on 5 November, four Turkish fighter planes flew straight across the buffer zone at an altitude of 200 metres and entered some 300 metres into the government-controlled area before returning to the northern part of the island.

Both sides continued to upgrade their military and mechanized forces. The equipment of the Turkish forces was modernized with replacement tanks and the introduction of large-calibre, self-propelled artillery pieces. The Government of Cyprus plan to purchase the S-300 air defence system (see above) continued to draw a strong reaction from Turkey and the Turkish Cypriot side.

UNFICYP continued efforts to have the package of proposals for the reduction of tension along the ceasefire lines accepted. In late June, to facilitate an agreement, it presented to both sides a revised package of unmanning proposals that took into account their expressed preoccupations. The revised proposals focused on Nicosia and Dherenia as the areas of close proximity most prone to generate tension; they were based on detailed on-site reviews with both sides and included a new approach of "lateral unmanning". The lateral unmanning approach would increase the distance between positions of the opposing forces by the unmanning of guard posts alternating diagonally between the two ceasefire lines. The proposal for the prohibition of loaded weapons along the ceasefire lines and the proposed code of conduct were amalgamated since both proposals aimed at raising the threshold before firearms were used. Despite a further 21 meetings with the military authorities on both sides, no agreement had been reached.

The latest position of the National Guard was that reducing tension along the ceasefire lines would best be achieved by implementing the prohibition of loaded weapons and the code of conduct. It did not wish to unman in areas such as Nicosia where the security of Greek Cypriot civilians might be affected. On 23 October, the Turkish forces declared their willingness to accept the UNFICYP revised package, provided the National Guard did likewise. UNFICYP would continue its efforts to reach an agreement on the proposed package of proposals.

UNFICYP movement in the northern part of the island continued to be restricted. On several occasions, humanitarian patrols were obstructed and vehicles searched, and on one occasion a humanitarian officer was arrested and held for several hours. UNFICYP continued to encourage contact and cooperation between the two communities and to build mutual trust through actively promoting bicomunal events and activities. It organized, in cooperation with various diplomatic missions, a bicomunal fair on 27 September attended by some 3,900 Greek and Turkish Cypriots. A large number of bicomunal meetings were also held in the Ledra Palace Hotel, located in the buffer zone in Nicosia, under the auspices of UNFICYP and diplomatic missions or on the initiative of Greek and Turkish Cypriot non-governmental and professional organizations representing a wide spectrum of disciplines and interests.

On 28 and 31 July, the leaders of the two communities met jointly with the Deputy Special Representative to discuss humanitarian issues of common concern, including the issue of missing persons. On 31 July, they agreed to provide each other with all the information at their disposal on the location of graves of Greek and Turkish Cypriot missing persons, to designate a person who would meet to exchange that information and to arrange for the return of the remains. On 30 September, the leader of the Greek Cypriot community informed Mr. Feissel that his side was ready to proceed as agreed on 31 July. The Turkish Cypriot side indicated that it would be ready by the end of November. At their 31 July meeting, the two leaders also reached agreement on a number of other humanitarian issues, which had since been implemented.

The Secretary-General recommended that the Security Council extend the mandate of the Force for a further period of six months, until 30 June 1998.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 December [meeting 3846], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1146 (1997). The draft [S/1997/997] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 8 December 1997 on the United Nations operation in Cyprus,

Welcoming also the report of the Secretary-General of 12 December 1997 on his mission of good offices in Cyprus,

Noting that the Government of Cyprus has agreed that in view of the prevailing conditions on the island it is necessary to keep the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus beyond 31 December 1997,

Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions on Cyprus, in particular resolutions 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, 367(1975) of 12 March 1975, 939(1994) of 29 July 1994 and 1117(1997) of 27 June 1997,

Noting with concern that tensions along the ceasefire lines remain high, despite the further decrease in the number of serious incidents in the last six months, and that restrictions to freedom of movement of the Force have increased,

Reiterating its concern that negotiations on a comprehensive political solution have yet to make progress, despite the efforts made at the two rounds of direct negotiations, held in July and August 1997, between the leaders of the two communities, at the initiative of the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to extend the mandate of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus for a further period ending on 30 June 1998;

2. Reminds both sides of their obligations to prevent any violence directed against Force personnel, to co-operate fully with the Force and to ensure its complete freedom of movement;

3. Underlines the importance of early agreement to the reciprocal measures for the reduction of tension along the ceasefire lines proposed and subsequently adapted by the Force, notes the fact that only one side has so far accepted this package, calls for early agreement to and rapid implementation of reciprocal measures, and encourages the Force to continue its efforts towards that end;

4. Calls upon the leaders of the two communities to continue the discussions on security issues begun on 26 September 1997;

5. Calls upon the military authorities on both sides to refrain from any action, particularly in the vicinity of the buffer zone, which would exacerbate tensions;

6. Reiterates its grave concern at the continuing excessive and increasing levels of military forces and armaments in the Republic of Cyprus and the rate at which they are being expanded, upgraded and modernized, including by the introduction of sophisticated weaponry, and the lack of progress towards any significant reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus, which threaten to raise tensions both on the island and in the region and complicate efforts to negotiate an overall political settlement;

7. Calls upon all concerned to commit themselves to a reduction in defence spending and a reduction in the number of foreign troops in the Republic of Cyprus to help restore confidence between the parties and as a first step towards the withdrawal of non-Cypriot forces as described in the set of ideas, stresses the importance of eventual demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus as an objective in the context of an overall comprehensive settlement, and encourages the Secretary-General to continue to promote efforts in this direction;

8. Reiterates that the status quo is unacceptable, and stresses its support for the Secretary-General's mission of good offices and the importance of concerted efforts to work with the Secretary-General towards an overall comprehensive settlement;

9. Expresses its full support for the intention of the Secretary-General to resume in March 1998 the opened process of negotiations initiated by him in July 1997 and aimed at achieving a comprehensive settlement;

10. Calls upon the leaders of the two communities to commit themselves to that process of negotiations and to cooperate actively and constructively with the Secretary-General and his Special Adviser on Cyprus, and urges all States to lend their full support to these efforts;

11. Calls upon, in this context, all parties concerned to create a climate for reconciliation and genuine mutual confidence on both sides and to avoid any actions which might increase tension, including further expansion of military forces and armaments;

12. Reaffirms its position that a Cyprus settlement must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded, and comprising two politically equal communities as described in the relevant Security Council resolutions, in a bicomunal and bi-zonal federation, and that such a settlement must exclude union in whole or in part with any other country or any form of partition or secession;

13. Welcomes the ongoing efforts by the Force to implement its humanitarian mandate in respect of Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in the northern part of the island, and Turkish Cypriots living in the southern part, and welcomes also the progress in the implementation of recommendations arising out of the humanitarian review undertaken by the Force in 1995, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General;

14. Welcomes also the agreement reached between the leaders of the two communities on 31 July 1997 on the issue of missing persons in Cyprus;

15. Welcomes further the efforts of the United Nations and others concerned to promote the holding of bicomunal events so as to build cooperation, trust and mutual respect between the two communities, commends the increase in such bicomunal activity in the last six months, acknowledges the recent cooperation from all concerned on both sides to that end, and strongly encourages them to take further steps to facilitate such bicomunal events and to ensure that they take place in conditions of safety and security;

16. Recognizes that the decision of the European Union concerning the opening of accession negotiations with Cyprus is an important development;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report by 10 June 1998 on the implementation of the present resolution;

18. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

Financing

During its resumed fifty-first session, the General Assembly considered the financial performance report of UNFICYP for the period 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996 [A/51/755 & Corr.1], the proposed budget for the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/51/755/Add.1], which amounted to $50,320,400 gross ($48,180,600 net), and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions [A/51/851 & Corr.1]. On 13 June [meeting 101], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/921], adopted resolution 51/235 without vote [agenda item 132].

Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling Security Council resolution 186(1964) of 4 March 1964, by which the Council established the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1092(1996) of 23 December 1996,

Recalling also its resolution 50/236 of 7 June 1996 on the financing of the Force,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force that are not covered by voluntary contributions are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force by certain Governments,

Noting the agreement of the Government of Greece that, for the period under consideration, a proportion of its annual voluntary contribution will serve to cover, in part, the United Nations obligations regarding termination benefits payable to locally employed civilian staff,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Expressing its appreciation to all those Member States and observer States which have made voluntary contributions to the Special Account established for the financing of the Force for the period prior to 16 June 1993,

Noting that voluntary contributions were insufficient to cover all of the costs of the Force, including those incurred by troop-contributing Governments prior to 16 June 1993, and regretting the absence of an adequate response to appeals for voluntary contributions, including that contained in the letter dated 17 May 1994 from the Secretary-General to all Member States,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus as at 13 May 1997, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 13,326,013 United States dollars, representing 15 per cent of the total assessed contributions from 16 June 1993 to the period ending 30 June 1997, notes that some 23 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus an amount of 48,000,800 dollars gross (45,877,800 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, inclusive of an amount of 1,939,100 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations and an amount of 1,131,000 dollars for the cost of termination benefits for locally employed civilians relating to the period of employment after 15 June 1993;

8. 9. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 8 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,123,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

10. Decides to continue to maintain as separate the account established for the period prior to 16 June 1993 for the Force, invites Member States to make voluntary contributions to that account, and requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts in appealing for voluntary contributions to the account;

11. Calls upon Member States to make voluntary contributions to the Special Account for the Force to enable the United Nations to meet its remaining obligations with respect to the locally employed civilian staff;

12. Notes the agreement of the Government of Greece to earmark, on an ad hoc basis, for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, an amount of 2,768,667 dollars from its annual voluntary contribution of 6.5 million dollars to the Force, for this purpose;

13. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to direct the Office of Internal Oversight Services to evaluate the events and circumstances that led to United Nations responsibility for termination pay to the locally employed civilians in the Force, including all aspects of accountability and responsibility of United Nations staff, and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus".

On 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/456, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item on the financing of UNFICYP and relevant reports at the resumed fifty-second (1998) session of the Assembly.

Cooperation with OSCE

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/57 [YUN 1996, p. 374], the Secretary-General, in an October 1997 report [A/52/450], described cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE).

During the year, cooperation and coordination between the two organizations had further improved, he stated.

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), together with OSCE and the International Organization for Migration (IOM), organized the first meeting (Geneva, 2 July) of the Steering Group of the 1996 Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and Relevant Neighbouring States [YUN 1996, p. 373]. In the follow-up to the Regional Conference, UNHCR and OSCE had further enhanced cooperation on questions related to human and minority rights, conflict prevention, conflict resolution and the return and reintegration of refugees and displaced persons in the CIS countries. UNHCR was also working with OSCE in preparing for the return of Ossetians to their homes in Georgia.

In January, informal high-level tripartite consultations were held in Geneva between the United Nations, OSCE and the Council of Europe. Issues discussed were the former Yugoslavia, the Caucasus, Central Asia and the follow-up to the 1996 Regional Conference. Participants agreed that, despite the ongoing cooperation in the regions under discussion, there was room for further mutually supportive action, particularly in the areas of democracy-building, the rule of law, constitutional matters and minority rights.

In the former Yugoslavia, the United Nations and OSCE had cooperated closely in a range of matters, including elections in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the dispute over the Brcko area, legal reforms and training of local police (see above). In Albania, cooperation between OSCE and various UN agencies had become imperative in early 1997 (see above). Cooperation between OSCE, the World Food Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund had been crucial in ensuring prompt delivery of humanitarian assistance to needy Albanians.

OSCE had cooperated in various spheres with the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES), especially in the matter of confidence-building and reconciliation.

In Georgia, the Secretary-General's Special Representative was in frequent contact with the OSCE Head of Mission at Tbilisi. On 25 April, a memorandum of understanding concerning the UN office for the protection and promotion of human rights in Abkhazia, Georgia, was signed by the Officer-in-Charge of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the OSCE Secretary-General. Under the memorandum, OSCE agreed to deploy to the office a member of its mission in Georgia who was experienced in human rights work.

In Tajikistan, the United Nations and OSCE had continued to cooperate closely for an early political solution to the conflict there. The inter-Tajik negotiating process, where OSCE representatives acted as observers, resulted in the signing on 27 June of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan. (See PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November [meeting 55], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/22 [draft: A/52/L.38 & Add.1] by recorded vote (126-0-1) [agenda item 40]. Before its adoption, a vote (104-1-17) was taken on an amendment introduced by Azerbaijan [A/52/L.39] by which a phrase was added to paragraph 16 stating specifically that Nagorny Karabakh was a region of Azerbaijan.

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/50 [YUN 1996, p. 376], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/52/427 & Corr.1], reproducing replies from five States (Algeria, Jordan, Lebanon, Malta, Russian Federation) to his note verbale requesting their views on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/605], adopted resolution 52/43 without vote [agenda item 76].

Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, including resolution 51/50 of 10 December 1996,

Reaffirming the primary role of the Mediterranean countries in strengthening and promoting peace, security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region,

Bearing in mind all the previous declarations and commitments, as well as all the initiatives taken by the riparian countries at the recent summits, ministerial meetings and various forums concerning the question of the Mediterranean region,

Recognizing the indivisible character of security in the Mediterranean and that the enhancement of cooperation among Mediterranean countries with a view to promoting the economic and social development of all peoples of the region will contribute significantly to stability, peace and security in the region,

Recognizing also the efforts made so far and the determination of the Mediterranean countries to intensify the process of dialogue and consultations with a view to resolving the problems existing in the Mediterranean region and to eliminating the causes of tension and the consequent threat to peace and security, and their growing awareness of the need for further joint efforts to strengthen economic, social, cultural and environmental cooperation in the region,

Recognizing further that prospects for closer Euro-Mediterranean cooperation in all spheres can be enhanced by positive developments worldwide, in particular in Europe, in the Maghreb and in the Middle East,

Reaffirming the responsibility of all States to contribute to the stability and prosperity of the Mediterranean region and their commitment to respect the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the peace negotiations in the Middle East, which should be of a comprehensive nature and represent an appropriate framework for the peaceful settlement of contentious issues in the region,

Expressing its concern at the persistent tension and continuing military activities in parts of the Mediterranean that hinder efforts to strengthen security and cooperation in the region,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that security in the Mediterranean is closely linked to European security as well as to international peace and security;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the continuing efforts by Mediterranean countries to contribute actively to the elimination of all causes of tension in the region and to the promotion of just and lasting solutions to the persistent problems of the region through peaceful means, thus ensuring the withdrawal of foreign forces of occupation and respecting the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all countries of the Mediterranean and the right of peoples to self-determination, and therefore calls for full adherence to the principles of non-interference, non-intervention, non-use of force or threat of use of force and the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with the Charter and the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Commends the efforts by the Mediterranean countries in meeting common challenges through co-ordinated overall responses, based on a spirit of multi-lateral partnership, towards the general objective of turning the Mediterranean basin into an area of dialogue, exchanges and cooperation, guaranteeing peace, stability and prosperity, and encourages them to strengthen such efforts through, inter alia, a lasting multilateral and action-oriented cooperative dialogue among States of the region;

4. Recognizes that the elimination of the economic and social disparities in levels of development and other obstacles, as well as respect and greater understanding among cultures, in the Mediterranean area will contribute to enhancing peace, security and cooperation among Mediterranean countries through the existing forums;

5. Calls upon all States of the Mediterranean region that have not yet done so to adhere to all the multilaterally negotiated legal instruments related to the field of disarmament and non-proliferation, thus creating the necessary conditions for strengthening peace and cooperation in the region;

6. Encourages all States of the region to favour the necessary conditions for strengthening the confidence-building measures among them by promoting genuine openness and transparency on all military matters, by participating, inter alia, in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures and by providing accurate data and information to the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms;

7. Encourages the Mediterranean countries to strengthen further their cooperation in combating terrorism, in all its forms and manifestations, which poses a serious threat to peace, security and stability in the region and therefore to the improvement of the current political, economic and social situation;

8. Invites all States of the region to address, through various forms of cooperation, problems and threats posed to the region, such as terrorism, international crime and illicit arms transfers, as well as illicit drug production, consumption and trafficking, which jeopardize the friendly relations among States, hinder the development of international cooperation and result in the destruction of human rights, fundamental freedoms and the democratic basis of pluralistic society;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on means to strengthen security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region".

Chapter VI

Middle East

The Middle East peace process, which began in Madrid, Spain, in 1991, stagnated in 1997, despite efforts to get it back on track. The Protocol concerning the redeployment of the Israeli Defence Forces in Hebron, concluded in January, and other Israeli measures, including the release of all female Palestinian prisoners, inspired hope for a revival of the peace talks. However, Israel's decision to start construction of a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim south of East Jerusalem in March—the first since Israel had announced in August 1996 that it would cancel the restrictions on the building of settlements imposed in 1992 by the previous Government—thwarted that positive trend and led to a dangerous and lengthy stalemate. Terrorist bombings in Israel, which took the lives of innocent people, further shook the confidence between Israelis and Palestinians and deepened the crisis. The Israel-Syrian Arab Republic and Israel-Lebanon tracks of negotiations were also stalled.

In view of Israel's renewed settlement activities, the Security Council met twice in March, but failed to adopt the two draft resolutions before it, which would have requested Israel to stop construction of the Jebel Abu Ghneim settlement, as well as other similar activities. In the absence of action by the Council, the General Assembly, pursuant to its resolution 377 A (V) of 3 November 1950 entitled "Uniting for Peace" [YUN 1950, p. 193], convened in April for its tenth emergency special session, which was resumed in July and again in November. The Assembly demanded, among other things, immediate cessation of all settlement activities and other illegal Israeli measures in Jerusalem, and recommended that the High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilians in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) hold a conference on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory. A number of the 188 States parties to the Convention voiced support for the recommendation.

The UN system's economic and social assistance to the Palestinians, coordinated by the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, was geared towards improving living conditions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip—which had deteriorated due to frequent closures of the occupied territories, in order to help create a favourable atmosphere for the peace process on the ground. Chinmaya R. Gharekhan—serving also as the Secretary-General's Representative to the multilateral peace talks—succeeded Terje Rød-Larsen as Special Coordinator in February.

In 1997, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to mobilize international support for the Palestinians. The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and other Arabs of the Occupied Territories reported to the General Assembly on the situation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights.

Despite ongoing serious financial problems, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) maintained a wide-ranging programme of education, health, relief and social services to more than 3.4 million Palestinian refugees living both in and outside camps in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, as well as in Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic. The Agency's financial crisis forced the UNRWA Commissioner-General to announce further austerity measures in August, including, for the first time, the introduction of school fees and a freeze on reimbursement of hospitalization costs, which provoked protests by the refugee community. Donor pledges of additional allocations enabled the Commissioner-General to revoke those measures for the time being. In view of the dire financial circumstances—which were likely to continue—donors were urged to increase their contributions to the Agency so that it could maintain the most basic and effective assistance to the refugees.

The situation in southern Lebanon remained tense and volatile during 1997, with a rising level of hostilities and an increase in the number of civilian casualties, especially during the second half of the year. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) pursued its efforts to limit the conflict and protect inhabitants from its consequences. The mandates of UNIFIL and of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights were extended, and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), headquartered in Jerusalem, continued to assist both peacekeeping operations in their tasks.

By decision 52/431 of 18 December, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the agenda item entitled "Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third (1998) session. The item had been inscribed yearly on the Assembly's agenda since 1981, following the bombing by Israel of a nuclear research centre near Baghdad [YUN 1981, p. 275].

Peace process

Overall situation

In a November report [A/52/581-S/1997/866] on the question of Palestine (see below) and the situation in the Middle East, the Secretary-General observed that the stagnation of the Middle East peace process during the preceding year was disappointing. After prolonged and difficult talks, the signing by Israel and the Palestinian Authority (PA) on 17 January 1997 of a Protocol concerning the redeployment of the Israeli Defence Forces (IDF) in Hebron, had inspired the hope that confidence and mutual trust between Palestinians and Israelis would increase and create a positive environment for subsequent successful negotiations. In addition to providing for the redeployment of IDF in Hebron, the Protocol created timetables for further redeployment of IDF in the West Bank and for the resumption of the permanent status negotiations. In March, Israel approved a plan for the first redeployment in the West Bank.

Regrettably, the Secretary-General stated, the start by Israel of construction of a settlement in Jebel (Jabal) Abu Ghneim/Har Homa to the south of East Jerusalem in March had thwarted that positive trend and led to a dangerous and lengthy stalemate. Terrorist bombings in Israel, which took the lives of innocent people, further shook the confidence between Israelis and Palestinians and deepened the crisis in the peace talks. The Secretary-General unreservedly condemned those acts of terror, calling them despicable and an enemy of the peace negotiations, and underlined that the parties to the peace process bore responsibility for settling the Arab-Israeli conflict in a just and comprehensive manner, in accordance with Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. The people of the Middle East had a right to live in peace, security, mutual respect and dignity, he stressed, and attempts to avoid implementing in full and on time the agreements signed since 1993 or to undermine them could only postpone the fulfilment of their aspirations and weaken the peace process.

It was the Secretary-General's earnest belief, that both sides should do everything possible so that trust was restored, peace negotiations were revitalized and steady progress was ensured through the transition period, leading to a permanent settlement as envisaged by the 1993 Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements [YUN 1993, p. 521]. Israel should refrain from unilateral actions that had the effect of pre-empting the outcome of the peace talks, while the PA should spare no effort in fighting terrorism effectively. He hoped that the resumption of high-level meetings in the autumn and the committee talks on outstanding issues would create momentum to get the talks back on track; progress on the Israel-Syrian Arab Republic and Israel-Lebanon tracks of negotiations was also essential for achieving a comprehensive and durable peace in the region.

The United Nations would continue to support the peace process, the Secretary-General concluded, politically as well as through the provision of economic and social assistance to the Palestinians facilitated by the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories. Improving the living conditions in the West Bank and Gaza was imperative for creating a favourable atmosphere for the peace process on the ground; in that connection, it was important that the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) be put on a sound financial footing so that the downgrading of services to the Palestinian refugees could be avoided.

Occupied territories

Communications (19 January-3 March). On 21 January [A/51/782-S/1997/61], Israel transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of a letter sent by the Israeli Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs to his counterparts on 19 January following the signing and implementation of the Hebron Protocol. He stated that the agreements reached were testament to the commitment of both sides to continuing the peace process through direct negotiations, cooperation, avoidance of violence and the building of mutual trust. Israel was committed to implementing existing agreements on the basis of reciprocity and to advancing peace while ensuring security, as the terrorist outrages over the previous year served as clear reminder that progress towards peace could not be achieved without safeguards. The Hebron agreements referred not only to the redeployment of Israeli military forces in the city, but also to security arrangements, joint security measures, the deployment of the Palestinian police and various civilian matters relating to the effective functioning of the city and its Israeli and Palestinian populations; both sides had to work closely together and build confidence in each other if they were to implement the agreements effectively and proceed together on the path of peace.

Israel hoped that the Hebron agreements—brokered by the United States, with the assistance of Egypt and Jordan, and supported by the Russian Federation, the European Union (EU) and other members of the international community—dispelled the many doubts raised as to its commitment to the peace process, and it believed that the foundations had been established for continuing negotiations. The Deputy Prime Minister said it was now vital to push forward on all fronts of the peace process—the permanent status negotiations with the Palestinians, the negotiations with Syria and Lebanon, and the multilateral working groups to which Israel attached special significance. Israel would also continue to pursue normal relations with its neighbours, to ensure that the peace to be negotiated would be lasting; it was imperative that its relations with the countries of the Arab world and the growing regional cooperation not be used as pawns in the negotiating process; efforts to do so would not only damage mutual interests but also undermine the peoples' fundamental belief in peace, the Deputy Prime Minister stressed.

By a communique issued on 31 January [A/51/792-S/1997/100], the Palestinian leadership expressed concern over recent decisions taken by the Israeli Government and military leaders which, they warned, threatened to bring about the failure of all efforts to get the peace process back on track. They reported that on 19 January—two days after the signing of the Hebron Protocol—a decree was issued forbidding the inhabitants of the old city of Hebron from making repairs to their houses and Israeli forces began arresting all those doing so. On 27 January, they noted, the occupation forces expelled the Arab al-Jahalin tribe from their dwellings in the Abu Dis area of Jerusalem in order to make room for the expansion of the Maaleh Adumim settlement, and prohibited the use of the Bilal Mosque, locking the building.

In recent weeks, the Palestinian leaders charged, Israel had taken a number of decisions approving the expansion of Israeli settlements on Palestinian land, including the Holy City of Jerusalem. The identity cards of Palestinian residents of the city had been withdrawn, the appropriation of land and the continuing construction of bypass roads authorized, houses demolished and their inhabitants expelled. Israel's policy of closure, blockade and suppression continued to be implemented against the Palestinians, with shipments of food and medical supplies being held up for lengthy periods at international crossing points and in the ports.

Furthermore, the Palestinian leaders said, Israel had announced on 25 January that 70 million new shekels, due to the PA in respect of taxes and customs for the previous month, would not be transferred as part of the blockade against the Authority; the outstanding accounts and monies owed to the Authority amounted to some hundreds of millions of dollars. In an effort to tighten its blockade and prevent the export of Palestinian goods, Israel had also prohibited the operation of Gaza's international airport for more than six months, which resulted in daily losses of over $7 million. European companies were prevented from starting work on the construction of the Gaza seaport, to be financed mainly by France and the Netherlands. Israel was also creating obstacles to safe passage between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and, so far, the Joint Commission on the release of women prisoners and other detainees had not met.

The pursuit of such practices, said the Palestinian leadership, threatened to cause the failure of all the efforts to get the peace process back on track and to ensure the faithful application of the agreements signed, as well as the efforts towards the resumption of the final status negotiations on the basis of the agreed agenda, which included the issues of Jerusalem, borders, settlements and refugees. They called on all countries, particularly the sponsors of the peace process and the Arab and Islamic States, to take immediate action to stop those practices and save the peace process. They renewed their call on Israel to desist from those measures, to annul the military decrees, to proceed with the balanced implementation of all the provisions of the 1995 Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) [YUN 1995, p. 626] and the settlement of outstanding issues, and to resume the final status negotiations.

On 21 February, the Permanent Observer of Palestine to the United Nations, on behalf of the Group of Arab States members of the League of Arab States (LAS), addressed identical letters [A/51/805-S/1997/149] to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council, expressing great concern at Israel's policy of taking illegal measures against the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, as well as the occupied Syrian Arab Golan, which included continuing with the construction of settlements. Those actions, he said, violated the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention) and the 1907 Hague Convention, as well as the many resolutions adopted by the Security Council and the General Assembly, and seriously endangered the Middle East peace process and the integrity of the accords concluded between the parties.

The Arab Group drew particular attention to Israel's policies and illegal measures in occupied East Jerusalem, aimed at "Judaizing" the city—which was of vital importance to the Arab and Islamic world, as well as to the international community and the three major religions—and changing its legal status and demographic composition. Israel had confirmed its decision to build a new settlement to the south of East Jerusalem, specifically in the Jebel Abu Ghneim area, as a sequel to a series of other such decisions, including the building of a settlement in the Ras al-Amud area, within the original frontiers of the municipality of East Jerusalem. In addition, Israeli authorities had kept open the tunnel located within the Haram al-Sharif (which connected sacred and archaeologically significant sites under the western wall of the Al-Aqsa Mosque in East Jerusalem), Security Council resolution 1073(1996) [YUN 1996, p. 384] on the subject notwithstanding. It was recalled that Israel had destroyed the building belonging to the Burj al-Laqlaq association, located within the Old City, where it would appear that a new settlement was to be constructed. Israel was continuing to deprive the Palestinians of Jerusalem—who were its original inhabitants—of their "right of residence", in the context of what appeared to be a campaign to drive them out. It also further isolated East Jerusalem from the other areas of Transjordan (the West Bank), denying the Palestinians access.

The Group of Arab States members of LAS therefore requested the Security Council to take steps to induce Israel, the occupying Power, to put an end to its policies and actions and, in particular, to renounce any settlement activity, especially in the areas of Jebel Abu Ghneim and Ras al-Amud. Any failure in that regard risked having serious consequences and disastrous sequels, they warned.

On 25 February, the Permanent Observer, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, transmitted a 23 February communique [A/51/808-S/1997/157] by the General Secretariat of LAS, in which it noted with grave anxiety Israel's decision to establish in the Jebel Abu Ghneim area a new settlement, with the alleged aim of tightening the stranglehold on Al-Quds (Jerusalem). Moreover, Israel continued to isolate East Jerusalem from the West Bank, declaring it off-limits to Palestinians and withdrawing residence permits for the city's original Arab inhabitants, which, LAS charged, constituted a deliberate "transfer" operation designed to encourage Jewish settlement in the city and to impose a fait accompli prior to the opening of the final status negotiations in March.

The actions to increase the flow of settlers into Jerusalem and the occupied Syrian Arab Golan constituted a flagrant violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and the 1907 Hague Convention, as well as a serious infringement of UN resolutions; Israel's persistence in establishing settlements in the occupied Arab territories would have awkward consequences for the Middle East peace process. Accordingly, the Security Council and the co-sponsors of the peace process, the United States in particular, were urged to take prompt action to compel Israel to desist from those settlement activities, especially in Jerusalem.

On 27 February [S/1997/165], the Permanent Observer, on behalf of the Arab Group, requested that an immediate Security Council meeting be held in order to consider Israel's illegal settlement activity, above all in Jerusalem. That request was supported by the Acting Chairman of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) in identical letters of 28 February [A/51/812-S/1997/172] to the Secretary-General and the Council President.

Responding to the Palestinian leadership's 31 January communique, Israel, by a 3 March letter [A/51/814-S/1997/177], pointed out that a number of matters referred to in the communique were currently receiving the joint attention of both Palestinians and Israel, and many of the issues raised had already been resolved or were in the process of being resolved. Israel felt that the outstanding issues should be settled directly between the two sides through the agreed channels; attempts to politicize them and invite international pressure could only damage the trust between the parties and be counterproductive. Israel therefore called on the international community to encourage the Palestinians to resolve those matters face to face with Israel, which, for its part, proposed to raise its own concerns regarding compliance by the Palestinians with their obligations directly and in the appropriate forums. Israel expressed particular concern at the threat that, if Palestinian demands were not met, the peoples of the region would return to their former positions of confrontation and struggle; veiled threats of violence undermined the foundations of dialogue and damaged the prospects of progress in negotiations, Israel believed.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (5-7 March)

At the request of the Permanent Observer of Palestine [S/1997/165], the Security Council, on 5 and 6 March, discussed the situation in the occupied Arab territories [meeting 3745]. With the Council's consent, the Council President invited Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Malaysia, Malta, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, the Philippines, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. The President also invited the representative of Palestine to participate, at his own request [S/1997/194] and in accordance with the Council's provisional rules of procedure and previous practice. Invitations were also extended to the Permanent Observer of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC), at the request of Indonesia [S/1997/196], and to the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, at his own request.

The first speaker, the representative of Palestine, reported that Israel had decided on 26 February to build a new settlement for approximately 25,000 Israeli settlers in the area of Jebel Abu Ghneim, on land confiscated in 1991 and 1992. That construction would isolate areas of Arab Jerusalem from the southern part of the West Bank, in pursuit of a long-standing Israeli plan to build settlements around Arab neighbourhoods in order to isolate them completely from the rest of the West Bank. The measure followed a series of others that constituted a clear policy aimed at the "Judaization" of Jerusalem and at changing its legal status and demographic composition, including the intended building of a settlement of more than 132 housing units in the heart of East Jerusalem in the populated Arab quarter of Ras al-Amud, which would also overlook Al-Haram Al-Sharif and the Al-Aqsa Mosque.

The representative charged that Israel had long enforced the isolation of East Jerusalem and kept the Palestinians out of the city, in another attempt to impose a de facto situation and despite the affirmation by the international community that East Jerusalem was part of the occupied territories.

The historical shift following the signing of the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p. 521] and of the 1995 Interim Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 626] (the so-called Oslo agreements) had resulted in positive changes in the Middle East, as the benefits of peace began to appear on the horizon for the peoples of the region and for the whole world in general. Unfortunately, Israel had begun to pursue policies that ran counter to the spirit and logic of the peace process and to take decisions and actions that were in gross violation of the agreements reached and that aimed at altering the situation and the status of the city of Jerusalem and creating new facts on the ground that would pre-empt negotiations and render them useless. If the peace process was to succeed, those measures could not continue. There would be no peace in the region without the attainment of Palestinian and Arab rights in the Holy City. Israel had to cease construction of the colonial settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim and promptly cease all settlement activities and confiscation of land, especially in occupied East Jerusalem. The Council should adopt a clear resolution in order to guarantee respect for its relevant resolutions and for international law and to save the peace process; such goals fell within its responsibility to preserve international peace and security.

Israel pointed out that Jerusalem had been the capital of the State of Israel since its rebirth in 1948 and the seat of Jewish Government since its establishment by King David some 3,000 years earlier. Since that time, the thoughts, hopes and prayers of the entire Jewish people had been focused on Jerusalem, whose centrality to Judaism transcended geographical boundaries. Currently, it was Israel's largest city, home to 578,000 residents, of whom 71.2 per cent were Jewish. The Israeli Government had unanimously approved construction in Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim and in 10 predominantly Arab neighbourhoods throughout Jerusalem. The new neighbourhood of Har Homa, to be located in an unpopulated area in southern Jerusalem, within the city's municipal boundaries, would eventually consist of 6,500 housing units; 75 per cent of the land for the project was owned by individual Jews.

Jerusalem was in the midst of an unprecedented surge of planning and development. The Har Homa project was an essential part of a comprehensive municipal plan to construct 20,000 new housing units for Jerusalem's Jewish residents and 8,500 for its Arab residents—a ratio comparable to that of both its populations. Concurrently with the construction of Har Homa, infrastructure work for the construction of 3,000 housing units in 10 of the city's predominantly Arab neighbourhoods was to begin, with the purpose of alleviating the shortage of housing for both populations.

The coming years would be crucial for the Arab-Israeli peace process, Israel stated; during that time, the international community would have to exhibit restraint, understanding and trust in the determination of Israel and its neighbours to advance the peace process. Israel regretted that the Council once again saw fit to discuss issues of contention between Israel and the Palestinians; the PLO's very appeal to the Council was inconsistent with its explicit agreement to settle all issues under dispute through negotiations. The two parties were currently making progress in negotiations and reconciliation, and the peace process had thus far succeeded in establishing a new modus vivendi between them. Most recently, that was expressed in the Hebron Protocol and through the establishment of timetables for resuming the negotiation of the permanent status and further redeployment of IDF in the West Bank.

Regrettably, Israel continued, some speakers in the Council failed to differentiate between the issue of Jerusalem and its neighbourhoods and the issue of settlements in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, which were to be negotiated separately within the context of permanent status negotiations. In agreeing that the issue of Jerusalem was to be part of permanent status negotiations, the parties recognized Jerusalem as a separate issue, with the city's status remaining unchanged so long as no decision to the contrary was taken in those negotiations. Therefore, Israel stressed, the approval of building plans within the city or the implementation of any construction work did not constitute a change in Jerusalem's status; neither did it create a situation that could adversely affect the permanent status negotiations. In any event, since the existing agreements did not accord the Palestinian authorities any powers or responsibilities in Jerusalem, Israel was under no obligation to coordinate its actions with them or to consult with them.

After hearing 49 speakers, the Council, on 7 March [meeting 3747], voted on a draft resolution [S/1997/199] submitted by France, Portugal, Sweden and the United Kingdom, by which the Council would have called on Israel to refrain from all actions or measures, including settlement activities, which altered the facts on the ground, pre-empting the final status negotiations, and had negative implications for the peace process. It would have further called on Israel to abide scrupulously by its legal obligations and responsibilities under the Fourth Geneva Convention, and called on all parties to continue their negotiations within the peace process.

The draft resolution received 14 votes in favour to 1 against (United States), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

Speaking before the vote, Costa Rica stated that it had supported the draft text originally presented by the EU countries on the understanding that its content would accurately reflect what was expressed in the debate. An important point, Costa Rica said, would have been to preserve the unity of that message; unfortunately, however, the negotiation process took a different path and consensus was not reached. The Middle East peace process needed unity of purpose and that should be the Council's message to the parties. Although unity in the Council had not been maintained, Costa Rica would vote for the draft text because the spirit of Oslo had to be upheld at all costs as the only way towards a stable and lasting peace.

Egypt believed that the draft resolution was balanced and avoided confrontation and represented a Council reaction that was commensurate with the gravity of Israel's decision on Jebel Abu Ghneim. The text expressed in form and content the commitment to the Charter of the United Nations and the norms of international law; it also reflected the EU support for the peace process, as well as the sentiments of grave concern expressed by many delegations over the expansion of Israeli settlement activity, which was in contravention of the legal commitments Israel had entered into with the PA.

Explaining its negative vote, the United States said it shared the concern expressed by many Council members about Israel's decision to commence construction in Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim, which ran counter to the progress and achievements of the parties to date and was not helpful to the peace process. Building the trust and confidence needed to create the environment for successful negotiations, especially on the difficult issues involved in the permanent status talks, required the parties to take special care to avoid pre-emptive actions that prejudged outcomes. However, the Member States of the United Nations had to take great care to respond in a way that would bolster, not batter, the negotiating process and encourage the partners in peace. Despite its useful role in working for Middle East peace, the Council was not an appropriate forum for debating issues under negotiation between the parties. Unfortunately, the draft resolution would not have helped; it made sweeping statements on the legal status of Israeli settlements, which the parties themselves had agreed to treat as a permanent status issue in the talks that were about to resume. The Council should reiterate support for the achievements of the partners to date and respect their commitment to working together towards their common goal—a peaceful and prosperous Middle East—without the interference of outside parties.

In the view of the representative of Palestine, the central importance of Jerusalem and the grave danger posed by Israel's decision required the Palestinians and Arabs to insist that the Council adopt a clear draft resolution on the question. Despite the moderation and flexible timing of the text and accommodation of certain requirements, the Council had been unable to assume its responsibilities because one permanent member exercised its right of veto. The Council's inaction stood in stark contrast to the collective position of the international community, the great potential damage of Israel's decision, its impact on the peace process and the harm wrought by the Council's failure to adopt the submitted text. The Council remained responsible for international peace and security, including in the Middle East, the representative stressed; the peace process and the Palestinian-Israeli agreements had not ended the responsibilities of the United Nations or provided a reason for the Council not to intervene—especially when those agreements had been violated.

Some States seemed to suggest that Israel had the right to take unilateral steps and impose new realities on the ground, the representative continued, while the Palestinian side should commit itself to resolving through negotiations the problems resulting from those steps. The Palestinians would not change their position on Jerusalem and their historical rights in the city, which was a central issue to them; in view of the Council's failure to fulfil its obligations, they would request the UN Members to agree to an emergency meeting of the General Assembly.

Since the Council had decided not to take any action regarding the decision to begin construction in Har Homa and in 10 predominantly Arab neighbourhoods throughout Jerusalem, Israel stated, it hoped that the sponsors of the proposed resolution would recognize that the Council was not the appropriate forum for discussing outstanding issues between Israel and the Palestinians. The peace process was founded on direct, open and substantial dialogue between the two sides, which had brought about historic progress; the adoption of unbalanced positions by outside parties could only damage that process. The permanent status negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians would be resumed later in the month, and issues such as Jerusalem would be discussed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In accordance with requests by Qatar, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States [A/51/822], and Colombia, as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/51/823], the General Assembly convened on 12 March [meetings 91 & 92] to consider the situation in the Middle East, together with the question of Palestine.

The Observer of Palestine stated that Palestine had come before the Assembly following the Council's failure to carry out its duties under the Charter due to the use of the veto power by the United States. The international community should reiterate its firm position with regard to the consequences of Israel's illegal policies, and reaffirm that all its measures aimed at changing the legal status and demographic composition of Jerusalem were null and void; that Israeli settlements were illegal and a great obstacle on the road to peace; that the plight of the Palestinian refugees had to be resolved through their right to return or through compensation; and that the acquisition of territory by acts of war was inadmissible. The Assembly's action should focus on Israel's behaviour, which seemingly aimed at retaining a large portion of the occupied territory, including East Jerusalem, and at preventing the Palestinians from enjoying their inalienable rights; such designs totally contradicted the mutual recognition of Israel and the PLO and the text and spirit of the agreements reached, which specified the goal of the process—implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. The solution was to guarantee Israel's actual compliance with the agreements reached and their complete implementation in accordance with the agreed timetables.

In Israel's view, there was no substitute for direct negotiations, through which the 1993 Declaration of Principles and all subsequent agreements had been reached. Israel's sincere hope was that the Hebron Protocol, which created timetables for further redeployment of Israeli forces in the West Bank and for the imminent resumption of the permanent status negotiations, as well as other measures taken by Israel—the release of all female Palestinian prisoners; the formation of nine committees to discuss all outstanding issues, such as the construction of a Gaza airport and seaport and safe passage; and steps to address the economic situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, including raising to 70,000 the number of Palestinians allowed to work in Israel—would increase mutual trust and create an atmosphere conducive to the peace process. However, despite the progress achieved, the Palestinians, whenever contentious issues arose, instead of seeking redress through direct negotiation, ran to third parties and bodies not involved in the peace process, with the hope of imposing their positions on Israel. The United Nations was not the appropriate forum for discussing such issues, Israel stated, and the multitude of UN resolutions relating to the Arab-Israeli conflict had failed to advance the peace process even one inch; direct negotiations, beginning in Madrid and continuing for the better part of the decade, had proved the only way to advance the cause of peace.

It was important to distinguish, Israel stressed, between the issue of Jerusalem and that of the settlements, which were separate and would be discussed in the context of the permanent status negotiations scheduled to resume later in the month. Israel concluded that its message to the international community was to support the peace process, but not to adopt one-sided positions aimed at prejudging and predetermining the outcome of the negotiations.

During the debate, which featured 30 speakers, widespread concern was expressed at the planned construction of the settlement at Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim, as well as at the recent acts of terrorism, both seen as obstacles to the peace process.

On 13 March [meeting 93], the Assembly adopted resolution 51/223 [draft: A/51/L.68 & Add.1] by recorded vote (130-2-2) [agenda items 33 & 35].

Israeli settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territory, in particular in occupied East Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Having considered the letters dated 21, 25 and 27 February 1997 from the Permanent Observer of Palestine on behalf of the States members of the League of Arab States,

Expressing deep concern at the decision of the Government of Israel to initiate new settlement activities in the Jebel Abu Ghneim area in East Jerusalem,

Expressing concern about other recent measures that encourage or facilitate new settlement activities,

Stressing that such settlements are illegal and a major obstacle to peace,

Recalling its resolutions on Jerusalem and other relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions,

Confirming that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel which purport to alter the status of Jerusalem, including expropriation of land and properties thereon, are invalid and cannot change that status,

Reaffirming its support for the Middle East peace process and all its achievements, including the recent agreement on Hebron,

Concerned about the difficulties facing the Middle East peace process, including the impact these have on the living conditions of the Palestinian people, and urging the parties to fulfil their obligations, including under the agreements already reached,

Having discussed the situation at its 91st, 92nd and 93rd plenary meetings on 12 and 13 March 1997,

1. Calls upon the Israeli authorities to refrain from all actions or measures, including settlement activities, which alter the facts on the ground, pre-empting the final status negotiations, and have negative implications for the Middle East peace process;

2. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to abide scrupulously by its legal obligations and responsibilities under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, which is applicable to all the territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

3. Calls upon all parties to continue, in the interests of peace and security, their negotiations within the Middle East peace process on its agreed basis and the timely implementation of the agreements reached;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Government of Israel the provisions of the present resolution.

Introducing the draft resolution on behalf of its 57 sponsors, Indonesia said that they regarded the text as a reasonable, balanced and appropriate response to Israel's ill-conceived action; its adoption would be invaluable in ensuring that the peace process remained on track. The resolution as a whole reaffirmed UN permanent responsibility on the question of Palestine.

Speaking before the vote, Israel said it was difficult to comprehend that countries wishing to play a more active role in the peace process were rushing to support and even sponsor such a blatantly one-sided and biased text, which singled out Israel and was detrimental to that process. The murder of six Israeli schoolgirls and their teacher the same morning in the Jordan Valley reinforced Israel's belief that the only way to promote peace, support the political process and fight terrorism was through direct talks. It welcomed the positive UN support for the peace process, as expressed by Assembly resolution 51/29 [YUN 1996, p. 381], which could be useful but only when in concert with the efforts of all the parties involved, with a view towards building consensus.

While sharing the widely expressed concern over the construction at Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim and believing that such action ran counter to the achievements of the parties to date, the United States felt that the Assembly should not inject itself into the negotiation process; doing so could only build mistrust and harden both sides' positions, while interfering with the progress the parties were making on their own. Instead, the United States felt that the international community should reiterate its support for the achievements of the partners and respect their commitment to work together towards their common goal—a peaceful and prosperous Middle East—without outside interference.

Expressing deep appreciation to those who had voted in favour, the Observer of Palestine said that their action reflected the almost unanimous support of the international community. That clear position, which included many friends of Israel, sent an unmistakable message to all parties. The first element of that message was that Israel should stop its plans to construct the Jebel Abu Ghneim settlement and refrain from further settlement activities; the second element was that the United Nations had a central role to play, in keeping with its responsibilities under the Charter, especially when Israel, a Member State, violated international humanitarian law, relevant UN resolutions and the bilateral agreements reached within the framework of the peace process.

Communications (17-21 March). On 17 March, the Permanent Observer of Palestine, in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council [A/51/834-S/1997/228], reported that less than 24 hours after the overwhelming adoption of resolution 51/223, Israel had reaffirmed its decision to proceed with the construction of a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim, to begin that week. That was further proof, he said, of Israel's contempt for the will of the international community and its persistence in violating international law, UN resolutions and the agreements reached between the parties. Some Israeli officials had made the situation even worse by making dangerous statements, threatening the foundations of the peace process and even the mutual recognition of both sides. Israel's attitude was reinforced by the recurring impediment to the exercise of the mechanisms provided for in the UN Charter.

The current serious situation necessitated Security Council action, the Observer said. The Palestinians hoped that this time the Council would be enabled to exercise its responsibilities under the Charter. They called on it to do so and to demand immediate and full cessation of all Israeli settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territories, including Jerusalem, especially the settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim.

On 18 March [A/51/837-S/1997/233], the Observer of Palestine informed the Secretary-General that Israel had begun work for the construction of the new settlement on that date, closing off the area, declaring it a military zone and sending in bulldozers. He called on the Security Council to convene an immediate, official meeting to consider the serious situation and adopt a resolution clearly demanding the immediate and full cessation of all settlement activities in Jebel Abu Ghneim, East Jerusalem and throughout the occupied territories.

By a letter of 21 March [A/51/839-S/1997/243], Israel drew the Secretary-General's attention to a terrorist act committed that day in a cafe in Tel Aviv, as a result of which three women were killed and over 40 others, children among them, wounded. The organization Hamas had claimed responsibility. Israel noted that a few days earlier, Israeli security services had warned of imminent terrorist attacks, as the release by the PA of several Hamas terrorists, together with incendiary statements made by Palestinian exponents, were being interpreted as a "green light" for attacks on Israel—an interpretation not countered by Palestinian officials; therefore, the Palestinian leadership bore overriding responsibility for the attack. In addition, Israel stated, the convening of the Security Council, the General Assembly and other international forums in which Israel had been lambasted time and again contributed to an atmosphere conducive to anti-Israeli operations. Israel remained firmly convinced that Chairman Yasser Arafat had full control of the situation in the Palestinian self-rule areas in which Hamas and other like-minded organizations were based; however, the Palestinian leadership had failed to make adequate efforts to prevent terrorist activities. Israel called on the international community to condemn unequivocally the recent terrorist act and to dedicate all its efforts to eradicating the plague of terrorism.

SECURITY COUNCIL CONSIDERATION (21 March)

In response to a request by Qatar, on behalf of LAS, for an immediate Security Council meeting

[S/1997/235], the Council convened on 21 March [meeting 3756]. The President, with the consent of the Council, invited Israel and Qatar, at their request, to participate in the discussion without the right to vote. An invitation to participate was also extended to the representative of Palestine, at his own request [S/1997/242].

The President drew attention to a draft resolution [S/1997/241] presented by Egypt and Qatar, demanding that Israel immediately cease construction of the Jebel Abu Ghneim settlement and other settlement activities in the territories, and requesting the Secretary-General to submit a report on developments in that regard. The draft received 13 votes in favour to 1 against (United States), with 1 abstention (Costa Rica), and was not adopted owing to the negative vote of a permanent Council member.

Before the vote, statements were made by China, Costa Rica, Egypt, Japan and the United States. Egypt said that the Arab Group hoped the Council would take measures as soon as possible, as Israel's provocative policies had a grave effect on the situation in the region, having raised violence and tension. While condemning terrorism in all its forms, including the attack in Tel Aviv that day, Egypt pointed out that Israel had to realize that its settlements policies, which stirred up international and Arab feelings, would always lead to destructive results for all the peoples of the Middle East. The Arab Group wished to give all Council members the opportunity to reach a formula that would enable the Council to send a unanimous message; Egypt was prepared to continue consultations towards that end. The Council's silence and its failure to take up its duties under the UN Charter would send an erroneous and dangerous message, likely to encourage Israel in continuing to violate international law, thus aborting the peace process which was at a very sensitive juncture.

Stressing that its opposition to the text should not be interpreted as an expression of support for the construction at Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim, the United States said that the controversy over the settlement would not be resolved by interference from the Council, the General Assembly or any other outsider, but only by the parties themselves, who had demonstrated time and again in the nearly six years since the Madrid Conference that they could overcome the problems and differences that divided them and move forward with the active support of the international community. The Council's action, however, lacked that spirit of encouragement. Rather than addressing the issue in a forum that was inappropriate for the real work at hand, the international community should concentrate on finding a way to support Israelis and Palestinians as they tried to cope with a difficult situation and to restore the confidence, trust, hope and dialogue that was essential to forging a just and lasting peace.

In Costa Rica's view, Israel's decision seriously jeopardized the peace process and threatened the spirit of Oslo, as did the reprehensible terrorist acts that had taken place in recent hours, responsibility for which had been claimed by the Hamas group. The radical positions of either side should never override the explicit will expressed by President Yasser Arafat and the late Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, when they signed the Oslo peace accords, which was the only route both sides should continue to follow.

China felt it necessary for the Council to send Israel a clear message, calling on it to cease immediately its settlement activities. China also condemned all forms of terrorist activities and expressed deep regret at the bombing incident that had taken place in Tel Aviv.

It was a cause for great sadness that the Council had not succeeded in its effort to arrive at a unanimous message to Israel and it was regrettable that Israel was proceeding with the construction at Har Homa, Japan said; such action could undermine the peace process which had been so arduously constructed over the years. Japan voiced deep indignation over the terrorist bombing in Tel Aviv.

Speaking after the vote, France regretted that it had not been possible to achieve consensus; the Council ought to be able to carry out its responsibilities with regard to actions that endangered the peace process and that had aroused the disapproval of the entire international community. In France's opinion, the settlements ran counter to international law and were at variance with the spirit of the peace process. At the same time, France expressed concern at the resumption of deadly violence in Tel Aviv and, during the previous week, in the Jordan Valley.

In the Russian Federation's view, the situation continued to deteriorate and was becoming increasingly confrontational because of Israel's acts of provocation, which in connection with the recent outbreak of violence complicated the negotiation process. Russia urged Israel to rescind its decision to build a new settlement in East Jerusalem and stressed the importance for both parties to avoid further instances of confrontation and to break the deadlock in the peace process. Russia strongly condemned the terrorist act in Tel Aviv as criminal and unwarranted.

Portugal had hoped that the Council could have agreed on a formula whereby it would have assumed its responsibilities and expressed firmly its support for the peace process, which, through terrorist violence, was being used by those who wanted to jeopardize the achievements reached. Both parties had to realize that there was no alternative to that process. Israel should reconsider and stop all actions that created mistrust among the Palestinian and Arab peoples, while the Palestinians and their leaders should continue to show restraint and not resort to violence.

Sweden fully supported the draft text's content. It urged restraint in order to prevent an escalation of violence and stressed that the only way forward was to return to the peace process.

Due to the United States veto, the Council had failed, for the second time, to carry out its duties for the maintenance of international peace and security, the Observer of Palestine remarked; it was regrettable that the veto had been cast in the aftermath of Israel's commencement on 18 March of the building of the Jebel Abu Ghneim settlement, in the wake of Assembly resolution 51/223, which had reflected a near-unanimous position of the international community, and against the background of escalating tension in the region and the increasing outrage among Palestinians and Arabs resulting from Israeli policies and statements.

It was difficult to accept that the veto had been cast to protect the peace process, as it was difficult to accept that bilateral negotiations were the only solution at a time when one of the two parties was imposing new facts on the ground; the reality was, Palestine stated, that the veto had been cast to shield Israel from the will of the international community and exempt it from international law and the Charter. The existence of bilateral agreements should not, said the Observer, negate the provisions of international law or those of Council resolutions; it was the duty of the international community to reject any attempt to exploit the peace process to neutralize the law and leave the Palestinian side subject to the occupier and the imbalance of power on the ground. The Palestinians would return to the Council whenever the situation so required; at the same time, they would also resort to other UN bodies, particularly the General Assembly, as that body had partitioned Palestine and bore special responsibility for it.

Although still committed to the peace process, the agreements reached and the need to work for their implementation, the Observer continued, the Palestinians were determined to protect their historical and legal rights, particularly in Jerusalem and on every inch of their land. While condemning the terrorist bombing that had taken place in Tel Aviv, the Observer emphasized that such acts could not be isolated from the situation created by Israeli policies and actions.

Israel noted that on the same day when three Israeli women were murdered by Palestinian terrorists and more than 40 others, including children, were wounded, 13 Council members supported a one-sided draft resolution singling out Israel. The Council debate and those preceding it harked back to the dark days before the Madrid Peace Conference when Arab countries were engaged in anti-Israeli warfare and attempted to misuse the Council. The convening of the Council, the Assembly and other international forums that lambasted Israel unfortunately contributed to an atmosphere that was further interpreted by terrorist organizations as conducive to operations against Israel.

In recent weeks, Israel charged, the Palestinians had been engaged in a concerted effort to bring international pressure on it and to avoid addressing the outstanding issues through a mechanism established as part of the peace process. Those actions could only damage the trust between the parties, be counter-productive and raise doubts over the Palestinians' readiness to negotiate in good faith.

In compliance with its commitments, Israel had undertaken to implement the first phase of redeployment of its forces, to release all female Palestinian prisoners and to reopen negotiations on a range of issues, including safe passage, the airport and the Gaza port. The Palestinians had undertaken to complete revising the Palestinian charter, to fight terrorism, prevent violence and conduct Palestinian Council activities in the area of its jurisdiction—and not in Jerusalem. However, they had failed to demonstrate their intention or will to comply with all their commitments, but chose to generate political pressure and avoid the direct bilateral talks that were the basis of the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations. The Interim Agreement obliged the Palestinians to act against all expressions of violence and terror, an obligation restated and strengthened in the Note for the Record attached to the Hebron Protocol; notwithstanding that obligation, recent months had seen a marked decline in Palestinian activity against terrorists. Not only had the Palestinian Council ceased to arrest individuals suspected of terrorism and ceased to take measures against the terrorist infrastructure, but it continued to release members of terrorist groups, many of whom had been actively involved in organizing and perpetrating acts of terror.

Communications (24 March-4 April). By a letter of 24 March [S/1997/249], Israel stated that the requests for Security Council meetings made by the Permanent Observer of Palestine on 27 February and 18 March (see above) were not valid, having been made by a representative of an organization and not a State, as required under the UN Charter and the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Responding to Israel's communication on 4 April [S/1997/275], the Observer of Palestine emphasized that Israel had no authority with regard to issues relating to the Council's work, which were decided by its members. Also, there was a clearly established practice with regard to his requests for Council meetings. Israel responded to the Observer on 5 May (see below).

Commission on Human Rights. At its fifty-third session (10 March-18 April) [E/1997/23], the Commission on Human Rights considered a report by the Special Rapporteur on the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967 [E/CN.4/1997/16]. It adopted one resolution on Israeli settlements in the occupied Arab territories [res. 1997/3], another on the situation in occupied Palestine [res. 1997/4] and a third on the Middle East peace process [res. 1997/6]. It also adopted resolutions dealing with human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine [res. 1997/1], and human rights in the occupied Syrian Golan [res. 1997/2] (see PART TWO, Chapter III).

Emergency special session

On 31 March, Qatar, as Chairman of the Group of Arab States at the United Nations, requested an emergency special session of the General Assembly to discuss the item "Illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory". The Secretary-General transmitted that text to Member States on 1 April, asking them whether they concurred in that request. As the majority did concur, the Secretary-General, by a 22 April note [A/ES-10/1], informed Members that the tenth emergency special session would convene at UN Headquarters on 24 April. Qatar's letter was annexed to the note. The need for the speedy convening of an emergency special session was also stressed by the Permanent Observer of Palestine on 8 April in identical letters to the Secretary-General and the President of the Security Council [A/51/866-S/1997/289].

On 24 April, the Credentials Committee accepted the credentials of 183 Member States. The Assembly, by resolution ES-10/1 of 25 April, approved the Committee's report [A/ES-10/5] without vote.

Malaysia, the Assembly President, said the emergency special session reflected the Members' conviction that an increasingly grave situation involving peace and security existed. In the past two months, the Security Council twice and the Assembly once had held extensive discussions on Israel's actions in East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied territories. The emergency special session underlined the Member States' resolve to deal with the issue by peaceful means, in an effort to eliminate tension and save the peace process.

In the words of the Observer of Palestine, the Middle East peace process had heralded an end to a long era of conflict and had become the harbinger of a promising future for the region and its peoples. According to the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p. 521], peace was pursued on the basis of mutual recognition of the legitimate rights of both peoples and their desire to live in peaceful coexistence and mutual dignity and security. A just, lasting and comprehensive settlement—based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]—and a historic reconciliation were to be achieved through the agreed political process. Within that context, the two sides agreed on a five-year transitional period of interim self-government arrangements and also agreed to postpone negotiations on a number of important issues, including the future of Jerusalem and Israeli settlements, until a time not later than the beginning of the third year of the negotiation process. Three years after the peace process began, however, the very bases of the peace process were being eroded. The Declaration of Principles had led to significant changes; Israel gained great benefits as a result and the Palestinian side began to accomplish some goals, most important of which was the holding of democratic general elections for the Palestinian National Authority and its President. The process continued, enduring numerous difficulties and problems, some of which were expected but were overcome through the general commitment of both parties to fulfil their contractual obligations. However, the current Israeli Government had adopted basic political guidelines that contradicted the agreements signed, and a regression to the mentality of the occupier overwhelmed the dealings between both parties. It had fervently pursued settlement activities and the "Judaization" of East Jerusalem, which led to a dramatically deteriorating situation. The only exception to that trend of reversal of the peace process was the Hebron Protocol, which was, however, followed by a series of Israeli actions that threatened the peace process and its actual continuation. The most dangerous of those actions was the construction of a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim. Palestinians saw their living conditions decline as a result of Israeli policies preventing any viable development of the Palestinian economy, while the most important commitments agreed on—including safe passage between the West Bank and Gaza Strip, operation of the airport and building of the port, and return of hundreds of thousands of displaced Palestinians—remained unfulfilled. Land confiscations continued, as did the exploitation of natural resources and the transfer of settlers to the occupied territory.

The bombings and acts of terror, from whatever source, were a different issue, the Palestinian representative stated; there was an established policy in that regard, confirmed by the strategic decision to accept the peace process. The Palestinian side condemned those acts and would continue to resist them; nevertheless, their complete elimination required real progress on both the political and economic, not only on the security, levels.

As the situation deteriorated as a result of Israeli policies and actions, new ideas were being proposed that called for setting aside existing agreements, moving to the final settlement negotiations and completing them in a specified time-frame, as though existing agreements did not cover the final settlement negotiations. That was unacceptable. The right path was implementation of the existing agreements and acceleration of the negotiations for the final settlement. The Palestinians were still ready to implement their obligations under the peace process and the agreements reached between the parties within its framework. However, they were fully aware of the real threats facing the process from the Israeli side, and thwarting those threats required extraordinary efforts by the sponsors of the peace process and the international community as a whole. To stop the illegal construction at Jebel Abu Ghneim and all other settlement activities would be a success for justice and peace and an impetus to work for a better future in the Middle East.

In Israel's view, the building of a new neighbourhood in Jerusalem and any other dispute that might arise between the two sides could not be considered as a "threat to international peace and security". No determination had been made, during two Security Council meetings, that the dispute constituted such a threat, nor had the Council called for the convening of an emergency special session of the Assembly. Such a session, not activated for the past 15 years, was a relic of the cold-war era, particularly unsuited and discordant in the context of the Israeli-Palestinian peace process and would not only fail to advance mutual understanding, but could become a source of further polarization. The housing construction in the Har Homa neighbourhood had already been dealt with at five meetings in the past month, two in the Council and three in the Assembly. The emergency special session was being convened as a cloud of insecurity hung over the peace process and recommendations by Arab Foreign Ministers to freeze normalization with Israel could be heard. Although that threatened a return to the era before the peace process, Israel was committed to achieving a permanent and comprehensive peace. Its sincere hope was that the Hebron Protocol and subsequent steps would increase mutual trust and create an atmosphere conducive to advancing the peace process. The decision to build in Har Homa did not violate any agreements with the Palestinians, under which, pending the conclusion of the permanent status negotiations, the PA did not have any standing in the city of Jerusalem.

Unfortunately, Israel continued, instead of continuing the peace process, the Palestinians had embarked on a regional and international campaign to exert pressure on and isolate Israel if it did not accept all Palestinian positions. Israel's commitment to peace was irreversible and it would spare no effort to reach true peace for itself and its neighbours. However, there could be no meaningful peace while terrorism reigned; the Palestinians' fight against terrorism should be uncompromising and comprehensive, which was an obligation they undertook when they embarked on the path of negotiation and peace. Unfortunately, the Palestinians were not keeping their commitment to refrain from inciting violence, but Israel was hopeful that the PA would take the necessary measures in its fight against terrorism and return to the permanent status negotiations. The issue of Jerusalem would be discussed within the context of those negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following a two-day debate, the General Assembly, on 25 April [meeting 3] adopted resolution ES-10/2 [draft: A/ES-10/L.1 & Add.1] by recorded vote (134-3-11) [agenda item 5].

Illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory

The General Assembly,

Aware of the commencement, after the adoption of General Assembly resolution 51/223 of 13 March 1997, of construction by Israel, the occupying Power, of a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim to the south of East Jerusalem on 18 March 1997, and of other illegal Israeli actions in Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory,

Noting with regret that the Security Council, at its 3747th meeting, on 7 March 1997, and at its 3756th meeting, on 21 March 1997, twice failed to adopt a resolution on the actions referred to above, as a result of the negative vote of a permanent member of the Council,

Reaffirming the permanent responsibility of the United Nations with regard to the question of Palestine until it is solved in all its aspects,

Reaffirming also the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Having considered the serious deterioration of the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the Middle East in general, including the serious difficulties facing the Middle East peace process, as a result of recent Israeli actions and measures,

Affirming its support for the Middle East peace process, started at Madrid in 1991, on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, for the principle of land for peace and for the full and timely implementation of the agreements reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, and of all commitments reached between the parties,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 181(II) of 29 November 1947 and 51/223, and the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular those on Jerusalem and Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, including resolutions 252(1968) of 21 May 1968, 446(1979) of 22 March 1979, 452(1979) of 20 July 1979, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980, 476(1980) of 30 June 1980, 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, 672(1990) of 12 October 1990 and 1073(1996) of 28 September 1996,

Reaffirming that the international community, through the United Nations, has a legitimate interest in the question of the City of Jerusalem and the protection of the unique spiritual and religious dimension of the City, as foreseen in relevant United Nations resolutions on this matter,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907 to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and all other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Recalling the obligation of the High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War to respect and ensure respect for the Convention in all circumstances, in accordance with article 1 of the Convention,

Conscious of the serious dangers arising from persistent violation and grave breaches of the Convention and the responsibilities arising therefrom,

Convinced that ensuring respect for treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security, and determined, in accordance with the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained,

Also convinced, in this context, that the repeated violation by Israel, the occupying Power, of international law and its failure to comply with relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions and the agreements reached between the parties undermine the Middle East peace process and constitute a threat to international peace and security,

Increasingly concerned about the actions of armed Israeli settlers in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem,

Aware that, in the circumstances, it should consider the situation with a view to making appropriate recommendations to the States Members of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 377 A (V) of 3 November 1950,

1. Condemns the construction by Israel, the occupying Power, of a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim to the south of occupied East Jerusalem and all other illegal Israeli actions in all the occupied territories;

2. Reaffirms that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that have altered or purported to alter the character, legal status and demographic composition of Jerusalem are null and void and have no validity whatsoever;

3. Reaffirms also that Israeli settlements in all the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 are illegal and an obstacle to peace;

4. Demands immediate and full cessation of the construction in Jebel Abu Ghneim and of all other Israeli settlement activities, as well as of all illegal measures and actions in Jerusalem;

5. Demands also that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to all the territories occupied since 1967, and that it comply with relevant Security Council resolutions, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Stresses the need to preserve the territorial integrity of all of the occupied Palestinian territory and to guarantee the freedom of movement of persons and goods in the territory, including the removal of restrictions into and from East Jerusalem, and the freedom of movement to and from the outside world;

7. Calls for the cessation of all forms of assistance and support for illegal Israeli activities in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, in particular settlement activities;

8. Recommends to the States that are High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War to take measures, on a national or regional level, in fulfilment of their obligations under article 1 of the Convention, to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, of the Convention;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the situation and to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution, within two months of its adoption, in particular on the cessation of the construction of the new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim and of all other illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory;

10. Expresses the need for scrupulous implementation of the agreements reached between the parties, and urges the sponsors of the peace process, the interested parties and the entire international community to exert all the necessary efforts to revive the peace process and to ensure its success;

11. Recommends that a comprehensive, just and lasting solution to the question of the City of Jerusalem, which should be reached in permanent status negotiations between the parties, should include internationally guaranteed provisions to ensure the freedom of religion and of conscience of its inhabitants, as well as permanent, free and unhindered access to the Holy Places by the faithful of all religions and nationalities;

12. Rejects terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, in accordance with all relevant United Nations resolutions and declarations;

13. Decides to adjourn the tenth emergency special session of the General Assembly temporarily and to authorize the President of the General Assembly to resume its meetings upon request from Member States.

Speaking before the vote, Israel said the Middle East peace process had no need for another forum to hurl rhetoric or for another resolution, which contained many contentious elements and was detached from reality and devoid of evenhandedness. Direct negotiations would continue to be the only viable effective solution. Over the past 24 hours, while the Council was debating, a number of violent incidents occurred in the Jerusalem area. The resolution did not send the right message to the peoples of the region, in particular to the Palestinians; the message rather had to be that the peace process would go forward and that violence and terror were illegitimate and unacceptable.

Although sharing the concerns expressed about Israel's decision to begin construction at Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim, the United States believed that the resolution would make harder the task of rebuilding confidence and reactivating productive negotiations. The Security Council and the Assembly should not insert themselves into issues that the negotiating partners had decided would be addressed in permanent status talks. Beyond the threat the text posed to the peace process, it also posed a threat to the orderly conduct of business at the United Nations, clearly infringing on the Security Council's authority and setting a dangerous precedent by moving in the direction of the Assembly endorsing collective action against one of its Members.

Explaining its abstention, Norway said it remained convinced that the current crisis in the peace process could be solved only by the parties themselves, through direct negotiations; adoption of the resolution at the current time would not be conducive to the goal of an early resumption of those negotiations. Germany felt the text was unbalanced, and Canada considered it not helpful, the Middle East peace process being at a critical juncture. Australia was concerned that the resolution would do nothing to advance the re-establishment of trust and confidence between the parties. Uruguay abstained on the understanding that the matter of Israeli settlements should be left to negotiations between the parties.

Although voting in favour, the Russian Federation felt that the reference in paragraph 11 to internationally guaranteed provisions regarding the status of the Holy Places in Jerusalem, a subject for Palestinian-Israeli negotiations, had no direct relation to the resolution's topic. Russia emphasized the need for liaison between the two parties in the area of security and for implementation by the parties of all their commitments under relevant agreements, as stressed in paragraph 10.

Reaffirming the ongoing relevance of the peace process agreed to in Madrid, based on resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257], 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213] and 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], Lebanon stated it would have preferred inclusion in the text of an explicit reference to the Declaration adopted by the Assembly as resolution 50/6 [YUN 1995, p. 289] during the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations, which, among other things, reaffirmed the right of peoples to resist foreign occupation. Lebanon also reiterated its condemnation of what it called Israeli terrorism, manifest in the ongoing acts of violence committed by Israeli settlers and the Israeli Army throughout occupied Arab territory; any such illegal activity as the establishment of settlements, including in Jerusalem, should be condemned.

The Syrian Arab Republic had voted in favour because it believed that the construction and expansion of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories undermined the peace process and jeopardized the peace and security of the region as well as of the entire world. With reference to paragraph 7, Syria reaffirmed that all Israeli settlement activities in the territories occupied since 1967 were illegitimate and were to be considered null and void and in violation of international law.

Eritrea felt that the resolution fell short of expressing in clear language that a just, stable and lasting Middle East peace could not prevail without the realization of the Palestinians' fundamental right to self-determination through the establishment of an independent homeland. Mexico would have preferred a more rigorous wording of the principle of "land for peace".

Speaking before the session was temporarily adjourned, the Observer of Palestine expressed the hope that the new, clear message addressed to Israel would help achieve the cessation of the illegal Israeli actions and a return of the peace process to its appropriate track.

On 6 May [S/1997/360], the President of the General Assembly informed the President of the Security Council that 59 Member States and two observers had participated in the Assembly's debate during the emergency special session. The Assembly President drew the Council President's attention in particular to paragraphs 9 and 13 of resolution ES-10/2.

Communications (May/June). Referring to the 4 April letter from the Permanent Observer of Palestine (see above), Israel, on 5 May [S/1997/355], said that the proposition that a UN Member State had no authority with regard to issues relating to the work of the Security Council, as stated by the Observer in his communication, was unacceptable. Concerning the authority to request Council meetings, Israel was of the view that the established practice by which only States were entitled to make such requests reflected the provisions of the Charter and the Council's provisional rules of procedure and should continue to be followed.

By a letter of 5 June [A/52/173], Israel called the Secretary-General's attention to what it called a series of ominous and disturbing events during the last month, in which three Palestinians—involved in bona fide commercial real estate transactions with Israelis—were brutally murdered in the Jerusalem and Ramallah areas. Another abduction and potential murder was foiled by the Israeli police. Those acts, Israel stated, were preceded, and given justification, by a wave of public incitement by high-ranking Palestinian officials who had advocated punishment of persons selling real estate to Israelis, even declaring such transactions treason and punishable by death. Such incitement and the subsequent abductions and murders, which clearly represented a flagrant abuse of all civilized norms, as well as of human rights principles and the rule of law, were an assault on the fundamental tenets of the peace process, namely, to foster mutual trust and cooperation and create a basis for friendly relations between Palestinians and Israel. Israel urged the international community to condemn them unequivocally, and called on the Palestinian leadership to take steps to end such action.

By identical letters dated 12 June [A/51/923-S/1997/453], the Permanent Observer reported to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President that the Israeli Prime Minister had revealed ideas about a final settlement with the Palestinians, which included the establishment of a virtual "Greater Jerusalem" under Israeli sovereignty, continuous control over the Jordan Valley, a buffer zone along the borders and annexation of settlement blocs. That would leave less than half of the occupied territory for the Palestinians and without geographical contiguity, thus ensuring prevention of the realization of Palestinian national rights, including the establishment of a Palestinian State. The Prime Minister's plan, the Observer alleged, was solid evidence, along with government guidelines, of Israel's intention to destroy the peace process and the agreements reached, while trying to impose unilaterally a new framework; the plan also made a mockery of resolution 242(1967), which was the basis of the peace process and implementation of which was the goal of the agreements reached between both sides, and of the principles embodied in the mutual recognition of Israel and the Palestinians. The plan, as well as the continuation of illegal Israeli actions in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, represented another direct challenge to the international community and a gross violation of resolution ES-10/2.

The Observer stated that the issue of land could not be considered in isolation from that of Israeli settler colonialism, a major dimension of which was the illegal acquisition of Palestinian land, as Israel used any non-Palestinian ownership of land as a tool to challenge Palestinian sovereignty; since its establishment, Israel had instituted all types of practical and legal arrangements to prevent land ownership by non-Jews. The PA would permit only the application of existing laws in the occupied territory to prevent illegal land sales and transfers and, at the same time, would continue to take measures to inhibit any attempt by persons to take the law into their own hands.

Report of Secretary-General (June/July). The Secretary-General, on 26 June, presented a report [A/ES-10/6-S/1997/494 & Corr.1 & Add.1] on implementation of resolution ES-10/2, in particular on the cessation of the construction of the new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim and of all other illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory, as well as on his efforts to monitor the situation.

The Secretary-General, by a 14 May note verbale addressed to all Member States and to the Permanent Observer of Palestine, requested any information relevant to the implementation of the resolution. In order to comply with the Assembly's request, he had intended to dispatch a Special Envoy to the area and had instructed the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs to contact Israel to discuss the scope of such a mission. He gave details of consultations and of an exchange of letters between Israel and the UN Secretariat, in which Israel expressed concerns over the sending of a UN representative to the region and other matters connected with implementation of the resolution. During discussions between Israel and the Under-Secretary-General on the terms of reference of the proposed mission, Israel placed a number of restrictions on the visit, including limiting the representative's interlocutors to Israel and the PA and not allowing settlements other than Har Homa (Jebel Abu Ghneim) to be inspected or issues other than the construction of housing in Har Homa to be reflected in the representative's report.

On 5 June, the Secretary-General informed Israel that he proposed to dispatch the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs, Kieran Prendergast, as his Special Envoy. His terms of reference would be to discuss with Israel any matter it chose to raise with him and, based on those discussions and on consultations with the PA, to provide the Secretary-General with information for the requested report. Although the primary focus of the mission would be the construction of housing in Har Homa, the Special Envoy would also discuss other topics should Israel or his other interlocutors choose to raise them. The Special Envoy would also be ready to meet with parties other than the Government of Israel and the PA should they so request.

In response, Israel reiterated its restrictions on the terms of reference of the Secretary-General's representative; the Secretary-General noted that those restrictions would prevent the Special Envoy from carrying out his task adequately. He hoped that the visit could take place on the basis set out by him on 5 June and noted that, in order for the report to be completed by 25 June, as the Assembly had requested, the Special Envoy would need to leave New York no later than 14 June.

In further correspondence, Israel objected to the holding of the emergency special session, saying that there was no procedural or substantive justification, and it categorically rejected the one-sided resolution adopted.

Owing to Israel's restrictions, which, the Secretary-General said, were not acceptable to the United Nations, it had not been possible to dispatch the Special Envoy in conditions under which he could discharge in a satisfactory manner the mandate entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Assembly. Therefore, he based the substantive portion of his report on reliable sources available to the United Nations at Headquarters and in the field.

According to that information, he reported, Israel had not abandoned, as of 20 June, its construction of a new settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim. Although settlement activity continued unabated throughout the occupied territories (see below), Abu Ghneim was viewed as particularly serious for a number of reasons. (a) Politically, the construction there was the first move to establish an entirely new settlement on occupied Palestinian lands since a freeze was imposed by the previous Israeli Government. Palestinians pointed out that such a move prejudiced final status negotiations, during which the issue of Jerusalem and borders was to be determined; the settlement was seen as closing the door on what Palestinians expected to be the future capital of a Palestinian State-East Jerusalem. (b) Geographically, the settlement represented the final link in a chain of Israeli settlements around occupied East Jerusalem, which was seen as a final step towards isolating Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank and as part of Israel's stated policy to incorporate fully occupied East Jerusalem as part of the "unified eternal capital of the State of Israel". (c) Demographically, the settlement would further advance the forced alteration of occupied East Jerusalem's religious and ethnic composition; according to projections, 50,000 Jewish settlers from Israel would settle in a predominantly Arab area. (d) Economically, the settlement was expected to damage an already devastated Palestinian economy, due to the resulting separation of the economic hub of East Jerusalem from the towns and agricultural areas of the rest of the West Bank. (e) As to the peace process, Israel's refusal to abandon construction represented, in the view of the Palestinians, the largest single negative factor in the breakdown of that process and the fomenting of unrest in the occupied territories. Through both public statements and the continuing construction, the Israeli Prime Minister and other government representatives continued to reject the terms of the Assembly resolution requiring cessation of those activities. Palestinian communities in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, included Jerusalem, had responded with two months of public demonstrations, during which hundreds of Palestinians were wounded in clashes with the Israeli military and a number of Palestinian deaths were reported, while tensions continued to mount.

According to the report, Israeli Prime Minister Netanyahu had promised to build 3,500 housing units for Palestinians in 10 as yet unidentified neighbourhoods in Arab East Jerusalem, at the same time as construction at Jebel Abu Ghneim proceeded. It was not clear whether the units would be government funded, or if only building permits would be issued. Since 1967, reportedly, only 600 housing units for Palestinians had been built by the Government.

Israeli settlement activities continued during the period under review in numerous locations throughout the West Bank and Gaza, the Secretary-General stated; expansion was recorded in over 30 settlements and settlement road construction was under way at more than 10 sites. It had been reported that 30,000 dunums of Palestinian land in the West Bank were expropriated in 1997 for the expansion of settlements. Significant portions of land had been seized for those purposes near Hebron, around Jerusalem and in the Jordan Valley. In the Gaza Strip, attempts by settlers to seize additional land adjacent to existing settlements at Gush Katif led to violent clashes among Palestinians, Israeli settlers and the military, resulting in a number of Palestinians injured and at least one dead. Demolitions of Palestinian homes, some of them punitive and unlicensed, in Jerusalem and other parts of the occupied territories continued.

The Secretary-General noted that Israel had implemented other measures that altered or purported to alter the character, legal status and demographic composition of Jerusalem, and adopted a number of administrative, legal and other measures affecting the rights and status of Palestinians living there. External support for settlements and their economic infrastructure continued, including private support from foreign companies and individuals.

Israel had not, as of 20 June, accepted de jure applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention to all occupied territories, the Secretary-General said, and the realization of the principle of territorial integrity, as enunciated in the Oslo accords, had been frustrated by Israeli restrictions on the movement of persons and goods. Israel's policy of general closure of the occupied territories, in effect since March 1993, was aggravated by periodic comprehensive closures entailing complete denial of movements during a full 353 calendar days until mid-June 1997. Since 21 March, when a bomb attack in Tel Aviv, apparently carried out by Hamas, killed three Israeli women, such comprehensive closures had been imposed for a total of 24 days. Internal closures, during which movement was not allowed even inside the West Bank, took place on 27 days in 1996. Restrictions on movement were also imposed on UN officials and project materials, resulting in delays and added costs for development projects in the occupied territories and in serious disruption of the work of humanitarian agencies.

A number of other activities deemed to be in violation of international law continued to raise tensions and jeopardize both the peace process and the rights of the Palestinians, the Secretary-General stated, including the imprisonment of over 3,000 Palestinians in Israeli jails, almost 300 of them held in administrative detention without charge or trial. Palestinian detainees continued to be subjected to torture and other mistreatment under security regulations officially endorsed by the Israeli High Court and the Government.

Israel's 6 March decision to limit the long-delayed second troop redeployment to only 9 per cent of the West Bank further aggravated the situation. Within the overall deteriorating security situation, Palestinian violence against Israeli civilians, settlers and military personnel increased, as did military operations against Palestinians. The majority of violent incidents involving settlers, who attacked Palestinians in response to stone-throwing, took place in the Hebron area, but sporadic incidents of settler violence were also reported in the Gaza Strip.

The Secretary-General's report contained responses from 11 Member States to his request for information relevant to the implementation of resolution ES-10/2, received as of 23 June, and a reply from the Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations. Replies from three additional States were reproduced in an 11 July addendum [A/ES-10/6/Add.1-S/1997/494/Add.1].

The Permanent Observer of Palestine underlined the importance of the emergency special session and of the implementation by Member States of the resolution adopted, in particular of paragraphs 7 and 8. With regard to paragraph 7, he stated that while no known Member was providing assistance to illegal Israeli activities in the occupied territories, the activities of private groups in some countries and the issue of the fungibility of money raised concerns that should be addressed. Paragraph 8 stressed the obligation of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention; it was accordingly expected, the Observer said, that specific national as well as regional actions would be taken by the Parties in that regard. He noted that Israel had not heeded the demand in the resolution to cease the construction of Jebel Abu Ghneim and all other settlement activities, but continued with such illegal measures, as it continued to violate the integrity of Palestinian territory, imposing all kinds of restrictions on the freedom of movement of persons and goods. Efforts by UN Members during the emergency special session and those of the Secretary-General were indeed valuable, the Observer emphasized, in the attempt to salvage the peace process, which was being very seriously threatened by Israel's failure to comply with the will of the international community, international law and resolution ES-10/2, in addition to its serious violations of the agreements reached with the PLO in the framework of the peace process. In case of Israel's non-compliance, the emergency special session could be resumed and could consider making further recommendations under Chapters VI and VII of the UN Charter, the Observer concluded.

