ANNEX

United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines)

I. Fundamental principles

1. The prevention of juvenile delinquency is an essential part of crime prevention in society. By engaging in lawful, socially useful activities and adopting a humanistic orientation towards society and outlook on life, young persons can develop non-criminogenic attitudes.

2. The successful prevention of juvenile delinquency requires efforts on the part of the entire society to ensure the harmonious development of adolescents, with respect for and promotion of their personality from early childhood.

3. For the purposes of the interpretation of the present Guidelines, a child-centred orientation should be pursued. Young persons should have an active role and partnership within society and should not be considered as mere objects of socialization or control.

4. In the implementation of the present Guidelines, in accordance with national legal systems, the well-being of young persons from their early childhood should be the focus of any preventive programme.

5. The need for and importance of progressive delinquency prevention policies and the systematic study and the elaboration of measures should be recognized. These should avoid criminalizing and penalizing a child for behaviour that does not cause serious damage to the development of the child or harm to others. Such policies and measures should involve:

(a) The provision of opportunities, in particular educational opportunities, to meet the varying needs of young persons and to serve as a supportive framework for safeguarding the personal development of all young persons, particularly those who are demonstrably endangered or at social risk and are in need of special care and protection;

(b) Specialized philosophies and approaches for delinquency prevention, on the basis of laws, processes, institutions, facilities and a service delivery network aimed at reducing the motivation, need and opportunity for, or conditions giving rise to, the commission of infractions;

(c) Official intervention to be pursued primarily in the overall interest of the young person and guided by fairness and equity;

(d) Safeguarding the well-being, development, rights and interests of all young persons;

(e) Consideration that youthful behaviour or conduct that does not conform to overall social norms and values is often part of the maturation and growth process and tends to disappear spontaneously in most individuals with the transition to adulthood;

(f) Awareness that, in the predominant opinion of experts, labelling a young person as "deviant", "delinquent" or "pre-delinquent" often contributes to the development of a consistent pattern of undesirable behaviour by young persons.

6. Community-based services and programmes should be developed for the prevention of juvenile delinquency, particularly where no agencies have yet been established. Formal agencies of social control should only be utilized as a means of last resort.

II. Scope of the guidelines

7 The present Guidelines should be interpreted and implemented within the broad framework of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Declaration of the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and in the context of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), as well as other instruments and norms relating to the rights, interests and well-being of all children and young persons.

8. The present Guidelines should also be implemented in the context of the economic, social and cultural conditions prevailing in each Member State.

III. General prevention

9. Comprehensive prevention plans should be instituted at every level of government and include the following:

(a) In-depth analyses of the problem and inventories of programmes, services, facilities and resources available;

(b) Well-defined responsibilities for the qualified agencies, institutions and personnel involved in preventive efforts;

(c) Mechanisms for the appropriate co-ordination of prevention efforts between governmental and non-governmental agencies;

(d) Policies, programmes and strategies based on prognostic studies to be continuously monitored and carefully evaluated in the course of implementation;

(e) Methods for effectively reducing the opportunity to commit delinquent acts;

(f) Community involvement through a wide range of services and programmes;

(g) Close interdisciplinary co-operation between national, state, provincial and local governments, with the involvement of the private sector, representative citizens of the community to be served, and labour, child-care, health education, social, law enforcement and judicial agencies in taking concerted action to prevent juvenile delinquency and youth crime;

(h) Youth participation in delinquency prevention policies and processes, including recourse to community resources, youth self-help, and victim compensation and assistance programmes;

(i) Specialized personnel at all levels.

IV. Socialization processes

10. Emphasis should be placed on preventive policies facilitating the successful socialization and integration of all children and young persons, in particular through the family, the community, peer groups, schools, vocational training and the world of work, as well as through voluntary organizations. Due respect should be given to the proper personal development of children and young persons, and they should be accepted as full and equal partners in socialization and integration processes.

A. Family

11. Every society should place a high priority on the needs and well-being of the family and of all its members.

12. Since the family is the central unit responsible for the primary socialization of children, governmental and social efforts to preserve the integrity of the family, including the extended family, should be pursued. The society has a responsibility to assist the family in providing care and protection and in ensuring the physical and mental well-being of children. Adequate arrangements including day-care should be provided.

13. Governments should establish policies that are conducive to the bringing up of children in stable and settled family environments. Families in need of assistance in the resolution of conditions of instability or conflict should be provided with requisite services.

14. Where a stable and settled family environment is lacking and when community efforts to assist parents in this regard have failed and the extended family cannot fulfil this role, alternative placements, including foster care and adoption, should be considered. Such placements should replicate, to the extent possible, a stable and settled family environment, while, at the same time, establishing a sense of permanency for children, thus avoiding problems associated with "foster drift".

15. Special attention should be given to children of families affected by problems brought about by rapid and uneven economic, social and cultural change, in particular the children of indigenous, migrant and refugee families. As such changes may disrupt the social capacity of the family to secure the traditional rearing and nurturing of children, often as a result of role and culture conflict, innovative and socially constructive modalities for the socialization of children have to be designed.

16. Measures should be taken and programmes developed to provide families with the opportunity to learn about parental roles and obligations as regards child development and child care, promoting positive parent-child relationships, sensitizing parents to the problems of children and young persons and encouraging their involvement in family and community-based activities.

17. Governments should take measures to promote family cohesion and harmony and to discourage the separation of children from their parents, unless circumstances affecting the welfare and future of the child leave no viable alternative.

18. It is important to emphasize the socialization function of the family and extended family; it is also equally important to recognize the future role, responsibilities, participation and partnership of young persons in society.

19. In ensuring the right of the child to proper socialization, Governments and other agencies should rely on existing social and legal agencies, but, whenever traditional institutions and customs are no longer effective, they should also provide and allow for innovative measures.

B. Education

20. Governments are under an obligation to make public education accessible to all young persons.

21. Education systems should, in addition to their academic and vocational training activities, devote particular attention to the following:

(a) Teaching of basic values and developing respect for the child's own cultural identity and patterns, for the social values of the country in which the child is living, for civilizations different from the child's own and for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

(b) Promotion and development of the personality, talents and mental and physical abilities of young people to their fullest potential;

(c) Involvement of young persons as active and effective participants in, rather than mere objects of, the educational process;

(d) Undertaking activities that foster a sense of identity with and of belonging to the school and the community;

(e) Encouragement of young persons to understand and respect diverse views and opinions, as well as cultural and other differences;

(f) Provision of information and guidance regarding vocational training, employment opportunities and career development;

(g) Provision of positive emotional support to young persons and the avoidance of psychological maltreatment;

(h) Avoidance of harsh disciplinary measures, particularly corporal punishment.

22. Educational systems should seek to work together with parents, community organizations and agencies concerned with the activities of young persons.

23. Young persons and their families should be informed about the law and their rights and responsibilities under the law, as well as the universal value system, including United Nations instruments.

24. Educational systems should extend particular care and attention to young persons who are at social risk. Specialized prevention programmes and educational materials, curricula, approaches and tools should be developed and fully utilized.

25. Special attention should be given to comprehensive policies and strategies for the prevention of alcohol, drug and other substance abuse by young persons. Teachers and other professionals should be equipped and trained to prevent and deal with these problems. Information on the use and abuse of drugs, including alcohol, should be made available to the student body.

26. Schools should serve as resource and referral centres for the provision of medical, counselling and other services to young persons, particularly those with special needs and suffering from abuse, neglect, victimization and exploitation.

27. Through a variety of educational programmes, teachers and other adults and the student body should be sensitized to the problems, needs and perceptions of young persons, particularly those belonging to underprivileged, disadvantaged, ethnic or other minority and low-income groups.

28. School systems should attempt to meet and promote the highest professional and educational standards with respect to curricula, teaching and learning methods and approaches, and the recruitment and training of qualified teachers. Regular monitoring and assessment of performance by the appropriate professional organizations and authorities should be ensured.

29. School systems should plan, develop and implement extra-curricular activities of interest to young persons, in co-operation with community groups.

30. Special assistance should be given to children and young persons who find it difficult to comply with attendance codes, and to "drop-outs".

31. Schools should promote policies and rules that are fair and just; students should be represented in bodies formulating school policy, including policy on discipline, and decision-making.

C. Community

32. Community-based services and programmes which respond to the special needs, problems, interests and concerns of young persons and which offer appropriate counselling and guidance to young persons and their families should be developed, or strengthened where they exist.

33. Communities should provide, or strengthen where they exist, a wide range of community-based support measures for young persons, including community development centres, recreational facilities and services to respond to the special problems of children who are at social risk. In providing these helping measures, respect for individual rights should be ensured.

34. Special facilities should be set up to provide adequate shelter for young persons who are no longer able to live at home or who do not have homes to live in.

35. A range of services and helping measures should be provided to deal with the difficulties experienced by young persons in the transition to adulthood. Such services should include special programmes for young drug abusers which emphasize care, counselling, assistance and therapy-oriented interventions.

36. Voluntary organizations providing services for young persons should be given financial and other support by Governments and other institutions.

37. Youth organizations should be created or strengthened at the local level and given full participatory status in the management of community affairs. These organizations should encourage youth to organize collective and voluntary projects, particularly projects aimed at helping young persons in need of assistance.

38. Government agencies should take special responsibility and provide necessary services for homeless or street children; information about local facilities, accommodation, employment and other forms and sources of help should be made readily available to young persons.

39. A wide range of recreational facilities and services of particular interest to young persons should be established and made easily accessible to them.

D. Mass media

40. The mass media should be encouraged to ensure that young persons have access to information and material from a diversity of national and international sources.

41. The mass media should be encouraged to portray the positive contribution of young persons to society.

42. The mass media should be encouraged to disseminate information on the existence of services, facilities and opportunities for young persons in society.

43. The mass media generally, and the television and film media in particular, should be encouraged to minimize the level of pornography, drugs and violence portrayed and to display violence and exploitation disfavouredly, as well as to avoid demeaning and degrading presentations, especially of children, women and interpersonal relations, and to promote egalitarian principles and roles.

44. The mass media should be aware of its extensive social role and responsibility, as well as its influence, in communications relating to youthful drug and alcohol abuse. It should use its power for drug abuse prevention by relaying consistent messages through a balanced approach. Effective drug awareness campaigns at all levels should be promoted.

V. Social policy

45. Government agencies should give high priority to plans and programmes for young persons and should provide sufficient funds and other resources for the effective delivery of services, facilities and staff for adequate medical and mental health care, nutrition, housing and other relevant services, including drug and alcohol abuse prevention and treatment, ensuring that such resources reach and actually benefit young persons.

46. The institutionalization of young persons should be a measure of last resort and for the minimum necessary period, and the best interests of the young person should be of paramount importance. Criteria authorizing formal intervention of this type should be strictly defined and limited to the following situations: (a) where the child or young person has suffered harm that has been inflicted by the parents or guardians; (b) where the child or young person has been sexually, physically or emotionally abused by the parents or guardians; (c) where the child or young person has been neglected, abandoned or exploited by the parents or guardians; (d) where the child or young person is threatened by physical or moral danger due to the behaviour of the parents or guardians; and (e) where a serious physical or psychological danger to the child or young person has manifested itself in his or her own behaviour and neither the parents, the guardians, the juvenile himself or herself nor non-residential community services can meet the danger by means other than institutionalization.

47. Government agencies should provide young persons with the opportunity of continuing in full-time education, funded by the State where parents or guardians are unable to support the young persons, and of receiving work experience.

48. Programmes to prevent delinquency should be planned and developed on the basis of reliable, scientific research findings, and periodically monitored, evaluated and adjusted accordingly.

49. Scientific information should be disseminated to the professional community and to the public at large about the sort of behaviour or situation which indicates or may result in physical and psychological victimization, harm and abuse, as well as exploitation, of young persons.

50. Generally, participation in plans and programmes should be voluntary. Young persons themselves should be involved in their formulation, development and implementation.

51. Governments should begin or continue to explore, develop and implement policies, measures and strategies within and outside the criminal justice system to prevent domestic violence against and affecting young persons and to ensure fair treatment to these victims of domestic violence.

VI. Legislation and juvenile justice administration

52. Governments should enact and enforce specific laws and procedures to promote and protect the rights and well-being of all young persons.

53. Legislation preventing the victimization, abuse, exploitation and the use for criminal activities of children and young persons should be enacted and enforced.

54. No child or young person should be subjected to harsh or degrading correction or punishment measures at home, in schools or in any other institutions.

55. Legislation and enforcement aimed at restricting and controlling accessibility of weapons of any sort to children and young persons should be pursued.

56. In order to prevent further stigmatization, victimization and criminalization of young persons, legislation should be enacted to ensure that any conduct not considered an offence or not penalized if committed by an adult is not considered an offence and not penalized if committed by a young person.

57. Consideration should be given to the establishment of an office of ombudsman or similar independent organ, which would ensure that the status, rights and interests of young persons are upheld and that proper referral to available services is made. The ombudsman or other organ designated would also supervise the implementation of the Riyadh Guidelines, the Beijing Rules and the Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty. The ombudsman or other organ would, at regular intervals, publish a report on the progress made and on the difficulties encountered in the implementation of the instrument. Child advocacy services should also be established.

58. Law enforcement and other relevant personnel, of both sexes, should be trained to respond to the special needs of young persons and should be familiar with and use, to the maximum extent possible, programmes and referral possibilities for the diversion of young persons from the justice system.

59. Legislation should be enacted and strictly enforced to protect children and young persons from drug abuse and drug traffickers.

VII. Research, policy development and co-ordination

60. Efforts should be made and appropriate mechanisms established to promote, on both a multidisciplinary and an intradisciplinary basis, interaction and co-ordination between economic, social, educational and health agencies and services, the justice system, youth, community and development agencies and other relevant institutions.

61. The exchange of information, experience and expertise gained through projects, programmes, practices and initiatives relating to youth crime, delinquency prevention and juvenile justice should be intensified at the national, regional and international levels.

62. Regional and international co-operation on matters of youth crime, delinquency prevention and juvenile justice involving practitioners experts and decision makers should be further developed and strengthened.

63. Technical and scientific co-operation on practical and policy-related matters, particularly in training, pilot and demonstration projects, and on specific issues concerning the prevention of youth crime and juvenile delinquency should be strongly supported by all Governments, the United Nations system and other concerned organizations.

64. Collaboration should be encouraged in undertaking scientific research with respect to effective modalities for youth crime and juvenile delinquency prevention and the findings of such research should be widely disseminated and evaluated.

65. Appropriate United Nations bodies, institutes, agencies and offices should pursue close collaboration and co-ordination on various questions related to children, juvenile justice and youth crime and juvenile delinquency prevention.

66. On the basis of the present Guidelines, the United Nations Secretariat, in co-operation with interested institutions, should play an active role in the conduct of research, scientific collaboration, the formulation of policy options and the review and monitoring of their implementation, and should serve as a source of reliable information on effective modalities for delinquency prevention.

UN Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/113.

United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as other international instruments relating to the protection of the rights and well-being of young persons,

Bearing in mind also the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Bearing in mind further the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, approved by the General Assembly by its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988 and contained in the annex thereto,

Recalling the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules),

Recalling also resolution 21 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Congress called for the development of rules for the protection of juveniles deprived of their liberty,

Recalling further that the Economic and Social Council, in section II of its resolution 1986/10 of 21 May 1986, requested the Secretary-General to report on progress achieved in the development of the rules to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control at its tenth session and requested the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to consider the proposed rules with a view to their adoption,

Alarmed at the conditions and circumstances under which juveniles are being deprived of their liberty world wide,

Aware that juveniles deprived of their liberty are highly vulnerable to abuse, victimization and the violation of their rights,

Concerned that many systems do not differentiate between adults and juveniles at various stages of the administration of justice and that juveniles are therefore being held in gaols and facilities with adults,

1. Affirms that the placement of a juvenile in an institution should always be a disposition of last resort and for the minimum necessary period;

2. Recognizes that, because of their high vulnerability, juveniles deprived of their liberty require special attention and protection and that their rights and well-being should be guaranteed during and after the period when they are deprived of their liberty;

3. Notes with appreciation the valuable work of the Secretariat and the collaboration which has been established between the Secretariat and experts, practitioners, intergovernmental organizations, the non-governmental community, particularly Amnesty International, Defence for Children International and

Rädda Barnen International (Swedish Save the Children Federation), and scientific institutions concerned with the rights of children and juvenile justice in the development of the United Nations draft Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty;

4. Adopts the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty contained in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Calls upon the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to formulate measures for the effective implementation of the Rules, with the assistance of the United Nations institutes on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

6. Invites Member States to adapt, wherever necessary, their national legislation, policies and practices, particularly in the training of all categories of juvenile justice personnel, to the spirit of the Rules, and to bring them to the attention of relevant authorities and the public in general;

7. Also invites Member States to inform the Secretary-General of their efforts to apply the Rules in law, policy and practice and to report regularly to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the results achieved in their implementation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General and invites Member States to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the text of the Rules in all of the official languages of the United Nations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to conduct comparative research, pursue the requisite collaboration and devise strategies to deal with the different categories of serious and persistent young offenders, and to prepare a policy-oriented report thereon for submission to the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General and urges Member States to allocate the necessary resources to ensure the successful application and implementation of the Rules, in particular in the areas of recruitment, training and exchange of all categories of juvenile justice personnel;

11. Urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the regional commissions and specialized agencies, the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and all concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to collaborate with the Secretary-General and to take the necessary measures to ensure a concerted and sustained effort within their respective fields of technical competence to promote the application of the Rules;

12. Invites the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to consider this new international instrument, with a view to promoting the application of its provisions;

13. Requests the Ninth Congress to review the progress made on the promotion and application of the Rules and on the recommendations contained in the present resolution, under a separate agenda item on juvenile justice.

ANNEX
United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty

I. Fundamental perspectives

1. The juvenile justice system should uphold the rights and safety and promote the physical and mental well-being of juveniles. Imprisonment should be used as a last resort.

2. Juveniles should only be deprived of their liberty in accordance with the principles and procedures set forth in these Rules and in the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules). Deprivation of the liberty of a juvenile should be a disposition of last resort and for the minimum necessary period and should be limited to exceptional cases. The length of the sanction should be determined by the judicial authority, without precluding the possibility of his or her early release.

3. The Rules are intended to establish minimum standards accepted by the United Nations for the protection of juveniles deprived of their liberty in all forms, consistent with human rights and fundamental freedoms, with a view to counteracting the detrimental effects of all types of detention and to fostering integration in society.

4. The Rules should be applied impartially, without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, age, language, religion, nationality, political or other opinion, cultural beliefs or practices, property, birth or family status, ethnic or social origin, and disability. The religious and cultural beliefs, practices and moral concepts of the juvenile should be respected.

5. The Rules are designed to serve as convenient standards of reference and to provide encouragement and guidance to professionals involved in the management of the juvenile justice system.

6. The Rules should be made readily available to juvenile justice personnel in their national languages. Juveniles who are not fluent in the language spoken by the personnel of the detention facility should have the right to the services of an interpreter free of charge whenever necessary, in particular during medical examinations and disciplinary proceedings;

7. Where appropriate, States should incorporate the Rules into their legislation or amend it accordingly and provide effective remedies for their breach, including compensation when injuries are inflicted on juveniles. States should also monitor the application of the Rules.

8. The competent authorities should constantly seek to increase the awareness of the public that the care of detained juveniles and preparation for their return to society is a social service of great importance, and to this end active steps should be taken to foster open contacts between the juveniles and the local community.

9. Nothing in the Rules should be interpreted as precluding the application of the relevant United Nations and human rights instruments and standards, recognized by the international community, that are more conducive to ensuring the rights, care and protection of juveniles, children and all young persons.

10. In the event that the practical application of particular rules contained in sections II to V, inclusive, presents any conflict with the rules contained in the present section, compliance with the latter shall be regarded as the predominant requirement.

II. Scope and application of the rules

11. For the purposes of the Rules, the following definitions should apply:

(a) A juvenile is every person under the age of 18. The age limit below which it should not be permitted to deprive a child of his or her liberty should be determined by law;

(b) The deprivation of liberty means any form of detention or imprisonment or the placement of a person in a public or private custodial setting, from which this person is not permitted to leave at will, by order of any judicial, administrative or other public authority.

12. The deprivation of liberty should be effected in conditions and circumstances which ensure respect for the human rights of juveniles. Juveniles detained in facilities should be guaranteed the benefit of meaningful activities and programmes which would serve to promote and sustain their health and self-respect, to foster their sense of responsibility and encourage those attitudes and skills that will assist them in developing their potential as members of society.

13. Juveniles deprived of their liberty shall not for any reason related to their status be denied the civil, economic, political, social or cultural rights to which they are entitled under national or international law, and which are compatible with the deprivation of liberty.

14. The protection of the individual rights of juveniles with special regard to the legality of the execution of the detention measures shall be ensured by the competent authority, while the objectives of social integration should be secured by regular inspections and other means of control carried out, according to international standards, national laws and regulations, by a duly constituted body authorized to visit the juveniles and not belonging to the detention facility.

15. The Rules apply to all types and forms of detention facilities in which juveniles are deprived of their liberty. Sections I, II, IV and V of the Rules apply to all detention facilities and institutional settings in which juveniles are detained, and section III applies specifically to juveniles under arrest or awaiting trial.

16. The Rules shall be implemented in the context of the economic, social and cultural conditions prevailing in each Member State.

III. Juveniles under arrest or awaiting trial

17. Juveniles who are detained under arrest or awaiting trial ("untried") are presumed innocent and shall be treated as such. Detention before trial shall be avoided to the extent possible and limited to exceptional circumstances. Therefore, all efforts shall be made to apply alternative measures. When preventive detention is nevertheless used, juvenile courts and investigative bodies shall give the highest priority to the most expeditious processing of such cases to ensure the shortest possible duration of detention. Untried detainees should be separated from convicted juveniles.

18. The conditions under which an untried juvenile is detained should be consistent with the rules set out below, with additional specific provisions as are necessary and appropriate, given the requirements of the presumption of innocence, the duration of the detention and the legal status and circumstances of the juvenile. These provisions would include, but not necessarily be restricted to, the following:

(a) Juveniles should have the right of legal counsel and be enabled to apply for free legal aid, where such aid is available, and to communicate regularly with their legal advisers. Privacy and confidentiality shall be ensured for such communications;

(b) Juveniles should be provided, where possible, with opportunities to pursue work, with remuneration, and continue education or training, but should not be required to do so. Work, education or training should not cause the continuation of the detention;

(c) Juveniles should receive and retain materials for their leisure and recreation as are compatible with the interests of the administration of justice.

IV. The management of juvenile facilities

A. Records

19. All reports, including legal records, medical records and records of disciplinary proceedings, and all other documents relating to the form, content and details of treatment, should be placed in a confidential individual file, which should be kept up to date, accessible only to authorized persons and classified in such a way as to be easily understood. Where possible, every juvenile should have the right to contest any fact or opinion contained in his or her file so as to permit rectification of inaccurate, unfounded or unfair statements. In order to exercise this right, there should be procedures that allow an appropriate third party to have access to and to consult the file on request. Upon release, the records of juveniles shall be sealed, and, at an appropriate time, expunged.

20. No juvenile should be received in any detention facility without a valid commitment order of a judicial, administrative or other public authority. The details of this order should be immediately entered in the register. No juvenile should be detained in any facility where there is no such register.

B. Admission, registration, movement and transfer

21. In every place where juveniles are detained, a complete and secure record of the following information should be kept concerning each juvenile received:

(a) Information on the identity of the juvenile;

(b) The fact of and reasons for commitment and the authority therefor;

(c) The day and hour of admission, transfer and release;

(d) Details of the notifications to parents and guardians on every admission, transfer or release of the juvenile in their care at the time of commitment;

(e) Details of known physical and mental health problems, including drug and alcohol abuse.

22. The information on admission, place, transfer and release should be provided without delay to the parents and guardians or closest relative of the juvenile concerned.

23. As soon as possible after reception, full reports and relevant information on the personal situation and circumstances of each juvenile should be drawn up and submitted to the administration.

24. On admission, all juveniles shall be given a copy of the rules governing the detention facility and a written description of their rights and obligations in a language they can understand, together with the address of the authorities competent to receive complaints, as well as the address of public or private agencies and organizations which provide legal assistance. For those juveniles who are illiterate or who cannot understand the language in the written form, the information should be conveyed in a manner enabling full comprehension.

25. All juveniles should be helped to understand the regulations governing the internal organization of the facility, the goals and methodology of the care provided, the disciplinary requirements and procedures, other authorized methods of seeking information and of making complaints, and all such other matters as are necessary to enable them to understand fully their rights and obligations during detention.

26. The transport of juveniles should be carried out at the expense of the administration in conveyances with adequate ventilation and light, in conditions that should in no way subject them to hardship or indignity. Juveniles should not be transferred from one facility to another arbitrarily.

C. Classification and placement

27. As soon as possible after the moment of admission, each juvenile should be interviewed, and a psychological and social report identifying any factors relevant to the specific type and level of care and programme required by the juvenile should be prepared. This report, together with the report prepared by a medical officer who has examined the juvenile upon admission, should be forwarded to the director for purposes of determining the most appropriate placement for the juvenile within the facility and the specific type and level of care and programme required and to be pursued. When special rehabilitative treatment is required, and the length of stay in the facility permits, trained personnel of the facility should prepare a written, individualized treatment plan specifying treatment objectives and time-frame and the means, stages and delays with which the objectives should be approached.

28. The detention of juveniles should only take place under conditions that take full account of their particular needs, status and special requirements according to their age, personality, sex and type of offence, as well as mental and physical health, and which ensure their protection from harmful influences and risk situations. The principal criterion for the separation of different categories of juveniles deprived of their liberty should be the provision of the type of care best suited to the particular needs of the individuals concerned and the protection of their physical, mental and moral integrity and well-being.

29. In all detention facilities juveniles should be separated from adults, unless they are members of the same family. Under controlled conditions, juveniles may be brought together with carefully selected adults as part of a special programme that has been shown to be beneficial for the juveniles concerned.

30. Open detention facilities for juveniles should be established. Open detention facilities are those with no or minimal security measures. The population in such detention facilities should be as small as possible. The number of juveniles detained in closed facilities should be small enough to enable individualized treatment. Detention facilities for juveniles should be decentralized and of such size as to facilitate access and contact between the juveniles and their families. Small-scale detention facilities should be established and integrated into the social, economic and cultural environment of the community.

D. Physical environment and accommodation

31. Juveniles deprived of their liberty have the right to facilities and services that meet all the requirements of health and human dignity.

32. The design of detention facilities for juveniles and the physical environment should be in keeping with the rehabilitative aim of residential treatment, with due regard to the need of the juvenile for privacy, sensory stimuli, opportunities for association with peers and participation in sports, physical exercise and leisure-time activities. The design and structure of juvenile detention facilities should be such as to minimize the risk of fire and to ensure safe evacuation from the premises. There should be an effective alarm system in case of fire, as well as formal and drilled procedures to ensure the safety of the juveniles. Detention facilities should not be located in areas where there are known health or other hazards or risks.

33. Sleeping accommodation should normally consist of small group dormitories or individual bedrooms, account being taken of local standards. During sleeping hours there should be regular, unobtrusive supervision of all sleeping areas, including individual rooms and group dormitories, in order to ensure the protection of each juvenile. Every juvenile should, in accordance with local or national standards, be provided with separate and sufficient bedding, which should be clean when issued, kept in good order and changed often enough to ensure cleanliness.

34. Sanitary installations should be so located and of a sufficient standard to enable every juvenile to comply, as required, with their physical needs in privacy and in a clean and decent manner.

35. The possession of personal effects is a basic element of the right to privacy and essential to the psychological well-being of the juvenile. The right of every juvenile to possess personal effects and to have adequate storage facilities for them should be fully recognized and respected. Personal effects that the juvenile does not choose to retain or that are confiscated should be placed in safe custody. An inventory thereof should be signed by the juvenile. Steps should be taken to keep them in good condition. All such articles and money should be returned to the juvenile on release, except in so far as he or she has been authorized to spend money or send such property out of the facility. If a juvenile receives or is found in possession of any medicine, the medical officer should decide what use should be made of it.

36. To the extent possible juveniles should have the right to use their own clothing. Detention facilities should ensure that each juvenile has personal clothing suitable for the climate and adequate to ensure good health, and which should in no manner be degrading or humiliating. Juveniles removed from or leaving a facility for any purpose should be allowed to wear their own clothing.

37. Every detention facility shall ensure that every juvenile receives food that is suitably prepared and presented at normal meal times and of a quality and quantity to satisfy the standards of dietetics, hygiene and health and, as far as possible, religious and cultural requirements. Clean drinking water should be available to every juvenile at any time.

E. Education, vocational training and work

38. Every juvenile of compulsory school age has the right to education suited to his or her needs and abilities and designed to prepare him or her for return to society. Such education should be provided outside the detention facility in community schools wherever possible and, in any case, by qualified teachers through programmes integrated with the education system of the country so that, after release, juveniles may continue their education without difficulty. Special attention should be given by the administration of the detention facilities to the education of juveniles of foreign origin or with particular cultural or ethnic needs. Juveniles who are illiterate or have cognitive or learning difficulties should have the right to special education.

39. Juveniles above compulsory school age who wish to continue their education should be permitted and encouraged to do so, and every effort should be made to provide them with access to appropriate educational programmes.

40. Diplomas or educational certificates awarded to juveniles while in detention should not indicate in any way that the juvenile has been institutionalized.

41. Every detention facility should provide access to a library that is adequately stocked with both instructional and recreational books and periodicals suitable for the juveniles, who should be encouraged and enabled to make full use of it.

42. Every juvenile should have the right to receive vocational training in occupations likely to prepare him or her for future employment.

43. With due regard to proper vocational selection and to the requirements of institutional administration, juveniles should be able to choose the type of work they wish to perform.

44. All protective national and international standards applicable to child labour and young workers should apply to juveniles deprived of their liberty.

45. Wherever possible, juveniles should be provided with the opportunity to perform remunerated labour, if possible within the local community, as a complement to the vocational training provided in order to enhance the possibility of finding suitable employment when they return to their communities. The type of work should be such as to provide appropriate training that will be of benefit to the juveniles following release. The organization and methods of work offered in detention facilities should resemble as closely as possible those of similar work in the community, so as to prepare juveniles for the conditions of normal occupational life.

46. Every juvenile who performs work should have the right to an equitable remuneration. The interests of the juveniles and of their vocational training should not be subordinated to the purpose of making profit for the detention facility or a third party. Part of the earnings of a juvenile should normally be set aside to constitute a savings fund to be handed over to the juvenile on release. The juvenile should have the right to use the remainder of those earnings to purchase articles for his or her own use or to indemnify the victim injured by his or her offence or to send it to his or her family or other persons outside the detention facility.

F. Recreation

47. Every juvenile should have the right to a suitable amount of time for daily free exercise, in the open air whenever weather permits, during which time appropriate recreational and physical training should normally be provided. Adequate space, installations and equipment should be provided for these activities. Every juvenile should have additional time for daily leisure activities, part of which should be devoted, if the juvenile so wishes, to arts and crafts skill development. The detention facility should ensure that each juvenile is physically able to participate in the available programmes of physical education. Remedial physical education and therapy should be offered, under medical supervision, to juveniles needing it.

G. Religion

48. Every juvenile should be allowed to satisfy the needs of his or her religious and spiritual life, in particular by attending the services or meetings provided in the detention facility or by conducting his or her own services and having possession of the necessary books or items of religious observance and instruction of his or her denomination. If a detention facility contains a sufficient number of juveniles of a given religion, one or more qualified representatives of that religion should be appointed or approved and allowed to hold regular services and to pay pastoral visits in private to juveniles at their request. Every juvenile should have the right to receive visits from a qualified representative of any religion of his or her choice, as well as the right not to participate in religious services and freely to decline religious education, counselling or indoctrination.

H. Medical care

49. Every juvenile shall receive adequate medical care, both preventive and remedial, including dental, ophthalmological and mental health care, as well as pharmaceutical products and special diets as medically indicated. All such medical care should, where possible, be provided to detained juveniles through the appropriate health facilities and services of the community in which the detention facility is located, in order to prevent stigmatization of the juvenile and promote self-respect and integration into the community.

50. Every juvenile has a right to be examined by a physician immediately upon admission to a detention facility, for the purpose of recording any evidence of prior ill-treatment and identifying any physical or mental condition requiring medical attention.

51. The medical services provided to juveniles should seek to detect and should treat any physical or mental illness, substance abuse or other condition that may hinder the integration of the juvenile into society. Every detention facility for juveniles should have immediate access to adequate medical facilities and equipment appropriate to the number and requirements of its residents and staff trained in preventive health care and the handling of medical emergencies. Every juvenile who is ill, who complains of illness or who demonstrates symptoms of physical or mental difficulties should be examined promptly by a medical officer.

52. Any medical officer who has reason to believe that the physical or mental health of a juvenile has been or will be injuriously affected by continued detention, a hunger strike or any condition of detention should report this fact immediately to the director of the detention facility in question and to the independent authority responsible for safeguarding the well-being of the juvenile.

53. A juvenile who is suffering from mental illness should be treated in a specialized institution under independent medical management. Steps should be taken, by arrangement with appropriate agencies, to ensure any necessary continuation of mental health care after release.

54. Juvenile detention facilities should adopt specialized drug abuse prevention and rehabilitation programmes administered by qualified personnel. These programmes should be adapted to the age, sex and other requirements of the juveniles concerned, and detoxification facilities and services staffed by trained personnel should be available to drug- or alcohol-dependent juveniles.

55. Medicines should be administered only for necessary treatment on medical grounds and, when possible, after having obtained the informed consent of the juvenile concerned. In particular, they must not be administered with a view to eliciting information or a confession, as a punishment or as a means of restraint. Juveniles shall never be testees in the experimental use of drugs and treatment. The administration of any drug should always be authorized and carried out by qualified medical personnel.

I. Notification of illness, injury and death

56. The family or guardian of a juvenile and any other person designated by the juvenile have the right to be informed of the state of health of the juvenile on request and in the event of any important changes in the health of the juvenile. The director of the detention facility should notify immediately the family or guardian of the juvenile concerned, or other designated person, in case of death, illness requiring transfer of the juvenile to an outside medical facility, or a condition requiring clinical care within the detention facility for more than 48 hours. Notification should also be given to the consular authorities of the State of which a foreign juvenile is a citizen.

57. Upon the death of a juvenile during the period of deprivation of liberty, the nearest relative should have the right to inspect the death certificate, see the body and determine the method of disposal of the body. Upon the death of a juvenile in detention, there should be an independent inquiry into the causes of death, the report of which should be made accessible to the nearest relative. This inquiry should also be made when the death of a juvenile occurs within six months from the date of his or her release from the detention facility and there is reason to believe that the death is related to the period of detention.

58. A juvenile should be informed at the earliest possible time of the death, serious illness or injury of any immediate family member and should be provided with the opportunity to attend the funeral of the deceased or go to the bedside of a critically ill relative.

J. Contacts with the wider community

59. Every means should be provided to ensure that juveniles have adequate communication with the outside world, which is an integral part of the right to fair and humane treatment and is essential to the preparation of juveniles for their return to society. Juveniles should be allowed to communicate with their families, friends and other persons or representatives of reputable outside organizations, to leave detention facilities for a visit to their home and family and to receive special permission to leave the detention facility for educational, vocational or other important reasons. Should the juvenile be serving a sentence, the time spent outside a detention facility should be counted as Part of the period of sentence.

60. Every juvenile should have the right to receive regular and frequent visits, in principle once a week and not less than once a month, in circumstances that respect the need of the juvenile for privacy, contact and unrestricted communication with the family and the defence counsel.

61. Every juvenile should have the right to communicate in writing or by telephone at least twice a week with the person of his or her choice, unless legally restricted, and should be assisted as necessary in order effectively to enjoy this right. Every juvenile should have the right to receive correspondence.

62. Juveniles should have the opportunity to keep themselves informed regularly of the news by reading newspapers, periodicals and other publications, through access to radio and television programmes and motion pictures, and through the visits of the representatives of any lawful club or organization in which the juvenile is interested.

K. Limitations of physical restraint and the use of force

63. Recourse to instruments of restraint and to force for any purpose should be prohibited, except as set forth in rule 64 below.

64. Instruments of restraint and force can only be used in exceptional cases, where all other control methods have been exhausted and failed, and only as explicitly authorized and specified by law and regulation. They should not cause humiliation or degradation, and should be used restrictively and only for the shortest possible period of time. By order of the director of the administration, such instruments might be resorted to in order to prevent the juvenile from inflicting self-injury, injuries to others or serious destruction of property. In such instances, the director should at once consult medical and other relevant personnel and report to the higher administrative authority.

65. The carrying and use of weapons by personnel should be prohibited in any facility where juveniles are detained.

L. Disciplinary procedures

66. Any disciplinary measures and procedures should maintain the interest of safety and an ordered community life and should be consistent with the upholding of the inherent dignity of the juvenile and the fundamental objective of institutional care, namely, instilling a sense of justice, self-respect and respect for the basic rights of every person.

67. All disciplinary measures constituting cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment shall be strictly prohibited, including corporal punishment, placement in a dark cell, closed or solitary confinement or any other punishment that may compromise the physical or mental health of the juvenile concerned. The reduction of diet and the restriction or denial of contact with family members should be prohibited for any purpose. Labour should always be viewed as an educational tool and a means of promoting the self-respect of the juvenile in preparing him or her for return to the community and should not be imposed as a disciplinary sanction. No juvenile should be sanctioned more than once for the same disciplinary infraction. Collective sanctions should be prohibited.

68. Legislation or regulations adopted by the competent administrative authority should establish norms concerning the following, taking full account of the fundamental characteristics, needs and rights of juveniles:

- (a) Conduct constituting a disciplinary offence;
- (b) Type and duration of disciplinary sanctions that may be inflicted;
- (c) The authority competent to impose such sanctions;
- (d) The authority competent to consider appeals.

69. A report of misconduct should be presented promptly to the competent authority, which should decide on it without undue delay. The competent authority should conduct a thorough examination of the case.

70. No juvenile should be disciplinarily sanctioned except in strict accordance with the terms of the law and regulations in force. No juvenile should be sanctioned unless he or she has been informed of the alleged infraction in a manner appropriate to the full understanding of the juvenile, and given a proper opportunity of presenting his or her defence, including the right of appeal to a competent impartial authority. Complete records should be kept of all disciplinary proceedings.

71. No juveniles should be responsible for disciplinary functions except in the supervision of specified social, educational or sports activities or in self-government programmes.

M. Inspection and complaints

72. Qualified inspectors or an equivalent duly constituted authority not belonging to the administration of the facility should be empowered to conduct inspections on a regular basis and to undertake unannounced inspections on their own initiative, and should enjoy full guarantees of independence in the exercise of this function. Inspectors should have unrestricted access to all persons employed by or working in any facility where juveniles are or may be deprived of their liberty, to all juveniles and to all records of such facilities.

73. Qualified medical officers attached to the inspecting authority or the public health service should participate in the inspections, evaluating compliance with the rules concerning the physical environment, hygiene, accommodation, food, exercise and medical services, as well as any other aspect or conditions of institutional life that 'affect the physical and mental health of juveniles. Every juvenile should have the right to talk in confidence to any inspecting officer.

74. After completing the inspection, the inspector should be required to submit a report on the findings. The report should include an evaluation of the compliante of the detention facilities with the present rules and relevant provisions of national law, and recommendations regarding any steps considered necessary to ensure compliance with them. Any facts discovered by an inspector that appear to indicate that a violation of legal provisions concerning the rights of juveniles or the operation of a juvenile detention facility has occurred should be communicated to the competent authorities for investigation and prosecution.

75. Every juvenile should have the opportunity of making requests or complaints to the director of the detention facility and to his or her authorized representative.

76. Every juvenile should have the right to make a request or complaint, without censorship as to substance, to the central administration, the judicial authority or other proper authorities through approved channels, and to be informed of the response without delay.

77. Efforts should be made to establish an independent office (ombudsman) to receive and investigate complaints made by juveniles deprived of their liberty and to assist in the achievement of equitable settlements.

78. Every juvenile should have the right to request assistance from family members, legal counsellors, humanitarian groups or others where possible, in order to make a complaint. Illiterate juveniles should be provided with assistance should they need to use the services of public or private agencies and organizations which provide legal counsel or which are competent to receive complaints.

N. Return to the community

79. All juveniles should benefit from arrangements designed to assist them in returning to society, family life, education or employment after release. Procedures, including early release, and special courses should be devised to this end.

80. Competent authorities should provide or ensure services to assist juveniles in re-establishing themselves in society and to lessen prejudice against such juveniles. These services should ensure, to the extent possible, that the juvenile is provided with suitable residence, employment, clothing, and sufficient means to maintain himself or herself upon release in order to facilitate successful reintegration. The representatives of agencies providing such services should be consulted and should have access to juveniles while detained, with a view to assisting them in their return to the community.

V. Personnel

81. Personnel should be qualified and include a sufficient number of specialists such as educators, vocational instructors, counsellors, social workers, psychiatrists and psychologists. These and other specialist staff should normally be employed on a permanent basis. This should not preclude part-time or volunteer workers when the level of support and training they can provide is appropriate and beneficial. Detention facilities should make use of all remedial, educational, moral, spiritual, and other resources and forms of assistance that are appropriate and available in the community, according to the individual needs and problems of detained juveniles.

82. The administration should provide for the careful selection and recruitment of every grade and type of personnel, since the proper management of detention facilities depends on their integrity, humanity, ability and professional capacity to deal with juveniles, as well as personal suitability for the work.

83. To secure the foregoing ends, personnel should be appointed as professional officers with adequate remuneration to attract and retain suitable women and men. The personnel of juvenile detention facilities should be continually encouraged to fulfil their duties and obligations in a humane, committed, professional, fair and efficient manner, to conduct themselves at all times in such a way as to deserve and gain the respect of the juveniles, and to provide juveniles with a positive role model and perspective.

84. The administration should introduce forms of organization and management that facilitate communications between different categories of staff in each detention facility so as to enhance co-operation between the various services engaged in the care of juveniles, as well as between staff and the administration, with a view to ensuring that staff directly in contact with juveniles are able to function in conditions favourable to the efficient fulfilment of their duties.

85. The personnel should receive such training as will enable them to carry out their responsibilities effectively, in particular training in child psychology, child welfare and international standards and norms of human rights and the rights of the child, including the present Rules. The personnel should maintain and improve their knowledge and professional capacity by attending courses of in-service training, to be organized at suitable intervals throughout their career.

86. The director of a facility should be adequately qualified for his or her task, with administrative ability and suitable training and experience, and should carry out his or her duties on a full-time basis.

87. In the performance of their duties, personnel of detention facilities should respect and protect the human dignity and fundamental human rights of all juveniles, in particular, as follows:

(a) No member of the detention facility or institutional personnel may inflict, instigate or tolerate any act of torture or any form of harsh, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, punishment, correction or discipline under any pretext or circumstance whatsoever;

(b) All personnel should rigorously oppose and combat any act of corruption, reporting it without delay to the competent authorities;

(c) All personnel should respect the present Rules. Personnel who have reason to believe that a serious violation of the present Rules has occurred or is about to occur should report the matter to their superior authorities or organs vested with reviewing or remedial power;

(d) All personnel should ensure the full protection of the physical and mental health of juveniles, including protection from physical, sexual and emotional abuse and exploitation, and should take immediate action to secure medical attention whenever required;

(e) All personnel should respect the right of the juvenile to privacy, and in particular should safeguard all confidential matters concerning juveniles or their families learned as a result of their professional capacity;

(f) All personnel should seek to minimize any differences between life inside and outside the detention facility which tend to lessen due respect for the dignity of juveniles as human beings.

Instrumental use of children in criminal activities

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/115.

Instrumental use of children in criminal activities

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, as well as the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances,

Bearing in mind also the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines) and the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty, Recalling that, in its resolution 44/82 of 8 December 1989, it proclaimed 1994 the International Year of the Family,

Recalling and reaffirming its resolutions 43/121 of 8 December 1988 on the use of children in the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and rehabilitation of drug-addicted minors and 40/35 of 29 November 1985 on the development of standards for the prevention of juvenile delinquency, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1989/66 of 24 May 1989 on the Beijing Rules and 1990/33 of 24 May 1990 on the reduction of demand and prevention of drug consumption among young persons in the Near and Middle East,

Recognizing that within the traditional forms of child exploitation the instrumental use of children in criminal activities, especially those aimed at illicit profit making, has become an increasingly grave phenomenon,

Concerned that children are being led by adults into a criminal lifestyle, which hinders their development and denies them opportunities for a healthy and responsible role in society,

Considering that the instrumental use of children by adults in profit-making criminal activities is a grave practice that represents a violation of social norms and a deprivation of the right of children to proper development, education and upbringing and prejudices their future,

Emphasizing that categories of children, such as those who are runaway, vagrant, wayward or "street" children, are targets for exploitation, including seduction into drug trafficking and abuse, prostitution, pornography, theft, burglary, begging and homicide for reward,

1. Requests Member States and the Secretary-General to take measures with a view to formulating programmes to deal with the problem of the instrumental use of children in criminal activities and to take effective action by, inter alia:

(a) Undertaking research and a systematic analysis of the phenomenon;

(b) Developing training and awareness-raising activities in order to make law enforcement and other justice personnel, as well as policy makers, sensitive to those situations of social risk that cause children to be manipulated by adults into engaging in crime;

(c) Taking measures in combating criminality with a view to ensuring that appropriate sanctions are applied against adults who are the instigators and authors of crimes, rather than against the children involved who themselves are victims of criminality by virtue of their being exposed to crime;

(d) Developing comprehensive policies, programmes and effective preventive and remedial measures, in order to eliminate the involvement and exploitation of children by adults in criminal activities;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to study the situation in different countries and to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite the collaboration of the Centre for Human Rights and the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and other concerned institutes in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to consider this matter and to keep it under constant review.

Treatment of prisoners

In December, the General Assembly considered three draft resolutions on matters relating to the treatment of prisoners recommended by the Eighth Congress. The first annexed draft UN standard minimum rules for non-custodial measures, to be known as the Tokyo Rules, the second annexed draft basic principles for the treatment of prisoners, and the third concerned the computerization of criminal justice.

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/CONF.144/11] submitted to the Eighth Congress, the Secretary-General provided updated information on the implementation of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in 1957[YUN 1957, p. 254]. The report was based on replies received from 49 countries to the Secretary-General's request for information on the application, dissemination and implementation of the Rules as well as on a number of special issues, including the status and human rights of prisoners, reduction of prison population, transfer of foreign prisoners, medical services, discipline and punishment, prison work, education and vocational training, treatment programmes, outside contacts and institutional personnel.

The report's purpose was to provide an overview of the extent of the implementation of the Rules as reported by each country and a better understanding of current implementation difficulties, to suggest viable remedies, and to enable the United Nations to assist Member States, at their request, in improving prison conditions through, inter alia, the services of the regional and interregional UN institutes for crime prevention and treatment of offenders.

UN Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules)

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/110.

United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as other international human rights instruments pertaining to the rights of persons in conflict with the law,

Bearing in mind also the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and the important contribution of those Rules to national policies and practices,

Recalling resolution 8 of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on alternatives to imprisonment,

Recalling also resolution 16 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on the reduction of the prison population, alternatives to imprisonment, and social integration of offenders,

Recalling further section XI of Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/10 of 21 May 1986, on alternatives to imprisonment, in which the Secretary-General was requested to prepare a report on alternatives to imprisonment for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and to study that question with a view to the formulation of basic principles in that area, with the assistance of the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders,

Recognizing the need to develop local, national, regional and international approaches and strategies in the field of non-institutional treatment of offenders and the need to formulate standard minimum rules, as emphasized in the section of the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its fourth session, concerning the methods and measures likely to be most effective in preventing crime and improving the treatment of offenders,

Convinced that alternatives to imprisonment can be an effective means of treating offenders within the community to the best advantage of both the offenders and society,

Aware that the restriction of liberty is justifiable only from the viewpoints of public safety, crime prevention, just retribution and deterrence and that the ultimate goal of the criminal justice system is the reintegration of the offender into society,

Emphasizing that the increasing prison population and prison overcrowding in many countries constitute factors that create difficulties for the proper implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners,

Noting with appreciation the work accomplished by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, as well as by the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on topic II, "Criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures", and by the regional preparatory meetings for the Eighth Congress,

Expressing its gratitude to the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for the work accomplished in the development of standard minimum rules for non-custodial measures, as well as to the various inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations involved, in particular, the International Penal and Penitentiary Foundation for its contribution to the preparatory work,

ANNEX

United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules)

I. General principles

1. Fundamental aims

- 1.1 The present Standard Minimum Rules provide a set of basic principles to promote the use of non-custodial measures, as well as minimum safeguards for persons subject to alternatives to imprisonment.
- 1.2 The Rules are intended to promote greater community involvement in the management of criminal justice, specifically in the treatment of offenders, as well as to promote among offenders a sense of responsibility towards society.
- 1.3 The Rules shall be implemented taking into account the political, economic, social and cultural conditions of each country and the aims and objectives of its criminal justice system.

1.4 When implementing the Rules, Member States shall endeavour to ensure a proper balance between the rights of individual offenders, the rights of victims, and the concern of society for public safety and crime prevention.

1.5 Member States shall develop non-custodial measures within their legal systems to provide other options, thus reducing the use of imprisonment, and to rationalize criminal justice policies, taking into account the observance of human rights, the requirements of social justice and the rehabilitation needs of the offender.

2. The scope of non-custodial measures

2.1 The relevant provisions of the present Rules shall be applied to all persons subject to prosecution, trial or the execution of a sentence, at all stages of the administration of criminal justice. For the purposes of the Rules, these persons are referred to as "offenders", irrespective of whether they are suspected, accused or sentenced.

2.2 The Rules shall be applied without any discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, age, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

2.3 In order to provide greater flexibility consistent with the nature and gravity of the offence, with the personality and background of the offender and with the protection of society and to avoid unnecessary use of imprisonment, the criminal justice system should provide a wide range of non-custodial measures, from pre-trial to post-sentencing dispositions. The number and types of non-custodial measures available should be determined in such a way that consistent sentencing remains possible.

2.4 The development of new non-custodial measures should be encouraged and closely monitored and their use systematically evaluated.

2.5 Consideration shall be given to dealing with offenders in the community, avoiding as far as possible resort to formal proceedings or trial by a court, in accordance with legal safeguards and the rule of law.

2.6 Non-custodial measures should be used in accordance with the principle of minimum intervention.

2.7 The use of non-custodial measures should be part of the movement towards depenalization and decriminalization instead of interfering with or delaying efforts in that direction.

3. Legal safeguards

3.1 The introduction, definition and application of non-custodial measures shall be prescribed by law.

3.2 The selection of a non-custodial measure shall be based on an assessment of established criteria in respect of both the nature and gravity of the offence and the personality, the background of the offender, the purposes of sentencing and the rights of victims.

3.3 Discretion by the judicial or other competent independent authority shall be exercised at all stages of the proceedings by ensuring full accountability and only in accordance with the rule of law.'

- 3.4 Non-custodial measures imposing an obligation on the offender, applied before or instead of formal proceeding; & trial, shall require the offender's consent.
- 3.5 Decisions on the imposition of non-custodial measures shall be subject to review by a judicial or other competent independent authority, upon application by the offender.
- 3.6 The offender shall be entitled to make a request or complaint to a judicial or other competent independent authority on matters affecting his or her individual rights in the implementation of non-custodial measures.
- 3.7 Appropriate machinery shall be provided for the recourse and, if possible, redress of any grievance related to non-compliance with internationally recognized human rights.
- 3.8 Non-custodial measures shall not involve medical or psychological experimentation on, or undue risk of physical or mental injury to, the offender.
- 3.9 The dignity of the offender subject to non-custodial measures shall be protected at all times.
- 3.10 In the implementation of non-custodial measures, the offender's rights shall not be restricted further than was authorized by the competent authority that rendered the original decision.
- 3.11 In the application of non-custodial measures, the offender's right to privacy shall be respected, as shall be the right to privacy of the offender's family.
- 3.12 The offender's personal records shall be kept strictly confidential and closed to third parties. Access to such records shall be limited to persons directly concerned with the disposition of the offender's case or to other duly authorized persons.

4. Saving clause

- 4.1 Nothing in the present Rules shall be interpreted as precluding the application of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment or any other human rights instruments and standards recognized by the international community and relating to the treatment of offenders and the protection of their basic human rights.

II. Pre-trial stage

5. Pre-trial dispositions

- 5.1 Where appropriate and compatible with the legal system, the police, the prosecution service or other agencies dealing with criminal cases should be empowered to discharge the offender if they consider that it is not necessary to proceed with the case for the protection of society, crime prevention or the promotion of respect for the law and the rights of victims. For the purpose of deciding upon the appropriateness of discharge or determination of proceedings, a set of established criteria shall be developed within each legal system. For minor cases the prosecutor may impose suitable non-custodial measures, as appropriate.

6. Avoidance of pre-trial detention

- 6.1 Pre-trial detention shall be used as a means of last resort in criminal proceedings, with due regard for the investigation of the alleged offence and for the protection of society and the victim.

- 10.2 If a non-custodial measure entails supervision, the latter shall be carried out by a competent authority under the specific conditions prescribed by law.
- 10.3 Within the framework of a given non-custodial measure, the most suitable type of supervision and treatment should be determined for each individual case aimed at assisting the offender to work on his or her offending. VII. Volunteers and other community resources

17. Public participation

- 17.1 Public participation should be encouraged as it is a major resource and one of the most important factors in improving ties between offenders undergoing non-custodial measures and the family and community. It should complement the efforts of the criminal justice administration.
- 17.2 Public participation should be regarded as an opportunity for members of the community to contribute to the protection of their society.

18. Public understanding and co-operation

- 18.1 Government agencies, the private sector and the general public should be encouraged to support voluntary organizations that promote non-custodial measures.

They shall be properly trained for the specific responsibilities to be discharged by them and shall have access to support and counselling from, and the opportunity to consult with, the competent authority.
- 19.2 Volunteers should encourage offenders and their families to develop meaningful ties with the community and a broader sphere of contact by providing counselling and other appropriate forms of assistance according to their capacity and the offenders' needs.
- 19.3 Volunteers shall be insured against accident, injury and public liability when carrying out their duties. They shall be reimbursed for authorized expenditures incurred in the course of their work. Public recognition should be extended to them for the services they render for the well-being of the community.

VIII. Research, planning, policy formulation and evaluation

23. International co-operation

- 23.1 Efforts shall be made to promote scientific co-operation between countries in the field of non-institutional treatment. Research, training, technical assistance and the exchange of information among Member States on non-custodial measures should be strengthened, through the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, in close collaboration with the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Branch of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat.
- 23.2 Comparative studies and the harmonization of legislative provisions should be furthered to expand the range of non-institutional options and facilitate their application across national frontiers, in accordance with the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released.

Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/111.

Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the long-standing concern of the United Nations for the humanization of criminal justice and the protection of human rights,

Bearing in mind also that sound policies of crime prevention and control are essential to viable planning for economic and social development,

Recognizing that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, are of great value and influence in the development of penal policy and practice,

Considering the concern of previous United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, regarding the obstacles of various kinds that prevent the full implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules,

Believing that the full implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules would be facilitated by the articulation of the basic principles underlying them,

Recalling resolution 10 on the status of prisoners and resolution 17 on the human rights of prisoners, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling also the statement submitted at the tenth session of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control by Caritas Internationalis, the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs of the World Council of Churches, the International Association of

Educators for World Peace, the International Council for Adult Education, the International Federation of Human Rights, the International Prisoners' Aid Association, the International Union of Students, the World Alliance of Young Men's Christian Associations and the World Council of Indigenous Peoples, which are non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, category II,

Recalling further the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on topic II, "Criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures",

Aware that the Eighth Congress coincided with International Literacy Year, proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/104 of 7 December 1987,

Desiring to reflect the perspective noted by the Seventh Congress, namely, that the function of the criminal justice system is to contribute to safeguarding the basic values and norms of society,

Recognizing the usefulness of drafting a declaration on the human rights of prisoners,

Affirms the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, contained in the annex to the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to bring them to the attention of Member States.

ANNEX

Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners

1. All prisoners shall be treated with the respect due to their inherent dignity and value as human beings.

2. There shall be no discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

3. It is, however, desirable to respect the religious beliefs and cultural precepts of the group to which prisoners belong, whenever local conditions so require.

4. The responsibility of prisons for the custody of prisoners and for the protection of society against crime shall be discharged in keeping with a State's other social objectives and its fundamental responsibilities for promoting the well-being and development of all members of society.

5. Except for those limitations that are demonstrably necessitated by the fact of incarceration, all prisoners shall retain the human rights and fundamental freedoms set out in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and, where the State concerned is a party, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, as well as such other rights as are set out in other United Nations covenants.

6. All prisoners shall have the right to take part in cultural activities and education aimed at the full development of the human personality.

7. Efforts addressed to the abolition of solitary confinement as a punishment, or to the restriction of its use, should be undertaken and encouraged.

8. Conditions shall be created enabling prisoners to undertake meaningful remunerated employment which will facilitate their reintegration into the country's labour market and permit them to contribute to their own financial support and to that of their families.

9. Prisoners shall have access to the health services available in the country without discrimination on the grounds of their legal situation.

10. With the participation and help of the community and social institution, and with due regard to the interests of victims, favourable conditions shall be created for the reintegration of the ex-prisoner into society under the best possible conditions.

11. The above Principles shall be applied impartially.

Computerization of criminal justice

In a July report [A/CONF.144/14], the UN Secretariat described the role of computerization in the administration of criminal justice as a means of improving its efficiency, taking into account the fair and humane treatment of offenders. In addition to describing UN action in that area, the report reviewed the prerequisites for computerization and discussed modalities for international co-operation in computerizing the management of criminal justice. Those modalities included development of guidelines for decision makers and users of computer output, strengthening of the world-wide United Nations Criminal Justice Information Network, and preparation of technical co-operation projects for introducing computers in the management of criminal justice and for training criminal justice staff in their use.

The report set out a variety of possibilities for bilateral and multilateral co-operation at the international level. Among them were assistance to national authorities in the development of methodologies for the creation and use of information systems tailored to national needs; regional, sub-regional or interregional training seminars to sensitize policy makers to the need to plan for and implement computerization projects; international collection, dissemination and exchange of information on appropriate general purpose software and training courses; networking mechanisms to broaden the scope of information exchange among Member States and institutions; bilateral and multilateral assistance in national training programmes for trainers, user-managers and systems personnel; and formulation and implementation of specific projects, upon request of Member States, to be financed bilaterally and multilaterally.

In an August addendum [A/CONF.144/14/Add.1] to the report, the Secretariat presented an executive summary of the Manual on Computerization in the Management of Criminal Justice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/109.

Computerization of criminal justice

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/72 of 8 December 1989, in which the question of computerization of criminal justice was addressed,

Recalling also resolution 9 of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on the development of crime and criminal justice information and statistical systems,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1986/12 of 21 May 1986,

Bearing in mind the recommendations on the computerization of criminal justice administration contained in the report of the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on topic II, "Criminal justice policies in relation to problems of imprisonment, other penal sanctions and alternative measures", which emanated from the European Seminar on Computerization of Criminal Justice Information Systems: Realities, Methods, Prospects and Effects, held at Popowo, Poland, from 18 to 22 May

Aware that crime poses a serious problem for the personal security of individuals and for their enjoyment of human rights, thereby adversely affecting the quality of life and harming the development process,

Aware also that inefficiencies, inequalities or failures in the administration of criminal justice may themselves infringe on the rights and personal security of individuals,

Recognizing that the computerization of criminal justice administration is an important mechanism for the promotion of the efficient and humane management of criminal justice as long as the protection of privacy, the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are taken into account,

Taking note with appreciation of the principles on the storage, use and protection of data enunciated in the final report of the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files,

Recognizing that computerization of criminal justice is an important mechanism for the production of statistical information that would benefit national Governments and the international community by providing data on crime trends and the operation of criminal justice systems,

Recognizing also that the growth of crime nationally and internationally calls for enhanced international co-operation,

Noting that the European Seminar and the first United Nations workshop on the computerization of criminal justice information organized within the framework of the Eighth Congress offered a suitable opportunity to share experiences and establish viable policy options on this issue.

Conscious that the promotion of the computerization of criminal justice administration among Member States requires the enhancement of technical co-operation activities,

Emphasizing the common problems faced by all Member States in the administration and computerization of criminal justice, and the fact that both developing and developed countries may, through an enhanced capacity for an exchange of information on an international level, benefit from such international co-operation in the process of computerization,

Mindful that technical co-operation requires extensive expertise and resources and new logistical arrangements for the speedy delivery of services relating to the computerization of criminal justice administration,

Noting with appreciation the draft directory of automated criminal justice information systems submitted by the Helsinki Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, to the first United Nations workshop on the computerization of criminal justice information,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General, to the extent that the activities referred to in the present resolution cannot be undertaken within existing resources and with available expertise, to prepare proposals for submission to potential donors in the governmental, inter-governmental and private sectors, in possible consortium, for the provision of such funding and expertise; such proposals should include pilot projects to demonstrate the value and viability of such activities, and should serve as a basis for ensuring long-term resource support from diverse sources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the network of United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, to strengthen the Global Crime and Criminal Justice Information Network by:

(a) Developing and distributing appropriate publications, reports and newsletters;

(b) Developing a directory of innovative programmes for the computerization of the administration of criminal justice;

(c) Organizing regional and interregional meetings, seminars and workshops on a continuing basis;

(d) Maintaining an up-to-date roster of individuals and organizations to form the basis of an international technical co-operation infrastructure;

(e) Enhancing communication between Member States by utilizing an electronic information network;

(f) Facilitating the exchange of criminal justice computer applications;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the network of United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, to establish a technical co-operation programme for the systematization and computerization of criminal justice in order to offer training, assess needs, formulate and execute specific projects, and to report on the results achieved to the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to establish an international group of experts which would be supported by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat, would report regularly to the Secretary-General and would have inter-regional representation and responsibility for:

(a) Reviewing and assessing national experiences in the computerization of criminal justice;

(b) Overseeing the establishment of the technical co-operation programme;

(c) Monitoring the activities of the technical co-operation programme;

(d) Informing Member States of the potential availability of funds and services from various donors in the governmental, intergovernmental and private sectors;

(e) Informing such donors of the needs of Member States for assistance;

(f) Consulting with relevant experts in the private sector in the field of criminal justice;

5. Requests that adequate information on the experience of Member States with systematization and computerization should be included in the Global Crime and Criminal Justice Information Network and that the necessary facilities for the exchange of general substantive information between Member States should be provided in the Network;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to pay special attention to the developing countries in providing technical assistance and co-operation for the formulation of information programmes and statistics regarding crime and criminal justice;

7. Urges Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, specialized agencies and other bodies, including, in particular, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, and interested entities in the private sector with technical co-operation programmes, to consider giving high priority to criminal justice systematization and computerization projects in such programmes;

8. Also urges Member States to assist the Secretary-General in the funding of the Global Crime and Criminal Justice Information Network, the technical co-operation programme and the work of the international group of experts;

9. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, in preparing the provisional agenda for the Ninth Congress, to consider including the question of the computerization of the administration of criminal justice as one of the items, and to consider also the organization of the second United Nations workshop on the computerization of criminal justice information within the framework of the Ninth Congress in order to allow for the sharing of experiences in technical co-operation among Member States and other interested parties on the improvement of the administration of criminal justice.

Human resources

Human resources development

In October, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/451] on developing human resources for development, prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 44/213 [YUN 1989, p. 596]. The report examined the policies and practices in developing countries for human resources development in the context of the patterns of resource allocation among the fundamental sectors of health, nutrition and education, not only within each of those sectors but also between rural and urban areas. It further examined international support for national efforts in terms of direct aid, higher education in developed countries, employment in transnational corporations operating in developing countries, and public discussion of human resources development in international forums sponsored by intergovernmental organizations. The report stated that, in many respects, the emphasis on the human condition came closer to general ideas about the purpose of development than strictly economic measures such as gross domestic product per capita, but that, generally, most measures of human development showed a strong relationship with the level of economic development. It drew attention to human resources development as both a source of immediate gains in human well-being and a crucial means of expanding the productive capacity of economies.

The report found that there was a demonstrable waste of human resources in developing countries due to early death, recurring and disabling sickness and illiteracy, and an obvious need for the acquisition of a variety of new skills, for which education was essential. It stated that, although striking progress had been made in human resources development in those countries as a whole, the decade of the 1980s was marked by stagnation and reversals in many of them, especially in Africa and Latin America. A fresh start on human resources development was thus essential to raise the standards of well-being, which largely depended, however, on the policies of developing countries themselves. Granted that adequate resources for the purpose were essential, development of human resources could be greatly served by the reallocation of more available resources from secondary and tertiary education to primary education, from curative medical services to primary health care, and from subsidies for the politically vocal to subsidies for adequate nutrition and satisfactory hygiene for the needy. In view of the long-term contribution to total growth made by equitable distribution of resources, a larger proportion of government resources should be mobilized to enable broader access to human resource benefits, which would mean changing the conditions under which high-income groups often received subsidies at the expense of lower-income groups.

Given the large amount of resources allocated for human resources development in developing countries, efficiency in their use was important. For example, if fairly simple structures were used to provide educational facilities, capital expenditure on education could be more widely spread. The close association between health and nutrition improvements and progress in school pointed to the need for considering policies in those areas. Attention should be paid to the supply of teaching materials in educational institutions and of drugs and equipment in health institutions, as well as to better management practices and accountability to consumers, to make for higher productivity.

International measures cited as contributing to the improvement of human resources development policies in developing countries included comparative analyses of those policies undertaken by international institutions, as well as closer analyses of patterns of resource allocation, cost structures and management practices, and drawing to the attention of the public and political leaders the importance of and opportunities for human resources development in their economies. Also cited was giving students from developing countries the opportunity to study in developed countries.

Human resources development through technical cooperation

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in a report transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in February [A/45/113], presented a broad study of the technical cooperation activities of various bodies and organizations in the UN system on human resources development and drew attention to the problems they faced in implementing their programmes. The UN organs covered in the study were the Secretariat's Department of Technical Cooperation for Development, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Population Fund, the five regional commissions, with specific coverage of the activities of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, and 11 specialized agencies.

JIU concluded that the UN system's contribution to human resources development was undeniable and that Member States were the principal beneficiaries. That contribution often failed, however, to be well integrated into the developing countries' development process and lacked co-ordination so that optimum benefit could not be derived from it. For instance, difficulties had been encountered in placing fellows or trainees in higher educational institutions in the West due to stringent admission requirements. There was a high wastage rate of those who had successfully completed training, because either their Governments did not assign them in areas for which they had been specifically trained, or they were not given the opportunity to enter fully into the production process.

In conclusion, JIU pointed to the need for a more co-ordinated approach to the question of human resources development. Accordingly, it recommended that, first, the Secretary-General be authorized to establish an inter-agency "focal point", which could be assigned to UNDP, to monitor and assess co-ordination of the preparation of human resource development programmes and of their implementation by Member States and UN agencies, to advise them of progress made and difficulties encountered and to report annually to the General Assembly on results, proposals and new developments. Second, activities should be more oriented towards promoting human fulfilment at the grass roots, thereby to ensure active participation at that level in the development process. Third, human resources development and its integration in the development process should be kept as a permanent agenda item of the meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), to enable a more thorough discussion of criteria, the methodological approach and all other aspects of the subject.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), whose comments on the JIU report were transmitted to the Assembly in October [A/45/113/Add.1], shared JIU's view that knowledge and understanding of the fundamental underlying relationships between human resources development and social and economic development, and of the strong interactions among the several components of human resources development, was still inadequate. While ACC found the report useful as a compendium of human resources development activities, a solid analytical framework based on clearly established methodology and terms of reference would have made the report more persuasive.

As to JIU's recommendations, ACC agreed on the importance of co-ordination among agencies in programme implementation. It felt, however, that co-ordination arrangements must be flexible to take account of the broad scope and diversified nature of the activities undertaken by organizations. ACC members moreover pointed out that several modalities already existed for achieving better co-ordination. Regarding the possibility of entrusting the focal-point function to UNDP, many ACC members were of the view that human resource development activities in the UN system went beyond UNDP-funded projects, and such a focal point might not be suitable to deal with training projects or activities financed directly by individual donor Governments. As to grass-roots mobilization, it was pointed out that certain training programmes were directed to higher professional levels because of the highly technical and professional nature of some agencies' training programmes. ACC welcomed and agreed with the third recommendation and believed its discussion could be pursued in the Economic and Social Council.

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/191.

Developing human resources for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the human being is at the centre of all development activities,

Considering that human resources are an essential means of achieving economic and social development goals,

Recalling its resolution 44/213 of 22 December 1989 on developing human resources for development and other earlier resolutions on the same subject, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/120 of 28 July 1989 on the development of human resources,

Referring to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, the annex to which contains the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, in particular the relevant sections thereof on human resources development,

Reaffirming the contribution to the elaboration of the concept of human resources development made by the Jakarta Plan of Action on Human Resources Development in the Region of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Khartoum Declaration: Towards a Human-focused Approach to Socio-economic Recovery and Development in Africa, the African Alternative Framework to Structural Adjustment Programmes for Socio-economic Recovery and Transformation and the communiqué of the tenth Meeting of the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community, held at Grand Anse, Grenada, from 3 to 7 July 1989,

Welcoming the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children

UNDP activities

Human Development Report

The Human Development Report 1990, published by UNDP, was the first in a series of annual reports on the human dimension of development. Its orientation was practical and pragmatic and it aimed to analyse country experience in order to distill practical insights. Its purpose was not to recommend any particular model of development but to make relevant experience available to all policy makers. Its five chapters dealt with the definition and measurement of human development; an analysis of human development since 1960; economic growth and human development; human development strategies for the 1990s; and a special focus on urbanization and human development.

As defined by the Report, human development was a process of enlarging people's choices, the three essential ones being to lead a long and healthy life, to be educated and to have access to resources needed for a decent standard of living. Additional choices ranged from political, economic and social freedom to opportunities for being creative and productive and for enjoying personal self-respect and guaranteed human rights. Human development involved achieving a balance between the acquisition of human capabilities-improved health, knowledge and skills-and the use made of them. According to that concept of human development, development in general must be more than just concerned with the expansion of income and wealth; it must embrace the total human condition.

The Report's central message was that, while growth in national production was absolutely necessary to meet all essential human objectives, it was important to study how successfully growth translated into human development in various societies. For example, it was important to study what policies had led some societies to achieve high levels of human development despite modest levels of per capita income while others had failed to translate their comparatively high income levels and rapid economic growth into commensurate levels of human development.

According to the Report's main conclusions and policy messages, the developing countries had made significant progress towards human development in the last three decades: life expectancy had risen from 46 years in 1960 to 62 years in 1987, the adult literacy rate had increased from 43 per cent to 60 per cent, the under-five mortality rate had been halved, primary health care had been extended to 61 per cent of the population and safe drinking water to 55 per cent, and the rise in food production had exceeded the rise (of 2 billion) in population by about 20 per cent. During the same period, North-South gaps in basic human development had narrowed considerably, even as income gaps had widened: in 1987, the average per capita income in the South had been only 6 per cent of that in the North, but its average life expectancy and literacy rates had been 80 per cent and 66 per cent, respectively, of the averages in the North; developing countries had reduced their average infant mortality from nearly 200 deaths per 1,000 live births to about 80 in nearly four decades (1950-1988), a feat that took the industrial countries nearly a century to accomplish. Averages of progress in human development concealed large disparities within developing countries between urban and rural areas, between rich and poor, and between men and women: rural areas had half the urban areas' access to health services and safe drinking water, the literacy rate for women was still only two thirds that for men, and the levels of health, nutrition and education among high-income groups far exceeded those of the poor.

Respectable levels of human development were possible even at modest levels of income, as demonstrated by, among a number of other countries, Sri Lanka, which had managed a life expectancy of 71 years and an adult literacy rate of 87 per cent with a per capita income of $400; by contrast, Saudi Arabia, where per capita income was $6,200, life expectancy was only 64 years and the adult literacy rate was an estimated 55 per cent. The link between economic growth and human progress was not automatic. Social subsidies were absolutely necessary for poor income groups.

Developing countries were not too poor to pay for human development and also take care of economic growth: restructuring budget priorities to balance economic and social spending should move to the top of the national agenda; and Governments should improve the efficiency of social spending by creating a policy and budgetary framework to allow a more desirable mix among various social expenditures, for example, by reorienting priorities from highly trained doctors to paramedics, from urban to rural services, from general to vocational education, from expensive housing for the privileged to sites and service projects for the poor, from the formal to the informal sector and to programmes for the unemployed and underemployed. The human costs of adjustments were often a matter of choice, not of compulsion: in a sudden squeeze on resources, it was for policy makers to decide whether budgetary cuts would fall on military spending, parastatals and social subsidies for privileged groups or on essential health, education and well-targeted food subsidies. A favourable external environment was vital to support human development strategies in the 1990s, which called for a satisfactory solution of the lingering debt crisis, with debts drastically written down and a debt refinancing facility created within the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Some developing countries, especially in Africa, needed external assistance more than others; between 1979 and 1985, the number of Africans below the poverty line had increased by almost two thirds, compared with an average increase of one fifth in the entire developing world, and was projected to rise from around 250 million in 1985 to more than 400 million by the end of the century. Technical co-operation had to be restructured if it was to help build human capabilities and national capacities in developing countries; programmes should focus more on human development issues to broaden the base for more effective national capacity-building; and emphasis should be placed on improving the availability of relevant social indicators and on assisting Governments to formulate their own human development plans. A participatory approach, including the involvement of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), was crucial to any viable strategy for human development and a significant reduction in population growth rates was essential for visible improvements in human development levels. The rapid population growth in the developing world was becoming concentrated in cities, a process that seemed inevitable and required effective government programmes to deal with its consequent problems. Finally, sustainable development strategies should meet the needs of current generations without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their needs.

Governing Council action. On 22 June [E/1990/29(dec.90/13)], the UNDP Governing Council took note of UNDP efforts in the area of human development, including publication of the Human Development Report. It requested the Administrator to assist with convening regional consultations, within existing resources, so that the specific human development concerns and priorities of developing countries could be identified and taken into account in the context of the future work on that issue. It further requested him to inform it of the outcome of those consultations at its 1991 session in order to facilitate a decision on future work in human development.

Education and literacy

International Literacy Year and World Conference on Education for All

The year 1990, proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 42/104 [YUN 1987, p. 654] as International Literacy Year, was marked by the World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 5-9 March), sponsored by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Bank, joined by a number of co-sponsors and associate sponsors. The Conference had three principal objectives: to highlight the importance and impact of basic education and to renew commitment to make it available to all; to forge a global consensus on a framework for action to meet the basic learning needs of children, youth and adults; and to provide a forum for sharing experiences and research results to invigorate ongoing and planned programmes. On 9 March, the Conference adopted the World Declaration on Education for All and a Framework for Action to Meet Basic Learning Needs. It also endorsed two statements on follow-up to the Conference.

Details of the Conference, as well as of the activities and measures undertaken during International Literacy Year, were provided by the UNESCO Director-General in a report [A/46/281-E/1991/112] transmitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The report noted that the Declaration consisted of three parts: its purpose, which was to meet the basic learning needs of every person; an expanded vision encompassing universalizing access and promoting equity, focusing on learning, broadening the means and scope of basic education, enhancing the environment for learning and strengthening partnerships at all levels; and a statement of requirements, including developing a supporting policy context, mobilizing resources and strengthening international solidarity. Also noted were the Framework for Action setting forth principles, policies and approaches for implementing the Declaration; and a statement on follow-up to the Conference stressing that the principal follow-up would be at the country level. The second statement concerned principles on the involvement of NGOs in follow-up activities with non-NCO bodies.

UN research and training institutes

UN Institute for Training and Research

Further restructuring of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) took place during 1990. As requested by General Assembly resolution 42/197 [YUN 1987, p. 656], its staff was more drastically reduced and its statute was amended to reflect the various changes that the restructuring had introduced in its organization and functioning. Despite the drastic staff reduction, the volume of UNITAR activities had continued to grow, thanks to resources mobilized through special-purpose grants and to the dynamism of the UNITAR staff and fellows. Also, the number of UNITAR trainees had increased; the increase was 1,053 between June 1986 and June 1988 and 1,779 between June 1988 and June 1990, or nearly 70 per cent.

Activities

The Executive Director of UNITAR reported in October [A/45/14] on the implementation of the Institute's training and research programmes and matters concerning its functioning during the period from July 1988 to June 1990. As in previous years, the UNITAR, under its training programme for international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy, continued to organize orientation courses on the role, function and work of the United Nations for new members of permanent missions to the United Nations in New York and Geneva and on practices and procedures of organs and institutions of the UN system; workshops on the drafting of international legal instruments, on the structure, retrieval and use of UN documentation for documentalists and other permanent mission members; annual seminars on international development issues for senior members; seminars or workshops on the setting, issues and techniques of multilateral economic negotiations; and briefing seminars for new delegates to the Assembly sessions. UNITAR also continued to organize at The Hague, Netherlands, the joint United Nations/UNITAR international law fellowship programme for government legal advisers from developing countries, as well as courses in international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy for other government officials of those countries. Under a special-purpose grant from the Ford Foundation and in co-operation with the United Nations Centre for Human Rights, UNITAR was preparing a manual on human rights reporting, due for completion before year's end.

Under its training programme for economic and social development, UNITAR held two seminars relating to debt management: an awareness seminar for senior officials from the United Republic of Tanzania (Dar es Salaam, 14-15 January) and Uganda (Kampala, 17-20 January) and a training seminar on the legal aspects of the subject (Nairobi, Kenya, 19 February-2 March). Also held, under the auspices of the United Nations Environment Programme and UNITAR, was a 16-week training programme that began in May (Bangkok, Thailand) for 12 scientists from the International Centre for Integrated Mountain Development and from two participating countries.

Research activities during the year encompassed the publication of books, monographs and pamphlets, as well as the organization of research seminars and conferences. The book entitled The United Nations and International Business, produced under a project on the economic and social history of the United Nations, was commercially published in 1990. The third issue of the UNITAR Newsletter was published in June/July. A directory of some 337 research projects undertaken by more than 140 institutions in 26 European countries was being printed, and a comprehensive guide on the workings of the UN system in Geneva—a major centre of UN-related multilateral diplomacy and of diverse institutions with which that diplomacy was concerned—was in preparation for publication before year's end. The quarterly newsletter The Heavy Oiler continued to be published by the UNITAR/UNDP Centre for Heavy Crude and Tar Sands.

Financing

The General Fund of UNITAR was used to fund only those training activities in international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy benefiting all Member States, i.e., members of permanent missions to the United Nations in New York and in Geneva, as well as to satisfy some training needs of the UN Secretariat. All other UNITAR training activities, in that field or in economic and social development, were funded through special-purpose grants. The Executive Director of UNITAR stated that the Institute's financial situation remained a matter of deep concern as government contributions to the General Fund continued to decline. To enable the Institute to repay its debt to the United Nations and to establish a reserve fund to improve that situation, General Assembly resolution 42/197 [YUN 1987, p. 656] had approved the Secretary-General's recommendation for the sale of the entire UNITAR headquarters property. The building remained unsold in 1990, however, due to a depressed real estate market.

In a November report on UNITAR [A/45/634], the Secretary-General discussed financial questions relating to the UNITAR budget and budgetary performance in 1990. He noted that the Executive Director presented to the UNITAR Board of Trustees at its twenty-eighth session (New York, 16-20 April) an expenditure budget for 1990 of $1,335,550, together with a new budget for programme support costs of $277,600, consistent with Assembly resolution 42/197. Their combined sum of $1,613,150 represented a 36 per cent increase over the 1989 budget of $1,186,700. Difficulties of timing did not permit the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) to review the proposed budget, as called for by Assembly resolution 44/175 [YUN 1989, p. 600], prior to its approval by the Board of Trustees in April. To avoid recurrence of the same situation, the Board decided to hold its future regular sessions in mid-May. Meanwhile, the Board conditionally approved the proposed budget on the understanding that the Executive Director, in consultation with the UN Controller, would make whatever revisions were necessary to conform with ACABQ's comments. It agreed to review the budget again at its September special session if those comments were of a substantive nature.

ACABQ's comments focused on the presentation and format of the budget proposals, the level of the estimated expenditures and the timing of the budget preparation. It recommended, inter alia, that the proposed reclassification of two P-5 posts to the D-1 level, as approved by the Assembly, should not be implemented in the light of UNITAR's current financial difficulties and that the amount of $150,000 as interest income from the reserve fund for 1990 should be deleted from income estimates since the UNITAR building had not been sold. The Executive Director explained to the Board in September that the absence of that interest income meant the United Nations would have to advance UNITAR $400,000, instead of the $250,000 initially envisaged, to balance the budget. As the Board felt it was too late substantively to modify the budget, it authorized the Executive Director, subject to the availability of funds, to incur expenditure not to exceed the corresponding 1989 expenditure between the beginning of the budgetary year, on 1 January, and the date of the budget's formal approval.

The Secretary-General noted that budgetary performance in 1990 had been disappointing; income had again not matched expectations. At the same time, UNITAR had been unable to effect savings in expenditures to offset the income shortfall and expenditures against a reserve account set up two years before had continued to mount. The combined effect of the shortfalls and deficits disclosed that UNITAR's debt to the United Nations might be estimated at about $4.2 million by the end of 1990. Adding that to the $4,410,566 advanced by the United Nations in 1989, UNITAR's total indebtedness was projected at $9.1 million by 31 December 1990.

The Secretary-General stated that, despite his efforts at laying down foundations for an enduring revitalization of the Institute, there had been no solution to the financial difficulties facing it. While the Assembly had repeatedly reaffirmed its support for the continuing relevance and importance of the Institute's mandate, Member States had not provided sufficient voluntary contributions to the General Fund, whose expenditures had repeatedly exceeded its income. UNITAR's debt to the United Nations had reached a level that could not be raised further without calling into question UNITAR's ability ever to repay its debt. For the Secretary-General, there would appear to be only two possible solutions: a resumption, at significantly higher and predictable levels, of government voluntary contributions to the General Fund, or significant allocations to it from the UN regular budget on a continuing basis. As the first option was unlikely to materialize, the Secretary-General believed that the recommendations advanced by the Board of Trustees in September deserved the Assembly's careful consideration.

Those recommendations called for: deferring payments of UNITAR's debt to the United Nations, pending the sale of its headquarters building, for about five years or shorter, in the expectation that the real estate market would improve in that time; UN budget support of the General Fund, given the purposes for which that Fund was used; and UN funding for UNITAR research on the United Nations, given the difficulty of raising voluntary contributions for that activity. If the Assembly was not prepared to act on those recommendations, the Secretary-General indicated that it might wish to decide what other course of action should be taken.

According to the financial report and audited financial statements of UNITAR for the year ended 31 December 1990 [A/46/5/Add.4], the General Fund showed an income of $680,966 and expenditures of $1,398,676, or $717,710 in excess of income. The Fund also showed assets of $340,981 against which were liabilities totalling $4,187,507 (of which $4,059,917 was due to the United Nations), a deficit of $2,650,732, and cumulative expenditures (for 1988, 1989 and 1990) of $1,195,794 against the Reserve Account. That Account was where certain costs were being carried temporarily outside the UNITAR budget against the anticipated proceeds from the proposed sale of the UNITAR property.

The Special Purpose Grants Fund indicated a total income of $3,476,478, while expenditures amounted to $2,543,467, or an excess of $933,011 in income over expenditure. Against the Fund's total assets of $1,961,790 were liabilities amounting to $225,899, leaving a balance in the Fund of $1,735,891. The Special Account for Programme Support Costs reflected an income of $168,670 and expenditures of $148,494, leaving an available balance of $20,176.

The Board of Auditors recommended, among other corrective actions, that steps be taken to improve the liquidity position of the General Fund and to maximize unused working capital of the Special Purpose Grants Fund; that guidelines on the utilization of the Reserve Account be established, with UNITAR being more involved in the control of that account; and that preparation of budget proposals take into consideration the downturn in revenue resources for more realistic assumptions and projections.

By resolution 45/235 of 21 December, the Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNITAR for the period ended 31 December 1989 [A/45/5/Add.4], which had been submitted in 1990.

Restructuring

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/175 [YUN 1989, p. 600], the Secretary-General presented a November report [A/45/634] on the restructuring of UNITAR, on financial questions and on longer-term issues related to the financing of UNITAR. The report indicated that UNITAR's draft work programme for the 1990-1991 biennium had been prepared on the basis of the criteria laid down by Assembly resolution 42/197 [YUN 1987, p. 656] for the restructuring of UNITAR. The work programme provided for a core programme of activities funded through the General Fund and an expanded programme of activities funded through extrabudgetary resources, the former focusing on training in international co-operation and multilateral diplomacy, and the latter on training for economic and social development, and research on the United Nations, in energy and natural resources and on the future of the main developing regions of the world. In keeping with other provisions of the same resolution, the draft work programme reflected priority setting in the light of available financial resources and a research programme entirely funded through special-purpose grants. To implement adequately its work programme, UNITAR continued to resort to the services, free of charge, of full-time senior fellows appointed by the Secretary-General, who, in accordance with established procedures, extended for another year the term of the eight full-time senior fellows appointed in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 599] and appointed a ninth senior fellow for 1990. In connection with the Assembly's authorization enabling UNITAR to enter into arrangements to execute UNDP-funded projects falling within its functions, UNITAR had agreed with UNDP in January that, when serving as executing agency, it would adhere to UNDP standard basic executive agency agreements.

The report stated that, at its 1990 special session (New York, 10-12 September), the Board of Trustees approved a proposed project for the establishment of a UNITAR training centre for international co-operation and socio-economic development in Atlanta, Georgia, it being understood that the centre would become operational only if the United States did not object to its location and that its creation and functioning would not incur any financial cost to the UNITAR budget. On 12 September, the United States communicated to the Executive Director that, after a careful review in accordance with its obligations and responsibilities as the host country to the United Nations, it could not concur with the proposal.

As to the Assembly's request that the Secretary-General proceed rapidly with the sale of the UNITAR headquarters building, the report noted that the Secretary-General had submitted two progress reports to the Board of Trustees at its April and September sessions. Those reports indicated that, as reported to ACABQ, efforts to sell the building at the highest obtainable price had failed to produce a buyer. The Secretary-General would consult with ACABQ in due course on the appropriate disposition of the building.

The report further noted that the stringent restructuring of the Institute—which had taken a heavy toll on its staff and could not be further intensified without bringing the work of the Institute to a standstill—had not prevented UNITAR from slipping into repeated fiscal deficits and growing indebtedness vis-a-vis the United Nations. In brief, the process of revitalizing the Institute on a long-term basis after years of financial tribulations appeared to have reached a new impasse as a solution had yet to be found to the problem of devising ways and means to fund the Institute's core budget. The matter of the long-term issues related to the financing of the Institute was reviewed by the Board of Trustees at its September special session in order to respond to the Secretary-General's request for suggestions on effective ways of solving the problem. The Board adopted a number of recommendations (see above, under "Financing"), which the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly.

Annexed to the report were the results of a meeting (Geneva, 11 July 1990) of autonomous research institutes of the United Nations, organized by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. Held in response to Assembly resolution 44/175 [YUN 1989, p. 600], the meeting discussed ways and means of building upon the already existing network of functional relationships among research institutes to enable them to move towards a flexible and more sustained system of interaction that could lead to mutually reinforcing initiatives within the framework of their respective mandates and to make appropriate contributions to the work of UN intergovernmental bodies as well.

The research institutes attending the meeting included UNITAR, the United Nations University, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research, the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning, the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, the Research Administration Office of the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund Institute, and the International Institute for Labour Studies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/219.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolutions 41/172 of 5 December 1986, 42/197 of 11 December 1987, 43/201 of 20 December 1988 and 44/175 of 19 December 1989.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, and taking into account the statements made before the Second Committee on 30 November 1990 by the representative of the Secretary-General and the Executive Director of the Institute,

Recognizing the continuing importance and relevance of the functions of the Institute particularly in the field of training,

Recognizing also the need for Governments to contribute or increase their voluntary contributions, as appropriate, to the Institute,

Noting with concern the continuing lack of a sufficiently broad base of donor countries supporting the Institute,

Paying tribute to the Institute for its activities since its creation in 1965,

Deeply concerned that the sale of the headquarters property of the Institute, which would have enabled a reserve fund for the Institute to be established, has not yet been completed,

Noting with concern that the 1990 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities did not provide the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with the level of resources required for it to maintain a minimum training programme and institutional structure,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/175 and the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research;

2. Strongly reiterates its urgent desire that the Institute sell its headquarters property at the earliest reasonable opportunity, preferably within the next twelve months;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint an appropriately qualified high-level independent consultant, to be paid from extrabudgetary resources, who would submit a report directly to the Secretary-General containing recommendations on:

(a) The continued relevance of the mandate of the Institute, taking into account the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and other research and training activities of the United Nations system, a review and assessment of all aspects of the current activities of the Institute and their benefits to the United Nations and its Member States, inter alia, in the fields of the maintenance of peace and security and the promotion of economic and social development, and an assessment of whether those activities can be more effectively carried out by the Institute or by other bodies in the United Nations system;

(b) The overall staffing requirements for the Institute, including the number and level of such staff, in order to meet satisfactorily the needs of the United Nations and its Member States;

(c) The financial means for meeting those needs, based on the findings;

(d) The feasibility of utilizing the facilities of the Institute for the training of personnel for peace-keeping operations;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the report of the independent consultant to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and to the Board of Trustees of the Institute for comment and to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

5. Requests that the budgetary proposals of the Institute continue to be submitted to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for review and comment prior to approval by the Board of Trustees of the Institute;

6. Reaffirms that the activities of the Institute that are not funded from the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research shall continue to be funded through voluntary contributions mobilized as special-purpose grants from Governments, intergovernmental organizations, foundations and other non-governmental sources;

7. Agrees with the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the Institute should, immediately after the sale of its property, repay the amounts currently owed to the United Nations and use the balance to establish a reserve fund for the Institute;

8. Recommends that the Institute, with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, should consider financial mechanisms in order to finance its General Fund budget for 1991;

9. Decides to take a decision on the future of the Institute at its forty-sixth session, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 42/197;

10. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to explore new modalities for greater interfacing among United Nations research bodies, and requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to continue to organize meetings of United Nations research institutes with a view to enhancing practical co-operation among them, particularly in regard to the formulation and implementation of their programmes and plans;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN University

Activities

The institutional development of the United Nations University (UNU), an autonomous academic institution within the UN system, remained of paramount concern in 1990 to the University's Rector and Council. Several meetings were held (Paris, July and September; Tokyo, October) to which various consultants and advisers were invited to assist UNU to elaborate a comprehensive institutional development strategy, in particular to strengthen its institutional presence in developing countries.

The Council, in its report on the work of UNU in 1990 [E/1991/15], stated that the most important event of the year was the start of programme activities in research, training and dissemination under UNU's second medium-term perspective for 1990-1995, organized under five interrelated areas reflecting the major global issues of concern to UNU: peace, culture and governance; the global economy; global life support systems; science and technology; and population, health and human welfare. While the first medium-term perspective (1982-1987) had concentrated on broadening the work of UNU beyond its initial three programmes into timely research on important emerging issues, the second aimed at developing strength in certain areas through UN U's institutional mechanisms.

Under examination in programme area 1 were governance and conflict resolution, programme proposals and activities for which were discussed at a meeting (Bogota, Colombia, May); multilateralism and the UN system, for which an initial consultative meeting was held to review a draft programme proposal and initial research activities (Paris, June); and culture and development, the theme, as it concerned the Asia and Pacific region, of two international conferences (Fukuoka, Kyushu, Japan, March and September). Under programme area 2 were activities related to: hunger and poverty, discussed at a conference (Helsinki, Finland, July); money, finance and trade, the subject of an April meeting and a planning conference (Ottawa, Canada, September); the economics of environment and development; and women in development, studies on which were brought before research conferences in July. The UNU World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER) in Helsinki carried out the programmes under that programme area.

Activities under programme area 3 centred on: mountain ecology and sustainable development; a programme for natural resources in Africa; the human dimensions of global change, in connection with which three meetings were held (Moscow, March; The Hague, September; Mexico, November), as were an international conference (August/September) and a symposium (Palma de Mallorca, Spain, November); sustainable development in the humid tropics; and energy, technology and environment. Programme area 4 was concerned with the implications of advances in science and technology, science and technology for development, biotechnology in Latin America and the Caribbean, and microprocessors and informatics. Programme area 5 dealt with alternative rural-urban configurations, which was debated at a symposium (UNU Centre, October), food and nutrition for human and social development, the subject of a major global conference (Washington, D.C., November); and the implications of demographic change.

Regarding the year's training activities, 29 UNU fellows completed their studies, bringing to 1,026 the total number of fellows trained by UNU since 1976. Fifty-four fellows started their training in, among other studies, economics and quantitative techniques, new and renewable sources of energy, geothermal energy, remote sensing technology, science and technology policy, food science and technology, and biotechnology. Most of the new fellowships had been made possible through cost-sharing arrangements with national scientific and research institutions and funds from external sources. Other training activities were also undertaken in conjunction with the five programme areas.

With the reorganization at the beginning of the year of the University's publication unit as the United Nations University Press, steps were taken to improve manuscript assessment to ensure high-quality publications, to expand sales and distribution, and to increase advertising, book notices and reviews. The new direction of the UNU Press was described in a widely distributed brochure entitled United Nations University as a Scholarly Publisher: the United Nations University Press. In addition to continuing publication of issues of the four UNU journals—Food and Nutrition Bulletin (F&B), Abstracts of Selected Solar Energy Technology (ASSET), Mountain Research and Development, and Food Composition Data—UNU published 27 books between January and August, listed in annex II of the Council's report. Also published were two issues of the University newsletter, Work in Progress, on the themes "A comprehensive view of the world in the 1990s" and "Universal human values".

Added to UNU's research and training centres were the newly established Institute for New Technologies, in the Netherlands, which became operational in June, and the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa, whose Director was appointed in April. Consistent with the priorities of the second medium-term perspective, eight new proposals were under consideration for: three institutes, for advanced studies in Japan, for software technology and for leadership development; four research and training centres, on global environment and human health, culture and development, governance and new and renewable energy sources; and a programme on ocean affairs and marine science.

The report noted that 1990 marked the fifteenth anniversary of the commencement of UNU's full operations in Tokyo with the assumption of office by its Rector. To commemorate the event, UNU organized two international symposia: one on the mega-city and mankind's future (Tokyo, October) and another on Japan's role in development and aid to the Association of South-East Asian Nations (November).

UNU continued to be financed entirely by voluntary contributions from Governments and other sources. As at 31 December 1990, it had received $177.6 million in actual payments to its Endowment Fund, from the investment of which UNU derived its main income. During 1990, 21 Governments and two other benefactors pledged and/or contributed a total of $11.08 million. In addition, $2,528,909 for specific programmes was contributed by a number of foundations and organizations, including UNDP and the World Bank.

During the year, the Rector and other senior staff undertook fund-raising missions to 23 countries. A meeting held (Paris, July) to discuss the University's institutional development, also discussed fund-raising strategies.

UNU Council

The UNU Council held two sessions in 1990: its thirty-fifth in Maastricht, Netherlands, from 25 to 29 June; and its thirty-sixth in Tokyo from 10 to 14 December. Symposia were held during the sessions, on emerging new technologies during the first and on "The changing world: towards the twenty-first century" during the second.

At the June session, the Council focused on the organization of the University's work and on the fundamental issues involving the establishment of its research and training centres and programmes. Management of the Endowment Fund was also discussed, with special consideration given to the question of reinvestment in the Fund of all windfall gains in income arising from unanticipated changes in exchange rates.

At the December session, the Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on Institutional and Programmatic Development, approved the proposed UNU supplementary and revised programme; on the recommendation of the Committee on Finance and Budget, it approved the budget for the biennium 1990-1991. Other items considered included the implementation of programme activities under the second (1990-1995) medium-term perspective, developments in the UNU Press, management of the Endowment Fund, the preliminary report of the UNU/WIDER review and evaluation team, and the Council's 1990 report on UNU. In addition, the Council elected its Chairman and Vice-Chairmen for 1991, as well as the Chairmen and members of each of its four committees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly, which had for its consideration the report on the work of UNU in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 601], submitted to it at its current session, adopted resolution 45/220.

21 December 1990 Meeting 71 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/45/855) without vote, 11 December (meeting 54); 30-nation draft (A/C.2/45/L.70/Rev.1); agenda item 85. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 2nd Committee 48, 50, 51, 54; plenary 71.

By resolution 45/235, also of 21 December, the Assembly accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNU for the biennium ended 31 December 1989 [A/45/5, vol. III], which had been submitted in 1990.

University for Peace

Tenth anniversary

In 1990, the University for Peace, established by General Assembly resolution 35/55 [YUN 1980, p. 1006], marked its tenth anniversary. The University's host country, Costa Rica, speaking before the Assembly on 24 October, stated that the University had worked for the last 10 years to promote graduate studies. It had developed two masters programmes for students from five continents, one in communications for peace, offered at University headquarters in Costa Rica, and the other in development and peace studies, offered at the University's European Centre in Belgrade, Yugoslavia. An agreement had been concluded with the Government of Colombia for the establishment in Bogota of an international centre (of the University) for the peaceful settlement of conflicts. The University had organized conferences, seminars, short courses and meetings in more than 17 countries, at which core curriculum subjects were emphasized, especially those in education for peace, the peaceful resolution of conflicts, negotiation skills, environment studies, human rights and international relations. It had also promoted research programmes stressing Central American issues. More than 15,000 people had been exposed to the University's messages. The University currently included a Centre for Information and Documentation for Peace, the Gandhi Centre for Television Production and the International Radio for Peace, transmitting short-wave programmes in Spanish, English, French and German, 16 hours a day.

In observance of its tenth anniversary, the University was organizing a round of high-level conferences on such topics as new development patterns, on the eve of the twenty-first century, prospects for a Central American community, and external and social debt in Latin America.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/8.

Tenth anniversary of the University for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/109 of 18 December 1978, 34/111 of 14 December 1979 and 35/55 of 5 December 1980, on the establishment of the University for Peace,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1985/2 of 24 May 1985 and 1986/6 of 21 May 1986 and its resolution 41/175 of 5 December 1986,

Taking into account the positive contribution which the University has made to the cause of peace through the various international programmes it has developed during its first ten years, in particular those focusing on Central America, as a contribution to efforts to promote peace, security and trust amongst the countries of the region and the economic and social development of that part of the American continent,

Beating in mind that 1990 marks the end of the first decade of continuous work and activities by this institution dedicated to research and education for peace,

1. Welcomes the fact that in 1990 the University for Peace completes its first decade of activities in the cause of peace, in accordance with the purposes and objectives for which it was established;

2. Invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace;

3. Appeals to Member States and governmental and non-governmental agencies which provide financial assistance for research to make financial contributions in order further to advance the objectives of the University;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to establish an agreement on co-operation between the United Nations and the University, in accordance with the Charter of the University;

5. Expresses its appreciation to Costa Rica, the host country, for its valuable support and contribution to the operation of the University;

Chapter XIII

Women

In 1990, the United Nations undertook the first five-year review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which were adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985). The Commission on the Status of Women, which carried out the review and appraisal at an extended thirty-fourth session (Vienna, 26 February–9 March), considered the first biennial report of the Secretary-General on progress made by the UN system in implementing the Strategies and made recommendations for action in the priority areas of equality, development and peace.

The Economic and Social Council in May adopted the recommendations and conclusions arising from the review and appraisal and urged Governments and international and non-governmental organizations to implement them, as did the General Assembly in December.

On the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Council adopted three resolutions related to the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies and others dealing with various aspects of the advancement of women, women in development and the rights of women. Also on the basis of the Commission's report, the Council recommended that a world conference on women be held in 1995 and that the Commission include preparations for the conference in its 1991-1995 work programme. That recommendation was endorsed by the Assembly in December.

Among other action by the Assembly concerning the situation of women were resolutions encouraging the United Nations and Member States to support efforts to increase women's literacy; urging Governments to participate actively in an interregional consultation on women in public life, to be held in 1991; and commending the efforts of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, which pioneered new ways to promote women's participation in national planning and innovative grass-roots activities.

The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, which marked its tenth anniversary in 1990, strengthened its work in statistics and indicators on women, including women's work in the informal sector. In May, the Council recommended that, given the growing role of research, training and information on women and development, the Institute continue to work on new methodological approaches in those fields.

In 1990, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) considered seven initial and five periodic reports of States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women at its January/February session. CEDAW also adopted recommendations on female circumcision and on avoidance of discrimination against women in the prevention and control of AIDS. By the end of the year, there were 103 States parties to the Convention.

Advancement of women

Implementation of Nairobi Strategies

First review and appraisal

In 1990, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/22 [YUN 1988, p. 617], the first five-year review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women was carried out by the Commission on the Status of Women. The Strategies had been adopted in 1985 by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) [YUN 1985, p. 937].

The Secretary-General's report to the Commission's February/March session on progress made at the national, regional and international levels in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies [E/CN.6/1990/5] was based on national reports received from 55 Member States, as well as on statistics and other information compiled from within the UN system and elsewhere. The report indicated that there had been progress in some areas since the Strategies were adopted in 1985, especially with regard to de jure equality. However, for a number of reasons, progress in achieving de facto equality—such as the full integration of women in development or full participation of women in peace—had slowed or stopped. In addition, the report outlined the long-term effects on women of demographic and social factors as well as the consequences of the economic conditions of the late 1980s. It noted national action taken in terms of the Strategies and pointed out that a number of steps had been taken by the UN system to improve its ability to assist national action in implementing them.

The Secretary-General concluded that, despite advances in some areas, the general pattern of implementation of the Strategies was one of a loss of dynamism and, unless implementation was greatly improved, many of the objectives would not be achieved by the year 2000. In each of the three objectives of the Strategies—equality, development and peace—there were areas in which positive developments had been made and others in which little progress was observed. At the national level, the institutional basis for the advancement of women remained weak due to insufficient authority, expertise and resources. At the international level, improvements made in planning and co-ordination were partially offset by the lack of sufficient resources to ensure implementation.

Also before the Commission, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1988/22, was the first biennial report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1990/7] on monitoring progress made by the UN system in the implementation of the Strategies. The report examined both intergovernmental and intersecretariat co-ordination during 1988-1989 to implement the Strategies as well as measures taken to strengthen institutional co-ordination and the focal points on the status of women. For each theme (equality, development, peace), the report reviewed the basic strategies and mandates adopted by intergovernmental bodies and the substantive and operational activities undertaken by the organizations of the UN system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/14.

Action to increase awareness of the slow progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on progress at the national, regional and international levels in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Aware of the fact that, although some progress was reported in the area of de jure equality, progress in de facto equality is slow in both developing and developed countries,

Deeply concerned about the seriousness of the situation in many developing countries, where economic stagnation or negative growth, continued population increase, the growing burden of debt, and reduction of public expenditures for social programmes as part of unavoidable adjustment-oriented policies have further constrained the opportunities for women to improve their situation,

Alarmed by trends, in particular in some developing countries, that suggest that there has been a regression in the status of women in education, employment and health, and that there has been slow or no progress in achieving the full integration of women in development or the full participation of women in efforts to promote peace,

Conscious of the fact that, in many countries, the national machinery for the advancement of women lacks the necessary technology and resources to gather and disseminate information or to formulate policies in favour of women,

Taking into account the fact that in many countries the issue of the advancement of women is receiving low priority,

Bearing in mind the role assigned to the United Nations system in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

1. Urges Governments to make renewed commitments to implement the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women by strengthening their national machinery and increasing the resources devoted to programmes for the advancement of women;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to carry out, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a world-wide educational campaign to increase awareness of the obstacles encountered in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, in particular:

(a) Obstacles to de facto equality in political participation and decision-making;

(b) Obstacles to the advancement of women in education, employment and health, in particular in developing countries, giving special attention to problems confronted by women living in extreme poverty, rural women and women in the informal sector of the economy;

(c) Obstacles to the participation of women in the peace process;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1991, through the Commission on the Status of Women, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/14

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/68) without vote, 8 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1990/25); agenda item 4.

Also on 24 May, the Council adopted resolution 1990/9.

Second report on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1988/22 of 26 May 1988, by which it established a comprehensive reporting system for the quinquennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Taking note of the first report of the Secretary-General on progress made at the national, regional and international levels in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind the obstacles encountered in the preparation of that report, in particular the inadequate response to the questionnaire on progress at the national level,

Aware of the need for disaggregated information on the situation of women, in particular in developing countries,

Aware that gender-based statistics produced by the Statistical Office of the Secretariat, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and corresponding bodies in the United Nations system should facilitate more serious research at all levels in the years to come,

Concerned that financial resources for activities related to the advancement of women in the United Nations system have not increased,

Bearing in mind the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to base the second report on progress made in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women on national reports and available analyses of statistical data in the United Nations system and in other pertinent governmental and non-governmental organizations;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-sixth session a report containing:

(a) Information on data that will be used in the formulation of the second report;

(b) An outline of the second report, in which special emphasis should be given to the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, in particular those referring to the status of women in developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/9

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/68) without vote, 8 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1990/25); agenda item 4.

Recommendations and conclusions

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/32 [YUN 1989, p. 647], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/1990/6] to the Commission on the Status of Women containing draft recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies. Informal meetings of an open-ended group of Member States had been held during the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly in 1989 to provide guidance to the Secretariat in preparing the draft recommendations and conclusions, which stated that, unless a number of key obstacles were overcome by 1995, it was doubtful that the Strategies could be implemented. However, elimination of many of the obstacles could bring about a self-sustaining process of change in related areas. Therefore, the draft recommendations focused on a limited number of actions that should be given priority in the five-year period 1990-1995 in the areas of equality, development and peace, particularly women's legal, economic, social and political empowerment and their more active participation in the economic and political life of their societies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/15.

Recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women to the year 2000

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987, in which it affirmed the appropriateness of a five-year cycle of review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Having reviewed the discussion held by the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session on the report of the Secretary-General on progress at the national, regional and international levels in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Adopts the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, annexed to the present resolution;

2. Urges Governments and international and non-governmental organizations to implement the recommendations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give wide distribution to the recommendations and conclusions;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include information on the implementation of the recommendations in his biennial monitoring report and in the report on the second regular review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies.

ANNEX

Recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

I. Increasing the pace of implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

1. After five years of implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and one third of the time set for achieving the objectives has elapsed, obstacles remain. Although the continued efforts of women throughout the world to achieve equality, development and peace have begun to have an effect at the grass-roots level, their efforts have yet to be translated into improvements in the daily lives of most women. This success is largely invisible: it is not yet reflected in official statistics and not always found in government policy. The entrenched resistance to women's advancement and the reduction of resources available for change that has accompanied the world economic situation in the late 1980s have meant that there has been a loss of impetus and even stagnation in some areas where more progress would have been expected.

2. The pace of implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies must be improved in the crucial last decade of the twentieth century. The cost to societies of failing to implement the Strategies will be high in terms of slowed economic and social development, misuse of human resources and reduced progress for society as a whole. For this reason, immediate steps should be taken to remove the most serious obstacles to the implementation of the Strategies.

A. Equality

3. The interdependence of the different political and social sectors on the one hand, and the legal and social situation on the other, needs to be recognized. However, de jure equality constitutes only the first step towards de facto equality. Most countries have enacted legal measures to ensure that women have equal opportunities before the law, that is, de jure equality. But de facto as well as de jure discrimination continues and visible political and economic commitment by Governments and non-governmental organizations will be required to eliminate it. One obstacle to eliminating de facto discrimination is that most women and men are not aware of women's legal rights or do not fully understand the legal and administrative systems through which they must be implemented. Some affirmative action measures require legal bases which still need to be created.

Recommendation I. Governments, in association with women's organizations and other non-governmental organizations, should take steps on a priority basis to inform women and men of women's rights under international conventions and national law and to prepare or continue campaigns for women's "legal literacy" using formal and non-formal education at all levels, the mass media and other means; efforts to this end should have been undertaken by 1994.

The work of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women should be widely publicized through forms of communication that are accessible to women in order to make them aware of their rights. National reports to the Committee should be widely disseminated within the respective countries and discussed by governmental and non-governmental organizations. Organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should be requested to examine national experience in promoting legal literacy with a view to assisting Governments, non-governmental organizations and women's movements in mounting successful campaigns.

Recommendation II. Governments should take steps to put legal equality into practice, including measures to provide a link between individual women and official machinery such as the establishment of offices of ombudsmen or similar systems. Where possible, access to legal redress by collective and individual legal action by national machinery and non-governmental organizations should be facilitated in order to assist women in ensuring the implementation of their rights.

4. There is abundant evidence that practices denigrating the role and potential of women continue to constitute obstacles in many countries. Whether reflected in stereotyped images of male and female roles in textbooks or in the glorification of traditional roles in the mass media, the perpetuation of such images retards women's advancement by providing justification for an unequal status quo.

Recommendation III. In the area of education, both formal and non-formal, Governments should promote the training of teachers on gender issues, co-education and professional counselling. Governments should complete the revision of textbooks expeditiously, if possible by 1995, in accordance with national law and practice, in order to eliminate sex-biased presentations and should, in conjunction with women's groups, take steps to reduce the stereotyping of women in the mass media, whether by self-policing on the part of the media or by other measures.

Governments, non-governmental organizations, women's groups and all other entities concerned should take steps to amend formal and informal educational systems at all levels to promote change in the psychological, social and traditional practices that are the foundation of the de facto obstacles to women's progress.

The United Nations Secretariat, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system should continue to analyse the extent and effects of stereotyping of women and implement innovative programmes to combat it.

5. Women have always been an important part of the work-force and their role will continue to grow with development, industrialization, economic necessity and the expansion of women's access to the economy. In most countries, however, the participation of women and men in the economy continues to be unequal, characterized by job segregation, insufficient training opportunities, unequal pay for work of equal value, inadequate career prospects and lack of full participation in economic decision-making.

Recommendation IV. Governments, non-governmental organizations and private-sector enterprises should take special measures to increase the proportion of women involved in economic decision-making, including studies on the incidence of women in such positions in the public and private sectors, the promotion of training programmes, analysis of alternative policies to provide women with careers leading to economic decision-making, and the adjustment of national legislation.

The United Nations should study the incidence of women in economic decision-making world-wide, analyse innovative national programmes to increase the proportion of women in economic decision-making positions and publicize the results, within existing resources.

Recommendation V. Governments and other appropriate parties should make efforts to increase the number of women in paid employment, including the adoption of measures to eliminate sex segregation in the labour market and to improve women's working conditions. Governments and other appropriate parties should collect, maintain and improve statistics showing the relative remuneration of women and men. They should renew their efforts to close the gap between women's and men's pay, possibly by 1995, and take special measures to address the principle of equal pay for work of equal value. They should also take concrete steps to measure the economic value of women's unpaid work with a view to taking it into account in national policies by 1995.

The United Nations system should complete work on methodological aspects of measuring pay inequities between women and men, unpaid work and work in the informal sector and should publish studies of countries where such measurements have been made.

6. That women are grossly underrepresented in political decision-making has been amply documented. This means that decisions on public policies that affect women's equality are still in the hands of men, who may not have the same incentive to pursue them as women. Despite indications that in some countries women, by voting for candidates or parties that promise to promote their interests, are beginning to decide the outcome of elections, the incidence of women in parliaments, political parties and in formal Government is still low. The situation will persist unless more women stand and are selected for office and are allowed to begin careers leading to senior management positions in the public sector and until women exercise their voting power in their own interests as well as in the interests of society.

7. The number of women in decision-making positions in intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations should be increased. Efforts should also be made to ensure women's participation in the process of selection and enrolment.

Recommendation VI. All civil service regulations should have clear statements on practices of recruitment, appointment, promotion, leave entitlement, training and development, and other conditions of service. Governments, political parties, trade unions and professional and other representative groups should each aim at targets to increase the proportion of women in leadership positions to at least 30 per cent by 1995, with a view to achieving equal representation between women and men by the year 2000, and should institute recruitment and training programmes to prepare women for those positions.

Governments, political parties, trade unions and women's organizations should be encouraged to establish a list of qualified women which could be used to fill vacant positions. The importance of training women in the skills necessary for political and administrative careers should also be recognized.

The Interregional Consultation on Women in Public Life, to be held in September 1991, should have maximum participation by Governments and non-governmental organizations and should elaborate for the first half of the decade an agenda for political action that will mobilize all women to participate actively in the political process.

The United Nations Secretariat, in co-operation with other institutions and in collaboration with Governments, should further develop and disseminate an accessible data base on the composition of the highest decision-making bodies at the national, regional and international levels, disaggregated by sex. The United Nations system could assist national Governments to set up such data bases.

B. Development

8. The experience of the past five years has confirmed the view expressed at the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, that the advancement of women is not possible without development, and that without the advancement of women, development itself will be difficult to achieve.

9. Unfortunately, women in most developing countries were adversely affected by an overall economic crisis produced by the debt problem, deteriorating terms of trade, protectionism, internal imbalances and unequal patterns of income distribution. For the majority of women, economic and social developments during the 1980s have not resulted in the benefits anticipated at the beginning of the decade. On the contrary, there has been a dramatic reduction of economic development and the adjustment-oriented policies adopted have led to a serious reduction of public expenditure on education, health and housing. Those circumstances have affected the condition of women in a variety of negative ways.

10. An economic environment of growth with equitable distribution, both at the national level and in the international economic system, is essential, as is the recognition of women's full participation. The feminization of poverty reflects the underlying structural problems faced by women in the midst of economic change. Prevailing economic policies at the national and international levels have frequently failed to take into account potential negative effects on women or women's potential contribution and have accordingly not succeeded.

Recommendation VII. In order to help revitalize economic growth, international economic and social co-operation, together with sound economic policies, should be pursued. Structural adjustment and other economic reform measures should be designed and implemented so as to promote the full participation of women in the development process, while avoiding the negative economic and social effects. They should be accompanied by policies giving women equal access to credit, productive inputs, markets and decision-making and this should be incorporated fully into national economic policy and planning.

The international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade should take full account of women's contribution and potential and this should be an important part of monitoring its implementation. Relevant organizations of the United Nations system should continue to examine the effects of national and international economic policies on social progress, in particular the condition of women in developing countries.

11. The incorporation of women into the labour force has occurred on a scale unimaginable 30 years ago. Nevertheless, given unfavourable economic conditions in developing countries, the majority of women remain or are increasing in number in the informal sector of the economy.

Recommendation VIII. Governmental policies, non-governmental action and international co-operation should be directed towards supporting programmes to improve the living conditions of women in the informal sector.

These programmes should contribute, among other things, to the incorporation into the informal sector of appropriate technologies which could increase production in that sector and make domestic and international markets more accessible. Women in the informal sector should be encouraged to organize themselves so that they know their rights and are able to obtain the necessary support to exercise them.

Appropriate organizations at the international level should gather more detailed and accurate information related to women in the informal sector in order to identify the most efficient measures to ameliorate their condition.

12. Women are overrepresented among the poor because of the factors deriving from existing inequality between men and women in most societies. The number of women living in extreme poverty in many countries has increased during the period under review.

Recommendation IX. Governments, non-governmental organizations and international organizations should take concrete measures to eradicate poverty. These measures should have a multi-purpose approach and include educational skills and training designed to generate productive activities.

13. Since 1970, there has been a significant expansion in women's access to education, which has proved to be an important means of equipping women to play a full and equal role in society. Although some regions have achieved equality in access to education, considerable progress remains to be achieved in most developing countries at all levels of education, including universal primary education. Moreover, although improved access of girls to education is gradually eliminating illiteracy among the young, gender-related differences in illiteracy among adults continue to constitute an obstacle to women's legal, economic, social and political empowerment by denying women an essential tool for acquiring knowledge and skills. In addition, women who have access to education are often channelled into traditionally female specialities. Of particular concern for the future is the achievement of women's access to science and technology through education and training, which is now limited by budgetary constraints, especially in developing countries.

Recommendation X. Governments that have not already done so should reorient resources to ensure women's equal access to education and training at all levels and in all fields and, in collaboration with women's groups and non-governmental organizations, should make special efforts to remove all gender-related differences in adult literacy by the year 2000. Programmes should be established to ensure that parents and teachers provide equal educational opportunities for girls and boys. In particular, encouragement should be given to promoting the study by girls of scientific and technological subjects, particularly those corresponding to national development priorities, and to preparing girls for full participation in the economy and in public life. In order to fulfil these commitments, appropriate measures should be taken at the national and international levels to ensure revitalization of growth on a long-term basis.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other organizations of the United Nations system should give special priority to eliminating female illiteracy and to monitoring efforts to ensure that women have equal access to all levels of education and training.

14. The importance of food security and the critical role of women as producers of food—both domestic and cash crops—are indisputably recognized; none the less, the conditions of rural women are improving at a slow pace and in some cases have even deteriorated. Projects on their behalf have generally met with limited success. The main reasons are insufficient human and financial expertise, the lack of a country-wide network of regional or local branches of government agencies and the lack of technical expertise. All of these factors have been aggravated in developing countries by the current economic crisis, which has shifted resources to export-oriented farmers and deprived rural women of vital inputs and infrastructure.

Recommendation XI. Governments should take particular steps to ensure that new technologies are accessible to women and that women participate in the design and application of those technologies.

Recommendation XII. Governments and non-governmental organizations should adopt empowerment rather than welfare strategies to support women in their role as agricultural producers, with a view to improving their economic and social situation and to integrating them into mainstream agricultural development. Priority should be accorded to projects aimed at guaranteeing access of rural women to technology, credit, training, trade marketing, management and improved agricultural infrastructure and control of the use of land.

The United Nations system, mainly the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should collaborate with Governments in identifying and providing inputs that are needed to support the agricultural productive capacity of women.

The United Nations system should develop new methods of promoting the transfer of science and technology to women.

15. Since the beginning of the 1980s, there has been a decline in the standard of health and nutrition of women in parts of every developing region due, inter alia, to a decline in per capita expenditure on health. This is a particularly alarming situation since maternal and neonatal health are crucial to infant survival. Infant and child mortality rates have been rising in a number of countries after having declined for decades.

Recommendation XIII. Governments, international organizations, non-governmental organizations and the public in general should be aware of the decline in women's health in developing countries. Improvement of women's health by the provision of appropriate and accessible health services should be a priority within the goal of health for all by the year 2000.

Women constitute the majority of health care workers in most countries. They should be enabled to play a much larger role in decision-making for health. Governments, international non-governmental organizations and women's organizations should undertake programmes aimed at improving women's health by ensuring access to adequate maternal and child health care, family planning, safe motherhood programmes, nutrition, programmes for female-specific diseases and other primary health care services in relation to the goal of health for all by the year 2000.

The World Health Organization and other organizations of the United Nations system should further develop emergency programmes to cope with the deteriorating conditions of women's health mainly in developing countries, with particular attention to nutrition, maternal health care and sanitation.

16. Women's access to information and services relating to population and family planning are improving only slowly in most countries. A woman's ability to control her own fertility continues to be a major factor enabling her to protect her health, achieve her personal objectives and ensure the strength of her family. All women should be in a position to plan and organize their lives.

Recommendation XIV Governments, non-governmental organizations and women's movements should develop programmes to enable women to implement their decisions on the timing and spacing of their children. These programmes should include population education programmes linked to women's rights and the role of women in development, as well as the sharing of family responsibilities by men and boys. Social services should be provided to help women reconcile family and employment requirements.

Family planning programmes should be developed or extended to enable women to implement their decisions on the timing and spacing of their children and for safe motherhood.