Communications (3-11 July). By a 3 July letter [A/ES-10/7-S/1997/515], the Syrian Arab Republic, referring to Israel's position as expressed in the Secretary-General's report, charged that Israel was seeking to evade all responsibility with respect to the serious deterioration in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, attributable to its settlement policy, particularly the construction at Jebel Abu Ghneim. Distinguishing between terrorism, to be condemned, and struggles against occupation, to be supported, Syria said the only form of terrorism to be condemned was State terrorism, which Israel practised under the guise of self-defence.

On 7 July [A/52/225-S/1997/530], Israel expressed serious reservations with regard to the content and tone of the Secretary-General's report, which, it felt, could only further encourage those on the Palestinian side who believed that there was no need to sit at the negotiating table when international forums were prepared to abet its attempts to bypass the peace process; UN Members should not delude themselves that a document of that nature could play any constructive role in bringing the parties to resolve the differences between them. The report bore little or no relation to the task assigned by resolution ES-10/2, made no effort to understand or convey the complexities of the issues it raised and presented uncorroborated reports as fact and parroted partisan political views. It focused on Israel's security measures in response to terrorist attacks, without considering the terrorism and incitement that created the need for such measures, and blamed Israel for "fomenting unrest" in the territories, thus absolving the Palestinian side from any responsibility for escalating the violence. The report took judgemental positions on issues to be negotiated in the final status negotiations and, far from contributing to resumption of peaceful negotiations, it conveyed a clear message to the Palestinians that the United Nations was a convenient and willing forum for bypassing the peace process.

Resumed session (July). Following a 7 July request [A/ES-10/8] from Egypt, as Chairman of the Arab Group and on behalf of the States members of LAS, the Assembly on 15 July resumed its tenth emergency special session. Support for the request to resume the session was voiced by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/ES-10/9], the Committee on Palestinian Rights [A/ES-10/10] and OIC [A/ES-10/11-S/1997/532].

Expressing appreciation for the Secretary-General's report, the Observer of Palestine, the first of the 38 speakers during the debate, said it set out the real picture, in particular with regard to the Jebel Abu Ghneim settlement and all illegal Israeli actions in East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory; the report should serve as a shock for the international community concerning the reality of Israel's actions, the attempted destruction of the basis of the historical reconciliation and mutual recognition of the existence and rights of Israelis and Palestinians, and serve as an additional reason for taking decisive measures. The building of the settlement and the attempts to "Judaize" and seize Jerusalem had to be stopped to salvage the peace process. The Palestinians had made many concessions concerning their historic rights to their homeland in order to achieve peace; they had recently accepted a solution based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213] and on the principle of returning the territories occupied since 1967 in their entirety for peace. The West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip constituted only about 22 per cent of the area of mandated Palestine. In spite of that, the Observer said, some on the Israeli side attempted to deny responsibility for Israel's official acceptance of that solution, which enjoyed international consensus, rejecting the principle of land for peace or proposing a compromise; that position insulted the Palestinians' national feelings and the will of the whole world. The world unanimously rejected Israel's practices and insisted on the need to implement the agreements reached, and only Israel rejected those factors.

The Palestinians and their leadership were still committed to engaging in the peace process and upholding the agreements reached; they hoped that the sponsors of the peace process, other influential parties and the entire international community would exert additional efforts to bring about a change in Israel's position, which was necessary to salvage the peace process. In order to regain their inalienable rights and establish their independent State, with Jerusalem as its capital, the Palestinians would continue to work within the United Nations, and to return to the emergency special session and to the Security Council.

The real issue threatening the peace process was not an urban housing project, said Israel, but the unravelling of the very basis of the Israel-PLO agreements: the principle that violence would not be used as an instrument to achieve political ends. Since the signing of the Declaration of Principles in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 521], Israel had witnessed an unprecedented upsurge in terrorism, much of it emanating from areas under the control of its negotiating partner. But despite repeated suicide bombings that struck the heart of its cities, Israel was determined to make the peace process work. Rather than stop that process, Israel moved forward with the Hebron Protocol and the "Note for the Record", in which both sides undertook to implement their mutual commitments and which made the principle of reciprocity an integral part of the Oslo process. Since January 1997, Israel had taken difficult and tangible steps for peace, completing the redeployment in Hebron, releasing convicted terrorists from prison, transferring large funds to the PA and offering a further redeployment that would have more than tripled the area under full Palestinian control in the West Bank, had it been implemented by the Palestinian side. Israel was ready and willing to resume negotiations on all outstanding interim issues and to restart the final status negotiations.

While it had met all of its commitments, Israel stated, the PLO had met none of its post-Hebron obligations: the process of revising the Palestinian National Council Covenant, which called for Israel's destruction, had not been completed; cooperation between Israeli and Palestinian security services had not been strengthened, but repeatedly cut off; there had been no systematic and effective combating of terrorist organizations, as Hamas and Islamic Jihad terrorists had been released from prison over recent months; not a single terrorist suspect had been transferred by the Palestinian side; no illegal arms had been confiscated in the area under Palestinian jurisdiction; the size of the Palestinian police had not been reduced to the level agreed on under the Interim Agreement; and Palestinian governmental activity in Jerusalem had not been halted.

In Israel's view, the emergency special session threatened to turn the clock back decades, undermining the international community's painstaking efforts in three areas: the work of the United Nations itself, the work of humanitarian organizations and the work of those involved in the peace process. Any delusions one might have had about the role the United Nations might play in the Middle East were dispelled by the Secretary-General's report, the content and tone of which, and the interpretation of its task, were hostile and one-sided, entirely ignoring paragraph 12 of resolution ES-10/2 and the issue of terrorism. It legitimized the incitement and use of violence as a response to political differences. Despite Israel's offer to place all relevant information before those preparing the report, none of the serious and controversial allegations contained in the report were submitted to Israel for verification or comment. The report was damaging not only to the reputation of the United Nations, but also to the valuable work of its agencies operating in the region, which served for the report as sources "in the field"; it threatened to harm the cooperation between host States and UN agencies which was essential for their functioning.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following the debate, the Assembly, on 15 July [meeting 5], adopted resolution ES-10/3 [draft: A/ES-10/L.2/Rev.1, orally revised] by recorded vote (131-3-14) [agenda item 5].

Illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory

The General Assembly,

Having received with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling all relevant United Nations resolutions,

Reaffirming its resolution ES-10/2 of 25 April 1997,

Having been informed in the report of the Secretary-General that, inter alia, the Government of Israel, as of 20 June 1997, has not abandoned its construction of the new Israeli settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim and that settlement activity, including the expansion of existing settlements, the construction of bypass roads, the confiscation of lands adjacent to settlements and related activities, in violation of Security Council resolutions on the matter, continues unabated throughout the occupied Palestinian territory, and also that the Israeli Prime Minister and other representatives of the Government continue to reject the terms of resolution ES-10/2 requiring the cessation of those activities,

Aware that, in the light of the position of the Government of Israel, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General, the General Assembly should once more consider the situation with a view to making additional appropriate recommendations to States Members of the United Nations, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 377 A (V) of 3 November 1950,

1. Condemns the failure of the Government of Israel to comply with the demands made by the General Assembly at its tenth emergency special session in resolution ES-10/2;

2. Strongly deplores the lack of cooperation of the Government of Israel and its attempts to impose restrictions upon the intended mission of the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General to Israel and the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

3. Reaffirms that all illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory, especially settlement activity, and the practical results thereof cannot be recognized, irrespective of the passage of time;

4. Reiterates the demands made in resolution ES-10/2, in particular for the immediate and full cessation of the construction of a new settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim, to the south of occupied East Jerusalem, and of all other Israeli settlement activities, as well as of all illegal measures and actions in Jerusalem;

5. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, immediately cease and reverse all actions taken illegally, in contravention of international law, against Palestinian Jerusalemites;

6. Recommends to Member States that they actively discourage activities which directly contribute to any construction or development of Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, as these activities contravene international law;

7. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, make available to Member States the necessary information about goods produced or manufactured in the illegal settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

8. Stresses that all Member States, in order to ensure their rights and benefits resulting from membership, should fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

9. Emphasizes the responsibilities, including personal ones, arising from persistent violations and grave breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

10. Recommends that the High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War convene a conference on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to ensure its respect, in accordance with common article 1, and requests the Secretary-General to present a report on the matter within three months;

11. Calls for the reinjection of momentum into the stalled Middle East peace process and for the implementation of the agreements reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, as well as for the upholding of the principles of the process, including the exchange of land for peace, and calls upon the two sides to refrain from actions that impede the peace process by pre-empting permanent status negotiations;

12. Stresses the need for actions in accordance with the Charter, to continue to ensure respect for international law and relevant United Nations resolutions;

13. Decides to adjourn the tenth emergency special session of the General Assembly temporarily and to authorize the President of the most recent General Assembly to resume its meetings upon request from Member States.

Introducing the draft on behalf of the 23 sponsors, Indonesia said it was balanced and reasonable and the product of extensive consultations with Member States; its adoption would go a long way towards mitigating the current volatile situation and would be fully consistent with the aim of reviving the stalled peace process.

In Israel's opinion, supporting the resolution was inconsistent with support for the only process that brought any real benefit to the region, namely, negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. The approach to resolving the toughest issues—Jerusalem, settlements, borders and other permanent status issues—would not be calls for economic measures that undermined the principle of building economic ties as a key element in advancing the peace process, nor would it be the politicization of instruments of humanitarian law and the organizations which implemented them, and certainly it would not be the endless ritual of reports presenting a one-sided picture and providing a platform for any conceivable allegation against Israel. Israel's quest for peace was strong enough to keep it at the negotiating table, waiting for its counterparts to return to complete arrangements for safe passage, a port and an airport and to begin to tackle permanent status issues.

In the United States view, the text was partisan, aimed not at building confidence or dialogue but confrontation. Its specifics would not serve the cause of peace and detracted from the peace process to the extent that they were designed to inject the United Nations and other bodies into deliberations between the parties. The United States strongly objected to several of the resolution's elements: the economic measures envisioned amounted to a demand for a partial economic boycott of Israel; there should be no language threatening the participation of any Member in the Assembly; and a conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention was not the proper forum to address the situation. The United States was also troubled by the ostensible goal of that conference, i.e., "to enforce the Convention", with the Secretary-General to report on the matter, which seemed merely a device to perpetuate the counter-productive cycle of special Assembly sessions. In sum, the resolution would further aggravate prospects for renewed progress in the peace process, which was a goal shared by most Assembly Members, and certainly by the Palestinians and Israelis themselves.

The Russian Federation felt that, although amendments to the text made it a bit more balanced, it could benefit from further work to make it more realistic. No measures, including sanctions, were excluded and further refinement was required with regard to paragraph 10—concerning the convening of a conference for the Fourth Geneva Convention—which lacked clarity. Russia had been prepared for further constructive cooperation with the sponsors; there was a haste to vote, however, and Russia, as a sponsor of the peace process, had no choice but to abstain.

Norway deeply regretted that Israel had still not heeded the calls from the partners in peace and from the international community to halt its settlement activities. It would vote for the resolution despite reservations on a number of elements and reservations regarding the holding of the emergency special session, which it did not consider to be conducive to progress in the peace process. Canada explained that it would vote in favour because the text reflected in broad measure its concerns about the serious situation of the peace process and the particular importance of the construction of a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim/Har Homa. It regretted that some paragraphs of the resolution contained elements that were imprecise or impractical or had unclear implications for the United Nations and for Member States. With regard to paragraphs 9 and 10, Canada's policy was that the Fourth Geneva Convention applied to the Israeli-occupied territories, including East Jerusalem. As a High Contracting Party to the Convention, its decision about the merits of convening the conference called for in paragraph 10 would be made after full examination of the utility and consequences of doing so, as well as of the cost implications and consultations with the other High Contracting Parties. Though supporting the main thrust of the resolution, Turkey felt that certain paragraphs were impractical and could have been formulated in a more constructive manner. Liberia expressed reservations on paragraphs that seemed to suggest interference with Israel's membership in the United Nations. Uruguay explained that it would vote in favour as the building of the new settlements continued, despite the international community's opinion as expressed in UN resolutions.

Rwanda, in the absence of a resolution conducive to inspiring both parties to resume direct talks leading to a final settlement of the plight of the Palestinians, had no choice but to abstain. Although casting a positive vote, Japan placed on record its view that the statement contained in the oral revision made by Indonesia—adding "as these activities contravene international law" at the end of paragraph 6—might contain some imprecision and lead to some ambiguities strictly from the juridical point of view.

The Syrian Arab Republic noted that paragraph 11 did not refer to the principles and terms of reference of the Middle East peace process, which enjoyed the entire international community's full support and which was founded on the principles of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257], 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213] and 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312] and on the principle of land for peace. Nor did it demand that Israel fulfil agreed obligations and commitments, which was essential for injecting momentum in the stalled peace process, an impasse for which Israel was responsible.

Communications (18 July-26 September). The Permanent Observer of Palestine, by identical letters [A/52/258-S/1997/560, A/ES-10/13] of 18 July to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President, expressed increased concern in the face of Israel's reaction to resolution ES-10/3, as it reflected intransigence, arrogance and even contempt for the will of the international community. Israel's outrageous response to the Secretary-General's report, submitted pursuant to resolution ES-10/2, made unacceptable challenges to the integrity of UN work and ignored the facts on the ground, as well as the established positions of the international community and the provisions of international law. Such response, in addition to the continued illegal settlement activities at Jebel Abu Ghneim, clearly indicated that Israel did not understand the messages sent by the international community, which increased the need for serious follow-up to the two resolutions and probably for further actions by the international community to ensure Israel's compliance.

By a letter of 31 July, transmitted to the Secretary-General on 1 August [A/52/265-S/1997/604], Israel reported that in two terrorist attacks on 30 July in West Jerusalem, 13 Israelis had been killed and more than 150 injured, more than 10 of them being in critical condition. Those attacks came, Israel said, as it was continuing to implement measures to ease the economic conditions of the Palestinians and had reconvened the bilateral committees charged with addressing the most pressing issues on the Palestinian agenda in a genuine effort to restore trust and confidence between the two sides. The PA, on the other hand, had consistently failed to fulfil its obligations to combat violence and terror, refrain from incitement to hatred, and cooperate with Israel in the security sphere; instead, known terrorists were released early from detention, the official Palestinian media continued to disseminate hateful slogans and call for continued armed struggle against Israel, and senior officials of the PA participated in anti-Israeli demonstrations and Israeli flag-burning ceremonies, actions which were clearly perceived by the population as official approval of continued violence and terror. If the peace process was to be salvaged, Israel stated, the PA had to take immediate, effective steps to address the security issue. The international community could play a more effective role in that regard by sending an unequivocal message to the PA and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat that the terrorist infrastructure had to be uprooted, the security coordination with Israel unconditionally renewed and the terrorist scourge effectively removed.

On 4 August [S/1997/609], the Permanent Observer of Palestine brought to the Security Council President's attention that Israel had imposed a land and sea blockade on Palestinian territory, blocking its borders with Israel, Egypt and Jordan and preventing the use of the sea of Gaza by Palestinian boats; further, it had imposed a siege on Palestinian cities and villages in the West Bank, isolating them from each other, confining the movement of persons and preventing the transport of goods. Israel had also blocked the transfer of important amounts of funds belonging to the PA and even issued an arrest warrant against the head of the Palestinian police force. Those actions, supposedly taken in response to the bombings of 30 July in West Jerusalem, had caused food and medical supply shortages and total economic destruction, the Observer charged. In addition to Israel's continued illegal settler colonialism, its recent action represented unprecedented collective punishment and did not serve the purpose of fighting violence and extremism, but was politically motivated, as the Israeli Government was trying to pre-empt any possible progress in the peace process and perhaps destroy that process altogether. Israel's measures required action by the international community, specifically the Security Council, with the aim of bringing them to an immediate end and reversing their destructive and dangerous impact, the Observer concluded.

On 20 August [A/ES-10/14], the Observer Mission of Palestine brought to the Secretary-General's attention that the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, continued to deteriorate seriously as a result of Israel's collective punitive measures and actions against the Palestinians and the Palestinian National Authority, which included the closure of the occupied territory and the continued siege of Bethlehem and Jerusalem for the past three weeks. Further, Israel continued to build the new settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim, confiscate land, expand existing settlements and demolish Palestinian homes, as well as to impose additional measures aimed at changing the character, demographic composition and legal status of Jerusalem, in flagrant violation of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly at its emergency special session and other relevant UN resolutions. Private contributions continued to support illegal settlement activities, the representative of Palestine charged. In accordance with the resolutions of the emergency special session and with international law, Member States had a responsibility to prevent any such support, including from the private sector.

Informing the Secretary-General of a triple bombing in Jerusalem, Israel, by a 4 September letter [A/52/321-S/1997/689], alleged that the latest attack was supported by a broad infrastructure of terrorism in the territories under the PA's control. The Authority had to be held accountable as it had consistently failed to fulfil its security obligations, Israel charged; instead, the infrastructure of the Hamas organization, which had taken credit for the 4 September attack, and of the Islamic Jihad had grown, as the Authority had released hundreds of terrorists from prison and was holding back security cooperation with Israel as a political card in the negotiations. Finally, the public embrace of Hamas leaders by PLO Chairman Arafat sent a message to the Palestinian public legitimizing Hamas actions. Israel reserved the right to do what was necessary to defend its people and expected the international community to send a clear message to the PA to live up to its commitments to fight terrorism; there could be no progress in the peace process without eradication of the terrorist infrastructure and close cooperation between the PA and Israel in security matters.

that the PA had unequivocally condemned the 4 September bombing and other similar acts; there were, however, increasing indications that Israel was using those acts as an excuse to bury both the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p. 521] and the 1995 Interim Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 626]. Since its first day in office, the Government of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu had shown clear hostility towards those agreements and had adopted official guidelines contradicting their letter and spirit. The real underlying causes for Palestinian extremism and violence were Israel's severe measures, such as the simultaneous closure of Palestinian territory and siege over Palestinian cities, in spite of which the Palestinian side would continue to take its responsibilities seriously, including taking action against anyone who might be involved in illegal activities. The road to establishing a comprehensive peace was clear, the Observer concluded: the parties had to reaffirm their commitment to the basis of the Middle East peace process, including the principle of land for peace and their commitment to the implementation of the agreements and to mutual recognition and respect.

By identical letters to the Secretary-General and the Security Council President [A/52/371-S/1997/727, A/ES-10/15] dated 19 September, the Permanent Observer reported that Israel was continuing with its drive to colonize occupied Arab East Jerusalem, having allowed illegal settlers to occupy a house in Ras al-Amud, a crowded Arab neighbourhood. According to Israeli media, several government ministers had known in advance of the settlers' intention, as had the Prime Minister himself, who had asked for postponement of the action until after the departure of the United States Secretary of State from the region. The Observer stressed that it was the duty of the international community, especially the Security Council, to take immediate action to bring an end to the repeated violations of the Fourth Geneva Convention by Israel.

On 26 September [A/52/396-S/1997/749], the Permanent Observer informed the Secretary-General that the Israeli Prime Minister had declared on 24 September that his Government would build 300 new housing units in a settlement called "Efrat" in the occupied territory; that decision, in addition to being illegal, came at a time when the peace process was facing an increasingly endangered future, with many parties, including the United States, trying to revive the process, and it was hard to believe that it had not been made in order to pre-empt those efforts. Further to that decision, the Observer said, the use by the Prime Minister of outrageous and dangerous expressions—such as "The land of Israel is constantly being built up before my eyes, and also before your eyes and you can see it" and "We are building in Judea and Samaria and we are building in Efrat"—was tantamount to negating any commitment to the peace process as well as the mutual recognition of the parties. Phrases like "land of Israel" and "Judea and Samaria" were irreconcilable with that process, the agreements reached between the parties and the agreed aim of the peace process, namely, implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) and 338(1973).

Report of Secretary-General (October/November). The Secretary-General presented an October report [A/ES-10/16-S/1997/798] concerning the recommendation contained in resolution ES-10/3 that a conference be convened by the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to ensure respect for the Convention. In a 31 July note verbale, the Secretary-General had requested Switzerland, in its capacity as depositary of the Convention, to provide him with the necessary information. On 7 October, Switzerland replied that it had sought the views of the 188 States parties to the Convention; of those, 53 had responded and 29 of them were in favour of convening a conference, while one was against, saying that "such a conference would have seriously harmful effects on humanitarian protection and on the peace process". Among the other States that responded, some had no objection or no objection with reservations, while others felt that more careful study was required. Various other views were put forward, as were alternative suggestions for dealing with the issue.

Support for the convening of a conference was expressed by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and LAS. The EU suggested that a meeting of experts examine the political and legal context before a conference was convened.

In a 10 November addendum [A/ES-10/16/Add.1-S/1997/798/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported that on 5 November Switzerland had informed him that it had received 20 additional replies, five of them declaring their support for the convening of the conference and a sixth saying it would participate in the conference. Other States indicated no major objection or approved of holding a conference, but with reservations or indications that further preparations were required.

One State did not believe that a conference would be useful or necessary at the current time or that it would foster the atmosphere of confidence required for progress in the negotiations between the parties to the peace process. Another

State saw no urgent need to convene a conference, saying that it would be better to follow closely the progress of the negotiations.

In addition, the depositary received a spontaneous communication from the general delegation of Palestine in Switzerland, in which the PLO and the Palestinian National Authority affirmed the need to convene a conference of the High Contracting Parties as soon as possible, so as to take measures to ensure respect for the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention in the occupied territory, including East Jerusalem, and to confirm the necessity of respecting them in accordance with common article 1 of the four Geneva Conventions of 1949.

Resumed session (November). In accordance with a 24 October request by Yemen on behalf of the LAS [A/ES-10/17], which was supported by Indonesia, as Chairman of the Islamic Group of OIC in New York [A/ES-10/18], and Colombia, in its capacity as Chairman of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/ES-10/19], the tenth emergency special session was resumed on 13 November. At the start of the debate, Palestine said that collective measures should be escalated until Israel complied with the Assembly's clear demands contained in the two substantive resolutions adopted at the emergency special session by an overwhelming majority. Israel's only reaction to those resolutions had been to scorn the will of the international community and to continue to carry out its illegal measures. The responses as summarized in the Secretary-General's report indicated that the overwhelming majority agreed on the need to convene a conference in one form or another. Palestine hoped that the Assembly would adopt a provision to that effect and that Switzerland, as the Fourth Geneva Convention's depositary, would begin the preparatory measures. In that regard, Palestine welcomed any meetings to prepare for the conference, including a meeting of experts, to be held no later than within three months. Palestine's participation in the conference and in any preparatory meeting was necessary. There was international consensus on the Convention's applicability to the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, as affirmed by the Security Council in 25 resolutions, and Israel alone rejected its applicability, having continuously violated the Convention for 30 years.

Action by the Assembly was even more important and urgent due to the severe deterioration of the Middle East peace process as a result of Israel's policies and practices. The current Israeli Government not only had not implemented any of the provisions of the agreements reached—many of them overdue—with the exception of the redeployment from Al-Khalil/Hebron, it had also resumed its colonial settlement campaign, including the "Judaization" of Arab East Jerusalem, had undertaken to strangle the Palestinian economy and flagrantly exploit the Palestinian market by imposing sieges and closures and restricting the freedom of movement, and had increased direct oppressive measures such as demolition of homes, kidnappings and collective administrative detentions, even killings and assassinations.

While acknowledging the deep negative impact of and forcefully condemning the bombings and other violent and terrorist actions carried out by enemies of peace on the Palestinian side, the Observer stressed that Israeli policies were not the result of those actions, but were partially responsible for them and for the state of frustration among the Palestinians, as well as for the tension in the region and the decline of hope among its peoples. Success in confronting violence and terrorism was linked to the political and economic reality and the Observer called on all the concerned parties fully to shoulder their responsibilities in that regard. The Palestinians remained committed to their strategic option to become engaged in the peace process and to the agreements reached. It remained their right and duty to achieve maximum UN involvement in the question of Palestine, which was the permanent responsibility of the Organization, and in the situation in the Middle East. Israel, however, together with some of its friends, seemed to want to get rid of the framework of the agreements reached; until that was accomplished, it also intended to get rid of the framework of international legality, aiming at abolishing the Palestinians' existence as a people, abrogating their rights and placing them in cantons under Israeli hegemony.

Israel termed the resumed session a masquerade that claimed to be concerned with advancing the prospects for peace and with increasing humanitarian protection, while in fact only serving to undermine those prospects and the instruments for such protection and ultimately, undermining the United Nations itself. While Israeli and Palestinian negotiators resumed intensive efforts to bridge the gap between them, the Palestine Observer Mission to the United Nations was occupied with preparing a draft resolution that referred to the stalled peace process; at the very moment when Israel was asked, despite the heinous acts of terror that continued to cost innocent civilians their lives, to take risks for peace on vital security issues—to provide safe passage through the heart of Israel, allow a full-scale airport to begin operating in the Gaza Strip, invest millions to create jobs for Palestinians—the Assembly would broadcast its resonant vote of no confidence in the peace process. The perpetrators of the recent brutal bombings in the heart of Jerusalem came from the area under the control of the PA, which had failed to comply with its commitment to combat terrorist organizations and structures. Although the bombing of innocent Israelis eroded the core of the Oslo process, Israel declared it was determined to make the peace process work.

In the Declaration of Principles, Israel continued, both sides had agreed that there would be no restriction on settlement activity during the interim period and that the settlements would be one of the subjects of the permanent status talks. On the date set for the start of those talks, Israel turned up but the Palestinians never came; while Israel called repeatedly for its Palestinian counterparts to join it in expedited talks, which would also deal with settlements, the Palestinians preferred to reject practical negotiations and opted instead for the fool's gold of political resolutions in international forums.

Despite many cases of actual occupation, Israel explained, it was the only State that had actually implemented in practice the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention relating to occupied territory. Even though the Convention was not, strictly speaking, applicable to territories that were formerly occupied and not under a legitimate sovereign, Israel had implemented the Convention in practice.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After hearing the 29 speakers who participated in the debate, the General Assembly on 13 November [meeting 7] adopted resolution ES-10/4 [draft: A/ES-10/L.3 & Add.1, orally revised] by recorded vote (139-3-13) [agenda item 5].

Illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with paragraph 10 of its resolution ES-10/3 of 15 July 1997,

Having received a letter dated 20 August 1997 from the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations, informing about specific cases of assistance by individuals for illegal settlement activities,

Gravely concerned at the continuing deterioration of the Middle East peace process and the lack of implementation of the agreements reached,

Reaffirming that all illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory, especially settlement activities, and the practical results thereof, cannot be recognized irrespective of the passage of time,

Recalling its rejection of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations in accordance with all relevant resolutions and declarations of the United Nations,

States to actively discourage activities that directly contribute to any construction or development of Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, as these activities contravene international law;

4. Reiterates also its recommendation that the High Contracting Parties to the Geneva Convention convene a conference on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to ensure its respect in accordance with common article 1;

5. Recommends to the Government of Switzerland, in its capacity as the depositary of the Geneva Convention, to undertake the necessary steps, including the convening of a meeting of experts in order to follow up on the above-mentioned recommendation, as soon as possible and with a target date not later than the end of February 1998;

6. Requests the Government of Switzerland to invite the Palestine Liberation Organization to participate in the above-mentioned conference and any preparatory steps for that conference;

7. Calls for reinjecting momentum into the stalled Middle East peace process and for the implementation of the agreements reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, as well as for the upholding of the principles of the process, including the exchange of land for peace;

8. Decides that, in case of continuous lack of compliance by Israel, the occupying Power, with the provisions of resolutions ES-10/2 and ES-10/3, it shall reconsider the situation with a view to making further appropriate recommendations to the States Members of the United Nations in accordance with its resolution 377 A (V) of 3 November 1950;

9. Decides to adjourn the tenth emergency special session of the General Assembly temporarily and to authorize the President of the most recent General Assembly to resume its meetings upon request from Member States.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION ES-10/4:

In Israel's view, the most dangerous aspect of the text's proposal to convene a conference was that it would constitute a dangerous mix of political and humanitarian spheres; the politicization of instruments of international humanitarian law would only undermine their effectiveness and have far-reaching consequences, not merely in the region but across the world, and would be a blow to the defence of human rights. The resolution called for reinjecting momentum into the peace process. In order to do that, the international community had to send the Palestinians back to the negotiating table.

Speaking after the vote, Israel said the resolution would not bring the parties together, but would rather continue to provide an excuse for those who wished to see the issue dealt with by fiat in international forums rather than by direct bilateral talks. The recommendation concerning the High Contracting Parties would set a dangerous precedent which would undermine the Fourth Geneva Convention and the effort to implement it.

The United States did not believe that the resolution would serve the cause of Middle East peace; neither the United Nations nor any other body should interfere in discussions of issues that Palestinians and Israelis had decided to address bilaterally. To the extent that the resolution relied on condemnatory formulations, it only poisoned the atmosphere for further talks and would not accomplish the goal it ostensibly sought to achieve.

Explaining its abstention, Australia stated that it continued to support the principles underlying the text, but did not consider it to be helpful in the process of frank, direct and wide-ranging talks between the parties themselves. Swaziland called on the two parties to continue convening conferences at agreed venues, in conformity with Article 33 of the Charter.

Canada said that, with regard to paragraphs 3 to 5 of the resolution, the Fourth Geneva Convention did apply to the occupied territories; as a High Contracting Party, Canada's decision about the merits of convening a conference would be made after full examination of the necessity, possible outcome and impact on the peace process, as well as of the cost implications. Japan was concerned that such a conference would have a negative impact on the peace process. Although it had reservations on a number of the resolution's elements, Norway remained deeply concerned about Israel's continued settlement activities which were clearly not in the spirit of the agreements reached.

The Syrian Arab Republic had hoped that the resolution's sponsors would include in the ninth preambular paragraph an expression of great concern about the continued deterioration of the peace process and that the paragraph would be in line with the prevailing situation, indicating that the peace process was stalled because Israel was abandoning both it and the land-for-peace formula. The text should also have expressed the international community's deep concern about Israel's reneging on its obligations and commitments on all tracks and should have included reference to all the Arab territories occupied since 1967. Syria considered that the eleventh preambular paragraph was not in line with the resolution's content and purpose.

The Republic of Korea believed that the resolution contained a clear message that momentum for the peace process would be irrevocably lost if appropriate steps were not taken soon.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its twenty-ninth annual report [A/52/131/Add.2], the Special Committee on Israeli Practices stated that Israel's settlement policy constituted the principal reason for the current deadlock in the peace process and had given rise to extensive human rights violations in the occupied territories during the period under review (21 September 1996-29 August 1997). In August 1996, Israel had cancelled the previous Government's restrictions on the construction of settlements and, in October, the new Israeli Prime Minister had pledged to push the development of settlements forward. More than $300 million was allocated for settlement development in 1997, and in December 1996 subsidies were given to existing settlements and incentives were offered to settlers. An unprecedented 84 settlements were added to the existing 39 classified as "national priority areas A and B". The estimated 194 settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip were inhabited by over 150,000 settlers, in addition to an estimated 36 to 40 Israeli settlements in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan.

What halted the peace process, said the Committee, was Israel's decision to build the Har Homa/Jebel Abu Ghneim settlement, the first completely new settlement to be built since the lifting of the construction freeze; if completed, it would constitute the final link of a chain of settlements encircling Arab-populated East Jerusalem, which would be cut off from the rest of the West Bank, damaging an already devastated Palestinian economy and significantly advancing the forced alteration of the religious and ethnic composition of East Jerusalem. The building of a number of other settlements was reportedly foreseen between Jerusalem and nearby Ramallah, and Israel had accelerated the building of an extensive network of bypass roads and tunnels, including the construction of highways around Jerusalem, which Palestinians were not allowed to use.

A number of new quarries were also being built, the Committee reported, many of which were located in parts of the occupied territories near the border with Israel in order to serve its construction needs and avoid environmental degradation on its soil. All those activities required the confiscation of Arab land on a massive scale, most of it prime agricultural land; approximately 74 per cent of the West Bank and 40 per cent of the Gaza Strip had been confiscated since 1967. Israel's customary scenario for land expropriation, alleged the Committee, was that the area was first declared a closed military zone, thus rendering it inaccessible to its Palestinian owners; allocation for settlements, quarries or bypass roads followed. Alternatively, a "green area" might be proclaimed, as was often the case in East Jerusalem. It was reported that by May 1997 30,000 dunums had been expropriated in the West Bank for settlement expansion.

The number of clashes and violent incidents between Palestinians and Israeli settlers had increased during the reporting period, the Committee stated, the most frequent and most violent ones being in Hebron.

Reiterating its condemnation of terrorism in all its forms, the Committee considered that the resort to extreme measures, especially in the wake of the Israeli decision to build the Har Homa settlement, was indicative of the degree of desperation of the Palestinian population of the occupied territories.

The Special Committee appealed to Israel to act in conformity with the spirit animating the peace process by recognizing that its current settlement policy represented the most formidable obstacle to peace and security in the region. Accordingly, Israel should halt the establishment of new settlements and the expansion of existing ones; end the policy of land confiscation and the building of bypass roads; and stop exerting pressure on Arabs in East Jerusalem to sell their houses to members of the Jewish community. The Committee further appealed to Israel to refrain from destroying property, demolishing houses and uprooting trees, as well as from discriminatory measures concerning the use of water resources. It recommended that Israel immediately eliminate the practice of forced evictions, adopt protection measures against such practice, and provide restitution or compensation, as stipulated by the Commission on Human Rights in a 1993 resolution [YUN 1993, p. 895].

In a later report [A/53/136], the Special Committee provided updated information on the situation in the occupied territories for the period from 30 August to 31 December 1997. On 1 September, it was reported, the Director-General of the Israeli Prime Minister's Office accused Arabs of robbing 2.8 million dunums of "State-owned land" in the Negev, the Galilee, along the "Green Line"—the border between predominantly Arab East and Jewish West Jerusalem—and in area C; according to a government plan, legal steps would be taken against individuals charged with "illegal" construction, and the possibility of declaring some land "fire practice areas" in order to bar access to them would be examined. The Ministerial Committee on Settlement Affairs would be reinstated and settlement agencies would help Jews to set up large agricultural farms on "State-owned land". On 2 September, the Ministerial Committee for Economic Affairs approved a new map of national priority areas, which classified almost all settlements, including those in the Golan Heights, areas of top national priority. On 5 September, the Security Cabinet, meeting after a suicide bombing attack in Jerusalem on the previous day, announced that no more territory would be handed over to the PA unless it eradicated the "terror" infrastructure in the areas under its control. The Prime Minister also disclosed that IDF and the security forces had been given instructions to minimize their dependence on cooperation with the PA.

Following the 4 September triple suicide bombing, 35 members of the Islamic Resistance Movement—all said to be members of the military wing of Hamas—were arrested by the PA in the cities of Nablus, Ramallah, Bethlehem, Tulkarm and Kalkiliya, and an estimated 400 Palestinians were arrested by Israel in zones B and C. On 16 September, it was reported that 250 Palestinians had been arrested on charges of belonging to "terrorist" organizations.

On 9 September, the Israeli Government published a list of Palestinian security commitments that were to be given to the United States Secretary of State, Madeleine Albright, during her visit to Israel the following day, including: agreement by the Palestinians to full and unconditional security cooperation; detention, arrest and imprisonment of all "terrorists" previously released by the PA, according to lists submitted by Israel; dismissal of PA personnel involved in terrorism or violent acts against Israel; PA implementation of the security commitments specified in the Hebron Protocol; collection and confiscation of illegal arms; no further incitement against Israel by PA officials; PA compliance with the 33 extradition requests submitted to it; reduction of the Palestinian Police Force from 35,500 to the agreed 24,000; and submission for approval of a complete list of PA recruits.

In response, the Palestinians, on 10 September, presented their own demands: immediate transfer by Israel to the PA of the $ 100 million in Palestinian tax payments withheld; lifting of the internal closure of the West Bank; permission for the import of raw materials into the Gaza Strip and the West Bank and the export of agricultural products; permission for a fixed number of labourers with permits to work in Israel, even during periods of hermetic closures; and resumption of the work of the eight committees aimed at implementing important articles of the 1995 Interim Agreement, including the release of Palestinian prisoners, the opening of an airport, the construction of a sea port and safe passage between the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. In addition, the Palestinians demanded that the following practices be stopped: settlement construction and expansion; the invalidation of identity cards of Palestinian residents of Jerusalem; the demolition of homes in the West Bank built without permit; and the evacuation of Bedouins throughout the West Bank and their transfer to areas B and A.

On 14 September, senior United States officials revealed that Secretary Albright had been disappointed by Prime Minister Netanyahu's refusal to commit himself to limiting settlement construction, even if the PA were to win the battle against terrorism. Military sources revealed on 15 September, that IDF was preparing for possible skirmishes with PA fighters in case of further deterioration of the situation. On 26 September, the Prime Minister rejected a renewed United States call for imposing a freeze on settlement expansion in the West Bank. According to reports of 28 September, IDF troops had mounted a series of military exercises near Jenin aimed at reconquering Palestinian-controlled areas and battling PLO fighters attacking Jewish settlements. On 7 October, Sheikh Ahmad Yassin, the founder of Hamas, who had just returned to Gaza after some nine years in an Israeli prison, told reporters that Hamas would stop targeting Israeli civilians if Israel stopped killing Palestinians, confiscating land, demolishing houses and building settlements. On 10 October, it was reported that the Israeli Government would allow the construction of 300 new housing units in the Efrat settlement south of Bethlehem and near the Arroub refugee camp. On 12 October, the Council of Jewish Settlers in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, alleging that Arab housing construction was on the rise in a dozen of villages surrounding Jerusalem, warned that the trend could threaten the city's status and establish facts on the ground in advance of final status negotiations. On 31 October, it was reported that the Israeli Military Commission for Complaints had postponed hearings on land confiscation in the eastern outskirts of Jerusalem, which were to have provided Palestinian landowners with the opportunity to submit proof of their title deeds to land Israel planned to confiscate in order to expand the Maaleh Adumim settlement.

On 13 November, PA President Arafat announced that the Authority would declare statehood in 1999, at the end of the five-year interim autonomy period, if need be unilaterally. Mr. Arafat accused Prime Minister Netanyahu of dragging his feet in negotiations, warning that his policies would bring disaster not just for Israelis and Palestinians but also for the people of the entire region. Commenting on Mr. Arafat's declaration about a Palestinian State, the Prime Minister's communications advisor stated that a unilateral declaration would violate earlier agreements because it would prejudice negotiations on a final status settlement. The Prime Minister, on 1 December, warned that if the PA President were to declare a Palestinian State unilaterally, he would announce the annexation of the Jordan Valley and "other territories", in response to which Mr. Arafat stated that a Palestinian State already existed.

On 19 November, Israel presented the United States with maps outlining its security and settlement concerns in a final status agreement with the Palestinians; Israel stressed that it had to retain several security zones in the territories in any final status settlement, among them the Jordan River Valley and east-west roads cutting through the territories, as well as water sources. On 22 November, the Prime Minister's spokesman stated that the Prime Minister had not promised anyone a settlement freeze, denying a report that a pledge to that effect had been made to the United States President. Following a visit to the Old City of Jerusalem, the Prime Minister on 23 November declared that his Government was committed to increasing the presence of settlers in Arab Jerusalem and Hebron. He ordered a fourth Israeli police station to be set up inside the Old City, following the killing of a settler two days earlier in the Muslim Quarter. On 24 November, he vowed that Israel would never abandon the Gush Etzion settlement, but pledged to continue developing and fortifying it.

On 25 November, it was reported that the new Government proposed transferring an additional 6 to 8 per cent of area C of the West Bank to the PA; under the plan, IDF troop redeployment would take place within five months and be contingent on the Authority's agreeing to suspend a third redeployment until the conclusion of the final status talks. Upon completion of the redeployment, the PA would control 35 to 37 per cent of the West Bank, its jurisdiction covering all of areas A and B and 6 to 8 per cent of area C. Israel's proposal for limited redeployment in area C was immediately rejected by Palestinian officials.

On 27 November, Prime Minister Netanyahu drew a new map of Israel and the adjacent Palestinian "entity", which kept the Jordan Valley, Gush Etzion and other "security zones" under Israeli sovereignty. Under the plan, Israel would also control the coastline of the Gaza Strip to maintain a line of defence along its western flank. In addition to retaining Jerusalem within its enlarged municipal boundaries and the Etzion bloc of settlements, the Prime Minister also advocated a narrow "security zone" east of the Green Line, pointing out that most of the so-called security zones contained few Arab inhabitants. He again expressed opposition to the creation of a Palestinian State, warning that Israel would take swift countermeasures should the PA declare an independent and fully sovereign State.

On 28 November, it was reported that the PA had demanded from Israel the return of 9 dunums of land seized a week earlier in the Mawasi area by settlers from Neve Dekalim, the largest settlement in the Gaza Strip; according to the Palestinians, Israel had committed 320 violations of the Oslo accords in the Mawasi area since their signing. On the same date, it was reported that Israel had built a wall around Rachel's Tomb in Bethlehem, which took up half of the Jerusalem-Bethlehem highway. The measure was said to be aimed at redrawing Jerusalem's municipal boundaries. On 30 November, Israel announced its willingness to order an IDF troop withdrawal from unspecified areas of the West Bank until a permanent arrangement with the Palestinians went into effect; a special team headed by the Prime Minister was authorized to draw up the requisite maps and timetables. That decision also contained an unequivocal expression of support for West Bank settlements, including a pledge to take all necessary measures to ensure their existence and strengthening. The Cabinet Secretary stressed that the troop redeployment was conditional on the PA fulfilling the commitments contained in the Hebron Protocol, including disarming Hamas, extraditing "murderers" to Israel and concluding the revision of the Palestinian National Charter.

Details of Israel's annexation and settlements policy were provided in the report, as was an overview of the administration of justice and the treatment of civilians and detainees, and information on the occupied Syrian Arab Golan (see below). The report also listed Palestinians killed by troops or Israeli civilians and those killed as a result of the occupation. It also detailed other incidents that had occurred during the latter part of the year, such as protests and demonstrations, clashes between Palestinians and Israeli forces, and arrests.

On 8 December, the human rights organization B'tselem released a report on Israeli human rights violations against the Palestinians since the beginning of the intifadah. The report claimed that 1,346 Palestinians, 276 of them children under 17 and 70 under 13, had been killed by IDF or security forces since the beginning of the uprising on 9 December 1987 up to 30 November 1997. Another 133 Palestinians had been killed by settlers during the same period, while 256 Israeli citizens, 18 of them children, and 127 IDF and security forces had been killed by Palestinians. The report claimed that in most fatal shooting incidents the security forces had not faced life-threatening situations. However, those responsible had stood trial in only 55 cases. The report noted that the number of Palestinians killed by IDF gunfire had dramatically declined following IDF troop withdrawal from most of the Gaza Strip and towns in the West Bank as part of the implementation of the Oslo accords. No such decrease had occurred with regard to children, however, who represented 27 per cent of those killed in 1997. The report accused the security forces of making few attempts to prevent settler violence or to arrest the offenders and charged that numerous violent acts had not been investigated at all. In most of the trials that had been held, lenient punishments had been meted out, in marked contrast to the law enforcement and punishment policy in cases of Palestinian attacks on Israelis. According to the report, 447 Palestinian houses had been demolished and 294 sealed off as punishment for violent offences committed by a suspected or convicted family member. Some 106 houses had been demolished by artillery fire because fugitives were suspected of hiding inside, and another 1,800 had been demolished on the grounds that they were built without a permit.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. In its annual report [A/52/35], the Committee on Palestinian Rights expressed great concern and anguish that the peace process appeared to be increasingly in jeopardy, leading to an alarming exacerbation of tension and violence, which resulted in loss of life on both sides. The Committee called for reinjection of momentum into the stalled peace process and for implementation of the agreements reached. Noting with appreciation the increased efforts to bring about a resumption of bilateral negotiations by the co-sponsors of the process, as well as the EU and a number of world leaders, the Committee reiterated that UN involvement in the peace process was essential for its successful outcome.

Deploing Israel's decision to approve the construction of a new Jewish settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim and to proceed with its construction in spite of the unanimous expression of opposition by the international community, the Committee fully supported the General Assembly's recommendations contained in resolutions ES-10/2 and ES-10/3, in particular for the convening of a conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (10 December)

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/52/617], adopted resolution 52/66 by recorded vote (149-2-7) [agenda item 87].

Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including those adopted at its tenth emergency special session, as well as relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 446(1979) of 22 March 1979, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Aware of the Middle East peace process started at Madrid and the agreements reached between the parties, in particular the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993 and the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip of 28 September 1995,

Expressing grave concern about the decision of the Government of Israel to resume settlement activities, including the construction of the new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim, in violation of international humanitarian law, relevant United Nations resolutions and the agreements reached between the parties,

Gravely concerned in particular about the dangerous situation resulting from actions taken by the illegal armed Israeli settlers in the occupied territory, as illustrated by the massacre of Palestinian worshippers by an illegal Israeli settler in Al-Khalil on 25 February 1994,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,^a

1. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;

2. Calls upon Israel to accept the de jure applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of

Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to the occupied Syrian Golan and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Convention, in particular article 49;

3. Demands complete cessation of the construction of the new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim and of all Israeli settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan;

4. Stresses the need for full implementation of Security Council resolution 904(1994) of 18 March 1994, in which, among other things, the Council called upon Israel, the occupying Power, to continue to take and implement measures, including, inter alia, confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers, and called for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in the occupied territory.

Earlier, on 9 December, in resolution 52/52 on the peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine (see below), the Assembly expressed full support for the ongoing peace process and voiced the hope that the process would lead to the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting Middle East peace.

Introducing the Special Committee's report in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, the Special Committee Chairman said the biggest threat to the peace process was the continued confiscation of Palestinian-owned land and the building and expansion of Israeli settlements. If the peace process was to continue, Palestinians and Israelis had to extricate themselves from a situation that had been described as "zero-trust level". The single act that might be described as having brought the peace process to a halt was the beginning of the Har Homa settlement. Plans were also being made to expand the largest settlement in the occupied territories, Maaleh Adumim, which would cover more land than Tel Aviv; in addition, there had been a number of demolitions of Palestinian-owned houses. The situation of the Palestinian Jerusalemites, who were threatened by discriminatory measures, gave rise to particular concern. If it degenerated further, the Chairman warned, it would lead to more violence and despair as the hopes that the Oslo accords would lead to harmony, dignity and mutual respect among the peoples of the region had all but vanished. Both sides should respect and comply with the principle of land for peace, which was the underlying premise for peace, and refrain from actions that would undermine the permanent status negotiations. The international community had to assume an even more active and positive role in safeguarding and giving further impetus to the peace process.

Speaking after the vote on resolution 52/66, Australia said it fully supported the principles set forth therein, but had reservations about the reference in the second preambular paragraph to the resolutions of the emergency special session, on which it had abstained. Speaking on behalf of the EU, Luxembourg said the Union reaffirmed that it was still deeply committed to the peace process, which was the only means of establishing lasting peace and security in the region. Swaziland had abstained as it felt that the time for adopting resolutions condemning the actions of the parties had passed.

Communication (24 December). In a 24 December letter [A/52/754-S/1997/1011] to the Secretary-General, the Permanent Observer of Palestine reported that the Israeli Prime Minister had made an extremely dangerous and illegal claim that destroyed the peace process and mutual recognition, by stating on 19 December that the occupied West Bank was "part of Israel proper"; further statements made by aides to the Prime Minister in an attempt to back-pedal from that position did not succeed in quelling the impact of his original statement. On 23 December, the Prime Minister, while on tour in the occupied territories, declared that Israel would "never return to the former situation", which, according to the Observer, referred to a return to the armistice lines that marked the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 and was another gross violation of the terms of the peace process, the aim of which was implementation of Security Council resolution 242(1967)[YUN1967,p.257]. Such statements, the Observer said, required the most serious and concerted response by the international community in order to save the peace process. For the UN family, such declarations provided additional justification for the serious concerns expressed by the Arab Group during the 1997 General Assembly session with regard to Israel's credentials and made it more imperative to take action to ensure that Israel's participation in the Assembly's work was consistent with international law, provisions of the UN Charter and relevant UN resolutions.

Jerusalem

The issue of Jerusalem, to be resolved in final status negotiations within the framework of the Middle East peace process, continued to be a focal point of UN concern in 1997, particularly in the context of the construction of the Jebel Abu Ghneim/Har Homa settlement to the south of East Jerusalem (see above).

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. East Jerusalem, where most of the city's Arab inhabitants lived, constituted one of the most sensitive issues in the permanent status negotiations and was pivotal to the peace process, the Special Committee on Israeli Practices said in its annual report [A/52/131/Add.2]. The city and its Palestinian population had been subjected to human rights violations resulting from concerted and accelerated Israeli efforts to create facts on the ground, affecting the demographic and geographic balance. Since Jerusalem's occupation in 1967, the city's Arab population was never allowed to amount to more than 28 per cent and the number of Israeli settlers in East Jerusalem already outnumbered the Palestinian inhabitants (an estimated 180,000 Arabs and 200,000 Jews). Over one third of East Jerusalem's territory had been confiscated since 1967 and more than 40,000 housing units had been built there exclusively for Jews, while an estimated 21,000 Palestinian families were in urgent need of adequate housing. Only 2 per cent of the Jerusalem municipality's budget was spent on areas inhabited by Palestinians, for whom the housing density was double that of the Jewish population. On 26 January, an additional 130 million new Israeli shekels were reportedly earmarked for the municipal budget as part of a plan to strengthen Israel's sovereignty in East Jerusalem.

A number of discriminatory measures were applied to the city's Arab inhabitants, and it was reported that no construction permits had been issued to Palestinians in the West Bank since the current Government took office. Requests for family reunification in Jerusalem had been refused more frequently since 1993 and even persons granted the right to reunification in 1996 were not issued identity cards. The most disquieting measure to reduce further the number of Palestinians in Jerusalem was, according to the Committee, the stepping up since 1994 of the application of the 1952 Law of Entry into Israel, amended in 1974, under which the city's Arab residents were considered resident aliens or foreign immigrants. Palestinian inhabitants risked losing their identity cards if they lived outside Jerusalem for seven consecutive years, said to have been reduced even further to three years, and as of November 1995 they had to document to Israeli authorities, through among other things tax receipts, school enrolment certificates, etc., that the city was their "centre of life". By March 1997, the Ministry of the Interior was allegedly confiscating two or three identity cards of Palestinians per day. The endemic housing shortage, declining standard of living and lack of sufficient Palestinian educational institutions within city limits forced numerous parents to send their children to schools outside Jerusalem. The lack of permits also forced Palestinians to build houses outside official city boundaries. An estimated 60,000 to 80,000 Palestinian Jerusalemites, including those living and studying abroad, risked withdrawal of their identity cards, although the criteria applied were said not even to be known to lawyers, the Committee noted. In May, it was reported that the Israeli Ministry of the Interior recognized officially for the first time that 385 identity cards had been withdrawn from Palestinians in 1996, while 689 had been withdrawn and the persons forced to leave the city by mid-1997; the real figure was believed to be much higher. The identity card policy, endorsed by the Israeli High Court of Justice, was compounded further by regulations governing child registration, which affected some 10,000 children. The combined effects of land confiscation, housing shortages, lack of building permits, house demolitions, lack of job opportunities and other effects of the closure of the occupied territories, cutting off the city, when coupled with the threat of the withdrawal of identity cards and encouragement to adopt Israeli citizenship, were described as having led the Palestinian inhabitants to live in a pervasive state of fear as to whether they would be allowed to remain in the city. Witnesses who had testified before the Special Committee described those policies as amounting to slow deportation and ethnic cleansing.

Committee on Palestinian Rights. In its annual report [A/52/35], the Committee on Palestinian Rights considered especially worrisome Israel's actions to strengthen its control over East Jerusalem, such as the opening of a new entrance to the tunnel near Al Aqsa Mosque, the withdrawal of Jerusalem identity cards, the destruction of buildings and the intensified efforts to establish Jewish settlements in the Old City.

Transfer of diplomatic missions

Report of Secretary-General. On 15 October, the Secretary-General reported [A/52/467] that six Member States had replied to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement General Assembly resolution 51/27 [YUN 1996, p. 385], which addressed the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) [YUN 1980, p. 426] and called on them to abide by the relevant UN resolutions.

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/52/131/Add.2], the Special Committee on Israeli Practices noted that violent clashes had taken place in the occupied territories during several days in June, following the decision of the United States Congress to recognize Jerusalem as Israel's capital and to allocate $100 million for the transfer of the United States Embassy from Tel Aviv.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/53 [draft: A/52/L.54 & Add.1] by recorded vote (148-1-9) [agenda item 37].

Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/120 E of 10 December 1981, 37/123 C of 16 December 1982, 38/180 C of 19 December 1983, 39/146 C of 14 December 1984, 40/168 C of 16 December 1985, 41/162 C of 4 December 1986, 42/209 D of 11 December 1987, 43/54 C of 6 December 1988, 44/40 C of 4 December 1989, 45/83 C of 13 December 1990, 46/82 B of 16 December 1991, 47/63 B of 11 December 1992, 48/59 A of 14 December 1993, 49/87 A of 16 December 1994, 50/22 A of 4 December 1995 and 51/27 of 4 December 1996, in which it determined that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, which have altered or purported to alter the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem, in particular the so-called "Basic Law" on Jerusalem and the proclamation of Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, were null and void and must be rescinded forthwith,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 478(1980) of 20 August 1980, in which the Council, inter alia, decided not to recognize the "Basic Law" and called upon those States which had established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Determines that the decision of Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Holy City of Jerusalem is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

2. Deplores the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem in violation of Security Council resolution 478(1980) and their refusal to comply with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon those States to abide by the provisions of the relevant United Nations resolutions, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Explaining its abstention, the United States stressed that Jerusalem's future should be decided through permanent status negotiations and the Assembly should not interject itself into that most complex and emotional issue. Iran expressed reservations on any part of the text that might imply recognition of Israel.

Economic and social situation

ESCWA. report. The Secretary-General transmitted on 22 July a report [A/52/172-E/1997/71 & Corr.1] on the economic and social repercussions of the Israeli settlements on the Palestinians in the occupied territory, including Jerusalem, and on the Arab population of the Syrian Golan. The report, prepared by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) in accordance with a request in Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/40 [YUN 1996, p. 397], reiterated by the General Assembly in resolution 51/190 [Ibid.], covered the period from March 1996 to May 1997. It reviewed Israel's settlements policy and noted that a number of settlements had been established and existing ones expanded. Settlement activities had intensified in the Golan Heights.

Among Palestinians in the occupied territories, there had been an increase in unemployment and a significant decrease in real wages. It was reported that unemployment in Gaza was estimated at 50 to 60 per cent, with the highest unemployment rate in the refugee camps. In the West Bank, the rate was 24 per cent and a further 10 to 12 per cent were severely underemployed. Palestinian incomes had dropped sharply since the 1993 Oslo Agreement, from $1,800 to $950 a year in the West Bank, and from $1,200 to $600 a year in the Gaza Strip. An increasing number of Palestinians were being forced to live in slums, where miserable social, living and health conditions prevailed.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/309, took note of the ESCWA report. On the same date, the Council adopted resolution 1997/67 [draft: E/1997/L.52, orally revised] by roll-call vote (43-1-2) [agenda item 11].

Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/190 of 16 December 1996,

Recalling also its resolution 1996/40 of 26 July 1996,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Stressing the importance of the revival of the Middle East peace process on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967), 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the principle of land for peace, as well as the full and timely implementation of the agreements reached between the Government of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of people under foreign occupation over their natural resources,

Convinced that the Israeli occupation impedes efforts to achieve sustainable development and a sound economic environment in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan,

Gravely concerned about the deterioration of the economic and living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan, and the exploitation by Israel, the occupying Power, of their natural resources,

Aware of the important work being done by the United Nations and the specialized agencies in support of the economic and social development of the Palestinian people,

Conscious of the urgent need for the development of the economic and social infrastructure of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and for the improvement of the living conditions of the Palestinian people as a key element of a lasting peace and stability,

1. Stresses the need to preserve the territorial integrity of all of the occupied Palestinian territory and to guarantee the freedom of movement of persons and goods in the territory, including the removal of restrictions into and from East Jerusalem, and the freedom of movement to and from the outside world;

2. Also stresses the vital importance of the operation and construction of the Gaza airport, the seaport in Gaza and safe passage to the economic and social development of the Palestinian people;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease its measures against the Palestinian people, in particular the closure of the occupied Palestinian territory, the enforced isolation of Palestinian towns, the destruction of homes and the isolation of Jerusalem;

4. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the Palestinian people and the Arab population of the occupied Syrian Golan to all their natural and economic resources, and calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, not to exploit, endanger, or cause loss or depletion of these resources;

5. Reaffirms that Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to economic and social development;

6. Stresses the importance of the work of the organizations and agencies of the United Nations and of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories under the auspices of the Secretary-General;

7. Urges Member States to encourage private foreign investment in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, in infrastructure, job-creation projects and social development, in order to alleviate the hardship of the Palestinian people and improve their living conditions;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to continue to include, in the report of the Special Coordinator, an update on the living conditions of the Palestinian people, in collaboration with relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations;

9. Decides to include the item henceforth to be entitled "Economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan" in the agenda of its substantive session of 1998.

ROLL-CALL VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1997/67:

In favour. Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Czech Republic, Djibouti, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, India, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Latvia, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Mozambique, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Philippines, Poland, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom.

Against: United States.

Abstain: Australia, Romania.

The United States, speaking before the vote, which it had requested, said it would continue to oppose all resolutions that stated or implied Arab or Palestinian sovereignty over Jerusalem and territories that were the subject of direct negotiations. The Observer of Israel stated that the draft made countless demands of Israel but none of the Palestinians. The text, from which it would appear that the whole of Jerusalem was occupied Palestinian territory, was a regrettable sign of the Council's increasing politicization and another element in the recently stepped up political warfare against Israel.

The Russian Federation, although voting in favour, also felt that the matter was clearly outside the purview of the Council and would only serve to politicize its deliberations; the issues raised by the resolution clearly had to be resolved in the context of the peace process.

Canada said that its positive vote reflected the importance it attached to the Palestinians' social and economic development needs; it was pleased to note that the resolution had been firmly placed in the context of the peace process.

The Observer of Palestine stated that the respect due to international law and Security Council resolutions was in no way incompatible with an inquiry into the lot of the occupied Palestinian territories and a concern for ensuring better life conditions for their people. Whenever Israel tried to alter the territories' status, its efforts had to be considered a violation of international law; that should also be the attitude towards its latest decision authorizing the construction of new homes for Israelis in the heart of Jerusalem's Arab quarter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/52/632], adopted resolution 52/207 by recorded vote (137-2-14) [agenda item 101].

Permanent sovereignty of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/190 of 16 December 1996 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/67 of 25 July 1997,

Reaffirming the principle of the permanent sovereignty of peoples under foreign occupation over their natural resources,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, affirming the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, and recalling relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 465(1980) of 1 March 1980 and 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Expressing its concern at the exploitation by Israel, the occupying Power, of the natural resources of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Aware of the additional, detrimental economic and social impact of the Israeli settlements on Palestinian and other Arab natural resources, especially the confiscation of land and the forced diversion of water resources,

Expressing its concern at the difficulties facing the Middle East peace process which started at Madrid on 30 October 1991 and which is based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967), 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the principle of land for peace, as well as concern over the lack of implementation of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, signed in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, and the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, of 28 September 1995,

1. Takes note of the report transmitted by the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the population of the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources, including land and water;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, not to exploit, to cause loss or depletion of or to endanger the natural resources in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and in the occupied Syrian Golan;

4. Recognizes the right of the Palestinian people to claim restitution as a result of any exploitation, loss or depletion of, or danger to, their natural resources, and expresses the hope that this issue will be dealt with in the framework of the final status negotiation between the Palestinian and Israeli sides;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution, and decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Permanent sovereignty of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources".

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Speaking before the vote, Israel said that the current situation of Palestinian resources resulted from the lack of Palestinian and Arab investment in the territories, the never-ending cycle of Palestinian terror and extremism, and the lack of political will on the part of the PA to impose its control over the extremist elements within its jurisdiction. The subject should have no place in the Second Committee as the text was political, designed to serve the interests of an observer delegation and to prejudge the outcome of negotiations to the detriment of Israel.

The United States expressed firm opposition to the text which, it felt, brought the Assembly into the direct negotiations between the parties and prejudged their outcome. It also rejected the resolution's one-sided language, in particular the term "sovereignty", and it would continue to oppose the use of the phrase "the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem".

Japan endorsed the idea expressed in paragraph 4 that the issue of sovereignty had to be dealt with in the framework of the final status negotiations; its positive vote, it added, in no way altered its position as to the outcome of those negotiations. Japan also felt that the Second Committee was not the appropriate forum for discussing issues that were purely political in nature. The Russian Federation explained that it had voted for the text although it felt that the reference made to resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312] was inappropriate; that did not mean, however, that its position on that resolution had changed.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the EU, said its members believed that the natural resources of a territory seized by force of arms should not be used improperly or illegally by the occupying Power; the Fourth Geneva Convention was applicable, de facto and de jure, to the occupied territories and any infringement of the rights of the Palestinians recognized by the Convention was illegal. However, the resolution should not prejudge the outcome of the final status negotiations.

Iran and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya stressed that their vote for the resolution did not imply recognition of Israel. The Syrian Arab Republic would have liked the resolution to make it clear that Israel was responsible for the difficulties facing the peace process, as it had gone back on a number of commitments made earlier.

The Observer of Palestine said that Israel's statement distorted the facts, articulated an absurd logic and defied the international community by falsifying the history of Jerusalem and claiming that its annexation had been an act of self-defence and that Israel would withdraw from the territory once it was no longer under threat, while Israel in fact was stepping up its settlement activity and the Prime Minister had recently threatened to annex the West Bank.

Other aspects

Special Committee on Israeli Practices. The three-member Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, established in 1968 [YUN 1968, p. 556], reported for the twenty-ninth time to the General Assembly on events in the territories it considered to be occupied—the Golan Heights, the West Bank, including Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip.

In addition to the annual report [A/52/131/Add.2], the Special Committee submitted two periodic reports in 1997, at the request of the Assembly, one in May [A/52/131] and the other in July [A/52/131/Add.1]. The three reports, which covered developments between 21 September 1996 and 29 August 1997, contained information obtained from the Arab and Israeli press; testimony given at hearings held in Amman, Jordan, Cairo, Egypt, Damascus, Syrian Arab Republic, and Geneva between 28 May and 8 June; Israeli Government policy statements; and other communications and reports from Governments, organizations and individuals. The Committee had benefited from the cooperation of Egypt, Jordan and Syria, Palestinian representatives and numerous human rights organizations. As in the past, Israel had not responded to the Committee's requests for cooperation.

The Special Committee's report, its Chairman stated, attempted to present a composite picture of the realities in the territories as they affected the human rights of the civilian population. The signing of the 1995 Interim Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 626] and, more recently, of the Hebron Protocol in January 1997 (see above) had generated great expectations and hope among both the population of the territories and the international community that a lasting peace would be established in the region. That was the spirit in which the Special Committee approached its mandate.

The information contained in the Committee's twenty-ninth report, however, showed that the human rights situation in the territories had deteriorated further during the period under review, the Chairman said. The most disturbing aspect of that situation was Israel's settlement policy, the most serious development in that connection being the beginning of construction of the so-called Har Homa settlement on the hill called Jebel Abu Ghneim, which brought the peace process to a standstill. The gravity of the situation in East Jerusalem was compounded further by the recent withdrawal on a massive scale of identity cards of Palestinian residents of Jerusalem and other discriminatory measures (see above).

The situation in the territories continued to be characterized by closures, including internal closures of Palestinian towns and their agglomerations. An unprecedented internal and total closure, which extended to the border crossings between the occupied territories and Egypt and Jordan, was implemented following two suicide bombings in an open market in Jerusalem on 30 July. The closures prevented the majority of Palestinians who held jobs in Israel from reaching their places of work and practically strangled Palestinian agriculture and industry, with devastating economic and social effects on the inhabitants of the occupied territories, whose standard of living was estimated to have declined by 30 per cent since the signing of the peace agreements. The Gaza Strip inhabitants were the most seriously affected.

The closures continued to seriously affect the health of the population, with more persons dying, as patients suffering from life-threatening diseases and in serious condition were denied access to medical institutions in Israel or in other parts of the territories for lack of permit. The restrictions on movement also had repercussions for freedom to worship of the Muslim and Christian population. A first-time restriction affected numerous Palestinians living abroad who were not given entry permits to visit their families in the territories on the pretext of security; the lack of funds they brought back each year dealt an additional blow to the Palestinian economy.

The closures had a particularly devastating effect on the 1 million Palestinian children—over 50 per cent of the population—who were growing up in an environment of conflict, the Special Committee stated. An increasing number of families had to borrow money to buy food for their children, and numerous children between the age of 10 and 16 were taken out of school in order to work and supplement their families' income. The lack of freedom of movement had a negative effect on children's immunization, and access to schools was reduced for both students and teachers. Given the poor quality of sanitation in Gaza, up to 80 or 90 per cent of children there were thought to suffer from water-borne diseases. Palestinian children had been killed by settlers and were often injured in clashes with the Israeli army.

Housing demolitions continued in Jerusalem and other parts of the territories, with Israel mostly invoking the lack of building permits. It was reported in May that 860 Palestinian homes in the territories were slated for demolition and some 2,600 buildings in East Jerusalem were vulnerable. That was in sharp contrast to the 5,000 housing units under construction in the territories for Israeli settlers, who made up 6 per cent of the population there. Homes of Palestinians suspected of perpetrating or having a connection to security offences continued to be demolished. Such collective punishment was intensified after the 30 July suicide bombings in Jerusalem, with some four to six houses being demolished daily, leaving 125 persons homeless. The massive demolition in August was particularly intensive in Jerusalem, Hebron and Bethlehem, which was subjected to an internal closure for 28 days. In addition, the number of trees uprooted by Israeli authorities as a retaliatory measure increased, especially in the West Bank and particularly around Hebron, where numerous vineyards were also destroyed.

The Special Committee continued to monitor closely the situation of Palestinian prisoners held in detention facilities inside Israel, in contravention of international humanitarian law. Some 2,750 Palestinians were imprisoned in Israel at the time of the Committee's visit to the area, in addition to 261 administrative detainees, 63 per cent of whom had allegedly had their detention renewed. Following the suicide bombings in Jerusalem on 30 July, the number of administrative detainees, including children, had reportedly risen to 500. Conditions of detention were said to have deteriorated further and protests by prisoners were violently repressed by the prison authorities. Owing to the closure of the territories, few prisoners had been able to receive family visits or consult with their lawyers. The Special Committee's attention was drawn to the situation of child prisoners and children in administrative detention, in contravention of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child contained in Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], ratified by Israel in 1991; and children placed on trial before Israeli military courts, who were said to be subjected to psychological pressure and intimidation during interrogation, were denied adequate medical care and even placed in solitary confinement.

Palestinian detainees were reported to have continued to be subjected to measures amounting to torture or ill-treatment, especially during interrogation. The Special Committee was concerned by Israeli High Court decisions of January and November 1996 to lift interim injunctions prohibiting the members of the General Security Service from using violent interrogation methods against detainees. The Special Committee noted the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee against Torture in pursuance of the special report submitted to it by Israel before its April/May 1997 session (see PART TWO, Chapter I), indicating that the use of "moderate physical pressure" during interrogation of persons suspected to be in possession of information of imminent attacks against Israel constituted breaches of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813], which entered into force in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 755].

The Special Committee also visited Syria, and reported on the Israeli occupied Syrian Golan Heights (for details see below, under "Peacekeeping operations"). Syria's report to the Special Committee during its visit to the country was transmitted to the Secretary-General on 20 June [A/52/202].

The Special Committee had endeavoured, the Chairman said, within the constraints imposed on it to provide in its three 1997 reports a clear picture of the human rights situation in the occupied territories. It reiterated its view that occupation itself constituted a human rights violation; in spite of the peace agreements signed, the status of occupation continued and Israel should, therefore, abide by its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention and other relevant international instruments. The Special Committee believed that the prevailing climate of strife and bitterness could be replaced by the beginning of a new era of peaceful coexistence in the whole region and expected that its findings would be taken into account when concrete measures were drawn up to revive the peace process.

In the meantime, the Special Committee recommended once more the implementation of measures to safeguard the basic human rights of the Palestinians and other Arabs in the territories, which should include the following: full application by Israel of the relevant provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention; full compliance with all UN resolutions pertinent to the occupied territories; full cooperation by Israel with UNRWA and respect for its privileges and immunities; full cooperation by Israel with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in order to protect detainees; full support by Member States of UNRWA and ICRC activities to enable both organizations to improve their assistance; full Israeli cooperation with the UN Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories; renewed efforts by Member States to convince Israel of the need for increased human rights protection through international monitoring by the Special Committee and other bodies, allowing the Committee access to the territories; and full Israeli cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to implementation of the advisory assistance programmes in areas falling under the interim self-government arrangements.

The Special Committee appealed to Israel to act in conformity with the spirit animating the peace process by recognizing that current settlement policy represented the most formidable obstacle to peace and security in the region, and by halting the establishment and expansion of settlements, and ending land confiscation, the building of bypass roads and the exertion of pressure on Arabs in East Jerusalem to sell their houses to members of the Jewish community. It also appealed to Israel to refrain from destroying property, demolishing houses, uprooting trees, discriminatory measures concerning the use of water resources, imposing closures and curfews, and interrogation practices amounting to torture and ill-treatment; and review the situation of all Palestinian and other Arab prisoners, especially political detainees or persons having committed non-violent crimes, and expedite their release. The Special Committee called on Israel to establish for its security forces clear rules of engagement that fully respected human rights standards; apply open-fire regulations strictly in conformity with the principles of necessity and proportionality; exercise utmost restraint in responding to outbreaks of violence and fully investigate all incidents of shooting; and immediately end the activities of undercover units and extrajudicial and summary executions perpetrated by such units. It appealed to Israel to exercise strict control over abuses perpetrated by settlers, prevent acts of violence by settlers, investigate such acts and bring those responsible to justice. It further appealed to Israel to enforce the law equitably by ensuring all legal safeguards and impartial administration of justice for the Arab population; and to allow those who had been deported or expelled from the territories to return and have their properties restituted.

In a later report [A/53/136], the Committee presented updated information on the human rights situation in the occupied territories during the period from 30 August to 31 December 1997, providing details on Palestinians killed as a result of the occupation; the administration of justice, including the right to a fair trial; the treatment of civilians; and the treatment of detainees. Also included was information on the occupied Syrian Golan (see below, under "Peacekeeping operations").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], following consideration of the Special Committee's annual and periodic reports and four reports of the Secretary-General on specific aspects of the situation in the occupied territories (see below), the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/617], adopted resolution 52/67 by recorded vote (151-2-7) [agenda item 87].

Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including those adopted at its tenth emergency special session, and the resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the most recent of which are resolutions 904(1994) of 18 March 1994 and 1073(1996) of 28 September 1996,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the reports of the Secretary-General,

Aware of the responsibility of the international community to promote human rights and ensure respect for international law,

Reaffirming the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967,

Recalling the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Noting the withdrawal of the Israeli army, which took place in the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area in accordance with the agreements reached between the parties, and the initiation of the Palestinian Authority in those areas,

Noting also the redeployment of the Israeli army from six cities in the West Bank,

Concerned about the continuing violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel, the occupying Power, especially the use of collective punishment, closure of areas, annexation and establishment of settlements and the continuing actions by it designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem,

Expressing its deep concern in particular about the closure by the Israeli authorities of the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, which prevents the freedom of movement of persons and goods and is the cause of great economic and social hardship, in violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and the agreements reached between the two sides,

Convinced of the positive impact of a temporary international or foreign presence in the occupied Palestinian territory on the safety and protection of the Palestinian people,

Expressing its appreciation to the countries that participated in the Temporary International Presence in Hebron for their positive contribution,

Convinced of the need for the full implementation of Security Council resolutions 904(1994) and 1073(1996),

1. Determines that all measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and contrary to the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, are illegal and have no validity and that such measures should cease immediately;

2. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, cease all practices and actions that violate the human rights of the Palestinian people;

3. Stresses the need to preserve the territorial integrity of all of the occupied Palestinian territory and to guarantee the freedom of movement of persons and goods within the Palestinian territory, including the removal of restrictions on movement into and from East Jerusalem, and the freedom of movement to and from the outside world;

4. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to accelerate the release of all remaining Palestinians arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, in line with agreements reached;

5. Calls for complete respect by Israel, the occupying Power, of all fundamental freedoms of the Palestinian people, pending the extension of the self-government arrangements to the rest of the occupied territory;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Work of Special Committee

Report of Secretary-General. In a 30 October report [A/52/553], the Secretary-General stated that all necessary facilities had been provided to the Special Committee on Israeli Practices, as requested in General Assembly resolution 51/131 [YUN 1996, p. 389]. Arrangements had been made for it to meet in February, May/June and August 1997, and a field mission was carried out to Egypt, Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic in May/June. Two periodic reports [A/52/131 & Add.1] and the twenty-ninth annual report of the Special Committee [A/52/131/Add.2] had been circulated to Member States. The UN Department of Public Information continued to provide press coverage of Special Committee meetings and to disseminate information materials on its activities (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/617], the General Assembly, on 10 December [meeting 69], adopted resolution 52/64 by recorded vote (83-2-72) [agenda item 87].

Work of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories

The General Assembly,
Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Guided also by the principles of international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, as well as international standards of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolution 2443(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, and relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling also relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Aware of the lasting impact of the uprising (intifada) of the Palestinian people,

Convinced that occupation itself represents a primary violation of human rights,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Recalling the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Expressing the hope that, with the progress of the peace process, the Israeli occupation will be brought to an end and therefore violation of the human rights of the Palestinian people will cease,

1. Commends the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly and for its impartiality;

2. Demands that Israel cooperate with the Special Committee in implementing its mandate;

3. Deplores those policies and practices of Israel which violate the human rights of the Palestinian people and other Arabs of the occupied territories, as reflected in the reports of the Special Committee covering the reporting period;

4. Expresses concern about the recent deterioration of the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, as a result of Israeli practices and measures and the impasse facing the Middle East peace process;

5. Requests the Special Committee, pending complete termination of the Israeli occupation, to continue to investigate Israeli policies and practices in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, especially Israeli lack of compliance with the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross according to its regulations in order to ensure that the welfare and human rights of the peoples of the occupied territories are safeguarded and to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arises thereafter;

6. Also requests the Special Committee to submit regularly to the Secretary-General periodic reports on the current situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

7. Further requests the Special Committee to continue to investigate the treatment of prisoners in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967;

8. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To provide the Special Committee with all necessary facilities, including those required for its visits to the occupied territories, so that it may investigate the Israeli policies and practices referred to in the present resolution;

(b) To continue to make available such additional staff as may be necessary to assist the Special Committee in the performance of its tasks;

(c) To circulate regularly to Member States the periodic reports mentioned in paragraph 6 above;

(d) To ensure the widest circulation of the reports of the Special Committee and of information regarding its activities and findings, by all means available, through the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat and, where necessary, to reprint those reports of the Special Committee that are no longer available;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the tasks entrusted to him in the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories".

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Chile, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libya, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Speaking on behalf of the EU, Luxembourg said its members abstained on the text, while supporting the other resolutions on the agenda item; they believed that the problems dealt with by the Special Committee would be better considered in other forums more in keeping with the spirit of compromise and understanding, without which genuine peace could not be achieved.

In the view of the Observer of Palestine, the further deterioration of the situation clearly testified to the need for the Special Committee's continued existence; its work would continue to be of great importance until Israeli occupation came to an end.

Fourth Geneva Convention

At its tenth emergency special session (see above), the General Assembly, in resolutions ES-10/3 and ES-10/4, recommended that a conference be convened by the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention on measures to enforce the Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and to ensure respect for the Convention.

On 30 October [A/52/551], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that Israel had not replied to his June request for information on steps taken or envisaged to implement Assembly resolution 51/132 [YUN 1996, p. 391] demanding that Israel accept the de jure applicability of the Fourth Geneva Convention in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and comply scrupulously with its provisions. Also in June, the Secretary-General noted, he had drawn the attention of all States parties to paragraph 3 of resolution 51/132 calling on them to exert all efforts to ensure respect by Israel for the Convention provisions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/617], adopted resolution 52/65 by recorded vote (156-2-3) [agenda item 87].

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions,

Bearing in mind the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories and the relevant reports of the Secretary-General,

Palestinian women

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.6/1997/2] to the Commission on the Status of Women, the Secretary-General, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/5 [YUN 1996, p. 393], reviewed the situation of Palestinian women and described assistance provided by UN organizations in 1996. He stated that the conditions of Palestinian women living in the Palestinian self-rule areas and in the occupied territories remained of particular concern as the deteriorating economic situation in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip exacerbated the hardship of many families, in particular households with low incomes or those headed by females. Women were affected more severely than men due to their economic and legal status. An estimated 40 to 42 per cent of the Arab residents of Jerusalem, for example, lived below the poverty line, and women and children were particularly exposed to poverty. High unemployment rates among men caused women and children to start looking for work in order to maintain family living levels; in 1996, the number of women in the paid labour force increased by 8.5 per cent, whereas the male labour force grew by only 5.1 per cent. The highest concentration of female labour (35 per cent) was in agriculture, where women worked for low wages and under unfavourable conditions. However, there was also a high concentration of female workers (32.5 per cent) in relatively well-paid professional, technical and clerical positions. It was possible, the report said, that women's increased participation in the formal labour market would become a new trend in Palestinian economic and social development that needed to be taken into account.

Measures linked to occupation—the imposition of curfews, collective punishment, the closing or sealing off of certain areas and other restrictions—affected all population groups, but some targeted women in particular, the report noted. The many Palestinian women working in the agricultural sector were especially affected by land seizures, loss of water utilization and other economic and social repercussions of Israeli settlement policy.

The loss of identity cards of Palestinian residents of Jerusalem who lived abroad for more than seven consecutive years also affected their wives. Palestinian women had reportedly been humiliated and harassed during raids on their homes and, contrary to Israeli-Palestinian agreements, not all women detainees in Israeli prisons had been released.

Female illiteracy stood at 24 per cent, compared to 16 per cent for all residents of the West Bank and Gaza Strip over 15 years of age, according to a February 1996 survey. Women and girls also were particularly affected by other measures impairing education, such as the frequent closures of the self-rule areas, aggravated by overcrowding of schools and lack of teaching materials. Inadequate health conditions and health services also had an impact on the overall and reproductive health of Palestinian women. As fertility rates remained high, low age at marriage, short birth intervals and lack of education were factors responsible for women's poor health, especially refugee women, many of whom were anaemic.

The report noted that Palestinian women maintained a high level of participation in non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and women's committees. Progress was reported on the establishment of national machinery for the advancement of women in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, where the PA had set up an intergovernmental committee under the Gender Development and Planning Directorate of the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation and an NGO committee had been formed under the General Union of Palestinian Women.

Assistance to Palestinian women was provided by the UN system in close cooperation with the PA and NGOs. With the help of bilateral donors, a number of projects for Palestinian women were initiated and carried out during 1995-1996. Activities focused mainly on health and family planning, relief and social services, education and training, collection of statistics disaggregated by sex, and support for the national machinery for the advancement for women, including training in legal literacy and the enhancement of women's role in public life. UNRWA placed special emphasis on maternal and child-health care as an integral part of its regular programme (see below). It offered family planning services in 120 health care centres in the Gaza Strip in 1996, up from 49 in 1992.

Some 49.5 per cent of the total school population and half of the 12,000 teaching staff were female, making UNRWA schools among the first in the Middle East to achieve gender equality. Of a total of 4,624 training places in UNRWA's eight vocational and technical training centres, 1,273 were held by women. Vocational training for women was provided in clothing production, hairdressing and beauty care; UNRWA was also seeking to raise the proportion of women trainees in nursing, computer science, business and office practice. Of 943 scholarships granted to refugee pupils, 437 were awarded to women.

The UNRWA programme for women in development sought to involve Palestinian refugee women in remunerative economic activity. Some 11,000 women received training in the production of goods or management of services, together with basic business skills. A solidarity group-lending programme provided credit ranging from $330 to $8,000 to 1,089 refugee women in microenterprises or working as street vendors. Under UNRWA's small-scale enterprise programme, which offered loans ranging from $1,000 to $75,000 for capital investment to new and expanding enterprises and working capital to established ones, 10 per cent of the credits were given to women. Through its special hardship programme, UNRWA provided material and financial aid to refugee families without a male adult medically able to earn an income and without other financial support sufficient to cover basic needs.

Other organizations within the UN system that provided assistance to Palestinian women included the Food Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organization, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, through its Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the World Bank and ESCWA.

The report recommended that UN organizations and bodies continue to incorporate a gender perspective in their assistance activities and to integrate such a perspective into monitoring possible violations of women's rights, notably that carried out by the Special Committee on Israeli Practices and the Special Rapporteur on the Palestinian Territories occupied since 1967 of the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter III). The report considered it desirable that the Special Committee achieve a better perspective on the violations of women's human rights and their needs and concerns by inviting more women to give oral testimony.

While the international community had made a commitment to empower Palestinian women and enhance their role in society, including in public life, in leadership positions and through income-generating projects and vocational training, their needs were not fully addressed in programmes for macroeconomic development and market economy, the report stated. Women's increasing role in the labour market had to be taken into account on a more consistent basis.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1997/27], adopted resolution 1997/16 by roll-call vote (44-1) [agenda item 7 (c)].

Palestinian women

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General concerning the situation of and assistance to Palestinian women,

Recalling the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Recalling also its resolution 1996/5 of 22 July 1996 and other relevant United Nations resolutions,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women as it concerns the protection of civilian populations,

Aware of the signing by the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel, in Washington, D.C., of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements on 13 September 1993 and of the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip on 28 September 1995, within the framework of the Middle East peace process,

Concerned about the continuing difficult situation of Palestinian women in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and about the severe consequences of continuous Israeli illegal settlement activities, as well as the harsh economic conditions and other consequences for the situation of Palestinian women and their families resulting from the frequent closure and isolation of the occupied territory,

1. Stresses its support for the Middle East peace process and the need for full implementation of the agreements already reached between the parties;

2. Reaffirms that the Israeli occupation remains a major obstacle for Palestinian women with regard to their advancement, self-reliance and integration in the development planning of their society;

3. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply fully with the provisions and principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 18 October 1907 and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949, in order to protect the rights of Palestinian women and their families;

4. Calls upon Israel to facilitate the return of all refugee and displaced Palestinian women and children to their homes and properties in the occupied Palestinian territory, in compliance with the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Urges Member States, financial organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and other relevant institutions to intensify their efforts to provide financial and technical assistance to Palestinian women for the creation of projects responding to their needs, especially during the transitional period;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor and take action with regard to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in particular paragraph 260 concerning Palestinian women and children, and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the situation and to assist Palestinian women by all available means, and to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-second session a report on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

ROLL-CALL VOTE ON RESOLUTION 1997/16:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bangladesh, Belarus, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Czech Republic, Djibouti, El Salvador, Finland, France, Gabon, Germany, Iceland, India, Japan, Jordan, Latvia, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Mozambique, Netherlands, Philippines, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, South Africa, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom.

Against: United States.

withdrawal from the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967 and for resolving the problem of the Palestine refugees. Under the same agenda item, the Assembly also considered a draft resolution on the participation of Palestine in the work of the United Nations, which was not put to a vote (see below).

In commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, celebrated annually on 29 November in accordance with Assembly resolution 32/40 B [YUN 1977, p. 304], the Committee, on 1 December, held a solemn meeting and other activities. Under the Committee's auspices, an exhibit entitled "At home in Palestine" was presented by the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations.

On 9 June, the Committee convened a special meeting to commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the occupation by Israel of the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories. The Secretary-General, the Security Council President and a Vice-President of the General Assembly took part in the special meeting and made statements. Statements by the President of the Palestinian Authority (PA), the Chairmen of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States (LAS) and the North American Coordinating Committee of Non-Governmental Organizations on the Question of Palestine were also read out.

The Committee adopted a statement on the occasion, expressing its belief that the current situation in the occupied territory called for reaffirmation of the international community's commitments to the objective of achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement to the Palestine question, in accordance with international legitimacy and UN resolutions.

Report of Secretary-General. In a November report on the question of Palestine [A/52/581-S/1997/866], the Secretary-General made observations on the Middle East peace process (see under "Peace process" above).

By a 9 September note verbale, the Secretary-General had sought the positions of the Governments of Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic, as well as the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), regarding steps taken by them to implement the relevant provisions of resolution 51/26 [YUN 1996, p. 399]. As at 23 October, only the PLO and Egypt had responded. The PLO stated that since the adoption of the resolution the peace process had deteriorated critically, owing to Israel's policies and actions;

Issues related to Palestine

General aspects

During 1997, the General Assembly continued to grapple with the question of Palestine. Following consideration of the report of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights) [A/52/35], the Assembly in December adopted four resolutions, reaffirming, among other things, the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question—the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict—in all its aspects, and stressing the need for immediate and scrupulous implementation of the agreements reached between the parties, as well as for the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, primarily the right to self-determination, for Israeli the transitional agreement had not been implemented, with the exception of the part relating to Al-Khalil (Hebron); the negotiations on the final settlement had not started; and the economic and living conditions of the Palestinians had dramatically deteriorated. Several bombing attacks in West Jerusalem had contributed to the exacerbation of the situation.

The Palestinian side welcomed the progress made concerning the United Nations playing an expanded role in the peace process and in implementing the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p. 521], especially in providing economic, social and other assistance to the Palestinians. It hoped that the Organization would be involved in bringing the peace process back on track, keeping it alive and achieving progress. Security Council involvement would be a very important factor, and the Council had indeed contributed to salvaging the peace process; in 1997, it had unfortunately been prevented twice from playing the same positive role due to United States vetoes on 7 and 21 March, which had led to the convening of the Assembly's tenth emergency special session, an indication of the UN Members' determination to remain engaged in and protect the Middle East peace process.

For a peaceful settlement of the Palestine question to be achieved within the framework of the current peace process, it was necessary, the Palestinians believed, to respect the basis on which that process was initiated—the principle of the return of land for peace and implementation of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. They considered it equally important for the parties to comply with the agreements reached and implement them in good faith without delay. All actions violating those agreements, international law and relevant Council resolutions had to cease immediately; the international community, especially the co-sponsors of the peace process, had great responsibility in that regard, the PLO stressed.

Egypt made similar points in its reply.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/52 [draft: A/52/L.52 & Corr.1 & Add.1] by recorded vote (155-2-3) [agenda item 36].

Peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions adopted at the tenth emergency special session,

Recalling also the relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973,

Aware that 1997 marks fifty years since the adoption of resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947 and thirty years since the occupation of Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted pursuant to the request made in its resolution 51/26 of 4 December 1996,

Convinced that achieving a final and peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, is imperative for the attainment of a comprehensive and lasting peace in the Middle East,

Aware that the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples is among the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Affirming the principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war,

Affirming also the illegality of the Israeli settlements in the territory occupied since 1967 and of Israeli actions aimed at changing the status of Jerusalem,

Affirming once again the right of all States in the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized borders,

Recalling the mutual recognition between the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the Palestinian people, and the signing by the two parties of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993, as well as the subsequent implementation agreements, including the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip signed in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Recalling also the withdrawal of the Israeli army, which took place in the Gaza Strip and the Jericho area in 1995 in accordance with the agreements reached by the parties, and the initiation of the Palestinian Authority in those areas, as well as the beginning of the re-deployment of the Israeli army in the rest of the West Bank in 1996,

Noting with satisfaction the successful holding of the first Palestinian general elections,

Noting with appreciation the work of the Office of the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories and its positive contribution,

Welcoming the convening of the Conference to Support Middle East Peace in Washington, D.C., on 1 October 1993, as well as all follow-up meetings and the international mechanisms established to provide assistance to the Palestinian people,

Concerned about the serious difficulties facing the Middle East peace process, including the lack of implementation of the agreements reached and the deterioration of the socio-economic conditions of the Palestinian people as a result of the Israeli positions and measures,

1. Reaffirms the necessity of achieving a peaceful settlement of the question of Palestine, the core of the Arab-Israeli conflict, in all its aspects;

2. RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/52:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syria, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstain: Bulgaria, Marshall Islands, Micronesia.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said the text injected the Assembly into questions that were the subject of direct negotiation. The United States wanted to support that process rather than focus on issues that divided or polarized.

Although in favour of the text, Turkey felt that it did not reflect all the obstacles on the road to lasting Middle East peace and stability. It believed that terrorism was a fundamental threat to the peace process and emphasized the urgent need for countries that lent support to terrorism to desist from such illegal and destructive practice and refrain from using terrorism as foreign-policy leverage.

The Syrian Arab Republic explained that its vote in favour did not mean that it either supported or opposed the 1993 Declaration of Principles referred to in the text. Syria stressed that complete Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories and the establishment of a just and comprehensive peace, in accordance with the principles and mandate of the Madrid Conference and the principle of land for peace, was the only way to enable the people of the region to live in peace within secure and internationally recognized boundaries.

Indonesia, introducing the draft resolution on behalf of the sponsors, noted that 1997 marked 50 years since the adoption of resolution 181(II) [YUN 1947-48, p. 247] on the future Government of Palestine and 30 years since the occupation of Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem.

On 9 December [meeting 68], under the agenda item on the "Question of Palestine", Indonesia introduced before the General Assembly plenary a draft resolution entitled "Full participation of Palestine in the work of the United Nations" [A/52/L.53/Rev.1] on behalf of 22 sponsors. The preambular part of the text recalled, among others, resolution 43/177 [YUN 1988, p. 208], by which the Assembly acknowledged the proclamation of the State of Palestine by the Palestine National Council and decided that the designation "Palestine" should be used in place of "Palestine Liberation Organization" in the UN system. The preamble also recalled that the Security Council in 1977 had decided that the PLO should be invited to participate in the debate on the situation in the Middle East and that that invitation would confer on it the same rights of participation as those conferred on a Member State under rule 37 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Since February 1994, Palestine had been invited to participate in the discussion without the right to vote, in accordance with the provisional rules of procedure and established practice. In the text's operative part, the Assembly would decide to confer on Palestine, in its capacity as observer, similar rights and privileges of participation as those conferred on Member States, with the exception of voting and candidature, in the sessions and work of the Assembly and international conferences convened under the auspices of the Assembly or other UN organs as well as in UN conferences. The UN Secretariat would be authorized to implement the resolution and the Secretary-General would be requested to proceed expeditiously in that regard.

The United States expressed strong opposition to the text on the ground that it would grant the Palestinians more rights than Observer States; if adopted, it would set a provocative precedent that would not be easy to walk away from and would affect the conduct of UN business for years to come. The Palestinians were not a State, the United States stressed, and should not have rights nearly equal to those of States; that was especially true since the ultimate disposition of the West Bank and Gaza was a permanent status issue that the Palestinians themselves had agreed to resolve in direct negotiations in the 1993 Declaration of Principles [YUN 1993, p. 521]. The United States was also concerned that the proposal could have negative consequences for diplomatic efforts to inject new momentum into the peace process, which were extremely sensitive. If successful, the United States warned, the move would likely encourage other groups involved in regional disputes to attempt similar status upgrades, with chaotic political consequences.

Introducing the draft resolution, Indonesia stressed that the text did not seek full UN membership or balloting, but additional rights and privileges of participation for Palestine as an observer. The sponsors hoped that adoption of the draft would contribute to achieving the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, thus bringing about a just and comprehensive Middle East peace.

On behalf of the European Union (EU), Luxembourg introduced an amendment [A/52/L.59] replacing the operative paragraphs with a text by which the Assembly would reaffirm the right of Palestine to participate as an observer in the Assembly's session and work and in international conferences convened under the auspices of the Assembly or other UN organs. The Assembly would also decide to review whether the rights currently enjoyed by Palestine were adequate to ensure its proper participation in its work and that of its Main Committees and international conferences; and would request the Secretary-General to report on the issue as soon as possible, before the end of the Assembly's fifty-second session.

In presenting the amendment, Luxembourg stated that the draft resolution went well beyond a practical improvement in the participation of the Observer of Palestine in the work of the Assembly and other UN organs and had implications not only for the precise status of Palestine in the United Nations, but also for the relationship between States Members and Observers. The EU was prepared to participate in such a discussion which, however, had to be properly prepared so that a well-considered decision could be taken in full awareness of all the facts and after an in-depth exchange of views.

Yemen, on behalf of the sponsors of the original text, moved that the EU amendment be considered a new proposal, rather than an amendment, as it sought to delete the important body of the draft and insert paragraphs with a completely different meaning. Yemen's motion was rejected by a recorded vote of 65 against to 57 in favour, with 32 abstentions.

After consultations among the original draft's sponsors, it was decided to request that the text not be put to the vote and that further consultations would take place.

Committee on Palestinian Rights

As mandated by General Assembly resolution 51/23 [YUN 1996, p. 402], the Committee on Palestinian Rights, established in 1975 by Assembly resolution 3376(XXX) [YUN 1975, p. 248], kept under review the situation relating to the Palestine question, reported on it and made suggestions to the Assembly or the Security Council. The Committee continued to promote a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement to the question in accordance with international legitimacy, and participated actively in meetings of the Council, the Assembly and other international forums convened for that purpose. The Committee also monitored the situation in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and developments in the peace process, through the media and UN reports, as well as information provided by non-governmental organizations (NGOs), individual experts and participants in meetings held under Committee auspices.

In accordance with decisions taken in 1996 to streamline its programme, the Committee held the following meetings in 1997: the annual meeting of consultations with representatives of coordinating committees of NGOs (New York, 3-4 February); a seminar on assistance to the Palestinians (Amman, Jordan, 20-22 May) (see below); the annual North American Symposium of NGOs (New York, 9-11 June); and the annual International Meeting of NGOs, combined with the European Symposium of NGOs (Geneva, 25-28 August). An Asian seminar and NGO symposium on the question of Palestine was held in Jakarta, Indonesia (4-7 May). The Committee decided not to convene the remaining meetings programmed for the 1996-1997 biennium, and requested the Secretariat to ensure that the resulting savings be used to finance new activities and the further development of the computer-based UN Information System on the Question of Palestine (UN-ISPAL).

The Committee continued to follow the activities relating to the Palestine question of intergovernmental bodies, such as OAU and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and through its Chairman, participated in relevant meetings. Through its Bureau, the Committee made efforts to involve additional Member States in its work, in particular the members of the EU, and held consultations with LAS and OIC with a view to organizing a joint event in early 1998.

In its annual report to the Assembly [A/52/35], covering the period from 15 November 1996 to 5 November 1997, the Committee welcomed the signing by the parties in January 1997 of the Protocol concerning the Redeployment in Hebron and the Note for the Record (see above, under "Peace Process"). Following that agreement, over 80 per cent of the city was successfully transferred to the PA. On 20 January, the Bureau of the Committee had expressed the hope that the Protocol would lead to full implementation of the agreements reached, in particular the commencement of substantive negotiations on matters pertaining to a permanent settlement.

The Committee welcomed the establishment, at the beginning of February, of eight bilateral Israeli-Palestinian subcommittees to tackle the outstanding issues during the transitional period, including operation of the Gaza seaport and airport, safe passage corridors from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and the release of Palestinian prisoners. It further welcomed the contribution to the peace process by the various international parties and noted the increased involvement of the co-sponsors of the peace process, as well as the EU, in efforts to bring about a resumption of the bilateral negotiations.

The Committee noted with extreme concern, however, that the negotiations faced serious setbacks during the year as a direct result of Israel's position on various elements of the peace process; it noted that in the course of the year numerous Israeli statements and actions had a negative effect with regard to sensitive issues to be discussed during permanent status negotiations and had created a situation in which the peace process could not successfully move forward. Especially worrisome were continued Israeli statements of intent regarding the expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of new ones, as well as the building of roads to connect those settlements.

In the year under review, the issue of Jewish settlements remained at the forefront of the Committee's attention. The Committee deplored Israel's decisions to start constructing a new Jewish settlement at Jebel Abu Ghneim and to continue with construction in spite of the international community's overwhelming expression of opposition. On the day of the start of construction, the Bureau of the Committee voiced concern at its negative implications for the future of the peace process. It also called for an end to military occupation, land confiscation and settlement policies, and for the resumption of bilateral negotiations. In September, the Committee expressed grave concern at efforts by militant settlers to establish a permanent presence in the Ras al-Amud district in occupied East Jerusalem.

Especially worrisome in the Committee's opinion were actions taken by Israel to strengthen its control over East Jerusalem, such as the opening of a new entrance to the tunnel near Al Aqsa Mosque, the withdrawal of Jerusalem identity cards, the destruction of buildings and intensified efforts to establish Jewish settlements in the Old City. The Committee was of the view that Israel's policy on Palestinian residency rights in Jerusalem and the confiscation of identity documents of the city's Palestinian residents was aimed at creating a demographic reality that would pre-empt any just solution to the question of Jerusalem and produce an eventual imbalance in favour of Israel in the permanent status negotiations.

The Committee affirmed its strong opposition to the repeated closures and blockade of the occupied territories, which, it said, suffocated the fledgling Palestinian economy, interfered with the implementation of assistance projects and the disbursement of international aid, brought hardship and suffering to Palestinians and exacerbated tension. It reiterated its position that the practice of closures was in direct contravention of the Fourth Geneva Convention.

The Committee expressed great appreciation for the international community's continued efforts to provide assistance to the Palestinians through the PA, despite growing difficulties on the ground. The Committee was of the view that such assistance remained vital to the successful transition to national sovereignty and statehood. It welcomed the appointment in February of Chinmaya R. Gharekhan as the Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, to serve as a focal point for the UN family of organizations and to maintain ongoing contact with the donor community, NGOs and others.

Noting the dedicated efforts of the United Nations relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), which continued to provide its much-needed services to refugees and their families despite its difficult financial situation (see below), the Committee called for intensified international support for UNRWA's activities.

In making its recommendations, the Committee noted that 1997 marked the fiftieth anniversary of General Assembly resolution 181(II) [YUN 1947-48, p. 247], by which the Assembly decided on the partitioning of Palestine and called for the establishment of independent Jewish and Arab States and a special international regime for Jerusalem; the thirtieth anniversary of the occupation of Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories by Israel; and the tenth anniversary of the beginning of the intifadah, the Palestinian uprising which, according to the Committee, helped create the conditions for the peace process.

The signing of the Declaration of Principles in September 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 521] was a dramatic turning point in the search for peace, the Committee said, leading to the emergence of a new reality on the ground, enabling the Palestinians to take their first steps towards independence and opening new possibilities for cooperation among the peoples of the region. The Committee considered it essential that the international community intensify its efforts in support of the historic process of reconciliation between the two sides, the effective implementation of the agreements reached and the resumption of all aspects of the negotiations on the agreed basis.

The Committee expressed greatest concern and anguish that the hopes ushered in by initial positive developments were not carried through in the year under review and that the peace process appeared increasingly in jeopardy, leading to an alarming exacerbation of tension and violence, which resulted in loss of life on both sides. The Committee believed that the harsh economic measures against the occupied territory, including the prolonged blockade, were a form of collective punishment in contravention of the Fourth Geneva Convention and the agreements reached, and called for their end in the interests of restoring mutual confidence and promoting peace.

The Committee, noting that 30 Palestinian women prisoners had been released by the Israeli authorities in February, emphasized that the release of prisoners should have become an important confidence-building step, but that Israel was still holding more than 3,600 Palestinian prisoners. Instances of excessive force were recorded by the PA and various human rights organizations. The Committee reaffirmed that the holding of prisoners in the territory of the occupying Power violated the Fourth Geneva Convention and called on Israel to respect its obligations under that Convention and to release the prisoners pursuant to the bilateral agreements.

The Committee fully supported the General Assembly's recommendations in resolutions ES-10/2 and ES-10/3, in particular for the convening of a conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention (see above). The Committee would remain engaged in the follow-up to those recommendations and continue to promote the necessary action.

The Committee reiterated that the involvement of the United Nations in the peace process, both as the guardian of international legitimacy and in mobilizing and providing international assistance, was essential for the successful outcome of that process. As the organ of the General Assembly established to deal with the question, the Committee believed that its role continued to be useful and necessary during the transitional period and until a satisfactory final settlement was achieved.

The Committee reaffirmed that such a settlement had to be based on Security Council resolutions 242(1967) [YUN 1967, p. 257] and 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]; Israeli withdrawal from the Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem, and other Arab territories occupied since 1967; the principle of exchange of land for peace; and the exercise by the Palestinians of their inalienable rights, in particular the right to self-determination. The Committee also insisted that, during the interim period, Israel had to recognize and respect its obligations as the occupying Power under the Fourth Geneva Convention.

While remaining firm on those positions of principle, the Committee continued to make adjustments in its approach and programme of work in order to make a concrete contribution to promoting implementation of the agreements reached and to mobilize international assistance to the Palestinians.

The Committee expressed great appreciation to those States that had supported its work and facilitated the organization of events held under its auspices. It considered that a broadening of its membership to include countries that supported its objectives but had not hitherto participated in its work would greatly enhance the Assembly's contribution to promoting peace at the current, important stage.

The Committee considered that its programme of seminars in the various regions played a useful role in informing and mobilizing public opinion, promoting the exchange of experience and expertise among participants from the various regions and Palestinians and Israelis, and promoting increased involvement by Governments in the search for a just and comprehensive solution. The annual convening of a seminar devoted to the economic and social challenges facing the Palestinians during the transitional period had proved very useful in the Committee's opinion and it intended to continue the practice in order to give the international donor community, including UN bodies and agencies, the opportunity to exchange views with representatives of the PA and internationally renowned experts.

In view of the current situation in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, the Committee intended to encourage intensified efforts by NGOs to organize sustained campaigns to inform public opinion and promote national and international action in support of UN resolutions and the Committee's objectives. It also planned to continue its meetings of NGOs in the various regions, for a periodic analysis of political developments and as a forum for an exchange of views and experience, as well as for coordinating specific activities.

The Committee concluded that it would continue to strive for maximum effectiveness in implementing its mandate and to adjust its work programme in the light of developments in order to contribute further to the realization of the common UN objective of achieving a just and lasting solution to the Palestine question.

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a permanent responsibility with respect to the question of Palestine until the question is resolved in all its aspects in a satisfactory manner in accordance with international legitimacy,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People for its efforts in performing the tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/49:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Egypt, El Salvador, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syria, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstain: Andorra, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, United Kingdom.

The United States said the draft resolution, and those on the Division for Palestinian Rights and the special information programme on the Palestine question (see below), promoted institutions whose activities and approaches to Middle East peace were unbalanced and outdated and did nothing to support the process of negotiations under way, scarcely taking note of the considerable achievements of the negotiating partners to date. Instead, they drained away millions of dollars each year that could better serve economic development in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Speaking on behalf of the EU, Luxembourg expressed regret that the Committee's mandate did not take better account of the spirit of the peace process; however, the EU welcomed the dialogue established in recent months with the Bureau of the Committee and intended to continue that exchange, particularly with a view to adapting the Committee's activities and mandate to the new situation in the Middle East so that it could make a constructive contribution to UN action in support of the peace efforts.

Division for Palestinian Rights

With the guidance of the Committee on Palestinian Rights, the Division for Palestinian Rights of the UN Secretariat continued to function as a centre for research, monitoring, preparation of studies, and collection and dissemination of information on all issues related to the Palestine question. The Division continued to respond to requests for information and to prepare and disseminate the following publications: a monthly bulletin covering action by the Committee and other UN bodies and agencies, as well as inter-governmental organizations and NGOs on the Palestine question; a periodic bulletin entitled "Developments related to the Middle East peace process"; a monthly chronology of events relating to the question, based on media reports and other sources; reports of meetings organized under Committee auspices; a special bulletin on the commemoration of the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November); and an annual compilation of relevant General Assembly and Security Council resolutions, decisions and statements.

The Committee, in its annual report [A/52/35], noted with appreciation that the Division had completed a study on the status of Jerusalem, to be published in the near future, and was working on a draft study on Israeli settlements. It also noted that the Division, in cooperation with relevant technical services of the Secretariat, had made substantial progress in developing UN-ISPAL, as mandated by Assembly resolution 46/74 B [YUN 1991, p. 228]; that a public replica of the system had been established and made available to external users for the second year; and that the Division was making progress in placing some of its documentation on the Internet. While pleased by those developments, particularly the conversion of some 5,000 pages into electronic format through an outside vendor, the Committee expressed the wish that the database be made more comprehensive and useful.

The Committee requested the Division to continue its publications programme, in consultation with the Committee, to pay particular attention to finalizing the proposed study on settlements during the coming year, and to continue its successful project for the training of staff of the PA in the workings of the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure the continued cooperation of the Office of Communications and Public Information and other units of the Secretariat in enabling the Division to perform its tasks and in covering adequately the various aspects of the question of Palestine;

5. Invites all Governments and organizations to lend their cooperation to the Committee and the Division in the performance of their tasks;

6. Notes with appreciation the action taken by Member States to observe annually on 29 November the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People, requests them to continue to give the widest possible publicity to the observance, and requests the Committee to continue to organize, as part of the observance of the Day of Solidarity, an annual exhibit on Palestinian rights in cooperation with the Permanent Observer Mission of Palestine to the United Nations.

Special information programme

As requested by General Assembly resolution 51/25 [YUN 1996, p. 405], the UN Department of Public Information (DPI) continued in 1997, in full cooperation and coordination with the Committee on Palestinian Rights, its special information programme on the Palestine question.

The Department's Public Inquiries Unit responded to requests for information on Middle East issues, and the Group Programme Unit organized briefings on the Palestine question and the Middle East for students and other groups. The subject was included in the presentation to visitors taking guided tours. The Dissemination Unit responded to information requests and disseminated material by electronic mail. Information material and video programmes were distributed to the NGO community in New York, Geneva and Vienna. The UN Dag Hammarskjöld Library and the depository libraries disseminated material, documents and press releases on the Committee's activities.

The quarterly UN Chronicle continued its comprehensive coverage of the Palestine question, including General Assembly and Security Council action, special meetings, symposia and seminars. The publications The United Nations and the Question of Palestine and For the Rights of the Palestinians: The Work of the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People continued to be comprehensive sources of historical information; those publications and the poster entitled "Self-determination: an inalienable right of the Palestinian people" were made available in all UN languages.

The Radio and Central News Service covered extensively all aspects of the Palestine question and related issues in daily news bulletins, weekly current affairs magazines and feature programmes in official and non-official languages for dissemination throughout the world.

Following a video-taping mission to the Palestinian territories, the Media Division completed a programme on: Palestinian television, with special emphasis on broadcasters trained by DPI; a rehabilitation project of youth centres in Gaza sponsored by the United Nations Development Programme and training and income-generating programmes for women, sponsored by UNRWA. Videos were being produced for "UN in Action", "CNN World Report" and "1997 Year in Review". As requested by the Committee, video footage on the Palestine question since 1945 had been researched and compiled and a small section in the video library devoted to the question was being established.

DPI, in cooperation with Greece, organized an international seminar with the theme "The peace process: the challenges ahead" (Athens, 26-27 May), which discussed the status of the peace process, implementation of the peace agreements, final status negotiations and the region's economic situation. The seminar brought together Palestinian and Israeli media representatives, as well as academics and political and economic development experts, officials of the PA, and senior journalists representing prominent media organizations from the United States, Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America. After the seminar, a fact-finding news mission of eight international journalists visited Cairo, Egypt and Amman, Jordan, where they met with high-ranking government officials and the local press corps.

DPI, in cooperation with the Division for Palestinian Rights, promoted the International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People (29 November), providing assistance in organizing a special exhibit on that occasion, entitled "At home in Palestine". Print and electronic media coverage of the event in many countries was extensive, and panel discussions and forums, with the participation of UN and government officials, delegations of Palestine and NGOs, were among several activities organized by UN information centres. Also, throughout the year, many centres dealt with the Palestine question in their periodic newsletters and bulletins, organized media activities and special events, issued information materials in local languages and disseminated documents.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/51 [draft: A/52/L.51 & Add.1] by recorded vote (158-2-4) [agenda item 36].

Special information programme on the question of Palestine

3. Requests the Office, in full cooperation and coordination with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue, with the necessary flexibility as may be required by developments affecting the question of Palestine, its special information programme for the biennium 1998-1999, with particular emphasis on public opinion in Europe and North America and, in particular:

(a) To disseminate information on all the activities of the United Nations system relating to the question of Palestine, including reports on the work carried out by the relevant United Nations organizations;

(b) To continue to issue and update publications on the various aspects of the question of Palestine in all fields, including materials concerning the recent developments in that regard and, in particular, the prospects for peace;

(c) To expand its collection of audiovisual material on the question of Palestine and to continue the production of such material;

(d) To organize and promote fact-finding news missions for journalists to the area, including the territories under the jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority and the occupied territories;

(e) To organize international, regional and national seminars or encounters for journalists;

(f) To continue to provide assistance to the Palestinian people in the field of media development, in particular to strengthen the training programme for Palestinian broadcasters and journalists initiated in 1995.

Assistance to Palestinians

UN involvement

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/52/159-E/1997/69], the Secretary-General described UN assistance to the Palestinian people between June 1996 and May 1997. He also provided an assessment of assistance actually received and of needs still unmet and specific proposals for responding effectively to them.

Chinmaya R. Gharekhan succeeded Terje Rød-Larsen as Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories in February 1997. Concurrently, Mr. Gharekhan continued to serve as the Secretary-General's Representative to the multilateral peace talks on the Middle East, a position he had held since January 1993.

Throughout the reporting period, the Special Coordinator focused his efforts on coordinating and targeting donor-funded projects to alleviate unemployment and related socio-economic hardship and to encourage employment generation; working with partners in the development effort to provide budgetary support to the PA and to address the budget deficit; strengthening institution-building and targeted technical assistance, so that greater progress could be made towards sustainable socio-economic development; encouraging greater private-sector involvement to stimulate growth, economic development and employment generation; and expediting donor disbursements so that the PA's Public Investment Programme, supported by the international community, could be implemented.

Since its inception in 1994, the report stated, the Office of the Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories had been instrumental in establishing donor coordination mechanisms that brought together the PA, donors, the World Bank and the United Nations. The UN presence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip increased from three organizations in 1993 to 15 in 1997. Combined UN funds dispersed through regular budgets and funds for specific projects totalled approximately $254 million in 1996. With the exception of UNRWA, UN organizations worked for the most part through the PA or local executing agencies.

UN organizations developed their 1997 programmes in response to the needs identified by the PA in the areas of education, health, employment generation, infrastructure and housing, institution-building and the private sector. The Special Coordinator presented the proposed programme of UN assistance for 1997 to the donor community at the Consultative Group meeting in November 1996, which was preceded by an intense round of consultations involving the PA, donors, the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund; the process resulted in a comprehensive public investment programme for 1997 of $865 million, which included 48 UN projects totalling $113 million. At the November meeting, attended by representatives of 35 donor countries and 14 development agencies, $888 million was pledged.

Preparation of the Palestinian Development Plan for 1998-2000 commenced in early 1997. The aim of the improved preparatory process, which drew upon the expertise of PA ministries and agencies and the sector working groups of the Local Aid Coordination Committee, was to better target donor funding to Palestinian development needs. To increase the efficiency and usefulness of the sector working groups, set up in 1995 to facilitate communication and coordination between donors and the PA, a series of evaluative workshops was held in early 1997, leading in some cases to the creation of more focused subgroups. Under the guidance of a steering committee, chaired by the Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation, the working groups would also assist the PA in formulating the Palestinian Public Investment Programme.

By decision 1997/294 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on assistance to the Palestinians.

Education

Education, the largest public-service sector within the PA's area of responsibility, employed almost 22,000 people and catered to the needs of approximately 1.2 million children. Immediate priorities for the PA upon assuming responsibility were upgrading inadequate physical infrastructure and revitalizing human resources. Efforts to relieve overcrowding, the insufficient number of schools and deteriorating premises remained a high priority owing to the demands of a rapidly growing population. An estimated 40 new schools per year were required simply to keep up with the natural increase; in addition, there was a need for textbooks and equipment in the almost 1,500 existing schools.

Capacity development at the classroom level was urgently needed to revitalize the educational process, which had suffered from low teacher morale and lack of institutional support. The framework for such efforts had to be, said the report, a comprehensive institutional development process targeting the education system overall, its policy-making and implementation procedures at every level. The sectoral priority was to support the PA's implementation of its National Plan of Action for Children, in which formal, non-formal and early childhood education were targeted for improvement in quality, access and management.

Employment

The average number of Palestinians working legally inside Israel had fallen to 22,000 in 1996 from 116,000 in 1992. With an estimated 16,000 joining the labour force each year, it seemed unlikely, the report said, that the Palestinian economy would be able to absorb many of the currently unemployed or to accommodate the anticipated increases of roughly 4 per cent annually. A two-track approach was required to address the immediate needs through the provision of short-term job opportunities, while at the same time formulating long-term strategies. In order to address long-term employment needs, changes in the preparation of the labour force were required; university graduates experienced high unemployment due to the concentration on humanities and social science rather than science and technology-related fields. Private enterprise and investment had to be encouraged in such important sectors as agriculture, and there was a need to develop a transparent, streamlined legal and regulatory framework.

Health

The PA had identified the fragmentation of health services between different providers, the lack of standardization in skills and services and the neglected state of physical infrastructure and equipment as the health sector's priority needs. As was also the case with other sectors, the health sector in general had suffered from the lack of Palestinian participation in planning and decision-making during the occupation years. In addition, the human and technical resources for gathering comprehensive data for the whole of the West Bank and Gaza Strip were unavailable, and health providers were consequently unable to ascertain fully the scale and priority of health problems. There was no comprehensive health safety net, the report noted, and many families could not afford insurance coverage; that created particular problems in specialist health care, which was currently unavailable in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, necessitating patient referrals to Israeli hospitals. In addition, curative rather than preventive and primary health care was overemphasized, which greatly increased costs both system-wide and at the household level. Currently, almost one quarter of all patients' first contacts with health-care services were initiated as emergencies, which placed higher financial and manpower costs on the system. The 1996 health budget was $96 million, up from $76 million the previous year.

Overall health indicators for the West Bank and Gaza Strip were comparable with those of other Arab countries of the region and of countries with similar socio-economic characteristics. Major causes of child mortality were acute respiratory infections and diarrhoeal diseases. Child and maternal nutrition deficiencies were evident in the high rates of anaemia, diarrhoeal disease and related problems. There was a need for widespread health education—aimed at both the public and health professionals—in order to lessen the severity of those and other pressing health problems. On the whole, however, the West Bank and Gaza were characterized by pockets of need rather than the urgent health sector demands evident in some developing countries. Sectoral priorities remained centred around the strengthening of institutional and human capacity in the context of developing a locally relevant, locally managed comprehensive health-care system.

Infrastructure

Neglected infrastructure remained one of the most pressing challenges facing the PA, the report stated, as consistent underfunding had resulted in decaying and inadequate systems that were overwhelmed by demand. Priority areas were modern roads planned with the need of local communities in mind, adequate and environmentally sound water and sanitation systems, and efficient electricity and telecommunications capable of facilitating development and commercial expansion. Housing was characterized by a large gap between supply and demand and a lack of government investment and remained subject to zoning restrictions, planning and building permits.

As the population grew and residential and industrial use expanded, demand for electricity continued to rise; however, over 130 villages in the West Bank either had no electricity at all or were supplied for only a few hours a day. Only 29 per cent of the West Bank and Gaza Strip population was connected to a public sewage system, and raw sewage, which continued to be diverted into cess-pits, posed an environmental hazard to the underground aquifers that were the main water resource. Insufficient facilities for solid waste disposal or irregular collection in many areas compounded the problem. In 1995, the Palestinian Water Authority had assumed responsibility for coordinating activities related to water and waste-water management; long-term planning had begun and sewage treatment plants were being overhauled, but rehabilitating the entire system was a lengthy process and, owing to the absence of any previous substantive development in the sector, much remained to be done.

According to the report, over 40 per cent of the existing road network required urgent repairs, and the entire road system needed to be reworked to facilitate development. Fully functioning airports and seaports were necessary if trade, commerce and tourism were to grow to their full potential. Telecommunications were improving, although the number of telephones per person stood at 1:46—compared with 1:15 in Jordan—presenting a constraint on commercial enterprises. The PA had plans to expand to 250,000 telephone lines by the year 2000, compared with the current figure of 90,000.

Three years after the PA assumed responsibility, major progress had been made in institution-building in the area of public administration at both central and local levels, the report noted. Much of the donor initiative had focused on support for the start-up phase, capital expenditures and recurrent costs, and on technical assistance for the development process to ministries and other institutions responsible for the delivery of public and social services. The challenge continued to be to assist the PA in the assumption of its central responsibilities. Ensuring financial accountability and operational transparency of ministries, councils and organizations was key to continued international participation in the process.

Increasing attention was being devoted to strengthening the legal system, developing institutional capacity for the administration of justice and protection of human rights, and establishing a regulatory framework in both the public and private sectors. Other priorities included encouraging private investment and fostering donor confidence by enhancing the legal environment surrounding private-sector investment, specifically land registration, building and property ownership, and planning and zoning regulations. The public-sector regulatory framework also needed to be developed, the report stated, with respect to taxation and banking laws, labour laws and workers' rights, and environmental protection.

Private-sector development

The report considered the expansion and encouragement of the private sector to be central to the achievement of long-term structural employment, but stated that investment was currently inhibited by fears of potential economic losses owing to closures of the West Bank and Gaza Strip and the resultant lack of access to markets and materials. In addition, there was an ongoing need to develop a comprehensive legal and regulatory framework conducive to private-sector investment. Also required was continued support to the banking sector, to ensure the availability of dependable financial services needed for business investment and expansion.

Housing construction accounted for some 85 per cent of private-sector investment. Agriculture—largely centred around small, family-based farms—was another important economic activity, generating roughly one third of gross domestic product and one quarter of exports. Owing to the effects of border closures, lack of access to markets, the threat of ever decreasing access to water resources and dependence on, as well as inappropriate use of, chemical fertilizers and pesticides, the sector had been unable to develop its full economic potential. There was a need for further development of rain-fed crops and multi-cropping, and institutional support in the form of credit facilities, uniform legislation, research and testing stations for crop-testing and trying out new methodologies.

The PA had also highlighted the tourism sector for development, as the approaching turn of the millennium was expected to attract a huge influx of visitors to the region. While major efforts were under way, particularly in Bethlehem, the sector required additional physical infrastructure and improved services.

Seminar on assistance to Palestinian people. By a 9 June letter [A/52/179-E/1997/76], the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian Rights transmitted to the Secretary-General the report of the 1997 Seminar on Assistance to the Palestinian People (Amman, Jordan, 20-22 May), which had as its theme "Palestinian Human Development Needs". The Seminar's round-table meetings discussed sustainable human development as the basis for nation-building; promoting poverty eradication and sustainable development; and promoting gender equality and the full participation of women in society. Representatives of 32 Governments, 3 intergovernmental organizations, 11 UN bodies and agencies and 17 NGOs participated in the seminar, at which 16 experts from various regions, including Palestinians and one Israeli, presented papers.

The UN and Palestine refugees

The year 1997 was one of uncertainty for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) and for the refugee community with whom the Agency had been working since 1950. The virtual suspension of ongoing negotiations within the framework of the Middle East peace process, and the closures on security grounds affecting the West Bank and Gaza Strip, led to a deterioration in the political, social and economic environment in which the refugees lived and the Agency operated. At the same time, UNRWA faced a financial crisis that threatened to undermine the level and standard of the humanitarian services it was mandated by the international community to provide until the Palestine refugee problem was resolved. During the year, finding a solution to the financial crisis became a major preoccupation of the UNRWA Commissioner-General and his staff, who intensified efforts to work with the Agency's major donors, the host authorities and the international community at large to secure the Agency's financial footing.

By mid-1997, 3.42 million Palestine refugees were registered with UNRWA, an increase of 3.6 per cent over the 1996 figure of 3.31 million. The largest refugee population was registered in Jordan (1.3 million, or 41.4 per cent, of the Agency-wide total), followed by the Gaza Strip (717,000, or 21.8 per cent), the West Bank (532,000, 15.9 per cent), Lebanon (352,000, 10.5 per cent) and the Syrian Arab Republic (347,000, 10.4 per cent).

Work of UNRWA

In his annual report [A/52/13] on the work of the Agency (1 July 1996-30 June 1997), the UNRWA Commissioner-General said that the Agency's humanitarian work was being overshadowed by concern about its financial situation. The steady increase in the refugee population due to natural growth, combined with inflation and the fact that UNRWA's public-sector-like services were made available to all those eligible for them, meant that the cost of providing services at a given level over time rose inexorably. Also, in view of the worsening economic conditions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the Agency was facing mounting demands from the refugees to do more to improve the quality of services and living conditions inside and outside the camps.

The perpetual financial crisis was pushing the Agency towards a situation in which cost implications would become the exclusive concern in decisions on humanitarian assistance, the Commissioner-General warned. Such a situation was not at all conducive to the effective functioning of an agency chiefly responsible for providing basic public sector services to a vulnerable, marginalized and impoverished population of over 3 million, particularly given the sensitive and contentious political issues surrounding the refugee issue and UNRWA's own work. Under its regular programmes of assistance, UNRWA provided essential education, health and relief and social services through a network of 643 schools, eight training centres and 121 out-patient health facilities. Environmental health services included sewage and refuse disposal, waste-water management and provision of clean drinking water to more than 1.1 million refugees living in 59 camps. A special hardship programme served 185,000 of the neediest refugees with food rations, medical subsidies, shelter rehabilitation and other benefits. A range of social services was provided to over 32,000 refugees through 126 Agency-sponsored women's programme, community rehabilitation and youth activity centres. By the end of 1997, an income-generation programme had provided loans valued at more than $22 million to 10,538 refugee-owned business enterprises, achieving repayment rates of more than 95 per cent.

Peace Implementation Programme

In its fourth year of operation, UNRWA's Peace Implementation Programme (PIP) remained the main channel for extrabudgetary project funding of Agency education, health and relief and social service programmes and income-generation activities. Launched in October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 569] after the signing of the Declaration of Principles between the PLO and Israel, PIP aimed to demonstrate the tangible benefits of the peace process through a comprehensive initiative to develop infrastructure, improve living conditions and create employment opportunities in refugee communities.

From mid-1996 to mid-1997, PIP funding enabled UNRWA to complete construction of 13 schools, 6 additional classrooms, 11 specialized rooms, 4 health centres or health points, 3 community rehabilitation centres, and a vocational training centre workshop, a distribution centre, a women's programme centre, a kindergarten/nursery and a secondary school built for the PA. The Agency rehabilitated 567 shelters for special hardship families and performed comprehensive maintenance on 20 schools. Facilities of three vocational and technical training centres, two health centres and three women's programme centres were upgraded, and a youth activities centre was renovated. Completed projects that improved camp infrastructure and services included an internal sewerage project in one camp in the West Bank, the paving of pathways and drains in three camps in Jordan, improvements to water supply systems in three camps in Syria and one in Lebanon, construction of a pumping station in one camp in Gaza, installation of a new electricity network in another in the West Bank, and upgrading of solid waste disposal facilities in a number of camps in Syria and Gaza. Other environmental health projects, including a major project for eight Lebanon camps and construction of new premises for the Gaza Rehabilitation Centre for the Visually Impaired, were ongoing.

Other PIP-funded activities included after-school recreation and emergency job-creation programmes in the Gaza Strip; repatriation to Gaza of residents of a camp in the Sinai peninsula; a slow-learners' programme and provision of computers for the tenth grade in Jordan; a poverty alleviation programme in the West Bank; and a vocational training course, a slow-learners' programme, pre-school classes, special care for destitute persons, provision of prosthetic devices and nursing training in Lebanon. PIP also helped to sustain regular Agency programmes by providing additional hospitalization assistance and medical supplies in Lebanon, additional teacher posts in the West Bank, funding university scholarships for refugee students, and support for the income-generation programme. PIP cash expenditures totalled $74 million in the 1996-1997 biennium—not including expenditures for the European Gaza Hospital project, contributions for which were recorded as PIP income. Pledges and contributions for PIP during the period totalled $69.5 million, raising the aggregate received over the life of the programme to $219.5 million by the end of 1997. All in all, 310 projects had been funded since PIP's inception.

In view of the marked decrease in pledges and contributions compared to previous reporting periods, as well as financial constraints experienced by major donors and the establishment of new channels of implementation, UNRWA assumed that funding for PIP had peaked. Consequently the focus of the programme would shift towards completion of funded projects and development of a more targeted fund-raising approach reflecting Agency-wide priorities and continuity in service provision.

Education

During the 1996/97 school year, the 643 UNRWA schools accommodated 436,169 pupils, mainly in the elementary and preparatory cycles but also including 333 students at the single Agency secondary school in Lebanon. Total enrolment increased by 3.4 per cent, or 14,315 pupils, over the 1995/96 school year. However, growth in enrolment was unevenly distributed, with an increase of 8.6 per cent in the Gaza Strip (11,179 new pupils) and a decrease of 1.6 per cent in Jordan (2,371 fewer pupils), with the other three fields (Lebanon, Syria, West Bank) maintaining growth rates between 3.1 and 4.6 per cent. While natural growth in the refugee population was the principal cause of the overall increase, other sometimes countervailing tendencies were also at work, including movement of Palestinian families within the area of operations (particularly from Jordan and to the Gaza Strip and West Bank); movement into the area of operations (Gaza Strip); the transfer of refugee pupils from Agency to government schools (Jordan) and vice versa (Syria); and the transfer of refugee pupils from tuition-based private schools to Agency schools (Lebanon). Female pupils represented 49.8 per cent of total enrolment.

The education programme, which was run in cooperation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), remained UNRWA's single largest area of activity. The 13,766 education staff represented two thirds of all Agency personnel, while the education budget of $167.1 million for 1997 accounted for half of the total UNRWA budget.

The Agency's basic education programme consisted of an elementary cycle of six years and a preparatory cycle of three or four years, depending on local norms; a three-year secondary cycle was also offered at the UNRWA secondary school in Lebanon. The programme adhered to the curricula, study plans, textbooks and education structures of the host authorities; thus changes in host authority education programmes had implications for the Agency. The most significant issue in that regard was the extension of the basic education cycle by the PA from 9 years to 10. The Authority, which had previously requested UNRWA to introduce the tenth grade in its West Bank schools, broadened that request to include the Gaza Strip. However, a lack of funds prevented the Agency from introducing the new grade in either field—for a fourth consecutive year in the case of the West Bank. The Agency was seeking special funding of $7.8 million for the West Bank and $17.7 million for the Gaza Strip to cover the hiring and training of staff, construction of new facilities, purchase of required textbooks and other expenditures to implement the measure in phases over a four-year period.

In the 1996/97 school year, UNRWA elementary and preparatory schools in the West Bank and Gaza Strip used study plans and textbooks prescribed by the PA, with textbooks procured for the first time in Gaza. The Agency coordinated with the Authority on issues such as school calendars and infrastructure mapping, and on accommodating in UNRWA schools children of refugee families newly arrived in the self-rule areas. Agency staff continued to participate in designing and developing a unified Palestinian curriculum through the PA's curriculum development centre. UNRWA cooperated with the Authority in offering vocational training courses for released prisoners in the West Bank, and constructed a secondary school building for it in Gaza using project funds received for that purpose. The university-level degrees awarded by the Educational Sciences Faculty (ESF) in the West Bank received recognition by the Authority.

The shortcomings of UNRWA's education infrastructure continued to hamper the basic education programme. Lacking sufficient school buildings, the Agency was in most cases obliged to house two separate schools in one building, working in morning and afternoon shifts, a practice that shortened the school day, led to overuse of facilities and deprived pupils of extra-curricular activities. Many Agency schools were accommodated in dilapidated structures built in the 1950s or 1960s, some of which were becoming unsafe or were beyond repair. Where no UNRWA-built school was available, the Agency was obliged to accommodate pupils in rented buildings not originally designed as schools. Overcrowding within the UNRWA education system continued, due to a lack of funds to hire more teachers or construct schools and classrooms. Occupancy rates in the elementary and preparatory cycles averaged 43.2 pupils per classroom in the 1996/97 school year Agency-wide, up from 42.7 in the 1995/96 year.

The eight UNRWA vocational and technical training centres in the five fields offered 4,666 training places in the 1996/97 academic year, 42 more than in 1995/96. However, actual enrolment remained below capacity, at 4,444 trainees, largely owing to the inability of trainees from Gaza enrolled at Agency training centres in the West Bank to obtain travel permits from the Israeli authorities. At the post-preparatory level, 22 two-year vocational courses were offered to male trainees in the building, electrical, electronic, mechanical and metalworking trades, in addition to special courses for women. At the post-secondary level, 26 two-year technical/semi-professional courses were offered to male and female trainees in a variety of technical, paramedical and commercial skills. Agency training centres also offered short-term courses of 12 to 40 weeks' duration in Jordan, Lebanon and the West Bank, in which 133 trainees were enrolled. The placement and career guidance office at the Agency's Amman headquarters assisted in finding employment for more than 300 graduates of Agency training centres, with nearly 73 per cent of 1995 graduates reportedly employed.

The three branches of ESF in Jordan and the West Bank continued to provide pre-service and in-service teacher training leading to a first-level university degree. ESF was established in 1993 in response to education reforms introduced by Jordan, later adopted by the PA in the West Bank, requiring teachers in the basic education cycle to possess four-year diplomas. The four-year pre-service programme, which granted degrees in classroom teaching or in the specialized topics of Arabic, mathematics, science and vocational education, was offered to 737 secondary school graduates, including 509 women, at three centres. The three-year in-service programme was offered at the Amman ESF to 619 teachers holding two-year teacher training diplomas, including 164 women, to upgrade their qualifications to the first university degree level. During the reporting period, 227 pre-service trainees and 169 in-service trainees graduated from ESF programmes, becoming the first group of students ever awarded a university-level degree by UNRWA. The ESF in-service programme in Jordan would henceforth produce about 200 graduates a year, enabling the Agency to upgrade all underqualified teachers in the field within 10 years. The pre-service programme in Jordan and the West Bank was also expected to produce about 200 graduates a year, from whom the Agency could recruit. During the 1996/97 school year, UNRWA awarded university scholarships to 1,088 Palestine refugee students, including 507 women, for study at 45 universities in 10 countries of the region. The increase of 145 scholarships over the 1995/96 year resulted from additional contributions to fund the programme.

Health

UNRWA's health-care programme remained focused on comprehensive primary health care, including a full range of maternal and child health care (MCH) and family planning services, school health services, health education and promotion, out-patient medical care, prevention and control of communicable diseases and of non-communicable ones such as diabetes mellitus and hypertension, and specialist care with an emphasis on gynaecology and obstetrics, paediatrics and cardiology. Those services were provided through a network of 121 primary health-care facilities—including 88 health centres, 23 health points offering a wide range of health-care services on a part-time basis, and 10 mother-and-child health centres offering comprehensive family health services—backed up by basic support services such as X-ray and laboratory facilities.

Between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1997, Agency out-patient facilities handled 5.3 million medical and 500,000 dental visits, as well as 1.4 million visits for nursing services such as dressings and injections. The health programme had an operating budget of $61.3 million for 1997. Owing to funding shortfalls, allocations had to be reduced through a series of austerity measures, leaving average budgeted expenditure per refugee on health services at little more than $18 a year. Approximately 62 per cent of cash allocations to the health programme were devoted to the costs of 3,412 locally recruited health staff, who implemented all core programme activities. Even with such a large share of expenditure on staff costs, available human resources fell short of ever-increasing demands. The sanitation labour force in camps remained 26 per cent below UNRWA standard norms owing to a recruitment freeze, while the ratio of Agency health staff per 10,000 population was 0.87 for doctors and 2.5 for nurses, as against comparable national figures of 5.5 doctors and 50 nurses in Jordan, and 10.8 doctors and 28.3 nurses in Syria. As a result, workloads in UNRWA health facilities remained high, with each doctor handling an average of 100 patient visits a day Agency-wide, reaching as high as 118 in the Gaza Strip. The World Health Organization (WHO) provided UNRWA with two senior health staff on a non-reimbursable loan basis, including the Director of Health, and covered the cost of the five division chief posts.

Family health continued to be emphasized as an integral part of the Agency's regular health programme. The progress attained in recent years towards developing a comprehensive maternal health and family planning programme was reinforced through additional contributions from the EU, as well as by a special contribution from the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) towards the cost of contraceptive supplies for Agency clinics. Those additional allocations enabled UNRWA to recruit more gynaecologists/obstetricians, medical officers and trained midwives and ensure the full integration of family planning services within the Agency's MCH programme. During the reporting period, UNRWA MCH clinics and centres cared for some 205,000 children below the age of three, representing approximately 6 per cent of the registered refugee population, and some 70,000 pregnant women, who accounted for approximately two thirds of expected pregnancies. Nearly 23,000 family planning acceptors were registered during the reporting period, bringing the total number of women using the Agency's family planning services to 51,000.

UNRWA's health programme also addressed the prevention and control of communicable diseases through immunization, such as poliomyelitis and tetanus; vector-borne diseases transmitted through environmental channels, such as brucellosis and intestinal parasites; newly emerging infectious diseases, such as HIV/AIDS; re-emerging infectious diseases, such as tuberculosis; and non-communicable diseases associated with lifestyles, such as diabetes mellitus, hypertension, heart diseases and cancer.

The Agency maintained optimal immunization coverage against the major childhood diseases. In early 1997 it took part in national immunization days for eradication of poliomyelitis. A total of 205,000 refugee children under the age of five were immunized, using vaccines donated by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Special care comprising close monitoring and management of diabetes mellitus and hypertension was provided through all Agency health centres, benefiting 63,000 patients during the reporting period. Cancer prevention programmes included the introduction of a simple technique for self-examination and early detection of breast cancer, and a youth-centred programme for the prevention of tobacco use among schoolchildren. Special attention continued to be paid to early detection and management of micronutrient disorders, especially iron-deficiency anaemia, which was still highly prevalent among preschoolchildren and women of reproductive age.

Palestine refugees received secondary care assistance through partial reimbursement of costs incurred for treatment at governmental or non-governmental hospitals, or through contractual agreements with non-governmental or private hospitals, depending on the field of operation. Hospitalization accounted for 18 per cent of cash allocations under UNRWA's health programme in 1996, the second-largest component of the health budget after staff costs. While the Agency managed to maintain its primary health-care services within the limited financial and human resources available, it could not continue to meet the continuous increase in the cost of hospital services. In Lebanon, hospital services were maintained at current levels only by securing extrabudgetary resources.

More than 1.1 million Palestine refugees in 59 camps benefited from environmental health services provided by UNRWA in cooperation with local municipalities, including sewage disposal, management of storm water run-off, provision of safe drinking water, collection and disposal of refuse, and control of insect and rodent infestation. The Agency continued to play an active role, particularly in the Gaza Strip, in planning and implementing large-scale projects to install sewerage, drainage and water networks in camps and expand solid-waste collection and disposal capacity. UNRWA completed or continued to implement sewerage and drainage projects in four camps in the West Bank and two camps in the Gaza Strip; completed detailed technical designs for such projects in eight camps in Lebanon and one in Syria; and provided technical assistance to two of those projects in the Gaza Strip. Under the self-help programme for environmental health, the Agency contributed building materials for projects such as paving of pathways and construction of surface drains, with labour being provided on a volunteer basis by camp committees.

UNRWA placed high priority on coordinating and streamlining health policies and service standards with the PA. Cooperation included implementation of a three-year maternal health and family planning project; participation in a newly established committee for the control of iodine deficiency disorders; procurement of emergency medical supplies for the PA; maintenance of the arrangement for the treatment of members of the Palestinian Police Force and their families at Agency clinics in Jericho; and harmonization of UNRWA's immunization schedule with that of the Authority, which provided the Agency's vaccine requirements. A close dialogue was also maintained on the commissioning and future operation of the European Gaza Hospital, which was built by UNRWA with EU and bilateral funding. Other cooperative projects included the construction of a central health laboratory in Ramallah; upgrading of the UNRWA hospital at Qalqilia; and improving the environmental health infrastructure in the Gaza Strip. However, the stalled peace process and limited international assistance presented major obstacles to completing institutional capacity-building, upgrading health infrastructure and developing new health policies and plans of action in the self-rule areas.

Relief and social services

Of the 3.42 million Palestine refugees registered with UNRWA as at 30 June 1997, 37.5 per cent were age 15 or under, 53.5 per cent were between 16 and 59 years of age, and 9 per cent were age 60 or older. Fewer than one third were registered in the 59 refugee camps in UNRWA's area of operations, most being intermingled with the local population in towns and villages. The rate of increase of the refugee population was significantly lower than in previous reporting periods and closer to the rate of natural population growth, suggesting that families had largely updated records to include previously unregistered persons. That could be attributed to two causes: the perception that there might be a link between Agency records and a future negotiated settlement of the Palestine refugee question, and the relocation of many refugee families from outside the area of operations in the early 1990s, both particularly relevant in Jordan.

UNRWA continued work on developing a unified registration system (URS) to integrate three sets of records: a basic refugee registration database, an archive of refugee family files and a database of socio-economic data on special hardship families. While seeking funding, the Agency conducted a pilot project in early 1997 to identify appropriate technology and establish standards for the electronic scanning of the estimated 700,000 hard-copy family files, the major task of the URS project. With the electronic storage of the family files and linkage of the three sets of records, URS would improve programme planning and management, ensure the security of vital data and preserve an important historical resource. Meanwhile, improvements to existing Agency records continued.

UNRWA continued to assist refugee families unable to meet basic needs for food, shelter and other life essentials through its special hardship programme. The number of refugees in households meeting the stringent eligibility criteria—no male adult medically fit to earn an income, and no other identifiable means of financial support above a defined threshold—increased by 3.4 per cent, from 179,178 in June 1996 to 185,259 a year later. The close correlation between growth in special hardship enrolment and in the registered population suggested that demand had stabilized. The percentage of refugees enrolled in the programme continued to be highest in Lebanon (10.2 per cent) and the Gaza Strip (8.4 per cent) and lowest in Jordan (2.5 per cent).

Assistance to special hardship families included food support, hospitalization subsidies, emergency cash grants, shelter rehabilitation and poverty alleviation initiatives and preferential access to UNRWA training centres. It was decided to modify the form of food support starting in January 1997: while the basic commodities most valued by refugees (flour, rice, sugar, cooking oil and milk powder) were retained, a cash subsidy, equivalent to $40 per person a year, was substituted for other items in order to give refugees flexibility in the choice and timing of food purchases.

Some 11,880 special hardship families, representing 25 per cent of the total and comprising 46,315 persons, still lived in housing that did not meet minimum standards. Progress in meeting the urgent housing needs of those families slowed by 1997 owing to a decrease in special funding for that purpose. In contrast to the 4,559 shelters rehabilitated in 1994/95 and 2,556 in 1995/96, UNRWA rehabilitated only 600 shelters in 1996/97, representing just 5 per cent of total estimated need. Pockets of dire need also remained, particularly in Lebanon, where displaced refugee families were squatting in miserable conditions. Shelter rehabilitation was carried out either on a self-help basis, with the Agency providing financial and technical assistance and beneficiary families arranging volunteer labour, or by small camp-based contractors, helping create jobs within the refugee community.

Under its poverty alleviation programme, UNRWA assisted disadvantaged refugees, especially women, to raise their economic status through skills training, participation in production units, group savings and loan schemes, and credit provision. During the reporting period, 55 grants and 88 loans were awarded to special hardship and other impoverished families to help them establish small enterprises. The programme's emphasis shifted towards loans repayable either to the Agency or to a community group, allowing capital to be recovered and reinvested. UNRWA staff provided training in credit provision and served as trainers in courses organized by other UN organizations. Group savings and loan schemes benefited 666 people; women participants were especially interested in using the schemes for home improvements and for purchasing equipment to enable them to earn an income. Participation in the poverty alleviation programme increased slightly, from 1,803 participants at mid-1996 to 1,848 at mid-1997.

Community-based programmes

Participation in UNRWA's community-based social development programmes for women, youth and persons with disabilities increased by 22 per cent, from 26,458 at mid-1996 to 32,407 at mid-1997. The focal point for the programmes was the network of 126 Agency-sponsored community centres, comprising 71 women's programme centres, 30 community rehabilitation centres and, in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, 25 youth activities centres. Activities at the women's programme centres emphasized projects and training to help participants earn an income; lectures and workshops on issues of concern to women and the community; courses to enhance the social development of women; and support services for women, such as kindergartens and legal advice bureaux. The community rehabilitation centres worked to raise community awareness of the needs and rights of the disabled; integrate persons with disabilities into mainstream activities, such as schools; help disabled persons and their families cope with disability; assist disabled adults to obtain training and employment; and provide referrals to specialist services and equipment, such as hearing aids and prosthetic devices. The youth activities centres offered sports and recreational and cultural activities, which were increasingly open to young women; organized community service activities such as clean-up campaigns; and held lectures and public meetings on issues of community concern. By 30 June 1997, 52 of the 71 women's programme centres were managed by local committees, up from 42 the previous year, as were all community rehabilitation centres and youth activities centres.

Income generation

UNRWA's income-generation programme continued to provide working capital loans at commercial interest rates to small-scale businesses and micro-enterprises through field-based revolving loan funds, with the aim of creating employment, generating income and supporting sustainable business enterprises within the refugee community. In the Gaza Strip, where income-generation efforts were concentrated, the Agency targeted small businesses and micro-enterprises in the formal and informal sectors of the economy whose lack of collateral prevented them from obtaining credit through the formal banking system. Despite reduced donor contributions to the programme's capital base during the reporting period, the Gaza income-generation programme tripled the number of loans over the previous period. A total of 4,452 loans valued at $5.4 million were awarded, 66 per cent of them to women borrowers. Despite increasing growth in operating expenses over the preceding three years, the programme was able to continue to increase sustainability at an annual rate of 10 per cent, achieving 89 per cent coverage of operating costs by the end of 1996.

The income-generation programme in the West Bank resumed operations at full capacity after undergoing substantial restructuring in the previous reporting period. It issued $1.3 million in loans to 106 small-scale enterprises, including a construction firm, medical clinic, handicraft workshop, bakery, furniture manufacturer and children's nursery. Additional project funding in the amount of $400,000 was received, increasing the programme's capital base to $2.4 million. The West Bank programme was preparing to launch a micro-enterprise credit programme similar to that in Gaza later in 1997, initially focusing on the Nablus area but subsequently extending to other areas of the West Bank.

UNRWA also operated revolving loan funds for small-scale enterprises in Jordan and Lebanon, though on a smaller scale than in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The Agency awarded 26 loans valued at $181,000 in Jordan, and 36 loans valued at $196,000 in Lebanon, achieving overall repayment rates of 96 per cent and 97 per cent, respectively. No new contributions were received to expand the capital base of those programmes, which at mid-1997 stood at $494,000 in Jordan and $325,000 in Lebanon.

Refugees in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

In coordination with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and an international NGO, UNRWA had been monitoring the situation of a group of as many as 250 Palestinians required to leave the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya who had been encamped at the Salloum crossing point on the Libyan-Egyptian border. The Libyan authorities relocated the group into the country and dismantled the camp in April 1997.

General Assembly resolutions related to Palestine refugees

On 10 December, the General Assembly adopted seven resolutions relating to Palestine refugees: assistance to Palestine refugees (52/57); financing of UNRWA (52/58); displaced persons (52/59); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (52/60); operations of UNRWA (52/61); Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues (52/62); and the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees (52/63).

In the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee debate on the UNRWA item, speakers concentrated on the Agency's financial crisis. Virtually all of them noted the negative impact on the lives of the refugees of reductions in UNRWA services, particularly in the context of the stalled peace process.

Introducing his report in the Fourth Committee, the UNRWA Commissioner-General said the Agency was responsible for 3.4 million refugees—75 per cent of the Gaza Strip population, 34 per cent of the population of the West Bank and 31 per cent of the population of Jordan; any factor affecting the Agency, such as its continuing financial crisis, had a negative impact on them.

According to the Observer of Palestine, UNRWA had since its establishment played a crucial role in preventing the worsening of the Palestine refugees' human catastrophe; its work had to continue in all fields of operation until a definitive solution was found to the refugee problem.

The grave deterioration of the peace process had resulted in a worsening of the refugees' daily life, and there was no doubt that the reduction in services due to UNRWA's serious financial crisis had had a negative impact.

Israel stated that Arab leaders had blocked attempts to improve the living conditions of the Palestine refugees and had used them as a political asset and weapon in their warfare and diplomatic campaign against Israel. In the West Bank and Gaza, Israel stated, UNRWA did not operate "disconnected and isolated" from the reality of terrorist attacks against innocent Israeli citizens. Requesting a vote on the draft resolutions in the Fourth Committee, Israel stressed that the Committee was dealing with a humanitarian problem which at the same time was a political issue. Its objections to the resolutions arose from the reference in them to the right of Palestine refugees to return to Israel, a matter to be considered in negotiations on a final settlement; also, the influx of Arab refugees into Israel would be a demographic time bomb.

General Aspects

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/616], adopted resolution 52/57 by recorded vote (159-1-2) [agenda item 86].

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/124 of 13 December 1996 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997,

Welcoming the signature in Washington, D.C., on 13 September 1993 by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization, the representative of the people of Palestine, of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements and the subsequent implementation agreements, and also the signature of the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in Washington, D.C., on 28 September 1995,

Encouraging the Multilateral Working Group on Refugees of the Middle East peace process to continue its important work,

Welcoming the completion of the transfer of the headquarters of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to Gaza, to its area of operations,

1. Notes with regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees, as provided for in paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III), has not yet been effected and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialized agencies and to private organizations for their valuable work in assisting refugees;

3. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1998;

4. Notes the significant success of the Peace Implementation Programme of the Agency since the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements, and stresses the importance that contributions to this Programme are not at the expense of the General Fund;

5. Welcomes strengthened cooperation between the Agency and the World Bank and other specialized agencies, and calls upon the Agency to make a decisive contribution towards giving a fresh impetus to the economic and social stability of the occupied territories;

6. Urges all Member States to extend and expedite aid and assistance with a view to the economic and social development of the Palestinian people and the occupied territories;

7. Reiterates its deep concern regarding the persisting critical financial situation of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

8. Commends the efforts of the Commissioner-General to move towards budgetary transparency and internal efficiency, and hopes that such moves will continue;

9. Notes with profound concern that the structural deficit problem confronting the Agency portends an almost certain decline in the living conditions of the Palestine refugees and that it, therefore, has possible consequences for the peace process;

10. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and encourages contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

6. Also calls upon Israel to abide by Articles 100, 104 and 105 of the Charter of the United Nations and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations with regard to the safety of the personnel of the Agency and the protection of its institutions and the safeguarding of the security of the facilities of the Agency in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem;

7. Calls once again upon the Government of Israel to compensate the Agency for damages to its property and facilities resulting from actions by the Israeli side;

8. Requests the Commissioner-General to proceed with the issuance of identification cards for Palestine refugees and their descendants in the occupied Palestinian territory;

9. Notes that the new context created by the signing of the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements by the Government of the State of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization and subsequent implementation agreements has had major consequences for the activities of the Agency, which is henceforth called upon, in close cooperation with the United Nations Special Coordinator in the Occupied Territories, the specialized agencies and the World Bank, to continue to contribute towards the development of economic and social stability in the occupied territory;

10. Notes also that the functioning of the Agency remains essential in all fields of operation;

11. Notes further the significant success of the Peace Implementation Programme of the Agency;

12. Expresses concern over those remaining austerity measures due to the financial crisis which have affected the quality and level of some of the services of the Agency;

13. Requests the Commissioner-General to consider the possibility of modernizing the archives of the Agency;

14. Urges all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to continue and to increase their contributions to the Agency so as to ease current financial constraints and to support the Agency in maintaining the provision of the most basic and effective assistance to the Palestine refugees.

Displaced persons

In an October report [A/52/423] on compliance with General Assembly resolution 51/126 [YUN 1996, p. 421], which called for the accelerated return of all persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, the Secretary-General said that since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for either refugees or displaced persons not registered as refugees, Agency information was based on requests by returning registered refugees for the transfer of their service entitlements to their areas of return. Displaced refugees known by the Agency to have returned to the West Bank and Gaza Strip since June 1967 numbered about 16,400. Its records indicated that, between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1997, 841 refugees had returned to the West Bank and 352 to the Gaza Strip. Some of the refugees might not have been displaced in 1967, but might be family members of a displaced registered refugee whom they either had accompanied on return or joined later.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Education, training and scholarships

In an October report [A/52/415], the Secretary-General transmitted responses received to the General Assembly's 1996 appeal contained in resolution 51/127 [YUN 1996, p. 422] for States, specialized agencies and other organizations to augment special allocations for scholarships and grants to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In the 1996/97 academic year, Japan awarded 10 vocational fellowships, of which 3 were to Palestine refugees in UNRWA's employ, 1 in vocational training administration and 6 in community health. Under Japanese grants of $400,000 made annually between 1992 and 1994, $500,000 in 1995 and $600,000 in 1996, 423 Palestinian students were participating in the UNRWA university scholarship programme in 1996/97, while 19 scholars graduated in 1995 and 1996. Contributions from Switzerland totalling some $240,000 in 1996 and $338,000 in 1997 allowed some 300 Palestinians to pursue university studies. UNESCO granted 71 scholarships to Palestinian students during the 1996-1997 biennium. In addition, Japan offered three fellowships and Saudi Arabia five, while the inter-university Palestinian European Academic Cooperation in Education programme renewed six ongoing scholarships and added seven new ones. In 1996/97, WHO provided 32 fellowships/study tours for Palestinian candidates.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/130 [YUN 1996, p. 423], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/52/503] on the proposal to establish a university for Palestine refugees in Jerusalem. First considered by the Assembly in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 444, GA res. 35/13 B], the issue had been the subject of annual reports by the Secretary-General.

To assist in the preparation of the study and at the Secretary-General's request, the Rector of the United Nations University asked expert Mihaly Simai to visit the area and meet with competent Israeli officials. In response to the Secretary-General's note verbale of 5 September, requesting Israel to facilitate the expert's visit, Israel in a 10 October reply stated that it had consistently voted against the resolution on the proposed university and that its position remained unchanged. It charged that the resolution's sponsors sought to exploit higher education for political purposes extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Accordingly, it felt that the proposed visit would serve no useful purpose. The Secretary-General reported that it had not been possible to complete the feasibility study as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, acting on the Fourth Committee's recommendation [A/52/616], adopted resolution 52/63 by recorded vote (158-2-3) [agenda item 86].

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works

Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997,

1. Emphasizes the need for strengthening the educational system in the Palestinian territory occupied by Israel since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

3. Calls once more upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cooperate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances that it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds";

4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Property rights

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/129 [YUN 1996, p. 423], the Secretary-General submitted a September 1997 report [A/52/372] on steps taken to protect and administer Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to establish a fund for income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners. He indicated that he had transmitted the resolution to Israel and to all other Member States, requesting information on action taken or envisaged with regard to its implementation.

In a 28 July reply, reproduced in the report, Israel stated that its position on the resolutions on Palestine refugees had been set forth in successive annual replies, the latest of which had been included in the Secretary-General's 1996 report on the subject [YUN 1996, p. 423]. Israel regretted that the resolutions regarding UNRWA remained rife with political issues irrelevant to the Agency's work and detached from the new reality in the area. While Israel believed that UNRWA could play an important role in promoting the social and economic advancement foreseen in agreements between Israel and the PLO, and accordingly looked forward to continuing cooperation with UNRWA, Israel considered it essential that the Assembly consolidate the UNRWA resolutions into one directly related to the Agency's humanitarian tasks.

The Secretary-General also referred to a 30 June letter to him from the Chairman of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine relaying a 13 June Commission decision relating to paragraph 2 of resolution 51/129 by which the Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to take steps to preserve and modernize the existing records on Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel. The Commission noted that the UN Division for Palestinian Rights would be prepared to store such records electronically and suggested that the proposed operation be carried out within the Archives and Records Management Section of the UN Office of Conference and Support Services. The Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs subsequently wrote to the Chairman of the Conciliation Commission requesting that the Division for Palestinian Rights be given access to the records in order to undertake a preliminary assessment of resources required for the project. In his 10 September reply, the Chairman authorized access to the land records kept at the UN Archives for a cost-estimate to be made of a project to modernize the records.

Report of Conciliation Commission. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in its fifty-first report covering the period from 1 September 1996 to 31 August 1997 [A/52/311], stated that it had nothing new to report since its 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 423].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/616], adopted resolution 52/62 by recorded vote (158-2-3) [agenda item 86].

Palestine refugees' properties and their revenues

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194(III) of 11 December 1948, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981 and all its subsequent resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of its resolution 51/129 of 13 December 1996,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine for the period from 1 September 1996 to 31 August 1997,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her property,

Recalling in particular its resolution 394 (V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the Conciliation Commission, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Taking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the Conciliation Commission in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

Recalling that in the framework of the Middle East peace process the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Government of Israel agreed, in the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements of 13 September 1993, to commence negotiations on permanent status issues, including the important issue of the refugees, and calling for the commencement of those negotiations,

1. Reaffirms that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived therefrom, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel and to preserve and modernize the existing records;

3. Calls once more upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Calls upon all the parties concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel that would assist him in the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Urges the Palestinian and Israeli sides, as agreed between them, to deal with the important issue of Palestine refugees properties and their revenues in the framework of the final status negotiations of the Middle East peace process;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UNRWA financing

UNRWA's financial situation remained critical in 1997, characterized by large funding shortfalls for the regular budget and project accounts, continued enforcement of austerity measures, and depleted working capital and cash reserves, said the Commissioner-General in his report to the General Assembly covering 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/52/13]. The structural deficit—a consequence of stagnant or declining contributions combined with natural growth in the refugee population and inflation, which increased the cost of maintaining a constant level of services—showed no sign of easing.

The Agency had ended 1996 with a fourth consecutive annual deficit in the regular budget, and in 1997 the impact of two earlier rounds of austerity measures introduced in response to anticipated deficits—in February 1993 and June 1996—continued to be felt. After an extraordinary meeting of major donors and host Governments in September 1996 produced donor pledges of $15 million, UNRWA was able to cover the core deficit and avoid insolvency.

UNRWA began 1997 with no indication of an increase in income, cumulative deficits in several extrabudgetary activities, depleted working capital and cash reserves, and a projected year-end deficit in the order of $40 million. In response, the Commissioner-General introduced a new round of austerity measures in February, in the amount of $18.7 million for the year. Those measures included eliminating a provision for salary increases; eliminating a contingency reserve for the cost of moving UNRWA headquarters from Vienna to Gaza and Amman; freezing certain vacancies; and significantly reducing allocations for temporary labour, vehicles, equipment, medical and other supplies, training, maintenance, hospitalization and travel. The Agency also embarked on new initiatives, with the assistance of donor countries, to broaden its resource base and ensure that the entire international community was involved in supporting UNRWA programmes. In February and March, the Commissioner-General visited Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates; several opportunities for strengthening cooperation were identified, and assurances were received that countries in the region would continue and in some cases seek to increase their support. The Commissioner-General also visited Brunei and Malaysia in May in an effort to engage South-East Asian countries which had not historically had a relationship with the Agency.

UNWRA also worked to develop a corporate outreach programme with a view to obtaining additional in-kind donations and established high-level contacts with an international NGO devoted to supporting sustainable development activities in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and Lebanon, which subsequently formed a committee to support UNWRA. A special emergency appeal for assistance to Palestine refugees in Lebanon was also launched.

Despite those efforts, the Agency's financial situation remained bleak as at 30 June, with a projected deficit in the order of $20 million for 1997 and an acute liquidity crisis forecast for November. The sustained imposition of austerity measures and repeated funding shortfalls since 1993 continued to exert an erosive effect on the quality of Agency services and UNWRA was again unable to expand services at a rate commensurate with natural growth in the refugee population, leading to higher workloads for staff and overuse of facilities.

At an informal meeting of major donor and host Governments in Amman in June, delegates reaffirmed that there could be no question of a premature phasing out of UNWRA's mandated responsibilities. It was agreed to combine additional revenue-raising with internal savings on current operations and better methods of service provision. To that end, regular consultations would be held among UNWRA, host authorities and donors. In the absence of major contributions in the short term that would substantially decrease the Agency's structural deficit, the donor community was urged to re-examine contribution levels, with a view to ensuring the continued provision of essential services to refugees at existing levels.

Working Group. The Working Group on the Financing of UNWRA held two meetings in 1997 (12 September and 14 October). In its report to the General Assembly [A/52/578], the Working Group noted that UNWRA ended the 1996 financial year with a shortfall of $26.7 million. Since that estimate did not take into account the cumulative effects of two rounds of austerity measures ($23.2 million) or the $12.7 million provision for termination indemnities built into the Agency's 1995 budget, the total shortfall for 1996 was therefore projected at $45.2 million.

Measures taken by UNWRA to get through 1996 meant that some activities provided for in the 1996-1997 budget would not be fully implemented. Moreover, the Agency's "working capital" reserves had been driven to a dangerously low level. UNWRA thus began 1997 with a shortfall projected to be roughly $40 million in the regular budget by year's end, without firm prospects of any increase in income. That there remained outstanding at the end of 1996 some $93.5 million in cash pledges to all UNWRA accounts, of which $35.3 million was earmarked for the regular budget and $58.2 million for projects, was also of concern. That, combined with outstanding payments of some $13 million due as reimbursement for value-added tax and port and transit charges, had served to put the Agency's cash balances under severe strain.

The Working Group noted that the Commissioner-General had, in February, introduced another round of austerity measures amounting to some $18.7 million annually (see above) and UNWRA had embarked on new initiatives to broaden its resource base. Although some opportunities for strengthened cooperation had been identified, more concrete results from those initiatives remained to be realized. In July, the Agency had launched a special appeal for Lebanon, for $11 million, against which confirmed pledges of $9 million had been made to assist Palestine refugees there.

For 1997, the cash portion of UNWRA's General Fund budget as approved by the General Assembly was $312 million, the Working Group reported. By June, the Agency was forecasting cash income in 1997 of some $235 million; UNWRA therefore faced a cash shortfall for the year of some $77 million. To confront that situation, the Commissioner-General had ordered the continuation of the austerity measures previously introduced and the continued freeze on the provision for termination indemnities. He also carried out a number of additional administrative cost-cutting measures. In August, with no solution to the crisis in sight, the Commissioner-General reluctantly announced a series of measures, including an immediate freeze on the recruitment of 250 new teachers needed to cope with rising school enrolments; a 15 per cent reduction in international staff posts; the cancellation for the last two months of the year of reimbursements for non-emergency hospitalization; and the discontinuation of Agency funding for university scholarships, shelter rehabilitation and emergency cash assistance. In addition, UNWRA began reviewing charges levied by host authorities for basic education services with a view to adopting similar ones, which elicited a decidedly negative reaction, including protests and urgent pleas to the international community to resolve UNRWA's financial difficulties. Major donors met again in Amman in September and pledged more than $20 million in additional funding for the Agency's regular programmes in 1997, enabling the Commissioner-General to defer some of the proposed measures, including the cancellation of hospitalization payments and the imposition of school fees.

Briefing the Working Group in September the Commissioner-General emphasized: (a) while the measures taken had enabled the Agency to scrape through the past two years, it could face the same situation again in 1998, by which time the cumulative effects of austerity measures would have taken an even greater toll; (b) the biennial budgets agreed to by the Assembly represented a commitment on the part of the international community to assist Palestine refugees at a certain level, and in order for that commitment to be met funds had to be provided at commensurate levels; (c) although UNRWA's budgets and the amount of contributions went up annually in absolute terms, those increases took no account of inflation or exchange rate fluctuations or, above all, of the steady growth of the refugee population, felt principally in the rising number of children enrolling in Agency schools; (d) the amounts spent by UNRWA per refugee—for education services, health care, and relief and social programmes—had been declining annually for the past five years and, while the results of those programmes in terms of the well-being of the refugees was something that the Agency could be proud of, UNRWA was spending considerably less per capita on the beneficiaries of its services than was the case for the host country populations served by their own Governments.

The Working Group, deeply concerned at that assessment, expressed the hope that joint efforts would be undertaken, including the provision of necessary resources by the international community at large, to ensure that UNRWA would be able to maintain acceptable levels of services.

The Group urged Governments to continue contributing generously and to consider additional contributions to finance deficit amounts so that UNRWA services could continue uninterrupted and, if possible, so that services cut for austerity reasons could be restored, and to ensure support of emergency-related and special programmes or capital projects without diverting contributions to the Agency's regular programmes.

Pledging Conference. At a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to UNRWA, 23 countries pledged $126 million for UNRWA's 1998 programmes, 40 per cent less than the Agency needed to maintain its regular services. The largest pledges were made by the United States ($70 million), Sweden ($19 million), Norway ($14.2 million) and the Netherlands and Switzerland ($5.5 million). The Commissioner said that for decades the international community had financed services to refugees at a certain level; it was important to maintain that level, so that the Palestine refugees, who had maintained their identity and educated their children and instilled in them a sense of survival and enterprise, would be able to continue to do so until the problem was resolved.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the Fourth Committee's recommendation [A/52/616], adopted resolution 52/58 without vote [agenda item 86].