The United Nations Secretariat, the United Nations Population Fund, the World Health Organization and other organizations of the United Nations system should develop collaborative programmes to link the role of women's role in development to questions related to population.

17. During the past five years, women's health, both physical and psychological, has been increasingly affected in many countries by the consumption and abuse of alcohol, narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

Recommendation XV. Governments and other competent national authorities should establish national policies and programmes on women's health with respect to the consumption and abuse of alcohol, narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. Strong preventive as well as rehabilitative measures should be taken.

In addition, efforts should be intensified to reduce occupational health hazards faced by women and to discourage illicit drug use.

18. The emergence, since the Nairobi Conference, of new threats to the health and status of women, such as the alarming increase in sexually transmitted diseases and the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) pandemic, requires urgent action from both medical and social institutions.

Recommendation XVI. Greater attention is also needed with respect to the issue of women and AIDS. Efforts in this regard should be an integral part of the World Health Organization Global Programme on AIDS. Urgent action and action-oriented research are also required by social institutions at all levels, in particular the United Nations system, national AIDS committees and non-governmental organizations, to inform women of the threat of AIDS to their health and status.

19. Urbanization, migration and economic changes have increased the proportion of families headed by women and the number of women entering the labour force. These women have experienced increasing difficulties in harmonizing their economic role with the demands on them to provide care for children and dependants. The double burden, rather than being reduced by greater sharing between spouses, has increased. Unless it is reduced, women will not be able to play their full and fair role in development.

Recommendation XVII. Governments and other appropriate bodies should, by 1995, establish social support measures with the aim of facilitating the combination of parental and other caring responsibilities and paid employment, including policies for the provision of services and measures to increase the sharing of such responsibilities by men and women and to deal with specific problems of female-headed households that include dependants.

The United Nations Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund and other appropriate organizations of the United Nations system should, as part of the International Year of the Family in 1994, make a special effort to analyse the issues of caring for children and dependants and sharing domestic, parental and other caring responsibilities, including the appraisal of national experience.

20. The issue of the environment affects the lives of everyone, women and men alike. Women's participation in making decisions on the environment is limited despite the high level of concern women express for the issue and their involvement in it. Women's concern for the environment in all its aspects can be an important force for a general mobilization of women that may have an impact on other areas, including equality and peace.

Recommendation XVIII. Governments should make efforts to involve individual women and women's groups in making decisions on the environment. Educational programmes should be developed on environmental issues and their relation to daily life.

The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in 1992, should consider dealing with the issue of women and the environment with a view, inter alia, to mobilizing women at both the national and international levels and to ensuring that the experience and knowledge of women are fully taken into account.

21. The progress made in disarmament negotiations is welcomed. It is noted that this has not been matched by progress in social and economic development.

Recommendation XIX. Governments are urged to consider redirecting possible savings from disarmament to the improvement of social and economic development, including women's development.

C. Peace

22. Despite the progress made in some areas, international, regional and national conflicts persist, and women continue to number among their main victims. At the same time, women are no more prominent among those making decisions on conflicts than in the past.

Recommendation XX. Governments should be encouraged to increase the participation of women in the peace process at the decision-making level, including them as part of delegations to negotiate international agreements relating to peace and disarmament and establishing a target for the number of women participating in such delegations.

The United Nations and the international non-governmental organizations concerned should continue to monitor and support greater involvement of women in the peace process.

Recommendation XXI. In the context of an increased effort to resolve the long-standing conflicts affecting Palestinian and South African women, special efforts should be made to ensure that all women concerned fully participate in the peace process and in the construction of their societies. The reconstruction process should include as a priority special programmes of assistance to women. Such programmes should also be developed for the benefit of Namibian women.

23. The recognition that violence against women in the family and society is pervasive and cuts across lines of income, class and culture must be matched by urgent and effective steps to eliminate its incidence. Violence against women derives from their unequal status in society.

Recommendation XXII. Governments should take immediate measures to establish appropriate penalties for violence against women in the family, the work place and society. Governments and other relevant agencies should also undertake policies to prevent, control and reduce the impact of violence on women in the family, the work place and society. Governments and relevant agencies, women's organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector should develop appropriate correctional, educational and social services, including shelters, training programmes for law enforcement officers, the judiciary and health and social service personnel, as well as adequate deterrent and corrective measures. The number of women at all levels of law enforcement, legal assistance and the judicial system should be increased.

The United Nations system, Governments and non-governmental organizations should study the relationship between the portrayal of violence against women in the media and violence against women in the family and society, including possible effects of new transnational transmission technologies.

II. National machinery

24. The first few years of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies have emphasized the importance of national machinery for the advancement of women in promoting the integration of women's needs and concerns into government policies and programmes, in mobilizing grass-roots support and in providing information at the national and international levels. National machinery, despite resource limitations, has been a significant factor in keeping the Strategies alive in individual countries. The effectiveness of national machinery has been found to depend on the political commitment of Governments, as reflected in appropriate resource levels, institutional location, competence in technical fields and ability to use information. Improving all of these factors is an important means of eliminating other obstacles.

Recommendation XXIII. National machinery should be established in every State by 1995, should be given an institutional location allowing it to have a direct effect on government policy and should be provided with sufficient resources of its own to collect and disseminate information on the situation of women and on the potential consequences of government policies on women and to contribute to their advancement. National machinery should continue to develop coherent policies for the advancement of women as part of national priorities and plans.

The United Nations system should support national machinery by providing advisory, training and information services relating to planning and management, training methods, evaluation and the acquisition and use of information; it should encourage mutual assistance and exchange of experience between units of national machinery.

Recommendation XXIV. The United Nations system should, within the existing regular budget, allocate sufficient resources to enable it to meet national requests and maintain co-ordinated international activities at a level that will make possible the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women. Additionally, voluntary contributions to this end are to be encouraged.

III. Priority themes for the period 1993-1996

25. Based on this analysis, the Commission on the Status of Women should examine key priority themes in each of the areas of equality, development and peace.

A. Equality

1. Increased awareness by women of their rights, including legal literacy.
2. Equal pay for work of equal value, including methodologies for measurement of pay inequities and work in the informal sector.
3. Equality in economic decision-making.
4. Elimination of stereotyping of women in the mass media.

B. Development

1. Women in extreme poverty: integration of women's concerns in national development planning.
2. Women in urban areas: population, nutrition and health factors for women in development, including migration, drug consumption and AIDS.
3. Promotion of literacy, education and training, including technological skills.
4. Child and dependant care, including sharing of work and family responsibilities.

C. Peace

1. Women and the peace process.
2. Measures to eradicate violence against women in the family and society.
3. Women in international decision-making.
4. Education for peace.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15
24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote
Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/68) without vote, 8 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1990/25); agenda item 4.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report [A/45/489] on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies. The report, prepared in consultation with the organizations of the UN system, contained an assessment of actions relevant to the priority themes to be considered by the Commission on the Status of Women at its next (1991) session—equality: vulnerable women, including migrant workers; development: machinery for the effective integration of women in the development process; and peace: refugee and displaced women and children.

The report also discussed implementation of 1989 Assembly resolutions 44/77 [YUN 1989, p. 645] on the Strategies and 44/76 [YUN 1989, p. 663] on elderly women.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/129.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women
The General Assembly,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 44/77 of 8 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it endorsed and reaffirmed the importance of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000 and set out measures for their immediate implementation and for the overall achievement of the interrelated goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for women: Equality, Development and Peace, Taking into consideration the resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council on issues relating to women since its resolution 1987/18 of 26 May 1987.

Reaffirming its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it emphasized that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society and that, consequently, elderly women should be considered contributors to as well as beneficiaries of development,

Reaffirming also its determination to encourage the full participation of women in economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs and to promote development, co-operation and international peace,

Conscious of the important and constructive contribution to the improvement of the status of women made by the Commission on the Status of Women, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned,

Emphasizing once again the priority of the implementation, monitoring, review and appraisal of the Forward-looking Strategies,

Recognizing the advancement of women as one of the priorities of the Organization for the biennium 1990-1991,

Recalling that the Commission held in 1990 a session of extended duration to review and appraise progress in the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Also takes note of the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990;
3. Urges Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to implement the recommendations;
4. Reaffirms paragraph 2 of section I of the recommendations and conclusions, in which it is stated that the pace of implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies must be improved in the crucial last decade of the twentieth century since the cost to societies of failing to implement the Strategies would be high in terms of slowed economic and social development, misuse of human resources and reduced progress for society as a whole and, for that reason, immediate steps should be taken to remove the most serious obstacles to the implementation of the Strategies;
5. Calls again upon Member States to give priority to policies and programmes relating to the subtheme "Employment, health and education", in particular to literacy, for the empowerment of women, especially those in the rural areas, to meet their own needs through self-reliance and the mobilization of indigenous resources, as well as to issues relating to the role of women in economic and political decision-making, population, the environment and information;

6. Reaffirms the central role of the Commission on the Status of Women in matters related to the advancement of women, and calls upon it to continue promoting the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies to the year 2000, based on the goals of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the subtheme "Employment, Health and Education", and urges all organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate effectively with the Commission in this task;

7. Requests the Commission, when considering the priority theme relating to development during its thirty-fifth and subsequent sessions, to ensure its early contribution to the work of the international meeting on population to be held in 1994 and to address the role of technologies in the development of developing countries;

8. Endorses Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/12 of 24 May 1990, in which the Council recommended that a world conference on women should be held in 1995 and requested that the Commission act as the preparatory body for the world conference;

9. Takes note of the invitation extended by the Government of Austria to host the world conference on women in 1995 at Vienna;

10. Requests the Commission, as the preparatory body for the world conference, to decide on the venue of the conference, not later than 1992, bearing in mind that preference should be given to those regions that have not yet hosted a world conference on women;

11. Also requests the Commission, in deciding on the preparation of documentation for the conference, to pay attention to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/9 of 24 May 1990 concerning the second report on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies;

12. Further requests the Commission to focus the agenda of the world conference in 1995 on the Forward-looking Strategies as well as on the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategies;

13. Requests the Commission to ask the Secretary-General to appoint not later than 1992 the Secretary-General of the conference;

14. Requests the relevant United Nations bodies to continue to provide action-oriented input when reporting to the Commission on the priority theme;

15. Emphasizes, in the framework of the Forward-looking Strategies, the importance of the total integration of women in the development process, bearing in mind the specific and urgent needs of the developing countries, and calls upon Member States to establish specific targets at each level in order to increase the participation of women in professional, management and decision-making positions in their countries;

16. Also emphasizes the need to give urgent attention to redressing socio-economic inequities at the national and international levels as a necessary step towards the full realization of the goals and objectives of the Forward-looking Strategies;

17. Urges that particular attention be given by the United Nations and Governments to the situation of disabled women and that Governments take steps to ensure the equalization of opportunities for these women in the economic, social and political fields;

18. Also urges the Commission, the relevant organizations of the United Nations and Governments to give particular attention to refugee women and children and migrant women, taking into account their contribution in the social, economic and political fields and the urgent need to avoid all kinds of discrimination against them;

19. Endorses the convening in 1991 of a high-level interregional consultation on women in public life, to be financed within existing resources and from voluntary and other contributions;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, in formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001 and in integrating the Forward-looking Strategies into activities mandated by the General Assembly, to pay particular attention to the strengthening of national machineries for the advancement of women and to specific sectoral themes that cut across the three objectives, equality, development and peace, and include, in particular, literacy, education, health, population, the environment and the full participation of women in decision-making;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue updating the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, gearing in mind its importance, placing particular emphasis on the adverse impact of the difficult economic situation affecting the majority of developing countries, in particular on the condition of women, and giving special attention to worsening conditions for the incorporation of women into the labour force as well as to the impact of reduced expenditures for social services on women's opportunities for education, health and child care, and to submit a preliminary version of the updated World Survey on the Role of Women in Development to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, in 1993 and a final version in 1994;

22. Requests Governments, when presenting candidatures for vacancies in the Secretariat, in particular at the decision-making level, to give priority to women's candidatures, and requests the Secretary-General in reviewing these candidatures to give special consideration to female candidates from underrepresented and unrepresented developing countries;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to report periodically to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission, on activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies;

24. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide for the existing weekly radio programmes on women in the regular budget of the United Nations, making adequate provisions for broadcasts in different languages, and to develop the focal point for issues relating to women in the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, which, in concert with the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, should provide a more effective public information programme relating to the advancement of women;

25. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, an assessment of recent developments that are relevant to the priority themes to be considered at the subsequent session of the Commission and to transmit to the Commission a summary of relevant views expressed by delegations during the debate in the Assembly;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on measures taken to implement the present resolution;

27. Decides to consider these questions further at its forty-sixth session under the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

World conference

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/12.

World conference on women to be held in 1995

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 35/10 C of 3 November 1980, on special conferences of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 1987/20 of 26 May 1987, in which it recommended that world conferences to review and appraise the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women be held during the decade of the 1990s, on a date to be determined by the General Assembly not later than 1990, and in 2000,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 44/77 of 8 December 1989, requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider at its session in 1990 the question of holding in 1995 a world conference on women, at the lowest possible cost, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session,

Bearing in mind that in its resolution 1987/20 the Council decided that the Commission on the Status of Women would be designated the preparatory body for those world conferences,

Convinced that without a major international event by which to focus national attention on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, the review and appraisal to take place in 1995 will not be given sufficient priority,

Reaffirming the continuing validity of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, including the interrelationship between equality, development and peace, and stressing the need to ensure their full implementation by the year 2000,

1. Recommends that a world conference on women be held in 1995;

2. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women, as the preparatory body for the world conference, to include preparations for the conference in its regular work programme during the period 1991-1995 under the item concerning the monitoring of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to include the relevant costs of preparing for and convening the world conference in the programme budget for the bienniums 1992-1993 and 1994-1995, within the respective budgetary limits;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to make proposals on the preparation and convening of the world conference for submission to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/12

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/68) without vote, 8 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1990/25); agenda item 4.

In resolution 45/129 (see above), the General Assembly endorsed the Council's resolution.

System-wide co-ordination

The fourteenth Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Women was held in Vienna on 12 and 13 March [ACC/1990/PG/13]. The Meeting brought six recommendations to the attention of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). They dealt with: follow-up to the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies; the priority themes; the integration of women in development; preparations for the 1994 World Survey on the Role of Women in Development; the contributions of the UN system to the work of the Commission on the Status of Women; and preparation of a consolidated list of meetings related to the advancement of women.

In a May decision [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14 (dec. 1990/2)], ACC noted the need for the international community to increase the pace of progress in implementing the Forward-looking Strategies. The injunctions in the review and appraisal for further work by the UN system at the monitoring, policy formulation and operational levels constituted incentives to strengthen further individual and joint actions by the organizations of the system.

Convention on Discrimination against Women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor the implementation of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [GA res. 34/180], held its ninth session in 1990.

The purpose of the 30-article Convention, which set down constitutional, legislative and other principles and standards relating to the rights of women, was to promote women's equality in political, economic, social, cultural and civic fields.

CEDAW session. CEDAW—a 23-member expert committee that reviews periodic country reports on progress made in implementing the Convention's provisions—held its ninth annual session from 22 January to 2 February in New York [A/45/38 & Corr.1]

It had before it seven initial reports of States parties to the Convention (Federal Republic of Germany, Malawi, Peru, Thailand, Turkey, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania) and five second periodic reports (Canada, Egypt, Mexico, Mongolia, Ukrainian SSR).

During the session, CEDAW adopted two general recommendations, on female circumcision and on avoidance of discrimination against women in the prevention and control of AIDS. By general recommendation No. 14, the Committee called for States parties to take measures to eradicate the practice of female circumcision, including the collection and dissemination of data about such traditional practices; support of women's organizations working for the elimination of female circumcision and other practices harmful to women; encouragement of politicians, professionals and religious and community leaders at all levels, including the media and the arts, to co-operate in influencing attitudes towards the eradication of female circumcision; and the introduction of appropriate educational and training programmes based on research findings about the problems arising from female circumcision.

By general recommendation No. 15, CEDAW called for intensification of efforts in disseminating information to increase public awareness of the risk of HIV infection and AIDS; special attention to the rights and needs of women and children in AIDS programmes; the active participation of women in primary health care; and inclusion by States parties of information on the effects of AIDS on the situation of women in their reports to the Committee.

By an 8 March resolution [E/1990/25 (res. 34/6)], the Commission on the Status of Women recognized the special relevance of the periodic reports of States parties to the Convention to the efforts of the Commission to review and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies in those States. It welcomed initiatives to provide regional training courses for government officials on the preparation and drafting of reports and urged UN organs and organizations to support such initiatives.

Belize, Bolivia, Grenada and Trinidad and Tobago.

In his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention [A/45/426], the Secretary-General provided a list of States that had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 1 August 1990 and information on reservations and objections received between 1 August 1989 and 1 August 1990.

Commission on Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women held its thirty-fourth session in Vienna from 26 February to 9 March [E/1990/25]. In addition to carrying out the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women (see above), the Commission considered three priority themes—equality: equality in political participation and decision-making; development: negative effects of the international economic situation on the improvement of the status of women; and peace: women in areas affected by armed conflicts, foreign intervention, alien and colonial domination, foreign occupation and threats to peace.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption 13 draft resolutions concerning: improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (see PART SIX, Chapter II); equality in political participation and decision-making; physical violence against detained women; women and children in Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III); Central American women: equality, development and peace; communications concerning the status of women; the second report on the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies; integration of women in the international development strategy for the fourth UN development decade; the situation of Palestinian women; a world conference on women in 1995; women and children under apartheid; action to increase awareness of the slow progress in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies; and recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategies. It also recommended to the Council the adoption of two draft decisions dealing with women and the environment and the Commission's report on its thirty-fourth session and agenda and documentation for its thirty-fifth (1991) session.

The Commission further adopted and brought to the Council's attention eight resolutions on: women and the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse (1991-2000), in which it appealed to Member States to assign higher priority to the participation of women in programmes connected with the Decade; refugee and displaced women; women and economic growth; women and situations of extreme vulnerability; women and development; the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; recommendations and observations on the International Year of the Family (1994) for consideration by the Commission for Social Development; and women and literacy.

On 24 May, by decision 1990/214, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on its thirty-fourth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-fifth session. By decision 1990/213 of the same date, the Council, recalling its resolution 1987/24 [YUN 1987, p. 844] on the long-term programme of work of the Commission to the year 2000, the annex to which set out the priority themes for the period 1988-1992, and bearing in mind that the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development would be held in 1992, decided to add the question of women and the environment to the priority theme to be dealt with at the thirty-sixth (1992) session of the Commission under the objective of development.

Communications

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/8.

Communications concerning the status of women

Recalling its resolutions 76 (V) of 5 August 1947 and 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950, which continue to form the basis for the mandate of the Commission on the Status of Women to receive at each of its regular sessions a list of confidential and non-confidential communications relating to the status of women,

Taking into consideration its resolution 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, in which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission to consider confidential and non-confidential communications on the status of women and authorized the Commission to appoint a working group to consider the communications and prepare a report to the Commission on them,

Recalling its resolution 1986/29 of 23 May 1986, in which it requested the Commission to continue to consider communications relating to the status of women and to make recommendations thereon to the Council, if necessary,

Reaffirming that discrimination against women is incompatible with human dignity and that women and men should participate on the basis of equality, irrespective of race or creed, in the social, economic and political processes of their countries,

Recognizing that the mandate of the Commission to consider communications on the status of women is crucial to its central role in monitoring and formulating recommendations to further the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and strengthens its ability to fulfil other aspects under its mandate regarding the elimination of discrimination against women,

Requests the Secretary-General to examine, in consultation with Governments, the existing mechanisms for communications on the status of women, in order to ensure that such communications receive effective and appropriately co-ordinated consideration in view of their role in the work on the elimination of discrimination against women carried out by the Commission on the Status of Women, and to report thereon to the Commission at its thirty-fifth session.

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

In a report to the General Assembly [A/46/325], the Secretary-General stated that, during 1990, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) continued its catalytic role in elaborating methodologies for carrying out research, training and information activities in new areas of interest affecting women and development, such as women, environment and sustainable development, women and communication for development, and country-specific research and training materials on rural women, including rural credit. It also strengthened its work in such areas as statistics and indicators on women, including women's work in the informal sector, women and water supply and sanitation, and women and new and renewable sources of energy. Action was also taken within the Institute's long-term research programme on monitoring and evaluation methodologies for programmes and projects on women and development, and a new orientation was given to the scholarship and internship programme and the production of training materials on women and development. The scope of the women-in-development studies curricula programme was widened and the Institute continued its research activities on choice and assessment of technology for mobilization of women in development.

For the 1990-1991 biennium, the INSTRAW Trust Fund received contributions totalling $2.7 million; that amount was expected to increase through donations from donor countries that had pledged but not paid contributions.

Board of Trustees. The INSTRAW Board of Trustees held its tenth session in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 12 to 16 February [E/1990/34]. Decisions adopted by the Board and brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council dealt with: progress in implementing the Institutes's work programme for 1989; co-operation with the regional commissions, INSTRAW focal points and correspondents; the proposed work programme and budget for 1990-1991; and trends in research, training, information on women and development and the tenth anniversary of the Board of Trustees.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/16.

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1989/43 of 24 May 1989, in which it took note of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its ninth session,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 44/60 of 8 December 1989, in which the Assembly took note of the report of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its activities,

Having considered the report of the Board of Trustees of the Institute on its tenth session,

Recognizing the significance of the global role of the Institute as the international research and training body for the advancement of women, which provides direction on issues related to women and development,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its tenth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Expresses its appreciation of the successful implementation of the programmes of the Institute, particularly its activities on statistics and indicators on women, including the role of women in the informal sector and the first phase of the long-term research programme on monitoring and evaluation methodologies for development programmes related to women, and its work on sectoral issues, especially water supply and sanitation, new and renewable sources of energy and communication for women and development;

3. Takes note of the programme of activities of the Institute for the biennium 1990-1991, approved by the Board of Trustees at its tenth session, and the commencement of work on methodological approaches in fields relating to women, the environment and sustainable development;

4. Commends the Institute for further strengthening its networking mode of operation, including increased co-operation between the Institute and the regional commissions, and for giving priority to the programming of parallel activities;

5. Expresses its profound satisfaction that on the tenth anniversary of its establishment, the Institute has proved itself to be an invaluable body of the United Nations in fulfilling the requirements of the Charter by promoting social progress through a reaffirmation of the equal rights of women and men and by furthering economic and social advancement;

6. Reaffirms that the Institute will continue its dual approach as an agent for sensitization on the role of women in the mainstream of development, and as a centre for specialized research, training and information, and for co-operation with other organizations with parallel interests within and outside the United Nations system;

7. Recommends that, given the growing role of research, training and information on women and development within and outside the United Nations system, the Institute continue to work on new methodological approaches in these fields;

8. Expresses its appreciation, on the tenth anniversary of the Institute, to those countries, both developed and developing, that have contributed to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, thereby ensuring implementation, continuity and expansion of the programmes of the Institute, to the host country and the Secretary-General for their support, and to the co-operating bodies within and outside the United Nations system for their collaboration with the activities of the Institute;

9. Renews its appeal to Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other potential donors to continue making contributions and, to the extent possible, to increase their contributions to the Trust Fund.

Women and development

Negative economic effects

At its February/March session, the Commission on the Status of Women, under the UN Decade for Women's objective of development, considered the priority theme of the negative effects of the international economic situation on the improvement of the status of women. According to a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1990/3] on the subject, there was evidence that the impact of the combination of the world economic situation, often termed an economic crisis, and the various policies adopted to deal with it had been more severe on women in general and on certain groups of women. In the short run, economic policies sought to deal with immediate problems of foreign exchange flow, trade balances and private and public expenditure. In that context, programmes needed to be designed to compensate for aspects of women's status (education, health, employment) that had been negatively affected by reductions in public expenditures and the subsequent deterioration in services. In the longer run, the purpose of policies was to build a general economic structure, international and national, that worked. Examining the role of women was a way of encouraging a successful long-term change by engaging the productive capacity of half the population. It was important to look at expenditure for the advancement of women as a productive opportunity rather than a welfare issue.

By a 9 March resolution [E/1990/25 (res. 34/5)], the Commission urged Governments to adopt policies that were sensitive to the relationship of economic growth and the status of women and asked international financial organizations to search for measures to stimulate the economies of developing countries, while avoiding adverse effects on human well-being. It called on Governments and financial institutions to make greater efforts to support the establishment of co-operatives and rural banks for women and to include work by women farmers in statistical reporting for the gross national product. Governments and international organizations were requested to facilitate access of women to credit, training programmes and family planning.

In an 8 March resolution [res. 34/4], the Commission, considering that the predicament of women as heads of household, elderly women and disabled women had been aggravated by the economic crisis, recommended to Governments that they formulate and put into effect a body of specific measures in favour of those women in order to improve their situation, ensure respect for their fundamental rights and ensure opportunities for them to contribute to and share in the benefits of development. UN agencies with special responsibility for formulating development programmes were invited to include in them special provisions for women in situations of extreme vulnerability.

Women and economic development

In an 8 March resolution [E/1990/25 (res. 34/3)], the Commission on the Status of Women recognized that women, who comprised half the labour force in most countries and who were primary providers in an estimated 35 per cent of all households world wide, would be essential to the success and sustainability of any development strategy. It urged UN specialized agencies and Member States to develop strategies, especially in the area of human resources development, to promote opportunities for women to participate more fully in the economic growth of their countries, by facilitating women's fuller participation in their economies and optimizing their productivity, and by supporting efforts to increase equal opportunities for women in education, employment and advancement in the workplace.

UNDP action. In a report to the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [DP/1990/26], the UNDP Administrator reviewed the extent to which Governing Council decisions on women in development were being implemented. The report identified five means to improve the gender responsiveness of UNDP operational activities: training of government, executing agency and UNDP staff; field office support; inter-agency co-ordination and collaboration; policy development; and institutional strengthening.

By a 22 June decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/19)], the Governing Council requested the Administrator to give high priority to women-in-development training and to ensure that gender issues were addressed throughout all other training courses. UNDP was urged to adopt measures to ensure that gender issues were adequately taken into account in its programmes on the environment, poverty, HIV, and refugees and displaced persons. The Council asked the Administrator to report in 1991 on procedures adopted for and progress made in addressing women-in-development issues in the reparations for the fifth programming cycle (1991-1996) and to report on a triennial basis, beginning in 1993, on progress made in implementing the women-in-development mandate.

Fourth UN development decade

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/10.

Integration of women in the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 44/169 of 19 December 1989, the annex to which contains an outline for the elaboration of an international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade,

Recognizing that a major theme of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, particularly of paragraphs 109 to 111 thereof, is the role of women in development,

Stressing the critical role played by women in the development process, and that women constitute 50 per cent of available human resources,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, established by the General Assembly in its resolution 43/182 of 20 December 1988, will elaborate the outline, with a view to finalizing the international development strategy in 1990,

1. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade identify strategies for ensuring that women's needs and their contribution to the development process are reflected in all aspects of the international development strategy, including human resource development and economic growth;

2. Also recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee, in finalizing the international development strategy, consider measures to ensure the full and effective participation of women in development, taking into consideration Council resolution 1989/105, paragraph 11, of 27 July 1989, as well as relevant resolutions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session;

3. Urges Member States to give special attention to the role of women in development when preparing their contributions to the work of the Ad Hoc Committee to finalize the international development strategy and, in this regard, to consult with national machinery and the non-governmental organizations concerned with women in development;

4. Decides that the Commission on the Status of Women should monitor the implementation of the international development strategy as it pertains to women and development in the context of its review of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/68) without vote, 8 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on Status of Women (E/1990/25); agenda item 4.

Also on 24 May, the Council, by decision 1990/215, decided to transmit the above resolution to the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

UN Development Fund for Women

During 1990, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)—established in 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 623] as the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women—pioneered new ways to promote women's participation in national planning and innovative grass-roots activities, said the UNDP Administrator in his annual report covering 1990 [DP/1991/10/Add.1]. The Fund's longer-term priorities concentrated on two sectors of strategic importance to women: food security and trade and industry. Its shorter-term priorities were identified within regional strategies for Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean and Western Asia.

In a report to the General Assembly on the UNIFEM programme in 1990 [A/46/491], the UNDP Administrator described activities in the various regions. In Africa, initiatives were under way in Benin, Ghana, Kenya, Mali, Namibia and the Sudan. The first gender analysis training workshop (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, July) was conducted for the Livestock, Fisheries and Wildlife Co-ordinating Units of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference countries, and two additional workshops were held in November in Zimbabwe for the staff of the Agricultural Research, Food Security, Soil and Water Conservation and Forestry Units. In the Asia and Pacific region, UNIFEM was implementing projects in India, Maldives, Mongolia, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam and, in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation, continued to carry out a regional project for women's vocational training in the Pacific. In Western Asia, UNIFEM's regional projects were interrupted in 1990 as a result of the war in the Persian Gulf, and country projects, such as those in the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen, were operating at a slower pace than usual. UNIFEM activities in Latin America and the Caribbean included projects in Argentina, Costa Rica and Peru.

At the beginning of 1990, UNIFEM instituted a comprehensive fund-raising plan, the goal of which was to assure continuing and growing funding with the support of the UNIFEM special constituency, including women in the private sector, women parliamentarians, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and women's groups. At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities in November, contributions to UNIFEM for 1991 were estimated at $9.3 million, a 13 per cent increase over pledges for 1990.

By a July note [A/45/347], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the UNDP Administrator on UNIFEM activities in 1989.

Consultative Committee. The Consultative Committee on UNIFEM held two sessions in 1990, both in New York. The twenty-seventh session took place from 24 to 26 January and the twenty-eighth from 20 to 24 August. At both sessions, the Committee reviewed progress in UNIFEM's work in various areas.

UNDP action. By a 20 June decision [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/42)], the UNDP Governing Council expressed its appreciation to Governments, NGOs and individuals for their increasing support to enable the Fund to strengthen its flexibility and capacity to implement its own projects and programmes for women in developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/128.

United Nations Development Fund for Women
The General Assembly

Recalling its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, in which it decided to establish the United Nations Development Fund for Women as a separate and identiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme,

Reaffirming that the Fund has an important role in contributing to an increase in opportunities and options for women in developing countries,

Emphasizing the position of the Fund as a specialized resource base for development co-operation, serving as a bridge between the needs and aspirations of women and the resources, programmes and policies for their economic development,

Taking note of the section of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme concerning the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women,

1. Commends the United Nations Development Fund for Women for its efforts to increase the visibility of women and to ensure that issues relating to women are on the agenda of the mainstream development efforts of Governments, United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and the private sector;

2. Notes with satisfaction the achievements of the Fund in giving its work a high profile and in increasing and broadening its financial resource base. with. inter alia, the support of the national committees for the Fund;

3. Welcomes the development of new strategies for the programme management of the Fund based on long-term and short-term priorities;

4. Encourages the Fund in its efforts to document and share its experiences in the context of increasing emphasis on the human development dimension in technical co-operation;

5. Urges Governments and public and private donors to continue to extend their support to the Fund through voluntary contributions and pledges to its programmes;

6. Stresses the importance of the work of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women in policy and programme matters relating to the activities of the Fund;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of providing conference services in the relevant working languages to the Consultative Committee, bearing in mind the importance of its work;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the activities of the Fund to be submitted in accordance with Assembly resolution 39/125.

Women and literacy

By a 9 March resolution [E/1990/25 (res. 34/8)], the Commission on the Status of Women encouraged the Secretary-General and Member States, as well as intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, to support efforts to increase literacy by improving the educational opportunities for females of all ages; providing basic education to all without discrimination based on gender; and encouraging the development of gender-specific indicators and measurements for assessing the impact of and participation of women in educational and training efforts. Member States were urged to eliminate barriers to schooling for women of all ages, disaggregate by gender data on school enrolments, completion, participation and repetition rates, give special attention to guidelines developed for the International Literacy Year (1990), accelerate women's participation in literacy programmes, and increase the number of tutors/trainers to optimize their efforts to reach women.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/126.

Women and literacy

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights the inalienable right of every individual to education is recognized,

Recalling also the special references to and recommendations on women's needs in relation to literacy, education and training contained in paragraphs 163 to 173 of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Taking note of Commission on the Status of Women resolution 34/8 of 8 March 1990 on women and literacy

Taking note also of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990, the annex to which contains the recommendations and conclusions arising from the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which, inter alia, it is recommended that Governments should make special efforts to remove all gender-related differences in adult literacy by the year 2000 and that programmes should be established to ensure that parents and teachers provide equal educational opportunities for girls and boys,

Noting that in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, States parties, inter alia, committed themselves to taking measures to ensure equal access to education for women and men,

Recalling its resolutions 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year, and 44/127 of 15 December 1989, in which it called for continuing international efforts to promote literacy,

Recalling also the World Declaration on Education for All adopted by the World Conference on Education for All, in which it is recognized that literacy programmes are indispensable to the basic learning needs of all and that the most urgent priority is to ensure access to, and improve the quality of, education for girls and women, as well as to remove every obstacle that hampers their active participation,

Mindful of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/12 of 24 May 1990, in which it recommended that a world conference on women be held in 1995,

Taking note of the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, in which, inter alia, the adoption of measures was called for that emphasized the need to improve the current disparities between girls and boys in access to basic education and the need to reduce adult illiteracy by half, with an emphasis on female illiteracy, before the year 2000,

Mindful of the fact that the eradication of illiteracy, including illiteracy among women, is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Recognizing that in many countries there is a significant gap between enrolment and retention levels of girls and boys in basic education programmes, just as there is a gap in literacy between adult men and women, which denies women of all ages the opportunity to participate fully in national development activities,

Bearing in mind that increased literacy levels have already been directly associated with reduced population growth in many parts of the world and that the promotion of women's literacy is an important element in ensuring the success of national objectives relating to population,

1. Notes with appreciation the commendable work done in connection with International Literacy Year by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, with its Plan of Action for the Eradication of Illiteracy by the Year 2000, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme;

2. Commends those Governments that have launched national programmes aimed at meeting the objectives of the Year;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active involvement of many non-governmental organizations in the Year and, in particular, the establishment of the International Task Force on Literacy;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General and Member States, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to continue to support efforts to increase literacy by:

(a) Improving the educational opportunities for females of all ages, particularly children;

(b) Providing basic education to all without discrimination based on gender and in settings that are accessible and culturally acceptable;

(c) Encouraging the development of gender-specific indicators and measurements for assessing the impact of educational and training efforts in both domestic and international projects and programmes and for assessing the inclusion and participation of women of all ages in those efforts;

5. Encourages Member States to attempt to disaggregate by gender data in such areas as school enrolment, completion, participation and repetition rates;

6. Urges Member States to eliminate de jure and de facto barriers to schooling for women of all ages;

7. Calls upon Member States to give special attention and emphasis to the guidelines and recommendations developed for the Year when implementing measures to eliminate illiteracy;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General, in collaboration with relevant United Nations organizations, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme, to assist Member States in strengthening strategies to target resources to women of all ages, especially those most disadvantaged, and thereby work towards the elimination of illiteracy of women of all ages;

9. Calls upon Member States to accelerate the participation of women in literacy programmes, particularly in areas pertaining to the improvement of their socio-economic condition, including legal literacy and income-generating and skill-building activities;

10. Encourages Member States to increase the number of tutors and trainers with the necessary qualifications, to maximize their efforts to reach women and to increase the participation of non-governmental and private volunteer organizations, particularly women's organizations, in the implementation and management of literacy programmes and in policy and programme development;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare for the world conference on women to be held in 1995 a report on the progress to increase female literacy made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the specialized agencies, regional commissions and other organizations of the United Nations system;

12. Requests the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to pay particular attention to measures taken by Governments to increase female literacy, particularly by ensuring equal access to basic education for girls and boys;

13. Requests the Secretary-General in his next update to the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development to examine specifically the relationship between the literacy of women and their economic and social advancement.

Other issues

Political participation and decision-making

Under the priority theme of equality, the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a report of the Secretary-General on equality in political participation and decision-making [E/CN.6/1990/2 & Corr.1]. The report examined the reasons for the low percentage of women occupying decision-making positions, including the low participation of women in politics generally and obstacles to advancement in the civil service. On the basis of recommendations, included in an annex to the report, made by a 1989 expert group on the subject, a variety of national and international actions were suggested to increase the participation of women in decision-making.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/4.

Equality in political participation and decision-making

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraphs 86 to 92 thereof,

Recalling also the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in particular paragraph 7 thereof,

Noting the recommendation made by the Expert Group on Equality in Political Participation and Decision-making, held at Vienna from 18 to 22 September 1989, that the advancement of women should be considered a priority in national decision-making and that women should be full partners in those decisions,

Gravely concerned that on average women represent a very low proportion of decision makers in all regions,

Gravely concerned also about the findings in the report of the Secretary-General concerning the low number of women throughout the United Nations system, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts,

Bearing in mind that key decisions in society are taken in a large number of bodies, such as Governments, parliaments, public boards and committees, trade and industry boards, trade unions and other organizations,

Also bearing in mind that women constitute approximately half the world's population and must participate on an equal footing with men in national decision-making and in the construction of their countries,

Considering that decisions taken in society, if they are to reflect universal views, need to be based on the experience of women as well as men,

Also considering that women at all levels of society should be aware of the importance of political and other decisions to their everyday life and the potential impact of their participation in those decisions,

Aware of the need to create more flexible structures in decision-making and open practices in recruiting processes,

Noting the importance of the contribution of women's organizations and other non-governmental organizations to the work of increasing women's participation in decision-making at all levels of society,

Affirming that increasing the number of women in decision-making, in Member States as well as in the organizations of the United Nations system, is of paramount importance for the fulfilment and implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies,

1. Welcomes the recommendations of the Expert Group on Equality in Political Participation and Decision-making;

2. Urges States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to ensure strict implementation of the Convention and to facilitate the wide publication of its provisions;

3. Urges Governments to increase their efforts to make women full partners in national decision-making;

4. Recommends that, in order to accelerate the pace of progress towards the full participation of women in national decision-making, Governments introduce the following measures:

(a) The regular compilation and dissemination of gender-specific data on the composition of relevant bodies at various levels of national decision-making, including central and regional levels;

(b) The design of programmes and campaigns to inform women of their legal political rights, including the introduction of temporary positive action measures and the facilitation of the training of women for leadership and participation in political organizations and trade unions;

(c) The review of educational material with the aim of removing gender bias;

(d) The facilitation of research on women's opportunities to exert influence and on structural and other obstacles to women's participation in decision-making;

(e) The setting of concrete targets for the number of women in bodies whose composition is the responsibility of the Government;

5. Urges political organizations, trade unions and other relevant bodies to take appropriate measures to increase substantially the number of women who participate in decision-making in their organizations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, as part of the regular work for the advancement of women carried out by the Organization, to disseminate on a regular basis information on the composition of the highest decision-making bodies at the national, regional and international levels, disaggregated by sex, to assist national machinery for the advancement of women in developing similar information at the central, regional and local levels, and to promote the exchange of experience between national machinery;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General urgently to intensify his efforts to increase the number of women employees throughout the United Nations system, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts.

Women in public life

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/127.

Interregional consultation on women in public life

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/77 of 8 December 1989, in which it endorsed the convening in 1991 of an interregional consultation on women in public life,

Concerned that the level of participation by women in decision-making in almost all countries is exceedingly

Stressing the importance of the full participation of women in the political process at all levels, especially in top decision-making, as a means of achieving the objectives set in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Considering that the consultation would be an important event towards the preparations for the world conference on women to be held in 1995,

1. Decides that the consultation on women in public life should be an intergovernmental meeting;

2. Urges all Governments to participate actively in the consultation and for that purpose to designate as participants women who currently hold leadership positions in government and national institutions and organizations or are considered to have the potential for high public office;

3. Invites Governments and national institutions and organizations to provide extrabudgetary resources to facilitate preparations for the consultation, especially for the participation of least developed countries and for the dissemination of information about the consultation in the mass media;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure the necessary servicing and support of the consultation and to transmit its conclusions in a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Women in areas of armed conflict

Under the priority theme of peace, the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a February report of the Secretary-General on women in areas affected by armed conflicts, foreign intervention, alien and colonial domination, foreign occupation and threats to peace [E/CN.6/1990/4]. The report showed that the number of armed conflicts continued to be great; that women were disproportionately among the victims without being the decision makers; that, although special provisions for the protection of women existed in international humanitarian law, those provisions were not always applied; and that humanitarian assistance existed but was often not targeted to the special needs of women. It noted that women had an important role to play in eliminating armed conflicts, but that they were still largely excluded from official decision-making on the peace process. However, women continued to exercise their influence through non-governmental organizations and through their own initiatives in the peace movement.

Detained women and violence

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/5.

Physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex

The Economic and Social Council,

noting with grave concern the continuing pattern of physical violence against women, cases of rape, sexual abuse and other instances of violent treatment while detained, to which the Commission on the Status of Women drew attention at its thirty-fourth session,

Considering that women are especially vulnerable to sexual violence,

Recalling its resolutions 76 (V) of 5 August 1947, 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950, 1984/19 of 24 May 1984 and 1986/29 of 23 May 1986,

Recalling also its resolutions 198/1980/39 of 2 May 1980 and 1983/27 of 26 May 1983, by which it reaffirmed the mandate of the Commission to consider communications relating to the status of women, including the replies of Governments thereon, if any, and to draw to the attention of the Council emerging trends and patterns so that the Council might decide what action to take,

1. Calls upon all Member States that have not yet done so to take appropriate measures urgently, as necessary, to eradicate acts of physical violence against detained women;

2. Invites Member States that have not yet done so to submit to the Secretary-General a report on legislative and other measures they have taken, as applicable, to prevent physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex, so as to enable him to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-sixth session, in 1992;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Commission at its thirty-sixth session prepared on the basis of reports received from Member States;

4. Requests the Commission to continue to consider communications relating to the status of women and to make recommendations thereon to the Council, if necessary.

Refugee and displaced women

By an 8 March resolution [E/1990/25 (res. 34/2)], the Commission on the Status of Women recommended that the scheduled report of the Secretary-General on refugee and displaced women and children, to be submitted to the Commission in 1991, should be prepared in full collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, taking into account the importance of the legal and physical protection of refugee women, and the Office of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, as well as other sources. Governments and the UN system were called on to increase efforts to respond to the specific needs of refugee women, particularly long-term refugees, and displaced women in the areas of education, health, physical safety, social services, skills training, employment and income-generating activities.

Situation of Palestinian women

By a note to the Commission on the Status of Women [E/CN.6/1990/10], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of a fact-finding mission of experts that travelled to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic in December 1989 to investigate the situation of Palestinian women in the occupied territories. The report analysed various aspects of the living conditions of Palestinian women and, in particular, the impact of the intifadah (see PART TWO, Chapter IV) on the Palestinian family; education; health, including the psychological well-being of women and children; economy and employment; and the changing traditional roles of women towards self-reliance and decision-making. It presented recommendations aimed at the long- and short-term improvement of the living conditions of Palestinian women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/11.

Situation of Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of a mission of experts to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic to investigate the condition of Palestinian women and children.

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 thereof,

Recalling also its resolutions 1988/25 of 26 May 1988 and 1989/34 of 24 May 1989,

Expressing concern at the persistent refusal of Israel to respect the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply alarmed at the critical situation of Palestinian women and children in the occupied Palestinian territories, which is profoundly influenced by the consequences of continued Israeli military occupation,

Dismayed at the continuation of the oppressive practices of Israel, including collective punishment, curfews, demolition of houses, closure of schools and universities, confiscation of land and measures that are particularly harmful to the Palestinian women and children in the occupied Palestinian territory,

Deeply alarmed by the practice of Israel of settling new waves of Jewish immigrants in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is illegal and contravenes the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention,

1. Reaffirms that the basic improvement of the living conditions of the Palestinian women, their advancement, full equality and self-reliance can only be achieved through an end to the occupation and the attainment of their right to return to their homes, their right to self-determination and their right to establish an independent State in accordance with United Nations resolutions;

2. Reaffirms also that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to the Palestinian people in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

3. Strongly condemns the oppressive Israeli measures against the intifadah and the consequent suffering experienced by Palestinian women and their families in the occupied Palestinian territory;

4. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to monitor the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260, which concerns assistance to Palestinian women inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territory;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the experts continue to monitor and investigate further the situation of Palestinian women and children inside and outside the occupied Palestinian territory, and to ensure that their report is submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session;

6. Requests governmental, non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations, including organizations of the United Nations system, to encourage and assist in existing income-generating activities for Palestinian women and in the creation of new jobs;

7. Requests that Palestinian women be assisted in the creation of a women's centre that would provide possibilities for child care, educational discussion, cultural activities, women's solidarity and small-scale production;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report of the mission of experts to Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic in order to alleviate the situation of Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session on the implementation of the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the mission of experts, taking into consideration all available information, including reports of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and its expert missions, reports of meetings, as appropriate, and information from Governments and non-governmental organizations.

Women and children in Namibia

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/31 [YUN 1989, p. 664], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report [E/CN.6/1990/8] on the situation of women and children in Namibia, covering the areas of education, health, economy and employment and women's participation in political affairs for the period 1985-1989. The report included statistical data and recommendations for national and international action based on the information contained in the report and gathered during missions to Namibia in 1989.

By resolution 1990/6 of 24 May, the Economic and Social Council expressed its appreciation to the Commission for its support in the struggle for Namibian independence (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). It appealed to the international community to provide financial, technical and other assistance to enable the Government of Namibia to implement measures aimed at improving the condition of women and children in that country.

Women and children under apartheid

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/33 [YUN 1989, p. 665], the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.6/1990/9] to the Commission on the Status of Women on the situation of women and children living under apartheid in South Africa. The report analysed those consequences of apartheid that particularly affected women, including legal inequality, difficulties in housing and settlements, and problems related to employment, education and health. It also described measures taken by UN bodies and specialized agencies to assist women and children living under apartheid in South Africa during the period from 1 September 1985 to 30 November 1989.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Women and children under apartheid

Recalling its resolution 1989/33 of 24 May 1989,

Noting the concern of women throughout the world about the continuing degradation and abuse to which African women and children are subjected daily by the white minority regime of South Africa,

Recalling that this concern was expressed in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which also contain proposals for various forms of assistance to be rendered to women and children inside South Africa and to those who have become refugees,

Recognizing that the inhuman exploitation and dispossession of the African people by the white minority régime is directly responsible for the appalling conditions in which African women and children live.

Also recognizing that the equality of women cannot be achieved without the success of the struggle towards a united, non-racial and democratic South Africa,

1. Commends the tenacity and bravery of those women both inside and outside South Africa who have resisted oppression, who have been detained, tortured or killed, and of those whose husbands, children and other relatives have been detained, tortured or killed and who, despite this, have remained steadfast in their opposition to the racist régime;

2. Acknowledges the efforts of those Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have campaigned for and applied sanctions against the racist régime;

3. Welcomes recent developments in South Africa, in particular the unbanning of political organizations and the release of Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners;

4. Demands the immediate and unconditional release of all other political prisoners and detainees, among whom are many women and children;

5. Condemns unequivocally the South African régime for the imposition of the state of emergency, the forcible separation of black families and the detention and imprisonment of women and children;

6. Urges the international community not to relax sanctions against South Africa until all the provisions of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, adopted by the General Assembly by its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, and contained in the annex thereto, are met;

7. Appeals to all countries to support educational, health and social welfare programmes for women and children under apartheid;

8. Appeals to the international community for increased assistance for women and children refugees in southern Africa;

9. Calls upon the international community to encourage the atmosphere for dialogue prevailing in South Africa;

10. Urges Member States and United Nations bodies, in consultation with national liberation movements, to give effect forthwith to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women that deal with women and children under apartheid, giving particular attention to education, health, vocational training and employment opportunities and to the strengthening of the women's sections of liberation movements;

11. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to work closely with women in the liberation movements in order to disseminate information and to ensure a proper assessment of the needs and aspirations of the women and children living under apartheid;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session a report on the progress made in achieving those goals.

Central American women

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/7.

Central American women: equality, development and peace

Recalling its resolution 1989/35 of 24 March 1989 on women and peace in Central America,

Bearing in mind the progress made in the implementation of the commitments reached by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua at the Esquipulas II summit meeting, and the joint declarations adopted by those Presidents at Alajuela, Costa Rica, at Costa del Sol, El Salvador, and, in particular, at Tela, Honduras,

Convinced of the exceptional importance to the peoples of Central America, in particular the women, of the achievement of peace, reconciliation, development and social justice in the region, and the recognition of their economic, social, cultural, political and civil rights,

Considering that the problems connected with the economic, social and political situation of the Central American region severely affect the living conditions and welfare levels of the population in general and of women in poverty and their children, in particular,

Considering the importance of the role that Central American women play or should play in the development of the countries of the region, as well as in the peace process and the preservation of national sovereignty,

Considering also that the intensity of the crisis in the region has caused women's associations to postpone their efforts to obtain social equality for Central American women,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 42/231 of 12 May 1988, 43/210 of 20 December 1988 and 44/182 of 19 December 1989 on the Special Plan of Economic Co-operation for Central America,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the progress made in the implementation of the commitments made in the agreement concluded at the Esquipulas II summit meeting and in subsequent agreements;

2. Again calls upon the Presidents of the Central American countries to persevere in their joint efforts to reach peace in Central America and to ensure favourable conditions for the full implementation in the region of the objectives of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and requests the international community to support those efforts;

5. Appeals to the Central American Governments to facilitate and promote the adoption and full implementation of laws on the protection and social promotion of women;

6. Also appeals to the Central American Governments to promote the participation of women in the development of societies based on equality, peace, self-determination and social justice;

7. Recommends to the Secretary-General the reinforcement of the Special Plan on Economic Co-operation for Central America with concrete activities supporting the advancement of Central American women;

8. Urges the international community to take into consideration the specific needs and interests of Central American women in the programmes of technical, economic and financial co-operation for the region;

9. Urges women's organizations, national and international, governmental and non-governmental, to play an active role in the democratization, peace and development processes in Central America.

Chapter XIV

Children, youth and aging persons

The year 1990 was one of major achievement for the world's children and the work of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), despite the enormous challenges still to be addressed in that area by the international community.

On 2 September, the Convention on the Rights of the Child entered into force, setting universal legal standards to protect children against neglect, abuse and exploitation, as well as guarantee their basic human rights. In December, the General Assembly welcomed the entry into force of the Convention as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The United Nations World Summit for Children (New York, 29-30 September), attended by leaders from 159 countries representing 99 per cent of the world's population, adopted the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration in the 1990s. Those historic proclamations, containing specific goals, many with measurable targets and deadlines for achievement, were accompanied by a detailed list of follow-up measures to be implemented at national and international levels. The General Assembly, in December, welcomed the adoption of the World Declaration and the Plan of Action and urged all States and other members of the international community to work for the achievement of the goals and objectives endorsed by the World Summit as an integral part of their national plans and international co-operation.

The year was also a milestone in the area of immunization, with the effective achievement of the goal of universal child immunization. Immunization coverage increased more than four-fold from less than 20 per cent in 1981 to the 1990 goal of 80 per cent. In April, the UNICEF Executive Board approved the goals and strategies for children and development as guiding principles for UNICEF's work in the 1990s and endorsed specific nutritional goals for the year 2000.

In December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a draft world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond. The Assembly also endorsed the action programme on aging for 1992 and beyond, which, on the tenth anniversary of the 1982 adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging, would serve as a catalyst for its further implementation.

Children

UN World Summit for Children

The United Nations World Summit for Children was held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990. On 30 September, the Summit adopted the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children, which contained specific goals, many with measurable targets and deadlines for achievement. It also adopted the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration in the 1990s, which was intended as a guide for Governments, international organizations, bilateral aid agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and all other sectors of society in formulating their own programmes of action for ensuring the implementation of the Declaration.

Representatives from 159 countries, including 71 heads of State or Government and 88 senior ministers and ambassadors, attended the Summit. On 18 October [A/45/625], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the text of the World Declaration and the Plan of Action.

World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children

The World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children identified the challenges political leaders had to meet with regard to children and the tasks involved in meeting those challenges. World leaders attending the Summit committed themselves to a 10-point programme to protect the rights of children and improve their lives. By that programme they would promote earliest ratification and implementation of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [GA res. 44/25]; enhance children's health, promote Pre-natal care and lower infant and child mortality; work for optimal growth and development in childhood by eradicating hunger, malnutrition and famine; strengthen the role of the status of women; promote respect for the role of the family in providing for children and support parents, other care givers and communities in nurturing and caring for children through adolescence; reduce illiteracy and provide educational opportunities for all children and prepare them for productive employment; ameliorate the plight of millions of children living under difficult circumstances; protect children from the scourge of war and prevent further armed conflicts to give children everywhere a peaceful and secure future; work for common measures for the protection of the environment so that children could enjoy a safer and healthier future; and work for a global attack on poverty, which would have immediate benefits for children's welfare.

The leaders decided to adopt and implement a plan of action, as a framework for more specific national and international undertakings and were prepared to make available the resources to meet those commitments, as part of the priorities of their national plans.

Plan of Action for implementing the World Declaration

The Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s set out specific actions for child survival, protection and development and identified measures for follow-up and monitoring relating to the areas of the 10-point programme contained in the Declaration. It was intended as a guide for Governments, international organizations, bilateral aid agencies, NGOs and all other sectors of society in formulating their own programmes of action for ensuring the implementation of the Declaration.

The Plan of Action called for concerted national action and international co-operation to strive for the achievement, in all countries, of the major goals for the survival, protection and development of children by the year 2000. These included reduction of 1990 mortality rates for children under five years of age by one third or to a level of 70 per 1,000 live births; reduction of maternal mortality rates to half the 1990 levels; reduction of severe and moderate malnutrition among children under five to half the 1990 levels; universal access to safe drinking water and to sanitary means of excreta disposal; universal access to basic education and completion of primary education by at least 80 per cent of primary-school-age children; reduction of the adult literacy rate to at least half its 1990 level, with emphasis on female literacy; and protection of children in especially difficult circumstances, particularly in situations of armed conflict.

In terms of specific actions, the Plan of Action recommended that every effort be made in all countries to disseminate the Convention on the Rights of the Child and, where it had not been ratified, to promote its implementation and monitoring. It called for effective action to combat preventable childhood diseases such as measles, polio, tetanus, tuberculosis, whooping cough and diphtheria by strengthening primary health care and basic health services in all countries. There was also an urgent need to ensure that programmes for the prevention and treatment of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), including research on possible vaccines and cures, and information and education campaigns, received high priority for both national action and international co-operation. It was desirable and feasible, through concerted national action and international co-operation, to aim at providing all the world's children with universal access to safe drinking water and sanitary means of excreta disposal by the year 2000. An important benefit of that action would be the control of many water-borne diseases, among them elimination of dracunculiasis (Guinea-worm disease) in parts of Africa and Asia.

Concerning food and nutrition, the Plan of Action stated that with the right policies, appropriate institutional arrangements and political priority, the world was in a position to feed all children and to overcome the worst forms of malnutrition. For the young child and the pregnant woman, provision of adequate food during pregnancy and lactation, protection and support of breast-feeding and complementary feeding practices, growth monitoring with follow-up actions and nutritional surveillance were the most essential needs. Adequate diet for the growing child was a human priority. Meeting that need required employment and income-generating opportunities, dissemination of knowledge, and supporting services to increase food production and distribution. Those were key actions within broader national strategies to combat hunger and malnutrition.

Efforts for the enhancement of women's status and their role in development had to begin with the girl child. Equal opportunity should be provided for the girl child to benefit from health, nutrition, education and other basic services to enable her to grow to her full potential. To address the major risk factors of maternal mortality, which claimed the lives of 500,000 young women each year, special attention should be given to the health, nutrition and education of women. All couples should have access to information on responsible planning of family size and the advantages of child spacing. Pre-natal care, clean delivery, access to referral facilities in complicated cases, tetanus toxoid vaccination and prevention of anaemia and other nutritional deficiencies during pregnancy were other important interventions to ensure safe motherhood and a healthy start for the newborn.

All institutions of society should respect and support the efforts of parents and other care givers to nurture and care for children in a family environment. Every effort should be made to prevent the separation of children from their families. Whenever that happened, arrangements should be made for appropriate alternative family care or institutional placement, due regard being paid to the desirability of continuity in a child's upbringing in his or her own cultural milieu. Extended families, relatives and community institutions should be supported to help meet the special needs of orphaned, displaced and abandoned children. Efforts should be made to ensure that no child was treated as an outcast of society.

In fulfilment of the commitment undertaken at the World Conference on Education for All (see PART THREE, Chapter XII), specific measures should be adopted for expansion of early childhood development activities; universal access to basic education, including completion of primary education or equivalent learning achievement by at least 80 per cent of the relevant school-age children, with emphasis on reducing the disparities between boys and girls; reduction of adult literacy by half, with emphasis on female literacy; vocational training and preparation for employment; and increased acquisition of knowledge, skills and values through all educational channels to improve the quality of life of children and families. Investment in education had to be accorded high priority in national action as well as international co-operation.

The millions of children living under difficult circumstances—as orphans and street children; as refugees or displaced persons; as victims of war and man-made disasters, including such perils as exposure to radiation and dangerous chemicals; as children of migrant workers and other specially disadvantaged groups; as child workers or youth trapped in prostitution, sexual abuse and other forms of exploitation; as disabled children and juvenile delinquents; and as victims of apartheid and foreign occupation—deserved special attention, protection and assistance from their families and communities and also as part of national efforts and international co-operation.

All States should work to end exploitative child labour practices and see how the conditions and circumstances of children in legitimate employment could be protected to provide adequate opportunity for their healthy upbringing and development. With drug abuse emerging as a global menace to large numbers of young people and, increasingly, children, concerted action was needed by Governments and intergovernmental agencies to combat illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution to counter that tragedy. Equally important was community action and education. To prevent the degradation of the environment in industrialized and developing countries, more action was needed through changes in the wasteful consumption patterns of the affluent and by helping to meet the necessities of survival and development of the poor. Programmes for children that helped to meet their basic needs and inculcated in them respect for the environment had to figure prominently in the world's environmental agenda.

In the areas of poverty alleviation and revitalization of economic growth, more needed to be done to ensure that a solid economic base was established to meet and sustain the goals for long-term child survival, protection and development. To foster a favourable international economic environment, it was essential to continue to give urgent attention to an early, broad and durable solution to the external debt problems of developing countries; to mobilize external and domestic resources to meet increased needs for development finance; to ensure that the problem of net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries did not continue in the 1990s and that its impact was effectively addressed; to create a more open and equitable trading system to facilitate diversification and modernization of the economies of developing countries, particularly commodity-dependent economies; and to make available substantial concessional resources, particularly for the least developed countries. In all those efforts, the basic needs of children should receive high priority.

Programmes benefiting children, women and other vulnerable groups had to be protected in times of structural adjustment and other economic restructuring; for example, resources released by reductions in military expenditure should be channelled to programmes for social and economic development, including those benefiting children. The international community, including private-sector creditors, were urged to work with developing countries and relevant agencies to support debt relief for children. To match the efforts of developing countries, donor countries and international institutions should target more development assistance to primary health care, basic education, low-cost water and sanitation programmes and other interventions specifically endorsed in the Summit

Declaration and the Plan of Action. The countries of sub-Saharan Africa and many landlocked and island countries would require additional long-term international support to complement their own national efforts to meet the pressing needs of children over the 1990s.

In terms of follow-up action at the national level, the Plan of Action urged Governments to prepare, before the end of 1991, national programmes of action and to encourage and assist provincial and local governments, NGOs, the private sector and civic groups to prepare their own programmes of action to help implement the goals and objectives of the Declaration and the Plan of Action. Each country was encouraged to re-examine how it might accord higher priority to programmes for the well-being of children in general and for meeting during the 1990s the major goals of the Declaration and the Plan of Action. Each country, including donor countries, should also re-examine development assistance budget to ensure that programmes for achieving the goals for the survival, protection and development of children would have priority when resources were allocated. Every effort should be made to ensure that such programmes were protected in times of economic austerity and structural adjustments.

Families, communities, local governments, NGOs and social, cultural, religious, business and other institutions, including the mass media, were encouraged to play an active role in support of the goals of the Plan of Action. All forms of social mobilization, including the effective use of the potential of the new world information and communication capacity, should be marshalled to convey to all families the knowledge and skills required for dramatically improving the situation of children. Each country should establish mechanisms for the regular and timely collection, analysis and publication of data required to monitor social indicators relating to the well-being of children and to alert policy makers to any adverse trends to enable timely action.

Countries should re-examine arrangements for responding to natural disasters and man-made calamities which often afflicted women and children the hardest and, where they did not exist, establish plans for disaster preparedness with the support of international institutions. Progress towards the goals in the Declaration and Plan of Action could be further accelerated and solutions to problems confronting children and families facilitated through further research and development. Governments, industry and academic institutions should increase their efforts in basic and operational research, aimed at new technical and technological breakthroughs, more effective mobilization and better delivery of existing social services.

At the international level, the Plan of Action urged international development agencies to examine how they could contribute to the achievement of the goals of the Declaration and Plan of Action as part of more general attention to human development in the 1990s, and to report their plans and programmes to their respective governing bodies before the end of 1991 and periodically thereafter. Regional institutions, including political and economic organizations, should include consideration of the Declaration and Plan of Action in the agendas of their meetings, including at the highest political level, with a view to developing agreements for mutual collaboration for implementation and ongoing monitoring.

There should be full collaboration among all relevant UN agencies and organs and other international institutions to ensure the achievement of the goals and objectives of the national plans envisaged in the Declaration and Plan of Action. Governing bodies should ensure that within their mandates the fullest possible support was given by those agencies for the achievement of those goals. Governing bodies of specialized agencies and UN organs should include a periodic review of the implementation of the Declaration and Plan of Action at their regular sessions and keep the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, informed of progress and additional action required during the decade.

The United Nations was requested to institute mechanisms for monitoring implementation of the Plan of Action, and the Secretary-General to arrange for a mid-decade review of progress in implementing the commitments. UNICEF was requested to prepare, in collaboration with specialized agencies and UN organs, a consolidated analysis of the plans and actions undertaken by individual countries and the international community in support of child-related development goals for the 1990s.

Appended to the Plan was a list of detailed sectoral goals for children and development in the 1990s and specific actions to enable the attainment of the major goals of the Plan of Action.

Summit preparations

The first meeting of the Planning Committee for the World Summit for Children was held in New York on 12 January [E/ICEF/1990/12 & Corr.1]. The six initiating Governments (Canada, Egypt, Mali, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden) had invited 12 additional Governments to join them as initial members of the Planning Committee; an additional two Governments had asked to attend, and two other Governments indicated interest. The Planning Committee agreed that its membership should be open to any State Member of the United Nations or members of its specialized agencies. It accepted the Statement of Agreement on the World Summit for Children, adopted by the initiating Governments, and the 1989 decision of the UNICEF Executive Board as its terms of reference [YUN 1989, p. 682]. The Committee authorized the UNICEF Executive Director, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to determine the dates of the Summit. On 8 February, the Secretary-General announced that the Summit would be convened on 29 and 30 September and, if necessary, on 1 October. At the request of the Planning Committee, 17 Governments and 15 international organizations and the Summit secretariat submitted suggestions on themes and topics to be included in the agenda of the Summit.

At its second meeting (New York, 19 March), the Committee endorsed the nomination of Benazir Bhutto (Pakistan) and Brian Mulroney (Canada) as Co-Chairmen of the World Summit. It established an open-ended working group on the declaration, to draft the proposed political documents of the World Summit, and an open-ended working group on its format.

The first meeting of the Working Group on the Declaration (2 April) concluded that a short political declaration of commitment for action, and a plan of action that elaborated upon specific child-related goals and strategies for the 1990s, should be proposed for adoption by the heads of State or Government participating in the World Summit. It agreed that the declaration should provide a message that could be communicated to and understood by all sectors of society and that the topics and themes submitted by Governments and agencies provided a base of issues that might be included in the plan of action, supplemented by decisions by the UNICEF Executive Board or other sources. The Working Group requested its Chairman to prepare preliminary drafts of the declaration and plan of action. The first meeting of the Working Group on Format was held on 10 April.

UNICEF consideration. At its 1990 regular session (16-27 April), the UNICEF Executive Board had before it a progress report on preparations for the World Summit [E/ICEF/1990/12 & Corr.1], which highlighted the work of the Planning Committee for the World Summit and its working groups and the financial implications of holding the Summit. An addendum to the report [E/ICEF/1990/12/Add.1] set out the suggested themes and topics for the Summit, as well as a tentative schedule for the Planning Committee and related meetings and activities. It also reported that pledges and contributions of $763,925 had been received for the Summit and $500,034 for Summit-related mobilization activities. Revised budget estimates amounted to $1,483,762 for the Summit for 1990 and totalled $1,999,683 for mobilization activities [E/ICEF/1990/AB/L.11].

In April [E/1990/28 (dec. 1990/12)]¹, the Executive Board noted the progress made in planning and preparations for the World Summit for Children. It invited the Planning Committee and the working groups to bear in mind the views expressed by the Executive Board in carrying out their future work. The Board decided to review the preparations for the Summit at a special session in early September and appealed to those Governments, National Committees for UNICEF and others, that had not yet done so to make voluntary contributions to the special accounts for the Summit.

In a further decision [dec. 1990/24], the Board approved the revised budget estimates for the Summit as presented.

Special session. The Executive Board held its special session [E/ICEF/1990/17] in New York on 6 and 7 September to review preparations for the Summit. It had before it a progress report on the preparations for the Summit [E/ICEF/1990/16], which dealt with the process of organizing and preparing the Summit, the drafting of the final declaration and plan of action, formulation of the agenda and format of the meeting, and some of the initiatives taken at the country level in support of the Summit. Also before the Board were: a note by the Executive Director containing the draft world declaration on the survival, protection and development of children and the draft plan of action [E/ICEF/1990/L.20]; the response of the NGO Committee on UNICEF to the draft declaration and plan of action [E/ICEF/1990/NGO/8]; and revised budget estimates for the Summit and Summit-related mobilization activities [E/ICEF/1990/AB/L.16 & Corr.1].

As at 20 August, a total of $2,015,008 in contributions and pledges had been received for the Summit meeting and $1,563,210 for mobilization activities. Revised budget estimates were submitted amounting to $2,994,762 for the Summit, an increase of $1,511,000 over the amount approved by the Board in April, and $2,139,683 for mobilization activities, an increase of $140,000.

In September [E/ICEF/1990/17 (dec. 1990/35)]¹, the Executive Board approved the revised budget estimates for the World Summit for Children and the Summit-related mobilization activities as presented. It authorized the Executive Director to enter into commitments up to the limit of total confirmed and anticipated contributions and requested him to ensure that all unforeseen and extraordinary expenditures were financed from the special account for the Summit. He should report on any additional expenditures in excess of the approved budget level for review by the Board at its next regular (1991) session.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560] and opened for signature in New York on 26 January 1990, entered into force on 2 September, having received 103 signatures and 31 ratifications or accessions from 31 States as at 31 August 1990, said the Secretary-General in his report on the status of the Convention [A/45/473].

The Executive Director, in his report on 1990 activities [E/ICEF/1991/2 (Part I)], stated that the Convention set universal legal standards for the protection of children against neglect, abuse and exploitation, as well as guaranteeing their basic human rights, including survival, development, protection and participation in social, cultural, educational and other endeavours necessary for their well-being. While full implementation would take a long time, particularly in developing countries, its norms and standards would provide guiding principles for development efforts in the future.

As at 31 December 1990, the number of States parties to the Convention had risen to 62.

The General Assembly, by resolution 45/104 of 14 December, welcomed the entry into force of the Convention as a major step in international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It called upon all States that had not done so to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority.

UN Children's Fund (UNICEF)

During 1990, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) supported programmes in 127 countries and territories, the greatest number of which were in Africa (44), followed by Latin America and the Caribbean (35), Asia (34) and the Middle East and North Africa (14).

Programme expenditures amounted to $584 million, of which $250 million (43 per cent) was spent on child health; $82 million (14 per cent) on water supply and sanitation; $75 million (13 per cent) on planning and support; $57 million (10 per cent) on education; $49 million (8 per cent) on emergency operations; $41 million (7 per cent) on community development; and $29 million (5 per cent) on child nutrition and household food security.

In his report on 1990 activities [E/ICEF/1991/2 (Part I)], the UNICEF Executive Director stated that 1990 would be seen as a historic turning-point for the world's children. It was a year when the needs and aspirations of children received more attention in more forums at higher policy-making levels than ever before. It was a year of great promises for children, as embodied in the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children, the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration (see above) and the Convention on the Rights of the Child (see above). Beyond promises, it was also a year of concrete, practical results, as evidenced by the effective achievement of the ambitious goal of universal child immunization (UCI), saving the lives of some 3 million children a year and protecting the health of millions more. However, 1990 was by no means a year of unqualified success for children. In certain areas, the situation of children had actually deteriorated. Sub-Saharan Africa continued to reel under persistent economic decline, natural disasters, civil strife and the ravages of AIDS, and a broad and durable solution had not yet been found to the external debt crisis in Latin America. Current rates of progress and the scale of commitments had to be surpassed if the goals for children endorsed by the World Summit for Children were to be achieved. The hope for their achievement lay in accelerating progress, galvanizing political commitment, and searching for technical breakthroughs and social mobilization to compress the work of several decades into one.

Programme policies

Medium-term plan

In April [dec. 1990/31, the Executive Board endorsed the programme objectives for UNICEF as described in the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1993 [E/ICEF/1990/3 & Corr.1].

The plan, which represented a substantive revision of the 1988-1992 plan, was prepared in the context of the goals and strategies for children in the 1990s (see below) and of foreseeable socio-economic trends [YUN 1989, p. 670]. It presented major programme areas, including specific UNICEF interventions in support of child survival and development goals. It reviewed the principal programmatic approaches and areas of concern that cut across all sectors and programme activities and presented those aspects of country programming that characterized specific regions. The strategic approaches that would guide external relations and the operations area during the period of the plan were discussed. Also presented was a strategy for the allocation of resources among countries and by major programme sectors, including the financial plan for 1990-1993.

Development goals and strategies for children in the 1990s

In April, the Executive Director submitted proposals for goals and strategies for children and development in the 1990s [E/ICEF/1990/L.5]. The proposals were derived from an analysis of the experience of the 1980s, recommendations of several recent international commissions and conferences, and the medium- and longer-term plans and perspectives of various UN agencies, including UNICEF.

The major goals of child survival, development and protection to be achieved by the year 2000 were: the reduction of the infant mortality rate and the mortality rate of children under five in all countries by one third, or to 50 and 70 per 1,000 live births, respectively, whichever was less; the reduction of the maternal mortality rate by one third; the reduction of malnutrition among children under five by 50 per cent; universal access to safe drinking water and sanitary means of excreta disposal; universal access to basic education and completion of primary education by at least 80 per cent of primary-school-age children; the reduction of the adult illiteracy rate to at least one half of its 1990 level, with an emphasis on female illiteracy; and improved protection of children in especially difficult circumstances. Also proposed were goals in specific and sectoral areas such as maternal and child health, nutrition, safe water supply and environmental sanitation, basic education, literacy, early childhood development, and children in especially difficult circumstances.

The Executive Director noted that the goals would have to be adapted to the specific realities of each country but were technically feasible and financially affordable. He proposed a number of strategic actions to achieve the goals, including building the economic base for meeting human goals, and set out UNICEF'S operational strategies.

In April [dec. 1990/21, the Board approved the goals and strategies for children and development as the guiding principles for UNICEF work in the 1990s, while stressing the importance of maximizing their long-term development impact. The focus of UNICEF activities would be on integrated primary health care, with special emphasis on child and maternal health, including safe motherhood; food and nutrition, safe water supply and environmental sanitation; basic education, with special emphasis on girls and women; and children in especially difficult circumstances. Those principles would guide the formulation of UNICEF's medium-term plan and the biennial budget and the setting of specific programme priorities, the proposals for the commitment of financial resources and other proposals. The country programming process had to have primacy, and goals and targets might be valuable aiming-posts and bench-marks. The Board called on States to set goals and develop and implement national, regional and international strategies for children and to support the goals and strategies for the 1990s as part of the international development strategy for the Fourth International Development Decade (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It requested all States, international development agencies and NGOs to help mobilize the financial resources and political support to help achieve the major goals and strategies, which might imply the restructuring of the allocation of resources and of the use of available means.

The Board urged all States and international and non-governmental agencies, in formulating and implementing strategies for children, to take into account the fact that strategies for children should be situated within general development strategies and should take into account, inter alia, national capacity-building, poverty alleviation, people's (particularly women's) empowerment and participation in planning and implementation, sustainability and environmental soundness, and co-ordinated and intersectoral policies, recognizing the necessity for adequate resources to achieve those objectives.

Strategy for improved nutrition of children and women in developing countries

The Executive Director proposed a strategy for improved nutrition of children and women in developing countries [E/ICEF/1990/L.6]. The strategy, based on previous nutrition-oriented programmes, aimed to reduce and ultimately eliminate malnutrition in developing countries. Its overall objective was to empower families, communities and Governments to improve the nutrition of women and children on the basis of adequate information and sound analysis, implying the concepts of self-reliance, sustainability and scale. It would initiate new processes and accelerate existing ones at all levels of society in order to mobilize people and resources for improved nutrition. The two most important elements of the strategy were a method of assessment, analysis and action ("triple A approach") and a conceptual framework for the analysis of the causes of malnutrition in a specific context. The first element described how information should be used, while the second provided a guide for discerning what information should be collected. The strategy was applicable at household, community, district and national levels. Important strategy components included the promotion of breast-feeding and attention to outreach and urbanization.

In April [dec. 1990/91], the Executive Board endorsed specific nutritional goals for the year 2000: the control of protein-energy malnutrition, including the reduction of both moderate and severe protein-energy malnutrition in children under five by one half of the 1990 levels, and the reduction of the rate of low birth weight (less than 2.5 kilograms) to less than 10 per cent; and the control of micronutrient deficiency disorders, including the reduction of iron-deficiency anaemia among women of child-bearing age by one third of the 1990 levels and the elimination of iodine-deficiency disorders and of vitamin A deficiency and its consequences, including blindness. The Board also endorsed the strategy proposed to achieve the overall objective of empowering families, communities and Governments to improve the nutrition of women and children on the basis of adequate information and analysis. It further endorsed the proposal that the strategy be implemented at household/community, district and national levels, and the proposal that the elements of the strategy in a given context would be identified through analysis and would include actions that addressed the manifestation and immediate causes of malnutrition, as well as its underlying and basic causes.

UNICEF external relations

In response to a 1989 Executive Board request [YUN 1989, p. 671], the Executive Director submitted a report on the future role of UNICEF external relations [E/ICEF/1990/L.4], which had been prepared based on an in-depth evaluation and analysis of current UNICEF external relations and an outline by the Executive Director of future trends. The report provided definitions of terms pertaining to UNICEF external relations, described the context for the work and set out the objectives, policies and priorities of future external relations. It presented proposals for improving management and planning and strengthening links between the relevant functions at headquarters and the field network and National Committees.

According to the report, the role of UNICEF external relations would continue to be to support overall UNICEF objectives through programmes of co-operation, information, advocacy, public outreach and fund-raising. Its objectives were:

advocacy, information and fund-raising efforts to improve the situation of children and mothers, particularly the specific goals for health, nutrition, water and sanitation and basic education, and the priorities embodied in the Convention on the Rights of the Child; mobilizing partners and allies at the international level and support for mobilization efforts at the country level through advocacy, information, fund-raising and other efforts; building awareness and mobilizing support for community participation and reaching the unreached as important objectives of UNICEF assistance and of other co-operation in the development process; support for the enhancement of the situation of women through advocacy in international and regional organizations, through specific-purpose fund-raising and through support for the information and communication processes that might help to empower them; and arguing strongly through international and regional advocacy and information for national capacity-building as a foundation of sustainable and self-reliant development.

Specific objectives for fund-raising and greeting card sales were identified, as well as plans for the work of the external relations division at headquarters.

The Executive Board supported [dec. 1990/14] the steps taken to improve the integration of the planning and management of UNICEF external relations, in particular reactivating the External Relations Committee and more regular meetings of the external relations division directors at headquarters. It endorsed the measures proposed to strengthen the linkages between external relations efforts at headquarters, in the field and with National Committees for UNICEF, in particular as focused on countries where UNICEF had programmes of co-operation, and urged the Executive Director to take further steps to improve the external relations function. He should review the role, functions and resources of the Geneva Office and the size and level of its staffing, to enable it, in particular, to meet the new challenges that Europe offered in the 1990s, and to present recommendations thereon to the Board in 1991. He should also report on developments and intentions in the area of external relations in his annual report. Beginning in 1992, he should include, in country programme recommendations with a significant external relations component, a section setting out external relations activities, expenditures, accomplishments, problems and future plans. Also beginning in 1992, he should make the planning of external relations and advocacy an integral part of the medium-term plan process specifying, inter alia, goals, objectives, activities, outputs, staffing and resource requirements and an evaluation plan. The Executive Director should also clarify, at the Board's 1991 session, the complete role and specific functions of the external relations units.

UNICEF Maurice Pate Award

The 1990 Maurice Pate Award, established in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 385] to commemorate the first UNICEF Executive Director, was presented to Professor Olikoye Ransome-Kuti, Minister of Health of Nigeria, for his advocacy of public health services for all; his vision and leadership in the development of a national, community-based public health-care system, which served as a model for African countries and throughout the world; and his pioneering adaptation of the principles of the Bamako Initiative (see below).

The Executive Director submitted recommendations to amend the procedure related to objectives, recipients, nominations and selection of the award. Those amendments reflected the views of Executive Board members that no government or government-related official should be nominated; that nominations should be sought from Board member Governments; that the Bureau of the Executive Board should review and evaluate all nominations; and that equitable geographical rotation should be ensured in the selection process.

In September, the Board decided that the amendments should be submitted to its 1991 organizational session for approval.

UNICEF programmes by region

Africa

In 1990, programme expenditure in Africa amounted to $218.4 million, representing 37 per cent of total UNICEF programme expenditure.

During the year, Africa continued to struggle with many different challenges. Although there was some political progress, the economic crisis persisted and new outbreaks of violence created more refugees and displaced persons. Against a mixed backdrop of political progress and continuing economic crisis in 1990, UNICEF undertook a wide range of activities to promote child survival, protection and development in Africa and to reach the global goals for the 1990s.

In eastern and southern Africa, programmes to improve the health status of women and children remained the centre-piece of country programmes. Priority attention was devoted to achieving UCI, and efforts were continued to expand primary health care (PHC), increase access to oral rehydration therapy (ORT), control diar-rhoeal diseases and combat acute respiratory infections (ARI).

Many countries moved beyond the traditional concept of safe motherhood-limited to pregnancy and lactation-and focused on the supply of equipment and the training of health personnel. The Safe Motherhood Conference held in Harare, Zimbabwe, in October generated renewed interest in translating the principles of safe motherhood into effective country programmes.

Two critical health problems continued to require heightened attention in the region: malaria and AIDS. In Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, malaria was reported to be the major cause of death of children under five years old. UNICEF efforts to combat malaria included the provision of chloroquine in essential drug kits and promotion of the use of mosquito nets treated with insecticide.

The HIV/AIDS virus continued to spread at alarming rates. The UNICEF anti-AIDS strategy focused on using information, education and communication (IEC) aimed particularly at young people to prevent HIV transmission. The AIDS/Health Education network focused on the social problems arising from HIV/AIDS, as well as the special needs of families affected by the disease.

UNICEF supported a wide range of activities to improve the nutritional status of women and children in the region, including training health and IEC workers, educating mothers and sometimes fathers, establishing community-based growth monitoring and growth promotion activities, and strengthening the planning and management activities of key government ministries, especially those responsible for planning and health. The major challenge in the area of nutrition would be the translation of the new UNICEF nutrition strategy (see above) into actual country programming activities.

Despite some advances during the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) (see below), a wide gap remained in the region between rural and urban access to safe water and adequate sanitation. Improved sanitation lagged behind water supply, while water pollution and health education were major problems. Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe developed and implemented national programmes to improve safe water and sanitation. In Ethiopia, UNICEF supported efforts to strengthen government capacity to plan and manage water supply and sanitation programmes, and in Uganda, it supported the development of a strong, community-based maintenance system, including the training of personnel. The rehabilitation and construction of water sources such as springs, deep and shallow wells and, in some urban areas, running main pipelines into settlements received UNICEF support in Angola and Mozambique. In the context of decreasing government resources, cost recovery was a recurring concern and served as the theme for a workshop on community-based water supply and sanitation held in Kampala, Uganda, attended by water supply and sanitation officers from the eastern and southern and West and Central Africa UNICEF regional offices.

As a follow-up to the 1990 World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 5-9 March) (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) and with UNICEF support, several countries in the region (Malawi, Rwanda, Zambia) established task forces to facilitate implementation of the Conference Declaration. Most countries re-examined their problems and worked to find innovative solutions. UNICEF supported regional seminars to examine and promulgate the principles of education for all. A consultative meeting of UNICEF programme officers and education focal points assessed the implications for UNICEF programmes.

In April [dec. 1990/91], the UNICEF Executive Board, having considered a report on UNICEF support for children and women in South Africa [E/ICEF/1990/P/L.42], expressed concern about the infant mortality rate among black children in South Africa, which was approximately ten times higher than that of white children and was one of the highest in the region. It supported UNICEF co-operation with the newly independent State of Namibia for the provision of services to the children and women of that country and UNICEF co-operation with NGOs seized with the problems relating to children and women inside South Africa. It requested UNICEF to operate in accordance with the relevant UN resolutions regarding collaboration with the South African regime, and urged the international community to continue supporting the oppressed women and children of South Africa. It requested the Executive Director to report on those activities in 1991.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1990/13 of 24 May, appealed to all countries to support educational, health and social welfare programmes for women and children under apartheid.

In the West and Central Africa region, 1990 was marked by growing trends towards multi-party political systems, although some countries continued to be affected by strife. Following the outbreak of civil war in Liberia at the end of 1989, over 600,000 refugees fled to neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone. In Liberia, over 745,000 people were without adequate food, water, shelter or medical care. UNICEF co-operated with other members of the UN system and with NGOs to alleviate the plight of refugees, particularly those Liberian children severely traumatized by the tragedy. The African Development Bank and UNICEF held their first consultative meeting (Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire, May) to discuss operational modalities for co-operation, joint implementation of the Bamako Initiative [YUN 1987, p. 859] and collaboration in addressing the effects of structural adjustment programmes.

The region continued to make progress in the area of immunization. Cape Verde, the Congo and the Gambia had reached UCI by 1990, and at least five other countries were expected to attain 75 per cent vaccination coverage during the year. Regional coverage was expected to average over 50 per cent for three doses of combined diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus vaccine (DPT3). At the Third Regional Conference on Dracunculiasis in Africa, held in March in Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, strategic project options to achieve eradication of the disease in the region by 1995 were reviewed (see below).

The Bamako Initiative, adopted by the African ministers of health in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 859] to improve the health of women and children through community-level funding and management of essential drugs, was increasingly promoted in the context of country programmes. Common constraints identified in developing the Bamako Initiative in the region included: slow progress in policy formulation and effective implementation on essential drugs, decentralization and community financing; the difficulty of upgrading the first referral level; the scarcity of foreign exchange; and pressing issues related to staff management, such as grossly insufficient remuneration and lack of incentives, difficulty in filling posts in remote areas and generally poor performance. UNICEF worked closely with all partners to develop models for sustainable health services financing and for community organization, with special focus on capacity-building at all levels.

The situation with regard to AIDS worsened in 1990, with the total number of confirmed cases increasing in some countries by 100 per cent in comparison to the previous year. The Fifth International Conference on AIDS in Africa was held in Kinshasa, Zaire, in October.

Although the targets of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade were not reached in the region (see below), countries did adjust their strategies according to lessons learned during the 1980s. The application of low-cost technologies such as gravity spring systems in Nigeria and hand-dug wells in Sierra Leone and Zaire, with full community participation, helped to make greater use of financial resources.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1990, programme expenditure in the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $58 million, representing 10 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure.

Despite the region's structural difficulties, strides were made in almost every country towards establishing and consolidating democratic governments, with the elections in Haiti and Nicaragua in 1990 as examples of that trend. However, the region's chronic poverty and growing unrest posed threats to the democratization process in the long term. In addition, the growing level of open violence in some Latin American countries, particularly Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala and Peru, was a further challenge in the region. Economic conditions remained bleak in 1990, with the external debt totalling $423 billion and, for the ninth consecutive year, the region being a net exporter of capital—$18.9 billion in 1990 alone. Thus, economic vulnerability continued to be the condition of millions of people in the region, with chronic poverty affecting some 270 million people, or 62 per cent of the population.

The region continued to make progress towards the goal of UCI. It was on the verge of reaching the goal of polio eradication; during 1990, only 10 cases of wild polio virus were confirmed. The formulation of phase II of the expanded programme of immunization (EPI) (1991-1995) was a new challenge facing both the countries of the region and UNICEF, in which success would be measured by decreases in the rates of vaccine-preventable diseases rather than by the percentages of children immunized.

All countries in the region conducted situation analyses to ascertain the number and the problems of children in especially difficult circumstances, as well as the number of those at risk. The focus on research and policy formulation reinforced the open and human approach that 16 countries in the region had implemented successfully in dealing with the problem of children in especially difficult circumstances. Effective programmes for assisting working and street children had already been initiated in most countries of the region, and future actions were to target those children not yet covered by existing programmes.

In 14 countries, the attention of the public and policy makers was called to the situation of women, through research studies describing their problems and programme activities to generate income and improve their health and educational status. Four successful models for women's development were identified in Brazil, Chile, Ecuador and Mexico. Those case-studies were to be documented to help stimulate their replication in other countries of the region.

In April [dec. 1990/10], the Executive Board, noting the positive results achieved by the establishment of the Special Adjustment Facility for Latin America and the Caribbean (SAFLAC), requested the Executive Director to continue the development of a concrete financing mechanism to be set up in conjunction with the Inter-American Development Bank. He was asked to promote and strengthen early childhood education programmes, particularly for children under the age of six, including components for early stimulation, basic education, health, nutrition and promoting community organization and participation. He should also promote safe motherhood programmes, including the reduction of unwanted pregnancies, and promote and support the development of strategies for providing additional support to school-age children during out-of-school hours to prevent the undesired phenomena associated with truancy, such as exposure to illicit drug trafficking and all the dangers to which children were exposed in the street.

Asia and the Pacific

In 1990, programme expenditure in Asia and the Pacific amounted to $233 million, or 40 per cent of UNICEF'S total programme expenditure.

During the 1980s, most developing countries in East Asia and Pakistan demonstrated a high level of political commitment to improving services for children and women, which led in 1990 to continued improvements in their health and educational status. However, economic instability exacerbated by the conflict between Iraq and Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III), together with rapid urbanization, the increased number of female-headed households and environmental degradation, posed serious challenges for the future. Despite economic growth in much of the region and the overall improvements in women's and children's health and educational status, income distribution and access to services remained highly inequitable, with disproportionate numbers of women and children among the poorest of the poor. Although per capita income rose in Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand, the lowest income groups were unable to improve their quality of life.

In 1990, there were considerable improvements in child survival and development in the region, with all countries reporting increased immunization coverage. The availability and use of oral rehydration salts (ORS) increased throughout the region, with several countries becoming self-sufficient in ORS production. Safe motherhood policies had been initiated in all countries, while the infant mortality rate continued to decline. By 1990, UCI had been reached in Indonesia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Thailand, Viet Nam, the Marshall Islands and five other Pacific island nations. Malaysia was close to the target, and Pakistan was making great efforts to achieve UCI by the end of the year. Impressive improvements in coverage under EPI were noted in Bangladesh, as well as in Cambodia, Kiribati, Papua New Guinea and Vanuatu. Almost all countries in the region had strengthened their health delivery systems through immunization programmes. All countries in the region also had programmes for the control of diarrhoeal diseases (CDD), which included training in case management, programme management and supervision; research into access to and use of ORS production; and supply of ORS and IEC support for CDD. UNICEF also supported the establishment of diarrhoea training units. Attempts were made throughout the region to integrate CDD activities into broader initiatives in maternal and child health (MCH) and in water supply and sanitation. In Pakistan, the national diarrhoea treatment policy emphasized prevention through the promotion of breast-feeding, measles immunization and hygiene education.

In 1990, ARIs were the leading cause of morbidity and mortality in the region, accounting for 25 per cent of all deaths of children under five years of age. Programmes for the prevention and control of ARIs were in progress in Bangladesh, Indonesia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand and Viet Nam and were expanding rapidly.

The rate of malnutrition among children declined slowly in most countries. Throughout 1990, the major nutritional activities were growth monitoring, community nutrition activities and the promotion of breast-feeding and national and household food security. Growth monitoring and promotion remained an important focus of most nutrition programmes, while the prevention and control of micronutrient deficiencies, such as iodine deficiency disorders and vitamin A deficiencies, also continued to be a priority.

The number of people infected with AIDS increased dramatically during 1990. Between August 1989 and August 1990, the cases of HIV reported in the region had escalated from 9,473 to 20,604, but the actual number was much higher than officially reported. Most countries in the region had implemented short-term plans of action with assistance from various donors.

UNICEF continued to support programmes of direct benefit to women and the integration of women's concerns into other sectoral programmes. Income-generating activities for women were supported in many countries in the region. In the Lao People's Democratic Republic and in Thailand, women were trained in silkworm raising, textile weaving, animal raising and establishing rice banks; in Bangladesh, landless women were assisted by the Grameen Bank; and in Papua New Guinea, a survey was conducted of women's income-generating activities. Support was given to embroidery, sewing and dress-making in Viet Nam and to skills-training activities in Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Papua New Guinea. In the Philippines, UNICEF supported training in new non-formal educational methods for female functional literacy skills, and in Thailand in business skills.

Working children, child abuse, child prostitution, street children and children affected by armed conflict were growing problems in many countries of the region. Regional networks, supported by UNICEF, made important contributions in raising awareness of those problems, enhancing support for activities of NGOs and influencing public opinion. One UNICEF-supported NGO, Child Workers in Asia, published newsletters and pictorial booklets on the situation of working children. In China, the fourth Government of China/UNICEF programme of co-operation for the period 1990-1994 commenced. The major aim of the initiative was to ensure that every young child below the age of six, especially those in poor and remote areas, had access to essential services and could participate in affordable, community-based early childcare and education activities.

In South Central Asia, UCI efforts harnessed the energy of all UNICEF offices in the region in 1990. Universal coverage was achieved and verified in Maldives, Mongolia and Sri Lanka. In Bhutan, continued outreach through a network of mobile clinics achieved substantial improvements in coverage. The programme in Afghanistan realized remarkable coverage under most difficult circumstances. Nepal's major efforts in 1989 were set back over much of 1990 by political turmoil and resulting changes in Government, although 93 per cent of children received at least one vaccine. India embarked on a nationwide mobilization to achieve UCI by the end of the year.

Diarrhoeal diseases remained the main killer of young children in the region, and an extensive effort was made to expand public awareness of

ORT and to increase the availability of ORS. In Mongolia, where there were ORT units in every health institution, there was a measurable decline in deaths caused by diarrhoea. The national diarrhoea training unit established in Bhutan trained all health workers in the country in the management of diarrhoea, while in Nepal, a household survey on diarrhoeal diseases showed a decrease in diarrhoea episodes, improved feeding practices, including breast-feeding, and greater use of ORT. In Afghanistan, diarrhoea was associated with over 40 per cent of the deaths of children under two years of age. Through a public information effort, 90 per cent of refugee camp dwellers were aware of ORS, although utilization rates were much lower.

Concerted attention was paid to programmes for safe motherhood, starting with a regional meeting in Lahore, Pakistan, in March, attended by representatives of all countries in the region.

Middle East and North Africa

In 1990, programme expenditure in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $57 million, or 10 per cent of UNICEF's total programme expenditure.

During the closing months of 1990, the Iraq-Kuwait crisis (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and its aftermath affected all the region's economies. Oil prices doubled, hundreds of thousands of foreign workers returned home and both interregional trade and workers' remittances vanished overnight. The events overshadowed even the impending famine in the Sudan and a military confrontation in Lebanon. The upward momentum of programmes to protect children and mothers was seriously affected.

By mid-1990, the Middle East and North African countries were well on their way to achieving the goal of reducing the infant mortality rate to one half its 1990 level. However, the conflict between Iraq and Kuwait abruptly clouded that outlook. In the countries seriously affected by the crisis-especially Djibouti, Jordan and Yemen-the only clear signal in the rapidly deteriorating situation was that the recently created fragile protection for children was in danger of disintegrating.

In response to the crisis between Iraq and Kuwait, UNICEF assistance was closely co-ordinated with Jordan, UN agencies and NGOs to help to provide tents, blankets, mattresses, water supply and sanitation facilities and health supplies at six camps for refugees and evacuees entering Jordan from Iraq and Kuwait. Approximately 1.3 million refugees entered Jordan, severely straining its economy, adversely affected by the situation in the region. In mid-December, UNICEF arranged delivery to Iraq of a shipment of paediatric medical supplies valued at approximately $318,000, including vaccines, weighing scales and birthing kits.

During 1990, all countries in the region positioned themselves to reach the goal of 80 per cent immunization coverage by December. Lebanon and the Sudan raised their immunization coverage dramatically; war-torn Lebanon carried out its first nation-wide coverage survey, yielding the first basic indicators on child survival since the 1960s. Coverage in Egypt, Iran and Turkey stabilized at between 80 and 88 per cent, and in other countries it reached 90 per cent. The momentum of high immunization coverage could also strengthen MCH services, CDD and other areas likely to be affected by budget cuts.

Infant, child and maternal mortality reduction was another priority in the region in 1990. At a meeting in September (Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic), Arab health ministers stated that mothers managing successfully to bring their children through the dangers of early childhood must have their own health and survival ensured. The high levels of maternal mortality in Djibouti, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen clearly indicated the need for interventions to improve maternal health and nutrition. New initiatives were already under way, and most countries had already begun advocating birth spacing, while Iran moved ahead in its promotion of safe, effective contraceptives.

The countries of the region developed programmes or planned to develop strategies and activities to narrow disparities between boys and girls. The Arab Council for Childhood and Development was a partner in that process, as was the League of Arab States. An indication of the success of their advocacy was the decision taken by Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates to undertake situation analyses of disparities between boys and girls so that national strategies to reduce differences could be formulated. The UNICEF regional office in Amman, Jordan, prepared a data base on sex differentials in child survival and development (CSD) indicators, and each country office undertook similar initiatives.

The Executive Board had before it a report on programme development in the Middle East and North Africa [E/ICEF/1991/10], which analysed major new trends and developments of UNICEF programme co-operation in the area, where the upward momentum of programmes to protect children and mothers was seriously affected during 1990 in the aftermath of the conflict between Iraq and Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III). The report described political and socio-economic developments affecting children in the region; presented highlights of programme, regional co-operation and management issues; outlined UNICEF'S co-operation with regional partners; described office management; and contained a section on Yemen.

Central and Eastern Europe,
CIS and the Baltic States

One of the major activities in Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States in 1990 was a round table on "Safety Nets for Children in Central and Eastern Europe", held in Warsaw, Poland, under the auspices of the Polish Government, with organizational support from UNICEF. The round table focused on adjustment mechanisms that needed to be developed by countries in the region to protect children and other vulnerable groups during the transition to a market economy when previous forms of security and protection might have been abandoned before new forms were developed and put in place. Its conclusions included recommendations to monitor the development of alternative social policies with respect to their effectiveness and to establish basic reporting systems to monitor child welfare indicators during the transitional phase. The International Child Development Centre (see below) had proposed research and information exchange projects on institutionalized child care and early child development in Central and Eastern Europe as an extension of its ongoing analytical work on children in industrialized countries.

The plight of institutionalized children in Romania aroused much concern during the year. As many as 140,000 to 200,000 children were found in extremely deprived, often shocking institutional settings. UNICEF undertook four emergency missions to the country with a focus on those children. In response to the crisis, UNICEF received funds-in-trust of approximately $4 million from Governments and National Committees for UNICEF for emergency assistance. UNICEF'S emergency response included: providing immediate emergency requirements; catering for longer-term emergency needs; and designing policies and programmes for the deinstitutionalization of children, child protection and child development. Support for immediate emergency requirements included the delivery of pharmaceutical and medical products and equipment for the institutions for children, as well as training for professional and paraprofessional staff working in those institutions. As a longer-term objective, the emergency programme aimed to reduce the number of institutionalized children by redefining the screening criteria for child disabilities for specialized institutional care and also by developing alternative approaches to institutionalization, including family reunion, foster home placement and adoption.

In April [dec. 1990/51], the Executive Board, noting the particular pressures on children at that time in countries of Central and Eastern Europe and the particular needs of children in the region, requested the Executive Director, during the transitional period 1990-1992, to provide technical support to rethink policies for child survival, development and protection in the context of the new situation of Central and Eastern Europe, and to respond on an exceptional basis to specific requests for support. It authorized UNICEF to spend additionally, without any diversion of support from developing countries, up to $1 million per year from the administrative budget during 1990-1992 to support data collection on the situation of children and women, analytical studies, technical workshops, information materials and other related activities, and to cover necessary staff costs.

UNICEF programmes by sector

Immunization

Immunization coverage of infants in the developing world reached an all-time high, achieving the 1990 goal of 80 per cent. Coverage with BCC (anti-tuberculosis vaccine) reached 89 per cent, and coverage with three doses of polio vaccine and DPT3 reached 83 and 81 per cent, respectively. Measles coverage was at 78 per cent. A total of 64 countries achieved their UCI targets by the end of 1990 and an additional 16 achieved it for all antigens except measles, accounting for approximately two thirds of infants in developing countries. In accelerating immunization programmes to meet the 1990 goal, a number of significant achievements in interrelated areas were made such as extending cold-chain systems to reach all or nearly all communities in most countries, establishing or strengthening logistical systems and developing in most countries information systems for monitoring, management and evaluation. A vaccine-independence initiative was developed to provide a mechanism for developing countries to become self-reliant in vaccine procurement. The children's vaccine initiative was launched in September by UNICEF and the World Health Organization (WHO) and endorsed by the World Summit for Children (see above). A global strategy and plans of action for reaching each of the 1990 goals were elaborated by WHO and UNICEF and national plans of action were drawn up by many countries with high coverage levels.

The success in increasing immunization coverage was a result of excellent international collaboration, as well as the commitment of developing countries to invest in building systems to reach all of their children with immunization services. More than 80 countries had given priority to accelerating immunization coverage and had been striving to achieve the 1990 goal or to maintain UCI target levels.

UNICEF provided the Executive Board with a progress report on UCI [E/ICEF/1991/L.8]. A later addendum [E/ICEF/1991/L.S/Add.1] contained an analysis of regional and country-level experiences.

In April [dec. 1990/11], the Board called on the Executive Director, in collaboration with WHO, to convene an expert group, including those from developing countries, to consider more closely the vaccine and related research needs for furthering UNICEF programme objectives, and requested him to report to the Board at the earliest opportunity on the findings and recommendations of the expert group, and to submit proposals to the Board.

Control of diarrhoeal diseases

Progress continued in CDD, with national CDD programmes existing in 112 countries. UNICEF offices collaborated with WHO and Governments in those efforts and, in many cases, UNICEF was the major source of external support. Recent data indicated continued gains in access to ORS, ORS production, ORS use rates and the use of ORT. UNICEF reviewed its experience in assisting CDD efforts at a global consultation on CDD held in New York in April, where a number of recommendations were made to further enhance the effectiveness of UNICEF work in CDD.

In several countries, UNICEF continued to play a key role in defining national CDD policies. Improving the management of diarrhoea episodes, both within the health system and at home, continued to be a major area of its assistance. Almost all UNICEF country offices had provided support to CDD training efforts. The training of ORT providers outside the health system also expanded rapidly and included church volunteers in Brazil; local government officials in Egypt and Tunisia; teachers, farmers and students in Iraq; scouts in Nepal; and traditional healers in Uganda. UNICEF involvement in the production, distribution and provision of ORS continued in almost all developing countries. Increasing emphasis was also given to stimulating production within the private sector. The emphasis of UNICEF support for ORS in several countries shifted from local production per se to tackling other obstacles to availability, quality and access at national and local levels. In the area of communication, UNICEF assisted mass media activities, principally television and radio spots in many countries. UNICEF offices also reported extensive involvement in activities to prevent diarrhoea incidence, including co-operation with ministries and institutions outside the health sector.

Acute respiratory infections

UNICEF and WHO identified ARI control as an area of priority concern. The two organizations collaborated in developing appropriate technologies, such as 30- and 60-second respiratory rate timers and oxygen concentrators for use at the community and referral levels. UNICEF also increased efforts to strengthen its technical support and guidance related to ARI. As a result of increased support from UNICEF, WHO and other external agencies, as well as of heightened awareness of ARI as a major child health problem, 32 countries had initiated national ARI control programmes. Another 22 countries had issued technical guidelines and/or drafted plans of operation.

During 1990, UNICEF support to national ARI efforts focused on four major areas: in some countries, definition of national policies and programme direction and, in some others, formation of national task forces and/or co-ordinating committees; support to operational research with the goal of establishing base-line data on ARI-related morbidity and mortality, and of assessing the knowledge, attitudes and practices of both health providers and mothers concerning the recognition and treatment of ARI; integration of ARI control efforts into ongoing PHC programmes; and expansion of training in ARI case management, including for doctors, nurses and community health workers.

The Executive Director, in a review [E/ICEF/1990/L.7] of UNICEF's ARI policy and programmes, recommended that to reduce the morbidity and mortality caused by ARI, priority should be given to the development of sound policies and approaches, paying special attention to issues requiring further study, including strategies for involving paraprofessionals in the administration of antibiotics, techniques for diagnosing pneumonia, the nature and timing of communications efforts and the identification of risk factors and preventive measures. UNICEF would work closely with WHO, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and other interested organizations in developing common strategies for the control of ARI. The Executive Director also identified the specific areas in which UNICEF would provide support.

In April ^[dec. 1990/20], the Executive Board accepted the Executive Director's recommendations and urged him, in close co-operation with WHO, to give due attention within the medium-term plan to the development and funding of strategies and pilot programmes for the control and prevention of ARI. He should complement and strengthen WHO activities in developing and testing strategies and methodologies for diagnosis and case management, in particular by encouraging the rational use of drugs. A report detailing the structure of UNICEF co-operation with WHO and other actors was requested for 1992.

Malaria control

It was estimated that there were 100 million cases of malaria each year, with the disease being responsible for 1 million to 2 million deaths annually, many of them children. In some sub-Saharan African countries, malaria was a major cause of childhood mortality. UNICEF supported operations research in the Gambia, Kenya, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Viet Nam to determine the efficacy of using bed nets treated with chemicals on malaria morbidity and mortality, and initial reports from the Gambia suggested that it had a substantial impact. The bed nets provided significant reduction, especially in infant mortality. In the meantime, current practice continued to be supported for the administration of prophylaxis for pregnant women and symptomatic treatment for all infants and young children in endemic cases. Active collaboration with WHO in malaria control programmes at the country level had been established in Cambodia and Viet Nam, and expanded to include the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in Mozambique.

At headquarters level, UNICEF and WHO established an intersecretariat technical working group to facilitate close monitoring of existing activities and the dissemination of information on effective control strategies. UNICEF also worked closely with WHO in the preparation of a global meeting on malaria, scheduled to be held at the ministerial level in the Netherlands in 1992.

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

The direct and indirect consequences of HIV infection and AIDS on women and children continued to escalate in many countries of Africa, Asia and the Caribbean. In its first HIV/AIDS projections relating to children, WHO estimated that there had been 400,000 cases of AIDS among in-infants and children under five since the beginning of the pandemic about a decade earlier, with 90 per cent of them in sub-Saharan Africa. It also estimated that, by the year 2000, 10 million more infants would be infected with HIV.

In 1990, the UNICEF AIDS-prevention programme continued to work closely with the WHO Global Programme on AIDS to develop global strategies and raise global awareness about women and children and AIDS, and to assist country-level efforts. At the country level, UNICEF's main focus continued to be on AIDS-prevention education initiatives. Its country offices integrated AIDS-prevention components into other ongoing projects at low or no additional cost. Examples included adding AIDS information to the curricula of health worker training, including AIDS in school health education programmes, accelerating and expanding efforts to ensure sterilization of immunization and other skin-piercing equipment, and employing a range of other social mobilization channels for AIDS prevention, such as the book Facts for Life. In Rwanda, Uganda and other countries, UNICEF supported efforts to evaluate the effectiveness of school-based AIDS messages. In Haiti and elsewhere, it also targeted street children. In addition, training and materials were provided for women's, political and religious groups, and AIDS materials were translated into local languages. UNICEF assisted Governments and NGOs to develop strategies for addressing the impact of AIDS on women and children, particularly in Zaire.

In April [dec. 1990/18], the Executive Board urged the Executive Director to further mobilize UNICEF field offices to make their full contribution to the efforts of the UN system to combat the spread of AIDS within the framework of national AIDS-control programmes. It requested him to ensure a significant contribution by UNICEF, fully using its capacity for advocacy, in mobilizing social awareness in order to avoid behaviour and practices that could spread HIV, and to consider what further activities UNICEF could undertake on behalf of children orphaned by AIDS. He should report in 1991 on UNICEF's efforts to combat and alleviate the effects of AIDS, including examples of problems identified, efforts to deal with them and progress in implementation.

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1990/86, emphasizing that the prevention and control of HIV infection and AIDS for women and children called for strengthening and improvement of the primary health care system and for educational and other psychological, social and economic support programmes for women, children and families, requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with WHO, UNDP, UNICEF and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), to mobilize technical and other relevant resources to deal with that aspect of the problem.

Maternal health and family planning

Although women's health and safe motherhood were long-standing areas of UNICEF programming, they came into sharper focus in 1990, as more than 500,000 women died as a result of pregnancy or childbirth, and all but 6,000 of them in the developing world. The World Summit for Children (see above), which endorsed the goal of reducing maternal mortality by one half between 1990 and the year 2000, succeeded in raising awareness of the problem. UNICEF activities at the country level made significant progress, particularly in respect of special attention to the girl child, improving the status of young women, preventing early marriages and pregnancies, expanding access to family planning information, and improving pre-natal and perinatal health services. Family planning was included in many UNICEF-supported health personnel training programmes. In several countries, assistance was provided for national demographic and health surveys to obtain better information on fertility, family planning practices and maternal and child health for policy makers and planners. UNICEF supported WHO research efforts to develop more culturally acceptable family planning messages and methods. In the United Republic of Tanzania, it worked with the Ministry of Health, UNFPA, WHO and Family Care International on a safe motherhood strategy to improve family planning and maternity services and on raising the status of women. UNICEF co-sponsored with the World Bank, WHO, UNDP and UNFPA a meeting on safe motherhood for South Asia (Lahore, Pakistan, March) and one for southern African countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, October).

At its regular session, the Executive Board requested [dec. 1990/7] the Executive Director to include in his annual report in 1991 a specific section on UNICEF efforts in family planning, including child spacing, as an integral part of PHC. The Board also endorsed [dec. 1990/16] the concept of safe motherhood as a means of achieving the goal of halving the 1990 maternal death rate by the year 2000 and related operational activities, including co-operation with WHO, UNFPA, UNDP, the World Bank and other agencies and organizations, in support of national, regional and global efforts.

At its special session in September [E/ICEF/1990/17 (dec. 1990/36)], the Board, noting decision 90/85 [E/1990/29] of the UNDP Governing Council, in which, among other things, it had requested UNFPA to initiate the preparation, based on specific country studies, of a joint report on collaborative programme activities with UNICEF and other organizations, requested the Executive Director to collaborate with UNFPA in the preparation of that report and to submit it to the Executive Board at its regular 1992 session.

Water supply and sanitation

In December 1990, the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade ended, having developed awareness and workable models for programming water supply and sanitation inputs. However, one third of the world's population continued to be without access to a safe water supply and nearly one half were without access to sanitary means of excreta disposal.

During 1990, UNICEF co-operated with 90 countries in water supply and sanitation projects or activities, involving a financial input of $82 million. A total of 104,058 water supply systems were completed during the year, including 94,494 drilled/dug wells and hand-pumps, 1,808 stand-pipes and 7,756 other types, including rain-water collection and protected springs. Some 20 million people benefited overall. Also completed in 1990 were a total of 677,681 sanitary excreta disposal facilities, which benefited some 4.4 million people.

Dracunculiasis

During 1990, significant progress was made towards the goal of eliminating dracunculiasis (Guinea worm disease) in the 1990s. Activities at the global, regional and national levels were accelerated significantly. As a first step towards elimination, national surveys were completed or were under way to identify affected villages in countries that accounted for 85 per cent of cases of the disease, with financial and technical support from UNICEF, the WHO Collaborating Center at the United States Centers for Disease Control, WHO headquarters, UNDP, Global 2000 and the Carter Center in Atlanta, United States. Other active agency collaborators included the Japanese International Co-operation Agency, USAID, the United States Peace Corps and other bilateral co-operation agencies and NGOs. During the year, UNICEF supported a consultation at WHO headquarters on establishing the criteria for certification of dracunculiasis elimination. The Third Regional Conference on Dracunculiasis in Africa was held in March in Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire, bringing together ministry officials and UNICEF programme officers from 18 endemic countries, as well as representatives of collaborating technical and supporting agencies and the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

A number of UNICEF country programmes supported health education, community-based surveillance, vector control, water supply and wound treatment activities. In India, an integrated programme, serving nearly one half of the country's endemic areas, had reduced the number of cases in the programme area by nearly 50 per cent in 1990.

Bamako Initiative

In 1990, many of the countries that constituted the core group of the Bamako Initiative-Benin, Burundi, Cameroon, Equatorial Guinea, Kenya, Mali, Mauritania, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Togo made significant progress with health delivery systems based on the Initiative, which was launched in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 1223] to ensure access to affordable essential health services, while containing costs. Their financial basis for health service delivery had been strengthened through community management of services, and the utilization of health services had risen. In terms of investment in public health systems, the level of community financing in Guinea was one and a half times that of local expenditures, including the resupply of essential drugs. Operations research had highlighted such problems as the high incidence of self-medication in Sierra Leone. Monitoring systems were being introduced or strengthened in each country to track changes in access, utilization and financing. Based on its success to date, the Initiative was viewed as a principal post-Summit strategy for revitalizing and strengthening basic health delivery systems to achieve the health goals for the 1990s. It had also led to the adaptation of its principles in six countries outside sub-Saharan Africa (Maldives, Myanmar, Nepal, Peru, Sudan, Viet Nam).

The June 1990 Pan-African Conference on the Financing of Community Health Activities, organized by the WHO Regional Office for Africa in collaboration with UNICEF, and attended by more than 150 African health experts, adopted the Kinshasa Declaration, which urged greater national and international mobilization for the Initiative as an important strategy for achieving PHC and, eventually, health care for all. UNICEF mobilized approximately $20 million to support country action for preparation and initial implementation of the Initiative.

In April [E/1990/28 (dec. 1990/15)], the Executive Board recognized the Bamako Initiative as an important strategy in the revitalization of health systems in African countries at the community and peripheral levels and in helping to create conditions for sustaining EPI coverage and achieving the joint WHO/UNICEF health goals for the 1990s. It reaffirmed the main thrust of the policy framework for the Initiative to make PHC/MCH services universally accessible, to promote the provision of essential drugs to ensure cost recovery, with a decentralized integrated health delivery system based on community control, and bearing in mind the need for an equitable access for the poorest of the community. The Board urged UNICEF to accelerate the process of making the Bamako Initiative the core of the health programmes with the allocation of resources within the context of ongoing and new country programmes, in addition to supplementary funding from donors. The Executive Director should place special significance on assisting African Governments in national capacity-building and in making greater use of national and regional experts in the implementation of the Initiative.

Basic education

The World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 5-9 March) [E/ICEF/1990/L.14] (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) provided an opportunity for participating countries to review critically their education systems and priorities and to redefine their education goals and strategies in the light of the Conference Declaration and Framework for Action. During 1990, UNICEF played an important role in assisting many countries in that endeavour, particularly in the area of advocacy for universal primary education, girls' and women's education, and early childhood development. As follow-up to the Conference, UNICEF would work with other multilateral, bilateral, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in supporting national efforts to reach the goals of the Conference. It would focus on national capacity-building and would support national strategies and plans to achieve the Education for All goals.

UNICEF support for early childhood development continued in many countries, with attention paid to developing low-cost, community- and home-based early childhood stimulation and development activities. In many countries, especially in sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia, UNICEF support for primary education focused on curriculum reform, teacher training and the production and provision of educational materials.

The education of the girl child was a major focus of attention in countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation and in the Middle East and North Africa region. Initiatives undertaken focused on the need to increase the enrolment and retention of girls in primary formal and non-formal schools. Social mobilization and communication efforts were supported, with a strong focus on girls' education, while activities in other sectors increasingly emphasized girls' and women's education as the cutting edge for women's development. Bangladesh declared that the education of girls would be free up to grade eight and that all new primary-level teaching recruits would be female. Djibouti committed itself to a goal of 80 per cent literacy for females under age 25 by 1995.

UNICEF continued to support adult literacy programmes in many countries, focusing on the qualitative improvement of teaching/learning materials, training, social mobilization and neo-literate materials. In several countries, literacy programmes for women were linked to skills training and income-generating opportunities. In China, functional literacy classes were combined with vocational training programmes for young girls. In Sri Lanka, literacy activities were combined with vocational, marketing and credit management training. In Pakistan and other countries, literacy and functional education were included as essential components of development programmes for women. UNICEF also continued to support innovative ways to promote education, such as Escuelas Nuevas (new schools) in Colombia, an initiative to reorganize primary school education to tackle problems with which rural communities were confronted.

Women in development

UNICEF-assisted programmes continued to respond to girls' and women's concerns, both in specific activities and as a part of sectoral programming. Expenditure for women-related programmes increased from 29 per cent of total expenditures in 1989 to 31 per cent in 1990. Several countries improved their situation analyses to show more clearly the conditions and constraints facing women. Several UNICEF offices reported growing concerns about the health and income status of adolescent girls, as well as the proportion of single women heading households, which had reached over 40 per cent in some countries. UNICEF strengthened its advocacy in several countries to promote the formulation of national policies providing increased attention to girls and women. Bangladesh, with the technical support of UNICEF and several collaborating UN and bilateral agencies, included women in development in its fourth five-year plan (1991-1995) and incorporated objectives, targets and budgetary allocations in all sectoral plans to meet the needs of girls and women. UNICEF continued to support credit and technical training in women's income-generating and economic activities in many countries. Women's projects in Brazil, funded through SAFLAC, assisted small businesses with credit. Other projects targeted special groups of women, such as rural women in Egypt, Nepal and Rwanda, women heads of households in the Caribbean and indigenous Indian women in Colombia.

At its 1990 regular session [dec. 1990/17], the Executive Board endorsed the priority focus given to the girl child, and recommended that UNICEF programmes and strategies in the 1990s address explicitly the status of the girl child and her needs, particularly in nutrition, health and education, with a view to eliminating gender disparities. It requested UNICEF, in collaboration with other organizations, to ensure implementation of gender-sensitive monitoring and evaluation mechanisms to assess progress in reducing disparities between boys and girls. The Board also requested the Executive Director to highlight the girl child in the annual progress report on women in development and to submit in 1992 and every second year thereafter a progress report on the situation of the girl child.

Emergency operations

In 1990, UNICEF provided emergency assistance to 29 countries in Africa, Asia, the Americas and the Middle East and North Africa in response to natural disasters, epidemics and man-made crises. Humanitarian assistance was provided for victims of drought, famine and civil conflict in Angola, Liberia, Mozambique and the Sudan and the affected neighbouring countries of Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone. As a consequence of the conflict between Iraq and Kuwait, emergency assistance was provided to Iran, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic. Appeals were issued to support relief and rehabilitation interventions in the earthquake-affected countries of Iran and the Philippines. A total of $35.9 million was mobilized in 1990 for emergency assistance. In view of the increasing number and complexity of emergency situations, the Executive Director appointed a Director for Emergency Programmes, to streamline and improve UNICEF's ability to respond to the urgent needs of children and women in emergency situations.

In April [dec. 1990/22], the Executive Board requested the Executive Director, in his 1991 progress report on emergency operations, to propose guidelines on UNICEF involvement in that area as well as an outline of the administrative framework for co-ordination and co-operation between UN agencies, NGOs and other relevant agencies.

Children in especially difficult circumstances

UNICEF efforts to assist children in especially difficult circumstances—a programme established in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 810] for children affected by armed conflict or natural disasters or in exploitative work situations, street children and abused and neglected children—continued in 1990. There was an increased awareness and a much clearer understanding of the scale and nature of children in especially difficult circumstances, and UNICEF currently supported programmes in 45 countries, including projects for child workers and institutionalized, abused or neglected children. Programmes for street children were under way in 17 Latin American countries, including Guatemala, Honduras and Mexico, and were being replicated in other regions through intercountry and interregional exchanges. Support for national efforts to assist street children had spread to countries like India, Kenya, the Philippines, the Sudan and Thailand and, more recently, Bangladesh, Nigeria and Senegal.

Concerning child labour, UNICEF helped Brazil, Egypt, the Philippines, Thailand and Venezuela and NGOs to investigate and expose child labour, and to initiate programmes that provided protection, non-formal education and services to working children. UNICEF also worked closely with the International Labour Organisation in support of regional meetings and the development of training materials and publications to raise public awareness and stimulate action.

In April [dec. 1990/6], the Executive Board urged the Executive Director to ensure the application and development of research into efforts to protect and rehabilitate children in especially difficult circumstances or to mitigate and prevent the occurrence of those circumstances, in order to continuously analyse their causes and effects and concurrently update strategies, interventions and programmes to ensure their efficacy and cost-effectiveness.

In a decision on creating a more peaceful world for children [dec. 1990/13], the Board called upon all States of the international community, as they reduced their military expenditures, to consider how they could channel part of the resources released to support country actions to reach the goals for children in the 1990s.

On 14 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 45/115, requested Member States and the Secretary-General to formulate programmes to deal with the problem of the instrumental use of children in criminal activities.

UNICEF income in 1990 amounted to $821 million, comprising $536 million from general resources and $285 million for supplementary funds, including $57 million in emergency supplementary funds. Contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations accounted for 74 per cent of total income. Expenditures amounted to $738 million, including a total programme expenditure of $584 million, $81 million for programme support services, $69 million for administrative services and $4 million for write-offs and other charges.

The Executive Board approved [dec. 1990/8] a new allocation for programme co-operation and the replenishment of the Emergency Reserve Fund to be financed from general resources in the amount of $263,367,153, of which $237,651,153 represented new general resources net of available balances. It also approved new supplementary funding proposals to be financed from specific-purpose contributions in the amount of $663,432,800. It recorded savings in the amount of $641,314 and approved an amount of $52,460 to cover overexpenditure.

The Board authorized [dec. 1990/26] the establishment of a reserve fund for field office accommodation and staff housing in a total maximum amount of $22 million, of which $16.5 million would be earmarked for accommodations relating to UNICEF participation in common premises with other UN organizations, and $5.5 million for acquiring or renovating existing housing.

It deferred its decision on additional New York headquarters office space requirements and requested [dec. 1990/25] the Executive Director to submit in 1991, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a review and analysis of those requirements, including current and future space needs, relationship to the medium-term plan, alternative locations, estimated costs and a statement of rental policies.

The Board also approved [dec. 1990/29] the medium-term plan as a framework for 1990-1993, including the preparation of up to $585 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1991. It also approved [dec. 1990/27] a mock-up as the basis to revise the associated tables and annexes for the next biennium budget proposal.