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 51/125 of 13 December 1996 and the previous resolutions on this question,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, by which it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Having considered the report of the Working Group,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997,

Deeply concerned about the persisting critical financial situation of the Agency, which has affected and affects the continuation of the provision of the necessary Agency services to Palestine refugees, including the emergency-related programmes,

Emphasizing the continuing need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at the current minimum level, the activities of the Agency, as well as to enable the Agency to carry out essential construction,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the financial security of the Agency;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Peacekeeping operations

The first and oldest UN peacekeeping operation—the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), established in 1948 to monitor the ceasefire called for by the Security Council in newly partitioned Palestine—continued its work in 1997. UNTSO's unarmed military observers fulfilled changing mandates—from supervising the original four armistice agreements between Israel and its Arab neighbours (Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and the Syrian Arab Republic) to observing and monitoring other ceasefires, as well as performing a number of additional tasks.

During the year, UNTSO personnel worked with the two remaining UN peacekeeping forces in the Middle East—the Observer Group Golan with the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force (UNDOF) in the Golan Heights, and the Observer Group Lebanon with the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). In January, Estonia was added to the list of Member States providing military observers to UNTSO.

Lebanon

The tense and volatile situation in southern Lebanon gave cause for serious concern in 1997, which witnessed a rising level of hostilities and an increase in the number of civilian casualties, especially in the second half of the year. In letters of 17 January [S/1997/41] and 10 July [S/1997/534] to the Secretary-General, requesting further extensions of UNIFIL, Lebanon reported that the monitoring group that had emanated from the April 1996 understanding between Israel and Lebanon [YUN 1996, p. 428] reached in the wake of intensified Israeli bombardment of many Lebanese towns and villages had helped to reduce the intensity of the shelling. However, Lebanon stressed, the group's objective was of a temporary nature and in no way an alternative to full implementation of Security Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312], which called on Israel to cease military action against Lebanon and withdraw its forces from all Lebanese territory. In view of Israel's continued aggression, said Lebanon, implementation of that resolution remained the only way to stop the violence and enable the Lebanese Government to extend its sovereign authority throughout the area under occupation and to re-establish law and order. Its comprehensive national recovery remained hampered by Israel's continued occupation of southern Lebanon and Israeli aggression against its territory and citizens, Lebanon charged. Particularly, Israel refused to release hundreds of innocent Lebanese detainees held for years in Israeli jails and the notorious detention camps in Al-Khiam and Marjayoun in southern Lebanon, manned by the Israeli-controlled militia, in violation of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilians in Time of War (Fourth Geneva Convention). Many of the detainees were suffering from serious diseases, according to Lebanon, as a result of harsh living conditions, ill-treatment, torture and denial of medical care; others had died in the camps or shortly after their release.

Nevertheless, Lebanon reported that national reconstruction and rehabilitation was moving ahead, including rebuilding the commercial centre in downtown Beirut and modernizing the national infrastructure; priority was given to basic services such as electricity, telecommunications, transportation, water works, schools and hospitals.

Israel, on its side, alleged, as in a 2 January letter [A/51/769-S/1997/6], that it was Lebanon's inability or lack of will to prevent terrorists attacks that allowed armed elements of Hezbollah (Hizbollah) and other terrorist organizations to roam southern Lebanon freely, equipped with a variety of weapons and missiles, the majority of which came from Iran. According to Israel, those organizations were permitted to operate with impunity from Lebanese soil and carry out attacks against Israel with the tacit acquiescence of the Lebanese Government, as well as with the support of other countries known to practise terrorism.

Refuting Israel's allegations on 23 January [A/52/63-S/1997/70], Lebanon said the actions Israel referred to as terrorism were in fact acts of resistance to occupation, directed against military elements of the occupying forces; they were a legitimate expression of the right to self-defence enshrined in the UN Charter and aimed to liberate national territory from foreign occupation. Lebanon had repeatedly voiced its readiness to ensure security and the rule of law in southern Lebanon immediately upon Israeli withdrawal in accordance with resolution 425(1978). Israel's occupation was the basic reason for the existing tension, Lebanon insisted; Israel's security policy had demonstrably failed to achieve stability in the area and on both sides of the border.

Israel, on 3 February [A/52/70-S/1997/108], stressed that its responses to acts by terrorist organizations operating in Lebanon had been taken solely in self-defence. Israel would welcome a change, but Lebanon could not export terrorism and expect peace in return. Lebanon's claim of a so-called "right of resistance" was completely spurious and without basis in international law, Israel added, and any attempt to use General Assembly resolutions as a source of such claim was a deliberate misinterpretation. Assembly resolution 51/210 [YUN 1996, p. 1208] on measures to eliminate international terrorism clearly established that there was no justification for acts of terror. Lebanon's position and policies were the primary obstacle in the way of fulfilment of the role of UNIFIL, as they allowed the infiltration of armed terrorists throughout its area of operations, thereby placing on the Force the impossible task of dealing with a situation for which it was not created and for which it had no mandate. Lebanon's refusal to return to the conference table to discuss a peace treaty was at odds with its claim to be committed to the Middle East peace process, said Israel; if Lebanon truly wished to achieve a peaceful settlement, it had to control its heavily armed, semi-independent militias and resume direct negotiations with Israel in accordance with the agreed terms of reference of the peace process. Israel's position was reiterated in a 30 July letter to the Secretary-General [S/1997/603].

In a 3 March letter [A/52/87-S/1997/187], Lebanon responded that it had time and again expressed readiness to ensure security and the rule of law in southern Lebanon immediately on the withdrawal of the Israeli occupying forces, in implementation of resolution 425(1978). It had always cooperated with the United Nations and UNIFIL, having been commended on the constancy of such cooperation in reports of the Secretary-General and in Security Council resolutions and statements, the most recent of them made on 28 January 1997 [S/PRST/1997/1] (see below, under "UNIFIL"). Israel, on the other hand, had not hesitated to proclaim its lack of trust in the Organization and to confront UNIFIL, frequently shelling the latter's positions and inflicting casualties on it. Lebanon had affirmed its commitment to the goals of the 1991 Madrid Peace Conference [YUN 1991, p. 221] and the achievement of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region, and considered that the implementation of resolution 425(1978) remained the basic condition for peace.

On 7 July [A/51/940-S/1997/527], Lebanon transmitted a letter from its Minister for Foreign Affairs containing lists of Lebanese detainees held in Israeli prisons and detention camps without legal charges and under inhuman conditions, and calling on the Secretary-General to exert his utmost efforts to bring their ordeal to an end.

By a letter of 11 August [A/52/276-S/1997/630], Lebanon again stated that the situation in the southern part of the country resulted from Israeli occupation. Lebanon had repeatedly called for implementation of resolution 425(1978) and had expressed support for the resumption of negotiations in accordance with the principle of land for peace as part of a comprehensive and just solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict and with the participation of all parties. However, the harsh policy pursued by the current Israeli Prime Minister had led to a freeze in the negotiations and impeded further advancement of the peace process.

In a series of monthly communications [A/51/800-S/1997/142, A/51/821-S/1997/203, A/51/868-S/1997/295, A/51/898-S/1997/368, A/51/919-S/1997/447, A/51/941-S/1997/528, A/51/960-S/1997/615, A/51/974-S/1997/702, A/52/442-S/1997/780, A/52/668-S/1997/876, A/52/738-S/1997/988 & Corr.1, A/52/763-S/1998/20], Lebanon detailed Israeli attacks on southern Lebanon and the Western Bekaa and its practices against the civilian inhabitants of those areas during the year.

According to the Secretary-General's report on developments in the UNIFIL area of operation from 17 July 1997 to 15 January 1998 [S/1998/53], the level of hostilities rose during the second half of the year and there was a significant increase in civilian casualties. A number of serious incidents involving civilians also took place outside the area, and armed elements carried out several hostile acts against UN personnel.

UNIFIL

The Security Council twice extended the mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon in 1997, in January and June, each time for a six-month period.

Established by Council resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312] following Israel's invasion of Lebanon [ibid., p. 296], UNIFIL was originally entrusted with confirming the withdrawal of Israeli forces, restoring international peace and security, and assisting the Lebanese Government in ensuring the return of its effective authority in southern Lebanon. After a second Israeli invasion in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 428], the Council, in resolution 511(1982) [ibid., p. 450], authorized the Force to carry out, in addition to its original mandate, the interim tasks of providing protection and humanitarian assistance to the local population, while maintaining its positions in its area of deployment.

The Force headquarters, based predominantly in Naqura, provided command and control, as well as liaison with Lebanon and Israel, UNDOF, UNTSO and a number of non-governmental organizations.

Composition and deployment

As at 31 December, UNIFIL troops totalled 4,468 from nine countries—Fiji, Finland, France, Ghana, Ireland, Italy, Nepal, Norway and Poland. They were assisted by 55 UNTSO observers. In addition, the Force employed 455–122 internationally and 333 locally recruited—civilian staff. Major-General Jioje Konouse Konrote of Fiji took over the UNIFIL command from Major-General Stanislaw F. Wozniak on 1 October. The Secretary-General, on 19 August [S/1997/660], had informed the Security Council President of his intention to appoint Major-General Konrote. The President conveyed the Council's agreement with that proposal on 25 August [S/1997/661].

UNIFIL's military component comprised a force headquarters, six infantry battalions and a mobile reserve company, together with supporting logistic and administrative units. The battalions were deployed throughout the south of Lebanon in a network of 140 positions, staffed 24 hours a day and consisting of: checkpoints, for the control of movement on the principal roads in UNIFIL's area of operations; observations posts, for observing movement on and off the roads in the area; and checkpoints/observations posts that combined the functions of control and observation. The battalions were supported in their task by a Force Mobile Reserve used to reinforce positions during rotation and deployed during serious incidents. UNTSO observers assisting UNIFIL manned a number of observation posts along the Israel-Lebanon armistice demarcation line, operating mobile patrols in the area of operations controlled by Israel. A helicopter wing was maintained with the primary function of patrol and reconnaissance flights over the mission area; it also undertook coastal patrols, medical evacuation and search and rescue operations.

Activities

Report of Secretary-General (January). In a report [S/1997/42] on developments from 21 July 1996 to 17 January 1997 in the UNIFIL area of operation, the Secretary-General stated that hostilities continued between the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) and its local Lebanese auxiliary, the de facto forces (DFF), on the one hand, and armed elements who had proclaimed their resistance to Israeli occupation on the other. Following the Lebanese parliamentary elections in September, armed activity increased and in recent weeks the level of hostilities rose further, especially north of the Litani River, causing a number of casualties.

During the reporting period, UNIFIL observed 92 operations by armed elements against IDF/DFF and reported more than 160 clashes between the two sides north of the Litani River. The vast majority of the attacks were carried out by the Islamic Resistance, the military wing of the Shiite Muslim Hizbullah organization; the Shiite movement Amal was responsible for a few and one was believed to have been carried out by a Palestinian group. The armed elements fired more than 900 mortar rounds, rockets and anti-tank missiles and also used small arms, mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and road-side bombs. IDF/DFF, in response to attacks or in operations they initiated, employed artillery, mortars, tanks, helicopter gunships and fixed-wing aircraft. On numerous occasions, they conducted pre-emptive artillery bombardments, usually to cover troop movements or rotation convoys. UNIFIL recorded over 9,000 artillery, mortar and tank rounds fired by IDF/DFF, significantly fewer than during the previous reporting period. In recent weeks, however, IDF air raids—mostly north of the Litani River, except one in the Nepalese battalion sector on 5 January—had increased markedly, the Secretary-General noted, as Israel began using combat aircraft to respond to attacks on its forces. As before, the Israeli navy patrolled Lebanese territorial waters in the south, but restrictions imposed by it on local fishermen appeared less severe than in the past.

Firing into populated areas also decreased markedly. At least one rocket was fired into northern Israel on 7 January but no casualties were reported and no organization claimed responsibility, although the Lebanese authorities arrested two persons suspected of having been involved in the incident.

UNIFIL continued its efforts to limit the conflict and protect the inhabitants from the fighting and did its best to prevent its area of deployment from being used for hostile activities and to defuse situations that could lead to escalation. It also provided a measure of protection to villages and to farmers working in the fields.

In July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 434], UNIFIL had obtained a commitment from IDF that it would respect a safety zone around UNIFIL positions and received assurances from the Islamic Resistance that no operations would be conducted in their vicinity; although both sides showed more restraint during the reporting period, 78 firings—76 by IDF/DFF and 2 by armed elements—at or close to UNIFIL positions and personnel were recorded, which were promptly protested to the authorities concerned. The monitoring group set up in accordance with the understanding of 26 April 1996 held 11 meetings at UNIFIL headquarters to consider complaints by Israel and Lebanon.

Israel continued, within the Israeli-controlled area (ICA), to maintain a civil administration and security service. The infrastructure in ICA—road system, electricity, water supply, public buildings—was improved significantly, primarily owing to aid from the Lebanese Government. However, ICA remained economically dependent on Israel, where more than 2,000 of its inhabitants worked. IDF/DFF carried out sporadic search operations throughout ICA and made several arrests. UNIFIL recorded four cases of the families of defectors from DFF being expelled from ICA and forced to vacate their homes at short notice. Reports of forced recruitment to DFF increased. All movement between ICA and other parts of Lebanon remained under IDF/DFF control. A night curfew was still being imposed on the village of Rshaf, despite UNIFIL efforts to have it lifted.

The Force continued to extend assistance to the civilian population in the form of medical care, harvest patrols, clothes, blankets, food, engineering work and the distribution of educational material and equipment to poorer schools. In addition, resources made available by troop-contributing countries allowed UNIFIL to carry out water projects and provide equipment and services to schools, orphanages and the needy. UNIFIL medical centres and mobile teams cared for an average of 3,000 civilian patients per month, and a field dental programme treated approximately 100 cases per month. The Force co-operated closely on humanitarian matters with the Lebanese authorities, UN agencies, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and other organizations operating in Lebanon. UNIFIL also continued to dispose of unexploded ordnance in its area of operation, carrying out 116 controlled explosions during the reporting period.

The Secretary-General observed that while the level of hostilities was somewhat lower than in the past, the situation in southern Lebanon continued to be tense and volatile, as Israel maintained its occupation of parts of the area and Lebanese groups continued their attacks against the occupying forces. The UNIFIL mandate, defined in resolution 425(1978) [YUN 1978, p. 312] and reaffirmed subsequently, thus remained unfulfilled. In accordance with the April 1996 understanding, the parties exercised certain restraint with regard to firing into populated areas; that positive development, however, should not obscure the fact, the Secretary-General emphasized, that the inherent instability of the situation and the ever-present possibility of renewed deterioration remained a cause for serious concern.

Although UNIFIL continued to be prevented from implementing its mandate, its contribution to stability and the protection it afforded the area's population remained important, the Secretary-General said; he therefore recommended that the Security Council accede to Lebanon's request of 17 January [S/1997/41] to extend the Force's mandate for another six months, until 31 July.

In making that recommendation, the Secretary-General drew attention to the serious shortfall in UNIFIL funding, with unpaid assessments amounting to some $177 million (for details, see below). He appealed to all Member States to pay their assessments promptly and in full and to clear all arrears.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (January)

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's report, the Security Council, on 28 January [meeting 3733], unanimously adopted resolution 1095(1997). The draft text [S/1997/79] had been prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 20 January 1997 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and taking note of the observations expressed and the commitments mentioned therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 17 January 1997 from the Permanent Representative of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 July 1997;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Condemns all acts of violence committed in particular against the Force, and urges the parties to put an end to them;

5. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

6. Encourages further efficiency and savings provided they do not affect the operational capacity of the Force;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

After the adoption of the resolution, the President made a statement on behalf of the Council [S/PRST/1997/1]:

The Security Council has noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 20 January 1997 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, submitted in conformity with resolution 1068(1996) of 30 July 1996.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the full sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, the Council asserts that all States shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

As the Council extends the mandate of the Force for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), the Council again stresses the urgent need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. It reiterates its full support for the Taif Agreement of 22 October 1989 and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The Council commends the Lebanese Government for its successful effort to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with the Force.

The Council expresses its concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regrets the loss of civilian life, and urges all parties to exercise restraint.

The Council takes this opportunity to express its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard and commends troops of the Force and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

Report of Secretary-General (July). In a report [S/1997/550 & Corr.1] on developments during the period from 18 January to 16 July 1997, the Secretary-General noted that hostilities continued between IDF/DFF and armed elements at a higher level than during the previous reporting period. UNIFIL recorded 154 operations by the latter against the former, the vast majority carried out by the Islamic Resistance, a few by Amal and three were attributed to Palestinian groups. There were also reports of more than 210 operations north of the Litani River. Armed elements more frequently employed long-range mortar fire in their attacks, firing over 1,400 mortar rounds, rockets and anti-tank missiles. IDF/DFF in turn conducted more frequent pre-emptive artillery bombardments and increased long-range patrols beyond its forward positions. In a new development, IDF/DFF also used road-side bombs outside ICA. More than 12,000 artillery, mortar and tank rounds fired by IDF/DFF were recorded by UNIFIL; except for an attack in the Nepalese battalion sector on 9 February and one in the Ghanaian battalion sector on 1 June, all air raids were carried out north of the Litani River. Firing into populated areas was maintained at a relatively low level, although there were a number of serious incidents; in the UNIFIL area of operation, the most serious one occurred on 12 July when a civilian at Adshit Al Qusayr was killed by an anti-personnel flechette tank round fired by IDF/DFF. Other serious incidents were reported from north of the Litani River: IDF/DFF shelling killed one civilian and injured two others on 18 February and killed two civilians and wounded another on 14 July; on 6 July, three civilians were injured by artillery rounds fired by IDF/DFF; and on 15 July, a civilian was wounded by shrapnel from rockets fired by armed elements. On 25 April and 3, 6 and 15 July, mortar rounds and rockets fired by armed elements at IDF/DFF positions along Lebanon's border with Israel landed inside Israeli territory. The Israeli navy continued to patrol Lebanese territorial waters in the south and to impose restrictions on local fishermen.

Civilian casualties from road-side bombs increased. In the UNIFIL area, a civilian was killed by a bomb with Hebrew markings on 20 February. On 5 May, four civilians were injured by a bomb detonated by armed elements near El Qlaiaa. Other casualties were reported from north of the Litani, notably on 6 May, when two civilians were killed and two others wounded by IDF/DFF bombs near Nabatiyeh. There were also reports of two civilians having been killed by bomb explosions on 4 June in the southern Bekaa Valley and on 18 June near Jezzine.

UNIFIL continued its efforts to limit the conflict and protect the inhabitants from the fighting. Although both sides showed restraint in a safety zone around UNIFIL positions, 68 firings—40 by IDF/DFF, 15 by armed elements and 13 by unidentified elements—at or close to Force positions and personnel were recorded.

In accordance with an understanding reached several years earlier, IDF observed certain limitations on its activities in the Norwegian battalion sector. During the reporting period, there was some friction between IDF and UNIFIL over the former's access to the sector. On 27 April, IDF placed restrictions on UN traffic entering the sector, after the battalion had prevented IDF from conducting meetings with local villagers. Although UNIFIL protested the incident, IDF, on 24 and 25 May, again reacting to the battalion's denial of a request for meetings owing to inadequate notice time, closed the border crossings in Metullah and Rosh Haniqra, as well as an IDF/DFF checkpoint on the coastal road near Naqoura. UNIFIL strongly protested the restriction of its freedom of movement and the matter was resolved after negotiations.

Reacting to reports that IDF had acquired UN vehicles, elements of the Islamic Resistance, on three occasions on 28 and 29 May, stopped UNIFIL traffic and harassed Force personnel. UNIFIL vigorously protested the harassment and obtained an assurance that it would end. On investigation, it was found that a number of old vehicles had been sold to an Israeli buyer by UNDOF and transported to ICA with their UN markings still intact. After the incident, procedures for disposing of old vehicles were tightened.

The monitoring group set up in accordance with the April 1996 understanding held 11 meetings at UNIFIL headquarters to consider complaints by Israel and Lebanon.

Within ICA, Israel maintained a civil administration and security service. IDF/DFF carried out sporadic search operations throughout ICA and made several arrests. All movement between ICA and other parts of Lebanon remained under IDF/DFF control. Reports of forced recruitment to DFF decreased, however.

UNIFIL continued to assist the civilian population through its medical centres, mobile teams and field dental programme. It also assisted the Lebanese Government to transport and distribute supplies to villages in ICA when they faced economic difficulties owing to IDF/DFF-imposed restrictions. Cooperation with the Lebanese authorities, UN agencies, ICRC and other organizations on humanitarian matters also continued, as did the disposal of unexploded ordnance, with 147 explosions being carried out in UNIFIL's area of operation.

On 6 March, a Palestinian who had been accommodated at UNIFIL headquarters since April 1995, after being deported to Lebanon by the Israeli authorities, was allowed to leave for Jordan via Israel, as a result of continuous contacts between the Force and IDF.

The Secretary-General observed that the level of hostilities in southern Lebanon had risen somewhat during the previous six months and civilians were again targeted or put at risk. The situation remained volatile and continued to give cause for serious concern, he said. Although still prevented from implementing its mandate, UNIFIL's contribution to stability and the protection it was able to afford the population of the area remained important; therefore, the Secretary-

General recommended that the Force's mandate be extended for another six months, until 31 January 1998, as requested by Lebanon in a 10 July letter [S/1997/534]. Noting that there was a serious shortfall in UNIFIL funding, with unpaid assessments amounting to some $176 million, the Secretary-General appealed to Member States to pay their assessments promptly and in full and to clear all arrears.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION (July)

On 29 July [meeting 3804], the Security Council adopted resolution 1122(1997) unanimously. The draft text [S/1997/575] had been prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 425(1978) and 426(1978) of 19 March 1978, 501(1982) of 25 February 1982, 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509(1982) of 6 June 1982 and 520(1982) of 17 September 1982, as well as all its resolutions on the situation in Lebanon,

Having studied the report of the Secretary-General of 16 July 1997 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and taking note of the observations expressed and the commitments mentioned therein,

Taking note of the letter dated 10 July 1997 from the Charge d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Lebanon to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Responding to the request of the Government of Lebanon,

1. Decides to extend the present mandate of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon for a further period of six months, that is, until 31 January 1998;

2. Reiterates its strong support for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries;

3. Re-emphasizes the terms of reference and general guidelines of the Force as stated in the report of the Secretary-General of 19 March 1978, approved by resolution 426(1978), and calls upon all parties concerned to cooperate fully with the Force for the full implementation of its mandate;

4. Condemns all acts of violence committed in particular against the Force, and urges the parties to put an end to them;

5. Reiterates that the Force should fully implement its mandate as defined in resolutions 425(1978), 426(1978) and all other relevant resolutions;

6. Encourages further efficiency and savings provided they do not affect the operational capacity of the Force;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue consultations with the Government of Lebanon and other parties directly concerned with the implementation of the present resolution and to report to the Security Council thereon.

At the same meeting, the President made the following statement on behalf of the Council [S/PRST/1997/40]:

The Security Council has noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General of 16 July 1997 on the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, submitted in conformity with resolution 1095(1997) of 28 January 1997.

The Council reaffirms its commitment to the full sovereignty, political independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Lebanon within its internationally recognized boundaries. In this context, the Council asserts that all States shall refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

As the Council extends the mandate of the Force for a further interim period on the basis of resolution 425(1978), the Council again stresses the urgent need for the implementation of that resolution in all its aspects. It reiterates its full support for the Taif Agreement of 22 October 1989 and for the continued efforts of the Lebanese Government to consolidate peace, national unity and security in the country, while successfully carrying out the reconstruction process. The Council commends the Lebanese Government for its successful effort to extend its authority in the south of the country in full coordination with the Force.

The Council expresses its concern over the continuing violence in southern Lebanon, regrets the loss of civilian life, and urges all parties to exercise restraint.

The Council takes this opportunity to express its appreciation for the continuing efforts of the Secretary-General and his staff in this regard. The Council notes with deep concern the high level of casualties the Force has suffered and pays a special tribute to all those who gave their life while serving in the Force. It commends the troops of the Force and troop-contributing countries for their sacrifices and commitment to the cause of international peace and security under difficult circumstances.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (February and April). In a 3 February report [A/51/535/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted the financial performance report of UNIFIL for the period from 1 February to 30 June 1996, for which resources of $53,874,000 gross ($52,448,000 net) were provided. Corresponding expenditures amounted to $51,010,500 gross ($49,768,300 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $2,863,500 gross ($2,679,700 net), which was primarily due to lower than estimated rotation costs of military personnel, a high vacancy rate for civilian staff and the transfer of vehicles, equipment and generators from other peacekeeping missions.

As requested in General Assembly resolution 50/89 B [YUN 1996, p. 437], the report presented a full evaluation of damages resulting from the 18 April 1996 incident at the headquarters of the Fiji battalion at Qana and surrounding positions [Ibid., p. 429]. That incident, which occurred during Israeli retaliatory operations against the Islamic fundamentalist organization Hezbollah, resulted in the deaths of over 100 Lebanese who had sought refuge in the area. Another 100 people were wounded, including several UN personnel.

UNIFIL identified the total costs attributable to the incident at $893,319, comprising $552,474 in damages to the Fiji battalion headquarters and $340,845 in damages sustained in surrounding positions, but not including costs associated with the relocation of the battalion headquarters. From the resources provided to UNIFIL for the period under review, $ 131,750 was used for immediate repairs to premises.

Subsequent to the Qana incident, it was determined, according to the Secretary-General, that it would no longer be operationally acceptable for a battalion headquarters to be located within a town that had since grown in population to encompass a headquarters position originally sited on the town's outskirts. It was therefore decided to relocate the Fijian battalion; the costs associated with such relocation were estimated at $880,300.

In a 21 February report [A/51/535/Add.2], the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget for UNIFIL for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, in the amount of $122,166,000 gross ($118,031,000 net), reflecting a 0.5 per cent decrease in gross terms compared with the previous 12-month period. The decrease was mainly due, he said, to the lower cost of rotation of military contingents and the fact that there was no requirement for refurbishing armoured personnel carriers. The budget provided for maintaining the Force at a level of 4,513—3,518 infantry and 995 logistics—troops, supported by 487—143 international and 344 local level—civilians.

As to the status of contributions, the Secretary-General stated that $2,645.2 million had been assessed on Member States for the period from the Force's inception to 31 January 1997. Contributions received as at 31 January for that time amounted to $2,471 million. Outstanding assessments were reduced by $9.9 million pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/83 [YUN 1995, p. 406], to partially offset the waiver of South Africa's unpaid contributions to peacekeeping operations. The outstanding balance of $174.2 million included an amount of $19.6 million transferred to a special account in accordance with Assembly resolution 36/116 A [YUN 1981, p. 1299].

The Secretary-General projected an operating deficit of $234.7 million for UNIFIL, mainly attributable to outstanding contributions. Until that high level was reduced, he recommended that the surplus balance of $10,657,000, that otherwise would have to be surrendered as credits to Member States, be entered into the account es-established pursuant to Assembly resolution 34/9 E [YUN 1979, p. 353] and held in suspense pending a further decision by the Assembly. As a result of the withholding of contributions or delays in payment by certain Member States, the Secretary-General said, the Force had been unable to meet its obligations on a current basis or in full, particularly those due to the troop-contributing countries. Full reimbursement in accordance with standard rates established by the Assembly for troop costs had been made to them through 31 March 1996. An estimated $52 million was due for troop costs for the period ending on 31 January 1997.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in an April report [A/51/684/Add.1], recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal that the Assembly decide to credit Member States their respective share in the unencumbered balance of $2,863,500 gross ($2,679,700 net) for the period from 1 February to 30 June 1996. With regard to the proposed budget for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, ACABQ recommended a lower appropriation totalling $122,035,000 gross ($117,926,000 net). It also recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's request regarding the surplus balance of $10,657,000.

On 13 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/51/725/Add.1], adopted resolution 51/233 by recorded vote (127-2-1) [agenda item 123 (b)].

Financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 425(1978) of 19 March 1978, by which the Council established the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1095(1997) of 28 January 1997,

Recalling its resolution S-8/2 of 21 April 1978 on the financing of the Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/89 B of 7 June 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon have been used to meet expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions,

Recalling its resolution 50/89 B, in which it requested the Secretary-General to include in his next report on the financing of the Force a full evaluation of damages resulting from the incident that occurred at the headquarters of the Force at Qana on 18 April 1996 and the costs thereof,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon as at 30 April 1997, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 176.8 million United States dollars, representing 6.6 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending on 30 June 1997, notes that some 16 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Authorizes the Secretary-General to enter into commitments for the Force in the amount of 1,773,618 dollars to cover the costs resulting from the incident at the headquarters of the Force at Qana on 18 April 1996;

8. Decides that the total amount mentioned in paragraph 7 above, namely 1,773,618 dollars, shall be borne by Israel;

9. Decides also to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon the amount of 124,969,700 dollars gross (120,860,700 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the amount of 4,708,300 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at the monthly rate of 10,414,142 dollars gross (10,071,725 dollars net) in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and 51/218 A and B of 18 December 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and for the year 1998, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 July 1997;

10. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 4,089,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

11. Decides that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the estimated other income of 20,000 dollars for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

12. Decides also that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against their apportionment, as provided for in paragraph 9 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 2,863,500 dollars gross (2,679,700 dollars net) in respect of the period ending on 30 June 1996;

13. Decides further that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the unencumbered balance of 2,863,500 dollars gross (2,679,700 dollars net) for the period ending on 30 June 1996 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 51/233:

In favour Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bhutan, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstain: Russian Federation.

The Assembly and the Committee adopted paragraph 8 separately, by recorded votes of 66 to 2, with 59 abstentions, and 58 to 2, with 52 abstentions, respectively.

Introducing the draft in the Committee on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, the United Republic of Tanzania said that the sponsors had subtracted $49,000 from the costs to cover the damages resulting from the Qana incident in the light of Israel's contribution of that amount.

Israel stated that its action in providing medical assistance to injured UNIFIL members in the wake of the Qana incident had been a purely humanitarian gesture and should under no circumstances be interpreted as an admission of any responsibility. Speaking before the Assembly vote, Israel stated that singling out one country to bear the costs of damages to a UN peacekeeping force attributable to a military incident was utterly unprecedented and contrary to the practice of reimbursing expenditures related to peacekeeping operations. Moreover, as clearly indicated in the Secretary-General's report, the sum of $880,300 represented the estimated costs of relocating a battalion headquarters.

The tragic events that took place at Qana on 16 April 1996 were brought on by a series of violent Hezbollah attacks against northern Israel; in the absence of any Lebanese effort or action to prevent them, Israel was left with no option but a military one. Both UN and Israeli investigations confirmed separately the activity of terrorist elements close to the UNIFIL battalion headquarters at the time; it was that activity which elicited the artillery response that was blamed for the damage. The terrorists should be held accountable and Israel was bound by no legal or moral obligation to assume responsibility for reimbursing the amount stated in the resolution.

The United States believed that the paragraph, which apportioned a particular expense to one Member State, had serious ramifications that would affect UN operations; the resolution politicized the funding of UNIFIL and so would weaken support for it in Israel, the United States and other countries.

The Russian Federation abstained because it was firmly committed to the consensus adoption of decisions on financial matters; departure from that principle would create problems for UN peacekeeping operations. Japan, which abstained in the Committee, stressed that the financing of peacekeeping operations was a matter of collective responsibility. Speaking for the European Union (EU), the Netherlands expressed a similar opinion. The EU had abstained on paragraph 8 as it considered the text to be inappropriate.

In Fiji's view, the issue was a sensitive one; since 1978 it had lost 30 of its nationals serving with UNIFIL. The UNIFIL budget should be appropriated in its entirety, as small troop-contributing countries could not rely on voluntary contributions and without collective responsibility, peacekeeping would be severely affected. Fiji requested full compensation for the soldiers injured at Qana.

By decision 52/456 of 22 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of UNIFIL's financing at the resumed fifty-second session in 1998.

Syrian Arab Republic

In 1997, the General Assembly again called for Israel's withdrawal from the Golan Heights, an area in the southern part of the Syrian Arab Republic near its borders with both Israel and Lebanon. Israel occupied the Golan Heights following the 1967 war, effectively annexing that area when it extended its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the territory towards the end of 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 309]. The annexation was confirmed by the Israeli Knesset on 11 November 1991.

Israeli policies and measures affecting the human rights of the population in the Golan Heights and other occupied territories were monitored by the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Areas of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and were the subject of resolutions adopted by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter III) and the Assembly.

Committee on Israeli Practices. In its annual report [A/52/131/Add.2], the Committee on Israeli Practices, having visited the Syrian Arab Republic, observed that one of the most striking features of the Israeli occupation of the Syrian Arab Golan was the severance of family ties, owing to restrictions on visits to and from Syria. The Committee was informed that measures taken against citizens who expressed nationalistic sentiments towards Syria were repressed more harshly than before and that land in the occupied Golan continued to be confiscated for the expansion of Israeli settlements and the construction of bypass roads. Agricultural produce and cattle were also subjected to confiscation and the Israeli authorities continued to exercise tight control over the water resources available to the Golan inhabitants, including rainwater. Complaints were voiced about Israeli measures in the educational field, such as the dismissal of qualified teachers and attempts to alter curricula with regard to the area's political geography and the historical identities of the Golan's ethnic communities. Hebrew biblical names were imposed on Arab localities. Syrian diplomas were reportedly not recognized and unemployment was widespread. Witnesses also complained about difficulties faced by Golan inhabitants in obtaining proper medical care.

In January 1997, Israel announced the construction of an additional 200 housing units in Katzrin, the largest Israeli settlement in the occupied Golan. In May, it was reported that a study prepared in the United States showed that 28 per cent of the housing units in the Golan were uninhabited, while the Israeli Minister of Housing suggested that only 6 per cent were unoccupied.

According to The Jerusalem Post of 18 January, the Israeli Prime Minister had stated that the Golan's future was not negotiable and that the Golan Heights had to remain under Israeli control because of their strategic, historical and economic importance. On 23 July, the Knesset adopted a bill requiring any move by Israel to withdraw from the Golan to be approved by a two-thirds majority, i.e., 80 out of the 120 Knesset members; in addition, it would have to be approved by the Israeli population through a referendum.

The Special Committee recalled the position taken by the General Assembly and the Security Council that the annexation by Israel of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan was illegal and therefore null and void; it hoped that negotiations between Syria and Israel concerning the Golan would resume. It noted that the occupation—in itself a human rights violation—continued in spite of the signing of the peace agreements; consequently, Israel should abide by its obligations under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and comply fully with all universally accepted human rights standards.

Noting that the peace talks between Syria and Israel had halted, the Committee considered it vital that a constructive dialogue between the parties be maintained and that the peace process continue. The Committee called on the international community to address urgently the current situation and take an active and positive role in safeguarding the peace process, giving it new impetus and ensuring its success.

Report of Secretary-General. By a 15 October report [A/52/467], the Secretary-General transmitted replies from six Member States received in response to his request for information on steps taken or envisaged with regard to implementation of General Assembly resolutions 51/28 [YUN 1996, p. 440], which dealt with Israeli policies in the Syrian territory occupied since 1967, and 51/27 [ibid., p. 385] on the transfer by some States of their diplomatic missions to Jerusalem (see above, under "Occupied territories").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 68], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/54 [draft: A/52/L.55/ & Add.1] by recorded vote (92-2-65) [agenda item 37].

The situation in the Middle East: the Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East",

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force, in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan, Deeply concerned that Israel has not withdrawn from the Syrian Golan, which has been under occupation since 1967, contrary to the relevant Security Council and General Assembly resolutions,

Stressing the illegality of the Israeli settlement construction and activities in the occupied Syrian Golan since 1967,

Noting with satisfaction the convening at Madrid on 30 October 1991 of the Peace Conference on the Middle East, on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967, 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 and 425(1978) of 19 March 1978 and the formula of land for peace,

Expressing grave concern over the halt in the peace process on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks, and expressing the hope that peace talks will soon resume from the point they had reached,

1. Declares that Israel has failed so far to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981);

2. Declares also that the Israeli decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan is null and void and has no validity whatsoever, as confirmed by the Security Council in its resolution 497(1981), and calls upon Israel to rescind it;

3. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under those instruments in all circumstances;

4. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan and its de facto annexation constitute a stumbling block in the way of achieving a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region;

5. Calls upon Israel to resume the talks on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks and to respect the commitments and undertakings reached during the previous talks;

6. Demands once more that Israel withdraw from all the occupied Syrian Golan to the line of 4 June 1967 in implementation of the relevant Security Council resolutions;

7. Calls upon all the parties concerned, the co-sponsors of the peace process and the entire community to exert all the necessary efforts to ensure the resumption of the peace process and its success;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/54:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Qatar, Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syria, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstain: Andorra, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Marshall Islands, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zambia.

Speaking before the vote, the United States said that Syria and Israel had committed themselves to a negotiating process to resolve their differences and achieve a lasting peace agreement; the Assembly could only make that goal more elusive by injecting itself into issues that the parties had agreed would be decided in face-to-face negotiations.

Turkey stated that there were several reasons for the current impasse in the peace process and it was not fair to assign all responsibility to one of the elements or one of the countries involved. Turkey emphasized that terrorism was one of the most important obstacles to peace, calling on those countries that supported and encouraged terrorism to cease using such inhuman and destructive policy as leverage to advance their foreign-policy interests.

On 10 December [meeting 69], the Assembly, under the agenda item on the report of the Committee on Israeli Practices and on the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee's recommendation [A/52/617], adopted resolution 52/68 by recorded vote (152-1-7) [agenda item 87].

The occupied Syrian Golan

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories,

Deeply concerned that the Syrian Golan occupied since 1967 has been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its previous relevant resolutions, the last of which was resolution 51/135 of 13 December 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General submitted in pursuance of resolution 51/135,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of the decision of 14 December 1981 taken by Israel to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under international law, including the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Syrian Golan,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Welcoming the convening at Madrid of the Peace Conference on the Middle East on the basis of Security Council resolutions 242(1967) of 22 November 1967 and 338(1973) of 22 October 1973 aimed at the realization of a just, comprehensive and lasting peace, and expressing grave concern about the stalling of the peace process on the Syrian and Lebanese tracks,

1. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to comply with the relevant resolutions on the occupied Syrian Golan, in particular Security Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan was null and void and without international legal effect, and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Also calls upon Israel to desist from changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan and in particular to desist from the establishment of settlements;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the occupied Syrian Golan are null and void, constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Calls upon Israel to desist from imposing Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Golan, and to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the occupied Syrian Golan;

5. Deplores the violations by Israel of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

6. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/68:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel.

Abstain: Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Nicaragua, Swaziland, United States, Uruguay, Zambia.

Speaking after the Committee vote, Syria remarked that the result reflected support for the principles of legality, the UN Charter and relevant UN resolutions, and testified to the deep concern over the deadlock in the peace process. Following the Assembly vote, Syria stated that the overwhelming majority support of the resolution constituted a clear message to Israel and demonstrated support of human rights, the struggle for which was also a struggle against oppression and injustice.

In Israel's view, the adoption of extremist and one-sided resolutions—which did not help create the peaceful and constructive climate necessary for the conduct of negotiations—had no influence on the real state of affairs.

Pakistan, one of the text's sponsors, said it shared the concern about the suspension of the peace process, especially in relation to the Syrian Golan and Lebanon. It found it regrettable that Security Council resolution 497(1981) [YUN 1981, p. 312], stating that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Golan was null and void and demanding that Israel rescind its decision, had not been implemented and that Israel was persisting unimpeded in its efforts to change the area's physical nature, demographic composition, organizational structure and legal status, and in building settlements.

UNDOF

The United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, established by Security Council resolution 350(1974) [YUN 1974, p. 205], was charged with supervising the observance of the ceasefire between Israel and Syria in the Golan Heights area and ensuring the separation of their forces. Assisting UNDOF, as required, were observers from UNTSO.

UNDOF maintained an area of separation, which was some 80 kilometres long and varied in width between approximately 10 kilometres in the centre to less than 1 kilometre in the extreme south. The area of separation was inhabited and was policed by the Syrian authorities. No military forces other than UNDOF were permitted within it. The Force supervised the area of separation and intervened whenever any military personnel entered or tried to operate therein. Both the Austrian battalion deployed in the northern part of the area of separation and the Polish battalion in the south conducted mine-clearing operations.

The Force's mandate was renewed twice in 1997, in May and November, each time for a six-month period.

Composition and deployment

As at November 1997, UNDOF comprised 1,053 troops from Austria, Canada, Japan and Poland. It was assisted by 78 UNTSO military observers. Major-General David Stapleton (Ireland) was appointed Force Commander, taking over from Major-General Johannes C. Kusters (Netherlands), who completed his tour of duty on 31 May. The Secretary-General informed the Security Council on 9 May [S/1997/388] of his intention to appoint Major-General Stapleton; the Council's agreement was conveyed to him in a letter of 22 May [S/1997/389].

UNDOF was entirely deployed within, and close to, the area of separation with two base camps, 44 permanently manned positions and 11 observation posts. Its headquarters was located at Camp Faouar and an office maintained in Damascus, Syria. Damascus international airport served as UNDOF's air head, along with Tel Aviv international airport. The ports of Latakia and Haifa were used for sea shipments.

The Canadian and Japanese logistics units, based in Camp Ziouani, with a detachment at Camp Faouar, performed second-line general transportation tasks, rotation transport, control and management of goods and maintenance of heavy equipment.

Activities

UNDOF continued in 1997 to supervise the area of separation between Israeli and Syrian troops in the Golan Heights, to ensure that no military forces of either party were deployed there, by means of fixed positions and patrols. The Force, accompanied by liaison officers from the party concerned, also carried out fortnightly inspections of armament and force levels in the areas of limitation. As in the past, both sides denied inspection teams access to some of their positions and imposed some restrictions on UNDOF's freedom of movement.

The Force Commander and his staff maintained close contact with the military liaison staff of Israel and Syria. Both sides cooperated with UNDOF in the execution of its tasks.

The Force also assisted ICRC with facilities for mail and the passage of persons through the area of separation and provided, within the means available and upon request, medical treatment to the local population.

Reports of Secretary-General (May and November). Before the expiration of the UNDOF mandate on 31 May, and again on 30 November, the Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on UNDOF activities that took place between 19 November 1996 and 16 May 1997 [S/1997/372] and between 17 May and 14 November 1997 [S/1997/884]. Both reports noted that UNDOF continued to perform its functions effectively, with the cooperation of the parties. In general, the ceasefire in the Israel-Syria sector was maintained without serious incident, and the UNDOF area of operation remained calm. On 30 May, two Austrian soldiers were shot and killed during a routine foot patrol east of position 14 near Hadar. Regrettably, the Secretary-General stated, the investigations carried out by the Syrian authorities and UNDOF, in cooperation with the Government of Austria and with technical assistance from Canada, had so far not shed any light on the perpetrators of the attack and its motives. The Syrian authorities had informed UNDOF that they were continuing their investigation.

The Secretary-General observed that, despite the quiet in the Israel-Syria sector, the situation in the Middle East continued to be potentially dangerous and was likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem could be reached. He hoped for determined efforts by all concerned to tackle the problem in all its aspects, with a view to arriving at a just and durable peace settlement, as called for by Security Council resolution 338(1973) [YUN 1973, p. 213]. Stating that he considered the Force's continued presence in the area to be essential, the Secretary-General, with the agreement of both Syria and Israel, each time recommended that the UNDOF mandate be extended for a further six months, until 30 November 1997 in the first instance and 31 May 1998 in the second.

In making his recommendation, the Secretary-General drew attention to the serious shortfall in the funding of the Force, with unpaid assessments totalling $48.2 million in May and $50.9 million in November; those amounts, representing money owed to the troop-contributing countries, were far larger than the Force's current annual budget, he noted. He therefore appealed to all Member States to pay their assessments promptly and in full and to clear all remaining arrears.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May [meeting 3782], the Security Council adopted resolution 1109(1997) unanimously. The draft [S/1997/396] was prepared during consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 16 May 1997 on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 30 November 1997;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

On 21 November [meeting 3835], the Council, without debate, unanimously adopted resolution 1139(1997). The draft [S/1997/904] had been prepared during consultations.

The Security Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 14 November 1997 on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force,

Decides:

(a) To call upon the parties concerned to implement immediately Security Council resolution 338(1973) of 22 October 1973;

(b) To renew the mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force for another period of six months, that is, until 31 May 1998;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to submit, at the end of this period, a report on the development in the situation and the measures taken to implement resolution 338(1973).

After the adoption of each resolution, the President made the following statement [S/PRST/1997/30, S/PRST/1997/53] on behalf of the Council:

As is known, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force states, in paragraph 13 [9 in the November report]: "Despite the present quiet in the Israeli-Syrian sector, the situation in the Middle East continues to be potentially dangerous and is likely to remain so, unless and until a comprehensive settlement covering all aspects of the Middle East problem can be reached." That statement of the Secretary-General reflects the view of the Security Council.

Financing

Reports of Secretary-General and ACABQ (January/February and April). On 31 January, the Secretary-General presented a report [A/51/405/Add.1] on the financial performance of UNDOF, covering the period from 1 December 1995 to 30 June 1996, for which resources of $18,753,000 gross ($18,221,000 net) were provided. Expenditures amounted to $17,623,700 gross ($17,154,300 net), resulting in an unencumbered balance of $1,129,300 gross ($1,066,700 net), which was primarily due to more favourable rates for the hire of aircraft used for rotation of military personnel, filling of vacant posts with staff at lower levels, cancellation and deferment of construction projects, and reduced procurement of major equipment due to availability of some items at the UN Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy.

The action required from the General Assembly was a decision to credit Member States their respective shares in the unencumbered balance.

On 21 February, the Secretary-General presented the proposed budget of UNDOF [A/51/405/Add.2] for the 12-month period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, totalling $32,368,000 gross ($31,466,000 net), which reflected a 2.8 per cent increase in gross terms compared with the resources for the preceding 12 months, which amounted to $31,494,000 gross. The increased requirements related to reimbursement for contingent-owned equipment, replacement of vehicles, communications and data-processing equipment, and vehicle third-party liability insurance. The budget provided for maintaining the Force at a level of 1,036 troops (821 infantry and 215 logistics personnel), supported by 120 civilians (36 international and 84 local). The required Assembly action was approval of an appropriation of $32,368,000 gross ($31,466,000 net) and a decision to credit Member States with the surplus balance of $2,358,000 for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994.

The Secretary-General noted that assessments on Member States in respect of UNDOF and the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) for the period from inception to 31 May 1997 totalled $1,126.5 million, while contributions received as at 31 January 1997 for the same period amounted to $1,066.6 million. Outstanding assessments were reduced by $4.2 million pursuant to Assembly resolution 50/83 [YUN 1995, p. 406]. The outstanding balance of $59.9 million as at 31 January 1997 included an amount of $36 million transferred to a special account in accordance with Assembly resolution 36/116 A [YUN 1981, p. 1299].

In an April report [A/51/684/Add.1], ACABQ recommended acceptance of the Secretary-General's proposal to credit Member States their respective shares in the unencumbered balance of $1,129,300 gross ($1,066,700 net) for the period from 1 December 1995 to 30 June 1996. As to the proposed programme budget for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, it recommended approval of the Secretary-General's proposal that the Assembly appropriate $32,368,000 gross ($31,466,000 net), subject to the extension of the Force's mandate by the Security Council. It further recommended that Member States be credited their respective shares in the surplus balance of $2,358,000 for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/724/Add.1], adopted resolution 51/232 without vote [agenda item 123 (a)].

Financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and taking note of the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services,

Bearing in mind Security Council resolution 350(1974) of 31 May 1974, by which the Council established the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force, and the subsequent resolutions by which the Council extended the mandate of the Force, the latest of which was resolution 1081(1996) of 27 November 1996,

Recalling its resolution 3211 B (XXIX) of 29 November 1974 on the financing of the United Nations Emergency Force and the United Nations Disengagement

Observer Force and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 50/20 B of 7 June 1996,

Reaffirming that the costs of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force are expenses of the Organization to be borne by Member States in accordance with Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its previous decisions regarding the fact that, in order to meet the expenditures caused by the Force, a different procedure is required from that applied to meet expenditures of the regular budget of the United Nations,

Taking into account the fact that the economically more developed countries are in a position to make relatively larger contributions and that the economically less developed countries have a relatively limited capacity to contribute towards such an operation,

Bearing in mind the special responsibilities of the States permanent members of the Security Council, as indicated in General Assembly resolution 1874(S-IV) of 27 June 1963, in the financing of such operations,

Noting with appreciation that voluntary contributions have been made to the Force,

Mindful of the fact that it is essential to provide the Force with the necessary financial resources to enable it to fulfil its responsibilities under the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Concerned that the Secretary-General continues to face difficulties in meeting the obligations of the Force on a current basis, including reimbursement to current and former troop-contributing States,

Concerned also that the surplus balances in the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force have been used to meet expenses of the Force in order to compensate for the lack of income resulting from non-payment and late payment by Member States of their contributions,

1. Takes note of the status of contributions to the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force as at 15 May 1997, including the contributions outstanding in the amount of 47.9 million United States dollars, representing 4.2 per cent of the total assessed contributions from the inception of the Force to the period ending 31 May 1997, notes that some 24 per cent of the Member States have paid their assessed contributions in full, and urges all other Member States concerned, in particular those in arrears, to ensure the payment of their outstanding assessed contributions;

2. Expresses concern about the financial situation with regard to peacekeeping activities, in particular as regards the reimbursement of troop contributors, which bear burdens owing to overdue payments by Member States of their assessments;

3. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States which have paid their assessed contributions in full;

4. Urges all other Member States to make every possible effort to ensure the payment of their assessed contributions to the Force in full and on time;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary action to ensure that the Force is administered with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force the amount of 33,616,400 dollars gross (32,714,400 dollars net) for the maintenance of the Force for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, inclusive of the amount of 1,248,400 dollars for the support account for peacekeeping operations, to be assessed on Member States at the monthly rate of 2,801,366 dollars gross (2,726,200 dollars net), in accordance with the composition of groups set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 of General Assembly resolution 43/232 of 1 March 1989, as adjusted by the Assembly in its resolutions 44/192 B of 21 December 1989, 45/269 of 27 August 1991, 46/198 A of 20 December 1991, 47/218 A of 23 December 1992, 49/249 A of 20 July 1995, 49/249 B of 14 September 1995, 50/224 of 11 April 1996 and 51/218 A and B of 18 December 1996 and its decisions 48/472 A of 23 December 1993 and 50/451 B of 23 December 1995, and taking into account the scale of assessments for the year 1997, as set out in its resolution 49/19 B of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/471 A of 23 December 1995, and for the year 1998, subject to the decision of the Security Council to extend the mandate of the Force beyond 31 May 1997;

8. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 888,000 dollars approved for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

9. Decides further that there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the estimated other income of 14,000 dollars for the period from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998;

10. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the assessment, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the unencumbered balance of 1,129,300 dollars gross (1,066,700 dollars net) for the period ending 30 June 1996;

11. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the unencumbered balance of 1,129,300 dollars gross (1,066,700 dollars net) for the period ending 30 June 1996 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

12. Decides that, for Member States that have fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, there shall be set off against the assessment, as provided for in paragraph 7 above, their respective share in the surplus balance of 2,358,000 dollars for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994;

13. Decides also that, for Member States that have not fulfilled their financial obligations to the Force, their share of the surplus balance of 2,358,000 dollars for the period from 1 December 1993 to 30 November 1994 shall be set off against their outstanding obligations;

14. Invites voluntary contributions to the Force in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General, to be administered, as appropriate, in accordance with the procedure and practices established by the General Assembly;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session, under the item entitled "Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East", the sub-item entitled "United Nations Disengagement Observer Force".

By decision 52/456 of 22 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee would continue consideration of the item on the financing of UNDOF at the resumed fifty-second session in 1998.

Chapter VII

Disarmament

In 1997, the General Assembly reaffirmed the central role and primary responsibility of the United Nations in the field of disarmament, reiterating the highest priority accorded by the international community to nuclear disarmament. Major developments occurred during the year with regard to a number of important international instruments concerning both nuclear and conventional arms.

Stating its determination to end the suffering and casualties caused by anti-personnel mines that killed or maimed hundreds of innocent citizens, especially children, every week, the Assembly in 1997 invited all States to sign the 22-article Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, adopted in September in Oslo, Norway.

On 29 April, the 1993 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction entered into force, and its monitoring Organization was launched on 29 May in The Hague, Netherlands.

During the year, the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization continued its work, concentrating on verification issues. By 29 October 1997, the historic Treaty, adopted in 1996, had been signed by 148 States and ratified by seven, but had not entered into force.

Under consideration in 1997 was a 23-article draft Protocol for the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction. It dealt with issues of compliance, investigations, confidentiality, and scientific and technological issues, among others.

Preparations for a review conference in the year 2000 for the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons continued. Bilateral arms negotiations were again the subject of General Assembly resolutions in 1997. Under the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I), the United States and the Russian Federation continued to dismantle and destroy nuclear warheads and deactivate delivery vehicles. On 21 March, the Presidents of both countries agreed that once START II had entered into force, they would immediately launch negotiations for START III.

The General Assembly again asked the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on a draft four-article Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons. It also called for effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons.

In addition to addressing issues related to nuclear and conventional weapons, nuclear-free zones and regional disarmament, the United Nations in 1997 also dealt with various aspects of disarmament verification, an arms race in outer space, small arms, observance of environmental norms in drafting disarmament agreements and dumping of radioactive wastes. The Assembly for the first time asked for the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in Central Asia. The Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone entered into force on 27 March.

Preparatory work for the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament continued in 1997, but no firm date for its convening was set.

Both the General Assembly's Disarmament Commission and the Geneva-based Conference on Disarmament held regular sessions during 1997, continuing work in a variety of areas to advance global and regional disarmament.

Expansion of the membership of the Conference on Disarmament—the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum of the international community—was considered, with 14 outstanding applications. In 1996, the membership had been enlarged to 60, with the addition of 23 new members.

UN role in disarmament

UN machinery

Disarmament issues before the United Nations in 1997 were considered mainly through the General Assembly and its First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee, the Disarmament Commission (a deliberative body) and the Conference on Disarmament (a multilateral negotiating forum in Geneva). In addition, disarmament issues were dealt with in other international frameworks established on the basis of multilateral, regional and bilateral agreements.

Reform programme

Report of Secretary-General. In a July report [A/51/950] on a programme for reform of the United Nations, the Secretary-General noted that, as far as disarmament and the regulation of armaments were concerned, the emergence of new dangers and actors had added new urgency to the tasks that the United Nations was called upon to undertake in that area. A managerial re-organization of the Secretariat's capacities would be effected so that a structure would be in place to respond effectively to the priorities of Member States. Thus a new department for disarmament and arms regulation would be established, replacing the Centre for Disarmament Affairs, headed by an under-secretary-general. The Secretary-General also recommended that the General Assembly carry out a review of the work of the Disarmament Commission and the First Committee with a view to updating, rationalizing and streamlining their work. While a majority of Member States welcomed his proposals for reform and supported the creation of the new department, some questions were raised concerning its priorities, as outlined in his programme. Subsequently, the Secretary-General addressed those questions in an addendum to his report [A/51/950/Add.3].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After consulting with Member States, the First Committee Chairman submitted a draft decision [A/C.1/52/L.51] on rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First Committee, proposing that the General Assembly decide that, as from its fifty-third (1998) session, the Committee would conduct and conclude its substantive work during a period not to exceed five weeks, and would combine the existing phases in the work programme. There was no consensus on the draft and it was withdrawn.

Subsequently, informal consultations initiated by the European Union were carried out. Through consultation, agreement was reached to reconvene the Committee for one week in the first part of 1998. Accordingly, the General Assembly, by decision 52/459 of 22 December, left open for further consideration the two items referring to the Disarmament Commission (item 73) and the Committee (item 83).

On 19 December, the Assembly decided in resolution 52/12 B that the Commission and the Committee should carry out a review of their work, to be concluded before the end of the Assembly's fifty-second session in 1998, with a view to its revitalization, rationalization and streamlining.

Fourth special session devoted to disarmament

The General Assembly in 1996 had decided, by resolution 51/45 C [YUN 1996, p.447], to convene in 1999 the fourth special session devoted to disarmament, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its agenda and objectives.

In a note of 19 August 1997 [A/52/288], the Secretary-General reported that no consensus was reached by the Disarmament Commission in 1997 with regard to the convening of the fourth special session, including its objectives and agenda. Therefore, the Preparatory Committee for the special session would not hold any meeting in 1997.

In May, the Disarmament Commission [A/52/42] had agreed to include the item in the agenda of its 1998 substantive session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 F without vote [agenda item 71].

Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament: report of the Preparatory Committee for the Fourth Special Session of the General Assembly Devoted to Disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 I of 15 December 1994, 50/70 F of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 C of 10 December 1996,

Recalling also that, there being a consensus to do so in each case, three special sessions of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament were held in 1978, 1982 and 1988, respectively,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, and the objective of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Welcoming the recent positive changes in the international landscape, characterized by the end of the cold war, the relaxation of tensions at the global level and the emergence of a new spirit governing relations among nations,

Taking note of paragraph 108 of the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, which supported the convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament in 1997, which would offer an opportunity to review, from a perspective more in tune with the current international situation, the most critical aspects of the process of disarmament and to mobilize the international community and public opinion in favour of the elimination of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction and of the control and reduction of conventional weapons,

Taking note also of the report of the 1997 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission on the item entitled "Fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament",

Desiring to build upon the substantive exchange of views on the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament during the 1997 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission,

Reiterating its conviction that a special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament can set the future course of action in the field of disarmament, arms control and related international security matters,

Emphasizing the importance of multilateralism in the process of disarmament and arms control, peace and security,

Noting that, with the completion of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction and, in 1996, the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty, as well as of amended Protocol II and new Protocol IV to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, the following years would be opportune for the international community to start the process of reviewing the state of affairs in the entire field of disarmament and arms control in the post-cold-war era,

1. Decides, subject to the emergence of a consensus on its objectives and agenda, to convene the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

2. Endorses the recommendation of the Disarmament Commission at its 1997 substantive session that the item entitled "Fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament" should be included in the agenda of the Commission at its 1998 session;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament" and, subject to the outcome of the deliberations at the 1998 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission, to set an exact date for and to decide on organizational matters relating to the convening of the special session.

Disarmament Commission

The Disarmament Commission, comprising all United Nations Member States, held seven plenary meetings at its 1997 substantive session (New York, 21 April-13 May) [A/52/42]. It also held organizational meetings on 21 April and on 2 December.

The Commission agenda included items on: the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned; the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament; and guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of Assembly resolution 51/45 N [YUN 1996, p. 490].

The Commission established three working groups to deal with the three agenda items. Working Group I, set up to deal with the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones (see below, under "Nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament") met between 24 April and 9 May, holding 10 meetings. Working Group II, dealing with the fourth special session on disarmament, met between 28 April and 9 May and held 12 meetings. Working Group III, dealing with guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament (see below, under "Conventional weapons and related issues"), met between 23 April and 8 May and held 10 meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/602], adopted resolution 52/40 B without vote [agenda item 73 (a)].

Report of the Disarmament Commission

The General Assembly,
Having considered the report of the Disarmament Commission,

Recalling its resolutions 47/54 A of 9 December 1992, 47/54 G of 8 April 1993, 48/77 A of 16 December 1993, 49/77 A of 15 December 1994, 50/72 D of 12 December 1995 and 51/47 B of 10 December 1996,

Considering the role that the Disarmament Commission has been called upon to play and the contribution that it should make in examining and submitting recommendations on various problems in the field of disarmament and in the promotion of the implementation of the relevant decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Disarmament Commission;

2. Reaffirms the importance of further enhancing the dialogue and cooperation among the First Committee, the Disarmament Commission and the Conference on Disarmament;

3. Also reaffirms the role of the Disarmament Commission as the specialized, deliberative body within the United Nations multilateral disarmament machinery that allows for in-depth deliberations on specific disarmament issues, leading to the submission of concrete recommendations on those issues;

4. Encourages the Disarmament Commission to continue to make every effort to enhance its working methods so as to enable it to give focused consideration to a limited number of priority issues in the field of disarmament, bearing in mind the decision it has taken to move its agenda towards a three-item phased approach;

5. Requests the Disarmament Commission to continue its work in accordance with its mandate, as set forth in paragraph 118 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and with paragraph 3 of Assembly resolution 37/78 H of 9 December 1982, and to that end to make every effort to achieve specific recommendations on the items of its agenda, taking into account the adopted "Ways and means to enhance the functioning of the Disarmament Commission";

6. Welcomes the fact that, pursuant to the adopted three-item phased approach, the Disarmament Commission, at its 1997 organizational session, adopted the following items for consideration at its 1998 substantive session:

(a) The establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned;

(b) The fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;

(c) Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N of 10 December 1996;

7. Requests the Disarmament Commission to meet for a period not exceeding four weeks during 1998 and to submit a substantive report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Disarmament Commission the annual report of the Conference on Disarmament, together with all the official records of the fifty-second session of the General Assembly relating to disarmament matters, and to render all assistance that the Commission may require for implementing the present resolution;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure full provision to the Disarmament Commission and its subsidiary bodies of interpretation and translation facilities in the official languages and to assign, as a matter of priority, all the necessary resources and services, including verbatim records, to that end;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Disarmament Commission".

Conference on Disarmament

The Conference on Disarmament, a multilateral negotiating body based in Geneva, in 1997 held a three-part session in Geneva (20 January-27 March, 12 May-27 June and 28 July-10 September) [A/52/27].

During 28 formal plenary meetings and 31 informal meetings, the Conference considered: the cessation of the nuclear arms race and nuclear disarmament; prevention of nuclear war; prevention of an arms race in outer space; effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons; new types of weapons of mass destruction and new systems of such weapons; radiological weapons; a comprehensive programme of disarmament; and transparency in armaments.

Conference proceedings were influenced to a great degree by the continued divergence of views on disarmament priorities. Throughout the session, successive Presidents conducted consultations with a view to reaching consensus on the work programme. However, it was not possible to establish negotiating mechanisms on any of the substantive items on the agenda, or to establish any other mechanisms, apart from the appointment of four Special Coordinators (see below). As no agreement was reached with regard to the work programme, substantive discussions on various agenda items took place only in plenary meetings.

On 26 June, the Conference appointed four Special Coordinators as follows: the representative of Australia, as Special Coordinator to conduct consultations on a possible mandate on anti-personnel landmines; the representative of Austria, on the expansion of the membership of the Conference on Disarmament; the representative of Egypt, on the improved and effective functioning of the Conference; and the representative of Hungary, on the review of the Conference agenda. In August, the Special Coordinators reported to the Conference on the results of their consultations, each citing a lack of adequate time to complete his task and suggesting further consultations the following year.

Regarding the expansion of Conference membership, while no delegation was opposed to expansion in principle, there were divergent views as to its appropriate timing and scope as well as the possible selection criteria for new members. Thus, no decision was made on the expansion in 1997.

Following the expansion of the membership to 60 in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 449], there were still 14 outstanding applications (in order of receipt): Ireland, Tunisia, Ecuador, Greece, Croatia, Kuwait, Portugal, Slovenia, Czech Republic, Malaysia, Costa Rica, Denmark, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Cyprus.

The Special Coordinator on improved and effective functioning reported that in his consultations he had found a reaffirmation of several rules of procedure of the Conference on Disarmament. Chile had suggested updating Conference rules of procedure [CD/1473]. Areas needing further consultations included the possibility of applying the rule of consensus to matters of substance only and of adopting the agenda and the programme of work on a biennial or pluri-annual basis. Some delegations had proposed including in the annual reports of the Conference a brief description of: main themes and proposals made in statements at plenary meetings, without value judgement; strengthening the authority and function of the presidency; and greater involvement of non-governmental organizations in its work.

The Special Coordinator on the review of the agenda reported that there were two schools of thought. Some delegations believed that the Conference should maintain its current agenda, which could be changed only by a new special session on disarmament of the General Assembly, and which should have nuclear disarmament as the priority. Others preferred to replace the current agenda with a new, updated one that would establish three broad items: "Nuclear disarmament", "Conventional disarmament" and "Other items" (mainly to deal with outer space issues). He concluded that consensus on the future agenda was not within reach.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/602], adopted resolution 52/40 A without vote [agenda item 73 (b)].

Role of the United Nations in disarmament

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the United Nations has a central role and primary responsibility in the field of disarmament,

Recalling in this regard the various resolutions and decisions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular the principles and priorities established by consensus in the Declaration and the Programme of Action contained in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, which define the role of the United Nations and form the basis for the existing disarmament machinery, in the context of the implementation of the responsibilities of the Organization under the Charter of the United Nations,

4. Affirms its support for the objectives of nuclear and conventional disarmament, as set out in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament;

5. Reiterates that nuclear disarmament has the highest priority in efforts to advance disarmament on a universal basis;

6. Reaffirms its support for the United Nations machinery on disarmament, which is functioning pursuant to the decisions adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly;

7. Also reaffirms that the Conference on Disarmament is the sole multilateral negotiating body on disarmament;

8. Affirms that the implementation of international treaties dealing with disarmament should be carried out in accordance with the provisions of those treaties and that questions regarding compliance should be addressed in accordance with those provisions and the mechanisms established or envisaged in those provisions;

9. Also affirms that the Secretariat should support the realization of the objectives of disarmament, as set out in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, which was adopted by consensus.

Nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament

Following the opening for signature in 1996 of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) [YUN 1996, p. 452], and its signing by a vast majority of States, including the five nuclear-weapon States (China, France, Russian Federation, United Kingdom, United States), the most important events in the multilateral nuclear field in 1997 were the work of the Preparatory Commission for the CTBT Organization and its subsidiary bodies to prepare for the Treaty's entry into force and to build the International Monitoring System, together with the ongoing review process of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

Because of continuing strong differences of views among States concerning priorities and approaches, there was no progress on other nuclear issues, such as a cut-off convention on the production of fissile material, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, and multilateral negotiations on the broad subject of nuclear disarmament in the Conference on Disarmament.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

In 1997, Oman acceded to the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [GA res. 2373(XXII)], bringing the number of States parties to 186 at year's end.

Following NPT's entry into force on 5 March 1970, quinquennial review conferences were held in 1975 [YUN 1975, p. 27], 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 51], 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 56], 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 50] and 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 189], as called for under article VIII, paragraph 3, of the Treaty.

The Preparatory Committee for the 2000 NPT Review Conference (New York, 7-18 April) [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/32 & Corr.1] reviewed the operation of the Treaty, taking into account the decisions and the resolution adopted at the 1995 Review Conference. In doing so, it based itself on the allocation of items to the three Main Committees of the 1995 Conference, allowing for a balanced consideration of issues relating to the universality of the Treaty, non-proliferation and nuclear disarmament, security assurances to non-nuclear-weapon States, establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and peaceful uses of nuclear energy. During the deliberations, States parties put forward numerous proposals in which they reviewed developments since the 1995 Conference and outlined measures for further action. In discussing the possible result of the work of the Preparatory Committee, a large number of delegations favoured the elaboration of a document, either in the form of a chairman's report or of a "rolling text" [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/29 & Corr.1].

The issue of universality of the Treaty was addressed by almost all States parties. Those States not yet parties, particularly those operating unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, were urged to accede to the Treaty at the earliest possible date.

As to nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament, the importance of the conclusion of CTBT and its signature by an overwhelming majority of States was underlined, and hope for early ratification of the Treaty was expressed. A number of States parties considered that since CTBT had been opened for signature, it was important to tackle the second objective of the programme of action on nuclear disarmament, as contained in the 1995 decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament [YUN 1995, p. 189], i.e., negotiations on a convention banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices. Participants widely deplored that the Conference on Disarmament had thus far been unable to commence such negotiations.

In a joint statement of 8 April [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/2], the five nuclear-weapon States outlined their positions on nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament. They reiterated their strong support for the Treaty and their determination to continue to implement fully its provisions, and reaffirmed their determination to continue their pursuit of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and the pursuit by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control.

The importance of the consolidation of existing nuclear-weapon-free zones was underlined and the establishment of new zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned was encouraged. Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan reaffirmed their commitment to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/14]. Belarus and Ukraine referred to their initiatives for a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central and Eastern Europe [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/19]. Mongolia underlined the importance of single-State nuclear-weapon-free zones [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/12].

Regarding security assurances, Myanmar, Nigeria and the Sudan submitted a proposal for a draft protocol to NPT to assure non-nuclear-weapon States parties against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/16 & Corr.1].

In their joint statement of 8 April (see above), the five nuclear-weapon States expressed support for a strengthened and more efficient safeguards system and declared their intention to apply those measures provided for in the IAEA model protocol (see below, under "IAEA safeguards"). A number of States pointed out that nuclear material transferred from military uses to peaceful activities should be placed under IAEA safeguards. It was also stressed that full-scope safeguards were a necessary precondition for the transfer of special fissionable material or material designed or prepared for the processing, use and production of special fissionable material to non-nuclear-weapon States.

Concerning peaceful uses of nuclear energy, mainly the issue of international standards for nuclear safety and security, some countries, particularly those of the South Pacific, expressed concern about the safety of marine transport of irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium and radioactive waste [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/30]. Most States strongly supported the early conclusion of and widest possible adherence to relevant international legal instruments, such as the 1980 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material [YUN 1980, p. 161], the 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety [YUN 1994, p. 925], and the 1997 Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management (see below, under "Nuclear safety and radioactive waste"). In that regard, some States parties stressed that such applicable rules of international law should not impair navigational rights and freedoms [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/9].

On the issue of conversion of nuclear material to peaceful uses, some States parties, in particular the Central Asian States [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/18], the Marshall Islands [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/11] and Norway [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/28], underlined the need to pay increased attention to the problems of safety and contamination related to former operations associated with nuclear-weapon programmes. They also called for expertise and assistance in the clean-up and disposal of radioactive contaminants in affected areas.

A number of States parties also referred to the role of export control regimes, calling for more transparency, dialogue and objectivity in export controls. It was also felt that unilaterally enforced restrictive measures, beyond safeguards required under NPT, which prevented peaceful nuclear development should be removed.

Non-aligned States in particular expressed concern at the situation in the Middle East [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/10] and called for the implementation of the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review Conference [YUN 1995, p. 189]. They stated that the Preparatory Committee should recommend ways to get all parties directly concerned to undertake steps required to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. On 10 April [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/5], Egypt, on behalf of the members of the League of Arab States that were parties to NPT, stressed that there was an urgent need to assess the situation in the Middle East with a view to adopting recommendations made by the Committee pertaining to ways to ensure the implementation of the provisions of the 1995 resolution.

As a result of consultations with a small number of delegations, the Chairman presented a paper [NPT/CONF.2000/PC.I/32] that was intended to serve as the basis for further work on draft recommendations to the 2000 Review Conference. The paper consisted of two parts—one identifying points of general agreement on draft recommendations for the Conference, subject to review and updating at subsequent sessions and pending agreement on all draft recommendations at the last session; the other listing the specific proposals put forward by delegations on the understanding that they did not commit the Preparatory Committee and were without prejudice to the position of any delegation. The list was not exclusive and delegations were free to submit new proposals or modify or withdraw old ones at any further session of the Committee. Since there was concern regarding the status of the Chairman's paper and individual proposals by the delegations, the Committee finally agreed that the Chairman's working paper and the official documents and other proposals put forward by delegations on the sets of issues would be taken into account during further work of the Committee.

Based on proposals put forward to allocate time for consideration of specific issues at the Committee's second (1998) session, the Chairman suggested that the Committee should allocate time for subject areas dealing with security assurances for parties to NPT, the resolution on the Middle East; and the provision, in the Treaty's paragraph 4 (b) of the principles and objectives, on a non-discriminatory and universally applicable convention banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices. One State (Mexico) considered that the principal objective of the new process to review NPT was nuclear disarmament and that that priority must be duly reflected in any consideration of substantive issues. It suggested therefore that nuclear disarmament should be the fourth issue to which additional time should be allocated. There was no consensus within the Committee on such an approach. As a compromise, the Chairman read out a statement, according to which the Committee would recommend that within the existing agenda and in accordance with the methods of work adopted at the first session, time should be allocated at its second session for the discussion on and the consideration of the subject areas suggested by him, without prejudice to the importance of other issues.

The second session was to take place from 27 April to 8 May 1998 in Geneva; the third session, from 12 to 23 April 1999 in New York; and the Review Conference, from 24 April to 19 May 2000, also in New York.

Fissile material cut-off

Although in 1997 the Conference on Disarmament did not agree to establish an ad hoc committee to negotiate a fissile material cut-off treaty, the issue was extensively addressed during the plenary and informal meetings of the Conference. Differences among States concerning fissile material were reflected as follows: one advocated a cut-off convention as a separate measure, and the other, a measure to be taken within a programme for nuclear disarmament. Also, there were differences regarding scope, i.e., whether the convention should deal only with future production of fissile material or encompass the existing stockpiles.

At the bilateral level, the Russian Federation and the United States signed a joint statement on material production, control and accounting during a meeting of their Joint Commission on Economic and Technological Cooperation (Gore-Chernomyrdin Commission) in February. On 23 September, the United States-Russian Plutonium Production Reactor Agreement was signed, which entered into force immediately. The Agreement marked the first time that the two States had placed limits on the materials for nuclear warheads rather than on their delivery vehicles, as was done in the START Treaties (see below) and the 1987 Treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles (INF Treaty) [YUN 1987, p. 47].

On 30 September, representatives of the Russian Federation, the United States and IAEA met in Vienna to review progress made during the year in the trilateral initiative (launched on 17 September 1996 by the Russian Minister of Atomic Energy, the United States Secretary of Energy and the IAEA Director General) to consider practical measures for the application of IAEA verification to weapons-origin fissile material. The joint group addressed the scope and purposes of IAEA verification, the location, types and amount of weapons-origin fissile material potentially subject to IAEA verification and other questions. During the year, Russian and United States experts exchanged visits and invited IAEA experts for a joint demonstration of verification and monitoring technologies.

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/245 [YUN 1996, p. 454], the Secretary-General, as depositary of the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty (CTBT) [YUN 1996, p. 451], reported on the status of the Treaty [A/52/545]. As at 29 October 1997, the Treaty, which was opened for signature on 24 September 1996, had been signed by 148 States and ratified by seven. As at 31 December 1997, 149 States had signed the Treaty and eight had ratified it—Czech Republic, Fiji, Japan, Micronesia, Mongolia, Peru, Qatar, Uzbekistan. Japan and Peru were among the 44 States listed in article XIV of the Treaty as States that must sign and ratify it to effect its entry into force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/593], adopted decision 52/414 by recorded vote (154-0-4) [agenda item 64].

Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty

At its 67th plenary meeting, on 9 December 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, recalling its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty".

Preparatory Commission for CTBT Organization

The Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization, which was established and held the first part of its first session in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 452], reconvened the first session from 3 to 7 March 1997 in Geneva [CTBT/PC/I/22 and Corr.1]. The Commission decided to establish the Provisional Technical Secretariat (PTS) to assist it in preparing for the implementation of the Treaty's verification system; established two working groups, one on administrative and budgetary matters and the other on verification issues; elected its Executive Secretary; and adopted a programme of work and budget for the remainder of 1997. PTS officially started work in Vienna on 17 March. The Treaty had designated Vienna as the seat of CTBT, once it entered into force.

The Preparatory Commission held three more sessions in 1997, while its two working groups and a financial advisory group also met between sessions to prepare for plenary sessions. At its second session (Vienna, 12-16 May) [CTBT/PC/II/1 & Add.1-3], the Commission adopted the plans recommended by its verification working group for the commissioning of the International Data Centre, which was to receive, collect, process, analyse, report on and archive data from the International Monitoring System (IMS) facilities, and the specifications on the seismic, infrasound, radionuclide and hydroacoustic stations of IMS (a worldwide network of 321 monitoring stations). In addition, it entrusted PTS with implementing the steps to acquire the global communications infrastructure.

At the Commission's third session (Vienna, 15-19 September) [CTBT/PC/III/1/Rev.2 & Add.1,2 & Add.3/Rev.1 & Add.4/Rev.1], in reviewing its 1998 programme and budget, differences became pronounced over how quickly to establish the operational verification system. While some signatories called for establishing the system at the earliest possible date, others favoured a measured pace or felt such a pace to be unavoidable. Agreement was reached at the fourth session (Vienna, 15-18 December) [CTBT/PC/IV/1/Rev.1 & Add.1-3] to approve a programme of work and budget for 1998 in the amount of $58.4 million. It decided to hold its fifth session from 6 to 9 April 1998 in Vienna.

Issues related to START and other bilateral agreements

The United States and the Russian Federation continued to implement the 1991 Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (START I) [YUN 1991, p. 34], which was signed by the Presidents of the former USSR and the United States and had entered into force on 5 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 145], by dismantling and destroying warheads at the rate of approximately 2,000 a year. By the end of 1997, both parties had reduced their nuclear-delivery vehicles below the limits set for December 2001, although the Russian Federation encountered some delays in dismantling. In addition, the dismantling of missiles in Ukraine continued.

There were some positive developments concerning the 1993 START II [YUN 1993, p. 117], although the Russian Federation had not ratified the Treaty by the end of the year. In a joint statement on parameters on future reductions in nuclear forces [CD/1460], issued in Helsinki, Finland, on 21 March, Russian President Boris Yeltsin and United States President William J. Clinton agreed that once START II had entered into force the two States would immediately begin negotiations on a START III agreement, which would include, among other things, the establishment of lower aggregate levels of their strategic nuclear warheads; measures relating to the transparency of strategic nuclear warhead inventories and the destruction of the warheads; placement in a deactivated status of all strategic nuclear-delivery vehicles that would be eliminated under START II; and postponement of the deadline for their elimination.

In another joint statement [CD/1460] on 21 March, the two Presidents recognized the fundamental significance of the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty and the necessity for effective theatre missile defence (TMD), and reaffirmed the principles of their 1995 joint statement [YUN 1995, p. 198], which would serve as a basis for reaching agreement on demarcation between ABM systems and TMD systems.

In order to give concrete substance to their shared commitment to build a stable, peaceful and undivided Europe, members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the Russian Federation signed the Founding Act on Mutual Relations, Cooperation and Security [A/52/161-S/1997/413] in Paris on 27 May, establishing a NATO-Russia Permanent Joint Council to provide a forum for consultations, coordination and, to the maximum extent possible, where appropriate, joint decisions and joint action with respect to security issues of common concern in Europe.

Note by Secretary-General. In October [A/52/414], the Secretary-General noted the efforts by the nuclear-weapon States to further reduce nuclear weapons, building on the progress already achieved. He stated that the systematic and progressive reduction of nuclear weapons remained a priority task.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1997, the General Assembly adopted a series of resolutions on the elimination of nuclear weapons.

On 9 December [meeting 67], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee

[A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 K by recorded vote (156-0-10) [agenda item 71].

Nuclear disarmament with a view to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 H of 15 December 1994, 50/70 C of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 G of 10 December 1996,

Recognizing that the end of the cold war has increased the possibility of freeing the world from the fear of nuclear war,

Appreciating the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America are parties, and looking forward to the early entry into force of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, which was ratified by the United States of America,

Welcoming the reductions in the nuclear arsenals of other nuclear-weapon States,

Welcoming the removal of all nuclear weapons of the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from the territories of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine,

Welcoming the joint statement issued by the Presidents of the Russian Federation and the United States of America at Helsinki on 21 March 1997, which set forth the common understanding that, once the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms enters into force, these two States will immediately begin negotiations on a START III agreement,

Welcoming the decision of the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to extend the Treaty indefinitely, taken without a vote, as well as the decisions on strengthening the review process for the Treaty and on the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament,

Noting the reference in the decision on the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament to the importance of the following measures for the full realization and effective implementation of article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, including the programme of action as reflected below:

(a) The completion by the Conference on Disarmament of the negotiations on a universal and internationally and effectively verifiable comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty no later than 1996, and utmost restraint that should be exercised by the nuclear-weapon States pending the entry into force of that treaty,

(b) The immediate commencement and early conclusion of negotiations on a non-discriminatory and universally applicable convention banning the production of fissile materials for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices in accordance with the statement of the Special Coordinator of the Conference on Disarmament and the mandate contained therein,

(c) The determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty at the fiftieth session of the General Assembly and its opening for signature at the beginning of the fifty-first session, and noting the subsequent signing of that Treaty by over one hundred and forty Member States,

Welcoming also the smooth start of the strengthened review process of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons with the successful conclusion in April 1997 of the first meeting of the Preparatory Committee for the next Review Conference, which will be held in the year 2000,

Recalling that nuclear non-proliferation and the promotion of nuclear disarmament are key elements in the maintenance of international peace and security, which is one of the most important purposes of the United Nations,

1. Urges States not parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to accede to it at the earliest possible date, recognizing the importance of universal adherence to the Treaty;

2. Calls for the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, and invites them to keep States Members of the United Nations duly informed of the progress or efforts made;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts in the dismantlement of nuclear weapons, and notes the importance of the safe and effective management of the resultant fissile materials;

4. Calls upon all States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to make their best efforts for the success of the next Review Conference, which will be held in the year 2000;

5. Calls upon all States to implement fully their commitments in the field of disarmament and non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/38 K:

In the First Committee, paragraph 1 and the ninth preambular paragraph were adopted by separate recorded votes of 142 to 3, with 1 abstention, and 141 to 1, with 4 abstentions, respectively.

Also on 9 December [meeting 67], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 L by recorded vote (109-39-18) [agenda item 71 (m)].

Nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/75 E of 15 December 1994 on a step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat, and its resolutions 50/70 P of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 O of 10 December 1996 on nuclear disarmament,

Reaffirming the commitment of the international community to the goal of the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free world,

Bearing in mind that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction have already established legal regimes on the complete prohibition of biological and chemical weapons, respectively, and determined to achieve a nuclear weapons convention on the prohibition of the testing, development, production, stockpiling, loan, transfer, use and threat of use of nuclear weapons and on their destruction, and to conclude such an international convention at an early date,

Recognizing that there now exist favourable conditions for creating a world free of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 50 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, calling for the urgent negotiation of agreements for the cessation of the qualitative improvement and development of nuclear-weapon systems, and for a comprehensive and phased programme with agreed timeframes, wherever feasible, for the progressive and balanced reduction of nuclear weapons and their means of delivery, leading to their ultimate and complete elimination at the earliest possible time,

Reiterating the highest priority accorded to nuclear disarmament in the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly and by the international community,

Recognizing that the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and any proposed treaty on fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices must constitute disarmament measures, and not only non-proliferation measures, and that these measures, together with an international legal instrument on adequate security assurances for non-nuclear-weapon States and an international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons, must be integral steps leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Welcoming the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, to which Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation,

Ukraine and the United States of America are States parties,

Welcoming also the conclusion of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms by the Russian Federation and the United States of America and the ratification of that Treaty by the United States of America, and looking forward to the full implementation of the START I and START II Treaties by the States parties, and to further concrete steps for nuclear disarmament by all nuclear-weapon States,

Noting with appreciation the unilateral measures by the nuclear-weapon States for nuclear arms limitation, and encouraging them to undertake further such measures,

Recognizing the complementarity of bilateral and multilateral negotiations on nuclear disarmament, and that bilateral negotiations can never replace multilateral negotiations in this respect,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and the multilateral efforts in the Conference on Disarmament to reach agreement on such an international convention at an early date,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996, and welcoming the unanimous reaffirmation by all Judges of the Court that there exists an obligation for all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Mindful of paragraph 84 and other relevant recommendations in the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee to commence negotiations early in 1996 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework; paragraph 58 of the final document of the Twelfth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi on 7 and 8 April 1997; and paragraphs 40 to 42 of the communique of the Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegations of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries to the Fifty-second Session of the General Assembly, held in New York on 25 September 1997, which called for, as a first step, the conclusion of a universal and legally binding multilateral agreement committing all States to the total elimination of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind the proposal of twenty-eight delegations to the Conference on Disarmament that are members of the Group of 21 for a programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons, and expressing its conviction that this proposal will be an important input and will contribute to negotiations on this question in the Conference,

Commending the initiative by twenty-six delegations to the Conference on Disarmament that are members of the Group of 21, proposing a comprehensive mandate for an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament, which includes negotiations for, as a first step, a universal and legally binding multilateral agreement committing all States to the objective of the total elimination of nuclear weapons, an agreement on further steps required in a phased programme with time-frames leading to the total elimination of these weapons and a convention on the prohibition of the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons and other nuclear explosive devices taking into account the report of the Special Coordinator on that item and the views relating to the scope of the treaty,

1. Recognizes that, in view of recent political developments, the time is now opportune for all nuclear-weapon States to undertake effective disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons within a time-bound framework;

2. Recognizes also that there is a genuine need to de-emphasize the role of nuclear weapons, and to review and revise nuclear doctrines accordingly;

3. Urges the nuclear-weapon States to stop immediately the qualitative improvement, development, production and stockpiling of nuclear warheads and their delivery systems;

4. Reiterates its call upon the nuclear-weapon States to undertake the step-by-step reduction of the nuclear threat and a phased programme of progressive and balanced deep reductions of nuclear weapons, and to carry out effective nuclear disarmament measures with a view to the total elimination of these weapons within a time-bound framework;

5. Expresses its concern at the continuing opposition by some States to the establishment of an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament in the Conference on Disarmament, as called for in General Assembly resolution 51/45 O;

6. Reiterates its call upon the Conference on Disarmament to establish, on a priority basis, an ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament to commence negotiations early in 1998 on a phased programme of nuclear disarmament and for the eventual elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework through a nuclear weapons convention;

7. Urges the Conference on Disarmament to take into account in this regard the proposal of the twenty-eight delegations for a programme of action for the elimination of nuclear weapons, as well as the mandate for the ad hoc committee on nuclear disarmament, proposed by the twenty-six delegations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Nuclear disarmament".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/38 L:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Trini-

On the same date [meeting 67], the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 M by recorded vote (161-0-8) [agenda item 71].

Bilateral nuclear arms negotiations and nuclear disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions,

Recognizing the fundamental changes that have taken place with respect to international security, which have permitted agreements on deep reductions in the nuclear armaments of the States possessing the largest inventories of such weapons,

Mindful that it is the responsibility and obligation of all States to contribute to the process of the relaxation of international tension and to the strengthening of international peace and security and, in this connection, to adopt and implement measures towards the attainment of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Appreciating a number of positive developments in the field of nuclear disarmament, in particular the Treaty between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, and the treaties on the reduction and limitation of strategic offensive arms,

Appreciating also the indefinite extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and acknowledging the importance of the determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons, and by all States of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control,

Welcoming the steps that have already been taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America to begin the process of reducing the number of nuclear weapons and removing such weapons from a deployed status, and bilateral agreements on de-targeting strategic nuclear missiles,

Noting the new climate of relations between the States of the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, which permits them to intensify their cooperative efforts to ensure the safety, security, and environmentally sound destruction of nuclear weapons,

Recalling the Moscow Summit Declaration on Nuclear Safety and Security of April 1996, Urging early action to complete the ratification of the Treaty on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms and further intensification of efforts to accelerate the implementation of agreements and unilateral decisions relating to nuclear arms reduction,

Appreciating the joint statement on future reductions in nuclear forces and the joint statement outlining the elements of an agreement for higher-velocity theatre missile defence systems, both issued on 21 March 1997 by the Russian Federation and the United States of America, as well as their joint statement of 10 May 1995 in connection with the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems,

Welcoming the significant reductions made by other nuclear-weapon States, and encouraging all nuclear-weapon States to consider appropriate measures relating to nuclear disarmament,

1. Welcomes the entry into force of the Treaty on the Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms, signed in Moscow on 31 July 1991 by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America, including the Protocol to that Treaty signed at Lisbon on 23 May 1992 by the parties thereto, and the exchange of documents of ratification between Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America on 5 December 1994 at Budapest;

2. Also welcomes the signing of the Treaty between the Russian Federation and the United States of America on Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms in Moscow on 3 January 1993, and urges the parties to take the steps necessary to bring that Treaty into force at the earliest possible date;

3. Further welcomes the joint statement issued at Helsinki on 21 March 1997, in which Presidents Yeltsin and Clinton reached an understanding that after the entry into force of START II their two countries would immediately commence negotiations on a START III agreement, which would include the establishment, by 31 December 2007, of lower aggregate levels of 2,000 to 2,500 strategic nuclear warheads, take measures relating to the transparency of strategic nuclear warhead inventories and destruction of strategic nuclear warheads, and carry out other actions to promote the irreversibility of these deep reductions;

4. Notes with satisfaction the Protocol to START II, the Joint Agreed Statement, and the Letters on Early Deactivation, signed by the Russian Federation and the United States of America in New York on 26 September 1997, which are intended to promote the further process of still deeper reductions and limitations of strategic offensive arms;

5. Welcomes the signing on 26 September 1997 by Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America of a number of significant agreements that contribute to ensuring the viability of the Treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems;

6. Expresses its satisfaction at the entry into force and ongoing implementation of the 1991 Treaty as well as the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States of America to the 1993 Treaty, and expresses its hope that it will soon be possible for the Russian Federation to take corresponding steps for ratifying that Treaty;

7. Expresses further satisfaction at the continuing implementation of the Treaty between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range and Shorter-Range Missiles, in particular at the completion by the parties of the destruction of all their declared missiles subject to elimination under the Treaty;

8. Welcomes the removal of all nuclear weapons from the territory of Kazakhstan as of 1 June 1995, from the territory of Ukraine as of 1 June 1996 and from the territory of Belarus as of 30 November 1996;

9. Encourages Belarus, Kazakhstan, the Russian Federation, Ukraine and the United States of America to continue their cooperative efforts aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons and strategic offensive arms on the basis of existing agreements, and welcomes the contributions that other States are making to such cooperation as well;

10. Welcomes the participation in the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine as non-nuclear States, which thereby provided notable enhancement of the non-proliferation regime;

11. Urges the Russian Federation and the United States of America to commence negotiations on a START III agreement immediately after START II enters into force, thereby realizing the understandings they reached in the joint statement issued at Helsinki;

12. Encourages and supports the Russian Federation and the United States of America in their efforts to reduce their nuclear weapons and to continue to give those efforts the highest priority in order to contribute to the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons;

13. Invites the Russian Federation and the United States of America to keep other States Members of the United Nations duly informed of progress in their discussions and in the implementation of their strategic offensive arms agreements and unilateral decisions.

Nuclear explosive testing

Although CTBT had not entered into force by the end of the year, the signing of the Treaty by the five nuclear-weapon States strengthened their unilateral moratoriums on testing, which had been declared at different times. The former USSR conducted its last nuclear test on 24 October 1990 [YUN 1991, p. 39] and the Russian Federation maintained the moratorium; the United Kingdom's last test was on 26 November 1991; the United States, on 23 September 1992. China conducted its last test explosion on 29 July 1996 and declared a moratorium on further testing effective the following day [YUN 1996, p. 455]. France conducted its last nuclear test explosion on 27 January 1996 and announced the end of its testing programme two days later [YUN 1996, p. 454]; France had not conducted nuclear tests from 15 June 1991 to 5 September 1995.

During the year, the United States conducted two subcritical experiments at its Nevada test site (on 2 July and on 18 September), stating that they were scientific experiments to obtain technical information in support of the Department of Energy programme to maintain the safety and reliability of the United States nuclear weapons stockpiles without nuclear testing. Although it was considered that those types of tests were not prohibited by CTBT, Indonesia on 18 July [CD/1469] expressed deep concern, stating that the conduct of the experiment was in principle inconsistent with the faith and spirit enshrined in the Treaty. It stated that other technologically advanced countries could be encouraged to follow suit and would undermine the objective and purpose of CTBT.

IAEA safeguards

The Committee on Strengthening the Effectiveness and Improving the Efficiency of the Safeguards System met twice in 1997 (Vienna, 20-31 January and 2-4 April). It had been established by the IAEA Board of Governors in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 462] to draw up a draft model protocol to supplement the existing safeguards inspection agreements between IAEA and non-nuclear-weapon States and to define the nature of additional information and additional access to nuclear-related locations that were to be inspected.

In 1997, the Committee completed its mandate and transmitted the draft Model Protocol Additional to Safeguards Agreements for approval by the Board of Governors, which did so on 15 May. The Protocol represented the first major change in the IAEA safeguards system in 25 years, and identified new technologies and new methods to strengthen safeguards and improve efficiency. That strengthened safeguards verification system was to focus on increased access to information regarding a State's nuclear activities; broader access to nuclear sites and other locations within a State, involving no-notice inspections and greater freedom of movement for inspectors; and maximum use of new and available technologies to increase detection capacity and, in due course, to reduce the frequency of on-site inspections.

By the end of 1997, seven States had signed a Protocol Additional to their safeguards agreements.

Concerning the implementation of the agreement between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) for the application of safeguards in connection with the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the IAEA Director General noted that, although there had been improvement in the means of communication between IAEA inspectors in the DPRK and IAEA headquarters and that the DPRK had also accepted the designation of additional inspectors, cooperation remained limited.

On 3 October, the IAEA General Conference adopted a resolution in which, among other things, it expressed concern over the continuing non-compliance of the DPRK with the IAEA-DPRK safeguards agreement, and called on the DPRK to comply fully with it and to cooperate fully with the Agency in implementing it. (See also PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

As to Iraq, the IAEA Nuclear Monitoring Group, assisted by and in coordination with the United Nations Special Commission on Iraqi disarmament (UNSCOM), continued to implement an ongoing plan for monitoring and verifying Iraq's compliance with relevant Security Council resolutions. The deterioration in relations between Iraq and UNSCOM, which generated a number of Council resolutions and presidential statements, also affected the work of the IAEA inspection teams.

The IAEA General Conference adopted, on 3 October, a resolution on the implementation of Council resolutions relating to Iraq, by which it stressed Iraq's obligation to hand over without delay currently undisclosed nuclear-weapon-related equipment, material and information and to allow IAEA inspectors unconditional and unrestricted rights of access, in accordance with Council resolution 707(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 188]. (See also PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

Middle East

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/48 [YUN 1996, p. 457], the Secretary-General in October reported [A/52/454] on the risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East. He stated that, apart from the text of an IAEA resolution adopted by its General Conference on 3 October, annexed to his report, he had received no additional information on the subject since the submission of his 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 457].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/603], adopted resolution 52/41 by recorded vote (147-2-14) [agenda item 74].

The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the latest of which is resolution GC(41)/RES/25, adopted on 3 October 1997,

Cognizant that the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the region of the Middle East would pose a serious threat to international peace and security,

Mindful of the immediate need to place all nuclear facilities in the region of the Middle East under full-scope safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Agency,

Recalling the resolution on the Middle East adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference noted with concern the continued existence in the Middle East of unsafeguarded nuclear facilities, reaffirmed the importance of the early realization of universal adherence to the Treaty, and called upon all States in the Middle East that had not yet done so, without exception, to accede to the Treaty as soon as possible and to place all their nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards,

Recalling also the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted by the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons on 11 May 1995, in which the Conference urged universal adherence to the Treaty as an urgent priority and called upon all States not yet party to the Treaty to accede to it at the earliest date, in particular those States which operate unsafeguarded nuclear facilities,

Noting that, since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 51/48 of 10 December 1996, Israel remains the only State in the Middle East that has not yet become party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Concerned over the threats posed by the proliferation of nuclear weapons to the security and stability of the region of the Middle East,

Stressing the importance of undertaking confidence-building measures, in particular the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East, in order to enhance peace and security in the region and to consolidate the global non-proliferation regime,

Noting the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty and its signature by one hundred and forty-nine States, including a number of States in the region,

1. Calls upon the only State in the region of the Middle East that is not party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to accede to it without further delay, and not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons and to renounce possession of nuclear weapons, and to place all its unsafeguarded nuclear facilities under full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards as an important confidence-building measure among all States of the region and as a step towards enhancing peace and security;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/41:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda,* Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syria, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

In the First Committee, the sixth preambular paragraph was adopted by a separate recorded vote of 137 to 2, with 3 abstentions.

Nuclear safety and radioactive waste

On 29 September, the Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management was opened for signature at IAEA headquarters in Vienna. The Joint Convention applied to spent fuel and radioactive waste resulting from civilian nuclear reactors and applications and to spent fuel and radioactive waste from military or defence programmes, if and when such materials were transferred permanently to and managed within exclusively civilian programmes, or when declared as spent fuel or radioactive waste for the purpose of the Convention. As at 31 December 1997, 26 States had signed the Convention.

The International Advisory Committee on the Study of the Radiological Situation at the Atolls of Mururoa and Fangataufa, established in 1996 by IAEA at the request of France, was asked to: assess the radiological situation at the two atolls and involved areas from the point of view of radiological safety; ascertain whether there were any radiological hazards to people; and make recommendations on the form, scale and duration of any monitoring, remedial action or other follow-up action that might be required. The Committee set up a number of task groups and working groups. The final drafts of their technical reports were completed by the end of the year, and a meeting of the Committee was scheduled for February 1998 to approve the study. An international conference on the study was planned for mid-1998, at which the results were to be discussed by the scientific community and other interested parties. The Committee was composed of 10 prominent scientists from 10 IAEA member States as well as ex-officio representatives from the World Health Organization, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, the South Pacific Forum and the European Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 6] the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 I without vote [agenda item 71 (i)].

Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind resolutions CM/Res.1153(XLVIII) of 1988 and CM/Res.1225(L) of 1989, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, concerning the dumping of nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa,

Welcoming resolution GC(XXXIV)/RES/530 establishing a Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste, adopted on 21 September 1990 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-fourth regular session,

Welcoming also resolution GC(XXXVIII)/RES/6, adopted on 23 September 1994 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its thirty-eighth regular session, inviting the Board of Governors and the Director General of the Agency to commence preparations for a convention on the safety of radioactive waste management, and noting the progress that has been made in that regard,

Taking note of the commitment by the participants at the Summit on Nuclear Safety and Security, held in Moscow on 19 and 20 April 1996, to ban the dumping at sea of radioactive wastes,

Considering its resolution 2602 C (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it requested the Conference of the Committee on Disarmament, inter alia, to consider effective methods of control against the use of radiological methods of warfare,

Recalling resolution CM/Res.1356(LIV) of 1991, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, on the Bamako Convention on the Ban on the Import of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and on the Control of Their Transboundary Movements within Africa,

Aware of the potential hazards underlying any use of radioactive wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and its implications for regional and international security, in particular for the security of developing countries,

Recalling all its resolutions on the matter since its forty-third session in 1988, including its resolution 51/45 J of 10 December 1996,

Desirous of promoting the implementation of paragraph 76 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

1. Takes note of the part of the report of the Conference on Disarmament relating to a future convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons;
2. Expresses grave concern regarding any use of nuclear wastes that would constitute radiological warfare and have grave implications for the national security of all States;
3. Calls upon all States to take appropriate measures with a view to preventing any dumping of nuclear or radioactive wastes that would infringe upon the sovereignty of States;
4. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to take into account, in the negotiations for a convention on the prohibition of radiological weapons, radioactive wastes as part of the scope of such a convention;
5. Also requests the Conference on Disarmament to intensify efforts towards an early conclusion of such a convention and to include in its report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session the progress recorded in the negotiations on this subject;
6. Takes note of resolution CM/Res.1356(LIV) of 1991, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity, on the Bamako Convention on the Ban on the Import of Hazardous Wastes into Africa and on the Control of Their Transboundary Movements within Africa;
7. Expresses the hope that the effective implementation of the International Atomic Energy Agency Code of Practice on the International Transboundary Movement of Radioactive Waste will enhance the protection of all States from the dumping of radioactive wastes on their territories;
8. Welcomes the adoption at Vienna on 5 September 1997 of the Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management, as recommended by the participants in the Moscow Summit on Nuclear Safety and Security, and the signing of the Joint Convention by a number of States beginning on 29 September 1997, and appeals to all States to sign and subsequently ratify, accept or approve the Convention, so that it may enter into force as soon as possible;
9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Prohibition of the dumping of radioactive wastes".

Prohibition of use of nuclear weapons

During the year, the Conference on Disarmament was unable to undertake negotiations on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons, as requested in General Assembly resolution 51/46 D [YUN 1996, p. 458].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/601], adopted resolution 52/39 C by recorded vote (109-30-27) [agenda item 72 (c)].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Convinced that the use of nuclear weapons poses the most serious threat to the survival of mankind,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 8 July 1996 on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons,

Convinced that a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons would contribute to the elimination of the nuclear threat and to the climate for negotiations leading to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, thereby strengthening international peace and security,

Conscious that some steps taken by the Russian Federation and the United States of America towards a reduction of their nuclear weapons and the improvement in the international climate can contribute towards the goal of the complete elimination of nuclear weapons,

Recalling that, in paragraph 58 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, it is stated that all States should actively participate in efforts to bring about conditions in international relations among States in which a code of peaceful conduct of nations in international affairs could be agreed upon and that would preclude the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming that any use of nuclear weapons would be a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity, as declared in its resolutions 1653(XVI) of 24 November 1961, 33/71 B of 14 December 1978, 34/83 G of 11 December 1979, 35/152 D of 12 December 1980 and 36/92 I of 9 December 1981,

Determined to achieve a universal nuclear weapons convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Stressing that an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Noting with regret that the Conference on Disarmament, during its 1997 session, was unable to undertake negotiations on this subject as called for in General Assembly resolution 51/46 D of 10 December 1996,

1. Reiterates its request to the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations, in order to reach agreement on an international convention prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons under any circumstances, taking as a possible basis the draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament to report to the General Assembly on the results of those negotiations.

ANNEX

Draft Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Alarmed by the threat to the very survival of mankind posed by the existence of nuclear weapons,

Convinced that any use of nuclear weapons constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a crime against humanity,

Desiring to achieve a multilateral, universal and binding agreement prohibiting the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice that there exists an obligation of all States to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control,

Determined, therefore, to achieve a universal nuclear weapons convention prohibiting the development, production, stockpiling and use of nuclear weapons, leading to their ultimate destruction,

Convinced that the present Convention would be an important step in a phased programme towards the complete elimination of nuclear weapons within a time-bound framework,

Determined to continue negotiations for the achievement of this goal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

The States Parties to the present Convention solemnly undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons under any circumstances.

3. The present Convention shall enter into force on the deposit of instruments of ratification by twenty-five Governments, including the Governments of the five nuclear-weapon States, in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article.

4. For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited after the entry into force of the Convention, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

5. The depositary shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and the date of entry into force of the present Convention, as well as of the receipt of other notices.

6. The present Convention shall be registered by the depositary in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Article 4

Security assurances

Although the issue of negative security assurances was discussed at the Preparatory Committee for the 2000 NPT Review Conference (see above), in the Conference on Disarmament and in the First Committee of the General Assembly, the positions of States remained virtually unchanged. In the Conference on Disarmament, the members of the Group of 21 non-aligned countries (Algeria, Bangladesh, Brazil, Cameroon, Colombia, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kenya, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Myanmar, Nigeria, Pakistan, Peru, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Syrian Arab Republic, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Zimbabwe), believing that, pending the total elimination of nuclear weapons, it was imperative to have in place effective international arrangements, and that the assurances thus far given and reflected in Security Council resolution 984(1995)[YUN1995,p.192]fell short of the expectations of the non-nuclear-weapon States, advocated the re-establishment of an ad hoc committee on negative security assurances [CD/1462]. China shared that position, although it viewed the mandate [YUN1992,p.68] that was being proposed for such an ad hoc committee as outdated and weak. Towards the end of the session, South Africa, recalling a proposal it made at the Preparatory Committee, stated that the appropriate venue for discussion of security assurances was the strengthened review process of NPT. It therefore opposed the establishment of an ad hoc committee.

A number of Western delegations expressed some doubts and reservations with regard to the wording of the proposed mandate for an ad hoc committee on security assurances, and a large number of delegations suggested that the current mandate should be updated.

The Russian Federation, referring to the assurances that it and other nuclear States had given to the States parties to NPT, noted that, in addition, the regional arrangements set out in nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties had gone a long way towards providing the assurances that the non-nuclear States had been pursuing for many years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/598], adopted resolution 52/36 by recorded vote (116-0-51) [agenda item 69].

Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the need to allay the legitimate concern of the States of the world with regard to ensuring lasting security for their peoples,

Convinced that nuclear weapons pose the greatest threat to mankind and to the survival of civilization,

Welcoming the progress achieved in recent years in both nuclear and conventional disarmament,

Noting that, despite recent progress in the field of nuclear disarmament, further efforts are necessary towards the achievement of general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Convinced that nuclear disarmament and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons are essential to remove the danger of nuclear war,

Determined strictly to abide by the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations on the non-use of force or threat of force,

Recognizing that the independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty of non-nuclear-weapon States need to be safeguarded against the use or threat of use of force, including the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Considering that, until nuclear disarmament is achieved on a universal basis, it is imperative for the international community to develop effective measures and arrangements to ensure the security of non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons from any quarter,

Recognizing that effective measures and arrangements to assure the non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons can contribute positively to the prevention of the spread of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind paragraph 59 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, in which it urged the nuclear-weapon States to pursue efforts to conclude, as appropriate, effective arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, and desirous of promoting the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Final Document,

Recalling the relevant parts of the special report of the Committee on Disarmament¹ submitted to the General Assembly at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, and of the special report of the Conference on Disarmament submitted to the Assembly at its fifteenth special session, the third special session devoted to disarmament, as well as the report of the Conference on its 1992 session,

Recalling also paragraph 12 of the Declaration of the 1980s as the Second Disarmament Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/46 of 3 December 1980, which states, inter alia, that all efforts should be exerted by the Committee on Disarmament urgently to negotiate with a view to reaching agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Noting the in-depth negotiations undertaken in the Conference on Disarmament and its Ad Hoc Committee on Effective International Arrangements to Assure Non-Nuclear-Weapon States against the Use or Threat of Use of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to reaching agreement on this item,

Taking note of the proposals submitted under that item in the Conference on Disarmament, including the drafts of an international convention,

Taking note also of the relevant decision of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, and also of the decision adopted by the Tenth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 1 to 6 September 1992, as well as the relevant recommendations of the Organization of the Islamic Conference reiterated in the Final Communiqué of the Twentieth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Istanbul from 4 to 8 August 1991, calling upon the Conference on Disarmament to reach an urgent agreement on an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons,

Taking note further of the unilateral declarations made by all nuclear-weapon States on their policies of non-use or non-threat of use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States,

Noting the support expressed in the Conference on Disarmament and in the General Assembly for the elaboration of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, as well as the difficulties pointed out in evolving a common approach acceptable to all,

Noting also the greater willingness to overcome the difficulties encountered in previous years,

Taking note of Security Council resolution 984(1995) of 11 April 1995 and the views expressed on it,

Recalling its relevant resolutions adopted in previous years, in particular resolutions 45/54 of 4 December 1990, 46/32 of 6 December 1991, 47/50 of 9 December 1992, 48/73 of 16 December 1993, 49/73 of 15 December 1994, 50/68 of 12 December 1995 and 51/43 of 10 December 1996,

1. Reaffirms the urgent need to reach an early agreement on effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons;

2. Notes with satisfaction that, in the Conference on Disarmament there is no objection, in principle, to the idea of an international convention to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, although the difficulties as regards evolving a common approach acceptable to all have also been pointed out;

3. Appeals to all States, especially the nuclear-weapon States, to work actively towards an early agreement on a common approach and, in particular, on a common formula that could be included in an international instrument of a legally binding character;

4. Recommends that further intensive efforts should be devoted to the search for such a common approach or common formula and that the various alternative approaches, including, in particular, those considered in the Conference on Disarmament, should be further explored in order to overcome the difficulties;

5. Recommends also that the Conference on Disarmament should actively continue intensive negotiations with a view to reaching early agreement and concluding effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons, taking into account the widespread support for the conclusion of an international convention and giving consideration to any other proposals designed to secure the same objective;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons".

Advisory opinion of International Court of Justice

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) advisory opinion on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons, issued on 8 July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 461], was referred to in the 1997 debates in the Conference on Disarmament and the First Committee. A large number of States, especially non-aligned, referred to the opinion in support of their positions concerning nuclear disarmament and implementation of article VI of NPT. However, a number of countries, especially some nuclear-weapon States, considered that the draft resolution on the opinion either misinterpreted or quoted selectively from it. As a result, the resolution on the subject (see below) was adopted with a considerable number of States voting against it (including four nuclear-weapon States) or abstaining.

Communication. In a letter of 31 October 1997 addressed to the Secretary-General [A/C.1/52/71, Costa Rica, recalling General Assembly resolution 51/45 M on the ICJ advisory opinion [YUN 1996, p. 461], submitted a model nuclear-weapons convention setting forth what it said were the legal, technical and political issues that should be considered to obtain a nuclear-weapons convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 O by recorded vote (116-26-24) [agenda item 71 (k)].

Advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/75 K of 15 December 1994 and 51/45 M of 10 December 1996,

Convinced that the continuing existence of nuclear weapons poses a threat to all humanity and that their use would have catastrophic consequences for all life on Earth, and recognizing that the only defence against a nuclear catastrophe is the total elimination of nuclear weapons and the certainty that they will never be produced again,

Mindful of the solemn obligations of States parties, undertaken in article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, particularly to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament,

Recalling the principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament adopted at the 1995 Review and Extension Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, and in particular the objective of determined pursuit by the nuclear-weapon States of systematic and progressive efforts to reduce nuclear weapons globally, with the ultimate goal of eliminating those weapons,

Recalling also the adoption of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty in its resolution 50/245 of 10 September 1996,

Recognizing with satisfaction that the Antarctic Treaty and the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba are gradually freeing the entire southern hemisphere and adjacent areas covered by those treaties from nuclear weapons,

Noting the efforts by the States possessing the largest inventories of nuclear weapons to reduce their stockpiles of such weapons through bilateral and unilateral agreements or arrangements, and calling for the intensification of such efforts to accelerate the significant reduction of nuclear-weapon arsenals,

Recognizing the need for a multilaterally negotiated and legally binding instrument to assure non-nuclear-weapon States against the threat or use of nuclear weapons,

Reaffirming the central role of the Conference on Disarmament as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, and regretting the lack of progress in disarmament negotiations, particularly nuclear disarmament, in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1997 session,

Emphasizing the need for the Conference on Disarmament to commence negotiations on a phased programme for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons with a specified framework of time,

Desiring to achieve the objective of a legally binding prohibition of the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, threat or use of nuclear weapons and their destruction under effective international control,

Recalling the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, issued on 8 July 1996,

1. Underlines once again the unanimous conclusion of the International Court of Justice that there exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control;

2. Calls once again upon all States immediately to fulfil that obligation by commencing multilateral negotiations in 1998 leading to an early conclusion of a nuclear weapons convention prohibiting the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, transfer, threat or use of nuclear weapons and providing for their elimination;

3. Requests all States to inform the Secretary-General of the efforts and measures they have taken on the implementation of the present resolution and nuclear disarmament, and requests the Secretary-General to apprise the General Assembly of that information at its fifty-third session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons".

Nuclear-weapon-free zones

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/47 B [YUN 1996, p. 448], the Disarmament Commission [A/52/42] in 1997 considered an agenda item entitled "Establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned". The item was discussed and reported on by Working Group I, which focused on four broad areas: general overview and introduction, scope, principles and objectives, and recommendations. As had been the case in the First Committee, varying national security concerns on the part of some States were evident, although the vast majority supported the concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones as contributing to the strengthening of the non-proliferation regime and regional and global security. Some progress was, nevertheless, achieved. It was decided that at the next session the Commission would consider, among other things, the scope of the discussion, as well as topics relating to nuclear-weapon-free zones as a means for enhancing peace, security and stability; the characteristics of the region concerned, including the geographical definition of the zone; the relationship between nuclear-weapon-free zones and existing treaties or agreements; the role of verification; and consultation and negotiating processes and elements conducive to the establishment of such zones.

Africa

The African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) [YUN 1995, p. 203], which was opened for signature in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 468], in 1997 had 49 signatories, one more than in 1996. Also, China ratified Protocols I and II thereto. France had ratified Protocols I, II and III in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 468], and the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom and the United States had signed Protocols I and II.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/608], adopted resolution 52/46 without vote [agenda item 79].

African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/53 of 10 December 1996 and all its other relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Organization of African Unity,

Recalling also the successful conclusion of the signing ceremony of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Pelindaba) that took place at Cairo on 11 April 1996,

Recalling further the Cairo Declaration adopted on that occasion, which emphasized that nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in regions of tension, such as the Middle East, enhance global and regional peace and security,

Noting the statement made by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the members of the Council on 12 April 1996, in which it was stated that the signature of the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty constituted an important contribution by the African countries to the maintenance of international peace and security,

Considering that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones, especially in the Middle East, would enhance the security of Africa and the viability of the African nuclear-weapon-free zone,

1. Calls upon African States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty as soon as possible so that it may enter into force without delay;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the nuclear-weapon States that have signed the Protocols that concern them, and calls upon those which have not yet ratified the Protocols concerning them to do so as soon as possible;

3. Calls upon the States contemplated in Protocol III to the Treaty that have not yet done so to take all necessary measures to ensure the speedy application of the Treaty to territories for which they are, de jure or de facto, internationally responsible and which lie within the limits of the geographical zone established in the Treaty;

4. Calls upon the African States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons that have not yet concluded comprehensive safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency pursuant to the Treaty to do so, thereby satisfying the requirements of article 9 (b) of and annex II to the Treaty of Pelindaba when it enters into force;

5. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for the diligence with which he has rendered effective assistance to the signatories to the African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty in accordance with resolution 51/53;

6. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity and the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the diligence with which they have rendered effective assistance to the signatories to the Treaty;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty".

Asia

Central Asia

On 28 February, the Presidents of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan adopted in Almaty, Kazakhstan, the Almaty Declaration [A/52/112], in which they acknowledged the need to establish a nuclear-free zone in Central Asia. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs of those countries adopted a statement at the International Conference on Central Asia as a Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Tashkent, Uzbekistan, 15-16 September), calling on the permanent members of the Security Council and all States to support the initiative for the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia and to provide assistance to do so [A/52/390].

An initiative launched in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 469] by Kyrgyzstan to establish a nuclear-free zone in the region was endorsed by the General Assembly in 1997 (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First

Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 S without vote [agenda item 71].

Recalling also the Almaty Declaration of the heads of State of the Central Asian States of 28 February 1997 and the statement issued at Tashkent on 15 September 1997 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia,

Reaffirming the generally recognized role of the United Nations in promoting the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones,

Convinced that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions of the world can contribute to the achievement of general and complete disarmament,

Believing that the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in various regions, including Central Asia, will help to strengthen peace and stability at both the regional and the global levels and is in the interest of the security of the States in the Central Asian region,

Welcoming the offer of Kyrgyzstan to hold a consultative meeting of experts on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia at Bishkek in 1998,

1. Calls upon all States to support the initiative aimed at the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to provide assistance to the Central Asian countries in the preparation of the form and elements of an agreement on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia;

3. Decides to consider the question of the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia at its fifty-third session under the agenda item entitled "General and complete disarmament".

South Asia

In a report of 28 August [A/52/306], the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/42 [YUN 1996, p. 470] asking him to ascertain the views of States on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in South Asia, no States had responded to his request for information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

South-East Asia

The Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Bangkok Treaty), which opened for signature in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 207], entered into force on 27 March 1997, following the deposit of the seventh instrument of ratification. As at 31 December, nine States had ratified the Treaty (Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Indonesia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Myanmar, Singapore, Thailand, Viet Nam). Consultations between the members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) and various nuclear-weapon States continued during the year; however, differences between the two groups persisted and, as at year's end, none of the nuclear-weapon States had signed the Protocol to the Treaty. At an ASEAN meeting in December, ASEAN officials were encouraged to finalize the revision of the Protocol to enable all the original signatories to ratify the Treaty and the nuclear-weapon States to sign the Protocol.

Latin America and the Caribbean

On 14 February, States parties to the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean, known as the Treaty of Tlatelolco [YUN 1967, p. 13], marked its thirtieth anniversary with a special session of the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean. An international seminar was also held on "Nuclear-weapon-free zones in the next century" (Mexico City, 13-14 February). The countries of the region continued to take concrete steps during the year to consolidate the regime of military denuclearization established by the Treaty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/607], adopted resolution 52/45 without vote [agenda item 78].

Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 1911 (XVIII) of 27 November 1963 it expressed the hope that the States of Latin America would take appropriate measures to conclude a treaty that would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America,

Recalling also that in the same resolution it voiced its confidence that, once such a treaty was concluded, all States, and in particular the nuclear-weapon States, would lend it their full cooperation for the effective realization of its peaceful aims,

Considering that in its resolution 2028(XX) of 19 November 1965 it established the principle of an acceptable balance of mutual responsibilities and obligations between nuclear-weapon States and those which do not possess such weapons,

Recalling that the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) was opened for signature at Mexico City on 14 February 1967,

Welcoming the holding of the eleventh special session of the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean on 14 February 1997 in commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the opening for signature of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, as well as the holding of the international seminar on the topic "Nuclear-weapon-free zones in the next century" in Mexico City on 13 and 14 February 1997,

Recalling that in its preamble the Treaty of Tlatelolco states that military denuclearized zones are not an end in themselves but rather a means for achieving general and complete disarmament at a later stage,

Recalling also that in its resolution 2286(XXII) of 5 December 1967 it welcomed with special satisfaction the Treaty of Tlatelolco as an event of historic significance in the efforts to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons and to promote international peace and security,

Recalling further that in 1990, 1991 and 1992 the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean approved and opened for signature a set of amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco, with the aim of enabling the full entry into force of that instrument,

Recalling resolution C/E/RES.27 of the Council of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean, in which the Council called for the promotion of cooperation and consultations with other nuclear-weapon-free zones,

Noting with satisfaction that, with the full adherence on 14 February 1997 of Saint Kitts and Nevis, the Treaty of Tlatelolco is in force for thirty-two sovereign States of the region,

Also noting with satisfaction that on 22 October 1996 Paraguay and on 14 February 1997 Barbados and Venezuela deposited their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V) of 3 July 1990, 268(XII) of 10 May 1991 and 290(E-VII) of 26 August 1992, and that on 23 October 1997 Guatemala signed the amendment to the Treaty contained in resolution 268(XII),

Further noting with satisfaction that the amended Treaty of Tlatelolco is fully in force for Argentina, Barbados, Brazil, Chile, Guyana, Jamaica, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay and Venezuela,

1. Welcomes the concrete steps taken by some countries of the region during the past year for the consolidation of the regime of military denuclearization established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco);

2. Notes with satisfaction the full adherence of Saint Kitts and Nevis to the Treaty of Tlatelolco;

3. Urges the countries of the region that have not yet done so to deposit their instruments of ratification of the amendments to the Treaty of Tlatelolco approved by the General Conference of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean in its resolutions 267(E-V), 268(XII) and 290(E-VII);

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco)".

Middle East

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/41 [YUN 1996, p. 472], the Secretary-General reported [A/52/271] in August on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East. He continued to carry out consultations to explore ways to promote the establishment of such a zone, but regretted that, since the submission of his 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 471], no positive developments had occurred. He also presented the views of States on measures to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East as outlined in a 1990 Study [YUN 1990, p. 63].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/596], adopted resolution 52/34 without vote [agenda item 67].

Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3263(XXIX) of 9 December 1974, 3474(XXX) of 11 December 1975, 31/71 of 10 December 1976, 32/82 of 12 December 1977, 33/64 of 14 December 1978, 34/77 of 11 December 1979, 35/147 of 12 December 1980, 36/87 A and B of 9 December 1981, 37/75 of 9 December 1982, 38/64 of 15 December 1983, 39/54 of 12 December 1984, 40/82 of 12 December 1985, 41/48 of 3 December 1986, 42/28 of 30 November 1987, 43/65 of 7 December 1988, 44/108 of 15 December 1989, 45/52 of 4 December 1990, 46/30 of 6 December 1991, 47/48 of 9 December 1992, 48/71 of 16 December 1993, 49/71 of 15 December 1994, 50/66 of 12 December 1995 and 51/41 of 10 December 1996 on the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East,

Recalling also the recommendations for the establishment of such a zone in the Middle East consistent with paragraphs 60 to 63, and in particular paragraph 63 (d), of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly,

Emphasizing the basic provisions of the above-mentioned resolutions, which call upon all parties directly concerned to consider taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East and, pending and during the establishment of such a zone, to declare solemnly that they will refrain, on a reciprocal basis, from producing, acquiring or in any other way possessing nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices and from permitting the stationing of nuclear weapons on their territory by any third party, to agree to place their nuclear facilities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to declare their support for the establishment of the zone and to deposit such declarations with the Security Council for consideration, as appropriate,

Reaffirming the inalienable right of all States to acquire and develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes,

Emphasizing the need for appropriate measures on the question of the prohibition of military attacks on nuclear facilities,

Bearing in mind the consensus reached by the General Assembly since its thirty-fifth session that the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East would greatly enhance international peace and security,

Desirous of building on that consensus so that substantial progress can be made towards establishing a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East,

Welcoming all initiatives leading to general and complete disarmament, including in the region of the Middle East, and in particular on the establishment therein of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction, including nuclear weapons,

Noting the peace negotiations in the Middle East, which should be of a comprehensive nature and represent an appropriate framework for the peaceful settlement of contentious issues in the region,

Recognizing the importance of credible regional security, including the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Emphasizing the essential role of the United Nations in the establishment of a mutually verifiable nuclear-weapon-free zone,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/41,

1. Urges all parties directly concerned to consider seriously taking the practical and urgent steps required for the implementation of the proposal to establish a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and, as a means of promoting this objective, invites the countries concerned to adhere to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

2. Calls upon all countries of the region that have not done so, pending the establishment of the zone, to agree to place all their nuclear activities under International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

3. Takes note of resolution GC(41)/RES/25, adopted on 3 October 1997 by the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its forty-first regular session, concerning the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East;

4. Notes the importance of the ongoing bilateral Middle East peace negotiations and the activities of the multilateral Working Group on Arms Control and Regional Security in promoting mutual confidence and security in the Middle East, including the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone;

5. Invites all countries of the region, pending the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East, to declare their support for establishing such a zone, consistent with paragraph 63 (d) of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, and to deposit those declarations with the Security Council;

6. Also invites those countries, pending the establishment of the zone, not to develop, produce, test or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or permit the stationing on their territories, or territories under their control, of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices;

7. Invites the nuclear-weapon States and all other States to render their assistance in the establishment of the zone and at the same time to refrain from any action that runs counter to both the letter and the spirit of the present resolution;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/41;

9. Invites all parties to consider the appropriate means that may contribute towards the goal of general and complete disarmament and the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the region of the Middle East;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to pursue consultations with the States of the region and other concerned States, in accordance with paragraph 7 of resolution 46/30 and taking into account the evolving situation in the region, and to seek from those States their views on the measures outlined in chapters III and IV of the study annexed to his report or other relevant measures, in order to move towards the establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the Middle East;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East".

South Pacific

On 19 September, the United Kingdom ratified all three Protocols to the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Treaty of Rarotonga) [YUN 1985, p. 58]. France had ratified and the United States had signed them in 1996, while China and the former USSR had signed the two Protocols for which they were eligible in 1987 and 1986, respectively, and had ratified them in 1988.

Under Protocol 1, the States internationally responsible for territories situated within the zone would undertake to apply the relevant prohibitions of the Treaty to those territories; under Protocol 2, the five nuclear-weapon States would provide security assurances to parties or to territories within the zone; and under Protocol 3, the five would not carry out nuclear tests in the zone.

On 9 December [meeting 6] the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 N by recorded vote (131-3-34) [agenda item 71 (d)].

The nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/45 B of 10 December 1996,

Determined to continue to contribute to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons in all its aspects and to the process of general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, in particular in the field of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, with a view to strengthening international peace and security, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling the provisions on nuclear-weapon-free zones of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, the first special session devoted to disarmament, as well as of the decision on principles and objectives for nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament of the 1995 Review and Extension

Conference of the Parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,

Stressing the importance of the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba, establishing nuclear-weapon-free zones, as well as the Antarctic Treaty, to, inter alia, the ultimate objective of achieving a world entirely free of nuclear weapons, and underlining also the value of enhancing cooperation among the nuclear-weapon-free zone treaty members by means of mechanisms such as joint meetings of States parties, signatories and observers to those treaties,

Recalling the applicable principles and rules of international law relating to rights of passage through maritime space, including under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

1. Welcomes the contribution that the Antarctic Treaty and the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba are making towards freeing the entire southern hemisphere and adjacent areas covered by those treaties from nuclear weapons;

2. Calls for the ratification of the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba by all regional States, and calls upon all concerned States to continue to work together in order to facilitate adherence to the protocols to nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties by all relevant States that have not yet done so;

3. Welcomes the steps taken to conclude further nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among the States of the region concerned, and calls upon all States to consider all relevant proposals, including those reflected in its resolutions on the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones in the Middle East and South Asia;

4. Stresses the role of nuclear-weapon-free zones in strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation regime and in extending the areas of the world that are nuclear-weapon-free, and, with particular reference to the responsibilities of the nuclear-weapon States, calls upon all States to support the process of nuclear disarmament, with the ultimate goal of eliminating all nuclear weapons;

5. Calls upon the States parties and signatories to the treaties of Tlatelolco, Rarotonga, Bangkok and Pelindaba, in order to pursue the common goals envisaged in those treaties and to promote the nuclear-weapon-free status of the southern hemisphere and adjacent areas, to explore and implement further ways and means of cooperation among themselves and their treaty agencies;

6. Encourages the competent authorities of nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties to provide assistance to the States parties and signatories to such treaties so as to facilitate the accomplishment of these goals;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "The nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas".

Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons

Chemical weapons

The Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction entered into force on 29 April 1997, 180 days following receipt of its sixty-fifth instrument of ratification. The Convention, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] by the Conference on Disarmament, was opened for signature in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 111]. As at 31 December 1997, 165 States had signed it and 106 States had deposited their instruments of ratification or accession, among them the five nuclear-weapon States.

In 1997, the Convention was ratified by Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, China, Cuba, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Iceland, Iran, Kenya, Kuwait, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Luxembourg, Mali, Malta, Nepal, the Niger, Pakistan, Qatar, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation, Saint Lucia, Singapore, Slovenia, Suriname, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, the United States, Venezuela and Zimbabwe. Acceding to it were Jordan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Trinidad and Tobago. The first and second sessions of the Conference of States Parties to the Convention took place in May and December, respectively.

Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

The Preparatory Commission for the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

(OPCW), set up in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 65] to prepare for the Convention's implementation, held its sixteenth and final session at the seat of the Commission in The Hague, Netherlands, from 9 to 15 April 1997 [PC-XVI/37]. The Commission adopted its final report for submission to the first session of the Conference of the States Parties and to the first meeting of the OPCW Executive Council (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 May [meeting 100], the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/230 without vote [draft: A/51/L.73 & Add.1] [agenda item 167].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

The General Assembly,

Noting that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, opened for signature at Paris on 13 January 1993, entered into force on 29 April 1997, whereby the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons was established,

Recognizing the need to establish an appropriate relationship between the United Nations and the organization,

Considering it essential to the prompt and effective functioning of the organization that its inspectors be able to use the United Nations laissez-passers as an official travel document,

1. Invites the Secretary-General to take steps to conclude with the Director-General of the Technical Secretariat of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons an agreement between the United Nations and the organization to regulate the relationship between the two organizations, to be applied provisionally upon signature, pending the completion of procedures necessary for its entry into force, and to present the negotiated draft relationship agreement to the General Assembly for its approval;

2. Authorizes the Secretary-General, pending the conclusion of the relationship agreement, to enter with the Director-General of the Technical Secretariat of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, as a matter of urgency, into a temporary arrangement concerning the issuance of the United Nations laissez-passers to members of the organization's inspection teams, to be used as a valid travel document, where such use is recognized by States parties to the Convention.

On 15 September, the Assembly, by decision 51/480, decided to conclude consideration of the item on cooperation between the United Nations and OPCW.

Sessions of Conference of States Parties

The first session of the Conference of States Parties to the Convention was held in The Hague from 6 to 23 May. It was attended by 80 States parties, 3 States that had deposited their instruments of ratification but for which it had not entered into force, and 33 signatory States.

The Conference approved OPCW's financial regulations and a headquarters agreement, and adopted decisions regarding verification. It appointed Jose Mauricio Bustani (Brazil) as the first Director-General of OPCW, and elected 41 initial members of the OPCW Executive Council and a 20-member Confidentiality Commission. It adopted a budget covering activities from 29 April to 31 December 1997. In debate, a need for greater universality was widely acknowledged, and the importance of ratification by the Russian Federation, States in "regions of tension", and States with significant chemical industries was emphasized. (The Russian Federation ratified the Convention on 5 November 1997.)

The second session of the Conference took place in The Hague from 1 to 5 December, with 82 States parties, 18 signatory States and two observer States participating. In his opening statement, the Director-General provided an overview of the activities of OPCW and the 115 initial inspections and visits that had been conducted on the territory of 21 States parties. Discussion in the general debate stressed recent ratifications by Iran, Nepal, Pakistan and the Russian Federation, and the accession by Jordan, as well as the need to ensure that all States parties complied with all provisions of the Convention in a timely manner. The Conference adopted the OPCW programme of work and budget for 1998. It also elected new members to the Executive Council for two-year terms, beginning on 12 May 1998.

Sessions of Executive Council

The Executive Council held seven sessions during the year (13-23 May, 23-27 June, 28 July-1 August, 1-5 September, 29 September-1 October, 28-31 October, 18-20 November). At its first session, the Council prepared an OPCW budget for 1997 for approval by the Conference, recommended the appointment of the Director-General, and adopted guidelines for transitional verification arrangements. Subsequently, it considered reports by the Director-General on the status of implementation of the Convention, including a review of the receipt of initial declarations and the current status of processing them, and expressed its concern that a significant number of States had not yet submitted national declarations and/or obligatory notifications. The Council was also informed by the OPCW secretariat of the number of inspections carried out. At its last session, the Council adopted the draft budget and programme of work for 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 T without vote [agenda item 71 (o)].

Status of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons, in particular resolution 51/45 T of 10 December 1996, adopted without a vote,

Determined to achieve the effective prohibition of the development, production, acquisition, transfer, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and their destruction,

1. Welcomes the fact that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction entered into force on 29 April 1997 with eighty-seven original States parties as well as the fact that seventeen States have subsequently become States parties to the Convention;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the First Conference of States Parties held at The Hague in the Kingdom of the Netherlands from 6 to 23 May 1997 successfully launched the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons with Ambassador Jose M. Bustani of Brazil as the first Director-General;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of universal adherence to the Convention, and calls upon all States that have not yet done so to become States parties to the Convention without delay;

4. Stresses the vital importance of full and effective implementation of, and compliance with, all provisions of the Convention;

5. Notes with satisfaction that the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons has quickly initiated verification activities, including the processing of declarations of States parties and the conducting of inspections of chemical weapons-related and other declared facilities as required by the Convention, and underlines the importance of the early initiation of activities under all relevant provisions of the Convention by the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons;

6. Stresses the importance to the Convention that all possessors of chemical weapons, chemical weapons production facilities or chemical weapons development facilities, including previously declared possessor States, should be among the States parties to the Convention, and welcomes recent progress to that end;

7. Urges all States parties to the Convention to meet in full their obligations under the Convention and to support the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons in its implementation activities;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Bacteriological (biological) weapons

Efforts to strengthen the 1972 Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction (BWC) [GA res. 2826(XXVI)] continued throughout the year within the Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to BWC. In July, the Chairman of the Group submitted a rolling text of a protocol, without prejudice to the positions of delegations, although much of it remained in square brackets. Negotiations continued on the basis of the rolling text in the latter part of the year and, as of the Group's last session in 1997, considerable differences remained.

A formal consultative meeting of the States parties to the Convention (Geneva, 25-27 August) [BWC/CONS/1] met to consider allegations made by Cuba, conveyed to the Secretary-General on 28 April [A/52/128], that the appearance in its territory of the thrips palmi karay (a pest injurious to plants) plague was related to the dropping, in October 1996, of an unknown substance by an aircraft operated by the United States Department of State. On 26 June [A/52/213], Cuba presented some technical considerations related to the activities of the aircraft, alleging that they ran counter to and violated BWC provisions.

Following the consultations and the receipt of a number of written submissions by States parties, the Chairman reported in writing to all States parties on 15 December that "due, inter alia, to the technical complexity of the subject and to the passage of time, it has not proved possible to reach a definitive conclusion with regard to the concerns raised by the Government of Cuba".

Work of Ad Hoc Group

The Ad Hoc Group of the States Parties to BWC held its sixth (3-21 March) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/34], seventh (14 July-1 August) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/36] and eighth (15 September-3 October) [BWC/AD HOC GROUP/38] sessions, all in Geneva.

The Group considered definitions of terms and objective criteria; measures to promote compliance; investigations annex; measures related to article X; legal issues; confidentiality issues; and national implementation and assistance. The work was conducted in seven groups, each led by a Friend of the Chair who assisted the Chairman in consultations and negotiations on the areas listed above. In order to assist the Ad Hoc Group, the Chairman submitted, at the beginning of the seventh session, a document entitled "Rolling text of a Protocol to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction"

[BWC/AD HOC GROUP/35/Rev.1], which stated that the text was without prejudice to the positions of delegations and did not imply agreement on its scope or content. The results of discussions during the eighth session were incorporated into the rolling text in which brackets had been introduced to cover specific preliminary concerns of delegations, and it was recognized that further and detailed consideration of all elements would be required at the future sessions.

The rolling text resulting from the eighth session contained 23 articles, 8 annexes and 5 appendices. The main articles, additional to the standard ones on authentic text, entry into force and other matters, were as follows: I, General provisions; II, [Definitions]; III, Compliance measures; IV, Confidentiality provisions; V, Measures to redress a situation and to ensure compliance; VI, Assistance; VII, Scientific and technological exchange for peaceful purposes and technical cooperation; VIII, Confidence-building measures; IX, [The Organization] [and implementational arrangements]; X, National implementation measures; XI, Relationship of the Protocol to BWC and other international agreements; XII, Settlement of disputes; XIII, Review of the Protocol; XIV, Amendments; XV, Duration and withdrawal; and XVI, Status of the annexes [and appendices]. The eight provisional annexes were concerned with: Declarations; [[Non-challenge] [Random] visits]; [Measures to strengthen the implementation of article III]; Investigations; Confidentiality provisions; Scientific and technological exchange for peaceful purposes and technical cooperation; Confidence-building measures; and [The [Technical] Secretariat]. The five appendices were concerned with information to be provided in declarations. The number of square brackets in the articles indicated that considerable differences remained to be resolved and that nothing in the text was agreed to until it was all agreed upon.

At the end of the eighth session, it was decided that the work of the Group had to be intensified. The Group decided to hold in 1998 three sessions of three weeks duration (5-23 January; 22 June-10 July, 28 September-16 October) and one session of two weeks, the dates of which were not specified, to work further on those issues and text where differences of view persisted.

In addition to their efforts to elaborate a verification mechanism, States parties continued their confidence-building measures and information exchange as agreed to at the Second (1986) [YUN 1986, p. 64] and Third (1991) [YUN 1991, p. 52] Review Conferences. Among the measures decided upon under article V was the declaration by parties concerning legislation and other regulations they had enacted both to implement the provisions of the Convention and to enable States parties to follow a standardized procedure in order to prevent or reduce the occurrence of ambiguities, doubts and suspicions, and to implement international cooperation in the area of peaceful bacteriological activities. By the end of 1997, 46 States parties had submitted reports to the United Nations, including those concerning their export and import of certain biological weapons-related materials [CDA/BWC/1997/CBM & Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/609], adopted resolution 52/47 without vote [agenda item 80].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions relating to the complete and effective prohibition of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and to their destruction,

Noting with satisfaction that there are one hundred and forty States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, including all the permanent members of the Security Council,

Bearing in mind its call upon all States parties to the Convention to participate in the implementation of the recommendations of the Review Conferences, including the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, and to provide such information and data in conformity with standardized procedure to the Secretary-General on an annual basis and no later than 15 April,

Recalling its resolution 46/35 A, adopted without a vote on 6 December 1991, in which it welcomed, inter alia, the establishment, proceeding from the recommendations of the Third Review Conference, of an ad hoc group of governmental experts open to all States parties to identify and examine potential verification measures from a scientific and technical standpoint,

Recalling also its resolution 48/65, adopted without a vote on 16 December 1993, in which it commended the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts to Identify and Examine Potential Verification Measures from a Scientific and Technical Standpoint, agreed to by consensus at the last meeting of the Ad Hoc Group at Geneva on 24 September 1993,

Recalling further its resolution 49/86, adopted without a vote on 15 December 1994, in which it welcomed the final report of the Special Conference of the States

Parties to the Convention, adopted by consensus on 30 September 1994, in which the States parties agreed to establish an ad hoc group, open to all States parties, whose objective should be to consider appropriate measures, including possible verification measures, and draft proposals to strengthen the Convention, to be included, as appropriate, in a legally binding instrument to be submitted for the consideration of the States parties,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention related to scientific and technological cooperation and the related provisions of the final report of the Ad Hoc Group of Governmental Experts, the final report of the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention, held from 19 to 30 September 1994, and the final documents of the Review Conferences,

1. Welcomes the information and data provided to date, and reiterates its call upon all States parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction to participate in the exchange of information and data agreed to in the Final Declaration of the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention;

2. Also welcomes the progress made by the Ad Hoc Group towards fulfilling the mandate established by the Special Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on 30 September 1994, and urges the Ad Hoc Group to intensify its work with a view to completing it as soon as possible before the commencement of the Fifth Review Conference and to submit its report, which shall be adopted by consensus, to the States parties to be considered at a special conference;

3. Further welcomes in this context the steps taken by the Ad Hoc Group, as encouraged by the Fourth Review Conference, to review its methods of work and, in particular, the start of negotiations on a rolling text of a protocol to the Convention;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render the necessary assistance to the depositary Governments of the Convention and to provide such services as may be required for the implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the Review Conferences, as well as the decisions contained in the final report of the Special Conference, including all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Group;

5. Calls upon all signatory States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so without delay, and also calls upon those States that have not signed the Convention to become parties thereto at an early date, thus contributing to the achievement of universal adherence to the Convention;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction".

Conventional weapons and related issues

Landmines

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/45 S [YUN 1996, p. 482], the Secretary-General, in an August report with later addendum [A/52/268 & Add.1], presented information he had received from five Governments on measures they had taken to complete an international agreement to ban anti-personnel mines (APMs).

Communications. During the year, a number of States informed the Secretary-General of their positions or measures they had taken regarding APMs.

On 12 March [A/52/91], Austria transmitted its Federal Law on the Ban of Anti-personnel Mines, which entered into force on 1 January 1997 and was viewed by that country as a further effective step to ban totally the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of APMs. On 3 June [A/52/207], Panama expressed support for a total ban on APMs. Kazakhstan, on 11 August [A/52/335], stated that it adopted a decision on 6 August to ban the export of APMs, including the re-export and transit thereof. Cuba, on 31 October [A/C.1/52/6], stated that its policy was to use mines solely as a defence against an external threat or use of aggression. On 4 December [A/52/713], the Czech Republic stated that it had extended for an indefinite period its moratorium on exports of APMs.

Anti-personnel mines Convention

Following the adoption of the Ottawa Declaration in 1996 at the Ottawa International Strategy Conference [YUN 1996, p. 481], which, among other things, called for the conclusion of a legally binding international agreement to ban anti-personnel mines, the Minister for Foreign Affairs announced that Canada would host a signing ceremony for such a convention in December 1997.

Work proceeded quickly through a series of short negotiating sessions, a follow-up conference in June in Brussels, Belgium, and a diplomatic conference in September in Oslo, Norway. On 9 July, Belgium transmitted to the Conference on Disarmament the text of the final Declaration of the International Conference for a Comprehensive Ban on Anti-Personnel Mines (Brussels, 24-27 June) [CD/1467], which set out the essential elements of a complete ban. The 97 States which signed the Brussels Declaration welcomed the convening of a Diplomatic Conference in Oslo on 1 September to negotiate a legally binding international instrument banning APMs and affirmed their objective of concluding the negotiations and of signing an agreement before the end of 1997 in Ottawa. It was agreed that a draft text circulated by Austria in May would serve as the basis for the negotiations in Oslo.

The Diplomatic Conference (Oslo, 1-18 September) adopted the text of the Convention without a vote. At a signing Conference (Ottawa, 2-4 December), the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction [United Nations Disarmament Yearbook, vol. 22: 1997, Sales No. E.98.IX.1] was signed by 121 States. The Secretary-General was designated depositary of the Convention, which was to enter into force six months after the fortieth instrument of ratification had been deposited.

A central component of the Ottawa Conference was the Mine Action Forum, a series of round-table meetings of experts from Governments, non-governmental organizations, academia and the international development sector that were held to initiate the second part of the Ottawa process, which would aim at ensuring that the commitments entailed by the Convention would be met fully and as quickly as possible. Thus, the second part of the Ottawa process would focus on efforts to expand mine clearance and assistance to victims, to encourage all States to sign the Convention and to urge all signatories to ratify it without delay. The Forum issued an "Agenda for Mine Action" to serve as a guide for the second phase, to maintain the current momentum and to facilitate coordination of efforts in the aforementioned areas.

Conference on Disarmament. The United States formally proposed negotiations for a global ban on APMs at the opening meeting on 20 January of the 1997 session of the Conference on Disarmament [CD/1441].

In the first part of the Conference's 1997 session, two draft mandates for an ad hoc committee were submitted: one, affirming the ultimate objective of a global ban but providing for its achievement by a step-by-step approach, proposed by the United Kingdom in January [CD/1443]; another, to undertake work on the various aspects of a ban, simultaneously put forth by Japan and Hungary in May [CD/1455]. Neither was put to a decision.

Because of difficulties in establishing its programme of work, the Conference on Disarmament was able only on 26 June to appoint a special coordinator to conduct consultations on a possible mandate for an ad hoc committee [CD/1466]. On 28 August, as the Conference neared the end of its session and on the eve of the convening of the Diplomatic Conference in Oslo, the Special Coordinator reported that a clear majority of delegations were in favour of—or at least not opposed to—commencing work in the Conference on landmines, many favouring a phased approach to elimination, beginning with work on exports, imports and transfers. However, it was commonly held that the Conference's role could not be precisely determined until early 1998, following the opening for signature of the Convention in Ottawa in December.

Convention provisions

Following the preamble, the main obligations of the States parties were elaborated in articles 1 to 9, while the remaining articles (10 to 22) contained traditional clauses pertaining to such treaty aspects as the settlement of disputes, meetings of States parties and entry into force.

Under article 1, each State party affirmed never, under any circumstances, to use APMs; to develop, produce, otherwise acquire, stockpile, retain or transfer to anyone, directly or indirectly, APMs; and to assist, encourage or induce, in any way, anyone to engage in any activity prohibited to a State party. In addition, every State party was responsible for destroying or ensuring the destruction of all stockpiled APMs it owned or possessed, or that were under its jurisdiction or control not later than four years after entry into force of the Convention (article 4), and for destroying mines in mined areas not later than 10 years after that date (article 5). In a case where a State party was unable to destroy all its APMs, it could submit a request for an extension of the deadline.

Article 2 set out the definition for "anti-personnel mine", which explicitly excluded from the prohibition mines designed to be detonated by the presence, proximity or contact of a vehicle, as opposed to a person, that were equipped with anti-handling devices.

The Convention made an exception (article 3) to the general obligations of article 1, whereby States were permitted to retain or transfer a number of APMs for the development of and training in mine detection, mine clearance or mine destruction techniques and to transfer APMs for destruction.

In an effort to facilitate implementation, States parties were responsible for participating in the fullest possible exchange of equipment, material and technological information; and, if in a position to do so, for providing assistance for the care, rehabilitation and social and economic reintegration of mine victims and for mine clearance and related activities (article 6).

As to transparency, States parties were responsible for a number of measures (article 7), including the submission of a report to the Secretary-General on their national implementation measures not later than 180 days after entry into force of the Convention, and updated annually thereafter (article 9); and for submitting data pertaining to their stockpiles, the location of all mined areas, and the types and quantity of all APMs retained or transferred, in accordance with article 3. They were also to report on the status of programmes for conversion of production facilities and for destruction of mines.

Instead of a verification regime involving on-site challenge inspections, States parties adopted a facilitation and clarification of compliance procedure (article 8). States parties agreed to consult and cooperate with each other regarding implementation of the Convention. If a State party wished to clarify a question relating to compliance, it might submit, through the Secretary-General, a request for clarification, and, if it did not receive a response within 28 days or deemed the response unsatisfactory, it could submit the matter to the next meeting of the States parties. If further clarification was needed, the meeting would authorize a fact-finding mission, the members of which were to be appointed by the Secretary-General. The mission was to report back its findings to the meeting, which might ask the requested State party to take measures to address the compliance issue within a specified period of time. In connection with matters of compliance, each State party was responsible for taking all appropriate legal, administrative and other measures to prevent and suppress any activity prohibited under the Convention by persons or on territory under its jurisdiction or control (article 9).

The Convention also dealt with: settlement of disputes (article 10); regular and special meetings of the States parties (article 11); review conferences (12); amendments to the Convention (13); responsibility for costs of meetings of States parties, special meetings of States parties, the review conferences and the amendment conferences, as well as fact-finding missions (14); signature of the Convention (15); ratification, acceptance, approval or accession (16); entry into force (17); provisional application (18); reservations (19); unlimited duration of the Convention (20); the designation of the Secretary-General as depositary (21); and equal authenticity of the texts of the Convention in UN official languages (22).

Under the terms of the Convention, the Secretary-General and the United Nations were required to play a role that exceeded the traditional role of depositary. The UN Mine Action Service, located within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, was designated by the Secretary-General as the focal point for all mine-related activities within the UN system. In connection with the activities of collection, analysis and dissemination of mine-related information to be undertaken by the United Nations, Switzerland announced that it would establish an information management system. With respect to international cooperation and assistance, the United Nations maintained a database on mine-clearance experts and technologies, would elaborate national demining programmes upon request, would provide assistance for the care of mine victims and for mine-awareness programmes, and maintained the United Nations Voluntary Trust Fund for Mine Clearance, established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 172]. Regarding transparency measures, the Secretary-General received and circulated to States parties annual reports on the various categories of information mentioned above, and, for facilitation and clarification of compliance, he maintained lists of experts qualified to carry out fact-finding missions, appointed the members of such missions and circulated their reports. In addition, he convened the various meetings of States parties provided for in the Convention.

(For information on assistance in mine clearance, see PART THREE, Chapter III.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 A by recorded vote (142-0-18) [agenda item 71].

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction

The General Assembly,

Determined to put an end to the suffering and casualties caused by anti-personnel mines that kill or maim hundreds of people every week, mostly innocent and defenceless civilians and especially children, obstruct economic development and reconstruction, inhibit the repatriation of refugees and internally displaced persons, and have other severe consequences for years after emplacement,

Believing it necessary to do the utmost to contribute in an efficient and coordinated manner to facing the challenge of removing anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world, and to assure their destruction,

Wishing to do the utmost in assuring assistance for the care and rehabilitation, including the social and economic reintegration, of mine victims,

Recalling its resolution 51/45 S of 10 December 1996 urging all States to pursue vigorously an effective, legally binding international agreement to ban the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel landmines with a view to completing the negotiation as soon as possible,

Stressing the role of public conscience in furthering the principles of humanity as evidenced by the call for a total ban on anti-personnel mines, and recognizing the efforts to that end undertaken by the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, the International Campaign to Ban Landmines and numerous other non-governmental organizations around the world,

Recalling the Ottawa Declaration of 5 October 1996 and the Brussels Declaration of 27 June 1997 urging the international community to negotiate an international and legally binding agreement prohibiting the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines,

Emphasizing the desirability of attracting the adherence of all States to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, and determined to work strenuously towards the promotion of its universalization in all relevant forums including, inter alia, the United Nations, the Conference on Disarmament, regional organizations and groupings, and review conferences of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects,

Basing itself on the principle of international humanitarian law that the right of the parties to an armed conflict to choose methods or means of warfare is not unlimited, on the principle that prohibits the employment in armed conflicts of weapons, projectiles and materials and methods of warfare of a nature to cause superfluous injury or unnecessary suffering and on the principle that a distinction must be made between civilians and combatants,

Welcoming the conclusion of negotiations on 18 September 1997 at Oslo on the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction,

1. Invites all States to sign the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, which was open for signature at Ottawa on 3 and 4 December 1997 and at Headquarters in New York on 5 December 1997, and which shall remain open for signature thereafter at Headquarters until its entry into force;

2. Urges all States to ratify the Convention without delay subsequent to their signatures;

3. Calls upon all States to contribute towards the full realization and effective implementation of the Convention to advance the care and rehabilitation, and the social and economic reintegration of mine victims, and mine-awareness programmes, and the removal of anti-personnel mines placed throughout the world and the assurance of their destruction;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to render the necessary assistance and to provide such services as may be necessary to fulfil the tasks entrusted to him by the Convention;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction".

Taking into account the efforts to address the landmine issue, and underlining that the efforts made within different forums should be mutually reinforcing.

Taking note of the decisions taken by States to adopt bans, moratoriums or other restrictions on transfers of anti-personnel landmines, and other measures taken unilaterally,

Welcoming the ongoing national, regional and multi-lateral efforts in demining and victim rehabilitation,

Having considered the report of the Conference on Disarmament,

Small arms

Panel of Governmental Experts

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/70 B [YUN 1995, p. 217], the Secretary-General submitted, in August, a report on small arms [A/52/298], prepared with the assistance of the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, appointed in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 488]. The report focused on the types of small arms and light weapons used in conflicts dealt with by the United Nations; the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons, including their illicit production and trade; and the prevention and reduction of the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons.

The Panel held three sessions in New York (24-28 June 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 489], 20-31 January 1997 and 7-18 July) and also met in Tokyo (26-28 May) at the invitation of the Government of Japan. It also conducted three regional workshops, in Pretoria, South Africa (23-25 September 1996) [YUN 1996, p. 489], San Salvador, El Salvador (16-17 January 1997), and Kathmandu, Nepal (22-23 May).

In its assessment, the Panel related the phenomenon of the excessive accumulation and use of small arms and light weapons to the increasing incidence of internal conflicts and high levels of crime and violence, the handling of small arms by private and irregular groups, and the connection between the illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons and drug-trading and criminal activities. The Panel made a series of recommendations to the United Nations and to States on how to reduce the trend in specific regions of the world where such weapons had already accumulated, and on measures to prevent such accumulations and transfers from occurring in the future.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 J by recorded vote (158-0-6) [agenda item 71 (b)].

Small arms

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/70 B of 12 December 1995,

Recalling also its resolution 51/45 L of 10 December 1996, in which it welcomed the initiative taken by Mali concerning the question of the illicit circulation of small arms and their collection in the affected States of the Saharo-Sahelian subregion,

Convinced of the need for a comprehensive approach to promote, at the global and regional levels, the control and reduction of small arms and light weapons in a balanced and non-discriminatory manner as a contribution to international peace and security,

Reaffirming the inherent right to individual or collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, which implies that States also have the right to acquire arms with which to defend themselves,

Reaffirming also the right of self-determination of all peoples, in particular peoples under colonial or other forms of alien domination or foreign occupation, and the importance of the effective realization of this right, as enunciated, inter alia, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Reaffirming further the urgent need for practical disarmament in the context of the conflicts the United Nations is actually dealing with and of the weapons that are actually killing people in the hundreds of thousands,

Welcoming the submission of the report of the Secretary-General prepared with the assistance of the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, which contains measures to reduce the excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer of small arms and light weapons in specific regions of the world and to prevent such accumulations and transfers from occurring in future,

Welcoming also the guidelines for international arms transfers in the context of General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991, which were adopted by consensus by the Disarmament Commission in 1996, and taking note of the ongoing efforts of the Commission to consider guidelines for post-conflict situations, including demobilization of former combatants, disposal and destruction of weapons, as well as confidence- and security-building measures,

1. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report on small arms, which was approved unanimously by the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, bearing in mind the views of Member States on the recommendations;

2. Calls upon all Member States to implement the relevant recommendations to the extent possible and where necessary in cooperation with appropriate international and regional organizations and/or through international and regional cooperation among police, intelligence, customs and border control services;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to implement the relevant recommendations, in particular to initiate a study on the problems of ammunition and explosives in all their aspects, as early as possible, within available financial resources, and in cooperation with appropriate international and regional organizations where necessary;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the report and on the steps that they have taken to implement its recommendations, and, in particular, to seek their views on the recommendation concerning the convening of an international conference on the illicit arms trade in all its aspects in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report, with the assistance of a group of governmental experts to be nominated by him in 1998 on the basis of equitable geographical representation, (a) on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations of the report on small arms and (b) on further actions recommended to be taken, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

6. Encourages Member States and the Secretary-General to carry out recommendations for post-conflict situations, including demobilization of former combatants and disposal and destruction of weapons;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Small arms".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/38 J:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstain: Bahrain, Israel, Oman, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates.

In the Committee, the fifth preambular paragraph was retained by a recorded vote of 120 to none, with 23 abstentions. Similarly, the Assembly adopted the paragraph by a recorded vote of 139 to none, with 21 abstentions.

Assistance to States

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/45 L [YUN 1996, p. 490], the Secretary-General, in a July report [A/52/264], discussed further developments concerning assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them. Since the adoption of that resolution, the Secretary-General said he had not received any specific request for UN assistance from States.

A senior UN official had been sent to Bamako, Mali, to represent the Secretary-General at official ceremonies commemorating the first anniversary of the "Flame of Peace" (Timbuktu, Mali, 27 March 1996), during which thousands of small arms handed over by ex-combatants of the armed movements of northern Mali were publicly destroyed. The Secretary-General looked forward to the implementation of a moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of light weapons, a proposal adopted in 1996 at an international conference on conflict prevention, disarmament and development in West Africa, organized by the UN Institute for Disarmament Research, the UN Department for Political Affairs and the United Nations Development Programme, in cooperation with the Government of Mali. In March 1997, ministerial-level consultations were held in Bamako among Algeria, Burkina Faso, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania and Senegal, which resulted in the adoption of a document for the declaration of a moratorium, including the establishment of a mechanism called the Programme for Coordination and Assistance on Disarmament and Security.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 C without vote [agenda item 71 (b)].

Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/36 H of 6 December 1991, 47/52 G and J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 H and J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 G of 15 December 1994, 50/70 H of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 L of 10 December 1996,

Considering that the illicit circulation of massive quantities of small arms throughout the world impedes development and is a source of increased insecurity,

Considering also that the illicit international transfer of small arms and their accumulation in many countries constitute a threat to their populations and to national and regional security and are a factor contributing to the destabilization of States,

Basing itself on the statement of the Secretary-General relating to the request of Mali for United Nations assistance for the collection of small arms,

Gravely concerned at the extent of the insecurity and banditry linked to the illicit circulation of small arms in Mali and the other affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion,

Taking note of the first conclusions of the United Nations advisory missions sent to the affected countries of the subregion by the Secretary-General to study the best way of curbing the illicit circulation of small arms and ensuring their collection,

Taking note also of the interest shown by the other States of the subregion in receiving a United Nations advisory mission,

Noting the actions taken and those recommended at the meetings of the States of the subregion held at Banjul, Algiers, Bamako, Yamoussoukro and Niamey to establish close regional cooperation with a view to strengthening security,

Basing itself on the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization, in particular the section entitled "Preventive diplomacy, peaceful settlement of disputes and disarmament",

1. Welcomes the initiative taken by Mali concerning the question of the illicit circulation of small arms and their collection in the affected States of the Saharo-Saharan subregion;

2. Also welcomes the action taken by the Secretary-General in implementation of this initiative in the context of General Assembly resolution 40/151 H of 16 December 1985;

3. Thanks the Governments concerned in the subregion for the substantial support that they have given to the United Nations advisory missions, and welcomes the declared readiness of other States to receive the United Nations Advisory Mission;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, in the context of the implementation of resolution 49/75 G and of the recommendations of the United Nations advisory missions, to curb the illicit circulation of small arms and to collect such arms in the affected States that so request, with the support of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa and in close cooperation with the Organization of African Unity;

5. Notes that, as part of its efforts to halt the flow of small arms into Mali and the Saharo-Saharan subregion, the Government of Mali oversaw the destruction, at the "Flame of Peace" ceremony held at Timbuktu, Mali, on 27 March 1996, of thousands of small arms handed over by ex-combatants of the armed movements of northern Mali;

6. Encourages the setting up in the countries of the Saharo-Saharan subregion of national commissions against the proliferation of small arms, and invites the international community to support as far as possible the smooth functioning of the national commissions where they have been set up;

7. Takes note of the conclusions of the ministerial consultation on the proposal for a moratorium on the importing, exporting and manufacture of light weapons in the region, held at Bamako on 26 March 1997, and encourages the States concerned to pursue their consultations on the matter;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to examine the issue and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and collecting them".

Illicit arms manufacture and transfer

The General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS) (twenty-fourth special session, Washington, D.C., 13-14 November) adopted the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials, which was subsequently signed by 29 States.

The 30-article Convention, among other things: covered legal and operational measures to prevent, combat and eradicate illegal arms trafficking; established a system for licensing the export, import and international transit of firearms and the maintenance of adequate records by manufacturers, importers and exporters of firearms; required appropriate markings on firearms; and committed States parties to adequate border controls and to pass legislation making it a crime to engage in the illicit manufacturing and trafficking of arms, ammunition and explosives.

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/45 F [YUN 1996, p. 489], the Secretary-General reported on national control measures on arms transfers with a view to preventing illicit ones; effective ways to collect weapons transferred illicitly; and measures to curb the illicit transfer and use of conventional arms [A/52/229].

Convention on excessively injurious conventional weapons and Protocols

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/49 [YUN 1996, p. 485], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/52/227 & Con.1,2] updating, as at 30 June, the status of the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects [YUN 1980, p. 76] and its four Protocols (dealing with non-detectable fragments; mines, booby traps and other devices; incendiary weapons; and blinding laser weapons).

As at 31 December 1997, there were 71 States parties to the Convention. During the year, Cambodia, Cape Verde, the Holy See, Monaco, Panama, Peru, Portugal and Uzbekistan became parties to the Convention, which had entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 66].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First

Committee [A/52/604], adopted resolution 52/42 without vote [agenda item 75].

Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/49 of 10 December 1996 and previous resolutions referring to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects,

Recalling with satisfaction the adoption, on 10 October 1980, of the Convention, together with the Protocol on Non-Detectable Fragments (Protocol I), the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II) and the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons (Protocol III), which entered into force on 2 December 1983,

Also recalling with satisfaction the adoption by the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, on 13 October 1995 of the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV), and on 3 May 1996 of the amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II),

Recalling the role played by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the elaboration of the Convention and the Protocols thereto,

Noting that, in conformity with article 8 of the Convention, conferences may be convened to examine amendments to the Convention or to any of the Protocols thereto, to examine additional protocols concerning other categories of conventional weapons not covered by existing Protocols or to review the scope and application of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto and to examine any proposed amendments or additional protocols, and welcoming the decision adopted by the Review Conference in its Final Declaration on 3 May 1996 to convene a Review Conference no later than the year 2001,

1. Welcomes the additional ratifications and acceptances of or accessions to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, as well as the ratifications and acceptances of or accessions to the amended Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices (Protocol II);

2. Urgently calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take all measures to become parties, as soon as possible, to the Convention and the Protocols thereto, and in particular to amended Protocol II, with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence to this instrument at an early date, and calls upon successor States to take appropriate measures so that ultimately adherence to these instruments will be universal;

3. Calls, in particular, upon the States parties to the Convention to express their consent to be bound by the amended Protocol II with a view to its entry into force as soon as possible, and, pending its entry into force, to respect and ensure respect for its substantive provisions to the fullest extent possible;

4. Commends the Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV) to all States, with a view to achieving the widest possible adherence to this instrument at an early date and calls, in particular, upon the States parties to express their consent to be bound by the Protocol with a view to its entry into force as soon as possible;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in his capacity as depositary of the Convention and the Protocols annexed thereto, to continue to inform it periodically of ratifications and acceptances of and accessions to the Convention and the Protocols, and decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects".

Practical disarmament

Disarmament Commission action. The Disarmament Commission on 21 April approved the provisional agenda for its 1997 substantive session, and decided to allocate to Working Group III the agenda item entitled "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N" [A/52/42]. The Group held a general exchange of views, and several working papers were submitted. Subsequently, a non-paper prepared by the Chairman on the basis of the ideas and papers put before the Group served as a basis for further discussion. After a number of revisions, the suggested scope/framework for future guidelines comprised the following elements: introduction, general framework, principles, practical disarmament measures, and other conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament measures. While the text had support as a contribution to the elaboration of the guidelines, it was felt that some elements required further elaboration and refinement. Thus it was annexed, as the Chairman's paper, to the report of the Working Group without prejudice to the positions of delegations.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/45 N [YUN 1996, p. 490], the Secretary-General in August reported on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures [A/52/289]. He stated that to respond effectively to the priorities of Member States in the area of disarmament, he was undertaking a managerial reorganization of the Secretariat's capacities. He pointed to the establishment of a new Department for Disarmament Affairs and Arms Regulation. He outlined steps leading to a more integrated approach to practical disarmament measures, especially in post-conflict situations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 G without vote [agenda item 71 (1)].

Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/45 N of 10 December 1996,

Convinced that a comprehensive and integrated approach towards certain practical disarmament measures, such as, inter alia, arms control, particularly with regard to small arms and light weapons, confidence-building measures, demobilization and reintegration of former combatants, demining and conversion, often is a prerequisite to maintaining and consolidating peace and security and thus provides a basis for effective rehabilitation and social and economic development in areas that have suffered from conflict,

Noting with satisfaction that, since the adoption of resolution 51/45 N, the importance of such practical disarmament measures has received growing attention from the international community in general, and from interested and affected Member States in particular, as well as from the Secretary-General,

Stressing that further efforts are needed in order to develop and effectively implement programmes of practical disarmament in affected areas,

Recalling the deliberations at the 1997 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission in Working Group III on agenda item 6, entitled "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N", where the scope of resolution 51/45 N was a major focus,

Welcoming the adoption by the Disarmament Commission of the "Guidelines for international arms transfers in the context of General Assembly resolution 46/36 H of 6 December 1991",

Noting, with reference to its resolution 50/70 B of 12 December 1995, the report of the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms and its relevance in the context of the present resolution and of the ongoing work in the Disarmament Commission,

1. Stresses the particular relevance of the deliberations at the 1997 substantive session of the Disarmament Commission in Working Group III on agenda item 6, entitled "Guidelines on conventional arms control/limitation and disarmament, with particular emphasis on consolidation of peace in the context of General Assembly resolution 51/45 N", for this topic, takes note of the Chairman's paper of 9 May 1997 and other views expressed, as a useful basis for further deliberations, and encourages the Disarmament Commission to continue its efforts aimed at the adoption of such guidelines;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, submitted pursuant to resolution 51/45 N, and encourages Member States as well as regional arrangements and agencies to lend their support to the implementation of relevant recommendations contained therein;

3. Recognizes, with reference to paragraph 12 of section III of the report, that the readiness of the international community to assist affected States in their efforts to consolidate peace would greatly benefit the effective implementation of practical disarmament measures;

4. Invites interested States to establish a group in order to facilitate this process and to build upon the momentum generated, and requests the Secretary-General to lend his support to the efforts of such a group;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures".

Transparency

Conference on Disarmament. In 1997, delegations addressed the issue of transparency in armaments during plenary and informal meetings of the Conference on Disarmament [A/52/27]. Their statements revealed, once again, a divergence of views on the scope of the item, the most appropriate way to deal with it and the mandate of a possible ad hoc committee. Proposals submitted to the Conference envisaged various approaches: one, by Iran, sought to establish an ad hoc committee to consider means of promoting transparency [CD/1450]; another, by Canada, to address transparency as a part of the broader issue of conventional disarmament [CD/1456]; and another, by the Group of 21, to appoint a special coordinator to seek views of the members of the Conference on Disarmament [CD/1462]. None of the proposals commanded consensus.

The Western and Eastern European countries wished the Conference to continue considering the subject of transparency in armaments as a means of ensuring a proper balance between the nuclear and conventional items on the agenda, and believed that it could contribute to the further improvement and strengthening of the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms. They thus called for the re-establishment of the appropriate ad hoc committee.

On the other hand, the non-aligned countries were dissatisfied with the mandate based on General Assembly resolution 46/36 L [YUN 1991, p. 57]. Some of them did not object, in principle, to the establishment of the ad hoc committee, provided that its mandate would be comprehensive, addressing transparency in terms of both conventional arms and weapons of mass destruction, and also encompassing stockpiles of armaments, national production, and transfers of high technology with military applications. Others reiterated that currently the concept of transparency was vague and imprecise, and that the former ad hoc committee on transparency in armaments had exhausted its mandate. Under the circumstances, the Group of 21, recognizing the sensitivity of the issue, was in favour of appointing a special coordinator to seek views of members of the Conference on the item.

UN Register of Conventional Arms

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/45 H [YUN 1996, p. 486], the Secretary-General submitted the fifth annual report on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms [A/52/312 & Corr.1,2 & Add.1-4], established in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 75] to promote enhanced levels of transparency regarding arms transfers.

The report contained data on imports and exports during the 1996 calendar year in the seven categories of conventional arms: battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery systems, attack helicopters, combat aircraft, warships, and missiles and missile launchers. Information had been provided by 93 Governments; an index by State of the type of background information submitted by Governments was also included.

Group of Governmental Experts

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 51/45 H [YUN 1996, p. 486], the Secretary-General, in August, reported on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development, with data from a Group of Governmental Experts. The Group, which had held three sessions between March and August (New York) [A/52/316 & Corr.2], reviewed the Register's first five years of operation and examined various proposals to develop it further, to make it more efficient and effective, and to encourage wider participation.

In its review of the Register's operation for the calendar years from 1992 to 1996, as well as data submitted up to and including 15 August 1997, the Group concluded that the Register showed a consistent level of participation, but there were wide variations in the levels of reporting among regions. The promotion of understanding of the Register should be maintained and, where possible, increased; Member States should designate an official point of contact for Governments relative to reporting to the Register; and a further comprehensive review of the operation of the Register would be needed. The Group was unable to agree on expanding the scope of the Register, the addition of new categories to the Register, and technical adjustments to existing categories.

The Group made recommendations to Member States concerning: participation; nominating a national point of contact; changing the annual due date for reporting; amending the reporting format and explanatory notes; and providing additional information, such as types or models. It recommended that the General Assembly ask the Secretary-General to ensure resources to operate and maintain the Register, and that it decide at an early date on a time to conduct a full review of the continuing operation of the Register and its further development. Appended to the Group's report was a list of the categories of equipment covered under the Register and their definitions, and standardized forms for reporting international transfers of conventional arms, for both imports and exports.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 R by recorded vote (155-0-11) [agenda item 71 (c)].

Transparency in armaments

The General Assembly,

Recalling its earlier resolutions on transparency in armaments,

Continuing to hold the view that an enhanced level of transparency in all types of armaments contributes greatly to confidence-building and security among States,

Taking duly into account the relationship between transparency and the security needs of all States at the regional and international levels,

Recognizing that, notwithstanding the fact that the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms in its current form deals with seven categories of conventional weapons, the principle of transparency should also apply to weapons of mass destruction and to transfers of equipment and technologies directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons,

Convinced that an enhanced level of transparency in weapons of mass destruction and transfers of equipment and technologies directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons could serve as a catalyst towards general and complete disarmament,

Stressing the need to achieve universality of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction and the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, as well as other instruments related to transfers of equipment and technologies directly related to the development and manufacture of such weapons, with a view to realizing the goal of the total elimination of all weapons of mass destruction,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on transparency in armaments;

Other issues

Transparency of military expenditures

On 25 August, the Secretary-General provided information received from 27 Member States in standardized form regarding their military expenditures [A/52/310], as requested in General Assembly resolution 51/38 [YUN 1996, p. 487].

In a 27 August report [A/52/302], the Secretary-General presented the views of the Netherlands on behalf of the European Union and of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe associated with it (Bulgaria, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia), as well as Iceland and Norway, in reply to a request in that resolution that he seek the views of Member States on changes to the content and structure of the system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures. Owing to the financial situation of the Organization in 1996, the Secretary-General noted, it was not possible to organize consultations to compare the reporting instruments used by other international bodies receiving similar data. He stated that he intended to resume consultations to ascertain the requirements for adjusting the current instrument to encourage wider participation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/594], adopted resolution 52/32 without vote [agenda item 65].

Objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/38 of 10 December 1996 on objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures,

Also recalling its resolution 35/142 B of 12 December 1980, which introduced the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, and its resolutions 48/62 of 16 December 1993 and 49/66 of 15 December 1994, calling upon all Member States to participate in it, and its resolution 47/54 B of 9 December 1992, endorsing the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters and inviting Member States to provide relevant information to the Secretary-General regarding their implementation,

Noting that since then national reports on military expenditures and on the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters have been submitted by a number of Member States belonging to different geographic regions,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on ways and means to implement the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, including, in particular, how to strengthen and broaden participation in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures,

Expressing its appreciation to the Secretary-General for providing Member States with the reports on military expenditures in standardized form reported by States and on guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters,

Welcoming the decision of many Member States to exchange and to publish information annually on their military budgets and to implement the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters, as appropriate,

Reaffirming its firm conviction that a better flow of objective information on military matters can help to relieve international tension and contribute to the building of confidence among States and to the conclusion of concrete disarmament agreements,

Convinced that the improvement of international relations forms a sound basis for promoting further openness and transparency in all military matters,

Recalling that the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters recommended certain areas for further consideration, such as the improvement of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures,

1. Recommends the guidelines and recommendations for objective information on military matters to all Member States for implementation, fully taking into account specific political, military and other conditions prevailing in a region, on the basis of initiatives and with the agreement of the States of the region concerned;

2. Calls upon all Member States to report annually, by 30 April, to the Secretary-General their military expenditures for the latest fiscal year for which data are available, using, for the time being, the reporting instrument as recommended in its resolution 35/142 B;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate annually the reports on military expenditures as received from Member States;

4. Endorses the intention of the Secretary-General, as stated in his report, to resume consultations with relevant international bodies, within existing resources, with a view to ascertaining the requirements for adjusting the present instrument to encourage wider participation;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make recommendations, based on the outcome of the intended consultations and taking into account the views of Member States, on necessary changes to the content and structure of the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures in order to strengthen and broaden participation, and to submit a report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

6. Calls upon all Member States, in time for the deliberation by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, to provide the Secretary-General with their views on ways and means to strengthen and broaden participation in the United Nations system for the standardized reporting of military expenditures, including necessary changes to its content and structure;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Objective information on military matters, including transparency of military expenditures".

Verification

As requested by General Assembly resolution 50/61 [YUN 1995, p. 233], the Secretary-General, in August, submitted a report [A/52/269] containing the views of two Member States (Canada and Ecuador) on the recommendations contained in the expert study on verification in all its aspects, including the UN role in verification [YUN 1995, p. 233].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/592], adopted resolution 52/31 without vote [agenda item 63].

Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification

The General Assembly,

Noting the critical importance of, and the vital contribution that has been made by, effective verification measures in arms limitation and disarmament agreements and other similar obligations,

Reaffirming its support for the sixteen principles of verification drawn up by the Disarmament Commission,

Recalling its resolutions 40/152 O of 16 December 1985, 41/86 Q of 4 December 1986, 42/42 F of 30 November 1987, 43/81 B of 7 December 1988, 45/65 of 4 December 1990, 47/45 of 9 December 1992, 48/68 of 16 December 1993 and 50/61 of 12 December 1995,

Recalling also the reports of the Secretary-General of 11 July 1986, 28 August 1990, 16 September 1992, 26 July 1993, 22 September 1995 and 6 August 1997, and the addenda thereto,

1. Reaffirms the critical importance of, and the vital contribution that has been made by, effective verification measures in arms limitation and disarmament agreements and other similar obligations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on further views received from Member States pursuant to resolution 50/61;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Verification in all its aspects, including the role of the United Nations in the field of verification".

Regional and other approaches to disarmament

Africa

With Africa widely regarded as having one of the largest concentrations of anti-personnel mines in the world, individual African States and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) took an active part in worldwide efforts to ban those weapons. In May, 40 OAU member States, UN specialized agencies and a wide spectrum of representatives of the donor community and of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) attended the first Continental Conference of African Experts on Landmines (Kempton Park, South Africa, 19-21 May) [CD/1468]. The meeting adopted a plan of action covering the issues of African policies on anti-personnel landmines, including mine clearance, realization of an African landmine-free zone, landmine survivors assistance and international cooperation and finance aimed at demining countries in the region.

In addition, African States, OAU, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the International Campaign to Ban Landmines (ICBL), other NGOs and regional organizations organized conferences in support of a ban on anti-personnel mines. ICBL held its fourth international conference (Maputo, Mozambique, 25-28 February) and ICRC and OAU sponsored a meeting of the South African Development Community (Harare, Zimbabwe, 20-23 April). In December, 39 States in the region signed the 1997 Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction (see above, under "Landmines"). At the national level, Angola, Kenya, Somalia, Zambia and Zimbabwe launched landmine ban campaigns, while Mozambique and South Africa officially banned landmines from their countries. South Africa completed the destruction of its stockpiles on 30 October.

Under the Bangui Agreements [S/1997/561], signed on 25 January, an inter-African force was established to monitor their implementation and to disarm the former rebels, the militia and all other unlawfully armed individuals in the Central African Republic. Between the ceasefire of 2 July and year's end [S/1998/61], the disarmament provisions of the Agreements had been implemented almost fully with regard to heavy weapons and, with regard to light weapons, close to two thirds had been handed over to the regional peace force. (See also PART ONE, Chapter II.)

In West Africa, the successful completion of the disarmament and demobilization exercise in Liberia marked a significant turn of events (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The term of the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group, known as ECOMOG, was extended to help consolidate and strengthen security in the country and to assist with the restructuring and training of the armed forces as well as the police and security services. Following the withdrawal of the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia, a representative of the Secretary-General was appointed to head a UN Peacebuilding Support Office there.

In an effort to curb small arms and light weapons, a ministerial consultation on the proposal for a moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of light weapons in the Saharo-Saharan subregion was held (Bamako, Mali, March). Consultations took place among representatives of Algeria, Burkina Faso, Guinea, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania and Senegal, and were observed by representatives of the United Nations, OAU, the Central African Non-Aggression Pact, the Chairman of the Wassenaar Arrangement on Export Controls for Conventional Arms and Dual-Use Goods and Technologies, the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the Norwegian Institute of International Affairs and the Canadian International Development Agency. The consultations resulted in the adoption of a document for the declaration of a moratorium on import, export and manufacture of light weapons, including the establishment of a mechanism called the Programme for Coordination and Assistance on Disarmament and Security.

The need to take effective steps for conflict prevention was discussed at the ninth ministerial meeting of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa (Libreville, Gabon, 7-11 July) [A/52/283-S/1997/644]. In an August report covering the activities of that Committee [A/52/293], the Secretary-General presented highlights of the ninth ministerial meeting, stating that it called for eliminating sanctions against Burundi and setting up peace operations in the Central African Republic; establishing the early-warning mechanism for Central Africa agreed upon in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 4921; and action against illicit arms transfers and circulation in Central Africa. The ministerial meeting appealed to all States members of the Committee to sign the Non-Aggression Pact [YUN 1996, p. 492], and to the international community to support the Committee's efforts to enhance stability in the subregion, particularly to establish in Libreville a subregional early-warning mechanism aimed at preventing future armed conflicts in Central Africa. At the meeting, France and the United States informed participants of a programme launched jointly with the United Kingdom to strengthen the capacity of African States to participate more effectively in peace operations of the region. The Committee agreed to carry out a number of programmes and activities for the remainder of 1997 and into early 1998, funded from voluntary contributions to a trust fund set up at the request of the General Assembly in resolution 50/71 B [YUN 1995, p. 216].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/601], adopted resolution 52/39 B without vote [agenda item 72 (b)].

Regional confidence-building measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the United Nations and its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind the guidelines for general and complete disarmament adopted at its tenth special session, the first special session devoted to disarmament,

Recalling its resolutions 43/78 H and 43/85 of 7 December 1988, 44/21 of 15 November 1989, 45/58 M of 4 December 1990, 46/37 B of 6 December 1991, 47/53 F of 15 December 1992, 48/76 A of 16 December 1993, 49/76 C of 15 December 1994, 50/71 B of 12 December 1995 and 51/46 C of 10 December 1996,

Considering the importance and effectiveness of confidence-building measures taken at the initiative and with the participation of all States concerned, and taking into account the specific characteristics of each region, since such measures can contribute to regional disarmament and to international security, in accordance with the principles of the Charter,

Convinced that the resources released by disarmament, including regional disarmament, can be devoted to economic and social development and to the protection of the environment for the benefit of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Convinced also that development can be achieved only in a climate of peace, security and mutual confidence both within and among States,

Bearing in mind the establishment by the Secretary-General on 28 May 1992 of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa, the purpose of which is to encourage arms limitation, disarmament, non-proliferation and development in the subregion,

Recalling the Brazzaville Declaration on Cooperation for Peace and Security in Central Africa,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on regional confidence-building measures, which deals with the activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa in the period since the adoption by the General Assembly of resolution 51/46 C;

2. Reaffirms its support for efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at regional and sub-regional levels in order to ease tensions and conflicts in the subregion and to further disarmament, non-proliferation and the peaceful settlement of disputes in Central Africa;

3. Also reaffirms its support for the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee adopted at the organizational meeting of the Committee held at Yaounde in July 1992;

4. Invites the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee that have not yet signed the Non-Aggression Pact to do so, and encourages all member States to expedite ratification, being convinced that the entry into force of the Pact will effectively contribute to the prevention of conflicts in the Central African sub-region;

5. Welcomes with satisfaction the programmes and activities of the Standing Advisory Committee for the period 1997-1998, adopted by the member States during the ninth ministerial meeting held at Libreville from 7 to 11 July 1997, which are designed:

(a) To set up and render operational at the earliest opportunity and on the basis of voluntary contributions an early warning system for Central Africa;

(b) To launch programmes designed to retrain demobilized soldiers and prepare them for reintegration into civilian life;

(c) To combat the illegal circulation of weapons and drugs in the subregion;

(d) To organize training seminars so as to strengthen the capacity of the Central African States to participate more actively in peacekeeping operations organized under the auspices of the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

(e) To organize joint military exercises to simulate the conduct of standard peacekeeping operations;

(f) To organize, for members of the armed forces and security forces of the Central African States, seminars and awareness programmes relating to the conduct of public affairs, the rule of law and respect for human rights;

(g) To hold a subregional conference on the topic "Democratic institutions and peace in Central Africa";

(h) To revert to the holding of two annual meetings of the Standing Advisory Committee at the ministerial level in order to further consultations among the member States;

6. Expresses its conviction that the full implementation of those measures and activities will contribute to the promotion of confidence among the member States, the establishment of democracy and good governance and the consolidation of peace in the Central African subregion;

7. Welcomes the participation, at the invitation of the Government of Gabon, of representatives of the States permanent members of the Security Council in the ninth ministerial meeting of the Standing Advisory Committee, and invites the Secretary-General to facilitate the pursuit of this type of dialogue, which is likely to strengthen cooperation between the Council and the countries concerned with a view to contributing to the peaceful settlement of conflicts in Central Africa, whenever the States members of the Committee so request;

8. Thanks the Secretary-General for having established the Trust Fund for the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa;

9. Appeals to Member States and to governmental and non-governmental organizations to make additional voluntary contributions to the Trust Fund for the implementation of the programme of work of the Standing Advisory Committee, in particular the measures and objectives referred to in paragraph 5 above;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance to the States members of the Standing Advisory Committee to ensure that they are able to carry on with their efforts, being convinced that effective cooperation between the international community and the countries of the subregion can stimulate the search for peaceful solutions to the crises and conflicts that occur in the subregion;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Regional confidence-building measures: activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa".

Asia and the Pacific

In connection with the observance of its thirtieth anniversary, the thirtieth ministerial meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) was held (Subang Jaya, Malaysia, 24-25 July). Two new members, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Myanmar, were admitted into ASEAN, whose other members were Brunei Darussalam, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Viet Nam. The admission of Cambodia was postponed owing to the outbreak of internal strife in the country (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). ASEAN members expressed satisfaction with the level of political and security cooperation among ASEAN countries at regional and international forums, and welcomed proposals among the defence agencies to conduct seminars related to facilitating and enhancing confidence-building among ASEAN members.

The fourth ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) (Subang Jaya, 27 July) generally agreed that ARF played a positive role in strengthening mutual understanding and promoting greater transparency in the region. In addition to considering regional matters, ARF members emphasized their support for international efforts in various areas of disarmament, including anti-personnel mines, particularly demining programmes and the rehabilitation of mine victims. Apart from the ASEAN States, ARF included Australia, Canada, China, India, Japan, New Zealand, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation, the United States and the European Union (EU).

The member States of the Conference on Interaction and Confidence-building Measures in Asia (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 3 December) [A/52/748-S/1997/1003] agreed that they would, without infringing on the rights of all States to conclude disarmament and arms control agreements as appropriate, discuss questions relating to disarmament and non-proliferation, with a view to helping achieve the ultimate goal of the complete elimination of weapons of mass destruction, arms control, security, confidence-building and the peaceful and equitable settlement of disputes.

As follow-up to their 1996 Agreement on Confidence-building in the Military Field in the Border Area [YUN 1996, p. 492], the five parties—China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Russian Federation—in April signed an Agreement on Mutual Reduction of Military Forces in the Border Area. The Agreement provided for a significant reduction in forces and equipment and the exchange of information on military forces along the borders.

In the context of bilateral relations, China and India exchanged instruments of ratification of their 1996 Agreement on Confidence-building Measures in the Military Field along the Line of Actual Control in the China-India Border Areas, and the Agreement entered into force in August. Both countries began discussions on ways to implement it.

The United States and Japan announced on 23 September the revision of their 1978 defence co-operation guidelines. Under the new arrangement, they agreed to enhance the existing level of cooperation in the event of an emergency. More significantly, for the first time Japan would be able to engage in military activities in cooperation with the United States in the areas surrounding Japan.

Meanwhile, throughout most of 1997, the East Asia region remained the second largest arms market after the Middle East. Despite concerns expressed over the potential for an arms race, most States in the region continued with their respective weapons acquisition programmes.

Europe

Several developments in 1997 had an impact on European security, including plans to enlarge the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO); negotiations on the Founding Act on Mutual Relations, Cooperation and Security between NATO and the Russian Federation; Vienna negotiations on the adaptation of the 1990 Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) [YUN 1990, p. 79] to the newly created security environment in the region; and activities within the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE).

The first CFE Treaty Review Conference in May 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 492] had launched a process of treaty adaptation aimed at improving the operation of the Treaty in a changing environment, enhancing its viability and effectiveness, and improving the security of each State party, irrespective of whether it belonged to a politico-military alliance, while providing for extra transparency and specific constraints. According to section VI of the Document agreed to at the Conference, the Document would enter into force upon approval by all States parties; if it did not enter into force by 15 December 1996, they would review it. As the condition was not fulfilled, the States parties agreed to extend the deadline until 15 May 1997. They then successfully initiated negotiations within the Treaty's Joint Consultative Group, based in Vienna, and the Document entered into force on 15 May.

On 23 July, the States parties adopted a "Decision concerning certain basic elements for Treaty adaptation". The basic agreement provided for the replacement of the bloc-to-bloc structure of the Treaty with the system of national and territorial ceilings. No State party's national ceiling would exceed the level permitted by the current Treaty and aggregated levels would be significantly lower. The national ceilings would be codified as new, binding limits and reviewed every five years at scheduled review conferences. Territorial ceilings would replace the existing structure of zones, with the exception that the substance of the flank regime would be maintained, but reconciled with the Treaty's new adapted structure. Provisions were made for temporary deployments in excess of territorial ceilings. The Treaty was made open for accession by new States parties. Attached to the decision were a statement by the 16 NATO member States and a draft decision on modalities for conducting on-site visits to assess and account for treaty-limited equipment unaccounted for and uncontrolled within the Treaty.

Plans to enlarge NATO had a profound effect on disarmament and arms limitation efforts at both the bilateral level and in the broader European context. After a number of high-level meetings to address the Russian Federation's concerns, NATO members and the Russian Federation signed, on 27 May in Paris, the Founding Act on Mutual Relations, Cooperation and Security [A/52/161-S/1997/413]. The Founding Act stipulated the basic principles on which their relationship was to be based and focused on specific areas. For example, the parties agreed to strive to cooperate in the area of increasing transparency, predictability and mutual confidence regarding the size and roles of their conventional forces; in the negotiations on the adaptation of the CFE Treaty, they would seek to strengthen stability by further developing measures to prevent any potentially threatening build-up of conventional forces in agreed regions of Europe, including Central and Eastern Europe; and in carrying out its collective defence and other missions, NATO would rely on reinforcement rather than on additional permanent stationing of substantial combat forces, and the Russian Federation, for its part, would exercise similar restraint in its conventional force deployments in Europe. To carry out the activities and aims provided in the Act, they also agreed to create the NATO-Russia Permanent Joint Council, which would provide a mechanism for consultation, coordination and, where appropriate, joint decisions and action.

On 30 May, in Sintra, Portugal, members of NATO and participating countries in the Partnership for Peace, a NATO initiative aimed at enhancing stability and security in Europe, decided to establish a Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council to provide the overarching framework for consultations among its members. On 8 July, in Madrid, Spain, NATO members issued the Madrid Declaration on Euro-Atlantic Security and Cooperation. The Declaration stressed the need to shape the new NATO for the twenty-first century, and invited the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland to begin accession talks with NATO, so that their membership might become effective by the fiftieth anniversary of NATO, in April 1999. Subsequently, on 16 December, those three States signed the Protocols of Accession of the New Members to NATO in Brussels, Belgium, during a meeting of foreign ministers. Meanwhile, in Madrid, on 9 July, a Charter on a Distinctive Partnership between NATO and Ukraine was signed, providing principles for the development of NATO-Ukraine relations, consultation and co-operation for a more secure Europe.

In accordance with the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544], and under the auspices of OSCE, the States parties to the Agreement on Subregional Arms Control, signed in Florence, Italy, on 14 June 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 493], continued to destroy surplus weapons, and several data exchanges took place during the year. That Agreement provided for limitations on five categories of weapons: battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, artillery pieces of 75 millimetre calibre and above, combat aircraft and attack helicopters. In addition, OSCE inspectors carried out inspections in connection with the destruction of weapons in the region. In an October report [A/52/450], the Secretary-General stated that cooperation between the United Nations and OSCE was evident in consultations, field offices of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, humanitarian assistance in Albania and the political conflict in Tajikistan.

Increasingly concerned about the effects of the transfer and excessive and destabilizing accumulation of small arms and light weapons, the European Union, in June, adopted a programme for preventing and combating illicit trafficking in conventional arms. The programme involved a series of measures to promote cooperation and data exchange between the relevant authorities of member States and called on them to strengthen domestic legislation and administrative procedures and to provide assistance to third countries in post-conflict situations. The programme was aimed at trafficking in all types of conventional weapons, with an emphasis on portable weapons.

Significant achievements were recorded in the promotion of peace and security in the Americas in 1997. As part of ongoing regional efforts to combat the illicit trafficking of small arms, the Organization of American States (OAS), at its twenty-seventh General Assembly (Lima, Peru, 2-6 June), approved the draft of an Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials. The final text of the Convention [A/53/78] was submitted to OAS member States, and then opened for signature in Washington, D.C., in November. The Convention, signed by 29 States, aimed to prevent, combat and eradicate illegal arms trafficking by strengthening export controls, sharing law enforcement information, requiring appropriate markings on firearms, improving security measures for confiscated weapons and establishing a licensing system for exports and imports, among other measures. It also established a legal framework to confront the problem of arms trafficking and created a consultative committee to address it. The Convention was scheduled to enter into force 30 days after it had been ratified by two countries.

A seminar on the subject of illicit traffic in small arms and sensitive technologies, organized by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research and the Government of Argentina, was held (Buenos Aires, 23-25 April) to address the circulation of a very large number of small arms in Central and South America. The Chairman of the UN Panel studying small arms (see above) discussed its work, and participants in the seminar identified characteristics of the illicit arms trade in South America, such as volume and type of weapons, routes and networks, vulnerability to transboundary smuggling, incidence of terrorism, and level of expertise of law-enforcement and intelligence officials, and formulated practical proposals for future action.

Regarding bilateral relations, Ecuador and Peru undertook to establish a binational commission on mutual confidence- and security-building measures, to embark on the drafting of a comprehensive agreement on border integration, and to complete preparations for the physical demarcation of a common land boundary in disputed areas.

In the latter part of the year, concerns were voiced about the possibility of an increase in arms imports into Latin America—despite a significant number of confidence-building mechanisms put in place between many Latin American States—after the United States decided on 1 August to lift a 20-year ban on the sale of advanced weaponry to the region. The ban, which had been imposed in connection with human rights policies, was to be lifted on 1 March 1998. United States officials stressed that as the Latin American democracies were becoming stronger and their economies growing, some Governments wished to modernize their militaries and that any orders from the region for advanced weapons would be judged on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the arms balance in the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 P without vote [agenda item 71 (j)].

Regional disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/58 P of 4 December 1990, 46/36 I of 6 December 1991, 47/52 J of 9 December 1992, 48/75 I of 16 December 1993, 49/75 N of 15 December 1994, 50/70 K of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 K of 10 December 1996 on regional disarmament,

Believing that the efforts of the international community to move towards the ideal of general and complete disarmament are guided by the inherent human desire for genuine peace and security, the elimination of the danger of war and the release of economic, intellectual and other resources for peaceful pursuits,

Affirming the abiding commitment of all States to the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations in the conduct of their international relations,

Noting that essential guidelines for progress towards general and complete disarmament were adopted at the tenth special session of the General Assembly,

Taking note of the guidelines and recommendations for regional approaches to disarmament within the context of global security adopted by the Disarmament Commission at its 1993 substantive session,

Welcoming the prospects of genuine progress in the field of disarmament engendered in recent years as a result of negotiations between the two super-Powers,

Taking note of the recent proposals for disarmament at the regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the importance of confidence-building measures for regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that endeavours by countries to promote regional disarmament, taking into account the specific characteristics of each region and in accordance with the principle of undiminished security at the lowest level of armaments, would enhance the security of all States and would thus contribute to international peace and security by reducing the risk of regional conflicts,

1. Stresses that sustained efforts are needed, within the framework of the Conference on Disarmament and under the umbrella of the United Nations, to make progress on the entire range of disarmament issues;

2. Affirms that global and regional approaches to disarmament complement each other and should therefore be pursued simultaneously to promote regional and international peace and security;

3. Calls upon States to conclude agreements, wherever possible, for nuclear non-proliferation, disarmament and confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels;

4. Welcomes the initiatives towards disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation and security undertaken by some countries at the regional and subregional levels;

5. Supports and encourages efforts aimed at promoting confidence-building measures at the regional and subregional levels in order to ease regional tensions and to further disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation measures at the regional and subregional levels;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Regional disarmament".

Also on 9 December [meeting 67], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 Q by recorded vote (164-1-2) [agenda item 71 (n)].

Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/75 J of 16 December 1993, 49/75 O of 15 December 1994, 50/70 L of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 Q of 10 December 1996,

Recognizing the crucial role of conventional arms control in promoting regional and international peace and security,

Convinced that conventional arms control needs to be pursued primarily in the regional and subregional contexts since most threats to peace and security in the post-cold-war era arise mainly among States located in the same region or subregion,

Aware that the preservation of a balance in the defence capabilities of States at the lowest level of armaments would contribute to peace and stability and should be a prime objective of conventional arms control,

Desirous of promoting agreements to strengthen regional peace and security at the lowest possible level of armaments and military forces,

Noting with particular interest the initiatives taken in this regard in different regions of the world, in particular the commencement of consultations among a number of Latin American countries and the proposals for conventional arms control made in the context of South Asia, and recognizing, in the context of this subject, the relevance and value of the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which is a cornerstone of European security,

Believing that militarily significant States and States with larger military capabilities have a special responsibility in promoting such agreements for regional security,

Believing also that an important objective of conventional arms control in regions of tension should be to prevent the possibility of military attack launched by surprise and to avoid aggression,

1. Decides to give urgent consideration to the issues involved in conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;

2. Requests the Conference on Disarmament, as a first step, to consider the formulation of principles that can serve as a framework for regional agreements on conventional arms control, and looks forward to a report of the Conference on this subject;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels".

Other disarmament issues

In 1997, there were several issues that had, in most instances, been before the international community for some time, but that, for a variety of reasons, were not directly addressed to any great extent in the different disarmament forums. They were, however, the subject of resolutions in the General Assembly and covered outer space issues; the relationship between disarmament and development; the role of science and technology; and compliance, verification and observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of arms regulation and disarmament agreements.

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The Conference on Disarmament did not establish an ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space during its 1997 session. However, the subject was actively discussed during plenary and informal meetings.

The Special Coordinator on the review of the agenda reported that there was a clear trend in favour of keeping the item; however, there were different views regarding the urgency of the problem. At least two delegations proposed reformulating the item to: "Legally binding document to prevent the weaponization of outer space", while others considered that the issue would best be addressed in the context of confidence-building measures.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/599], adopted resolution 52/37 by recorded vote (128-0-39) [agenda item 70].

Prevention of an arms race in outer space

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the common interest of all mankind in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes,

Reaffirming the will of all States that the exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be for peaceful purposes and shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interest of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development,

Reaffirming also provisions of articles III and IV of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies,

Recalling the obligation of all States to observe the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the use or threat of use of force in their international relations, including in their space activities,

Reaffirming paragraph 80 of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly, in which it is stated that in order to prevent an arms race in outer space further measures should be taken and appropriate international negotiations held in accordance with the spirit of the Treaty,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this issue and taking note of the proposals submitted to the General Assembly at its tenth special session and at its regular sessions, and of the recommendations made to the competent organs of the United Nations and to the Conference on Disarmament,

Recognizing that prevention of an arms race in outer space would avert a grave danger for international peace and security,

Emphasizing the paramount importance of strict compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament agreements relevant to outer space, including bilateral agreements, and with the existing legal regime concerning the use of outer space,

Considering that wide participation in the legal regime applicable to outer space could contribute to enhancing its effectiveness,

Noting that the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, taking into account its previous efforts since its establishment in 1985 and seeking to enhance its functioning in qualitative terms, continued the examination and identification of various issues, existing agreements and existing proposals, as well as future initiatives relevant to the prevention of an arms race in outer space, and that this contributed to a better understanding of a number of problems and to a clearer perception of the various positions,

Noting also that there were no objections in principle in the Conference on Disarmament during its 1997 session to the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee, subject to re-examination of the mandate contained in the decision of the Conference on Disarmament of 13 February 1992,

Emphasizing the mutually complementary nature of bilateral and multilateral efforts in the field of preventing an arms race in outer space, and hoping that concrete results will emerge from those efforts as soon as possible,

Convinced that further measures should be examined in the search for effective and verifiable bilateral and multilateral agreements in order to prevent an arms race in outer space, including the weaponization of outer space,

Stressing that the growing use of outer space increases the need for greater transparency and better information on the part of the international community,

Recalling in this context its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 45/55 B of 4 December 1990, 47/51 of 9 December 1992 and 48/74 A of 16 December 1993, in which, inter alia, it reaffirmed the importance of confidence-building measures as means conducive to ensuring the attainment of the objective of the prevention of an arms race in outer space,

Conscious of the benefits of confidence- and security-building measures in the military field,

Recognizing that negotiations for the conclusion of an international agreement or agreements to prevent an arms race in outer space remain a priority task of the Ad Hoc Committee and that the concrete proposals on confidence-building measures could form an integral part of such agreements,

1. Reaffirms the importance and urgency of preventing an arms race in outer space, and the readiness of all States to contribute to that common objective, in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies;

2. Reaffirms its recognition, as stated in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Prevention of an Arms Race in Outer Space, that the legal regime applicable to outer space by itself does not guarantee the prevention of an arms race in outer space, that this legal regime plays a significant role in the prevention of an arms race in that environment, that there is a need to consolidate and reinforce that regime and enhance its effectiveness, and that it is important strictly to comply with existing agreements, both bilateral and multilateral;

3. Emphasizes the necessity of further measures with appropriate and effective provisions for verification to prevent an arms race in outer space;

4. Calls upon all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the objective of the peaceful use of outer space and of the prevention of an arms race in outer space and to refrain from actions contrary to that objective and to the relevant existing treaties in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and promoting international cooperation;

5. Reiterates that the Conference on Disarmament, as the single multilateral disarmament negotiating forum, has the primary role in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement or agreements, as appropriate, on the prevention of an arms race in outer space in all its aspects;

6. Invites the Conference on Disarmament to re-examine the mandate contained in its decision of 13 February 1992, with a view to updating it as appropriate, thus providing for the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee during the 1998 session of the Conference on Disarmament;

7. Recognizes, in this respect, the growing convergence of views on the elaboration of measures designed to strengthen transparency, confidence and security in the peaceful uses of outer space;

8. Urges States conducting activities in outer space, as well as States interested in conducting such activities, to keep the Conference on Disarmament informed of the progress of bilateral or multilateral negotiations on the matter, if any, so as to facilitate its work;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Prevention of an arms race in outer space".

Disarmament and development

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/45 D [YUN 1996, p. 498], the Secretary-General, in a July note [A/52/228], stated that he had received no information from Member States providing their views and proposals for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the 1987 International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development [YUN 1987, p. 83].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 D without vote [agenda item 71 (f)].

Relationship between disarmament and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Final Document of the Tenth Special Session of the General Assembly concerning the relationship between disarmament and development,

Recalling also the adoption on 11 September 1987 of the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development,

Recalling further its resolutions 49/75 J of 15 December 1994, 50/70 G of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 D of 10 December 1996,

Bearing in mind the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995,

Stressing the growing importance of the symbiotic relationship between disarmament and development in current international relations,

1. Acknowledges the note by the Secretary-General and actions taken in accordance with the Final Document of the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development;

2. Urges the international community to devote part of the resources made available by the implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements to economic and social development, with a view to reducing the ever-widening gap between developed and developing countries;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General, by 15 April 1998, their views and proposals for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference on the Relationship between Disarmament and Development, as well as any other views and proposals with a view to achieving the goals of the action programme, within the framework of current international relations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take action, through appropriate organs and within available resources, for the implementation of the action programme adopted at the International Conference;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Relationship between disarmament and development".

Science and technology

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/595], adopted resolution 52/33 by recorded vote (103-43-19) [agenda item 66].

The role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that scientific and technological developments can have both civilian and military applications and that progress in science and technology for civilian applications needs to be maintained and encouraged,

Concerned that military applications of scientific and technological developments can contribute significantly to the improvement and upgrading of weapons of mass destruction,

Aware of the need to follow closely the scientific and technological developments that may have a negative impact on international security and disarmament, and to channel scientific and technological developments for beneficial purposes,

Cognizant that the international transfers of dual-use as well as high-technology products, services and know-how for peaceful purposes are important for the economic and social development of States,

Cognizant also of the need to regulate such transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technology with military applications through multilaterally negotiated, universally acceptable, non-discriminatory guidelines,

Expressing concern over the growing proliferation of ad hoc and exclusive export control regimes and arrangements for dual-use goods and technologies,

Recalling that the Final Document of the Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, from 18 to 20 October 1995, noted that restrictions being placed on access to technology through the imposition of non-transparent ad hoc export control regimes with exclusive membership tended to impede the economic and social development of developing countries,

Emphasizing that internationally negotiated guidelines for the transfer of high technology with military applications should take into account the legitimate defence requirements of all States and requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, while ensuring that access to high-technology products and services and know-how for peaceful purposes is not denied,

1. Affirms that scientific and technological progress should be used for the benefit of all mankind to promote the sustainable economic and social development of all States and to safeguard international security, and that international cooperation in the use of science and technology through the transfer and exchange of technological know-how for peaceful purposes should be promoted;

2. Invites Member States to undertake additional efforts to apply science and technology for disarmament-related purposes and to make disarmament-related technologies available to interested States;

3. Urges Member States to undertake multilateral negotiations with the participation of all interested States in order to establish universally acceptable, non-discriminatory guidelines for international transfers of dual-use goods and technologies and high technology with military applications;

4. Recalls its resolution 51/39 of 10 December 1996 and its request to the Secretary-General to submit an updated report no later than at its fifty-third session;

5. Encourages United Nations bodies to contribute, within existing mandates, to promoting the application of science and technology for peaceful purposes;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "The role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament".

Arms limitation and disarmament agreements

In 1997, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with various aspects of arms limitation and disarmament agreements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/591], adopted resolution 52/30 without vote [agenda item 62].

Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/60 of 12 December 1995 and other relevant resolutions on the question,

Recognizing the abiding concern of all Member States for maintaining respect for rights and obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law,

Convinced that observance of the Charter of the United Nations, relevant treaties and other sources of international law is essential for the strengthening of international security,

Mindful, in particular, of the fundamental importance of full implementation and strict observance of agreements and other agreed obligations on arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation by States parties if individual nations and the international community are to derive enhanced security from them,

Stressing that any violation of such agreements and other agreed obligations by States parties not only adversely affects the security of States parties but can also create security risks for other States relying on the constraints and commitments stipulated in those agreements and other agreed obligations,

Stressing also that any weakening of confidence in such agreements and other agreed obligations diminishes their contribution to global or regional stability and to further arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation efforts, and undermines the credibility and effectiveness of the international legal system,

Recognizing, in this context, that full compliance by States parties with all provisions of existing agreements and the resolving of compliance concerns effectively by means consistent with such agreements and international law can, inter alia, facilitate the conclusion of additional arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements, and thereby contribute to better relations among States and the strengthening of world peace and security,

Believing that compliance with all provisions of arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements by States parties is a matter of interest and concern to all members of the international community, and noting the role that the United Nations has played and should continue to play in that regard,

Welcoming the contribution to international peace and regional security that full compliance by States parties with verification provisions of arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements provides,

Also welcoming the universal recognition of the critical importance of the question of compliance with and verification of arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements, and other agreed obligations,

1. Urges all States parties to arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements to implement and comply with the entirety of all provisions of such agreements;

2. Calls upon all Member States to give serious consideration to the implications that non-compliance by States parties with any provisions of arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements has for international security and stability, as well as for the prospects for progress in the field of disarmament;

3. Also calls upon all Member States to support efforts aimed at the resolution of compliance questions by means consistent with such agreements and international law, with a view to encouraging strict observance by all States parties of the provisions of arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements and maintaining or restoring the integrity of such agreements;

4. Welcomes the role that the United Nations has played and continues to play in restoring the integrity of, and fostering negotiations on, certain arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements and in the removal of threats to peace;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide assistance that may be necessary in restoring and protecting the integrity of arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements;

6. Encourages efforts by all States parties to develop additional cooperative measures, as appropriate, that can increase confidence in compliance with existing arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements and reduce the possibility of misinterpretation and misunderstanding;

7. Notes the contribution that verification experiments and research can make and already have made in confirming and improving verification procedures for arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements under study or negotiation, thereby providing an opportunity, from the time that such agreements enter into force, for enhancing confidence in the effectiveness of verification procedures as a basis for determining compliance;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item entitled "Compliance with arms limitation and disarmament and non-proliferation agreements".

On the same date [meeting 67], the Assembly, also on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/600], adopted resolution 52/38 E by recorded vote (160-0-6) [agenda item 71 (g)].

Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/70 M of 12 December 1995 and 51/45 E of 10 December 1996,

Emphasizing the importance of the observance of environmental norms in the preparation and implementation of disarmament and arms limitation agreements,

Recognizing that it is necessary to take duly into account the agreements adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, as well as prior relevant agreements, in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms limitation,

Mindful of the detrimental environmental effects of the use of nuclear weapons,

1. Reaffirms that international disarmament forums take fully into account the relevant environmental norms in negotiating treaties and agreements on disarmament and arms limitation and that all States, through their actions, fully contribute to ensuring compliance with the aforementioned norms in the implementation of treaties and conventions to which they are parties;

2. Calls upon States to adopt unilateral, bilateral, regional and multilateral measures so as to contribute to ensuring the application of scientific and technological progress in the framework of international security, disarmament and other related spheres, without detriment to the environment or to its effective contribution to attaining sustainable development;

3. Invites all Member States to communicate to the Secretary-General information on the measures they have adopted to promote the objectives envisaged in the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report containing this information to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/38 E:

In favour. Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syria, Tajikistan, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstain: France, Israel, Japan, Monaco, United Kingdom, United States.

Studies, information and training

United Nations activities relating to information and training in the area of disarmament included expert studies on various topics, an information programme, fellowships, training and advisory services, publications and research. The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters advised the Secretary-General, among other things, on the studies programme and implementation of the information programme, and served as the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR).

Disarmament studies programme

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/70 B [YUN 1995, p. 217], the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, appointed by the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the types of small arms and light weapons actually used in conflicts, the causes of their excessive and destabilizing accumulation and transfer, and the ways and means to prevent and reduce their transfer, completed and submitted its report [A/52/298] to the General Assembly in August (see above, under "Conventional weapons and related issues").

By resolution 52/38 J, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to initiate a study on the problems of ammunition and explosives.

Disarmament Information Programme

As part of efforts throughout the UN system to serve the international community by keeping in step with the latest communications trends and technologies, the Centre for Disarmament Affairs expanded its use of electronic means to disseminate information. It began to design its own home page on the Internet as a component of the UN Web site (<http://www.un.org>) and continued to make the composite table of the Register of Conventional Arms (see above) available electronically, which it had done for the first time in 1996. Owing to staffing constraints, the Centre's traditional publications programme was somewhat reduced in type of publication and frequency of issuance.

In addition to publishing information, staff of the Centre participated in panels, meetings and seminars organized by the diplomatic and academic communities on topics such as illicit trade, light weapons, building societal resistance to violence, disarmament education, conflict resolution and peace, and arms control and disarmament. The staff also held numerous briefing engagements for the benefit of visiting high school and university students and of United Nations Association members from various countries.

As an important part of its outreach programme, the Centre liaised with public and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and the latter group, in collaboration with the Centre and the UN Department of Public Information, organized a number of events during Disarmament Week, which included a photo exhibit and public discussions on banning landmines and on nuclear disarmament.

Working with States parties, the Centre facilitated the participation of NGOs in the opening session of the Preparatory Committee for the 2000 Review Conference of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, implementing a Committee decision to make time available at each session for NGO representatives to address delegations. That action marked a significant change from the modalities governing the attendance of NGOs during the preparatory process for the 1995 Review Conference, when they had been allowed to attend only open meetings of the Committee.

The flow of contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund for the Disarmament Information Programme remained low. The Centre drew upon the Fund to cover expenses in preparing and disseminating publications, to help finance the production of the guidebook "The United Nations and Nuclear Disarmament" and to pay for services related to public events during Disarmament Week.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/601], adopted resolution 52/39 D without vote [agenda item 72].

United Nations Disarmament Information Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision taken in 1982 at its twelfth special session, the second special session devoted to disarmament, by which the World Disarmament Campaign was launched,

Recalling also its resolution 51/46 A of 10 December 1996,

Stressing the importance of informing, educating and generating public understanding of the importance of and support for multilateral action, including action by the United Nations and the Conference on Disarmament, in the field of arms limitation and disarmament, in a factual, balanced and objective manner,

Noting the delay in the publication of the 1996 edition of The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook,

1. Expresses its concern at the continuing decrease in contributions to the United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to support the timely publication and distribution of The United Nations Disarmament Yearbook.

Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters

The Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters, which advised the Secretary-General on the disarmament studies programme and implementation of the Disarmament Information Programme and served as the Board of Trustees of UNIDIR, held its twenty-ninth session (New York, 10-13 June) [A/52/282].

In 1997, the Board made recommendations to reorganize the disarmament sector of the Secretariat, and considered new security and disarmament challenges for the twenty-first century and the role of the United Nations, conventional arms and weapons of mass destruction. For reasons of continuity, the Board recommended that it meet at least twice yearly, and suggested that, in order to meet the incoming UNIDIR Director as early as possible, the next session take place in December 1997 or January 1998.

By a November note [A/C.5/52/14], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly for approval the recommendation of the UNIDIR Board of Trustees for a subvention of $213,000 for 1998 from the UN regular budget. In resolution 52/222, section I, of 22 December, the Assembly approved the subvention.

Disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services

In 1997, 24 fellows participated in the UN disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services programme, which began on 15 September in Geneva and ended on 1 November in New York. It included a series of lectures; speaking, drafting and simulation exercises; research projects; and study visits to Austria, Germany, Japan and the Netherlands.

UN Institute for Disarmament Research

By an August note [A/52/272], the Secretary-General transmitted the UNIDIR Deputy Director's report covering activities from July 1996 to June 1997, as well as the report of the Board of Trustees on the 1998 work programme. The research programme of the Institute continued to focus on the areas of collective security, regional security and non-proliferation studies. Activities relating to a fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament (see above, under "UN role in disarmament") were put on hold, pending clarification of its timing and modalities.

Regional centres for peace and disarmament

Asia and the Pacific

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/46 B [YUN 1996, p. 505], the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/52/309 & Corr.1] describing the activities of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific from August 1996 through July 1997. The Centre was inaugurated in Kathmandu, Nepal, in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 88].

The Secretary-General noted that the Centre organized two major regional meetings, one dealing with nuclear disarmament in the post-Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty era (Kathmandu, 24-26 February), and the second on the new agenda for disarmament and regional security (Sapporo, Japan, 22-25 July), which was organized by the Centre in cooperation with Hokkaido Prefecture and Sapporo City, as well as the Government of Japan. At the request of the United Nations Association of Japan, the Centre assisted in organizing a symposium (Kanazawa, Japan, 3-5 June) focusing on the subregion of north-east Asia. In addition, an informal exchange of views was held in July on the creation of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Central Asia and the concept of a nuclear-weapon-free State.

Since the submission of the Secretary-General's previous report in October 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 504], the Centre received voluntary contributions amounting to $197,168 as at July 1997.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/601], adopted resolution 52/39 A without vote [agenda item 72 (a)].

United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/39 D of 30 November 1987 and 44/117 F of 15 December 1989, by which it established the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and renamed it the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, with headquarters at Kathmandu and with the mandate of providing, on request, substantive support for the initiatives and other activities mutually agreed upon by the Member States of the Asia-Pacific region for the implementation of measures for peace and disarmament, through appropriate utilization of available resources,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General, in which he expresses his belief that the mandate of the Regional Centre remains valid and that the Centre could be a useful instrument for fostering a climate of cooperation in the post-cold-war era,

Commending the useful activities carried out by the Regional Centre in encouraging regional and sub-regional dialogue for the enhancement of openness, transparency and confidence-building, as well as the promotion of disarmament and security through the organization of regional meetings, which has come to be widely known within the Asia-Pacific region as the "Kathmandu process",

Noting that trends in the post-cold-war era have emphasized the function of the Regional Centre in assisting Member States as they deal with new security concerns and disarmament issues emerging in the region,

Recognizing the need for the Regional Centre to pursue effectively its expanded function,

Expressing its appreciation to the Regional Centre for its organization of substantive regional meetings at Kathmandu and at Sapporo, Japan, in 1997,

Appreciating highly the important role Nepal has played as the host nation of the headquarters of the Regional Centre,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 50/71 D of 12 December 1995, in particular its strong support for the continued operation and further strengthening of the United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific as an essential promoter of the regional peace and disarmament dialogue in the Asia-Pacific region known as the "Kathmandu process";

2. Welcomes the fact that 1998 will mark the tenth anniversary of the Kathmandu process;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the continued political support and financial contribution received by the Regional Centre;

4. Appeals to Member States, in particular those within the Asia-Pacific region, as well as to international governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations, to make voluntary contributions so as to strengthen the programme of activities of the Regional Centre and its implementation;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary support, within existing resources, to the Regional Centre in carrying out its programme of activities;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific".

Financial situation

In its first report on the proposed programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium [A/52/7/Rev.1], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended that the Secretary-General's 1995 proposal [YUN 1995, p. 2301] to abolish the Regional Centres should be drawn to the attention of the First Committee. In addition, ACABQ stated that the Secretary-General should provide further information on the status of voluntary contributions and, concerning the Centre in Lomé, Togo, the status of discussions with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Committee noted that it had been informed that discussions were under way with UNDP for provision of some resources for consultancy purposes for the Centre in Lomé and, if the efforts were successful, then the question of abolishing a P-5 post at the Centre would be reconsidered.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to the recommendation made by ACABQ, the Secretary-General, in a December report [A/52/309/Add.1 & Corr.1], updated the financial situation of the Regional Centres and provided the status of discussions with UNDP regarding possible financial support for the Centre in Lomé.

Regarding the Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa, established in Lomé in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 85], the Secretary-General stated that a consultancy mission earlier in the year concluded that there was much support for continuing and strengthening the Centre, especially in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Mechanism on Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution. The consultants recommended that the UN Department of Political Affairs (DPA) and UNDP ensure the sustainability of the Centre, and that DPA, UNDP, Member States and, particularly, the host State help the Centre raise funds. They also recommended a more stable process of funding; the provision of a grant of $ 150,000; appointing a Director of the Centre; and that the Director use the first six months of 1998 to develop, in consultation with the OAU secretariat, a five-year work programme for submission to potential donors. If agreement were reached on the recommendation that UNDP provide a grant of $ 150,000, it would make it possible to continue operating the Centre beyond December 1997. In the absence of the grant or other contributions, Centre operations might have to be suspended as of 1 January 1998.

As to the Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific, the Secretary-General stated that, in order to use the scarce available resources for substantive activities, it was impossible for the Centre to recruit any local support staff. For that reason, the Director continued to operate from Headquarters. Several States and other interested organizations had pledged contributions, and two Governments had indicated their willingness to host regional meetings in 1998. Centre activities were also expected to continue to receive funding from the UN Trust Fund for Public Awareness on Disarmament Issues and the UN Trust Fund for Global and Regional Disarmament Activities.

The Secretary-General recalled that the activities of the Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean, established in Lima, Peru, in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 88], were suspended in July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 504]. The Government of Peru, the host country, communicated to him its interest in reactivating the operation of the Centre, was examining the level of financial contribution it would make towards supporting the Centre and was studying options for a site in Lima. In addition, the Government of Chile communicated to him its interest in seeing the activities of the Centre reactivated and indicated its readiness to support it. Furthermore, a number of organizations and research institutes had indicated that, should the Centre be reactivated, there might be areas of common interest and activity.

Chapter VIII

Other political and security questions

The United Nations in 1997 considered a variety of issues with specific political and security aspects, including those related to international peace and security, regional aspects of such security, the eradication of colonialism, information, the peaceful uses of outer space and the effects of atomic radiation.

An important development lay in United Nations support for national efforts to promote and consolidate new and restored democracies. The Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development was held in Bucharest, Romania, from 2 to 4 September. The Conference proposed to Governments guidelines for strengthening policies and principles and addressed recommendations to donor countries and the international community as well as to the UN system and international financial organizations. The General Assembly encouraged the Secretary-General to improve the capacity of the Organization to respond effectively to requests for support to achieve the goals of good governance and democratization.

The Assembly also acted on regional security issues concerning the South Atlantic and the Indian Ocean, based on reports of UN activities in those areas.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in 1997 again reviewed progress on implementing the 1960 Declaration. The General Assembly stressed that the eradication of colonialism by the year 2000 required the full and constructive cooperation of all parties concerned, and noted the particular circumstances which prevailed in the Territories under UN review, encouraging their political evolution towards self-determination.

The Secretary-General, in the context of his reform of the United Nations, announced a sweeping revamp of UN information policies, based on the recommendations of a special Task Force of independent experts. UN policies were to be reoriented to provide communications and outreach services to the media, non-governmental organizations and other disseminators, utilizing the latest media technology and techniques. The Assembly adopted resolutions on information in the service of humanity and on the public information policies and activities of the Organization. The Administrative Committee on Coordination issued a statement in which UN organizations committed themselves to assisting developing countries in redressing the information and technology gap and embraced the objective of establishing universal access to basic communications and information services.

The Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space—the main UN body dealing with space issues—and its Scientific and Technical and Legal Subcommittees discussed ways of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes and spin-off benefits of space technology. The Assembly agreed that the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-III) should be convened in Vienna from 19 to 30 July 1999 as a special session of the Committee on Outer Space.

The UN Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation continued its studies on atomic and ionizing radiation, analysing their effects on mankind and the environment. The Assembly requested the Committee to continue its work, including its activities to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation.

General aspects of international security

Implementation of the 1970 Declaration

The General Assembly, pursuant to decision 51/415 [YUN1996,p.506], included the item on the implementation of the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security [YUN 1970, p. 105, GA res. 2734(XXV)] in the agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session.

On 9 December, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee [A/52/611], adopted decision 52/415 by recorded vote (116-0-52) [agenda item 82].

Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security

At its 67th plenary meeting, on 9 December 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Review of the implementation of the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security".

Support for democracies

On 9 September [A/52/334], Romania transmitted to the Secretary-General a document entitled "Progress Review and Recommendations", adopted at the Third International Conference of New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development (Bucharest, 2-4 September). The first Conference had been held in Manila, Philippines, in 1988, and the second in Managua, Nicaragua, in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 250].

The Third Conference reaffirmed its commitment to the process of democratization of societies, acknowledging the interdependence and mutual reinforcement between democracy, development and good governance. It noted that as the new or restored democracies approached the twenty-first century, rapid political, economic and social changes continued to challenge their struggle for development and their institutions of governance. It declared that the three areas of governance—the State, the private sector and civil society—were faced with new emerging issues in a complex and uncertain new era of globalization and interdependence. Among issues of particular concern were ways to consolidate democracy, alleviate poverty, allocate more resources to the judiciary and absorb the social cost of structural adjustment. Other issues included managing financial and natural resources more efficiently and effectively, and developing new institutional arrangements and mechanisms for sustainable human development, gender equality and citizens' participation in decision-making.

Most new or restored democracies were suffering from a widening gap between the reform of legal systems and the ability of Governments to apply laws effectively, the Conference asserted. They also had to grapple with the challenges of consolidating democracy through elections and the strengthening of political parties and the judiciary, State reform and institutional development. However, the real challenge was to strengthen democracy through the practices of efficient government, transparency and anti-corruption measures in order to promote sustainable human development and bring the State and the people closer together. New or restored democracies therefore needed to re-examine the role of the State, along with the structure of their political systems, to find ways to make government more efficient and effective.

The Conference proposed guidelines for strengthening policies and principles addressed to Governments of new or restored democracies and made recommendations specifically related to civil society and the private sector. It also addressed recommendations to donor countries and the international community, and to the UN system and international financial organizations.

It was suggested that a follow-up mechanism to the Conference be established to have issues treated systematically so that the progress made by each country could be shared, including the elaboration of indicators. The Conference noted the offer of Benin to host the Fourth International Conference, of Mongolia to host a future Conference, and the suggestion by the Philippines that a summit meeting be held in the year 2000 to consolidate the gains of the new or restored democracies and to underscore the interaction between peace, democracy and development for the next millennium.

On 16 September [A/52/437], the General Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, at its ninety-eighth session (Cairo, Egypt, 11-16 September), adopted the Universal Declaration on Democracy and urged Governments and parliaments to be guided by its content.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/52/513], the Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 51/31 [YUN 1996, p. 510], reported on support by the UN system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies. The report examined recent international events on democratization and governance, including the Third International Conference (see above) and the International Conference on Governance for Sustainable Growth and Equity (New York, 28-30 July) organized by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Seminars had also been organized in Imatra, Finland, and in Svetogorsk, Russian Federation, to address the problems and prospects of democratization in Russia and the Baltic States, and to foster an improved relationship between the United Nations and civil society.

Efforts to elaborate a new understanding of democratization and governance were recorded, as were UN approaches towards an agenda for democratization and governance, including the findings and recommendations of the Subgroup on Capacity Building for Governance of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). That body had identified principles emphasized by UN agencies in their definition of governance: an effective public sector; accountability/transparency of processes and institutions; effective participation of civil society/political empowerment; effective decentralization of power, access to knowledge, information and education; political pluralism/freedom of association and expression; rule of law/respect for human rights; legitimacy/consensus; attitudes and values fostering responsibility, solidarity and tolerance; equity/voice for the poor; and gender equality. Together with free and fair elections, those elements were essential for a solid framework for democratization assistance by the United Nations. It was stated that a joint agenda for democratization and governance also provided an opportunity to bridge the gap between the peace and development agendas of the United Nations, and that misunderstandings about the nature and scope of UN work in democratization should be avoided.

The UN system, in assisting and supporting Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies and democratization in general, did not endorse or promote any specific form of government. Furthermore, the pace at which democratization could proceed depended on a variety of political, economic, social and cultural factors proper to the circumstances of a particular culture and society. The international community could move to a new phase and develop plans jointly with the United Nations to implement specific strategies in promoting democratization within a truly multidisciplinary inter-agency framework. Other issues discussed in the report were elections and democratization, the role of civil society and the private sector in democratization, and gender participation and democratization.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Secretary-General stated that, while attention should be paid to the administrative and organizational aspects of electoral assistance, resources should be devoted to reinforcing other institutions and processes essential to the consolidation of democracy. In addition, the focus of electoral observation should move from the international to the national level, with support being provided to domestic organizations in their roles as electoral observers and watchdogs of democracy. Funds could be dedicated to improving the capacity of domestic observers and developing new and creative programmes to support other democratic institutions. In the context of UN reform, a general review should be undertaken of the ways the Organization provided electoral assistance, and further steps, including wider consultation with Member States, were necessary.

The Secretary-General said he would inform the General Assembly of ideas to encourage representatives of civil society to hold a people's millennium assembly as a separate companion event to a special millennium session of the General Assembly in the year 2000. He added that peace-building and development, democratization and governance efforts of the Organization were distinct but mutually reinforcing, underlining that the UN system must improve its ability to cooperate and coordinate its actions. The ACC Subgroup on Capacity Building for Governance had pointed to a lack of coordination and cooperation among UN organizations in the area of assistance for democratization and peace-building, and urged elaboration of a common framework on governance to guide future country-level programming throughout the UN system. The Secretary-General hoped that the report of the Third International Conference would stimulate discussions on the programmatic aspects of UN operational activities related to development, governance and peace-building.

The Secretary-General concluded that the concept of democracy had more practical relevance to UN activities than ever before. As the international community dealt less with interstate wars and more with internal conflicts, democratization had gained an immediate relevance for millions who aspired to its implementation. The United Nations had an obligation to those people to devise a revitalized programme of work with greater unity of purpose and coherence of action, he stated.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/18 without vote [draft: A/52/L.28 & Add.1] [agenda item 38].

Support by the United Nations system of the efforts of Governments to promote and consolidate new or restored democracies

Indian Ocean

In 1997, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean met (New York, 30 June-1 July) [A/52/29] to continue consideration of approaches to achieving the goals contained in the 1971 Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace [YUN 1971, p. 34, GA res. 2832(XXVI)]. In that connection, it noted a comprehensive statement by its Chairman, suggesting a possible course of action for the Committee.

The Chairman stated that propitious opportunities existed for renewed multilateral and regional efforts towards the realization of the goals of maintaining conditions of peace, security and stability by means other than military alliances in the Indian Ocean region. Conditions made it possible to have a fresh look at the alternative approaches adopted by the Committee in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 155], which had set forth general guiding principles to implement the goals of the 1971 Declaration and allowed a step-by-step approach so that the Committee could move forward. Those approaches could be grouped into four categories: possible cooperative strategies; techniques of preventive diplomacy; measures of arms control and disarmament arrangements; and non-military threats of security. The Chairman asked Committee members to identify priority concerns and ideas for in-depth study so as to progress towards negotiations on a consensus document or documents. First, the Committee could select specific proposals concerning confidence- and trust-building measures, and formulate, using existing UN documents, a set of principles and guidelines for confidence-building measures, preventive diplomacy and cooperation tailored to the needs and specific requirements of the region. Depending on progress made, other items could be selected by the Committee. The aim would be to formulate three or four consensus documents, to give expression to the international political climate and prevalent thinking, as well as the viewpoints of Member States.

To be successful, that approach required the participation of Member States and support and encouragement from the major Powers and the major maritime users, whose return to the Committee would have a positive influence on its discussions and ensure their viability. To bring the absent members back to the Committee, the Chairman suggested that the Committee demonstrate its further viability and ability to produce concrete results. States that had not participated actively in Committee work should show greater interest and encourage all other Member States and extend to them their cooperation.

Some delegations supported the approach proposed by the Chairman. However, since no consensus was reached, he was asked to continue informal consultations within the membership of the Committee and to report to the General Assembly at its current session. The report was deferred to the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 67], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/606], adopted resolution 52/44 by recorded vote (125-3-40) [agenda item 77].

Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace, contained in its resolution 2832(XXVI) of 16 December 1971, and recalling also its resolution

51/51 of 10 December 1996 and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the report of the Meeting of the Littoral and Hinterland States of the Indian Ocean held in July 1979,

Recalling further paragraph 72 of the final document adopted by the Twelfth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi on 7 and 8 April 1997, which underlined the importance of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean continuing his informal consultations on the future of the Indian Ocean as a zone of peace and the Committee's work,

Emphasizing the need to foster consensual approaches, in particular given the prevailing international climate, which is conducive to the pursuit of such endeavours,

Noting the initiatives taken by countries of the region to promote cooperation, in particular economic cooperation, in the Indian Ocean area and the possible contribution of such initiatives to overall objectives of a zone of peace,

Convinced that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would assist the progress of mutually beneficial dialogue to develop conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

Considering that greater efforts and more time are required to develop a focused discussion on practical measures to ensure conditions of peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Indian Ocean;

2. Reiterates its conviction that the participation of all the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee is important and would greatly facilitate the development of a mutually beneficial dialogue to advance peace, security and stability in the Indian Ocean region;

3. Requests the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee to continue his dialogue on the work of the Ad Hoc Committee with all of its members, the permanent members of the Security Council and the major maritime users of the Indian Ocean and to report at an early date to the General Assembly, through the Ad Hoc Committee, on his consultations and on other relevant developments;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to render all necessary assistance to the Ad Hoc Committee, including the provision of summary records;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace".

Decolonization

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Special Committee on decolonization) held its annual session in New York in two parts—on 16 January, 24 February and 30 April, for the first part, and from 30 May to 20 June and on 9 July and 16 September, for the second. The 22-member Special Committee, in line with Assembly resolution 51/146 [YUN 1996, p. 517], reported on its 1997 activities [A/52/23]. It considered various aspects of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration [YUN 1960, p. 49, GA res. 1514(XV)], including both general decolonization issues and the situations of individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (NSGTs). It decided to integrate its Subcommittee on Small Territories, Petitions, Information and Assistance into the Special Committee, and to abolish its Working Group and entrust its functions to the Bureau, which became open-ended.

The Special Committee and the Assembly in 1997 considered East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, New Caledonia and Western Sahara (see PART ONE, Chapter II), as well as the small island Territories in the Caribbean and Pacific regions.

Implementation of 1960 Declaration

Decolonization programme

The Secretary-General, within the context of his reform of the United Nations (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), suggested in the proposed programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium

[A/52/303] that the subprogramme on decolonization be undertaken by the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services.

In an 18 September letter [A/52/379] to the Secretary-General, the Special Committee Chairman, in noting the Secretary-General's proposal, stated that no mention had been made of the Decolonization Branch, which, contrary to assurances given, had been downgraded. In view of the lack of a positive response to the position of the Special Committee, he had no alternative but to bring the matter to the attention of the General Assembly.

On 8 October, the Assembly's Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee had before it a draft resolution, introduced by Papua New Guinea, on the implementation of the 1960 Declaration, which was later named "Decolonization programme of the United Nations system" [A/C.4/52/L.4/Rev.1]. By that resolution, the Assembly would have reaffirmed the political nature and substance of the mandate of the Special Committee, and expressed concern that the proposed administrative changes could jeopardize, downgrade and undermine the UN decolonization programme. It would have urged the Secretary-General to avail the Decolonization Branch of adequate resources until the completion of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000) [YUN 1988, p. 734, GA res. 43/47] and to maintain it and its functions pertaining to the Special Committee and the Fourth Committee in the Department of Political Affairs.

On 24 October [A/52/530], Papua New Guinea, on behalf of the draft's co-sponsors, sought confirmation from the Secretary-General, before the Committee acted on the text, that the Decolonization Unit with all its current functions would be located in the Department of Political Affairs, reporting directly to the Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. That understanding was confirmed by the Secretary-General on 27 October [A/52/531], when he reiterated his commitment to implementing the subprogramme on decolonization in the medium-term plan for 1998-2001. On the same day, Papua New Guinea announced in the Fourth Committee that the draft resolution had been withdrawn.

The Secretary-General, in a 24 October response [A/52/521] to the Special Committee Chairman, reiterated that he attached the highest priority to the decolonization programme and was committed to maintaining its importance and status in the Organization's work in the political arena. He said that the substantive responsibilities for the programme would be maintained in the Department of Political Affairs, which would remain the focal point for matters relating to decolonization. The related substantive services to the Special Committee would be provided by a Decolonization Unit and secretariat servicing would be carried out by the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services.

On 28 October [A/52/533], the Special Committee Chairman informed the Secretary-General of the Committee's satisfaction with the arrangements and reassured him of its full support for his UN reforms. In addition, he noted the importance of the approval of staffing and budgetary resources for the decolonization programme as stipulated in the medium-term plan for 1998-2001 and of maintaining the Decolonization Unit in the Department of Political Affairs [A/52/542]. Such action would satisfy the interests of Member States, comply with the decision of the Secretary-General and allow the international community to live up to the goals of the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, he stated.

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/78 [draft: A/52/L.64 & Add.1] by recorded vote (139-2-23) [agenda item 18].

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples

The General Assembly,

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all its subsequent resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, most recently resolution 51/146 of 13 December 1996, as well as the relevant resolutions of the Security Council,

Recognizing that the eradication of colonialism is one of the priorities of the Organization for the decade that began in 1990,

Deeply conscious of the need to take, speedily, measures to eliminate the last vestiges of colonialism by the year 2000, as called for in its resolution 43/47 of 22 November 1988,

Reiterating its conviction of the need for the elimination of colonialism, as well as of the need for the total eradication of racial discrimination and violations of basic human rights,

Noting with satisfaction the achievements of the Special Committee in contributing to the effective and complete implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations on decolonization,

Stressing the importance of the participation of the administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee,

Noting with satisfaction the cooperation and active participation of some administering Powers in the work of the Special Committee, as well as their continued readiness to receive United Nations visiting missions in the Territories under their administration,

Noting with concern the negative impact that the non-participation of certain administering Powers has had on the work of the Special Committee, depriving it of an important source of information on the Territories under their administration,

Aware of the pressing need of newly independent and emerging States for assistance from the United Nations and its system of organizations in the economic, social and other fields,

Aware also of the pressing need of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, including in particular the small island Territories, for economic, social and other assistance from the United Nations and the organizations within its system,

Taking special note of the fact that the Special Committee held a Caribbean Regional Seminar to Review the Political, Economic and Social Conditions in the Small Island Non-Self-Governing Territories at St. John's, Antigua and Barbuda, from 21 to 23 May 1997,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all other resolutions on decolonization, including its resolution 43/47, in which it declared the decade that began in 1990 as the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism, and calls upon the administering Powers, in accordance with those resolutions, to take all necessary steps to enable the peoples of the Territories concerned to exercise fully as soon as possible their right to self-determination, including independence;

2. Affirms once again that the continuation of colonialism in any form or manifestation, including economic exploitation, is incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

3. Reaffirms its determination to continue to take all steps necessary to bring about the complete and speedy eradication of colonialism and the faithful observance by all States of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

4. Affirms once again its support for the aspirations of the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

5. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples covering its work during 1997, including the programme of work envisaged for 1998;

6. Calls upon all States, in particular the administering Powers, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to give effect within their respective spheres of competence to the recommendations of the Special Committee for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

7. Calls upon the administering Powers to ensure that foreign economic activities in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration are directed to assist the peoples of those Territories in the exercise of their right to self-determination;

8. Takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or reduce some of the military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

9. Calls upon the administering Powers to eliminate the remaining military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories in compliance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and urges them not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States;

10. Urges all States, directly and through their action in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to provide moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories, and requests that the administering Powers, in consultation with the Governments of the Territories under their administration, take steps to enlist and make effective use of all possible assistance, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, in the strengthening of the economies of those Territories;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration and to carry out those actions approved by the General Assembly regarding the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism in all Territories that have not yet exercised their right to self-determination, including independence, and in particular:

(a) To formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

(b) To continue to examine the implementation by Member States of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions on decolonization;

(c) To continue to pay special attention to the small Territories, in particular through the dispatch of regular visiting missions, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most suitable steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise their right to self-determination and independence;

(d) To take all necessary steps to enlist worldwide support among Governments, as well as national and international organizations, for the achievement of the objectives of the Declaration and the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

12. Calls upon the administering Powers to continue to cooperate with the Special Committee in the discharge of its mandate and to receive visiting missions to the Territories to secure first-hand information and to ascertain the wishes and aspirations of their inhabitants;

13. Also calls upon the administering Powers that have not participated in the work of the Special Committee to do so at its 1998 session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to provide economic, social and other assistance to the Non-Self-Governing Territories and to continue to do so, as appropriate, after they exercise their right to self-determination, including independence;

15. Welcomes the decision of the Secretary-General of 27 October 1997:

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/78:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstain: Australia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Belgium, Bulgaria, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Israel, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Micronesia, Netherlands, Republic of Moldova, Russian Federation, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Ukraine.

The United Kingdom, in explaining its negative vote, regretted that the resolution contained many egregious examples of language and assumptions that did not reflect the situation in NSGTs. It did not accept that the presence of military bases could in any way constitute an obstacle to the granting of independence or impede the inhabitants from expressing their views on self-determination. The text appeared to accuse the administering Powers of economic exploitation and even of the violation of human rights. The continued references to colonialism, colonial rule and colonial countries were out of step with the major improvements in other resolutions on decolonization issues. The United Kingdom would continue to fulfil its obligations with regard to its dependent Territories, but took a different view of the need for a decolonization programme on the current scale, which was disproportionate to the real remaining problems. The United Nations had more pressing goals affecting vastly greater numbers of the world's population and more relevant to current needs. The activities and structure of the Organization should reflect the world's current and future priorities and not those of the past.

Implementation by international organizations

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/141 [YUN 1996, p. 520], the Secretary-General reported in June [A/52/185] on implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Secretary-General had requested information from the executive heads of 25 such organizations on measures they had taken to implement the relevant resolutions.

In a June report [E/1997/81 & Add.1], the President of the Economic and Social Council stated that a number of specialized agencies and organizations continued to extend assistance to NSGTs. Several had extended or formulated assistance programmes within their own budgetary resources, in addition to contributing as executing agencies of projects funded by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the primary provider of assistance. UNDP's assistance to Caribbean NSGTs under its fifth-cycle country programme focused principally on support for human resource development, capacity-building, institutional strengthening, and environment and natural resources management. For the sixth cycle, it was to continue to emphasize support for those areas, building on the results of its previous interventions. However, resource constraints had restricted severely UNDP's ability to respond more fully to the technical cooperation needs of the NSGTs in the Caribbean, forcing it to prioritize the allocation of assistance.

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) reported that the declining resources in technical cooperation made it increasingly difficult for ICAO to provide assistance to ensure the safe and efficient development of air transport as an important tool for economic development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1997/66 [draft: E/1997/L.48] by recorded vote (28-0-18) [agenda item 9].

Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the President of the Economic and Social Council on consultations held with the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Having heard the statement by the representative of the Special Committee,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, the resolutions of the Special Committee and other relevant resolutions and decisions, in particular Council resolution 1996/37 of 26 July 1996,

Noting that the large majority of the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories are small island Territories,

Welcoming the assistance extended to Non-Self-Governing Territories by certain specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme,

Stressing that, because the development options of small island Non-Self-Governing Territories are limited, there are special challenges to planning for and implementing sustainable development and that those Territories will be constrained in meeting the challenges without the continued cooperation and assistance of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system,

Stressing also the importance of securing necessary resources for funding expanded assistance programmes for the peoples concerned and the need to enlist the support of all major funding institutions within the United Nations system in that regard,

Reaffirming the mandates of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take all the appropriate measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to ensure the full implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions,

Expressing its conviction that closer contacts and consultations between and among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and regional organizations help to facilitate the effective formulation of assistance programmes to the peoples concerned,

Mindful of the imperative need to keep under continuous review the activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations decisions relating to decolonization,

Bearing in mind the extremely fragile economies of the small island Non-Self-Governing Territories and their vulnerability to natural disasters, such as hurricanes, cyclones and sea level rise, and recalling other relevant General Assembly resolutions,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/141 of 13 December 1996 on cooperation and coordination of the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations in their assistance to Non-Self-Governing Territories,

4. Reaffirms that the specialized agencies and other organizations and institutions of the United Nations system should continue to be guided by the relevant resolutions of the United Nations in their efforts to contribute to the implementation of the Declaration and all other relevant General Assembly resolutions;

5. Also reaffirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations organs of the legitimacy of the aspirations of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to exercise their right to self-determination entails, as a corollary, the extension of all appropriate assistance to those peoples;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have continued to cooperate with the United Nations and the regional and subregional organizations in the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and requests all the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to implement the relevant provisions of those resolutions;

7. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and international and regional organizations to examine and review conditions in each Territory so as to take appropriate measures to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of the Territories;

8. Requests the specialized agencies, the international institutions associated with the United Nations and regional organizations to strengthen existing measures of support and formulate appropriate programmes of assistance to the remaining Non-Self-Governing Territories, within the framework of their respective mandates, in order to accelerate progress in the economic and social sectors of those Territories;

9. Recommends that the executive heads of the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system formulate, with the active cooperation of the regional organizations concerned, concrete proposals for the full implementation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations and submit the proposals to their governing and legislative organs;

10. Also recommends that the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system continue to review at the regular meetings of their governing bodies the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

11. Welcomes the continued initiative exercised by the United Nations Development Programme in maintaining close liaison among the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and in providing assistance to the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

14. Recommends that all Governments intensify their efforts in the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system of which they are members to accord priority to the question of providing assistance to the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

15. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution and to the discussion held on the subject at the substantive session of 1997 of the Economic and Social Council;

Military activities and arrangements in colonial countries

The Special Committee on decolonization considered military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration. For that purpose, it had before it working papers containing information on military activities and arrangements in Bermuda, Guam and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2075, 2076, 2086].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/621], adopted decision 52/417 by recorded vote (108-51-3) [agenda items 91 & 18].

Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration

At its 69th plenary meeting, on 10 December 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text:

"1. The General Assembly, having considered the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to an item on the agenda of the Special Committee entitled 'Military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration', and recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and all other relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to military activities in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, reaffirms its strong conviction that military bases and installations in the Territories concerned could constitute an obstacle to the exercise by the people of those Territories of their right to self-determination, and reiterates its strong views that existing bases and installations, which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, should be withdrawn.

"2. Aware of the presence of such bases and installations in some of those Territories, the General Assembly urges the administering Powers concerned to continue to take all necessary measures not to involve those Territories in any offensive acts or interference against other States.

"3. The General Assembly reiterates its concern that military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration might run counter to the rights and interests of the colonial peoples concerned, especially their right to self-determination and independence. The Assembly once again calls upon the administering Powers concerned to terminate such activities and to eliminate such military bases in compliance with its relevant resolutions.

"4. The General Assembly reiterates that the colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories and areas adjacent thereto should not be used for nuclear testing, dumping of nuclear wastes or deployment of nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction.

"5. The General Assembly deplores the continued alienation of land in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly in the small island Territories of the Pacific and Caribbean regions, for military installations. The large-scale utilization of the local resources for this purpose could adversely affect the economic development of the Territories concerned.

"6. The General Assembly takes note of the decision of some of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of those military bases in the Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"7. The General Assembly requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform world public opinion of those military activities and arrangements in colonial and Non-Self-Governing Territories which constitute an obstacle to the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

"8. The General Assembly requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-third session."

Foreign interests impeding implementation of Declaration

In 1997, the Special Committee on decolonization, as in previous years, considered activities of foreign and other interests impeding implementation of the 1960 Declaration on decolonization. The Special Committee had before it working papers prepared by the Secretariat containing information on economic conditions, with particular reference to foreign economic activities, in the Territories of Anguilla, Bermuda, the Cayman Islands, Montserrat, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands [A/AC.109/2075, 2076-2078, 2081, 2082, 2088].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/621], adopted resolution 52/72 by recorded vote (156-3-5) [agenda items 91 & 18].