The Board amended [dec. 1990/28] its financial regulation on revaluation policy and noted [dec. 1990/30] a number of financial reports.

Organizational questions

UNICEF Executive Board

The UNICEF Executive Board held its 1990 regular session from 16 to 27 April [E/1990/28] and a special session from 6 to 7 September [E/ICEF/1990/17], both in New York. During those sessions, it adopted a total of 36 decisions.

At its regular session [dec. 1990/1], the Board decided to further improve and streamline its procedures for the schedule of meetings, submission of draft proposals, documentation, organizational sessions, and biennialization of its work programme.

Greeting Card Operation

In the 1989/90 season, the sale of 152 million cards brought in a contribution of $61.7 million to UNICEF general resources, $18.5 million more than the previous season.

In April [dec. 1990/32], the Executive Board approved the budgeted expenditures and noted gross budgeted income for the fiscal year 1 May 1990 to 30 April 1991. It approved the creation of a special operating account with a limit of $1 million from event revenues in the accounts of the Greeting Card Operation (GCO). It also noted [dec. 1990/33] the GCO financial report for the 1988/89 season and the GCO provisional report on the 1989 season.

International Child Development Centre

The Executive Director submitted a progress report on the International Child Development Centre [E/ICEF/1991/L.9 & Corr.1], established in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 649] in Florence, Italy, as a forum for international professional exchanges and to advocate innovative strategies for the benefit of children and provide training facilities. The report summarized the activities of the Centre during 1990 in its four major programme areas: national capacity-building for CSD; economic policies and mobilization of resources for children; the rights of the child; and the needs of the urban child. Italy had pledged a sum of 3.5 billion lire (approximately $3.1 million) per year for the period 1991-1993 and had provided assurance of continuing significant financial support thereafter. There were also indications of interest on the part of other donors, especially for joint funding arrangements of some activities.

Inter-agency co-operation

In 1990, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education (JCE) held its first (28-29 March) [E/ICEF/1990/L.11] and second (26-27 October) [E/ICEF/1991/L.13] meetings in Paris. At its March meeting, the two organizations clarified the terms of reference of JCE and reviewed their programmes of co-operation in the field of education. They also considered the results of the World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 5-9 March) (see PART THREE, Chapter XII) and proposed recommendations to the Board.

In April [dec. 1990/23], the Executive Board adopted the JCE recommendations and approved the establishment of a basic education reserve to support national, regional and international efforts, especially for innovative initiatives and for support to countries for start-up activities and for actions that were not foreseen in country programmes.

At its October meeting [E/ICEF/1991/L.13], JCE deliberated on the activities of UNESCO and UNICEF between the first and the second meetings and discussed perspectives of the UNESCO/ UNICEF co-operative programme in basic education.

In other areas, the Executive Board requested [dec. 1990/21] the Executive Director to co-operate with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation in preparing a schedule for implementation of General Assembly resolution 44/211 [YUN 1989, p. 302] on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system. He should make available to the Director-General and the international community UNICEF experience in decentralization; accountability in a decentralized environment; the programme approach; and the value of setting objectives and international and national goals, and using them as a basis for management by objectives and for inter-agency collaboration.

The Executive Director was also requested to support active UNICEF participation in the work of the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ (OPS)) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Joint Consultative Group on Policy in order to promote the harmonization of procedures and programming cycles, common premises and the effective functioning of the resident co-ordinator system.

Following the Board decision, CCSQ (OPS) consolidated the first major revision of the resident co-ordinator system and also developed guidelines for a number of areas, including joint participation in programming processes and common elements in country programme and mid-term reviews. The Consultative Committee also began a major effort to operationalize the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (1991-2000) (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and to help to develop common national and international goals and strategies to serve as a basis for common efforts. In addition, UNICEF pursued major inter-agency activities in 1990 with, among other organizations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, UNDP, UNESCO, UNFPA, the World Food Programme, WHO and the World Bank.

Other matters

Noting the importance of evaluation as a management tool in improving programme effectiveness, the Executive Board, in April [dec. 1990/41], requested the Executive Director to prepare a report on the overall progress and results achieved since 1984 in the implementation of the evaluation recommendations for presentation at the 1992 Board session. A monitoring and evaluation plan and structure should be included in all country plans and major projects presented to the Board in the future.

Regarding staffing, the Board noted [dec. 1990/31] a report on the composition of all international Professional core staff by title, grade, duty station and nationality.

Also in April, the Board reviewed and noted [dec. 1990/34] the text of the model Basic Co-operation Agreement, submitted to it by the Executive Director, and authorized the secretariat to use the model Agreement as the basis for negotiating agreements with co-operating Governments where no such agreement existed. In accordance with that decision, the Executive Director, in October, resubmitted the text of the revised model Basic Co-operation Agreement [E/ICEF/1991/L.1 & Add.1 & Rev.1/Corr.1].

Youth

The Secretary-General, by a September note [E/CN.5/1991/4 & Corr. 1], transmitted to the Commission for Social Development the report of the International Symposium on the Integration of Young People into Society, held in Toledo, Spain, from 4 to 8 June. The Symposium was conducted by the United Nations Office in Vienna, Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (UNOV/CSDHA), in close co-operation with the Instituto de la Juventud of the Ministry for Social Affairs of Spain. Its objectives were to assist Governments, particularly those of developing countries, in strengthening and improving their national capacities for the full and effective participation of youth in social life and development, and to review and assess selected national experiences, including obstacles encountered, in the process of integrating young people into society. The Symposium had reviewed and discussed the concepts involved in the integration of young people into social life and development, and identified policy options and guidelines to assist the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-second (1991) session, in considering the integration of young people into society.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on policies and programmes involving youth [A/45/422]. He reported that follow-up activities to the 1985 International Youth Year [YUN 1985, p. 978] were continuing at all levels, encouraged by the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 40/14 [YUN 1985, p. 979]. Initiatives included incorporating skills training in out-of-school programmes, identifying needs of sub-categories of youth, reviewing existing legislation, and assessing various governmental and non-governmental youth-related programmes. Two basic features of the follow-up period at the national level were enhanced efforts to formulate and implement integrated national youth policies and programmes, and the increasing recognition of the vital role of national co-ordination mechanisms in youth policy development.

UNOV/CSDHA continued to provide Governments with policy guidance and information, technical expertise and direct operational support in order to enhance national capacities. It was active also in strengthening co-ordination efforts, both within and outside the UN system. While youth-related activities were continuing at the national level, there was concern that the momentum created by the International Youth Year and the impetus to sustain follow-up activities had been declining at the international and regional levels. In order to stimulate renewed action at all levels, the observation of the tenth anniversary of the Year in 1995 presented a suitable occasion to focus global attention again on youth issues, particularly in the light of changing international political and economic situations and the effects of those changes on youth and youth-serving organizations.

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/103.

Policies and programmes involving youth The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, by which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also its resolution 40/14 entitled "International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace", adopted on 18 November 1985 by the General Assembly acting as the United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year, by which the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth were endorsed, and its other relevant resolutions,

Recalling further its resolution 44/59 of 8 December 1989,

Noting that the year 1995 will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Charter of the United Nations and the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year,

Recognizing that, in implementing the guidelines, priority should be given to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, including the right to education and to work, and to the resolution of other urgent problems faced by young people in the present-day world, such as hunger, drug abuse, diseases, including acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, and the deterioration of the environment,

Mindful of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which entered into force on 2 September 1990, the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted by the World Summit for Children on 30 September 1990, and the International Year of the Family proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/82 of 8 December 1989,

1. Calls upon States, all United Nations bodies, in particular the Economic and Social Council through the Commission for Social Development, the specialized agencies and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to continue to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote and monitor, by using the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat as a focal point, the inclusion of youth-related projects and activities in the programmes of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, specifically on such themes as communication, health, malnutrition, poverty, housing, culture, youth employment, illiteracy, juvenile delinquency, education, leisure-time activities, drug abuse and the environment;

3. Calls upon Member States to enable young people to obtain a modern education on such subjects as environmental issues;

4. Decides to devote a plenary meeting at its fiftieth session to youth questions, as 1995 marks the fiftieth anniversary of the Charter of the United Nations and the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year;

5. Calls upon the United Nations Postal Administration to produce commemorative United Nations stamps in 1995 to mark the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year;

6. Emphasizes the need for a review and appraisal of the progress achieved and obstacles encountered in the implementation of the guidelines and, on the basis of the evaluation, for preparation of a global youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond, with a target orientation and within a specific time-frame;

7. Invites all Member States to consider preparing a national plan of action based on an analytical national evaluation of the situation and needs of youth;

8. Calls again upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, adapted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17;

9. Requests the regional commissions, as appropriate, together with regional youth and youth-serving organizations, to undertake a comprehensive review of progress achieved and obstacles encountered in the regions since 1985 and to propose draft regional youth programmes of action towards the year 2000 and beyond;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a draft world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond in accordance with proposals to be submitted by Member States, the United Nations and non-governmental youth organizations and in consultation with the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

11. Calls upon youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and international levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations system and youth and youth organizations and, especially, to contribute to the preparations for the tenth anniversary of International Youth Year and to the formulation of a world youth programme of action towards the year 2000 and beyond;

12. Again invites Governments to include youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings, thus enhancing and strengthening the channels of communication through the discussion of youth-related issues, with a view to finding solutions to the problems confronting youth in the contemporary world;

13. Invites Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the United Nations Youth Fund, in order to enable it to continue its mandated role and to contribute effectively to the needs of developing countries in the field of youth;

14. Decides to consider the item entitled "Policies and programmes involving youth" at its forty-sixth session on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution.

Aging persons

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/67 [YUN 1989, p. 691], the Secretary-General submitted a report in October on the question of aging [A/45/420], setting out an action programme on aging for 1992 and beyond. The action programme was intended to serve as a catalyst for further implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging, adopted in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1184]. The main concern of the proposed action programme was to support and promote the integration of the elderly in the economic, social and cultural life of family and community. It endeavoured to stimulate activities at the global, national and local levels that could promote a more widespread and co-operative approach to aging. The programme proposed a process of target selection during 1991 and 1992, at the global and national levels, to identify a limited set of concrete measures for activities on aging in the 1990s. It included a draft calendar of events on aging in 1991-1992 to facilitate co-operation.

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/106.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging and related activities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/67 and 44/76 of 8 December 1989 and reaffirming all of their relevant provisions, particularly those which endorsed the priorities set and the recommendations made by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1989/50 of 24 May 1989,

Noting that the Economic and Social Council recommended in its resolution 1989/50 the convening of an ad hoc working group of the Commission for Social Development at the Commission's thirty-second session to monitor preparatory activities for the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging,

Noting with concern that, although in its resolution 43/93 of 8 December 1988 it recommended that aging should be considered a priority theme in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, the resources assigned to subprogramme 7 (Aging) of section 8 (Activities on global social development issues) in the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 for the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat are not sufficient to implement the programme adequately and to give it the priority recommended,

Also noting with concern that the contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging have steadily declined since 1982, thereby reducing its resource base, and that unless this trend is reversed and the Fund strengthened, many priority requests will not be met and the implementation of the Plan of Action will be weakened where it is most needed, in developing countries,

Recognizing that the elderly are an asset to society and can contribute significantly to the development process,

Mindful of the need for innovative and effective international co-operation in the field of aging if countries are to achieve self-reliance in responding to the aging of their populations,

Recognizing also the complexity and rapidity of the aging of the world's population and the need to have a common basis and frame of reference for the protection and promotion of the rights of the elderly, including the contribution that the elderly can and should make to society,

Recalling the establishment at Dakar in 1989 of the African Society of Gerontology,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging;

2. Endorses the action programme on aging for 1992 and beyond as outlined in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Urges Member States, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to participate in the action programme on aging for 1992 and beyond, especially in selecting targets in the field of aging, in organizing community-wide activities and in launching an information and fund-raising campaign to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the International Plan of Action on Aging at the local, national, regional and global levels;

4. Endorses the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1989/50 that an ad hoc working group of the Commission for Social Development be convened at the Commission's thirty-second session, in 1991, to monitor the activities for the tenth anniversary, especially the launching of a global information campaign, and the selection of targets that might form the basis of the third review and appraisal of the Plan of Action to be made by the Commission at its thirty-third session, in 1993;

5. Invites Member States, the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to consider innovative and effective ways of co-operating on the selection of targets in the field of aging during 1991 and 1992;

6. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development give consideration to the desirability of convening, subject to the availability of funds, regional and sectoral meetings on the selection of targets in the field of aging during 1991 and 1992 and global consultations in 1993 and 1997, to coincide with the third and fourth quadrennial reviews and appraisals of the implementation of the Plan of Action;

7. Notes with appreciation the work of the recent ad hoc inter-agency meetings on aging, and recommends that inter-agency meetings on aging be convened biennially;

8. Welcomes with appreciation the rapid progress made by the International Institute on Aging, in Malta, in establishing, in close collaboration and co-operation with the United Nations system, as well as with governmental and non-governmental institutions and organizations, programmes that promote in a practical manner the implementation of the Plan of Action, particularly through curriculum development, training courses, a global survey on training and the establishment of an information network, and requests the Secretary-General, in reporting on the question of aging to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, to inform the Assembly of the activities of the Institute;

9. Takes note with satisfaction of the plans for the establishment of training institutes on aging in Argentina and Yugoslavia and in Central America and the Caribbean;

10. Requests the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat to provide, within existing resources, technical assistance to the African Society of Gerontology;

11. Welcomes global fund-raising initiatives for activities in the field of aging, particularly the proposed establishment in 1991 of an independent foundation on aging under the patronage of the United Nations, to be called the Banyan Foundation, the main goal of which will be to empower the elderly in all world regions to maintain maximum independence and the ability to contribute to society in the context of the Plan of Action, thus serving as a much-needed international fund-raising vehicle for programmes for the aging worldwide;

12. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to consider under the priority theme "development" the positive contributions and specific roles of elderly women in the development of their societies;

13. Notes with appreciation the support given by the United Nations Population Fund to the Aging Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, and urges the Fund to maintain this commitment;

14. Notes with satisfaction the close collaboration of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, as the United Nations focal point on aging, with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in the field of aging, and encourages the Centre to continue to strengthen this collaboration;

15. Designates 1 October as International Day for the Elderly;

16. Urges Governments and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the Trust Fund for Aging;

17. Also urges Governments and non-governmental organizations to contribute human and financial resources through the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs for the co-ordination and implementation of the action programme on aging for 1992 and beyond;

18. Urges the Secretary-General to consider increasing the human and financial resources of the Aging Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs in order to enable it to fulfil its mandate as the United Nations focal point on aging;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Question of aging".

Chapter XV

Refugees and displaced persons

The year 1990 marked an unprecedented deterioration in the global refugee situation—with a staggering 15 million world wide—due in large part to developments in the Horn of Africa and western Africa. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued its humanitarian activities on behalf of refugees and internally displaced persons throughout the world, despite the financial constraints under which it was operating. In addition to responding to increased requests for emergency assistance to new refugees, UNHCR, in co-operation with concerned Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, continued to seek durable solutions to refugee problems through programmes of voluntary repatriation, local integration in the country of asylum or resettlement in another country.

There were, however, many positive developments during the year. The number of new arrivals of Vietnamese “boat people” declined dramatically, and Central America’s long-standing refugee problem appeared to be diminishing, thanks to the concerted efforts of countries in the region.

Voluntary repatriations took place in a number of countries, notably in Central America, where, following a favourable political climate created by elections, some 55,000 Nicaraguans returned to their country. The Comprehensive Plan of Action, following the 1989 International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees, brought hope for a solution to the 16-year-old refugee situation in that area of the world. In Africa, encouraging political developments brightened prospects with regard to Angola, South Africa and Western Sahara.

In October 1990, the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner’s Programme considered refugee protection, refugee women and children, UNHCR policy on refugee women, Indo-Chinese refugees, repatriation of refugees to Cambodia, Central American refugees and the situation of refugees in Africa.

The Nansen medal—since 1954 bestowed in honour of Fridtjof Nansen, the first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—was not awarded in 1990.

Thorvald Stoltenberg assumed his functions as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on 1 January 1990. He resigned from that position with effect from 2 November. On 21 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Secretary-General, elected Sadako Ogata (Japan) as his successor, for a three-year term beginning on 1 January 1991 (decision 45/319).

Regional developments

Africa

The number of refugees in Africa continued to rise, mainly due to influxes from Mozambique to Malawi, from Liberia to Côte d’Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone, and from Somalia to Ethiopia. Similarly, civil disturbances in Chad, Rwanda and the Sudan created new waves of refugees seeking asylum in Cameroon, the Central African Republic, the Niger, Uganda and Zaire. The increase in numbers necessitated the launching of new emergency operations as well as the strengthening of UNHCR’s field presence. The large numbers of refugees made it difficult to continue a generous tradition of asylum-granting by African countries. Moreover, the great majority of the refugees found asylum in countries which themselves faced political or economic problems, and, in many cases, were unable to provide adequate services to their own nationals.

During 1990, expenditure in Africa under UNHCR voluntary funds totalled $225.9 million, of which $144.3 million was obligated under General Programmes, the greater part for care and maintenance of operations, and $81.5 million under Special Programmes.

The UNHCR Executive Committee noted the “Khartoum Declaration” on Africa’s refugee crisis issued by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Commission of Fifteen on Refugees on 24 September. It encouraged the follow-up contained in the Declaration, which called for the enhancement of the capacity for management and conflict resolution to eradicate the causes of refugee flows and realize durable solutions. It called on the international community to provide adequate resources to enable the High Commissioner to discharge his mandate. The Committee invited host countries to promote protection, assistance and durable solutions in the most cost-effective manner.

Chad

By the end of 1989, some 107,000 voluntary returnees in Chad had benefited from UNHCR assistance, receiving blankets, household utensils, seeds and agricultural tools, as well as food and transportation, said the Secretary-General in an October report [A/45/651], submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 44/153 [YUN 1989, p. 702]. Limited repatriation continued in 1990, particularly from Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Nigeria and the Sudan. It was estimated that at the end of 1990, some 4,000 returnees benefited from UNHCR assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 18 December 1990, adopted resolution 45/156.

Assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/153 of 15 December 1989 on assistance to voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad, as well as all its previous resolutions on this question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the natural disasters that are compounding the already precarious food situation in Chad,

Considering that the large number of voluntary returnees poses serious social and economic problems for the Government of Chad,

Bearing in mind the many appeals made by the Government of Chad for international assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad,

1. Endorses the appeals made by the Government of Chad for humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

2. Notes with satisfaction the action taken by the various organizations of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies with a view to mobilizing humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

3. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide the necessary assistance to the Government of Chad in the implementation of programmes for the repatriation and resettlement of returnees and displaced persons;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize food aid for the persons displaced as a result of natural disasters;

5. Again requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Djibouti

As requested by General Assembly resolution 44/150 [YUN 1989, p. 703], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/445] in September that the movements of refugees in the Horn of Africa had not spared Djibouti, severely straining its already inadequate social and economic infrastructure. By the end of July 1990, the country was host to an estimated 33,000 refugees, for the most part Somalis living in Djibouti-Ville. UNHCR's assistance programme for those refugees was mostly for internal transport and storage of food donated by the World Food Programme (WFP).

UNHCR co-ordinated assistance in favour of those Somali refugees who arrived in the Ali-Sabieh district in June, making available $30,000 from its Emergency Fund to purchase food locally to supplement the basic food provided by WFP.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/157.

Humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/150 of 15 December 1989 on humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti, as well as all its previous resolutions on this question,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned about the recent inflow of over fifty thousand externally displaced persons, which has added considerably to the burden already being carried by Djibouti in respect of refugees in the country,

Noting that Djibouti is considered one of the least developed countries and that the recent inflow of large numbers of externally displaced persons and the continued presence of refugees have severely strained the already inadequate social and economic infrastructure,

Noting also that the situation thus created has resulted in the dispersal of the country's scarce resources and their diversion from economic development to emergency relief and precautionary measures,

Appreciating the determined and sustained efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the growing needs of refugees and externally displaced persons,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to implement appropriate and lasting solutions with respect to the refugees and externally displaced persons in Djibouti,

Also noting with appreciation that over seven thousand refugees have already been settled and integrated in Djibouti, despite the physical, social and economic obstacles that the country faces,

Appreciating the assistance provided by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to relief and rehabilitation programmes for refugees and externally displaced persons,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and appreciates the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to keep the situation under constant review;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to implement appropriate and lasting solutions with respect to the refugees and externally displaced persons in Djibouti;

3. Expresses its appreciation to Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies for their assistance to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and externally displaced persons in Djibouti;

4. Urges the High Commissioner to intensify his efforts to mobilize, on an emergency basis, the resources necessary to implement lasting solutions with respect to the refugees in Djibouti and the increasing inflow of externally displaced persons;

5. Calls upon all Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to support the determined and sustained efforts made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the urgent needs of refugees and externally displaced persons and to implement lasting solutions as regards their situation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Ethiopia

The presence of Ethiopian refugees in neighbouring Somalia and the Sudan was matched by the presence of an almost equal number of refugees from those countries in Ethiopia, said the Secretary-General in a September report [A/45/447], submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/154 [YUN 1989, p. 704].

At the end of 1990, Ethiopia was host to 790,000 refugees, comprising 385,000 Somalis in the east and 405,000 Sudanese in the west. In 1990, UNHCR programmes made progress in consolidating and strengthening relief assistance for those refugees, particularly in the transport, water and health/nutrition sectors, as well as for an estimated 13,000 Ethiopian returnees from neighbouring countries. In March 1990, a special appeal was launched to encourage large-scale voluntary repatriation of Ethiopians from Somalia, resulting in the registration of some 107,000 Ethiopians in southern Somalia for repatriation. Another 60,000 in north-western Somalia were also expected to register. The budget needed to assist those returnees was estimated at $28.3 million over a two-year period.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/161.

Assistance to refugees and returnees in Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its resolutions, in particular resolution 44/154 of 15 December 1989, as well as all those of the Economic and Social Council, on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Recognizing the increasing number of refugees and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia,

Deeply concerned about the massive presence of refugees and voluntary returnees in the country and the enormous burden this has placed on the country's infrastructure and meagre resources,

Deeply concerned also about the grave consequences this has entailed for the country's capability to grapple with the effects of the prolonged drought,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia and of the need for adequate assistance to refugees, voluntary returnees and victims of natural disasters,

1. Commends the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies for their assistance in mitigating the plight of the large number of refugees and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

2. Appeals to Member States and to international organizations and voluntary agencies to provide adequate material, financial and technical assistance for relief and rehabilitation programmes for the large number of refugees and voluntary returnees in Ethiopia;

3. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue his efforts to mobilize humanitarian assistance for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of voluntary returnees and the large number of refugees in Ethiopia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1991, of the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Liberia

In West Africa, the refugee population grew in 1990 from 200,000 to 875,000 due to the exodus of 759,000 Liberians to Côte d'Ivoire (300,000), Ghana (8,000), Guinea (325,000), Nigeria (1,500) and Sierra Leone (125,000). Expenditures for assistance to Liberian refugees alone amounted to $15.9 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/139.

Emergency humanitarian assistance to Liberian refugees and displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the civil strife that has in the past year ravaged the West African State of Liberia, decimated its population and forced thousands of Liberians to become refugees abroad or displaced persons within their own homeland,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in which he asserts that developments in the West African subregion necessitate new emergency operations,

Deeply concerned about the mass exodus of innocent victims of the Liberian civil strife into neighbouring West African countries and the enormous burden that this movement has placed on the infrastructure and already insufficient resources of the West African countries concerned,

Aware that the majority of the refugees and displaced persons are women and children, who are particularly vulnerable to the hardship imposed on them by the unfortunate circumstances,

Noting the determined and sustained efforts being made by the Governments of the West African countries hardest hit by the crisis to cater to and restore faith and hope among the Liberian refugees in their countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for having taken steps to encourage continued and concerted international action in favour of Liberian refugees and displaced persons;

2. Acknowledges, with grateful appreciation, the emergency humanitarian assistance provided by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the governmental and intergovernmental agencies to the thousands of Liberian refugees and displaced persons in the West African subregion;

3. Appeals to the organizations of the United Nations system, Member States and international and voluntary organizations, including non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to intensify urgent humanitarian and other assistance for the relief and rehabilitation of the victims of the Liberian civil strife taking refuge in neighbouring West African countries;

4. Also appeals to the organizations of the United Nations system, governmental and intergovernmental bodies, as well as non-governmental organizations, to provide the necessary material and financial assistance for the return and resettlement of the victims of the Liberian civil war;

5. Requests the High Commissioner to continue his efforts to mobilize additional resources necessary for the rehabilitation of Liberian refugees and displaced persons and to find a durable solution to the problem of Liberian refugees;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Somalia

In Somalia, an estimated 600,000 Ethiopian refugees continued in 1990 to receive assistance from UNHCR. Some 9,000 refugees were repatriated in organized convoys to Ethiopia, with some 4,500 of that number moving from north-western Somalia under a joint International Committee of the Red Cross/UNHCR operation.

Responding to General Assembly resolution 44/152 [YUN 1989, p. 705], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/45/508], outlined assistance provided to refugees in Somalia by organizations of the UN system. He stated that UNHCR had launched an appeal to the international community on 16 March to secure funds for the two-year special programme for durable solutions to the refugee problem, which envisaged voluntary repatriation, spontaneous local integration and assistance to refugees. In accordance with the conclusions of the tripartite commission established in 1989, a registration of refugees in all southern camps was conducted between November 1989 and February 1990 for one of those three options.

UNDP approved a $1 million project designed to increase the effectiveness of emergency assistance programmes to displaced persons and refugees. WFP continued the general feeding of Ethiopian refugees in Somalia through its refugee operation in the south and the Secretary-General's six-month extraordinary interim emergency programme for refugees in the north-west. During 1990, that assistance covered 440,000 re-registered refugees in the south and 140,000 refugees in the north-west, in addition to 50,000 vulnerable children and mothers in the refugee camps.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/154.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981, 37/174 of 17 December 1982, 38/88 of 16 December 1983, 39/104 of 14 November 1984, 40/132 of 13 December 1985, 41/138 of 4 December 1986, 42/127 of 7 December 1987, 43/147 of 8 December 1988 and 44/152 of 15 December 1989 on assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned about the heavy burden that has been placed on the fragile economy of Somalia by the continuing presence of large numbers of refugees,

Noting with concern the decision taken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the World Food Programme to suspend temporarily their food and other humanitarian assistance programmes for refugees in the north-west districts of Somalia, and the food shortages that have occurred in the refugee settlements as a result of the termination of the extraordinary interim emergency programme,

Considering the urgent need to reactivate the extraordinary interim emergency programme to alleviate hardship and human suffering of refugees in the affected north-west districts of Somalia,

Conscious of the fact that Somalia, as a least developed country, does not possess the economic or financial capacity to fill the gap created by the temporary suspension of humanitarian assistance programmes for refugees in the north-west districts of Somalia,

Aware of the fact that Somalia does not have the capacity to provide humanitarian assistance from its limited resources,

Noting with concern the deleterious effect of the presence of refugees on the environment, which has resulted in widespread deforestation, soil erosion and the threat of destruction to an already fragile ecological balance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the measures that the Government of Somalia is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees, in spite of its own limited resources and fragile economy;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in Somalia;

4. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the World Food Programme to resume their assistance programmes for the refugees in the north-west districts of Somalia as soon as possible;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner, the World Food Programme and the donor community, to resume the interim assistance programme so as to ensure that essential food aid and other humanitarian supplies continue to reach the refugee settlements in the north-west districts of Somalia until such time as a more permanent arrangement can be made;

6. Appeals once again to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to give full support to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the interim assistance programme;

7. Reiterates its appeal to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum and timely material, financial and technical assistance to enable the Government of Somalia to implement the projects and activities identified in the report of the 1987 inter-agency mission annexed to the report of the Secretary-General as the basis for a comprehensive programme of action concerned with both the humanitarian and the developmental needs of refugees;

8. Requests the pertinent organizations of the United Nations system, namely, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund, as well as the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Food Programme, to prepare, in consultation with the Government of Somalia, detailed project documentation for the implementation of those projects and activities identified in the report of the Secretary-General as priority endeavours for a comprehensive programme of action;

9. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to continue and expand their activities in Somalia, in co-operation with the Government of Somalia, and to protect and rehabilitate its damaged environment;

10. Recognizes the important role that the non-governmental organizations are playing with regard to programmes for the care, maintenance and rehabilitation of refugees, particularly in activities related to small-scale development projects, and in the fields of health and agriculture;

11. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1991, of the progress made in their respective fields of responsibility with regard to those provisions of the present resolution which concern them;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the High Commissioner and the United Nations Development Programme, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Southern Africa

In 1990, UNHCR continued to provide assistance to more than 140,000 Mozambicans in Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Some voluntary repatriation to Mozambique took place during the year. At the end of the year, UNHCR, in co-operation with the Governments concerned, organized the repatriation of 2,266 Namibian refugee children from Zambia by air. Since the middle of 1990, new waves of South African refugees had been arriving in neighbouring countries, fleeing violence in their townships. The estimated 38,000 South African refugees in the southern Africa region continued to receive UNHCR assistance, pending their repatriation when conditions permitted.

Follow-up to the 1988

Conference on refugees in southern Africa

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/136 [YUN 1989, p. 701], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/480] in September on follow-up to the 1988 International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa. He summarised the activities of Member States and organizations of the UN system in implementing the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action adopted at the Conference [YUN 1988, p. 665], which were designed to promote emergency preparedness, needs assessment and delivery assistance, recovery and development, and mobilization of resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 14 December, adopted resolution 45/137.

International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/136 of 15 December 1989,

Gravely concerned about the continuous deterioration of the situation in southern Africa arising from the domination and oppression of the people of South Africa by the minority racist regime of South Africa,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

Conscious of its responsibility to provide economic, material and humanitarian assistance to independent States in southern Africa in order to assist them in coping with the situation resulting from the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa,

Noting with appreciation the consultations undertaken by the Secretary-General to establish within the United Nations system a mechanism to ensure the implementation and overall co-ordination of relief programmes for internally displaced persons,

Convinced of the necessity to strengthen the capacity of the identified focal points within the United Nations system for the implementation and the overall co-ordination of relief programmes for internally displaced persons,

Noting with indignation that South Africa's policy of apartheid and its direct and indirect acts of aggression, intimidation and destabilization through armed terrorists continue to be the main causes of refugee flows and increasing displacement of persons in southern Africa,

Convinced also that there is an urgent need for the international community to extend maximum and concerted assistance to southern African countries sheltering refugees, returnees and displaced persons and also to highlight the plight of these persons,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the need to continue the implementation of the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa adopted by the International Conference on the Plight of Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in Southern Africa, held at Oslo from 22 to 24 August 1988;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the countries and organizations that have given assistance to the countries of southern Africa to enable them to cope with the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in their territories;

4. Calls upon the international community to provide increased assistance to the countries of southern Africa to enable them to strengthen their capacity to provide the necessary facilities and services for the care and well-being of the refugees, returnees and displaced persons in their territories;

5. Reiterates its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts, on behalf of the international community, to organize and mobilize special programmes of economic assistance for the front-line and other neighbouring States to help them to withstand the effects of the acts of aggression and destabilization committed by the apartheid regime of South Africa;

6. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by the Secretary-General, 'the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to implement the specific tasks and responsibilities assigned to them in the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action, and encourages them to continue their efforts;

7. Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General aimed at assigning to the United Nations resident co-ordinators the function of co-ordinating assistance for internally displaced persons, in close co-operation with Governments, local representatives of donor countries and United Nations agencies in the field;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity of the identified focal points at the field level to enable them to respond more effectively to government requests for assistance to refugees and displaced persons;

9. Once again urges all Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and governmental and non-governmental organizations to undertake the measures required of them under the Oslo Declaration and Plan of Action;

10. Decides to consider this question at its forty-sixth session on the basis of a report to be submitted by the Secretary-General.

Student refugees

In September, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/448] that UNHCR educational assistance programmes continued in 1990 for South African and Namibian refugee students in southern Africa. The aim of the assistance was to enable young refugees to become self-reliant in their host country, and to assume leadership roles upon their return. Most of the student refugees in those programmes (some 212 Namibians and 600 South Africans) were at the primary and lower secondary levels, with smaller numbers enrolled in secondary and post-secondary educational institutions in Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland and Zimbabwe. The programmes were implemented either directly by local UNHCR offices or through other agencies. Appropriation for the programmes for 1990 totalled $207,700.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/171.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/157 of 15 December 1989, in which, inter alia, it requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa and Namibia who had been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report continue to be successfully implemented,

Noting with concern that the discriminatory and repressive policies that continue to be applied in South Africa cause a continued and increasing influx of student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure that the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe for the co-operation that they have extended to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on matters concerning the welfare of the refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from South Africa, who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe;

6. Also requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue the sponsorship of Namibian students still studying under programmes of the High Commissioner until they complete their studies;

7. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, that were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

8. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

9. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and all other competent United Nations bodies, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance so as to facilitate and expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe;

10. Calls upon agencies and programmes of the United Nations systems to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

11. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1991, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Malawi

In 1990, UNHCR assisted Malawi to meet the burden of the presence of the large number of Mozambican refugees in the country, which increased by over 120,000 to a total of some 927,000. The UNHCR assistance programme continued to provide for the basic needs of refugees pending repatriation, but the financial constraints faced by the Office resulted in a cut of some $6 million from the 1989/90 programmes. As a result, the refugees suffered a nutritional deficiency and there was a deterioration in community services and education.

The Secretary-General, in a September report [A/45/444] submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/149 [YUN 1989, p. 699], said that the inevitable reduction in the UNHCR programme in Malawi had weakened the delivery of basic care and maintenance and hampered efforts to repair the ecological damage caused by the arrival of over 800,000 persons. WFP continued to co-ordinate the supply of basic food commodities, while UNHCR purchased additional supplies. However, the long-term presence of the large and increasing refugee population in Malawi continued to affect the country seriously, diverting precious resources intended for national development. To alleviate the situation, UNHCR and the Government in May addressed the Paris World Bank Consultative Group Meeting for the first time on the refugee crisis in Malawi.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 18 December, adopted resolution 45/159.

Assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/132 of 7 December 1987, 43/148 of 8 December 1988 and 44/149 of 15 December 1989 on assistance to refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having examined that part of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees that deals with the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Malawi,

Gravely concerned about the continuing serious social and economic impact of the massive presence of refugees and displaced persons, as well as its far-reaching consequences for the country's long-term development process,

Appreciating the important measures that the Government of Malawi is taking in order to provide shelter, protection, food, education and health' and other humanitarian services to thousands of refugees and displaced persons,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the people and Government of Malawi and the sacrifices they are making in caring for the refugees and displaced persons, given the country's limited social services and infrastructure, and the need for adequate international assistance to enable them to continue their efforts to provide assistance to the refugees and displaced persons,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States, the various organizations of the United Nations system, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in Malawi,

Bearing in mind the findings and recommendations of the inter-agency mission to Malawi, particularly on the need to strengthen the country's socio-economic infrastructure in order to enable it to provide for the immediate humanitarian relief requirements of the refugees and displaced persons, as well as the long-term national development needs of the country,

Recognizing the need to view refugee-related development projects within local and national development plans,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Commends the measures that the Government of Malawi is taking to provide material and humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons, in spite of the serious economic situation it faces, and stresses the need for additional resources to lessen the impact of the presence of refugees and displaced persons on the country's long-term development process;
3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees and displaced persons in Malawi;
4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the massive presence of refugees and displaced persons in the country and its implications for the long-term socio-economic development of the whole country;
5. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to continue providing the Government of Malawi with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects in regions affected by the presence of refugees and displaced persons, as well as for the development programmes now being implemented;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees and displaced persons and for programmes now being implemented;

7. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees and displaced persons in their settlements;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

In a September report [A/45/446], the Secretary-General stated that in 1990 UNHCR assisted some 385,000 of the more than 768,000 refugees estimated to be in the Sudan. With the completion of the voluntary repatriation of Ugandan refugees in 1989, UNHCR activities in the south of the Sudan were phased out. While efforts were made to promote the voluntary repatriation of the 20,000 Chadian refugees remaining in the west, no significant return movement took place. To enhance the economic independence of Ethiopian refugees in the eastern and central regions, efforts were made towards programme rationalization. A parallel effort was made to reduce refugee dependence on direct assistance in the long term by linking assistance to national development efforts. Refugee-specific activities were linked with regional development projects being implemented by the World Bank, the European Community and bilateral donors in refugee-affected areas. Full implementation of the World Bank/UNHCR/Government of the Sudan project in South Kassala targeting small farmers, including refugees in rural settlements, unassisted refugees and nationals, was hampered by a lack of financial contributions towards the refugee component of the project. The project had to be redesigned to reduce its scope. UNHCR continued to fund projects to improve infrastructure and services in refugee-affected areas in eastern Sudan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/160.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/151 of 15 December 1989 and its other previous resolutions on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the efforts made by the Government of the Sudan for the reception of the refugees and the provision of protection, shelter, food, education and health and other humanitarian services to the ever-increasing number of refugees who have been crossing the borders into the Sudan since the early 1960s, Recognizing the heavy burden shouldered by the people and the Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices they are making to host more than one million refugees, who constitute approximately 7.5 per cent of the total population of the country,

Deeply concerned that the great majority of the refugees have settled of their own accord in various urban and rural communities throughout the country and are thus sharing with the indigenous population the already meagre resources and services,

Expressing grave concern at the devastating and far-reaching effects of the successive calamities, ranging from the drought in 1984 to the torrential rains and floods and locust infestations in 1988 and the drought and food shortage of 1990, that have afflicted the country, thus exacerbating the already deteriorating situation resulting from the presence of this great number of refugees,

Gravely concerned also that the Government of the Sudan, besides dealing with the difficult prevailing economic and social problems, has the additional task of taking care of more than 3.7 million persons displaced by successive calamities and civil strife in the south,

Recognizing the efforts undertaken by the Government of the Sudan to initiate a wide-ranging rehabilitation programme to redress the damages incurred by the natural disasters,

Considering those serious circumstances, which render the Government of the Sudan less prepared than ever to meet its obligations to its own people, and the more serious consequences, which affect the capacity of the Government of the Sudan to receive and grant asylum to additional numbers of refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme in the Sudan,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Takes note also of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and, in particular, of the new trends identified in the area of refugee aid and development;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

4. Expresses grave concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of the presence of massive numbers of refugees on the security and stability of the country and the overall negative impact on its basic infrastructure and socio-economic development;

5. Also expresses grave concern at the shrinking resources available for refugee programmes in the Sudan and the serious consequences of this situation on the country's ability to continue to host and assist refugees;

6. Appeals to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial institutions to provide the Government of the Sudan with the necessary resources for the implementation of development assistance projects, in particular those prepared by the United Nations Development Programme, in the regions affected by the presence of refugees;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of ongoing projects in the areas affected by the presence of refugees;

8. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements and to explore ways and means to extend assistance to refugees who have settled of their own accord elsewhere;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asia and Oceania

In 1990, efforts continued to implement the Comprehensive Plan of Action (CPA) adopted at the 1989 International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 707] and aimed at achieving a durable solution to the problem of Indo-Chinese refugees in the South-East Asia region.

In Viet Nam, a mass information campaign aimed at discouraging the organization of clandestine departures was partly responsible for the dramatic decline in the number of new Vietnamese asylum-seekers in the region, from 83,700 in 1989 to 40,500 in 1990. The campaign involved close co-operation between UNHCR and the Government, as well as the media. By the end of 1990, under the Orderly Departure Programme, a total of 252,760 Vietnamese had left the country by air to over 30 countries.

UNHCR worked closely with the Governments concerned to establish status-determination procedures for asylum-seekers. Under CPA, voluntary repatriation for Vietnamese refugees continued in 1990. To help in their reintegration, returnees were paid $30 per month over a one-year period and UNHCR staff undertook periodic visits to their home provinces and villages to monitor their progress. In China, UNHCR contributed $3 million to support 40 projects geared towards income-generation, education, job creation and health care for the younger generation of 285,000 Vietnamese settled in China who suffered from lack of job opportunities and cultivable land.

In Thailand, there were 99,821 Indo-Chinese refugees at the end of 1990, two thirds of whom were Lao, and the rest Vietnamese and Cambodian. Under UNHCR auspices, more than 20,000 left the country for resettlement, but that was offset by new arrivals and natural population growth. UNHCR continued its programmes of care and maintenance, repatriation and resettlement assistance for refugees in Thailand, at a cost of $24.5 million.

The fate of some 300,000 Cambodians on the border with Thailand, assisted by the United Nations Border Relief Operation, as well as of 15,000 others in Thailand and an equal number in Viet Nam, awaited a resolution of the Cambodia conflict. Preparations for the repatriation of those refugees and displaced persons were under way in anticipation of a political settlement. An inter-agency mission, led by UNHCR, visited Thailand and Cambodia in May/June 1990. Follow-up consultations were held to ensure effective co-ordination and a definition of the responsibilities of each organization involved. A memorandum of understanding was concluded between UNHCR and WFP on food assistance and a contingency plan prepared to ensure a safe return and a smooth transition of returnees.

The UNHCR Executive Committee, noting that the inter-agency mission had laid the groundwork for the repatriation operation, called on the High Commissioner to work with the Secretary-General to ensure that the financial and other requirements of the operation were addressed in UN overall planning. It appealed for a comprehensive settlement in Cambodia and called on Governments and other donors to respond rapidly. The Committee also called for the creation of a climate of security and confidence so that repatriation and reintegration could be undertaken with international monitoring. In October 1990, the Secretary-General launched an appeal for funds to cover the preparatory phase of the repatriation, which was met with a favourable initial response of more than $10 million. Surveys were conducted in Cambodia to determine the absorption capacity of potential returnee areas.

Elsewhere in the region, in November 1990, UNHCR began an emergency relief programme for some 43,000 Sri Lankan returnees and displaced persons in Mannar District. That population had repatriated from south India since 1987, and was helped by UNHCR to resettle in their native towns and villages. However, since mid-1990 the situation in the north-east had deteriorated rapidly, and large numbers of returnees were again displaced. Due to the increase of asylum-seekers in Australia and New Zealand, the Governments of those countries requested additional help in carrying out status-determination procedures; in response, UNHCR recruited additional personnel. In both countries, persons of Indo-Chinese origin formed the majority of new asylum-seekers, with others from Europe, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America. At the end of 1990, the number of refugees in Australia stood at 97,915, and in New Zealand at 5,424.

Papua New Guinea gave permission to Irian Jayan refugees from Indonesia to settle on its territory; they were encouraged to engage in income-generating activities. However, during the year, 600 of those refugees voluntarily repatriated to their country of origin. During the same period, Nepal saw an influx of some 2,000 Bhutanese.

Total expenditures by UNHCR for the region under voluntary funds amounted to $102 million in 1990, of which $52.6 million was expended under General Programmes and $49.4 million under Special Programmes. Care and maintenance programmes accounted for $60 million of the total.

1989 Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees

In September, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/449] on the implementation of the Comprehensive Plan of Action adopted at the 1989 International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 707]. He said that considerable progress had been registered on all aspects of CPA, except the issue of the return of non-refugees. Concerning departures, a public information campaign was conducted in northern Viet Nam to inform inhabitants about the situation of asylum-seekers, the establishment of procedures to determine refugee status and the limitation of resettlement opportunities. That campaign contributed largely to the drastic reduction in arrivals in Hong Kong. In the rest of the region, however, no significant change was noted in the number of arrivals and a public information campaign would be undertaken in southern Viet Nam.

UNHCR conducted training/briefing sessions for government officials involved in the determination of refugee status. Special procedures were established with UNHCR assistance for unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable cases. Considerable progress was also made on resettlement of the pre-cutoff date case-load; over 80 per cent of the case-load had been accepted or had departed for resettlement. With respect to voluntary repatriation, 3,345 Vietnamese returned to Viet Nam. The Steering Committee of the Conference, at its third meeting (Geneva, 24-25 January), agreed on the principle of the return of non-refugees, but was unable to agree on a timetable for implementation. At an informal meeting of the Steering Committee (Manila, Philippines, 17-18 May), first asylum countries issued a statement indicating that, if there was no solution for non-refugees by 1 July, they would reserve the right to take unilateral action to safeguard their national interest, including abandonment of first asylum.

The UNHCR Executive Committee emphasized the need for continued efforts to ensure full and balanced implementation of all mutually reinforcing elements of CPA, including temporary asylum and repatriation. It requested the High Commissioner and the Steering Committee to continue their multilateral co-ordinating role towards that end and urged that a consensus be reached in the near future enabling full CPA implementation.

Europe and North America

Changes taking place in Central and Eastern Europe led to a substantial increase in the activities of UNHCR in the area. The agency undertook a number of missions with a view to encouraging Governments to accede to international refugee instruments and to develop national legislation pertaining to refugees and asylum-seekers, repatriation, resettlement and family reunification. In 1990, Hungary and Yugoslavia were the only countries in the region to have acceded to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 769], but almost all others had expressed their intention to do so in the near future. The number of refugees in Eastern Europe was as yet relatively small, but future mass flows were anticipated.

In Western Europe, the number of asylum-seekers continued to rise, from 290,000 in 1988 to 420,000 in 1990. That resulted in strains on reception facilities and increased expenditures for public assistance, and created a large backlog in the processing of asylum applications. At the same time, public opinion became increasingly less favourable to immigrants in general, and refugees in particular. During 1990, Albania was the largest source of new refugees: 19,852 sought asylum in Greece, 27,000 in Italy and 2,100 in Yugoslavia.

In North America, asylum applications in Canada during 1990 increased to about 36,000 from 21,745 in the previous year. However, their rate of acceptance was 70 per cent, reflecting the country's generous asylum policies. In the United States, requests for asylum during the year numbered some 74,000, the majority of which were from Cubans and Central Americans.

UNHCR worked closely with the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service in training asylum adjudicators in the new asylum regulations instituted in 1990.

UNHCR expenditures in Europe and North America amounted to $27.3 million for 1990.

Latin America and the Caribbean

At the end of 1990, 92,773 refugees were being assisted by UNHCR in Central America and another 8,275 in South America (out of a refugee population of 29,098 in that region). The momentum created by regional peace efforts and the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees (CIREFCA) [YUN 1989, p. 709] served as a catalyst to find durable solutions, through voluntary repatriation or integration in host countries, to refugee problems in Central America, notably in El Salvador and Nicaragua. Following the elections in Nicaragua in March 1990 (see PART Two, Chapter II), most of the Nicaraguan refugees in Honduras expressed a desire to return home. At the request of the Secretary-General, UNHCR lent its good offices to the work of the International Support and Verification Commission. In 1990, in the largest such effort in Latin America by UNHCR, it helped in the repatriation of 35,464 refugees and 18,883 members of the Nicaraguan resistance within the framework of the Commission. It also set up seven field offices in returnee areas for rehabilitation assistance. In addition to immediate relief aid, UNHCR, in partnership with UNDP, began implementing long-term development projects for the permanent reintegration of the returnees. During the year, another 8,072 refugees were repatriated to El Salvador under UNHCR auspices, making a total of 30,000 returnees to that country since 1987; UNHCR continued to monitor the security conditions and welfare of the returnees in more than 17 communities throughout the country. Some 783 refugees were repatriated from Mexico to Guatemala in 1990—a slower rate of return than in the previous year.

In South America, following the growing trend towards voluntary repatriation, 2,500 Chileans returned under UNHCR auspices from various countries of asylum, most notably from Argentina, receiving assistance within a framework agreed upon between the Chilean Government, the International Organization for Migration and UNHCR.

With funds made available through CIREFCA projects, local integration efforts were pursued to assist those refugees who did not wish to return home. In Costa Rica, five CIREFCA projects were implemented by UNHCR to provide housing credit, job training and education to Nicaraguan refugees. As a result of those measures, it was expected that by the end of 1991 there would be no more refugee camps in Costa Rica. In Mexico, the Government announced a new policy of "secure settlement" aimed at providing a measure of self-sufficiency for 7,000-8,000 Guatemalan refugees in the State of Chiapas.

UNHCR opened a Regional Office in Caracas, Venezuela, in April, and intensified its activities in the Caribbean. Voluntary repatriation of Haitian refugees continued and a rehabilitation project for returnees was re-opened.

Expenditures for the year in Latin America and the Caribbean amounted to $43.4 million, of which $24 million was obligated under General Programmes and $19.4 million under Special Programmes.

Follow-up to the 1989

Conference on Central American Refugees

During 1990, UNHCR, in collaboration with UNDP, provided technical and material support for the finalization of development and reconstruction projects presented at the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 709], said the Secretary-General in a September report [A/45/450]. In compliance with the Concerted Plan of Action adopted at that Conference, a governmental national committee was formed in each affected country to define priorities regarding the linkage of development projects for uprooted populations to their countries' national plans. Also in compliance with the Plan of Action, donor Governments, NGOS, the affected Governments, UNDP and UNHCR worked together in a support group which served as a forum for sharing information and viewpoints regarding project design and implementation.

The First International Meeting of the Follow-up Committee of CIREFCA was held in New York on 27 and 28 June. The Meeting reviewed the progress reports of the seven affected Governments on the application of the Concerted Plan of Action in their respective countries and showed their support for the CIREFCA process during its implementation stage. Contributions for the financing of projects totalling $156.2 million were made or announced at the Meeting. The Meeting adopted the Declaration of the First International Meeting of the Follow-up Committee, which supported the strengthening of the mechanisms set in motion by CIREFCA and called for consideration in development-related projects for uprooted persons in the region of the participation of women, physical and intellectual development of children, conservation of ethnic and cultural values and protection of the environment. The Meeting requested the Secretary-General, UNHCR and UNDP to support the affected Governments, in particular through the CIREFCA Joint Support Unit.

The UNHCR Executive Committee welcomed the Declaration of the First International Meeting of the Follow-up Committee. It requested the Governments in the region to strengthen the functioning of the mechanisms established under the Concerted Plan of Action at the national and international levels and asked the High Commissioner to ensure effective implementation of CIREFCA projects and reinforce his collaboration with UNDP and national support groups. The Committee appealed to the Governments of Central America, Belize and Mexico, the international community, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to increase their efforts towards full implementation of the Concerted Plan of Action to achieve durable solutions for refugees, returnees and displaced persons.

South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

In 1990, the situation of Afghan refugees in neighbouring Pakistan and Iran was the principal focus of UNHCR activities in the region, though assistance continued to pockets of refugee populations elsewhere.

The expected mass return of Afghan refugees, following the complete withdrawal of foreign armed forces from Afghanistan in February 1989, did not materialize. Although significant repatriations, involving some 300,000 persons, took place in 1989 and 1990, by the end of 1990 there were 3,185,265 Afghan refugees in Pakistan and more than 2.3 million in Iran. In Pakistan, the majority of Afghans lived in some 345 refugee villages, with women and children comprising 75 per cent of the refugee population. Most of UNHCR services were geared towards community-based activities and income-generating schemes for those refugees who had not attained economic self-sufficiency. Food aid to the refugees was provided by WFP at an estimated value of $120 million.

Besides the 2.3 million Afghans, Iran hosted over 500,000 Iraqi refugees. Only a small percentage of the Afghan refugees lived in camps, the majority being integrated in urban centres throughout the country, where they enjoyed the right to employment and access to education and health facilities on an equal footing with Iranian citizens. UNHCR assistance was limited to health, sanitation, water, education and income generation. In the field of health, UNHCR complemented the efforts of Iran by procuring vaccines, medicines and water-distribution systems, and by providing salaries of Afghan health workers, at a cost of $8 million. Another $4 million was expended on similar assistance to Iraqi refugees.

In order to promote a durable solution to the problem of Afghan refugees, UNHCR took part in a Pilot Repatriation Project launched in July 1990. In Afghanistan, UNHCR continued to support the Peace Guest House project, where returnees were received and assisted with transportation to their areas of origin. Guest houses were established in Kabul, Herat and Mazari-i-Sharif, where WFP provided food aid to the returnees. By the end of 1990, UNHCR had assisted some 30,000 persons through that project.

During 1990, UNHCR voluntary funds expenditure in South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East totalled $97.6 million, $63.6 million of which was for care and maintenance.

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

In 1990, there was an overall improvement in the international protection of refugees, said the High Commissioner in his annual report to the General Assembly [A/46/12]. That was evidenced by the implementation in Central America and South-East Asia of plans of action developed in 1989 to deal with the refugee situation in those regions; the setting up of a regional mechanism in Africa to contain the rapidly worsening refugee situation there; and the voluntary repatriation of refugees in several parts of the world and the consequent closure of camps set up over a decade earlier. However, that was offset by negative trends in other parts of the world. Although many States admitted the vast majority of the world's refugees, granting them temporary asylum at least and protection from refoulement, a number of countries denied entry to asylum-seekers on various grounds and concern did not lessen over violations of the principle of non-refoulement.

In August, the High Commissioner, in a note on international protection [A/AC.96/750] to the Executive Committee, gave an overview of the problems faced in the area of protection and suggested certain considerations for any broad-based approach to the refugee problem in the coming decade. The aim was to underpin suggestions for future direction for refugee policy that States and the international community might develop.

Refugee problems were identified as operational in nature, especially where there were communities of refugees for whom no lasting solution to their situation had been found; the serious and growing challenge to the institution of asylum as a main way of offering protection to refugees; and the financial crisis of UNHCR which had adversely affected its ability to protect refugees.

The High Commissioner stated that the physical security of refugees during their flight and after arrival in asylum countries was of paramount concern. Military or armed attacks on refugee camps or settlements destroyed lives and property, refugees were forcibly recruited into regular and irregular armed forces and women and children were subjected to physical violence or sexual abuse. Denial by Governments of UNHCR access to refugee populations further impeded effective monitoring or intervention. A related concern was the detention of refugees and asylum-seekers in circumstances outside the guidelines agreed to in 1986 by the Executive Committee. There were also restrictions on the full enjoyment of rights of refugees guaranteed by international instruments. Protection training and promotion activities instituted by UNHCR had proved only partially effective. The institution of asylum, which was critical to refugee protection, was increasingly being undermined. Certain States expelled refugees individually and, in some instances, in large numbers. In addition, many States, some of which were among the architects of the international refugee protection structures, adopted measures denying admission and hindering access to procedures for the determination of status. As a complement to such policies, a number of States had adopted a narrow view of the scope of their responsibilities under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520], particularly article 1 on refugee definition, so that it was held to apply to only a limited group of persons. As a result of such restrictive approaches there was a higher rejection rate. Additionally, there was the problem of the rigid adherence by some countries to the country-of-first-asylum principle. Those problems had the combined effect of making asylum less accessible. The situation was further undermined by the serious financial crisis facing UNHCR, which threatened to compromise its ability to meet the refugees' basic needs, including protection. The Office was forced to identify priorities even among mandated activities, resulting in enforced reductions affecting not only the immediate welfare of refugees, but also their protection and prospects for solutions, particularly voluntary repatriation. Concerning long-term approaches, UNHCR was of the view that an overall and global approach was required to develop asylum and refugee policies so that humanitarian and human rights concerns could be integrated and properly balanced in relation to development, foreign policy and immigration control procedures.

In the conclusions to the report, the High Commissioner suggested that, as part of new strategies, human rights institutions and organizations should be utilized more actively and effectively to address the human rights concerns in refugee situations. International co-operation to ensure early warning of developing humanitarian emergencies and to facilitate their timely mediation should be promoted and activities strengthened. Future policies should reflect new and broadly endorsed human rights positions regarding torture and inhumane and degrading treatment. National and international development assistance agencies, in implementing policies on development aid, should promote positive human rights situations and target socio-economic difficulties causing people to leave or hindering their return to their countries of origin. States must respond to the legitimate concerns of all affected States, including the protracted nature of refugee problems in many developing countries with their own troubled economies, their limited ability to provide for substantial refugee populations, concern about waning international solidarity in sharing the burden, and the political and security difficulties. The manner in which regional bodies might more actively contribute to positive resolution of problems in their respective regions should be explored. Response strategies employing the three traditional durable solutions should include measures to broaden their acceptability. New thinking on solutions should develop the concept of State responsibility under international law, particularly as it related to the responsibilities of countries of origin. Governments should share with UNHCR the responsibility to lead and educate public opinion and to encourage positive attitudes by making public information activities an integral part of new strategies to address refugee problems. Open debate on possible new strategies should precede any final decision at the political level. Migration control should be examined with a view to assessing the appropriateness of legal migration as an alternative channel for departures for some groups, particularly those with no compelling reasons for their departure that were pertinent to refugees status. Any new strategy must contain measures to deal humanely and effectively with rejected asylum-seekers.

In an October conclusion, the UNHCR Executive Committee called for measures to ensure that refugees were effectively protected and, in that regard, reiterated the importance of the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 769]. It also called on the High Commissioner to continue to ensure that protection measures were fully integrated into assistance and durable solutions programmes. The Committee noted the accomplishments of UNHCR in promoting and disseminating refugee law and called on the High Commissioner to pursue those activities within existing resources. Noting matters emphasized by the High Commissioner in his note on refugee protection, it decided to refer those matters to its Working Group on Solutions and Protection.

The Executive Committee took note of the establishment of that Working Group and requested that a further meeting of the Group be convened as soon as possible after the October 1990 session of the Committee and that a report on the Group's work be submitted in 1991.

Refugee women and children

In an August report [A/AC.96/754], the High Commissioner outlined UNHCR's policy on refugee women, which was based on the principle that the resources and needs of refugee women should be integrated into all aspects of programme planning and implementation rather than creating special women's projects. The organizational goals were to provide protection appropriate to the specific needs of women, identify durable solutions and provide assistance that would encourage the realization of their full potential and encourage their participation in preparing for the durable solution. The main policy objectives to support those goals were to recognize that refugee women represented approximately 80 per cent of UNHCR's target population and that programmes could be effective only if they were planned with an understanding of, and in consultation with, that group; to ensure that specific protection needs and the legal rights of refugee women were understood and that adequate response measures were taken; to support their efforts and ensure their participation in UNHCR's protection and assistance activities; to ensure that differing needs and resources of refugee men and women were considered in programme activities and, where necessary, for cultural and social reasons; to place particular emphasis on strategies to protect and assist refugee women; and to ensure that refugee women were equitably represented in resettlement programmes.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report [E/CN.6/1991/4] on refugee and displaced women and children, based on the work of the Expert Group on Refugee and Displaced Women and Children (Vienna, 2-6 July 1990), in which he dealt with, inter alia, the issue of refugee protection as it related to women and children.

The report stated that women and children shared the same protection problems experienced by all refugees but they had additional legal and physical protection problems peculiar to their gender and age. Women faced special difficulties in obtaining refugee status, and few countries had an adequate number of female staff involved in the procedures for determining refugees to respond to the needs of those women. In addition, women were also underrepresented in the protection staff of UNHCR and that of implementing partners. Refugee women also experienced difficulty in registering and obtaining documentation of their refugee status and eligibility for assistance. Children also faced difficulties in establishing refugee status, particularly unaccompanied children. They frequently did not have access to information to substantiate their claims. Statelessness was one of their major problems. The physical security of refugee women and children was also at risk both during flight and after they had found asylum. Problems included rape, abduction, sexual harassment and the forced induction of children into the military. Additionally, camp design and operation contributed to physical insecurity. In urban settings, minimal assistance programmes forced many refugee women into prostitution.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee approved the policy on refugee women [A/AC.96/754] and urged States, relevant UN organizations and NGOs to implement the policy, including in the area of training. It called on the High Commissioner to present a progress report in 1991 on the implementation of the policy in protection and assistance activities and to develop comprehensive guidelines on the protection of refugee women and their application within the framework of the policy.

The Committee urged States, UN organizations and NGOs to ensure that the needs and resources of refugee women were fully understood and integrated into their activities and programmes and to pursue measures for improving the international protection of refugee women.

Early warning of refugee flows

Co-ordination

In October [A/45/649 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the co-ordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows. The report examined the policy framework for a co-ordinated early-warning system, UN system involvement in activities relevant to early warning of possible refugee flows as a basis for co-ordination, methods and techniques to monitor early warning and co-operation and co-ordination.

The report concluded that although 10 years had passed since the importance of early warning was recognized by the General Assembly, mass exoduses of refugees continued to increase. Many organizations of the UN system had already developed techniques and methods to monitor certain factors within their mandate. However, activities related to early warning were not well co-ordinated in the light of the fragmentation and decentralization of the work of the UN system. JIU concluded that there was a need to introduce early warning as a regular component of work of the UN system in a co-ordinated manner. To that end, the report recommended that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) should include in the agenda of its forthcoming session an item on the subject, which it should further consider from time to time as needed; designate a central focal point of the UN system for the co-ordination and monitoring of factors related to possible refugee flows; establish a working group on early warning of refugee flows to work out modes of co-operation and procedures to develop an effective early-warning system for refugees; set up a regular inter-agency consultative mechanism to consider concrete cases and to meet urgently in case of emergencies; and make arrangements for UN resident coordinators to serve as co-ordination points for early warning of refugee flows. The Secretary-General should make administrative arrangements to increase the capacity of the Office for Research and the Collection of Information (ORCI) in early warning of refugee flows; the executive heads of relevant UN organizations should strengthen early-warning activities related to refugee flows; ORCI should develop an effective early-warning system, give priority to the finalization of specific indicators concerning the root causes of refugee flows, promote consultative discussions with relevant entities and further develop links with existing internal and external data bases; and UN research institutions should disseminate information on their work related to alert function by sending their products to the entities involved.

In November [A/45/649/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted his comments on the JIU report. He noted that the information and observations contained therein could be useful in designing the UN arrangements for early warning and prevention of possible refugee flows. However, the report did not sufficiently emphasize the necessity of developing an early-warning capacity at the country level and the role that could be played by the resident co-ordinators. The Secretary-General agreed that the envisaged arrangement should extend to all displaced persons, but noted that the involvement of UNHCR in early-warning activities would have to take into account the scope of its mandate. He said that he would consider arrangements to increase the capacity of ORCI in early warning of refugee flows and undertook to expedite the work related to early warning as proposed by JIU. He indicated that the comments of ACC on those recommendations with system-wide implications would be submitted to the General Assembly at a later date.

Assistance

During 1990, UNHCR continued to co-operate with concerned Governments and the international community to meet the humanitarian needs of refugees throughout the world, as well as in the pursuit of durable solutions, through programmes of voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement. Those efforts were affected by the financial constraints of the Office as well as by requests for emergency assistance in an increasing number of new refugee situations.

UNHCR continued its large care and maintenance programmes in Ethiopia ($42.4 million), Malawi ($36.3 million) and the Sudan ($13.9 million). The deteriorating situation in Somalia considerably hampered the implementation of UNHCR activities in the latter part of the year and finally led to the evacuation of all UN personnel. Assistance was provided in neighbouring countries to refugees fleeing Somalia. The situation in Liberia throughout the year resulted in an influx of large numbers of refugees in need of assistance in Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea and Sierra Leone. Assistance provided included infrastructure in host villages, and agricultural and small income-generating projects. Large care and maintenance programmes continued throughout South-East Asia, especially in Thailand ($21.4 million), Hong Kong ($15.1 million) and Malaysia ($6.1 million). In South-West Asia, the largest programme was in Pakistan in favour of Afghan refugees ($44.1 million). In Latin America, care and maintenance programmes continued in Mexico ($3.3 million) and Honduras ($3.7 million).

In 1990, some $183 million was spent under General and Special Programmes to promote durable solutions. UNHCR emphasized the need for States to create the necessary conditions to make voluntary repatriation a viable option, and in that regard advocated the establishment of tripartite commissions whenever possible. In Africa, some 2,774 Namibians, mostly students from Zambia, were repatriated. Another 32,000 persons returned to Mozambique, including 25,800 from Malawi, 2,500 from Zimbabwe and over 3,500 from South Africa. However, the two-way repatriation to Angola and Zaire remained suspended at the end of the year for financial and security reasons. In Latin America, the repatriation of Nicaraguan refugees from Honduras and other countries in the region was successfully completed. In Asia, a new outbreak of violence in Sri Lanka disrupted ongoing repatriation activities. Under the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees, some 5,462 refugees returned from Hong Kong, and smaller numbers from Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. In addition, 1,476 persons voluntarily returned to the Lao People's Democratic Republic and projects continued to provide them with assistance for reintegration and to attain self-sufficiency. Also in 1990, 70,000 Afghans returned home through the Voluntary Repatriation Pilot Project, and an additional 30,000 spontaneous returnees from Iran were assisted through the UNHCR Guest House Programme. An estimated 100,000 Afghans also returned to their country of origin unassisted by UNHCR.

The emphasis of resettlement was on South-East Asia, where in 1990 new homes were provided for 49,313 Indo-Chinese. Some 3,600 refugees from the Middle East and South-West Asia were resettled. In Africa, the number of refugees resettled was a small portion of the total refugee population on the continent; a total of 4,274 were resettled, mainly in Canada and the United States. The number of refugees resettled in Latin America under the auspices of UNHCR was just 1,537. The historic changes in Eastern Europe resulted in a marked decline in resettlement from the region; 1,429 persons were resettled in 1990.

UNHCR also responded to numerous requests for emergency assistance. The UNHCR Emergency Fund was used for situations in Angola ($1.6 million), Burundi and Rwanda ($0.2 million), Ethiopia ($0.5 million), Guatemala ($0.2 million), the Sudan ($1.4 million), Uganda ($0.42 million), Zaire ($1.4 million) and Zambia ($0.9 million).

UNHCR promoted greater public awareness of the refugee problem by producing and distributing a variety of written and audio-visual materials. Ten editions of the magazine Refugees were published in English, French and Spanish, six in Japanese, five in German, four in Italian and one each in Arabic and Greek. Other activities included the further development of relations with the media and the organization of exhibitions and special events.

In October, the Executive Committee addressed the High Commissioner's need for more flexibility to respond to a range of contingencies. Subsequently, the level of the Emergency Fund was increased from $10 million to $20 million and the High Commissioner was authorized to spend up to $6 million in any one year for a given emergency. The ceiling of the Working Capital and Guarantee Fund was also raised, from $10 million to $50 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/140 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1166(XII) of 26 November 1957, 2956 B (XXVII) of 12 December 1972, 3271 B (XXIX) of 10 December 1974 and 35/41 B of 25 November 1980 in connection with the Emergency Fund of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Noting with appreciation the work of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in relation to the funding and administration of programmes and projects, including those aimed at responding to emergency situations, Authorizes the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to determine in future the terms and conditions for the operation of the Emergency Fund of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Development assistance

The presence of large numbers of refugees, displaced persons and returnees continued to cause environmental degradation and to divert scarce human and financial resources from development efforts in already fragile economies. Recognizing the need to link refugee assistance with economic development, UNHCR continued to co-operate with other agencies in supporting income-generating schemes for refugees and development projects in various host countries.

In 1990, UNHCR efforts to assist refugees and displaced persons was complemented by the development initiatives of other agencies. The technical planning for phase III of the income-generating project for refugee areas in Pakistan had begun. Joint project identification and appraisal missions were undertaken by UNHCR with development and donor agencies. Missions were undertaken, with the European Economic Community, to Mexico, where an operational plan was drawn up for the Guatemalan refugee programme in Campeche, and to Viet Nam, for the development of projects for those Vietnamese returning home. In co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, UNHCR prepared a plan of action for the integration/reintegration of Rwandese refugees/returnees. Projects in Iran, Somalia and the Sudan were awaiting funding.

In May, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) submitted a report [DP/1990/66] to the UNDP Governing Council on the present and future role of UNDP in the field of refugee aid and development. The report reviewed the impact of the growing numbers of refugees and displaced persons on temporary and permanent host environments, creating an impediment to development; diverting scarce resources; and engendering hostile reactions as their presence created economic hardships. It focused on the role of UNDP in helping to bridge the gap between relief assistance and development. Among the future strategies recommended were inclusion of the problem of displacement as a new criterion for calculating indicative planning figure levels; co-ordination of overall UN assistance in the field; continued collaboration between UNDP and UNHCR in formulating programmes and mobilizing resources; establishment of a trust fund; promotion of the fullest participation of NGOs in refugee rehabilitation; integration of women into mainstream activities relating to refugees and development efforts; and the establishment of a focal point for UN policy on the matter.

On 22 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/22)], the Governing Council encouraged UNDP to assist Governments to assess the impact and take into account the problems of refugees, displaced persons and returnees in their development plans and programmes, which could help attract additional co-financing or other resources. It invited the Administrator to participate with UNHCR in rehabilitation, reconstruction and long-term development of areas affected by massive population displacements and to collaborate with UNHCR, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the World Food Programme (WFP), the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations Volunteers and NGOs in providing assistance. The Governing Council authorized the Administrator to utilize for the remainder of the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) up to $500,000 from the Special Programme Resources allocation for disaster-relief activities, for the assessment of needs caused by population displacements. It requested UNDP to train its field staff and that of national Governments to react effectively in situations of population displacements and to plan rehabilitation activities. It invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Secretary-General to initiate a UN system-wide review to assess the experience and capacity of organizations of the system in assisting refugees and in supporting affected countries.

In October, the UNHCR Executive Committee called on the High Commissioner to assure greater inter-agency co-operation in responding to the needs of refugees and in seeking to complement the Office's humanitarian endeavours with development initiatives from specialized agencies. It called on member Governments to support those efforts in the governing bodies of those agencies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/78.

Refugees, displaced persons and returnees

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling decision 90/22 adopted on 22 June 1990 by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its thirty-seventh session,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/137 of 15 December 1989, in which, inter alia, the Assembly invited the agencies of the United Nations system, as well as all other relevant international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to establish as soon as possible specific mechanisms of co-operation to assure an agreed division of responsibilities and arrangements for the financing of operational activities relating to refugees, while preserving the mandate of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Noting the substantial increase in the number of refugees, displaced persons and returnees and their impact on the development prospects of the often fragile economic infrastructure of the countries concerned,

Realizing the immense human suffering occasioned by the phenomenon of mass population movements resulting from conflict, natural and man-made disasters and war,

Recognizing that relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development are part of the same continuum, and stressing that the impact of refugees and displaced persons on the development prospects of affected countries is frequently severe, multifaceted and requires a system-wide approach in order to ensure that the full spectrum of their needs is covered and that serving those needs should complement the development efforts of the affected countries,

Recognizing the primacy of the mandate of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in providing international protection and assistance to refugees and in seeking durable solutions to their problems, and commending the efforts being made by the Office in that regard,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to initiate a United Nations system-wide review to assess the experience and capacity of various organizations in the co-ordination of assistance to all refugees, displaced persons and returnees, and the full spectrum of their needs, in supporting the efforts of the affected countries;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General, on the basis of the system-wide review and within existing resources, to recommend ways of maximizing co-operation and co-ordination among the various organizations of the United Nations system in order to ensure an effective response by the United Nations system to the problems of refugees, displaced persons and returnees, keeping in mind the mandates of the United Nations organizations concerned;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on the results of the system-wide review and on the recommendations emanating therefrom to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/78

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/115), 24 July (meeting 17); 12-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.16); agenda item 9.

International instruments

As at 31 December 1990, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, P. 520] had been ratified or acceded to by 103 States and the 1967 Protocol to the Convention [YUN 1967, p. 769] had 104 States parties as a result of the 1990 accession of Belize to both instruments.

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees, the 1969 Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San Jose, Costa Rica, and the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees.

As at 31 December 1990, there were 37 States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416] and 15 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533].

UNHCR programme and finances

Programme policy

At its forty-first session (Geneva, 1-5 October) [A/45/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees reaffirmed the High Commissioner's central and basic role in international protection of refugees. It expressed concern that refugee protection was seriously jeopardized in many countries through expulsion, refoulement and threats to the security, dignity and well-being of refugees, and, noting the link between protection and resettlement, called on States to assist refugees in need of resettlement and on the international community to continue to share the burden of refugee assistance with countries of first asylum. The Committee expressed concern about the lack of adequate international protection for various groups of refugees, including a large number of Palestinians, and urged continued efforts within the UN system to address their needs.

Noting the widespread violations of the rights of refugee women, the Committee approved the UNHCR policy on refugee women and invited the Office to develop comprehensive guidelines to give effect to that policy. It urged States, relevant UN organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) dealing with refugees to ensure that the needs of refugee women were integrated into their programmes and activities, and to encourage refugee women to participate in the planning and implementation of assistance programmes.

Realizing that the problem of refugees in Africa had assumed alarming proportions, and that African countries, despite their limited resources, continued to host and provide assistance to millions of refugees, the Executive Committee called on the international community to provide adequate resources to enable the High Commissioner, in co-operation with other organizations, to discharge his mandate. The Committee recognized that substantial progress had been achieved in the implementation of the Comprehensive Plan of Action of the 1989 International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 707] and emphasized the need for continued efforts to ensure full implementation of all elements of the Plan. Concerning the repatriation of Cambodian refugees under the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict endorsed by the Security Council in September by resolution 668(1990), the Committee called on the High Commissioner to work with the Secretary-General to ensure that the financial and other requirements for repatriation and reintegration programmes were adequately and urgently addressed in UN overall planning. The Committee noted the valuable role of various assistance programmes of repatriation and integration within the context of the 1989 International Conference on Central American Refugees (CIREFCA) [YUN 1989, p. 709], and urged the High Commissioner to continue to support, through the CIREFCA Joint Support Unit, Governments in the region and to strengthen collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in implementing development projects for refugees and returnees.

The Committee endorsed the allocation under General Programmes of $340.9 million (including $10 million for the Emergency Fund) for 1990, and $345.6 million for 1991.

At its extraordinary session (Geneva, 28-30 May) [A/AC.96/747], the Executive Committee approved the revised target of General Programme activities for 1990 of $378.9 million and adopted the report of the Temporary Working Group on Programme, Budgetary, Administrative and Organizational Matters containing recommendations on the most effective use of UNHCR funds, bearing in mind the severe financial constraints imposed on the Office (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1990/260 of 17 July 1990, the Economic and Social Council transmitted the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees [A/45/12] to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth (1990) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/140 A.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its forty-first session, noting the statement made by the Officer-in-Charge of the Office of the High Commissioner on 15 November 1990, and having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees,

Recalling its resolutions 44/137 and 44/138 of 15 December 1989,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner, as well as the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's international protection function and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this primary and essential responsibility,

Noting with satisfaction that one hundred and seven States are now parties to the 1951 Convention and/or the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

Welcoming the valuable support extended by Governments to the Office of the High Commissioner in carrying out its humanitarian tasks,

Noting with concern that refugee protection continues to be seriously jeopardized in many States, including through expulsion, refoulement and other threats to the physical security, dignity and well-being of refugees,

Commending the Office of the High Commissioner for its efforts to continue to address the special problems and needs of refugee and displaced women and children, who in many cases are exposed to a variety of difficult situations affecting their physical and legal protection as well as their psychological and material well-being,

Emphasizing the need for States to assist, on as wide a basis as possible, the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner in its search for durable and timely solutions to the problems of refugees based on new approaches that meet the current size and characteristics of these problems and are built on respect for fundamental human rights and basic internationally agreed protection principles and concerns,

Aware of the need for the international community to continue to provide adequate resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution is in sight,

Commending those States which, despite severe economic and development problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner into their territories, and emphasizing the need to share the burden of these States to the maximum extent possible through international assistance, including development-oriented assistance,

Aware also that the application of the principle of international solidarity implies an improved sharing of responsibilities and arrangements between relevant agencies of the United Nations system and other concerned governmental and non-governmental organizations for the financing and implementation of related activities and that such activities need also include specific development assistance to avert new flows of refugees as well as to solve problems of refugees and returnees and areas hosting them,

Commending the Office of the High Commissioner and its staff for the dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, and paying tribute to those staff members who have endangered their lives in the course of their duties,

1. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the function of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide international protection and the need for States to co-operate fully with the Office in fulfilling this function, in particular by acceding to and fully and effectively implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments;

2. Recognizes the urgent need to put all issues related to refugees, asylum-seekers and other migratory flows firmly on the international political agenda, especially in view of the fortieth anniversary of the Office of the High Commissioner and the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, and in this connection welcomes initiatives to promote further awareness of and support for the Office, including accessions to this instrument;

3. Calls upon all States to refrain from taking measures that jeopardize the institution of asylum, in particular returning or expelling refugees and asylum-seekers contrary to fundamental prohibitions against these practices, and urges States to ensure proper determination procedures and to continue to give humane treatment and to grant asylum to refugees;

4. Condemns violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated by military or armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements, forced recruitment into armed forces and other forms of violence, and reiterates the conclusions on military and armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its thirty-eighth session;

5. Calls upon States to give high priority to the rights of refugee children and to their survival, protection and development as reflected in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and in the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s, adopted by the World Summit for Children in New York on 30 September 1990;

6. Endorses the High Commissioner's policy on refugee women, which provides for the integration of refugee women into all the programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner, as well as the conclusion on refugee women and international protection adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-first session;

7. Urges States, relevant agencies of the United Nations system and other international intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support the implementation of the policy on refugee women through their own efforts;

8. Recognizes the importance of attaining durable solutions to refugee problems and, in particular, the need to address in this process the root causes of refugee movements in order to avert new flows of refugees and to facilitate the solution of existing problems;

9. Underlines the concept of State responsibility particularly as it relates to the countries of origin, including addressing root causes and facilitating voluntary repatriation and the return of their nationals who are not refugees;

10. Urges all States to support the Office of the High Commissioner in its efforts to search for durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, which remain the most desirable solution to the problem of refugees, or, wherever appropriate, through integration into countries of asylum or through resettlement in third countries;

11. Welcomes the decision of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its extraordinary session in May 1990 to adopt the report of the Temporary Working Group established by the Executive Committee at its fortieth session, and calls upon all parties concerned to continue to implement the recommendations contained in that report;

12. Endorses the decisions on administrative and financial matters adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-first session, and notes with satisfaction the efforts under way to find an appropriate mechanism that will address the need of the High Commissioner to have a higher degree of flexibility to ensure funding of ongoing-needs under approved general programmes and of initial emergency needs under special programmes pending the receipt of contributions pledged;

13. Calls upon the High Commissioner to sustain his efforts in assuring greater inter-agency co-operation in responding to the needs of refugees and, in particular, in seeking to complement the humanitarian endeavours of the Office of the High Commissioner with development initiatives from specialized agencies so as to attain, in an effective and efficient manner, further and more concrete results towards achieving durable solutions, and calls upon the member Governments to support these efforts in the governing bodies of these agencies;

14. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/78 of 27 July 1990, in which, inter alia, the Council requested the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to initiate, with a view to recommending ways of maximizing co-operation and co-ordination among the various organizations of the United Nations system, a system-wide review to assess the experience and capacity of these organizations in the co-ordination of assistance to all refugees, displaced persons and returnees, and the full spectrum of their needs, in supporting the efforts of the affected countries, and to report on the results to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1991;

15. Endorses the conclusion on the note on international protection adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-first session, in which, in particular, the Executive Committee recognized the importance of human rights and humanitarian principles and recognized that the current size and characteristics of the refugee and asylum problem necessitate appropriate reassessment of international responses to the problem to date, with a view to developing comprehensive approaches to meet present realities, and at the same time noted the difference between refugees and persons seeking to migrate for economic and related reasons;

16. Also endorses, with these objectives in mind, the conclusion on solutions and protection adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-first session, in which the Executive Committee noted the establishment of the Working Group on Solutions and Protection, which will present a report to the Executive Committee at its forty-second session;

17. Further endorses the conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-first session on the implementation of the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees and on repatriation to Cambodia, welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General to designate the High Commissioner as his Special Representative to co-ordinate efforts with all parties concerned to promote the phased and orderly return of non-refugees in a manner that is fully compatible with the humanitarian mandate of his Office and under conditions of safety and dignity, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor closely the progress towards the implementation of these conclusions and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

18. Endorses the conclusions on the International Conference on Central American Refugees and on the situation of refugees in Africa, adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-first session, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner and all other parties concerned to continue their efforts in implementing these conclusions;

19. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries which, despite limited resources, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers on a permanent or temporary basis;

20. Urges the international community, including non-governmental organizations, in accordance with the principle of international solidarity and in the spirit of burden-sharing, to continue to assist the countries referred to in paragraph 19 above and the High Commissioner in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden that the care for refugees and asylum-seekers represents;

21. Calls upon all Governments to contribute to the High Commissioner's programmes and, taking into account the need to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors, to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional and timely income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector in order to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner are met.

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/763) without vote, 28 November (meeting 55); 44-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.64), orally revised; agenda item 107.

Financial and administrative questions

The financial limitations, which UNHCR faced in 1989, continued to a greater extent in 1990 and did not allow the Office to provide the level of assistance that it otherwise would have. UNHCR total expenditure in 1990 amounted to $544 million which, compared to 1989, represented a decrease of $26.3 million. Some $331.3 million was spent under General Programmes and $212.7 million under Special Programmes and other trust funds. Total contributions for 1990 amounted to $567.3 million.

Special appeals were made in 1990 to respond to new situations, such as the two-way, voluntary repatriation operation between Angola and Zaire, the massive exodus of Liberians into neighbouring countries, the emergency assistance required in Sri Lanka, the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees and the repatriation operation from Honduras and Costa Rica to Nicaragua.

The Executive Committee in 1989 had noted the budget for 1990 General Programmes of $414.4 million and imposed a ceiling on obligations of $190 million for the first six months of the year. In view of that restriction, the working budget for the 1990 General Programmes was adjusted to $340 million.

Revised estimates for 1990 General Programmes were submitted to the extraordinary session of the Executive Committee in May [A/AC.96/747]. The Executive Committee approved the revised target of $340.9 million (including $10 million for the Emergency Fund), which, together with the carry-over of $38 million from 1989, amounted to $378.9 million.

In October, the Executive Committee approved the country and area programmes and the overall allocations for 1991 General Programmes amounting to $345.6 million (including $10 million for the Emergency Fund).

Contributions

Contributions to UNHCR assistance programmes in cash and kind in 1990 totalled $567.3 million, compared to $507.3 million in 1989. Seventy-five Governments made contributions totalling $498.4 million, while international and non-governmental organizations contributed some $68 million. Donor support continued to be very strong and several donors increased their total contributions by up to 60 per cent in absolute terms, with an increase of 12 per cent on the total contributions figure of $507 million in 1989.

Government pledges of $141 million were announced at the 20 November 1990 meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the 1991 Programme of UNHCR.

In May, the Executive Committee, expressing concern about the serious financial problems facing UNHCR, called on the international community and UNHCR to join in common efforts to mobilize resources.

In October, it called on donors to consider urgently additional contributions to ensure timely and full funding of activities programmed for 1990 to allow UNHCR the flexibility to allocate funds according to the most pressing needs. It urged early announcement of 1991 contributions and called on non-contributing Governments to provide financial support to offset the shortfall in funds in relation to assessed needs. The Committee also called on Governments to provide the financial resources that would enable UNHCR to pursue new ways of broadening its income base. It requested the High Commissioner to continue negotiations for an increase of the UN regular budget participation in the administrative costs of UNHCR for 1992-1993. The Executive Committee noted the High Commissioner's proposal to establish a special contingency account. It recognized his need for a higher degree of flexibility to ensure funding of ongoing needs and of initial emergency needs pending the receipt of contributions pledged. Accordingly, it requested him to seek the advice of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on proposals for appropriate mechanisms that would address that need and to submit a proposal to the Sub-Committee on Administrative and Financial Matters for endorsement.

The audited financial statements of the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 1989 showed total expenditures of $570.3 million and income of $533.6 million [A/45/5/Add.5]. The Board of Auditors recommended that UNHCR explore the possibility of obtaining guaranteed income as a complement to voluntary contributions, which were becoming unpredictable.

ACABQ in an October report [A/45/570], recommended that the purpose of funds channelled through UNHCR to refugee programmes carried out by third parties should be clearly reflected in financial documents and the purpose should be consistent with UNHCR's policies and objectives.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/235 of 21 December, accepted the financial report and audited financial statements of UNHCR and endorsed the observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ.

Administrative and personnel issues

The UNHCR Executive Committee approved the transfer in 1991 of up to $300,000 from the General Programme Reserve to the Fund for Field Staff Housing and Basic Amenities. It urged the Office to pursue outstanding issues related to the recommendations of the Temporary Working Group and to report thereon to the Sub-Committee on Administrative and Financial Matters.

The Executive Committee supported the High Commissioner's action to phase reductions in staffing levels through retrenchment and attrition, vacancy management, redeployment within UNHCR and transfer to other UN agencies, and requested the Secretary-General to assist the High Commissioner in implementing that decision. It authorized the High Commissioner to meet the costs relating to General Programmes of the staff retrenchment exercise (estimated at between $2.5 million and $2.9 million) from the 1990-1991 Programme Reserve, on the understanding that such costs would be absorbed within the approved allocations for support costs.

Enlargement of Executive Committee

On 17 May 1990 [E/1990/89], the Philippines requested that the Economic and Social Council discuss, under the agenda item on the report of the High Commissioner, the membership of the UNHCR Executive Committee. The Philippines pointed to the need to enlarge the membership to include more members from South-East Asian countries, which, like the Philippines, continued to host large numbers of Indo-Chinese refugees.

Chapter XVI

International drug control

In 1990, the United Nations continued to address the problem of the rising trend in drug abuse and the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotics and psychotropic substances. During the year, the Organization took major steps to enhance its drug control activities.

In February, the General Assembly held its seventeenth special session, which was devoted to international co-operation relating to various drug issues. It adopted a Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

The General Assembly in 1990 stated its conviction that an intensification of international co-operation and concerted action among States was the fundamental basis for confronting the problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, and that the extraordinary high levels of illicit consumption, cultivation and production of narcotic drugs and of illicit drug trafficking necessitated a more comprehensive approach to international co-operation in drug abuse control and counter-offensives at the national, regional and international levels. The Assembly also proclaimed the period from 1991 to the year 2000 as the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse.

In May, the Secretary-General presented the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, an agenda aiming at the full implementation of all existing drug abuse control mandates of every entity of the United Nations system, identifying concrete activities that each agency should undertake. To enhance UN effectiveness in combating the scourge of illegal drugs, the General Assembly called for the creation of a United Nations International Drug Control Programme to be based in Vienna, beginning on 1 January 1991.

The International Narcotics Control Board continued to oversee the implementation of three major UN drug control conventions. In its annual report, it analysed drug abuse trends and control efforts so that Governments continued to be aware of existing and potentially dangerous situations. On 11 November, the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances entered into force. The General Assembly welcomed the entry into force of the Convention and urged States that had not done so to proceed as soon as possible to ratify or accede to the Convention.

The UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs-the Organization's main policy-making body on drug control matters-held its eleventh special session and adopted a number of resolutions on various drug control issues.

World drug situation

In an October report [A/45/542], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 34/177 [YUN 1979, p. 933], described international co-operation in drug abuse control and action to combat abuse and illicit trafficking.

The Secretary-General stated that drug abuse and its attendant illicit production, supply and trafficking were now recognized by the international community as a major problem. It was accepted that the drug problem must be dealt with at all levels-locally, regionally, nationally and internationally-and the UN system had a special role to play in addressing many aspects of the problem and in providing the forum for addressing new solutions. The core UN drug units located in Vienna were fully committed to activities that addressed the problem in all its aspects: control of supply, prevention and reduction of demand, elimination of illicit trafficking and treatment and rehabilitation. Although the United Nations had been active in that area for many years and had gained much valuable experience, to make a real impact on the problem much more needed to be done, the Secretary-General said.

Co-ordination of the activities of the three drug units in Vienna took place on an informal day-to-day basis in response to perceived needs or particular circumstances as they arose. Of special note was the co-ordinated and active participation of the three units in the preparations for and during the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat (London, 9-11 April) [A/45/262].

Co-ordination was also carried out between the drug units and the other programmes at the UN

Office at Vienna, as in the case of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) on which that Office was working closely with the World Health Organization (WHO).

The UN System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control (seep. 870) constituted a vital new instrument, the Secretary-General said, to strengthen co-ordination of the combined drug control efforts of the UN system, promote complementarity and reduce the dangers of overlap or duplication. Progress made by specialized agencies and UN bodies was also outlined.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/149.

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the illicit demand for, production of and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances continue to pose a serious threat to all mankind, to affect adversely the socio-economic and political structures of affected societies and to endanger the stability, national security and sovereignty of States,

A/armed by the growing connection between drug trafficking and terrorism,

Reaffirming the principle of the shared responsibility of the international community in combating drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Reaffirming also the importance of international co-operation in the immediate implementation of all mandates and courses of action contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and the Global Programme of Action, adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session,

Taking note with interest of the reports of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the work of the Intergovernmental Expert Group to study the Economic and Social Consequences of Illicit Traffic in Drugs, convened under General Assembly resolution 44/142 of 15 December 1989, on the impact of the social and economic consequences of drug-money transfers and conversion, which have an adverse effect on national economic systems,

Having in mind that the Intergovernmental Expert Group proposed a framework for a future in-depth study on the economic and social consequences of illicit traffic in drugs, for which reason the issue must be duly followed up,

Keeping in mind that the Secretary-General has taken note of the recommendations addressed to him by the Intergovernmental Expert Group, which will be considered in the context of the proposed programme of drug-control activities for the biennium 1992-1993,

Recognizing that the consideration by the Intergovernmental Expert Group of the financial aspects of its mandate was more extensive than that of the economic and social aspects, and that these latter areas require further and more detailed analysis,

Welcoming the efforts made by those countries which produce narcotic drugs for scientific, medicinal and therapeutic uses to prevent the channelling of such substances to illicit markets and to maintain production at a level consistent with licit demands,

Reiterating that the transit routes used by drug traffickers change constantly and that an ever-growing number of countries in all regions of the world, and even entire regions, are particularly vulnerable to illicit transit traffic on account, inter alia, of their geographical location,

Noting with regret that the work of the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board and of the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat is impeded by lack of human and financial resources and affirming that this problem must be given due consideration in the context of the restructuring of the United Nations drug control system,

Reiterating its condemnation of criminal activities that involve children in the use, production and illicit distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and appealing to the competent international agencies and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to assign priority to measures designed to address this problem,

Reaffirming that the Declaration adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, the Declaration of the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990, and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control and the Global Programme of Action, together with the international drug control treaties, provide a comprehensive framework for international co-operation in drug control,

Noting that in the Global Programme of Action the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control is invited to elaborate for consideration by States a sub-regional strategy covering all aspects of drug abuse control and concentrating on the most affected areas where the problems are most complex and grave,

Noting with satisfaction that the regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies and the Sub-Commission on Illicit Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East are sources of very useful recommendations for action at the regional level oriented towards solving specific problems of the various regions,

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking

1. Strongly condemns the crime of drug trafficking in all its forms and urges continued commitment and effective international action to combat it, in keeping with the principle of shared responsibility and with full respect for national sovereignty and the cultural identity of States;

2. Urges Governments and organizations to adhere to the principles set forth in the Declaration adopted by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the Political Declaration adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, and to implement the recommendations and mandates contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control and in the Global Programme of Action;

3. Also urges the immediate implementation of the mandates and recommendations contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control and the Global Programme of Action, particularly those pertaining to, inter alia, demand reduction, treatment and social rehabilitation of drug addicts, eradication and substitution of illicit crops, integrated rural development, establishment of complementary employment, health, housing and education programmes, expanded opportunities for trade and investment, including international co-operation to facilitate the marketing of substitute crops, elimination of illicit trafficking, interdiction, supervision and control of precursors and essential chemicals, money-laundering and problems of licit producers;

4. Welcomes the establishment under the Commission on Narcotic Drugs of a world-wide network of regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies, which, together with the Sub-Commission on Illicit Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, constitute co-operation mechanisms against illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and the convening in Moscow from 19 to 23 November 1990 of the First Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, European Region;

5. Emphasizes the connection between the illicit production and supply of, demand for, sale of and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the economic, social and cultural conditions of the countries affected and that solutions to these problems must take into account the differences and diversity of the problem in each country;

6. Culls upon the international community to provide increased international economic and technical co-operation to Governments, at their request, in support of programmes for the substitution of illicit crops by means of integrated rural development programmes, respecting fully the jurisdiction and sovereignty of countries and the cultural traditions of peoples;

7. Considers that a system should be established to identify the methods and routes used for transit traffic of illicit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in order to enhance the interdiction capability of States along such routes;

8. Encourages all countries to take action to prevent the illicit arms trade by which weapons are provided to drug traffickers;

9. Takes note of the recommendations and conclusions of the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, notes all efforts designed to reduce and prevent the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and calls upon the United Nations and other relevant international organizations to devote greater attention to this aspect of the drug problem;

10. Urges Member States to increase substantially their voluntary contributions to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to enable it to expand further its programmes;

11. Welcomes the initiatives of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control aimed at promoting and supporting subregional programmes as envisaged by the Global Programme of Action and urges the Governments concerned to increase their co-operation in support of such subregional strategies;

12. Strongly recommends that the necessary resources from within the regular budget and from extrabudgetary sources be made available for the implementation of the various activities for drug abuse control, and particularly for the implementation of the mandates and courses of action contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control and the Global Programme of Action;

13. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to study the mandates and recommendations contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Global Programme of Action and other relevant documents, with a view to establishing a timetable for their implementation in the first five years of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse 1991-2000.

II

Economic and social consequences of illicit traffic in drugs and psychotropic substances

1. Requests the Secretary-General to issue the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group to Study the Economic and Social Consequences of Illicit Traffic in Drugs as a document of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly and to submit it to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs for consideration at its thirty-fifth session;

2. Invites the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to study the various recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group, in particular those relating to the proposed framework for a future in-depth study on the economic and social consequences of illicit traffic in drugs, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session through the Economic and Social Council;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the provisional and preliminary nature of the study carried out by the Intergovernmental Expert Group, to consider the possibility of convening a meeting of an expert group to conclude the analysis commenced pursuant to paragraph 9 (a) of resolution 44/142. and to give due consideration to any recommendation made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

4. Notes with interest the observation made by the Intergovernmental Expert Group that it is important for the United Nations to develop an integrated and unified information system to provide reliable data and information on the illicit drug trafficking chain, especially illicit production, manufacture, processing and consumption;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the measures to be adopted in implementation, in a timely manner, of the recommendations made by the Intergovernmental Expert Group, as well as the relevant recommendations made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "International action to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking".

General Assembly resolution 45/149

INCB Report

The International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) in 1990 analysed [E/INCB/1990/1] drug-abuse trends and control efforts by region, to keep Governments aware of existing and potential situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug-control treaties. A summary of the 1990 INCB report [E/1991/11] was also made available.

Africa

In 1990, INCB noted that all countries of the African continent were confronted, to one degree or another, with drug trafficking and abuse. The means of surveillance already in place had made progress possible, but it had remained tenuous in the face of the threatening way in which the situation continued to evolve. The Board regretted that 16 of the 52 African countries were not parties to any of the UN drug control conventions.

Grown clandestinely in many countries, cannabis was widely available in Africa. The most extensive cultivation continued to take place in Morocco. Seizure data showed that substantial quantities of cannabis of Moroccan origin continued to be smuggled into several European countries.

Heroin, originating principally in South-West Asia and destined for Europe and North America, continued to pass through Africa. Trafficking from the source countries was carried out by networks manned primarily by African nationals. Airports throughout the continent were increasingly used as stopover points for numerous couriers, who often held several passports or forged travel documents. Increased surveillance in West Africa caused traffickers to change their routes to countries previously not seriously affected; newly affected countries included Cameroon, Chad, the Congo, Gabon and Zaire in Central Africa and Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania in East Africa. Significant heroin seizures in Egypt showed that traffickers attempted to use that country as a new port of entry for heroin from South-East Asia.

The Board reported that cocaine trafficking had worsened, partly because of the recent establishment of commercial air links between some African countries (Angola, Côte d'Ivoire, Mozambique and Nigeria) and South America and also prompted by the networks already used to traffic heroin. The spread of cocaine throughout Africa was demonstrated by seizures made in all subregions of the continent.

Psychotropic substances continued to be diverted in millions of tablets to Africa during 1990. Substances most frequently seized continued to include methaqualone, secobarbital and other barbiturates, and amphetamines. Prevailing economic and social conditions and the attendant lack of health care systems had led to the development of street markets, in which a large number of those substances was available. Also, some countries did not have regulations requiring medical prescriptions for dispensing those substances. The Board said that the European and Asian manufacturing and exporting countries bore a large measure of the responsibility for the diversion of those substances and the subsequent peril for public health throughout Africa.

Americas

North America

Cannabis and its derivatives remained the primary drug of abuse in Canada with abundant supplies from both illicit foreign sources and domestic cultivation. Cocaine, originating in South America and entering the country either directly or through the United States, continued to constitute one of the most widely used drugs. The abuse of heroin was concentrated in major urban areas and was associated with the spread of AIDS. Diversion of licit pharmaceutical drugs remained a lesser although widespread problem. Substances most abused were ephedrine, pentazocine and methylphenidate; other drugs of abuse were LSD, methamphetamine, MDMA ("ecstasy") and phencyclidine ("PCP"). In 1990, Canada was in the second half of its five-year national drug strategy, "Action on Drug Abuse", which focused on community action, education and demand reduction activities. The Government investigated ways to trace and identify laundered drug money following a joint Canada-United States report which had found that hundreds of millions of dollars of such money flowed from the United States to Canada annually.

In the United States, drug abuse continued to be widespread. In many urban areas, drug-related violence had reached unprecedented levels, and attacking the problem was considered one of the highest national priorities. The socio-economic cost of drug abuse was estimated at more than $60 billion annually and intravenous drug abuse was a major source of new AIDS cases in the country.

Trafficking and abuse of cocaine were viewed as the most serious aspect of the drug problem; however, the widespread abuse of that drug, especially in the form of "crack", was decreasing. There was also a decline in the number of cocaine-related emergency hospital admissions as well as in cocaine-related deaths. Increased law enforcement and interdiction efforts apparently affected the availability of cocaine.

The abuse of cannabis remained at high levels, with supplies illicitly trafficked into the country or, increasingly, produced locally.

The Board noted that bumper crops in the "Golden Triangle" region of South-East Asia had resulted in ample supplies of heroin in the United States. The 50 per cent drop in the street price of the drug had led to a noticeable spread in its trafficking within the country. Heroin of South Asian origin accounted for up to one half of all heroin found in the United States, 30 per cent was believed to originate in Mexico, and Guatemala was becoming an increasingly important source of the drug.

Abuse of methamphetamine was a significant problem, especially in the western parts of the country and in the form of "ice". With the increasing interdiction efforts directed towards cocaine, there was concern that demand might increase for other stimulants illicitly manufactured in the country, such as methamphetamine and LSD.

The 1990 National Drug Control Strategy continued to stress user as well as trafficker accountability and recognized the important role of states and municipal authorities. The United States continued to co-operate with many countries on a bilateral basis as well as multilaterally, as in the case of the Declaration of Cartagena (see below). Of particular prominence was the joint action taken with a number of Governments which allowed the identification and freezing of several hundred million dollars of drug money traced to banks in the United States.

In Mexico, the Government's commitment to its comprehensive drug-control efforts was illustrated by the considerable increase in human and financial resources allocated to the campaign. Penalties for drug-related crimes were increased and longer sentences with no provision for parole were set for convicted government officials.

While cannabis abuse was common throughout Mexico, the level of abuse of cocaine and heroin appeared to be low. Most of the opium poppy and cannabis grown in the country was cultivated by small-scale farmers. In June, a nation-wide pre-planting season campaign was conducted, which resulted in the eradication of young crops and seedling beds. The authorities seized considerable amounts of cannabis, cocaine, opium, heroin and depressants. Mexican authorities seriously disrupted several drug trafficking organizations and arrested a number of well-known traffickers. The Government was actively engaged in increasing the level of co-operation with its neighbours as well as with other countries in the region.

South and Central America and the Caribbean

The INCB report noted that 1990 was a crucial year in the fight to suppress drug trafficking in the whole of Latin America. Following the example of the Andean countries in their struggle against criminal drug organizations, other South American Governments strengthened their opposition to traffickers by implementing their national legislation with renewed vigour and increasing national and international co-operation. The people of the Andean region had answered the challenge to democratic institutions posed by drug terrorists by reaffirming the values and principles of democracy. Cocaine seizures had been more numerous than in any previous year, and major traffickers were captured, jailed and in some instances extradited to face trial.

The Board took note of the efforts made and activities implemented by the Andean Parliament, which adopted the Cochabamba Declaration emphasizing the need for alternative economic possibilities for coca bush cultivators; the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission (CICAD) of the Organization of American States (OAS); and the Presidents of Bolivia, Colombia, Peru and the United States, whose meeting in February resulted in the Declaration of Cartagena, a plan of action including law enforcement, tighter control over precursors, money laundering and illicit trafficking and expanded demand reduction efforts.

The year's successes were, however, offset by unfavourable events. Cocaine production and coca bush cultivation increased steadily. The expansion of coca bush cultivation to remote zones of the Amazon posed further problems, not only for effective eradication programmes but also for the ecological equilibrium of that vital area. Easy availability of drugs led to greater domestic abuse among both upper and middle class youth; less affluent young drug abusers inhaled glue or solvents. The consumption of coca paste smoked in combination with cannabis, and of cocaine in the form of "crack", increased in the producing areas. A new trend was the alarming growth in the consumption of psychotropic substances, which were readily available at low prices.

The results achieved in Colombia's war against drug traffickers were impressive but also very costly for the country. Drug traffickers responded to the government campaign with increased violence, including the murder of judiciary personnel, acquisition of sophisticated weaponry and recruitment of mercenaries from around the world.

Because of their proximity to Colombia and the success of the enforcement operations there, both Brazil and Ecuador were at great risk. Ecuador was emerging as a crucial transit point for illicit traffic in both precursors and narcotic drugs. Colombian traffickers smuggled chemicals into Colombia from the licit market in Ecuador and also used Ecuadorian territory for the shipment of drugs to North America. In addition, Colombian traffickers were increasingly moving their operational centres to Brazil's Amazon region.

Coca bush cultivation continued over vast areas of Peru, INCB reported. Manual eradication programmes were suspended from February 1989 to March 1990 because of an escalation of violence and terrorism. The Government decided on a double strategy of strengthened control by patrolling national territory and seeking international investments to provide alternatives to coca production, in order to combat the twin problems of drug trafficking and terrorism.

The Bahamas, Trinidad and Tobago and the coastlines and numerous islands of the whole of the Caribbean continued to be used as trans-shipment points for cocaine and cannabis destined for North America and Europe. Cannabis cultivation continued on a relatively large scale in Jamaica. Significant quantities of cocaine were trafficked through Venezuela, where seizures of coca paste had increased considerably. In Central America, traffickers continued to expand their operations as a result of stricter controls and intensified enforcement actions in several South American countries. Panama, an important location for money-laundering activities and cocaine traffic from Colombia, signed an agreement with the United States aimed at improving co-operation. The level of money laundering appeared to have decreased. Drug traffickers, lured by banking secrecy, had gained a foothold in the banking industry of the Cayman Islands. The Board looked forward to the entry into force of a Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty between the Cayman Islands and the United States.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

Illicit opium production in South-East Asia, which had doubled in 1988/89 from the previous year's production to some 2,000 tonnes, was estimated to have remained around the same high levels during the 1989/90 growing season.

Traffickers significantly increased the movement of heroin across China's southern borders to Macao and Hong Kong; in March, a seizure of some 221 kilograms was made in a case involving traffickers of various nationalities in the region. Abuse of heroin in the southern border areas was spreading to some other parts of China and contributed to the spread of HIV infection there. Heroin traffic to Hong Kong moved through Thailand, and was increasingly transported overland via China. Substantial amounts of heroin and other drugs were trafficked onward to North America and Australia. Large cannabis shipments from the Philippines and Thailand were also detected in Hong Kong. The Board noted that the easy availability of heroin might reverse the gains previously made by the drug demand-reduction sector.

In Japan, methamphetamine abuse continued, with most of the drug being trafficked from neighbouring countries. The Board stated that the several-fold increase in cocaine seizures indicated an ominous development.

Opium and cannabis cultivation continued in the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Opium poppy was cultivated by the hill tribes that consumed opium; seizures outside the country indicated, however, that the amount of opium produced was in excess of domestic consumption. The Board expressed its concern that the easy availability of opiates, compounded by the apparent lack of control of psychotropic substances, might lead to serious abuse problems in the country.

The flow of opiates into Malaysia continued despite severe drug legislation and active enforcement. Heroin was the major abuse problem; the number of abusers was estimated at 100,000. The Government had shown an unwavering commitment to drug control, backing political will with resources.

ous highly publicized poppy eradication dropped drastically, from 16,000 hectares eradicated in 1987 to 86 in 1989 and 48.5 in the first half of 1990. The apparently unhindered production was a matter of great concern to the Board. Despite legislative and administrative actions taken by the Government, the surge in opiate availability in the last two years was being felt by the surrounding countries and beyond to other continents. The ample opiate supplies would inevitably have negative repercussions also on demand reduction and the spread of HIV infection, not only in Myanmar but also in neighbouring countries.

Opium production in Thailand in 1990 was estimated to be around the level of 1989 (some 30 tonnes). Heroin laboratories continued to be active in the country and Thailand's well-developed transportation system had made it a major conduit of opiates and cannabis trafficked out of the region. The Board stated that it looked forward to the entry into force of a proposed but yet to be enacted Suppression Measures against Drug Offenders Bill in the country. The major problem of heroin abuse in Bangkok had been compounded by the associated rapid spread of the HIV infection. It was encouraging, however, that the number of newly registered abusers had been decreasing and the average age of the abuser population was increasing.

South Asia

Under the aegis of the South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation, legal experts were harmonizing drug laws for a convention to provide a framework for mutually supportive anti-drug efforts in member countries.

Drug abuse in Bangladesh, with some 50,000 abusers estimated in Dhaka, was on the rise, with increased transit traffic in heroin and cannabis. The country enacted legislation in 1990 providing very stringent sanctions, including examination of bank accounts and tax files of suspects, and established a National Narcotics Control Board.

In India, heroin and cannabis resin from the Near and Middle East moving through the country slackened. Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and New Delhi, however, the trafficking exit points from the country, witnessed a higher incidence of heroin abuse by youth. Seizure data showed that substantial methaqualone traffic to southern African countries continued, as did clandestine manufacturing within India. Opium seizures in states licensed to produce opium for licit purposes suggested that there was some diversion from licit cultivation. Eradication of illicit poppy cultivation was carried out in the northeastern and north-western parts of the country. Similar action was taken against increased cannabis cultivation. Law enforcement in the north-east was stepped up as trafficking of heroin and cannabis to Bangladesh and small amounts of heroin from Myanmar were detected.

In Nepal, with an estimated 20,000 drug abusers, cannabis and cannabis resin continued to be produced and trafficked to India. Other drugs available for abuse in the country included heroin and cocaine.

Sri Lanka continued to serve as a transit country for heroin from India to the West. There were an estimated 30,000 to 40,000 drug abusers in the country, the main drugs of abuse being heroin and cannabis.

Near and Middle East

INCB stated that national policies were evolving with the changing politics in the region. The new perspectives might have far-reaching implications for the production and trafficking of opiates and cannabis resin, which continued to be seized in large quantities throughout the Near and Middle East. Psychotropic substances were being trafficked into the region. The Board said that subregional co-operation among countries in which the bulk of illicit drugs was produced and trafficked was imperative to achieve significant progress.

In Afghanistan, opium production and cannabis cultivation in 1989 had markedly increased; poppy was cultivated in the provinces along the Pakistani border where heroin laboratories also operated. The political situation, with various conflicting tribal groups, coupled with easy availability of sophisticated weaponry, facilitated increased drug production and trafficking. The Government was co-ordinating at the highest level the campaign against illicit supply and demand of drugs and expressed its willingness to co-operate with all countries within and outside the region.

In Iran, where all trafficking in drugs was prohibited, the Government strictly enforced its ban on opium poppy cultivation; traffickers possessing more than 30 grams of heroin or 5 kilograms of opium faced the death penalty and the confiscation of all their property. Law enforcement activities across its eastern borders and seizures of opium, heroin, cannabis and opioid drugs continued; almost 30 tonnes of opium were seized. Nevertheless, opium and heroin, mainly from Pakistan and Afghanistan, continued to be smuggled into and through Iran. Iran signed agreements with Turkey and Pakistan to develop bilateral co-operation. During a mission to the country in September, the Board was informed that Iran would welcome increased co-operation with neighbouring States and assistance from the United Nations to strengthen drug enforcement efforts.

Illicit opium poppy and cannabis cultivation continued in Lebanon, as did heroin production. Drugs from Lebanon were trafficked to countries within the region, especially Egypt, and to Europe and North America. The Board noted that the spread of drug abuse within Lebanon and the region would be difficult to contain if the easy availability of drugs in such large quantities continued.

In 1990, a mission of the Board visited Pakistan. Illicit poppy cultivation existed mainly in the tribal areas, with heroin laboratories located mainly along the Afghan border. Despite a ban on poppy cultivation and anti-poppy cultivation campaigns, the amount of opiates still being produced in and trafficked out of the country indicated the need for a long-term integrated approach, with a clear commitment by the Government to extend project activities in conjunction with enforcing the poppy ban. Of the estimated 2.5 million drug abusers in the country, over 1 million were reported to abuse heroin, mainly those in the younger age groups. The Board was of the opinion that a concerted approach between both federal and provincial departments was called for, not only in treatment and rehabilitation, but also for more effective law enforcement arrangements.

Due to effective control of licit production of poppy straw, no opium was produced in Turkey. The country was on the overland "Balkan route" over which heroin was trafficked from the Near and Middle East to Europe; more than a third of drugs seized in Turkey were from trucks carrying goods to Europe.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/33.

Reduction of demand and prevention of drug consumption among young persons in the Near and Middle East

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 43/121 of 8 December 1988 on the use of children in the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and rehabilitation of drug-addicted minors, in which the General Assembly called for, inter alia, the adoption of various urgent measures and national and international programmes to protect children from the illicit consumption of drugs and from involvement in illicit production and distribution,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/25 of 20 November 1989 and contained in the annex thereto, and other relevant international standards and norms concerning the protection of the rights and well-being of young persons,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to devise, within such regular or extrabudgetary resources as may become available, comprehensive policies, programmes and strategies to prevent and reduce the abuse of drugs by children:

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to design model programmes and manuals for the prevention of drug abuse among children and adolescents in the Near and Middle East;

3. Invites interested Member States to provide financial support and relevant organizations to collaborate closely with the Secretary-General in this activity.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/33

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/67) without vote, 3 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1990/24); agenda item 6.

Europe

INCB reported that current political and economic changes in several Central and Eastern European countries resulted in a substantial increase in the movement of people, goods, services and capital within and outside Europe, and could make States that had generally not yet experienced major drug-related problems more vulnerable to abuse and illicit traffic. Governments of those countries had repeatedly stressed their concern over such emerging risks at international meetings. In that context, the Board welcomed the newly established participation of several States from Central and Eastern Europe in the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and other international co-operation activities.

Cocaine, mostly refined in clandestine laboratories in South America (and mainly Colombia), was being trafficked into Europe in ever-increasing quantities; however, a few clandestine laboratories refining coca paste into cocaine had been detected in western Mediterranean countries, INCB said. Implementation of legislation in countries of the Americas restricting the availability of precursors might result in the establishment in Europe of more clandestine laboratories. The Board expressed its concern at reports that exports to South America of precursors, which were produced industrially in most European countries, were increasing sharply. No significant spread of the abuse of "crack" appeared to have taken place in Europe, while cocaine abuse seemed to be spreading in most European countries.

The amount of heroin seized in Europe in 1989 had again increased over the previous year but the number of seizures and persons implicated had decreased. With successful enforcement activities in European airports, traffic routes had changed and traffickers increasingly chose to transport larger quantities of heroin in road vehicles. Two thirds of the heroin seized was trafficked via the "Balkan route". At a meeting held in Rome in March 1990, Ministers of Interior from 10 European countries most affected by heroin trafficking along that route decided to strengthen regional co-operation. Traffic routes were expected to change again as a result of closer links between Eastern and Western Europe; a sharp increase in the number of seizures of heroin transiting through Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Romania had been noticed since 1988.

Trafficking in and abuse of cannabis continued to be widespread, although law enforcement agencies had accorded cannabis lower priority than efforts against cocaine and heroin trafficking. Amphetamine abuse, widespread throughout the Scandinavian countries, had been increasingly observed in the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom. The recent discovery of clandestine manufacture of MDMA ("ecstasy") in several European countries indicated a dangerous new trend in the abuse of stimulants.

The Board noted positive trends in the Nordic countries, where the average age of drug abusers had risen and young people's interest in drugs was declining. New legislation to fight drug abuse was enacted or old legislation amended in Austria, France and Italy. In the Federal Republic of Germany, a national drug conference in 1990 adopted a plan to combat drug abuse. In the Netherlands, indicators such as the decline in the number of drug-related deaths revealed a positive trend. The Board noted, however, that the country's drug policies had led to an easy availability of cannabis as well as the influx into the Netherlands of drug abusers from other countries. In Poland, where drug abusers had become the main carriers of the HIV infection, authorities were concerned at their country's emergence as a manufacturing point for amphetamines trafficked to Western and Northern Europe. In Spain, 65 per cent of AIDS cases were reported to result from intravenous drug abuse. In the USSR, the number of drug abusers, estimated at around 140,000, had almost doubled during the last five years, and drug-related crimes accounted for 1.5 per cent of all crimes committed in the country. Main drugs of abuse were cannabis, some opiates and medically prescribed drugs obtained from local sources. International traffickers did not appear to have been able to make well-established contacts inside the country, but INCB noted that the situation might change if the rouble became fully convertible. In the United Kingdom, a new national campaign was launched which encompassed three regional campaigns focusing on local problems. Enforcement operations had succeeded in making heroin less available, but abusers had turned to other substances, mainly diverted from the retail trade in April 1990. The United Kingdom convened the first World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat (see p. 867).

Oceania

In Australia, multi-kilogram heroin seizures at airports reflected the abundant 1990 South-East Asian opium crop. Cannabis plantations and cocaine smuggling attempts were again detected, and amphetamine and ephedrine abuse continued. The country's National Campaign against Drug Abuse, initiated in 1985, was extended to 1991.

The Board noted that New Zealand was being used as a trans-shipment point in drug trafficking; in February, United States authorities seized 3,357 kilograms of cannabis smuggled from Thailand via New Zealand. New Zealand hosted seminars for countries in the South Pacific region on drug enforcement measures and launched an initiative to establish a regional Pacific data base to improve co-operation among enforcement agencies.

Seventeenth special session of General Assembly

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/16 [YUN 1989, p. 724], by which it decided to convene a special session to consider as a matter of urgency the question of international co-operation against the production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs, with a view to expanding the scope and increasing the effectiveness of such co-operation, the seventeenth special session took place in New York from 20 to 23 February. The special session concluded with the adoption, on the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Seventeenth Special Session, of the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action on international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (see p. 857).

In other action, the Assembly approved the report of the Credentials Committee (resolution S-17/1). With regard to procedural matters, the Assembly adopted the agenda and allocated the agenda items (decision S-17/23); appointed members of the Credentials Committee (decision S-17/11); elected the President of the forty-fourth session of the Assembly to serve in the same capacity at the seventeenth special session (decision S-17/12); elected the Chairmen of the Main Committees (decision S-17/13); elected the Vice-Presidents of the Assembly (decision S-17/14); and elected the officers of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Seventeenth Special Session (decision S-17/15).

By decision S-17/21, the Assembly endorsed the report of the Preparatory Committee of the Whole for the Seventeenth Special Session and the recommendations contained therein [A/S-17/4].

The Preparatory Committee had held its first session in 1989 (6-7 December) and its second session from 12 to 14 February 1990 in New York. At those sessions, the Preparatory Committee adopted recommendations and decisions relating to the opening and duration of the special session, attendance, officers, adoption of the agenda and preparations for the special session.

By decision S-17/22, the Assembly decided to hear the observers of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Holy See, the Republic of Korea and Switzerland during the debate in plenary.

By a 16 February letter [A/S-17/6] addressed to the Secretary-General, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden requested that a paper concerning Nordic regional co-operation on narcotic drugs be included as an official document of the seventeenth special session. By a 20 February letter [A/S-17/8] to the Secretary-General, Bolivia, Colombia, Peru and the United States requested that the 15 February 1990 Declaration of Cartagena on co-operation with respect to narcotic drugs be circulated as a document of the special session.

Addressing the special session, the Assembly President (Joseph Nanven Garba (Nigeria)) said that drug abuse world wide, with its deleterious effects, was an immense problem which affected everybody and posed an increasing threat to international peace and security. In spite of the UN treaties and conventions on narcotic drugs already in place, such as the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382] and its Protocol of 1972 [YUN 1972, p. 397], the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380] and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690], the global problem persisted. It was imperative to pursue a comprehensive campaign against drug abuse in all its aspects, concentrating not only on the eradication of supply and the suppression of illicit trafficking but also on prevention and reduction of demand. There was ground for optimism that recent world political events had given the opportunity so badly needed to tackle the war against drug abuse with real vigour and on a scale commensurate with the size of the problem.

In his statement to the special session, the Secretary-General stated that the problem of drug abuse was by its nature truly international and on the top of the list of priorities requiring urgent attention from the international community. It was vitally important to strengthen the pivotal role of the United Nations in that regard, because it served no single country and played a neutral role. The international struggle against illicit drugs amounted to a war that must be fought with the kind of resources wars commanded. Extrabudgetary resources greatly in excess of what was currently available were needed.

Preparations

On 20 February, the General Assembly established the Ad Hoc Committee of the Seventeenth Special Session.

The Ad Hoc Committee held four meetings between 20 and 23 February [A/S-17/11] to hear representatives of UN bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and to consider the adoption of a political declaration and a global programme of action and the follow-up measures for the implementation of decisions to be adopted by the special session. It had before it a draft political declaration [A/S-17/AC.1/L.1] and a draft global programme of action [A/S-17/AC.1/L.2].

On 23 February, the Committee adopted its report and recommended that the Assembly adopt a draft resolution to which were annexed the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action on international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 23 February, the General Assembly adopted resolution S-17/2.

Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, devoted to the question of international co-operation against illicit production, supply demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly

Adopts the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action on international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Political Declaration

We, the States Members of the United Nations,

Assembled at the seventeenth special session of the General Assembly to consider the question of international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Deeply alarmed by the magnitude of the rising trend in the illicit demand, production, supply, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which are a grave and persistent threat to the health and well-being of mankind, the stability of nations, the political, economic, social and cultural structures of all societies and the lives and dignity of millions of human beings, most especially of young people,

Aware of the dangers posed for all countries alike by the illicit cultivation, production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and aware also of the need for a comprehensive approach in combating them,

Conscious that the extraordinarily high levels of illicit consumption, cultivation and production of narcotic drugs and of illicit drug trafficking necessitate a more comprehensive approach to international co-operation in drug abuse control and counter-offensives at the national, regional and international levels,

Reaffirming our determination to combat the scourge of drug abuse and illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in strict conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law, in particular respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of States and non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations, and the provisions of the international drug control conventions,

Reaffirming also the provisions set forth in the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and in that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances adopted in 1988.

Reaffirming further the principle of shared responsibility in combating drug abuse and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recognizing the links between the illicit demand, consumption, production, supply, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the economic, social and cultural conditions in the countries affected by them,

Deeply concerned about the violence and corruption generated by the illicit demand, production, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the high human, political, economic and social costs of drug abuse and of the fight against the drug problem, entailing the diversion of scarce resources from other national priorities, which in the case of developing countries includes development activities,

Conscious that international co-operation for the development of the developing countries should be strengthened, allowing all countries to participate more fully in an effective fight against the drug problem,

Recognizing the links between drug abuse and a wide range of adverse health consequences, including the transmission of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection and the spread of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS),

Recognizing also that illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances is a criminal activity and that its suppression requires a higher priority and concerted action at the national, regional and international levels by all States, including rapid ratification of and accession to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances,

Noting that the large financial profits derived from illicit drug trafficking and related criminal activities enable transnational criminal organizations to penetrate, contaminate and corrupt the structure of Governments, legitimate commercial activities and society at all levels, thereby vitiating economic and social development, distorting the process of law and undermining the foundations of States,

Recognizing that a growing number of countries, in particular developing countries, are affected by illicit transit trafficking in narcotic drugs because of their geographical location or economic situation, which imposes serious burdens on the drug law enforcement machinery of those countries and forces diversion of scarce resources from pressing developmental needs and other national priorities,

Convinced that the fight against illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances has to comprise effective measures aimed, inter alia, at eliminating illicit consumption, cultivation and production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; preventing the diversion from legitimate uses of precursor chemicals, specific substances, materials and equipment frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; and preventing the use of the banking system and other financial institutions for the laundering of proceeds derived from illicit drug trafficking by making such activities criminal offences,

Alarmed at the growing link between illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and terrorist activities, which is aggravated by insufficient control of commerce in arms and by illicit or covert arms transfers, as well as by illegal activities of mercenaries,

Mindful of the results already achieved by the United Nations in the field of drug abuse control, including the Declaration and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary nary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, adopted at the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, as well as the United Nations Convention against Illicit Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, Convinced that action against drug abuse and illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances should, as a shared responsibility, be accorded a higher priority by the international community and convinced also that the United Nations should be the main focus for concerted action and should play an enhanced role in that field,

Considering that the goals of intensified international co-operation and increased efforts of States in that direction would be served by the proclamation of a United Nations decade against drug abuse,

Agree on the following:

1. We resolve to protect mankind from the scourge of drug abuse and illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

2. We affirm that the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances should be accorded high priority by Governments and by all relevant regional and international organizations;

3. We are determined to take the necessary actions to combat the drug problem, taking into account the fundamental responsibility resting with each State in that regard;

4. We shall expand the scope and increase the effectiveness of international co-operation against illicit demand, production, supply, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, with strict respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the principle of non-interference in their internal affairs;

5. We shall increase our efforts and resources in order to intensify international co-operation and concerted action, based upon the principle of shared responsibility, including the necessary co-operation and assistance to affected States, when requested, in the economic, health, social, judicial and law enforcement sectors in order to strengthen the capabilities of States to deal with the problem in all its aspects;

6. We shall pursue strategies that are comprehensive and multidisciplinary in scope and that comprise measures to eliminate illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, cultivation of illicit crops and illicit drug trafficking, to prevent the misuse of the financial and banking systems and to promote effective treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration;

7. We commend the efforts made by some States in the fight against illicit drug production, trafficking and consumption and urge that current levels of international co-operation be increased and strengthened;

8. We condemn the crime of illicit drug trafficking in all its forms and reaffirm our political commitment to concerted international action;

9. We are convinced that the international fight against illicit drug trafficking should be pursued in full conformity with the principles of non-interference in internal affairs and respect for the territorial integrity of States and free from unrelated political motivations;

10. We shall continue our national efforts in the simultaneous fight on all levels against the phenomenon of illicit drug trafficking, with special emphasis on the need for stronger measures to eliminate illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

11. We shall reinforce our policies aiming at the prevention, reduction and elimination of illicit demand;

12. We shall intensify our efforts in the fields of health, education and public information, including well-targeted campaigns involving the relevant United Nations specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, as an essential measure to reduce illicit demand;

13. We urge the international community to increase economic and technical co-operation to developing countries and to facilitate trade flows in support of viable alternative income schemes, such as crop-substitution programmes, by means of integrated rural development strategies, including facilitation of appropriate efficient marketing and sound economic policies, so as to eliminate illicit cultivation and production of narcotic drugs;

14. We call for international co-operation to assist and support transit countries, in particular developing transit-countries, by implementing appropriate programmes of technical and financial assistance through competent international or regional organizations for the purpose of expanding and strengthening the infrastructure needed for effective control and prevention of illicit drug trafficking;

15. We stress the need for effective action to prevent the diversion for illicit purposes of precursors and other chemicals, materials and equipment frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

16. We urge the international community to strengthen international co-operation under mutually agreed conditions through bilateral, regional and multilateral mechanisms;

17. We stress that all initiatives undertaken within the United Nations in the field of international drug abuse control shall take into consideration the competence of its organs as defined in the Charter of the United Nations;

18. We shall further develop and utilize, to the maximum extent, existing bilateral and other international instruments or arrangements for enhancing international legal and law enforcement co-operation;

19. We reaffirm the principles set forth in the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and undertake to apply, as appropriate, the recommendations of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control;

20. We urge States to ratify or accede to the United Nations conventions in the field of drug abuse control and illicit trafficking and, to the extent they are able to do so, to apply provisionally the terms of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances;

21. We commend the important work carried out by the organizations of the United Nations system in the field of international drug abuse control with regard to combating the abuse and production of and trafficking in illicit drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as the work done in other multilateral forums;

22. We commend also the positive action undertaken by the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, the International Narcotics Control Board and its secretariat, and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control;

23. We call upon the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to give higher priority in their programmes of work, in accordance with existing procedures, to international measures to combat illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

24. We emphasize the importance of the development and implementation of a United Nations system-wide action plan aimed at the fulfilment of all existing mandates for drug abuse control and the implementation of subsequent decisions of intergovernmental bodies throughout the United Nations system;

25. We shall strengthen and enhance the capability of the United Nations to achieve more effective and co-ordinated co-operation at the international, regional and national levels against the threats posed by illicit production and illicit trafficking and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

26. We stress the need to reinforce United Nations structures for drug abuse control in order to increase their effectiveness and status;

27. We recognize the need for additional financial and human resources, which shall be made available for United Nations activities in the area of drug abuse control, bearing in mind the Organization's additional responsibilities in that regard;

28. We attach high priority to the speedy and effective implementation of the Global Programme of Action;

29. We proclaim the period from 1991 to 2000 the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, to be devoted to effective and sustained national, regional and international actions to promote the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, taking into account and paying due consideration to the guidelines for international decades recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1988/63 of 27 July 1988;

30. We resolve to keep under constant review the activities set out in the present Declaration and in the Global Programme of Action.

Global Programme of Action

I. Introduction

1. The international community confronts a dramatic problem of drug abuse and the illicit cultivation, production, processing, distribution and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, insufficiently effective controls over or monitoring of specific chemical substances and monitoring of the economic benefits of drug trafficking. States are not in a position to deal with this scourge individually. Therefore, international solidarity and the concerted, collective and simultaneous action of the international community are required.

2. An important aspect of the fight against drug abuse has been the elaboration of international legal instruments. The adoption of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and of that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 were first important steps in that direction.

3. By its resolution 40/122 of 13 December 1985, the General Assembly decided to convene an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking. The Conference took place at Vienna from 17 to 26 June 1987 and adopted a Declaration and a Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control.

4. In order to reinforce and supplement the measures provided in existing legal instruments and to counter the new magnitude and extent of illicit drug trafficking and its grave consequences, a United Nations plenipotentiary conference, held at Vienna from 25 November to 20 December 1988, adopted the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances.

5. The General Assembly, in its resolution 44/16 of 1 November 1989, decided to convene a special session of the Assembly to consider, as a matter of urgency, the question of international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs, with a view to expanding the scope and increasing the effectiveness of such co-operation.

6. Cognizant of the above, and following extensive deliberations at its seventeenth special session, the General Assembly, in order to achieve the goal of an international society free of illicit drugs and drug abuse, adopts the present Global Programme of Action and commits itself to its full and speedy implementation, where necessary following due consideration of the modalities by the competent technical bodies.

7. In adopting the Global Programme of Action, and without prejudice to the existing procedures, the General Assembly also decides to accord, within the United Nations system, a higher priority to the allocation of the necessary financial, personnel and other resources. There is a need for all parts of the United Nations system to galvanize efforts to improve international co-operation to stamp out the scourge of illicit drugs and drug abuse. The requirement for additional resources for that purpose is explicitly recognized, in the full expectation that that will be reflected as a high priority in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and in the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993, as well as future medium-term plans and biennial budgets. The General Assembly also recognizes that the effective implementation of the Global Programme of Action will require examination of the structure of the existing drug control units based at the United Nations Office at Vienna with a view to enhancing their effectiveness and status in the system.

II. Activities of the Global Programme of Action

8. The Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control shall be used by national authorities and interested organizations as a basis for developing and translating into action, at the national, regional and international levels, to the widest extent possible, balanced strategies aimed at combating all aspects of drug abuse and illicit trafficking. Those strategies shall include, in particular, the aspects described below.

- A. Prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to elimination of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

9. States shall give higher priority to prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to elimination of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances at the national and international levels. National strategies, plans and programmes for combating drug abuse shall be elaborated, adopted and implemented through the necessary policy and legislative adjustments, including the allocation of appropriate resources and services for prevention, treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration.

10. The causes generating illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including its recent increase, shall be analysed and the necessary measures shall be identified in order to combat drug abuse at the root of the problem. In this regard, special attention shall be given to the social causes underlying the drug problem, which should be adequately reflected in national social policies.

11. Information and education programmes shall be used to prevent the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to increase awareness of their harmful effects. In this context, States, relevant specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations shall co-ordinate and exchange information with a view to initiating well-targeted campaigns in this field.

12. The role of the United Nations as an advisory centre for collecting, analysing and disseminating information and experience in the field of reduction of illicit demand, for reviewing and evaluating national scientific programmes in the field of combating drug abuse and for co-ordinating efforts of States concerning those activities shall be further enhanced. Bodies of the United Nations system such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund (including its national committees), the United Nations Development Programme, the World Health Organization, the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations information centres shall play a more active role in collecting and disseminating information and exchanging experience.

13. States shall establish and promote national systems to assess the extent of drug abuse and to collect data on trends of abuse. For that purpose, they shall establish data bases that should be based on the international drug abuse assessment system being developed by the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat with financial support from the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control. The Division, in collaboration with other United Nations drug control bodies and the World Health Organization, shall assist Governments in establishing such data bases and shall work to establish a data base concerning the nature and extent of drug abuse at the international level.

14. The Division of Narcotic Drugs shall publish and update periodically a digest listing national focal points that deal with various aspects of the drug problem, including information on direct channels of communication.

15. In order to assess the level of national and international progress towards prevention and reduction of the demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances with a view to its elimination, and in implementing the seven targets set out in chapter I of the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Division of Narcotic Drugs shall submit, by 31 December each year: a succinct questionnaire to all Governments, regional intergovernmental organizations, and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. The questionnaire shall request details of action taken in this regard at the national and regional levels, the results achieved by the measures taken, and details of any practical difficulties encountered. The Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report, in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to be submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its regular and special sessions analysing the information submitted and assessing, in particular, the best means of providing assistance to States in furthering demand-reduction strategies.

16. States and regional intergovernmental organizations shall co-operate fully in the preparation of that report by providing in good time the information required by the questionnaire.

17. In the light of the experience of operating that questionnaire and reporting system, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs shall consider the necessity and feasibility of elaborating, under the auspices of the United Nations, an International instrument that would deal especially with the reduction of the illicit demand for drugs and that would provide, inter alia, comprehensive and specific measures for the control and elimination of illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as for treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts.

18. The recommendations of all international high-level meetings aimed at the reduction and eventual elimination of illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including those of the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, to be held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990, shall be submitted to States for reference, if requested, in order to make it possible for them to consider such recommendations in the elaboration of their national anti-drug campaigns and policies.

19. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in collaboration with the World Health Organization and other appropriate United Nations bodies, shall be encouraged to solicit, compile and analyse information on effective prevention strategies, including public information, education programmes and professional training, and on programme evaluation techniques and to disseminate that material to States upon request.

20. The United Nations Children's Fund shall be encouraged to give financial support to developing countries in order to enhance their campaigns to prevent drug abuse by children and the use of children for the illicit production and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as for implementing programmes to rehabilitate such children.

21. The International Labour Organisation shall be invited to provide, upon request, advice on education programmes to reduce drug abuse in the work-place and monitor their effectiveness.

22. Measures for the prevention of drug abuse shall be developed and included to the extent possible in the curricula of all educational institutions if circumstances so require. The expertise of relevant United Nations bodies should be made available to all countries, in particular developing countries, in order to assist them in elaborating such curricula.

23. Information on the rational prescribing and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and pharmaceutical preparations containing such substances shall be incorporated into the curricula of training institutions for health-care personnel.

24. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with United Nations drug control bodies, non-governmental organizations and other organizations involved in the rational use of pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, shall be encouraged to assist national educational authorities in developing training materials and conducting training courses to ensure that medical practitioners and other health personnel are well trained in rational prescribing and use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

25. The mass media shall be encouraged to publish and disseminate information in support of national and international strategies for the elimination of illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

26. The establishment of national committees or other ad hoc structures aimed at mobilizing public support and the participation of communities and at co-operating in and implementing the activities emanating from the Global Programme of Action shall be considered.

27. States shall, as appropriate, promote increased co-operation with and involvement of non-governmental organizations in the field of reduction of illicit demand, thus encouraging initiatives and programmes at the grass-roots level.

28. Appropriate United Nations bodies shall be invited to collaborate with non-governmental organizations with special expertise in the field of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances to identify and make available technical expertise on strategies and methods for reduction of illicit demand.

29. The United Nations shall undertake a review of activities of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies for the reduction of illicit demand in order to identify the needs for intensified action consistent with the principles of the Global Programme of Action.

B. Treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug addicts

30. National strategies in the health, social, legal and penal fields shall contain programmes for the social reintegration, rehabilitation and treatment of drug abusers and drug-addicted offenders. Such programmes shall be in conformity with national laws and regulations and be based on respect for basic human rights and the dignity of the individual, showing due regard for the diverse needs of individual drug addicts.

31. The United Nations shall act as a clearing-house for information on effective policies and techniques, programme modalities and resource materials for the treatment, rehabilitation and occupational reintegration of former drug addicts. The World Health Organization and the International Labour Organisation, in collaboration with other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, shall be encouraged to contribute to that end.

32. The relevant United Nations bodies should render assistance to interested States, in particular developing countries, in their programmes for treatment and rehabilitation of drug abusers.

33. Training programmes relating to the latest developments and techniques in the field of treatment of drug addiction and rehabilitation and reintegration of former addicts shall be conducted more regularly at the national, regional and international levels. Governments, the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in a position to do so shall, upon request, provide advice, information and proposals on existing training programmes, new methods and techniques and other general guidelines for States wishing to develop their training programmes further.

34. The World Health Organization shall be encouraged to work with Governments with a view to facilitating access to drug-treatment programmes and to strengthening the capacity of primarily health care to respond to drug-related health problems.

35. The World Health Organization shall be encouraged to continue to explore with Governments the development of health education programmes and policies for the reduction of risk and harm of drug abuse as a means of preventing the transmission by drug abusers of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and of securing appropriate treatment and counselling for drug abusers who are HIV-positive or who have developed acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), and to report thereon.

36. The International Labour Organisation should prepare and publish guidelines for programmes to re-integrate former addicts into occupational activities or vocational training.

37. States shall, as appropriate, facilitate and promote the involvement of non-governmental organizations in all areas of treatment and rehabilitation and intensify their co-operation with the relevant United Nations bodies.

C. Control of supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

1. Eradication and substitution of illicit production of narcotic drugs, and eradication of illicit processing of such drugs and of illicit production and diversion of psychotropic substances

38. States shall consider, at the national and international levels, means by which the internal sector of those economies that are affected by the illicit production and processing of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances might be strengthened, in order to support and strengthen the implementation, by competent national authorities, of effective anti-drug programmes, including the following measures:

(a) Prompt identification, eradication and substitution of illicit cultivation of narcotic plants, taking into account the need to protect the environment; for the purpose of crop surveys and monitoring efforts, such technologies as high-resolution satellite imagery and aerial photography could be used when agreement has been reached with the Government concerned;

(b) Further development and implementation of comprehensive and well-articulated reduction programmes with a view to eliminating illicit production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in countries affected by illicit production, taking particular account of traditional licit uses of such cultivation;

(c) Identification and provision of further incentives for crop substitution;

(d) Assessment and study, by the United Nations Environment Programme, of effects on the environment of the expanding cultivation and production of narcotic drugs and the use and disposal of chemical substances related to those activities, as well as methods used for the eradication of illicit production of narcotic drugs;

(e) Extension of the scope of economic and technical co-operation in support of crop substitution and integrated rural development programmes and other economic and technical programmes aimed at reducing illicit production and processing of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

(f) Establishment of complementary programmes in the fields of employment, health, housing and education;

(g) Elaboration and implementation of programmes for agro-industrial development;

(h) Elaboration and implementation of programmes for economic recovery of the social and economic sectors in countries that are adversely affected by the diversion for supply-reduction programmes of resources that would otherwise be used for development.

39. The external sectors of those economies that are affected by illicit production and processing of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances shall be strengthened in order to support and strengthen the implementation by competent national authorities of effective anti-drug programmes by the following means:

(a) Consideration of measures to strengthen international co-operation to facilitate trade flows, in particular measures to create expanded opportunities for trade and investment in order to provide access to international markets for crop-substitution products and other goods produced by countries affected by the illicit production and processing of narcotic drugs;

(b) Consideration by States of entering into multi-lateral, bilateral or regional agreements with countries affected by illicit drug production and processing, with a view to facilitating access by those countries to international markets and to assisting them in strengthening and adapting their internal capacity to produce exportable goods;

(c) Consideration of economic and other forms of co-operation with developing countries directly affected by the illicit transit of narcotic drugs through their territories, including measures to create expanded opportunities for trade and investment;

(d) Regular submission by States to the relevant United Nations drug control bodies of information on the extent of the manufacture, availability and abuse of illicit synthetic drugs in their territories.

2. Licit production, manufacture and supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

40. A balance shall be maintained between demand and supply of raw materials, intermediates and final products for legitimate uses, including medical and scientific purposes.

41. International co-operation, solidarity and assistance are called for to overcome the problem of excess stock of opiate raw materials in traditional supplier countries. This may include international assistance, particularly to developing countries, to help them establish the necessary opiate drug management regime to enable them to meet their potential legitimate need for opiates.

3. Co-operation on the multilateral level

42. The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, in collaboration, where appropriate, with the United Nations Development Programme and other United Nations bodies, is invited to elaborate for consideration by States a subregional strategy covering all aspects of drug abuse control and concentrating on the most affected areas where the problems are most complex and grave. States shall increase their co-operation with the Fund in support of such a subregional strategy.

43. States should endeavour to obtain the support of international, regional and national financial institutions, within their respective areas of competence, with the goal of identifying alternative development and crop-substitution programmes to support countries so that they can carry out sound economic policies and effective programmes against illicit drugs. States should also encourage those institutions to consider the economic and social consequences of drug trafficking when analysing the economic systems of those countries. In this regard, those institutions should consider availing themselves of assistance from and co-operation with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

44. Specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies such as the United Nations Development Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as the international financial institutions, in accordance with their mandates, should consider the possibility of undertaking further activities in the field of prevention and substitution of illicit production of narcotic drugs.

4. Monitoring and control mechanisms

45. States shall take all necessary measures, such as the conclusion of bilateral and regional agreements, to establish monitoring and control systems to prevent diversion from legitimate purposes of specific chemical substances, materials and equipment frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in particular through the application of articles 12 and 13 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances adopted in 1988.

46. Consideration shall be given to the convening of an international conference on the production and distribution of chemical products used in the illicit production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in order to co-ordinate efforts for more effective prevention of the diversion of precursor chemicals, specific substances, materials and equipment for illicit purposes. It is desirable that States include representatives of manufacturing and distribution enterprises in their delegations to that conference..

47. The World Health Organization, in collaboration with the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board, should assist national drug regulatory authorities in developing and strengthening their pharmaceutical administrations and control laboratories in order to enable them to control pharmaceutical preparations containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

48. Governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the United Nations shall be encouraged to co-operate in measures within the guidelines set out in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control to strengthen national and international systems of control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in particular those established under the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971.

49. The International Narcotics Control Board is invited to advise States, at their request, and to extend its technical co-operation activities with a view to furthering the aims of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances adopted in 1988.

50. Special attention shall be paid to co-operation that will enable States to strengthen their drug detection and pharmaceutical control laboratories, as well as their police and customs activities in the field of drug control.

D. Suppression of illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

1. Traffic

51. States shall proceed rapidly and make every effort to ratify or accede to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, adopted in 1988, in order to enable the entry into force of the Convention, preferably by the end of 1990.

52. The United Nations, in particular the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, shall provide expertise and assistance to States, at their request, to enable them to establish the legislative and administrative measures for the ratification and effective implementation of the United Nations Convention.

53. States shall, to the extent and where they are able to do so, apply provisionally the measures set forth in the United Nations Convention.

54. Consistent with the United Nations Convention, consideration shall be given to the conclusion of bilateral, regional and multilateral agreements and other arrangements aimed at suppressing illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

55. States that have not yet done so shall consider ratification of or accession to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971.

56. States in a position to do so and the organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, shall provide appropriate technical and financial support to enable States, at their request, to establish effective mechanisms against illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. Particular attention shall be given, in that regard, to the strengthening of interdiction capabilities of transit States, including control of land, sea and air boundaries. To that end, States should undertake an analysis of the methods and routes used for illicit transit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and should monitor them in their respective territories on a continuing basis, bearing in mind that the routes and methods used change frequently and affect a growing number of States. States shall consider appropriate information-sharing in this respect on a bilateral, regional or multilateral basis.

57. Interested States may consider, in conformity with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, the possibility of jointly establishing border inspection check-points, with a view to suppressing illicit trans-boundary movement of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, without affecting the national sovereignty and territorial integrity of States.

58. Specialized agencies such as the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Organization, in collaboration with member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, shall be invited to expand the development of programmes whereby such organizations and member States work with the transportation industry to suppress illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

59. States shall make increased use of the meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, such as the Customs Co-operation Council and the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), regional co-operation arrangements and other relevant institutional frameworks, for the purpose of coordinating co-operation in law enforcement and expanding programmes of training for law enforcement personnel in investigative matters and methods, interdiction and narcotics intelligence.

60. The United Nations, in particular the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, should assist States, at their request, in equipping and strengthening their law enforcement authorities and criminal justice systems.

2. Distribution

61. States shall strengthen their national efforts to curb and eradicate domestic illicit commerce and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

E. Measures to be taken against the effects of money derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking, illegal financial flows and illegal use of the banking system

62. Priority shall be accorded to the implementation of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, adopted in 1988, and the conclusion of bilateral, regional and multilateral agreements on tracing, freezing and seizure and forfeiture or confiscation of property and proceeds derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking.

63. Mechanisms shall be developed to prevent the banking system and other financial institutions from being used for the processing and laundering of drug-related money. To this end, consideration should be given by States to entering into bilateral, regional and multilateral agreements and developing mechanisms to trace property and proceeds derived from, used in or intended for use in drug-related activities through the international banking system, facilitate access to banking records and provide for the exchange of information between law enforcement, regulatory or investigative agencies concerning the financial flow of property or proceeds related to illicit drug trafficking.

64. The Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, in co-operation with the Customs Co-operation Council and the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol), should promote bilateral or regional exchanges of information between governmental regulatory or investigative agencies concerning the financial flow of illicit drug proceeds.

65. The Division of Narcotic Drugs and Interpol shall be invited to develop a repository of laws and regulations on money laundering, currency reporting, bank secrecy and forfeiture of property and proceeds, as well as procedures and practices designed to prevent banking systems and other financial institutions from money laundering, and shall make this information available to States, at their request.

66. States shall consider enacting legislation to prevent the use of the banking system for the processing and laundering of drug-related money, inter alia, through declaring such activities criminal offences.

67. States shall consider enacting legislation to permit the seizure and forfeiture of property and proceeds derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking. To that end, consideration should be given by States to concluding bilateral and multilateral agreements to enhance the effectiveness of international co-operation, taking into particular account article 5, paragraph 5, of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances.

68. States shall encourage international, regional and national financial associations to develop guidelines to assist their members in co-operating with government authorities in identifying, detecting, tracing, freezing and seizing proceeds and property related to illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

69. The elaboration of international agreements providing for stringent controls on money derived from, used in or intended for use in drug-related activities and penalizing the laundering of such money might be considered. Such instruments might also deal with the forfeiture or confiscation of funds, proceeds and property acquired through revenues deriving from drug-related activities.

70. States shall consider measures on an international level, including the feasibility of a United Nations facility to strengthen the gathering, collation and exchange of information on the financial flow from drug-related funds, giving particular emphasis to principles, rules and national law concerning the protection of ongoing law enforcement investigations and of individuals with regard to automatic processing of personal data.

71. States should encourage international, regional and national financial institutions, within their respective areas of competence, to pay special attention, in their analyses of the economies of States, to the characteristics and magnitude of the conversion and transfer of drug-related monies in order to contribute to international efforts aimed at counteracting the negative economic and social consequences of the drug problem.

72. States shall consider the possibility of using forfeited property and proceeds for activities to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking. In that context, the possible use of such proceeds and property or their equivalent value for United Nations drug-related activities shall also be taken into consideration.

73. All measures and proposals on possible action to prevent the use of the banking systems and financial institutions for money laundering, such as the conclusions arising from the study undertaken by the Financial Action Task Force, established at the Summit of seven major industrial nations, held in Paris from 14 to 16 July 1989, shall be made available to all States for information.

F. Strengthening of judicial and legal systems, including law enforcement

74. States shall, as soon as possible, ratify or accede to the United Nations conventions in the field of drug abuse control and illicit trafficking.

75. States in a position to do so and the United Nations, strengthening their action in co-ordination with the regional institutes of the United Nations with mandates in this sphere, shall provide advice and legal and technical assistance to enable States, at their request, to adapt their national legislation to international conventions and decisions dealing with drug abuse and illicit trafficking.

76. States are invited to give consideration to the model treaties on mutual assistance in criminal matters and on extradition, which contain specific provisions related to illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and are to be dealt with by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

77. States shall encourage international and regional organizations to elaborate model agreements on co-operation among customs officials, law enforcement agencies and other interested organs in the field of combating drug abuse and illicit trafficking.

78. The scope of international co-operation in support of technical assistance programmes aimed at the strengthening of judicial, legal and law enforcement systems, in particular in the field of the administration of justice, shall be extended. Particular attention shall be given to the training of personnel at all levels.

79. Measures to protect the judiciary from any form of exposure and intimidation threatening its independence and integrity shall be studied and promoted.

80. The United Nations shall act as a clearing-house for information on training programmes in drug law enforcement, including training for national narcotics agents in investigative methods, interdiction and narcotics intelligence.

81. Consideration shall be given to establishing a capability within the United Nations system to co-ordinate the provision by States of training and equipment to other States, at their request, for their own anti-drug operations, within their territories, to inhibit the use, interdict the supply and eliminate the illicit trafficking of drugs.

82. Since the International Law Commission has been requested to consider the question of establishing an international criminal court or other international trial mechanism with jurisdiction over persons alleged to be engaged in illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs across national frontiers, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination shall consider, in its annual adjustments to the United Nations system-wide action plan on drug abuse control requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 44/141 of 15 December 1989, the report of the International Law Commission on the question.

83. States shall consider the appropriateness of establishing arrangements, on the basis of bilateral, regional and multilateral agreements, which would allow them to benefit from one another's criminal justice system in dealing with similar drug-related offences.

84. Consideration shall be given to establishing a register of anti-drug expertise and services, under the supervision of the Division of Narcotic Drugs, which could be made available to States, at their request.

85. A review should be undertaken of international and regional law enforcement activities funded or sponsored by the United Nations, as well as those of other intergovernmental organizations and regional arrangements, to ensure a coherent approach to law enforcement activities within the overall context of the Global Programme of Action.

G. Measures to be taken against the diversion of arms and explosives and illicit traffic by vessels, aircraft and vehicles

86. States shall consider the adoption of measures, within their territories, to strengthen arrangements for controlling or monitoring the licit transportation of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including the vessels, aircraft and vehicles being used for that purpose, so as to prevent their misuse for the illicit transportation of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

87. Effective measures should be taken to prevent illicit and covert transfers of arms and explosives and their diversion to illicit drug traffic-related activities.

88. Alarmed by the growing link between illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, illegal activities of mercenaries and subversive and terrorist activities, States shall take prompt measures on their prevention.

89. States shall take strict measures to prevent private aircraft, vessels and vehicles registered in their territory from engaging in illicit drug trafficking and related activities.

H. Resources and structure

90. There is need both for optimum utilization of existing resources of the United Nations drug-related units and for additional resources to be allocated to those units in order to enable them fully to implement their mandates, bearing in mind their increased responsibilities.

91. A higher priority shall be accorded to United Nations drug control activities in the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and in the corresponding biennial budgets, and the General Assembly, at its forty-fifth session, is invited to take appropriate action in this regard, in accordance with existing procedures.

92. Priority shall be given to providing, on both a short-term and long-term basis, extrabudgetary support to enhance the efficiency of the United Nations structure for drug abuse control and to achieve and promote a truly comprehensive global programme of action.

93. Intensification of efforts at the national level and increased intergovernmental co-operation require a commensurate strengthening of the United Nations drug control organs and their secretariats. Against this background, the functioning of the United Nations structure for drug abuse control needs to be reviewed and assessed, in accordance with the mandate given to the Secretary-General by the General Assembly in paragraph 4 of its resolution 44/141, for the purpose of identifying alternative structural possibilities, the end result being the establishment of a stronger, more efficient United Nations drug control structure with enhanced status, with a report to be made to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

94. Attention shall be given to the need for (a) coherence of actions within the United Nations drug-related units and co-ordination, complementarity and non-duplication of all drug-related activities across the United Nations system; (b) Integration of drug-related information within the United Nations system; (c) integration of the reduction of illicit demand in United Nations programming; (d) integration of law enforcement field expertise in United Nations programmes; (e) compliance with all non-discretionary obligations mandated by the three drug control conventions; and (f) an estimate of resources necessary to carry out these mandates successfully.

95. More States should contribute financial and other resources to the operational activities of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in order to enable the Fund to expand its technical co-operation programmes and to develop an operational structure capable of assisting States in joint efforts on the sub-regional level.

III. Follow-up measures

96. States should take the necessary measures to promote and implement the Global Programme of Action and to translate it into practical action to the widest possible extent at the national, regional and international levels. The United Nations and its relevant bodies and specialized agencies, other relevant intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations should extend their co-operation and assistance to States in the promotion and implementation of the Global Programme of Action.

97. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the United Nations drug control bodies should continuously monitor the progress on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, and the Secretary-General should report annually to the General Assembly on all activities relating to the Global Programme of Action and the efforts of Governments.

98. The Secretary-General shall, in consultation with all Member States, identify, whenever necessary, a limited number of experts, from different regions of the world, on various aspects pertaining to the drug problem to advise him and existing United Nations drug control units and other bodies and specialized agencies on specific issues dealt with in the Global Programme of Action that may require further elaboration. These experts shall be funded exclusively from voluntary contributions.

99. The United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, covering the years 1991 to 2000, as proclaimed by the General Assembly in the Political Declaration adopted at its seventeenth special session, is a period for intensifying and sustaining international, regional and national efforts in the fight against drug abuse on the basis of the measures contained in the Global Programme of Action.

100. The International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, 26 June, as proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/112 of 7 December 1987, shall be observed in the continuing effort to raise public awareness of the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as to promote preventive measures.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on 27 July, adopted resolution 1990/84.

Implementation of the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its special session devoted to the question of international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/141 of 15 December 1989 and decision 44/410 of 14 November 1989,

Noting that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, at the first part of its thirtieth session, recommended, inter alia, that General Assembly resolution S-17/2 of 23 February 1990 be fully reflected in the proposed medium-term plan,

Reaffirming the fundamental importance of the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-17/2,

1. Strongly affirms the need for the full implementation of all the mandates and activities included in the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session and for the effective follow-up thereof;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a statement of the programme budget implications of all mandates and activities included in the Global Programme of Action, in a timely manner, to the relevant committees of the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session, in accordance with the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, in order to provide Member States with a detailed and precise specification of the mandates and activities of the United Nations drug control units and the extent and nature of the resources required to fully implement their responsibilities.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/84

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/117) without vote. 20 July (meeting 15); draft by Austria (E/1990/C.3/L.21); agenda item 11.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly a report [A/45/536] on the Global programme of Action against illicit narcotic drugs, in which he reported on plans for monitoring implementation of the Global Programme of Action by the UN system and Governments.

The Secretary-General said that the System-wide Action Plan (see p. 870), which had been amended at the request of the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1990/87 of 27 July, detailed the actions that had been taken by the UN system to implement the mandates of the Global Programme of Action and identified those activities mandated but not yet or not fully carried out and the resources needed to implement fully all existing and new mandates. In addition, the 1990 annual report [A/45/542] on international co-operation in drug abuse control had been presented in a modified format to reflect the actions taken by the UN system to implement the recommendations contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, adopted by the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking [YUN 1987, p. 901], and those taken to implement the mandates of the Global Programme of Action.

With respect to UN action to monitor implementation of the Global Programme of Action by Governments, the Secretary-General suggested that the Assembly keep in mind the already cumbersome obligations of Governments to answer questionnaires on their activities pursuant to drug control treaties and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline and request the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-fourth session to review existing questionnaires with a view to reducing their number through consolidation and simplification.

Also in October, pursuant to the July request of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General submitted a statement of programme budget implications of all mandates and activities included in the Global Programme of Action [A/C.5/45/27]. The Secretary-General requested an appropriation of $911,900 for activities in 1991 (net of staff assessment).

By a 20 April letter [A/45/262] addressed to the Secretary-General, the United Kingdom transmitted the text of the London Declaration of the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, and requested that it be circulated as an official document of the General Assembly. The World Ministerial Summit was held in association with the United Nations in London (9-11 April).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/148.

Implementation of the Global Programme of Action against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly,

Fully aware that the international community is confronted with the dramatic problem of drug abuse and the illicit cultivation, production, demand, processing, distribution and trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that States need to work at the international level as well as individually to deal with this scourge,

Stressing the important role of the United Nations, its relevant bodies and the specialized agencies in the fight against drug abuse at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session on 23 February 1990, on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, and the Declaration adopted at the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990,

1. Reaffirms the commitment expressed in the Global Programme of Action and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control;

2. Calls upon States to take all possible steps to promote and implement individually and in co-operation with others the mandates and recommendations contained in the Global Programme of Action, with a view to translating the Programme into practical action to the widest possible extent at the national, regional and international levels;

UN mechanisms

Conventions

INCB reported that, as at 31 December 1990, 129 States were parties to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382] in its original form or amended by the 1972 Protocol [YUN 1972 p. 397]. During the year, four States (Bahrain, Cape Verde, Malta and Suriname) became parties to the Convention, and two States (New Zealand and Suriname) became parties to the 1972 Protocol.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380] stood at 103 as at 31 December. During the year, 10 countries became parties to the Convention: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, Ghana, Guinea, Japan, Malta, New Zealand, Singapore and Suriname.

INCB urged Governments that had not done so to become parties to the Conventions. The Board expressed its hope that those countries which had announced their intention to that effect a number of years ago would become parties without further delay. A request for ratification of or accession to the Conventions was also formulated in paragraph 55 of the Global Programme of Action (resolution S-17/2, above), adopted by the General Assembly at its special session in February.

On 11 November, the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690] entered into force. As at 31 December, 31 States and the European Economic Community were parties to the Convention.

During the year, 27 States and the European Economic Community ratified, acceded to or approved the Convention. Those States were: Bahrain, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Bolivia, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Cyprus, Ecuador, France, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, India, Italy, Jordan, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Qatar, Spain, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Emirates and the United States.

INCB welcomed the entry into force of the Convention as a further demonstration of the determination of the international community to fight against the trafficking menace. It urged all States which had not already done so to become parties at the earliest possible time. The Board also urged all States to respond affirmatively to the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council recommending that they provisionally apply the provisions of the Convention to the greatest extent possible even before formally becoming parties. It reiterated the urgent need for Governments to impose appropriately stringent penalties on traffickers, as well as to apply provisions of the 1988 Convention relating to money laundering, seizure of assets and extradition.

In an October report [A/45/495], the Secretary-General noted that in April the Division of Narcotic Drugs had launched a special campaign for adherence to international drug-control treaties, in response to General Assembly resolution 44/140 [YUN 1989, p. 716] and as contained in the Global Programme of Action. Notes had been sent out to all States not parties to one or more drug-control treaties, recalling their individual situations and offering to provide them with model forms of accession and to assist them in overcoming procedural and substantive difficulties.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, on 29 January, decided to include alpha-methylthiofentanyl, para-fluorofentanyl, beta-hydroxyfentanyl, beta-hydroxy-3-methylfentanyl, thiofentanyl and 3-methylthiofentanyl in Schedules I and IV of the 1961 Single Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/146.

Implementation of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 338/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984, 40/120, 40/121 and 40/122 of 13 December 1985, 41/125, 41/126 and 41/127 of 4 December 1986, 42/111, 42/112 and 42/113 of 7 December 1987, 43/120 of 8 December 1988 and 44/140 of 15 December 1989 and other relevant provisions,

Reaffirming the importance of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 for improving international co-operation in that field and further strengthening the existing international instruments for the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, namely, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Welcoming the entry into force of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 on 11 November 1990, the necessary number of ratifications and accessions having been reached,

Expressing its satisfaction with the work thus far done by the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat relating to the establishment of various measures to assist States to become parties to the Convention and provisionally implement its provisions, as well as with the inclusion of legal and technical assistance to States to these ends in the programme of work of the Division for the biennium 1990-1991,

Taking note of the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, held from 20 to 23 February 1990, as well as the Declaration of the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990, Bearing in mind the Ministerial Meeting on the Consumption, Production and Traffic of Illicit Drugs, held at Ixtapa, Mexico, from 17 to 20 April 1990.

Taking note of the report of the commission on Narcotic Drugs on its eleventh special session, held at Vienna from 29 January to 2 February 1990, and in particular of the measures adopted by this United Nations standard-setting body relating to the entry into force and the provisional application of the Convention,

1. Urges States that have not yet done so to proceed as soon as possible to ratify or accede to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, in order to make its provisions more universally effective;

2. Also urges states to establish the necessary legislative and administrative measures so that their internal juridical regulations may be compatible with the spirit and the scope of the Convention;

3. Invites States, to the extent that they are able to do so, to apply provisionally the measures set forth in the Convention, pending its entry into force for each of them, and, in particular, to bear in mind the advisory services available for this purpose from the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat;

4. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to ratify or accede to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to assign appropriate priority to providing the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board with the necessary financial, technical and human resources that would enable them to carry out their additional responsibilities under the Convention for the biennium 1990-1991 without prejudice to the provisions of any resolution authorizing a reform of the United Nations structure for international drug abuse control;

6. Once again request the Secretary-General, within existing resources and drawing, in particular, on funds available to the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to provide, facilitate and encourage public information activities relating to the Convention;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

International Narcotics Control Board

In its 1990 report [E/INCB/1990/1], INCB provided a comprehensive overview of illicit production, trafficking and abuse of drugs and summarized the operations of the international drug control system (see p. 850).

In carrying out its specific responsibilities under international treaties, the Board acted in co-operation with Governments and maintained a continuous dialogue with them to further the aims of the treaties. The information provided by Governments enabled the Board to study the licit movement of narcotic drugs, thereby ensuring that the provisions of the drug control conventions were strictly observed. The information, published annually by the Board, was used by Governments to verify whether they had adequately applied the conventions' provisions.

In its annual report, the Board drew attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and in treaty compliance, and made suggestions and recommendations for improvements at both the national and international levels.

The Board collaborated with other international bodies concerned with drug control, including not only the Economic and Social Council and its Commission on Narcotic Drugs but also relevant UN specialized agencies, especially the World Health Organization (WHO), and bodies outside the UN system such as the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol). Daily co-operation took place with the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC).

The report stated that illicit production, trafficking and abuse of drugs, together with attendant escalating violence, continued seriously to imperil not only public health in virtually all countries but also the very lives of political leaders, public officials and private citizens in some countries. During the year, well-financed and heavily armed criminal-trafficking organizations wantonly murdered presidential candidates and scores of innocent victims, many of them children. Despite those developments, the democratic institutions in two countries under siege by traffickers, Colombia and Peru, had survived. Trafficking organizations, often in conjunction with terrorists, continued to forge links within countries, within regions and interregionally.

The Board reiterated that the response of the international community to the traffickers must be even more forceful, comprehensive and innovative. Priority should be accorded to enacting and vigorously pursuing comprehensive measures to contain and reduce the illicit demand for drugs; denying traffickers opportunities to launder their ill-gotten gains; preventing drug traffickers from acquiring chemical precursors, arms, sophisticated weaponry, aircraft and ships; and providing large-scale integrated rural development assistance to enable cultivators of illicit crops to make their living through licit agricultural or other enterprises and expanding marketing possibilities and establishing fair export prices for alternative economic activities.

INCB expressed its concern about the increasing number of AIDS cases related to intravenous drug abuse, mainly in metropolitan areas in a number of countries, and the mounting number of congenital HIV infection in the newborn. It was essential to adopt measures that might decrease the sharing of hypodermic needles among intravenous drug abusers to reduce the spread of AIDS.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/220 of 24 May, took note of the report of the Board for 1989 [E/INCB/1989/1].

System-wide Action Plan

In February, the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/141 [YUN 1989, p. 720], reported to the seventeenth special session of the Assembly on the ongoing work towards the development of a system-wide plan of action on drug abuse control [A/S-17/2 & Corr.1]. He stated that consultations were held between the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, INCB and its secretariat and UNFDAC to develop a draft framework for the plan of action. A preliminary draft outline was circulated to all agencies participating in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in January 1990.

The plan was reviewed by the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Co-ordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse Control (Vienna, 5 February) [ACC/1990/PG/1], which agreed that it be revised to take account of the views expressed at that meeting, and the decisions to be taken by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session as contained in the Global Programme of Action (see above). Consultations were again held in March with participating entities, and comments received by 21 March were taken into account in the preparation of the text.

Report of Secretary-General. In a 1 May report [E/1990/39 & Corr.1,2], the Secretary-General presented the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control. The Plan was to strengthen international co-operation and the UN response in an area where the Organization had a unique leading role. Its aim was the full implementation of all existing drug control mandates of every entity of the UN system and of subsequent decisions of intergovernmental bodies through the UN system. The Plan consisted of two parts. The first dealt with operational activities, in particular those of UNFDAC. The second part outlined the roles of substantive drug control units of the UN Secretariat, of other UN entities and of the specialized agencies. It addressed five areas: strengthening the licit drug control system; prevention and reduction of the illicit demand for drugs; treatment and rehabilitation; elimination of the supply of drugs from illicit sources; and suppression of illicit drug traffic. Concrete activities that each agency should undertake were identified, as well as a time-frame for implementation and an assessment of the resources available and of additional resources required.

The Secretary-General said that to achieve the goal of an international society free of illicit drugs and drug abuse, a comprehensive and balanced approach should be followed. Both the illicit supply of drugs and the illicit demand for drugs should be reduced and eventually eliminated. Vigorous action should be taken to break the distribution link between demand and supply—that is, illicit traffic. He stressed that an important deterrent to both the demand for and the supply of illicit drugs, as well as drug trafficking, was the presence of effective and enforceable legal sanctions at the national level, between States and at the international level. The response of the UN system must be multidisciplinary in character and considered within the socio-economic context of each country, while also taking into account the national, cultural and social settings. Accordingly, Governments might find it advisable, in so far as they had not already done so, to set up co-ordinating mechanisms or to strengthen existing machinery by establishing a national drug-abuse control strategy.

CPC action. On 31 May, at its thirtieth session [A/45/16], the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) considered the UN System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control. The Committee decided to transmit the Plan to the Economic and Social Council and called the attention of the Council to the need for a revised version fully incorporating all mandates and activities included in the Global Programme of Action for timely submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July 1990, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/87.

United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 44/141 of 15 December 1989, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to co-ordinate at the inter-agency level the development of a United Nations system-wide action plan on drug abuse control aimed at the full implementation of all existing mandates and subsequent decisions of intergovernmental bodies throughout the United Nations system,

Noting that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination has presented the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control to all Member States,

Noting also that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination considered the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control at the first part of its thirtieth session, held from 7 May to 11 June 1990,

Recognizing the commendable efforts of the Secretary-General in the development of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control as an instrument to facilitate co-ordination, complementarity and non-duplication in drug control activities within the United Nations system and recognizing also that further efforts are needed to improve the methodology used for its preparation and updating,

Recognizing further that the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control should adequately reflect the balance achieved in the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution S-17/2 of 23 February 1990,

Recalling that the Secretary-General has appointed a group of experts to advise and assist him in order to enhance the efficiency of the United Nations structure for drug abuse control, as requested in General Assembly resolution 44/141, and thus the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control may need to be updated in the light of further relevant decisions that may be made by the General Assembly,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with regard to the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control;

3. Stresses the need to revise the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control in time for the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly in order to incorporate fully all the mandates and activities contained in the Global Programme of Action adopted by the Assembly in its resolution S-17/2 and to comply with the guidelines set out by the Assembly in its resolution 44/141.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/87

27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/116) without vote, 20 July (meeting 151); 37-nation draft (E/1990/C.3/L.12/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 10.

Responding to the request of the Council, the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Co-ordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse Control (Geneva, 12-14 September) [Acc/1990/PG/7] agreed on proposals for amending the Plan. It also agreed that the Plan could be used for intensifying inter-agency co-operation in key areas and the linkages between related programmes.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted the proposed revisions to the Council in an addendum [E/1990/39/Add.1] to his May report.

In resolution 45/179 of 21 December (see p. 874), the General Assembly requested the Secretary General to review the revised System-wide Action Plan in the light of the structural changes decided on in that resolution, which included the creation of a single drug-control programme to be called the United Nations International Drug Control Programme.

United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During the year, UNFDAC continued to support Governments' efforts to prevent and control the various manifestations of drug abuse [E/CN.7/1991/10], and the marked expansion and intensification of UNFDAC activities in recent years continued. The 1990 budget of $69.3 million enabled the provision of financial and technical assistance to 67 countries through 118 national-level drug-control projects. The Fund's work programme for 1990 also included 41 regional and global projects supporting a broad range of drug-control activities such as specialized training, advisory services, research, exchange of information and meetings. Of the total annual budget, 39 per cent was allocated to reducing the supply of illicit drugs; 28.5 per cent to reducing illicit demand; 25 per cent to strengthening control measures; 4.5 per cent to working arrangements with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); 2.5 per cent to administration and programme evaluation; and 0.5 per cent to research.

The continued expansion of UNFDAC's work programme required the adoption of measures to strengthen its management and evaluation. Those measures centred on: the early involvement of potential donor countries in the assistance for project design, formulation and evaluation; the extension and strengthening of electronic data processing systems for advancing office automation; the strengthening of the UNFDAC field advisers network in countries and regions where major multisectoral programmes supported by UNFDAC were under way; extended collaboration with UNDP, which was providing general support services to UNFDAC on the basis of the 1987 Working Arrangement; and extensive recourse to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), which was providing administrative support for a number of projects. UNFDAC further strengthened its evaluation capacity with the creation of an evaluation unit, and continued the co-ordination of operations with other bilateral and multilateral drug-control activities, with attention to the involvement and support of UN entities and specialized agencies.

Among UNFDAC activities in 1990 in Latin America and the Caribbean were: a project to extend treatment and rehabilitation services in both State and private institutions in Argentina; a dairy farming and community development project in Bolivia's Cochabamba and Chapare areas and a $21.8-million programme of agricultural diversification and agro-industrial development at Los Yungas of La Paz; a $12-million project in Brazil involving both supply and demand reduction; and prevention projects targeted at young people in Chile and Costa Rica. In Colombia, a new $35.4-million project was launched encompassing sub-projects to prevent the spread of drug abuse and acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS); a treatment and rehabilitation project working with "street children" in Bogota; and two projects to halt the deteriorating drug abuse situation in metropolitan areas. In the supply-reduction sector, three integrated rural development projects were approved.

Among UNFDAC's activities in Asia and the Pacific were the improvement of roads and other physical infrastructure, agricultural training and applied research, and the provision of health services in the Lao People's Democratic Republic; supply- and demand-reduction projects in Malaysia; and a mission to Nepal to assess drug abuse problems and needs. In India, a $20-million project entered its second year of operation, focusing on strengthening that country's Narcotics Control Bureau. In Pakistan, an UNFDAC evaluation mission recommended that the rural development project in Dir District be extended for two more years. In Thailand, six high-land development projects were being implemented with $20 million of UNFDAC support.

In the Middle East and the Balkans, against the background of drug trafficking along the Balkan route from the eastern Mediterranean, through Eastern and Central Europe to established markets further west and north, UNFDAC undertook a subregional strategy to foster co-operation between the countries concerned. An UNFDAC mission visited Bulgaria, Greece, Hungary, Turkey and Yugoslavia in July.

UNFDAC granted assistance to Cyprus for the provision of telecommunications equipment, vehicles, computer training, and office and surveillance equipment for the police. A project was approved to support Egypt's pharmacy-control system and to undertake preventive education initiatives. UNFDAC also supported drug control activities in Jordan, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

In Africa, programmes were under way or in advanced planning stages in 31 countries. New projects began in Algeria, Benin, Cameroon, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Malawi, Mali, Mauritius, Senegal, Somalia and Zimbabwe. In Morocco, a $2.6 million pilot project, aimed at beginning the elimination of cannabis production in the Rif area, entered its second year of operation.

United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs

During the year, the Division of Narcotic Drugs continued to implement its ongoing responsibilities deriving from drug control treaties and mandates stemming from resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The new responsibilities deriving from the adoption of the 1988 Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690] continued to strain the limited resources of the Division. Activities to publicize the Convention included the publication of a revised version of the booklet The United Nations and Drug Abuse Control and the issuance of the Information Letter every two months.

The work programme of the Division expanded in response to the increasingly urgent demand for services and advice from Member States. The Division continued to advise Governments on the formulation of national legislation related to drug abuse control and to provide relevant examples of existing legislation. In April, it sent notes to all States not yet parties to one or more international drug control treaties and to those States that had not yet ratified or acceded to the 1988 Convention, including information on their respective status of adherence and on services available at the Division. Several States responded with requests for assistance.

The Division carried out a wide range of activities in collaboration with government agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and educational institutions. It spearheaded promotional activities for the observance of the third International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (26 June 1990), focusing on the theme "Demand reduction through community action". A booklet, Preventing Drug Abuse: the Community at Work-Teachers' Contribution, was issued, and a second booklet, Grassroots Parent Movement, was in preparation.

The Division's Laboratory continued its assistance efforts, providing equipment, material and information to national laboratories in Colombia, Egypt, Jordan, Pakistan and Uruguay. Under a project aimed specifically at Africa, eight such laboratories were completed in Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Gambia, Kenya, Togo, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia. Twenty-one fellows from 12 countries received three months of basic training at the Laboratory in Vienna, and 12 senior chemists from five countries received advanced training.

Continuing the Division's project on recommended methods for the analysis of seized material, over 2,000 copies of manuals on analysis of substances were distributed to laboratories in some 90 countries. In support of law enforcement services to Member States, 261 UN field drug identification kits were provided to 25 countries.

The Division continued to act as the substantive secretariat to regional meetings of subsidiary organs of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Activities of other UN agencies

United Nations Development Programme

Involvement of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in drug-abuse control activities continued to be concentrated in Asia and the Pacific and in Latin America and the Caribbean. Because of the growing dimensions of the drug problem in the supplying countries and the developmental nature of the problem, UNDP was increasingly supporting the efforts of the Governments in those areas. A central theme of UNDP activity was to assist Governments in exploring and formulating alternative economic strategies that would reduce dependency on the drug economy as well as diminish the social impact of drug abuse on the population. A growing number of UNDP programmes were being executed by Governments and positive results had been obtained. Through its Office for Project Services (OPS), UNDP was closely associated in the implementation of the programme activities of the UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC), mostly in Latin America and the Caribbean, and was also providing administrative support through its country field offices to Fund-supported programmes. In Bolivia, UNDP/OPS was executing the UNFDAC rural development project in the Yungas area of La Paz, and also provided administrative support for the implementation of community development activities in the area.

In the region of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), UNDP, in co-operation with UNFDAC, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), supported an integrated rural development project among the hill tribes in northern Thailand. By promoting the cultivation of alternative cash and food crops, as well as improved health conditions and overall standards of living, the project sought to discourage the cultivation of the opium poppy. UNDP also supported a regional project involving the six ASEAN countries to train personnel working in the field of drug rehabilitation.

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Drug abuse control activities of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) were aimed at the elimination of the supply of drugs from illicit sources. In the context of its rural poverty alleviation programmes, IFAD provided drug producers with alternative income sources or employment on and off the farm. Poor rural communities were given improved social services and support so that they could be weaned away from the cultivation of illicit crops. They were provided with a "safety net" enabling them to enter the mainstream of legitimate community life and productivity. IFAD fostered the self-mobilization of communities through community development and training and awareness-raising campaigns. Most important, IFAD paid great attention to the marketing of new crops or surplus production. Most IFAD projects included extension of credit, improvement of support services (especially extension and adaptive research), community development, and, as was the case in Latin America, the development of new land for cultivation. A number of IFAD projects were intended to promote drug-crop substitution.

World Food Programme

The World Food Programme (WFP) supported rural development schemes providing alternatives to the production of narcotics, primarily the opium poppy. Its food aid could provide supplementary food rations to local farmers participating in such schemes, or finance local labour costs. WFP provided low-key but useful support to the activities of UNFDAC in Bolivia and Peru to contain the spread of coca-growing by improving the general economic and social condition of rural areas. In Bolivia, components of a $16-million project to assist primary health care focused on areas in which the Fund was concentrating its efforts to prevent coca-bush cultivation. WFP food assistance also supported institutions dealing with the rehabilitation of drug addicts in a project in the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

World Health Organization

The World Health Organization (WHO) continued to improve the process for reviewing dependence-providing psychoactive substances for scheduling recommendations, and updated guidelines on the rational use of opiates and on the treatment of conditions for which they might be prescribed. The Director-General of WHO announced, on the occasion of the third International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking 26 June 1990, the creation of a new

WHO programme on substance abuse. WHO also gathered and disseminated data on drug-related morbidity and mortality, and its activities on the prevention of HIV/AIDS was often linked to the prevention of drug abuse. WHO acted as the executing agent for country programmes funded by UNFDAC, which included the development of demand reduction and treatment services; national programmes were under way in countries in five of the six WHO regions.

Enhancement of UN structure

In April, the Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 44/141 [YUN 1989, p. 720] in which the Assembly requested that a group of independent experts be established to help him strengthen the UN response to the worsening drug problem, taking into account the Organization's ability to perform its increasing tasks in the light of existing mandates and the decisions taken at its seventeenth special session (see p. 855), selected 15 international experts (from Hungary, India, Italy, Jamaica, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Peru, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States) to constitute the Group of Experts. The Group held three sessions in Vienna (28-29 May, 18-29 June and 23-27 July).

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report [A/45/652], the Secretary-General presented his conclusions on the enhancement of the efficiency of the UN structure for drug abuse control, based on the recommendations of the Expert Group [A/45/652/Add.1].

The Secretary-General concluded that the objective of enhancing the efficiency of the UN structure could be best achieved through securing a structure-both at the secretariat and inter-governmental levels-that would, in a most rational and effective way, ensure that the provisions of the relevant conventions were adhered to, and help facilitate such compliance; facilitate the implementation of the measures contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control adopted by the 1987 International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking [YUN 1987, p. 901] and the Global Programme of Action (see p. 859); and ensure that the formulation and execution of operational activities were consistent with the provisions of the conventions, the Multidisciplinary Outline and the Global Programme of Action, and that appropriate legislative guidance was given in that respect.

To attain those objectives, he proposed a unified secretariat unit at Vienna (headed by an Assistant Secretary-General) responsible for treaty implementation, policy implementation and research and operational activities; two services for treaty implementation: the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the secretariat of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs; and for policy implementation and research, a division responsible for the implementation of policy decisions of the relevant UN legislative bodies, which would also do analytical work. Within that division, the Repository Service would deal with analysis of the annual reports of Governments on the implementation of the drug control treaties, central statistics, publications and references and the computerized information strategy. The Substantive Service would deal with supply reduction, demand reduction, suppression of illicit drug trafficking, central training and the laboratory. Concerning operational activities, there would be a division responsible for co-ordinating and carrying out technical co-operation projects. It would co-operate with organizations of the UN system, regional organizations, and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Its Resources Mobilization Service would provide support to the head of the unified secretariat structure in fund-raising and backstop technical co-operation projects; its Project Operations Service would be responsible for monitoring the design and implementation of projects at the national and regional levels and would be organized along regional lines. The division would be financed from extrabudgetary resources of UNFDAC, which would be placed under the direct responsibility of the head of the unified secretariat structure.

The arrangements thus described would be named the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, functioning as an organizational unit within the UN Secretariat.

The Secretary-General stated that the measures outlined above would be implemented beginning on 1 January 1991.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/179.

Enhancement of the United Nations structure for drug abuse control

The General Assembly,

A/armed by the dramatic increase in drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which is threatening the health and well-being of millions of people in the majority of countries in the world,

Emphasizing that the problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking has to be dealt with within the broader economic and social contexts,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues and the independent role of the International Narcotics Control Board,

Underlining also the importance of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and that Convention as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Group of Experts, entitled "Drugs and the United Nations: meeting the challenge";

3. Requests the Secretary-General to create a single drug control programme, to be called the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, based at Vienna, and to integrate fully therewith the structures and the functions of the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the Secretariat, the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board and the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control with the objective of enhancing the effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations structure for drug abuse control in keeping with the functions and mandates of the United Nations in this field;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps in order to appoint a senior official at the level of Under-Secretary-General, who will execute the integration process and head the new integrated Programme starting from 1 January 1991 with the exclusive responsibility for co-ordinating and providing effective leadership for all United Nations drug control activities, in order to ensure coherence of actions within the Programme as well as co-ordination, complementarity and non-duplication of such activities across the United Nations system;

5. Also invites the Secretary-General to structure the United Nations International Drug Control Programme along the following lines:

(a) Treaty implementation, which would integrate, with due consideration to treaty arrangements, the functions of the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board and the treaty implementation functions of the Division of Narcotic Drugs, taking into account the independent role of the Board;

(b) Policy implementation and research, with responsibility for implementing policy decisions of the relevant legislative bodies and conducting analytical work;

(c) Operational activities, with responsibility for co-ordinating and carrying out the technical co-operation projects currently being executed mainly by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, the Division of Narcotic Drugs and the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board;

6. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to place the financial resources of the existing United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control under the direct responsibility of the head of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as a fund for financing operational activities, mainly in developing countries;

7. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its thirty-fourth regular session, to consider ways and means of improving its functioning as a policy-making body and to submit its recommendations to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1991;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit his report and that of the Group of Experts to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-fourth regular session so that they can be taken into account when the Commission discusses ways and means of improving its functioning;

9. Requests the Economic and Social Council, as a matter of urgency at its first regular session of 1991, giving due consideration to the recommendations of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to undertake a review of the functioning of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and decide on the appropriate changes needed to improve it;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to review the United Nations System-Wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, as devised, including all mandates and recommendations established by the Global Programme of Action in the light of structural changes decided on in the present resolution;

11. Underlines that the United Nations International Drug Control Programme should give priority to the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, as well as the mandates and recommendations in the Global Programme of Action;

12. Requests that the appropriation within the regular budget of the United Nations currently allocated to the secretariat of the International Narcotics Control Board and the Division of Narcotic Drugs be reallocated to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in accordance with the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, and invites the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate financial and other resources are allocated to the Programme to enable it to discharge its functions effectively;

13. Decides that the operational programme and related support costs currently financed from voluntary contributions shall, upon the establishment of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, continue to be borne from voluntary contributions;

On 21 December, in resolution 45/248 B, section IV, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to propose a comprehensive restructuring of UN entities in Vienna with a view to the speedy implementation of the expressed wish of the Assembly both to strengthen the UN Office at Vienna and to consolidate the UN drug structures under the authority of an Under-Secretary-General.

Other matters

Eleventh special session of Narcotic Drugs Commission

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its eleventh special session in Vienna (29 January-2 February) [E/1990/24]. It adopted 8 resolutions on various drug control issues as well as 11 decisions.

The Commission dealt with matters relating to the seventeenth special session of the General Assembly (see p. 855); implementation of international drug control treaties; the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1989; the entry into force and provisional application of the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690]; the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 concerning the drug control programme; development and promotion of more effective action against illicit drug trafficking through regional co-operation in drug law enforcement; and the interim report of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control.

It also acted on the inclusion of certain substances in Schedules I and IV of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382] as amended by the 1972 Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397], or under Schedules I and IV of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]. In addition, it also recommended draft decisions to the Economic and Social Council concerning applications by Bahrain, Qatar and the Syrian Arab Republic for membership in the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East.

The Council, by decision 1990/221 of 24 May, took note of the Commission's report on its eleventh special session.

Demand reduction

In a December report [E/CN.7/1991/19], the Secretary-General provided an overview of the achievements of targets in the area of prevention and reduction of illicit demand for narcotic drugs by region and by international organizations. The report also summarized the responses to a questionnaire on the implementation of the seven targets on demand reduction of the 1987 Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control [YUN 1987, p. 901], which the Economic and Social Council had requested the Secretary-General to issue [YUN 1989, p. 725]. As at 1 September, replies had been received from 44 Governments and eight inter-governmental organizations.

INCB, in its 1990 report [E/INCB/1990/1], stated that one of the most critical and intractable components of the drug problem was the containment and reduction of spreading illicit demand since it involved influencing and modifying human behaviour. Unless progress towards that end was made and sustained, success in eradicating illicit cultivation and production of narcotic drugs as well as clandestine manufacture of psychotropic substances could only be temporary. The first World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat (London, 9-11 April) constituted one of the most significant events of 1990 in the fight against drug abuse. The Declaration adopted by the Summit provided a comprehensive framework and set out a broad international commitment.

Narcotics raw material for licit use

In 1990, INCB continued to monitor the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs. It stated that in 1989, the last year for which complete figures were available, world consumption of various opiates amounted to approximately 200 metric tons in morphine equivalent. Codeine continued to account for a substantial part, totalling 150 tons in morphine equivalent. Dihydrocodeine consumption rose to 15 tons in morphine equivalent, following a decrease in 1988, and morphine consumption grew also, to nearly 6 tons. Annual global production from 1986 had been, on an average, 40 tons below global consumption, thus reducing excess stock of raw material.

In 1990, INCB requested Governments to provide information on actions taken to carry out the recommendations contained in the 1989 special report [YUN 1989, p. 726] on demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs.

INCB also requested Governments to ensure that medical instructors and professional medical associations were urged to promote the rational use of opiates for medical purposes, while at the same time ensuring they would not be abused.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council on 24 May adopted resolution 1990/31.

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes

The Economic and Social Council,⁴

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986, 1987/31 of 26 May 1987, 1988/10 of 25 May 1988 and 1989/15 of 22 May 1989,

Emphasizing once again that achieving a balance between the licit supply of opiates and the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes constitutes an important aspect of the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control and that resolving the problem of excess stocks of opiate raw materials is an essential step in that direction,

Noting the fundamental need for international co-operation and solidarity in overcoming the problem of excess stocks, which imposes heavy financial and other burdens on the traditional supplier countries.

Having considered the special report of the international Narcotics Control Board for 1989 on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs, and the recommendations contained therein,

1. Urges all Governments to give serious consideration to ways to bring about a rapid improvement in solving the problem of excess stocks of opiate raw materials held by the traditional supplier countries;

2. Commends the International Narcotics Control Board for its special report on the demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs, in which the Board, inter alia, highlighted the impediments to the availability of opiates for medical use, which impediments make it difficult to assess the full licit medical needs for opiates realistically;

3. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to accord priority to monitoring the implementation of the recommendations contained in the above-mentioned report;

4. Requests the World Health Organization to develop guidelines on the rational use of opiates and on the treatment of conditions for which opiates may be prescribed, with a view to assisting Governments in evolving national policy in this regard;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/67) without vote, 3 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1990/24); agenda item 6

Economic and social consequences of drug abuse

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/142 [YUN 1989, p. 717], the Secretary-General convened the meeting of the Intergovernmental Expert Group to Study the Economic and Social Consequences of Illicit Traffic in Drugs (Vienna, 21-25 May and 9-20 July).

The Group, made up of 20 experts, had before it several background documents related to the subject of the study. Country reports were received for Bolivia, Colombia and the United States; analytical contributions were provided by experts from Egypt, France, India, the Netherlands, Senegal, Spain, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. In view of the wide scope of its mandate and the complex issues covered by it, the Expert Group, following the consideration of its mandate, drew up a preliminary study setting out the framework for a future in-depth, full-scale study dealing with the illicit market and its main characteristics; the production of illicit drugs; and the consumption and distribution of illicit drugs. Because of the limited time available and the inadequacy of data concerning illicit traffic, drug abuse and financial flows related to drug trafficking, the Expert Group was unable to undertake such an in-depth study. However, the Expert Group submitted 18 recommendations

[A/C.3/45/8] covering the collection of data and preparation of annual estimates of the illicit drug situation; an analytical study to establish and quantify the link between illicit drug trafficking and external debt; measures to combat money laundering; and other matters related to study and treatment of the problem of illicit trafficking.

Drug abuse and international law

On 18 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/147.

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking

The General Assembly,

Conscious that the adoption of the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action at the seventeenth special session of the General Assembly, devoted to the question of international co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, was an important step in the harmonization of the efforts of all to combat this scourge of mankind,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Convinced that an intensification of international co-operation and concerted action among States is the fundamental basis for confronting the problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Recognizing that the international fight against illicit trafficking should be pursued in full conformity with the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, and the principles of international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, non-interference in the internal affairs of States, and non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations,

1. Reaffirms that the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking should continue to be based on strict respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, non-interference in the internal affairs of States; and non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations;

2. Calls upon all States to intensify their actions to promote effective co-operation in the efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking, so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving this end, and to refrain from using the issue for political purposes;

3. Affirms that the international fight against drug trafficking should not in any way justify violation of the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly the right of all peoples freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and that every

State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to give due consideration to principles set out in the present resolution in a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

5. Decides to consider at its forty-sixth session the question of respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking, under the item entitled "International action to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking".

Regional co-operation in drug law enforcement

During 1990, the following Meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA) were held: Third Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Africa (Cairo, Egypt, 4-8 June) [E/CN.7/1991/2 & Corr.1]; Third Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Latin America and the Caribbean (Oranjestad, Aruba, 24-28 September) [E/CN.7/1991/3 & Corr.1,2]; and Fifteenth Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, Asia and the Pacific (Beijing, 15-19 October) [E/CN.7/1991/4].

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/15 [YUN 1988, p. 690], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered a December note [E/CN.7/1991/22] on the meetings of HONLEA.

The Commission's attention was drawn to a new approach followed by the HONLEA meetings, which emphasized the identification of urgent issues facing drug law enforcement agencies in the fight against illicit traffic in the various regions and the establishment of working groups to discuss those issues with a view to finding acceptable countermeasures to be implemented at the national and regional levels. By facilitating the consideration of sensitive matters in a direct, informal manner, the new approach had produced valuable results. The Commission was invited to endorse the new approach, recommend ways of further improving the working methods of HONLEA meetings and identify items that the meetings should deal with in the future.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/30.

Establishment of Meeting of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies, European Region

Also on the same date, by decision 1990/219, the Council approved the application of Bahrain for membership in the Sub-Commission.

Chapter XVII

Statistics

In 1990, the United Nations continued its efforts to strengthen international co-operation in the field of statistics.

Reports prepared for the Statistical Commission of the United Nations continued to focus on the development of economic statistics, including the main features of the revised System of National Accounts (SNA) and the further elaboration of social and demographic statistics. In June, the Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination held its twenty-fourth session. It considered, among other things, a revision of SNA; the National Household Survey Capability Programme; the Living Standards Measurement Study and the Social Dimensions of Adjustment Project; and statistical implications of the single market of the European Economic Community and the changes in Eastern Europe.

UN statistical bodies

The Statistical Commission, which meets biennially, is a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council. The Commission did not convene in 1990. Its twenty-sixth session was scheduled for February 1991.

ACC Sub-Committee

The Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) held its twenty-fourth session in 1990 (Vienna, 18-22 June) [ACC/ 1990/PG/6]. Among the issues it considered were: a revision of the System of National Accounts (SNA); co-ordination of technical co-operation in statistics; monitoring achievement of social goals in the 1990s; the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP); the Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS) and the Social Dimensions of Adjustment Project (SDA); science and technology statistics; external debt statistics; general price statistics and the International Comparison Programme (ICP); environment statistics; services statistics; the informal sector; population and housing censuses; civil registration and vital statistics; social statistics and indicators; indicative patterns of consumption; status in employment classification; tourism and migration statistics; and a base year for statistics.

The Sub-Committee also discussed co-ordination and ad hoc statistical inquiries to countries from non-statistical units of organizations and a plan of action to strengthen epidemiological capability and future trend assessment in production and use of health statistics.

Emerging issues and priorities for statistical development, including statistical implications of the changes in Eastern Europe, were also considered, as well as the processing and dissemination of trade statistics; statistical implications of the single market of the European Economic Community; working arrangements among the organizations with respect to collection and compilation of statistics from Member States; and publication and dissemination policy, including co-ordination of statistical data bases.

The Sub-Committee called the attention of ACC to three issues: the statistical implications of changes in Eastern Europe; monitoring the achievement of social goals in the 1990s; and the positive results from co-ordinating household survey programmes.

Economic statistics

National accounts and balances

During 1990, the United Nations continued work on the revised SNA. The main features of the revised SNA were discussed during a round of regional meetings held between June and September, and were considered on the basis of proposals put forward by the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts. These included: integrated presentation of the System; integration of analysis of production versus income and financial analysis; definition of the production boundary; valuation principles; residence and breakdown of domestic sectors; income concepts; further integration of balance sheets and accumulation accounts; asset boundary; financial transactions, transactors and accounts; price and quantity measures; inflation accounting; and final consumption and final consumption expenditure.

The Expert Meeting on the Revision of the System of National Accounts in the Arab World [E/CN.3/1991/10] was held in Tunis, Tunisia, from 11 to 16 June. The experts, in the report of their meeting, stated that the basic issue for developing countries was resource development; therefore greater attention needed to be focused on resource endowment statistics and income statistics dealing with the utilization and allocation of available resources. In addition, there were certain issues that carried great weight in the Arab region and required special treatment in national accounts, including: the refugee issue; the use of the Hijra calendar; Arab investments overseas; the special character of the oil sector and the dominance of a single economic activity; and the informal sector and small industries.

The Economic Commission for Africa Meeting on the System of National Accounts [E/CN.3/1991/7] was held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 16 to 25 July. The report noted that the aim of the revised SNA was to present a system that was conceptually sound and could be applied universally. Nevertheless, from the African point of view, further attention should be given to some of the special concerns of the developing countries and less developed statistical systems. It would be rather difficult for priorities to be treated in the revised SNA, as those could differ from one region to another and from country to country, it was felt. Those were better addressed in handbooks, for example, a planned handbook on enterprise accounting. Another concern of particular interest to developing economies was that of multiple rates of exchange.

Two meetings on the revision of SNA were held in 1990 by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific [E/CN.3/1991/8]: the first, organized for countries of the Asian subregion (Bangkok, Thailand, 15-24 August); the second, for countries of the Pacific subregion (Suva, Fiji, 29 August-7 September). From the regional point of view, participants particularly wanted certain issues incorporated into SNA, which they believed had not been given adequate attention in the review process. Those included: development of regional and quarterly accounts; further breakdown of the household sector by socio-economic groups; development of definitions for the informal sector; and development of productivity measures. Other SNA-related issues of importance to the Pacific subregion included extension of the asset boundary to such areas as fishing stocks and mangrove swamps, and more broadly defined environmental assets, including clean air and water. The report welcomed the efforts of the Statistical Office of the United Nations Secretariat and the World Bank in jointly preparing a handbook on environmental accounting. It stressed that concepts used in the environmental accounts should be as consistent as possible with SNA, but recalled its preference that environmental accounts be developed as satellite accounts, rather than as part of the central national accounts framework. Most participants agreed that the revised SNA provided a much clearer set of conceptual guidelines than the 1968 system, and that the revised system would contribute to the understanding of national accounting, thus facilitating its implementation. Further guidance through handbooks or other technical assistance was still needed because the revised SNA included many new elements, extension of coverage of existing items and new treatments of transactions, on which there was no experience with implementation in the countries of the region or indeed anywhere in the world. It was agreed that more time was needed for countries to study the revised system from the points of view of statisticians and users.

The meeting of the Working Party of the Conference of European Statisticians on the System of National Accounts was held in Geneva from 10 to 13 September [E/CN.3/1991/6]. Of special concern to the region were the problems of countries in transition to a market economy. Participants reported that their countries were advancing rapidly to calculate national accounts on an SNA basis. Most preferred to adopt directly the recommendations of the revised SNA. An obvious problem was the period of overlap between the System of Balances of the National Economy (MPS) and SNA, and how to construct a historical time series on a consistent basis. The easiest part to develop, because it had been largely treated in MPS, related to the production account. Greater difficulty would be experienced with regard to income flows, financial assets and the financial sector in general. Another major common problem flowed from the enormously increased number of producer units-a consequence of privatization and the dismemberment of State enterprises-from which data needed to be collected. That brought with it the problems of sampling and non-response previously not encountered. Countries in transition indicated that they would welcome assistance in carrying through the major changes in their statistics and accounts that the profound changes in their economies implied. For that purpose, handbooks and methodological papers were useful but not alone sufficient. More direct technical assistance and advice was needed, and, in that connection, it was noted that several bilateral co-operation projects had already begun.

The Regional Seminar on National Accounts, convened by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean [E/CN.3/1991/9], was held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 18 to 28 September. With regard to the proposed revision of SNA from the Latin American and Caribbean perspective, there was a general consensus to stress progress made in the conceptual framework, highlighting the integration of flows in the balances, the presentation of integrated accounts by institutional sectors, the introduction of accounting adjustments for the analysis of inflation, and harmonization achieved with other statistical systems. Serious concern was expressed about applying the new system in the short and medium term. The most important factors, which had also affected the implementation of the existing version, included: the difficulties encountered in the area of basic statistics; the need for staff training of technical personnel; the growing need to concentrate on short-term analysis, instead of maintaining, improving or expanding the System itself; and the difficulty in implementing instruments for such analysis, a difficulty aggravated by the inflationary process taking place in most countries of the region.

In December, the Secretary-General submitted a progress report [E/CN.3/1991/5] on the revision of SNA. The report reaffirmed that the original objectives of the SNA review programme were: simplification and clarification; further harmonization with other related systems of statistics; and updating SNA to fit new circumstances. The Commission commended the preliminary draft of selected chapters of the revised SNA, and agreed that the revised System should contain an accounting framework and a glossary. The report provided information on the past and future work programme of the revision of SNA; described the main outstanding issues and the review of the revised SNA features by the regional commissions; explained the concerns, needs and requirements for a successful implementation of SNA, as identified in regional meetings; and included points for the Commission's discussion.

Price statistics

Following the 1989 meeting of the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on ICP [YUN 1989, p. 733], considerable efforts were undertaken by member organizations to define a strategy for the implementation of phase VI of ICP. At a series of informal consultations during 1990, many aspects of ICP were discussed, among them, core-country versus core-product method, analytical needs, software development and related processing issues, postponement of the reference year (originally set at 1990), financial resources, and co-operation among international organizations. Those discussions led to a decision to hold a conference on ICP to review those and related issues, so that clear conclusions on the scope and nature of ICP phase VI could be reached. The Conference, entitled "Twenty-five Years of ICP: A Review and Future Plans", was held in Philadelphia, United States, from 1 to 3 August. It was sponsored by the World Bank in co-operation with the Statistical Office of the UN Secretariat, and hosted by the University of Pennsylvania. With regard to ICP phase VI, the outcome of the Conference was a joint agreement to work in close co-operation to resolve the undetermined methodology, work programme and timetable in order to implement phase VI as rapidly as possible. It was understood that regions would produce their own comparisons with the ultimate objective of a timely global comparison.

In a report on price statistics [E/CN.3/1991/17], the Secretary-General provided information on ICP, including the finalization of phase V (reference year 1985) of ICP comparisons, and progress in implementing phase VI comparisons, both at regional and global levels, as well as the status of a draft handbook on ICP. The report also described methodological as well as organizational and financial issues for phase VI and proposed points for the Commission's discussion.

Service statistics

In December, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.3/1991/15] to the Statistical Commission on work done by national and international agencies in the field of service statistics. It was based on inquiries into data compilation and methodological development work and materials presented at the various meetings of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics. The report represented an initial effort to document, in a general manner, the situation in service statistics at the national and international levels. It described work by national statistical agencies in data compilation, methodological development and countries' experiences; provided an account of the Voorburg Group's efforts to advance work in service statistics; contained statements on the initiatives of international agencies in the field of service statistics; presented proposals for future work; and included points for discussion.

The Voorburg Group, a co-operative effort among volunteer national and international statistical agencies to address problems associated with data gaps and conceptual issues in service statistics, held its fifth meeting in 1990 in Paris, from 1 to 5 October, as a follow-up to its 1989 meeting [YUN 1989, p. 733]. Its report [E/CN.3/1991/16] contained a model survey for the collection of data on computer services. The Voorburg Group was of the opinion that for each service industry there should be a model of production, trade and accumulation, and that the value of its output, expressed in Central Product Classification (CPC) classes, could be decomposed into price and volume components. The model survey, presented in the form of data collection modules, was designed to test product classes of CPC and the industry classes of the International Standard Industrial Classification ((WC), and to provide performance measures of the computer services industry. The survey's results, presented at the Paris meeting, showed that in data collection, the highest priorities were assigned to services' contribution to gross domestic product (GDP), employment and annual growth rates. Statistics on the volume growth of services, price developments, and investment in service industries and in services (research and development and education) were also considered important aspects of service statistics. The following services were frequently selected as growth leaders for the 1990s: telecommunications, computer services, health, business services, financial intermediation and transportation.

Industrial statistics

In October, the Secretary-General reported [E/CN.3/1991/18] on the World Programme of Industrial Statistics. The report examined the effectiveness of the 1983 World Programme in achieving its goals and compared the outcome of the 1983 Programme, the third in a series sponsored every ten years by the Statistical Commission, with that of 1973. The objectives of the 1983 Programme were to encourage bench-mark inquiries and to guide national industrial census-taking. The report also contained suggestions for the 1993 Programme and included points for discussion.

With regard to participation in the Programme, the report stated that there had been a slight overall improvement in the level of country participation between 1973 and 1983. For 1983, 28 countries were able to provide data covering all units of the programme, compared with 24 in 1973. Overall, a total of 66 countries participated in the 1983 Programme, compared with 54 in the 1973 Programme. Of those participating, only 49 produced data that conformed with the concept of the Programme, in terms of establishment coverage or item content, or at the level of industrial detail required.

Using as an indicator the GDP originating in industry for 1980 in current United States dollars for each country, the country coverage attained in association with the Programme accounted for 72 per cent of world GDP originating in industry, with 75 per cent of GDP originating in industry for the developed countries and 61 per cent of the corresponding value for developing countries.

There was a wide range of coverage across the developing regions, varying from 97 per cent for Asia and the Pacific to 10 per cent for Africa. The corresponding figures for Western Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean were 14 and 75 per cent, respectively.

It was proposed in the report that the latest revision of the International Recommendations for Industrial Statistics [Sales No. E.83.XVII.8] be retained as the core document for the next round of the World Programme. With that approach, efforts and resources could be directed towards reinforcing the basic elements of the integrated industrial statistics programme. Relevant documentation would consist of short working papers or monographs on specific topics, to be prepared directly for the consideration of national statistical offices and for use in training workshops. At a later time, after review and revision of the working papers, in the light of practical experience, they would be incorporated into a further revision of international recommendations. International efforts for the next round, the report proposed, should be directed towards efforts that would directly strengthen the planning and implementation of industrial statistics programmes at the national level.

International economic classifications

A report [E/CN.3/1991/14] on the progress of work on the International Classification of Status in Employment (ICSE) provided a review of ICSE and national practices in censuses and surveys submitted by the International Labour Office to the Statistical Commission. The report described the units to be classified by the status-in-employment variable and the active population covered by it; discussed the possible conceptual basis for a revised and expanded ICSE; and presented ideas for defining status in employment and delineating categories and subcategories of ICSE, including the treatment of borderline groups. It also outlined issues relating to the implementation of the Classification and provided points for the Commission's discussion.

Environment statistics

In October, the Secretary-General reported to the Statistical Commission on progress made in the development of environmental statistics [E/CN.3/1991/23]. The report described the preparation of technical reports on concepts and methods of environment statistics, the development of environmental accounting, and outcomes of a May meeting of the Intergovernmental Working Group on the Advancement of Environment Statistics. It further considered the main issues stemming from the Third Consultation on the Co-ordination of International Environmental Data Collection held in March, described current activities in the compilation and dissemination of international environment statistics and technical co-operation activities, and suggested points for the Commission's discussion. The report contained a proposed programme of work for the Statistical Office of the UN Secretariat, which was to assist the international community in the assessment of the interrelations between environment and development through the development and compilation of environmental and related socio-economic data. It stated that increased concerns with environmental issues, both in developed and developing countries, had created demands for a broad range of environment statistics and indicators, including integrated economic and environmental accounting. Annexed to the report were two Frameworks for the Development of Environment Statistics one on human settlements, and the other on the natural environment.

The Secretary-General reported in September [E/CN.3/1991/22] on the methodology of environment statistics developed under the work programme of the Conference of European Statisticians (CES). It provided a brief history of the work of the Conference in the field of environment statistics; described the development by the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) of standard concepts, definitions and classifications; described the methodological discussions within the framework of CES; and proposed points for discussion by the Statistical Commission. With regard to perspectives for future work of the Conference, the report stated that they would have to be derived from several circumstances. The first was the changing context of international co-operation in Europe in general, and of statistical multilateral international co-operation in particular. The Conference had started to determine its future role in relation to the universal changes, and environment statistics were retained on the short list of three work areas being given top priority. The second aspect was the ongoing concern over concentrating on work methods that were particularly cost-effective, for both the United Nations Secretariat and Member States. 'That trend seemed to favour data work, work that was not excessively dependent on the holding of international meetings. As a last aspect, the past record of the work of the Conference was to be taken into account in such a way that particularly successful types of projects would be strengthened. As a result, the conceptual work on statistical nomenclatures would probably be extended to further areas. Taking those circumstances together, it could be expected that the development of an international data service would become more important in future work. In addition, standard concepts and, where necessary, classifications would be finalized where drafts existed and would be developed in new areas. The new areas already included in the work programme, but not yet tackled, were marine water quality, chemicals from an environmental point of view, noise and radioactivity. It could be expected that a more systematic coverage of the interface between the economy and the environment would also be attempted in the not-too-distant future. Finally, the entire area of socio-environmental interrelations was as yet untouched. In that field, perhaps, statistics on environmental health would become a starting point for conceptual work.

In three annexes, the report contained Categories of the ECE Standard Statistical Classification of Land Use; Categories of the ECE Standard Statistical Classification of Water Use; and Categories of the ECE Standard Statistical Classification of Ambient Air Quality.

Social and demographic statistics

Social indicators

A report [E/CN.3/1991/20] describing progress made in the development of a co-ordinated UN system data base for selected social statistics and indicators was submitted to the Statistical Commission by the Secretary-General. It described an integrated programme for monitoring and compiling social and economic indicators, outlined the need for common social statistics and indicators, discussed statistical and measurement issues, and suggested points for the Commission's discussion. The report discussed progress in the development of a monitoring programme specifically within the context of human development concerns identified in the programmes and mandates of the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund and the World Health Organization. It stated that the monitoring programme would seek to further expand opportunities for collection, compilation, analysis and filling gaps in key social statistics which were seen to be relevant for assessing progress in reaching social goals, especially in developing countries. An effective monitoring programme must ensure: appropriate statistical capabilities and programmes at the national level, including data collection, processing, compilation, dissemination and analysis; effective review and co-ordination of methods in selecting and defining needed indicators and filling gaps, and development of underlying statistical methodologies to ensure their validity, comparability and timeliness of results; an effective programme for analysis and dissemination of comparable indicators and supporting documentation at national, regional and international levels; and effective mobilization and co-ordination of bilateral and multilateral resources for technical co-operation.

The report concluded that progress towards the achievement of social and human development goals by the year 2000 could only be monitored through the collection and dissemination of valid, reliable and timely statistical information. The measurement effort needed was complex and technically demanding. It would require dedicated efforts on the part of national and international statisticians, extensive investments in human and financial resources, well-focused co-ordination, continuing development of statistical infrastructure, and innovative techniques for measuring changes and monitoring progress.

Patterns of consumption

In October, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development submitted a report [E/CN.3/1991/21] to the Statistical Commission on country case studies it had carried out and on preparations for the planned international statistical meeting on indicators of patterns of consumption. The report was part of the project on qualitative indicators of development [YUN 1989, p. 735], which was intended to help orient national development and support international co-operation by: assisting Governments to formulate and follow policies better geared to the well-being of the population; promoting the evaluation of progress; promoting the application of concerted objectives; and providing early warnings regarding conditions that demanded attention and action. The report described the meaning of qualitative indicators as the percentage of a population having a defined quality, such as literacy, or meeting a given standard of adequacy with regard to some condition of living such as food consumption. The report also covered: data sources for qualitative indicators; indicators of living conditions such as health, nutrition, housing, clothing, education, income and employment; disaggregation; data processing and organizational questions; and preparations for the 1991 international statistical meeting on indicators of patterns of consumption. The report was based on country case studies for Côte d'Ivoire, India, Kenya and Morocco.

With regard to the international statistical meeting on indicators of patterns of consumption, representatives of nine agencies and UN offices met in Geneva on 16 May to discuss preparations. It was decided that the meeting should take place in Rabat, Morocco, in April 1991. Participants would include selected experts on the methodology of measuring levels of living, representatives of UN offices and specialized agencies working in the field, a small number of policy makers and senior statisticians from developing countries, and members of the Statistical Commission.

Civil registration and vital statistics

A progress report [E/CN.3/1991/19] on civil registration and vital statistics was submitted to the Statistical Commission by the Secretary-General. The report stated that since 1981, when the Statistical Commission last considered a progress report on the matter [YUN 1981, p. 1071], the demand for current demographic statistics had substantially increased. It discussed activities carried out at the global, regional and national levels since 1981, as well as the work of non-governmental organizations; focused on issues and advances in the improvement of civil registration and vital statistics systems, including support provided by the United Nations to Member States, upon request, over the previous 10 years; and described technical co-operation and future needs. The report gave a short description of the new International Programme for Accelerating the Improvement of Vital Statistics and Civil Registration Systems, which featured a new approach in technical co-operation by shifting the emphasis away from pilot studies and demonstration to solving specific problems existing in the current vital statistics and civil registration systems of the country. The report also suggested points for the Commission's discussion.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

A report [E/CN.3/1991/26] on progress in implementation and co-ordination of NHSCP was submitted to the Statistical Commission by the Secretary-General. It reviewed progress in programme implementation, co-ordination with other international programmes, training and preparation of technical studies, programme management and evaluation, and the work programme for 1991-1992. The report included points for the Commission's discussion.

As of October 1990, the number of countries participating in NHSCP was 45, of which 15 were new entrants, having joined the Programme during 1989-1990. Twelve countries had been transferred to the maintenance phase, having completed one or more phases of the Programme or participated in it for a minimum of five years, and having attained reasonable ability to continue NHSCP on the basis of their own resources, subject to minimal external assistance without a formal project. In addition, project proposals had been prepared for 23 countries.

World Bank initiatives

In December, the World Bank submitted a report [E/CN.3/1991/27] to the Statistical Commission on its initiatives in the design of two permanent integrated household surveys. The report updated the Bank's presentation [YUN 1989, p. 737] to the Commission in 1989, provided information on the LSMS and SDA programmes, and included points for discussion. The report stated that the LSMS and SDA programmes had further evolved over the past few years. The conceptual and analytical frameworks had been refined to reflect country needs, and the survey strategies and instruments had been tested in a wide variety of country circumstances in different regions of the world. The Bank was of the view that implementation of the LSMS and SDA programmes would call for strong co-operative measures at all levels, and it proposed to continue its interactions with national governments, donors and the specialized agencies.

In order to promote the methodologies it had developed in a flexible manner in different regions of the world, it would attempt to disseminate as widely as possible the technical documentation currently available for use by member governments.

Special issues

In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the Statistical Commission a report [E/CN.3/1991/3] on increasing user awareness of the value of statistical outputs and services. It was based on a questionnaire sent to 47 selected Member States, and another questionnaire sent to 15 specialized agencies and international organizations, and the statistical divisions of the five regional commissions. By 20 August, 32 countries had responded to the questionnaire, as had 12 international organizations, four regional commissions and the Statistical Office of the UN Secretariat. The report discussed user awareness and the use of statistics, national and international experiences in user awareness, and strategies for improving user awareness. The Secretary-General also suggested points for the Commission's discussion.

The results of the evaluations by national organizations indicated very low awareness on the part of the public at large.

Other statistical activities

Methodological work

In October, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.3/1991/24] to the Statistical Commission on the general development and integration of methodological work. Its main purpose was to keep the Commission informed of developments in methodological work in certain fields that were important but did not require separate documents at that time. Thus it described methodological work in the areas of international classifications; energy statistics; international trade and transport statistics, including the Automated System for Customs Data (ASYCUDA); population and housing censuses; housing and human settlements statistics; and statistical programmes for social indicators. It also summarized the methodological work programme of the Statistical Office of the UN Secretariat.

Chapter XVIII

Institutional arrangements

The Economic and Social Council continued during 1990 to review its structure and functioning. In July, the Council invited its President to hold informal consultations on the review of measures agreed upon for the revitalization of the Council. It also agreed to hold a special high-level meeting on major policy themes in 1991. The General Assembly, in December, decided to reconvene in a resumed session in April 1991 for in-depth consideration and negotiation of proposals for the restructuring of the United Nations in the economic and social fields. It also adopted new proposals for the revitalization of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its two regular sessions in 1990, gave priority consideration to development and international economic co-operation; the impact of recent developments in East-West relations; African economic recovery and development; and operational activities for development.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) continued efforts to harmonize system-wide activities and programmes.

Restructuring questions

Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/114 [YUN 1989, p. 740], the Secretary-General submitted a 22 May report [E/1990/75] on the revitalization of the Council. The report addressed questions relating to the Council's function regarding policy formulation, monitoring, operational activities for development and co-ordination, working methods, organization of work and secretariat support. The Secretary-General suggested that the Council should take into consideration the usefulness of the general discussion and time limitation when considering future arrangements for its in-depth consideration of major policy themes. It should also consider, he said, whether more structured preparations would be required for future informal exchanges, and the usefulness of inviting two or three eminent scholars or knowledgeable persons to participate in the discussions. In its review of the multi-year work programme, the Council should bear in mind the need to maintain a balance between social and economic issues, the work programmes of the organs and organizations of the UN system and the progress made in the revitalization of the Council. There was a need to reach a clear understanding in regard to the modality for the Council's in-depth consideration of major policy themes and urgent and emerging issues. Any arrangement should be flexible and practical so as to assist the Council in achieving progress. The Council might consider changes to its work programme to accommodate the in-depth consideration, which constituted an addition to its work programme, within its regular schedule and without extending its regular session. It could consider themes pertaining to social questions at its first regular session and economic themes at its second regular session. The in-depth consideration should be distinct from the regular proceedings of the Council. The Council could also convene one ministerial-level meeting on a major policy theme each year, which would also alternate between social and economic questions. The Secretary-General's report also discussed urgent and emerging issues to be considered at a special session.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that while there were positive developments in the revitalization of the Council initiated two years ago, including reorganization of working arrangements, there was still a need to change the perception of the role of the Council so as to enhance its effectiveness. Governments, he said, should make better use of the Council, the Secretariat should provide more analytical and focused documentation, and the Council should give more professional and functional consideration to issues on its agenda. The Council should therefore allow the present arrangements to be consolidated before reviewing the process further, possibly in 1992. He repeated his suggestion that the Council should summarize the major conclusions of the general discussion in order to identify policy divergences and convergences among Member States and agree upon broad policy guidelines in the overall context of development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/69.

Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the relationship between the process of revitalization of the Council and the restructuring of the United Nations intergovernmental machinery and secretariat support in the economic and social sectors, as further spelt out in General Assembly resolution 44/103,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the revitalization of the Economic and Social Council, and of the views expressed by the Member States on the subject,

Bearing in mind that the Secretary-General will, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 43/174 and 44/103, paragraph 5, submit a report on the revitalization of the United Nations in the economic and social fields to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session, in order to facilitate a further consideration and appropriate action on the question,

1. Stresses the need for the full and speedy implementation of the provisions of Council resolutions 1988/77 and 1989/114;

2. Decides to review the implementation of the measures agreed upon for the revitalization of the Council, pursuant to its responsibilities for promoting international economic and social co-operation and in accordance with the relevant articles of the Charter of the United Nations, at its second regular session of 1992;

3. Invites the President of the Council to undertake informal consultations open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations, on all relevant issues pertaining to the review of the implementation of the measures agreed upon for the revitalization of the Council, and to submit an interim report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1991.

Documentation

The task force on documentation of the Economic and Social Council, established in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 745] to consider what documentation might be redundant, had lost its usefulness or could be issued less frequently, submitted its recommendations [E/1990/13] on 17 January to the Council.

The Council, in decision 1990/201 of 9 February, requested the task force to prepare a final report for consideration at its second regular session under the item entitled "Revitalization of the Economic and Social Council".

Responding to that request, the task force recommended to the Council, in a 6 June report [E/1990/93], the adoption of measures to improve the quality and reduce the volume of documentation as an integral part of the revitalization process of the Council. The task force suggested that the Council should propose priorities for the preparation and issuance of documentation to ensure timely submission to the Council and avoid overwhelming it with excessive documentation. It might also extend the practice of hearing oral reports on questions relating to special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance and other matters. As a general rule, the Council should have before it in considering an agenda item only the report of the subsidiary body concerned, the relevant consolidated report and the relevant reports requested. In submitting their reports, the functional commissions and other subsidiary bodies of the Council should ensure that their reports were in a format that would facilitate the Council's deliberations; that they did not exceed 32 pages and were accompanied by an executive summary; and that the recommendations in the report were presented in the form of draft proposals. It was further proposed that they should review current documentation to determine which had become redundant, lost their usefulness or could be issued less frequently, and restraint should be exercised in making requests for new documentation. The Secretariat should adhere to the 24-page limit for documentation.

On 27 July, the Council, by decision 1990/272, endorsed the recommendations of the task force on documentation.

Restructuring of economic and social sectors

Report of Secretary-General. Responding to General Assembly resolution 44/103 [YUN 1989, p. 743], the Secretary-General submitted a 20 November report [A/45/714] on the UN intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. In presenting his ideas for reform and restructuring of the United Nations in those sectors, he said the views of Member States and UN bodies had been taken into account. Of particular importance was the high level of commitment and political support of Member States for future improvements in the functioning of UN machinery and their assertion that the object of the ongoing reform effort was not to seek financial savings but to make the Organization more responsive to the needs of the international community. The role of the Council in addressing major international policy issues could be significantly enhanced if the General Assembly assigned to the Council responsibility for the preparatory process of international conferences on specific issues. Its coherence and effectiveness could be improved by enhancing its role in connection with system-wide or cross-sectoral programmes and activities. Discussion at the level of subsidiary bodies should move towards greater specialization to enable the Council to begin consideration of substantive questions in the light of their cross-sectoral links, thus enhancing its co-ordination role. There was a need to transform a number of the subsidiary bodies into expert groups specialized in technical aspects, leaving to the Council the political, global and cross-sectoral dimensions. For the UN intergovernmental machinery to become more effective, there was a need to address the fragmentation of issues and proliferation of institutions. An improved modality for considering substantive sectoral questions might assist in achieving better co-ordination and an integrated approach at the intergovernmental and also the national level.

Regarding the Secretariat, the Secretary-General suggested that pending agreement on the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery, a number of steps could be taken to strengthen the capacity of the Secretariat to address problems already identified and to deal with emerging issues. They included enhancing the United Nations capacity to assist intergovernmental bodies effectively to address economic and social issues; strengthening UN research and analysis capacity; identifying and bringing to the attention of Member States emerging problems at the global, regional and national levels; achieving greater clarity in the responsibilities of the Organization's various units in the economic and social sectors; ensuring greater interaction and cross-fertilization between operational activities and research and analytical capacity; and enhancing the policy planning capacity of the Secretariat.

To enhance the United Nations activities in the area of technology, the work of the Centre for Science and Technology should be closely related to that of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Centre on Transnational Corporations, especially in the areas of investment, trade and technology transfer. To carry out its mandate in the economic and social fields, the United Nations needed the active support and collaboration of the specialized agencies and programmes of the system. Co-ordination must also be enhanced to ensure that the system could respond to the challenges of the future in a coherent and effective manner.

The report stated that the effective and systematic restructuring of the Organization required solid financial support and the increasing use of extrabudgetary resources to finance many of the Organization's important activities had to be reviewed. The Organization must be in a position to fulfil new expectations and to meet existing responsibilities effectively and must be provided with the necessary long-term financial security.

III. Recommendations concerning organizational matters

Pre-sessional documentation

1. Pre-sessional documentation should be circulated six weeks in advance in all working languages.

Introductory statements by Secretariat officials

2. Texts of introductory statements by Secretariat officials should be circulated to delegations in the original language and in the other official languages, if possible, at least three days in advance of the introduction of the item. Oral introductory statements should be limited to 15 minutes and should only highlight areas of special interest.

3. Secretariat officials should, at the end of the debate on a particular item, respond to matters raised and to questions asked.

Statements by delegations

4. In accordance with rule 106 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly and paragraph 22 of decision 34/401 on the rationalization of the procedures and organization of the General Assembly, at the beginning of each session the Chairman should propose to the Third Committee the limitation of the time to be allowed to speakers. While it is understood that this decision will have to be applied with a degree of flexibility, delegations are encouraged to exercise self-discipline in this respect.

5. Copies of interventions made by delegations will be distributed by the conference officers. If a delegation is in a position to provide 200 copies, they may be circulated to all delegations during delivery of the statement. If only a limited number of copies can be provided, they may be given to the conference officer for placement at the back of the conference room.

Programme of work

6. The Secretariat should propose the programme of work of the Third Committee on the basis of experience gained at previous sessions of the Committee so that sufficient time is allocated for the consideration of a given item.

Questions for further consideration

7. Further consideration should be given to:

(a) The question of inviting eminent persons to address the Third Committee on the world social situation or other issues. It was considered that the experience of other Committees with that matter should be reviewed;

(c) The relationship between the work of the Second Committee and that of the Third Committee.

Report of Working Group. The Working Group on the Rationalization of the Work of the Third Committee submitted a 3 December report [A/C.3/45/L.100] which considered all aspects of the work programme of the Committee, including its substantive agenda, administrative and organizational matters and the role of the Secretariat in facilitating the Committee's work. It agreed that the primary focus of the rationalization exercise would not simply be to reduce the Committee's agenda, but to reorganize its work so as to improve the quality of debates and the impact of its deliberations and discussions. It agreed that any decision to biennialize resolutions or items must be part of a general agreement encompassing all items on the Committee's agenda, but delegations would not be prevented from submitting resolutions. Resolutions would take into account international years, decades, world conferences, congresses, anniversaries, and reviews and appraisals. It was also agreed that a longer period between reports and a reduction in the number of requests for reports would enhance their quality and substance. Reports of treaty bodies would be submitted to the Assembly annually and resolutions on those reports adopted biennially. In alternate years, the Committee would take note of the report, unless substantive action was deemed appropriate. Requests for status reports on treaties should be made biennially, the Working Group said, and should be incorporated in the substantive resolution concerning the reports of the treaty bodies. The items on racism and racial discrimination and self-determination would continue to be discussed jointly. The programme of work of the Committee would be reviewed and approved annually to allow for adjustments.

The detailed recommendations of the Working Group were set out in three sections which contained the proposed structure of the Committee's agenda, a draft biennial work programme for 1991 and 1992 and further recommendations concerning organizational matters.

Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council in 1990 held its organizational session in New York on 17 January and from 6 to 9 February. Its first regular session was also held in New York from 1 to 25 May. The first part of its second regular session took place in Geneva from 4 to 27 July.

On 26 July, by decision 1990/264, the Council decided to resume its second regular session of 1990, at a date to be determined, in order to consider, inter alia, the relevant sections of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) on its resumed thirtieth session, the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) on its special session and the report of the Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

The first part of the second regular session of the Council was resumed in New York on 9 November.

Agendas

On 6 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted a five-item agenda for its organizational session.

By decision 1990/208 of 1 and 3 May, the Council adopted the agenda [E/1990/65] for its first regular session, and decided to include the items of the revival of the Library of Alexandria and a new item entitled "International co-operation in the elimination of the consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant." It deferred to its second regular session consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on a United Nations system-wide action plan on drug abuse control, together with relevant chapters of the report of CPC on its thirtieth session, and to consider it under the item entitled 'Co-ordination questions'. The Council also approved the organization of work of the session. By decision 1990/201 of the same date, the Council decided that at its second regular session, in its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, it would focus on the issue of resources for development and the external indebtedness of the developing countries.

On 25 May, by decision 1990/258, the Council approved the provisional agenda [E/1990/L.25] and the organization of work for its second regular session. It included a new sub-item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries" under agenda item 7 and decided to consider the question of the membership of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees under item 15.

On 4 July, by decision 1990/259, the Council adopted the agenda [E/1990/92] and approved the organization of work of its second regular session and decided to consider in plenary the question of the implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Co-operation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries.

(For agendas, see APPENDIX IV.)

Substantive session

Work programmes for 1990 and 1991

At its organizational sessions on 6 and 9 February, the Economic and Social Council considered the proposed basic programme of work of the Council [E/1990/1 & Add.1] for 1990 and 1991, as submitted by the Secretary-General. The Council on 9 February adopted decision 1990/201.

In section I of the decision, the Council approved the list of items for consideration in 1990-8 items for the first regular session and 14 for the second regular session-and allocated the items to its sessional committees and plenary meetings. The Council decided to consider at its first regular session a proposal of Sweden [E/1990/19] concerning the question of an international convention on the rights of disabled people. It would also consider the advisory opinion delivered by the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, which was transmitted to the Council by the Secretary-General [E/1990/15]. The Council decided that, at its second regular session, it would focus its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, on the issue of resources for development and the external indebtedness of the developing countries. It would also consider the report of the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on the second part of its thirty-sixth session and to authorize the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the General Assembly the Board's report on the first part of its thirty-seventh session. The second session would also address the question of the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries. The Council authorized the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the Assembly the report of the United Nations University. It included in the agenda of the second regular session the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme; damage caused by torrential rain and flooding in Democratic Yemen and Djibouti; and the report of the task force on documentation. Under the item on regional co-operation, the Council would consider, on an exceptional basis, inter-regional co-operation in international trade facilitation and in monitoring and assessment of illegal traffic in toxic and dangerous products and wastes. It decided to conduct its annual policy review of operational activities for development for 1990 and to reiterate its request that its subsidiary bodies highlight policy recommendations and decisions resulting from deliberations for consideration and action by the Council.

By section II of the decision, the Council took note of a list of questions for inclusion in its 1991 work programme.

Multi-year work programme

At its organizational session, the Economic and Social Council considered the Secretary-General's report [E/1990/14] on the implementation of Council resolutions 1988/77 and 1989/114, pursuant to 1989 General Assembly resolution 44/103 [YUN 1989, p. 7431]. The report discussed implementation of a multi-year work programme, modalities for in-depth consideration of major themes, organization of the work of the Council, the format of the report of the Council, issue-oriented consolidated reports, a consolidated note on General Assembly decisions in economic and social fields and Secretariat support for the Council. An annex to the report listed the relevant major programmes and the programme structure of the medium-term plan for 1992-1997.

The report proposed that the Council limit its consideration to a maximum of three themes each year: one at the first regular session and two at the second regular session. Under transitional arrangements to be agreed upon for 1990 and 1991, operational activities for development would be considered at the second regular session in 1990, and poverty eradication and the implementation of the international development strategy would be the themes of the first and second regular sessions of 1991. A six-year work programme for the in-depth discussion of major themes was proposed for the period 1992-1997 on a two-year roll-over basis. A number of themes were suggested for the Council's consideration. It was also proposed that the Council set aside a specific segment of its regular sessions for the consideration of major policy themes with high-level participation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 9 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1990/205.

Implementation of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1988/77 and 1989/114

At its 4th plenary meeting, on 9 February 1990, the Economic and Social Council, stressing the importance of full implementation of its resolutions 1988/77 of 29 July 1988 and 1989/114 of 28 July 1989, on the revitalization of the Council, agreed on the following:

1. In respect of the years 1990 and 1991, the Council decided:

(a) To hold discussions in 1990 on the following issue: "The impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular, on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic co-operation";

The discussions would be carried out in accordance with paragraph 22 of Council resolution 1989/114. Accordingly, the Council shall devote one day at its second regular session of 1990, following the general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, to an informal exchange of views among members of the Council, with the active participation of the executive heads of organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, on this theme. The discussions would assist the Council in preparing for a high-level in-depth consideration of the theme in the context of its multi-year work programme over a period of two days in 1991;

(b) In connection with the major policy theme, in accordance with paragraph 2 (a) (iii) of Council resolution 1988/77, to discuss in 1991 as an urgent and emerging issue the following: "The impact of the recent evolution of East-West relations on the growth of the world economy, in particular, on the economic growth and development of the developing countries, as well as on international economic co-operation";

The discussion of this theme shall be at a special meeting at an appropriately high level, without excluding the ministerial level, which shall be held on 4 and 5 July 1991, during the second regular session of the Council. The special meeting shall be separate from the regular proceedings of the Council and precede its general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments. In this connection, the Council shall:

- (i) Invite the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Council, to take the necessary measures to ensure adequate preparation for the special meeting, including the possibility of proposing at the second regular session of 1990 appropriate modalities for that purpose;
- (ii) Also invite all the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the successful outcome of the special meeting.

2. In respect of the years 1992 to 1994, the Council established, on a provisional basis, the following indicative multi-year work programme for the in-depth consideration of major policy themes during those years, which would be considered in the context of a high-level special meeting of the Council and a review of the current sessional arrangements. The list of themes would be reviewed annually and adjusted on a roll-over basis as necessary and as stipulated in the relevant paragraphs of Council resolutions 1988/77 and 1989/114. In reviewing such a work programme, the Council should bear in mind the need to maintain a balance between social and economic issues, the work programmes of the organs and organizations of the United Nations system and the progress made in the revitalization of the Council;

The international trade system and its impact on the development of the developing countries;

Eradication of poverty in the developing countries, including the impact of structural adjustment programmes on vulnerable groups;

1993

Environment and development;

Population, development and socio-economic indicators;

1994

Technology and industrialization in the development process of the developing countries;

International co-operation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs.

3. The Council decided to request the President of the Council, in the context of the above, to continue his consultations between the organizational and the second regular sessions of 1990, on all relevant matters concerning the revitalization of the Council.

Economic and Social Council decision 1990/205

Adopted without vote

Draft by President (E/1990/L.15/Add.2), based on informal consultations; agenda item 3 (a).

In resolution 1990/68 of 27 July, the Council invited its President to convene a one-day preparatory meeting to precede the special high-level meeting of the Council in 1991.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/182 of 21 December, invited all Member States and observer States to be represented at the special high-level meeting of the Council at the ministerial level and invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Economic and Social Council, to ensure adequate preparation of the meeting.

Report for 1990

The work of the Economic and Social Council at its organizational, first and second regular and resumed second sessions during 1990 was summarized in its annual report to the General Assembly [A/45/3/Rev.1].

On 21 December, by decision 45/453, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, took note of chapters I, III (section B) and VI (sections B and C) of the report of the Council.

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 45/438, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, took note of the report of the Council.

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

Requests from NGOs for hearings

The Committee on NGOs met on 30 April 1990 to hear requests from NGOs in category I consultative status to address the Economic and Social Council or its sessional committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda. The Committee recommended that six be heard [E/1990/63]. A meeting on 3 July recommended a further six NGOs [E/1990/98].

The Council approved the latter request on 5 July, by decision 1990/259.

Co-ordination in the UN system

ACC activities

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination held two regular sessions in 1990 (Vienna, 2-4 May; New York, 22-23 October) [E/1991/42 & Add.1, 2].

During the year, ACC gave priority to seven substantive issues: development and international economic co-operation; the impact of recent evolution in East-West relations; African economic recovery and development; environment and development; drug abuse control; women and development; and operational activities for development. ACC also took action in response to a number of other issues, including the prevention and control of AIDS, the International Conference on Nutrition, the Chernobyl accident and assistance to Namibia. One goal of ACC was to ensure that the organizations of the UN system contributed in an effective manner to the successful conclusion of important intergovernmental negotiations and deliberations dealing with development and international economic co-operation. It highlighted the role of the United Nations in facilitating the progress of change in East-West relations as well as the lack of resources to respond fully to requests for assistance. It also considered the impact of those changes on multilateral co-operation and expressed its determination to ensure that the international community continued to give priority to those developing countries most in need of assistance.

ACC reviewed major initiatives and actions by the UN system in the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development (1986-1990), and concluded that co-ordinated support by the international community and by the UN system must be accelerated beyond the Programme of Action. It also devoted considerable attention to a range of issues related to the environment, including preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in 1992. ACC also supported the activities of the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme in preparation for negotiations for the development of a framework convention on climate change. The Committee prepared the UN System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control (see PART THREE, Chapter XVI), and adopted a statement recognizing the need for the international community to accelerate the pace of progress in the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 937]. In response to requests from Member States for more comprehensive and transparent information on the activities of the organizations of the United Nations, ACC reconvened its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (CCSQ) (Programme Matters). With regard to personnel issues, the comprehensive review of conditions of employment of staff in the Professional and higher categories was completed. Through its Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Financial and Budgetary Questions), ACC addressed the financial situation of the UN system, budgeting methods, the cost of health insurance and support costs. It reiterated its concern regarding arrears in contributions and noted the resulting programmatic consequences which jeopardized international co-operation in the political, economic, technical and social fields. ACC's principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (New York, 12-15 February, 8-10 and 23 October; Geneva, 19 July; Vienna, 9-11 April and 4 May); CCAQ (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (seventy-second session, New York, 26 February-16 March; Geneva, 2-27 July); CCAQ (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (seventy-second session, Paris, 19-23 March; seventy-third session, New York, 10-14 September) CCSQ (Programme Matters) (Geneva, 11-13 July); CCSQ (Operational Activities) (first regular session, Geneva, 2-5 April; second regular session, New York, 2-4 October); Informal Joint Working Group of CCSQ (Programme Matters) and CCAQ (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (New York, 17-19 September).

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Ad hoc inter-agency meeting on co-ordination in matters relating to international drug abuse control (Vienna, 5 February; Geneva, 12-14 September); ad hoc inter-agency meeting on women (Vienna, 12-13 March); Sub-Committee on Nutrition (sixteenth session, Paris, 19-23 February; seventeenth session, Geneva, 24-26 July); Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy (ninth session, New York, 26-27 March and 2 April); Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives (nineteenth session, Geneva, 26-29 March); Task Force on Rural Development (eighteenth session, Rome, 2-4 May); Task Force on Science and Technology for Development (eleventh session, New York, 7-9 May); ad hoc inter-agency working group on demographic estimates and projections (sixteenth session, New York, 6-8 June); Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities (twenty-fourth session, Vienna, 18-22 June); Joint United Nations Information Committee (sixteenth session, Geneva, 21-22 June); ad hoc inter-agency meeting on outer space activities (Rome, 26-28 September); Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources (eleventh session, Geneva, 3-5 October); inter-agency meeting on United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (eighth session, Vienna, 5-7 December).

Report for 1989

The ACC annual overview report for 1989 [E/1990/18] was considered by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) at its May/June session [A/45/16].

The Committee agreed that the ACC report should be more forward-looking and provide action-oriented conclusions and recommendations. It should keep Member States informed where differences existed among its members or where difficulties in co-ordination were encountered. CPC also said it should inform Member States on remedial measures that had been considered and implemented. The attention of ACC was drawn by CPC to a number of comments regarding the preparation of future reports, including the recommendation that the twenty-fifth series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees should consider information to be presented to them on a prototype for a revised annual overview report of ACC. The Committee recommended that ACC take measures to ensure the coherent and systematic implementation of its own recommendations.

CPC activities

In 1990, CPC met in New York for an organizational meeting on 2 April and for its thirtieth session from 7 May to 11 June and 17 to 22 September.

CPC reviewed the efficiency and the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and considered the proposed medium-term plan for 1992-1997 (see PART THREE, Chapter I). The Committee felt that the objectives of many subprogrammes should be stated with greater clarity and precision to facilitate evaluation. The distinction between objectives of Member States and those of the Secretariat should be more precise in terms of their respective roles. It recommended that decisions and resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, particularly during its sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth special sessions, should be reflected in the proposed plan and that cross-references should be indicated in subprogrammes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 July, the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1990/282, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of CPC on the first part of its thirtieth session.

On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 1990/83.

Programme questions

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the introduction to the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and the relevant programmes of the plan,

Having considered the relevant sections of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the first part of its thirtieth session,

Noting with concern the delay in the issuance of documentation for the medium-term plan and the difficulties that it created for the Committee in its discussions,

Recognizing the importance of further consideration of the medium-term plan by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work done by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination during the first part of its thirtieth session;

2. Takes note of the introduction to the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997 and the views expressed by delegations thereon;

3. Takes note of the relevant programmes of the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997;

4. Takes note of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the first part of its thirtieth session, and endorses the relevant conclusions and recommendations contained therein on the understanding that further consideration of the proposed medium-term plan would be undertaken by the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session;

5. Requests the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to make every possible effort to complete its consideration of the items set out in the provisional agenda for its resumed thirtieth session within the approved time-frame of 17 to 21 September 1990, and authorizes the Committee, on an exceptional contingency basis and subject to established procedures, to extend its resumed session to 26 September, should that prove necessary;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the timely submission of the necessary documentation so as to enable the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to complete its work.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/83
27 July 1990 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote
Approved by Third Committee (E/1990/117), 24 July (meeting 17); draft by Chairman (E/1990/C.3/L.14/Rev.1); agenda item 11.

Also on the same date, the Council, by decision 1990/281, recommended that the General Assembly request CPC to prepare draft guidelines governing the preparation and revision of system-wide action plans and system-wide medium-term plans and the relationship between the United Nations medium-term plan and those two instruments.

On 9 November, the Council, by decision 1990/289, took note of the report of CPC on the second part of its thirtieth session and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations relating to the proposed programme 45 of the medium-term plan for 1992-1997 (African economic recovery, development and transformation) and proposed programme 31 (regional co-operation for development in Asia and the Pacific).

Joint meetings of CPC and ACC

The twenty-fifth series of Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC was held in New York from 25 to 26 October 1990 [E/1990/123]. The topics considered were improvement of co-ordination in the UN system and natural disaster reduction.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Joint Meetings recognized that existing intergovernmental and intersecretariat bodies charged with co-ordination were adequate but said their effectiveness needed to be enhanced. At the country level, organizations of the system needed to intensify efforts to develop a team approach in support of national plans and priorities. The annual overview report of ACC should highlight problems of co-ordination requiring urgent attention and action by Governments, as well as proposals on action to be taken, agencies responsible and resources needed. System-wide communication and information should be strengthened. The Joint Meetings accepted the suggestions by ACC on the manner in which information and programmes would be presented in future annual overview reports and agreed that information on both regular and extrabudgetary resources would be included.

With respect to disaster reduction, the Joint Meetings stated that greater effort should be made to address disaster prevention and mitigation as part of the development process and the UN system should give greater priority to the integration of disaster prevention and/or mitigation in its development activities. It was agreed that the collective capacity of the United Nations to provide early warning should be enhanced, as well as international capacity, by promoting technical and technological capacities and training programmes and greater flow of information. A framework programme should be developed for the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1990/290 of 9 November, took note of the report, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein and decided to transmit it to the General Assembly for consideration at its forty-fifth (1990) session.

The Assembly, in decision 45/438 of 21 December, took note of the Secretary-General's note [A/45/835] on the report.

On the same date, by resolution 45/254 B, the Assembly endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Joint Meetings.

Cross-organizational programme analyses

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988/77 [YUN 1988, p. 705], the Secretary-General submitted a 6 April report [E/AC.51/1990/6] on cross-organizational programme analysis of UN activities for industrial development. The analysis reflected the policy statements of relevant organizations on industrial development and its relationship to the environment. It also paid particular attention to the collection of data on programme activities and included information on financial resources allocated to industrial development. Specific recommendations emerging from the analysis were also presented.

Cpc considered the report and noted the conclusion that the system as a whole was pursuing the mandates in industrial development in a rational manner, given the resources available for that purpose. It suggested that the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in co-operation with the World Bank, should establish a substantive liaison function and that other UN organizations with significant industrial development operations should establish co-ordination arrangements with the World Bank. The United Nations Development Programme was invited to provide an information exchange function with regard to pre-investment activities; co-ordination at the national level among various organizations involved in industrial development needed to be strengthened. CPC stressed the need to provide the least developed countries with an adequate level and share of resources to enable them to attain sustained industrial development.

CPC also considered a report [E/AC.51/1990/8] on cross-organizational programme analysis of UN activities on economic and social research and policy analysis. CPC requested the Secretary-General to continue to secure greater interaction among research bodies of the United Nations system and those outside the United Nations family.

Other institutional arrangements

Work programme of the Assembly's Second Committee

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by decision 45/439, approved the biennial programme of work for its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for 1991-1992.

PART FOUR

Trusteeship and decolonization

Chapter I

Questions related to decolonization

The year 1990 marked the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. It was also the first year of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1988. Commemorating the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration, the Assembly recognized the significant and commendable role played by the United Nations since its inception in the field of decolonization and noted that, during that period, more than 100 States had achieved sovereignty. The Assembly expressed its determination to take effective measures leading to complete and unconditional elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations without further delay.

The main body dealing with decolonization was the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization). In 1990, the Committee continued to examine the decolonization issue in general and made recommendations on the situations in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and other Non-Self-Governing Territories, such as the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), New Caledonia and Western Sahara, as well as a number of small island Territories.

1960 Declaration on decolonization

In 1990, the United Nations continued to focus on implementing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, set out in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49], which had served for 30 years as the basis of the decolonization process. The Assembly stressed that the Declaration had played an important role in assisting the peoples under colonial rule and would continue to serve as an inspiration in their efforts to achieve self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, and to mobilize world public opinion for the complete elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations.

The Special Committee on decolonization held 15 meetings in New York during 1990, the first part of its annual session taking place on 22 January and the second part from 1 to 20 August. Its Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance held 12 meetings, between 23 March and 29 June, and the Sub-Committee on Small Territories held 20 meetings, between 8 February and 15 June. On their recommendations, the Committee took action on implementation of the Declaration by international organizations, on the dissemination of information on decolonization, and on reports on the Territories supplied by the administering Powers and by the Committee's visiting missions.