Economic and other activities which affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which impede the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Territories under colonial domination",

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, as well as all its other relevant resolutions, including, in particular, resolution 46/181 of 19 December 1991,

Reaffirming the solemn obligation of the administering Powers under the Charter of the United Nations to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the human and natural resources of those Territories against abuses,

Reaffirming also that any economic or other activity that has a negative impact on the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and on the exercise of their right to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) is contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming further that the natural resources are the heritage of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, including the indigenous populations,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location, size and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the need to promote the economic stability, diversification and strengthening of the economy of each Territory,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Conscious also that foreign economic investment, when done in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes, could make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories and could also make a valid contribution to the exercise of their right to self-determination,

Concerned about any activities aimed at exploiting the natural and human resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to the detriment of the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the final documents of the successive Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries and of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, the South Pacific Forum and the Caribbean Community,

1. Reaffirms the right of peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as their right to enjoyment of their natural resources and their right to dispose of those resources in their best interest;

2. Affirms the value of foreign economic investment undertaken in collaboration with the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and in accordance with their wishes in order to make a valid contribution to the socio-economic development of the Territories;

3. Reaffirms the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, and reaffirms the legitimate rights of their peoples over their natural resources;

4. Reaffirms its concern about any activities aimed at the exploitation of the natural resources that are the heritage of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, including the indigenous populations, in the Caribbean, the Pacific and other regions, as well as their human resources, to the detriment of their interests, and in such a way as to deprive them of their right to dispose of those resources;

5. Affirms the need to avoid any economic and other activities which adversely affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

6. Calls once again upon all Governments that have not yet done so to take, in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970, legislative, administrative or other measures in respect of their nationals and the bodies corporate under their jurisdiction that own and operate enterprises in the Non-Self-Governing Territories that are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of those Territories, in order to put an end to such enterprises;

7. Reiterates that the damaging exploitation and plundering of the marine and other natural resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, in violation of the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, is a threat to the integrity and prosperity of those Territories;

8. Invites all Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to take all possible measures to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories over their natural resources is fully respected and safeguarded;

9. Urges the administering Powers concerned to take effective measures to safeguard and guarantee the inalienable right of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories to their natural resources and to establish and maintain control over the future development of those resources, and requests the administering Powers to take all necessary steps to protect the property rights of the peoples of those Territories;

10. Calls upon the administering Powers concerned to ensure that no discriminatory working conditions prevail in the Territories under their administration and to promote in each Territory a fair system of wages applicable to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, through all means at his disposal, to inform world public opinion of any activity that affects the exercise of the right of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to self-determination in conformity with the Charter and General Assembly resolution 1514(XV);

12. Appeals to the mass media, trade unions and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals, to continue their efforts to promote the economic well-being of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories;

13. Decides to follow the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories so as to ensure that all economic activities in those Territories are aimed at strengthening and diversifying their economies in the interest of their peoples, including the indigenous populations, and at promoting the economic and financial viability of those Territories;

14. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Dissemination of information

In 1997, the Special Committee again considered the question of dissemination of information on decolonization. The Committee held consultations with the UN Departments of Political Affairs and of Public Information. It reported on the Week of Solidarity with the Peoples of All Colonial Territories Fighting for Freedom, Independence and Human Rights (21-25 May), which had been observed annually since 1972. Speaking on the occasion of the Week, the Special Committee Chairman said that however important the success in decolonization, the task of the complete eradication of colonialism was still unfinished and required further concerted and determined action, particularly for those small island NSGTs in the Pacific and the Caribbean. He appealed for the strengthened and continued support of the administering Powers. According to the Chairman, the Special Committee counted on the support of the specialized agencies and organizations within the UN system in enhancing the standard of living of NSGTs and promoting their self-sufficiency, as well as that of regional and international organizations, which should explore new avenues to provide NSGTs with legal and political opportunities for participating in programmes that related to their environment and livelihood. The Committee believed that the combined effort would ensure the fulfilment of the promise of freedom, lasting peace, sustained growth and sustainable development for all peoples of the planet, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Committee [A/52/23], adopted resolution 52/79 by recorded vote (159-3-3) [agenda item 18].

Dissemination of information on decolonization

The General Assembly,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and other resolutions and decisions of the United Nations concerning the dissemination of information on decolonization, in particular General Assembly resolution 51/147 of 13 December 1996,

Recognizing the need for flexible, practical and innovative approaches towards reviewing the options of self-determination for the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories with a view to achieving complete decolonization by the year 2000,

Reiterating the importance of dissemination of information as an instrument for furthering the aims of the Declaration, and mindful of the role of world public opinion in effectively assisting the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories to achieve self-determination,

Recognizing the role played by the administering Powers in transmitting information to the Secretary-General in accordance with the terms of Article 73 (e) of the Charter of the United Nations,

Aware of the role of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization,

1. Takes note of the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the dissemination of information on decolonization and publicity for the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization;

2. Considers it important to continue its efforts to ensure the widest possible dissemination of information on decolonization, with particular emphasis on the options of self-determination available for the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

3. Requests the Department of Political Affairs and the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat to take into account the suggestions of the Special Committee to continue their efforts to take measures through all the media available, including publications, radio and television, as well as the Internet, to give publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization and, inter alia:

(a) To continue to collect, prepare and disseminate, particularly to the Territories, basic material on the issue of self-determination of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories;

(b) To seek the full cooperation of the administering Powers in the discharge of the tasks referred to above;

(c) To maintain a working relationship with the appropriate regional and intergovernmental organizations, particularly in the Pacific and Caribbean regions, by holding periodic consultations and exchanging information;

(d) To encourage the involvement of non-governmental organizations in the dissemination of information on decolonization;

(e) To report to the Special Committee on measures taken in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Requests all States, including the administering Powers, to continue to extend their cooperation in the dissemination of information referred to in paragraph 2 above;

5. Requests the Special Committee to follow the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 52/79:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cuba, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstain: France, Micronesia, Russian Federation.

The United Kingdom said it had voted against the resolution because it believed that, at a time of ever more acute financial crisis in the United Nations, placing an obligation on the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Public Information to publicize decolonization issues represented a waste of scarce resources.

Puerto Rico

On 20 June, the Special Committee on decolonization postponed until 1998, pending the outcome of other consultations and subsequent steps that were continuing to be taken at various levels by interested parties, consideration of its decision of 15 August 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 790], by which it had deplored the fact that the United States Congress had not adopted a legal framework for holding a referendum to enable the people of Puerto Rico to determine their political future. The Special Committee decided, on the basis of its usual practice, to give due consideration to requests for hearings. Subsequently, 26 representatives gave their views before the Committee.

Territories under review

East Timor

The Special Committee on decolonization in 1997 again considered the question of East Timor. It had before it a working paper [A/AC.109/2079 & Add.1] containing information on political developments, the human rights situation, and economic, social and educational conditions in the Territory. Since 1977, Portugal, as the administering Power, had annually informed the Secretary-General that, owing to conditions in the Territory, namely, the presence of armed forces of Indonesia, it had been prevented from transmitting any information concerning East Timor under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations. In 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1349], the General Assembly had requested the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with all parties directly concerned, with a view to exploring ways of achieving a comprehensive settlement of the problem, and since then the Secretary-General annually had kept the Assembly apprised of developments related to the exercise of his good offices.

The Special Committee was told that the Secretary-General had held the eighth round of discussions on the question of East Timor in London on 27 June 1996 with the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal, and had discussed substantive issues related to an eventual framework for the achievement of a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor. The Ministers considered the proposals from the All-inclusive Intra-East Timorese Dialogue held in March 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 529], and agreed to proceed with consultations on the establishment of an East Timorese cultural centre in Dili and on the development of human resources in East Timor. The Ministers also agreed to continue efforts, with the assistance of the Secretary-General, to find a just and comprehensive settlement and, to that end, agreed to schedule a ninth round of talks in December 1996.

The Secretary-General, on 3 February 1997, met with the Minister of the Presidency of the Council of Ministers of Portugal and the Foreign Minister of Indonesia with the aim of restarting the talks on East Timor; he stated that he favoured a sustained leading effort by the United Nations.

On 12 February, the Secretary-General appointed Jamsheed K. A. Marker (Pakistan) as his Personal Representative for East Timor in an effort to give new impetus to his good offices. Mr. Marker visited Portugal, Indonesia and East Timor in March and held talks with officials at the highest level regarding the continuation of the Secretary-General's good offices.

The Commission on Human Rights, in April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/63)], expressed concern at the continuing reports of violations of human rights in East Timor, including reports of extrajudicial killings, disappearances, torture and arbitrary detention, and called on the Government of Indonesia to take measures to ensure full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the people of East Timor. It encouraged the Secretary-General to continue his good offices mission for achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor, and, in that context, to encourage the All-inclusive Dialogue to continue. (See also PART TWO, Chapter III.)

Portugal, on 19 May [A/52/152], reported that it continued to be prevented de facto from exercising its responsibilities for the administration of East Timor due to the illegal occupation by a third country. However, reports from different sources confirmed that the situation in East Timor continued to be very serious, justifying the gravest concern.

The Secretary-General on 6 June [A/AC.109/2111] said that he had been following with concern the reports of violence in East Timor, which had resulted in the loss of life and considerable human suffering. He called on all parties concerned to exercise restraint.

The Special Committee also heard statements by petitioners. It decided to continue consideration of the question at its next (1998) session, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give at its fifty-second session.

The Secretary-General in September [A/52/349] reported that, due to matters not directly related to the issues impeding the holding of preparatory meetings, at his suggestion, the ninth round of ministerial talks had been postponed. However, he had met with the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Portugal on 19 and 20 June to consider a revised format for the All-inclusive Intra-East Timorese Dialogue. The Ministers agreed to the Secretary-General's proposal that the tripartite talks should continue at the working level, and that his Personal Representative should carry out consultations for the early convening of the All-inclusive Dialogue. Those working-level talks between officials of the two Foreign Ministries were held in New York from 4 to 7 August, with follow-up talks in October and November, under the chairmanship of the Personal Representative. The Secretary-General also reported on the initiative of South African President Nelson Mandela to support his good offices by discussing the issue with Indonesian President Soeharto and, with Indonesia's agreement, with the East Timorese pro-independence leader, Xanana Gusmao.

The third round of the Dialogue was held in Krumbach, Austria, from 20 to 23 October. At the conclusion of the meeting, participants adopted the Krumbach Declaration, by which they reaffirmed their confidence in and support for the dialogue between Indonesia and Portugal, under the auspices of the United Nations, and expressed interest in and availability for the All-Inclusive Intra-East Timorese Dialogue to continue the debate on concrete and practical ideas leading to the creation of confidence-building measures, with a view to contributing to a solution for the question of East Timor. They approved the name, objectives, structure and financing of the Centre for Culture and Development of Timor Lorosae (Centro de Cultura e Desenvolvimento Timor Lorosae). The participants expressed their concern at the escalation of violence in the Territory, and undertook to do everything in their power to contribute to the achievement of a lasting peace. They reaffirmed the urgent need to implement suitable measures for the promotion and protection of human rights in general, and in particular for the protection and promotion of women, children and young people.

In November, the Secretary-General held talks with the President of Portugal, Jorge Sampaio, and Prime Minister Antonio Guterres during the Ibero-American Summit in Venezuela. On 17 December, he met with the Indonesian Foreign Minister, Ali Alatas, in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, during the meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, and discussed the latest developments on regional issues, including East Timor. In December, the Personal Representative of the Secretary-General visited East Timor and Jakarta. He met with the Indonesian Foreign Minister and other high-ranking civilian and military officials.

On a related matter, Portugal, on 5 September, transmitted a note verbale of 28 August [A/52/323-S/1997/691] protesting the signing of a treaty between Australia and Indonesia establishing an exclusive economic zone and certain seabed boundaries, in so far as such a treaty related to East Timor. Indonesia, on 8 September [A/52/333], responded to Portugal's communication of 19 May, offering information on the situation in East Timor.

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Special Committee on decolonization in 1997 considered the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). The United Kingdom, the administering Power, did not participate in the consideration of the subject. The Committee had before it a working paper covering developments in the Territory [A/AC.109/2083], including constitutional and political developments, and economic, social and educational conditions. The Committee adopted a resolution reiterating its view that the way to end the dispute between Argentina and the United Kingdom over sovereignty of the islands was through a peaceful and negotiated settlement. The Committee requested the two Governments to resume negotiations to find a quick and peaceful solution in accordance with General Assembly resolutions on the issue, and, to that end, it reiterated its support for the mission of good offices of the Secretary-General.

In the working paper, it was reported that in January 1997 the United Kingdom Secretary of State for Defence had visited the Territory. On 2 January, he stated that the Government was committed to defending the islands and maintaining their security; there was no caveat, exception or time limit to that commitment. During a press conference, he stated that the United Kingdom was not prepared to discuss sovereignty, let alone share it.

On 3 January, Argentina issued a press release in which it reaffirmed its right to sovereignty over the islands and the maritime spaces around them, but reiterated its intention to move forward in its dialogue with the United Kingdom with the aim of building a relationship of mutual confidence and arriving at a new understanding in the south-western Atlantic. In a 10 June press release, Argentina reaffirmed its belief that the resumption of talks on the substance of the question, as well as the re-establishment of communication, would create a favourable framework for a peaceful and lasting resolution of the dispute.

At the thirteenth meeting of the South Atlantic Fisheries Commission (Buenos Aires, 24-25 November), the British and Argentine delegations expressed their commitment to the conservation of fish stocks in the South Atlantic and agreed to recommend to their Governments the continuation of cooperation to reach a greater level of scientific understanding of the most significant off-shore species. The Commission recommended that every effort be made to ensure a level of 40,000 metric tons of Illex (squid genus) spawning stock biomass at the end of the 1998 season, and that joint research on the southern blue whiting should be intensified with a joint research cruise taking place in the next austral spring.

The South-West Atlantic Hydrocarbons Commission held its third (Buenos Aires, 16 July) and fourth (London, 5 December) meetings in 1997. At the third meeting, the Commission recommended carrying out a survey on the condition of the marine environment in the Special Cooperation Area, and that priority be given to work on detailed terms and conditions under which licences would be issued in that area. At the fourth meeting, the Commission confirmed its subcommittee's recommendation on harmonization of licence terms and conditions and approved lists of items where harmonization between the two licensing regimes was necessary and where it was not.

By decision 52/409 of 10 November, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) and to include it in the agenda of its 1998 session.

Gibraltar

The Special Committee on decolonization in 1997 considered the question of Gibraltar, having before it a working paper describing developments concerning the Territory [A/AC.109/2084]. The Committee acceded to Spain's request to participate in its consideration of the question. It decided to continue its consideration of the question at its next session, subject to any directives that the General Assembly might give.

In the working paper, it was reported that one formal meeting (Madrid, Spain, 22 January) under the Anglo-Spanish negotiating process established in 1984 was held at the level of Foreign Minister. The discussions covered a wide range of issues relevant to Gibraltar and to the relationship of Gibraltar with Spain and the United Kingdom, in the context of European Union membership.

The Commander of British Forces announced that the 500 previously planned reductions in manpower levels of the garrison stationed in Gibraltar would not go ahead. Subsequent developments and a decision to retain certain functions in-house meant that a greater number of locally employed civilian posts would be required: 1,000 by the turn of the century, instead of the 700 announced in July 1994.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/613], adopted decision 52/419 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of Gibraltar

At its 69th plenary meeting, on 10 December 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee), adopted the following text as representing the consensus of the members of the Assembly:

"The General Assembly, recalling its decision 51/430 of 13 December 1996, and recalling at the same time that the statement agreed to by the Governments of Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland at Brussels on 27 November 1984 stipulates, inter alia, the following:

"The establishment of a negotiating process aimed at overcoming all the differences between them over Gibraltar and at promoting cooperation on a mutually beneficial basis on economic, cultural, touristic, aviation, military and environmental matters. Both sides accept that the issues of sovereignty will be discussed in that process. The British Government will fully maintain its commitment to honour the wishes of the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble of the 1969 Constitution', takes note of the fact that, as part of this process, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Spain and the United Kingdom hold annual meetings alternately in each capital, the most recent of which was held in London on 22 January 1997, and urges both Governments to continue their negotiations with the object of reaching a definitive solution to the problem of Gibraltar in the light of relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and in the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations."

New Caledonia

The Special Committee on decolonization in 1997 considered the question of New Caledonia. It had before it a working paper [A/AC.109/2074] describing developments in the Territory, particularly the implementation of the 1988 Matignon Accords [YUN 1988, p. 742], which provided for a 10-year period of economic and social development, leading to a self-determination referendum to be held in 1998. The signatories to the Accords were the Government of France and the two main Caledonian political groupings—the Rassemblement pour la Calédonie dans la République (RPCR) and the Front de libération nationale kanake socialiste (FLNKS). On 28 December 1996, the President of FLNKS said that the party believed that the local partners in the Matignon Accords should resume bilateral discussions on the country's institutional future before the whole range of political groups, social and professional categories and traditional institutions was associated with the approach advocated by FLNKS. That meant that the two sides were opting for negotiation instead of confrontation, leading to a negotiated solution for the future of the country. That negotiated solution would, once the referendum had taken place, allow for shared sovereignty with France and the eventual full exercise of its attributes of sovereignty on the basis of a timetable for relinquishment of authority to be determined. RPCR supported the statement by the President of FLNKS.

On 21 October, New Zealand transmitted to the Secretary-General the report [A/52/590] of a ministerial visit to New Caledonia from 11 to 14 August by the South Pacific Forum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/613], adopted resolution 52/76 without vote [agenda item 18].

Question of New Caledonia

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of New Caledonia,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to New Caledonia,

Reaffirming the right of peoples to self-determination as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960,

Noting the importance of the positive measures being pursued in New Caledonia by the French authorities, in cooperation with all sectors of the population, to promote political, economic and social development in the Territory, including measures in the area of environmental protection and action with respect to drug abuse and trafficking, in order to provide a framework for its peaceful progress to self-determination,

Noting also, in this context, the importance of equitable economic and social development, as well as continued dialogue among the parties involved in

New Caledonia in the preparation of the act of self-determination of New Caledonia,

Welcoming the strengthening of the process of review of the Matignon Accords through the increased frequency of coordination meetings,

Noting with satisfaction the intensification of contacts between New Caledonia and neighbouring countries of the South Pacific region,

1. Urges all the parties involved, in the interest of all the people of New Caledonia and building on the positive outcome of the mid-term review of the Matignon Accords, to maintain their dialogue in a spirit of harmony;

2. Invites all the parties involved to continue promoting a framework for the peaceful progress of the Territory towards an act of self-determination in which all options are open and which would safeguard the rights of all New Caledonians according to the letter and the spirit of the Matignon Accords, which are based on the principle that it is for the populations of New Caledonia to choose how to control their destiny;

3. Welcomes measures that have been taken to strengthen and diversify the New Caledonian economy in all fields, and encourages further such measures in accordance with the spirit of the Matignon Accords;

4. Also welcomes the importance attached by the parties to the Matignon Accords to greater progress in housing, employment, training, education and health care in New Caledonia;

5. Acknowledges the contribution of the Melanesian Cultural Centre to the protection of the indigenous culture of New Caledonia;

6. Notes the positive initiatives aimed at protecting the natural environment of New Caledonia, notably the "Zonéco" operation designed to map and evaluate marine resources within the economic zone of New Caledonia;

7. Acknowledges the close links between New Caledonia and the peoples of the South Pacific and the positive actions being taken by the French and territorial authorities to facilitate the further development of those links, including the development of closer relations with the countries members of the South Pacific Forum;

8. Welcomes, in particular, in this regard, continuing high-level visits to New Caledonia by delegations from countries of the Pacific region and high-level visits by delegations from New Caledonia to countries members of the South Pacific Forum;

9. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to continue the examination of this question at its next session and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Island Territories

In 1997, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee continued consideration of two draft resolutions submitted by the Special Committee in 1996 concerning the small island Territories: American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands. They had been deferred by the Fourth Committee in 1996 as a result of its failure to resolve all the differences [YUN 1996, p. 535]. The General Assembly President in December 1996 deferred consideration of the drafts until March 1997, noting the assurance given by the administering Powers (United Kingdom and United States) to continue dialogue with the Special Committee under the chairmanship of the Fourth Committee.

In 1997, the Fourth Committee Chairman convened four meetings between the Special Committee Chairman and the administering Powers, and five meetings between the Special Committee and the administering Powers. As a result of those consultations, the United Kingdom and the United States withdrew their amendments [A/C.4/51/L.11] to the draft resolutions. Agreement was reached on amendments [A/C.4/51/8], which the Chairman submitted to the Fourth Committee.

On 27 March [meeting 94], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/51/588/Add.1], adopted resolutions 51/224 A and B without vote [agenda item 19].

Questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands

General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its fiftieth session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolution,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the sentiments of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options of self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern that even three and a half decades after the adoption of the Declaration there still remains a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Acknowledging the significant achievements by the international community towards the eradication of colonialism in accordance with the Declaration, and conscious of the importance of continuing effective implementation of the Declaration, taking into account the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by the year 2000,

Taking note of the positive constitutional developments in some Non-Self-Governing Territories about which the Special Committee has received information, while also recognizing the need for recognition to be given to expressions of self-determination by the peoples of the Territories consistent with practice under the Charter,

Recognizing that in the decolonization process there is no alternative to the principle of self-determination as enunciated by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary cooperation of New Zealand, as an administering Power, in the work of the Special Committee, and welcoming the recent constitutional developments in Tokelau,

Welcoming the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland that it continues to take seriously its obligations under the Charter to develop self-government in the dependent Territories and, in cooperation with the locally elected Governments, to ensure that their constitutional frameworks continue to meet the wishes of the people, and the emphasis that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories to decide their future status,

Welcoming also the stated position of the Government of the United States of America that it supports fully the principles of decolonization and takes seriously its obligations under the Charter to promote to the utmost the well-being of the inhabitants of the Territories under United States administration,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of promoting economic stability and diversifying and strengthening further the economies of the respective Territories as a matter of priority,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Aware of the usefulness both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of appointed and elected representatives of the Territories in the work of the Special Committee,

Convinced that the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories should continue to guide the development of their future political status and that referendums, free and fair elections, and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people,

Convinced also that any negotiations to determine the status of a Territory must not take place without the active involvement and participation of the people of that Territory,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions of the General Assembly,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers should be kept under review,

Taking note of the fact that the Special Committee held at Port Moresby, from 12 to 14 June 1996, a Pacific regional seminar to review the situation in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, particularly their political evolution towards self-determination by the year 2000,

Mindful that in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories, and to fulfil its mandate effectively, it is important for the Committee to be apprised by the administering Powers, and to receive information from other appropriate sources, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories,

Mindful also that in this connection the Special Committee regards the holding of regional seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions and at Headquarters and other venues, with the active participation of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, as a helpful means to fulfil its mandate, while recognizing the need for reviewing the role of these seminars in the context of a United Nations programme for ascertaining the political status of the Territories,

Requests the administering Powers to transmit to the Secretary-General information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter and other information and reports, including reports on the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories regarding their future political status as expressed in fair and free referendums and other forms of popular consultation, as well as the results of any informed and democratic processes consistent with practice under the Charter which indicate the clear and freely expressed wish of the people to change the existing status of the Territories;

5. Stresses the importance for the Special Committee to be apprised of the views and wishes of the peoples of the Territories and to enhance its understanding of their conditions;

6. Reaffirms that United Nations visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Power are an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and requests the administering Powers and the elected representatives of the peoples of the Territories to assist the Special Committee in this regard;

Reaffirms also the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and recommends that priority continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

8. Requests the administering Powers in consultation with the peoples of the Territories to take all necessary measures to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories under their administration against any environmental degradation, and requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in those Territories;

9. Calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the respective territorial Governments, to continue to take all necessary measures to counter problems related to drug trafficking, money laundering and other offences;

10. Stresses that eradication of colonialism by the year 2000 requires the full and constructive cooperation of all parties concerned;

11. Takes note of the particular circumstances which prevail in the Territories concerned, and encourages the political evolution in them towards self-determination;

12. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in the twenty-first century in a world free of colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

13. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to initiate or to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territories;

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, speaking for the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), said that CARICOM Governments were of the view that other elements of the Plan of Action for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000) [YUN 1988, p. 734, GA res. 43/47] should be addressed from a regional perspective as well, in particular the review of the impact of the economic and social situation on the constitutional and political advancement of NSGTs—an activity called for in the Plan of Action but never carried out, and which should be addressed in the context of the 1997 seminar (see below).

A General

The General Assembly,

Having considered the questions of American Samoa, Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, Guam, Montserrat, Pitcairn, St. Helena, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands, hereinafter referred to as "the Territories",

Having examined the relevant chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and all resolutions and decisions of the United Nations relating to those Territories, including, in particular, the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its fifty-first session on the individual Territories covered by the present resolution,

Recognizing that the specific characteristics and the sentiments of the peoples of the Territories require flexible, practical and innovative approaches to the options of self-determination, without any prejudice to territorial size, geographical location, size of population or natural resources,

Recalling its resolution 1541(XV) of 15 December 1960, containing the principles that should guide Member States in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations,

Expressing its concern that thirty-seven years after the adoption of the Declaration there still remain a number of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Acknowledging the significant achievements by the international community towards the eradication of colonialism in accordance with the Declaration, and conscious of the importance of continuing effective implementation of the Declaration, taking into account the target set by the United Nations to eradicate colonialism by the year 2000,

Taking note of the positive constitutional developments in some Non-Self-Governing Territories about which the Special Committee has received information, while also acknowledging the need for recognition to be given to expressions of self-determination by the peoples of the Territories consistent with practice under the Charter,

Recognizing that in the decolonization process there is no alternative to the principle of self-determination as enunciated by the General Assembly in its resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions,

Noting with appreciation the continuing exemplary cooperation of New Zealand, as an administering Power, in the work of the Special Committee, and welcoming the recent constitutional developments in Tokelau,

Welcoming the stated position of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland that it continues to take seriously its obligations under the Charter to develop self-government in the dependent Territories and, in cooperation with the locally elected Governments, to ensure that their constitutional frameworks continue to meet the wishes of the people, and the emphasis that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories to decide their future status,

Welcoming also the stated position of the Government of the United States of America that it supports fully the principles of decolonization and takes seriously its obligations under the Charter to promote to the utmost the well-being of the inhabitants of the Territories under United States administration,

Aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of each Territory, and bearing in mind the necessity of promoting economic stability and diversifying and strengthening further the economies of the respective Territories as a matter of priority,

Conscious of the particular vulnerability of the small Territories to natural disasters and environmental degradation,

Aware of the usefulness both to the Territories and to the Special Committee of the participation of appointed and elected representatives of the Territories in the work of the Special Committee,

Convinced that the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories should continue to guide the development of their future political status and that referendums, free and fair elections and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people,

Convinced also that any negotiations to determine the status of a Territory must not take place without the active involvement and participation of the people of that Territory,

Recognizing that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned and in conformity with the clearly defined principles contained in resolutions 1514(XV), 1541(XV) and other resolutions of the General Assembly,

Mindful that United Nations visiting missions provide an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and considering that the possibility of sending further visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers should be kept under review.

Noting that the Special Committee held at St. John's, Antigua and Barbuda, from 21 to 23 May 1997, a Caribbean regional seminar to review the political, economic and social conditions in the Territories,

Mindful that in order for the Special Committee to enhance its understanding of the political status of the peoples of the Territories and to fulfil its mandate effectively, it is important for the Committee to be apprised by the administering Powers, and to receive information from other appropriate sources, concerning the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories,

Mindful also in this connection that the Special Committee considers the holding of regional seminars in the Caribbean and Pacific regions and at Headquarters and other venues, with the active participation of representatives of the Non-Self-Governing Territories, as a helpful means to fulfil its mandate, while recognizing the need for reviewing the role of those seminars in the context of a United Nations programme for ascertaining the political status of the Territories,

Mindful further that some Territories have not had any United Nations visiting mission for a long period of time, and that no such visiting missions have been sent to some of the Territories,

Noting with appreciation the contribution to the development of some Territories by specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, and regional institutions such as the Caribbean Development Bank,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of the Territories to self-determination, including, if they so wish, independence, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

2. Reaffirms also that it is ultimately for the peoples of the Territories themselves to determine freely their future political status in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, the Declaration and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and in that connection calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the territorial Governments, to facilitate programmes of political education in the Territories in order to foster an awareness among the people of their right to self-determination in conformity with legitimate political status options, including those defined in resolution 1541 (XV);

3. Requests the administering Powers to transmit to the Secretary-General information called for under Article 73 e of the Charter and other information and reports, including reports on the wishes and aspirations of the peoples of the Territories regarding their future political status as expressed in fair and free referendums and other forms of popular consultation, as well as the results of any informed and democratic processes consistent with practice under the Charter that indicate the clear and freely expressed wish of the people to change the existing status of the Territories;

4. Stresses the importance for the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to

Colonial Countries and Peoples to be apprised of the views and wishes of the peoples of the Territories and to enhance its understanding of their conditions;

5. Reaffirms that United Nations visiting missions to the Territories at an appropriate time and in consultation with the administering Powers are an effective means of ascertaining the situation in the Territories, and requests the administering Powers and the elected representatives of the peoples of the Territories to assist the Special Committee in this regard;

6. Reaffirms also the responsibility of the administering Powers under the Charter to promote the economic and social development and to preserve the cultural identity of the Territories, and recommends that priority continue to be given, in consultation with the territorial Governments concerned, to the strengthening and diversification of their respective economies;

7. Requests the administering Powers, in consultation with the peoples of the Territories, to take all necessary measures to protect and conserve the environment of the Territories under their administration against any environmental degradation, and requests the specialized agencies concerned to continue to monitor environmental conditions in those Territories;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers, in cooperation with the respective territorial Governments, to continue to take all necessary measures to counter problems related to drug trafficking, money laundering and other offences;

9. Stresses that the eradication of colonialism by the year 2000 requires the full and constructive cooperation of all parties concerned;

10. Takes note of the particular circumstances that prevail in the Territories concerned, and encourages the political evolution in them towards self-determination;

11. Urges Member States to contribute to the efforts of the United Nations to usher in the twenty-first century in a world free of colonialism, and calls upon them to continue to give their full support to the Special Committee in its endeavours towards that noble goal;

12. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to initiate or to continue to take all necessary measures to accelerate progress in the social and economic life of the Territories;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue the examination of the question of the small Territories and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session with recommendations on appropriate ways to assist the peoples of the Territories in exercising their right to self-determination.

Individual territories

The General Assembly,
Referring to resolution A above,

I. American Samoa

Noting the report by the administering Power that most American Samoan leaders express satisfaction with the island's present relationship with the United States of America,

Noting also the non-participation of representatives of the people of American Samoa in the last three regional seminars,

Noting further that the Government of the Territory continues to have significant financial, budgetary and internal control problems and that the Territory's deficit and financial condition are compounded by the high demand for government services from the rapidly growing population, a limited economic and tax base and recent natural disasters,

Study and training

The Secretary-General reported in September [A/52/388 & Add.1,2] on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of NSGTs. Since 1954, Member States had been invited by the General Assembly to offer education and training, not only at the university level but also at the post-primary level, as well as technical and vocational training of immediate practical value. Those offers were communicated by the Secretariat to the administering Powers to enable them to give appropriate publicity in the Territories under their administration.

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/142 [YUN 1996, p. 527], his report covered offers and awards made from 1 October 1996 to 30 September 1997. Over the years, 46 Member States and one non-member State had offered scholarships. During the reporting period, four countries—Austria, the Bahamas, New Zealand and the United Kingdom—informed the Secretary-General of their offers. Austria said that it regularly provided vocational training and capacity-building in the infrastructure and education sectors for inhabitants of Western Sahara. Assistance was also provided for the training of kindergarten teachers. The Bahamas reported that it had rendered assistance to students from the Turks and Caicos Islands enrolled in teacher education at the College of the Bahamas, and would be prepared in the future to assist two students from Montserrat and one each from Anguilla and the Turks and Caicos Islands. New Zealand said that it had awarded two scholarships to students from Tokelau and six training awards to students from New Caledonia. The United Kingdom stated that in 1996/97 it had offered 41 scholarships to students from British Territories: Anguilla (2), Bermuda (21), British Virgin Islands (1), Cayman Islands (12), Montserrat (3), St. Helena (1) and Turks and Caicos Islands (1).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/623], adopted resolution 52/74 without vote [agenda item 93].

Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/142 of 13 December 1996,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories, prepared pursuant to its resolution 845(IX) of 22 November 1954,

Conscious of the importance of promoting the educational advancement of the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Strongly convinced that the continuation and expansion of offers of scholarships is essential to meet the increasing need of students from Non-Self-Governing Territories for educational and training assistance, and considering that students in those Territories should be encouraged to avail themselves of such offers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that have made scholarships available to the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories;
3. Invites all States to make or continue to make generous offers of study and training facilities to the inhabitants of those Territories that have not yet attained self-government or independence and, wherever possible, to provide travel funds to prospective students;
4. Urges the administering Powers to take effective measures to ensure the widespread and continuous dissemination in the Territories under their administration of information relating to offers of study and training facilities made by States and to provide all the necessary facilities to enable students to avail themselves of such offers;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution;
6. Draws the attention of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to the present resolution.

Regional seminars

The Special Committee on decolonization, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/146 [YUN 1996, p. 517], in 1997 organized the Caribbean Regional Seminar to review the political, economic and social conditions in the small island Territories (St. John's, Antigua and Barbuda, 21-23 May) as part of the effort to implement the 1991 Plan of Action [YUN 1991, p. 777] for the International Decade for the Eradication of Colonialism (1990-2000), declared by the Assembly in resolution 43/47 [YUN 1988, p. 734]. Participants assessed the situation in the NSGTs, with a view to formulating a comprehensive and integrated approach to ensure their political and sustainable socio-economic development, as well as their constitutional evolution towards self-determination by the year 2000, and identified areas in which the international community could increase and enhance its assistance.

The Seminar, in its conclusions and recommendations [A/AC.109/2089], noted that implementation of the 1960 Declaration was not complete as long as there remained NSGTs that still had to exercise their right to self-determination. All options for addressing the situations of the remaining NSGTs were valid, as long as they were in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned. The United Nations and the Special Committee should actively participate in monitoring and observing the evolution of NSGTs towards self-determination and certify to the Assembly the compliance of those processes with UN norms and practices. Administering Powers should re-establish their formal co-operation with the Special Committee, facilitate UN visiting missions to the Territories under their administration, and respect and pay close attention to the views and the political will of the elected territorial Governments. Programmes of socio-economic assistance provided to NSGTs by the administering Powers, as well as by UN specialized agencies and international organizations and by regional and subregional organizations, should be increased and streamlined in conformity with the needs and wishes of the Territories. Activities of foreign economic interests should be closely monitored to ensure that they contributed to socio-economic advancement and self-determination. Announced plans of the administering Powers to close or downsize some of their remaining military facilities in NSGTs should be carried out with the territorial Governments to prevent or mitigate possible negative effects of socio-economic and environmental consequences of those closures. Administering Powers, in cooperation with territorial Governments, should establish effective mechanisms to protect vulnerable socio-economic structures from illicit drug trafficking, money laundering and funds smuggling. The Special Committee should assist NSGTs in becoming included in UN programmes and projects, particularly those under the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and others to assist small island developing States.

NSGTs should be encouraged to participate in regional and subregional organizations, particularly those in the Caribbean and Pacific regions. The Special Committee should facilitate direct and regular consultations between elected Governments of NSGTs and relevant UN organizations and bodies, and review the Territories' situation with respect to the status of the people's ownership, control and disposal of land and marine resources and report to the Assembly. The United Nations should commit the necessary human and financial resources to assist in the process of self-determination.

The Seminar made specific recommendations with respect to Bermuda, East Timor, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Gibraltar, Guam, Montserrat, Puerto Rico, Tokelau, the Turks and Caicos Islands and Western Sahara.

OIOS report. The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [A/51/486] had conducted in 1996 an investigation into all seminars organized by the Special Committee on decolonization since 1990, following a report that the Committee might have misused or wasted UN funds spent on a seminar held in Trinidad and Tobago in July 1995.

In its findings, OIOS stated that while it did not question the purpose of the seminars as they had been approved by the General Assembly, the issue of the efficient and effective use of funds for holding the seminars at a time of financial crisis for the Organization was worth objective and independent consideration. OIOS stated that the seminars were largely duplicative, with their site selection having little impact on the participation of the Territories affected. In recent years, their participation had never exceeded 30 per cent. Although approved by the Assembly, the reasons for holding and paying for the seminars were not transparent, OIOS stated.

OIOS agreed with the position of the Department of Political Affairs, which was to raise with the Special Committee the question whether, given the seriousness of the current financial circumstances, the seminars needed to be held, and to ask it to reconsider its decision to hold the June 1996 seminar [YUN 1996, p. 516]. That suggestion had not been accepted by the Special Committee, some of whose members questioned the propriety and legitimacy of the Secretariat making such suggestions, and the seminar was subsequently conducted at a cost of $135,900. OIOS concluded that without a compelling, and as yet unarticulated, reason for continuing to hold those seminars, there was the appearance of a waste of limited UN resources which, in the best interests of the Organization, ought to be considered and explicitly explained.

Following consideration of the matter in February 1997 by the Special Committee, the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services, in a 14 March letter to the Special Committee Chairman [A/AC.109/2085], said that it was not the intention of OIOS to overstep the limits of Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], which provided the mandate for the Office. He underlined that at no point did OIOS question the mandate of Member States or pass judgement on the underlying political issue, which was entirely within the authority of the legislative bodies. The sole and specific issue on which OIOS meant to give advice was the value-for-money aspect in the context of the seminars. It did not suggest that the most serious issue of decolonization should be ignored in the future.

The Chairman of the Special Committee reported that the seminars continued to be an important and effective instrument for the discharge of the Committee's mandate [A/AC.109/2085]. The Committee believed that the OIOS report exceeded its mandate and that its conclusions were unbalanced and unjustified. The Committee would continue its dialogue with the administering Powers to ensure their full cooperation, particularly by facilitating visiting missions to NSGTs, and therefore would be ready to review the role of the regional seminars.

On 6 June, the Special Committee adopted the Chairman's report and authorized him to transmit it to the Assembly.

On 13 June, the Assembly noted the OIOS report and the Special Committee's consideration of it (decision 51/468 D).

On 30 June, the Special Committee Chairman, in a letter to the Secretary-General [A/52/220] referring to the action of the Assembly on the OIOS report, drew attention to the fact that no action had been taken on his report on the Committee's regional seminars, which he said was closely related to the OIOS report and which clarified some of the latter's erroneous conclusions. He hoped that before issuing future reports criticizing a major programme authorized by the Assembly, OIOS would first seek the views of the committee concerned and avoid reaching erroneous conclusions.

Information

United Nations public information activities continued to be directed in 1997 towards publicizing the goals and activities of the Organization and assisting in improving the communication capabilities of developing countries. That work was largely carried out by the UN Department of Public Information (DPI), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), the last being an inter-agency committee of UN officials responsible for coordinating information activities within the UN system.

The General Assembly's 89-member Committee on Information, at its nineteenth session (New York, 13-19 May (first part), 3 September and 14 and 17 November (resumed)) [A/52/21/Rev.1], examined UN public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations, and evaluated progress made by the UN system in the area of information and communications, and the need to establish a new international economic order and a new world information and communication order. A major report—by the Task Force on the Reorientation of United Nations Public Information Activities—entitled "Global vision, local voice: a strategic communications programme for the United Nations" was a central focus of Assembly discussion.

Other reports considered concerned an evaluation of the Dag Hammarskjöld Library [A/AC.198/1997/2 & Add.1], a DPI review of publications [A/AC.198/1997/3], a review of DPI publications in the sphere of development [A/AC.198/1997/4], integration of UN information centres with field offices of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [A/AC.198/1997/5], an evaluation of UN information centres [A/AC.198/1997/6], activities of JUNIC in 1996 [A/AC.198/1997/7] and ways to further the development of communications infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries [A/AC.198/1997/8].

At its resumed session in September, the Committee considered proposals for reorienting UN public information activities, based on the Task Force report.

The Committee's recommendations were considered by the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee and by the General Assembly. Two resolutions on information were adopted: one calling for the development of information flows and communication capabilities in the service of humanity, particularly in developing countries, and the other outlining UN public information policies and activities (see below for texts).

Information in the service of humanity

The Committee on Information in 1997 considered a report [A/AC.198/1997/8] detailing observations and suggestions by Member States and international organizations on ways of furthering the development of communications infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/138 B [YUN 1996, p. 543].

Universal access to communications

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a statement of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) [A/52/354] on universal access to basic communication and information services, adopted at its April session. ACC expressed concern at the increasingly inadequate distribution of access, resources and opportunities in the information and communication field. The gap in that area and related inequities between industrialized and developing nations was widening, so that a new type of poverty, information poverty, was being created. Most developing countries, especially the least developed ones, were not sharing in the communication revolution since they lacked affordable access to core information resources, cutting-edge technology and sophisticated telecommunication systems and infrastructure; the capacity to build, operate, manage and service the technologies involved; policies that promoted equitable public participation in the information society as producers and consumers of information and knowledge; and a trained workforce to develop, maintain and provide the value-added products and services required by the information economy. ACC therefore committed the organizations of the UN system to assisting developing countries in redressing those alarming trends, and decided to embrace the objective of establishing universal access to basic communication and information services for all. Individually and jointly, UN organizations were carrying out, or were planning at the national level to embark on, various projects and activities to highlight the catalytic role that multilateral organizations could and had to play in that increasingly vital area. Within the limits of its resources and priorities, the UN system stood ready to assist Governments in designing policies, plans and strategies to facilitate and guide the development and management of an appropriate national information infrastructure, in accordance with their needs and traditions.

ACC believed that the expansion of domestic telecommunication infrastructure to rural areas and its connection to reliable international networks had to become a top priority for Governments, the private sector and multilateral and bilateral development organizations. Unless telecommunication systems could be expanded, access would be confined to an urban, literate elite in developing countries, bypassing rural areas and the poor. One indication of the magnitude of the investment required was the estimate that in sub-Saharan Africa raising teledensity to 1 telephone mainline per 100 inhabitants (from the current 0.46 mainline per 100 inhabitants) would require an investment of $8 billion.

The private sector, Governments, civil society and other development organizations had to establish and promote a common global vision and broad-based awareness of changes taking place, and articulate a compelling vision and strategy so that new technologies could benefit all countries, particularly the poorest. Other actions could include building national human, technical and economic capacities to facilitate access to and utilization of information and communication technologies in developing countries; promoting multimedia information and communication technologies in the delivery of programmes advancing sustainable human development, especially to rural areas; and promoting, with the participation of the private sector, the creation, management and dissemination of strategic information and data pertaining to the various dimensions of development at the global, regional, national and community levels.

UN organizations could accelerate reform and change by becoming modern, cost-effective and globally networked organizations, with strengthened in-house technical capacities and changed staff attitudes and perceptions, especially among senior managers.

ACC was particularly concerned by the staggering financial needs required to narrow the gap between those with access to information and those without. Since official development assistance flows were not projected to increase dramatically over the next few years, the UN system had to stimulate innovative approaches to raise a critical mass of resources. That would necessitate industry alliances linking developed and developing countries, and collaborative partnerships across traditional lines. It was agreed that strategic approaches to the issues of the global information economy and society and universal access to basic communication and information services should be sought. To that end, UN organizations agreed to undertake pilot projects in the areas of interactive long-distance education and learning, telemedicine, telebanking and microcredit schemes, and environmental protection and management, among others.

The Assembly, in decision 52/451 of 18 December, took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the ACC statement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/619], adopted resolution 52/70 A without vote [agenda item 89].

Information in the service of humanity

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the comprehensive and important report of the Committee on Information,

Also taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Urges all countries, organizations of the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned, reaffirming their commitment to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as well as to those of the independence, pluralism and diversity of the media, deeply concerned by the disparities existing between developed and developing countries and the consequences of every kind arising from those disparities that affect the capability of the public, private or other media and individuals in developing countries to disseminate information and communicate their views and their cultural and ethical values through endogenous cultural production, as well as to ensure the diversity of sources and their free access to information, and recognizing the call in this context for what in the United Nations and at various international forums has been termed "a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process":

(a) To cooperate and interact with a view to reducing existing disparities in information flows at all levels by increasing assistance for the development of communication infrastructures and capabilities in developing countries, with due regard for their needs and the priorities attached to such areas by those countries, and in order to enable them and the public, private or other media in developing countries to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and increase the participation of media and individuals in the communication process, and to ensure a free flow of information at all levels;

(b) To ensure for journalists the free and effective performance of their professional tasks and condemn resolutely all attacks against them;

(c) To provide support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes for broadcasters and journalists from public, private and other media in developing countries;

(d) To enhance regional efforts and cooperation among developing countries, as well as cooperation between developed and developing countries, to strengthen communication capacities and to improve the media infrastructure and communication technology in the developing countries, especially in the areas of training and dissemination of information;

(e) To aim, in addition to bilateral cooperation, at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries and their media, public, private or other, with due regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to action already adopted within the United Nations system, including:

(i) The development of the human and technical resources that are indispensable for the improvement of information and communication systems in developing countries and support for the continuation and strengthening of practical training programmes, such as those already operating under both public and private auspices throughout the developing world;

(ii) The creation of conditions that will enable developing countries and their media, public, private or other, to have, by using their national and regional resources, the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, especially for radio and television broadcasting;

(iii) Assistance in establishing and promoting telecommunication links at the subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries;

(iv) The facilitation, as appropriate, of access by the developing countries to advanced communication technology available on the open market;

(f) To provide full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which should support both public and private media.

UN public information

Reorientation of policies and activities

The Secretary-General, in a 17 March letter [A/51/829] to the General Assembly President, announced, within the context of his reform of the United Nations (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), a sweeping revitalization of UN public information policies. To that end, he said he intended to initiate a detailed review and consultations with Member States.

The Executive Coordinator for United Nations Reform was to establish a task force to examine DPI activities and to make recommendations on future public information work.

Task Force report

Following his 17 March announcement, the Secretary-General established the Task Force on the Reorientation of United Nations Public Information Activities. The Task Force comprised Mark Brown, Vice President of External Affairs/UN Affairs, World Bank (Chairman); Peter Arnett, Foreign Correspondent, CNN; Joan Cooney, Chairman of the Executive Committee of Children's Television Workshop; Raghida Dergham, Senior Diplomatic Correspondent, Al-Hayat; Djibril Diallo, Director of Public Affairs, UNDP; Lelei Lelaulu, Office of the Executive Coordinator for UN Reform (Secretary); Salim Lone, Chief of Publications, DPI (Rapporteur); Hironobu Shibuya, President of Pacific Basin Partners, Inc.; and Juan Somavia, Permanent Representative of Chile to the United Nations.

The Task Force was designed to provide the basis for reorienting public information around three principal themes: to provide communications and outreach services to Governments, the media, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and other re-disseminators, utilizing the latest media technologies and techniques; to link the information capability of the Secretariat more intimately with and directly support all the activities of the substantive departments and offices; and to decentralize and refocus resources to the country and regional levels and make greater use of capabilities. The process of integrating those UN information centres serving developing countries into the resident coordinator offices would be completed.

In July [A/51/950], the Secretary-General reported that the Task Force, in its report entitled "Global vision, local voice: a strategic communications programme for the United Nations", had found that broad and generalized support for the United Nations was only occasionally translated into any significant level of global public advocacy. Although the Organization held a position of solid respect in public opinion worldwide, it nevertheless seemed to be suffering from an erosion of public support in a number of countries. While political setbacks, such as those in the former Yugoslavia, Somalia and Rwanda, had taken their toll, more lasting damage was being inflicted worldwide by the perception of the Organization as a distant, global bureaucracy with little direct relevance to the lives of ordinary people. Although people's concerns revolved around certain core issues—peace, crime, drugs, disease, employment, education, the environment, human rights—only rarely was UN ownership and relevance to those issues recognized at the national level. Still, Governments continued to treat the United Nations as the principal forum for projecting their national and regional concerns, and a growing number of activists, public interest groups and other representatives of strengthened civil societies were keen to be associated with UN activities. There was a crucial need to position the Organization in a manner that played to its strengths and reflected its relevance to people's daily lives. The UN communications priority was therefore evident: putting itself and its programmes in touch with the world's people.

The Task Force proposed principles to guide a new communications strategy, including placing the communications function at the heart of the strategic management of the Organization; tailoring UN global messages, activities and information to a meaningful local context; allowing the culture of communications to pervade the entire Organization; framing issues that Member States were committed to in terms that had regional and global resonance; making the Secretary-General's role central to the current communication environment; and having the General Assembly and the Committee on Information play a more active role by providing strategic guidance and direction to the communications function, with the Secretariat given much greater responsibility for determining the methods for implementing mandated goals. It also made recommendations for a strengthened partnership with Member States.

The Task Force concluded that the UN image had to be addressed as a priority. Towards that end, the United Nations had to delineate in its communications the two separate functions that gave it its unique stature: acting as a forum for debate, reflection and consensus; and, through the Secretary-General, the Secretariat and other parts of the system, acting as spokesman, advocate and implementor of that consensus. An image that reflected those two roles would be much stronger than the blurred image that the Task Force believed had muddled public understanding.

The Secretary-General supported the principle of consolidation of communications activities under a senior official and the main thrust of the Task Force report.

The Committee on Information considered the report at its resumed 1997 session (September and November) and recommended to the General Assembly two draft resolutions for adoption (see resolutions 52/70 A and B).

DPI activities

In 1997, DPI continued to enhance its outreach efforts by strengthening its partnerships with media organizations, leaders of civil society, and intellectual and educational groups, among others, and by utilizing information technology to its fullest capacity. It also continued to make gains in outreach through the traditional media—press, radio and television—the Secretary-General reported in October [A/52/455]. The Department was taking full advantage of new information technologies, including use of the Internet and electronic publishing capacities, and had established the Information Technology Section in April, thus formalizing its efforts to play a leading role in the dissemination of electronic information over the Internet. Greater use of the Internet had led to savings for the Organization, reducing print-runs of press releases by 25 per cent. UN photographs, video clips and radio news bulletins were posted on a daily and weekly basis. The Department had also become the focal point for the growing number of electronic mail queries addressed to the United Nations.

The Office of the Spokesman for the Secretary-General was the main contact for the world press covering the United Nations, particularly with media representatives accredited at UN Headquarters. Through daily briefings and one-on-one contacts with journalists, the Office provided authoritative and timely information on UN activities.

DPI continued to produce press releases in English and French, as well as a wide variety of radio programmes in 15 languages. United Nations Television provided live satellite coverage of events at Headquarters and, on a trial basis, television news production services were provided to resident correspondents. DPI also commissioned a feasibility study on the integration of the databases of the photo, film and audio libraries to be made accessible to the public and to DPI producers. The "UN in Action" television series, in five languages, continued to reach some 200 million viewers a week, and the weekly talk show "World Chronicle" gained an important cable distribution outlet throughout North America through the International Channel.

DPI's annual training programme for broadcasters and journalists from developing countries was held in New York from 15 September to 23 October.

DPI assisted NGOs and other groups in civil society to communicate information on UN activities to global audiences. It held its fiftieth Annual Conference for NGOs (New York, 10-12 September) under the theme "Building partnerships". There was renewed emphasis by DPI on reaching out to students and teachers through visits by school groups to Headquarters and by bringing the United Nations into the classroom.

DPI also developed thematically integrated information programmes on implementing information strategies, promotional activities and public services that highlighted the Organization's role in furthering sustainable development, peace and security, democracy, human rights and humanitarian assistance, and social and economic development. It also emphasized developing communications programmes and services for the promotion of follow-up on issues such as the recent cycle of major international conferences, observances of international days, years and decades, preparations for special sessions of the General Assembly and ongoing or special issues requiring immediate publicity.

With the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) and financial support from Germany, DPI convened in March a two-day seminar on public information policies and practices for field missions. DPI assisted DPKO in identifying qualified personnel to staff radio programming and broadcasting operations, and in exploring cooperation with NGOs and others engaged in radio broadcasting initiatives in conflict areas. Television programming and broadcasting were considered important elements in public information components of some peacekeeping missions. The Department continued its special information programme on the question of Palestine, and organized an international seminar for journalists on "The Peace Process: The Challenges Ahead" (Athens, Greece, 26-27 May) and a training programme for Palestinian media practitioners (September-November).

Publications

Attractive, relevant and timely publications remained a basic goal of DPI efforts to communicate to a widening audience the work and achievements of the UN system. A revised publications strategy aimed at better targeted products and advanced publishing technology.

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/138 B [YUN 1996, p. 543], the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Information two reports: one reviewing DPI publications [A/AC.198/1997/3] and the other focusing on DPI publications in the sphere of development [A/AC.198/1997/4].

The review stated that DPI aimed to make all its publications more widely available, more cost-effective, and more timely and marketable. To help address misperceptions and misunderstandings of the role and work of the United Nations, DPI published a revised edition of Image and Reality. United Nations information centres remained a principal means of accessing audiences in the regions they served. Other ways of broadening the Department's outreach included co-publishing ventures with UN information centres and/or commercial publishing houses. The United Nations Web site included the popular United Nations CyberSchoolBus, which continued to provide on-line educational services. DPI's increasing use of new production technologies was supporting the goal of more timely delivery of products, as in the case of investment in desktop publishing for the Yearbook of the United Nations. Improvements in internal typesetting were also helping to facilitate publication in all six official languages of basic information materials on the United Nations. Sales publications included the Blue Books Series, The Blue Helmets, the quarterly magazine the UN Chronicle, and the biennial publication Basic Facts about the United Nations.

The review of DPI publications in the sphere of development examined Africa Recovery, Development Business and Development Update, the Department's main periodical publications dealing with development issues. In addition, the development-related contents of its two other regular publications, UN Chronicle and UN Briefing Papers, were also reviewed.

Library services

In 1997, the Dag Hammarskjöld Library (DHL) launched its own home page on the Internet and posted a database providing access to frequently requested documents, known as UN-I-QUE (UN Info Quest). An electronic "UN in the News" service provided daily desktop delivery of major news stories concerning the Organization to staff members throughout the world. The Library's training programme in electronic information retrieval was expanded. An on-line public access catalogue was under preparation. The number of UN depository libraries currently numbered 351 located in 142 countries. Workshops for librarians on the use and management of UN documentation were held in Bangkok and New York.

The Committee on Information reviewed the evaluation by consultants of DHL [A/AC.198/1997/2], which concerned its organizational structure, technical processes, user services, information resources, library products, networking, co-operation and coordination, outreach and marketing, infrastructure and future development. The evaluation concluded that the United Nations had an obligation to provide information support to all its constituents and that that would be performed most efficiently by DHL. The consultants were particularly concerned that the needs of all Member States be recognized, especially those in which information technology and the library and information infrastructure were not fully developed. The United Nations, it was stated, must ensure that the Library's technological capabilities could provide rapid and increasing access to the vast array of UN and other information resources.

The Secretary-General responded [A/AC.198/1997/2/Add.1] that many of the evaluation's recommendations were already under way in DHL to maximize the use of cost-effective technological innovations and to ensure the optimal use of existing resources.

UN information centres

In 1997, UN information centres (UNICs)—a global network of more than 60 offices—complemented efforts at Headquarters to increase public understanding of the United Nations in local communities, publicizing major UN reports, and organizing briefings, exhibits, film screenings, press conferences, round-table meetings and workshops to promote greater awareness of UN work on a variety of issues. In addition, partnerships were formed with local NGOs, UN publications were translated into local languages, and electronic capabilities were extended with the introduction of local home pages.

The Department continued to work with host Governments to secure financial contributions towards the operation of the centres, and continued the process of integrating UNICs with UNDP field offices. The Committee on Information considered a report [A/AC.198/1997/5] on that process, which stated that resources had been saved because of it.

DPI continued its efforts to improve the capacity of UNDP resident representatives and coordinators who served as UNIC directors to promote an informed understanding of the work of the Organization among local constituents in a timely and cost-effective manner. It also directed specific attention to strengthening the role of national information officers.

A second report on UNICs [A/AC.198/1997/6] reviewed their functioning and areas of activities. It was stated that local constituents relied on UNICs as their most important source of information about the United Nations and highly valued the personalized services the centres were able to provide. UNICs also played a key role in engaging and supporting NGOs and other local organizations in community-based activities aimed at highlighting UN themes.

The report recommended that all UN organizations should coordinate outreach activities with UNICs to pool resources, avoid duplication and project a unified image of the United Nations in the field. The integration of UNICs with UNDP field offices should be continued and the means of obtaining audience feedback should be refined with a view to drawing up a set of survey guidelines to enable UNICs to gauge systematically the effectiveness of their services.

JUNIC

The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), a UN inter-agency committee to coordinate information activities within the UN system, held its twenty-third session in Turin, Italy, from 1 to 3 July [ACC/1997/11]. It discussed, inter alia, ways of promoting better public understanding of the role and achievements of the United Nations, participation by the UN system in international expositions, special events calling for JUNIC participation, and inter-agency co-operation in audio-visual productions.

JUNIC agreed on the need for the UN system to communicate its achievements and relevance through a unified message, based on the different perspectives of member organizations and using modern technology and expertise. It also agreed to bring to the attention of ACC later in the year the need to strengthen internal communications and develop the communications culture in all organizations of the UN system.

It was stressed that JUNIC should consider the development of basic guidelines to set minimum standards with respect to the content of information posted on the home pages of member organizations, to ensure the consistency of the messages conveyed and avoid fragmentation within the system. JUNIC decided to convene an open-ended group to draft system-wide guidelines for posting information on the Internet, for consideration by ACC. It also decided to establish a mechanism whereby, before the end of each year, members would agree on the calendar of press launches of important reports scheduled for the year ahead.

In reviewing the role of the Non-Governmental Liaison Service (NGLS), JUNIC endorsed the NGLS mission statement that the Service promoted "dynamic partnerships" between the United Nations and NGOs, and endorsed the decision that a strategic review of NGLS be undertaken.

JUNIC agreed to discuss in 1998 ways of communicating development-related stories to the mainstream media. It asked DPI to prepare, for consideration in 1998, a strategy for the five-year review in the year 2000 of the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and of the progress made in implementing decisions adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1168] and the World Summit for Social Development [ibid., p. 1113].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/619], adopted resolution 52/70 B without vote [agenda item 89].

United Nations public information policies and activities

The General Assembly,

Strongly reaffirming its primary role in elaborating, coordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on Information;
2. Notes that the Committee on Information was unable to finish its task during its nineteenth session;
3. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information;
4. Also takes note of the report of the Task Force on the Reorientation of United Nations Public Information Activities;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to implement already mandated activities;
6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information at its twentieth session, and to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, on United Nations public information activities and on the implementation of the measures regarding information and communications approved by the Assembly;
7. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;
8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

Peaceful uses of outer space

In 1997, the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (Committee on Outer Space), at its fortieth session (Vienna, 2-10 June) [A/52/20], discussed ways of maintaining outer space for peaceful purposes, as well as the spin-off benefits of space technology. It also reviewed the work of two Subcommittees, one concerned with scientific and technical issues, the other with legal questions.

In December, the General Assembly endorsed the recommendations of the Committee for its future work, including those made by its Subcommittees.

Scientific and Technical Subcommittee

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee of the Committee on Outer Space, at its thirty-fourth session (Vienna, 12-27 February) [A/AC.105/672], reviewed the implementation of the recommendations of the Second (1982) United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE-82) [YUN 1982, p. 162], the United Nations Programme on Space Applications and coordination of space activities within the UN system.

The Subcommittee also dealt with matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including applications for developing countries; the use of nuclear power sources in outer space; space debris; space transportation; the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization for space communications; space activities related to the Earth environment; spin-off benefits of space technology; and other questions, including space medicine, planetary exploration, astronomy, and the use of small satellites for the expansion of low-cost space activities.

UNISPACE-82 recommendations

In August 1997 [A/52/307], the Secretary-General, as requested by General Assembly resolution 51/123 [YUN 1996, p. 558], reported on implementation of the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. The Committee on Outer Space, its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee and the Working Group of the Whole to Evaluate the Implementation of the Recommendations of the Second United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space considered the question during their 1997 sessions. The Subcommittee endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group, as annexed to its report [A/AC.105/672].

The Working Group urged the continuation of training courses and workshops in remote sensing, satellite communications and other topics organized for developing countries with UN assistance. However, the activities of the UN Programme on Space Applications should be oriented towards preparing the international and potential user communities for the special session of the Committee on Outer Space (UNISPACE III) (see below). Recent advances in space technologies and applications should be brought to the attention of planners, administrators and decision makers in developing countries. The Working Group also recommended that States, particularly those with major space-related capabilities, and international organizations continue to inform the Secretary-General annually about space activities that were or could be the subject of greater international cooperation, with particular emphasis on the needs of developing countries. It recommended that the UN Programme on Space Applications continue to provide expert consultants from developed and developing countries to assist in the preparation of integrated national plans of action for initiating, strengthening or reorienting space applications programmes. Preparations for UNISPACE III should be advanced.

To promote further the applications of space science and technology for development, the Working Group considered that priority should be given to the stimulation and support of the growth of indigenous nuclei and an autonomous technological base in space technology in developing countries, promotion of a greater exchange of actual experiences in space applications, United Nations funding and voluntary contributions.

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, in considering implementation of UNISPACE-82 recommendations, stated that the Assembly had noted specifically that it was particularly urgent to implement the following recommendations: all countries should have the opportunity to use the techniques resulting from medical studies in space; national and regional databases should be strengthened and expanded and an international space information service should be established; the United Nations should support the creation of adequate training centres linked to institutions implementing space programmes; and the United Nations should organize a fellowship programme for graduates from developing countries.

The Subcommittee adopted the Working Group's report on the understanding that the recommendations would be carried out in accordance with the UNISPACE-82 recommendations.

Convening of UNISPACE III

As recommended by General Assembly resolution 51/123 [YUN 1996, p. 558], the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, through its Working Group of the Whole, considered the organization of a third UN Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III) to be held in 1999, including its technical and political objectives, detailed agenda, funding, timing and organizational aspects, and other means to achieve the goals set for the Conference.

The Working Group recommended that the objectives of UNISPACE III should be to: provide developing countries with opportunities to define their needs for space applications for development purposes; consider ways of expediting the use of space applications to promote sustainable development, particularly in implementing the recommendations of Agenda 21 adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]; address issues related to education, training and technical assistance in space science and technology and their applications aimed at developing indigenous capabilities; provide a forum for critical evaluation of space activities and increase awareness regarding their benefits; and strengthen international cooperation. The Conference would be held for a period of up to 10 days in July 1999. The Working Group recommended that workshops and seminars be held during UNISPACE III, as well as poster sessions and a space exhibition. Two committees would be established to deal with the substantive agenda items.

The Committee on Outer Space, acting as the Preparatory Committee for UNISPACE III, endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group. The Committee agreed that the UN Programme on Space Applications should organize in 1998 and 1999 regional preparatory meetings for UNISPACE III, with the participation of private industry. It requested the UN Office for Outer Space Affairs to inform intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and regional commissions concerned with space activities about the Conference. The theme of UNISPACE III should be "Space benefits for humanity in the twenty-first century". The Secretariat should encourage participation by high-level officials, eminent scientists and experts, especially from developing countries.

UN Programme on Space Applications

The UN Programme on Space Applications, in accordance with its 1982 mandate [YUN 1982, p. 163, GA res. 37/90], continued to focus on developing indigenous capabilities in space science and technology by providing training fellowships and technical advisory services; organizing regional and international training courses and conferences; disseminating space-related information; and promoting cooperation between developed and developing countries.

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the report of the UN Expert on Space Applications [A/AC.105/660 & Add.1], noting that the Programme had been carried out satisfactorily in 1996. The Subcommittee expressed concern over the still limited financial resources available for carrying out the Programme and appealed to Member States for voluntary contributions to support it.

In 1997, nine training courses, workshops, expert meetings and symposia, at the regional and international levels, were scheduled. The Programme received 12 fellowship offers for 1996-1997, with China offering 7 in the areas of Photogrammetry and remote sensing, geodesy and cartography, and the European Space Agency (ESA) offering 5 in various areas relating to space activities.

Technical advisory services were provided by the Programme in support of regional space applications projects. Collaboration with ESA included follow-up activities relating to workshops on basic space science. An inter-agency project proposal on a satellite-based disaster warning broadcasting system for small island developing States was also elaborated. In 1997, the Programme co-sponsored the participation of scientists from developing countries in the United Nations/International Astronautical Federation/ESA Workshop on Space Technology as a Cost-Effective Tool to Improve Infrastructure in Developing Countries (Turin, Italy, 2-5 October).

To facilitate the development of indigenous capability, as had been recommended by UNISPACE-82 and the General Assembly in resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], regional centres for space science and technology education were being established. The Centre for Space Science and Technology Education in Asia and the Pacific, inaugurated in 1995, had completed its first nine-month education programme, which had focused on remote sensing and the Geographic Information System, and a second programme on satellite communications began in January 1997.

Brazil and Mexico had announced their intention to sign the agreement establishing the regional Centre for Space Science and Technology Education in Latin America and the Caribbean. Bolivia had issued a statement, on behalf of Latin American and Caribbean States, supporting the Centre and expressing interest in participating in its activities. In Africa, Morocco and Nigeria had developed agreements that would be entered into by French- and English-speaking African States in 1997. Discussions were also in progress with Jordan, Saudi Arabia and the Syrian Arab Republic on establishing a centre for western Asia. Bulgaria, Greece, Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Turkey were considering the establishment of a network of space science and technology education and research institutions for central eastern and south-eastern European countries, which would be in harmony with existing institutions in Europe.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/56 (see below), endorsed the 1998 UN Programme on Space Applications, as proposed by the Expert on Space Applications.

Remote sensing

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1997 continued its consideration of matters relating to remote sensing of the Earth by satellites, including applications for developing countries. It reviewed national and cooperative programmes in remote sensing, particularly examples of national programmes in developing and developed countries and of international programmes based on bilateral, regional and international cooperation, including programmes of technical cooperation between developing countries.

The Subcommittee took note of the continuing programmes for the development and use of information generated from remote-sensing satellites by Argentina, Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, China, Ecuador, France, Germany, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Lebanon, Morocco, Romania, the Russian Federation, Ukraine, the United States and ESA. It also noted that the European remote sensing (ERS-2) satellite, the Canadian RADARSAT satellite, the Japanese Advanced Earth Observing Satellite (ADEOS) and the IRS-P3 satellite of India were providing valuable microwave data to complement data from previously launched satellites.

The Subcommittee reiterated its view that remote-sensing activities should take account of the need to provide non-discriminatory assistance to meet the needs of developing countries. Emphasizing the importance of making remote-sensing data and analysed information available to all countries at reasonable cost and in a timely manner, the Subcommittee recognized the example of international cooperation in the exchange of meteorological data in the World Meteorological Organization. Those countries that had freely and openly provided meteorological satellite data were encouraged to continue to do so.

The Subcommittee encouraged the use of remote-sensing satellites through coordination of the operation of ground stations and regular meetings between satellite operators and users. Compatibility and complementarity of existing and future remote-sensing systems were important, as were the sharing of experiences and technologies, cooperation through international and regional remote-sensing centres and joint work on collaborative projects. The Subcommittee noted the value of remote-sensing systems for environmental monitoring and, in that context, stressed the need for the international community to utilize remote-sensing data to implement Agenda 21 recommendations [YUN 1992, p. 672].

The Subcommittee noted the ongoing multi-lateral cooperation in small multi-mission satellite development with the participation of China, Pakistan, the Republic of Korea, Thailand and other countries in Asia.

Nuclear power sources

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. Recalling that the General Assembly in resolution 47/68 had adopted the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space [YUN 1992, p. 116], the Subcommittee noted that the Committee on Outer Space in 1995 had agreed that the Principles should remain in their current form until amended and that consideration should be given to the aims and objectives of any proposed revision. The Subcommittee agreed that, at the current time, revision of the Principles was not warranted and that, until a firm scientific and technical consensus had been reached on the revision of the Principles, it would be inappropriate to pass the topic to the Legal Subcommittee.

In a statement to the Subcommittee, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) stated that the Principles should be reviewed in view of the most recent International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) recommendations on radiation safety, incorporated into the IAEA International Basic Standards for Protection against Ionizing Radiation and for the Safety of Radiation Sources, published by IAEA as Safety Series No. 115. IAEA also noted that the principles relating to notification of re-entry of space objects with nuclear power sources on board, as well as those relating to subsequent assistance to States, should be revised in view of the Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident and the Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency. Mindful of the differences in the safety principles applied for space and the safety standards for terrestrial systems, the Subcommittee agreed that a study of those developments, arising from the latest ICRP recommendations, should be continued.

As requested in Assembly resolution 50/27 [YUN 1995, p. 282], the Working Group on the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space was reconvened from 25 to 27 February 1997. The Working Group agreed that technical experts, including those from IAEA, should identify and study the current international technical standards pertinent to the use of nuclear power sources in outer space. The Subcommittee adopted the report of the Working Group, which was annexed to the Subcommittee's report.

In response to the Assembly's request for information on national and international research on the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources on board and the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources, with space debris, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Canada, Germany, Hungary, Japan, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation, Sweden and the United Kingdom had submitted information to the Subcommittee. Working papers were submitted by the Russian Federation on the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, and by the United Kingdom on progress made in revising the Principles.

The Subcommittee agreed that Member States should continue to be invited to report to the Secretary-General on national and international research concerning the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources, and that further studies should be conducted on the collision with space debris of orbiting space objects with nuclear power sources on board. While agreeing that a revision of the Principles was not currently necessary, the Subcommittee stressed that it was important that States making use of nuclear power sources in space should conduct their activities in full accordance with them.

The Committee on Outer Space agreed with the findings of the Subcommittee, including that revision of the Principles was not currently warranted and that discussions on the issue should continue. The Committee agreed that Member States should continue to report on research concerning the safety of space objects with nuclear power sources and that further studies should be conducted on the collision of orbiting space objects with nuclear power sources aboard. It noted that the Russian Federation had provided information on the construction and flight of the Mars 96 spacecraft and on safety provisions concerning the nuclear power sources carried on board, and that the United States had informed the Secretary-General on how States might obtain the results of the environmental assessment in connection with the Cassini spacecraft to be launched in October 1997, which was to carry a nuclear power source on board.

Space debris

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1997 continued consideration of an item on space debris, understood to be inactive man-made objects, such as spent upper stages, spent satellites, fragments or parts generated during launch or mission operations, or fragments from explosions and other break-ups.

The Subcommittee agreed that international cooperation was needed to expand affordable strategies to minimize the potential impact of space debris on future space missions. It noted with appreciation the annual report [A/AC.105/663] on steps taken by space agencies to reduce the growth or damage potential of space debris and to encourage acceptance of those steps by the international community on a voluntary basis. It took note of programmes of some Member States and organizations, including ESA, on the acquisition and understanding of data on the characteristics of the space debris environment, and on measuring, modelling and mitigating the orbital debris environment. The Subcommittee also noted the reports on the first confirmed collision of two catalogued objects in orbit, the Cerise (1995-033B) and Ariane-1 (1986-019RF), on 24 July 1996. It further noted that the event was significant for the validation of statistical models predicting the probability of similar collisions in the future.

The Subcommittee agreed that Member States should pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, that national research on space debris should continue and that the results of that research, including information on practices adopted that had proved effective in minimizing the creation of space debris, should be made available to all interested parties. France, Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom, the United States, ESA and the Inter-Agency Space Debris Coordination Committee (IADC) made scientific and technical presentations on space debris to the Subcommittee.

The Subcommittee noted that cooperation had continued in IADC, with the participation of Japan, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration of the United States, ESA, the Russian Space Agency, the Chinese National Space Agency and, since 1996, the British National Space Centre, the Centre national d'etudes spatiales (France) and the Indian Space Research Organization, to enable members to exchange information on space debris activities, facilitate co-operation in research, review progress of ongoing activities and identify debris mitigation options.

The Committee on Outer Space endorsed many Subcommittee findings, agreeing that it should continue consideration of space debris as a priority matter.

Space transportation

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee in 1997 considered space transportation systems and their implications for future activities in space. It reviewed national and international co-operative programmes in such systems, including expendable launchers, reusable space shuttles and space stations. In particular, the Subcommittee noted that China was continuing to use and develop its Long March series of launch vehicles; that India was continuing development of the Geostationary Satellite Launch Vehicle and had launched the Polar Satellite Launch Vehicle; that Japan was continuing to use its H-II, J-I and M-V launch vehicles and had started to develop the H-IIA vehicle; that the Russian Federation had continued to launch space objects of various types using expendable launchers and had sent a number of national and international crews to the Mir space station; that Ukraine, in cooperation with the Russian Federation, was planning to use rocket launchers in commercial space activities; that the United Kingdom was cooperating with ESA in its Future European Space Transportation Investigation Programme; that the United States was continuing its programme of expendable launchers and flights of the reusable space shuttle, many involving international participation; that Canada, Japan, the Russian Federation, the United States and ESA were continuing preparations for the International Space Station programme; and that ESA was continuing to develop the Ariane series of launch vehicles.

The Subcommittee noted developments in the United States commercial launch industry, including expendable vehicles and the reusable launch vehicle technology programme. It also took note of the automatic landing flight experiment and a study of an experimental unmanned winged vehicle of Japan. In addition, it noted developments in the Russian Federation, including improved and ecologically clean launchers, as well as the introduction into the Russian space transportation system of launchers that were based on converted ballistic missiles. The Subcommittee also noted the construction of a new cosmodrome in the eastern part of the Russian Federation, and plans for the modernization of the one in Kazakhstan with its increased use for commercial launchings by international enterprises.

The Subcommittee and the Committee on Outer Space stressed the importance of international cooperation in space transportation in order to provide all countries with access to the benefits of space science and technology.

Technical aspects of the geostationary orbit

In its examination of the physical nature and technical attributes of the geostationary orbit and its utilization and applications, the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee reviewed national and international cooperative programmes in satellite communications, including progress in technology that would make satellite communications more accessible and less expensive and would increase the communications capacity of the geostationary orbit and the electromagnetic spectrum. The Subcommittee took note of the growing use of communications satellite systems for telecommunications, television broadcasting, data networks, environmental data relay, mobile communications, disaster warning and relief, telemedicine and other communications functions.

Some Subcommittee members expressed the view that the geostationary orbit was a limited natural resource and that saturation should be avoided in order to ensure that all countries had non-discriminatory access to it. Those delegations felt that a special sui generis legal regime was required to ensure equitable access by all States, particularly developing countries. Some expressed the view that, in considering the question of equitable access, account should be taken of the geographic situation of the equatorial countries and, in particular, of countries at high latitudes. The view was expressed that the Legal Subcommittee could draft an appeal to the 1997 World Radiocommunication Conference, stressing the principle of guaranteeing equitable access to the geostationary orbit as well as a solution to its virtual congestion by "paper satellites", and that that appeal could be regarded as the finalization of deliberations on the matter in the Legal Subcommittee. Some delegations noted that the use of the geostationary orbit, like other orbits, was affected by the problem of space debris and that efforts were needed to minimize the generation of debris in the orbit and to move satellites shortly before the end of their useful lives into disposal orbits beyond the geostationary orbit.

The Committee on Outer Space noted that delegations had reiterated views concerning the geostationary orbit that had been reflected in earlier reports of the Committee and its two Subcommittees. Legal aspects of the geostationary orbit were considered by the Legal Subcommittee (see below).

Environment-related issues

The Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued in 1997 its consideration of progress in national and international space activities related to the Earth environment, in particular progress in the International Geosphere-Biosphere (Global Change) Programme. The Subcommittee noted the progress being made through international cooperation in that Programme, with the participation of many countries. Such a joint international effort was important for examining the future habitability of the planet and for managing its natural resources, and there was a need to involve as many countries as possible in the scientific activities of the Programme, in both developed and developing countries, the Subcommittee stated. It noted the important contributions of satellite remote sensing to environmental monitoring, planning sustainable development, monitoring crop conditions and predicting and assessing drought, and that the Centre for Climatic Studies and Forecasting of Brazil was fully operational. Also noted were the contributions of meteorological and atmospheric research satellites to studying global climate change, the greenhouse effect, the degradation of the ozone layer, and other oceanic and global environmental processes. There was need for further space research relating to climate change, energy exchange between the atmosphere and land and ocean surfaces, weather patterns, vegetation distribution and other environmental factors. The Subcommittee noted the importance of international cooperation in existing and planned satellite systems for environmental monitoring, and recommended that other States should consider participating in such cooperative activities.

The Committee on Outer Space agreed that it could promote international cooperation in the applications of space technologies for environmental monitoring and sustainable development. In particular, it felt that the UN Programme on Space Applications could play an important role in assisting developing countries in strengthening their capabilities in related space technologies and applications, particularly in reducing poverty and enhancing rural development.

Spin-off benefits

The Committee on Outer Space agreed that spin-offs of space technology were yielding substantial benefits in many fields and took note of the efforts in many Member States to develop such benefits and to disseminate information on those activities to interested countries. It noted that spin-off technology could be used for peacekeeping and humanitarian activities, and was providing new techniques in population studies, national economic development planning, disaster prediction and mitigation, geological prospecting, topographic mapping, agriculture and fishing, and literacy and family welfare programmes. Recent spin-offs included an anti-shock pressure suit for medical applications, a transportation guidance system, a handheld electromagnetic probe for inspecting aircraft for cracks and other damage, an obstacle detection system to assist in automated operations, a prototype silicon detector of radiation-induced effects in humans, automated robotic gasoline pumps, force-reflecting devices to assist the blind in using a computer mouse, nuclear-waste facility clean-up and field applications and demonstrations of telemedicine systems ("tele-clinics"). The Committee agreed that microsatellite technologies were particularly important and could provide substantial direct and spin-off benefits to countries at a lower cost than other satellite technologies. It noted the multilateral cooperation in the area of small multi-mission satellite development and the programmes of many countries in small satellites and microsatellites.

The Committee agreed that in promoting spin-off benefits and effective space applications, particularly for developing countries, the capacity to understand the technology and to develop it was of primary importance. Developing countries should enhance their potential in basic and advanced research to promote capacity-building for space applications and to benefit from spin-offs of space technology.

The Committee noted with interest Ukraine's proposal to utilize the Evpatoria Centre of Deep Science Communication as the basis for a new international centre for space research that could be used for many activities, including coordination as a way of further strengthening international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space.

Coordination in the UN system

In 1996, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/123 [YUN 1996, p. 558], had requested all Governments within the organizations of the UN system and other intergovernmental organizations working in the field of outer space or related matters to cooperate in implementing the recommendations of UNISPACE-82. The Secretary-General outlined their programmes in his report on coordination of outer space activities within the UN system for 1997-1998 [A/AC.105/675]. Those programmes and projects were coordinated at annual inter-agency meetings. At its eighteenth session (Vienna, 28-30 May) [A/AC.105/676], the Inter-Agency Meeting on Outer Space Activities agreed that the use of advanced information technologies, in particular the Internet, should be expanded as a means of strengthening inter-agency coordination, and that the Office for Outer Space Affairs could serve as a coordinating mode for accessing space-related information of UN bodies.

The Committee on Outer Space found that reports from UN organizations helped to enable it and its subsidiary bodies to fulfil their role as a focal point for international cooperation in space, especially with respect to the practical applications of space science and technology in developing countries.

Other questions

The Committee on Outer Space and its Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considered other space-related questions, including life sciences and space medicine. The Subcommittee noted that studies of human and animal physiology under the microgravity conditions of space flight had led to important advances in medical knowledge in such areas as blood circulation, osteoporosis, sensory perception, immunology and the effects of cosmic radiation. New information in those fields had been obtained through experiments on the Mir space station, particularly through international cooperation programmes carried out during the flights of ESA, French, German and United States astronauts aboard that space station. Important information was gathered during several United States space shuttle missions, including flights involving Canadian and French astronauts, on the BION 11 satellite, launched by the Russian Federation with participation of experts from France, Ukraine and the United States, and from experiments on sounding rockets such as TEXUS.

The Subcommittee noted that applications of space technologies were demonstrating growing promise in medicine and public health. Specialists from Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, the United States and Uruguay were preparing biotechnology experiments involving the growth of many types of protein crystals under microgravity conditions. Products of space biotechnology, such as pharmaceutical and medical instruments, could have applications for improved health care. The Subcommittee encouraged further research and exchange of information on those applications.

The Subcommittee noted that several planetary exploration missions were currently under way. The Galileo spacecraft, upon entry into the orbit of Jupiter, launched a complex investigation of its natural satellite system; the United States had launched the Mars Global Surveyor and Pathfinder for global observation of Mars and the Near-Earth Asteroid Rendezvous (NEAR) mission for the study and observation of asteroids. Noting the high degree of international cooperation in all those projects, the Subcommittee stressed the need to enable all countries to benefit from and participate in them.

The Subcommittee also noted ongoing and new programmes for ground-based astronomical observations, particularly in Brazil, Canada, India, Italy, the Russian Federation and the United States. It noted that the increase in space debris and radio noise, as well as recent proposals for promotional and commemorative use of outer space, posed a real threat to ground-based astronomy. Finally, it noted the need to minimize the impact of space activities on astronomical observations.

Legal Subcommittee

The Legal Subcommittee of the Committee on Outer Space, at its thirty-sixth session (Vienna,

1-8 April) [A/AC.105/674], continued its review of the 1992 Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space; matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space; and matters related to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure the rational and equitable use of the geostationary orbit without prejudice to the role of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU).

In June [A/52/20], the Committee on Outer Space took note with appreciation of the Legal Subcommittee's report.

Nuclear power sources

Continuing its review of the Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 47/68 [YUN 1992, p. 116], the Legal Subcommittee concurred with the view of the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee that revision of the Principles was not warranted at the current time (see above). It also agreed that consideration by its Working Group of the subject should again be suspended for one year, pending the results of the work in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, unless sufficient progress was made by that Subcommittee in 1998 to warrant reconvening the Group. The item would be retained on the Legal Subcommittee's agenda to give delegations an opportunity to discuss it in plenary meetings.

The Committee on Outer Space endorsed those recommendations and agreed that the Principles would remain valid for the time being, with the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee considering the need for revision in the light of changing technology, before the Legal Subcommittee or the Committee undertook any actual revision.

Geostationary orbit and definition of outer space

The Legal Subcommittee, through a working group, continued to consider matters relating to the definition and delimitation of outer space and to the character and utilization of the geostationary orbit, including ways to ensure the rational and equitable use of that orbit without prejudice to the role of ITU. It noted that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its 1997 session, had dealt with certain scientific aspects of the geostationary orbit (see above). The Legal Subcommittee had before it a working paper submitted by the Secretariat, in cooperation with ITU, analysing the compatibility of the approach contained in the working paper entitled "Some considerations concerning the utilization of the geostationary satellite orbit" with the existing ITU regulatory procedures relating to the use of the geostationary orbit [A/AC.105/C.2/L.205]. Also before the Subcommittee were a paper by Colombia [A/AC.105/C.2/L.200 & Corr.1] and a draft resolution by Germany [A/AC.105/C.2/L.207 & Rev.1,2]. Other documents concerning the geostationary satellite orbit [A/AC.105/635 & Add.1-4, A/AC.105/C.2/L.204] were also considered.