Thirtieth anniversary of Declaration

In accordance with the Programme of Activities in Observance of the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Declaration, adopted in General Assembly resolution 44/100 [YUN 1989, p. 758], the Special Committee on decolonization held two regional seminars in Port Vila, Vanuatu (9-11 May), and in Bridgetown, Barbados (19-21 June). The Committee in August considered the item on the thirtieth anniversary and the seminar reports, and recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the General Assembly.

In November, the Secretary-General presented to the Assembly messages from Member States received on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary [A/45/627]. The Assembly commemorated the anniversary at a plenary meeting on 10 October [A/45/Pv.29].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/33.

Thirtieth Anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988, entitled "International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism",

Having commemorated in plenary meeting, in the year of the forty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Recalling the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in which the peoples of the world proclaimed their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further its resolutions 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as its resolution 40/56 of 2 December 1985,

Considering that the process of national liberation is irresistible and irreversible, and recalling that the Declaration solemnly proclaimed the necessity speedily and unconditionally to put an end to colonialism in all its forms and manifestations,

Recognizing the significant and commendable role played by the United Nations, since its very inception, in the field of decolonization and noting the emergence, during this period, of more than one hundred States into sovereign existence, in particular noting with satisfaction the attainment of independence by Namibia following the holding of free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations, and the subsequent admission of independent Namibia as a Member of the United Nations on 23 April 1990,

Noting with satisfaction, in particular, that during the past thirty years a large number of former colonial Territories have achieved independence, mainly through the courageous liberation struggle carried out by the peoples of those countries, led by their national liberation movements, and that many former Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories have exercised their right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration,

Noting also with satisfaction the important contribution made by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in furthering the aims and objectives of the Declaration with a view to the liberation of peoples from colonial rule,

Noting further with satisfaction the active and important role being played by former colonial Territories, as States Members of the United Nations and members of the other organizations of the United Nations system, in the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter, the preservation of international peace and security, decolonization and the promotion of human progress, as well as the profound impact thereof on contemporary international relations,

Conscious of the fact that the Declaration has played an important role in assisting the peoples under colonial rule and will continue to serve as an inspiration in their efforts to achieve self-determination and independence in accordance with the Charter and in mobilizing world public opinion for the complete elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the two regional seminars held by the Special Committee in Vanuatu and Barbados on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Deeply concerned at the fact that, thirty years after the adoption of the Declaration, colonialism in the world has not yet been totally eradicated,

Reaffirming that all peoples have the right to self-determination and independence and that the subjection of peoples to colonial domination constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights and is a serious impediment to the maintenance of international peace and security and the development of peaceful relations among nations,

Increasingly aware of the importance of economic, social and cultural development and self-reliance of colonial countries and peoples for the attainment and consolidation of genuine independence,

Convinced that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples in the remaining colonial Territories will be achieved peacefully and most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration,

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Determined to take effective measures leading to the complete and unconditional elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations without further delay,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all peoples under colonial rule to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Declares that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations, including racism and apartheid, is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration and the principles of international law;

3. Expresses its conviction that the thirtieth anniversary of the Declaration should provide an opportunity for Member States to rededicate themselves to the principles and objectives enunciated in that document and for concerted efforts to be made to remove the last vestiges of colonialism in all regions of the world;

4. Strongly condemns South Africa's aggressive activities and acts of destabilization against neighbouring independent African States and its policies of apartheid, as well as its acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability, the use of which would heighten tension and increase the threat to regional as well as international peace and security;

5. Calls upon Member States, in particular colonial Powers, to take effective steps with a view to the complete, unconditional and speedy eradication of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations and to the faithful and strict observance of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as other relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

6. Urges Member States to do their utmost to promote, in the United Nations and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, effective measures for the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration in all colonial Territories to which the Declaration applies;

7. Calls upon Member States to render, as a matter of urgency, all moral and material assistance to the peoples under colonial rule in their struggle to exercise their right to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the Charter and the Declaration;

8. Urges the administering Powers and other Member States to ensure that the activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial Territories do not run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories and do not impede the implementation of the Declaration;

9. Urges Member States to discontinue all economic, financial, trade and other relations with the racist minority regime of South Africa that run counter to the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa and to refrain from entering into any relations which may lend legitimacy or support to its policies of apartheid;

10. Requests Member States, as well as the organizations of the United Nations system, to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

11. Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to the dependent Territories;

12. Reaffirms that all administering Powers are obliged, under the Charter and in accordance with the Declaration, to create economic, social and other conditions in the Territories under their administration which will enable those Territories to achieve genuine independence and economic self-reliance;

13. Requests the administering Powers concerned to adopt the necessary measures to discourage or prevent any systematic influx of immigrants and settlers into the Territories under their administration which might disrupt the demographic composition of those Territories and prevent the genuine exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by their peoples, and to avoid any forced displacement, complete or partial, of the population of colonial Territories;

14. Also requests the administering Powers to preserve the cultural identity, as well as the national unity, of the Territories under their administration and to encourage the full development of the indigenous culture, with a view to facilitating the unfettered exercise of the right to self-determination and independence by the peoples of those Territories;

15. Reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of all kinds of military bases and installations in colonial Territories could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration and that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers concerned to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the peoples of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Declaration;

16. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in the Territories under their administration;

17. Requests Member States, in particular the administering Powers, to adopt appropriate measures to prevent the recruitment, financing, training and transit of mercenaries in their Territories for use against the national liberation movements struggling for freedom and independence from the yoke of colonialism, racism and apartheid;

18. Considers it incumbent upon the United Nations to continue to play an active role in the process of decolonization and to intensify its efforts for the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with a view to the further mobilization of international public opinion in support of complete decolonization;

19. Urges Member States to ensure the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

20. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render, or continue to render, within their respective spheres of competence, all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and to their national liberation movements, to take measures to withhold from the apartheid régime of South Africa any form of collaboration or assistance in the financial, economic and technical fields and to discontinue all support to that regime until apartheid has been eradicated and a non-racial, united and democratic State based on the will of all South African people has been established in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly, including the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, and of the Security Council;

21. Invites non-governmental organizations having a special interest in the field of decolonization to intensify their activities in co-operation with the United Nations;

22. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the full compliance of all States with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization, to seek the most suitable ways for the speedy and total application of the Declaration to all Territories to which it applies and to propose to the Assembly specific measures for the complete implementation of the Declaration in the remaining colonial Territories;

23. Invites all States to co-operate fully with the Special Committee in the complete fulfilment of its mandate.

Implementation of the Declaration

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the item on implementation of the Declaration at plenary meetings in August and prepared a report for the General Assembly [A/45/23].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/34.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, and 35/118 of 11 December 1980, the annex to which contains the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, as well as 40/56 of 2 December 1985, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration,

Also recalling all its resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolution 44/101 of 11 December 1989, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Deeply conscious of the urgent need to take all necessary measures to eliminate forthwith the last vestiges of colonialism, and, in that respect, recalling its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988,

Reiterating its conviction that the total eradication of racial discrimination, apartheid and violations of the basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories will be achieved most expeditiously by the faithful and complete implementation of the Declaration,

Conscious that the success of national liberation struggles and the resultant international situation have provided the international community with a unique opportunity to make a decisive contribution towards the total elimination of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations in Africa,

Welcoming the attainment of independence by Namibia following the holding of free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations, and the subsequent admission of independent Namibia as a Member of the United Nations on 23 April 1990,

Noting with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee to secure the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Noting also with satisfaction the co-operation and active participation of some of the administering Powers concerned in the relevant work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee and noting with concern the negative impact which the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Keenly aware of the pressing need of the newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism is one of the priorities of the Organization for the decade 1990-1999,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the dependent peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully and without further delay their inalienable right to self-determination and independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations-including racism, apartheid, those activities of foreign economic and other interests contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as the violations of the right to self-determination and basic human rights of the peoples of colonial Territories and policies and practices to suppress legitimate national liberation movements-is incompatible with the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and poses a threat to international peace and security;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all necessary steps with a view to the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and to the faithful and strict observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

dence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the guiding principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

9. Strongly condemns collaboration, particularly in the nuclear and military fields, with the Government of South Africa and calls upon the States concerned to cease forthwith all such collaboration;

10. Calls upon the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories, to refrain from establishing new ones and not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

11. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide all moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories and requests that the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

12. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) in all Territories that have not yet attained independence and, in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

(b) To make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial Territories that are likely to threaten international peace and security;

(c) To continue to examine the compliance of Member States with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(d) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of visiting missions to those Territories whenever the Special Committee deems it appropriate, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(e) To take all necessary steps to enlist world-wide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

13. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to co-operate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to receive visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants, and urges, in particular, those administering Powers which do not participate in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1991 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide or continue to provide to the newly independent and emerging States all possible assistance in the economic, social and other fields;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and services required for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as of the various resolutions and decisions on decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

Implementation of the Declaration by UN organizations

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/85 [YUN 1989, p. 755], the Secretary-General in March invited 25 specialized agencies and international institutions forming part of or associated with the UN system to inform him of their activities to implement the 1960 Declaration. Summaries of responses were included in a June report of the Secretary-General, with later addendum [A/45/309 & Add.1].

The issue was also considered by the President of the Economic and Social Council in consultation with the Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization. In a June report [E/1990/72], the President appealed to the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to focus their renewed attention on the remaining Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories, so as to expand and increase their assistance programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/60.

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council concerning the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Having heard the statements made by the representative of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and by the Vice-Chairman of the Special Committee against Apartheid,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions adopted by United Nations bodies on the subject, including in particular Assembly resolution 44/85 of 11 December 1989 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/95 of 26 July 1989,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all effective measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to assist in the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies,

Noting with satisfaction the attainment of independence by Namibia following the holding of free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations, and the subsequent admission of independent Namibia as a Member of the United Nations on 23 April 1990,

Also recalling General Assembly resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, containing the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Noting with deep concern that destabilization by South Africa of the front-line and neighbouring States, whether through direct aggression, sponsorship of surrogates, economic subversion or other means, is unacceptable in all its forms and must not occur,

Recognizing that permanent peace and stability in southern Africa can only be achieved when the system of apartheid in South Africa has been eradicated and South Africa has been transformed into a united, democratic and non-racial country, and reiterating, therefore, that all the necessary measures should be adopted at the present time to bring a speedy end to the apartheid system in the interest of all the people of southern Africa, the African continent and the world at large,

Deeply concerned that the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples have not been fully achieved,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes and cyclones, and recalling relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Deeply conscious of the continuing critical need of the people of Namibia for concrete assistance from the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation that assistance has continued to be extended to refugees from southern Africa through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council, and endorses the observations and suggestions contained therein;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspiration of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to co-operate in varying forms and degrees with the United Nations and the regional organizations concerned in the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and other relevant resolutions of United Nations bodies, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

9. Urges the administering Powers concerned to facilitate the participation of the representatives of the Governments of Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories at the relevant meetings and conferences of the agencies and organizations so that the Territories may draw the maximum benefits from the related activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

10. Urges the governing bodies of those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of their regular sessions a separate item on the progress made and action to be taken by their organization in the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations bodies;

11. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to formulate, with the active co-operation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations resolutions and to submit the proposals as a matter of priority to their governing and legislative organs;

12. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to adhere to the Programme of Action contained in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, in particular with regard to increased support for the opponents of apartheid, the use of concerted and effective measures aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid and ensuring the non-relaxation of existing measures to encourage the South African regime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes;

13. Stresses, in the context of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, the need for the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable them to rebuild their economies, which have been adversely affected by

South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization, to withstand any further such acts and to continue to support the people of South Africa;

14. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussion held on the subject at the second regular session of 1990 of the Economic and Social Council;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to follow the implementation of the present resolution, with particular attention to co-ordination and integration arrangements for maximizing the efficiency of the assistance activities undertaken by various organizations of the United Nations system, and to report thereon to the Council at its second regular session of 1991;

18. Decides to keep these questions under continuous review.

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, and the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, as well as all its other relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular resolution 44/85 of 11 December 1989,

Recalling also its resolution S-16/1 of 14 December 1989, the annex to which contains the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity,

Noting with satisfaction the attainment of independence by Namibia following the holding of free and fair elections under the supervision and control of the United Nations, and the subsequent admission of independent Namibia as a Member of the United Nations on 23 April 1990,

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Recalling relevant resolutions of the Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee concerning the access of Non-Self-Governing Territories to programmes and activities of the United Nations system,

Noting the assistance extended thus far to colonial Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and considering that such assistance should be expanded further, commensurate with the pressing needs of the peoples concerned for external assistance,

Reaffirming that it is the responsibility of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the necessary measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full and speedy implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, particularly those relating to the extension of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories,

Expressing its appreciation to the General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity for the continued co-operation and assistance it has extended to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in connection with the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and convinced that closer contacts and consultations between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of assistance programmes for the peoples concerned,

Noting with grave concern the extensive links and collaboration between the apartheid regime of South Africa and certain countries in the political, diplomatic, economic, nuclear, military and other fields, and the growing military and nuclear co-operation between racist Pretoria and Israel,

Bearing in mind the importance of the activities of non-governmental organizations aimed at putting an end to the assistance which is still being rendered to South Africa by some specialized agencies,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters such as hurricanes and cyclones, and recalling relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute, within their spheres of competence, to the full and speedy implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms also that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to exercise their right to self-determination and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of all the necessary moral and material assistance to those peoples and their national liberation movements;

4. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to co-operate in varying degrees with the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and urges all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to accelerate the full and speedy implementation of the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

5. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render or continue to render, as a matter of urgency, all possible moral and material assistance to the colonial peoples, bearing in mind that such assistance should not only meet their immediate needs but also create conditions for development after they have exercised their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Requests once again the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to provide all humanitarian, material and moral assistance to Namibia and all newly independent and emerging States so as to enable them to achieve genuine economic independence;

7. Reiterates its recommendation that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should initiate or broaden contacts and co-operation with the colonial peoples and the administering Powers concerned, directly or, where appropriate, through regional organizations, in order to intensify programmes of assistance and to facilitate and accelerate the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

8. Urges the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in co-operation with the regional and other organizations where appropriate, to submit to their governing and legislative organs concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant United Nations decisions, particularly specific programmes of assistance to the peoples of the colonial Territories and their national liberation movements;

9. Urges once again the executive heads of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to draw the attention of their governing bodies to the present resolution, and urges them to introduce flexible procedures to prepare specific programmes for the peoples of the colonial Territories;

10. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not already done so to include in the agenda of the regular meetings of their governing bodies a separate item on the progress they have made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

11. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as international and regional organizations, to take appropriate measures within their respective spheres of competence in order to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of the colonial Territories;

12. Welcomes the continued initiative exercised by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in co-ordinating the activities of the agencies in extending effective assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, and calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in those Non-Self-Governing Territories affected by natural disasters;

13. Urges the administering Powers concerned to facilitate the participation of the representatives of the Governments of Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories in the relevant meetings and conferences of the agencies and organizations so that the Territories may draw the maximum benefits from the related activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system;

14. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to adhere to the programme of action contained in the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, in particular with regard to increased support for the opponents of apartheid, the use of concerted and effective measures aimed at applying pressure to ensure a speedy end to apartheid and ensuring the non-relaxation of existing measures to encourage the South African régime to eradicate apartheid until there is clear evidence of profound and irreversible changes;

15. Stresses, in the context of the Declaration on Apartheid and its Destructive Consequences in Southern Africa, the need for the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to render all possible assistance to the front-line and neighbouring States to enable them to rebuild their economies, which have been adversely affected by South Africa's acts of aggression and destabilization, to withstand any further such acts and to continue to support the people of South Africa;

16. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Action for Resisting Invasion, Colonialism and Apartheid Fund set up by the Eighth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Harare from 1 to 6 September 1986, with the common objective of providing emergency assistance to the front-line States and national liberation movements struggling against the apartheid régime;

17. Condemns the extensive links and collaboration between the apartheid régime of South Africa and certain countries in the political, diplomatic, economic, nuclear, military and other fields, and the growing military and nuclear co-operation between the racist régime and Israel;

18. Recommends that all Governments should intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations and, in that connection, should accord priority to the question of providing assistance on an emergency basis to the peoples of the colonial Territories;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to assist the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and to prepare for submission to the relevant bodies, with the assistance of those agencies and organizations, a report on the action taken in implementation of the relevant resolutions, including the present resolution, since the circulation of his previous report;

20. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue, as appropriate, to consider, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and

Peoples, appropriate measures for co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

21. Requests the specialized agencies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the implementation of the present resolution;

22. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Foreign interests impeding implementation of Declaration

The Special Committee on decolonization in August considered the question of activities of foreign economic and other interests which impeded the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It reaffirmed its concern over those activities and adopted a resolution which became the basis of a draft resolution recommended to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/17.

Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa";

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, and the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980, as well as all its other relevant resolutions on this subject, including, in particular, resolution 44/84 of 11 December 1989,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that those economic and other activities which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and obstruct efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories are in direct violation of the rights of the inhabitants and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources of all Territories under colonial and racist domination are the heritage of the peoples of those Territories and that the depletive exploitation of those resources by foreign economic interests constitutes a direct violation of the rights of the peoples and of the principles of the Charter and all relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity,

Condemning the intensified activities of those foreign economic, financial and other interests that continue to exploit the natural and human resources of the colonial Territories and to accumulate and repatriate huge profits to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants, thereby impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence,

Strongly condemning the collaboration by certain countries with the racist minority régime of South Africa in the nuclear field, which, by providing that régime with nuclear equipment and technology, enables it to develop nuclear and military capabilities and to become a nuclear Power, thereby strengthening its abhorrent system of apartheid,

Concerned about any foreign economic, financial and other activities which continue to deprive the indigenous populations of colonial Territories in the Caribbean, the Pacific Ocean and other regions of their rights over the wealth of their countries, and concerned that the inhabitants of those Territories continue to suffer from a loss of land ownership as a result of the failure of the administering Powers concerned to restrict the sale of land to foreigners, despite the repeated appeals of the General Assembly,

Conscious of the continuing need to mobilize world public opinion against the involvement of foreign economic, financial and other interests in the exploitation of natural and human resources, which impedes the independence of colonial Territories and the elimination of racism, particularly in South Africa, and emphasizing the importance of action by local authorities, trade unions, religious bodies, academic institutions, mass media, solidarity movements and other non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, in applying pressure on transnational corporations to refrain from any investment or activity in South Africa, in encouraging a policy of systematic divestment of any financial or other interest in corporations doing business with South Africa and in counteracting all forms of collaboration with the apartheid regime,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

2. Reiterates that any administering or occupying Power that deprives the colonial peoples of the exercise of their legitimate rights over their natural resources or subordinates the rights and interests of those peoples to foreign economic and financial interests violates the solemn obligations it has assumed under the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms that, by their depletive exploitation of natural resources, the continued accumulation and repatriation of huge profits and the use of those profits for the enrichment of foreign settlers and the perpetuation of colonial domination and racial discrimination in the Territories, the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating at present in the colonial Territories constitute a major obstacle to political independence and racial equality, as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Condemns those activities of foreign economic and other interests in the colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination;

5. Strongly condemns the collaboration of the Governments of certain countries, in particular Israel, with the racist minority regime of South Africa in the nuclear field, and calls upon those and all other Governments concerned to refrain from supplying that regime, directly or indirectly, with installations, equipment or material that might enable it to produce uranium, plutonium and other nuclear materials, reactors or military equipment;

6. Also strongly condemns the collaboration with the racist minority regime of South Africa of certain countries as well as transnational corporations that continue to make new investments in South Africa and supply the regime with armaments, nuclear technology and all other materials that are likely to buttress it and thus aggravate the threat to world peace;

7. Calls upon all States to take urgent, effective measures to terminate all collaboration with the racist régime of South Africa in the political, economic, trade, military and nuclear fields and to refrain from entering into other relations with that regime in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and of the Organization of African Unity;

8. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises and to prevent new investments that run counter to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories;

9. Calls upon those oil-producing and oil-exporting countries that have not yet done so to take effective measures against the oil companies concerned so as to terminate the supply of crude oil and petroleum products to the racist regime of South Africa;

10. Reiterates that the exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of colonial Territories by foreign economic interests, including the activities of those transnational corporations which are engaged in the exploitation and export of the natural resources of the Territories, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, are illegal and are a grave threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

11. Reiterates its request to all States, pending the imposition of comprehensive mandatory sanctions against South Africa, to take legislative, administrative and other measures, individually or collectively, as appropriate, in order effectively to isolate South Africa politically, economically, militarily and culturally, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and encourages those Governments that have recently taken certain unilateral sanction measures against the South African regime to take further measures;

12. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, having regard to the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolution 3201(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, and of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, to ensure, in particular, that the permanent sovereignty of the colonial Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

13. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the colonial Territories to their natural resources, as well as their right to establish and maintain control over the future development of those natural resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

14. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to abolish all discriminatory and unjust wage systems and working conditions prevailing in the Territories under their administration and to apply in each Territory a uniform system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, a sustained and broad campaign with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the pillage of natural resources in colonial Territories and the exploitation of their indigenous populations by foreign economic interests;

16. Appeals to mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to co-ordinate and intensify their efforts to Mobilize international public opinion against the policy of the apartheid regime of South Africa and to work for the enforcement of economic and other sanctions against that régime and for encouraging a policy of systematic and genuine divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa;

17. Decides to continue to monitor closely the situation in the remaining colonial Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interests of the indigenous peoples, at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories and at speeding their accession to independence, and in that connection requests the administering Powers concerned to ensure that the peoples of the Territories under their administration are not exploited for political, military and other purposes detrimental to their interests;

18. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Military activities in Territories

In August, the Special Committee on decolonization continued to consider the issue of military activities by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might impede the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. The Committee recommended a draft decision to the General Assembly for adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the General Assembly adopted decision 45/406.

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 20 November 1990, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples' and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in Non-Self-Governing Territories, and conscious that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration, should be withdrawn and that no further entrenchment should be condoned.

"2. In recalling its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, the General Assembly reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and that it is the responsibility of the administering Powers to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the populations of the Territories from exercising their right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration. Furthermore, aware of the presence of military bases and installations of the administering Powers concerned and other countries in those Territories, the Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration.

“3. The General Assembly reiterates its condemnation of all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration that are detrimental to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the colonial Powers concerned to terminate unconditionally such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly, in particular with paragraph 9 of the Plan of Action for the Full Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in the annex to Assembly resolution 35/118 of 11 December 1980.

“4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

“5. The General Assembly notes with serious concern that, in southern Africa in general, a critical situation continues to prevail as a result of South Africa’s inhuman repression of the people of South Africa. The Assembly declares that the policy of apartheid and destabilization not only undermines the peace and stability of the southern African region but also constitutes a threat to international peace and security.

“6. The General Assembly condemns the continued military, nuclear and intelligence collaboration between South Africa and certain countries, which constitutes a violation of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa by the Security Council in its resolution 418(1977) of 25 November 1977 and poses a threat to international peace and security. The Assembly urges the Council to consider, as a matter of urgency, the report of the Committee established under its resolution 421(1977) of 9 December 1977 and adopt further measures to widen the scope of its resolution 418(1977) in order to make it more effective and comprehensive. The Assembly also calls for the scrupulous observance of Council resolution 558(1984) of 13 December 1984 enjoining all States to refrain from importing armaments from South Africa. The Assembly is particularly mindful in that regard of a series of resolutions adopted by the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Special Committee against Apartheid, as well as the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and a number of intergovernmental and regional organizations.

“7. The General Assembly considers that the acquisition of nuclear-weapon capability by the racist régime of South Africa, with its infamous record of violence and aggression, constitutes a further effort on its part to terrorize and intimidate independent States in the region into submission while also posing a threat to all mankind. The Assembly condemns the continuing support to the racist régime of South Africa in the military and nuclear fields. In this context, the Assembly expresses its concern at the grave consequences for international peace and security of the collaboration between the racist régime of South Africa and certain Western Powers, Israel and other countries in the military and nuclear fields. It calls upon the States concerned to end all such collaboration and, in particular, to halt the supply to South Africa of equipment, technology, nuclear materials and related training, which increases its nuclear capability.

“8. The General Assembly strongly condemns the continuing collaboration of certain countries with the racist régime in the military and nuclear fields and expresses its conviction that such collaboration is in contravention of the arms embargo imposed against South Africa under Security Council resolution 418(1977) and undermines international solidarity against the apartheid régime. The Assembly thus calls for the termination forthwith of all such collaboration.

“9. The General Assembly urges all Governments, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations to provide increased material assistance to the thousands of refugees who have been forced by the apartheid régime’s oppressive policies in South Africa to flee into the neighbouring States and for the purpose of resettlement of those who are returning.

“10. The General Assembly deprecates the continued alienation of land in colonial Territories for military installations. The large-scale utilization of local economic and manpower resources for this purpose diverts resources that could be more beneficially utilized in promoting the economic development of the Territories concerned and is thus contrary to the interests of their populations.

“11. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue, through the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, an intensified campaign of publicity with a view to informing world public opinion of the facts concerning the military activities and arrangements in colonial Territories which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV).

“12. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-sixth session.”

Territories under review

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

Delegations of the Governments of the United Kingdom and Argentina met again in Madrid, Spain, on 14 and 15 February 1990, to discuss further the question of the Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas). Both reaffirmed the formula on sovereignty over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands and the surrounding maritime areas: agreed on in October 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 766]. Under the terms of that formula, they decided to establish an "Interim reciprocal information and consultation system" for movements of units of their armed forces in areas of the south-west Atlantic, in order to increase confidence between the two countries and to contribute to achieving a more normal situation in the region without unnecessary delay; to establish a direct communication link between the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and the mainland in order to reduce the possibility of incidents, limit their consequences in the case of occurrence, and increase common knowledge of military activities in the south-west Atlantic; to agree on a set of rules of reciprocal behaviour for naval and air units when operating in proximity; to agree on a mechanism for emergencies aimed at facilitating air and maritime search and rescue operations in the south-west Atlantic; to establish a system of exchange of information on the safety and control of air and maritime navigation; and to continue bilateral consideration of those matters and review the measures agreed on within one year from their coming into force on 31 March 1990. On that day, the United Kingdom's decision to lift the Protection Zone established around the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) was also to be implemented.

Both Governments further agreed that they should proceed to exchange available information on the operations of fishing fleets, appropriate catch and stocks of the most significant offshore species in the maritime area of the Atlantic Ocean between the latitudes 45 and 60 degrees S. Such information would be assessed jointly and the possibilities for co-operation and conservation explored bilaterally. To continue considering the issues discussed, a Working Group on South Atlantic Affairs was to be set up.

Further consideration was given to the situation with regard to contacts between the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and the mainland, with the United Kingdom recognizing Argentina's readiness to facilitate communications and trading opportunities. Both countries expressed agreement to a visit to the cemetery on the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), by close relatives of Argentine nationals buried there. Both also agreed that the feasibility and desirability of a general co-operation agreement should be examined and that an investment promotion and protection agreement should be negotiated. Further agreement was reached on abolishing visas for nationals of each country wishing to visit the other, and on exploring ways of collaborating in the fight against illicit drug trafficking.

A statement on the agreements reached, as well as the text of those agreements, was transmitted to the Secretary-General [A/45/136-S/21159], the European Community and the Organization of American States.

Committee consideration. The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) during its August session as a separate item [A/45/23]. It adopted a resolution urging Argentina and the United Kingdom to consolidate the current process of dialogue and bilateral co-operation through the resumption of negotiations in order to find as soon as possible a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 45/424 of 12 December, the General Assembly took note of the letter dated 21 February from Argentina and the United Kingdom to the Secretary-General, transmitting their joint statement issued at the conclusion of their 14-15 February meeting (see above), and included the item entitled "Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas)" in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth (1991) session.

Western Sahara

Following the acceptance in principle by the parties concerned—Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO Front)—in August 1988 of the settlement proposals for resolving the question of Western Sahara [YUN 1988, p. 740], initiated by the UN Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the United Nations was actively involved in the preparatory process for their implementation.

Human Rights Commission action. On 16 February [E/1990/22 (res. 1990/4)], the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was a question of decolonization which remained to be completed on the basis of the exercise by the people of Western Sahara of their inalienable right to self-determination. The Commission welcomed the progress achieved through the joint good offices of the Chairman of OAU and the Secretary-General and urged them to intensify their efforts to resolve outstanding problems, thereby creating the conditions for holding a referendum on self-determination.

Activities of Secretary-General. In February, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, Johannes Manz of Switzerland, who succeeded Hector Gros Espiell, visited the Territory on a familiarization mission and met with the leaders of the neighbouring countries. In March, the Secretary-General visited the region in pursuance of his good offices mission and consulted with King Hassan II of Morocco and Mohamed Abdelaziz, the leader of POLISARIO, seeking clarification of their positions on various issues of the proposed implementation plan. He also met with the Algerian President and a Mauritanian government representative as observers to the peace process in Western Sahara.

As part of the preparatory process for the implementation of the settlement proposals, the Secretary-General, in consultation with the OAU Chairman, completed arrangements for the setting up of the Identification Commission to verify the identity and eligibility of the people of the Territory who wished to vote in the planned referendum for self-determination and to issue them voter-registration cards. Since the process of identification required the assistance of tribal chiefs and leaders, the Secretary-General convened in Geneva in June a meeting at which the terms of reference of the Identification Commission and its methods of work were explained to 38 tribal chiefs and elders.

Following those consultations, the Secretary-General, in a June report [S/21360], presented to the Security Council the full text of the settlement proposals of 1988, as well as the implementation plan with a time-frame for giving effect to those proposals. The plan provided for a transitional period, during which his Special Representative would have exclusive responsibility over all matters relating to the referendum, including its organization and conduct. The Special Representative would be assisted by an integrated UN support group, including civilian, military and civil police units, known as the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara (MINURSO).

The implementation plan foresaw a cease-fire monitored by UN military personnel, followed by an exchange of prisoners of war under the auspices of ICRC. Under the plan, Morocco would undertake a substantial and phased reduction of its troops in the Territory, and the combatants on each side would be confined to certain locations monitored by UN military. Twenty-four weeks after the cease-fire came into effect, a referendum would be held in which the people of Western Sahara would choose between independence or integration with Morocco. The referendum would be organized and conducted by the United Nations, which would issue regulations, rules and instructions for that purpose and would monitor other aspects of the Territory's administration, especially the maintenance of law and order, to ensure that the necessary conditions existed for the holding of a free and fair referendum. Following proclamation of an amnesty, political prisoners would be released and all laws or regulations which could impede the holding of a free and fair referendum would be suspended to the extent that the Special Representative deemed it necessary. All refugees and other Western Saharan residents outside the Territory would be enabled to return, after the United Nations had established their right to vote. Algeria and Mauritania would, as they had already indicated, cooperate with the Special Representative in ensuring that the transitional arrangements and the results of the referendum were respected.

In his concluding observations, the Secretary-General expressed the belief that the implementation plan—to be carried out by the United Nations in co-operation with OAU—provided an effective means of holding a referendum and permitting the people of Western Sahara to determine their future without military or administrative constraints. He accordingly commended it to the Council for such action as the Council might think appropriate in order to facilitate the earliest possible implementation.

To refine the administrative aspects of the plan and obtain information about the availability of logistic supplies and support, the Secretary-General intended to dispatch in the immediate future a technical mission to the Territory and neighbouring countries, required for the preparation of a further report containing an estimate of the cost of MINURSO. When presenting that report, he would then recommend to the Council that it authorize the immediate establishment of MINURSO for the purposes described.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 June, on the basis of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council adopted resolution 658(1990).

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 621(1988) of 20 September 1988, by which it decided to authorize the Secretary-General to appoint a special representative for Western Sahara and to request the Secretary-General to transmit to it as soon as possible a report on the holding of a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara and on ways and means to ensure the organization and supervision of such a referendum by the United Nations in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling also that, on 30 August 1988, the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro gave their agreement in principle to the proposals of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Governments of the Organization of African Unity in the framework of the joint mission of good offices,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the situation concerning Western Sahara,

1. Expresses its full support to the Secretary-General in his mission of good offices, pursued jointly with the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, with a view to settling the question of Western Sahara;

2. Approves the report of the Secretary-General, transmitted to the Council in accordance with resolution 621(1988) with a view to settling the question of Western Sahara, which contains the full text of the settlement proposals as accepted by the two parties on 30 August 1988 as well as an outline of the plan provided by the Secretary-General in order to implement those proposals;

3. Calls upon the two parties to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in their efforts aimed at an early settlement of the question of Western Sahara;

4. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to dispatch, in the immediate future, a technical mission to the territory and to neighbouring countries, in particular to refine the administrative aspects of the outlined plan and to obtain the necessary information for the preparation of a further report to the Council;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Security Council as soon as possible a further detailed report on his implementation plan, containing, in particular, an estimate of the cost of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara, on the understanding that this further report should be the basis on which the Council would authorize the establishment of the Mission.

Security Council resolution 658(1990)

27 June 1990 Meeting 2929 Adopted unanimously

Draft prepared in consultations among Council members (S/21376).

Committee consideration. The Special Committee on decolonization, during its consideration of the question of Western Sahara in August, heard a statement by a representative of the POLISARIO Front. It also had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on developments concerning the Territory [A/AC.109/1048 & Corr.1/Rev.1]. The Committee decided to give consideration to the item at its next session, subject to any directives the General Assembly might give in the mean time.

Further report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/88 [YUN 1989, p. 767], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/644 & Corr.1] on his activities during the period from 12 October 1989 to 10 October 1990. Pursuant to the Security Council resolution, he held further talks in Geneva in July with Morocco and the POLISARIO Front on how best to implement the peace plan approved by the Council, examining issues related to the referendum, such as a code of conduct, an extension of the suspension of military operations, and the prospect of direct dialogue between the parties under his auspices. He dispatched a technical mission to Western Sahara and neighbouring countries from 29 July to 11 August to refine the administrative aspects of the implementation plan, obtain information for a cost estimate and ascertain the available facilities and services.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that he had maintained close contact with the OAU Chairman on all aspects of the question of Western Sahara and had remained in contact with the two parties, which helped to clarify the approach being taken by the United Nations on specific issues and made it possible to take full account of their concerns regarding the implementation plan.

He continued to be encouraged by the progress being made with respect to the peace process, the Secretary-General said. His series of good offices missions enjoyed the full co-operation of the parties in their shared interest to move towards the implementation of the referendum. He expressed appreciation of the willingness of the tribal leaders of Western Sahara to help in the identification process.

Given the political will displayed by the parties, the Secretary-General believed that a solution was well within reach. He voiced the hope that the parties would continue to accord great attention to all questions regarding the peace plan's implementation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/21.

Question of Western Sahara

The General Assembly,

Having considered in depth the question of Western Sahara,

7. Reaffirms its conviction that the direct dialogue between the two parties to the conflict could contribute to the completion of the joint good offices process of the current Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity and the Secretary-General of the United Nations, to the restoration of peace in Western Sahara and to stability and security in the whole region;

8. Appeals once again to the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Rio de Oro to display the co-operation and the political good will necessary for the completion of the peace process with a view to a speedy settlement of the question of Western Sahara;

East Timor

In 1990, the Secretary-General continued consultations with Portugal—considered by the United Nations to be the legal administering Power—and Indonesia, which asserted [A/AC.109/1045 & Add.1] that decolonization in East Timor was complete and, consequently, the integration of East Timor into Indonesia was formalized on 17 July 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 732]. Portugal continued to maintain its position [A/45/172] that it was prevented “de facto” from exercising its responsibilities for the administration of the Territory, due to the latter’s illegal occupation by a third country.

In September, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/507] that there were, under his auspices, substantive, constructive and serious talks under way between Indonesia and Portugal, and that he was encouraged by the considerable progress made so far. Both countries had given assurances of their commitment to achieving a comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution.

The question of East Timor was taken up by the Special Committee on decolonization in August. The Committee heard statements by Indonesia, Portugal and Cape Verde—on behalf also of Angola, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, and Sao Tome and Principe—and additionally heard statements from 22 petitioners. The Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper on political developments, the human rights situation, and economic and social conditions in the Territory [A/AC.109/1037 & Add.1].

By letters to the Committee Chairman dated 27 July and 7 August [A/AC.109/1045/Add.1], Indonesia expressed strong opposition to the participation of the petitioners in the Committee deliberations, reiterating its view that consideration of the question by the Committee was inappropriate and constituted interference in matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of a sovereign Member State.

The Committee decided to continue consideration of the item at its next session, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give in that connection. The Assembly did not act on the matter in 1990.

New Caledonia

A group of islands in the south-west Pacific Ocean, known as New Caledonia, was determined by the General Assembly, in resolution 41/41 A [YUN 1986, p. 913], to be a Non-Self-Governing Territory (NSGT) within the meaning of the UN Charter; however, France, the administering Power, did not consider New Caledonia an NSGT. In September 1987, it had organized a referendum, which reportedly had resulted in a vote in favour of remaining with France. A Statute of Autonomy for the Territory, approved by the Council of Ministers of France, was to come into force after the holding of elections in April 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 742]. The elections were boycotted by the six-party Front de liberation nationale kanak et socialiste (FLNKS), one of the major political movements of the Territory, and won by the Rassemblement pour la Caledonie dans la République. In May of that year, France dispatched a mission to the Territory to present proposals for its future. Discussions were held with representatives of political parties and other officials; they resulted in a set of proposals known as the Matignon Agreement, according to which another referendum on self-determination was to be held in 1998.

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of New Caledonia in August 1990, hearing statements by Front uni de libération kanak and FLNKS. It had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on developments concerning the Territory [A/AC.109/1041 & Corr.1]. The Committee adopted a resolution which became the basis for a draft resolution to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/22.

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541 (XV) of 15 December 1960.

Noting the positive measures that continue to be pursued in New Caledonia by the French authorities, in co-operation with all sectors of the population, to promote political, economic and social development in the Territory, in order to provide a framework for its peaceful progress to self-determination,

Acknowledging the close links between New Caledonia and the peoples of the South Pacific and the positive actions of the French authorities to facilitate the further development of those links,

1. Approves the section of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia;

2. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia, to maintain their dialogic in a spirit of harmony;

4. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of this question at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization, for its consideration of the question of Gibraltar on 20 August, had before it a Secretariat working paper containing information on political developments and economic, social and educational conditions there [A/AC.109/1044]. Taking into account related developments, the Committee decided to continue consideration of the item at its next session, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give in that connection.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the General Assembly adopted decision 45/407.

Question of Gibraltar

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 20 November 1990, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the Members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 44/426 of 11 December 1989 and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1989, stipulates, inter alia, the following:

"The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting co-operation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution", takes note of the fact that, as part of this process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs have held annual meetings alternatively in each capital, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

Small Territories

The Special Committee on decolonization decided to allocate the following 13 Territories to its Sub-Committee on Small Territories: American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, Turks and Caicos Islands, United States Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see PART FOUR, Chapter II). In their capacity as the administering Powers concerned and in accordance with established procedures, New Zealand, Portugal and the United States continued to participate in the Committee's work-New Zealand in relation to Tokelau, Portugal to East Timor (see above) and the United States to American Samoa, Guam and the United States Virgin Islands. The United Kingdom did not participate in the Committee's consideration of the Territories under its administration. The Sub-Committee reiterated its appeal to the United Kingdom to reconsider its decision and resume its participation and supply information on the Territories under its administration, in accordance with Article 73 e of the UN Charter.

During its consideration of the 13 Territories, the Committee had before it a draft resolution by Norway [A/AC.109/L.1745] on the questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands. On 20 August, the Committee decided to transmit the draft to its 1991 session for appropriate consideration and also decided to examine the modalities of consolidating the various resolutions on the situation in those small NSGTS, subject to any directives which the General Assembly might give in that connection.

American Samoa

The Sub-Committee on Small Territories considered the question of American Samoa between April and June. It had before it a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/1033] on constitutional and political developments and economic, social and educational conditions in the Territory. The Special Committee on decolonization on 1 August [A/45/23] adopted the Sub-Committee's report [A/AC.109/L.1735] and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in it, forwarding them to the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/30.

Question of American Samoa

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of American Samoa,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to American Samoa, in particular General Assembly resolution 44/97 of 11 December 1989,

Conscious of the need to promote progress towards the full implementation of the Declaration in respect of American Samoa,

Having heard the statement of the representative of the United States of America, as the administering Power,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Noting with grave concern the destruction wrought by cyclone Ofa in February 1990, and, in this respect, noting the speedy emergency assistance provided to the Territory by the administering Power and by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Recalling the dispatch in 1981 of a United Nations visiting mission to the Territory,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of assessing the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and reaffirming the value of sending, at an appropriate time, a further visiting mission to American Samoa,

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United States of America, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in the Territory as will enable the people of American Samoa to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514 (XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of American Samoa themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration, and in that connection reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of the Territory of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Also reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of American Samoa, and recommends that priority should be given to the diversification of the Territory's economy in order to provide the foundations for sound social and economic development, to reduce its heavy economic and financial dependence on the United States and to create more employment opportunities for the people of the Territory;

7. Urges the administering Power, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the people of American Samoa to own and dispose of the natural resources of the Territory, including marine resources, and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources;

8. Urges that, because of the destruction wrought by cyclone Ofa, emergency assistance to the Territory be continued;

9. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territory;

10. Anguilla

On 1 August, the Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of Anguilla, having before it a report of the Sub-Committee on Small Territories [A/AC.109/L.1726] and two working papers prepared by the Secretariat [A/AC.109/1026] on developments concerning the Territory [A/AC.109/1026] and on foreign economic and other interests [A/AC.109/1035]. The Committee adopted the Sub-Committee's report, endorsing its conclusions and recommendations and transmitting them to the United Kingdom, the administering Power.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/23.

Question of Anguilla

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Anguilla,

Having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to Anguilla, including in particular General Assembly resolution 44/94 of 11 December 1989,

Bearing in mind the stated policy of the Government of the United Kingdom, the administering Power, that it remains ready to respond positively to the express wish of the people of the Territory on the question of independence,

Noting that the Government of the United Kingdom has agreed to several of the constitutional changes recommended by the Anguilla House of Assembly and that those agreed upon have been referred to the legal advisers of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, who were instructed to begin work on the amendments, and that in January 1990 a territorial government delegation visited London to discuss the amendments to the Constitution,

Noting that the administering Power has not changed its position regarding the restriction, or delegation to ministers of the territorial Government, of any or all of the Governor's special responsibilities without setting a time-frame for independence,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of the Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of diversifying and strengthening further its economy as a matter of priority in order to promote economic stability,

Reaffirming the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory,

Noting that, following the general elections of 1989, during which the ruling United Bermuda Party retained power in the House of Assembly despite the loss of eight seats, its leader, the Prime Minister, stated that the question of independence was no longer a major issue because the majority of the people did not seem to want independence at present,

Reiterates the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should in no way delay the speedy exercise by the people of the Territory of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration, which fully applies to Bermuda;

4. Reiterates that it is the responsibility of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as the administering Power, to create such conditions in the Territory as will enable the people of Bermuda to exercise freely and without interference their inalienable right to self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514 (XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Reaffirms that it is ultimately for the people of Bermuda themselves to determine their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Declaration, and in that connection reaffirms the importance of fostering an awareness among the people of the Territory of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination and independence;

6. Reaffirms its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the Territory could constitute a major obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration and that it is the responsibility of the administering Power to ensure that the existence of such bases and installations does not hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination and independence in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter;

7. Urges the administering Power to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve Bermuda in any offensive acts or interference directed against other States and to comply fully with the purposes and principles of the Charter, the Declaration and the resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly relating to military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration;

Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Power to promote the economic and social development of the Territory, and recommends that priority should continue to be given to the diversification of the Territory's economy in order to provide the foundations for sound social and economic development;

10. Calls upon the administering Power to continue to take all necessary measures, in co-operation with the territorial Government, to counter problems related to drug trafficking;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the General Assembly adopted decision 45/409.

Question of St. Helena

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 20 November 1990, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, having examined the relevant chapters of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of St. Helena to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960. The Assembly urged the administering Power, in consultation with the Legislative Council and other representatives of the people of St. Helena, to continue to take all necessary steps to ensure the speedy implementation of the Declaration in respect of the Territory and, in that connection, reaffirmed the importance of promoting an awareness among the people of St. Helena of the possibilities open to them in the exercise of their right to self-determination. The Assembly expressed the view that the administering Power should continue to implement infrastructure and community development projects aimed at improving the general welfare of the community, including the unemployment situation, and to encourage local initiative and enterprise, particularly in the areas of fisheries development, forestry, handicrafts and agriculture. The Assembly, in view of the serious developments in South Africa, noted with concern the trade and transportation dependency of the Territory on South Africa. The Assembly reaffirmed that continued development assistance from the administering Power, together with any assistance that the international community might be able to provide, constitutes an important means of developing the economic potential of the Territory and of enhancing the capacity of its people to realize fully the goals set forth in the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly, in that connection, welcomed the assistance rendered by the United Nations Development Programme and invited other organizations of the United Nations system to assist in the development of the Territory. The Assembly noted with deep concern the continued presence of military facilities on the dependency of Ascension Island and, in that regard, recalled all United Nations resolutions and decisions concerning military bases and installations in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Assembly urged the administering Power to take all the necessary measures not to involve the Territory in any offensive acts or interference against neighbouring States by the racist régime of South Africa. The Assembly considered that the possibility of dispatching a United Nations visiting mission to St. Helena at an appropriate time should be kept under review, and requested the Special Committee to continue to examine the question of St. Helena at its next session and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 43/47 [YUN 1988, p. 734] declaring the period 1990-2000 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, the Secretary-General invited all States and organizations of the UN system to submit suggestions for the preparation of an action plan aimed at ushering in a world free of colonialism in the twenty-first century. An interim report [A/45/624], presented in October 1990, reproduced the replies received from 14 Member States, one UN organization and one intergovernmental organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the General Assembly adopted decision 45/410.

International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism

At its 44th plenary meeting, on 20 November 1990, the General Assembly took note of the interim reports of the Secretary-General on the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism and recommended that the Secretary-General should request those States and organizations of the United Nations system which have not yet done so to reply not later than 1 April 1991 to his letter of 31 January 1989 and subsequent communications, and that he should invite them once again to submit suggestions so that they may be taken into account in the final report to be submitted to the Assembly at its forty-sixth session, which report would enable the Assembly to consider and adopt an action plan aimed at ushering in, in the twenty-first century, a world free from colonialism.

Puerto Rico

In August 1990, the Special Committee on decolonization considered a separate item on Puerto Rico, based on its 1989 resolution [YUN 1989, p. 764] by which it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence and requested its Rapporteur to report on the implementation of its resolutions on Puerto Rico. The Chairman of the Special Committee transmitted the 1989 resolution to the United States, while the Rapporteur requested information from the United States on action taken or envisaged to implement it.

Having considered the Rapporteur's report [A/AC.109/L.1746], the Committee adopted on 15 August a resolution [A/AC.109/1051] noting that the United States Congress was initiating a legislative process, with the participation of the main political parties of Puerto Rico, with a view to facilitating consultations with the people of Puerto Rico on their political future, and expressing its hope that the dialogue would continue.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories

States responsible for the administration of NSGTs continued to inform the Secretary-General about the Territories' economic, social and educational conditions under the terms of Article 73 e of the UN Charter. In his reports to the Special Committee on decolonization [A/AC.109/1039 & Corr.1] and the General Assembly [A/45/559], he listed the date of receipt of the information provided by the administering States and the period covered by their reports. Information was received in 1990 from the following countries on the Territories administered by them:

New Zealand: Tokelau

United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa, Guam, United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General noted that Portugal had regularly informed him since May 1980, the latest by a note verbale of 19 March 1990 [A/45/172], that the conditions in East Timor prevented it from assuming its responsibilities for the Territory's administration. Spain had informed him in 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 808] that it had terminated its presence in Western Sahara and considered itself exempt from any international responsibility in connection with the Territory's administration.

The Special Committee on decolonization considered the question of information from NSGTs in August and adopted a resolution, which became the basis for a draft recommended to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/16.

Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations and the action taken by the Special Committee in respect of that information,

Having also examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question,

Recalling also its resolution 44/83 of 11 December 1989, in which it requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under resolution 1970(XVIII),

Stressing the importance of timely transmission by the administering Powers of adequate information under Article 73 e of the Charter, in particular in relation to the preparation by the Secretariat of the working papers on the Territories concerned,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that a Non-Self-Governing Territory has attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the administering Power concerned should continue to transmit information under Article 73 e of the Charter with respect to that Territory;

3. Requests the administering Powers concerned to transmit or continue to transmit to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73 e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the Territories concerned, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in those Territories;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure that adequate information is drawn from all available published sources in connection with the preparation of the working papers relating to the Territories concerned;

5. Requests the Special Committee to continue to discharge the functions entrusted to it under General Assembly resolution 1970(XVIII), in accordance with established procedures, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Visiting missions

In 1990, the Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization, as requested by the Committee in 1989, continued consultations with the administering Powers of NSGTs on the question of permitting access of visiting missions to the Territories. In July, he reported [A/AC.109/L.1741] on his extensive consultations, particularly in Port Vila, Vanuatu, and Bridgetown, Barbados, where the Committee organized seminars in observance of the thirtieth anniversary of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization (see above). The Chairman noted with satisfaction the readiness of a number of Powers to continue to provide all relevant information on the Territories under their administration, to participate in the Committee's work and to receive visiting missions.

The Chairman stressed the importance of administering Powers' participation in the work of the Committee and, in that regard, appealed to the United Kingdom to reconsider its 1986 decision [YUN 1986, p. 916] not to participate. He also expressed the hope that the Committee would receive invitations from the United Kingdom to send visiting missions to Territories under its administration.

On 6 August, the Committee considered the issue and adopted a resolution by which it stressed the need to dispatch periodic visiting missions to colonial Territories in order to facilitate implementation of the 1960 Declaration and called on the administering Powers to receive UN missions and to participate in its work. The Committee requested its Chairman to continue consultations with the administering Powers and to report to it as appropriate.

Information dissemination

The Special Committee on decolonization in August considered the question of dissemination of information on decolonization. In its deliberations on the subject, it examined four reports [A/AC.109/L.1721, L.1723-25] of the Sub-Committee on Petitions, Information and Assistance on its consultations with the UN Secretariat, non-governmental organizations, the Organization of African Unity and national liberation movements. The Committee endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained in the reports, with the understanding that consultations would be held in connection with the implementation of specific recommendations and that the reservations expressed by members would be reflected in the meeting record.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/35.

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 44/102 of 11 December 1989,

Reiterating the importance of publicity as an instrument for furthering the aims and purposes of the Declaration and mindful of the continuing pressing need to take all possible steps to acquaint world public opinion with all aspects of the problems of decolonization with a view to assisting effectively the peoples of the colonial Territories in achieving self-determination, freedom and independence,

Noting with concern the measures of censorship imposed by the racist regime of South Africa upon the local and international media with respect to the policies and practices of apartheid,

Aware of the increasingly important role being played in the widespread dissemination of relevant information by a number of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, and noting with satisfaction the intensified efforts of the Special Committee in enlisting the support of those organizations in that regard,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it incumbent upon the United Nations to continue to play an active role in the process of self-determination and independence and to intensify its efforts for the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with a view to the further mobilization of international public opinion in support of complete decolonization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, and, inter alia:

(a) To continue, in consultation with the Special Committee, to collect, prepare and disseminate basic material, studies and articles relating to the problems of decolonization and, in particular, to continue to publish the periodical Objective: Justice and other publications, special articles and studies, including the Decolonization series, by increasing the information on all the Territories under consideration by the Special Committee, and to select from them appropriate material for wider dissemination by means of reprints in various languages;

(b) To seek the full co-operation of the administering Powers concerned in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To intensify the activities of all United Nations information centres;

(d) To maintain a working relationship with the Organization of African Unity and other appropriate organizations by holding periodic consultations and exchanging relevant information;

(e) To enlist, with the close co-operation of United Nations information centres, the support of non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization in the dissemination of the relevant information;

(f) To continue to provide full press release coverage for all meetings of the Special Committee and its subsidiary bodies;

(g) To ensure the availability of the necessary facilities and services to that end,

(h) To report to the Special Committee on the measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, in particular the administering Powers, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations having a special interest in decolonization, to undertake or intensify, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and within their respective spheres of competence, the large-scale dissemination of the information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session.

Week of solidarity with the peoples of all colonial Territories and those in South Africa

In 1990, the UN Secretariat undertook a series of public information activities, assisted by UN information centres throughout the world, in observance of the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of All Colonial Territories, as well as Those in South Africa, Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (21-25 May). In commemoration of the Week, the Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization issued a statement on 21 May. He reviewed developments in decolonization, particularly in Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III) and South Africa, and urged Member States to mobilize maximum support for the peoples of South Africa and elsewhere struggling for freedom, independence and equal rights.

Scholarships

In accordance with the General Assembly's request in resolution 44/87 [YUN 1989, p. 764], the Secretary-General reported in October 1990 [A/45/560] on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs. Over the years, he noted, 43 States had offered to make scholarships available. In 1990, Egypt informed him that it had made available 143 scholarships for the academic year 1990/91. The Federal Republic of Germany in 1989/90 had sponsored 10 university scholarships for students from South Africa and Namibia and 87 scholarships for professional training. It also provided for 30 on-the-spot scholarships in South Africa and 40 for Namibian students, as well as 171 on-the-spot scholarships for professional training. Israel informed the Secretary-General that it was awarding scholarships in 1990, as in previous years, consisting of 40-month post-graduate courses in exploration and development of ground-water resources, agriculture and meteorology, as well as in rural community development and cattle production and extension methods. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya offered 10 university scholarships to students from Western Sahara and two for students from other NSGTs. The USSR offered grants in 1989/90 to 150 undergraduate and post-graduate students from NSGTs for study in academic institutions.

In addition, the Secretary-General reported, the UN Secretariat had received between 1 September 1989 and 30 September 1990 requests from 96 students for information on the availability of scholarships; 90 of them were not inhabitants of NSGTs. Requests for information and applications from Namibian students were forwarded to the Office of the Commissioner for Namibia for consideration under the scholarship programme for Namibians and to the UN Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (see PART TWO, Chapter I), as well as to the offering Governments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/20.

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/87 of 11 December 1989,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential in order to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;

4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

Chapter II

International Trusteeship System

During 1990, the Trusteeship Council, composed of China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, on behalf of the Security Council continued to supervise the one Trust Territory remaining under the International Trusteeship System—the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The Territory, designated as a strategic area, was administered by the United States in accordance with the Trusteeship Agreement approved by the Security Council in 1947 [YUN 194647, p. 3981.

In December 1990, the Security Council terminated the Trusteeship Agreement with respect to three of the four entities of the Trust Territory—the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands. The fourth entity, Palau, continued to be supervised by the Trusteeship Council and administered by the United States.

The Trusteeship Council held its twentieth special session on 8 January, to consider the dispatch of a visiting mission to observe a February plebiscite in Palau on the Compact of Free Association. Its fifty-seventh regular session was held between 21 May and 28 November, at which it considered the annual report of the Administering Authority for the year ended 30 September 1989, heard 10 petitioners, and examined 63 written petitions and four communications.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

In accordance with Trusteeship Council resolution 2183(LIII) [YUN 1986, p. 918], the United States in 1990 continued to pursue the constitutional steps necessary to bring into force the Compact of Free Association with Palau. To that end, it had passed an Implementation Act in December 1989. In that same month, the United States had received a formal request from the President of Palau for a UN mission to observe a plebiscite on the Compact, to be held on 6 February 1990, and requested that a special session of the Trusteeship Council consider the issue [T/1940].

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL ACTION

At its twentieth special session on 8 January, the Trusteeship Council, by resolution 2192

(S-XX), decided to send a five-member mission to Palau.

Arrangements for the dispatch of a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trusteeship Council,

Aware of the plebiscite scheduled for 6 February 1990 in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, on the Compact of Free Association with the United States of America,

Having been invited by the Administering Authority to dispatch a mission to observe the plebiscite,

Considering that it would be desirable to include in such a mission representatives of countries of the region that are not members of the Trusteeship Council,

1. Decides to send to Palau a visiting mission to begin on or about 29 January 1990 and to end as soon as practicable after the declaration of the results of the plebiscite;

2. Further decides that the Visiting Mission to Palau should be composed of five members, the members to be representatives of China, Fiji, France, Papua New Guinea and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland;

3. Directs the Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite, specifically the polling arrangements, the casting of votes, the closure of voting, the counting of ballots and the declaration of results;

4. Requests the Visiting Mission to submit to the Trusteeship Council as soon as practicable a report on its observation of the plebiscite, containing such conclusions and recommendations as it may wish to make;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities to assist the Visiting Mission in the performance of its functions.

In the February referendum, slightly more than 60 per cent of the electorate voted in favour of the Compact, which was not sufficient to satisfy the 75 per cent majority required under the Palauan Constitution.

According to the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau [T/1942 & Corr.1], which visited Palau from 31 January to 10 February, the political campaign had been extremely low-key, peaceful and restrained, and the plebiscite had been conducted freely, fairly and in accordance with the rules, and its results reflected the wishes of the people of Palau.

Following consideration of the Visiting Mission's report, the Trusteeship Council on 1 June adopted resolution 2193(LVII).

Report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to observe the plebiscite in Palau,
Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,
February 1990

The Trusteeship Council,

Having examined at its fifty-seventh session the report of the United Nations Visiting Mission, dispatched by the Trusteeship Council at the invitation of the Administering Authority to observe the plebiscite in Palau, Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, held on 6 February 1990,

Takes note of the report of the Visiting Mission;

Expresses its appreciation of the work accomplished by the Visiting Mission on its behalf.

In its conclusions and recommendations, contained in its report to the Security Council [S/22212], the Trusteeship Council noted the statement of the representative of Palau before it on 21 May that the leadership of Palau was reviewing possible options with respect to the resolution of Palau's future political status. The Council welcomed the assurance of the Administering Authority that it was prepared to assist the Government of Palau, at its request, in any appropriate endeavour leading to the final determination of a political status chosen by the people of Palau.

The Trusteeship Council noted that the peoples of the Trust Territory, in the exercise of their right to self-government as set out in Article 76 b of the Charter of the United Nations, had elected to assume full responsibility for administration in the economic, social and educational fields. The Council considered that any difficulties over the interpretation of the new status agreements should be resolved in accordance with the procedures mutually agreed and laid down in the relevant new status agreements.

While welcoming the improvements reported in the tourism and fisheries sectors in Palau, the Council noted the concerns of its Government regarding economic development and self-sufficiency and shared the view that continued efforts were needed. The Council also welcomed the steps taken by the Administering Authority to assist Palau in particular in the areas of fisheries enforcement, the campaign against drug trafficking and abuse, public health and safety, and the operation and maintenance of public works facilities.

During its regular session, the Council had before it a Secretariat working paper issued on 14 May [T/L.1274], outlining the political, economic, social and educational conditions in the Trust Territory.

After considering four written communications and 63 petitions [T/INF/38], the Council decided on 23 May, without objection, to draw the attention of petitioners to the observations made during its current session by the Administering Authority and by other members of the Council.

On 1 June, again without objection, the Trusteeship Council decided to draw the Security Council's attention to its deliberations at its fifty-seventh session concerning the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territory.

On 28 November, the Trusteeship Council adopted its report [S/22212] to the Security Council, containing information on its deliberations and decisions taken during its twentieth special and fifty-seventh regular sessions.

Consideration by Special Committee. The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) considered the question of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands on 1 August. It adopted the report of the Sub-Committee on Small Territories [A/AC.109/L.1737], endorsing its conclusions and recommendations, which were later transmitted to the United States, as well as to the President of the Trusteeship Council [T/1950] and to the President of the Security Council [S/21662], for the attention of their members. During its consideration, the Committee had before it a Secretariat working paper [A/AC.109/1038] containing information on political, economic and social development, as well as educational advancement and special issues such as the environment and war-damage claims. The United States, as the Administering Authority, did not take part in the Committee's consideration of the Trust Territory.

The Special Committee recommended a draft resolution to the General Assembly for adoption. By that text, the Assembly would have affirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Trust Territory to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the UN Charter and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples [GA res.1514(XV)], and expressed the view that such factors as territorial size, geographical location, size of population and limited natural resources should not delay speedy implementation of the Declaration. The Assembly would have reaffirmed the importance of ensuring that the people of the Trust Territory fully and freely exercised their inalienable right and that the obligations of the Administering Authority were duly discharged. It would have welcomed the increasing devolution of power to the people of the Trust Territory and urged the Administering Authority to continue that process. Noting the intention of the Administering Authority to seek the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement on the Territory and its assurances that it would continue to fulfil its responsibilities, the Assembly would have called on it to discharge those responsibilities in strict conformity with the Charter and the 1960 Declaration. The Assembly would have affirmed its strong conviction that the presence of military bases and installations in the Trust Territory could constitute a major obstacle to implementing the Declaration and that it was the responsibility of the Administering Authority to ensure that their existence did not hinder the population of the Territory from exercising its right to self-determination and independence. It would have expressed the view that the Administering Authority should take all necessary measures to reduce the Trust Territory's economic dependence on it and facilitate the attainment of economic independence.

The Assembly would have urged the Administering Authority, in co-operation with the local authorities, to safeguard and guarantee the right of the people of the Trust Territory to own and dispose of the Territory's natural-including maritime-resources. It would have stressed the need to preserve the Micronesian people's cultural identity and heritage and taken note of the interest of the people of the Territory in creating a nuclear-free zone in the Pacific. Finally, the Assembly would have appealed to the Administering Authority to resume its participation in the related work of the Special Committee and to provide the Committee with up-to-date information on the Territory.

The text of the conclusions and recommendations concerning the Trust Territory, as well as the draft resolution, were contained in the report of the Special Committee to the Assembly [A/45/23].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

On 25 October, the Chairman of the General Assembly's Fourth Committee, following consultations with the Chairman of the Special Committee on decolonization and with delegations concerned, suggested [A/45/685] that no action be taken on the draft resolution submitted by the latter Committee. The suggestion was adopted without objection.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 December 1990, the Security Council met to consider a letter dated 7 December from the President of the Trusteeship Council to the President of the Security Council, transmitting a draft resolution recommended for adoption by the latter Council on the partial termination of the Trusteeship Agreement for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands [S/22008]. Also before the Council was a draft resolution tabled by China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States [S/22001].

The Council President drew the attention of the members to letters from Papua New Guinea [S/22007], Vanuatu [S/22009] and Cuba [S/22034]. Both Papua New Guinea and Vanuatu, the latter on behalf of the South Pacific Forum, recommended to the Council the early termination of the Trusteeship Agreement in respect of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and the Republic of the Marshall Islands. Cuba transmitted letters of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands and the President of the Senate of Palau requesting the exclusion of the Northern Mariana Islands from the termination of the Trusteeship Agreement. New Zealand, which was invited at its request to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, endorsed the call for partial termination of the Agreement.

A motion by Cuba to adjourn the Council meeting until 8 January 1991 was rejected by 9 votes against to 2 in favour, with 4 abstentions. Putting forward its motion, Cuba said the Council had not had an opportunity to consider in depth the situation. Several questions had arisen in the course of consultations and no efforts had been made to carry out negotiations with all members in order to produce a text supported by all. Also, the Council had before it very specific requests from representatives of the people whose destiny it would be deciding, in which they asked that a hasty decision not be taken.

On the same date, the Security Council adopted resolution 683(1990) by a vote of 14 to 1 (Cuba).

The Security Council,

Recalling Chapter XII of the Charter of the United Nations which established an international trusteeship system,

Conscious of its responsibility relating to strategic areas as set forth in Article 83, paragraph 1, of the Charter,

Recalling its resolution 21(1947) of 2 April 1947, by which it approved the Trusteeship Agreement for the former Japanese Mandated Islands, since known as the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands,

Noting that the Trusteeship Agreement designated the United States of America as Administering Authority of the Trust Territory,

Mindful that article 6 of the Trusteeship Agreement, in conformity with Article 76 of the Charter, obligated the Administering Authority, inter alia, to promote the development of the inhabitants of the Trust Territory towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of the Trust Territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned,

Aware that, towards this end, negotiations between the Administering Authority and representatives of the Trust Territory began in 1969 and resulted in the conclusion of a Compact of Free Association in the case of the Federated States of Micronesia and the Marshall Islands, and a Commonwealth Covenant in the case of the Northern Mariana Islands,

Satisfied that the peoples of the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands have freely exercised their right to self-determination in approving their respective new status agreements in plebiscites observed by visiting missions of the Trusteeship Council and that, in addition to these plebiscites, the duly constituted legislatures of these entities have adopted resolutions approving the respective new status agreements, thereby freely expressing their wish to terminate the status of these entities as parts of the Trust Territory,

Hoping that the people of Palau will be able in due course to complete the process of freely exercising their right to self-determination,

Taking note of Trusteeship Council resolution 2183 (LIII) of 28 May 1986 and of subsequent reports of the Trusteeship Council to the Security Council, Determines, in the light of the entry into force of the new status agreements for the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands, that the objectives of the Trusteeship Agreement have been fully attained, and that the applicability of the Trusteeship Agreement has terminated, with respect to those entities.

Other aspects of the Trusteeship System

Fellowships and scholarships

During its regular session, the Trusteeship Council on 23 May considered a report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Trust Territories, covering the period from 20

May 1989 to 15 May 1990 [T/1948]. Responding to an invitation in General Assembly resolution 557(VI) [YUN1951, p. 788] to make available to qualified students from Trust Territories scholarships, fellowships and internships, 11 Member States (Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, USSR, Yugoslavia) had in the past made such opportunities available.

The Secretary-General stated that to his request of 1 March 1990 to Member States for up-to-date information, only Italy and the USSR had responded. Italy offered no scholarship to the inhabitants of the Trust Territory, and none of them studied in the USSR during the academic year 1989/90. According to the report, information on available scholarships was included in the twenty-sixth edition of Study Abroad (1989/1990/1991), published by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The Council decided, without objection, to take note of the report.

Information dissemination

On 24 and 29 May, the Trusteeship Council considered a report of the Secretary-General on dissemination of information on the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in Trust Territories, covering the period from 1 May 1989 to 30 April 1990 [T/1947]. According to the report, the Department of Public Information (DPI) distributed information material both directly to the Trust Territory and through the United Nations Information Centres (UNICs), primarily UNIC Tokyo. UNIC Tokyo was in constant contact with the Trust Territory in order to be kept aware of its people's information needs.

During the period under review, DPI produced press releases in English and in French dealing with the work of the Trusteeship Council. Council documents were airmailed to recipients in the Trust Territory. UN publications, radio programmes and video tapes were regularly sent to government offices, radio stations, newspapers, educational institutions, libraries and individuals.

All editions of the UN Chronicle, a quarterly DPI publication, were sent to UNIC Tokyo, which forwarded them to the Territory. The UN Chronicle in 1989 had covered the deliberations of the Trusteeship Council and the UN Visiting Mission to Palau. In response to a Council request in 1989, DPI had assembled a file of information materials, which had been distributed in the Trust Territory.

During consideration of the item by the Council, its Secretary informed members that in addition to distributing materials to libraries, schools and political institutions, the Secretariat intended to widen its information efforts in the Territory, to include outstanding individuals, organizations, reporters, Palau governmental authorities, members of parliament, and the Governors of the various states in Palau.

On 29 May, the Trusteeship Council, without objection, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Co-operation with Special Committee on decolonization

At its 1990 regular session, the Trusteeship Council considered together the question of attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territories and the situation with regard to the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and co-operation with the Special Committee on decolonization.

During the deliberations, the USSR noted that the UN bodies dealing with decolonization had been called on to co-ordinate their efforts in order to help the peoples still living under colonial domination and trusteeship to achieve self-determination on the basis of freedom and social and political choice. It considered that such co-operation would undoubtedly benefit the Trust Territory's people.

Co-operation with CERD

On 24 May, the Trusteeship Council decided to consider jointly the question of co-operation with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) and the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993) (see PART III, Chapter X).

The Council, without objection, took note of those two agenda items.

Chapter III

Namibia

The year 1990 was a historic one for United Nations efforts in the area of decolonization, as Namibia, the last remaining colony in Africa, attained its independence on 21 March. That event occurred nearly a quarter century after the General Assembly had acted to change the Territory's status to bring it under UN administration, and a dozen years after the Security Council laid out in resolution 435(1978) a detailed settlement plan for its independence. In his 1990 report on the work of the Organization, the Secretary-General said that the Namibian experience was a striking demonstration of the results that could be achieved by multilateral effort, by the active engagement of the principal organs of the United Nations and by members of the Security Council and other States undertaking a crucial role in negotiations.

Background

Namibia, with 824,292 square kilometres (slightly larger than France and the United Kingdom combined), had a population of 1.7 million, about 1.8 persons per square kilometre, compared to 18 for Africa as a whole. Its landscape varied considerably from arid to lush; it exported diamonds, uranium oxide and other minerals, beef and karakul pelts for fur coats; it also had some of the world's richest fishing waters.

A pre-First World War German colony, known as South West Africa, the Territory had been administered by South Africa since 1920, first under a League of Nations Mandate, and then, illegally, since 1966 when the General Assembly voted to revoke its Mandate. In 1967, the Assembly created the United Nations Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until its independence. Nevertheless, South Africa refused to recognize the authority of the United Nations and continued to rule the Territory. In 1968, the Territory was renamed Namibia. The Assembly in 1976 recognized the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), led by Sam Nujoma, as the sole authentic representative of the Namibian people, and decided that any independence talks must be between South Africa and SWAPO. In 1978, the Assembly, at a special session, expressed support for the armed struggle of the Namibian people and for a settlement within the framework of the United Nations.

To end the stalemate, the five Western members of the Security Council—Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the United Kingdom and the United States—submitted to the Council in 1978 a proposal for settling the question of Namibia. By resolution 435(1978), the Council endorsed the UN plan for Namibia and established the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG) to supervise its implementation.

In 1980, South Africa accepted the plan. However, it did not agree to a cease-fire. Negotiations were again stalled when South Africa decided to link the independence of Namibia to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. In December 1988, Angola, Cuba and South Africa signed an agreement which opened the way to implementation of the UN plan for Namibia. Elections for a Constituent Assembly were held in November 1989. The work of UNTAG, which had supervised the elections leading to the creation of the Constituent Assembly on 9 February 1990, came to an end.

On 21 March, shortly after midnight, the Namibian flag—a bright yellow sun on a blue, red, green and white background—was raised at the National Stadium in Windhoek, the capital of Namibia, and Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar swore in Namibia's first President, Sam Nujoma, marking the culmination of years of intense efforts by the United Nations to promote a peaceful transition to democracy and independence. "The whole world, especially Africa, rejoices with Namibia. What is a triumph for Namibia is a triumph for Africa and, indeed, for the principles that are enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations", the Secretary-General told the crowd of 30,000. "Africa's last colony is, from this hour, liberated", President Nujoma, who had led a liberation struggle for 34 years, affirmed, expressing the hope that the statesmanship and realism shown by South Africa's President, F. W. de Klerk, over Namibia would "continue to unfold in South Africa itself".

The following month, the Council for Namibia held its final session, from 9 to 11 April in Windhoek, reviewing its activities in fulfilment of its mandate. In a declaration at the conclusion of the meeting, the Council stated that for more than two decades its mission had been inspired by the steadfastness of the Namibian people and the solidarity of the international community, and it was proud of the assistance it had been able to extend to the Namibian people throughout its existence. It decided to transfer those programmes and activities that had not been completed, as well as its assets, to the Government of Namibia, and recommended to the General Assembly its own dissolution. In September, the Assembly dissolved the Council and removed from the agenda of its forty-fifth session the item "Question of Namibia", thus ending an important chapter in the history of the Organization.

The newly independent nation of Namibia was admitted to the United Nations on 23 April as the 160th member. Despite a relatively developed infrastructure, skilled workers and local capital, Namibia was expected to need significant external assistance during its first years of independence, with a particular need for foreign loans to cover the expected $200 million annual budget deficit due to the loss of South African fiscal aid.

In June, a donors' pledging conference for Namibia was held in New York. Some $650 million was pledged for the period 1990-1993 for reconstruction and development. In September, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure the continued role of the United Nations in the reconstruction and development of Namibia through programmes of assistance.

At an independence day rally, Namibian President Nujoma declared that his Government was drafting a code to spell out an "open and inviting" attitude to investment and to set out the kind of commitment expected from investors towards national development goals. The World Bank described Namibia as having three main economic challenges: reactivation of the economy, reduction of income disparities, and restraint and redirection of public expenditures.

Independence

On 28 March, the Secretary-General reported [S/21215] to the Security Council that shortly after midnight on 20/21 March, at the National Stadium in Windhoek, the flag of the Republic of South Africa was lowered and the flag of the Republic of Namibia was raised, thus marking Namibia's accession to independence in accordance with Council resolution 435(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 915]. Immediately thereafter, the Secretary-General administered the oath of office to Sam Nujoma, leader of SWAPO, who had been elected President of the Republic of Namibia by the Constituent Assembly on 16 February. On 22 March, the South African Administrator General, Louis Pienaar, left Namibia. Thus, said the Secretary-General, the goal of independence for Namibia, for which the United Nations and its Member States had striven for so long, was achieved in dignity and with great rejoicing.

Constitution

The Constituent Assembly of Namibia, elected in November 1989 following the successful holding of UN-supervised elections, met on 9 February 1990 in Windhoek and approved, by consensus, the Constitution for an independent Namibia. As the fundamental law of the sovereign and independent Republic of Namibia, the Constitution reflected the "Principles for a Constituent Assembly and for an independent Namibia", adopted by all the parties concerned in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1292]. In a 16 March 1990 report [S/20967/Add.2], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council the full and definitive text of the Constitution, together with a comparison between the new Constitution and the 1982 constitutional principles. The Constitution entered into force on Independence Day, 21 March, as established by the Constituent Assembly.

The 148-article Constitution provided for a unitary State, with a National Assembly of 72 members, elected by proportional representation, and a National Council consisting of two members from each of Namibia's regions to review bills passed by the National Assembly. In its preamble, it was recalled that the rights of the Namibian people had long been denied by colonialism, racism and apartheid and it was asserted that the Namibian people were determined to adopt a Constitution that expressed for themselves and their children the resolve to cherish and protect the gains of the long struggle. Namibians were resolved to foster national unity and reconciliation in a sovereign, secular, democratic and unitary State, securing to all citizens justice, liberty, equality and fraternity. Fundamental human rights and freedoms were enshrined in its 148 articles. Article 23 stated that the practice of racial discrimination and the practice and ideology of apartheid from which the majority of Namibians had suffered for so long was prohibited and might be made a punishable offence by Act of Parliament. At the same time, provision was made for affirmative action by Parliament for those who had been disadvantaged by past discrimination and for achieving a balanced structuring of the public service, the police force, the defence force and the prison service.

UN membership

On 6 April [S/21241], Namibian President Nujoma submitted to the Secretary-General an application for his country's membership in the United Nations, and requested that it be given priority consideration to enable Namibia to participate in the special session of the General Assembly devoted to economic development, to be held from 23 to 28 April.

On 17 April [S/PV.2917], the Security Council referred the application to the Committee on the Admission of New Members for examination and report [S/21251], waiving the time-limit for reporting in order to facilitate Namibia's early admission. On the same day [S/PV.2918], the Council, by resolution 652(1990), unanimously recommended to the General Assembly that Namibia be admitted to UN membership. It also adopted the proposal of the Committee that the item on admission of new Members be included in the agenda of the eighteenth special session of the Assembly.

On 23 April, the Assembly, at the first plenary meeting of its eighteenth special session, devoted to international economic co-operation (see PART THREE, Chapter I), adopted resolution S-18/1, admitting the Republic of Namibia to membership in the United Nations as its 160th member. (It later became the 159th member when the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen merged into a single State (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).)

Following Namibia's admission, the President of the General Assembly, Joseph N. Garba of Nigeria, paid tribute to the United Nations, which, he said, had worked tirelessly to help the people of Namibia achieve its independent nationhood, including the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council, the Economic and Social Council, the Council for Namibia and the Secretary-General. He said that Namibia would forever be a reminder of what could be achieved when there was political will among nations. Namibia had shown that the path was open to negotiation for the achievement of a multiracial society committed to democracy, the rule of law and respect for inalienable human rights, ordered liberties and fundamental freedoms.

The Secretary-General said that the independence of Namibia and its admission to the United Nations had taken place at a moment of great and creative change in the world. Old confrontations were crumbling and the search for a new harmony was visible in several areas that had been most plagued by conflict in recent decades. The United Nations, inspired by Namibia's admission to the Organization, looked to those emerging global opportunities with renewed hope and confidence.

Addressing the Assembly for the first time as a representative of a UN Member State, the Prime Minister of Namibia, Hage Geingob, expressed appreciation to the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and all countries that had stood firm with Namibia in its struggle for freedom and justice. He also paid tribute to the UN system, particularly the Council for Namibia. He said that the new State would fulfil all obligations attendant upon its becoming a member of the world body. Namibia stood ready to take its place among the nations of the world to contribute positively towards the realization of world peace and harmony through the United Nations.

Post-independence activities

Council for Namibia

On 19 May 1967 [GA res. 2248(S-V)], the General Assembly, following its 1966 decision [GA res. 2145(XXI)] to terminate South Africa's Mandate over Namibia, established the United Nations Council for Namibia (then South West Africa), composed of 11 Member States and assisted by the Commissioner for Namibia, to administer the Territory. The Council held its first meeting on 16 August 1967; 23 years later, it was finally able to conclude its business at a final session in April 1990 in Windhoek, the first to be held within the territory of Namibia.

The activities of the Council were aimed primarily at bringing an end to South Africa's illegal presence in Namibia, achieving Namibia's independence, and protecting the rights and interests of Namibia and its people. In that connection, it mobilized international public opinion on, and disseminated information about, the political, military, economic and social aspects of the Namibian question by organizing conferences, seminars and symposia; by sending missions of consultation to various capitals; and by promoting Namibia's interests in the specialized agencies and other international organizations and conferences, and in intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

In addition, the Council supervised the United Nations Fund for Namibia, providing assistance to Namibians through the three accounts of the Fund—the General Account for education, social and relief activities; the United Nations Institute for Namibia; and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. Further, the Council disseminated information on the implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia (see p. 957) and undertook activities in the legal sphere, most notably the institution of legal proceedings in the domestic courts of the Netherlands, and by supporting initiatives in various regions and countries to enact legislation imposing sanctions against South Africa. It also considered questions relating to the accession of Namibia to appropriate international conventions, covenants and agreements.

Special session

On 2 April 1990, the General Assembly, by decision 44/463, noted the approval of the Committee on Conferences for the Council for Namibia to hold a special session in Namibia from 9 to 11 April.

The special session, held in the capital city of Windhoek at the invitation of the Government of Namibia, was to review the activities of the Council in fulfilment of its mandate as the legal Administering Authority for Namibia, and make recommendations to the Assembly concerning its dissolution and related matters arising as a consequence of Namibia's accession to independence.

Namibian President Sam Nujoma addressed the opening meeting. He expressed thanks and appreciation to all members of the Council, as well as observers, for their vital contribution and dedication to the struggle of the Namibian people. The Council's programmes and institutions, he said, had played a vital role in providing Namibians with the skills essential for the administration of an independent Namibia. The Council could therefore truly pride itself on having been part of the Namibian struggle against apartheid and colonialism.

The Council had before it a report on its activities since its establishment and a status report on the implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, and considered transitional arrangements for the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the Nationhood Programme for Namibia. It also had before it messages received on the occasion of the independence of Namibia by the Council President from countries and UN and other intergovernmental organizations [A/AC .131/324].

At the conclusion of the session, the Council issued a declaration [A/44/940-S/21270] in which it recalled the assumption 23 years before by the United Nations of direct responsibility for Namibia and the establishment of the Council as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory. That responsibility, it declared, was fulfilled on 21 March when Namibia attained independence. That achievement was a tribute to the heroism and determination of the Namibian people in their long struggle for national liberation in which SWAPO played a leading role. The struggle and the determination of the Namibian people was infused by international support, assistance and solidarity. The role played by the United Nations in that regard was unique and historic. The commitment of Member States to the Namibian cause was reflected in the activities of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations. The Council placed on record its appreciation of the support extended by the Organization of African Unity, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the front-line States and many other nations, NGOs and individuals who had devoted themselves to the Namibian cause. It called on all to address with equal fervour and concern the immense challenges facing the new nation.

The Council decided to arrange, in consultation with Namibia, the smooth transfer of those programmes and activities that remained incomplete, as well as the assets of the Council, to the Government of Namibia. In the light of the fulfilment of its mandate, the Council recommended to the General Assembly its own dissolution.

The Council also adopted two resolutions: one thanking the Government and people of Namibia for the invitation to hold the special session in Windhoek and for the warm hospitality accorded to the participants; and the other paying tribute to Peter D. Zuze of Zambia, President of the Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 September, at its resumed forty-fourth regular session, the General Assembly considered the agenda item "Question of Namibia". It had before it the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia [YUN 1989, p. 8091, and the section of the report [A/44/23 (Part V) & (Part V)/Add.1] of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) relating to Namibia.

Addressing the Assembly, the representative of Namibia, in the light of the forthcoming dissolution of the Council for Namibia, appealed to the international community to see that the ongoing programmes of the Council were not sacrificed. The Secretary-General should be given the means and the authority to oversee completion of those outstanding commitments, including the relocation of the United Nations Institute for Namibia and the satisfactory conclusion of its ongoing activities.

The Assembly, on 11 September, adopted resolution 44/243 A.

Dissolution of the United Nations Council for Namibia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2248(S-V) of 19 May 1967, by which it decided to establish a United Nations Council for South West Africa as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence,

Recalling also its resolution S-18/1 of 23 April 1990, by which it admitted the Republic of Namibia to membership in the United Nations,

Taking note of the declaration of the United Nations Council for Namibia adopted at its special plenary meetings, held at Windhoek from 9 to 11 April 1990, by which the Council decided to recommend to the General Assembly its own dissolution as a result of Namibia's attainment of freedom and independence,

Taking note also of the decision taken by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its special plenary meetings immediately to arrange, with the agreement of the Government of the Republic of Namibia, to co-ordinate the smooth transfer of the relevant programmes and activities of the Council to the Government of Namibia,

Taking note further of the decision of the United Nations Council for Namibia requesting the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and the United Nations Institute for Namibia to organize in Namibia a seminar on programme planning for the national reconstruction and development of Namibia,

1. Commends the United Nations Council for Namibia, as the legal Administering Authority for the Territory until independence, for the fulfilment of the important responsibilities entrusted to it by the General Assembly in its resolution 2248(S-V) and for its unrelenting efforts to ensure the attainment by the Namibian people of self-determination and national independence;

2. Decides that the United Nations Council for Namibia, having fulfilled the important mandate entrusted to it by General Assembly resolution 2248(S-V) relating to the Territory, is hereby dissolved;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary resources in order to complete the implementation of the programme activities approved by the United Nations Council for Namibia for 1990, as set forth in annex I to the present resolutions;

4. Requests the Secretary-General immediately to arrange, in consultation with the Government of Namibia, to co-ordinate the transfer to the Government of Namibia of the programmes, activities and assets of the United Nations Council for Namibia, including archival collections consisting of, inter alia, major resolutions and decisions of the United Nations on the question of Namibia and other relevant documents and official correspondence, as well as, in particular, those relating to the implementation of Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia and to the accession to international conventions and representation of Namibia in specialized agencies of the United Nations and intergovernmental organizations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in recognition of the unique and direct responsibility that the United Nations had assumed over Namibia prior to independence, to ensure the continued role of the United Nations in the reconstruction and development of the newly independent State of Namibia by providing the necessary resources and staff within the Secretariat for the delivery of such programmes of assistance;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide assistance as may be requested by the Government of Namibia in the preparation of a comprehensive national census in order to determine accurate demographic and other relevant socio-economic statistics on Namibia;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to consider as a matter of priority the redeployment within the United Nations Secretariat and other organizations of the United Nations system of the staff of the Office of the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia.

After adopting resolutions 44/243 A and B, the Assembly deleted the item on the question of Namibia from the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session.

Also on 11 September, the Assembly, in response to a request of the Special Committee on decolonization [A/44/974], by decision 44/469, decided, in the light of the independence of Namibia, to change the title of item 115 of the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session regarding foreign economic interests impeding efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa by deleting specific reference to Namibia.

Lifting of sanctions

On 1 March, Sam Nujoma, President-elect of Namibia, informed the Secretary-General that, in accordance with the Constitution of the Republic of Namibia, Walvis Bay now formed an integral part of Namibia. As of 21 March, he said, Walvis Bay should be recognized as a bona fide port of entry to Namibia for refined oil products and other goods. He recalled the international campaign to isolate South Africa because of its apartheid policy, which included a ban, since 1977 [GA res. 32/105 G], on the sale of oil and oil products with a destination to South African ports, including Walvis Bay. He requested the Secretary-General to advise all oil-producing countries and trading nations to lift the ban of oil and other goods destined for Namibia and of the desire of the future Namibian Government to distance itself from South African influence by being able to trade freely in the world market.

On 5 March [A/45/159-S/21181], the Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the General Assembly the request of the President-elect of Namibia, and recommended that the Assembly be convened to take appropriate action.

The Assembly President, on 12 March [A/45/187-S/21221], informed the Secretary-General that he agreed that the most expeditious way of responding to the request would be for the Assembly to rescind its earlier decision on sanctions. He was, however, inclined to await the independence of Namibia before taking action to enable the new administration to assume and exercise full control of its territory before the sanctions were lifted and to ensure that, while lifting the ban on oil and other goods destined for Namibia, the Assembly did not undermine existing sanctions against South Africa. He would commence consultations to convene the Assembly so that action could be taken after Namibia's independence.

UN Transition Assistance Group

The United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG), the establishment of which the Security Council authorized by resolution 435(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 915] to ensure the early independence of Namibia through free elections under the control of the United Nations, began operations on 1 April 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 790]. Only after agreement was reached between Angola, Cuba and South Africa on the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, did South Africa consent to co-operate with the Secretary-General to ensure Namibia's independence, and SWAPO agreed to a cessation of hostilities. UNTAG's tasks included keeping Namibia's borders under surveillance, preventing infiltration and intimidation, and ensuring the safe return of refugees and their free participation in the electoral process.

The mission successfully completed its work with the holding of elections from 7 to 11 November 1989 throughout Namibia, and the attainment of independence by Namibia on 21 March 1990. At the height of the mission, UNTAG numbered nearly 8,000 individuals from more than 100 nations who worked at more than 200 duty stations throughout the Territory. Of that number, 17 persons lost their lives during the year-long mission.

In his final report [S/21215] on the implementation of resolution 435(1978), dated 28 March 1990, the Secretary-General stated that the goal of independence for Namibia, for which the United Nations and its Members had striven for so long, had been achieved. As a result, the mandate entrusted to UNTAG had come to an end. The remaining personnel were being withdrawn, with the exception of those who were to remain in Namibia for a limited period under bilateral arrangements negotiated between their Governments and Namibia. A small rear party was to remain to finalize the administrative aspects of UNTAG's withdrawal, including the disposal of assets.

Support programmes for Namibia

UN Fund for Namibia

The United Nations Fund for Namibia, for which voluntary contributions were the main financial source, over the years served as the main instrument through which the Council for Namibia, acting as its trustee, channelled assistance to Namibians. The Fund had three main programmes with special accounts: the Nationhood Programme for Namibia; the United Nations Institute for Namibia; and educational, social and relief assistance (General Account).

The Nationhood Programme provided manpower training and conducted surveys and analyses of Namibian economic and social sectors, including identification of development tasks and policy options. Under manpower training, hundreds of Namibians continued their training at various institutions, mostly in African countries. Some 23 projects under the Programme had been inactive for more than a year. Of the 11 remaining projects, 4 were about to be closed and 3 were being continued for about 5 students each. Training was also done through the United Nations Vocational Training Centre in Cuacra, Angola, and the Namibia Secondary Technical School in Loudima, Congo. The assistance project to the school was subject to review by the Governing Board of the Vocational Training Centre and negotiations with the Government of Namibia.

The United Nations Institute for Namibia, located in Lusaka, Zambia, trained middle-level skilled manpower for an independent Namibia and carried out applied research in various sectors of the Namibian economy. During 1990, it had become apparent that the resources of the Institute for Namibia Account were insufficient to meet the financial requirements of the Institute. The Institute's revised budget for 1990 of $5,300,800 exceeded income for the year and cash reserves carried forward from 1989 by some $1.4 million. Accordingly, on 21 June, the Senate of the Institute requested an examination of the finances, and, at its thirty-first session (Windhoek, 28-29 August), it recommended the closure of the Institute. On 30 September, the Institute ceased operation and the Secretary-General appointed a senior official to undertake the liquidation of its assets and the discharge of its liabilities.

Educational, social and relief assistance, particularly in the form of scholarships, was the main activity financed by the Fund's General Account. It also financed vocational and technical training; provided assistance in health and medical care, nutrition and social welfare; acquired books and periodicals for Namibian refugee camps and SWAPO offices; and facilitated the attendance of Namibian representatives at international seminars, meetings and conferences.

The individual scholarship programme provided sponsorship for 185 Namibian students, the majority of whom were studying in the United States. It also supported six training projects similar to those of the Nationhood Programme and one project for financing the operating expenses of the Namibia Secondary Technical School in Loudima.

To support the work of the United Nations Trust Committee for the United Nations Fund for Namibia (see resolution 44/243 B below), the Secretary-General in December proposed the establishment of a Transitional Unit for Namibia in the Department for Special Political Questions, Regional Co-operation, Decolonization and Trusteeship. The Unit would implement residual programmes of the Council for Namibia, in particular activities financed by the Fund for Namibia, co-ordinate the transfer to Namibia of the Vocational Training Centre in Cuacra, and determine the status of the Namibia Secondary Technical School.

On 21 December, by resolution 45/248 B, section I, the General Assembly accepted the Secretary-General's proposal.

UN Educational and Training Programme

In a September report to the General Assembly [A/45/553], the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, between 1 September 1989 and 31 August 1990, had granted 117 new scholarships to Namibians and extended 244 more, in addition to those financed by the United Nations Fund for Namibia.

The Programme was expected to continue to provide new scholarship awards to Namibian students for a transitional period of one year following Namibia's accession to independence.

Economic and social matters

The Namibian economic picture showed some sharp contrasts: on the one hand, the country had a relatively high per capita income and well-developed physical infrastructure; however, a small minority enjoyed incomes and health and education services at levels comparable to those of a Western European country, while the vast majority endured living conditions that were barely above subsistence and suffered from highly inadequate public services.

Namibia had an expensive, fragmented and unbalanced public administration, with separate services for each of 11 ethnic groups through separate administrations. Prior to independence, as much as 30 per cent of public administration costs were covered by direct budget aid from South Africa. Now that such support had ended, the Namibian Government needed assistance while it reduced and rationalized administrative structures. An estimated 30 per cent of the Namibian labour force was out of work. The agricultural profile was characterized by skewed distribution and unequal development of land, as well as an emphasis on livestock rather than crop production. Some 30 to 40 per cent of school-age children did not attend classes, and 60 per cent of the teachers were unqualified, with another 30 per cent under-qualified, the vast majority of whom were to be found in the 10 black educational authorities. There were also problems in the areas of public health, water and sanitation. An acute housing shortage was compounded by the arrival of many returnees from exile and by demilitarization.

Protection of natural resources

The UN Council for Namibia had adopted in 1974 [YUN 1974, p. 152] Decree No. 1 for the Protection of the Natural Resources of Namibia, by which no person or entity was permitted to explore, extract or export any natural resource of Namibia without the consent of the Council. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 36/121 C [YUN 1981, p. 1163], authorizing the Council to take measures to ensure compliance with its Decree, including legal proceedings in the domestic courts of States, the Council in 1985 decided to commence legal proceedings in the Netherlands [YUN 1985, p. 1124].

On 10 April 1990, the Council heard a report by its Counsel, Willem Christiaan van Manen, on certain consequences of Namibia's independence regarding the litigation brought by the Council for Namibia against the Dutch firm Urenco Nederland Ultra-Centrifuze Nederland and the Government of the Netherlands on the protection of the natural resources of Namibia within the context of Decree No. 1. He said that in the litigation the Council was seeking a court order to prohibit Urenco from carrying out orders of enriched uranium and to instruct the State to supervise Urenco's compliance with the order by applying a system of "negative certificates of origin". The question raised was whether, in the light of Namibia's independence and the imminent dissolution of the Council, the litigation should be continued. Since 21 March, purchase contracts for uranium were being made with the consent of Namibia. The Council's claim would therefore seem to be lacking sufficient interest. However, there would seem to be sufficient interest in continuing the litigation for contracts made before that date. On the question of the substitution of Namibia for the Council in the litigation, if Namibia wished to continue the litigation or keep its option open to do so, certain arrangements would have to be made between the Council and Namibia before the Council ceased to exist. If that was sufficient under UN law, such an arrangement could take the form of an agreement or other instrument whereby the Council transferred certain assets to Namibia, including its right to claim the order sought in the litigation and all rights and obligations relating to the litigation and the period before the transfer. Such an agreement would be a normal arrangement in the course of winding up the Council's affairs.

In resolution 44/243 A, the General Assembly decided to transfer to the Government of Namibia all relevant documents and official correspondence, in particular those relating to the implementation of Decree No. 1.

System-wide activities

In response to a 1989 request of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [YUN 1989, p. 81], the Administrator reported [DP/1990/3] that the 1989 mission to Namibia had estimated the population at 1.7 million and per capita gross domestic product (GDP) at $1,044, lower than the World Bank estimate of $1,200. GDP showed a disparity ranging from $14,650 annually for whites (5 per cent of the total population) to $63 for non-whites supported by the traditional economy, representing 55 per cent of the total population.

On 22 June [E/1990/29 (dec. 90/32)], the Administrator's proposal to consolidate the funds available for the fourth cycle (1987-1991) indicative planning figure (IPF) for Namibia, which, including an independence bonus, totalled $15.67 million, including the uncommitted portion of the IPF for national liberation movements available for SWAPO. It invited Governments to contribute generously at the donors' conference (see below) to the UNDP Trust Fund for Namibia, created in 1989.

The Administrative Committee on Coordination, at its October session [ACC/1990/DEC/15-22 (dec. 1990/18)], assigned to its Organizational Committee the responsibility for keeping under review the provision of assistance to Namibia by organizations of the UN system.

The Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris, 3-14 September 1990) [A/CONF.147/18] (see PART THREE, Chapter I) adopted a resolution on economic assistance and least developed country status for Namibia. The Conference encouraged the international community and the UN system to support the fledgling economic and social structures of the new nation and its development aspirations. It considered that Namibia should be given special consideration in support of its economic and social development and, accordingly, invited the General Assembly to include Namibia in the list of least developed countries.

The Assembly, in resolution 45/198 of 21 December, requested the Committee for Development Planning to consider including Namibia in the list of LDCs and decided to give Namibia special consideration in support of its economic and social development, in accordance with the resolution of the Conference. The international community and the UN system were encouraged to support the economic and social structures of Namibia and its development aspirations.

The UN programme of activities for the 1990-1991 biennium called for the holding of a seminar, subject to the agreement of Namibia, on programme planning for reconstruction and development. The seminar would undertake an in-depth analysis and assessment of programmes and projects, as well as resource requirements for assistance to Namibia.

UN pledging conference

A donors' pledging conference to mobilize financial, material and technical support for the reconstruction and development of Namibia was held in New York on 21 and 22 June, under the auspices of UNDP. To assist the donor community in elaborating a support strategy, Namibia, with the assistance of the United Nations, had prepared a general policy statement on its reconstruction and development, a preliminary economic review, a private-sector policy paper and an investment programme, including project profiles.

Namibia's requirements for the period 1990-1992 were estimated at some $810 million. At the conference, pledges were announced of more than $200 million for 1990 for reconstruction and development, including $60 million in the form of concessional grants or loans. That did not include possible credits or loans from international development banks. Further pledges totalling $150 million per year for 1991-1993, of which some $30 million would be in the form of concessional lending, were also announced.

Transnational corporations

The Commission on Transnational Corporations (TNCS), at its sixteenth session in April 1990 [E/1990/2] (see PART THREE, Chapter V), considered the report [A/44/576-S/20867] and recommendations of the Panel of Eminent Persons established to conduct the second public hearings on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia. The Executive Director of the UN Centre on Transnational Corporations, referring to the independence of Namibia, stated that the new country would undoubtedly need continuing technical assistance in the formulation and implementation of appropriate investment policies. In that regard, the Centre was already engaged in the preparation of a new investment code at the request of the Government.

The Commission on TNCS took note of the Panel's report.

Social issues

Women and children

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its February/March session [E/1990/25] (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), following consideration of a report by the Secretary-General on developments in the situation of women and children in Namibia [E/CN.6/1990/8] (see PART TWO, Chapter I), recommended a resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/6.

Women and children in Namibia

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the independence of Namibia, proclaimed on 21 March 1990,

Bearing in mind the tremendous responsibilities that the Government of that newly independent country will face, men in political, social and economic activities and to continue their contribution to the construction of a free and independent Namibia;

PART FIVE

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) in 1990 continued to shape international law by considering and adjudicating cases brought before it by States. During the year, it dealt with seven contentious cases, and an eighth was referred to it during the year. The Court delivered a Judgment and made six Orders.

The General Assembly and the Security Council held elections in November to fill vacancies caused by the expiration of the term of office of five judges.

Poland and Spain deposited with the Secretary-General declarations recognizing the jurisdiction of the Court as compulsory, as contemplated in Article 36, paragraph 2, of the ICJ Statute.

At the beginning of the year, the Legal Counsel of the United Nations, on behalf of the Secretary-General, wrote to the ICJ President inviting the Court, in connection with the United Nations Decade of International Law, declared by the General Assembly in 1989, to submit views on the programme for the Decade and on appropriate action to be taken during it, including the possibility of holding a third international peace conference or other suitable international conference at the end of the Decade.

Judicial work of the Court

In 1990, the Court made an Order on an application by Nicaragua to intervene in the case concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras) and an Order on a request by Guinea-Bissau for provisional measures in the case concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989 (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal). The Court or its President made a further three Orders on the conduct of proceedings in several pending cases. A Chamber of the Court delivered a Judgment on the application by Nicaragua for permission to intervene in the case concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras); the President of that Chamber also made an Order on the conduct of the proceedings in that case.

One new case concerning a territorial dispute (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Chad) was referred to the Court on 31 August.

The 1990 activities of ICJ were described in two reports to the General Assembly, covering the periods from 1 August 1989 to 31 July 1990 [A/45/4] and from 1 August 1990 to 31 July 1991 [A/46/41]. By decision 45/405 of 25 October 1990, the Assembly took note of the first report.

Military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States)

In its Judgment of 27 June 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 981] on the merits of the case concerning military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua, the Court had found, inter alia, that the United States was under an obligation to make reparation to Nicaragua for all injuries caused by certain breaches of obligations under international law. It further decided that the form and amount of such reparation, failing agreement between the Parties, would be settled by the Court. In 1987, after having ascertained the views of Nicaragua and affording the United States an opportunity to state its views, the Court had made an Order [YUN 1987, p. 1047] fixing time-limits for written proceedings on the question of the form and amount of reparation to be made in the case. While Nicaragua had duly filed its Memorial in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 793], the United States did not file a Counter-Memorial by the fixed date of 29 July 1988.

At a meeting on 22 June 1990, called by the President of the Court to ascertain the views of Nicaragua and the United States on the date for reopening of oral proceedings on compensation in the case, the Agent of Nicaragua informed the President of the position of his Government, already set out in a 20 June letter from the Agent to the Court. He indicated that the new Government of Nicaragua was carefully studying the different matters it had pending before the Court, that the case was very complex, and that, added to the many difficult tasks facing the Government, there were special circumstances which would make it extremely inconvenient for it to take a decision on what procedure to follow in this case during the coming months. The President of the Court stated that he would inform the Court of Nicaragua's position and would take no action in the meantime to fix a date for hearings.

Border and transborder armed actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras)

The dispute concerning border and transborder armed actions had been before the Court since 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 983], when Nicaragua instituted proceedings against Honduras, alleging border and transborder armed actions, military attacks and threats of force from Honduras against it. In its Judgment of 20 December 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 794], the Court had found that it had jurisdiction to entertain Nicaragua's Application and that the latter was admissible. The President of the Court had fixed time-limits for written proceedings on the merits, which were extended to 8 December 1989 by an Order in August 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 816]. The Memorial of Nicaragua was filed within the prescribed time-limit. In December 1989, both Parties transmitted to the Court the text of an agreement reached by the Presidents of the Central American countries at San Isidro de Coronado, Costa Rica, which contained a paragraph recording an agreement between the Presidents of Nicaragua and Honduras aimed at achieving an extra-judicial settlement of the dispute, and which requested the postponement of the date for fixing the time-limit for the Honduran Counter-Memorial until 11 June 1990. Subsequent to that date, the President of the Court consulted the Parties and concluded that they did not desire the new time-limit for the Counter-Memorial to be fixed for the time being. He informed them that he would so advise the Court. No further developments took place.

Land, island and maritime frontier dispute (El Salvador/Honduras)

In 1990, a Chamber of the Court remained seized of the land, island and maritime frontier dispute between El Salvador and Honduras, which had been referred to the Court in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 984] by the two Central American countries on the basis of a Special Agreement between them. Each Party had filed a Memorial within the time-limit of 1 June 1988 which had been fixed by the Court after ascertainment of the Parties' views. By Orders of January and December 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 817], the Court extended time-limits for the filing of each Party's Counter-Memorial and Reply, which were filed within the prescribed time-limits of 10 February 1989 and 12 January 1990, respectively.

In November 1989, Nicaragua had addressed to the Court an Application under Article 62 of the ICJ Statute for permission to intervene in the case, stating as its object the protection of its legal rights in the Gulf of Fonseca and adjacent maritime areas, and expressing the view that its request was a matter exclusively within the procedural mandate of the full Court. In an Order of 28 February 1990 [I.C.J. Sales No. 576], adopted by 12 votes to 3, the Court, having considered the observations submitted by the Parties and the Applicant's comments thereon, concluded that it was sufficiently informed of the views of the States concerned, without there being any need for oral proceedings, and found that it was for the Chamber formed to deal with the case to decide whether the Application for permission to intervene should be granted. Judge Shigeru Oda (Japan) appended a declaration, and Judges Taslim Olawale Elias (Nigeria), Nikolai K. Tarasov (USSR) and Mohamed Shahabuddeen (Guyana) appended dissenting opinions to the Order.

Between 5 and 8 June, the Chamber, at five public sittings, heard oral arguments on the Nicaraguan Application presented on behalf of Nicaragua, El Salvador and Honduras.

At a public sitting held on 13 September 1990, the Chamber delivered its Judgment on the Application by Nicaragua for permission to intervene [I.C.J. Sales No. 584], the operative clause of which read as follows:

The Chamber,

Unanimously,

1. Finds that the Republic of Nicaragua has shown that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by part of the Judgment of the Chamber on the merits in the present case, namely its decision on the legal regime of the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca, but has not shown such an interest which may be affected by any decision which the Chamber may be required to make concerning the delimitation of those waters, or any decision as to the legal situation of the maritime spaces outside the Gulf, or any decision as to the legal situation of the islands in the Gulf;

2. Decides accordingly that the Republic of Nicaragua is permitted to intervene in the case, pursuant to Article 62 of the Statute, to the extent, in the manner and for the purposes set out in the present Judgment, but not further or otherwise.

Judge Oda appended a separate opinion to the Judgment.

By an Order of 14 September 1990 [I.C.J. Sales No. 585], the President of the Chamber, having ascertained the views of the Parties and of the intervening State, fixed 14 December 1990 as the time-limit for the submission by Nicaragua of a written statement, and 14 March 1991 as the time-limit within which the Parties might, if they so desired, furnish their written observations on the written statement of Nicaragua. The written statement by Nicaragua and the observations of the Parties were filed within the prescribed time-limit.

Maritime delimitation in the area between Greenland and Jan Mayen
(Denmark v. Norway)

In 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 795], Denmark had instituted proceedings against Norway and requested the Court to decide where a single line of delimitation should be drawn between Denmark's and Norway's fishing zones and continental shelf areas in the waters between the east coast of Greenland and the Norwegian island of Jan Mayen. By an Order of 14 October 1988, the Court had fixed 1 August 1989 as the time-limit for the Memorial of Denmark and 15 May 1990 for the Counter-Memorial of Norway. Both the Memorial and the Counter-Memorial were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

Taking into account an agreement between the Parties that there should be a Reply and a Rejoinder, the President of the Court, by an Order of 21 June 1990 [I.C.J. Sales No. 579], fixed 1 February 1991 as the time-limit for the Reply of Denmark and 1 October 1991 for the Rejoinder of Norway.

Aerial incident of 3 July 1988
(Iran v. United States)

In 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 816], Iran instituted proceedings against the United States over the aerial incident of 3 July 1988, involving the destruction of an Iranian aircraft and the killing of its 290 passengers and crew by missiles launched from the United States guided-missile cruiser USS Vincennes in Iranian airspace. By an Order of 13 December 1989, the Court had fixed 12 June 1990 as the time-limit for the filing of the Iranian Memorial and 10 December 1990 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of the United States.

By an Order of 12 June 1990 [I.C.J. Sales No. 578], made in response to a request by Iran and after the views of the United States had been ascertained, the President of the Court extended to 24 July 1990 the time-limit for the filing of the Memorial of Iran and to 4 March 1991 the time-limit for the Counter-Memorial of the United States. The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit thus extended.

Certain phosphate lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia)

In May 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 816], the Republic of Nauru filed an Application instituting proceedings against Australia in a dispute relating to the rehabilitation of certain phosphate lands mined under Australian administration before Nauruan independence. Nauru claimed that Australia had breached the trusteeship obligations it had accepted under the Charter of the United Nations and the 1947 Trusteeship Agreement for Nauru [YUN 1947-48, p. 138].

The Court had, by an Order of 18 July 1989, fixed 20 April 1990 as the time-limit for the Memorial of Nauru and 21 January 1991 for the Counter-Memorial of Australia. The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989
(Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal)

In August 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 816], Guinea-Bissau had filed an Application instituting proceedings against Senegal in a dispute concerning the validity of the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989 by the Arbitration Tribunal formed to determine the maritime boundary between the two States. Guinea-Bissau claimed that the Tribunal's decision, though supposed to serve as an award, did not in fact amount to one, and it asked the Court to declare the decision inexistent, null and void, and that Senegal was not justified in seeking to require Guinea-Bissau to apply it.

By an Order of 1 November 1989, the Court had fixed 2 May 1990 as the time-limit for the filing of the Memorial of Guinea-Bissau and 31 October 1990 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Senegal. Both the Memorial and the Counter-Memorial were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

On 18 January 1990, a request was filed in the Registry whereby Guinea-Bissau, on the ground of actions stated to have been taken by the Senegalese navy in a maritime area which Guinea-Bissau regarded as an area disputed between the Parties, requested the Court to indicate the following provisional measures: "In order to safeguard the rights of each of the Parties, they shall abstain in the disputed area from any act or action of any kind whatever, during the whole duration of the proceedings until the decision is given by the Court."

Having held public sittings on 12 February 1990 to hear the oral observations of both Parties on the request for provisional measures, the Court, in an Order of 2 March 1990 [I.C.J. Sales No. 577], adopted by 14 votes to 1, dismissed that request. Judges Evensen and Shahabuddeen appended separate opinions to the Order. Judge ad hoc Thierry appended a dissenting opinion.

Territorial dispute
(Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. Chad)

On 31 August 1990, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya filed in the Registry of the Court a notification of an agreement between it and Chad, entitled "Framework Agreement on the Peaceful Settlement of the Territorial Dispute between the Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the Republic of Chad", concluded in Algiers on 31 August 1989. The "Framework Agreement" provided, in article 1, that the two Parties undertake to settle first their territorial dispute by all political means, including conciliation, within a period of approximately one year, unless the heads of State decided otherwise. In article 2, it was provided that in the absence of a political settlement of their territorial dispute, the two Parties undertook to submit the dispute to the International Court of Justice. According to the notification, the question put to the Court could be defined in the following terms: "In further implementation of the Accord-Cadre [Framework Agreement], and taking into account the territorial dispute between the Parties, to decide upon the limits of their respective territories in accordance with the rules of international law applicable in the matter."

On 3 September 1990, Chad filed in the Registry of the Court an Application instituting proceedings against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, based on article 2 (a) of the "Framework Agreement" and subsidiarily on article 8 of a Franco-Libyan Treaty of Friendship and Good-Neighbourliness of 10 August 1955. By that Application, Chad requested the Court to determine the course of the frontier between both countries in accordance with the principles and rules of international law applicable in the matter as between the Parties.

Subsequently, the Agent of Chad, by a 28 September letter, informed the Court, inter alia, that his Government had noted that its claim coincided with that contained in the notification addressed to the Court on 31 August 1990 by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, and considered that those two notifications related to one single case, referred to the Court in application of the Algiers Agreement, which constituted the Special Agreement, the principal basis of the Court's jurisdiction to deal with the matter.

At a meeting on 24 October 1990 between the President of the Court and the representatives of the Parties, it was agreed that the proceedings in the case had in effect been instituted by two successive notifications of the Special Agreement constituted by the "Framework Agreement" of 31 August 1989, that filed by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya on 31 August 1990, and the communication from Chad filed on 3 September 1990, read in conjunction with the letter from the Agent of Chad of 28 September 1990, and that the procedure in the case should be determined by the Court on that basis, pursuant to Article 46, paragraph 2, of the Rules of the Court.

Having ascertained the views of the Parties, the Court decided, by an Order of 26 October 1990 [I.C.J. Sales No. 589], that, as provided in Article 46, paragraph 2, of the Rules of the Court, each Party should file a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial, within the same time-limit; the date of 26 August 1991 was fixed as the time-limit for the Memorials. Chad chose G. M. Abi-Saab to sit as Judge ad hoc.

Organizational questions

Elections to the Court

In 1990, five new members of the Court were elected to fill the vacancies due to the expiration on 5 February 1991 of the terms of office of the following Judges: Jose M. Ruda (Argentina), Kéba Mbaye (Senegal), Sir Robert Y. Jennings (United Kingdom), Gilbert Guillaume (France) and Raghunandan Swarup Pathak (India).

On 15 November, the Security Council and the General Assembly, independently of each other, elected the five members. The General Assembly adopted decision 45/307 on the composition of the Court. Judges Sir Robert Y. Jennings and Gilbert Guillaume were re-elected and Messrs. Andrés Aguilar Mawdsley (Venezuela), Christopher G. Weeramantry (Sri Lanka) and Raymond Ranjeva (Madagascar) were elected to be members of the Court, all as from 6 February 1991 (see also APPENDIX III).

Chapter II

Legal aspects of international relations

In 1990, the United Nations continued to address legal aspects of international relations and the promotion of friendly relations between States.

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization proceeded with the development of international law in the areas of maintenance of international peace and security, and considered working papers pertaining to the enhancement of fact-finding by the United Nations. It also dealt with the preparation of a handbook on peaceful settlement of disputes between States and with conciliation rules of the United Nations. In the area of rationalization of existing UN procedures, the Special Committee adopted a draft document on the subject and submitted it to the General Assembly for consideration.

In November, the General Assembly expressed its appreciation for the work of the International Law Commission (ILC) on the question of an international criminal jurisdiction. It invited ILC to continue elaboration of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, including the possible establishment of an international criminal court or other international criminal trial mechanism. ILC reviewed issues regarding State liability, responsibility and immunities; draft articles concerning the relations between States and international organizations; and codification of international law relating to non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

During the year, the United Nations also continued to promote and develop international law governing States and diplomatic relations, as well as international treaties and agreements. The Secretary-General received reports from States concerning serious violations of the security of diplomats and consular missions and representatives to States and international organizations, as well as views on measures to enhance their protection and safety. The Assembly condemned all acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and urged States to ensure their safety and prevent such acts. The General Assembly also dealt with such topics as improvement of consular relations, and the status of diplomatic bags and couriers, conciliation rules of the United Nations and good-neighbourliness between States. In addition, the Secretariat continued its depositary function for agreements, conventions and treaties deposited with the Secretary-General.

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country again reported in 1990 on matters relating to the security of all missions and the safety of their personnel. The General Assembly expressed its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country and urged it, in the light of travel regulations issued by it, to bear in mind its obligation to facilitate the functioning of the United Nations and the missions accredited to it. In addition, the Secretary-General reported on the observer status of national liberation movements and co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee.

Special Committee on UN Charter and Role of Organization

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

The Secretary-General, in his annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization [A/45/1], stated that the exercise of the authority of the Security Council in the manner envisioned in the Charter, the mutual reinforcement of Council and General Assembly efforts, close co-operation between the Council and the Secretary-General, the growing role and diversified missions of the Secretariat and the prospective revitalization of the Economic and Social Council's role all testified to a strengthening of the institutions embodied in the Organization. During the year, the United Nations had had remarkable success in conducting a variety of operations aimed at managing peaceful transitions in societies which were the scenes of conflict or had suffered upheavals. Those operations had combined elements of peace-keeping and peace-making so as to have radically altered the concepts of the arrangement between the two. The composite nature of those operations meant that the tasks assigned to them had multiplied.

The Secretary-General reiterated his suggestions, contained in his 1989 report [YUN 1989, p. 8], for strengthening the peacemaking capacity of the United Nations, and preventive diplomacy. He proposed improving fact-finding arrangements, establishing a United Nations presence in unstable areas and instituting subsidiary bodies, where appropriate, for monitoring potential conflict situations. He also suggested that the Security Council could have a peace agenda that would not be confined to items formally inscribed at the request of Member States, and that the Council could have periodic meetings to survey the political scene and identify points of danger in the world.

The rule of law in international affairs, the Secretary-General said, should also be promoted by a greater recourse to the International Court of Justice, not only in adjudicating disputes of a legal nature but also in rendering advisory opinions on the legal aspect of a dispute. The authorization of the Secretary-General to request such an opinion would greatly add to the means of peaceful solutions of international crisis situations.

The Secretary-General indicated that the recognition of the need to strengthen the rule of law in international relations had been crystallized at the forty-fourth session of the General Assembly, in the declaration of the 1990s as the United Nations Decade of International Law.

Discussing the new kinds of security challenges, the Secretary-General stressed that the efforts of regional agencies should be in harmony with those of the United Nations in accordance with the Charter. Because political and security considerations and economic and social issues were intertwined, it was necessary to rationalize the work of various bodies of the United Nations. The Organization, including its intergovernmental structures in the economic and social sector, should be more responsive to the emerging needs of, and new challenges faced by, the international community, and a higher degree of specialization would be needed to strengthen the technical underpinnings of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

With regard to reform within the Secretariat, the Secretary-General said that, despite the economies that had been effected, the Organization would not be able to play the role expected of it by the Governments and peoples of the world unless all Governments met their financial obligations fully and within the proper time-frame.

Public perceptions of the United Nations had radically changed, the Secretary-General said; it was now seen as a centre of agreement and decision a barrier against chaos in international relations and the one institution that could best assure that the actions of nations were governed by international law and responded to the demands of justice.

Maintenance of international peace and security

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its 1990 session (New York, 12 February-2 March) [A/45/33], accorded priority to the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/37 [YUN 1989, p. 846].

The Committee's Working Group had before it revised versions of two working papers concerning fact-finding by the United Nations, both originally submitted at the 1989 session of the Special Committee, one by Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand and Spain [A/AC.182/L.60/Rev.1], and the other by Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic [A/AC.182/L.62/Rev.1]. After a joint discussion of the working papers and further work by the co-sponsors, a unified document was presented to the Working Group [A/AC.182/L.66]. Following informal consultations held by the Chairman, the co-sponsors declared their intention to prepare a revised version of the unified document.

Peaceful settlement of disputes between States

In 1990, the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization continued work on the peaceful settlement of disputes. It devoted a meeting to a general exchange of views on the question.

Communication. In a joint statement [A/45/598-S/21854] transmitted to the Secretary-General by a 3 October letter, the United States and the USSR, noting the improvement of relations between East and West, called for a strengthening of UN efforts to promote international peace and security by enhancing UN peace-keeping, peacemaking and crisis prevention functions, and enhancing the efficiency of the executive machinery of the Organization.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, as requested by General Assembly resolution 44/31 [YUN 1989, p. 821], submitted in September 1990 a report, with later addendum

[A/45/436 & Add.1], containing replies received from Member States and international intergovernmental organizations on the implementation of the 1982 Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes [GA res. 37/10] and on ways and means of increasing its effectiveness. The replies, which included proposals and considerations for a broader implementation of the Declaration, were from Afghanistan, Argentina, the Byelorussian SSR, Ireland (on behalf of the 12 States members of the European Community) and Romania, and from five UN specialized agencies and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee.

By decision 45/412 of 28 November, the General Assembly, on the Sixth (Legal) Committee's recommendation, noted the Secretary-General's report and decided that the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States should be examined within the framework of the programme for the United Nations Decade of International Law (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV) and in the Special Committee, as appropriate.

Handbook on peaceful settlement of disputes

In 1990, the Special Committee examined a progress report on the preparation of a handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States [A/AC.182/L.64], submitted by the Secretary-General in response to General Assembly resolution 44/37. In the report, the Secretary-General informed the Special Committee that only one chapter of the handbook had yet to be reviewed by the Secretariat and that the handbook as a whole was expected to be submitted to the next session of the Special Committee. He explained that the preparation of the handbook had been carried out within the limits of existing resources and exclusively by regular Secretariat staff, and that more expeditious implementation was not feasible given the current financial situation of the United Nations.

In resolution 45/44, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to complete the work on the preparation of the draft handbook, on the basis of the outline elaborated by the Special Committee and in the light of the views expressed in the course of the discussions in the Sixth Committee and in the Special Committee, and to submit it, in its final form, to the Special Committee at its 1991 session.

UN conciliation rules

In 1990, the General Assembly considered United Nations conciliation rules as a method of amicably settling disputes arising in the context of relations between States. The item was allocated to the Sixth Committee, after Guatemala had requested that it be included in the provisional agenda of the Assembly's forty-fifth session. Annexed to Guatemala's July letter [A/45/143] conveying that request were draft conciliation rules as well as an explanatory memorandum stating that the rules constituted a model set of norms which could be adopted by any party following a simple proposal accepted by the other party, with possible modifications to facilitate a settlement by conciliation. The suggested machinery, Guatemala said, added to the already existing means of peaceful settlement, had both formal and substantive advantages and would help fill a gap created by the fact that the Optional Protocols on the settlement of disputes accompanying the Vienna Conventions on diplomatic and consular relations made provision for prior recourse to conciliation but gave States no indication of how such conciliation was to be conducted.

Sixth Committee consideration. On 17 October, Guatemala placed a draft resolution [A/C.6/45/L.2] containing the draft rules before the Sixth Committee. At the same time, it stated that since the draft rules were lengthy and complicated, it would not insist on putting the text to a vote, but suggested that the Secretary-General be requested to circulate the text of the draft rules, together with any amendments submitted during the session, to all Governments, relevant UN agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international legal institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted decision 45/413.

United Nations rules for the conciliation of disputes between States

At its 48th plenary meeting, on 28 November 1990, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, having taken into account the document relating to the draft conciliation rules of the United Nations submitted to the Assembly at its forty-fifth session, decided:

(a) To request the Secretary-General to circulate that document, together with the amendments submitted during the forty-fifth session, to all Member States, organs and competent specialized agencies of the United Nations, regional intergovernmental organizations and international legal bodies interested in the draft conciliation rules and to invite them to send to him their observations, comments and suggestions thereon;

(b) Also to request the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report containing the replies received;

(c) That the question of the rules for the conciliation of disputes between States should be examined as part of the programme of the United Nations Decade of International Law and in the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, as appropriate.

Other matters

Good-neighbourliness between States

By a 17 September letter to the Secretary-General [A/45/511], Romania requested that consideration of the item "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States" be deferred until the 1991 session of the General Assembly and be included in the provisional agenda of that session. The request was made because of the unprecedented number of items inscribed on the 1990 provisional agenda, as well as to allow the Sixth Committee to concentrate its attention at the current session on the preparation of the programme for the United Nations Decade of International Law.

On 21 September 1990, by decision 45/402, the General Assembly included the item "Development and strengthening of good-neighbourliness between States" in the provisional agenda of its 1991 session.

Rationalization of UN procedures

As requested by the General Assembly in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 846], the Special Committee, at its 1990 session, kept under active review the question of the rationalization of existing UN procedures. The Special Committee's Working Group had before it a working paper [A/AC.182/L.43/Rev.5] submitted by France and the United Kingdom; the document had originally been presented at the Special Committee's 1985 session [YUN 1985, p. 1177], and was subsequently revised at its 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 1000], 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 1072] and 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 846] sessions. The Special Committee also had before it a proposal set out in a conference room paper by the USSR at its 1989 session, as well as various proposals tabled by delegations during the current session, and a paper [A/AC.182/L.67] put forward by the Chairman following informal consultations. As a result of intensive work, the Committee completed the draft document on the rationalization of existing UN procedures and presented it to the General Assembly for consideration and adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/44.

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

(ii) To consider the final text of the draft handbook on the peaceful settlement of disputes between States with a view to recommending its publication to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

4. Also requests the Special Committee to be mindful of the importance of reaching general agreement whenever that has significance for the outcome of its work;

5. Decides that the Special Committee shall accept the participation of observers of Member States in its meetings, including those of its working group;

Rationalization of existing United Nations procedures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/37 of 4 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization on the work of its session held in 1990,

Conscious of the need to discharge in the most efficient manner the functions incumbent upon it under the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Approves the conclusions of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization as set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides that the conclusions referred to in paragraph 1 above shall be reproduced as an annex to its rules of procedure.

ANNEX

Conclusions of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization concerning the rationalization of existing United Nations procedures

1. Without prejudice to Article 18 of the Charter of the United Nations and with a view to facilitating the work of the United Nations, including, whenever possible, the adoption by the General Assembly of agreed texts of resolutions and decisions, informal consultations should be carried out with the widest possible participation of Member States.

2. When an electronic voting system is available for recording how votes were cast, a roll-call vote should as far as possible not be requested.

3. Before the end of each session of the General Assembly, the General Committee should, in the light of the experience it has acquired during that session, consider drawing up its observations on the organization of the work of the session, with a view to facilitating the organization of the work of future sessions of the Assembly.

4. The agenda of the General Assembly should be simplified by grouping or merging, to the extent possible, related items and, where it is appropriate for discussion of a particular item, by setting an interval of more than a year between the discussions on it. For this purpose, the Chairman of the Main Committee concerned or, as appropriate, the President of the Assembly, should undertake consultations with delegations.

5. The General Committee should consider, at the beginning of each session of the General Assembly, recommending that certain Main Committees should meet in sequential order, taking into account such matters as the number of meetings required for the consideration of the questions with which they are charged at that session, the organization of the work of the whole session and the problem of participation of smaller delegations.

6. In making recommendations as to how agenda items should be allocated to the Main Committees and to the plenary Assembly, the General Committee should ensure the best use of the expertise of the Committees.

7. When the General Assembly considers whether it needs to establish subsidiary organs, in accordance with Article 22 of the Charter, it should give careful consideration as to whether the subject-matter in question could be dealt with by existing organs, including its Main Committees and their working groups. Subsidiary organs should seek constantly to improve their procedures and methods of work in order to ensure effective consideration of questions allocated to them by the Assembly.

8. The dates and length of the sessions of bodies of the General Assembly that meet inter-sessionally should be determined as soon as possible by the Assembly, as appropriate, following advice from the Committee on Conferences, on the proposal of the Secretary-General. The Assembly should take account of the past experience, the state of current work in regard to the mandate given to the body in question and the need to avoid as far as possible overlapping meetings of bodies that deal with subject-matter of a similar nature.

9. Informal consultations about the work of bodies of the General Assembly that meet inter-sessionally should continue to be held in advance of the sessions of such bodies in order to facilitate the conduct of their sessions, especially as regards the composition of the bureau and the organization of work.

10. Resolutions should request observations from States or reports by the Secretary-General in so far as they are likely to facilitate the implementation of the resolutions or the continued examination of the question.

International Law Commission

In 1990, the 34-member International Law Commission (ILC) dealt with a variety of issues, including the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind and the establishment of an international criminal court. The Commission also examined reports by its Special Rapporteurs on State liability, responsibility and immunities, as well as on relations between States and international organizations. In addition, it considered two reports on draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses.

Draft code of crimes against peace and security

In 1990, at its forty-second session (Geneva, 1 May-20 July) [A/45/10], ILC continued work on the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. The draft Code, originally prepared by ILC in 1954 [YUN 1954, p. 411] in response to General Assembly resolution 177(II) [YUN 1947-48, p. 215], defined crimes under international law for which individuals responsible were to be punished. In 1954, the Assembly postponed consideration of the draft Code because of questions which had arisen over the definition of aggression [YUN 1954, p. 412]. In 1981, the Assembly invited ILC to resume its work on the draft Code, which it did the following year [YUN 1982, p. 1375]. The title of the Code in English was amended by the Assembly in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 1058] by replacing the word "offences" with "crimes", in order to achieve greater uniformity and equivalence between different language versions.

ILC consideration. ILC considered in 1990 the eighth report [A/CN.4/430 & Add.1] on the draft Code by its Special Rapporteur, Doudou Thiam (Senegal). It contained three draft articles dealing, respectively, with complicity, conspiracy and attempt, as well as two draft articles on illicit traffic in narcotic drugs as a crime against peace, and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs as a crime against humanity. Following a discussion of the report, ILC referred the articles to its Drafting Committee, together with revised versions submitted by the Special Rapporteur in the light of the debate. In 1990, the Commission provisionally adopted, on the recommendation of its Drafting Committee, three new articles for inclusion in Chapter II of the draft Code, namely, articles 16 (international terrorism), 18 (recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries) and X (illicit drug trafficking). The three articles provisionally adopted were transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General in September [A/45/469].

Sixth (Legal) Committee consideration. The texts of the three new articles were discussed by the Sixth Committee between 29 October and 20 November. The Chairman of ILC introduced them in greater detail and said that two of them—articles 16 and 18—belonged in the part of the draft Code devoted to crimes against peace. The Commission had provisionally decided that article X belonged in the part of the draft Code to be devoted to crimes against humanity. By taking that approach, the Commission had wished to stress that the activities in question posed a danger for all mankind, and to emphasize that they threatened not only the public order of the country where they occurred, but also the international community as a whole.

International criminal jurisdiction

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/39, ILC continued in 1990 a working group to address the question of establishing an international criminal court or other international criminal trial mechanism with jurisdiction over persons alleged to have committed crimes that may be covered under the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind. ILC had pronounced itself in favour of such a trial mechanism for the first time in 1950 [YUN 1950]. p. 857]. In 1983, the Commission had reported to the Assembly that some members considered that a code unaccompanied by penalties and by a competent criminal jurisdiction would be ineffective, and asked the Assembly whether its mandate extended to the preparation of the statute of a competent international criminal jurisdiction for individuals [YUN 1983. p. 1110]. The Commission's 1990 examination of the subject reflected a broad agreement in principle on the desirability of the establishment of a permanent international criminal court to be brought into relationship with the UN system, although different views were expressed as to the structure and scope of jurisdiction of such a court. The Commission concluded that establishing an international criminal court would be a progressive step in developing international law and strengthening the rule of law, but would be successful only if widely supported by the international community.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly in October 1990 a report [A/49/437] containing responses from 12 Governments to Assembly resolution 44/32, requesting the views of Member States on the 1983 conclusions of ILC on the preparation of the statute of a competent international jurisdiction for individuals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/41.

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-second session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-second session,

Emphasizing the need for the progressive development of international law and its codification in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and to give increased importance to its role in relations among States,

Noting with appreciation the work of the International Law Commission on the elaboration of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind which could contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security.

Recognizing the importance of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contributions to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Taking note with Appreciation of the section of the report of the International Law Commission concerning the question of the possible establishment of an international criminal jurisdiction and noting the debate in the Sixth Committee pertaining to this topic,

Considering that experience has demonstrated the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention on each of the main topics dealt with in the report, and that this process is facilitated when the Commission indicates specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments are of particular interest for the continuation of its work,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-second session;
2. Requests the International Law Commission to continue its work on the topics in its current programme, listed as items 3 to 8 in paragraph 9 of its report, taking into account the comments of Governments, whether in writing or expressed in the General Assembly, with a view to reaching at its forty-third session the goals indicated in paragraphs 537 to 542 of its report;
3. Invites the International Law Commission, as it continues its work on the elaboration of the draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, to consider further and analyse the issues raised in its report concerning the question of an international criminal jurisdiction, including the possibility of establishing an international criminal court or other international criminal trial mechanism;
4. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the International Law Commission to improve its procedures and methods of work, and to formulate proposals on its future programme of work;
5. Requests the International Law Commission:
 - (a) To consider further its methods of work in all their aspects, bearing in mind that the staggering of the consideration of some topics might contribute, inter alia, to a more effective consideration of its report in the Sixth Committee;
 - (b) To pay special attention to indicating in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest for the continuation of its work;
6. Invites the International Law Commission, when circumstances so warrant, to request a special rapporteur to attend the session of the General Assembly during the discussion of the topic for which that special rapporteur is responsible, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements within existing resources;

7. Recommends the continuation of efforts to improve the ways in which the report of the International Law Commission is considered in the Sixth Committee, with a view to providing effective guidance for the Commission in its work;

8. Decides that the Sixth Committee, in structuring its debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly, should continue to bear in mind the possibility of reserving time for informal exchanges of views on matters relating to the work of the Commission;

9. Recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the forty-sixth session of the General Assembly commence on 28 October 1991;

10. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of the duration of its session, as presented in paragraph 552 of its report, and expresses the view that the requirements of the work for the progressive development of international law and its codification and the magnitude and complexity of the subjects on the agenda of the Commission make it desirable that the usual duration of its sessions be maintained;

11. Also takes note of the intention of the International Law Commission, expressed in paragraph 548 of its report, to allow for two weeks of concentrated work in its Drafting Committee at the beginning of the forty-third session of the Commission, and requests the Commission to report on the results of that arrangement;

12. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the increased role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

13. Urges Governments and, as appropriate, international organizations to respond in writing as fully and expeditiously as possible to the requests of the International Law Commission for comments, observations and replies to questionnaires and for materials on topics in its programme of work;

14. Reaffirms its wish that the International Law Commission continue to enhance its co-operation with intergovernmental legal bodies whose work is of interest for the progressive development of international law and its codification;

15. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and expresses the hope that every effort will continue to be made by the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to provide the seminars with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly, together with such written statements as delegations may circulate in conjunction with their oral statements, and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate.

General Assembly resolution 45/41

28 November 1990 Meeting 48 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/45/735) without vote, 20 November (meeting 45); 43-nation draft (A/C.6/45/L.19); agenda items 140 & 142. Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 6th Committee 23-39,45; plenary 48.

A draft resolution [A/C.6/45/L.13] on the establishment of an international criminal court or other trial mechanism was introduced in the Sixth Committee but later withdrawn. It would have invited ILC to continue its work on the establishment of such a court, paying particular attention to the possibility of the court being vested by States with jurisdiction over an agreed set of crimes selected from those currently under ILC consideration.

State liability, responsibility and immunities

With respect to State liability, responsibility and immunities, ILC considered, in 1990, draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, consequences arising from an internationally wrongful act, and draft articles on State immunities.

State liability

In 1990, ILC had before it the sixth report by Julio Barboza (Argentina) [A/CN.4/428 & Corr.1-4 & Add.1], its Special Rapporteur on the topic of State liability, dealing with draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law. The report examined further the possibility of whether the obligations in respect of activities involving risk and those with harmful effects should be treated together or separately; offered another approach to the concept of activities involving risk; introduced a set of revised procedural rules in respect of activities with harmful transboundary consequences; and considered all the substantive rules bearing on the question of liability. The report proposed a complete outline of a set of 33 draft articles on State liability.

The Special Rapporteur also considered extending the topic to include harm to areas beyond national jurisdiction of States, the so-called "global commons". His report raised complex policy and technical issues, and many Commission members felt that they needed more time to reflect on those issues and, therefore, were able to make only tentative remarks. The Commission decided to reconsider such issues at its next session.

State responsibility

With respect to State responsibility, ILC discussed the substantive consequences arising from an internationally wrongful act (delict) other than cessation and restitution in kind. In this connection, it considered a second report [A/CN.4/425 & Corr.1 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1] by the Special Rapporteur, Gaetano Arangio-Ruiz (Italy), which dealt with three consequences: reparation by equivalent (article 8); interest (article 9); and satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition (article 10). The report also examined the impact of fault, in a broad sense, on the forms and degrees of reparation.

The Commission referred articles 8, 9 and 10 to its Drafting Committee, together with comments regarding specific aspects of the articles.

State immunities

In 1990, ILC had before it the third report on State immunities by its Special Rapporteur, Motoo Ogiso (Japan) [A/CN.4/431 & Corr.1], reviewing the entire set of draft articles and suggesting certain reformulations and taking into account views expressed by Commission members at a previous session, as well as by Governments, through written comments and in the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly in 1989.

The Commission focused on articles 12 to 28, including the title of part III, and decided to refer those articles to its Drafting Committee, together with the proposals of the Special Rapporteur as well as those submitted in the plenary session. The Drafting Committee provisionally adopted on second reading articles 1 to 10 and 12 to 16. As the second reading could not be concluded and a number of provisions were still pending, the Commission agreed that a detailed discussion of the articles adopted so far by the Drafting Committee would not serve any useful purpose. It accordingly decided to defer their final adoption until after the completion of the remaining articles and to confine itself at the current session to noting the oral report of the Drafting Committee Chairman. The Commission stated that the entire set of articles as formally adopted was expected to be submitted in 1991, together with commentaries, to the General Assembly.

Relations between States and international organizations

In 1990, ILC had before it the fourth [A/CN.4/424 & Corr.1] and fifth [A/CN.4/432] reports on relations between States and international organizations, by its Special Rapporteur, Leonardo Díaz-González (Venezuela). Consideration of the topic was divided into two parts. The first part, dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of representatives of States to international organizations, was completed in 1975 with the adoption of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character [YUN 1975, p. 880].

In-depth consideration of the second part, dealing with the status, privileges and immunities of international organizations, their officials, experts and other persons engaged in their activities not being representatives of States, began in 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 949].

In 1990, the Commission discussed the fourth report [YUN 1989, p. 834] of the Special Rapporteur. The fifth report could not be considered, owing to lack of time.

In examining the fourth report, the Commission discussed the general approach to the topic, as well as the 11 draft articles submitted by the Special Rapporteur, covering such matters as general provisions, legal personality, and property, funds and assets of international organizations. The Commission decided to refer the articles to its Drafting Committee. (See also "Treaties involving international organizations" and "Host country relations" below.)

Draft articles on non-navigational uses of international watercourses

Continuing its work on the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, ILC in 1990 had before it the second part of the fifth report [A/CN.4/421/Add.2] and the sixth report [A/CN.4/427 & Corr.1 & Add.1] by its Special Rapporteur, Stephen C. McCaffrey (United States).

In the second part of the fifth report, which had been introduced at the 1989 session [YUN 1989, p. 831], the Special Rapporteur submitted two draft articles: article 24 (Relationship between navigational and non-navigational uses; absence of priority among uses) and article 25 (Regulation of international watercourses), which were to constitute part V and part VI of the draft articles, respectively.

The first part of the sixth report covered the management of international watercourses, security of hydraulic installations, and implementation of the draft articles. It included three new draft articles: articles 26 (Joint institutional management), 27 (Protection of water resources and installations) and 28 (Status of international watercourses and water installations in time of armed conflict).

Also included was a proposed annex I to the draft articles, entitled "Implementation of the draft articles", which contained eight articles: "Definition", "Non-discrimination", "Recourse under domestic law", "Equal right of access", "Provision of information", "Jurisdictional immunity", "Conference of the Parties" and "Amendments to the draft articles". The second part of the sixth report dealt with the settlement of disputes; it was introduced at the 1990 session, but not discussed for lack of time.

The Commission, on the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur, referred articles 24 to 28, together with article 3, paragraph 1, and article 4 of annex I, to its Drafting Committee.

After examining the Drafting Committee's report, the Commission adopted provisionally the following articles: articles 22 (Protection and preservation of ecosystems), 23 (Prevention, reduction and control of pollution), 24 (Introduction of alien or new species) and 25 (Protection and preservation of the marine environment), comprising part IV of the draft, entitled "Protection and preservation", as well as articles 26 (Prevention and mitigation of harmful conditions) and 27 (Emergency situations), comprising part V of the draft, entitled "Harmful conditions and emergency situations".

The articles provisionally adopted in 1990 were transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in September [A/45/469]. In resolution 45/41 on the work of ILC, the Assembly requested the Commission to continue consideration of the topic, taking into account the comments of Governments, with a view to completing the first reading of the draft articles at its 1991 session.

States and international law

With continuing acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives in various parts of the world, the General Assembly in 1990 again dealt with the issue of their protection, security and safety, and with the related topics of consular relations and the status of diplomatic bags and couriers. (For information on matters of State liability, responsibility and immunities, see above, under "International Law Commission".)

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

During 1990, States continued to become parties to various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations. As at 31 December 1990, the status was as follows: 152 States parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512], with Angola acceding in 1990; 43 States parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [YUN 1961, p. 516] and 55 States parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes, with Nicaragua acceding to both during the year; 127 parties to the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510], with Angola acceding in 1990; 36 States parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality [YUN 1963, p. 512] and 43 States parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes, with Nicaragua acceding to both in 1990; 77 States parties to the 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents [GA res. 3166(XXVIII)], with Maldives and Nepal acceding during the year.

In resolution 45/39, the General Assembly referred to recent flagrant violations of international law concerning the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, and expressed concern over the abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, particularly in cases involving violence. On 18 August, in resolution 664(1990), the Security Council demanded that Iraq rescind its orders for the closure of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and the withdrawal of the immunity of their personnel. In resolution 667(1990) of 16 September, it condemned aggressive acts by Iraq against diplomatic premises and personnel in Kuwait, including the abduction of foreign nationals, and, in resolution 674(1990) of 29 October, the Council expressed alarm over the situation of the personnel of diplomatic and consular missions in Kuwait and Iraq.

Report of Secretary-General. In 1987, the General Assembly had requested [YUN 1987, p. 1068] all States to report to the Secretary-General as promptly as possible serious violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and personnel, and asked the Secretary-General to solicit information on violations from States and to circulate the reports received. Accordingly, the Secretary-General in January 1990 requested States to submit information on such violations, as well as their views on measures to enhance protection and safety. In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report [A/45/455 & Add.1-3] containing 55 replies from States, as well as listing States parties to the relevant conventions.

Violations reported ranged from burglary and the occupation of diplomatic premises to several cases of murder involving consular personnel or their families. Other attacks on missions and representatives included bombings or shootings at cars or diplomatic buildings or residences; muggings; incursions into diplomatic missions; confiscation of property or vandalism; and invasion of privacy. Two communications related to Iraq's occupation of Kuwait (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/39.

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Conscious of the need to develop and strengthen friendly relations and co-operation among States,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Alarmed by the repeated acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which endanger or take innocent lives and seriously impede the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 664(1990) of 18 August 1990, 667(1990) of 16 September 1990 and 674(1990) of 29 October 1990 regarding, inter alia, certain recent flagrant violations of international law concerning the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Mindful of the universal condemnation of those violations during the debate on the question in the Sixth Committee at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly,

Concerned at the abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, particularly if acts of violence are involved,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate measures as required by international law, including measures of a preventive nature, and to bring offenders to justice,

Welcoming measures already taken by States to this end in conformity with their international obligations,

Convinced that the role of the United Nations, which includes the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in later Assembly resolutions, is important in promoting efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Reaffirming its resolution 43/167 of 9 December 1988,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives to international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;
3. Calls for the immediate cessation of continuing violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and for respect of the right of free passage of diplomatic and consular personnel coming from or returning to the sending State;
4. Urges States to observe, implement and enforce the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to ensure, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above officially present in territories under their jurisdiction, including practical measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials;
5. Also urges States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above and to bring offenders to justice;
6. Recommends that States should co-operate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State, with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to the exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;
7. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;
8. Also calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of their international obligations concerning the protection of the missions or the security of the representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above, to make use of the means for peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General, when he deems it appropriate, to offer his good offices to the States directly concerned;
9. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 42/154 of 7 December 1987;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to issue a report on the item, in accordance with paragraph 12 of resolution 42/154, containing also an analytical summary of the reports received under paragraph 9 above, on an annual basis, as well as to proceed with hi; other tasks pursuant to the same resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-seventh session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives".

Against: Iraq.

Following approval of the text by the Sixth Committee, Kuwait withdrew a draft resolution [A/C.6/45/L.15] by which the Assembly would have strongly condemned the aggression against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives in Kuwait and Iraq and would have demanded that Iraq immediately protect the safety and well-being of diplomatic and consular personnel and take no action to hinder the diplomatic and consular missions in performing their functions, including access to their nationals and the protection of their person and interest. The text approved by the Committee satisfied in part the objectives embodied in its own, Kuwait said.

Consular relations

In 1990, the General Assembly considered the improvement of consular relations by supplementing the provisions of the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510] with an additional protocol relating to consular functions.

Sixth Committee consideration. The item "Additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations" was included in the provisional agenda of the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly pursuant to a request by Austria and Czechoslovakia, expressed in an April letter [A/45/141]. In an explanatory memorandum, to which was attached the text of the draft of the additional protocol, they proposed to supplement the 1963 Convention, which concentrated on consular privileges and immunities, with specific rules regarding consular functions. The item was allocated to and considered by the Sixth Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/47.

Additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 24 April 1963 sets the basic framework for the exercise of consular functions,

Considering that paragraph 2 of article 73 of the Convention provides that nothing in the Convention shall preclude States from concluding international agreements confirming or supplementing or extending or amplifying the provisions thereof,

Having in mind further development of the international practice in the field of consular functions as a result of an increased co-operation among States,

Realizing that one of the functions of the General Assembly in promoting international co-operation consists in initiating studies and making recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Having considered the item entitled "Additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations",

1. Reaffirms its conviction that the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations has played, for over two decades, and will continue to play an essential role in promoting co-operation and understanding among States, by creating favourable conditions for the activities of consular posts and for the conduct of consular relations;

2. Takes note with interest of the proposal concerning the elaboration of an additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States and of other States parties to the Convention on the proposal and on the procedure to be followed in considering this question, and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Additional protocol on consular functions to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations".

Status of diplomatic bags and couriers

In 1990, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/36 [YUN 1989, p. 833], consultations were held in the Sixth Committee on the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and on the draft optional protocols thereto, which had been adopted by ILC in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 833]. The question of how to deal further with these draft instruments with a view to reaching a generally acceptable decision was also discussed. The Chairman orally reported on the results of the informal consultations, and the Committee took note of his report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/43.

Consideration of the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and of the draft optional protocols thereto

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/36 of 4 December 1989, in which it noted that the International Law Commission, taking into account the written comments of Governments and views expressed in debates in the Assembly, had completed at its forty-first session the second reading of the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and also had prepared a draft optional protocol on the status of the courier and the bag of special missions and a draft optional protocol on the status of the courier and the bag of international organizations of a universal character,

1. Expresses its satisfaction at the useful informal consultations that were held during its forty-fifth session, pursuant to paragraph 2 of its resolution 44/36, to study the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and the draft optional protocols thereto, as well as the question of how to deal further with those draft instruments with a view to facilitating the reaching of a generally acceptable decision in the latter respect, and takes note of the oral report of the Chairman of the Sixth Committee on those consultations;

2. Decides that those informal consultations will be resumed at its forty-sixth session;

3. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Consideration of the draft articles on the status of the diplomatic courier and the diplomatic bag not accompanied by diplomatic courier and of the draft optional protocols thereto".

Host country relations

In 1990, the Committee on Relations with the Host Country considered various aspects of the relations between the United Nations diplomatic community and the United States, its host country, as requested by the General Assembly in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 847]. The Committee's annual report [A/45/26] to the General Assembly contained summaries of discussions, which took place at five meetings.

In January, the Committee resumed consideration of matters relating to the security of missions and the safety of their personnel. Cuba, by a 29 December 1989 letter to the Committee Chairman, had complained about a demonstration at its Mission premises. The host country assured the Committee of its commitment to working out solutions to such problems and said that the particular matter concerning the Cuban Mission had been resolved satisfactorily. In November 1990, Cuba informed the Committee of hostile demonstrations which, it said, had been held regularly for the past 11 months in front of its Mission. During those demonstrations, there had been repeated incidents of verbal abuse and physical aggression against members of the Mission and their families. The United States expressed regret over the incidents and assured the Committee that its authorities were working closely to deter any illegal action by demonstrators and that it would not tolerate unlawful demonstrations.

In October, Iraq informed the Committee that the United States had refused to allow a special Iraqi aircraft, bringing the Iraqi Foreign Minister and other members of the Iraqi delegation to the 1990 session of the General Assembly, to land in New York. In the circumstances, Iraq had decided not to participate in the work of the Assembly at the ministerial level. Iraq viewed the action of the host country as a violation of sections 11 and 12 of the Headquarters Agreement. The United States observed that the Headquarters Agreement, while providing that the host country should not impose any impediment for transit to and from the Headquarters district, nevertheless made no reference to an obligation to allow special flights. It further stated that the Iraqi Foreign Minister would have been allowed entry into the host country had he arrived by a commercial flight.

With respect to travel regulations, Bulgaria welcomed the elimination of travel restrictions for some Eastern European countries, but noted that restrictions imposed by the host country continued to be a problem for Bulgaria. The United States responded that those measures had been justified by national security concerns and that its recent action did not represent a change of policy per se. Still, it would continue to be responsive to changes. The USSR expressed appreciation that discriminatory travel restrictions were being re-examined by the host country, and said that although some problems remained, including discriminatory restrictions on the travel by personnel of a number of missions, those should be resolved in a spirit of co-operation.

Other matters brought before the Committee related to entry visas issued by the host country; acceleration of immigration and customs procedures; exemption from taxes; the possibility of establishing a commissary at UN Headquarters for diplomatic personnel and staff; use of motor vehicles, parking and related matters; insurance, education and health; and public relations of the UN community in the host city.

On 30 April, the United States introduced to the Committee the new Commissioner of the New York City Commission for the United Nations and the Consular Corps, Paul O'Dwyer. On 18 June, the Secretary-General and the newly elected Mayor of the City of New York, David N. Dinkins, both addressed the Committee.

On 14 November, the Committee expressed its appreciation for the host country's efforts to maintain appropriate conditions for the normal work of delegations and missions accredited to the United Nations; noted the positions of the affected Member States, of the Secretary-General and of the host country concerning travel regulations for personnel of certain missions and Secretariat staff members of certain nationalities; appealed to the host country to review measures relating to diplomatic vehicles so that they responded to the needs of the diplomatic community, and to consult with the Committee on matters relating to transportation; stressed the particular importance of a positive perception of the increasingly vital work of the United Nations; and urged that efforts be continued to build public awareness of the crucial role of the United Nations and the missions accredited to it in the solution of global and regional problems and the strengthening of international peace and security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/46.

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Welcoming the increased interest shown by Member States in participating in the work of the Committee,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 69 of its report;

2. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interests of the United Nations and all Member States, and expresses the hope that the host country will continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country and hopes that outstanding problems raised at the meetings of the Committee will be duly resolved in a spirit of co-operation and in accordance with international law;

4. Urges the host country, in the light of the consideration by the Committee of travel regulations issued by the host country, to continue to bear in mind its obligations to facilitate the functioning of the United Nations and the missions accredited to it;

5. Stresses the importance of a positive perception of the work of the United Nations, and urges that efforts be continued to build up public awareness by explaining, through all available means, the importance of the role played by the United Nations and the missions accredited to it in the strengthening of international peace and security;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

7. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

Treaties and agreements

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006] was ratified in 1990 by Argentina, and acceded to by Czechoslovakia, Liechtenstein, Spain and Switzerland. The Convention, which was not in force, had 11 parties as at 31 December 1990.

Registration and publication of treaties

During 1990, some 967 international agreements and 523 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 321 registrations of formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded are published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French, where necessary. In 1990, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed in 1975, 1979, 1980, 1981 and 1982 were issued: 984, 1135, 1145, 1153, 1202, 1207, 1214, 1219, 1232, 1244, 1280.

Multilateral treaties

New multilateral treaties

The following treaties, concluded under United Nations auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General in 1990:

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 18 December 1990 (see PART THREE, Chapter X)

Regulations of the Agreement concerning the Adoption of Uniform Conditions of Approval and Reciprocal Recognition of Approval for Motor Vehicle Equipment and Parts, done at Geneva on 20 March 1958:

Regulation No. 84: Uniform provisions concerning the approval of power-driven vehicles equipped with internal combustion engine with regard to the measurement of fuel consumption; Regulation No. 85: Uniform provisions concerning the approval of internal combustion engines intended for the propulsion of motor vehicles of categories M and N with regard to the measurement of the net power, Regulation No. 86: Uniform provisions concerning the approval of agricultural or forestry tractors with regard to the installation of lighting and light-signalling devices, and Regulation No. 87: Uniform provisions concerning the approval of daytime running lamps for power-driven vehicles.

Treaties deposited with Secretary-General

The number of multilateral treaties for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions stood at 405 at the end of 1990. During the year, 203 signatures were affixed to treaties for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions, and 414 instruments of ratification, accession, acceptance and approval or notification were transmitted to him. In addition, he received 225 communications from States expressing observations or declarations and reservations made at the time of signature, ratification or accession.

International organizations and international law

In 1990, the United Nations continued its work on international organizations and international law. (See also "States and international law" above.)

Observer status of national liberation movements

In September 1990, the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a report [A/45/438] containing replies from Cyprus and Ecuador on implementation of a 1988 General Assembly resolution on the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States [GA res. 43/160 B]. The Assembly had called on States, in particular those which acted as host to international organizations or to conferences convened by, or held under the auspices of, international organizations, to accord to those movements the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary to perform their functions in accordance with the provisions of the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character [YUN 1975, p. 880].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/37.

Observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/167 of 15 December 1980, 37/104 of 16 December 1982, 39/76 of 13 December 1984, 41/71 of 3 December 1986 and 43/160 B of 9 December 1988,

Recalling also its resolutions 3237(XXIX) of 22 November 1974 and 3280(XXIX) of 10 December 1974,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Bearing in mind the resolution of the United Nations Conference on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations relating to the observer status of national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States,

Noting that the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character, of 14 March 1975, regulates only the representation of States in their relations with international organizations,

Taking into account the current practice of inviting the above-mentioned national liberation movements to participate as observers in the sessions of the General Assembly, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in the work of the conferences held under the auspices of such international organizations,

Convinced that the participation of the national liberation movements referred to above in the work of international organizations helps to strengthen international peace and co-operation,

Desirous of ensuring the effective participation of the above-mentioned national liberation movements as observers in the work of international organizations and of regulating, to that end, their status and the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions,

Noting that many States have recognized those national liberation movements and have granted them facilities, privileges and immunities in their countries,

1. Urges all States that have not done so, in particular those which are host to international organizations or to conferences convened by, or held under the auspices of, international organizations of a universal character, to consider as soon as possible the question of ratifying, or acceding to, the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

2. Calls once more upon the States concerned to accord to the delegations of the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity and/or by the League of Arab States and accorded observer status by international organizations, the facilities, privileges and immunities necessary for the performance of their functions, in accordance with the provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 43/1 [YUN 1988, p. 830], the Secretary-General submitted in September 1990 a report [A/45/504] on co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC), an organization which in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 469] had been invited by the Assembly to participate in its sessions and to work in the capacity of a permanent observer.

The report reviewed the activities of AALCC in the context of a programme of co-operation in the following areas: representation at meetings and conferences; exchange of documentation and information; and identification of areas where the Committee's supportive role might be most productive. In particular, AALCC focused on the issues of strengthening the role of the United Nations through rationalization of functional modalities; wider use of the International Court of Justice; measures to further the work of the Assembly's Sixth Committee; law of the sea; international economic co-operation for development; refugees; zones of peace and international co-operation; and illicit traffic in narcotic drugs. The Committee also dealt with criteria for the distinction between terrorism and a people's struggle for liberation; deportation of Palestinians as a violation of international law, particularly the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War; and transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October 1990, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/4.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/38 of 18 November 1981, 37/8 of 29 October 1982, 38/37 of 5 December 1983, 39/47 of 10 December 1984, 40/60 of 9 December 1985, 41/5 of 17 October 1986 and 43/1 of 17 October 1988,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee,

Having heard the statement made on 16 October 1990 by the Secretary-General of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee on the steps taken by the Consultative Committee to ensure continuing, close and effective co-operation between the two organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with appreciation the continuing efforts of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee towards strengthening the role of the United Nations and its various organs, including the International Court of Justice, through programmes and initiatives undertaken by the Consultative Committee;

3. Notes with satisfaction the commendable progress achieved towards enhancing co-operation between the United Nations and the Consultative Committee in wider areas;

4. Notes with appreciation the decision of the Consultative Committee to participate actively in the programmes of the United Nations Decade of International Law;

Chapter III

Law of the sea

In 1990, the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea continued to set legal standards for the use of the world's seas and oceans, assuring a remarkable degree of conformity in the maritime practices of States even before its entry into force. During the year, the number of parties to the Convention increased to 45. The Secretary-General reported in November on developments relating to the Convention and its implementation, and took the initiative to convene informal consultations to promote dialogue aimed at achieving universal participation in the Convention.

The Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, at its eighth session, continued to examine issues related to the implementation of the obligations of the registered pioneer investors and their certifying States and the preparation of draft agreements, rules, regulations and procedures for the International Sea-Bed Authority. It received, in August, an application from China for registration as a pioneer investor, which would bring the number of pioneer investors to six.

The Assembly, the Council and the Secretariat were to be the principal organs of the Authority. The Assembly, consisting of all the members, would be the supreme organ of the Authority. The Council was to function as the Executive organ, with the power to establish specific policies in conformity with the Convention and the Assembly. The Secretariat would be composed of a Secretary-General and staff.

In December, the General Assembly called on all States that had not yet done so to consider ratifying or acceding to the Convention and to observe the provisions of the Convention when enacting national legislation. It urged Member States, in particular those with advanced marine capabilities, to review relevant policies and programmes in the context of the integration of the marine sector in national development strategies, and to explore prospects for intensifying co-operation with developing States.

The Assembly requested international and governmental organizations and multilateral funding agencies to intensify assistance to developing countries in their efforts to realize the benefits of the legal regime established by the Convention.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

During 1990, three States—Angola, Botswana and Uganda—ratified the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, bringing the number of ratifications to 45.

The Convention was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 178]. When the period for signature closed in 1984, it had received 159 signatures [YUN 1984, p. 108]. The Convention was to enter into force 12 months after receipt of the sixtieth instrument of ratification or accession.

Developments relating to the Convention

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/26 [YUN 1989, p. 841], the Secretary-General reported in November 1990 [A/45/721 & Corr.1] on developments relating to the Convention and on its implementation. The report examined the status of the Convention and informed the Assembly about its impact on State practice and national policy, settlement of specific conflicts and disputes, peaceful uses of the sea, protection and preservation of the marine environment, maritime safety and vessel-source pollution, and conservation and management of living marine resources. The work of the Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea was also described, as were the activities of the Secretariat's Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea.

In 1990, the Secretary-General convened informal consultations to promote dialogue aimed at achieving universal participation in the Convention, during which he continued to encourage all States that had not done so to ratify or accede to it. It had to be recognized, he stated, that problems with some aspects of the deep sea-bed mining provisions of the Convention had inhibited some States from ratifying or acceding to it, and that those problems had to be addressed. He noted that during the eight years since the adoption of the Convention a number of important political and economic changes had taken place—some directly affecting deep sea-bed mining, others affecting international relations in general—which had to be taken into account in considering those problems. Nevertheless, he was encouraged by the positive and constructive response from States in those consultations and intended to continue his efforts.

Although not yet in force, the Convention had none the less achieved a high level of conformity in State practice with regard to the extent and exercise of national sovereignty and jurisdiction. It was generally agreed that a 12-mile territorial sea, claimed by some 110 States, was the international legal norm, as was the 200-mile exclusive economic zone (EEZ) claimed by some 78 States. An additional 18 States claimed exclusive fishing zones. The success of the EEZ concept in improving resource management and environmental protection was increasingly recognized, most recently by North Sea States in their decision to co-ordinate the establishment of EEZs in that region. According to the report, the majority of States recognized the needs to harmonize their laws, regulations and practice with the provisions of the Convention, an example of which was a United States/USSR joint declaration of September 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 837].

With respect to regional co-operation, the Secretary-General noted that the prospects of accelerated development of national capabilities and rational integrated management of the oceans had led to a number of regional initiatives in marine affairs since the Convention was adopted. An example was the international agreement on the organization for the Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Co-operation (IOMAC), adopted at the Second Ministerial Conference of coastal and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean and other maritime user States, which met at Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, from 3 to 7 September 1990. The initiative for IOMAC had been taken in 1981 and was the result of measures aimed at giving practical effect to the emerging new ocean regime embodied in the Convention and the broad realization that marine development was possible only if efficiently co-ordinated in its various components. According to the Secretary-General, the agreement represented a unique and pioneering international endeavour to forge co-operation between the developing States of Asia and Africa, some of which were among the least developed and whose populations were increasingly dependent on the ocean for their nutritional needs, transport, communications and security in view of the intensifying competition for access to resources and maritime activity. In May, the follow-up Committee to the Ministerial Conference on Fisheries Co-operation among African States bordering the Atlantic Ocean (Rabat, Morocco, April 1989) investigated ways and means to enhance the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference and considered the legal and institutional arrangements likely to promote fisheries co-operation among member States of the Conference. The Committee decided to identify and carry out projects likely to foster such co-operation.

Another area of enhanced international co-operation was the integrated management of coastal and ocean resources. According to the Secretary-General, a number of countries were undertaking serious efforts towards the rational use of marine resources, the protection and preservation of the environment and the control of interactions among the various users of the ocean and the coastal areas. For example, countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) had taken the initiative to develop integrated coastal management strategies to ensure sustainable development of their renewable resources. In Ecuador, six special management zones had been created in a coastal management scheme designed to enable the development of coastal areas within a framework of conservation of the resource base through intersectoral integration.

With regard to conflict and dispute settlement, the report described recent maritime boundary delimitation agreements, such as the June 1990 treaty between the USSR and the United States, concluding negotiations on a new boundary delimitation in the Bering Sea, and an August 1990 maritime boundary agreement between the Cook Islands and the French Republic of French Polynesia. A December 1989 agreement between Australia and Indonesia created joint development zones for exploration and exploitation of petroleum resources in the area between the Indonesian Province of East Timor and northern Australia. The treaty, concluded after 10 years of negotiation, enabled the two countries to enter into provisional arrangements of a practical nature to benefit from resources, without prejudice to the boundary issue. The report also noted that in 1990 the International Court of Justice (ICJ) was seized with two cases concerning maritime boundary disputes, one between Guinea-Bissau and Senegal and the other between El Salvador and Honduras (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

The report also pointed to efforts related to the peaceful uses of the sea. At the Third Review Conference (September 1989) [YUN 1989, p. 81] of the Parties to the Sea-Bed Treaty [GA res. 2660(XXV)], the three nuclear-weapon States declared that they had not placed any nuclear weapons or weapons of mass destruction on the sea-bed outside the zone of application. Committee-level consensus was reached at the Fourth Review Conference (Geneva, 28 August-14 September 1990) (see PART ONE, Chapter II) of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [GA res. 2373(XXII)] on the importance for disarmament of nuclear-weapon-free zones based on arrangements freely arrived at among States of a region. Within the context of the United Nations Disarmament Commission's 1990 session, consultations on naval disarmament yielded a number of conclusions [A/45/42, annex II], prominent among them the need to extend existing agreements on avoiding incidents at sea and to modernize the law regulating naval warfare, particularly for the benefit of civilian maritime activities. The Secretary-General also noted that Argentina and the United Kingdom had agreed, on 15 February, to take a series of measures aimed at building confidence and contributing to a more normal situation in the south-west Atlantic, including, among others, an information and consultation system for movements of armed forces units.

The report also discussed developments in the protection and preservation of the marine environment (see also PART THREE, Chapter VIII). The Group of Experts on Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution (GESAMP) had concluded that, although concerns might differ from region to region, the major causes of immediate concern on a global basis were coastal development and the attendant destruction of habitats, eutrophication, microbial contamination of seafood and beaches, fouling of the seas by plastic litter, progressive build-up of chlorinated hydrocarbons and accumulation of tar on beaches. Issues of particular concern were the apparent increases in harmful algae blooms, eutrophication with associated regional anoxia, and fish diseases. They had also concluded that global climate change might be the most important environmental issue in the long term.

The United Nations Environment Programme/World Meteorological Organization (UNEP/WMO) Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) reported in June its conclusion that global warming would accelerate sea-level rise, with serious implications, particularly for small island countries and fisheries. While research and improved observations would produce progressively more reliable climate and sea-level predictions, IPCC said, the problems were complex and the scale of programmes required was such that rapid results could not be expected. An important objective of the international community would be to introduce arrangements for periodic examination, critical review of and -reporting on the state of the marine environment and of the impact of environmental and resource management policies.

Environmental monitoring was a basic component of management or regulatory regimes and, according to the Secretary-General, considerable attention would have to be paid to the development of international systems for monitoring and data and information exchange. The report also pointed to the importance of strengthening law and policy of the marine environment and improving the effectiveness of existing international law. It stated that the Convention on the Law of the Sea provided the necessary framework of rights and obligations for all ocean uses, and that its importance had been stressed in all discussions regarding the future development of international environmental law and policy. Measures with regard to transboundary movement of hazardous wastes and the status of protected areas were also discussed.

With regard to maritime safety and vessel-source pollution, the International Maritime Organization (IMO) in 1989 had stressed that effectiveness of maritime safety and pollution prevention standards in preventing or reducing marine pollution depended on their universal application and strict observance. It emphasized that the prevention of maritime casualties was the primary and preferred method for avoiding pollution and that the adequacy of related international instruments had to be continuously reviewed. Imo called for prompt submission of reports of casualty investigations, since those would yield information crucial to the development of new measures, and for an examination of the human role and the design of tankers in accidents. In that context, the report also considered the human factor in maritime casualties, the routing of ships and response to accidents.

With regard to the conservation and management of living marine resources, the report noted that world fisheries continued to face mounting problems. Biological, technical and economic forces were at work, among them the scarcity of resources in the wake of overfishing, degradation of ecosystems and natural stock fluctuations, and a trend towards intensified fishing due to advanced technology. Under those conditions, more attention was given, nationally and internationally, to the consideration of the objectives of resources management and the tools to be used. While the freedom to fish on the high seas was a well-established principle of international law, it was not unqualified, the report stated. Under the Convention, all members of the international community had the duty to take, and co-operate with other members in taking, such measures as might be necessary to ensure the conservation of living marine resources on the high seas. It was the obligation of members of the international community to ensure that their fisheries were adequately regulated and monitored to permit the full and timely assessment of fishing impacts and the state of the exploited population. Such assessment had to be conducted with the co-operation and participation of other members with interests in the living resources of the region. The report also pointed out that the conservation and management of living resources was prominent on the international agenda for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, to be held in Rio de Janeiro in 1992, and that the Convention provided the necessary framework to that end.

Portraying trends and prospects in world fisheries, as well as regional situations, the report noted that the main catch increases were in the north-west and south-east Pacific regions.

Marine scientific research

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/26 [YUN 1989, p. 841], the Secretary-General reported [A/45/563] in October 1990 on the state of marine scientific research in the light of the provisions of the Convention. The report elaborated on the new legal régime for marine scientific research, progress in marine sciences, and research tools and issues. It stated that the Convention, which devoted the entire part XIII to the question of marine scientific research, laid down a comprehensive global regime under which States were required to conduct marine scientific research and co-operate in such research.

According to the report, the recognition of the ocean as a resource capable of making a growing and substantial contribution to sustainable economic development and of the need to understand its role in the total global system had placed new and increased demands on marine science. Increased interests in coastal and shelf processes had been paralleled by a growing need to understand the holistic behaviour of the total global ocean system, particularly the way in which it acted as a control on climate variability through circulation and heat exchange. As the Secretary-General had pointed out in a previous report [YUN 1989, p. 837] on the subject, oceanography, far from being a mature science, was still in the process of discovery, and the chief source of new understanding came from new observations, not from theory. Global prediction models had to be verified against observations of such factors as sea level, temperature and salinity, and had to be compared with measured fluxes of heat, water, particles and gases between the atmosphere, the ocean and the ocean floor. The ocean sciences were thus entering an intensive data-gathering phase that would last through the late 1990s and perhaps beyond.

What was most needed, according to the report, was closer co-operation and co-ordination among States and international organizations in further promoting and facilitating the conduct of research; dissemination of knowledge, information and data obtained; and developing human resources urgently needed in many countries. The Convention provided for specific obligations of States and international organizations in that regard. In addition, there was a fundamental duty inscribed in the Convention to assist the efforts of developing countries to acquire technology and scientific knowledge.

The report went on to review progress in the marine sciences in the disciplines of physics, chemistry, biology, geology and geophysics. As major research issues, it identified marine resource management; protection of the marine environment; oceans and climate; coastal dynamics and sea-level rise; and global marine observing services.

Ocean resources

In response to General Assembly resolution 44/26 [YUN 1989, p. 841], the Secretary-General reported in November 1990 [A/45/712] on the realization of benefits under the Convention and measures taken in response to needs of States regarding the development and management of ocean resources. The report was based on information received from 23 States, 7 programmes and organizations of the UN system, 13 specialized agencies and 5 international organizations.

The report reviewed the major requirements of States for development of the ocean sector. According to the Secretary-General, the level of national activity reflected to a great deal the level of development of the countries concerned. Accordingly, the report identified a wide range of needs, from basic requirements in the case of countries that were not in a position to take any substantial measures to develop the ocean potential as provided by the Convention to the needs of those that had some capabilities and had taken early initiatives to secure jurisdiction over their extended maritime zones, adopt ocean development policies and implement programmes and projects. The positive experiences of the more advanced countries in ocean resource development served sometimes as references in the report and as a sound basis for assessing needs of other States that were aiming to further their level of development. Experiences in a region or subregion were highly relevant to the development of methods and mechanisms for other States of the same region and, when appropriate, of other regions. A comprehensive review of the efficacy of current measures and evaluation of alternative strategies, methods and mechanisms for maximizing the opportunities of States for the realization of benefits would require an in-depth study of practical experiences and ongoing activities of a cross-section of States and of competent organizations and institutions at the national and regional levels, as well as at the international level by intergovernmental conferences and bodies and the programmes of international organizations with competence in marine-related activities.

The report further discussed potentials and challenges of ocean resource development under the ocean régime established by the Convention; national ocean development policies; the integration of the requirements of the Convention into national legislation; technological, human and financial resources; environmental needs; surveillance and enforcement of compliance; living and non-living resources; maritime transport and ports; recreation uses; and international co-operation.

The report considered international co-operation to be a most effective means for developing the national capabilities of States. It noted that attempts were being made to establish or augment such co-operation in a number of regions or subregions and acknowledged a continuing need to provide assistance and advice to States to strengthen their efforts in that regard.

Preparatory Commission for Sea-Bed Authority and Tribunal

The Preparatory Commission for the International Sea-Bed Authority and for the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its eighth session at Kingston, Jamaica, from 5 to 30 March, and a summer meeting in New York from 13 to 31 August [A/45/721 & Corr.1]. Among the matters considered were the implementation of resolution II, adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 216], regarding the obligations of the registered pioneer investors and their certifying States, and the preparation of draft agreements, rules, regulations and procedures for the International Sea-Bed Authority.

The Preparatory Commission resumed consultations on the modalities for the implementation of the obligations of the registered pioneer investors and their certifying States. The matter was finally resolved during the summer meeting, when the General Committee, on behalf of the Preparatory Commission, adopted the Understanding on the Fulfilment of Obligations by the Registered Pioneer Investors and their Certifying States [LOS/PCN/L.87].

On 22 August, the Preparatory Commission received an application from China [LOS/PCN/I13] on behalf of the China Ocean Mineral Resources Research and Development Association (COMRA) for registration as a pioneer investor. China's application for exploration rights referred to an area in the north Pacific Ocean totalling 300,000 square kilometres. It stated that while China was comparatively rich in land-based mineral resources, its per capita possession of mineral resources was much lower than the world average. The reason for its application was to develop, under the principles set out under the Convention, new sources of mineral resources, both to meet part of the country's need and to make a contribution to the whole of mankind in the exploitation of the international sea-bed.

In August, the Preparatory Commission decided [LOS/PCN/I15] to convene a meeting of the Group of Technical Experts to examine and report to the General Committee on China's application and to convene the General Committee of the Preparatory Commission during its ninth session, to be held at Kingston in February/March 1991, in order to consider the application.

At its 1990 session, the Commission conducted [LOS/PCN/L.82/Rev.1] the second reading of the draft Headquarters Agreement between the International Sea-Bed Authority and Jamaica, and provisionally approved, without amendments, the preamble and a substantial number of articles. At the beginning of the second reading, the plenary reached an understanding that articles on which it would be difficult to achieve agreement in plenary would be left for the consultations of the Chairman with interested delegations. A number of articles were thus referred, and the Chairman reported the results of those consultations to the plenary. The plenary also conducted the first reading of the draft Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Sea-Bed Authority and approved without amendments the preamble and a substantial number of articles. Further articles were provisionally approved as orally amended.

Informal consultations continued on the establishment of a Finance Committee. The participants in the consultations expressed their view that they were useful and should be continued at the next session in order to provide the Secretariat with sufficient guidance for the preparation of a revised paper on the Committee. It was agreed that the following main issues should be addressed: composition of the Finance Committee; its status with regard to such organs as the Assembly and the Council; and functions and decision-making. Broad agreement was reached on the Committee's status and composition, and it was understood that the question of decision-making in the Committee would be considered within the broader context of decision-making in the organs of the Authority. It was agreed that the Preparatory Commission should not make any recommendations to the Authority with regard to the establishment of subsidiary organs, with the exception of the Finance Committee. With respect to the issue of observers, agreement was reached on the list of entities contained in the draft rules of procedure of the Assembly. The question of the nature and extent of observer participation in the work of the Assembly and the Council was deferred to a later stage.

Special Commissions

The Preparatory Commission's four Special Commissions continued to work in accordance with their respective mandates.

Developing land-based producer States

The mandate of Special Commission 1 was to undertake studies on the problems which would be encountered by the developing land-based producer States likely to be most seriously affected by the production of sea-bed minerals.

During 1990, the Special Commission completed the first reading of the 66 provisional conclusions that would provide the basis for final recommendations to the Authority. At the summer meeting, the Special Commission considered a revised list of the provisional conclusions, which incorporated the comments and suggestions of delegations in the course of the first reading and covered projection of production from the Area (the sea-bed beyond national jurisdiction); application by developing land-based producer States; and consideration of applications, determination of measures to assist developing land-based producer States. The Commission gave preliminary consideration to the provisional conclusions, except those directly related to the issues under consideration in the Ad Hoc Working Group. In his March statement on the progress of the Commission's work [LOS/PCN/L.78], the Chairman reported that fruitful suggestions had been made by delegations with regard to combining some closely related provisional conclusions, condensing or rearranging others and placing some in proper positions so as to ensure a rational and consistent overall structure. It was recognized that the list of 66 conclusions was not exhaustive. Some delegations felt that sea-bed mining would occur only in the distant future, and that detailed provisional conclusions might be premature. Others felt that most if not all the conclusions would remain valid regardless of uncertainties about the future.

The Ad Hoc Working Group of the Special Commission continued its discussions on certain "hard-core" issues, especially compensation to developing land-based producer States actually or likely to be affected by sea-bed production, subsidized sea-bed mining, dependency thresholds and trigger thresholds. The Chairman put forward revisions to suggestions discussed in the Working Group during the 1989 summer meeting and the March 1990 session of the Preparatory Commission with a view to facilitating agreement on both the criteria for the identification of developing land-based producer States [LOS/PCN/SCN.I/1990/CRP.18/Rev.1] and assistance to those States affected by sea-bed production [LOS/PCN/SCN.I/1990/CRP.19/Re.1]. Reports of the Chairman of the Working Group were annexed to statements on progress by the Chairman of Special Commission 1 in March [LOS/PCN/L.78] and August [LOS/PCN/L.83].

The Enterprise

Special Commission 2 was charged with making preparations for the establishment of the Enterprise, the operational arm of the Authority.

Based on a reading of the suggestion submitted by the Chairman, it was generally agreed that the purpose of transitional arrangements for the Enterprise could be: ensuring the continuity of the work initiated by the Preparatory Commission; introducing modifications and additions as required; providing a focus within the Authority for the collection and analysis of all information and data pertinent to the development of the sea-bed mining industry; providing expert advice on the scientific, technical and economic aspects of the Authority's policies and programmes relating to the Enterprise; and providing a mechanism for the implementation of a Training Programme for the Enterprise, initiated by the Preparatory Commission. The Special Commission also continued its review and article-by-article reading of working paper 16 on the structure and organization of the Enterprise. It concentrated on those provisions that called for annotations and on those that would enable the Preparatory Commission to comment on provisions of the Convention in the interest of promoting reasonable interpretation and to suggest draft provisions to facilitate effective application.

At the Special Commission's summer meeting, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for the Law of the Sea introduced a working paper on a draft basic joint venture contract for the Enterprise [LOS/PCN/SCN.2/WP.18 & Add.1], to be considered at the 1991 session of the Preparatory Commission. The Chairman's Advisory Group on Assumptions reviewed current market developments in respect of nickel, copper, cobalt and manganese, and continued to examine economic and technical factors and parameters for arriving at a new set of basic assumptions for a deep sea-bed mining model.

Special Commission 2 had adopted the Training Programme for the Enterprise at its 1989 session [YUN 1989, p. 8391. In 1990, it examined ways of expediting implementation of the Programme, bearing in mind particularly the various administrative and time-consuming steps required for its initiation. On the basis of a number of suggestions advanced by the Chairman, and using the device of informal Expanded Bureau meetings in which the registered pioneer investors were active participants, the Special Commission made a number of recommendations which were adopted by the Preparatory Commission.

Although opinions differed on the structure of the Enterprise and its status vis-à-vis the Authority, it was strongly suggested that a Director-General would be necessary, who would work full-time on matters pertinent to the Enterprise and would have a separate budget not hidden within the broader administrative expenses of the Authority. Further discussion of transitional arrangements was made a first priority of the next session of Special Commission 2.

In March [LOS/PCN/L.80] and in August [LOS/PCN/L.85], the Chairman of Special Commission 2 reported on the progress of work.

Sea-bed mining code

Special Commission 3 was entrusted with preparing rules, regulations and procedures for the exploration and exploitation of the deep sea-bed.

In 1990, it concluded the first reading of draft regulations on production authorization and began its consideration of part VIII of the draft Regulations on Prospecting, Exploration and Exploitation of Polymetallic Nodules in the Area, on protection and preservation of the marine environment in the Area [LOS/PCN/SCN.3/WP.6/Add.5], which had been prepared by the Secretariat. The Special Commission began a general exchange of views on the draft in March and then commenced the first reading, embarking on an article-by-article examination of the draft regulations in August. Twenty-one of the 27 draft articles were discussed, covering such subjects as scope of the regulations, the use of terms, conditions for carrying out activities in the Area, the exclusion of areas for exploitation, environmental reference zones, environmental reports and impact statements, inspectors, compliance, liability for harm to the environment, the rights and obligations of coastal States, emergency orders, and responsibilities of sponsoring States. The need for further studies of the marine environment in the international sea-bed Area was noted; safe methods of exploitation and adequate regulations could be established only on the basis of appropriate comprehensive experimental data and information on the effects of exploitation of polymetallic nodules on the living and non-living components of the marine environment. It was emphasized that there should be a balance in the draft between the need to protect and preserve the marine environment from activities in the Area and the need to develop the resources of the Area.

The Special Commission held a seminar on the environmental aspects of deep sea-bed mining dealing with a wide range of issues at the beginning of the summer meeting. Experts from France, the Federal Republic of Germany, India, Japan, Norway, Sweden, the USSR and the United States participated in the seminar, which was felt to be very useful in the consideration of the draft regulations of the mining code on the protection and preservation of the marine environment. The predominant theme was that little was known about the consequences of deep sea-bed mining and that more substantial research needed to be conducted.

The activities of Special Commission 3 were described in its Chairman's statements on the progress of work in March [LOS/PCN/L.79 & Corr.1] and August [LOS/PCN/L.84].

International Tribunal

Special Commission 4, dealing with the preparation of recommendations regarding practical arrangements for the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, continued to consider the administrative arrangements, structure and financial implications of the Tribunal and the draft relationship arrangements between the United Nations and the Tribunal prepared by the Law of the Sea Secretariat.

During consideration of working papers on the administration of the Tribunal [LOS/PCN/SCN.4/WP.8 & Add.1.2 & Add.1/Corr.1], it was generally agreed that there was a need for maximum economy in its establishment and functioning while maintaining the highest level of efficiency. The suggestion was made that the costs of members' allowances and of the Registry of the Tribunal should be further reduced and that, in its initial phase, the Tribunal should employ a minimal staff with a view to increasing it gradually as the case-load required. There was some debate on the number of official languages to be used by the Tribunal since that would have direct impact on costs.

The Special Commission also examined the draft Agreement on Co-operation and Relationships between the United Nations and the Tribunal [LOS/PCN/SCN.4/WP.9 & Add.1]. It discussed governing principles, mutual recognition of rights and responsibilities, co-operation and co-ordination, exchange of information, administrative co-operation and personnel arrangements, and budgetary and financial arrangements. The view was expressed that a decision of principle would have to be taken as to the necessity for the Tribunal to conclude a relationship agreement with the Authority, since that would tend to influence some of the decisions of the Tribunal. It was explained that the independence of the Tribunal should be maintained at all costs.

The Special Commission's Chairman reported in March [LOS/PCN/L.81] and August [LOS/PCN/L.86] on the progress of its work.

Other matters

Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

In 1990, the Office for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea continued to provide information, advice and assistance primarily to States, but also to global and regional bodies of the UN system and other organizations, subregional organizations and academic institutions, scholars and others. The programme implemented by the Office sought to facilitate the establishment by States of national legislative frameworks that would secure for them the extended maritime areas of sovereignty and jurisdiction under the new legal regime, while assisting them in exercising their rights and fulfilling their obligations under the Convention and reaping the benefits of it. To that end, the programme provided methodological approaches to, and formulated guidelines for, integrated marine policy-making and management and assessed their applications in specific instances, in particular at the regional and national levels. Technical studies and training courses covering general issues, as well as sea-use planning, the development of the marine areas under national jurisdiction on an environmentally sound and sustainable basis, marine scientific research and the assessment of ocean non-fuel mineral resources were also implemented.

The Office continued to monitor and analyse developments related to the new ocean regime at the global, regional, subregional and national levels. Those functions required continuing research and data and information collection and evaluation, which were supported, among other means, by the convening of groups of technical experts on specialized subjects and by developing the Office's reference library and its Law of the Sea Information System (LOSIS).

As the focal point for marine affairs within the United Nations, the Office participated in and supported inter-agency programmes, as well as inter-agency co-ordination activities and mechanisms, with a view to promoting co-operation in areas of common interest and a consistent approach towards the new regime for the oceans. It continued to provide integrated service to the Preparatory Commission, including the implementation of resolution II of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea on the registration of pioneer investors in deep sea-bed mining. It also prepared studies and working papers dealing with various matters under consideration by the plenary of the Preparatory Commission and its four Special Commissions (see above).

The Office assisted Governments and inter-governmental organizations as the trend towards increasing numbers of requests from Member States for assistance in developing national legislation and integrated policy and development plans in the marine field within the framework of the Convention continued. In close co-operation with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), the Office convened an Expert Group Meeting on Sea Use Planning and Coastal Area Management in Latin America and the Caribbean, held at ECLAC headquarters (Santiago, Chile, 28 November-1 December 1989). The main objective was to identify priority needs faced by the countries of the ECLAC region and examine possible solutions to their problems. In the context of its involvement in the Ministerial Conference on Fisheries and Co-operation among African States bordering the Atlantic Ocean, a follow-up meeting to the 1989 Conference was held in Morocco in May 1990, during which several proposals were made, indicating the need for continuing support of the Office. The Office further organized the First Technical Seminar of Experts of the Zone of Peace and Co-operation of the South Atlantic of the Law of the Sea (Brazzaville, Congo, June), providing an opportunity for legal experts of the region to describe their national activities in marine affairs and focus attention on their common needs, in the light of the Convention. The experts discussed priority areas of co-operation and identified a number of issues that required further discussion. In July, with the Indian Ocean Marine Affairs Co-operation (IOMAC) secretariat as the lead agency, the Office, together with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization/Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (UNESCO/IOC) as supporting agencies, undertook a mission to Mauritius, Seychelles and the United Republic of Tanzania, to assist the three countries in improving their capabilities to meet their requirements and derive benefits under the Convention. The Office also provided support and advice to IOMAC in preparation for the Second Ministerial-level Meeting (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 3-7 September), which formalized the organization by adopting its statute and rules. At the request of Mauritania, a technical assistance project financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) relating to the establishment of an overall marine profile for that country was completed and a final report submitted to the Government. Upon independence, Namibia immediately took steps to establish sovereignty over its adjacent marine areas. The Office, with the support of UNDP, provided that country with "umbrella" draft legislation covering different maritime jurisdictional zones, including legislation relating to the protection and the preservation of the marine environment and regulations for maritime scientific research.

To facilitate research and study of the law of the sea, its implementation and related marine affairs, the Office offered the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, established in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 139], in honour of the first President of the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. The fourth annual fellowship, providing post-graduate research, study and a subsequent internship with the Office, was awarded to Patricia Sobion of the Ministry of Legal Affairs of Trinidad and Tobago.

In order to create a better understanding of the Convention, the Office continued to pursue a programme of publication of the legislative history of its various provisions. In 1990, it issued two new publications: one dealt with the practice of States in relation to the establishment of straight baselines and included excerpts of national laws, accompanied by maps [Sales No. E.89.V.10]. The other was a repertory of international agreements relating to sections 5 and 6 of part XII of the Convention, on the protection and preservation of the marine environment [Sales No. E.90.V.3]. Further issues of the Law of the Sea Bulletin appeared and the third volume (1988) of the Annual Review of Ocean Affairs: law and policy, main documents was published, providing practitioners and researchers with an overview, in one convenient source, of the main developments in the area.

In 1990, the Office proceeded with the development of LOSIS, its computerized Law of the Sea Information System. The System, composed of a group of data bases, each containing information relating to the different aspects of the law of the sea, was being supplemented by additional marine-related data. All currently available references to legislation and regulations were coded into the National Marine Legislation Database (LEGISLAT), which comprised some 3,822 entries. The latest addition to LOSIS, the Law of the Sea Bibliographical Information System, was under development, and was to comprise all holdings of the Law of the Sea Library, indexed by author, title, subject, etc., to be accessed according to State or geographical area dealt with in the article or book concerned. The Ocean Affairs and Law of the Sea Library and Reference Collection continued to serve the needs of Member States and Permanent Missions to the United Nations, as well as Secretariat staff and researchers from academic institutions. In 1990, it published the fifth [Sales No. E.90.V.8] in the series of annual bibliographies on the law of the sea and marine affairs.

The Office also continued its co-operation within the UN system, for example with the Inter-Secretariat Committee on Scientific Programmes Relating to Oceanography (ICSPRO) and the Joint Group of Experts on Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution. The Office hosted the thirty-eighth session of ICSPRO in May 1990 in Geneva.

Chapter IV

Other legal questions

In 1990, the United Nations continued to consider various aspects of international law and of international economic law.

In November, the General Assembly adopted the programme of activities for the first term (1990-1992) of the United Nations Decade of International Law, which the Assembly had declared in 1989. It also appealed to States, international organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to make financial contributions for the implementation of the programme.

The twenty-sixth session of the International Law Seminar was held at Geneva from 5 to 22 June, attended by 20 participants, mostly from developing countries. Noting that not all applicants who had asked for financial assistance could be awarded fellowships, the International Law Commission appealed to States that could do so to make voluntary contributions needed to enable the convening of the Seminar in 1991.

Legal aspects of international economic law and the new international economic order were examined by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL). The Commission dealt with the topics of international countertrade, procurement, guarantees and stand-by letters of credit, legal problems of electronic data interchange and draft Model Laws on International Credit Transfers and on Procurement. It reviewed the status of conventions that had resulted from its previous work, as well as its programme of training and assistance. The Assembly repeated its invitation to States that had not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the conventions elaborated under the auspices of the Commission.

Furtherance of international law

United Nations Decade of International Law

In November 1989, the General Assembly had declared the period 1990-1999 as the United Nations Decade of International Law [GA res. 44/23], the main purposes of which would be to promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law; promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice; and encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification, as well as its teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation.

Between 5 October and 8 November 1990, the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law of the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee considered the report [a/45/430 & Corr.1 & Add.1-3] of the Secretary-General on the item, which was submitted pursuant to the Assembly resolution establishing the Decade. The report contained the replies of Member States, international bodies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to the Secretary-General's request for their views on the programme for the Decade, including the possibility of holding a third international peace conference or other suitable international conference at the end of the Decade. (The first International Peace Conference was held at The Hague, Netherlands, in 1899. A second International Peace Conference took place in 1907, also at The Hague.) On the basis of the report and its discussions, the Working Group elaborated the draft programme for the activities to be commenced during the first term of the Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/40.

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-sixth session the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law".

ANNEX

Programme for the activities to be commenced during the first term (1990-1992) of the United Nations Decade of International Law

I. Promotion of the acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law

1. The General Assembly, bearing in mind that maintenance of international peace and security is the underlying condition for the success of the implementation of the programme of the United Nations Decade of International Law, calls upon States to act in accordance with international law, and particularly the Charter of the United Nations.

2. States are invited to consider, if they have not yet done so, becoming parties to existing multilateral treaties, in particular those relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification. International organizations under whose auspices such treaties are concluded are invited to indicate whether they publish periodic reports on the status of ratifications of and accessions to multilateral treaties and, if they do not, to indicate whether in their view such a process would be useful. Consideration should be given to the question of treaties which have not achieved wider participation or entered into force after a considerable lapse of time and the circumstances causing the situation.

3. States and international organizations are encouraged to provide assistance and technical advice to States, in particular to developing countries, to facilitate their participation in the process of multilateral treaty-making, including their adherence to and implementation of such multilateral treaties.

4. States are encouraged to report to the Secretary-General on ways and means, as provided for by the multilateral treaties to which they are parties, regarding the implementation of such treaties. The Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on the basis of this information and to submit it to the General Assembly.

II. Promotion of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice

1. The United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations, including the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, as well as the International Law Association, the Institute of International Law, the Hispano-Luso-American Institute of International Law and other international institutions working in the field of international law, and national societies of international law, are invited to study the means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice, and to present suggestions for the promotion thereof to the Sixth Committee.

2. States are invited to make proposals to the Sixth Committee in respect of the promotion of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice.

3. The Sixth Committee is requested to consider, taking into account the above-mentioned suggestions and proposals, and, where appropriate, on the basis of a report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, or of the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law, the following questions:

(a) Strengthening the use of means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes, with particular attention to the role to be played by the United Nations, as well as methods for early identification and prevention of disputes and their containment;

(b) Procedures for the peaceful settlement of disputes arising in specific areas of international law;

(c) Ways and means of encouraging greater recognition of the role of the International Court of Justice and its wider use in the peaceful settlement of disputes;

(d) Enhancement of co-operation of regional organizations with the United Nations system of organizations in respect of the peaceful settlement of disputes.

III. Encouragement of the progressive development of international law and its codification

1. International organizations, including the United Nations system of organizations and regional organizations, are invited to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations summary information regarding the programmes and results 'of their work relevant to the progressive development of international law and its codification, including their suggestions for future work in their specialized field, with an indication of the appropriate forum to undertake such work. Similarly, the Secretary-General is requested to prepare a report on the relevant activities of the United Nations, including those of the International Law Commission. Such information should be presented in a report by the Secretary-General to the Sixth Committee.

2. On the basis of the information mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present section, States are invited to submit suggestions for consideration by the Sixth Committee and, as appropriate, recommendation. In particular, efforts should be made to identify areas of international law which might be ripe for progressive development or codification.

3. The Sixth Committee is requested to study, taking into account General Assembly resolution 684(VII) of 6 November 1952, its co-ordinating role with respect to, inter alia, the drafting of provisions of a legal nature and the consistent use of legal terminology in international instruments adopted by the General Assembly.

4. The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization is requested to continue studying possible measures to strengthen the United Nations system for the maintenance of international peace and security. States, particularly those that proposed the inclusion of this question in the programme for the Decade, are invited to present draft texts to the Secretary-General or the Special Committee for consideration.

IV. Encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law

1. The Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law is requested, in the context of the Decade, to formulate relevant guidelines for the Programme's activities and to report to the Sixth Committee on the activities carried out under the Programme in accordance with such guidelines. Special emphasis should be given to supporting academic and professional institutions already carrying out research and education in international law, as well as to encouraging the establishment of such institutions where they might not exist, particularly in the developing countries. States are encouraged to contribute to the strengthening of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law.

2. States should encourage their educational institutions to introduce courses in international law for students studying law, political science, social sciences and other relevant disciplines; they should study the possibility of introducing topics of international law in the curricula of schools at the primary and secondary levels. Co-operation between institutions at the university level amongst developing countries, on the one hand, and their co-operation with those of developed countries on the other, should be encouraged.

3. States should consider convening conferences of experts at the national and regional levels in order to study the question of preparing model curricula and materials for courses in international law, training of teachers in international law, preparation of textbooks on international law and the use of modern technology to facilitate the teaching of and research in international law.

4. The United Nations system of organizations, regional organizations and States should consider organizing seminars, symposia, training courses, lectures and meetings and undertaking studies on various aspects of international law. States and regional organizations have already expressed their readiness to undertake such activities on the following subjects: developing countries and international law (China); developing countries and international legislation on the environment (China); law of the sea (Yugoslavia); joint ventures in deep sea-bed mining (Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee); and promotion of the ratification of the United Nations conventions on refugees (Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee).

5. States are encouraged to organize special training in international law for legal professionals, including judges, and personnel of ministries of foreign affairs and other relevant ministries. The United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Hague Academy of International Law and regional organizations are invited to co-operate in this respect with States.

6. Co-operation among developing countries, as well as between developed and developing countries, in particular among those persons who are involved in the practice of international law, for exchanging experience and for mutual assistance in the field of international law, including assistance in providing textbooks and manuals of international law, is encouraged.

7. In order to make better known the practice of international law, States, regional and other international organizations should endeavour to publish, if they have not done so, summaries, repertories or year-books of their practice.

8. It would be conducive to the teaching and dissemination of international law if all judgments and advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice were available in all official languages of the United Nations. As envisaged in General Assembly resolution 44/28 of 4 December 1989 and bearing in mind the wishes expressed by States, the Sixth Committee will consider, at the forty-sixth session of the Assembly, the Secretary-General's report containing a study of alternative means of making the publications of the International Court of Justice available in all the other official languages in addition to French and English, within the existing overall level of appropriations and in a way which meets the concerns expressed by the Court. Such a study should also consider the possibility, within the existing overall level of appropriations, of compiling and publishing thematic and analytical summaries of the judgments and advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice.

9. Other international courts and tribunals, including the European Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, are invited to disseminate more widely their judgements and advisory opinions, and to consider preparing thematic or analytical summaries thereof.

10. International organizations are requested to publish treaties concluded under their auspices, if they have not yet done so. Timely publication of the United Nations Treaty Series is encouraged and efforts directed towards adopting an electronic form of publication should be continued. Timely publication of the United Nations Juridical Yearbook is also encouraged.

V. Procedures and organizational aspects

1. The Sixth Committee, working primarily through its Working Group and with the assistance of the Secretariat, will be the co-ordinating body of the programme for the United Nations Decade of International Law. The question of the use of an intra-sessional, inter-sessional or existing body to carry out specific activities of the programme may be considered by the General Assembly.

2. The Sixth Committee is requested to continue to prepare the programme of activities for the Decade.

3. All organizations and institutions referred to and invited to submit reports to the Secretary-General under sections I to IV above are requested to submit interim or final reports preferably at the forty-sixth session but not later than the forty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

4. States are encouraged to establish, as necessary, national, subregional and regional committees which may assist in the implementation of the programme for the Decade. Non-governmental organizations are encouraged to promote the purposes of the Decade within the fields of their activities, as appropriate.

5. It is recognized that, within the existing overall level of appropriations, adequate financing for the implementation of the programme for the Decade is necessary and should be provided. Voluntary contributions from Governments, international organizations and other sources, including the private sector, would be useful and are strongly encouraged. To this end, the establishment of a trust fund to be administered by the Secretary-General might be considered by the General Assembly.

General Assembly resolution 45/40

28 November 1990 Meeting 48 Adopted without vote

Approved by Sixth Committee (A/45/733) without vote, 19 November (meeting 44); 65-nation draft (A/C.6/45/L.16); agenda item 138.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 6th Committee 39-42, 44; plenary 48.

International Law Seminar

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/35 [YUN 1989, p. 849], the United Nations Office at Geneva organized the twenty-sixth session of the International Law Seminar, held from 5 to 22 June [A/45/10]. The Seminar was intended for post-graduate students of international law and young professors or government officials dealing with questions of international law in their work.

Of some 80 applicants, 24 candidates, mostly from developing countries, were selected; 17 of them, as well as three United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) fellows, were able to participate. During the Seminar, they attended the meetings of the International Law Commission (ILC) and lectures specifically organized for them. Topics dealt with included the work and the historical and legal development of ILC, the relationship between public international law and politics, and specific issues in international law. The Seminar was funded by Member States through voluntary contributions and through national fellowships awarded by Governments to their own nationals. Austria, Bahrain, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, New Zealand, the Philippines, Sweden and Switzerland provided voluntary contributions, making possible 13 full fellowships and one partial fellowship in 1990, as well as ensuring geographical distribution of participants and allowing deserving candidates from distant countries to attend who would otherwise have been prevented from participating. The Commission noted with regret, however, that in 1990 not all applicants who had asked for financial assistance could be awarded fellowships, and appealed to States that were able to do so to make voluntary contributions for the holding of the Seminar in 1991. Since the first Seminar in 1964, fellowships had been awarded to 294 of 576 participants representing 142 nationalities.

The Commission decided that the twenty-seventh session of the Seminar, to be held in 1991, would be dedicated to the memory of Paul Reuter, a recently deceased member of ILC, and entitled The Paul Reuter Session.

Siena Forum

By a note verbale of 23 October [A/45/666], Italy transmitted to the Secretary-General the conclusions of the Siena Forum on International Law of the Environment, which was held from 17 to 21 April 1990, as a follow-up to the Economic Declaration of the summit of the seven most industrialized countries (Paris, July 1989). Scholars, diplomats and experts from 30 States and 8 international organizations participated in the forum, whose purpose was to examine the need for a digest of existing rules of international law for the environment and to give in-depth consideration to the legal aspects of environment at the international level.

The Economic Declaration of the seven most industrialized countries' summit (Houston, Texas, United States, July 1990) noted with interest the conclusions of the forum and suggested that they be considered by the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development.

International economic law

In 1990, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly.

International trade law

Report of UNCITRAL

In 1990, UNCITRAL held its twenty-third session from 25 June to 6 July in New York. The Commission dealt with topics such as international countertrade, procurement, guarantees and stand-by letters of credit, legal problems of electronic data interchange and the draft Model Law on International Credit Transfers. It also reviewed the status of conventions that had resulted from its previous work, and its programme of training and assistance.

On 3 October, the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) took note [A/45/15] of the report of UNCITRAL on its twenty-third session [A/45/17].

Unification of trade law

International countertrade

In 1990, the Commission had before it sample chapters [A/CN.9/332 & Add.I-7] of a draft legal guide on drawing up contracts in international countertrade transactions. The chapters covered the guide's scope and terminology; contracting approach; general remarks on drafting; type, quality and quantity of goods; pricing; payment; and security for performance. UNCITRAL agreed with the overall approach and the structure of the guide.

During the Commission's discussion, it was stated that countertrade was an inefficient manner to carry on international trade and was detrimental to both developed and developing States as it distorted competition in international markets as well as the terms of trade of the participants themselves. The view was expressed that the legal guide should be drafted in such a way that it would not indicate specific approval of that type of trade or encourage parties to engage in it.

UNCITRAL decided that the Secretariat should complete the preparation of the remaining chapters and submit them to a working group for consideration. It also decided that the Secretariat should redraft the chapters presented to it at its current session, as well as the chapters to be submitted to the working group in the light of the discussion in the Commission and the working group. The final text of the legal guide was to be presented to the Commission in 1992.

International credit transfers

The Commission reviewed the reports of the Working Group on International Payments on its nineteenth (July 1989) [A/CN.9/328] and twentieth (November/December 1989) sessions [A/CN.9/329], at which the Working Group had continued consideration of the draft Model Law on International Credit Transfers.

The Commission noted that at the close of the Working Group's twentieth session, the United States had expressed concern about the direction the Model Law project had taken and had suggested the possibility of separating the Model Law into two parts, one applicable to high-speed electronic systems and the other applicable to slower systems. UNCITRAL noted that the United States had submitted a specific proposal to implement its suggestion, which would be before the Working Group later in the month. The Commission expressed its confidence that the Working Group would be able to resolve the outstanding issues so that a text could be presented to the Commission at its twenty-fourth session in 1991.

Guarantees and stand-by letters of credit

UNCITRAL considered the report [A/CN.9/330] of the Working Group on International Contract Practices on the work of its thirteenth session, held in New York from 8 to 18 January 1990.

The Commission noted that the Working Group had begun examining possible issues concerning a uniform law on guarantees and stand-by letters of credit, as discussed in a note by the Secretariat [A/CN.9/WG.II/WP.65], relating to the substantive scope of the uniform law, party autonomy and its limits and possible rules of interpretation. It also noted that the Working Group had engaged in a preliminary exchange of views on the form and time of establishment of the guarantee or stand-by letter of credit.

The Working Group had requested the Secretariat to submit to its next session, to be held at Vienna from 3 to 14 September 1990, a first draft set of articles (with possible variants) on the above matters, as well as a note discussing other possible issues to be covered by the uniform law. The Commission expressed its appreciation for the progress made by the Working Group so far and requested it to continue carrying out its task expeditiously.

Electronic data interchange

At its 1990 session, UNCITRAL had before it a report of the Secretary-General [A/CN.9/333] containing a preliminary study of legal issues related to the formation of contracts by electronic means. The report summarized work undertaken in the European Community and in the United States on the requirement that certain transactions be concluded in writing, as well as other issues that had been identified as arising from the formation of contracts by electronic means. Efforts to overcome related problems by the use of model communication agreements were also discussed.

The Commission expressed its appreciation for the report and requested the Secretariat to continue its examination of the legal aspects of the issue. It also asked the Secretariat to prepare for it at its twenty-fourth session a further report, on the basis of which it hoped to decide what work it might undertake in the field of electronic data interchange.

Co-ordination of work

UNCITRAL in 1990 examined a report [A/CN.9/336] of the Secretary-General on current activities of international organizations related to the harmonization and unification of international trade law. That report updated the information contained in an earlier report [YUN 1989, p. 855] submitted to the Commission in 1989 and dealt with a number of topics, including international commercial contracts in general, transnational corporations, international payments and commercial arbitration, and private international law.

UNCITRAL noted that the report was a valuable compilation of information on the activities of international organizations related to the harmonization and unification of international trade law and assisted the Commission in developing its own programme of work and fostering co-ordination in the activities of the various international organizations.

Training and assistance

In 1990, UNCITRAL had before it a note [A/CN.9/335] by the Secretariat describing training and assistance activities that had been carried out during the prior year, as well as possible future activities. The note indicated that the Secretariat had endeavoured to devise a more extensive programme of training and assistance than previously, keeping in mind the Commission's 1981 decision that a major purpose of training and assistance should be the promotion of the texts prepared by it.

During the year, UNCITRAL continued to organize and participate in seminars and symposia on international trade law. It co-sponsored a seminar to familiarize the legal community with UNCITRAL texts (Conakry, Guinea, 27-29 March). The seminar drew 120 participants and was hosted by the Government and organized in conjunction with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Twenty-one participants from developing countries attended a seminar in Moscow (17-21 April 1990) on the work of the Commission, which was financed from a trust fund established by the USSR with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), and hosted by the School of International Private and Civil Law and the School of International Business of the Moscow State Institute for Foreign Relations.

The Commission expressed its appreciation to all those who had participated in the organization of the various seminars, in particular to the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC) and the Moscow State Institute for Foreign Relations, and to UNDP and the Governments of Canada, Finland, France, Luxembourg, Switzerland and the USSR, whose contributions had enabled seminars to take place.

Legal aspects of the new international economic order

In 1990, UNCITRAL and the General Assembly's Sixth Committee continued to deal with legal aspects of the new international economic order.

UNCITRAL consideration. The Commission had before it the report [A/CN.9/331] of the Working Group on the New International Economic Order on the work of its eleventh session (New York, 5-16 February 1990), at which it considered the draft Model Law on Procurement prepared by the Secretariat, whose 35 draft articles covered application of the law, definitions, underlying policies, methods of procurement, eligibility of contractors and suppliers, notices of proposed procurement, and other aspects and phases of the procurement process. During the general discussion, it was noted that, as currently drafted, the Model Law did not deal with certain issues that were addressed in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) Agreement on Government Procurement; in response, it was observed that the nature and scope of the Model Law, which was a model for national legislation, differed from that of the GATT Agreement, which was a multilateral agreement, and that the Model Law sought to take account of the needs and interests of developing countries. A view was expressed that the Model Law was too complex, and the Working Group endorsed its earlier decision that the Model Law be accompanied by a commentary, but no final decision was taken as to the functions or structure of the latter.

At the close of the session, the Working Group requested the Secretariat to prepare for its twelfth session draft provisions of the Model Law that would deal with redress for actions and decisions taken by the procuring entity contrary to the provisions of the Model Law, and to revise the text of the draft Model Law to take into account the discussions and decisions of the eleventh session.

The Commission expressed appreciation for the work performed by the Working Group thus far and requested it to proceed expeditiously with its work. The view was expressed that the work on the Model Law should take into account its possible relevance to procurement conducted by private companies which, for certain large purchases, were increasingly resorting to the types of procedures laid down in the draft Model Law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 November, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/42.

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-third session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade, as well as its resolutions 43/166 of 9 December 1988 and 44/33 of 4 December 1989,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic co-operation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-third session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law within the framework of the United Nations Decade for International Law, particularly as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its twenty-third session;

2. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to co-ordinate legal activities in this field in order to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law and, in this connection, recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, should continue to maintain close co-operation with the other international organs and organizations, including those regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

3. Calls upon the Commission to continue to take account of the relevant provisions of the resolutions concerning the new international economic order, as adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth and seventh special sessions;

4. Reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and assistance in the field of international trade law and the desirability for it to sponsor seminars and symposia, in particular those organized on a regional basis, to promote such training and assistance;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commission's secretariat, to prepare a report with a view to analysing possible ways by which assistance could be given to developing countries that are members of the Commission, in particular least developed countries, so that they may attend meetings of the Commission and its working groups, bearing in mind the arrangements that exist for United Nations bodies generally, pursuant to resolution 43/217, section IX, of 21 December 1988, and to submit it to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Repeats its invitation to those States which have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to the conventions elaborated under the auspices of the Commission.

PART SIX

Administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations financing and programming

In 1990, the financial uncertainty facing the UN system continued at a time when, as the Secretary-General observed, certain developments-especially the lifting of the deadening weight of the cold war and renewed vigour in the democratization process-had opened enormous opportunities to expand advances already made by the Organization.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in June reiterated its profound concern regarding mounting arrears in contributions to the various regular budgets, which jeopardized international co-operation in the political, economic and technical fields. The Secretary-General, in December, stated that the possibility of imminent bankruptcy had been his constant preoccupation at the very time the United Nations had been called upon to undertake challenging new tasks. Once again, the General Assembly urged all Member States to meet their financial obligations under the Charter by paying promptly and in full all assessed contributions.

The revised budget appropriations for the biennium 1990-1991 added nearly $160 million to the previously appropriated $1,975 billion. Questions relating to the financing of UN peace-keeping operations were transmitted to the resumed Assembly session. Priorities for the proposed programme budget for 1992-1993 were stated by the Secretary-General to be peace-making, Africa, international drug control, and the environment and development.

The Secretary-General, in April, reported on the restructuring and reform of the United Nations, stating that the programme of administrative reforms initiated in 1986 had been largely implemented. There had been an 11.95 per cent reduction in regular-budget posts over three years. The Assembly encouraged the Secretary-General to continue implementing reform.

The Committee on Contributions continued to work on the methodology for determining the scale of assessments of Member States' contributions to the UN budget and discussed at length ways to improve communication between Member States and the Committee. The Assembly requested the Committee to continue working to improve the methodology for the preparation of future scales. It determined the rates of assessment for two new Member States, Namibia and Liechtenstein, as well as for Germany, following the accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany in October, and Yemen, after the merger of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic in May.

The accounts and financial statements for the year of the biennium ended 31 December 1989 for the United Nations and eight development and humanitarian programmes were accepted by the Assembly in 1990, together with conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors. Efforts to improve programme planning, performance and evaluation continued throughout 1990.

The Assembly adopted the medium-term plan for 1992-1997, reaffirming its role as the United Nations principal policy directive. The Assembly also urged the Secretary-General to develop procedures to ensure that evaluation was fully integrated into the programme planning cycle. Harmonization of budgeting procedures among organizations of the UN system was considered by the Joint Inspection Unit, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. The Assembly reiterated the importance of co-ordination as a policy instrument in improving the organizations' performance.

UN financing

Financial situation

ACC decision. In June, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), chaired by the Secretary-General and composed of the heads of all organizations of the UN system, adopted a decision [ACC/1990/DEC/1-14 (dec. 1990/6)] reiterating profound concern over the mounting arrears in contributions to the regular budgets of the organizations of the UN system. The consequent lack of resources had serious programmatic consequences and jeopardized international co-operation in the political, economic, technical and social fields, ACC said; therefore, it requested all Member States to pay their current and outstanding contributions promptly and in full, in order to enable the organizations of the system to continue to fulfil effectively the mandates entrusted to them by the international community.

Reports of Secretary-General. In an October analysis of the UN financial situation [A/C.5/45/17], requested by the General Assembly in resolution 44/195 B [YUN 1989, p. 863], the Secretary-General noted that every year since 1965 the Assembly had included an item on the financial emergency of the United Nations in its agenda. Despite the appeals and expressions of commitment contained in related Assembly resolutions, solutions had not been found; thus the Organization's financial situation continued to be as precarious as ever.

The primary means of resolving the financial difficulties, and the one which would result in the lowest cost to Member States, was the prompt payment by every Member State, within 30 days of receipt of an assessment letter, of all assessed contributions in accordance with the financial regulations. Other options, such as authority to borrow commercially when required and issuance of certificates of indebtedness against the arrears of Member States, had received negative reactions in the past and, therefore, the Secretary-General said, he had not put them forward. Voluntary contributions, though welcome when freely and unconditionally given, were unlikely to be adequate to resolve the situation.

In a December report [A/45/830], the Secretary-General noted that throughout 1990 the financial crisis, with possible bankruptcy imminent, had cast a shadow over the Organization at the very time when it was called on to undertake challenging new tasks.

As at 30 November, $290 million—or 35.1 per cent of the year's total regular budget assessments of $826.8 million—remained unpaid, so that together with arrears of $117.3 million for prior years, total assessed contributions outstanding amounted to $407.3 million. Cash reserves—the Working Capital Fund and the Special Account, totalling some $223 million—were replenished only during March; throughout the other months of 1990, those reserves had to be constantly drawn on to meet current operating requirements, and by November they were exhausted. Consequently, for the first time since 1986, the Secretary-General was obliged to borrow from peace-keeping funds in order to meet cash requirements for regular budget obligations.

The pattern of payments by the membership as a whole was much less encouraging in 1990 than in previous years. By 30 November, only 64 Member States had fully paid their assessed contributions to the regular budget, in contrast to 72 at the same time in 1989. Of the 93 Member States still in arrears, 50 owed more than their 1990 assessments, 11 owed an equal amount, and 32 owed less than that assessment. By the beginning of December, 24 Member States had made no payments at all, as opposed to 22 at the same time in 1989. It was expected that the Organization would have only $73.4 million in cash reserves by the end of 1990, leaving a deficit in the reserves of $148.6 million, while unpaid assessed contributions would remain at $390.7 million.

The only real solution to the financial crisis was, according to the Secretary-General, payment by all Member States of their assessed contributions in full and on time. Until that basic legal obligation under the Charter was honoured by all without exception, the threat of financial collapse would continue to haunt the Organization. To place the United Nations on a sound financial footing, additional steps had to be taken: the reserves had to be re-established and maintained, and the level of the Working Capital Fund increased substantially, to $200 million or even higher to as much as 25 per cent of the regular budget on an annual basis, as the only realistic buffer between the Organization and bankruptcy.

ACABQ report. In a December report [A/45/860], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) stated that it did not see an increase in the Working Capital Fund as a solution, even a partial one, to UN financial difficulties. Increasing the Fund prior to resolving the financial difficulties could worsen the situation, since outstanding obligations of certain Member States might increase as a result. To increase current or future assessments while some Member States still owed significant amounts on prior assessments would have the result that those which had fulfilled their financial obligation had to pay the shortfall created by those which had not. ACABQ, therefore, recommended that a decision on increasing the Fund level be undertaken only when the principle of payment by Member States of their full obligations to the Organization—the underpinning of the financial health of the United Nations—was honoured.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 45/236 A and B.

Current financial crisis and financial emergency of the United Nations

A

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, Article 17 thereof,

Recalling also its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986, 42/211 and 42/212 of 21 December 1987, 43/215 of 21 December 1988 and 44/195 A of 21 December 1989,

Deeply concerned that the current financial crisis threatens the financial solvency, stability and work of the Organization,

Noting the significant efforts made by Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full or to reduce the level of their outstanding contributions,

Reaffirming the need for a durable, reliable and last-inn financial foundation for the Organization, in accordance with the Charter,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the current financial crisis of the United Nations, the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee on this subject,

1. Reiterates the legal obligation of all Member States, under the Charter of the United Nations, to finance the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly;

2. Requests all Member States to pay their outstanding and current assessed contributions in full and in a timely manner in accordance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the financial situation of the United Nations and to keep the President of the General Assembly and the chairmen of the regional groups informed so as to facilitate consideration by Member States if the situation so requires;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to communicate to all Member States the latest information on the current financial crisis facing the Organization and to submit a report giving his best projections of the financial situation of the Organization to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session by 15 November 1991, followed by additional and more up-to-date information as soon as possible.

B

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/216 A of 21 December 1987, 43/220 of 21 December 1988, 44/195 B of 21 December 1989 and all previous related resolutions,

Noting the increased importance of the role of the Organization in peace-keeping and, in this regard, recalling paragraph 8 of resolution 45/75 of 11 December 1990,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the improvement in the level of the short-term deficit of the Organization, which it is estimated will be reduced to 260. million dollars as at 31 December 1990,

Concerned at the precarious financial situation of all peace-keeping operations and noting that troop-contributing Member States, including the developing country troop contributors of past and present peace-keeping operations, have borne most of the burden of the deficit,

Noting with concern the long delays in payment and the partial and non-payment of assessed contributions to past and current peace-keeping operations,

Reiterating earlier appeals to Member States, without prejudice to their position of principle, to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account referred to in annex VI to the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of the financial situation of the United Nations,

Considering the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee during the forty-fifth session,

1. Urges all Member States to meet their financial obligations under the Charter of the United Nations by paying promptly and in full all assessed contributions, including advances to the Working Capital Fund and assessments relating to peace-keeping operations;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that pay their assessed contributions in full in accordance with regulation 5.4 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in addition to sending official communications to the permanent representatives of Member States, to approach, as and when appropriate, the Governments of Member States for the purpose of encouraging the expeditious payment in full of all outstanding assessed contributions to all peace-keeping operations, as well as seeking further voluntary contributions for peace-keeping operations;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the financial emergency of the United Nations, on a regular basis, a detailed analysis of the financial situation of the Organization, including reimbursements owed to Member States for their participation in peace-keeping operations;

5. Takes note of the proposal of the Secretary-General for an increase in the level of the Working Capital Fund and the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in this regard and decides to revert to this matter, if necessary, at the forty-sixth session;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the financial emergency of the United Nations to the General Assembly each year by 10 October, including therein the results of his efforts in implementation of paragraph 3 of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolutions 45/236 A and B
21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/883 & A/45/884) without vote, 18 December (meeting 49); draft by India (A/C.5/45/L.17), following informal consultations; agenda items 120 & 121.

Financing of peace-keeping operations

Support account

Report of Secretary-General. In September, the Secretary-General presented a report [A/45/493], in response to General Assembly resolution 44/192 A [YUN 1989, p. 881], on a proposed support account for peace-keeping operations. The account would cover overload posts, which were designed to meet the additional work-load and to provide administrative support and back-stopping for good offices and peace-keeping operations financed outside the regular UN programme budget. The support account would also establish a single mechanism for the distribution of costs among the various peace-keeping operations. The account was to be financed initially from the combination of resources already included in the approved peace-keeping budgets, specifically for overload posts. Beginning in 1991, the financing would be through the inclusion of a provision in the budget of each peace-keeping operation, in an amount equal to the average ratio of the cost of overload posts to the cost of the civilian component. For 1991, it was estimated that $7 million ($5.6 million net) would be required for the account. The Secretary-General requested the Assembly to authorize establishment of the account.

ACABQ comments. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a November report [A/45/801], concurred in the interim establishment of a support account for peace-keeping operations, pending approval by the General Assembly of arrangements to begin in 1991. The Committee expressed some reservations with regard to the application of an "across-the-board" percentage in the financing method, in that this might not reflect the varied requirements of different peace-keeping operations. It intended to keep both the percentage approved by the Assembly and the methodology on which it was based under review, and would recommend changes as necessary. Also, it would review each request for the creation of additional posts to ensure that every effort had been made to achieve savings through the consolidation of functions whenever possible.

Bearing in mind its observations, ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve the establishment of the support account.

Reserve stock

Report of Secretary-General. At the end of October, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/493/Add.I], as requested by General Assembly resolution 44/192 A [YUN 1989, p. 881], on the feasibility and cost-effectiveness of a reserve stock of equipment and supply items for UN peace-keeping activities. An estimated $15 million would be needed to acquire such a reserve stock in order to enable rapid deployment and start-up of the various components of newly established operations. The major items in the proposed stock would be motor vehicles of various types and trailers, costing an estimated $8 million, and communications equipment in the amount of $4.6 million.

ACABQ comments. The Advisory Committee commented on the Secretary-General's proposal for a reserve stock for peace-keeping in a November report [A/45/801]. In principle, the Committee believed a reserve stock of equipment and supply items would be beneficial. However, it was informed that although the least complicated procedure for funding the $15 million which would be required to acquire the reserve stock would be through an assessment on Member States, a more acceptable approach would be for the stock to be funded from the unencumbered cash balance remaining in the account of the United Nations Transition Assistance Group (UNTAG) (see PART FOUR, Chapter III). ACABQ believed that many of the requirements to be met from the proposed reserve could be met from the UNTAG reserve, with the UNTAG account being credited as and when necessary from the account of the operation utilizing the equipment. For items not available from the remaining UNTAG equipment, ACABQ urged the Secretary-General to identify all possibilities for acquiring them through voluntary contributions, and requested him to report to it in early 1991.

Reimbursement rates to troop contributors

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ. The Secretary-General, in an October report [A/45/582], reviewed the reimbursement rates to Governments of troop-contributing States, as requested by General Assembly resolution 44/192 C [YUN 1989, p. 882]. Current reimbursement rates, which had become effective in December 1980, did not fully compensate all Governments for their troop costs, the report said. The average absorption factor—the portion of the costs not compensated for by the standard rates and absorbed by the respective troop-contributing State—in respect of pay and allowances of troops for 1988 had decreased to 23.3 per cent compared to 45.9 per cent for 1980. However, taking into account that the figures for individual countries varied through conversion rate factors relating to national currencies and the United States dollar, the relative increase between 1984 and 1988 of absorption costs was approximately 4 per cent.

In a November report [A/45/801], ACABQ concluded that some relief was necessary, especially in view of inflation since the current reimbursement rates were established in 1980. The Advisory Committee, therefore, recommended to the Assembly a 4 per cent increase in the reimbursement rate.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report and the related comments of ACABQ, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on 21 December recommended a draft resolution [A/C.5/45/L.25] for adoption by the General Assembly on the administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of UN peace-keeping operations, by a vote of 82 votes in favour to 2 against (USSR, United States), with 9 abstentions [A/45/903]. A proposal by the USSR to defer to the following session adoption of paragraph 6 of the draft—by which the Assembly would decide to increase the standard rates by 4 per cent beginning 1 July 1991—was rejected by 54 votes to 7, with 16 abstentions, as was an amendment by the United States to the same paragraph, by 52 votes to 3, with 21 abstentions. Under the amendment, the Assembly would have decided that reimbursements to troop-contributing States needed periodic adjustment and that the issue was to be given high-level attention at the resumed Assembly session.

By decision 45/455 of 21 December, the Assembly retained the agenda item "Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peace-keeping operations" on the agenda of its forty-fifth session.

Efficiency review

Report of Secretary-General. In April, the Secretary-General submitted an analytical report [A/45/226] on the restructuring and reform of the United Nations, analysing further the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations [YUN 1986, p. 1024], which set the process in train. The report supplemented three previous reports, following consideration of which the Assembly in resolution 44/200 A [YUN 1989, p. 866] requested the Secretary-General to provide detailed information on the implementation of each of the 71 recommendations of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts, accompanied by an explanation with regard to such implementation and an assessment of its impact on the relevant programmes, with particular emphasis on those programmes which had been terminated or completed.

The Group's recommendations, which related to the intergovernmental machinery and its functioning; the structure of the Secretariat; personnel management; monitoring, evaluation and inspection; and planning and budget procedure, ranged from very broad, general proposals to specific detailed instructions. The Organization's economic and social activities, owing to their magnitude and complexity, were identified as an area of particular importance requiring reform, the Secretary-General said. In addition to specific and general prescriptions concerning Secretariat arrangements addressed to him, a Special Commission was set up by the Economic and Social Council to deal with the rationalization of the intergovernmental machinery. After two years of negotiations, the Commission had failed to reach agreement; however, some progress had been made in improving the efficiency and effectiveness of individual entities and in revitalizing the Economic and Social Council. A practicable consensus on action required in the economic and social sectors had not yet emerged, in contrast to the progress achieved in the political, administrative and financial areas; the greater convergence of views on questions related to administration, budget and management was reflected in the adoption without vote of all resolutions in the General Assembly's Fifth Committee during the 1989 session. With regard to human resources management, some of the Group of Experts' recommendations were of an ongoing nature and their full effect would be felt in the future, the Secretary-General stated, and in several areas, especially peace-keeping, the Secretariat's capacity to fulfil its tasks had been stretched to its maximum limits by staff reductions.

The Secretary-General believed, however, that an opportunity existed to extend to the economic and social spheres the same level of co-operation that had evolved in the political and administrative fields. The urgency and seriousness of the economic and social problems confronting the international community rendered the role of the Secretariat in assisting Member States even more important. Decisions taken during the 1989 Assembly session, the Assembly's 1990 special sessions on international co-operation against illicit drug production and trafficking (see PART THREE, Chapter XVI) and on international economic co-operation, as well as the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (see PART THREE, Chapter I), reflected an increasing awareness by Member States of the need for the United Nations to play an increasingly dynamic role in the economic and social field, as well as a willingness to use the Organization as an instrument for collective action. The Secretary-General concluded that the reforms initiated in 1986 had been largely implemented.

However, the Organization's financial viability had yet to be restored and further changes might be required to enable the United Nations to adapt to new and emerging issues. The effectiveness of the UN system depended on timely and full payment by all Member States, and the plans, programmes and budgets to meet the mandates and priorities of Member States could be translated into action only if they had solid financial support.

CPC consideration. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) considered the Secretary-General's report in May [A/45/16]. While noting areas where progress had been limited or not possible, for example in the economic and social sectors, the Committee concurred with the Secretary-General that the Organization had, in a number of other areas, fulfilled the mandate for reform to the best of its abilities. CPC also concurred that the improvement of the efficiency and effectiveness of the administrative and financial functioning of the Organization was a continuing process and that the Organization should enter a stage of consolidation in order to strengthen its capacity to meet the challenges of the 1990s.

The Committee emphasized the need for continuing action in certain areas. In the political sector, it requested the Secretary-General to consolidate the results of restructuring. It also stressed that further efforts were required to achieve the Assembly's objectives regarding personnel and posts. CPC recommended that the Assembly request the Committee on Conferences to develop further guidelines for reducing the volume of documentation. It reiterated its view that any measures proposed by the Secretary-General for restructuring and revitalizing the United Nations in the economic and social sectors be reviewed by it in order to examine their effect on programmes. In construction matters, the Committee advised that the Secretary-General closely adhere to previously agreed schedules. Lastly, it emphasized the importance of co-ordination as a policy instrument in improving the performance of UN organizations, ensuring complementarity of effort and increasing cost-effectiveness. The Committee recommended that the Assembly request the Secretary-General to highlight systematically the progress achieved, through the existing reporting mechanisms pertaining to the areas where it had stressed the need for continuing action, or through a specific report. The Committee stressed that the Organization's financial viability was required to achieve the objectives of Member States as reflected in the UN programmes.

ACABQ consideration. In October, ACABQ reported [A/45/617] on its consideration of the Secretary-General's analytical report, stating that enhanced efficiency and effectiveness would be compromised if efforts to streamline cumbersome administrative, personnel and budgetary procedures were not redoubled. The Advisory Committee stated further that there was need to improve the consultative process, as well as the evaluation process, related to the programme planning and budget procedures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/254 A.

Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and its resolutions 42/211 of 21 December 1987, 43/213 of 21 December 1988 and 44/200 of 21 December 1989 on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213,

Reaffirming that measures to improve the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and to improve the planning, programming and budgeting process should aim at and contribute to strengthening the effectiveness of the Organization in dealing with political, economic and social issues in order better to achieve the purposes of and respect for the principles set out in the Charter of the United Nations,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General, the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recognizing that the reform measures undertaken so far in accordance with resolution 41/213 have contributed to improving the efficiency of the Organization in certain areas,

Recognizing also that the involvement of Member States in the new planning, programming and budgeting process has facilitated a broader agreement of Member States on the programme budget of the United Nations,

Noting that, while having somewhat improved, the financial situation of the Organization remains uncertain,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the analytical report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213;

2. Endorses the relevant conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

3. Renews its appeal to all Member States to demonstrate their commitment to the United Nations by, inter alia, meeting their financial obligations on time and in full in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

4. Emphasizes that the strengthening of the effectiveness of the Organization is a continuing process requiring the joint efforts of Member States and the Secretariat;

5. Stresses that measures for the improvement of the effectiveness of the Organization should aim at the fulfilment of all its objectives;

6. Reiterates its support for the Secretary-General in the fulfilment of his responsibility as chief administrative officer;

7. Recognizes the importance of the new budget process for the enhancement of the effectiveness of the Organization;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General and Member States to pursue the objectives of resolution 41/213, particularly those that have yet to be met, and invites the Secretary-General to consolidate and build upon the results achieved through the reform process and to submit proposals, whenever necessary, for improvements in the administrative and financial functioning of the Organization, in order to enable it to fulfil more effectively its role;

9. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue to implement the provisions of resolution 41/213 and other relevant resolutions on questions of personnel and posts in the Organization, particularly those that have yet to be implemented, and invites Member States and the Secretary-General to exercise maximum restraint in their proposals for the staffing table of the Organization, particularly for high-level posts;

10. Stresses that the relationship between posts and programmes funded from the regular budget and those funded from extrabudgetary resources requires further analysis and consideration;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to ensure greater transparency in the management and use of the extrabudgetary resources made available to the Organization in order, in particular, to assess more precisely the impact of those resources on the activities, programmes and priorities of the Organization;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to present to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on all aspects of the role and use of extrabudgetary resources, as outlined by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report to the Assembly at its forty-fourth session;

13. Encourages the intention of the Secretariat to develop management and work-load analysis techniques and invites the Secretary-General to take into account the results of such techniques in the course of his preparation of proposed programme budgets in order to ensure the full and effective implementation of all programmes and activities of the United Nations;

14. Reiterates the importance of a comprehensive solution to the problem of all additional expenditures, including those deriving from inflation and currency fluctuation;

15. Reiterates also the importance of the review of the procedures for the provision of statements of programme budget implications and for the use and operation of the contingency fund, and recalls that it will consider a single report on these questions at its forty-sixth session;

UN budget

Budget for 1990-1991

Revised appropriations

Report of Secretary-General. In his first performance report [A/C.5/45/45] on the programme budget for 1990-1991, issued in December 1990, the Secretary-General described an increase in net requirements of $154.4 million, or 9.6 per cent of the amount approved by the General Assembly in resolutions 44/202 A and B [YUN 1989, p. 871]. The net overall increase reflected increases under both expenditure ($181,984,500) and income ($27,584,500) estimates. The revised requirements were primarily due to variations in the rates of exchange and in the impact of inflation, as well as changes in standard costs and decisions of policy-making organs.

In an addendum [A/C.5/45/45/Add.1 & Corr.1] to his report, the Secretary-General recalled that under the 1990-1991 programme budget, part of the resources for temporary assistance for meetings was to be assigned to a global provision to be allocated between conference centres at the discretion of the Under-Secretary-General for Conference Services and Special Assignments. It appeared that the provision for temporary assistance for meetings and related objects of expenditure in the biennium was seriously inadequate, the Secretary-General said, and to continue ensuring full servicing of the 1991 calendar of conferences, additional net resources of $2 million would be required.

ACABQ consideration. Commenting on the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ [A/45/7/Add.14] recommended that his expenditure estimates be reduced by $15.4 million, basing currency exchange projections on the 1990 average rather than on the latest prevailing rates. It recommended a further reduction of $17.3 million gross, related to the financial implications of recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), which were still being considered by the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee; it said that the related financial implications that might result from Assembly action should be contained in a second progress report by the Secretary-General to be submitted in 1991. As for travel estimates, the Advisory Committee stressed that expenditures for the biennium should not exceed $40 million and, therefore, recommended that the Secretary-General's estimates in that regard be reduced by $3 million. Concerning his request for an additional $2 million for the global provision for temporary assistance for meetings, ACABQ noted that a substantial proportion of the projected over-expenditure in 1990 related to Vienna, most of the amount concerning payments by the United Nations for services provided by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). Since specific proposals for establishing either a common conference-servicing facility at Vienna or a unified United Nations/UNIDO service were being prepared for submission to ACABQ in early 1991, the Advisory Committee recommended that no decision be taken at this stage on the requested $2 million; ACABQ would decide if commitment authority for $2 million was required in the context of the forthcoming Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 45/252 A, B and C.

General Assembly resolutions 45/252 A-C

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/900) without vote. 21 December (meeting 52); draft contained in Committee document (A/C.5/45/L.15 & Corr.1, 2); agenda item 118.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 5th Committee 5, 6, 11, 14-16, 18, 20-23, 29, 31, 39, 41-52; plenary 72.

Recommendations of the Fifth Committee on the Secretary-General's revised estimates, as well as on the programme budget implications of resolutions adopted by the Assembly, resulted in net increases in the level of appropriations in the amounts of $159,438,100 under expenditures and $14,527,600 under income.

In other action relating to the programme budget for 1990-1991, the Assembly, by resolution 45/248 A, section I, of 21 December, took note with appreciation of the first report of ACABQ [A/45/7].

Revised estimates under budget sections 3, 13 and 27

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [A/C.5/45/2], the Secretary-General presented revised estimates under budget sections 3 (relating to the UN Council for Namibia and the Office of the UN Commissioner for Namibia, and to posts in the Centre against Apartheid), 13 (pertaining to the Economic Commission for Africa) and 27 (relating to public information, including the establishment of a UN Information Centre (UNIC) in Windhoek, Namibia), with concomitant revisions under section 31, regarding staff assessment, and under income section 1.

ACABQ report. The Advisory Committee, in October, recommended [A/45/7/Add.2] approval of the Secretary-General's cost estimates of $259,700 for establishing UNIC Windhoek and an additional appropriation of $1,716,500 for the modernization of computer technology at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA). However, it recommended deductions with regard to the rest of the Secretary-General's proposals totalling $10,632,900-as against $8,093,200 proposed by the Secretary-General-most of it resulting from the deletion of estimated salary and common staff costs for the 28 officials of the UN Commissioner for Namibia awaiting redeployment.

CPC consideration. Commenting on the Secretary-General's revised estimates [A/45/16], CPC regretted that since his report was not available in all official languages, it was not able to consider it. It recommended that the report be presented to the 1990 Assembly for appropriate action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION.

Contingency fund

In December, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/73] on the status of the contingency fund, which was set at $15 million—or 0.75 per cent of the overall programme budget—for the biennium 1990-1991 by General Assembly resolution 43/214 [YUN 1988, p. 862], and which remained at $13,120,500 following the initial budget appropriations approved by the Assembly in 1989. The contingency fund was created under Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024] to accommodate additional expenditures related to each biennium and to cover expenditures arising from mandates not included in the programme budget. The Secretary-General proposed that the Fifth Committee recommend appropriation of a total of $9,901,800 for various sections of the programme budget, leaving a fund balance of $3,218,700.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, by resolution 45/248 A, section XV, the General Assembly noted that a balance of $3,218,700 remained in the contingency fund.

Proposed programme budget for 1992-1993

Programme budget outline

Report of Secretary-General. As called for by General Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024], the Secretary-General in August 1990 reported [A/45/369] on the proposed programme budget outline for 1992-1993, including preliminary estimates of resources, to which the contingency fund for additional expenditures would be added. Total anticipated 1992-1993 growth comprised non-recurrent resource growth of $118.4 million and recurrent resource growth of minus $2.5 million. Real growth consisted of the negative amount of recurrent resource growth of $2.5 million, together with an amount of $2.5 million in respect of the delayed impact of anticipated new posts; the resulting real growth (recurrent resource growth plus delayed growth) amounted to zero in percentage terms. The projected zero percentage took into account likely reductions relating to Namibia, offset by increases in the priority activities identified in the medium-term plan, i.e., peace-making, Africa, international drug control, and the environment and development.

Preliminary estimates of resources to accommodate the proposed budget activities during 1992-1993 were $1,996.1 million, which was $21.5 million, or 1.1 per cent, higher in nominal terms than the initial appropriations for the 1990-1991 programme budget. As for the contingency fund, the Secretary-General proposed that it remain at 0.75 per cent, the same level as for the 1990-1991 budget (see above).

ACABQ report. ACABQ reporting on its consideration of the proposed budget outline in December [A/45/878], recommended a total preliminary estimate of $2,462,400,000 for 1992-1993, taking into account updated inflation forecasts and the latest available exchange rates. The Advisory Committee concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendation to keep the contingency fund at 0.75 per cent of the programme budget, which would amount to $19 million for the biennium.

CPC recommendations. At its 1990 session, CPC recommended [A/45/16 (Part II)] that the preliminary estimate of resources constitute the basis for a General Assembly decision, taking into account the recommendations of ACABQ, the implications of mandates the Assembly might adopt in 1990, and CPC's own recommendations on the proposed medium-term plan for 1992-1997 (see p. 1022). According to CPC, the estimate should be adequate for implementing mandated activities to be programmed for the coming biennium within the framework of the medium-term plan and should be seen in the perspective of providing enough flexibility for the Organization to undertake efficiently new and changing mandates. CPC noted that the resource estimate did not include additional expenditures deriving from inflation and currency fluctuations as well as extraordinary expenses, and that the breakdown by major programme area was only illustrative. It recommended that the outline be built on the premise that resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024], on the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations, would be fully implemented and that the approved programmes contained in the medium-term plan would be carried in 1992-1993 against a programme budget whose financing would be strictly observed.

CPC proposed that the Assembly examine priorities reflecting trends of a broad sectoral nature, as suggested in the introduction to the medium-term plan and the outline, with particular attention to maintenance of international peace and security; economic development of developing countries; the economic recovery and development of Africa; the environment; and international drug control. With regard to the calculation of zero per cent real growth, the Committee found that, owing to shortcomings in the methodology used, it could not assess precisely the impact of the proposed rate on mandated programmes. It suggested further study of the methodology, including the treatment of non-recurrent expenditures and comparability with programme budgets, and stressed the need for greater transparency. It emphasized that the size of the contingency fund, expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources, was to be adjusted for various factors, taking into account CPC and ACABQ recommendations and conclusions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/255.

Proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1992-1993

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, by which, inter alia, it requested the Secretary-General to submit in off-budget years an outline of the programme budget for the following biennium,

Recalling also its resolution 43/214 of 21 December 1988 on the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 1990-1991 and use and operation of the contingency fund,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, the relevant parts of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms that the proposed programme budget outline, being a part of the new budget process, is in a developmental period, that its methodology requires greater improvements, transparency and accuracy and that the whole exercise should be applied with flexibility, in accordance with resolution 41/213 and resolution 42/211 of 21 December 1987;

2. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and notes the intention of the Advisory Committee to study further the methodology of the outline;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to prepare his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 on the basis of the total preliminary estimate provided by the Advisory Committee of 2,006,200,000 United States dollars at the initial 1990-1991 rates indicated in the report of the Secretary-General, to be adjusted at 1992-1993 rates;

4. Decides that the contingency fund of the programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 shall provisionally be established at a level of 0.75 per cent of the preliminary estimate at 1992-1993 rates (or 2,462,400,000 dollars at the 1992-1993 rates indicated by the Advisory Committee), i.e. 19 million dollars, and recalls that the level and mode of operation of the contingency fund shall be reviewed by the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session in accordance with paragraph 4 of its resolution 44/200 B of 21 December 1989;

5. Takes note of the proposals of the Secretary-General and the views expressed by Member States on priorities, and endorses the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination thereon, and requests the Secretary-General to pay particular attention to them in preparing the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993;

6. Recognizes that the outline should provide a greater level of predictability of resources required for the following biennium, while ensuring that such resources are adequate for the fulfilment of the objectives, programmes and activities of the Organization, as mandated by the relevant legislative bodies of the United Nations, thereby facilitating the widest possible agreement on the programme budget;

7. Takes note of the rate of real growth, compared with the previous budget, indicated by the Secretary-General in his report, and stresses that the methodology for the preparation of the outline and the programme budget should be revised, taking into account the views of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee as well as the need for increased transparency in the methodology used to reflect inflation and currency fluctuations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1992-1993 in accordance with the present resolution and all resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly pertinent to the new budgetary process.

Contributions

The fiftieth session of the Committee on Contributions was held in New York from 11 to 29 June 1990 [A/45/11]. Responding to General Assembly resolution 44/197 A [YUN 1989, p. 873], the Committee completed its comprehensive review of all aspects of the existing methodology determining the scale of assessments, and made recommendations for changes. It also addressed another 1989 Assembly request, presented in resolution 44/197 C [YUN 1989, p. 874], regarding information on how the Committee arrived at decisions on the scale of assessments. The Committee presented recommendations on how to establish an effective mechanism of communication between Member States and the Committee in the preparation of any new scale.

Scale of assessments

Scale methodology

At its 1990 session, the Committee on Contributions recommended an increase of the upper per capita income limit to $2,600, from the current $2,200; this would provide further benefits to countries with very low per capita incomes. The recommended increase was also expected to reduce the need for ad hoc adjustments. Criteria for those adjustments were also revised by the Committee. The Committee recommended the use of the concept of debt-adjusted income in preparation of the next scale of assessments, a concept which, despite its limitations, it saw as a considerable improvement over the estimated debt adjustment factors used in the 1989-1991 scale.

In view of some countries' difficulties in applying price-adjusted rates of exchange (PARE), the Committee decided to use for the next scale the market exchange rates of the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The Committee also requested the Statistical Office to continue improving its data bank with regard to alternative income concepts so as to permit their further conceptual and quantitative exploration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/256 A.

The General Assembly,

Recalling all its previous resolutions on the scale of assessments, in particular resolutions 43/223 B of 21 December 1988 and 44/197 A of 21 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions,

Taking note of the views expressed in the Fifth Committee during the forty-fifth session,

Bearing in mind the difficult economic situation faced by many Member States, in particular the developing countries and among them the least developed countries,

1. Reaffirms that:

(a) The capacity of Member States to pay is the fundamental criterion for determining the scale of assessments;

(b) The scale of assessments should be determined on the basis of reliable, verifiable and comparable data;

(c) The methodology for determining the scale of assessments should be simplified as far as possible with a view to making it more transparent and stable over time;

2. Requests the Committee on Contributions to recommend to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a scale of assessments whose period of applicability will then be decided by the Assembly and which is prepared on the basis of the recommendations of the Committee contained in its report, taking into account the following:

(a) The debt adjustment approach used in the preparation of the scale of assessments for the period 1989-1991;

(b) A low per capita income allowance formula, taking into account the recommendations of the Committee, adjusted in accordance with the evolution of the average world per capita income until 1989;

(c) Individual rates for the least developed countries should not exceed their present level, namely 0.01 per cent;

3. Also requests the Committee on Contributions to use the criteria specified in paragraph 42 of its report for the ad hoc adjustment of the machine scale and to provide detailed information on the decisions made in this regard; it is recognized that the ad hoc adjustment process depends on the availability of points provided voluntarily by Member States;

4. Further requests the Committee on Contributions to continue its work on the improvement of the methodology for the preparation of future scales of assessment, in particular with regard to:

(a) The scheme of limits, with a view to reducing speedily any of its excessive distorting effects;

(b) The possible modification of the statistical base period;

(c) The possibility of excluding the allocation of any additional points, as a result of the application of the scheme of limits, to those Member States having a very low per capita income;

(d) The application of debt-adjusted income as recommended by the Committee in its report and the debt adjustment factor and taking into account the views expressed during the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

(e) The application of price-adjusted rates of exchange;

(f) Alternative income concepts;

(g) The possible use of factors that take account of the situation of countries with economic characteristics such as those outlined in paragraph 3 of Assembly resolution 43/223 B;

(h) The relationship of each of the elements and factors as part of the overall methodology;

5. Requests the Committee on Contributions to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the work undertaken in response to the requests contained in paragraph 4 of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Committee on Contributions with the facilities it requires to carry out its work, including supplementary assistance if necessary.

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/902) without vote, 21 December (meeting 52); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.5/45/L.22), based on informal consultations; agenda item 125.

Assessment of new Member States

The Committee on Contributions, in 1990, also considered the assessments for 1990 and 1991 of two new Member States-Namibia, which was admitted to UN membership on 23 April 1990 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), and the Republic of Yemen, comprising the former People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic, which were united in a single sovereign State on 22 May 1990 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). The Committee recommended that Namibia be assessed at the rate of 0.01 per cent for 1991 and at one quarter of 0.01 per cent for its year of admission.

Yemen informed the Committee that it would remit to the United Nations contributions at the same percentage allotted to a single State, beginning in 1990. The Committee, however, recommended that, in accordance with past practice, a State succeeding two previous Member States be assessed at their combined rates for the remainder of the scale period. For the next scale of assessments, the rate of the Republic of Yemen would be reviewed in relation to all other Member States. Action was also taken by the Assembly on Liechtenstein, admitted to membership on 18 September, and Germany, following accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/256 B.

The General Assembly

Resolves that:

1. The rates of assessment for the following States, admitted to membership in the United Nations on 23 April 1990 and 18 September 1990, respectively, shall be as follows:

Member State	Per cent
Namibia	0.01
Liechtenstein	0.01

For 1990 and 1991, these rates shall be added to the scale of assessments established under General Assembly resolution 43/223 A of 21 December 1988;

2. For the year of their admission, Namibia shall contribute at the rate of one fourth of 0.01 per cent and Liechtenstein at the rate of one ninth of 0.01 per cent, such contributions to be taken into account as miscellaneous income under regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations. Liechtenstein's contribution shall be adjusted by one ninth of the flat fee paid for its participation in United Nations activities as a non-Member State;

3. For the year 1991, Namibia and Liechtenstein shall each contribute at the rate of 0.01 per cent, such contribution by Liechtenstein also to be taken into account as miscellaneous income under regulation 5.2 (c) of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations;

4. The contributions of Namibia and Liechtenstein for 1990 and 1991 shall be applied to the same basis of assessment as for other Member States, except that, in the case of appropriations or apportionments approved by the General Assembly for the financing of peace-keeping operations, the contributions of those States, as determined by the group of contributors to which they may be assigned by the Assembly, shall be calculated in proportion to the calendar year;

5. The advances of Namibia and Liechtenstein to the Working Capital Fund, under regulation 5.8 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, shall be calculated by the application of the rates of assessment of 0.01 per cent each to the authorized level of the Fund, such advances to be added to the Fund pending the incorporation of the new Members' rates of assessment in a 100 per cent scale;

6. Yemen, having been formed when the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic merged on 22 May 1990, shall contribute at the rate of 0.02 per cent for 1990 and 0.01 per cent for 1991 with a corresponding reduction in the State's advance to the Working Capital Fund;

7. Following the accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, and in compliance with the current scale methodology and based on the statistical and economic data available for the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, Germany shall contribute at the rate of 9.36 per cent for 1991.

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Communication with Member States

At its 1990 session, the Committee on Contributions discussed at length the General Assembly's request in resolution 44/197 C [YUN 1989, p. 874] to submit specific recommendations on how to establish an effective mechanism of communication between Member States and the Committee. The Committee felt that the specific requests in that resolution, in particular the holding of informational meetings before the preparation of a new scale and during consideration of ad hoc adjustments to enable interested Members to convey their views, could create more problems than they would solve, and might compromise the Committee's status as an expert body and its advisory capacity to the Fifth Committee. It therefore reaffirmed the appropriateness of the existing means of communication, namely the submission of written communications prior to Committee sessions and informal contact with its Chairman.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/256 C.

The General Assembly,

Recalling rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

Requests the Committee on Contributions to hold in 1991, on an experimental basis, one or two information meetings, in a manner to be decided by the Committee, prior to executing the ad hoc adjustment of the machine scale, so as to give Member States the opportunity to provide the Committee with additional information as deemed necessary for the purpose of making the ad hoc adjustments.

Budget contributions in 1990

Of the $1,287,980,550 in contributions to the UN regular budget payable as at 1 January 1990, $885,028,907 had been collected from Member States as of 31 December, leaving $402,951,643 outstanding [ST/ADM/SER.B/345]. Of the total contributions payable, $826,817,526 was due for 1990 alone, while $461,163,034 was outstanding from previous years.

In addition, non-member States were assessed $2,891,417 for their share of activities in which they participated. Of the contributions payable to the Organization by non-member States for 1990 and prior years, totalling $3,844,792, the amount of $3,097,465 had been collected as at 31 December 1990, while $747,327 was outstanding.

On 18 September, the Secretary-General informed [A/45/515] the President of the General Assembly that seven Member States—the Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Liberia, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone and South Africa—were over two years in arrears in the payment of their budget contributions. By three more letters, dated 25 September [A/45/515/Add.1], 2 October [A/45/515/Add.2] and 8 October [A/45/515/Add.3], the Secretary-General reported that Guatemala, Sierra Leone and the Dominican Republic, respectively, had made the necessary payments and reduced their arrears, thereby retaining their right to vote in the Assembly.

Accounts and auditing

The accounts and financial statements for the year or the biennium ended 31 December 1989 for the United Nations and eight development and humanitarian programmes were accepted by the General Assembly in 1990, along with the conclusions and recommendations of the UN Board of Auditors and the comments of ACABQ. Financial reports and audited statements were submitted on the United Nations, including: the International Trade Centre and the United Nations University [A/45/5, [A/45/5, vol. I & Corr.1,2 & vols. II-III], the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [A/45/5/Add.1], the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) [A/45/5/Add.2 & Corr.1], the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) [A/45/5/Add.3], the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) [A/45/5/Add.4], the voluntary funds administered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) [A/45/5/Add.5], the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) [A/45/5/Add.6 & Corr.1], the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) [A/45/5/Add.7] and the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation [A/45/5/Add.8 & Corr.1].

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted [A/45/457] to the General Assembly a summary of the Board's principal findings and conclusions for remedial action. Among the topics considered were budgetary control, accounts and financial reporting, cash management, technical co-operation and project activities, and trust funds and special accounts.

ACABQ commented on the Board's reports in October [A/45/570 & Corr.1].

UN programmes

Programme planning and performance

Medium-term plan 1992-1997

Report of Secretary-General. In 1990, the Secretary-General put forward his proposals for the medium-term plan beginning in 1992. In an introduction presented in May [A/45/6], he stated that the objectives for the coming years and into the new century had to be defined with recent developments in mind, especially the lifting of the deadening weight of the cold war and renewed vigour in the democratization process, which opened new opportunities to expand advances and ensure peace in all its dimensions. The medium-term plan should aim to recapture the vision of international affairs articulated almost half a century earlier when the UN Charter was adopted.

In an annex to the introduction [A/45/6, annex], the Secretary-General tabulated a review of programmes by the relevant functional, sectoral and regional intergovernmental and expert review bodies. The proposed programme structure of the medium-term plan was annexed to a May Secretariat note [A/45/279] which provided a consolidated summary of the comments and recommendations made by Member States and intergovernmental bodies since 1988 on the draft introduction to the plan.

CPC consideration. CPC considered the proposed medium-term plan [A/45/16] as a whole in June, before discussing in detail each of the plan's programmes.

The Committee reiterated the importance that Member States attached to the medium-term plan and recalled that, under the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the plan, after its adoption by the General Assembly, would constitute the Organization's principal policy directive. CPC noted that the preparation of the plan was guided by the new planning and budgeting process laid down by Assembly resolution 41/213 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations [YUN 1986, p. 1024] and subsequent relevant resolutions; in that context, the Committee particularly welcomed the consultations with functional, sectoral and regional intergovernmental bodies throughout the process. CPC noted, however, that a number of proposed programmes had not been reviewed.

The Committee considered that further progress could be made in revisions to the plan as well as in future plans, notably in the definition of sectors of activity and presentation of activities being conducted in each sector. It felt that the objectives of many subprogrammes should be stated with greater clarity and precision to facilitate their evaluation, with more precise distinction between the objectives and respective roles of Member States and those of the Secretariat and more clearly spelt-out strategies and courses of action.

CPC welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to propose priorities among the subprogrammes of most of the plan's programmes, but noted that a number of programmes, particularly in the political sector, did not include proposals for such priorities. It also noted inconsistency in the priority designations of the various subprogrammes and the absence of an indicative estimate of resources. The Committee felt that a clear identification of new activities had not always been achieved and recommended that recently adopted Assembly decisions and resolutions be fully reflected. It stressed the importance of revisions to the plan, the first to be undertaken in 1992, in the light of resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly, before the plan came into effect.

Following its separate consideration of 38 programmes presented in the plan, the Committee recommended their approval with certain modifications. In September, two programmes were discussed, and CPC recommended, among other things, that the General Assembly give appropriate consideration to the question of priority setting among subprogrammes.

ACABQ consideration. ACABQ, in an October report [A/45/617], stated that the time had come to address seriously the issue of whether the medium-term plan, in its current form, fulfilled its objectives. Notwithstanding improvements, much remained to be done if the plan was to be of real use to Member States and the Secretariat; therefore, ACABQ made suggestions for further improvements, which included more reviews of programmes, and of greater quality, by specialized intergovernmental bodies; development of a common language, through greater involvement of top management in preparation of the draft plan, on matters of programming and budgeting; development of specific guidelines for the Secretary-General, including priorities, by the reviewing bodies; and structural refinements, streamlining and simplification of the plan.

Note of Fifth Committee Chairman. In order to take fully into account the views of Member States on the proposed medium-term plan, the Chairman of the Fifth Committee, through the President of the General Assembly, addressed in October identical letters to the Chairmen of the other Main Committees indicating to which Committee each of the plan's programmes should be referred. The substantive parts of the replies were reproduced in a November note [A/C.5/45/42] of the Fifth Committee Chairman.

Programme performance 1988-1989

Report of Secretary-General. A report [A/45/218 & Corr.] on the programme performance of the United Nations for 1988-1989 was submitted by the Secretary-General in April 1990. Performance was measured by comparing the number of final outputs programmed with the number of those implemented. Of 8,954 outputs (8,334 under the programme budget for the biennium, plus an additional 621 outputs carried over from previous bienniums), 6,597 or 74 per cent were implemented. The 2,357 programmed outputs not implemented were either postponed (1,012 or 11 per cent) or terminated (1,345 or 15 per cent). The postponed outputs were mainly publications (71 per cent) and reports (18 per cent), although 32 per cent of those were actually completed, but their delivery was delayed for logistical reasons in the area of printing and publishing. The overall implementation rate was slightly lower than the 76 per cent rate of the 1986-1987 biennium, mainly because of the higher percentage of terminations (15 per cent, compared to 12 per cent in the previous biennium). The number of outputs added by legislation and by Secretariat initiative was reduced by 50 per cent from the 1986-1987 level; that decline suggested both legislative restraint in considering new mandates and stretching of Secretariat resources to the limit in order to implement programmed and added outputs. Vacancy rates remained high and the substantial increase in peace-keeping operations required mobilization of a significant number of Secretariat personnel; those factors resulted in an average incumbency rate in the Professional category of barely 83 per cent during the biennium. In an April addendum [A/45/218/Add.1], the Secretary-General provided a breakdown of performance under all 29 sections of the 1988-1989 programme budget.

Evaluation findings in programme design

In April, the Secretary-General reported [A/45/204] on the application of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives. He observed that evaluation had still not been completely accepted as a management tool and, for the most part, had not been systematically and routinely integrated into the decision-making and management process. Further refinement was required in evaluation methodologies. It was suggested that CPC recommend that the Secretary-General make every effort to ensure that evaluation was fully integrated into the programme planning cycle, particularly the application of evaluation findings; that training in self-evaluation was intensified; and that evaluation methodologies continued to be refined. It was also recommended that he inform specialized intergovernmental bodies of findings from in-depth evaluations.

CPC consideration. CPC considered the Secretary-General's report at its 1990 session [A/45/16 (Part I)] and endorsed his recommendations, requesting him to put greater emphasis on refining evaluation methodologies and on the practical applications of evaluation findings.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In resolution 1990/83, the Economic and Social Council took note of the introduction to the proposed medium-term plan and of the relevant programmes of the plan. It endorsed CPC's conclusions and recommendations on the understanding that the General Assembly would further consider the proposed plan at its 1990 session. By decision 1990/281 of 27 July, the Council recommended that the Assembly request CPC to prepare draft guidelines governing the preparation and revision of system-wide action plans and system-wide medium-term plans and the relationship between the UN medium-term plan and those two instruments. By decision 1990/289 of 9 November, the Council endorsed CPC's conclusions and recommendations relating to proposed programme 45 of the plan (African economic recovery, development and transformation) and proposed programme 31 (regional co-operation for development in Asia and the Pacific).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/253.

Joint Inspection Unit

In its twenty-second report [A/45/34] since its creation in 1968, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), a subsidiary organ of the organizations of the UN system, reviewed its activities from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990. In drawing up its work programme for 1990, JIU paid special attention to the guidelines in General Assembly resolution 43/221 [YUN 1988, p. 874] as well as to the Assembly's request in resolution 44/184 [YUN 1989, p. 880] to give even greater attention to management, budgetary and administrative issues.

The report contained summaries of recommendations JIU had published in reports and notes during the above period, including those on budgeting in UN organizations [A/45/130]; human resource development through technical co-operation [A/45/113]; the optical disc system for the United Nations [A/44/684]; distribution and dissemination of documents and publications of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), particularly in the developing countries [JIU/REP/90/1]; and co-ordination of activities related to early warning of possible refugee flows [JIU/REP/90/2].

By a February note [A/45/117], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the JIU work programme for 1990 and the nucleus of its work programme for 1991-1992. In September, he forwarded, in accordance with procedures established by the Assembly in resolution 32/199 [YUN 1977, p. 1053], his annual report [A/45/441] on the status of implementation of recommendations contained in previous JIU reports which were of interest to the Assembly. The five reports dealt with the following subjects: technical co-operation between the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Economic Commission for Africa [A/42/110]; review of the United Nations Children's Fund's activities and structures [YUN 1987, P. 863]; technical co-operation between organizations of the UN system and the least developed countries [A/43/228]; representation of UN organizations at conferences and meetings [YUN 1988, P. 898]; and evaluation of UN technical co-operation project evaluation systems [E/1989/41 & Add.1].

5. Requests the Secretary-General and the Joint Inspection Unit, in bringing to the attention of the appropriate bodies of the United Nations system all reports of the Unit on matters within their respective spheres of competence, to arrange for the earliest possible introduction of reports of the Unit;

7. Encourages all governing bodies of the organizations and programmes to invite, when appropriate, a representative of the Joint Inspection Unit to be present at their meetings when considering the reports of the Unit;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of the executive heads of the participating organizations of the Joint Inspection Unit and to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on actions taken by those organizations to enhance consideration of the reports of the Unit by the respective governing bodies.

Administrative and budgetary co-ordination

JIU report. In February 1990, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a JIU report [A/45/130] on budgeting in organizations of the UN system, which sought to examine the extent to which efforts by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and other bodies had resulted in standardization and comparability in the budgets of the UN system, as well as the differences that remained. The 1986 report of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations [YUN 1986, pp. 1021, 1038] had recommended further efforts to harmonize the format of the programme budgets of UN organizations, as had several Assembly resolutions over the years. The JIU Inspector concluded that the budgets of the organizations concerned were still far from the desirable degree of harmonization. To facilitate a more equitable and comparable development of budgeting he made eight recommendations, stressing that they were not exhaustive, and follow-up studies were planned.

Among his recommendations were: those organizations that did not have programme budgets should review the possibility of introducing them and develop them adequately so as to indicate distinctively planned outputs, while a medium-term plan should constitute the principal policy directive; for objective calculation of real programme and budget growth, a method of recosting after comparison on a constant cost level should be adopted; organizations should establish small groups of experts in budgetary, financial and programmatic fields as a subsidiary unit of the legislative organ concerned in order to examine efficiently budget proposals and related matters; the experience of organizations applying a contingency margin—a portion of appropriations not to be expended pending receipt of contributions—should be studied for possible introduction elsewhere; Member States taxing the salaries of international civil servants of the UN system should compensate, entirely and in a timely manner, the costs involved in the special arrangements to reimburse income tax on staff members; working capital funds should not exceed one twelfth of the regular budget for one year, or approximately 4 per cent of a biennial budget, and should be used mainly to bridge short-term cash flow problems resulting from late payment of contributions; the use of reserve accounts and funds should, in pace with restoring financial viability, be reduced and gradually eliminated, so that organizations should restrict themselves to resources provided in the approved budget; and, in order to minimize adverse effects of currency fluctuation, organizations that spent over 85 per cent of expenditures in local currency at headquarters should switch budget currency to local currency, and all others should examine the possibility of a split assessment system in the two main currencies of their regular budget expenditure or forward purchasing of estimated currency needs.

ACC comments. In May, the Secretary-General forwarded to the Assembly [A/45/130/Add.I] the comments of ACC on the report, which the Committee considered an objective and factual review of important aspects of current budgeting practice in the UN system. With regard to the specific JIU recommendations, ACC believed that the introduction of programme budgets would depend on the specific circumstances of each organization and the requirements of their governing bodies, as would the matter of determining real resource growth. The establishment of small expert groups to examine budget proposals and related matters was up to the governing bodies concerned, the Committee said. As for contingency margins, those seemed likely to lead Member States to limit their contributions and were objectionable in principle because they would imply that Member States had the option of not honouring obligations. ACC could support in principle the recommendation that Member States taxing salaries of staff members compensate for the administrative costs involved in reimbursement arrangements, but considered that it was a matter for consideration by the Member States concerned. The Committee found no technical justification in the Inspector's report to support the proportional relationships recommended regarding working capital funds and regular budgets, and differences in the experiences of the various organizations made system-wide application impractical. Even more important, working capital funds had proved insufficient in situations characterized by both late payments and failure to pay large amounts; ACC therefore viewed the recommendation on limiting working capital funds with concern. As to reserve accounts and funds, it regarded them simply as an instrument of financial management for use by organizations according to their circumstances. It noted that the recommendations on currency arrangements had already been implemented or were under study.

CPC and ACC Joint Meetings. Improved administrative and budgetary co-ordination was one of the subjects of a November report [E/1990/123] of the Chairmen of CPC and ACC on the twenty-fifth series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees in October (see PART THREE, Chapter XVIII).

In decision 1990/290 of 9 November, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations. The Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the Council's action in a 10 December note [A/45/835].

ACABQ report. In a November report [A/45/798] on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), ACABQ provided nine tables with comparative data on the following: total amounts of approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1982-1991; total net contributions of Member States actually payable under approved regular budgets, including supplementary estimates, 1982-1991; established posts, 1989-1991; regular budget contributions to technical co-operation activities, 1989-1991; extrabudgetary funds administered by the UN system-voluntary contributions, 1988-1989; extrabudgetary expenditures, 1988-1989; working capital funds, 1991; scales of assessment applicable in 1991; and collection of contributions, 1989-1990.

ACABQ also commented on the budgets of the specialized agencies and IAEA and, as part of its co-ordination of administrative and budgetary questions, reported on its study of current and projected arrangements in the UN system for dealing with illicit drug trafficking. ACABQ held an exchange of views with the specialized agencies on the matter.

While meeting with the agencies and IAEA, the Advisory Committee also discussed the JIU report on budgeting in organizations of the UN system (see above). While agreeing that the report would serve as a useful source of reference, ACABQ had some reservations on continued efforts to achieve harmonization in budgetary practices. Significant progress had already been made in that direction, the Advisory Committee noted, and harmonization and standardization should not become ends in themselves. Rather, each agency should focus on achieving an even greater measure of clarity and simplicity in budgetary submissions.

Introducing ACABQ's report in the Fifth Committee, the Advisory Committee Chairman said that one of the special topics discussed with the specialized agencies, the question of future support-cost arrangements, would be the subject of reports to the General Assembly and the Governing Council of UNDP in 1991. Some of the other topics would form the basis of separate reports.

With regard to the JIU report, the Advisory Committee pointed out that it might not be possible to achieve complete harmonization and standardization of budgetary practices in view of the different mandates and programme structures of the various organizations. Keeping that in mind, Member States might perhaps address their efforts to requesting UN organizations to refine the presentation of their budgets, to simplify documents and to make them more transparent. The failure to achieve clarity, simplicity and transparency in budget documentation was not always attributable to a lack of harmonization and standardization.

Subsequent to preparing its report, ACABQ had discussed ways of improving the future presentation of such reports, the Chairman said. The Advisory Committee was planning to replace the current format by one which would take into account the extensive information prepared by ACC on the various organizations' programmes and resources. The Advisory Committee would strive to ensure the timely presentation of statistical information to the Assembly and increase its efforts to report on issues of system-wide concern, following consultation with ACC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

General Assembly decision 45/450

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/885) without vote, 19 December (meeting 50); draft by Germany (A/C.5/45/L.18), based on informal consultations; agenda item 122.

In related action, the General Assembly, by resolution 45/248 B, section VI, of 21 December, reaffirmed that the Fifth Committee was the appropriate Main Committee of the Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters, and reaffirmed ACABQ's role, while expressing concern at the tendency of the Assembly's substantive Committees and other intergovernmental bodies to involve themselves in administrative and budgetary matters. The Secretary-General was invited to provide all intergovernmental bodies with the required information regarding procedures for administrative and budgetary matters.

Chapter II

United Nations staff

In 1990, the Secretary-General pursued efforts to improve United Nations Secretariat staff composition in the areas of nationality and gender. The General Assembly requested him to continue to do so, ensuring broad and equitable geographical distribution of staff and giving paramount consideration to securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. The Assembly, as well as the Economic and Social Council, also requested him to take measures to increase the number of women employed throughout the United Nations system in posts subject to geographical distribution, thereby ensuring an overall participation rate of 30 per cent by the end of 1990, and to the extent possible to increase the number of women in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, so as to achieve an overall participation rate of 35 per cent by 1995.

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), the independent technical body responsible for the regulation and co-ordination of conditions of service for staff of the UN common system, made several recommendations to the Assembly, which approved, with effect from 1 March 1991, a revised scale of gross and net salaries in the Professional and higher categories. Upon consideration of ICSC's report, the Assembly took a number of other decisions affecting conditions of service. The Assembly also approved the recommendations of ICSC and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, and approved increases in salary and pension for the Secretary-General and other high-ranking officials.

The Secretary-General again reported that the number of arrests and detentions of UN officials remained very high, especially in the Middle East, with most of the cases relating to the arrest, detention and abduction of officials of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA). The Assembly called on Member States scrupulously to respect UN officials' privileges and immunities and to refrain from impeding them in the performance of their functions. It called for immediate release of illegally detained staff members and urged adherence to the relevant international instruments.

Considerable progress was made in the administration of justice within the Secretariat under revised disciplinary rules and, following consolidation of the appellate machinery, in eliminating the backlog of appeals. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue with reforms of the administration of justice and to establish by 1991 an effective system for informal settlement of staff grievances, together with a well-functioning disciplinary system.

Conditions of service

International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) held two regular sessions in 1990: its thirty-first from 5 to 23 March in New York, and its thirty-second from 9 July to 3 August in Geneva. In addition, it held a special session—the third since its inception in 1974 [YUN 1974, p. 871]—in New York from 5 to 9 November. The Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions (ACPAQ), established by ICSC in 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 852], held its fifteenth session in Vienna from 2 to 8 May.

The Commission examined issues derived from General Assembly decisions as well as its own statute. In 1990, ICSC focused on comprehensive reviews of the conditions of service as well as of the pensionable remuneration of the Professional and higher categories, and of the conditions of service of the General Service and related categories. The Commission also made specific recommendations with regard to special measures for the recruitment of women in the Professional and higher categories.

The Commission decided to recommend to the General Assembly the basis to be used for the methodology for pensionable remuneration, the actual methodology, the scale of staff assessment, the interim adjustment procedure, the margin range for pensionable remuneration, the procedure for calculating and reporting that margin, the modalities for operating the interim adjustment procedure within the margin range, and the scale of pensionable remuneration to be used after January 1991. It recommended procedures for the treatment of the housing component in the post adjustment system and the payment of rental subsidies. It recommended that the current base salary scale for Professional and higher categories be increased by 8.5 per cent through consolidation of post adjustment classes. It further recommended revised salary scales for the General Service category in London, New York and Rome, as well as for the Field Service category; approved an increase in the disabled children's allowance; recommended adjustments with regard to the mobility and hardship allowance; and decided that the assignment grant should be payable to internationally recruited General Service staff.

At its special session, ICSC continued to review the relationship between the levels of net remuneration of the United Nations and the United States federal civil service as the comparator. Based on its review, the Commission decided to report the revised level of the net remuneration margin of 116.8 for the calendar year to the Assembly and to inform the Assembly that, based on current predictions, the net remuneration margin for 1991 could exceed 120. ICSC reiterated its earlier request that the Assembly reconsider its request to the Commission to manage the margin over a five-year period so that the average margin would be around the mid-point of the range. In view of the developments regarding the margin level, the Commission decided to address the issue of the freeze methodology as a priority at its March 1991 session and to report to the Assembly in 1991.

Also at its special session, ICSC considered the report of ACPAQ on the work of its first special session, which dealt with the methodology applied in the place-to-place surveys carried out at the seven headquarters duty stations and Washington, D.C. The Commission approved the results of the surveys and decided to inform the Assembly that surveys at six duty stations with more than 150 staff members would be completed by the end of 1990 and the balance of five other large duty stations would be completed by early 1991; the total number of staff at those duty stations constituted about 70 per cent of all international staff in the UN common system. By the end of 1991, the surveys completed would cover about 90 per cent of the staff, and every effort would be made to finalize the current round of place-to-place surveys before the end of 1992.

In October and November, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee the views of the staff representatives of the UN Secretariat [A/C.5/45/19] and comments by the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations (FICSA) [A/C.5/45/23] and the Coordinating Committee for Independent Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System (CCISUA) [A/C.5/45/24] on issues considered by ICSC and other staff-related matters. Also in November, the Secretary-General transmitted, for consideration by the Assembly, a statement on the conditions of service adopted by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) at its second regular session in October.

A summary of the Commission's deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its sixteenth annual report [A/45/30 & Add.1], on which the Assembly acted in resolution 45/241. Total financial implications of ICSC's 1990 decisions and recommendations relevant to the UN common system were estimated at about $24 million for 1991.

Review of the functioning of ICSC

In March, ICSC reviewed its functioning, taking decisions in three major areas: working methods; the role of the Commission in the review of its functioning; and the format of its reports. In May, ACC requested [ACC/1990/DEC 1-14 (dec. 1990/8)] its Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) to report to its first regular session in 1991 on the review of the functioning of ICSC.

In the light of ACC's decision, ICSC agreed to a request by the organizations of the UN system to participate in the consideration of the issue through a working group composed of members of the Commission, CCAQ and staff representatives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/241.

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the sixteenth annual report of the International Civil Service Commission and other related reports,

I

1. Reaffirms the central role of the International Civil Service Commission in the regulation and co-ordination of conditions of service, including pensionable remuneration of all graded and ungraded staff, of the United Nations common system;

2. Endorses the efforts of the Commission to maintain the integrity and unity of those conditions of service in order to strengthen the effectiveness of common system activities and to ensure equity of treatment of all staff;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General and to the executive heads of the organizations of the common system to make every effort to absorb in 1991 and thereafter a significant portion of any additional costs arising in respect of the regular budgets of all the organizations as a result of the comprehensive review of the conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories;

II

Recalling section VIII of its resolution 42/221 of 21 December 1987, section II of its resolution 43/226 of 21 December 1988, and section II of its resolution 44/198 of 21 December 1989,

Taking note of the decisions and conclusions of the International Civil Service Commission with respect to the modification of its working methods and the format of its annual reports,

Welcoming the renewed participation of the staff representatives in the work of the Commission,

1. Reaffirm the independence and impartiality of the International Civil Service Commission in the performance of its functions, as envisaged in article 6 of its statute;

2. Expresses its satisfaction with the establishment of a more active dialogue between the Commission and representatives of organizations and of staff, inter alia, through tripartite working groups;

3. Requests the Commission to continue to seek improvements in the format of its report, with a view to enhancing its clarity and making it more comprehensible;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and his colleagues in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in preparing the report on the review of the functioning of the Commission in accordance with section II, paragraph 1, of resolution 44/198, to recommend alternative measures to improve the functioning of the Commission;

III

Noting with concern that it has again not been possible for the International Civil Service Commission to recommend the introduction of a revised remuneration structure for staff in the Professional and higher categories that would result in greater transparency and simplicity in the concepts and administration of the remuneration system,

Noting the 'intention of the Commission to review and evaluate the proposed procedures for the treatment of housing in the light of the experience gained,

1. Urges the International Civil Service Commission to continue its examination of the remuneration structure, in particular concerning the treatment of housing, and to report its findings to the General Assembly, as appropriate, taking into account the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee;

2. Takes note of the recommendations of the Commission with regard to the treatment of housing, as contained in paragraph 95 of its report;

3. Requests the Commission, as a matter of urgency, to continue to take measures to improve the measurement of the housing element in the remuneration package;

4. Also requests the Commission to establish a pilot project designed to simulate the operation of the proposals of the Commission in a limited number of duty stations in the field where valid housing comparisons are difficult or impossible, on the understanding that housing will remain within the post adjustment system in the mean time, and to report on the experience gained with that project to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

5. Further requests the Commission to examine experience gained with the functioning of the current rental subsidy scheme for headquarters duty stations and to review its proposals for a revised rental subsidy scheme, contained in paragraph 95 (b) (iv) and (viii) of its report, taking into account views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee on the need to improve the rental subsidy scheme, without losing sight of the purpose of the scheme of facilitating the resettlement of new staff members and of encouraging mobility within the common system, and to submit its conclusions and recommendations on the subject to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Decides to introduce, with effect from 1 January 1991, as a provisional arrangement, a revision to the current rental subsidy scheme at headquarters locations that provides for reimbursement over a seven-year period at the rate of 80 per cent for the first four years and 60 per cent, 40 per cent and 20 per cent, respectively, for the three years thereafter;

IV

Taking note of the compilation of the overview of common system allowances and those of the comparator civil service, as contained in annex VII to the report of the International Civil Service Commission, and the decisions of the Commission thereon,

1. Urges the International Civil Service Commission to make the utmost effort to complete its review of dependency allowances and its study on expatriate entitlements granted to staff living in their home countries and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

2. Invites the Commission to update the comparative overview of allowances on a regular basis;

V

Taking note of the decisions and recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission with respect to the conditions of service of staff at the Assistant Secretary-General and Under-Secretary-General and equivalent levels, as contained in paragraph 124 (b) of its report,

Requests the International Civil Service Commission to reconsider, in a comprehensive manner, the remuneration of staff of organizations of the United Nations common system at the Assistant Secretary-General and Under-Secretary-General and equivalent levels, taking into account, inter alia, the remuneration levels of equivalent positions in the comparator civil service, representation and other allowances, housing arrangements and pensionable remuneration levels, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

VI

Recalling the importance of ensuring that the governing bodies of the specialized agencies take common positions with regard to matters of concern for the United Nations common system,

Concerned by the continuing practice of some organizations to grant additional steps beyond the salary scale approved by the General Assembly,

Noting that the World Intellectual Property Organization has revised its rules in respect of an additional step in the salary scale of the Professional and higher categories,

1. Urges the governing bodies of the International Labour Organisation and the World Health Organization to take the necessary measures to bring their salary scales into line with those of the other organizations of the common system, as recommended by the International Civil Service Commission;

2. Invites the Commission, with regard to its recommendation on non-pensionable cash awards to reward merit, to continue its review of performance evaluation systems in all organizations of the common system, with a view to ensuring that such systems are objective and transparent and can provide a sound basis for decisions on the proposed cash awards, as well as on within-grade increments and promotions, as indicated in section I.F, paragraph 3, of resolution 44/198;

3. Urges Member States to ensure that their representatives in the meetings of the governing bodies of the organizations of the common system are informed of the positions taken by the Commission and the General Assembly in respect of conditions of employment in the common system;

4. Takes note of the recommendations being made by the Commission to the executive heads, as contained in paragraph 235 of its report;

VII

Recalling that in section I, paragraph 2, of its resolution 40/244 of 18 December 1985, it approved a range of 110 to 120, with a desirable mid-point of 115, for the margin between the net remuneration of officials in the Professional and higher categories of the United Nations in New York and that of officials in comparable positions in the United States federal civil service, on the understanding that the margin would be maintained around the desirable mid-point over a period of time.

Recalling also that in section I.C, paragraph 5, of its resolution 44/198, it requested the International Civil Service Commission to monitor the annual net remuneration margin over the five-year period beginning in the calendar year 1990 with a view to ensuring, to the extent possible, that by the end of that period the average of the successive annual margins is around the desirable mid-point of 115,

Taking note of the recommendations of the Commission, as contained in paragraphs 188 and 189 of its report,

Noting the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee,

Noting also the possibility of a freeze of post adjustment in 1991 for duty stations throughout the United Nations common system, as mentioned in the statement by the Administrative Committee on Coordination,

Requests the International Civil Service Commission to continue to monitor the evolution of the margin and also the impact of the potential changes in the United States federal civil service pay levels, as a result of the implementation of the Federal Employees Pay Comparability Act of 1990, and to submit recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, with a view to avoiding a prolonged freeze of post adjustment within the five-year period from the calendar year 1990;

VIII

Recalling section I.H, paragraph 1, of its resolution 44/198, by which it approved the establishment of a floor net salary scale for staff in the Professional and higher categories, with effect from 1 July 1990, by reference to the corresponding base net salary levels of officials in comparable positions serving at the base city of the comparator civil service,

1. Approves, with effect from 1 March 1991, the revised scale of gross and net salaries for staff in the Professional and higher categories contained in annex I to the present resolution and the consequential amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as reflected in annex II to the present resolution;

2. Reiterates its request to the International Civil Service Commission to report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the operation of the mobility and hardship allowance and, in particular, on the evolution of the mobility and hardship allowance in reference to equivalent allowances granted by the comparator and in relation to the base/floor salary itself;

IX

Taking note of the decisions of the International Civil Service Commission with regard to the practice of some Member States of making supplementary payments or deductions with respect to their nationals and, in particular, the affirmation by the Commission that such arrangements are unnecessary, inappropriate and undesirable, and are inconsistent with the staff regulations of the organizations of the United Nations common system,

Concerned that some Member States have yet to respond to the requests of the Chairman of the Commission for information on this issue and, in this context, that insufficient progress has been made in taking measures to discontinue these practices,

1. Notes the efforts of some Member States to reduce these practices, and encourages other Member States to take similar measures;

2. Invites those Member States that have not yet responded to the requests of the Chairman of the International Civil Service Commission for information, to do so;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the executive heads of the other organizations of the common system to take such measures and make such proposals as they consider appropriate in order to end such practices;

4. Requests the Commission to study the practice of supplementary payments and deductions and to propose measures to resolve this problem;

X

Noting the intention of the International Civil Service Commission to conduct a study of the process for setting education grant levels and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session,

Approves the changes to the maximum admissible levels of expenses incurred under the education grant in five currencies, as contained in paragraph 251 of the report of the International Civil Service Commission;

XI

Recalling its resolutions 41/207 of 11 December 1986, 42/221, 43/226 and 44/198, in which it drew the attention of the organizations of the United Nations common system to the recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission with respect to special measures for the recruitment of women, the need for organizations to submit proposals to the Commission for removing obstacles to equality in promotion prospects, and the importance of providing information on measures taken and results achieved in improving the status of women in both the Professional and higher categories and the General Service and related categories in the secretariats of the organizations,

Concerned at the slow and uneven progress made in these areas,

Invites the International Civil Service Commission, working together with the organizations of the common system and with the staff representatives, to examine specific and practical steps to translate the recommendations and requests recalled in the present section into action and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

XII

Recalling articles 13 and 14 of the statute of the International Civil Service Commission, under which it is empowered to make recommendations on classification and other aspects of personnel policy.

1. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to resume its active consideration of these substantive areas;

2. Also requests the Commission, in elaborating common personnel practices, to study, among other questions, the practice of inter-agency secondment and transfer, the feasibility of creating common staff rosters along occupational lines and the consistent system-wide application of the blaster Standard for classification;

XIII

Recalling article 12 of the statute of the International Civil Service Commission and article III of the Staff Regulations of the United Nations,

Noting the action taken on the recommendations of the Commission in respect of the survey of best prevailing conditions as regards the General Service staff in New York in October 1989,

Concerned that this action could establish an undesirable precedent for similar survey exercises throughout the United Nations common system in the future,

Appreciative of the broader managerial considerations involved,

1. Notes the application of the salary scale of the General Service category in New York that was put into effect as of 1 October 1989, and decides that this scale should not constitute a precedent for future salary surveys;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to adjust the salaries of the General Service category in New York to levels consistent with best prevailing rates of remuneration as determined by the International Civil Service Commission in accordance with its mandate so that there is no disparity by the time of the next survey;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session a report on procedures, whereby the Secretary-General and other executive heads could take measures regarding salary scales of the General Service category at variance with recommendations of the Commission, only after consultations with appropriate intergovernmental bodies and the Commission;

4. Notes that the Commission will review in 1991 the methodology for the conduct of salary surveys of the General Service and related categories at headquarters duty stations, and requests the Commission to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

XIV

Recalling that the work programme of the Joint Inspection Unit includes a study on the question of grade overlap between the Professional and higher categories and other categories of staff in the United Nations common system,

Requests the International Civil Service Commission, in view of the above study, to consider the relativities between the terms and conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories and those in other categories, as well as the broader question of the recruitment and retention of staff.

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Conditions of service and compensation of officials other than Secretariat officials

ICJ members

In November, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/44] on the compensation and conditions of service of members of the International Court of Justice (ICJ). Such a report was required every five years under General Assembly resolution 31/204 [YUN 1976, p. 869].

The Secretary-General said that, in May, the President, Vice-President and two ICJ members, accompanied by the Registrar, had met with him to express the Court's unanimous concern regarding the level of emoluments and conditions of service. The Secretary-General fully supported the view that a change in the level of emoluments was justified and recommended a 5 per cent base salary increase to $106,500 from 1 January 1991, with a post adjustment arrangement for the Netherlands, the seat of the Court, to result in a total annual salary of $145,000. The additional special allowance for the President, unchanged since 1985, would be raised from $15,000 to $20,000, while the Vice-President when acting as President would receive an additional $115 a day, up to a maximum of $11,500 per year, instead of the current $94 a day, $9,400 maximum. With those proposed increases, ICJ judges, elected to serve nine years, would receive a 29.9 per cent increase in pensions, from the current $41,000 annually to $53,250 a year. The financial implications of those proposals, together with others covering such matters as representation allowance, housing/rental subsidy and education grants, were estimated to amount to $1,065,100 for 1991.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in a December report [A/45/7/ADD. 10], recommended that the annual salary for ICJ members be raised to $145,000, effective 1 January 1991, with the next review to take place no later than three years after that date. However, it expressed difficulties with some of the Secretary-General's other proposals and emphasized that emoluments and conditions of service applicable to Court members should be simple and distinct from any other in the UN system, not directly related or compared to those of senior Secretariat officials. It recommended no change in the special allowance for the President or the Vice-President while acting as President. The Advisory Committee recommended against establishment of a representation allowance or housing allowance. There would be no cost-of-living adjustment or post adjustment, though the Committee recommended that a measure of protection against currency fluctuation be provided. It recommended a 22 per cent increase in pensions, allowing for a $50,000 pension after nine years; re-elected judges should receive an additional $250 a month for each further month of service, up to a maximum of $75,000 a year. The financial implications of the ACABQ recommendations would amount to $957,000 for 1991.

General Assembly resolutions 45/250 A-C

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/900) without vote, 14 December (meeting 46); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/45/L.7); agenda item 118.

ICSC members and ACABQ Chairman

In November, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/21], in response to General Assembly resolution 40/256 [YUN 1985, p. 1252], on compensation and conditions of service of full-time members of ICSC and of the Chairman of ACABQ. Noting that staff in the Professional and higher categories of the Secretariat had received a salary increase of approximately 5 per cent effective 1 July 1990, the Secretary-General recommended an upward adjustment for the ICSC Chairman and Vice-Chairman and the Chairman of ACABQ of 5 per cent, to $112,875 annually. An increase in the special allowance for the two Chairmen would bring the total remuneration of each to $120,875. Those increases, plus rental subsidies, would entail additional appropriations of $88,125 in 1991.

ACABQ, in a December report [A/45/7/Add.13], concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal to adjust compensation for the three officials upward by 5 per cent and to increase the special allowance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/249.

Conditions of service and compensation for officials, other than Secretariat officials, serving the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming the principle that the conditions of service for the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the International Civil Service Commission and for the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions shall be separate and distinct from those of officials of the Secretariat,

1. Decides that, with effect from 1 January 1991, the annual compensation of the two full-time members of the International Civil Service Commission and of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions shall be 112,875 United States dollars, with an additional special allowance of 8,000 dollars for the Chairman of the Commission and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee;

2. Approves the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as contained in paragraphs 3 to 5 of its report with regard to the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Commission and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee, and decides that the other conditions of service for these officials shall remain unchanged;

3. Decides that the compensation and other conditions of service of the full-time members of the Commission and of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee shall next be reviewed at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and that, pending such review, the annual compensation shall be adjusted in accordance with the procedure approved in paragraph 3 of its resolution 35/221.

Remuneration of Secretary-General, DIEC Director-General and UNDP Administrator

In a December report [A/45/7/Add.12], ACABQ recommended that the 5 per cent salary increases of July 1990 for staff in the Professional and higher categories also be applied to the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), raising their net annual remuneration from $130,556 to $137,083, with their pensionable remuneration rising to $163,960 from $156,864. No change was recommended in their representation allowance of $10,000.

The Advisory Committee recommended a more fundamental change in the salary and emoluments of the Secretary-General, from a net remuneration of $141,270 to $170,000, with his representation allowance, which had remained at $22,500 since 1963, increasing to $25,000 a year. The total net remuneration of the Secretary-General from 1 January 1991 would therefore be $195,000.

ACABQ also recommended raising the maximum annual retirement allowance for the Secretary-General from $81,650 to $85,000, with necessary revisions for retirement allowances payable to a former Secretary-General and surviving spouses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/251.

Pensions

According to the report [A/46/9] of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to the General Assembly, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund increased during 1990 from 56,222 to 58,263. As of year's end, there were 30,901 periodic benefits in award: 10,397 retirement benefits, 5,347 early retirement benefits, 5,338 deferred retirement benefits, 4,029 widows' and widowers' benefits, 5,154 children's benefits, 585 disability benefits and 51 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 3,757 lump-sum withdrawals and other settlements were paid. The principal of the Fund increased from $7,579,591,411 to $8,478,108,817. Investment income totalled $832,456,181, comprising $553,587,499 in interest and dividends and $278,868,682 in net profits on sales of investments. After deduction of investment management costs of $9,171,166, net investment income was $823,285,015.

In 1990, the Board held three sessions: its thirty-ninth (special) session (Rome, 21-23 February), its fortieth session (London, 20-29 June) and its forty-first (special) session (Geneva, 29-31 August). At those sessions, it dealt with the comprehensive review of the methodology for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, which the General Assembly, by resolution 41/208 [YUN 1986, p. 1071], had requested ICSC to undertake, in full co-operation with the Board and with recommendations to be submitted to the Assembly in 1990; the arrangements for a comprehensive review of the methodology for determining pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories, to be carried out in 1991 by ICSC, in full co-operation with the Board; a review of the operations of the pension adjustment system; and the methodology and actuarial assumptions to be used in the valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1990. The Board also examined the management of the Fund's investments, the financial statements and schedules for the year ended 31 December 1989, and a progress report on the efforts to improve the Fund's administrative and operational capacities. Other matters considered were the interest rates for calculating the lump-sum commutation of benefits; entitlements to survivors' benefits from the Fund for spouses and former spouses; and two recent judgements of the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) that affected the pension entitlements of ILO staff (see below).

ACABQ commented [A/45/699] on the Board's report in October.

Pension Fund investments

The Secretary-General's report [A/C.5/45/7] for the year ended 31 March 1990 on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund was presented to the General Assembly in October. The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world, with investments in 33 currencies and 43 countries; 52 per cent of assets were invested in currencies other than the United States dollar, the Fund's unit of account. The market value of the Fund's assets increased by 12.13 per cent to $8,558 million, from $7,632 million a year earlier, and $947 million above the book value. Total investment return for the year ending 31 March 1990 was 11.56 per cent, which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a real return rate of 6.03 per cent.

Equities constituted 40 per cent of assets, down from 42 per cent the previous year. Bonds accounted for 39 per cent, up from 34 per cent the year before, while real estate-related securities amounted to 12 per cent, the same as in 1989. Efforts continued to increase investments in developing countries in response to Assembly requests. Development-related investments rose by 12.6 per cent over the previous year, from $1,134.4 million to $1,277.2 million as at 30 June 1990. The combined development-related assets represented 16.7 per cent of the Fund's total book value. Investments in development institutions amounted to $1,036.6 million, 14 per cent over the total of $909.4 million the year before; direct investments in specific developing countries increased by 6.9 per cent, from $225 million to $240.6 million. Direct investments and those through regional development institutions increased in Africa by 14.8 per cent, to $117.1 million; in Latin America by 19.9 per cent, to $244.1 million; and in Asia by 27.6 per cent, to $314.3 million.

Given the volatility of the major financial markets and exchange rate fluctuations, the Secretary-General considered that the Fund's investment return of 11.56 per cent for the year ended 31 March 1990, when measured in United States dollars, was satisfactory. The defensive strategy of taking profits where appropriate and the diversification policy of increasing investments in those markets and instruments that performed better contributed to the Fund's satisfactory performance. He regarded the diversification policy and careful selection of investment instruments, including active investigation of opportunities in developing countries, as the best way of preserving the principal and enhancing investment return over the medium and long term. He would continue to discharge his fiduciary responsibilities through sound investment decisions in accordance with the criteria and values embodied in Assembly resolutions.

In an October report [A/45/699], ACABQ noting that total taxes withheld by countries on the Fund's investment income amounted to $11,048,461, said that it shared the Board of Auditors' concern over the matter and supported a divestment of the Fund's holdings in those countries that refused to exempt the Fund's investment transactions from national taxes.

Actuarial balance

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board in 1990 examined and approved the actuarial assumptions proposed by the five-member Committee of Actuaries. The Board noted that actuarial assumptions, which were intended to determine whether current and estimated future assets of the Fund would be sufficient to meet liabilities, were meant to reflect the overall effect of events expected to occur over a very long period of time. The "regular" economic assumptions—a 6.5 per cent annual increase in pensionable remuneration (in addition to static increases), a nominal interest rate (or expected rate of return on investments) of 9 per cent a year, and a 6 per cent cost-of-living increase of benefits—remained unchanged; the real rate of return under those assumptions was 3 per cent (investment rate of return minus price increase). The Board agreed with the Committee that the new demographic assumptions—first used in the 31 December 1988 valuation—relating to rates of withdrawal, death in service, disability, early retirement and retirement appeared satisfactory, and therefore no changes were recommended. However, the rates of male mortality after retirement were to be decreased for the next valuation. The Committee also examined the rate of early retirements, noting that in 1989 the number of such retirements had decreased to about 87 per cent of the annual average number during 1987–1988. The Board agreed with the Committee of Actuaries that the forthcoming valuation should be based on Fund population growth assumptions consistent with those used in the 31 December 1988 valuation.

The Board agreed that a study should be carried out of the actuarial implications of extending the maximum number of years of creditable contributory service, currently set at 35 years. It felt, however, that there was no basis for reconsideration of a reduction of the eligibility period, as the matter had been thoroughly discussed in 1989 as part of the review of measures to restore the Fund's actuarial balance, and at that time it had not proved possible to reach agreement.

ILO judgements

In 1990, the Board considered recent judgements by the Administrative Tribunals within the UN system that appeared to be relevant, with particular attention to two cases decided by the ILO Tribunal dealing with the entitlements of staff members of ILO, under whose Staff Regulation 3.1.1 pensionable remuneration was defined in a manner which, at times, did not coincide with the definition in the Fund's regulations. At the instruction of the ILO Governing Body, the ILO Director-General requested the Board's assistance in implementing the first of the two judgements, which dealt with the legal consequences of ILO making the lower scale of pensionable remuneration for staff in the Professional and higher categories (which went into effect under the Fund's regulations on 1 January 1985) applicable to its own officials in service on 31 December 1984, only from 1 April 1985. The ILO Administrative Tribunal held that such staff were entitled to receive from the organization the difference between their actual pensions and the amounts they would have received had those pensions been based until 31 March 1985 on the higher, pre-1 January 1985 scale of pensionable remuneration.

The Board agreed to recommend to the General Assembly that the assistance sought by ILO be provided, but only under the conditions that the ILO Governing Body completed formal action to replace article 3.1.1 by a cross-reference to the definition of pensionable remuneration under the Fund's regulations, so that the problem of differing definitions would not recur; that ILO agreed to bear the full actuarial and administrative costs involved in recalculating and paying the increased benefits of the approximately 350 participants involved; and that ILO endeavoured to reach lump-sum settlements with as many of the former staff members concerned as possible.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/242.

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/199 of 21 December 1989,

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1990 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, chapter III of the report of the International Civil Service Commission, the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the Fund, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

I

Pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories

Recalling its request in section I, paragraph 6, of its resolution 41/208 of 11 December 1986 to the International Civil Service Commission to undertake, in full co-operation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, a further comprehensive review of the methodology for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, for monitoring the level of the scale and for its adjustment between comprehensive reviews, and to submit its recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session,

Recalling also its request in section II, paragraph 2, of its resolution 44/199 to the Commission, in full co-operation with the Board, to study the desirability of establishing a margin range between the pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories in the United Nations common system and staff in comparable grades in the comparator civil service,

Noting with satisfaction that the close co-operation between the Commission and the Board has resulted in agreement between the two bodies on the substantive issues involved in the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration, as reflected in their respective reports,

Taking note of the views of the Commission and the Board on the desirability of a margin range for pensionable remuneration, as set out in paragraphs 33 to 37 of the report of the Commission and paragraphs 50 to 55 of the report of the Board,

Recalling the criteria established by the General Assembly in section I of its resolution 41/208 for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories.

1. Approves the recommendations made by International Civil Service Commission and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, for monitoring the level of the scale and for its adjustment in between comprehensive reviews, namely:

(a) That income replacement in New York should continue to be used as the basis of the methodology for the determination of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, bearing in mind the relationship between pensionable remuneration amounts for United Nations staff in the Professional and higher categories and for their counterparts in the United States federal civil service;

(b) That the methodology used to establish the 1 April 1987 scale of pensionable remuneration on the occasion of the previous comprehensive review should continue to be used;

(c) That the scale of staff assessment shown in annex III to the report of the Commission should be used for the determination of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories;

(d) That the interim adjustment procedure, as amended by the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, should be continued;

(e) That the procedure outlined in annex IV to the report of the Commission should be used for the calculation and reporting of the annual pensionable remuneration margin;

(f) That the income replacement ratios applicable over the three-year period ending on 31 December of the margin year should be calculated for both the comparator and the United Nations system and reported to the General Assembly;

(g) That, following the annual review of the pensionable remuneration margin and the income replacement ratios, the Commission and the Board should report and make their respective recommendations, as appropriate, to the General Assembly;

2. Amends, with effect from 1 January 1991, article 54 (b) of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Requests the Commission, in full co-operation with the Board, to undertake in 1995 a further comprehensive review of the methodology for the determination of the scale of pensionable remuneration of staff in the Professional and higher categories, for monitoring the level of the scale and for its adjustment between comprehensive reviews, and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its fiftieth session;

II

Pensionable remuneration and pensions of ungraded officials

Taking note of the information provided in paragraphs 59 to 67 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, and in annex IV thereto, on the pensionable remuneration and net remuneration of ungraded officials, including the executive heads of member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, and on the possible amendments to the Regulations of the Fund considered by the Board to cover such officials;

Noting that the International Civil Service Commission, in the light of the advisory opinion it had received from the United Nations Legal Counsel, concluded that it had neither the statutory authority nor the mandate from the General Assembly to address the matter of the pensionable remuneration of ungraded officials;

Believing that a common system approach should be used for the determination of the pensionable remuneration and pensions of all participants in the Fund, including ungraded officials;

1. Expresses concern at the divergent practices that have emerged since 1984 in the common system in respect of the pensionable remuneration of ungraded officials;

2. Requests the International Civil Service Commission, in full co-operation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, to review the methodology for the determination of the pensionable remuneration of ungraded officials, including the executive heads of member organizations, who are participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, and to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, and requests the Board to recommend consequential changes in the Regulations of the Fund;

3. Invites the governing bodies and executive heads of the member organizations of the Fund to co-operate with the Commission and the Board, taking account of the information contained in paragraphs 59 to 67 of the report of the Board, and in annex IV thereto;

III

Pensionable remuneration of staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories

1. Takes note of the intention of the International Civil Service Commission to undertake, in 1991, in full co-operation with the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, a comprehensive review of the pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories and of the arrangements, designed to ensure full co-operation in the conduct of the review, agreed upon by the Commission as set out in paragraphs 55 to 57 of its report and by the Board as set out in paragraphs 72 to 75 of its report;

2. Requests the Commission, in full co-operation with the Board, to submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

IV

Changes in the pension adjustment system

1. Takes note of section III.E of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board on the pension adjustment system, in particular of the modifications of that system considered by the Board, including the proposal of the International Telecommunication Union, for the determination of the initial local currency pension in the light of the expiration on 31 December 1990 of the interim measure approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 42/222 of 21 December 1987;

2. Takes note also of the arrangements made by the Board to continue, in 1991, its efforts to develop a long-term approach to the determination of the initial local currency pension;

3. Approves, with effect from 1 January 1991, the transitional measures recommended by the Board in paragraph 114 of its report, and the consequential change in the pension adjustment system, as set out in annex X to the report of the Board;

4. Also approves, with retroactive effect to 1 July 1990, the change in the pension adjustment system resulting from the introduction of a new salary structure for staff in the Professional and higher categories, as set out in annex X to the report of the Board;

5. Requests the Board to give priority to the development of a long-term approach to the determination of the initial local currency pensions, taking into account the observations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraphs 25 to 27 of its report and the need to safeguard the financial health of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund while, at the same time, responding to the problems caused by the declining value of pensions in certain countries resulting from currency exchange rate fluctuations, and to submit recommendations on appropriate changes in the pension adjustment system to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

6. Invites the governing bodies of the other member organizations of the Fund to refrain from seeking to establish for their staff, whether by provisions in their staff regulations or by other means, additional pension entitlements, as such action would be detrimental to the common system under which all staff should receive equal treatment, irrespective of their employing organization;

V

Assistance to the International Labour Organisation in implementing Judgement No. 990 of its Administrative Tribunal

1. Takes note of the information provided in paragraphs 188 and 189 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board on the International Labour Organisation Administrative Tribunal Judgement No. 990 [In re Cuvillier (No. 3)] and the request by the Director-General of the International Labour Organisation for assistance by the Board in implementing that judgement;

2. Concurs with the views of the Board, as set out in paragraph 190 of its report, that the assistance requested should be provided only if the conditions specified in that paragraph are met;

3. Urges the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation, in considering possible amendments to article 3.1.1. of its Staff Regulations, to ensure that the text it eventually adopts corresponds to the provisions in the staff regulations of the other member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund which define pensionable remuneration by direct reference to its definition in the Regulations of the Fund, so that pensionable remuneration would be defined uniformly for the staff of all the member organizations of the Fund;

VI

Other matters

Takes note of the other matters considered in the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board;

VII

Investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

2. Requests Member States that do not now grant tax exemptions on investments of the Fund to make all possible efforts to permit such exemptions.

Pensionable remuneration

Replace paragraph (b) by the following text:

“(b) In the case of participants in the Professional and higher categories, the pensionable remuneration effective 1 November 1990 shall be that set out in the appendix hereto. Thereafter, the scale of pensionable remuneration for such participants shall be adjusted as from the same date as the net remuneration amounts of officials in the Professional and higher categories in New York are adjusted. Such adjustment shall be by a uniform percentage equal to the variation in the net remuneration amounts, as determined by the International Civil Service Commission.”

Staff management issues

Staff composition

Report of Secretary-General. In October 1990, the Secretary-General presented his annual report [A/45/541] to the General Assembly on the composition of the UN Secretariat-by nationality, sex, grade and type of appointment-for the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990. The total number of UN Secretariat staff as at 30 June was 14,043, of whom 9,565 were paid from the regular budget and 4,478 from extrabudgetary sources. Staff in the Professional category and above numbered 3,784; staff in the General Service and related categories were 9,145; and project personnel totalled 1,114.

On 30 June, there were 11 unrepresented Member States, the same number as the previous year, and 19 underrepresented Member States, as compared with 26 on 1 July 1989. Changes in Member States' representation resulted not only from appointments and separations from service of staff, but also from adjustments of the desirable ranges resulting from a change in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution and from variations in the assessed contributions of individual States or in their population, as well as from changes in the status of some staff members.

During the reporting period, 63 women were appointed to posts subject to geographical distribution, representing 31.2 per cent of appointments, compared with 36 appointments, or 26.86 per cent, during the previous period.

Secondment from government service

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly's Fifth Committee a report [A/C.5/45/12] on secondment to the Secretariat from government service, a practice by which an official is posted away from his or her service to another service for a specified period under defined terms and conditions, on the understanding that, at the end of that period, he or she will return to the service of origin. About 500 Secretariat staff members in the Professional category and above, from 51 nationalities, were currently seconded from their Governments; 430 of them were seconded from seven Member States.

The report said that while secondment, practised on a limited scale, could be beneficial to the international civil service, it could under certain circumstances undermine the Secretary-General's efforts to enhance the independence and efficiency of the Secretariat. On a number of occasions, the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations had reviewed aspects of the practice of secondment. While a Tribunal judgement of May 1990 maintained the institution of secondment, it required a review by the Organization of its secondment procedures. In his report, the Secretary-General sought to identify the basic hypotheses according to which he would propose to devise policies to maximize the Organization's efficiency and effectiveness, while bearing in mind Member States' legitimate interests. In deciding whether to grant career appointments to staff members on secondment, he said he would consider all the interests of the Organization, giving paramount consideration to the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity in recruiting staff members, as well as paying due regard to geographical distribution. The Secretary-General would also be guided by the necessity of ensuring an adequate turnover of personnel in the interest of the Organization's performance in its various fields of activity. He was especially mindful of the major challenges in the coming years and the need for the Secretariat to be able to adapt to diverse and evolving tasks, with consequential personnel requirements. He invited the Assembly to consider and approve the approach indicated in the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/239 A.

Composition of the Secretariat
The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolutions 33/143 of 20 December 1978, 35/210 of 17 December 1980, 41/213 of 19 December 1986, 42/200 A of 21 December 1987, 43/224 A of 21 December 1988 and 44/185 A of 19 December 1989,

Recognizing the importance of maintaining a qualified, independent and geographically balanced international civil service,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat and the relevant sections of the analytical report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 41/213,

Noting with appreciation the progress made in reducing the number of Member States that are unrepresented or underrepresented in the Secretariat,

Recognizing that matters related to the representation of Member States in the Secretariat are dealt with on a country basis,

Noting the positive results of national competitive examinations for posts at the P-1 and P-2 levels and the intention of the Secretary-General to introduce national competitive examinations for posts at the P-3 level in two occupational groups,

Noting also the continued efforts made to fill posts in organizational units with high vacancy rates, particularly in the regional commissions,

Noting further that there are limited opportunities for promotion in some occupational groups in the Secretariat,

Bearing in mind the views on personnel questions expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee during the forty-fifth session,

1. Reiterates its full support for the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization, and underlines its full respect for his prerogatives and responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen the role and emphasize the authority of the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat in accordance with recommendation 41 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts to Review the Efficiency of the Administrative and Financial Functioning of the United Nations;

3. Reaffirms, in accordance with the Charter, that the paramount consideration in the appointment, promotion, granting or reviewing of permanent contracts and career development of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and that this consideration is fully compatible with the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

4. Urges the Secretary-General, whenever making appointments at all levels to posts subject to geographical distribution, to make every effort to recruit nationals of unrepresented and underrepresented Member States, bearing in mind also the need to increase the number of staff recruited from Member States below the mid-point of their desirable ranges;

5. Notes that the existing practice of holding national competitive examinations is a useful tool for recruitment, inter alia, from unrepresented and underrepresented Member States, and requests the Secretary-General to expedite the recruitment of candidates successful in national competitive examinations with a view to filling all posts committed to each examination with the shortest possible delay;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take every available measure to ensure, at the senior and policy-formulating levels of the Secretariat, the equitable representation of Member States, in particular of developing countries and Member States with inadequate representation at those levels, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and to include relevant information in future reports on the composition of the Secretariat;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to preserve the principles of equitable geographical distribution and rotation in the upper echelons of the Secretariat, to ensure that equal opportunity is given to candidates of all Member States when making appointments to all posts in the upper echelons, and not to extend, as a rule, the service of under-secretaries-general and assistant secretaries-general for a period exceeding ten years, in accordance with recommendation 54 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts;

8. Reaffirms that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States, and accordingly requests the Secretary-General, when making appointments to high-level and policy-formulating posts, to give equal opportunity to all Member States through the announcement of such posts to the extent possible, with due regard to the principles of the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity and of equitable geographical distribution, bearing in mind that appointments are to be made at the discretion of the Secretary-General against specific selection criteria in accordance with Article 101 of the Charter;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts aimed at improving the composition of the Secretariat by ensuring a broad and equitable geographical distribution of staff in the Professional and higher categories in all main departments and offices, bearing in mind that the paramount consideration shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider measures in order to ensure, to the extent possible, the representation of the main legal systems in the Secretariat, where appropriate;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General, in order to ensure that equal opportunity is given to internal and external candidates, to take appropriate measures for the timely distribution of vacancy announcements to all Member States;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, with respect to the recruitment, transfer and promotion of staff for placement in the regional commissions, to make every effort to encourage equitable representation of all Member States in the regional commissions, in order to reduce the high vacancy rates;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the report on the composition of the Secretariat to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session statistical tables indicating the nationality of staff serving in posts financed from extrabudgetary resources in the Secretariat;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in future reports on the composition of the Secretariat statistical tables broken down by the current groupings of Member States as well as tables in alphabetical order and to continue to produce tables showing the representation of developing and other countries in posts subject to geographical distribution;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session a report on the implementation of a competitive examination for posts at the P-3 level in two occupational groups;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to pursue efforts towards the establishment of a comprehensive career development system for all categories of staff, bearing in mind the need to secure the highest standards of competence, efficiency and integrity and to promote mobility, and to report on this system to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

17. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue efforts to develop further and refine classification and evaluation systems and promotion procedures as an integral part of the vacancy management system, taking into account, inter alia, concepts of career ladders and linked grades, in consultation with the International Civil Service Commission, as appropriate, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session;

18. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-sixth session, a report on the issues mentioned in paragraph 8 of its resolution 44/185 A;

19. Urges the Secretary-General to strengthen the training and retraining capabilities of the Secretariat at all duty stations, and requests him to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on efforts to implement training programmes in the areas of language training, electronic data processing training, basic supervisory training and the upgrading of the professional knowledge of staff in substantive areas in conformity with recommendation 58 of the Group of High-level Intergovernmental Experts;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the review of staff-management activities and of the cost of staff representation in order to establish a more coherent, transparent and cost-effective framework for staff-management activities and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit, in the context of all future programme budgets, specific information concerning expenditures relating to staff union activities, including staffing costs;

22. Further requests the Secretary-General, within the framework of staff-management consultations, to stress the need to solve outstanding issues through regular channels so as to ensure the functioning of the Organization;

II

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on secondment from government service,

Recalling Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that there are differences inherent in the secondment of staff from government service to the United Nations and secondment between agencies of the United Nations common system,

Noting the uncertain status of many staff members made available to the United Nations by their respective Governments under current secondment procedures vis-à-vis their re-employment rights as government civil servants,

Taking into account the views expressed by Member States during the debate concerning secondment from government service at its forty-fifth session,

1. Affirms that secondment is not in conflict with Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms that secondment of staff from government service to the Secretariat can be beneficial to both the United Nations and Member States;

3. Endorses the basic approach of the Secretary-General regarding secondment as set out in his report, and requests him to review the procedures for future secondment from government service, taking into account the legitimate interests of the Organization and of the government service and the individual concerned, and to submit appropriate amendments to the Staff Regulations to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

4. Meanwhile requests the Secretary-General to deal with individual contracts on the basis of the approach described in paragraph 15 of his report, without prejudice to the rights of individuals as staff members of the Organization;

5. Invites Member States to continue to honour their obligations vis-à-vis their nationals made available to the United Nations under the current secondment procedures until their status is ascertained;

III

1. Requests the Secretary-General to exercise flexibility in the application of the desirable ranges in individual recruitment cases keeping in view all parts of the present resolution;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session in the light of section III, paragraph 2, of General Assembly resolution 42/220 A on alternative options for desirable ranges, which was to have been considered at the forty-fifth session, and therefore resolves to decide this matter on a priority basis at the forty-sixth session of the Assembly;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in the report referred to in paragraph 2 above other possible methodological ways for the distribution of posts subject to geographical distribution among Member States.

Status of women in the Secretariat

Commission on Status of Women. The Commission on the Status of Women, at its 1990 session (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII), considered the issue of improvement of the status of women in the UN Secretariat and adopted a draft resolution which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for action (see below).

ICSC consideration. The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), in 1990 [A/45/30], made a number of recommendations to improve the status of women in the organizations of the UN system. ICSC decided to form a working group on the status of women in both the General Service and Professional categories, to aid the Commission in implementing its recommendations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1990/3.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraphs 306, 315, 356 and 358, in which importance is attached to the appointment of women in the Secretariat at senior decision-making and managerial levels,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 43/101 and 43/103 of 8 December 1988, 43/224 C and 43/226 of 21 December 1988, 44/75 of 8 December 1989 and 44/185 C of 19 December 1989, Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/29 of 24 May 1989 and other related resolutions and decisions and their relevant provisions,

Recalling further the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,

Noting that the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat has resumed its mandated monitoring role,

Noting also the oral report made before the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fourth session by the officer designated as the focal point for women in the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat, and noting with appreciation the measures taken by the Secretary-General to reach the goal of an overall participation rate for women of 30 per cent of the total by 1990, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/258 B, paragraph 3, of 18 December 1985;

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take the measures necessary to increase the number of women employed throughout the United Nations system in posts subject to geographical distribution, and to make a special effort to increase the number of women in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, in order to achieve an overall participation rate of 35 per cent of the total by 1995, without prejudice to the principle of equitable geographical distribution of posts;

2. Requests that Member States continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and its specialized agencies to increase the percentage of women in the Professional category and above, inter alia, by nominating more women candidates, especially for senior policy-level and decision-making posts, by encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and by creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat and the governing bodies of the specialized agencies;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the information in his annual report on progress achieved and future strategies to implement action programmes on the status of women in the Secretariat and the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council is considered by the Assembly under the item concerning the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session the annual report referred to in paragraph 3 above, together with an update of the information contained therein.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/3

24 May 1990 Meeting 13 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1990/68) without vote. 8 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission on the Status of Women (E/1990/25); agenda item 4.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General submitted his sixth report [A/45/548] on the status of women in the UN Secretariat. He noted that during the period from July 1989 to June 1990, the percentage of women in the Secretariat rose by 1.5 per cent, the most significant annual increase since 1986. On 30 June 1990, the percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution stood at 28.3 per cent, compared to 26.9 per cent in June 1989. Overall, there had been an increase of 5.2 per cent over the last 5 years and a 9.6 per cent increase over the last 10 years, the Secretary-General said. The 1990 increase was all the more significant since it followed a recent retrenchment exercise during which approximately 500 posts were cut. As at June 1990, there were 725 women out of 2,561 staff in Secretariat posts subject to geographical distribution, compared to 679 out of 2,523 such staff in June 1989, showing a net gain of 46 women over the 12 months. The 1992-1997 draft medium-term plan proposed that the proportion of women in the Secretariat be increased by 1 per cent a year after the 30 per cent target was reached.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 14 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/125.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 1, 8, 97 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolution 2715(XXV) of 15 December 1970, in which it first addressed the question of the employment of women in the Professional category, and all relevant resolutions that have continued to focus on this area since then.

Recalling further the report of the Secretary-General of 8 November 1985 on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, which was submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 39/245 of 18 December 1984.

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraphs 315, 356 and 358 thereof,

Recalling also the recommendations for action contained in the fourth report, of 30 June 1988, of the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat, and realizing that they have not all been implemented,

Noting that the Steering Committee has resumed its work and will soon be submitting a report with recommendations to the Secretary-General,

Noting also that the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat has implemented some special emergency measures pursuant to fulfilling the mandate found in paragraph 27 of the report of the Secretary-General of 8 November 1985 and subsequent resolutions on this topic,

Noting with appreciation that the report of the Secretary-General of 1 October 1990 on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat was submitted also under the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000",

Noting with concern that, although there has been a slight increase in the percentage of women in the Secretariat, women still constitute less than 30 per cent of the Professional staff and that there has been a decrease in the number of women at the level of Assistant Secretary-General and above in the past twelve months,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/3 of 24 May 1990,

1. Urges the Secretary-General to continue, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, all possible efforts to increase the number of women employed throughout the United Nations system, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, and particularly from the developing countries in view of the small proportion of women from these countries in such posts, in order to achieve an overall participation rate of 30 per cent by the end of 1990 and 35 per cent by 1995, with due regard to equitable geographical distribution, in accordance with the report of the Secretary-General of 8 November 1985, all relevant subsequent resolutions and the proposed medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997;

2. Requests Member States to continue to support the efforts of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions to increase the percentage of women in the Professional category and above by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates, especially for senior policy-level and decision-making posts, by encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and by creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat, the governing bodies of the specialized agencies and the regional commissions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to address the unfulfilled points of the action programme for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, which aims at the creation of a framework for the advancement of women as an integrated component of the United Nations policy-making process, and by so doing to fulfil the goal of the action programme to secure and maintain the attitudinal changes and the management commitment required for the full participation of women in the work of the Secretariat under conditions of equality;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to be submitted to the General Assembly and the Commission on the Status of Women an action programme for the advancement of women in the Secretariat for the period 1991-1995, further to the request made in paragraph 5 of its resolution 44/75 of 8 December 1989, which should also include a comprehensive evaluation and analysis by the Secretariat of the main obstacles to the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat and should propose solutions to overcome those obstacles;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to ensure that adequate machinery, with the authority of enforcement and the responsibility of accountability, and including a senior-level official devoted to implementation of the action programme, is maintained and, to the extent possible, strengthened during the course of the programme for the period 1991-1995;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that his annual report on progress achieved and future strategies to implement action programmes on the status of women in the Secretariat and the relevant mandates adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and the recommendations of the Steering Committee for the Improvement of the Status of Women in the Secretariat are submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-fifth session and to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session for consideration under the item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

General Assembly resolution 45/125

14 December 1990 Meeting 68 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/45/758) without vote, 13 November (meeting 40); 40-nation draft (A/C.3/45/L.19/Rev.2): agenda item 102.

Meeting numbers. GA 45th session: 3rd Committee 18-24, 31, 40; plenary 68.

Speaking after the approval of the draft resolution in the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the United Kingdom voiced the opinion that all specific personnel matters fell within the purview of the Fifth Committee. Similarly, Japan expressed the hope that a further effort would be made to ensure that the text was not at variance with the results of the Fifth Committee's deliberations on the subject.

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/239 C.

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 2715(XXV) of 15 December 1970, in which it first addressed the question of the employment of women in the Professional category, and all relevant resolutions that have continued to focus on this area since then, particularly its resolution 40/258 B of 18 December 1985, in which it welcomed the action programme to improve the status of women in the Secretariat for 1985-1990,

Noting with satisfaction that the question of the improvement of the status of women in the secretariats of the United Nations system continues to be a standing item on the agenda of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Taking account of the relevant part of the report of the International Civil Service Commission,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat and section II.G of the report of the Secretary-General on the composition of the Secretariat,

Noting with concern that, although there has been a slight increase in the percentage of women in the Secretariat, women fill only 7.1 per cent of posts at the D-1 level and above,

Reaffirming that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibility for administrative, budgetary and personnel matters, including, inter alia, the issue of representation of women in the Secretariat,

1. Reiterates its full support for the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization and his prerogatives and responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to increase the number of women in posts subject to geographical distribution, particularly in senior policy-level and decision-making posts, in order to achieve an overall participation rate of 30 per cent by the end of 1990 and, to the extent possible, to 35 per cent by 1995, taking into account the principle that the paramount consideration shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

3. Also urges the Secretary-General, all things being equal and to the extent possible, to accord priority to the participation of women at the D-1 level and above with a view to increasing the participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above to 25 per cent of the total within the overall participation rate of women in 35 per cent of posts subject to geographical distribution by 1995;

4. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General make every effort to increase the representation of women from developing countries, in particular at the D-1 level and above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make every effort to increase the representation of women from those countries with a low representation of women;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/185 C of 19 December 1989, to develop an action programme for the advancement of women in the Secretariat for the period 1991-1995, incorporating as necessary the unfulfilled points of the 1985-1990 action programme and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in the action programme for the advancement of women in the Secretariat for the period 1991-1995: (a) a comprehensive evaluation and analysis by the Secretariat of the main obstacles to the improvement of the status of women in the Organization; (b) proposed measures to overcome the underrepresentation of women from certain Member States; and (c) a detailed programme of activities, including monitoring procedures and a timetable for their completion;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to maintain the existing Secretariat machinery and to consider the adequacy of the existing machinery to implement the action programme, taking account of the work-loads in the relevant offices, and to report thereon when submitting the action programme for the period 1991-1995;

9. Requests Member States to continue to support the efforts of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and related organizations to increase the participation of women in the Professional category and above by, inter alia, nominating more women candidates, especially for senior policy-level and decision-making posts, by encouraging women to apply for vacant posts and by creating national rosters of women candidates to be shared with the Secretariat, specialized agencies and related organizations.

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/898) without vote, 20 December (meeting 51); draft by Chairman (A/C.5/45/L.23), following informal consultations; agenda item 126.

Staff rules and regulations

In July 1990, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/3 & Corr.1] on amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, made to incorporate changes regarding boarding costs in relation to the education grant, the allowance for disabled children, home leave, establishment of additional steps at levels P-2 to P-5, post adjustment and separation payments.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted his annual report [A/C.5/45/18] containing the texts of provisional amendments to the Staff Rules of the United Nations. The changes concerned post adjustment, salary policy in promotions, the education grant, mission salary and allowances, mobility and hardship allowance, home leave, travel and removal expenses, separation-from-service allowances, and the Joint Appeals Board.

By decision 45/452 of 21 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on the amendments to the Staff Rules.

Other staff matters

Privileges and immunities

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/186 [YUN 1989, p. 896], the Secretary-General, in October 1990, presented a report [A/C.5/45/10 & Corr.1], covering the period from 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990, on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations. The report was submitted on behalf of and with the approval of ACC.

Cases of arrest, detention and even abduction of officials continued to be matters of grave concern, the Secretary-General stated. Every case, whether pending from previous years or arising during the reporting period, had been meticulously followed to help ensure a successful resolution. The greatest number of such cases took place in the Middle East, and mainly concerned United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) officials, of whom 160 were arrested or detained during the reporting period. Of those, 100 were released without charge or trial, while eight were charged, tried and sentenced to imprisonment and one was deported. In no case did UNRWA receive adequate or timely information about the reasons for the arrest and detention, despite requests to the authorities. Several UNRWA members were held in prisons in Israel, having been transferred there from the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The Secretary-General regretted having to report lack of progress and even negative developments in some arrest and detention cases, some of which occurred outside the Middle East. He noted, on the other hand, a marked decrease in the number of staff detained by militia groups in Lebanon, from 11 in the last reporting period to three in the current one. One attempted abduction, however, led to the death of a staff member of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in Lebanon, when Jena Hlass, while driving home from her office, was dragged from her car and shot by an unidentified man. The act was condemned by the Lebanese Prime Minister.

The Secretary-General also reported on other matters involving the status, privileges and immunities of officials, such as restrictions on official and private travel or movement and taxation or other forms of fiscal impositions. He summarized measures and proposals to further the safety and security of officials. In annexes to his report, he provided a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing, as well as detailed information submitted by individual organizations and UN subsidiary organs and offices.

Concluding, the Secretary-General regretted that once again he was obliged to report that the number of cases involving arrest and detention remained very high and that there was little indication that the grave situation might begin to improve. At the same time, he hoped that measures would be found to reverse the trend and strongly believed that mutual efforts of Member States and the international organizations concerned would produce positive results.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/240.

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling that, under Article 100 of the Charter of the United Nations, each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities,

Also recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter, all officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Member States such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization,

Further recalling the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Development Programme 'Standard Basic Assistance Agreements,

Stressing that respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies is becoming even more imperative owing to the growing number of assignments entrusted to the organizations of the United Nations system by the member States,

Recalling its resolution 76(I) of 7 December 1946, in which it approved the granting of the privileges and immunities referred to in articles V and VII of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations to all members of the staff of the United Nations, with the exception of those who are recruited locally and are assigned to hourly rates,

Also recalling its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988, to which is annexed the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, including the principle that all persons under arrest or detention shall be provided whenever necessary with medical care and treatment,

Reiterating the obligation of all officials of the Organization in the conduct of their duties to observe fully both the laws and regulations of Member States and their duties and responsibilities to the Organization,

Affirming that persistent obstruction of the exercise of the duties of United Nations officials constitutes an obstacle to the implementation of the mission entrusted by the member States to the organizations of the United Nations system and may affect programme delivery,

Mindful of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General to safeguard the functional immunity of all United Nations officials,

Mindful also of the importance in this respect of the provision by Member States of adequate and immediate information concerning the arrest and detention of staff members and, more particularly, their granting of access to them,

Bearing in mind the considerations of the Secretary-General to guarantee appropriate standards of justice and due process to United Nations officials,

Reaffirming its previous resolutions on this subject,

1. Takes note with grave concern of the report of the Secretary-General, submitted on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and of the developments indicated therein, in particular the significant number of new cases of arrest and detention;

2. Deplores the increase in the number of cases where the functioning, safety and well-being of officials have been placed in jeopardy;

3. Also deplores the disregard for Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations displayed by some Member States;

4. Calls upon all Member States scrupulously to respect the privileges and immunities enjoyed by officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations and to refrain from any acts that would impede such officials in the performance of their functions, thereby seriously affecting the proper functioning of the organizations;

5. Urges Member States and others responsible for the illegal detention of United Nations staff members to release them immediately;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to use all such means as are available to him to bring about an expeditious solution of the cases still pending, which were referred to in his report;

7. Urges the Secretary-General to give priority to the prompt follow-up of cases of arrest, detention and other possible matters relating to the security and proper functioning of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations;

8. Calls upon those Member States holding under arrest or detention officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to enable the Secretary-General or the executive head of the organization concerned to exercise fully the right of functional protection inherent in the relevant multilateral conventions and bilateral agreements, particularly with respect to immediate access to detained staff members;

9. Calls upon all Member States to take the necessary measures in order to promote knowledge of and compliance with the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, including the principle that all persons under arrest or detention shall be provided whenever necessary with medical care and treatment;

10. Affirms that, in providing medical assistance, the use of independent medical teams should be considered;

11. Calls upon the staff of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to comply fully with the provisions of Article 100 of the Charter and with the obligations resulting from the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, in particular regulation 1.8, and from the equivalent provisions governing the staff of the other agencies;

12. Takes note with concern of the restrictions on duty travel of officials as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General;

13. Also takes note with concern of the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General related to taxation on salaries and emoluments, and requests the Member States concerned and the Secretary-General to agree urgently on the appropriate action to be taken;

14. Calls upon all Member States otherwise impeding officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations in the proper discharge of their duties to review the cases and to co-ordinate their efforts with the Secretary-General or the executive head of the organization concerned to resolve each case with all due speed;

15. Calls upon the Secretary-General, as chief administrative officer of the United Nations, to continue personally to act as the focal point in promoting and ensuring the observance of the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations by using all such means as are available to him;

16. Urges all Member States that have not yet become parties to the existing international legal instruments covering the question of privileges and immunities of officials, in particular to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, to do so promptly;

17. Welcomes the advisory opinion of 15 December 1989 of the International Court of Justice on the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations that this section is applicable to persons other than United Nations officials to whom a mission has been entrusted by the Organization and who are therefore entitled to enjoy the privileges and immunities provided for in that section with a view to the independent exercise of their function;

18. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to review and appraise the measures already taken to enhance the proper functioning, safety and protection of international civil servants;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General, in compiling the information for incorporation into the reports on privileges and immunities of officials submitted on behalf of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to include, to the extent possible, the views of the Member States.

After-service health insurance

In November, the Secretary-General presented a report [A/C.5/45/33], in response to General Assembly resolution 44/201 B, section XIV [YUN 1989, p. 901], on the after-service health insurance programme (ASHI), and in particular on the possibility of means by which extrabudgetary activities could contribute towards the costs of the programme. The Secretary-General indicated that he would continue to explore ways to refine further the methodology for apportioning the cost of ASHI, and further information was to be provided to ACABQ in 1991. The Advisory Committee, in a December report [A/45/7/Add.9], said it trusted that a simple but effective methodology would be developed to ensure that extrabudgetary activities contributed a fair proportion to the cost of ASHI. By resolution 45/248 A, section VI, the Assembly took note of both reports.

Travel-related matters

Responding to General Assembly decision 44/442 [YUN 1989, p. 902], requesting annual reports on standards of accommodation for air travel, and to Assembly decision 40/445 [YUN 1985, p. 1244], calling for reporting on all UN expenditures for first-class air travel, the Secretary-General, in November 1990, submitted a report for the period 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990 [A/C.5/45/28] detailing those costs. First-class air travel for one representative of each least developed country attending the Assembly's regular and special sessions amounted to $265,857 for 66 journeys during that period. Costs for 109 cases of first-class or business-class travel authorized by the Secretary-General for such reasons as medical condition or advanced age, exigencies of service, non-availability of standard accommodation, as well as for eminent persons, arduous journeys and personal aides or security personnel of the Secretary-General, amounted to $95,956.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/248 A, section XIII.

Standards of accommodation for air travel
[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/214 of 21 December 1987;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to review the existing arrangements in regard to payment of subsistence allowance and standards of air travel by representatives of Member States in their official capacity to attend meetings of various intergovernmental bodies and for other United Nations official work and to submit concrete proposals to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, with a view to ensuring consistency of travel arrangements within the United Nations;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to examine how the discounts and other incentives offered by various airlines could be utilized to provide savings to the United Nations and upgraded travel arrangements to representatives of Member States, experts attending meetings of subsidiary bodies and the Secretariat staff without incurring any additional expenditure and to include his recommendations in this regard in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General, in the interim, to continue to exercise his discretion in respect of business class travel for United Nations official work, taking into account the status of the traveller and in the light of the views expressed by Member States at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session information on the meetings attended by eminent persons for whom exceptions have been made for first class travel;

7. Decides to review at its forty-sixth session the arrangements regarding the payment of subsistence allowance and accommodation for air travel on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

Administration of justice

In October, responding to General Assembly resolution 44/185 B [YUN 1989, p. 903], the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/11] on the operation of the administration of justice within the UN Secretariat under a new system of revised disciplinary rules effective 1 January 1990, and following the streamlining and consolidation of the appellate machinery and its procedures.

The main elements of the reform programme begun in 1987 had been put in place, the Secretary-General said, leading to a major enhancement in the efficiency and effectiveness of the system of administration of justice. Efforts were now directed principally at ensuring continuation of a smooth operation of the system's formal mechanisms. In the area of informal procedures for settling grievances, a new approach was being explored with a view to increasing its effectiveness. According to the Secretary-General's report, there had been an increase in the number of appeals, partly due to the reduction of posts, which limited career opportunities for staff and led to a number of appeals relating to placement selection against higher-level posts. Between 1 January and 30 September 1990, the number of requests for review of administrative decisions, as a first step in the appeals process, rose substantially to 244, as compared to an annual average of 155 over the previous four years. Only one third of the requests for review had resulted in appeals, as it was the Secretary-General's policy to seek to resolve as many cases as possible at the preliminary stages. The number of cases pending before the Headquarters Joint Appeals Board (JAB) remained near its record low of about 30 cases, and all appeals from previous years, except four from 1989, had been disposed of. On average, an appeal was completed within six months, compared with over two years prior to implementation of the justice reform programme. The appeals process of the JABS at Vienna and Nairobi, Kenya, had been further improved, and for the first time no cases were pending there. In 1990, however, there were considerable numbers of new appeals filed with the Geneva JAB, the majority relating to the current retrenchment at the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). Measures were being taken to streamline Geneva JAB procedures in a manner similar to Headquarters.

The Secretary-General's policy of accepting unanimous JAB recommendations, except where a major question of law or principle was involved, continued to be applied. During the first nine months of 1990, the Secretary-General took decisions, on average within a week, on 59 reports of the Boards; he accepted the JAB recommendations in full in 48 cases, in part in 6 cases, and rejected the recommendations in 5 cases. It was expected that final decisions on appeals would increase substantially, from 55 in 1989 to 75 in 1990. Since only a few cases had arisen since the revised set of disciplinary rules had been promulgated, it was too early to assess their impact and to report on the operation of the new disciplinary system. Internal rules of procedure for Joint Disciplinary Committees (JDCs) were being drafted.

The Secretary-General reported that the Panel of Counsel had continued, on a volunteer basis, to assist staff by providing advice with regard to grievances and disputes, as well as by representing them before JAB, JDC and the Administrative Tribunal. During the first nine months of 1990, the Co-ordinator of the Headquarters Panel received 169 cases, more than half of which were settled amicably, thus avoiding formal litigation. Since the establishment in 1976 of panels to investigate allegations of discriminatory treatment, about 100 cases a year were handled under that informal procedure, which was designed to supplement the formal recourse procedures of JAB. Departmental conciliation panels were now being set up on an experimental basis, with the aim of resolving problems as they arose and without their becoming formalized. If that decentralized approach proved successful, such panels could eventually replace the Secretariat bodies on discrimination and other grievances, the Secretary-General believed.

In November, ACABQ reported [A/45/806] on its consideration of the Secretary-General's report, recognizing the considerable progress achieved in the administration of justice, particularly the elimination of the backlog of appeals. However, it noted that the number of requests for review of administrative decisions, as the first step in the appeals process, had more than doubled, from an annual average of 155 over the previous four years to 314 in the first 10 months of 1990. It also noted that in 1989-1990, the Administration had paid a total of $592,000 to staff in implementing the Secretary-General's final decisions on appeals and on Administrative Tribunal judgements, excluding cases of staff of UNDP and UNICEF, and other cases where amounts were still undetermined. The Advisory Committee noted that the increasing numbers of new appeals and compensation awarded by the Tribunal not only were related to more limited career opportunities due to retrenchment, but could also be seen as reflecting increasing problems of staff administration and management, including recently implemented personnel policies, such as those dealing with vacancy management, promotion and secondment.

ACABQ recommended requesting the Secretary-General to continue with the reforms in the administration of justice, in accordance with Assembly resolution 44/185 B. It called, in particular, on the Secretary-General to establish by 1991 an effective system for informal settlements of staff grievances, and a well-functioning disciplinary system, and to report thereon to the Assembly. At the same time, it underlined the need for caution in abolishing the discrimination and grievance panels.

The seven-member Administrative Tribunal, in its annual note transmitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General [A/INF/45/7], reported that it had held two panel sessions in 1990 (Geneva, 23 April-25 May; New York, 8 October-19 November) and had rendered judgements in 32 cases. It reiterated even more strongly than in previous years its concern at the mounting volume of litigation. In view of the number of cases before it, the Tribunal decided to hold three sessions in 1991, in February, May, and during the last quarter of the year.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/239 B.

1. Recognizes the considerable progress achieved in the area of the administration of justice in the Secretariat, in particular the efficient functioning of the Headquarters Joint Appeals Board and the promulgation of a fully revised set of disciplinary rules;

Chapter III

Other administrative and management questions

During 1990, the Committee on Conferences again examined ways in which conference resources within the United Nations system could be used more effectively. It considered the possibility of central planning and co-ordination of all organizational aspects of conference servicing; compliance by General Assembly subsidiary bodies with the 32-page limit for documents; rules and regulations relating to documentation control and limitation; the Organization's printing requirements; publications policies; application of new technology; its role in reviewing the restructuring of the Department of Conference Services, within the general restructuring of the Organization; the 1992-1997 medium-term plan in relation to conference and library services; and the revised 1991 calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations. In December, the Assembly approved the 1991 calendar as submitted by the Committee.

Action was taken by the Assembly on a number of questions related to the 1990-1991 programme budget, including the implementation of technological innovations; budget estimates for the International Computing Centre in Geneva; administrative and unified conference services at the United Nations offices in Vienna; the integrated management information system project; the construction of additional conference facilities in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and Bangkok, Thailand; and the proposed optical disk storage and retrieval system.

Conferences and meetings

In 1990, the Committee on Conferences [A/45/32 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1] considered requests for changes or additions to the approved calendar of conferences for 1990 and examined the draft revised calendar for 1991.

It discussed a number of issues related to the calendar, including improved utilization of conference-servicing resources, improved organization of work and effective use of conference resources. It dealt with the need to control and limit documentation and reviewed UN publications policy, the application of new technology to conference servicing and the Committee's role in the context of the review of the Department of Conference Services. It considered requests from subsidiary bodies to meet during the annual session of the General Assembly, the 1992-1997 medium-term plan and its organization of work.

By resolution 44/196 A [YUN 1989, p. 905], the General Assembly had taken note of the Committee's intention to play a role in the review of the Department of Conference Services, on the understanding that the role to be determined by the Committee in 1990 would be in accordance with resolution 43/222 B [YUN 1988, p. 895]. In August, the Committee requested the Department of Conference Services, in co-operation with the Bureau of the Committee, to consider the issues that might require review in the Department and to report to the Committee at its substantive session in 1991.

The Committee held an organizational session from 9 to 12 February and its substantive session from 20 to 29 August.

Calendar of meetings

Calendar for 1990

At its organizational session in February, the Committee on Conferences agreed that proposed changes to the calendar for 1990 that did not have programme budget implications could be dealt with by the Secretariat in consultation with the Bureau of the Committee. Several such changes were made in 1990.

The Committee approved an additional session of the Group of Governmental Experts to Carry out a Comprehensive Update of the Study on Nuclear Weapons (New York, 26 June-6 July), on the understanding that there were no financial implications for the programme budget. It granted the request of the United Nations Council for Namibia to convene a special plenary meeting in Windhoek from 9 to 11 April and encouraged the exploration of possibilities for defraying part of the expenses in kind; and recommended that the General Assembly authorize the provision of records to enable the Council to submit its final report to the Assembly. The Committee approved, on an exceptional basis, the rescheduling of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Island Developing Countries and Donor Countries and Organizations to 25-29 June in New York, instead of 2-6 July in Geneva, on the understanding that that would not be a precedent for decisions on the venue of future meetings.

In August, the Committee recommended that the Assembly authorize the following bodies to meet in New York during its forty-fifth session, subject to the availability of facilities: Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Special Committee against Apartheid; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East; Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa; Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa; Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole for the Preparation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade; Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC); International Civil Service Commission (ICSC).

The Committee also recommended that the Assembly authorize CPC to hold its resumed session from 17 to 21 September; a separate request was to be made if it needed to meet beyond 21 September. The Committee decided not to grant CPC permanent authorization to meet at Headquarters during regular sessions of the Assembly and encouraged it to schedule its resumed sessions during the first week of September.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly authorize ICSC to hold a special session in New York from 5 to 9 November, subject to the availability of facilities and on the understanding that a statement of programme budget implications would be submitted to the Assembly.

Draft revised calendar for 1991

During its substantive session in August, the Committee on Conferences considered a draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1991. It also considered information from the Human Rights Committee and the Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space on the venue of their future sessions.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the 1991 draft revised calendar and authorize the Committee to make any necessary adjustments arising from actions taken by the Assembly.

The Committee appealed to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to reconsider the dates of its January 1991 session, and agreed that if the Assembly decided to dissolve the United Nations Council for Namibia (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), the item would be deleted from the calendar.

The Committee agreed to review the matter of the venue and duration of the Legal Subcommittee in 1991, in the context of the draft calendar for 1992-1993, and referred the issue of the applicability of Assembly resolution 40/243 [YUN 1985, p. 1256] relating to venues for meetings of certain treaty bodies to the Assembly.

Conference and meeting services

The Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/196 A [YUN 1989, p. 905], submitted a June report on the improved utilization of conference-servicing resources [A/AC.172/88/Add.8]. The report provided statistics showing the planned and actual utilization of conference resources allocated to a limited core sample of bodies that had been meeting for several years in New York, Geneva and Vienna. The report also presented two methodologies for analysing those figures: a new method which treated all the bodies in the sample as a single organ, deriving the utilization factor from the total number of meetings planned, held and cancelled and total time lost in late starting and early ending; and the existing method, used as a cross-check, which produced an average utilization factor by totalling up the utilization factors of each body under review at each session held during a given year, and divided that total by the number of sessions held. Based on those methods, the utilization factor for 1989 was 72 and 74 per cent, respectively.

The Secretary-General also provided information on existing conference resources, services and facilities [A/AC.172/137] in New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi, Kenya, and at the offices of the regional commissions. Also before the Committee was a report of the Secretary-General [A/AC.172/96/Add.7] containing letters sent by the Committee Chairman to the Chairmen of bodies failing to make adequate use of conference resources and the replies received.

The Committee on Conferences agreed, on an experimental basis, to put into use the newly proposed methodology for determining the utilization factor to run parallel with the existing methodology for three years, at the end of which period it would decide which one was the most appropriate. The Committee Chairman would continue to request the presiding officers of those bodies utilizing less than the 75 per cent bench-mark of conference resources allocated to them to take measures to utilize the resources to the fullest possible extent.

The Committee noted a lack of information on conference servicing in duty stations other than New York, Geneva and Vienna and stressed the need to expand future reports to all conference centres, including the regional commissions. It requested the Secretariat to prepare a report on the possibility of central planning and co-ordination of all organizational aspects of conference servicing for consideration in 1991, including information on existing co-operation between the Committee on Conferences and the Economic and Social Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/238 A.

Translation and interpretation services for ECA

Responding to section VIII of General Assembly resolution 44/201 B [YUN 1989, p. 255], the Secretary-General in October [A/C.5/45/26] reviewed the translation and interpretation services at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA). He reported that the major obstacle to delivering timely and quality translation services at ECA was the high vacancy rate, which stood at 47 per cent of total established Professional posts in 1988 and 1989 and 41 per cent as at 1 September in 1990. However, it would be premature to consider re-establishing a translator training programme until the final results of the competitive recruitment examinations were known. In the mean time, suc-successful candidates from those examinations would be recruited on a priority basis, and revisers from New York, Geneva and other duty stations would be assigned to Addis Ababa to train them during their probationary period. In addition, the policy of rotating translators from those duty stations to ECA for two years or more would continue. If those measures proved unsuccessful, the issue of re-establishing the language training programme at ECA would be reviewed again and a proposal submitted to the Assembly in the context of the proposed programme budget.

Concerning interpretation services, consideration had been given to establishing a core interpretation unit at the ECA secretariat. However, given the pattern of distribution of meetings requiring those services, such an arrangement would be uneconomical. ECA should continue to rely on freelance interpretation services for the time being. The review had also revealed a number of shortcomings in the functioning of ECA conference services as a whole. There would be further review and if necessary remedies would be proposed in the context of the 1992-1993 programme budget.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/248 B, section II, of 21 December, requested the Secretary-General to revive the training programme for translators/precis-writers in all official languages of ECA and to report to the Assembly at its forty-sixth (1991) session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), on the measures taken.

Unified conference and interpretation services in Vienna

The Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/C.5/45/30] on a unified conference service for the UN organizations at the Vienna International Centre, which had been endorsed by the General Assembly in section VIII of resolution 44/201 A [YUN 1989, p. 908]. He reported that consultations on the subject were held with the United Nations Office at Vienna, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) during April and May, but no conclusive agreements were reached. The Joint Advisory Committee for Conference Services at Vienna met in May and was expected to present its findings to the Directors-General of the UN Office at Vienna, UNIDO and IAEA in 1991.

The Secretary-General assessed the current arrangements for conference servicing between UNIDO and the United Nations and said that the two organizations would be prepared to administer conference services as a common service. He remained convinced that a single conference-servicing facility at the Vienna International Centre would represent the ideal solution from the point of view of cost efficiency, and the United Nations was best suited to assume the responsibility of providing such services to all organizations at the Centre. Short of that, a single unified service provided by the United Nations for itself and UNIDO would provide most of the benefits anticipated from fully unified services. If the Assembly agreed with the proposals, it might wish to invite UNIDO and IAEA to consider establishing a unified conference service as from the 1992-1993 biennium, and to request the Secretary-General to formulate specific proposals in that regard, which would be reviewed by ACABQ. The Secretary-General should submit to the Assembly in 1991 revised estimates for the 1992-1993 proposed programme budget.

ACABQ concurred [A/45/7/Add.6] with the Secretary-General's proposals and requested him to continue consultations with UNIDO and IAEA. It requested that his proposals for establishing unified conference services should, inter alia, identify the United Nations as the administering body and provide details on the apportionment of costs. Should no agreement be reached by the Joint Advisory Committee for Conference Services at Vienna, the Secretary-General should submit proposals for a separate UN service.

In a 26 November letter to the Secretary-General [A/C.5/45/62], the Director-General of UNIDO stated that the Secretary-General's report did not provide estimates of the posts and related costs involved in the suggested unification of conference services. Based on a preliminary calculation, it would involve 3 Professional and 12 General Service posts to establish a minimal personnel and finance infrastructure estimated at $1.8 million per biennium; 15 Professional and 50 General Service posts resulting from the conversion of temporary assistance used on a regular basis; and 54 Professional and 80 General Service posts to absorb personnel currently financed by UNIDO. The move would result in substantial additional charges in the UN budget. UNIDO could hardly agree to share increased costs for functions effectively performed under the current arrangements at much less expense.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/248 A, section VIII, of 21 December, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and the related comments of UNIDO, and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of ACABQ (for information on administrative and common services in Vienna, see below, under "UN premises").

Application of new technologies

The Committee on Conferences in August 1990 discussed the application of computer technology to the management of the interpretation service and the meetings programme. The Committee noted that the Secretariat had limited its report [A/AC.172/123] to activities in New York and Geneva, with little or no information on other centres. The Secretariat informed the Committee that it had been guided by the administrative and financial areas of responsibility for the Department of Conference Services as covered by section 29 of the programme budget, namely, New York, Geneva and Vienna. Therefore, the immediate plans and the resources available to achieve that purpose stipulated concentration on those three duty stations. The Secretariat provided clarification on various aspects of the technological innovations programme, including the participation of author departments in the Document Records, Information and Tracking System in efforts to reduce response time to changes in the programme; electronic mail systems; word processing; electronic typesetting; and the optical disk document storage and retrieval system (see below, under "Information systems and computers").

The Committee requested the Secretariat to prepare for consideration in 1991 a report that would include completed and updated information on present and planned applications of new technologies for all UN conference centres, including at the regional commissions, and to develop further its system of interdepartmental co-operation, making it more extensive and complete.

Work-load standards for conference-servicing staff

The Secretary-General submitted in March a report [A/C.5/45/1] on work-load standards for various categories of conference-servicing staff, including clerical and typing staff, and work-load statistics for the various conference services in the 1986-1987 and 1988-1999 bienniums. The report showed that the introduction of word processing had significantly increased the productivity of typists. The Secretary-General proposed a net increase of 25 per cent to the existing standard for typists, and that a new standard be established for translators/self-revisers at: a level of 1,400 words per work-day (or 4.25 standard final pages). Concerning reproduction, while no work-load standard had been applied at Headquarters, a standard of 15,000-page impressions per work-day had been used to estimate temporary assistance requirements in Geneva. He proposed a standard of 15,000-page impressions for Geneva and 30,000 for New York, taking into account the variables inherent in the printing process. Those were considered experimental, to be reviewed and revised when the full impact of staff reductions, restructuring and further technological innovations had been evaluated. No change in work-load standards was proposed for interpretation, précis-writing or verbatim reporting.

ACABQ recommended [A/45/7/Add.1] that formal technical standards be established and enforced for the transmission of documents from author departments to the Department of Conference Services. Efforts should be made to upgrade the drafting and editorial abilities of the Secretariat as a whole, through, inter alia, the expansion of efforts by the Training Service. It also recommended that, with regard to reproduction, the standard of 20,000-page impressions should serve as a starting point in Geneva, rather than the 15,000 proposed by the Secretary-General. ACABQ, noting that there were no unified work-load standards for conference-servicing staff in the UN system, recommended that the Secretariat explore the possibilities of introducing uniform standards wherever possible in those areas that were not currently covered.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/248 A, section II, of 21 December, requested the Secretary-General to pursue through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination the elaboration of unified work-load standards for conference-servicing staff within the UN common system and to report thereon, through ACABQ, to the General Assembly at its forty-seventh (1992) session.

Documents and publications

Documents limitation

In May 1990, the Secretary-General published an updated document [A/INF/45/1] setting forth the policies laid down by the General Assembly regarding the control and limitation of documentation, as had been requested by the Assembly in resolution 2538(XXIV) [YUN 1969, p. 830]. The document, which enumerated policy decisions adopted by the Assembly over the years, most recently in 1989, was distributed to all Member States. Annexed to the document were a list of meeting record entitlements and revised guidelines for the format and contents of reports of subsidiary organs of the Assembly, as well as guidelines for the control and limitation of documentation for UN special conferences.

The Secretary-General also submitted a June report [A/AC.172/139] regarding compliance by the Assembly's subsidiary organs with the 32-page document limit for their reports, set by Assembly resolution 36/117 A [YUN 1981, p. 1364]. He reported that during 1981 to 1989, only 22 subsidiary bodies had submitted reports within the 32-page limit. Only two of the four subsidiary bodies entitled to verbatim records and only 3 of the 12 entitled to summary records had submitted one or more reports within the 32-page limit since 1981.

The Secretary-General concluded that, while it was clear that Member States continued to attach importance to measures to control and limit the volume of documentation, experience since 1982 had led to the conclusion that the length of reports depended on the nature of the information they were required to convey.

In a July note [A/AC.172/140] on the provision of summary records to subsidiary organs of the Assembly, the Secretariat presented information on the number of meetings covered by precis-writers during 1975-1979 and 1985-1989 in New York, Geneva and Vienna, including meetings of UNIDO prior to 1986. During those periods, meetings in New York and Geneva had decreased from 798 and 527 to 456 and 350, respectively. The Secretariat stated that the Assembly's decision to limit the entitlement to summary records had produced a significant decrease in the work-load, thus freeing conference-servicing resources for other priority activities. It recommended that the Committee on Conferences propose that the Assembly adopt, on a permanent basis, subject to periodic monitoring by the Committee, the experimental arrangements by which no subsidiary organ of the Assembly should be entitled to summary records, except the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, the International Law Commission, the Legal Sub-Committee of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law and the United Nations Council for Namibia.

Also before the Committee on Conferences was a report on review of the implementation of all rules and recommendations relating to the control and limitation of documentation [A/AC.172/141]. According to the report, directives for control and limitation were prepared in response to Assembly resolutions and Secretariat experience, which were then approved by the Publications Board and issued as addenda to the 1969 administrative instruction on the regulations for the control and limitation of documentation. The directives also covered aspects of the publications policy of the Organization. Those specifically concerned with the control and limitation of documentation included: the initiation, approval and execution of the UN publications programme; documentation work-load estimates; requests for document services; criteria for the selection of material to be issued as UN publications; newsletters; the maximum length of documents submitted in the name of the Secretary-General or of the Secretariat; and the timetable for the planning and submission of documents for sessions of UN organs. Compliance was regularly monitored by the Publications Board and its subsidiary bodies and there was a continuous exchange of views between author departments and the Board concerning measures to improve the quality and timely submission of documentation and to comply with directives of the Assembly concerning its control and limitation.

The Secretariat also reported on difficulties in complying with the six-week rule for the submission of documentation. Problems accounting for late submission included the timing of sessions of intergovernmental bodies, the need to take account of the latest relevant political developments, bottle-necks caused by submission of many documents at the same time, the necessity of receiving responses from Member States or UN system organizations, and short deadlines for complex documents requiring extensive research and analysis. In addition, initial estimates of the volume and timing of the flow of pre-session documentation were not reliable for planning, and the situation was further complicated by the need to give priority to the processing of in-session documentation. However, efforts continued to improve the timely processing and distribution of documents, including greater use of word processing; consultations between author departments, editors and the Documents Control Section at the earliest stage of preparation; identification of documents for contractual translation; introduction of electronic typesetting; and improved control and scheduling of the processing of documents through the Document Records, Information and Tracking System (DRITS).

Pursuant to Assembly resolution 43/222 C [YUN 1988, p. 899], the Secretariat submitted a report on the number of communications from Member States circulated as UN documents [A/AC.172/142/Rev. 1]. During the first six months of 1990, a total of 1,327 pages were circulated. At the rate of $650 a page, the estimated notional cost of processing and circulating them was $862,550. Some 83 Member States or observers had submitted 269 communications, ranging in length from 1 to 25 pages, the average length being 4.9 pages and the median length 3. Only 25 submissions were more than 10 pages and only 4 Member States or observers submitted more than 10 communications. Of the total number of communications, 134 (about 50 per cent) were, at the request of those concerned, circulated as both Assembly and Security Council documents. While there were no clear trends, the number of communications from Member States seemed to have decreased since 1988, but their length had increased.

The Committee on Conferences requested the Secretariat to prepare a study on the 32-page limit for reports of the Assembly's subsidiary bodies, including the question of establishing a page limit for reports of those bodies to the Assembly. The Committee Chairman was to seek the views of the Chairmen of those bodies whose reports exceeded the 32-page limit, stressing the need to comply whenever possible. The Committee recommended that the Assembly request the secretariats of subsidiary organs to bring the recommendations on the 32-page limit to the attention of those organs at the start of substantive sessions. It would report on the matter to the Assembly at its forty-seventh (1992) session.

The Committee accepted the Secretariat's recommendation on the provision of summary records to the seven subsidiary organs listed above (the Council for Namibia was subsequently dissolved). It recommended to the Assembly that summary records continue to be provided to regular and special sessions of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund, the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme. It decided to continue to monitor the situation on a regular basis and to consider in 1991 the provision of records with respect to meetings of organs and programmes not funded from the UN regular budget.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly renew its appeal to Member States to respond in a timely manner to requests for information for inclusion in documents and reaffirmed the need for the Secretariat to comply with the six-week rule regarding the availability of documentation.

It also recommended that the Assembly renew its appeal to Member States to exercise restraint in their requests for circulation of communications as UN documents, and decided to keep the matter under review and to report to the Assembly in 1992.

General Assembly resolution 45/238 B

21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/879) without vote, 14 December (meeting 46); draft by Rapporteur (A/C.5/45/L.8), following informal consultations; agenda item 124.

Printing and publications policy

Recurrent publications

The Committee on Conferences considered an August report of the Secretary-General [A/AC.172/138] on recurrent UN publications, which presented comparative data for the 1986-1987 and 1990-1991 bienniums, indicating the work-load for author departments and for various processing services in the Department of Conference Services. The data showed the number of original manuscript pages and number of copies in all languages as percentages of the total publications programme. The Secretary-General stated that the Department of Conference Services and the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Finance were studying the question of a methodology to analyse the costs of recurrent publications, but an appropriate methodology had not yet been developed.

The Committee on Conferences decided to await the development of the new methodology being prepared by the Secretariat. In the mean time, it recommended that the Assembly request intergovernmental bodies to exercise restraint in their authorization of recurrent publications. It also asked for an evaluation of the readership of such publications.

The General Assembly, in resolution 45/238 B, requested intergovernmental organs to exercise restraint in the authorization of recurrent publications.

Printing requirements

The Secretary-General submitted in September a report [A/C.5/45/8] on UN printing requirements, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 44/196 B [YUN 1989, p. 907] requesting that he analyse those requirements and recommend proposals to maximize the cost-effectiveness of external and internal printing.

The Secretary-General stated that the practice of the United Nations was to make the most complete and effective use of the printing facilities at each conference centre and to turn to external printing only when the special requirements of a publication could not be met internally. In both cases, every effort was made to ensure that the printing was done as efficiently and economically as possible, which increasingly benefited from the application of computer-based technologies.

He recommended continuation of UN printing policies and practices so that maximum use was made of internal printing capacities at major conference centres, including the regional commissions, and that use of external printing services be carefully controlled to ensure that they were procured on the most economic and efficient basis.

The Committee on Conferences noted that the information before it was insufficient to make recommendations to the Assembly. It asked the Secretariat to prepare a report on printing requirements containing quantified data on work volume and costs, while clarifying the relationship between printing practices and publication policies. The Secretariat should develop an internal manual establishing rules and regulations on the Organization's printing policy, which would enable understanding of the software and hardware involved; explain technological devices used and the use and guidelines of DRITS and provide guidance on the control of external printing costs.

The Assembly, by decision 45/451 of 21 December, concurred with the Secretary-General's recommendations. In resolution 45/238 B, it requested the Secretary-General to maximize the use of internal printing facilities, revising the format of UN documents for which external printing was currently required.

UN premises

Conference facilities in Addis Ababa and Bangkok

In November, the Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/45/53] to the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee regarding construction of additional conference facilities at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) in Bangkok, Thailand. The report reviewed progress on the projects and contained updated timetables for implementation and related financial considerations. Construction of both projects had originally been approved by the Assembly in 1984 [YUN 1984, pp. 620 & 628].

The Secretary-General reported that on 18 January a supplementary agreement to the ECA Headquarters Agreement regarding the construction site was signed, as was a letter regarding duty-free importation of materials and equipment and other procedures during the construction period. Advertisements were placed inviting applications for pre-qualification from construction contractors world wide and invitations to tender were issued in June to 17 contractors/consortia representing firms from 12 countries. Tenders were received from 10 contractors. Up-to-date estimates of project costs had been prepared by the quantity surveyor. In view of the 23 per cent increase in the exchange rate of the United States dollar to the European Currency Unit, the total project cost would be $107,576,900. (Construction was estimated to be completed in 1991.)

The construction of ESCAP conference facilities in Bangkok continued at a slower pace than the contractor had envisaged in his original timetable. Thailand's construction boom had caused shortages in both materials and skilled personnel. Although the UN project had escaped the full effects of those adverse factors, by September 1990 it was four months behind schedule, with the completion of the main construction estimated at late 1991. Of the estimated total cost of $44,177,700, expenditures up to the end of 1989 were $11,165,000, with disbursement up to 31 August 1990 totalling $7,631,500. A further $4,764,700 was expected to be disbursed by the end of 1990. It was projected that $15,500,000 would be needed in 1991. The total 1990-1991 appropriation of $16,603,900 and the unexpended balance of $11,533,000 in the construction-in-progress account would be sufficient to cover expenditures during the current biennium.

The General Assembly, by resolution 45/248 A, section X, of 21 December, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and requested him to proceed with the projects in accordance with the revised timetables.

Administrative and common services at Vienna

Responding to section XV of General Assembly resolution 44/201 B [YUN 1989, p. 908], the Secretary-General submitted a November report [A/C.5//5/32] to the Fifth Committee on administrative and common services units in Vienna. During the year, a team from the Management Advisory Service and another from the Internal Audit Division reviewed the organization, functions, staffing and operations of those services in Vienna with a view to reducing duplication and costs of services and proposing improvements.

The Secretary-General said that the reviews pointed to the urgent need to reassess and restructure the Vienna administrative and common services arrangements, and to reconsider the assignment of functions. Some functions currently assigned to UNIDO could more appropriately devolve on the United Nations, such as security, communications, library services, language training and buildings management operations, each very closely related to conference servicing. A thorough review of all common and joint services would be conducted to determine the appropriate share of all users in the cost of each service. Consultations would be undertaken with the secretariats of UNIDO and IAEA in 1991 to formulate proposals for revised administrative arrangements. In anticipation of that revision, an appropriation of $93,000 would be required in the 1990-1991 programme budget, net of staff assessment. The Secretary-General also proposed that the Assembly delegate authority to ACABQ to approve the revised administrative arrangements in 1991.

ACABQ [A/45/7/Add.6] agreed with the conclusions and recommendations of the Secretary-General. It recommended the establishment of new posts suggested by the Secretary-General; however, the related costs for 1991 should be absorbed from within existing resources. In December, the Secretary-General submitted UNIDO's comments [A/C.5/45/63] on those arrangements, in which it expressed reservations regarding his proposals. It suggested that the problems regarding common and joint services at the Vienna International Centre should be addressed within the framework of tripartite or bilateral consultations, with the results thereof being submitted to the respective governing bodies for consideration. Prior to that, no financial or administrative changes should be made, nor should there be any new infrastructure established or additional costs incurred. The Joint Inspection Unit should be requested to review the situation in Vienna and to submit recommendations to the governing bodies of the United Nations, IAEA and UNIDO.

The General Assembly, by resolution 45/248 A, section VIII, of 21 December, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and the related comments of UNIDO. It endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of ACABQ.

The Secretary-General also submitted a review [A/C.5/45/4], pursuant to Assembly resolution 44/201 B, section II [YUN 1989, p. 870], of the functions and administrative support of the departments having mandates related to global social development issues and proposals for the strengthening of the United Nations Office at Vienna. In resolution 45/248 A, section VII, of 21 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

Information systems and computers

Technological innovations

In October, responding to General Assembly resolution 44/200 C [YUN 1989, p. 909], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/45/478] on the status of technological innovations in the United Nations. The report reviewed and assessed current policies and procedures, discussed the results obtained with the introduction of technological innovations and examined future plans and expectations.

The Secretary-General said that, beginning in the 1990-1991 biennium, a programme had been initiated to improve data communications capabilities, intending to upgrade all workstations to microcomputers and to link them to local-area networks, which would be connected to organizational mid-range computers or mainframe machines. Data communications over wide-area networks were being strengthened to offer a global electronic mail facility. Image processing offered great promise and a project to implement the storage, distribution and retrieval of the full text of UN parliamentary documents was under way (see below). The integrated management information system (see below) in the Office of Human Resources Management, approved by the General Assembly in section XII of resolution 43/217 [YUN 1988, p. 901], was to provide managers and staff in administrative offices with a modern tool for processing information in budget, finance, human resources and general services. The technical environment would be a network of mainframe computers, minicomputers and microcomputers distributed throughout the Organization and linked through reliable telecommunication networks.

The Secretary-General concluded that the challenge to the Organization was to develop a detailed strategic plan to serve as a guideline in allocating resources to projects supporting the introduction of technological innovations. The Technological Innovations Board would ensure that budget provisions for training reflected added requirements resulting from a global programme of acquisition and replacement of equipment and software. Transition from multiple central data-processing facilities to a networked organizational structure promised to be one of the most interesting trends in the next decade. Much work would be needed to reorient people to changes of that magnitude as well as to other innovations. Nearly everyone in the Organization would need to be computer literate. Training programmes would become of utmost importance in teaching users how to benefit from the new technologies.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 45/254 C, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and requested that an updated version of that report be submitted in the context of the proposed programme budget for 1992-1993.

Integrated management information system

In November, the Secretary-General, in his second progress report on the integrated management information system (IMIS) project [A/C.5/45/20], stated that a consulting firm had been selected to undertake the project and work began in January 1990 on a detailed analysis of user requirements and the logical design of IMIS. In May, the analysis of administrative requirements for IMIS was completed. It was found that the requirements of overseas offices were similar to those of Headquarters and therefore the premise that an integrated system could be designed serving the needs of all UN offices had been confirmed. Following the user requirements analysis, a logical design (or external design) for an integrated system allowing on-line processing was constructed. Planning had begun also for the phased procurement of hardware and software.

The Secretary-General observed that IMIS, which was expected to be operational in 1993, would provide management with a comprehensive, timely and accurate view of UN assets and liabilities, giving the Organization the capacity to handle an increasing work-load while containing costs, simplifying procedures, improving information flow, reducing delays through improved delegation of authority and achieving a greater accountability level.

The General Assembly, by resolution 45/248 A, section IX, of 21 December, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and reiterated its request that he report to the Assembly on the cost benefits of the IMIS project.

Optical disk storage system

In December, the Secretary-General reported on the optical disk storage and retrieval system

[A/C.5/45/58], as requested by General Assembly resolution 44/201 B, section XVI [Y-UN 1989, p. 909]. The system was intended to provide efficient storage of UN documents, on-line access and retrieval of such documents by local and remote computer workstations and high-speed transmission of documents to remote users within the Organization. The Secretary-General reported that an interdepartmental steering group had been formed within the Secretariat to establish the first phase of the system in Geneva and New York and to plan the implementation of the full system, to include the regional commissions and other duty stations. The request for proposals for the implementation of the first phase had been issued and selection of the supplier was expected to be completed in the first quarter of 1991. To carry out the project an additional appropriation of $400,000 was required for the 1990-1991 biennium, as well as Assembly approval to redeploy $237,500 appropriated for external printing and binding in the biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 45/248 A, section XIV

Optical disk storage and retrieval system

[The General Assembly . . .]

1. Decides to defer until its forty-sixth session consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the optical disk storage and retrieval system;

2. Requests the Secretariat to carry out consultations with the permanent missions in order to determine the appropriateness of making the system compatible with those of permanent missions and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-sixth session;

3. Empowers the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to authorize the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for additional requirements necessary for 1991, on the understanding 'that such appropriations as may be necessary for 1991 would have first call on the contingency fund of the programme budget for the biennium 1990-1991 at the forty-sixth session;

General Assembly resolution 45/248 A, section XIV
21 December 1990 Meeting 72 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/45/900) without vote, 14 December (meeting 46); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 118.

International Computing Centre

The 1991 budget estimates of the International Computing Centre (ICC) in Geneva were submitted by the Secretary-General in September 1990 [A/C.5/45/9]. ICC was established in 1971 as a provider of data-processing, text-processing and related telecommunications services for all UN organizations wishing to participate in its activities. At the time of the report, the United Nations and 19 other organizations and programmes participated.

For 1991, ICC requirements were estimated at $10,515,500, as compared to $11,260,400 in 1990. The five organizations/programmes that were projected to utilize ICC the most were, in order of money spent, the United Nations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme and the World Intellectual Property Organization; together, they provided more than 80 per cent of the funding for ICC's operations. The UN share for its use in 1991 was estimated at $2,716,400.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in November stated [A/45/7/Add.3] that it had no objection to the 1991 budget estimates and the related share for the United Nations. In view of the increasing demand and urgent need to provide participants with universal and standard communication links, ACABQ called on ICC to expedite the recruitment of qualified staff to fill all vacant posts. It welcomed the review of the Centre and requested that future reports of the Secretary-General to the Assembly should include relevant information on the administrative and operational status of ICC, as well as staffing information. ACABQ considered that a highly reliable and secure operations environment was essential to provide proper and effective communications support to participants and trusted that the reorganization of the Centre would improve the security situation.

On 21 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 45/248 A, section III, approved the 1991 budget estimates of ICC, amounting to $10,515,500.

UN Postal Administration

In 1990, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA) from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters and at overseas offices totalled more than $16.6 million. Revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes was retained by the United Nations. Under the terms of an agreement between the United Nations and the United States, revenue from the sale of United States dollar-denominated stamps used for postage from Headquarters was reimbursed to the United States Postal Service. Similarly, postal agreements between the United Nations and Switzerland and the United Nations and Austria required that revenue derived from the sale of Swiss franc (SwF)-denominated stamps and Austrian schilling (S)-denominated stamps for postage use be reimbursed to the Swiss and Austrian postal authorities, respectively.

Six commemorative stamp issues, two definitive stamps and two souvenir cards were released by UNPA during the year.

Three commemorative stamps in denominations of 25 cents, SwF 1.50 and S 12 were issued on the theme of "International Trade Centre" on 2 February. Two definitive stamps carrying denominations of SwF 5 and S 1.50 were released on the same date.

The second commemorative stamp issue of the year was released on 16 March with the theme "Fight AIDS Worldwide". The stamps were in denominations of 25 cents, 40 cents, SwF 0.50, SwF 0.80, S 5 and S 11. A souvenir card accompanied the issue.

"Medicinal Plants" was the theme of the third commemorative issue of the year. Stamps in denominations of 25 cents, 90 cents, SwF 0.90, SwF 1.40, S 4.50 and S 9.50 were issued on 4 May.

The "45th Anniversary of the United Nations" was celebrated on 26 June with an issue consisting of six stamps and three souvenir sheets. The stamps were denominated in 25 cents, 45 cents, SwF 0.90, SwF 1.10, S 7 and S 9, while the souvenir sheets carried denominations of 70 cents, SwF 2 and S 16.

"Crime Prevention" was the theme of the fifth commemorative issue of 1990. The stamps, released on 13 September, carried denominations of 25 cents, 36 cents, SwF 0.50, SwF 2, S 6 and S 8. A souvenir card was issued on the same date.

The second set of six stamps in the human rights stamp series was released on 16 November. The stamps, which illustrated articles 7 to 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, bore denominations of 25 cents, 45 cents, SwF 0.35, SwF 0.90, S 4.50 and S 7.

In 1990, UNPA produced 46,918,383 stamps and souvenir sheets. First day of issue cancellations were applied to 2,065,027 envelopes.

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), established in 1957 to foster the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, continued in 1990 to promote the exchange of scientific and technical information, to establish and administer safeguards, to provide technical information, to establish health and safety standards, and to provide technical assistance to its members.

The thirty-fourth session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 17-21 September) reviewed progress made by the Standing Committee on Liability for Nuclear Damage, established in February 1990, including draft amendments to the 1963 Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage [YUN 1963, p. 595]. The Conference adopted resolutions relating to nuclear safety and radiological protection; the 1987 Convention on Physical Protection of Nuclear Material [YUN 1987, p. 1187]; safety guidelines for nuclear-powered vessels; prohibition of armed attacks against nuclear installations devoted to peaceful purposes; the use of nuclear desalinization for producing potable water; and the nuclear capabilities of Israel and of South Africa. It also adopted the Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste.

IAEA membership decreased to 112 in 1990 with the unification of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic into a single State (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Nuclear safety

During 1990, the International Nuclear Event Scale was accepted for a trial period of operation. By year's end, 25 countries had informed IAEA that they were using the scale for rating the safety significance of events and had agreed to report to the Agency within 24 hours information on any events rated at the second level or above for world-wide dissemination. The rating of the safety significance of nuclear events was based on seven levels and three attributes (on-site effects, off-site effects and degradation of defence in depth).

The Nuclear Safety Standards Advisory Group reviewed the revised texts of safety guides on siting, design and operation of nuclear installations; the International Nuclear Safety Advisory Group completed its deliberations on safety culture and finalized its report for publication in 1991. Seven site safety review missions in 1990 focused on seismic problems, while operational safety review team missions to existing construction sites revealed the need for basic organizational changes, the application of modern management principles, and the introduction of comprehensive quality assurance provisions and reinforced industrial safety practices.

The Incident Reporting System included 25 participating member States and 1,081 data base records by the end of 1990. The safety of older power reactors became a matter of international concern, with emphasis placed on improving the awareness of aging phenomena and on developing methods for evaluation and management. Following the endorsement by the General Conference of a project for international assistance in assessing the safety of early model WWER-440/230 plants (power plants with 440 megawatts water cooled and moderated reactors of Soviet design), an advisory group met in September to establish the technical and work programme of the project.

IAEA radiation protection services were enlarged in 1990. During the year, the Agency had more than 120 national projects, and four major regional projects were under way aimed at strengthening radiation safety capabilities in developing member States. It published amended versions of the IAEA transport regulations related to radioactive materials, and sponsored training courses on the safety and regulation of radiation sources (Argonne, Illinois, United States) and on radiation cytogenetics in biomedical, environmental, health and radiation protection problems (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil). Two seminars were held on preparedness for nuclear and radiological accidents, including medical aspects (Indonesia, March; Hungary, September). In connection with an international project, initiated at the request of the USSR, to assess the health and environmental effects of the 1986 Chernobyl (Ukrainian SSR) accident and evaluate the protective measures taken, fact-finding missions visited the affected areas and preliminary reports were prepared under the auspices of an international advisory committee. The committee's report was to be published in 1991.

Nuclear power

The Agency continued to provide support to its developing member States, especially for project feasibility studies, infrastructure development planning, manpower planning and project management. In addition, it provided assistance for 11 technical co-operation projects in the area of quality assurance. The IAEA workshops, seminars and symposia convened in 1990 emphasized nuclear power planning (Republic of Korea), financing nuclear power projects in developing countries (Indonesia), and quality management (Czechoslovakia) and quality assurance (India, Indonesia) for nuclear power projects. Work continued on comparative assessments of nuclear power and other energy sources, in particular the potential to avoid greenhouse gas emissions and global warming.

The Agency's Power Reactor Information System (PRIS) with 50 users in 23 member States and two international organizations, continued as a main tool for statistical analysis of nuclear power plant performance. During 1990, the Agency completed preparations for offering a new service called micro-PRIS, which was a personal computer (PC) version of PRIS data on diskette in a form readily accessible by standard, commercially available PC packages.

The International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor Conceptual Design Activity was successfully concluded in December. The agreed design was based on the tokamak concept of magnetic confinement and a project plan was developed for future research, development and engineering design work that could be shared among national programmes.

Nuclear fuel cycle

IAEA activities related to the nuclear fuel cycle and resources in 1990 included projects, meetings and training courses on the environmental effects of nuclear fuel cycle facilities; the planning of such facilities in developing countries; resources of nuclear raw materials; processing of nuclear and reactor materials; reactor fuel design, fabrication and performance; and spent fuel management. A new edition of the "Red Book", a joint report of IAEA and the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development containing statistical data on uranium resources, was published. Preparation of a comprehensive world map of uranium deposits was initiated. IAEA supported 27 technical co-operation projects on various aspects of uranium exploration and development.

Radioactive waste management

In September, the Agency's new Radioactive Waste Safety Standards Programme was presented to the IAEA Board of Governors. The programme aimed at producing a series of safety documents to set out internationally agreed-upon approaches to the safe management and disposal of radioactive wastes. In 1990, six regular missions and one special mission were conducted to developing member States as part of the Agency's Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Programme. The missions offered advice on establishing national waste management programmes and technical assistance on specific waste management issues or problems. Other IAEA activities in the area of radioactive waste management included preparation of reports and initiation of projects regarding the handling, treatment, conditioning and storage of radioactive wastes; radioactive waste disposal; and the decontamination and decommissioning of nuclear installations.

Food and agriculture

During 1990, IAEA-sponsored symposia and courses related to the use of nuclear technologies in food and agriculture included meetings on the use of stable isotopes in plant nutrition, soil fertility and environmental studies; plant mutation breeding; the use of immunoassay techniques for promoting animal health and preventing diseases; controlling pests using the sterile insect technique; and food irradiation. In addition, Agency projects were under way relating to soil fertility, irrigation and crop production; plant breeding and genetics; animal production and health; insect and pest control; agrochemicals and residues; and food preservation.

The International Consultative Group on Food Irradiation continued to provide information and advice to member countries, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, IAEA and the World Health Organization (WHO), while the International Facility for Food Irradiation Technology, established in 1978, completed its mandate and ceased operation on 31 December 1990. The Soil Science Unit provided training to 16 fellows and conducted one interregional training course. The Plant Breeding Unit continued research and development activities related to mutation breeding and plant genetics. Activities related to animal production and health focused on improving livestock productivity and the diagnosis and surveillance of livestock diseases. The agrochemicals programme continued to assist member States in dealing with problems related to pesticide practices with a view to improving their efficacy, reducing hazards to consumers and protecting the agricultural environment.

Human health

In 1990, inter-agency consultations between IAEA and WHO identified areas of mutual interest and resulted in an action plan for mutual co-operation. The Agency completed 16 of 130 technical co-operation projects in nuclear medicine and awarded fellowships in that field to 43 candidates from 25 developing countries. Other projects under way addressed topics related to applied radiation biology and radiotherapy and the role of nuclear and isotopic techniques in human nutrition.

Physical and earth sciences

Under industry and earth sciences and physical and chemical sciences, IAEA activities during 1990 focused on industrial applications, including manpower development, dissemination of information and technology transfer; development of water and mineral resources; nuclear measurements and instrumentation; and utilization of research reactors and particle accelerators.

The increasing role of nuclear and nuclear-related techniques in environmental conservation was emphasized. Projects and meetings addressed environmental pollution in the coal and coke industry; radiation processing; the exploration and exploitation of energy and mineral resources; non-destructive testing of materials; and characterization methods of new materials.

The Agency supported 44 technical co-operation projects related to isotope hydrology in 34 member States and regional projects in Africa, the Middle East and Latin America. The Isotope Hydrology Laboratory provided laboratories in member States with 320 samples for stable isotope measurement calibration and intercomparison. Investigations continued or were initiated in numerous arid and semi-arid zones to assess ground-water origin, recharge and dynamics; ground-water investigations were carried out in numerous tropical countries. Missions and projects also related to ground-water salinization and contamination, geothermal studies, surface water and sedimentology, and precipitation and atmospheric studies.

The development of computer software for applications related to nuclear measurements and instrumentation continued, as did Agency co-ordination of world-wide networks of nuclear and atomic data centres concerned with nuclear reaction data, nuclear structure and decay data, and atomic and molecular data. Thirteen nuclear laboratories in developing countries, mostly in Africa, were given support to develop nuclear analytical facilities.

The International Centre for Theoretical Physics, jointly operated by IAEA and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and located in Trieste, Italy, continued its research and training activities. Some 4,400 scientists, of whom 65 per cent were from developing countries, took part in the Centre's activities in 1990 and in the programme for training at Italian laboratories. In the area of physics and pure and applied mathematics, the Centre sponsored 43 courses, workshops and symposia in 22 countries.

Technical co-operation

The first biennial technical co-operation programme was concluded in 1990 and a special evaluation of the two-year cycle was scheduled for 1991. During the year, a total of 1,135 projects were operational, while arrangements were provided for 2,220 expert assignments. In addition, the programme processed 3,152 purchase orders for equipment and supplies, devised training programmes for 1,057 fellows and visiting scientists and organized 108 regional and interregional training courses for 1,358 participants. New resources available for technical co-operation decreased by 11.1 per cent over 1989 to $44.6 million, due to a bookkeeping loss caused by the devaluation of a major non-convertible currency.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

In 1990, IAEA carried out 2,188 inspections of safeguarded nuclear material, leading it to conclude, as in previous years, that the nuclear material under Agency safeguards remained in peaceful nuclear activities or was otherwise accounted for.

As at 31 December 1990, 177 safeguards agreements were in force with 104 States and Taiwan, compared with 172 agreements with 101 States and Taiwan at the end of 1989. Safeguards agreements were in force with 86 States pursuant to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [GA res. 2373(XXI)]. NPT safeguards agreements had been concluded with 10 of the 11 signatories of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Rarotonga Treaty) [YUN 1985, p. 58] and safeguards were applied in one of those States. Agreements had been concluded with 19 of the 23 Latin American States party to the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) [YUN 1967, p. 13], of which 16 were in force. Safeguards were applied in 42 States under agreements pursuant to NPT or to NPT and the Treaty of Tlatelolco.

As at 31 December 1990, 515 nuclear installations were under safeguards or contained safeguarded materials; nine of them were in nuclear-weapon States. A further 395 locations outside nuclear facilities contained small amounts of safeguarded materials and there were two safeguarded non-nuclear installations.

Nuclear information

In 1990, 95,604 records were added to the International Nuclear Information System (INIS), bringing the total number of records in the INIS data base to 1,447,960. During the year, nearly 11 million printed pages were distributed in computer-aided microfiche format, while member States spent a total of 700 hours on-line to the INIS data base. INIS membership remained at 79 member States plus 15 international organizations in 1990, with the admission of the Sudan and the reunification of Germany.

Secretariat

At the end of 1990, there were a total of 2,175 staff members of the IAEA secretariat, including 832 in the Professional and higher categories, 1,202 in the General Service category and 141 in the Maintenance and Operatives Service category.

Budget

The IAEA regular budget for 1990 amounted to $178,653,000, of which $170,135,000 was to be financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1990 scale of assessment, $4,933,000 from income from work for others and $3,584,000 from other miscellaneous income. Actual expenditures amounted to $176,500,274, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,152,726.

The target for voluntary contributions to the Technical Assistance and Co-operation Fund in 1990 was established at $45.5 million, of which $38,797,255 had been pledged by member States by the end of the year.

Chapter II

International Labour Organisation (ILO)

The International Labour Organisation (ILO), established in 1919 as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations, in 1990 continued activities in six major areas: promoting policies to create employment and satisfy basic human needs; developing human resources; improving working conditions and environment; promoting social security; strengthening industrial relations and tripartite (government/employer/worker) co-operation; and advancing human rights in the social and labour fields.

ILO membership decreased to 148 in 1990 due to the unification of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic and that of Yemen and Democratic Yemen (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Meetings

The seventy-seventh session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 7-27 June) adopted a new convention on night work and a protocol revising the Convention on night work for women, as well as a new convention on safety in the use of chemicals at work (see below, under "Standard-setting"). The Conference considered the annual reports of the ILO Governing Body and the Director-General, focusing on environment and the world of work, as well as the twenty-sixth special report on the effect of apartheid on labour and employment in South Africa. The Conference held a first discussion on working conditions in hotels and restaurants, with a view to the adoption of standards in that field at its 1991 session. A general discussion reviewed the promotion of self-employment, highlighting its role in economic growth and poverty alleviation. A tripartite Conference committee again examined the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by member States, and reviewed the application of ILO instruments concerning minimum standards in merchant shipping.

The Fifth Tripartite Technical Meeting for Mines Other than Coal Mines (Geneva, 28 March-5 April) adopted conclusions on the effects of new technology on the industry and on conditions of work. The Third Tripartite Technical Meeting for the Printing and Allied Trades (Geneva, 5-13 December) examined conditions of work as well as security of employment and income in the light of structural and technological change.

international standards

In 1990, ILO's activities concerning Conventions and Recommendations consisted of standard-setting and implementation of standards.

Standard-setting

At its seventy-seventh session (June 1990), the International Labour Conference adopted the Chemicals Convention (No. 170) and Recommendation (No. 177), 1990; the Night Work Convention (No. 171) and Recommendation (No. 178), 1990; and the Protocol of 1990 to the Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1948 (No. 89). The report forms for those instruments were approved by the Governing Body at its annual session in November.

The Seafarers' Welfare Convention, 1987 (No. 163) entered into force on 3 October 1990.

During the year, 74 ratifications of ILO Conventions by 19 member States were registered, bringing the total number of ratifications as at 31 December 1990 to 5,508.

Supervision of standards

At its annual meeting in March, the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations examined some 1,526 reports from member States regarding compliance with their obligations under the ILO Constitution and international labour standards, and formulated 1,551 comments in the form of observations published in its report or direct requests to Governments. The Committee again examined the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and prepared a general survey of national law and practice in ILO member States regarding application of the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147) and the Merchant Shipping (Improvement of Standards) Recommendation, 1976 (No. 155).

The Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association met three times in 1990 to examine complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee submitted to the Governing Body seven reports containing final or interim conclusions in 74 cases.

A number of special procedures were pursued during 1990 to examine complaints and representations submitted under the ILO Constitution. Complaints under article 26 were examined concerning the application of ratified Conventions by Nicaragua and Romania, and representations under article 24 were examined concerning Argentina, Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania and Turkey.

Employment and development

ILO continued to assist in developing policies to generate employment and alleviate poverty in the context of rapid national and international structural change. The organization participated in a meeting on the employment consequences of structural adjustment in five Arab countries (Algeria, Egypt, Jordan, Morocco and Tunisia) and began preparations for a tripartite symposium on structural adjustment, employment, and training for Latin America and the Caribbean to be held in 1991. Among reports and publications produced during the year were studies on effective structural adjustment packages conceived to meet distributional directives, a case-study on private investment in Zimbabwe, and books on rural labour in Tunisia and on the links between economic growth and labour outmigration from agriculture in 86 developing countries. A report on structural adjustment and its socio-economic effects in rural areas was prepared for the eleventh session of the Advisory Committee on Rural Development held in October 1990. Activities also addressed various aspects of the relationships between technological change, employment and structural adjustment. A comprehensive data base on the incidence of rural poverty in developing countries was created.

The World Employment Programme (WEP) continued, through research activities, technical advisory services, national projects and the work of regional teams in Africa, Asia and Latin America, to address the longer-term development problems of rural areas and the rapidly growing urban informal sector. Among other areas covered by WEP were ensuring fairness in structural adjustment programmes; employment and poverty monitoring; direct employment creation and generation for vulnerable groups; linkages between macro-economic and micro-economic interventions; and environment and labour market problems.

Working environment

The ILO International Programme for the Improvement of Working Conditions and Environment continued to assist countries in promoting occupational safety and health and improving general working conditions.

Under safety and health, 19 major extrabudgetary projects were carried out in 11 countries. Co-operation continued with the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme within the International Programme on Chemical Safety and with the International Atomic Energy Agency on preparation of revised basic safety standards for radiation protection. The Twelfth World Congress on Occupational Safety and Health was organized by ILO and the International Social Security Association in Hamburg in May. The International Occupational Safety and Health Information Centre continued to disseminate information through its network of national centres, micro-computer data base and bilingual bulletin.

In the area of conditions of work and welfare activities, ILO technical co-operation and advisory services gave assistance in combating child labour and protecting working children; improving working conditions and productivity in small and medium-sized enterprises; preventing and reducing alcohol and drug problems in the workplace; and providing women wage-earners with welfare facilities. In October, a meeting of experts addressed the social protection of homeworkers. The biannual Conditions of Work Digest dealt with telework and working hours: new work schedules in policy and practice.

Field activities

For the sixth consecutive year, ILO expenditure on operational activities increased in 1990 to $152.2 million, a 6.1 per cent rise above $143.4 million in 1989. The United Nations Development Programme remained the largest single source of external funding, while increased contributions were provided by trust funds and multi-bilateral donors.

Activities in labour and population, principally funded by the United Nations Population Fund, amounted to nearly $11.5 million in 1990, representing nearly 8 per cent of total expenditure on ILO operational programmes. The ILO regular budget provided for operational activities close to 10 per cent of total resources available to the organization.

Regarding the substantive fields of action, the employment and development programme spent some $54 million, primarily on projects in support of infrastructure and rural works, and employment planning and population. Training programmes incurred $41 million and were devoted principally to vocational training and management development. The third largest technical co-operation programme covered sectoral activities, within which operations in support of co-operatives alone provided over two thirds of the total, and other significant sectors were the hotel and tourism and maritime industries.

Training and research

By the end of 1990, 147 management development projects were in operation, focusing on monitoring and managing productivity improvement; developing entrepreneurs and small enterprises; assisting in structural adjustment processes; and strengthening management development institutions. The vocational training programme, which comprised 160 projects, was concerned with the problems of rural populations, the informal sector and disadvantaged groups such as women, unemployed rural youth and refugees. In addition, more than 50 countries received technical assistance or advice on vocation rehabilitation.

ILO expenditure for vocational training in 1990, excluding management development training, reached $27 million, or about 19 per cent of total ILO technical co-operation expenditure. The International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training in Turin held 78 group training courses and seminars in 1990, involving 1,490 participants from around the world.

The International Institute for Labour Studies in Geneva, the ILO centre for education and research, held its twenty-fifth international internship course on active labour policy development (Geneva, 9 May-8 June). Other Institute activities included several projects under its new industrial organization programme as well as networking support to regional groups of researchers and institutions.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1990, full-time staff numbered 3,266, including 1,445 in the Professional and higher categories, and 1,821 in the General Service or Maintenance categories. Of the Professional staff, 686 were assigned to technical co-operation projects.

Budget

The International Labour Conference in June 1989 adopted a budget of $330.4 million for the 1990-1991 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), established in 1945, continued in 1990 to help raise the living standards of the rural poor and improve agricultural productivity using techniques that did not degrade the environment. With its main objective remaining the global achievement of food security, FAO also continued to monitor food supply conditions world wide and provide emergency relief.

The 49-member Council of FAO, the organization's governing body between biennial meetings of the FAO Conference, at its ninety-eighth session (Rome, 19-30 November), reviewed FAO's programmes and discussed relevant aspects of food, agriculture and rural development. In resolutions, the Council expressed concern over the world food outlook in the light of changes in the formerly centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe and the debt burdens that continued to hamper the economic growth of some developing countries. Among FAO priorities approved by the Council were increased resources for forestry research and expansion of the organization's efforts in environmental protection.

During the year, FAO membership remained unchanged at 158 countries.

World food situation

Record wheat and rice harvests and higher output of root and tuber crops helped boost world food production by 4 per cent in 1990 to 2,160 million tonnes. The increase, well above the average growth rate of the 1980s, helped to replenish global cereal reserves depleted over the previous three years.

Due to favourable weather in most grain-growing areas, the easing of wheat acreage restrictions in the United States and higher prices, global cereal production increased almost 5 per cent, from 1,706 million tonnes in 1989 to 1,784 million tonnes in 1990. Bumper harvests were registered in North America and Mexico, and in Bangladesh, China, India and the USSR, where cereals and pulses output grew by 14 per cent. In the developing world, output expanded moderately, with the size of harvests varying widely among regions: while output grew by some 10 per cent in Asia, it fell by 11 per cent in Latin America and 7.5 per cent in Africa.

World wheat production rose by 11 per cent to a record 599 million tonnes, while rice output reached a record 347 million tonnes due to an excellent monsoon season in Asia. However, those gains were offset by only slight growth in world coarse grain production, up less than 1 per cent to 834 million tonnes. Regarding other major food commodities, world production of roots and tubers grew by 1 per cent, global pulse production reached a record 59 million tonnes, world milk production increased by 0.5 per cent and meat output rose slightly to 171 million tonnes.

Activities in 1990

Emergency assistance

Serious food shortages due to civil strife or poor rainfall affected a number of countries in Africa in 1990, including Angola, Ethiopia, Liberia, Mozambique and the Sudan. Other countries in the region requiring exceptional assistance included Burundi, Cape Verde, Malawi, the Niger, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Somalia. A number of countries recorded food surpluses but required external assistance to transport supplies internally and to other countries. In addition, serious food shortfalls required emergency assistance to nine developing countries outside Africa: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Haiti, Jordan, Lebanon, Nicaragua, Peru, Samoa and Sri Lanka. Assistance was provided to victims of a cyclone in Samoa in February. In Europe, food shortages were reported in the USSR due to post-harvest losses and problems in transport and distribution.

FAO set up the Screwworm Emergency Centre for North Africa in June 1990 as an international, inter-agency programme to eradicate the livestock pest from the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, where an outbreak began in 1988. The Emergency Centre for Locust Operations was officially closed in December 1990 after having co-ordinated international campaigns to fight locust and grasshopper infestations. With FAO assistance, the desert locust plague of 1986-1989, which swept across the northern half of Africa, was brought to a halt.

Field programmes

There were some 2,325 FAO field projects under way in more than 130 countries world wide in 1990. The projects, which varied from small-scale, highly specialized activities to large multidisciplinary programmes, addressed crop production (24 per cent), forestry (15 per cent), rural development (15 per cent), natural resources (15 per cent), livestock (11 per cent), fisheries (9 per cent), policy analysis (7 per cent), research and technology (2 per cent), nutrition (1 per cent) and other categories (1 per cent).

Rural development

FAO's Agricultural Services Division continued in 1990 to promote farming systems analysis, from crop and livestock production to the availability of health care and the quality of the environment. Activities included publication of training materials on integrating land evaluation data into rural planning; workshops on the improved use of micro-level data in policy formulation and assessment; improving agricultural engineering and farm mechanization; developing post-harvest systems; strengthening agro-industries; applying biotechnology to traditional processing technologies; expanding markets; and strengthening rural financing. Assistance to rural financial institutions, including co-operatives, was a key activity.

The FAO Policy Analysis Division, another key player in rural development activities, continued to help developing countries to exercise more effective policy-making through policy advice, technical assistance and training. Areas of major concern included agricultural prices, marketing, processing, credit, fiscal and monetary policies, trade and exchange rates, food security and monitoring the impact of food and agricultural policies.

Crops

Many FAO activities in 1990 contributed to improvements in crop production. For example, FAO's Seed Exchange and Information Centre in Rome helped distribute seed samples to more than 82 developing countries. The Centre met 417 requests for samples of some 8,000 cultivars. Emergency shipments from the Centre's cold storerooms in 1990 included wheat seeds for agricultural rehabilitation in Afghanistan and vegetable seeds for farmers in Burundi.

Through integrated pest management techniques, which rely on natural control of pests rather than chemical pesticides, FAO offered farmers in Asia methods of keeping crop pests under control while limiting damage to the environment. The organization's Prevention of Food Losses projects involved simple techniques or technologies that could help prevent post-harvest food losses due to pests or poor storage and handling. FAO's programme for Integrated Plant Nutrition Systems relied on improvements in field techniques to reduce the amount of chemicals released into the environment.

Livestock

The FAO Animal Production and Health Division continued efforts to improve livestock production through programmes such as the eradication campaign of the Screwworm Emergency Centre for North Africa; information and vaccination campaigns to control rinderpest, a serious problem affecting livestock producers in Africa and some parts of Asia; and a cattle-painting campaign using a low-toxicity insecticide to stop tsetse fly attacks on cattle in Zanzibar.

As part of its efforts to improve indigenous livestock breeds, FAO launched a project to find ruminants suitable for a breeding programme in the Near East, including Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey. Other activities in 1990 included veterinary services development; publication of the Animal Health Yearbook (a reference book on over 135 infectious diseases); and a broad range of projects covering areas such as parasitic and vector-borne diseases, non-infectious and reproductive diseases, dairy development, tropical animal feeds, animal breed preservation and development, improved animal husbandry and animal product processing.

Fisheries

FAO activities in aquaculture and inland fisheries continued to expand in 1990. Programmes to improve crop yields or rural economies included fisheries activities to generate income or provide fodder or fertilizer. In addition, FAO programmes were under way in fish disease diagnostics, fish nutrition and fishery genetics.

The Fish Identification Group produced field guides, catalogues of species and other material essential to the fisheries sector. The global data base, SPECIESDAB, was expanded and micro-computer software was designed to help developing countries assess the state of their fish stocks. Manuals and associated software were developed for estimating and managing fish populations and on aspects such as bioeconomic modelling, size and age frequency population analysis, trawl survey analysis and models incorporating spatial and geographic components.

Several fisheries projects focused on the role of women in the sector. A project in India helped set up a fish market run by women; loans were provided to women's groups in the fishing communities of Lake Tanganyika in the United Republic of Tanzania; and women fish processors in Nigeria were introduced to improved smoking kilns.

Forestry

The FAO forestry department continued to give high priority to watershed management and protection. Other priority areas included studies of dry land tree formations and management, particularly in the Sahelian region, the Sudan and southern Africa, as well as wildlife conservation. International forestry research, forest industries, technology and trade, and non-wood forest projects were other important areas of activity. Renewed support was given to institution-building, statistics-gathering and the Tropical Forestry Action Plan.

During the year, FAO staff worked with Indonesian planners to draft a national forestry action programme, responding to serious concerns about the future of Indonesia's forestry activities. Work also progressed on the forest industries training centre in Mutare, Zimbabwe, which would serve the countries of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Environment

Activities of various FAO bodies and committees dealing with the environment expanded in 1990, including those in the areas of policy and planning, biological diversity, climate change, desertification control, integrated coastal area management and energy. Requests also increased for environmental assessments of field projects and programmes.

FAO was a sponsor of the Second World Climate Conference (Geneva, 29 October-7 November 1990), and presented a paper at the global gathering on the possible effects of climate change on agriculture, forestry and fisheries. Several areas of action were identified as countermeasures, including the more efficient use of fertilizers to limit nitrous oxide emissions; improving livestock feeds to reduce methane emissions; and reforestation and long-sighted forest management to limit carbon dioxide emissions.

The sustainable management of land and water resources remained a major aim of FAO field-work. One study found that soil losses from erosion and unsound soil management practices in Africa amounted to some 70,000 square kilometres annually.

Nuclear techniques

The Joint FAO-International Atomic Energy Agency Division on nuclear techniques carried out activities in soil fertility, plant production, pest control, animal production, agrochemicals and food irradiation. Joint Division activities included tests of the diagnostic kits for livestock used in detection of trypanosomiasis; the testing of sera in rinderpest control; campaigns against the New World screwworm, the Mediterranean fruit fly and several moth and caterpillar crop pests; improved pesticides use; and irradiation in the quarantine treatment of fresh horticulture produce. The Division sponsored hundreds of seminars and exchange programmes for scientists from developing countries.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

FAO activities under the technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) programme intensified in 1990. In addition to promoting regional co-operation, sponsoring seminars and offering technical advice, the programme continued to focus on research and setting up regional networks for information exchange. For example, a TCDC project in the Sahel aimed to improve millet, sorghum, cowpea and maize production through regional co-operation in research. Another TCDC project, designed to provide support to Asian aquaculture centres and encourage them to share responsibility for developing viable aquaculture in the region, resulted in establishment of the Intergovernmental Asian Aquaculture Network.

Secretariat

At the end of 1990, some 3,231 staff were employed at FAO headquarters, of whom 1,175 were in the Professional and higher categories. There were an additional 3,252 FAO field project personnel and staff employed at regional and country offices, of whom 1,206 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,756 in the General Service category. Of the 366 associated professional officers working with FAO, 76 were at headquarters and 290 were in the field or in regional and country offices.

Budget

The FAO Conference in 1989 approved a total working budget for the 1990-1991 biennium of $568.8 million.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued in 1990 to promote co-operation among nations in the fields of education, science, culture and communication. In accordance with the medium-term plan for 1990-1995—a general policy and strategy document adopted by the UNESCO General Conference in 1989—activities during the year aimed to meet the challenges of peace, development and protection of the environment by focusing on the priorities of education for all and literacy; protection of the environment and rational use of natural resources; promotion of scientific research and science education; preservation of cultural heritage; the cultural dimension of development; free flow of information and enhancement of communication capacities of developing countries; defence and affirmation of human rights; and propagation of a culture of peace.

Membership in UNESCO decreased in 1990 from 161 to 159 due to the unification of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic into a single State and that of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Education

During 1990, UNESCO educational programmes highlighted the priorities of reducing illiteracy and expanding basic education. As part of International Literacy Year (ILY), which was celebrated throughout the world in 1990, UNESCO promoted its Action Plan on the Eradication of Illiteracy by the Year 2000 and mobilized support for activities and programmes promoting literacy for youth and adults. Some 118 countries set up national ILY committees and UNESCO appointed 70 honorary ambassadors for ILY on the basis of nominations submitted by member States.

Together with the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank, UNESCO sponsored the World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, 5-9 March). The Conference inspired many countries to reassess their educational situation and design new strategies for expanding basic education services and developing human resources. The forty-second International Conference on Education (Geneva, 3-8 September) was devoted to the follow-up of the Jomtien Conference recommendations.

During the year, programmes devoted to education for the twenty-first century and educational development sought to re-establish UNESCO's leading role in promoting international co-operation among professionals and policy makers to improve the quality and relevance of education as the means by which societies could promote their own continuity and change. National, regional and international projects, workshops and meetings undertaken by UNESCO emphasized such issues as higher education and inter-university co-operation; values in informal and non-formal education; girls' access to mathematics and science education; educational aid to refugees; vocational education; educational buildings and furniture; education for the prevention of drug abuse and AIDS; and educational services for families and young children. UNESCO awarded five international literacy prizes in 1990 to: the People's Government of Xiping County (China); the Universidad Central del Este (Dominican Republic); the Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools; the General Directorate of Non-Formal Education (Cape Verde); and the Kerala Sastra Sahithya Parishad Movement (India).

Natural sciences and environment

UNESCO continued activities related to the environment and the management of natural resources and to the application of science and technology to development. In partnership with the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Council of Scientific Unions, UNESCO co-sponsored the Second World Climate Conference (Geneva, 29 October-7 November). High-level regional symposia on science and technology for the future were convened in Berlin, Germany, and Acapulco, Mexico.

The inter-agency programme on Man and the Biosphere continued to encourage interdisciplinary research, demonstration and training on resource management by promoting better understanding of the biophysical, socio-economic and cultural factors involved in sustainable development. It comprised a series of international research networks and 293 biosphere reserves in 74 countries.

The Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) gave increased attention to regional concerns. IOC programmes emphasized ocean dynamics and climate, ocean science in relation to living and non-living resources, marine pollution research and monitoring, ocean mapping, ocean observation and warning systems, and marine data and information exchange. IOC also continued development of the Global Ocean Observing System, a globally co-ordinated, scientifically based strategy that would monitor and predict environmental and climatic changes globally, regionally and nationally, and manage and protect ocean and coastal resources.

In 1990, the fourth phase (1990-1995) of the International Hydrological Programme, which included 49 projects, was initiated under the general theme "Hydrology and water resources for sustainable development in a changing environment". A symposium celebrating 25 years of scientific hydrology was held (Paris, March).

The International Geological Correlation Programme, with 92 established national committees, continued to stimulate international collaboration in the earth sciences through 61 research projects. In addition, geological maps of Africa, South and East Asia, and the world were published in co-operation with the Commission for the Geological Map of the World.

The Molecular and Cell Biology Network, which comprised 24 microbiological resource centres in 19 countries, implemented 8 research projects and organized 10 missions and 8 scientific meetings. In engineering sciences, emphasis was placed on small-scale energy production in rural areas and on promoting co-operation between research institutions and industry.

Social and human sciences

UNESCO activities in the social and human sciences were aimed at bolstering the institutional capabilities of member States to stimulate research and training and increase their intellectual involvement in those areas.

The international symposium on the future of the family, to be held in Paris in 1991, held five regional consultations on the subject, in Beijing; Lome, Togo; Mexico City; Tunis. Tunisia; and Vienna. UNESCO also sponsored a meeting on the role of confidence in international relations (Tunis, October), co-organized a conference on democracy and development (Montevideo, Uruguay, November), held a consultation of experts on multiculturalism and the integration of immigrants (Perth, Australia, October/November), and launched a new project to encourage better co-ordination of activities towards eliminating apartheid and preparing society in South Africa to live in conditions of non-discrimination and equality.

Culture

UNESCO continued to implement activities related to the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997) in an increasing number of member States. It provided seed money for 94 projects, and 150 projects received the Decade label. Progress continued in major interdisciplinary and intercultural Decade projects, such as the Silk Roads, the Maya Worlds, and the Revival of the Ancient Library of Alexandria. A Regional Conference of National Committees of the Decade (Bali, Indonesia, June) promoted subregional and regional co-operation towards realizing the Decade's objectives.

During 1990, some $245,000 was allocated to 20 international campaigns to safeguard cultural heritage, including co-ordination of international action to preserve the site of Angkor Wat in Cambodia. The World Heritage Committee, at its fourteenth session (Banff, Canada, December), inscribed 17 additional sites on the World Heritage List, bringing to 336 the number of cultural and natural sites protected under the 1972 Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage. By the end of 1990, 115 States had become parties to the Convention.

Communication and informatics

In 1990, UNESCO established a new sector for communication, information and informatics, in order to bring together three closely related programmes and improve co-operation among them. As part of a new communication strategy, which emphasized the free flow of information, meetings in support of press freedom and media independence were organized in Paris with the written media (February) and with radio and television practitioners (April) of Central and Eastern Europe. In addition, a regional Centre for the Training of Professionals in the Field of Journalism was established in Warsaw, Poland.

The Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC), in March, allocated $2,265,000 to 31 projects. IPDC projects included journalism training and community radio; vocational training courses for women; improving broadcasting capabilities in several African and Latin American countries; and assistance to news agencies in Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Pakistan, Tunisia and Yemen.

The General Information Programme continued to assist countries to increase their capacity to gather, organize, diffuse and utilize information, particularly through seminars and workshops and by providing technical assistance to libraries, national archives and other information networks.

In informatics, training courses, seminars and workshops designed to update knowledge and skills in computer science were organized. Under the Intergovernmental Informatics Programme, six projects were launched in 1990.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1990, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,765, comprising 1,042 in the Professional or higher categories and 1,723 in the General Service category.

Budget

The General Conference of UNESCO in 1989 approved a budget of $378.8 million for the 1990-1991 biennium. The level of the working capital fund was fixed at $15 million and the total assessment on member States (after deducting miscellaneous income) amounted to $364.8 million.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The World Health Organization (WHO), established in 1948, continued in 1990 to serve as the directing and co-ordinating authority on international health. WHO focused on disease prevention and control; promoting primary health care and the health of specific populations; addressing health issues related to environment and development; and encouraging implementation of a global strategy of health for all. The World Health Assembly, the governing body of WHO, at its forty-third session (Geneva, 7-17 May), focused on the negative effects of the worsening economic situation in many countries on the health of populations.

During 1990, two States, Belize and Namibia, became members of WHO. However, with the merger of Yemen and Democratic Yemen into one State and the accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), WHO membership remained at 166.

Health policy and infrastructure

The Consultative Committee on Primary Health Care Development (Geneva, April) recommended measures to enhance the implementation and sustainability of the primary health care approach, especially in countries facing severe economic constraints. On the basis of an interregional consultation on quality assurance in primary health care (China, October), training modules were established and a first training workshop was planned for September 1991. A report on the experiences of primary health care delivery in 15 countries was published, and guidelines for assessing community involvement in district health systems based on primary health care were prepared and widely circulated. A study group on the functions of hospitals at the first referral level (Geneva, October/November 1990) drew up principles for establishing a rational, balanced relationship between hospitals, health centres and health posts with respect to their staff, training, logistics, financing and minimum requirements for clinical skills, laboratory services, education and management.

WHO increased its activities in relief and emergency preparedness in response to a large number of natural and man-made disasters. The Division of Emergency Relief Operations, established in July 1989, was further strengthened for preparedness and response and a series of protocols for the rapid assessment of the immediate and potential impact of a broad range of emergencies and disasters was developed and field-tested. WHO launched a broad range of activities relating to the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-2000), including projects in Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, the Philippines and the Sudan.

WHO continued to ensure that member States had access to the information they required on significant international and national legislative developments in the health and environmental sectors. It also provided diverse forms of technical co-operation to members at their request, including the provision of consultant services to developing countries to draw up, review and amend health legislation.

Public information and education for health

World Health Day (7 April), observed in 1990 under the theme "Our planet, our health-Think globally, act locally", was widely promoted and celebrated, as were World No-Tobacco Day (31 May) and World AIDS Day (1 December). Health education for school-age children remained a critical concern in all regions.

Several African countries revised the school health syllabus to include AIDS and other priority health topics; country reports on school health education were compiled in five countries in South-East Asia; and a teacher training summer school in health education/promotion was held in the United Kingdom-National and inter-country training workshops to stimulate involvement of the media in health education, especially for the prevention of AIDS, were organized for the western Pacific (Sydney, Australia, March) and the eastern Mediterranean (Rabat, Morocco, November).

All WHO regions were supporting training programmes in health education and communication and several were producing educational and promotional materials for health education.

Health protection and promotion

WHO continued to give attention to the major health needs of women, whose status in and contributions to the field of health were recognized to be vital to the health of the population as a whole. A special report prepared by WHO for the World Conference on Education for All (Jomtien, Thailand, March) focused on improving education for girls and women. In 1990, inter-regional workshops for training in research in the field of women's health were held in Mexico City and in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, and the first meeting of a task force on human resources development for maternal health and safe motherhood took place in Geneva. Guidelines on AIDS prevention in maternal and child health and family planning were prepared and distributed. WHO and the United Nations Children's Fund convened a technical meeting (Geneva, June) to review the scientific basis of breast-feeding strategies, and a meeting of policy makers from developed and developing countries was held (Florence, Italy, July) to analyse deficient breast-feeding practices and approaches to improving the situation.

WHO became increasingly involved in food aid as part of emergency and longer-term projects for refugees and displaced persons under a newly established food and nutrition programme, responsible for promoting healthy diets and preventing malnutrition and food-borne diseases. A joint Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations/WHO consultation on the assessment of biotechnology in food production and processing as it related to food safety (Geneva, November) defined strategies for evaluating safety that provided sound technical and policy guidance for use by national food regulatory agencies and the food industry. Several regional courses and seminars convened in 1990 dealt with food safety and food technology and hygiene.

The Seventh World Conference on Smoking and Health was convened in Perth, Australia, in April. During the year, an increasing number of African countries instituted legal provisions restricting smoking in public places; a regional plan of action for the prevention and control of the use of tobacco, adopted in 1989, was being implemented in the Americas; and WHO support for educational programmes related to tobacco and health was provided to several countries in other regions. WHO was also active in the promotion of oral health and the promotion of accident and injury prevention.

Health of specific populations

As an approach to tackling the range of problems affecting mothers and children throughout the world, WHO activities were restructured to focus on maternal health and safe motherhood, child health and development, perinatal and neonatal care, and family planning and population. Particular attention was given to the development and adaptation of appropriate technology for use in primary health care. During the year, technical co-operation and human resources development were made components of the maternal health and safe motherhood programme and guidelines were produced on essential obstetric functions, rapid evaluation methodology, treatment of obstetric fistulae, use of the partograph and abortion care.

WHO activities related to child health and development included measures to promote perinatal and neonatal health, breast-feeding, growth and development of children and care of those children in difficult situations. The organization established an adolescent health programme in 1990 to promote the health and development of young people aged 10 to 24, with special attention to the needs of developing countries. The first WHO collaborating centre for adolescent health was formally opened at the University of Nairobi (Kenya) in June.

Regarding reproductive health, a WHO scientific group (Geneva, December) reviewed current knowledge about the use of combined oral contraceptives and the risk of neoplasia; a meeting of scientists from Eastern and Western Europe (Szeged, Hungary, October) discussed opportunities for collaboration in reproductive health research that would benefit developing countries; and an inter-agency consultation (Geneva, September) addressed the challenges of the 1990s in human reproduction research.

Activities carried out in collaboration with other international organizations related to occupational health included a symposium on contaminant measurement in environmental protection and occupational hygiene (Lubeck, Germany, September), the European Industrial Hygiene Conference (Milan, Italy, November) and a course on occupational health (Coimbra, Portugal, December).

WHO efforts, with the collaboration of several groups of scientists from some 15 countries, provided a basis for the adoption of standardized epidemiological and clinical procedures as well as research objectives with regard to the health of the elderly. The steering committee for a project on osteoporosis held its first meeting (Bethesda, Maryland, United States, September) to make recommendations related to identifying older people, especially women, at risk of fractures and to assess risk and protective factors for bone loss and fracture in older populations.

Environment, health and development

The WHO Commission on Health and Environment was established in 1990 to review knowledge about the impact of environmental change on human health and lay down a basis for WHO to develop the strategies needed to solve problems of health in the context of environment and development. The work of the Commission was supported by four expert panels which analysed the health implications of the environmental impact of food production and agricultural practices; industrial activities; energy production and use; and urbanization.

The International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) concluded with a series of events in which WHO was closely involved, including a global consultation on safe water and sanitation for the 1990s (New Delhi, India, September) and the World Summit for Children (New York, September), which reaffirmed the Decade's goals of universal access to safe drinking water and sanitary means of excreta disposal for the end of the 1990s.

A United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP)/WHO consultation on global freshwater quality monitoring (Leningrad, USSR, August) defined new programme objectives emphasizing the importance of data interpretation and greater sharing of tasks with collaborating centres and other international organizations. In November, a training course in water quality surveillance and control was held in the United Republic of Tanzania. A global radiation monitoring network was set up with UNEP, and a third co-ordination meeting of WHO collaborating centres for radiation emergency medical preparedness and assistance was held in Leningrad in May.

Disease prevention and control

During the year, substantial progress was made in national immunization programmes in all WHO regions. For the first time, some 80 per cent of children in the first year of life were covered by a third dose of combined diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus vaccine as well as poliomyelitis vaccine. Within WHO, collaboration was directed towards neonatal tetanus prevention, vitamin A supplementation, preparing training manuals and providing training in logistics.

Development and evaluation of new pesticides for control of disease vectors, such as those that spread malaria, continued in 1990. WHO and representatives of the pesticide industry met to discuss the procedures followed by the organization in approving pesticides. In collaboration with drug manufacturers, WHO continued to monitor the efficacy and side-effects of antimalaria drugs, and a monitoring system was made available to malaria control programmes in endemic countries. The World Health Assembly marked the achievements of the United Nations Development Programme/World Bank/WHO Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases in developing and testing a number of important new disease control tools and strengthening research capability in developing countries. A product development unit was set up with the Special Programme to examine research products of high priority for disease control and to collaborate with industry in order to turn them into practical tools for field use against tropical diseases, including malaria, schistosomiasis, African trypanosomiasis, Chagas disease, leishmaniasis and leprosy.

Efforts were intensified at all levels in 1990 to control diarrhoeal diseases. By year's end, a total of 67 programme managers' courses had been held and nearly 27 per cent of health staff had been trained in supervisory skills. The proportion of curative health staff trained in correct diarrhoea management was estimated at just over 14 per cent. The global use rate for oral rehydration therapy by the beginning of 1990 was 36 per cent, an increase of 4 per cent over 1988.

Preparation of a manual on methods for the surveillance of bacterial drug resistance related to acute respiratory infections was completed and the draft reviewed by a group of experts (Geneva, December). Following a July workshop, guidelines were prepared on tuberculosis treatment for adults and children. Another workshop drew up recommendations on case definitions and reporting systems for use in national tuberculosis programmes.

Regarding sexually transmitted diseases, a consensus statement on how to control hepatitis B virus infection was drawn up at a WHO meeting (Geneva, November). Six priorities were identified for WHO's work in AIDS prevention and control in the early 1990s: strengthening national AIDS programmes; planning for the social and economic consequences of AIDS; developing more effective interventions for halting the spread of HIV and caring for infected persons; accelerating biomedical research aimed at producing safe, effective, affordable and universally available vaccines and drugs; supporting human rights and opposing discrimination towards HIV-infected persons; and fighting complacency with relation to the AIDS pandemic.

The WHO cancer control programme continued to focus on two main components: primary prevention, early detection and treatment, and palliative care; and research on epidemiology, etiology, prevention and the mechanisms of carcinogenesis. In 1990, the recommendations of a study group on diet, nutrition and the prevention of chronic diseases were accepted by the WHO Executive Board as guidelines for a strategy to reduce cancers and other chronic diseases in industrialized countries and prevent increases in those diseases in developing countries.

Secretariat

As at 30 November 1990, the total number of WHO staff stood at 4,596.

The effective working budget approved by the forty-second (1989) World Health Assembly for the 1990-1991 biennium totalled $653.7 million.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), established in 1945, continued in 1990 to help raise living standards in developing countries by channelling financial resources to them from developed countries. Through loans and other economic assistance, the Bank financed all kinds of capital infrastructure, while at the same time emphasizing investments that directly affected the well-being of poor people in developing countries by making them more productive and by integrating them as active partners in the developmental process. The Bank also provided loans in support of structural adjustment and policy reform. For the fiscal year ending 30 June 1990, Bank lending totalled some $15,180 million.

During 1990, membership in the World Bank increased to 154, with the admission of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Namibia, and the merger of Yemen with Democratic Yemen.

Lending operations

The World Bank granted a total of 121 loans to 38 countries for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1990, amounting to gross commitments of $15,179.7 million, a decline of $1,254 million over fiscal 1989. Sectorally, total lending included $1,994.5 million for 29 agriculture and rural development loans in 21 countries; $945 million for development finance companies in six countries; $530.1 million for eight education projects in five countries; $3,084 million for 14 energy projects in 11 countries; $650.5 million for six industry-sector loans; $2,600 million for non-project loans to eight countries; $524.6 million for seven population, health and nutrition projects; $480 million for two public-sector management loans; $50 million for one small-scale enterprise loan; $96 million for six technical assistance loans; $592.2 million for three loans in the telecommunications sector; $2,250.2 million for transportation projects in 13 countries; $702.7 million for seven urbanization projects; and $679.4 million for 11 water supply and sewerage loans in nine countries. The cumulative total of loan commitments by the Bank since it began operations in 1946 amounted to $186,661.7 million.

Economic Development Institute

During fiscal 1990, the Economic Development Institute (EDI) increased its activities in three areas: training those involved in leading and managing development in developing member countries; providing assistance to training and research institutions in developing countries to help them strengthen their capacities for policy analyses and economic management; and producing and disseminating training materials. In fiscal 1990, EDI organized 99 seminars and courses. Among the most important were those focusing on human resource and social issues; access by the poor to urban services; vocational and technical education policy; structuring relations between the public and private sectors; experience with structural adjustment; and financial sector reform. The Institute continued to administer the World Bank graduate scholarship programme, funded by the Government of Japan, which had awarded a total of 222 scholarships, 25 per cent of them to women and 80 per cent to applicants from developing countries.

Sub-Saharan Africa continued to account for half of the Institute's activities, which ranged from organizing courses and seminars in collaboration with African institutions to providing institutional assistance to help train senior and mid-level staff. In the Europe, Middle East and North Africa region, EDI sustained its expanded programme for Arab countries and responded to increased interest to collaborate with it from Eastern and Central Europe. In Latin America and the Caribbean, EDI priorities included adjustment and growth (including financial sector reform), public- and private-sector management and human resource development. A number of programmes in the institutionally weaker countries of Asia and the Pacific, such as Viet Nam and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, emphasized development management and project-related issues.

While the United Nations Development Programme remained the largest source of external support for the Institute's activities, co-financing from bilateral sources continued to expand more rapidly than other sources, representing more than half of total external resources mobilized.

Co-financing

The volume of co-financing anticipated in support of World Bank-assisted operations reached a record level $12,978.5 million in fiscal 1990. More than half of all Bank-assisted projects attracted some form of co-financing. By region, 33 per cent of the co-financing volume was for operations in Asia, 32 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, 23 per cent in Africa and 12 per cent in the Europe, Middle East and North Africa region. In terms of the number of co-financed operations, the distribution by region indicated that 50 per cent was in Africa, 22 per cent in Asia, 14 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 13 per cent in the Europe, Middle East and North Africa region.

The largest sources of co-financing continued to be official bilateral agencies and multilateral development institutions, which together accounted for $9.1 billion. The volume of anticipated export credits increased significantly to an estimated $3.2 billion. Commercial bank co-financing accounted for some $657 million, reflecting continued difficulties experienced by Bank borrowers in attracting medium-to-long-term financing from commercial sources.

Financing activities

During fiscal 1990, the Bank borrowed a total of $11,720 million, consisting of $9,225.3 million of medium- and long-term public offerings; $1,216.8 million of medium- and long-term placements with central banks and Governments; $1,166.2 million of medium- and long-term other placements; and $111.7 million of short-term borrowings.

Although some 98 per cent of fiscal 1990 borrowings, after swaps, were in deutsche mark, United States dollars and Japanese yen, the Bank borrowed in a total of 15 currencies, continuing its policy of diversifying its borrowings in a large number of markets and currencies.

The outstanding debt of the Bank at the end of fiscal 1990 was $81.2 billion of medium- and long-term borrowings and $5.3 billion of short-term borrowings.

Capitalization

As at 30 June 1990, total subscribed capital of the Bank amounted to $125,262 million, an increase of $9,594 million over fiscal 1989.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues totalled $8,317 million, an increase of $43.3 million over fiscal 1989. Net income was $1,406 million, of which $750 million was allocated to the General Reserve; the remaining $296 million was included in unallocated accumulated net income pending a decision on its deposition. Expenses decreased by some $28 million in fiscal 1990 to $7,092 million. Administrative costs totalled $494.1 million, up by $31.8 million from fiscal 1989. At the end of fiscal 1990, the Bank's General Reserve amounted to $9,195.5 million.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1990, the World Bank had a total regular and fixed-term staff numbering 5,860, of which 3,714 were in the Professional or higher categories drawn from 125 nationalities.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

Established in 1956 as an independent affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), the International Finance Corporation (IFC) continued in 1990 to further economic growth in developing member countries by promoting private investment. During 1990, IFC continued to expand its activities, achieving record volumes in its three principal areas of work-financing projects, mobilizing funds from other sources and providing advisory services-and launching a number of new initiatives. Increased attention was given to protecting the environment, with the IFC environmental adviser reviewing some 100 project proposals.

During fiscal year 1990 (1 July 1989-30 June 1990), Angola and Cape Verde joined IFC, increasing its membership to 135.

Financial and advisory services

During fiscal 1990, IFC approved new investments totalling $1.5 billion for 122 private-sector projects in 38 countries. Overall costs of projects financed by IFC totalled nearly $9.4 billion, and the number of companies in which IFC held loan or equity investments increased from 468 in fiscal 1989 to 495 in fiscal 1990. Funds raised directly by IFC for projects through syndicated bank loans, underwritings and private placements were the highest ever, at $1 billion. For every dollar invested by IFC, an average of $5.2 was supplied by other lenders and investors, a mobilization rate below that achieved in 1989, but above the average of $4.5 for the five-year period 1985 to 1989.

The volume and variety of advisory services to both public- and private-sector clients grew during the fiscal year, principally in the areas of privatization, corporate restructuring and capital markets development. At year's end, IFC was working on more than 50 advisory assignments in 30 countries, with service fee income amounting to $17 million.

Regional projects

During the year, Eastern Europe emerged as an important area requiring increasing emphasis in IFC activities, with the Corporation able to provide advice on the problems of the transition to market-based economic systems. In Hungary and Poland, IFC provided advice on a variety of subjects to government agencies involved in the process of economic and financial reform and was engaged in a programme of investments, mainly joint ventures, in those countries. Within IFC, a new Department of Investments, Europe, was created to concentrate on Eastern and Southern Europe.

A new department was also created to focus greater attention on the Middle East and North Africa, an area where IFC's investment had not grown strongly in recent years. During fiscal 1990, total financing of $244 million was approved for 21 projects in seven countries in Europe and the Middle East, including capital markets projects.

Net investment approvals in Africa rose 50 per cent in fiscal 1990 to a record level. During the year, total financing of $362 million was approved for 34 projects in 13 African countries. IFC investments in the region were concentrated in industries based on natural resources, including mining, tourism and fishing. IFC was also active in the textile industry. It approved credit lines to private commercial intermediaries. The Corporation continued its efforts to assist small and medium-sized businesses in sub-Saharan Africa, particularly through the Africa Enterprise Fund and the Africa Project Development Facility.

Net investment approvals in Asia were up 81 per cent, with total financing of $697 million approved for 35 projects in eight countries, including capital markets and energy projects. Activities in the region included major industrial investments in East Asia and investments in the power sector in South Asia. During fiscal 1990, IFC opened a new regional mission in Pakistan. Following on the success of the African and Caribbean Project Development Facilities, IFC was establishing a similar facility for the South Pacific.

The share of new IFC investments to Latin America and the Caribbean, which had been over 50 per cent for several years, decreased in fiscal 1990. During the year, total financing of $735 million was approved for 29 projects in 10 countries, including capital markets and energy projects. Investments were approved in a number of large projects in Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Venezuela, which were funded in part by mobilizing funds from international sources. IFC also pro vided advisory and financial services, including the Corporation's first currency swap intermediations, which were transacted for two Latin American banks.

Financial performance

The Corporation's net income for fiscal 1990 was $157 million, a decrease from $196.5 million achieved in fiscal 1989. Interest, dividend and fee income were all at record levels, but realized capital gains, at $91 million, were not as high as in fiscal 1989. The return on the Corporation's equity portfolio (net of reserves) in fiscal 1990 amounted to 25.9 per cent.

Capital and retained earnings

With additional payments of capital and retained earnings during the year, IFC's net worth increased to $1.9 billion at 30 June 1990, compared with $1.6 billion at the end of fiscal 1989. Total borrowings over the year were $799 million.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1990, IFC's staff totalled 595 from some 70 countries, including more than 50 developing countries.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA), which was established in 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), continued to provide concessionary assistance to low-income countries on terms that bore less heavily on their balance of payments than those of the Bank. During fiscal year 1990 (1 July 1989-30 June 1990), IDA continued to concentrate on the very poor countries—those with an annual per capita gross national product of less than $650 (in 1988 United States dollars). More than 40 countries were eligible under that criterion in fiscal 1990.

Agreement was reached during the fiscal year on the ninth replenishment of IDA resources (IDA-9), amounting to some $15.5 billion for the three-year (fiscal 1991-1993) period. Thirty-one IDA members, plus Switzerland (not a member of IDA), contributed to IDA-9, among them seven members who were borrowers from the World Bank: Brazil, Hungary, Mexico, Poland, the Republic of Korea, Turkey and Yugoslavia. Three programme areas earmarked for higher priority during IDA-9 were poverty reduction, support for sound macro-economic and sectoral policies, and the environment.

As at 30 June 1990, cumulative IDA commitments totalled $58,222 million. During fiscal 1990, IDA approved credits (called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans) totalling $5,222 million, of which $2,785.9 million went to 30 countries in Africa and $2,222.3 million went to nine countries in Asia. The largest borrower was India, with eight credits totalling $832.4 million, followed by China (five credits totalling $590 million) and Bangladesh (five credits totalling $540.1 million).

In fiscal 1990, 21 countries received 30 credits totalling $1,661.6 million for agriculture and rural development; 14 received $956.5 million in support of education projects; nine countries received $535.1 million for transportation projects; eight countries were granted a total of $444 million for non-project assistance; 10 countries received $408.8 million for population, health and nutrition; and eight countries and the Caribbean region were extended $326.7 million to assist development finance companies. In addition, urban development projects in nine countries were extended support totalling $299.4 million; six countries received $252.4 million for water supply and sewerage projects; and four countries were granted a total of $219.8 million to assist with electric power programmes. Lesser amounts were granted as follows: $157.5 million to five countries for small-scale enterprises; $145.1 million to two countries and the Western Africa region for industry sector credits; $45.6 million to three countries for public-sector management; $45 million to five countries for technical assistance projects; and $24.5 million to one country for a telecommunications project.

IDA membership in 1990 remained at 138.

Secretariat

Though legally and financially distinct from the World Bank, the staffing and headquarters of IDA were the same as those of the Bank.

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued in 1990 to monitor the international monetary system and to promote conditions conducive to a healthy world economy. Surveillance over the policies of its members remained the central activity of the Fund. That surveillance consisted of an ongoing monitoring and analysis of a broad range of domestic and external policies affecting members' price and growth performance, external payments balances, exchange rates and restrictive systems.

During the year, the IMF Executive Board, the Fund's permanent decision-making body, discussed, among other things, the effects of inflation and the implications of a monetary strategy aimed at achieving price stability. The Fund's 1990 fiscal year covered the period from 1 May 1989 to 30 April 1990.

IMF membership rose to 154 in 1990 with the admission of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Namibia. Democratic Yemen and Yemen merged into one State.

IMF facilities and policies

A principal activity of the Fund continued to be support of macro-economic and structural policy adjustments in its member countries. IMF support and funds (in the form of special drawing rights (SDR)) were provided through various policies and facilities, which differed in the types of problems they sought to address and the terms and degree of conditionality attached to them.

In fiscal 1990, IMF committed SDR 10.9 billion under stand-by and extended arrangements (designed to overcome short- and medium-term balance-of-payments difficulties), representing a more than threefold increase over the average of the preceding six years. The rise partly reflected the fact that developing countries were requesting Fund assistance to reduce inflation, improve resource allocation and lower barriers to trade and foreign investment. The Fund's structural adjustment facility (SAF) and enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF) arrangements provided resources on concessional terms to low-income countries in support of macro-economic and structural adjustment policies. Six of the seven low-income countries for which the Fund approved new three-year arrangements under SAF and ESAF in fiscal 1990 were in sub-Saharan Africa and the other in Asia. The compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF), which was established in 1988 to help stabilize the earnings of countries exporting primary commodities and to protect the Fund-supported economic policies of members from the disruptive effects of unanticipated external shocks, continued to provide resources to members to cover export earnings shortfalls beyond their control and to provide financial protection to maintain the momentum of Fund-supported adjustment in the face of external disruptions.

IMF continued to devote considerable attention to the external debt problems of its members. The three main elements of the Fund's co-operative, case-by-case strategy for dealing with the problems of heavily indebted countries comprised ensuring that: debtor countries pursued growth-oriented structural reforms; multilateral, official and private sources provided adequate finance; and all countries collaborated in maintaining a favourable global economic environment. Guidelines approved in 1989 to determine countries' eligibility to receive Fund support for debt-reduction operations were applied in four initial cases: Costa Rica, Mexico, the Philippines and Venezuela. In April 1990, the Fund approved arrangements with six countries that had yet to conclude negotiations with their creditors on financing packages involving debt reduction: Argentina, Cote d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Jordan, Poland and Venezuela.

Financial assistance

In fiscal 1990, IMF approved 26 new arrangements with member countries, amounting to SDR 11.3 billion, the largest amount since fiscal 1984. The arrangements included 16 stand-by arrangements totalling SDR 3.2 billion; 3 extended arrangements amounting to SDR 7.6 billion; and 3 SAF arrangements and 4 ESAF arrangements totalling SDR 460.5 million. Two arrangements incorporated CCFF contingency mechanisms, while three were accompanied by drawings for CCFF compensatory financing of export fluctuations. Purchases under CCFF rose to SDR 0.8 billion in fiscal 1990 from SDR 0.2 billion in fiscal 1989.

As at 30 April 1990, the Fund had 51 arrangements with 49 countries. Of those, 19 were stand-by arrangements, 4 extended arrangements, 17 SAF arrangements and 11 ESAF arrangements.

The number of countries using Fund resources totalled 87—well over half the Fund's membership. Among the countries that entered into arrangements with the Fund during fiscal 1990, 9 were from the western hemisphere (Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Haiti, Jamaica, Mexico, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela); 10 were from Africa (Algeria, Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Sao Tome and Principe, Togo, Zaire); 1 was from the Middle East (Jordan); 3 were from Asia (the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines); and 3 were from Europe (Hungary, Poland, Yugoslavia).

Liquidity

The liquid resources of the Fund consisted of usable currencies and SDRs held in the General Resources Account, supplemented, as necessary, by borrowed resources. As at 30 April 1990, the Fund's uncommitted and usable ordinary resources totalled SDR 41.2 billion, compared with SDR 42.9 billion a year earlier. Available borrowed resources amounted to SDR 20 billion, all under a 1986 short-term borrowing agreement with Japan. That represented a use of borrowed resources during fiscal 1990 of SDR 1 billion, compared with SDR 0.2 billion during fiscal 1989.

The Fund's liquid liabilities declined to SDR 24.8 billion at 30 April 1990 from SDR 27.3 billion a year earlier. Those liabilities comprised reserve tranche positions, which declined by SDR 0.4 billion to SDR 21.3 billion, and loan claims on the Fund, which fell to SDR 3.5 billion from SDR 5.6 billion a year earlier.

SDR activity

Total purchases from the General Resources Account increased in fiscal 1990 to SDR 4.4 billion from SDR 2.1 billion in fiscal 1989. The increase reflected a rise of SDR 2.2 billion in disbursements under extended arrangements. In addition, ordinary resources were used to repay SDR 0.4 billion of Fund borrowing that was to be repaid before the corresponding repurchases became due.

Repurchases in the General Resources Account in fiscal 1990 amounted to SDR 6 billion, representing a decrease of SDR 0.3 billion from the previous fiscal year. Of that total, about SDR 0.4 billion consisted of early repurchases by Mauritius and Thailand whose balance-of-payments and reserve positions improved during the period.

Those flows resulted in a fall in Fund credit outstanding in the General Resources Account from SDR 23.7 billion in fiscal 1989 to SDR 22.1 billion in fiscal 1990.

Policy on arrears

Overdue financial obligations remained a serious problem, with the total amounting to SDR 3.27 billion at the end of fiscal 1990. Of that amount, some SDR 3.25 billion represented overdue obligations of 11 members in arrears to the Fund by six months or more as at 30 April 1990. At the same date, a total of 10 members had been declared ineligible to use the general resources of the Fund, in the light of their overdue obligations, which represented 98.4 per cent of total overdue obligations. The eligibility of two members was subsequently restored in June following full settlement of their overdue obligations.

Technical assistance and training

Technical assistance and training in economic and financial matters continued to be an important element of the Fund's relations with its member countries. Members sought assistance on matters ranging from broad policy issues connected with stabilization and adjustment policies and external debt management to more specialized technical, legal and data-processing matters.

Training was provided by the IMF Institute—both at headquarters and overseas—and by many other departments, including the Central Banking, Fiscal Affairs and Legal Departments, the Bureau of Computing Services and the Bureau of Statistics. During the year, the IMF Institute introduced new courses on programming and policies for medium-term adjustment and on techniques of financial analysis and programming. In addition, the Institute sharply increased the number of external workshops and seminars. Also in 1990, agreement was reached between the Fund and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which allowed IMF to act as executing agency for UNDP-financed technical assistance.

IMF-World Bank collaboration

The Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) shared the objective of promoting sustained growth and development of their member countries. While their charters provided them with differing but complementary mandates to pursue that objective, they co-operated to help their members by pooling their specialized expertise and co-ordinating policy advice and financial assistance. Collaboration was based on regular contacts between the two staffs, both at headquarters and in the field. Additional procedures for collaboration included systematic and frequent meetings of the senior staffs and managements of the two institutions. A joint task force was established to promote co-operation, analyse debt strategy issues and exchange information on financing techniques. During the 15-month period ending 31 March 1990, discussions on policy framework papers took place in 44 joint or parallel missions. Bank staff participated in 21 Fund missions that did not directly involve discussions on policy framework papers; Fund staff participated in 13 Bank missions. Close working relations were also maintained through unified positions regarding debt- and debt-service reduction and the problem of arrears.

Secretariat

At the end of fiscal 1990, the total full-time staff of IMF numbered 1,731, drawn from 104 countries.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), an intergovernmental regulatory organization whose objectives were set forth in annexes to the 1944 Convention on International Civil Aviation, continued in 1990 to prescribe standards, practices and procedures for the safety, regularity and efficiency of civil air transport. During the year, ICAO accorded high priority to aviation security through efforts to develop a comprehensive and detailed ICAO aviation security training programme for world-wide implementation. In addition, airport and airspace congestion continued to be closely monitored.

In 1990, traffic on the world's scheduled airlines amounted to some 236 billion tonne-kilometres, an increase of 5.4 per cent over 1989. The airlines carried 1.2 billion passengers, 4 per cent more than in 1989. As the number of seats offered increased at the same rate as passengers carried, the estimated passenger load factor remained at 68 per cent. Air freight increased by over 3 per cent to some 59 billion tonne-kilometres and airmail traffic increased by almost 5 per cent to more than 5 billion tonne-kilometres.

In October, the ICAO Assembly held an extraordinary session to amend the Convention on International Civil Aviation to increase the membership of the Council from 33 to 36. The amendment would go into effect following ratification by a two-thirds majority of ICAO member States. The Assembly also agreed on a world-wide policy towards operating restrictions on subsonic jet aircraft with a view to noise reduction and approved a resolution condemning violation of the sovereignty of the airspace of Kuwait and the seizure of Kuwait International Airport by Iraqi armed forces (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

The ICAO Council held three regular sessions in 1990. In January, the Sub-Committee for the Preparation of a New Legal Instrument Regarding the Marking of Plastic Explosives for Detectability drew up the draft of a new international agreement intended to ensure that plastic explosives were marked with an additive to enhance their detectability. The Sub-Committee was convened in response to concerns about the dangers to the travelling public following the use of plastic explosives in the downing of Pan American flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in December 1988.

In 1990, ICAO membership decreased to 161 with the merger of Yemen with Democratic Yemen and the unification of the German Democratic Republic and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Activities

Air navigation

In 1990, ICAO continued to direct its efforts in the air navigation field towards updating and implementing ICAO specifications, guidance material and regional plans. Six air navigation meetings during the year made recommendations for changes to ICAO specifications contained in six technical annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation and two documents in the Procedures of Air Navigation Services. Amendments were also made to regional plans, which set forth air navigation facilities and services required in the nine ICAO regions, and ICAO regional offices continued to assist States in the implementation of those plans. New guidance material was made available in the form of new and revised technical manuals and ICAO circulars.

Particular attention was given to safeguarding international civil aviation and its facilities against acts of unlawful interference. In the light of developments in the Persian Gulf area during the year, co-ordinating teams were established to identify and monitor alternative routings for civil air traffic to maintain safety, efficiency and regularity of international civil aviation. ICAO projects in 1990 also focused on accident investigation and prevention; aerodromes; bird strikes to aircraft; audio-visual training aids; aviation medicine; flight safety and human factors; illicit transport of drugs by air; instrument landing system/microwave landing system (ILS/MLS) transition; meteorology; rules of the air and air traffic services; and search and rescue.

Air transport

ICAO continued its programmes of economic studies, collecting and publishing air transport statistics, and promoting greater facilitation in international air transport. During 1990, a panel of experts completed its work of assisting with the development of an airport economics manual, and a technical advisory group completed specifications for machine-readable visas. Workshops were held on airport and route facility management (Varna, Bulgaria, December); international fares and rates (Trinidad and Tobago, April); and statistics (Cairo, Egypt, June). Publications included the regular series of digests of civil aviation statistics, the yearbook on civil aviation statistics, the 1990 edition of the manual of airport and air navigation facility tariffs, the ninth edition of Annex 9-Facilitation, a study of regional differences in fares, rates and costs for international air transport in 1988, and a survey of international air transport fares and rates in 1989.

By the end of 1990, all 22 States parties to the 1956 Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements for air navigation services had accepted the protocols of an amendment agreed upon in 1982 and applied since 1 January 1983.

Legal matters

A special sub-committee of the ICAO Legal Committee met (Montreal, Canada, 9-19 January) to study the topic of a draft instrument relating to the marking of plastic explosives for detectability, and to prepare a draft instrument for consideration by the Legal Committee. The Legal Committee considered the draft at its twenty-seventh session (27 March-12 April), resulting in a final text containing six articles for a draft convention on the marking of plastic (and sheet) explosives for the purpose of detection. In July, the ICAO Council decided to convene an International Conference on Air Law in Montreal from 12 February to 1 March 1991 to consider and approve the new convention.

In June, the Council approved the text of a new revised Headquarters Agreement between ICAO, and the Government of Canada, which followed closely the relevant provisions of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies of 21 November 1947. The Agreement, which was signed in October, would be submitted to the Canadian Parliament for legislative implementation and subsequently would enter into force with an exchange of notes between the President of the ICAO Council and the Government of Canada.

During the year, the following ratifications, adherences or successions were registered to conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO, auspices:

Technical co-operation

During 1990, ICAO provided technical co-operation to 139 countries in the form of resident expertise, equipment, fellowships, scholarships and short-term expert missions. ICAO awarded a total of 1,468 fellowships and employed 443 experts from 56 countries, 340 on assignment through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and 111 on Trust Fund projects. There were also 20 United Nations Volunteers. The total number of experts in the field at the end of 1990 was 175, compared with 191 at the end of 1989.

Equipment purchases and sub-contracts continued to represent a substantial proportion of the technical co-operation programme. In addition to UNDP and Trust Fund projects, 61 Governments or organizations had registered with ICAO under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. The value of equipment and sub-contracts delivered in 1990 increased to $18.4 million, compared with $16.2 million in 1989.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1990, the total number of staff members employed at the ICAO secretariat stood at 817, including 315 in the Professional and higher categories and 502 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget for 1990 totalled $39,263,000, as modified by the ICAO Council; actual obligations for the year amounted to $39,137,284.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established in Berne, Switzerland, in 1874, continued during 1990 to promote the reciprocal exchange of postal services between nations through the organization and improvement of postal services and to develop international collaboration. At the request of its members, UPU also participated in various forms of postal technical assistance.

In 1990, UPU membership decreased to 168, reflecting the merger of Yemen and Democratic Yemen into one State and the accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). No new members were admitted during the year.

Activities of UPU

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, the supreme legislative authority composed of all member States, normally meets every five years. The twentieth Congress took place in Washington, D.C., in 1989, and the twenty-first was scheduled to meet in Seoul, Republic of Korea, in 1994.

The work of the Congress consists mainly of making administrative arrangements for UPU activities as well as examining and revising the Acts of the Union based on proposals submitted by member States, the Executive Council or the Consultative Council for Postal Studies (CCPS).

Executive Council

At its 1990 session (Berne, 8-18 May), the UPU Executive Council—which carried out the work of the Union between sessions of the Congress—considered administrative matters and examined studies concerning international mail referred to it by the 1989 Congress. A large number of studies were launched in 1990, including those dealing with the structure of the Acts of the Union and management of the Union's work as well as technical studies on operations, organization, accounting and news services.

Consultative Council for Postal Studies

The 1990 session of CCPS (Berne, 8-19 October) focused on launching the Union's main strategies and objectives for the period 1989- 1994, as laid out at the twentieth Congress in the Washington General Action Plan [YUN 1989, p. 944]. Key activities would focus on designing new products and services; improving the quality of the products and services marketed; introducing leading-edge techniques and new technologies; standardizing, harmonizing and encouraging the general implementation of modern operating, management and communications systems; and increasing co-operation and support for postal development in UPU member countries.

The Electronic Transmission Standards Group worked on developing a statement of user requirements for message communication and system integration related to the establishment of a world-wide postal electronic data transmission network.

In conjunction with the 1990 Executive Council session, a symposium was held on 7 and 8 May on the security of the mails. As a result, a new Intergroup of Postal Security Experts was created, which would report to both the Executive Council and CCPS.

CCPS symposia were convened in the areas of market research, new parcel-post products and services and the Expedited Mail Service. Work continued on a new edition of the Multilingual Vocabulary of the International Postal Service, for publication in 1991.

International Bureau

The International Bureau, which functions as the UPU secretariat, continued to serve the postal administrations of member States as an organ for liaison, information and consultation. In 1990, the Bureau collected, co-ordinated, published and disseminated international postal information. At the request of postal administrations, it also conducted inquiries and acted as a clearing-house for settling accounts between them.

As at 31 December 1990, the UPU Bureau employed 147 permanent and temporary staff members, of whom 62 were in the Professional and higher categories and 85 were in the General Service category. Also, as French remained the sole official UPU language, 14 officials were employed in the Arabic, English, Portuguese, Russian and Spanish translation services.

Technical co-operation

UPU technical assistance totalled about $5.2 million in 1990, of which some $3.8 million was financed by the United Nations Development Programme. Assistance was also provided through the UPU regular budget and its special fund, consisting of voluntary contributions in cash and kind from member States.

During the year, 103 expert and consultant missions were carried out and 324 fellowships were granted, with the emphasis placed on the quality of postal services, commercial and operational strategies, and public information. UPU undertook initiatives to increase its field presence with regard to technical assistance and co-operation. In addition, a number of surveys were conducted as part of the Washington General Action Plan to identify the priority projects to be carried out for 1992-1995 in developing countries.

Budget

Under the Union's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. The budget approved for 1990 amounted to 24,389,550 Swiss francs.

In 1990, the UPU Executive Council approved the 1991 budget at a total net expenditure of 26,163,930 Swiss francs.

NOTE: For details of UPU activities, see Report on the Work of the Union, 1990, published by UPU.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

During 1990, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), which was founded in 1865 as the International Telegraph Union and became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1947, continued to promote the development and efficient operation of telecommunications facilities and to offer technical assistance in its areas of expertise.

By 31 December, one member State (Barbados) had ratified the ITU Constitution and International Telecommunication Convention (Nice, 1989). The Convention would enter into force 30 days after the deposit of 55 instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession with ITU's secretariat.

The ITU Administrative Council held its forty-fifth session in Geneva from 11 to 22 June. It adopted the 1991 budget, considered the reports on the activities of the Union, and reviewed the first progress report of the High Level Committee, established in 1989 to study and recommend measures to ensure greater effectiveness of ITU organs in the context of the changing international telecommunications environment. In addition, the Council established a voluntary group of experts to study how to improve the use of the radio frequency spectrum and how to simplify radio regulations governing frequency use, and reviewed the development of direct remote access to ITU data bases.

ITU membership decreased from 166 to 164 in 1990 as a result of the merger of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the unification of the German Democratic Republic and the Federal Republic of Germany (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Conferences

The Council approved the agenda of the 1992 World Administrative Radio Conference (WARC) dealing with a partial reallocation of the frequency spectrum and deferred until 1991 the adoption of the agenda of WARC-1993 on short-wave broadcasting.

Radio and telecommunications activities

In 1990, the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) adopted new working methods to reflect the telecommunications priorities of the 1990s, to streamline the decision-making process and to focus decision responsibility. It adopted recommendations (standards) relating to high-definition television and future universal personal telecommunications. Among the meetings convened by CCIR were expert group sessions on future mobile telecommunications and on compatibility of network protocols related to satellite links. By the end of the year, a total of 59 private agencies, 44 scientific or industrial organizations and 49 international organizations were participating in the Committee's work.

The International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT) study groups and working parties focused on preparing recommendations and replies to questions referred to them by the ninth CCITT Plenary Assembly in 1988. Twenty-one new or revised recommendations were approved and 77 draft new or revised recommendations were drawn up at 43 meetings convened during the year. By the end of 1990, a total of 65 recognized private agencies, 162 scientific or industrial agencies and 39 international organizations were participating in the Committee's work.

The International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) continued in 1990 to maintain the Master International Frequency Register, the International Frequency List and related service documents. During the year, IFRB examined 79,290 frequency assignment notices submitted by administrations; published four Tentative High Frequency Broadcasting schedules for 1990 and 1991; applied a special frequency selection and co-ordination procedure for world-wide frequencies in the aeronautical mobile service; and took follow-up action on decisions of several relevant conferences. The Board continued to provide special assistance in frequency management matters and dealt with 94 reports of harmful interference. The IFRB biennial seminar on frequency management and the use of the radio frequency spectrum and the geostationary-satellite orbit (October) focused on terrestrial services.

Technical co-operation and training

The ITU Telecommunications Development Bureau, established in 1989 to strengthen technical co-operation, became operational in 1990. During the year, 628 expert missions were carried out, 1,279 fellows were undergoing training abroad, and equipment valued at $8 million was delivered. A total of 191 national and regional technical co-operation projects amounting to some $32.8 million were under implementation, mainly in three broad categories: development of telecommunications networks (39 per cent); strengthening national, technical and administrative services (37 per cent); and development of human resources (24 per cent).

In the area of human resources development, 273 people from telecommunications administrations and broadcasting organizations participated in national and regional training workshops on course development, instructional techniques and human resources management during the year. In Africa, ITU continued to support the African Advanced Level Telecommunications Institute in Nairobi, Kenya, and the Higher Multinational School for Telecommunications in Dakar, Senegal. In Latin America, telecommunications training specialists met to improve the co-ordination of training at the regional level and discuss computer-assisted training and human resources management and development. In the Asia and the Pacific region, a new inter-country project on telecommunications management development and training was begun in June 1990. In Europe, the Middle East and the Mediterranean Basin, a report was prepared on the development of policies and strategies for training and other means of human resources development in telecommunications and on the design of a model training centre in Budapest, Hungary.

The ITU Centre for Telecommunications Development conducted a distance-learning training course on project management in 16 developing countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1990, 735 staff were employed by ITU on permanent or fixed-term contracts, either at headquarters or in the field.

Budget

The adjusted ITU budget for 1990 totalled 138,433,400 Swiss francs (SwF), including SwF 120,718,800 for ordinary budget expenditures, SwF 417,300 for regional administrative conferences, SwF 6,197,300 for technical co-operation and SwF 11,100,000 for publications.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO), established in 1950, continued its activities to facilitate world-wide co-operation related to meteorological information and the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, agriculture and other human activities. In March 1990, WMO commemorated its fortieth anniversary.

During the year, climate change and other environmental issues were emphasized. In June, the forty-second annual session of the Executive Council authorized the convening of an ad hoc working group to pave the way for negotiations on a climate change convention. The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, established jointly by WMO and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), completed its first assessment report in August, and the Second World Climate Conference was convened in Geneva from 29 October to 7 November (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

WMO membership remained at 154 States and five territories during 1990.

World Weather Watch

As the core programme of WMO, the World Weather Watch (www) was a world-wide integrated system for the collection, analysis and dissemination of meteorological data and processed products.

During 1990, the WMO Commission for Basic Systems held an extraordinary session (London, 24 September-5 October) to review each of the main components of the www system—the Global Observing System (GOS), the Global Data-processing System (GDPS) and the Global Telecommunication System (GTS). Concerning GOS, the Commission adopted recommendations on the future use of Automated Shipboard Aerological Programme observing systems, on the further development and implementation of a Composite Observing System for the North Atlantic and on aircraft meteorological data reporting. Proposals were made regarding studies on satellite capabilities and on the observing of volcanic activity.

With regard to GDPS, the Commission updated regulatory specifications and protocols related to quality of observations and verification of numerical weather prediction products and established priorities for their exchange. GDPS capabilities, functions and services continued to improve with the introduction of more powerful computers at the three World Meteorological Centres (Melbourne, Australia; Moscow; Washington, D.C.) and at some of the 29 Regional Specialized Meteorological Centres. Similarly, several National Meteorological Centres in Asia and the South-West Pacific improved their capabilities through the implementation of real-time data-processing functions and services using micro/minicomputers.

The Commission revised the organizational aspects of GTS to take greater advantage of modern telecommunication means and techniques, and particularly to integrate satellite-based data collection and dissemination systems in the GTS structure. Arrangements were considered for the exchange of seismic data on GTS in support of the Conference on Disarmament and operational arrangements were developed for the use of GTS in support of conventions of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The Commission agreed on the need to create a WMO multidisciplinary body responsible for reviewing the question of allocation of radio frequencies to meteorological activities, with particular reference to data-collection services via meteorological satellites and to wind profilers.

Instruments and methods of observation

Radiation standard instruments of 19 regional centres were calibrated at the Seventh International Pyrheliometer Comparison (IPC-VII) from 26 September to 12 October at the Swiss Meteorological Institute at the Physico-Meteorological Observatory Davos. The main purpose of IPCs was to carry out at five-year intervals calibrations of radiation standards of the 22 designated Regional Radiation Centres against the World Standard Group, consisting of eight absolute radiometers.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

During 1990, many tropical cyclones occurred. Reports indicated that activities under the Tropical Cyclone Programme (TCP) for the improvement and upgrading of tropical cyclone warning systems contributed significantly to the reduction of loss of life and property damage from those cyclones compared with those of earlier years. Substantial progress was made towards improving warning systems, especially through the installation or upgrading of observing, telecommunications and data-processing facilities and services. Steps were taken to establish regional and subregional tropical cyclone advisory and warning centres in the south-west Indian Ocean and the South Pacific and in the south-east Indian Ocean. Training of personnel-in particular tropical cyclone forecasters-was provided to developing countries through technical co-operation, workshops, fellowships, exchange programmes and other schemes and consultancy services with support from United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) regional projects and the WMO Voluntary Co-operation Programme.

World Climate Programme

The World Climate Programme (WCP), established in 1979, continued to aid in applying climate information to human activities, to improve the knowledge of climate processes and to warn of natural and man-made climate change. The components of WCP were the World Climate Applications Programme (WCAP), the World Climate Data Programme (WCDP), the World Climate Impact Programme (WCIP) and the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP).

WCAP continued to publish guidance materials in the priority areas of food, water, energy, and urban and building climatology. The Commission for Climatology initiated the development of the Tropical Urban Climate Experiment (TRUCE), aimed at improving basic understanding of the controlling mechanisms associated with the modification of climate in tropical urban areas. An international symposium (Guadalajara, Mexico) agreed to a plan of action for TRUCE. Work progressed on the standardization and expansion of the Climate Applications Referral System, which contained information on methods for the application of meteorological and climatological data in the solution of problems relating to food production, desertification and drought management, and energy assessment, among others.

In 1990, WCDP included the Data Rescue (DARE) project, which was fully implemented in nine countries; the climate computing (CLICOM) project, which had been installed in some 90 countries; the World Climate Data Information Referral System (INFOCLIMA), which collected and distributed information about the existence and availability of climate data and climatological networks; and the Climate System Monitoring Project, supported by UNEP. In November, a meeting of experts initiated plans for the Climate Change Detection Project, aimed at developing a system for the assessment of chronic or persistent climatological anomalies.

WCIP focused on the application of methods of climate impact assessment, particularly related to climate change. Studies continued on the consequences of drought in developing countries and the monitoring and assessment of the impacts of climatic events such as El Niño. Support was provided for a network of national climate impact studies programmes and for the establishment of the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development.

WCRP, undertaken jointly by WMO and the International Council of Scientific Unions (ICSU), continued activities aimed at providing a quantitative understanding of climate and predictions of global and regional climate changes on all time scales. In 1990, a scientific plan was completed for the Global Energy and Water Cycle Experiment (GEWEX), designed to observe, model and predict variations in the global hydrological cycle. The mid-point of the 10-year Tropical Ocean/Global Atmosphere programme was marked at an international conference (Honolulu, Hawaii, United States, July). Field operations began during the year in the World Ocean Circulation Experiment, a world-wide oceanographic programme led by the ICSU Scientific Committee on Ocean Sciences and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission and organized as a component of WCRP.

Research and development

The tenth session of the Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (Offenbach, Germany, April) welcomed the launch of the Global Atmosphere Watch (GAW) as an essential component for monitoring the atmosphere in the climate change context. As an umbrella system for existing monitoring networks such as the Global Ozone Observing System and the Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network, GAW was to serve as an early warning system for rapid detection of changes in the atmospheric concentration of chemical components, including ozone and greenhouse gases, and to establish reliable long-term data sets to answer questions on major issues related to global change. The WMO World Data Centre for Greenhouse Gases was inaugurated on 1 October at the headquarters of the Japan Meteorological Agency, Tokyo. The facility served to archive global data, past and present, concerning greenhouse gases.

During the year, training workshops were organized on long-range forecasting (Nanjing, China, October) and on the future development of limited-area models for meteorological forecasting (Trieste, Italy, October/November). International symposia were held on assimilating observations in meteorology and oceanography (Clermont-Ferrand, France, July) and on understanding the physical processes controlling droughts (Niamey, Niger, May).

Applications of meteorology

Under its Applications of Meteorology Programme, WMO emphasized agricultural meteorology, aeronautical meteorology and marine meteorology. Under agricultural meteorology, WMO continued to promote sustainable agricultural systems, improve productivity, ensure the efficient use of water, labour and energy, reduce pollution caused by agricultural chemicals and combat the damaging effects of drought, desertification, erosion, deforestation, locust swarms and other environmental threats. Missions were undertaken to Algeria, Benin, Cape Verde, Chad and the Niger, among other countries, to assist member States in improving their agrometeorological services and to support technical co-operation activities. Workshops and seminars during 1990 included a regional workshop on the preparation of practical agroclimatic information (Los Baños, Philippines, March/April); a roving seminar on the use of agrometeorological data and information to assess potential primary production of natural pastures in the rainy season (Yangon, Myanmar, June); and a symposium on the practical applications of agrometeorology to plant protection (Florence, Italy, December).

The Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology held its ninth session (Montreal, Canada, September) conjointly with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) Communications/Meteorology/Operations Divisional Meeting because of the close links between the two bodies. In addition to discussing various issues concerning meteorological support to aviation, the meeting addressed the World Area Forecast System, jointly adopted by WMO and ICAO in 1982, reviewed aeronautical operational requirements and updated specifications for aeronautical climatological information.

The WMO Marine Meteorology and Associated Oceanographic Activities Programme continued to provide meteorological and oceanographic services in support of marine users and to maintain a comprehensive operational global marine meteorological and oceanographic observing system in support of all WMO programmes. During 1990, the programme focused on drawing up a draft new global system for the preparation and dissemination of meteorological forecasts and warnings to shipping on the high seas. In addition, activities focused on further steps in the planning and implementation of a comprehensive global ocean observing system. A series of expert meetings and consultations convened during the year resulted in preparation of a detailed analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of existing ocean observation systems, together with a prospectus for the future global ocean observing system. It was expected that a first draft plan for the global system, suitable for immediate implementation, would be developed during 1991.

Hydrology and water resources

Some $9 million in UNDP-funded technical assistance projects in hydrology and hydrometeorology were executed by WMO in 1990. By year's end, the technology transfer system known as the Hydrological Operational Multipurpose Subprogramme (HOMS), in operation since 1981, consisted of more than 400 components comprising discrete descriptions of items of hydrological technology, such as a computer program for determining areal rainfall amounts, a current meter for measuring river flows, and a guide to making measurements of soil moisture. Those components, contained in the HOMS Reference Manual, were contributed to HOMS by hydrological services in developed countries.

Education and training

During 1990, a total of 182 people participated in seven training events organized by WMO in six countries. WMO also co-sponsored or supported another 17 training events organized by member States. Two WMO-sponsored training events were convened (Harare, Zimbabwe; Turin, Italy) in the area of training instructors.

The network of 17 WMO Regional Meteorological Training Centres continued to provide education and training in meteorology and operational hydrology and related areas. WMO provided assistance to a number of the Centres in the form of training material, visiting scientists and support for instructors and training events. Work continued on the preparation of new training publications and the revision and translation of existing ones from the original into other WMO working languages. The WMO Training Library continued to make educational material available to the training institutions of member countries.

Technical co-operation

In 1990, some 130 countries received technical assistance valued at some $33 million, financed by UNDP (53 per cent), the WMO Voluntary Co-operation Programme (28 per cent), trust funds (16 per cent), and the WMO regular budget (3 per cent).

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1990, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding 41 professionals on technical assistance projects) stood at 291. Of these, 134 drawn from 49 nationalities were in the Professional or higher categories and 157 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The year 1990 was the third year of the tenth financial period for which the Tenth wmo Congress established a maximum expenditure of 170,000,000 Swiss francs (SwF). The wmo Executive Council in June 1989 approved a regular budget of SwF 87,871,700 for the 1990-1991 biennium. In addition, the Executive Council in June 1990 approved supplementary estimates of SwF 4,800,000 for increases in salaries and allowances.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

The International Maritime Organization (IMO), which began work in 1959 as the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, continued in 1990 to develop and promote international shipping standards and treaties designed to improve maritime safety and prevent pollution from ships.

A new international instrument adopted during 1990 aimed at increasing the compensation paid to passengers involved in maritime accidents. Among other new treaty instruments and amendments that were adopted or entered into force during 1990 were measures designed to help combat oil pollution, improve the safety of passenger ships, especially roll-on/roll-off ferries, and institute a satellite-based maritime distress system.

IMO membership increased to 135 in 1990, with the admission of Belize and Sao Tome and Principe. IMO also had two associate members, Hong Kong and Macau.

Activities in 1990

In September, the International Maritime Prize for 1989 was awarded to Professor J. W. Doerffer of Poland, who had been involved in IMO's work since 1970 and had served as Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Ship Design and Equipment from 1978 to 1988. The Prize was awarded annually to the individual or organization judged to have made the most significant contribution to IMO's work and objectives.

The theme for World Maritime Day, which was celebrated at IMO headquarters on 27 September, was "Cleaner Oceans: The Role of IMO in the 1990s".

Prevention of pollution

In November 1990, a two-week conference in London, attended by delegates from 90 countries, culminated in the adoption of the International Convention on Oil Pollution Preparedness, Response and Co-operation, 1990, a new international treaty designed to help Governments combat major oil-pollution incidents. The Convention recognized that in the event of a pollution incident, prompt and effective action was essential. Such action depended upon the establishment of emergency plans on ships and offshore installations and at ports and oil-handling facilities, together with national and regional contingency plans. The Convention aimed to encourage the elaboration of such plans as well as establish a framework for international co-operation in response to pollution emergencies which would enable maximum resources to be mobilized as quickly as possible.

Ship security and safety at sea

The Global Maritime Distress and Safety System (GMDSS), which would make use of satellite communications and other new technologies and would result in the gradual phasing out of radio-telegraphy, was introduced by means of amendments to the International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS), 1974. The amendments entered into force on 1 February 1990. GMDSS was designed to overcome the shortcomings of the existing system, which was a combination of radio-telephony and Morse radio-telegraphy.

On 30 March, a Protocol was adopted to the Athens Convention relating to the Carriage of Passengers and Their Luggage by Sea, 1974. Measures contained in the new Protocol would substantially increase the compensation paid to passengers involved in maritime accidents. The Protocol was elaborated following the capsizing and sinking of the Herald of Free Enterprise, a British roll-on/roll-off car ferry, off the port of Zeebrugge, Belgium, in March 1987, in which 188 people died. After the disaster, the United Kingdom proposed that steps be taken urgently to revise the compensation limits contained in the Athens Convention, which set the maximum compensation limits for death or injury at about $50,000. The new Protocol raised the maximum compensation payable in the event of death or personal injury to some $225,000. The Protocol would enter into force 90 days after being ratified by 10 States.

Also in response to the Herald of Free Enterprise tragedy, amendments to chapter II-1 of the SOLAS Convention entered into force on 29 April. The amendments, which were adopted in 1988, were intended to improve the safety of passenger ships, especially roll-on/roll-off ferries, and would require that masters of all passenger ships be supplied with data enabling them to maintain sufficient intact stability in all service conditions; that cargo loading doors be closed and locked before the ship proceeded on any voyage and remained that way until the ship arrived at its next berth; and that a survey be carried out on passenger ships at periodic intervals not to exceed five years to verify any changes in lightweight displacement and ensure that any increase would not impair the ship's stability or centre of gravity.

Budget

In 1989, the IMO Assembly approved budgetary appropriations of 12.1 million pounds sterling for 1990.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

In 1990, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued to promote the protection and use of intellectual property—both industrial property and copyright—through development co-operation, norm-setting and registration activities. During the year, new activities were undertaken in the area of norm-setting for the protection and enforcement of international property rights, and an increase in international registration activities related to patents, marks and industrial designs was experienced. WIPO also completed work for new treaties or revised regulations related to patent law, copyright and the registration of marks.

The Governing Bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by it, at their twenty-first series of meetings (Geneva, 24 September–2 October), decided to hold the Diplomatic Conference for the Conclusion of a Treaty Supplementing the Paris Convention as Far as Patents are Concerned (Patent Law Treaty) in The Hague, Netherlands, in June 1991.

During 1990, WIPO membership increased to 125, with the accession of Singapore to the 1967 Convention establishing WIPO, amended in 1979. At the end of 1990, the number of States adhering to other treaties administered by WIPO stood at: 100 States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; 84 to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; 24 to the Budapest Treaty on the International Recognition of the Deposit of Micro-organisms for the Purposes of Patent Procedure; 34 to the Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purposes of the Registration of Marks; 35 to the Rome Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms and Broadcasting Organizations; and 45 to the Patent Co-operation Treaty.

Activities in 1990

Development co-operation

WIPO activities to promote development co-operation continued to focus on assisting developing countries to establish or modernize intellectual property systems; facilitate the creation or improvement of national and regional legislation and their enforcement; encourage domestic inventive and creative artistic activity; facilitate the acquisition of foreign patented technology and the access to foreign works protected by copyright; and facilitate the access to and use of technological information contained in patent documents.

During 1990, WIPO organized about 150 training events, which were hosted or organized by 43 developing countries and five intergovernmental organizations, to provide basic knowledge of industrial property or copyright, or specialized information related to patents and trademarks, computerization of industrial property office administration, the use of information data bases, and the use and collection of copyright royalties. WIPO missions were undertaken to about 80 developing countries. During the year, WIPO provided approximately 500 search reports and copies of 3,000 patent documents to requesting Governments and institutions. A total of 105 developing countries and eight intergovernmental organizations benefited from the WIPO development co-operation programme in 1990, which was supported by 62 developing and industrialized countries and eight intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

Setting of norms and standards

Progress continued towards making the protection and enforcement of international property rights more effective throughout the world. Preparations were completed for the Diplomatic Conference for the Conclusion of a Treaty Supplementing the Paris Convention as Far as Patents are Concerned (Patent Law Treaty), to be held in 1991.

Work was finalized on the Model Provisions for Legislation in the Field of Copyright, which were to be published in 1991. The Provisions covered protection, rights protected, limitations of economic rights, duration of protection, ownership of rights, transfer of rights, collective administration of economic rights, and obligations concerning equipment used for acts covered by protection, as well as measures, remedies and sanctions in case of piracy and other infringements.

In September, WIPO published a study containing advice on the collective administration of copyright and neighbouring rights.

During the year, five countries (Austria, Burkina Faso, Czechoslovakia, France, Mexico) ratified or acceded to the Treaty on the International Registration of Audiovisual Works, fulfilling the requirement for its entry into force in February 1991. The Committee of Experts on the Settlement of Intellectual Property Disputes Between States held two sessions (February, October). Discussions focused on the subject-matter of disputes, the parties to disputes, disputes to which a proposed treaty would not apply, consultations, good offices, conciliation and mediation, panel procedure, reporting and arbitration. The Committee of Experts on the Harmonization of Laws for the Protection of Marks, at its second session (June), held discussions, based on the draft Trademark Law Treaty, on the establishment of a Union of the Contracting Parties. The Committee of Experts on the International Protection of Geographical Indications, at its first session (May/June), decided that a preliminary draft treaty should be prepared for consideration. New studies begun by WIPO during 1990 addressed the role of intellectual property in the field of franchising; artificial intelligence; individual contracts in copyright; character merchandizing; and arbitration of disputes in intellectual property, among others.

Registration activities

Patent Co-operation Treaty (PCT). In 1990, 19,159 international applications were filed under PCT, a 29 per cent increase over 1989. With an average of 20.01 countries designated per application, the total number of international applications filed had the effect of over 400,000 national applications.

In July, September and December, the PCT Committee for Administrative and Legal Matters considered amendments to the PCT Regulations. The amendments, which aimed at further streamlining PCT procedures to facilitate the work of applicants and of the offices and authorities concerned, were expected to be submitted to the PCT Assembly for adoption in 1991.

Madrid Agreement. Under the Madrid Agreement concerning the International Registration of Marks, 17,157 international trademark registrations were received in 1990, an increase of 16 per cent over 1989, while the number of renewals was 4,854, a 5 per cent increase. With an average of 10 countries designated per international registration, the total applications filed had the effect of some 200,000 national applications.

The Working Group on the Application of the Madrid Protocol of 1989 held two sessions (March and November), with the aim of preparing new Regulations that would apply under both the Madrid Agreement and the Madrid Protocol, once it entered into force.

The Madrid Assembly approved the implementation of the ROMARIN project, which would lead to the creation of two CD-ROMs containing data from the International Trademark Register on the textual and figurative elements of each international registration.

Hague Agreement. Under the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, 4,292 industrial design deposits, renewals and prolongations were received, a 6 per cent increase over 1989. As growth was expected to continue, plans were made for computerization of operations.

Secretariat

As at 1 January 1990, WIPO employed 335 staff members. Of those, 114, drawn from 40 States, were in the Professional and higher categories and 221 were in the General Service category.

Budget

WIPO's principal income was derived from contributions from member States and international registration services, primarily under PCT and the Madrid Agreement. For the 1990-1991 biennium, WIPO's budgeted income was estimated at 184.2 million Swiss francs (SwF) and budgeted expenditures at SwF 145.8 million.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), established in 1977, continued in 1990 to provide concessional financial assistance to agricultural projects in low-income, food-deficit countries. The Fund aimed to increase food output while retaining environmental sustainability and focusing on support for poor rural women. By year's end, IFAD had committed a cumulative total of more than $3,100 million of its own resources to 292 projects in 93 developing countries.

The IFAD Executive Board, during three regular sessions in 1990 (April, October, December), approved 27 loans for 26 projects, including three under the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification (SPA), and 37 technical assistance grants. The Board also approved a programme of work for 1991 at a level of 235 million special drawing rights (SDR) for loans and grants under the regular programme and endorsed SDR 17.2 million for the SPA programme of work.

IFAD membership stood at 144 in 1990, with non-original membership pending for Namibia. Of the current members, 21 were in Category I (developed countries), 12 in Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and 111 in Category III (other developing countries).

Resources

Although agreement was reached in 1989 setting the third replenishment of IFAD's resources at $522.9 million, after receipt of additional pledges from member States of Category III, which Category I countries had agreed to match on a three-to-one basis, pledges as at January 1990 amounted to $566.6 million. Category I member States contributed $186.6 million in core contributions and $191.5 million in supplementary contributions; Category II members, $124.4 million; and Category III members, $64.1 million.

Activities in 1990

During the year, new IFAD loans and technical assistance grants under both the Regular Programme and SPA totalled SDR 237.5 million ($322.5 million), including SDR 226.8 million ($307.6 million) in 27 loans and SDR 10.7 million ($15 million) in 37 grants. The Fund's regular resources financed 23 loans totalling SDR 202.5 million ($273.7 million) and 24 grants totalling SDR 9.2 million ($12.9 million). The balance of three loans totalling SDR 24.3 million ($33.9 million) and eight grants totalling SDR 1.3 million ($1.8 million) were financed under SPA. An additional five technical assistance grants, totalling SDR 0.22 million ($0.31 million), were provided under the IFAD/ non-governmental organizations extended Co-operation Programme.

The amount of resources approved for new loans and grants in 1990 was the largest recorded by IFAD since 1983 and represented an 11 per cent increase over the SDR 213.8 approved in 1989. The average size of IFAD loans for new projects was SDR 8.7 million ($11.8 million) in 1990, the same as in 1989. The number of Fund recipients in 1990 totalled 93, with the provision during the year of the first IFAD loan to Seychelles.

During the year, 23.4 per cent of Regular Programme loans (39.5 percent in 1989) were approved for nine projects totalling SDR 211.7 million ($286.6 million) in the Africa region. Loans to the Asia region, which had commanded more than one third of Regular Programme lending since 1978, fell to 26.5 per cent in 1990. Latin America and the Caribbean increased its share of IFAD lending in 1990 to 28.9 per cent for five projects, compared with only 8.3 per cent for two projects in 1989.

In addition to maintaining an appropriate balance in its regional allocations, IFAD endeavoured to respond to the needs of three priority groups: the 44 countries of sub-Saharan Africa affected by drought and desertification; the 41 countries designated as least developed by the General Assembly (see PART THREE, Chapter I); and the 68 low-income, food-deficit countries identified as such by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). During 1990, sub-Saharan African countries received 34.9 per cent of IFAD loans under both the Regular Programme and SPA; the least developed countries, 21.2 per cent; and the low-income, food-deficit countries, 56.8 per cent.

Secretariat

At the end of 1990, IFAD's staff totalled 207, of whom 81 were in the Professional category and above and 126 were in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the IFAD Regular Programme for 1990 was $120.9 million, consisting of $89.2 million of investment income, including gains on the sale of investments of $0.9 million, and $31.7 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total operational and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $39.4 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $40.5 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $80.9 million.

Total revenue under SPA for 1990 was $14.2 million, consisting of $13.9 million of investment income and $0.3 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total expenses for the year amounted to $2.5 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $3.8 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year was $11.7 million.

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued in 1990 to promote industrialization through technical assistance and other activities in support of sectoral, regional and global industrial operations, strategies and investment. During the year, UNIDO undertook special multidisciplinary programmes related to the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA), 1980-1990, which included assistance to the least developed countries, industrial co-operation among developing countries, integration of women in industrial development, and co-operation with industrial enterprises and non-governmental organizations. The UNIDO Industrial Development Board, the organization's 53-member policy-making body, held its sixth (28 May-1 June) and seventh (5-9 November) sessions at UNIDO headquarters in Vienna.

As at 31 December 1990, UNIDO membership stood at 151. During the year Liberia and Myanmar became members and the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic became a single State, as did the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Industrial strategies and operations

In 1990, UNIDO implemented a total of 1,896 technical assistance projects with a value of $159.6 million. Of that total, Africa (including the African Arab States) received 34.9 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 31 per cent; the Arab States, 9.3 per cent; Latin America and the Caribbean, 7 per cent; and Europe, 3.3 per cent. Interregional and global projects accounted for 19.6 per cent. The level of overall project approvals totalled $162.7 million, compared with $171.5 million in 1989. The $8.8 million decline was due in part to the fluctuation in size and composition of pledges to the Industrial Development Fund following a sudden change in the pledging pattern of some donors and in part to the inclusion of large unprecedented approvals under trust funds in 1989.

UNIDO industrial policy and perspectives activities during 1990 in support of technical co-operation included briefing and data inputs for programming missions and project formulation, extending policy advice for industrial review and planning, and improving data preparation and statistical control in developing countries. Emphasis was placed on the environment, industrial rehabilitation and mobilization of financial resources.

Implementation of industrial operations

Technical co-operation expenditures for agro-industries amounted to $16.9 million, which supported 152 projects. Some 54 per cent of the total implementation was financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Activities related to agro-based industries focused on the production of value-added agro-based products, such as food and textiles, for local markets and on the improvement of quality standardization and controls for exports.

In the chemical industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $33.7 million for the implementation of 351 projects. Some 67 per cent of the total implementation was financed from UNDP resources. Particular attention was paid to ensuring that technical co-operation projects had a favourable impact on the environment, contributed to energy conservation and took into account other priority areas contained in the 1990-1995 medium-term plan. While some projects were primarily designed to reduce pollution and encourage recycling, others combined pollution reduction with saving energy.

As to metallurgical industries, technical co-operation expenditures amounted to $9.3 million for 120 projects. Some 81 per cent of the total implementation was financed from UNDP resources. During the year, new programmes were elaborated and existing activities reoriented to changing requirements in the metallurgical industry in developing countries where heavy investments had been made in the 1960s and 1970s. The industries in those countries required rehabilitation, taking into account energy and environmental aspects as well as the need for product diversification and the application of new technologies. The thrust of UNIDO technical co-operation in the sector reflected new trends in the areas of spare parts production, computer applications, industrial mineral processing and testing, waste management and utilization, and recycling.

In the engineering industries sector, technical co-operation expenditures for 209 projects totalled $20.2 million, of which 78 per cent was financed by UNDP resources. During the year, UNIDO focused on the development of multidisciplinary engineering activities. Main areas of technical co-operation continued to be the application of appropriate techniques to rural industrialization; integration of electro-mechanical and electronic aspects in subsectoral development; metal works and machine tools; transport equipment; equipment development in the energy sector; advancement of manufacturing value added through process technology and packaging techniques; repair and maintenance; and the introduction and application of advanced technologies.

Expenditures on technical co-operation for projects in industrial planning amounted to $10.6 million, some 88 per cent of which was financed from UNDP resources. A total of 115 projects were under implementation in 1990. There was further concentration on approaches relating to the strategic management of restructuring and development of the industrial sector; enhancement of the productive performance of the industrial sector and subsectors; and decision support systems for planning and policy formulation.

In the area of institutional infrastructure, a total of 271 technical co-operation projects were implemented or under implementation, amounting to expenditures of $19.4 million, of which some 83 per cent was financed from UNDP resources. The unprecedented level of technical co-operation delivery in 1990 reflected the growing demand from developing countries for UNIDO assistance through multidisciplinary programmes in: institutions and infrastructure for the promotion and development of small- and medium-scale industries; entrepreneurship development and privatization; rural industrial development; industrial research and development institutions and industrial information services; and standardization, quality control and metrology. Assistance was also provided to institutions promoting industrial development, including industrial sub-contracting, industrial associations and chambers of commerce and industry.

Expenditures for 98 technical co-operation projects in industrial management and rehabilitation totalled some $7.9 million, of which 79 per cent was financed from UNDP resources. In 1990, particular attention was given to the development of integrated approaches to technical co-operation, which involved strengthening management and local consultancy capabilities, introducing improved methodologies and carrying out diagnostic and restructuring operations.

A total of $5.9 million was spent on feasibility studies in 1990. Some 63 per cent of the total was financed under UNDP resources and 120 projects were at various stages of implementation. During the year, the scope of activities related to feasibility and pre-feasibility studies widened, and that was reflected in increased co-operation with private enterprises, assistance provided for enterprise rehabilitation, co-operation with industrial development financing institutions, and the promotion of projects in the industrial services sector, including investment advisory services.

Expenditures for fellowships and other training components in all technical co-operation projects amounted to $23.2 million, of which $16.1 million was spent on fellowships and study tours and $7.1 million on group training activities and meetings. Some 16 per cent of the total expenditures for 141 projects was financed from UNDP resources. During the year, priority was given to industrial training infrastructure and entrepreneurship development.

Industrial promotion

In 1990, UNIDO industrial promotion activities focused on industrial investment, the system of consultations and transfer of technology. UNIDO promoted 170 industrial investment projects during the year, with a total value of $699 million. Investors' forums were held for the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States, the Economic Community of West African States, the Arab countries, Poland and Yugoslavia.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1980-1990)

In 1990, 32 projects amounting to $4.66 million were approved under the technical co-operation component of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA), 1980-1990, of which $1.97 million was implemented. A major activity was the preparation of the programme for the second IDDA (1991-2000), including development of a framework and guidelines for action at the national and subregional levels. Prepared jointly with the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Commission for Africa, the document emphasized the basic principles and the twin objectives of the second IDDA: self-reliant and self-sustaining industrialization. (See also PART TWO, Chapter V.)

Industrial co-operation among developing countries

Development of programmes and projects for industrial co-operation among developing countries continued in 1990. Interregional, regional and subregional meetings and workshops addressed enterprise-to-enterprise co-operation (Cameroon, April), industrial joint ventures (Tunisia, October) and industrial utilization of medicinal plants (China, October). Eight operational projects promoted technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC), and a new computerized data base was established for economic and technical co-operation among developing countries. UNIDO continued to intensify its efforts to recruit experts from developing countries for its technical co-operation projects. During 1990, 891 nationals from developing countries were recruited, representing 36 per cent of all experts and consultants on contract during the year. Efforts were also made to ensure that bidders' lists included companies from developing countries, resulting in an increase in orders for equipment placed with vendors and manufacturers in developing countries.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1990, 1,392 staff members were serving at UNIDO headquarters. Of those, 458 were in the Professional and higher categories and 934 in the General Service and related categories. During 1990, a total of 2,490 experts were appointed as project personnel. UNIDO was represented in the field by 39 UNIDO Country Directors (UCDs) in developing countries, who worked with UNDP Resident Representatives. At the end of the year, 29 UCDs were financed by UNDP, nine from the operational budget and one from voluntary contributions. They were assisted by 71 Junior Professional Officers paid for by 11 member Governments: Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

Budget

UNIDO expenditures totalled $255.5 million in 1990, comprising $159.6 million for technical co-operation programmes and $95.9 million for headquarters expenditures. The UNIDO General Conference, in 1989, had approved a regular budget for the 1990-1991 biennium based on member States being assessed in both United States dollars and Austrian schillings (A); net appropriations amounting to $23,895,100 plus A 1,718,425,770 (total equivalent of $156,718,100) were approved.

Chapter XVIII

Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO) and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GALT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana, Cuba, November 1947-March 1948) drew up a charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). The members of the Conference's Preparatory Committee also negotiated tariffs among themselves and drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Since the charter was never accepted, ITO was not established. However, GATT-the only multilateral treaty that embodied reciprocal rights and obligations and laid down agreed rules for international trade-entered into force on 1 January 1948 with 23 contracting parties; ICITO provided the GATT secretariat.

By 31 December 1990, GATT membership had risen to 100 with the addition of Bolivia, Costa Rica, Tunisia and Venezuela during the year. In May, the GATT Council granted observer status to the USSR and established a working party to renegotiate the terms of accession of Poland in the light of that country's transition to a market economy.

Multilateral trade negotiations

Uruguay Round

The Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which was launched in Punta del Este, Uruguay, in 1986 [YUN 1986, p.12101, was the eighth round of such negotiations held under GATT auspices. The Round was unprecedented both in breadth of coverage (15 negotiating areas) and participation (107 countries).

In accordance with a 1989 agreement, the Ministerial Meeting to conclude the Uruguay Round was held in Brussels, Belgium, from 3 to 7 December 1990. The Ministers had before them a "draft Final Act" containing all the texts under negotiation as well as commentaries on those areas in which no agreed basis for negotiation had been arrived at. Although rapid progress was made in many negotiating areas, such as services, textiles and clothing, and certain non-tariff measures (preshipment inspection and rules of origin), negotiating positions remained rigid with regard to agriculture, making it impossible to conclude the Round as scheduled. Negotiations would therefore continue in 1991 in Geneva.

Trade Negotiations Committee

The most senior officiating body of the Uruguay Round was the Trade Negotiations Committee (TNC), which oversaw the Round as a whole, as well as the work of the other two principal officiating bodies-the Group of Negotiations on Goods (GNG) and the Group of Negotiations on Services (GNS). The Surveillance Body also reported to TNC.

Group of Negotiations on Goods. GNG continued in 1990 to oversee the work of 14 negotiating groups addressing tariffs; non-tariff measures; natural-resource-based products; textiles and clothing; agriculture; tropical products; the review of GATT articles; multinational trade negotiation agreements and arrangements; safeguards; subsidies and countervailing measures; trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights; trade-related investment measures; dispute settlement; and the functioning of the GATT system.

Group of Negotiations on Services. Work in GNS focused on negotiation of a framework agreement and the development of annexes to cope with the specific circumstances of individual services sectors. GNS focused on several objectives in 1990, including ways to address the increasing participation of developing countries in the services sector. In May, GNS established a series of working parties to consider the individual sectors of telecommunications, financial services, transport services, construction and engineering services, labour mobility and audiovisual services.

Surveillance Body. The Surveillance Body, which was established to maintain a standstill on new trade-restrictive measures and to orchestrate the progressive dismantling or "rollback" of existing illegal trade restrictions, received only one formal notification related to possible breaches of standstill in 1990, bringing to 25 the number of standstill notifications received since the Uruguay Round began in 1986. During the same period, 35 instances of proposed legislation or other trade measures had been brought to the attention of the Surveillance Body under its "early warning system". With regard to the process of rollback, by the end of 1990, consultations had taken place on 15 of the 20 requests tabled by eight participants.

Implementation of the Tokyo Round agreements

GATT committees continued in 1990 to oversee the agreements concluded under the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations (1973-1979). That Round had secured a major package of tariff concessions, a series of new agreements on non-tariff measures and an improved legal framework for GATT. The GATT committees supervising those agreements dealt with tariffs, anti-dumping practices, subsidies and countervailing measures, government procurement, technical barriers to trade, customs valuation, import licensing, bovine meat, dairy products and civil aircraft.

Other GATT activities

Contracting Parties regular session

The forty-sixth annual session of the GATT Contracting Parties was held on 12 and 13 December 1990. They undertook their annual year-end review of the Council of Representatives, the Committee on Trade and Development and other GATT bodies.

Council of Representatives

The Council of Representatives, GATT's highest body between sessions of the Contracting Parties, continued in 1990 to carry out the day-to-day task of managing the multilateral trading system at the same time that new and improved rules were being negotiated in the Uruguay Round.

Trade policy review

During the year, the Council held nine special meetings in its first series of reviews of the trade policies and practices of GATT members under the Trade Policy Review Mechanism, established in April 1989. The Mechanism allowed the Contracting Parties to collectively assess and monitor on a regular basis all aspects of the trade policies and practices of each individual member, thereby enhancing transparency in the multilateral trading system. In 1990, the Council conducted reviews of Colombia and Sweden (5-7 June) and of Canada, Hong Kong, Japan and New Zealand (30 July-3 August).

Trade and development

The Committee on Trade and Development, one of GATT's principal standing committees, continued in 1990 to review, discuss and negotiate issues of trade interest to developing countries. The Committee convened two meetings in 1990 (June, October), at which it carried out reviews of the technical assistance provided by GATT to developing countries; developments in international trade and the Uruguay Round; implementation of the provisions of Part IV of the General Agreement and the "Enabling Clause", which provided for more favourable treatment of developing countries in various areas of trade policy; and the work of the Sub-Committee on the Trade of Least Developed Countries.

Conciliation and settlement of disputes

In 1990, GATT conciliation mechanisms successfully settled trade disputes with greater dispatch, due to the introduction in 1989 of a streamlined dispute-settlement system. During the year, a number of complaints were taken up by dispute resolution panels: a Japanese complaint regarding anti-dumping duties on products assembled in the European Community (EC); a complaint from Canada regarding countervailing duties imposed by the United States on fresh, chilled and frozen pork; a United States complaint about Thailand's restrictions on the importation of and internal taxes on cigarettes; complaints by Australia, New Zealand and the United States about restrictions placed by the Republic of Korea on imports of beef; EC and Australian complaints against United States restrictions on sugar importation; EC and Canadian complaints regarding United States customs user fees; United States complaints against Canadian import restrictions on ice cream and yoghurt and the import and sale of alcoholic drinks; a Brazilian complaint regarding United States import restrictions on some of its products; a United States complaint regarding Norwegian restrictions on imports of apples and pears; a Mexican complaint concerning United States restrictions on tuna imports; and a complaint against German restrictions on circulation of Austrian lorries.

Technical assistance

GATT provided assistance to developing countries in all areas of its work and in 1990 was implementing a reinforced programme to facilitate more effective participation by developing countries in the Uruguay Round. The GATT secretariat participated in 14 national seminars in 1990, bringing the total number of national seminars organized in Africa, Asia and Latin America since the start of the Uruguay Round to 58. In addition, seven regional or subregional seminars and workshops were organized during the year.

Training programmes

Between 1955 and 1990, GATT trade policy courses were attended by a total of 1,195 officials from 114 countries and 10 regional organizations. The courses, held in English, French and Spanish, were organized in Geneva twice a year, with 24 fellowships granted for each course. In 1990, two courses were held-the sixty-ninth in Spanish and the seventieth in English.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre (ITC), established by GATT in 1964 and jointly operated with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development since 1968, continued to provide trade information and trade promotion advisory services to developing countries. In 1990, ITC organized two trade promotion sessions and produced a number of market studies, trade promotion handbooks and training materials, and a quarterly magazine. The Centre's technical co-operation activities amounted to $35.7 million during the year, with some 121 national, 59 regional and 113 interregional projects under implementation (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Financial arrangements

Member countries of GATT contributed to the budget in accordance with a scale assessed on the basis of each country's share in the total trade of the contracting parties and associated Governments. The budget for 1990 was 74,571,000 Swiss francs.

NOTE: For further information on GATT, see GATT Activities 1990: An Annual Review of the Work of the GATT, published by GATT.

GATT's successor organization-the World Trade Organization (WTO)-came into being on 1 January 1995, following the conclusion of the Uruguay Round.

³Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

⁴Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. As from that date, the Federal Republic of Germany has acted in the United Nations under the designation Germany.

⁵On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

⁶On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

⁷Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961 and Zanzibar on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

⁸Yemen was admitted to the United Nations on 30 September 1947 and Democratic Yemen on 14 December 1967. On 22 May 1990, the two countries merged and have since been represented as one Member.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971 and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles:

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II

MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.
3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.
2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.
3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.
4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.
5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.
2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.
2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

Chapter IV

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.
2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.
2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.
3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.
4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

Chapter V

AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.