The Committee on Outer Space noted the work carried out by the Legal Subcommittee and the Working Group. It noted Subcommittee views expressed on the question of the definition and delimitation of outer space in 1997. Some delegations reiterated the view that the geostationary orbit required a special, sui generis legal regime to regulate access and utilization by all States, taking into account the needs of developing countries. Such a regime should take into consideration the particular situation of the equatorial countries. Some delegations reiterated the view that the roles of ITU and the Legal Subcommittee were complementary and that the Subcommittee could contribute to the establishment of a special legal regime to regulate the use of the geostationary orbit, while others felt that ITU was the appropriate body to address questions concerning its use, and was doing so effectively. Following extensive consultations, Germany informed the Committee that those consultations had not resulted in a breakthrough to allow its draft resolution on equitable access to the geostationary orbit to be forwarded for adoption by the General Assembly and the ITU World Radiocommunication Conference (27 October-21 November). The Committee on Outer Space noted that Germany had therefore withdrawn the text.

Some delegations expressed the view that further discussions were needed in the Legal Subcommittee and that they could proceed on the basis of papers before the Subcommittee [A/AC.105/C.2/L.200 & Corr.1, A/AC.105/C.2/L.205].

Some delegations expressed the view that the topic of space debris should be included in the agenda of the Legal Subcommittee, while others felt that it would be premature to discuss the issue of space debris in that forum in view of the many technical issues that needed to be discussed in the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth (Special Political and Decolonization) Committee [A/52/615], adopted resolution 52/56 without vote [agenda item 85].

International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/123 of 13 December 1996,

Deeply convinced of the common interest of mankind in promoting the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes and in continuing efforts to extend to all States the benefits derived therefrom, and also of the importance of international cooperation in this field, for which the United Nations should continue to provide a focal point,

Reaffirming the importance of international cooperation in developing the rule of law, including the relevant norms of space law and their important role in international cooperation for the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes, and of the widest possible adherence to international treaties that promote the peaceful uses of outer space,

13. Notes with satisfaction that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee continued to consider on a priority basis the agenda item on space debris and that the work of the Subcommittee at its thirty-fourth session concentrated on the topics of modelling of the space debris environment and risk assessment, on the basis of the multi-year work plan adopted by the Subcommittee at its thirty-second session;

14. Agrees that the multi-year work plan for the consideration of the item on space debris should continue to be implemented with flexibility;

15. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee that the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, at its thirty-fifth session, taking into account the concerns of all countries, particularly those of developing countries, should:

(a) Consider the following items on a priority basis:

28. Recommends that more attention be paid to all aspects related to the protection and the preservation of the outer space environment, especially those potentially affecting the Earth's environment;

29. Considers that it is essential that Member States pay more attention to the problem of collisions of space objects, including those with nuclear power sources, with space debris, and other aspects of space debris, calls for the continuation of national research on this question, for the development of improved technology for the monitoring of space debris and for the compilation and dissemination of data on space debris, considers that, to the extent possible, information thereon should be provided to the Scientific and Technical Subcommittee, and agrees that international cooperation is needed to expand appropriate and affordable strategies to minimize the impact of space debris on future space missions;

30. Urges all States, in particular those with major space capabilities, to contribute actively to the goal of preventing an arms race in outer space as an essential condition for the promotion of international cooperation in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes;

33. Also requests the Committee to continue to consider at its forty-first session its agenda item entitled "Spin-off benefits of space technology: review of current status";

34. Endorses the decision of the Committee to grant permanent observer status to the International Space University;

35. Requests the specialized agencies and other international organizations to continue and, where appropriate, enhance their cooperation with the Committee and to provide it with progress reports on their work relating to the peaceful uses of outer space;

36. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in accordance with the present resolution, to consider, as appropriate, new projects in outer space activities, and to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, including its views on which subjects should be studied in the future.

Effects of atomic radiation

The United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation held its forty-sixth session in 1997 (Vienna, 16-20 June) [A/52/46]. The Committee considered recent information on sources of radiation, exposures and their effects, including exposures from natural and man-made sources of radiation; medical and occupational radiation exposures; dose assessment methodologies; epidemiological evaluation of radiation-induced cancer; deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) repair and mutagenesis; hereditary effects of radiation; combined effects of radiation and other agents; models, mechanisms and uncertainties at low doses; and local exposures and effects of the Chernobyl accident. The Committee made suggestions for the further development of those topics.

The Committee was preparing an extensive assessment of information on radiation exposures worldwide and a comprehensive review of the biological effects of radiation, representing the state of knowledge at the end of the millennium. It would also direct its attention to investigations of the mechanisms of radiation interactions, the response of cells and the organism, and the uncertainties in relating specific exposures and effects, especially at the low levels of exposure that occurred at home, in the workplace and in the environment.

The Committee expressed the hope that UN Member States and members of specialized agencies and national institutions would continue to assist in its work, especially by providing information on the subjects of interest for the future programme of study, so that its deliberations could be based on the broadest and most up-to-date scientific and technical information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 December [meeting 69], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee [A/52/614], adopted resolution 52/55 without vote [agenda item 84].

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 51/121 of 13 December 1996, in which, inter alia, it requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation,

Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

6. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their cooperation in this field;

7. Welcomes, in this context, the readiness of Member States to provide the Scientific Committee with relevant information on the effects of atomic radiation in affected areas, and invites the Scientific Committee to analyse and give due consideration to such information, particularly in the light of its own findings;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of future reports of the Scientific Committee to the General Assembly;

9. Invites the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Health Organization to consider the functions and role of the Scientific Committee and to submit a recommendation to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, and, meanwhile, requests the Scientific Committee to submit its report to the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Health Organization, as well as to the General Assembly, which will consider the report together with the evaluation of the report by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Health Organization.

PART TWO

Human rights

Chapter I

Promotion of human rights

United Nations efforts to promote human rights continued in 1997 through the Commission on Human Rights, which marked its fiftieth anniversary, and its subsidiary body—the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities—and human rights treaty bodies, which reported on their work to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights carried out a programme of technical cooperation in human rights, including advisory services.

Human rights instruments promoted civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights, and addressed racial discrimination, discrimination against women, the protection of children, and torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

In November, the Assembly proclaimed the year 2000 the International Year for the Culture of Peace. A project entitled "Towards a culture of peace", carried out by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, dealt with education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance; promotion of human rights and democracy; struggle against discrimination; cultural pluralism and intercultural dialogue; and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building.

Throughout the year, preparations continued for the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the five-year implementation review of the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, both of which would take place in 1998.

The Assembly approved the Secretary-General's appointment of Mary Robinson (Ireland) as UN High Commissioner for Human Rights for a four-year term starting on 12 September.

UN machinery

Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights held its fifty-third session in Geneva from 10 March to 18

April [E/1997/23], during which it adopted 78 resolutions and 26 decisions. The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption three draft resolutions and 52 draft decisions.

On 11 March [E/1997/23 (dec. 1997/101)], the Commission invited special representatives, special rapporteurs, chairmen/rapporteurs of various working groups and experts to participate in the discussion of their reports at its meetings.

Organization of work in 1998

On 16 April [dec. 1997/119], the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize 40 fully serviced additional meetings, to be used only if necessary, for the Commission's 1998 session, and requested its Chairman to make every effort to organize the session's work within the times normally allotted. The Council, by decision 1997/290 of 22 July, authorized the additional meetings and approved the Commission's request to its Chairman.

Also on 16 April [dec. 1997/120], the Commission decided that all special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups entrusted with continuing thematic or country-oriented mandates were expected to report in 1998, even if 1997 resolutions did not make explicit reference to that obligation.

The Commission, on 18 April [dec. 1997/123], recommended that its fifty-fourth session take place from 16 March to 24 April 1998. On 22 July, by decision 1997/291, the Council approved the recommendation.

By other decisions, the Commission deferred to 1998 consideration of draft resolutions on its restructuring and revitalization [dec. 1997/126] and on its special procedures system [dec. 1997/116].

Thematic procedures

In March [E/CN.4/1997/38], the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1996 Commission request [YUN 1996, p. 565], presented documentary references to the conclusions and recommendations of the thematic special rapporteurs and working groups. Regarding the Commission's request that he consider holding further periodic meetings of all of the thematic special rapporteurs and chairmen of working groups to exchange views, cooperate more closely and make recommendations, the Secretary-General recalled that such a meeting was held in 1996, the report of which was before the Commission's 1997 session [E/CN.4/1997/3].

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/37], the Commission on Human Rights encouraged Governments to cooperate more closely with it through the thematic procedures; respond expeditiously to requests for information; and consider follow-up visits by thematic special rapporteurs and working groups. It asked the thematic special rapporteurs and working groups to make recommendations to promote human rights; follow progress by Governments; continue close cooperation with relevant treaty bodies and country rapporteurs; include in their reports information provided by Governments on follow-up action, as well as their own observation; and include in their reports gender-disaggregated data and address human rights violations that were directed against women, or to which women were particularly vulnerable. They were also requested to include in their reports comments on problems of responsiveness, the results of analyses, and suggestions as to areas where Governments might request assistance through the programme of advisory services administered by the Centre for Human Rights. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to take note of the recommendations of the meetings of the special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups, and to consider convening further periodic meetings of the thematic special rapporteurs and the chairpersons of working groups. He was also asked to issue annually their conclusions and recommendations; to present annually a list of persons constituting the thematic and country procedures; and to ensure the availability of resources for the implementation of all thematic mandates. The Commission's request for resources was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/250 of 22 July.

Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

1997 session

The Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, at its forty-ninth session (Geneva, 4-29 August) [E/CN.4/1998/2], adopted 43 resolutions and 19 decisions, and recommended one draft resolution and 10 draft decisions for adoption by the Commission.

The Subcommission adopted resolutions on its rules of procedure, guidelines, decisions and practices applicable to its work [E/CN.4/1998/2 (res. 1997/16)], on the organization of its sessions [res. 1997/17] and on the promotion of dialogue on human rights issues [res. 1997/38] (see below). Decisions were adopted relating to its agenda [dec. 1997/101], organization of work [dec. 1997/103], methods of work [dec. 1997/104 & 1997/113], the composition of its pre-sessional working groups [dec. 1997/111] and voting by secret ballot on proposals relating to alleged human rights violations in countries [dec. 1997/106]. It annexed criteria for new studies [dec. 1997/112] to guidelines concerning its methods of work as contained in a 1992 resolution [YUN 1992, p. 759].

The Subcommission had before it reports on the organization of its work, including a May report that dealt with the financial and other implications of organizing Subcommission sessions [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/2], and a June working paper that addressed the rules of procedure, guidelines and practices applicable to the Subcommission [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/3].

Report of Subcommission Chairman. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report [E/CN.4/1997/79], submitted in response to its 1996 request [YUN 1996, p. 566] and prepared by the Subcommission's 1996 Chairman, Asbjørn Eide (Norway), describing aspects of the Subcommission's work.

Review of Subcommission work

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/22)], the Commission requested the Subcommission to review its working methods with a view to improving its efficiency and avoiding duplication with the Commission, and to prepare recommendations for the Commission's consideration. The Secretary-General was requested to ensure that documents were available in all UN official languages prior to the session; and, in responding to requests from the Subcommission to solicit information from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to agree to the requests only after they were approved by the Commission. The Subcommission Chairman was asked to submit a further report on the Subcommission's work in 1998.

Note by Secretary-General. In June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/24], the Secretary-General reviewed developments that had occurred between 1 June 1996 and 1 June 1997 in areas with which the Subcommission was concerned. They related to the status and monitoring bodies of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)], the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights [YUN 1966, pp. 419 & 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)], the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46], the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] and the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families [YUN 1990, p. 594, GA res. 45/158].

ILO report. In June, the International Labour Organization (ILO) submitted a memorandum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/25] concerning ratifications of ILO conventions relating to the concerns of the Subcommission. The conventions dealt with forced labour, discrimination, freedom of association, migrant workers, indigenous and tribal peoples, women workers, child labour, the situation of Arab workers of the occupied Arab territories and vocational rehabilitation.

Promotion of dialogue on human rights issues

In a 28 August resolution [res. 1997/38], adopted by a vote of 20 to 1, the Subcommission, expressing deep concern at the possibility of human rights issues being used for political purposes, encouraged further and timely dialogue among its expert members to facilitate the formulation and adoption of resolutions and decisions. Subcommission members and governmental and non-governmental observers were invited to carry out constructive dialogue and consultations on human rights, so as to enhance understanding and to search for effective and commonly agreed solutions to the promotion and protection of human rights, taking into account the Subcommission's role as a "think-tank" in that regard.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/134 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its commitment to promoting international cooperation, as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular in paragraph 3 of Article 1, as well as relevant provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 for enhancing genuine cooperation among Member States in the field of human rights,

Recognizing that the enhancement of international cooperation in the field of human rights is essential for the full achievement of the purposes of the United Nations, including the effective promotion and protection of all human rights,

Reaffirming the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, and underlining the importance of the promotion of dialogue on human rights issues,

Taking note of the adoption of resolution 1997/38 of 28 August 1997, entitled "Promotion of dialogue on human rights issues", by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-ninth session,

1. Welcomes the statement made by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights at its 70th meeting of its fifty-third session, on 18 April 1997;

2. Calls upon Member States, intergovernmental organizations and the specialized agencies to continue to carry out constructive dialogue and consultations for the enhancement of understanding and the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, and encourages non-governmental organizations to contribute actively to this endeavour;

3. Notes with appreciation that the Commission on Human Rights will keep under review the matter to which the Chairman's statement refers;

4. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its fifty-third session.

Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights

The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Jose Ayala Lasso, resigned from his post to become Minister for Foreign Affairs of Ecuador on 15 March. The Secretary-General's 12 June proposal to appoint Mary Robinson (Ireland) as the next High Commissioner [A/51/924] was approved by consensus by the General Assembly on 17 June in decision 51/322. The Secretary-General informed the Assembly in August that the new High Commissioner's term of office would be from 12 September 1997 to 11 September 2001 [A/51/924/Add.1].

On 1 September 1997, the Office of the High Commissioner and the Centre for Human Rights were consolidated as the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR).

Reports of High Commissioner. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/98 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1], the High Commissioner discussed the policy orientation of his Office and summarized his activities since his October 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 567].

The High Commissioner stated that globalization exposed the international community more than ever to human rights challenges, but also served as a catalyst for developing a human rights culture, which he defined as collective and individual responsibility. Human rights education was the basic vehicle of the human rights culture. The United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039], was an effective framework for partnerships to cooperate in building a culture of human rights (see below, under "Human rights education"). During a meeting of human rights educators (Geneva, 27-30 January), convened by the High Commissioner, an approach to human rights education based on various strategies for furthering human rights education at the national and international levels dominated the debate.

The criteria for sustainable development, the High Commissioner stated, should include better protection of all human rights—civil, cultural, economic, political and social—as well as protection of the most vulnerable and impoverished. Creating the conditions for sustainable development was important in ensuring that all human rights, including the right to development, would be implemented. Since international cooperation was indispensable for implementing the right to development, the High Commissioner had established close contacts with the United Nations Development Programme, the regional commissions, the World Bank, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other agencies.

A central priority of the UN human rights programme was removing the causes of discrimination and combating its manifestations. United Nations agencies and programmes had increasingly entered into joint activities to combat discrimination. The High Commissioner initiated inter-agency consultations on the protection of minorities and the subject had been the focus of attention of the human rights treaty-based bodies and special mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights.

International concern for human rights, wherever they were in danger, was legally justified and constituted a necessary component of future-oriented international and national policies. In his dialogues with Governments and contacts with civilians, the High Commissioner attached prime importance to issues of grave and massive human rights violations; refusal by Governments to cooperate fully with UN human rights machinery; and intimidation and reprisals against those who sought to cooperate with that machinery.

Regarding preventive and responsive action, the High Commissioner pointed to the effective implementation of human rights through field activities. Human rights field offices had been opened recently in Abkhazia (Georgia), Colombia, Gaza (Palestine) and Zaire. In addition, the programme of technical cooperation (see below, under "Other activities") provided advisory services and technical and financial assistance. The High Commissioner had focused specific attention on strengthening existing national institutions and creating new ones. Projects for that purpose had been conducted or initiated in Bangladesh, Latvia, Malawi, Mongolia, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Republic of Moldova, South Africa and Uganda.

A key target of the restructuring of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights was the better management of information on human rights. The High Commissioner drew attention to the UN Human Rights Website (<http://www.unhchr.ch>), which provided easy access to human rights conventions and declarations and information on UN human rights activities.

The High Commissioner stated that the fiftieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see below) should offer the opportunity to strengthen the promotion and protection of human rights; assess progress since the adoption of the Declaration; review progress made in implementing the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 908], adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights; and envisage ways to further develop the UN human rights programme.

In October [A/52/36], the High Commissioner stated, in the context of the Secretary-General's reform programme, that the consolidated OHCHR would analyse human rights technical assistance, as well as assistance that had an impact on human rights, such as the promotion of democratic governance, strengthening the rule of law, reform of the judiciary, and programmes related to the implementation of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [YUN 1966, p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25]. The High Commissioner reviewed the work of the 1997 session of the Commission and discussed action taken during the year by the Commission and Subcommission to promote the right to development. Regarding that right, OHCHR held two seminars in Geneva in 1997—one, which was organized together with a non-governmental organization (NGO), on multicultural and intercultural education (23-24 May), and another on immigration, racism and racial discrimination (5-9 May).

During the year, OHCHR continued to prepare for the fiftieth anniversary in 1998 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the five-year implementation review of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. Seven inter-agency meetings had been held, and OHCHR, in cooperation with the UN Department of Public Information, had initiated an inter-active information strategy.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, by decision 52/427, took note of part six of the report [A/52/644/Add.5] of the Third Committee dealing with the High Commissioner's report.

Commission action. On 16 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/68)], the Commission on Human Rights, having examined the High Commissioner's February report, recognized his efforts to enhance the Centre for Human Rights and the importance of continuing to support the activities of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights.

The Commission, on 18 April [res. 1997/76], reiterated the need to provide financial, material and personnel resources to the Office of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights. It again requested the Secretary-General to provide the human rights programme with all necessary resources from future regular UN budgets, and in particular to take that into account in the 1998-1999 budget. That request was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/279 of 22 July. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to continue to increase cooperation and coordination on human rights issues among UN departments, offices and agencies and to ensure the participation of the High Commissioner/Centre in all mechanisms related to the follow-up to major UN conferences. The High Commissioner was asked to make available to States information on voluntary contributions and their allocation and to invite them to briefing meetings and appeals; to report annually on the staff of the Office of the High Commissioner/Centre, reflecting grade, nationality and gender; and to submit in 1998 a report on the implementation of its resolution, including information on voluntary contributions and an assessment of ongoing field operations.

Composition of staff

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1996/272 [YUN 1996, p. 568], the Secretary-General, in February, reported on the composition of the staff of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights [E/CN.4/1997/45] as at 31 December 1996. He noted that the report was an interim one and that a comprehensive report would be submitted in 1998 after completion of the Centre's restructuring.

Commission action. On 18 April [dec. 1997/124], the Commission on Human Rights deferred consideration of a draft text dealing with the composition of the Centre to its 1998 session.

Strengthening UN action

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/131 by recorded vote (116-2-50) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Strengthening of United Nations action in the field of human rights through the promotion of international cooperation and the importance of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that among the purposes of the United Nations are those of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and taking other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace, as well as achieving international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Desirous of achieving further progress in international cooperation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply convinced that United Nations action in this field should be based not only on a profound understanding of the broad range of problems existing in all societies but also on full respect for the political, economic and social realities of each of them, in strict compliance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and for the basic purpose of promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms through international cooperation,

Reaffirming all its resolutions in this regard,

Reaffirming also the importance of ensuring the universality, objectivity and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues, as affirmed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Affirming the importance of the objectivity, independence and discretion of the special rapporteurs and representatives on thematic issues and on countries, as well as of the members of the working groups, in carrying out their mandates,

Underlining the obligation that Governments have to promote and protect human rights and to carry out the responsibilities that they have undertaken under international law, especially under the Charter, as well as various international instruments in the field of human rights,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and that every State has the duty to respect that right within the provisions of the Charter, including respect for territorial integrity;

2. Reaffirms that it is a purpose of the United Nations and the task of all Member States, in cooperation with the Organization, to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur;

3. 4. Considers that international cooperation in this field should make an effective and practical contribution to the urgent task of preventing mass and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and to the strengthening of international peace and security;

5. Reaffirms that the promotion, protection and full realization of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, as legitimate concerns of the world community, should be guided by the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality and objectivity and should not be used for political ends;

6. Underlines the importance of the promotion of dialogue on human rights issues;

7. Emphasizes that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that, as such, the international community must treat them globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis;

8. Requests all human rights bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the special rapporteurs and representatives, independent experts and working groups, to take duly into account the contents of the present resolution in carrying out their mandates;

Right to promote and protect human rights

Working group activities. The working group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms held its twelfth session in Geneva from 24 to 28 February and on 21 March. Annexed to the group's report [E/CN.4/1997/92] were a consolidated text of the draft declaration drawn up by the Chairman/Rapporteur for consideration by the group and a first reading text as amended during the second reading at its ninth [YUN 1994, p. 1067] and tenth [YUN 1995, p. 692] sessions.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/70], the Commission on Human Rights urged the working group to submit the completed draft declaration and decided to continue its work with a view to adopting the draft declaration in 1998.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1997/23], adopted resolution 1997/51 without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Question of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/70 of 16 April 1997,

1. Authorizes the open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of eight working days prior to the fifty-fourth session of the Commission in order to finalize its elaboration of a draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend all necessary facilities, within existing United Nations resources, to the working group for its meetings.

Human rights instruments

General aspects

In 1997, seven UN human rights instruments were in force that required monitoring of their implementation by expert bodies. The instruments and their treaty bodies were: the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440, GA res. 2106 A (XX)] (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination); the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1966, p. 423, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Human Rights Committee); the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [Ibid., p. 419, GA res. 2200 A (XXI)] (Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights); the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid [YUN 1973, p. 103, GA res. 3068 (XXVIII)] (Group of Three, suspended in 1995) [YUN 1995, p. 693]; the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180] (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women); the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46] (Committee against Torture); and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560, GA res. 44/25] (Committee on the Rights of the Child).

Note by High Commissioner. The High Commissioner submitted to the Commission on Human Rights a note [E/CN.4/1997/75] containing an inventory of all international human rights standard-setting activities, covering work and activities that fell under the Commission's purview.

It also contained standard-setting activities proposed or conducted by the Subcommission.

Report of independent expert. In March [E/CN.4/1997/74], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the final report on enhancing the long-term effectiveness of the UN human rights treaty system, prepared by independent expert Philip Alston (Australia). He had submitted a first report in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 521] and an interim report in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 912].

Recommendations for achieving universal ratification of the core treaties included: holding consultations with international agencies to explore their potential involvement in a ratification campaign; the appointment of special advisers on ratification and reporting; streamlining the reporting process for States with small populations; and paying attention to other substantial categories of non-parties. The expert also recommended establishing a public information budget to disseminate information about the treaty bodies in more popular formats and media. As non-reporting by States on measures taken to implement treaties had reached chronic proportions, the expert advocated the implementation of a specially tailored project for the provision of advisory services. He proposed the convening by the High Commissioner of a high-level meeting to explore better means of cooperation with the treaty bodies.

Commission action. On 3 April [E/1997/23 (dec. 1997/105)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to solicit the views of UN bodies, Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and interested persons on the report of the independent expert and to submit a report thereon that would also include the Secretary-General's views. The Commission decided to consider in 1998 all reports relating to the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1997/73] of the Secretary-General outlining measures taken to implement a 1996 Commission resolution [YUN 1996, p. 572] that called for implementation of international human rights instruments, including reporting obligations.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/87 [YUN 1996, p. 572], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/52/445] on measures taken to implement that resolution, which dealt with the same subject.

In October [A/52/507], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the eighth meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies (Geneva, 15-19 September), convened in accordance with resolution 51/87.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/118 without vote [agenda item 112 (a)].

Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/87 of 12 December 1996, as well as other relevant resolutions, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1997/105 of 3 April 1997,

Recalling also the relevant paragraphs of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993,

Reaffirming that the full and effective implementation of United Nations human rights instruments is of major importance to the efforts of the Organization, pursuant to the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Considering that the effective functioning of the human rights treaty bodies established pursuant to United Nations human rights instruments is indispensable for the full and effective implementation of such instruments,

Conscious of the importance of coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights,

Recalling that the effectiveness of the human rights treaty bodies in encouraging the realization by States parties of their obligations under United Nations human rights instruments requires constructive dialogue, which should be based on the reporting process supplemented by information from all relevant sources and aimed at assisting States parties in identifying solutions to human rights problems,

Recalling also the initiatives taken by a number of human rights treaty bodies to elaborate early-warning measures and urgent procedures, within their mandates, with a view to preventing the occurrence or recurrence of serious human rights violations,

Reaffirming its responsibility for the effective functioning of human rights treaty bodies, and reaffirming also the importance of:

- (a) Promoting the effective functioning of the periodic reporting by States parties to those instruments,
- (b) Securing sufficient financial, human and information resources to overcome the under-resourcing of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, which impedes the ability of the human rights treaty bodies to carry out their mandates effectively,
- (c) Promoting greater efficiency and effectiveness through better coordination of the activities of the United Nations bodies active in the field of human rights, taking into account the need to avoid unnecessary duplication and overlapping of their mandates and tasks,

(d) Addressing questions of both reporting obligations and financial implications whenever elaborating any further instruments on human rights,

Concerned that lack of adequate resources should not impede the effective functioning of the human rights treaty bodies, including in regard to their ability to work in the applicable working languages,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments on human rights,

1. Welcomes the submission of the report of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies on their eighth meeting, held at Geneva from 15 to 19 September 1997, and takes note of their conclusions and recommendations;

2. Encourages each human rights treaty body to give careful consideration to the relevant conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies;

3. Welcomes the submission to the Commission on Human Rights of the final report of the independent expert on enhancing the long-term effectiveness of the United Nations human rights treaty system;

4. Encourages ongoing efforts to identify measures for more effective implementation of the United Nations human rights instruments;

5. Emphasizes the need to ensure financing and adequate staff and information resources for the operations of the human rights treaty bodies, and, with this in mind:

(a) Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General provide adequate resources in respect of each human rights treaty body;

(b) Calls upon the Secretary-General to make the most efficient use of existing resources and to seek the resources necessary to give the human rights treaty bodies adequate administrative support and better access to technical expertise and relevant information;

6. Takes note with appreciation of the revised plan of action to strengthen the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the plan of action to strengthen implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, recalls the importance of administering those plans in accordance with established United Nations procedures, and requests the Secretary-General to include in his report prepared pursuant to the present resolution information on the implementation of those plans of action;

7. Reaffirms the need for human rights treaty bodies to better complement each other in their work, and emphasizes that the universal ratification of international human rights treaties containing reporting obligations adopted within the framework of the United Nations system is important for the realization of that complementarity;

8. Welcomes the continuing efforts by the human rights treaty bodies and the Secretary-General aimed at streamlining, rationalizing, rendering more transparent and otherwise improving reporting procedures, and urges the Secretary-General, the treaty bodies and the meetings of persons chairing the treaty bodies to continue to examine ways of reducing the duplication of reporting required under the different instruments, without impairing the quality of reporting, and of generally alleviating the reporting burden on States parties;

9. Takes note with appreciation, in this regard, of the efforts of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, at their eighth meeting, to develop appropriate reforms of the reporting system, with a view to, inter alia, reducing the reporting burden on States parties while maintaining the quality of reporting, and encourages them to continue these efforts, including through the continued examination of the benefits of reports focused on a limited range of issues and of opportunities for harmonizing the general guidelines regarding the form and content of reports, the timing of consideration of reports and the methods of work of the treaty bodies;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General to complete as soon as possible the detailed analytical study comparing the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which is being prepared with a view to identifying duplication of reporting required under those instruments;

11. Urges States parties to contribute, individually and through meetings of States parties, to the identification and implementation of ways of further streamlining, rationalizing, avoiding duplication of and otherwise improving reporting procedures;

12. Welcomes the publication of the revised Manual on Human Rights Reporting;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to compile in a single volume all the general guidelines regarding the form and content of reports to be submitted by States parties that have been issued by the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the Committee against Torture;

14. Reiterates its concern about the increasing backlog of reports on the implementation by States parties of certain United Nations instruments on human rights and about delays in consideration of reports by the treaty bodies;

15. Also reiterates its concern about the large number of overdue reports under the United Nations instruments on human rights, and again urges States parties to make every effort to meet their reporting obligations;

16. Invites States parties that have been unable to comply with the requirements to submit their initial report to avail themselves of technical assistance;

17. Urges all States parties whose reports have been examined by human rights treaty bodies to provide adequate follow-up to the observations and final comments of the treaty bodies on their reports;

18. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies to continue to identify specific possibilities for technical assistance, to be provided at the request of the State concerned, in the regular course of their work of reviewing the periodic reports of States parties;

19. Recalls the recommendation by the meeting of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies that treaty bodies urge each State party to translate, publish and make widely available in its territory the full text of the concluding observations on its reports to the treaty bodies;

20. Welcomes the contribution to the work of the human rights treaty bodies made by the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, and invites the specialized agencies, other United Nations bodies and the treaty bodies to continue to pursue further cooperation between them;

21. Notes that efforts continue to be made at coordination and cooperation between the human rights treaty bodies and the special procedures, rapporteurs, representatives, experts and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, all acting within their respective mandates;

22. Recognizes the important role played by non-governmental organizations in all parts of the world in the effective implementation of all human rights instruments, and encourages the exchange of information between the human rights treaty bodies and such organizations;

23. Recalls, with regard to the election of the members of the human rights treaty bodies, the importance of giving consideration to equitable geographical distribution of membership and to the representation of the principal legal systems and of bearing in mind that the members shall be elected and serve in their personal capacity and shall be of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report prepared pursuant to the present resolution a detailed explanation of the basis for the payment of honoraria to the members of the human rights treaty bodies and suggestions to improve coherence in this regard;

25. Encourages the Economic and Social Council, as well as its functional commissions and their subsidiary bodies, and other United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to consider the feasibility of participation by representatives of the human rights treaty bodies in their meetings;

26. Welcomes the continuing emphasis by the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies that the enjoyment of the human rights of women should be monitored closely by each treaty body within the purview of its mandate, and, in this regard, endorses the request of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies that the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat prepare a study, for use by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the treaty bodies, analysing what each treaty body has done to incorporate gender perspectives into its work and making practical suggestions about what each could do to further incorporate gender perspectives;

27. A/50 welcomes all appropriate measures the human rights treaty bodies may take, within their mandates, in response to situations of massive human rights violations, including bringing those violations to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Secretary-General and the competent bodies of the United Nations in the field of human rights, and requests the High Commissioner, acting within her mandate, to coordinate and consult throughout the United Nations system in this regard;

28. Welcomes the request of the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies to hold an extraordinary three-day meeting early in 1998 to pursue the reform process with the aim of improving the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, and requests the Secretary-General to take the appropriate steps to finance the meeting from the available resources of the regular budget of the United Nations;

29. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on measures taken to implement the present resolution, on obstacles to its implementation and on measures taken or planned to ensure financing and adequate staff and information resources for the effective operation of the human rights treaty bodies;

30. Decides to continue giving priority consideration at its fifty-third session to the conclusions and recommendations of the meetings of persons chairing human rights treaty bodies, in the light of the deliberations of the Commission on Human Rights, under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

In the Third Committee, paragraph 21 was retained by a recorded vote of 97 to 4, with 41 abstentions. Similarly, the Assembly retained the paragraph by a recorded vote of 118 to 5, with 37 abstentions.

Fiftieth anniversary of Universal Declaration of Human Rights Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/35], the Commission on Human Rights asked the High Commissioner to continue to coordinate preparations for the fiftieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535, GA res. 217 A (III)]. Governments were asked to review and assess progress made since the adoption of the Declaration, to identify obstacles to achieving progress and ways in which they could be overcome and to undertake additional efforts to develop education and information programmes. They were invited to undertake national programmes to celebrate the anniversary and to ensure wide participation. Human rights treaty bodies were asked to give attention to the anniversary and to reflect on their possible contribution to the preparations. The Commission called on UN organs and agencies to assess, and put forward pertinent conclusions on the state of implementation and the impact of existing international human rights instruments; it invited them to mark the anniversary by intensifying their contributions to UN system-wide efforts to promote and protect human rights. NGOs were invited to participate in the preparations, to intensify their campaign for greater understanding and better use of the Declaration and to communicate their observations and recommendations to the High Commissioner.

On the same date [res. 1997/41], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1999 on activities relating to the anniversary.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (res. 1997/43)], the Subcommission urged Governments to review and assess progress made since the adoption of the Declaration, to identify obstacles to achieving progress and ways in which they could be overcome, to consider, if they had not done so, ratifying the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights, contained in General Assembly resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 419 & 423], and to take legislative and administrative measures to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. It asked national institutions, NGOs and scholars to intensify efforts to inform public opinion regarding the Declaration.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/52/469], the Secretary-General stated that the first issue of a series of basic information kits, 1998: Fiftieth Anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Basic Information Kit No. 1, contained an executive summary, the mission statement of OHCHR, guiding ideas, an updated calendar of events, excerpts of documents and practical ideas for commemoration. Further issues on women's human rights, human rights education and the rights of the child were under preparation.

The UN Department of Public Information (DPI) was planning a multimedia information programme targeted at the media, NGOs, government officials, schools and academic institutions, the UN system and the public at large. There were plans to produce a poster in the six official languages and a press kit in English and French. In addition, DPI was planning a historical exhibit, an information seminar or round-table meeting for journalists, television programmes and a special series of radio programmes.

Workshop. By a 26 February letter [E/CN.4/1997/119], Poland informed the Commission on Human Rights that, in the context of preparations for the fiftieth anniversary, Germany, Poland and South Africa had organized a workshop on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights at the dawn of the twenty-first century (Warsaw, 30-31 January).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/117 without vote [agenda item 112 (a)].

Fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, on 10 December 1948, it recognized the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family as the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Considering that the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration provides an opportunity for the United Nations and its Member States to redouble their efforts to promote awareness and strengthened observance of the rights set out in the Declaration and other international instruments and declarations in the field of human rights adopted subsequently,

Recognizing the Declaration as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, as well as the source of inspiration and the basis of subsequent progress in the field of human rights,

Concerned that international human rights standards are not fully and universally respected, that human rights continue to be violated in all parts of the world and that people still suffer misery and are deprived of full enjoyment of their civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, and convinced of the necessity of respecting fundamental human rights in all situations and of strengthening the United Nations in this regard,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, that the international community must treat human rights globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing and with the same emphasis, and that while the significance of national and regional particularities and various historical, cultural and religious backgrounds must be borne in mind, it is the duty of States, regardless of their political, economic and cultural systems, to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Convinced of the necessity of protecting and promoting human rights and fundamental freedoms, and determined to take new steps forward, at the national level and with the increased cooperation and solidarity of the international community, with a view to achieving substantial progress in human rights,

Recalling the significance of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, as a milestone in the recognition and progressive development of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all by the international community,

Stressing the importance of ensuring that full attention is given to the integration of the human rights of women into all preparations for and celebrations of the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Recognizing the fundamental importance of tolerance as an essential element in promoting a culture conducive to the acceptance of diversity and pluralism and thereby to the fuller enjoyment of human rights,

Affirming that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration can be fully realized,

Stressing the fact that realization of the full range of human rights requires effective policies and compliance at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level,

Convinced that, in the light of the existing level of standard-setting in the field of human rights, a primary task of the United Nations is to promote the universal ratification of or accession to existing international instruments and their full implementation by all States parties to those instruments,

Recalling its decision to convene, during its fifty-third session, a one-day plenary meeting, on 10 December 1998, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration,

Welcoming the international and national initiatives to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration, and commending the efforts made in all regions of the world to promote all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to contribute to the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and requests her to continue to coordinate all relevant activities within the United Nations system, bearing in mind the provisions of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action for evaluation and follow-up;

2. Encourages all Governments and other actors to undertake additional efforts to develop education and information programmes, with a view to disseminating the text of the Declaration and arriving at a better understanding thereof, and emphasizes in that regard the primary importance of grass-roots initiatives in promoting, through education and the media, a culture of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

3. Invites Governments and the international community to continue to review and assess the progress made in the field of human rights since the adoption of the Declaration and to identify obstacles and ways in which they can be overcome, both through measures at the national level and through enhanced international cooperation, with a view to ensuring full enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, taking into account developments that have taken place during the past fifty years;

4. Urges Governments to endorse and implement national programmes for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration and to ensure wide participation, including the participation of public administration institutions, national institutions, non-governmental organizations, academic circles and all strata of civil society, and thereby to bring the letter and spirit of the Declaration to the awareness of all;

5. Urges those Governments that have not yet ratified the international human rights treaties and protocols adopted within the framework of the United Nations system to consider doing so, and calls upon all Governments to implement fully their international obligations in the field of human rights;

6. Invites the human rights treaty bodies to give appropriate attention, within their mandates and methods of work, to the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration and to reflect on their possible contribution to the above-mentioned preparations;

7. Calls upon relevant United Nations organs and agencies, in the light of the principles set forth in the Declaration, to make, within their respective mandates and fields of action, an assessment of the state of implementation and the impact of existing international human rights instruments and to put forward pertinent conclusions thereon;

8. Invites relevant United Nations organs and agencies, in coordination with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to mark the anniversary by intensifying their own contributions to United Nations system-wide efforts to promote and protect all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

9. Invites Governments, the Secretariat, the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat, relevant organs and agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations, to disseminate widely the Declaration, as well as other international instruments in the field of human rights, with a view to ensuring the universality and full and comprehensive enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

10. Reaffirms its commitment to continue building on the inspiration of the Declaration through the development of international human rights standards and of mechanisms for their promotion and protection, taking into account developments over the past fifty years, including the adoption of the Declaration on the Right to Development;

11. Encourages national human rights institutions, such as human rights commissions, Ombudspersons and others, to play a significant role in the activities marking the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration;

12. Invites non-governmental organizations to participate fully in the preparation for and commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration and to intensify their campaign for greater understanding and better use of the Declaration;

13. Encourages the Commission on Human Rights, at its fifty-fourth session, to give the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration attention commensurate with its historical significance.

By decision 52/424 of 12 December, the Assembly, considering that 1998 would mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration and recalling that in the annex to its resolution 2217 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 457] it had approved the awarding of human rights prizes, decided to ask the Secretary-General to make arrangements to award such prizes in 1998.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocols

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1997, parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI)

[YUN 1966, p. 423] and in force since 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 609], totalled 140 and 92 States, respectively. During the year, Greece, Honduras, Monaco and Turkmenistan became parties to the Covenant, and Cote d'Ivoire, Greece, Sri Lanka and Turkmenistan acceded to the Optional Protocol; Jamaica notified the Secretary-General of its denunciation of the Protocol.

In 1997, Colombia and Greece acceded to the Second Optional Protocol, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty—adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484] and in force since 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 544]—bringing the total number of States parties to 31 at year's end.

On 3 April [E/1997/23 (dec. 1997/104)], the Commission on Human Rights requested an update of the Secretary-General's 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 575] on the status of the Covenant and the Optional Protocols for consideration in 1998.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report [A/52/446] containing information on the status of the Covenant and its Optional Protocols as at 1 September 1997.

Monitoring body. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, held three sessions in 1997: its fifty-ninth from 24 March to 11 April in New York, and its sixtieth from 14 July to 1 August [A/52/40, vol. I] and sixty-first from 20 October to 7 November [A/53/40, vol. I], both in Geneva.

In 1997, the Committee considered reports from 14 States—Belarus, Bolivia, Colombia, France, Georgia, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Lebanon, Lithuania, Portugal (Macau), Senegal, Slovakia, Sudan—under article 40 of the Covenant. It adopted views on communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated, and decided that other such communications were inadmissible. Those views and decisions were annexed to the Committee's reports [A/52/40, vol. II; A/53/40, vol. II].

Having received an August notification from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea purporting to denounce the Covenant, the Committee considered whether denunciation was permissible under the Covenant. On 29 October, it adopted general comment No. 26, which stated that international law did not permit a State party to the Covenant to denounce or withdraw from it.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (res. 1997/41)], the Subcommission considered that the preliminary conclusions of the International Law Commission (ILC) on reservations to multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties, might be inconsistent with general comment No. 24, adopted by the Human Rights Committee in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1010], and actions by other human rights treaty bodies. It asked the Secretary-General to bring the ILC preliminary conclusions to the attention of the human rights treaty bodies and to ask them to transmit their views to ILC and the Subcommission. General comment No. 24 dealt with issues related to reservations made upon ratification of or accession to the Covenant.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/17)], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to secure, through national development policies and international cooperation, full respect for economic, social and cultural rights, and to promote the participation of representatives of civil society in the decision-making processes related to promoting and protecting those rights. It asked them to consider drawing up national action plans identifying steps to improve the human rights situation, with specific benchmarks to give effect to minimum essential levels of enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights.

States parties to the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 419] were called on to submit their reports to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in a regular and timely manner and to promote the participation of representatives of civil society in preparing their periodic reports to the Committee and in implementing the Committee's recommendations.

The Commission asked the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and human rights mechanisms and treaty bodies to give greater attention to the protection of economic, social and cultural rights. It asked the High Commissioner to consider the proposed programme of action [E/1997/22] designed to enhance the ability of the Committee to assist Governments in their reporting obligations and its capacity to process and follow up the examination of States' reports. The Secretary-General was asked to submit reports to the General Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998 on progress made towards realizing the rights sets forth in the Covenant. On 22 July, by decision 1997/244, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

In a 16 October note [A/52/511], the Secretary-General stated that the Secretariat had sent a note verbale and a letter to national and international organizations to collect information for the report.

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1997, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 419] and in force since 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 609], had 137 States parties. During the year, Monaco and Turkmenistan became parties.

The Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a report [A/52/446] on the status of the Covenant as at 1 September 1997.

On 3 April [E/1997/23 (dec. 1997/104)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the draft optional protocol to the Covenant [YUN 1996, p. 577] to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments for submission in 1998.

Monitoring body. The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, established in 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 878], held its sixteenth (28 April-16 May) and seventeenth (17 November-5 December) sessions, both in Geneva [E/1998/22]. The Committee's pre-sessional, five-member working group, established in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 527], met in Geneva from 9 to 13 December 1996 and from 20 to 23 May 1997 to identify issues to be discussed with representatives of reporting States.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/240 of 22 July, took note of the Committee's report on its fourteenth and fifteenth (1996) sessions [YUN 1996, p. 576].

In 1997, the Committee examined reports covering articles 1 to 15 of the Covenant submitted by Azerbaijan [E/1990/5/Add.30], the Dominican Republic [E/1990/6/Add.7], Guyana [E/1990/5/Add.27], Iraq [E/1994/104/Add.9], the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [E/1990/5/Add.26], Luxembourg [E/1990/6/Add.9], Peru [E/1990/5/Add.29], the Russian Federation [E/1994/104/Add.8], the United Kingdom [E/1994/104/Add.11], Uruguay [E/1990/6/Add.10] and Zimbabwe [E/1990/5/Add.28]. In addition, the Committee considered the state of implementation by Saint Vincent and the Grenadines of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Covenant.

The day of general discussion formed part of a two-day consultation [E/CN.4/1998/21] on the right to food (see also PART TWO, Chapter II). On the second day, a seminar was organized by OHCHR which considered the institutional dimensions of the issues raised in the 1996 World Food Summit Plan of Action [YUN 1996, p. 1129] and in the Committee's day of general discussion.

The Committee adopted general comment No. 7 on the right to adequate housing, specifically forced evictions, and No. 8 on the relationship between economic sanctions and respect for economic, social and cultural rights.

Two Committee members carried out a technical assistance mission to the Dominican Republic (19-27 September) to examine the housing situation there. They reported that the large-scale forced evictions that had characterized the previous regime had been suspended and work was being done to relocate many families living in slums.

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1988(LX) [YUN 1976, p. 615], the Secretary-General transmitted the twenty-third report [E/1997/55] of the International Labour Organization concerning implementation of the Covenant.

On 18 December, the Council, by decision 1997/321, postponed to its 1998 organizational session consideration of the Committee's recommendations. It requested the Secretariat to provide additional information on the programme budget implications of the decisions, which dealt with holding an extraordinary additional session of the Committee in 1998, holding the Committee's nineteenth (1998) session in New York and the payment of honoraria to members.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/116 without vote [agenda item 112 (a)].

International Covenants on Human Rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/171 of 22 December 1995, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1997/104 of 3 April 1997,

Mindful that the International Covenants on Human Rights constitute the first all-embracing and legally binding international treaties in the field of human rights and, together with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, form the core of the International Bill of Human Rights,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Recognizing the important role of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the International Covenants on Human Rights as major parts of international efforts to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Appeals strongly to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as to accede to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and to make the declaration provided for in article 41 of the Covenant;

3. Invites the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to intensify systematic efforts to encourage States to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights and, through the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, to assist such States, at their request, in ratifying or acceding to the Covenants and to the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

4. Emphasizes the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and, where applicable, the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

5. Stresses the importance of avoiding the erosion of human rights by derogation, and underlines the necessity of strict observance of the agreed conditions and procedures for derogation under article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, bearing in mind the need for States parties to provide the fullest possible information during states of emergency so that the justification for the appropriateness of measures taken in those circumstances can be assessed;

6. Also stresses the importance of fully taking into account a gender perspective in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights at the national level, including in the national reports of States parties and in the work of the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

7. Encourages States parties to consider limiting the extent of any reservations they lodge to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to formulate any reservations as precisely and narrowly as possible and to ensure that no reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the relevant treaty or otherwise contrary to international law;

8. Also encourages States parties to review regularly any reservations made in respect of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights with a view to withdrawing them;

9. Takes note with appreciation of the annual reports of the Human Rights Committee submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-first and fifty-second sessions, and takes note of General Comments Nos. 25 and 26 adopted by the Committee;

10. Also takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights on its twelfth and thirteenth and fourteenth and fifteenth sessions, and takes note of General Comments Nos. 6 and 7 adopted by the Committee;

11. Invites the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to identify specific needs of States parties that might be addressed through the advisory services and technical assistance programme of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with the possible participation of members of the Committees where appropriate;

12. Welcomes the continuing efforts of both Committees to strive for uniform standards in the implementation of the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, and appeals to other bodies dealing with similar human rights questions to respect those uniform standards, as expressed in the general comments of the Committees;

13. Urges States parties to fulfil in good time such reporting obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights as may be requested and to make use of gender-disaggregated data in their reports;

14. Also urges States parties to take duly into account, in implementing the provisions of the International Covenants on Human Rights, the observations made at the conclusion of the consideration of their reports by the Human Rights Committee and by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as the views adopted by the Human Rights Committee under the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

15. Invites States parties to give particular attention to dissemination at the national level of the reports they have submitted to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the summary records relating to the examination of those reports by the Committees and the observations made by the Committees at the conclusion of the consideration of the reports;

16. Once again encourages all Governments to publish the texts of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in as many local languages as possible and to distribute them and make them known as widely as possible in their territories;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of assisting States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights in the preparation of their reports, including seminars or workshops at the national level for the purpose of training government officials engaged in the preparation of such reports, and in the exploration of other possibilities available under the regular programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights effectively assists the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the implementation of their respective mandates, including by the provision of adequate Secretariat staff resources;

19. Once again urges the Secretary-General, taking into account the suggestions of the Human Rights

Committee, to take determined steps, in particular through the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat, to give more publicity to the work of that Committee and, similarly, to the work of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Human rights questions", a report on the status of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, including all reservations and declarations.

Convention against racial discrimination

As at 31 December 1997, there were 150 parties to the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440] and in force since 1969 [YUN 1969, p. 488]. Kyrgyzstan and Saudi Arabia acceded during 1997.

Commission action. On 18 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/74)], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States that had not done so to consider ratifying and acceding to the Convention and to consider making the declaration provided for in article 14 (see below).

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), set up under article 8 of the Convention, held its fiftieth and fifty-first sessions in 1997, both in Geneva, from 3 to 21 March and from 4 to 22 August, respectively [A/52/18].

The Committee devoted its sessions mainly to examining reports submitted by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention. It considered reports, comments and information submitted by 35 States parties and summarized its members' views on each country report and the statements made by the States parties concerned.

Under the item on the prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning and urgent procedures, the Committee adopted decisions on the situations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Israel and Papua New Guinea. The Committee also reviewed the situation in Burundi and Rwanda.

In conformity with article 14 of the Convention, CERD considered communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights by a State party recognizing CERD's competence to receive and consider such communications. Twenty-four States parties (Algeria, Australia, Bulgaria, Chile, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Republic of Korea, Russian Federation, Senegal, Slovakia, Sweden, Ukraine, Uruguay) had declared such recognition.

Under article 15, the Committee was empowered to consider petitions, reports and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories. CERD observed that it found it impossible to fulfil its functions under article 15 as the documents did not include copies of petitions. The Committee asked that the appropriate information be furnished.

On 18 August, the Committee adopted a general recommendation on the rights of indigenous peoples.

In October [A/52/463], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that, as at 30 August, 23 States parties had accepted an amendment to the Convention regarding the financing of CERD. The amendment, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 714], was to enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties. The Secretary-General stated that as at 30 September outstanding assessments for CERD financing totalled $224,499.

Other action. A May note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/31] presented the CERD Chairman's proposals for studies by the Subcommission covering succession to human rights treaty obligations; reservations to treaties; the advisability of referring to definitions of "race" and "racism" in texts prohibiting racism and its implications; claims by States parties that racial discrimination was absent in their territories; an elaboration of the implications of article 4 relating to claims by States parties that racial discrimination did not exist in their territories, but was also related to the allocation of effective legal resources and measures to punish and/or prevent racial discrimination; the application of article 7 regarding freedom of the press; affirmative action; rights of non-citizens; and the return of refugees' or displaced persons' property. Following consideration of the note, the Subcommission, on 28 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (dec. 1997/118)], asked Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) to prepare a working paper on the concept of affirmative action.

An August note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/46] updated progress made in implementing a 1996 decision [YUN 1996, p. 577] by which the Subcommission had asked two of its members, working together with two members of CERD, to prepare a working paper on article 7 of the Convention. The note stated that the experts would submit a draft in 1998. Article 7 dealt with the adoption by States of measures to combat prejudices that led to racial discrimination and to promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial or ethnic groups.

As requested by Assembly resolution 51/81 [YUN 1996, p. 602], OHCHR organized an expert seminar (Geneva, 10-14 November) [E/CN.4/1998/77/Add.2] on the role of the Internet in the light of the provisions of the Convention. The experts discussed racism and racial discrimination on the Internet, prohibition of racist propaganda on the Internet, technical aspects of screening such propaganda and elements relating to conduct and good practice of Internet-based materials.

The seminar proposed the establishment of an intergovernmental working group to draft guidelines for the ethical use of the Internet. It was suggested that the Commission on Human Rights consider setting up a consultative group to prepare a report within the context of the World Conference on Racism and Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (see PART TWO, Chapter II, under "Racism and racial discrimination"). The formulation of a code of conduct for Internet users and service providers was discussed. It would be necessary to clarify who would establish the code and how it would be established. United Nations Web sites, particularly that of OHCHR, should be used as a vehicle for aiding under-resourced populations, which were usually non-white populations. It was proposed that all Internet communications indicate their source so that users could not anonymously distribute racist propaganda. Although the importance of accountability was noted, concerns were raised about risks for privacy, free expression and human rights activity.

The seminar recommended that: CERD include references to the Internet in examining States parties' reports; the Internet be used as an education tool to combat racist propaganda, prevent racist doctrines and practices, and promote mutual understanding; UN bodies and specialized agencies, international organizations and NGOs address the issue of Internet access within and among nations; and existing national criminal laws to fight racism and racial discrimination be amended to apply to the Internet. The seminar also recommended that Member States continue their cooperation and establish international juridical measures to prohibit racism on the Internet while respecting individual rights such as freedom of speech.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/642], adopted resolution 52/110 without vote [agenda item 110].

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions concerning the reports of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and its resolutions on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, most recently resolution 51/80 of 12 December 1996,

Bearing in mind the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular section II. B of the Declaration relating to equality, dignity and tolerance,

Reiterating the importance of the Convention, which is one of the most widely accepted human rights instruments adopted under the auspices of the United Nations, and mindful of the importance of the contributions of the Committee to the efforts of the United Nations to combat racism and all other forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Calling upon States which have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto,

Emphasizing the obligation of all States parties to the Convention to take legislative, judicial and other measures in order to secure full implementation of the provisions of the Convention,

Recalling its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992, in which it welcomed the decision, taken on 15 January 1992 by the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to amend paragraph 6 of article 8 of the Convention and to add a new paragraph, as paragraph 7 of article 8, with a view to providing for the financing of the Committee from the regular budget of the United Nations, and registering its concern that the amendment to the Convention has not yet entered into force,

Reiterating the importance of enabling the Committee to function smoothly and to have all necessary facilities for the effective performance of its functions under the Convention,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 4 of article 10 of the Convention regarding the location of the meetings of the Committee,

I

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on its fiftieth and fifty-first sessions;

3. Calls upon States parties to fulfil their obligation, under paragraph 1 of article 9 of the Convention, to submit their periodic reports on measures taken to implement the Convention in due time;

4. Commends the Committee on its efforts to contribute to the effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, inter alia, by continuing to improve its working methods, which include the process of reviewing the implementation of the Convention in States whose reports are seriously overdue, and, in that regard, invites the Secretary-General to seek further ways to assist those States in fulfilling their reporting obligations;

5. Commends the Committee for its continuing contribution to the prevention of racial discrimination, including early warning measures and urgent procedures, and welcomes its relevant action thereon;

6. Encourages the Committee to continue to contribute fully to the implementation of the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and its revised Programme of Action, including by continuing to collaborate with the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by cooperating with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

7. Welcomes and encourages the cooperation and exchange of information between the Committee and relevant structures and mechanisms of the United Nations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as with the General Assembly and the States parties to the Convention;

II

Financial situation of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financial status of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination;

9. Expresses its profound concern about the fact that a number of States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination have still not fulfilled their financial obligations, as shown in the report of the Secretary-General, and strongly appeals to all States parties that are in arrears to fulfil their outstanding financial obligations under paragraph 6 of article 8 of the Convention;

10. Strongly urges States parties to the Convention to accelerate their domestic ratification procedures with regard to the amendment to the Convention concerning the financing of the Committee and to notify the Secretary-General expeditiously in writing of their agreement to the amendment, as decided upon at the Fourteenth Meeting of States Parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on 15 January 1992, endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992 and further reiterated at the Sixteenth Meeting of States Parties on 16 January 1996;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to ensure adequate financial arrangements and appropriate means and to provide necessary support to ensure the functioning of the Committee and to enable it to cope with its increasing amount of work;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite those States parties to the Convention that are in arrears to pay the amounts in arrears and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

13. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General on the financial situation of the Committee and the report of the Committee at its fifty-third session under the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination".

Convention against torture

As at 31 December 1997, 104 States were parties to the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [YUN 1984, p. 813, GA res. 39/46], which entered into force in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 755]. During the year, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan and Saudi Arabia became parties. The optional provisions of articles 21 and 22 (under which a party recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a party claims that another is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, and to receive communications from or on behalf of individuals claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention by a State party) also entered into force in 1987; 39 parties had made the required declarations under articles 21 and 22, and two had made the declaration under article 21 only. Amendments to articles 17 and 18, adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 735], had been accepted by 20 States parties at year's end.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 5 December [E/CN.4/1998/36/Rev.1].

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/38)], the Commission on Human Rights urged States to become parties to the Convention and invited all ratifying or acceding States that had not done so to make the declaration provided for in articles 21 and 22 and to consider withdrawing their reservations to article 20. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of adequate staffing and technical facilities for the Committee against Torture.

Draft optional protocol

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/24], the Commission welcomed the progress made in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 580] by the working group on the draft optional protocol which would establish a system of visits to places of detention to be carried out by a committee of experts. The Commission asked the working group to meet for two weeks prior to its 1998 session to complete a final text and to submit a report. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the report to Governments, specialized agencies, chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs concerned, and to invite them to submit their comments to the working group. It also asked him to invite Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as the Chairman of the Committee against Torture and the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture, to participate in working group activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1997/23], adopted resolution 1997/49 without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Question of a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/24 of 11 April 1997,

1. Authorizes an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights to meet for a period of two weeks prior to the fifty-fourth session of the Commission in order to continue the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to extend to the working group all necessary facilities for its meetings and to transmit the report of the working group to Governments, the specialized agencies, the chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Working group activities. The working group on the draft optional protocol held its sixth session from 13 to 24 October [E/CN.4/1998/42 & Corr.1]. Annexed to its report were the texts of the articles that constituted the outcome of the second reading and of those that constituted the basis for future work.

Implementation

Monitoring body. The Committee against Torture, established as a monitoring body under the Convention, held its eighteenth session in Geneva from 29 April to 9 May [A/52/44]. It considered reports by Denmark, Israel, Mexico, Namibia, Paraguay, Sweden and Ukraine.

The Committee held five closed meetings during which, in accordance with article 20, it studied confidential information that appeared to contain well-founded indications that torture was systematically practised in a State party. Under article 22, the Committee considered communications submitted by individuals who claimed that their rights, as enumerated in the Convention, had been violated by a State party and who had exhausted all available domestic remedies.

On 12 December, the General Assembly took note of the Committee's report (decision 52/423).

The Committee held its nineteenth session, also in Geneva, from 10 to 21 November [A/53/44 & Corr.1], during which it reviewed reports by Argentina, Cuba, Cyprus, Portugal, Spain and Switzerland. In four closed meetings, the Committee examined communications from individuals claiming to be victims of violations by States parties, and considered communications under article 22.

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women

On 22 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (res. 1997/9)], the Subcommission called on Governments that had not done so to ratify the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [YUN 1979, p. 895, GA res. 34/180] without resort to reservations. It called on the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women had equal status and resources with other human rights treaty bodies.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 52/100, welcomed the growing number of ratifications to the Convention and the withdrawal of reservations.

(For details on the status of the Convention and work on an optional protocol, see PART THREE, Chapter X.)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1997, 191 States were parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, contained in General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], which entered into force in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 614]. In 1997, the Cook Islands, Switzerland and the United Arab Emirates became parties.

By a January note [CRC/SP/22], the Secretary-General stated that 16 States parties had notified him of acceptance of an amendment to the Convention that would expand the membership of the Committee on the Rights of the Child from 10 to 18. The amendment was approved by General Assembly resolution 50/155 [YUN 1995, p. 706] and required acceptance by a two-thirds majority of States parties to enter into force.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 10 July [A/52/348] and 30 November [E/CN.4/1998/99]. On 12 December, the General Assembly, by decision 52/421, took note of the first report.

Implementation

Monitoring body. In 1997, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) held its fourteenth (6-24 January) [CRC/C/62], fifteenth (20 May-6 June) [CRC/C/66] and sixteenth (22 September-10 October) [CRC/C/69] sessions, all in Geneva. Each session was preceded by a pre-sessional working group which facilitated the Committee's work by reviewing State party reports and identifying the main questions that would need to be discussed with the representatives of the reporting States. It also provided an opportunity to consider technical assistance and international cooperation.

Under article 44 of the Convention, CRC considered initial reports from 18 States parties: Algeria, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Bulgaria, Cuba, Czech Republic, Ethiopia, Ghana, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, New Zealand, Panama, Paraguay, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda.

On 6 October, the Committee devoted its day of general discussion to the rights of children with disabilities.

Annexed to the May/June report of the Committee was the report of the working group on children and the media (Paris, 14 April) [CRC/C/66], a topic that had been the subject of the general discussion in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 581].

Commission action. On 18 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/78)], the Commission on Human Rights urged States that had not done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority, and called on States parties to implement the Convention, withdraw reservations incompatible with its purpose and consider reviewing others, and accept the amendment that would increase the membership of CRC from 10 to 18. The Commission asked States parties, UN organs and bodies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, the media and the community at large to make the Convention widely known and to encourage training for those involved in activities concerning children. Regarding CRC, it asked the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of staff and facilities for its effective performance, a request that, on 22 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed by decision 1997/281.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (dec. 1997/117)], the Subcommission decided to transmit to CRC, through the Secretary-General, the summary records containing a recommendation that CRC prepare general comments on articles 2 (discrimination), 37 (torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; deprivation of liberty) and 40 (guarantees for a child having infringed the penal law) of the Convention. It expressed its readiness to provide assistance, particularly regarding article 2.

Children in armed conflict

Working group activities. At its third session (Geneva, 20-30 January and 13 March) [E/CN.4/1997/96], the working group on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflicts held a general discussion on the draft and considered proposals relating to the preamble and operative part. Annexed to the group's report was a draft text of the optional protocol.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working group's report to Governments, relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies, CRC, the prospective special representative on the impact of armed conflict on children, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and to invite their comments thereon in time for circulation prior to the working group's next session. The working group was asked to meet for a two-week period or less prior to the Commission's 1998 session, with a view to finalizing the draft optional protocol. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the holding of the meeting on 22 July by decision 1997/281. The Secretary-General was requested to consider ways to organize regional training programmes for members of the armed forces relating to the protection of children and women during armed conflict.

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Working group activities. At its third session (Geneva, 3-14 February and 2 April) [E/CN.4/1997/97], the working group for the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography held a general discussion pertaining to the content of the protocol. Annexed to the report were texts resulting from the group's discussions.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working group's report to Governments, relevant specialized agencies, CRC, the relevant Special Rapporteur, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, and to invite their comments in time for circulation prior to the working group's next session. The working group was requested to meet for a two-week period, or less if possible, prior to the Commission's 1998 session, with a view to finalizing the draft optional protocol. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/281 of 22 July, endorsed that request.

Convention on migrant workers

Status of Convention

As at 31 December 1997, the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594], had been signed and ratified by Morocco and the Philippines, acceded to by Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cape Verde, Colombia, Egypt, Seychelles, Sri Lanka and Uganda, and signed by Chile and Mexico.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of the Convention as at 31 August to the Assembly [A/52/359] and as at 1 December to the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/1998/75].

Commission action. On 3 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/14)], the Commission on Human Rights called on all Member States to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority. It asked the Secretary-General to provide all assistance necessary to promote the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign for Human Rights and the human rights programme of advisory services, and to report in 1998 on the status of the Convention and on the Secretariat's efforts to promote it and the protection of the rights of migrant workers.

(For further information on migrant workers, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/115 without vote [agenda item 112 (a)].

International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and norms set forth in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Bearing in mind the principles and norms established within the framework of the International Labour Organization and the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, despite the existence of an already established body of principles and norms, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and to guarantee respect for the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Aware of the situation of migrant workers and members of their families and the marked increase in migratory movements that has occurred, especially in certain parts of the world,

Considering that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, all States are urged to guarantee the protection of the human rights of all migrant workers and members of their families,

Underlining the importance of the creation and promotion of conditions to foster greater harmony and tolerance between migrant workers and the rest of the society of the State in which they reside, with the aim of eliminating the growing manifestations of racism and xenophobia perpetrated in segments of many societies by individuals or groups against migrant workers,

Recalling its resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Bearing in mind that, in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, States are invited to consider the possibility of signing and ratifying the Convention at the earliest possible time,

Recalling that, in its resolution 51/85 of 12 December 1996, it requested the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-second session a report on the status of the Convention,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the growing manifestations of racism, xenophobia and other forms of discrimination and inhuman or degrading treatment directed against migrant workers in different parts of the world;

2. Welcomes the signature or ratification of or accession to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families by some Member States;

3. Calls upon all Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority, and expresses the hope that it will enter into force at an early date;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the facilities and assistance necessary for the promotion of the Convention through the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

5. Invites the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to intensify their efforts with a view to disseminating information on and promoting understanding of the Convention;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to submit an updated report on the status of the Convention to the Assembly at its fifty-third session;

7. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General at its fifty-third session under the sub-item entitled "Implementation of human rights instruments".

Convention on genocide

As at 31 December 1997, 124 States were parties to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, contained in General Assembly resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. In 1997, Burundi and Kyrgyzstan acceded to the Convention.

Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1997, 101 States were parties to the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 3068 (XXVIII) [YUN 1973, p. 103], which entered into force in 1976 [YUN 1976, p. 575]. Kyrgyzstan acceded to the Convention in 1997.

The Commission on Human Rights had suspended both consideration of the item "Implementation of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid" in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 790] and meetings of the Group of Three [YUN 1995, p. 693], the monitoring body of the Convention.

Other activities

Follow-up to 1993 World Conference

Report of High Commissioner. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/98 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1], the High Commissioner stated that the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908] had provided a means to evaluate progress made and difficulties faced in implementing human rights by linking in 1998 the five-year review of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the Conference, with the fiftieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Review of the progress made in implementing the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action since its adoption should include an analysis of achievements and of the obstacles remaining to the full realization of the recommendations adopted. An open debate would be important for future efforts aimed at promoting and protecting human rights. It would be useful to identify in advance the role to be played by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in the review. Governments, UN agencies and programmes, international organizations and NGOs were encouraged to launch preparations for the presentation of their reports and views on progress made in implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action.

The High Commissioner recalled that the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1996/283 [YUN 1996, p. 583], had endorsed the Commission's recommendation that it devote the coordination segment of its session in 1998 to the follow-up to and implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action as part of the overall coordinated follow-up to major UN conferences. That would be an excellent occasion, he said, to analyse the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action throughout the UN system. The General Assembly might wish to carry out in 1998 an analysis of the progress achieved in implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action and to consider recommendations made by the Commission and the Council. Thus, the report of the Secretary-General to the Assembly on the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action would highlight the activities of all actors involved, including international and regional organizations that were not parts of the UN system and civil society.

Commission action. On 16 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/69)], the Commission on Human Rights asked the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the General Assembly and other UN organs and bodies related to human rights to take further action towards the full implementation of all recommendations of the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 908]. It asked the High Commissioner to coordinate human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the UN system, as set out in Assembly resolution 48/141 [YUN 1993, p. 906]. The Commission called on all States to contribute to the preparations for the 1998 five-year review called for in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 908], and welcomed the High Commissioner's coordination with all UN programmes and agencies whose activities dealt with human rights for the preparations for the review.

The Commission welcomed Economic and Social Council decision 1996/283 [YUN 1996, p. 583], which endorsed the Commission's recommendation that it consider devoting the coordination segment of its 1998 substantive session to the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action as part of the five-year review. The High Commissioner was requested to continue to report on measures taken and progress achieved in implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action.

Note by Secretary-General. In a 30 June note [E/1997/91], the Secretary-General recommended that the Council consider taking a decision that the theme of its 1998 coordination segment on the follow-up to conferences would be "Coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action", as part of the 1998 five-year review. The Council did so in decision 1997/319 of 18 December.

Note by High Commissioner. By a November note [E/CN.4/1998/45], the High Commissioner transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights the report of a meeting of special rapporteurs/representatives, experts and chairmen of working groups of the Commission's special procedures and of its advisory services programme (Geneva, 20-23 May), as called for in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. Participants discussed cooperation with the Commission and the High Commissioner; coordination between the special procedures system and treaty bodies; the integration of HIV/AIDS issues in their mandates; the administrative, financial and personnel resources of the Centre for Human Rights; cooperation with the Secretary-General; and a draft manual for special rapporteurs/representatives, experts and working groups of the Commission and the advisory services programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.4], adopted resolution 52/148 without vote [agenda item 112 (d)].

Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/121 of 20 December 1993, in which it endorsed the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, as well as its subsequent resolutions on this matter,

Considering that the promotion of universal respect for and observance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all is one of the basic purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and one of the main priorities of the Organization,

Convinced that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action has to be translated into effective action by States, the competent United Nations organs and organizations and other organizations concerned, including non-governmental organizations,

Recalling the request of the World Conference to the Secretary-General and the General Assembly to take immediate steps to increase substantially the resources for the human rights programme from within the existing and future regular budgets of the United Nations,

Recalling also that by its resolution 48/141 the General Assembly decided to create the post of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights as the United Nations official with principal responsibility for United Nations human rights activities, including coordination of the human rights promotion and protection activities throughout the United Nations system,

Recalling further paragraph 100 of part II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action concerning the five-year review of progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, to be carried out in 1998, in which the World Conference, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to invite, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, all States, organs and agencies of the United Nations system related to human rights to report to him on the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action,

Reaffirming that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recognizing that the interdependence of democracy, development and respect for human rights, as stated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, requires a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of human rights and that adequate inter-agency cooperation and coordination are essential in order to ensure such a fully integrated approach throughout the United Nations system,

Welcoming the fact that the call of the World Conference for a United Nations system-wide approach to human rights issues has been reflected in the recommendations of major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, and noting the ongoing efforts to ensure a coordinated follow-up to major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Recalling that each year the Economic and Social Council shall carry out, within the framework of its coordination segment, a review of cross-cutting themes common to major international conferences and/or contribute to an overall review of the implementation of the programme of action of a United Nations conference, in accordance with agreed conclusions 1995/1 of the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling also its resolution 51/118 of 12 December 1996 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/78 of 23 April 1996, as well as Economic and Social Council decision 1996/283 of 24 July 1996 concerning the recommendation to devote the coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1998, to the question of the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/69 of 16 April 1997,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General on possible common themes for the follow-up of major international conferences during the coordination segment of the substantive session of 1998 of the Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in particular chapter VII, entitled "1998—Human Rights Year",

1. Reaffirms the importance of the promotion of universal respect for and observance and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as expressed in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

2. Also reaffirms the views of the World Conference on Human Rights on the urgency of eliminating denials and violations of human rights;

3. Recognizes that the international community should devise ways and means to remove current obstacles and meet the challenges to the full realization of all human rights and to prevent the continuation of human rights violations resulting therefrom throughout the world;

4. Calls upon all States to take further action with a view to the full realization of all human rights for all in the light of the recommendations of the Conference;

5. Urges all States to continue to give widespread publicity to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, in particular in the context of the public information and human rights education activities for the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, including through training programmes, human rights education and public information, in order to promote increased awareness of all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system related to human rights to take further action with a view to the full implementation of all the recommendations of the World Conference;

7. Takes note of the oral report of the Chairman of the Working Group of the Third Committee mandated to consider aspects of the implementation of the recommendations of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, as set out in paragraphs 17 and 18 of part II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, and underlines the need for its full implementation;

8. Emphasizes the important role of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the system of the United Nations human rights organs, as defined in its resolution 48/141, including her role in the process of analysis of the functioning of the United Nations human rights machinery and its adaptation to current and future needs;

9. Invites the Administrative Committee on Coordination to continue to discuss the implications of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action for the United Nations system, with the participation of the High Commissioner, in particular in the context of the preparations for the 1998 five-year review;

10. Welcomes the fact that, in accordance with paragraph 100 of part II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the High Commissioner has invited Governments and United Nations agencies and programmes related to human rights to provide reports on the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the World Conference and has invited regional and, as appropriate, national human rights institutions, as well as non-governmental organizations, to present their views in this regard;

11. Calls upon all States to contribute actively to the 1998 five-year review;

12. Welcomes the inter-agency consultations of the High Commissioner with all United Nations programmes and agencies whose activities deal with human rights for the preparations of the 1998 five-year review, and calls upon them to contribute actively to this process;

13. Encourages regional and national human rights institutions as well as non-governmental organizations to present, on this occasion, their views on the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

14. Welcomes and supports once again Economic and Social Council decision 1996/283, in which the Council endorsed the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights to consider devoting the coordination segment of its substantive session of 1998 to the question of the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action as part of the 1998 five-year review foreseen in paragraph 100 of part II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

15. Requests the High Commissioner to present an interim report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session and a final report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, as foreseen in paragraph 100 of part II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, taking into account reports provided by States and by United Nations organs and agencies related to human rights and views presented by regional and, as appropriate, national human rights institutions, as well as by non-governmental organizations;

16. Decides to review at its fifty-third session, as foreseen in paragraph 100 of part II of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the progress made in the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, under the sub-item entitled "Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action".

Also on 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/426, decided that the item "Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action" would remain on the agenda of its fifty-second session to allow the Working Group of the Third Committee to continue its work.

On the same date, by decision 52/422, the Assembly took note of part one of the report of the Third Committee on human rights questions [A/52/644].

Technical cooperation programme

In 1997 [E/CN.4/1998/92], the UN technical cooperation programme in the field of human rights continued to assist Governments, at their request, in promoting and protecting human rights. Forms of assistance included expertise, advisory services, training courses, workshops and seminars, fellowships, grants and the provision of information and documentation. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights had established that the programme should focus on countries or regions in transition to democracy; priority was also given to technical cooperation projects in response to the needs of less developed countries. Activities were funded by the UN regular budget and by the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, established in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 790]. Specific projects were sometimes funded or co-funded by other UN agencies and programmes.

As at 31 December 1997, 53 projects were either being implemented or had been approved and were scheduled to begin in 1998 in: Africa, 11 projects valued at $6.75 million; Latin America and the Caribbean, 11 projects for $4.41 million; Asia and the Pacific, 8 projects worth $3.86 million; Central and Eastern Europe, 6 projects for $1.97 million; 2 interregional projects worth $512,352; and 15 global projects valued at $4.42 million. The development of democratic changes and processes and the growing awareness among Member States of the need for human rights technical cooperation assistance contributed to a dramatic rise in the number of requests from Governments.

Three multi-year projects were completed in Burundi, Mongolia and Rwanda. Implementation of major technical cooperation projects began during 1997 in Ecuador, Guatemala, Morocco, Namibia, Panama and South Africa, as well as four follow-up projects in Burundi, El Salvador, Papua New Guinea and Rwanda. By year's end, there were technical cooperation field offices to facilitate project implementation in El Salvador, Guatemala, Malawi, Mongolia, South Africa and Togo. Global activities covered a wide range of issues, including women's rights, training for peacekeepers and human rights monitors, training for the military, strengthening national human rights institutions and human rights education. Regional activities took place in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Eastern Europe and Latin America. A significant number of technical cooperation activities were also being carried out within the framework of field presences of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cambodia and Rwanda. Twenty-one new projects were approved in 1997, most to provide assistance to national counterparts aimed at strengthening national capacity.

(See also PART TWO, Chapter II, under "Strengthening the rule of law".)

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/46)], the Commission on Human Rights noted with concern that in the current biennium resources for human rights technical cooperation had decreased by half as compared to the previous biennium and asked the Secretary-General to allocate for 1998-1999 more resources to enlarge the programme of technical cooperation and advisory services to meet the increased demand. Regarding the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights, it asked him to ensure its more efficient management, strict and transparent project management rules, periodic evaluations of its programme and projects, and dissemination of evaluation results, including programme implementation and financial accounting reports, as well as to arrange for information meetings open to all Member States and organizations directly involved. It further requested that administrative assistance be provided for the Fund's Board of Trustees and that the Board's conclusions be reflected in the annual report to the Commission on technical cooperation. The Board was asked to exercise its full mandate as advisory body to promote and solicit contributions to the Fund and to continue to assist the High Commissioner in monitoring, reviewing and improving the implementation of technical cooperation projects; the Chairman of the Board was invited to address the Commission. The Commission's requests to the Secretary-General and to the Board of Trustees were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/257 of 22 July.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1998 an analysis of the progress made and obstacles encountered in implementing the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation in the field of human rights and on the operation and administration of the Voluntary Fund.

Voluntary Fund Board

In 1997, the Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation in the Field of Human Rights held its seventh and eighth sessions (Geneva, 23-25 July, 1-3 December) [E/CN.4/1998/92].

The Board considered 16 new project proposals; reviewed 9 recently completed and current projects and activities; discussed project priorities, formats and procedures, and criteria for project identification, formulation and evaluation; and examined financial and administrative matters. In 1997, the High Commissioner approved 21 projects endorsed by the Board, 12 of which were national projects for implementation in Burundi, Ecuador, Georgia, Guinea, Honduras, Namibia, Moldova, Morocco, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay and South Africa.

Three regional projects were approved, one for the Asia and Pacific region and two for Africa. Six global projects were also approved.

Contributions received by the Fund in 1997 totalled $3,316,708.

Cambodia

Reports of Secretary-General. In an October report [A/52/489], the Secretary-General described the third (5-18 March), fourth (6-17 June) and fifth (31 August-4 September) missions of his Special Representative for human rights in Cambodia, Thomas Hammarberg (Sweden). His first and second missions took place in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 587].

The third mission focused on the situation of formal education and offences committed by the military and the police. The Special Representative also continued to examine the administration of justice and the preparation of elections. He was informed of the problems in the area of education, which operated on financial allocations representing 8 per cent of the national budget. Physical conditions of schools were often deplorable, schoolteachers received very low wages and school attendance was low, with a high drop-out rate for girls. Corruption was widespread and acknowledged by the public in the conduct of examinations and the issuance of diplomas. As for the military, in the province of Battambang, it was reported that over 60 per cent of the crimes committed against individuals were carried out by military personnel. The Special Representative stressed the seriousness of the problem of impunity. Torture was widely practised by the police in several provinces, and the independence of the judiciary had been seriously undermined by military intimidation, political pressure, very low salaries and limited training for judges and prosecutors, publicly recognized corruption of the judicial personnel and an article of the 1994 Law on Civil Servants stating that, except in cases of flagrante delicto, no civil servant could be arrested or prosecuted for any crime unless the Government or concerned Minister consented in advance. The Special Representative visited prisons where he observed malnutrition and disease. He expressed concern that a legal framework for the elections, including a commune election law, a national election law and a political parties law, had still not been adopted.

In June, the Special Representative examined the handling of past grave human rights violations, the administration of justice, the rights of the child, labour rights and the holding of elections. On the issue of past grave violations, the Special Representative met with high-level officials, who on 21 June requested international assistance. Once again, the Special Representative expressed concern about the lack of progress in preparing for the elections; commune elections were scheduled for 1997 and national elections for 1998. High-level officials gave the Special Representative their commitment to ensure educational access for all children and to fight widespread child prostitution and trafficking in children. As to the administration of justice, he was disappointed that no political murder cases had been brought before the court. Following a visit to a prison in Phnom Penh, the Special Representative raised concerns about the prison situation. He was shocked to learn of a 30 March grenade attack on a peaceful and authorized demonstration and called for a thorough investigation.

Prior to the Special Rapporteur's fifth mission, the OHCHR Cambodian Office gathered information on summary executions, disappearances, torture and detentions as from 2 July, the date of onset of human rights violations that occurred during armed violence that lasted until 7 July. He proposed an independent inquiry into the situation. On 22 August, he requested a criminal investigation into at least 41 cases of extrajudicial executions of persons held in custody by military troops and asked that those responsible be brought to justice.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/95], the Secretary-General presented details of the Special Representative's sixth mission (30 November-6 December), which focused on the 30 March grenade attack against a peaceful demonstration in Phnom Penh and the extrajudicial executions that occurred during and after the violent events in July. Eight months after the March attack, little progress had been made in the investigation. The Special Representative regretted that the investigation into the 41 cases of extrajudicial killings had not started. He asked the Government to provide a progress report by year's end on the investigations into the March attack and the extrajudicial killings.

Positive developments were reflected in the submission of reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Human Rights Committee, the convening of the first meeting of the Supreme Council of Magistracy in December, and progress in the electoral process.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/49], the Commission condemned the violence in Phnom Penh on 30 March and called on the Government of Cambodia to uphold the rule of law and bring the perpetrators to justice. It expressed grave concern about the human rights violations described by the Special Representative, and called on the Government to investigate cases of violence and intimidation directed at political parties and their supporters, as well as against media personnel and offices, and to bring to justice those responsible. The Commission welcomed the Government's efforts to promote peace and commended it for its constructive approach to the inclusion of Cambodian human rights NGOs in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country.

The Commission asked the Centre for Human Rights to develop and implement programmes, with the consent and cooperation of the Government, in the priority areas identified by the Special Representative, paying particular attention to women, children, disabled persons and minorities. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Government in ensuring protection of the human rights of all people in Cambodia and to ensure adequate resources for the presence in Cambodia of the Centre for Human Rights; to provide resources to enable the Special Representative to carry out his work; to examine any request by Cambodia for assistance in responding to past serious violations of Cambodian and international law as a means of bringing about national reconciliation, strengthening democracy and addressing the issue of individual accountability; and to consider favourably, within existing UN resources, any request from the Government for assistance in holding elections. Those requests to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/259 of 22 July. The Secretary-General was also asked to report in 1998 on the role of the Centre for Human Rights in assisting the Government and people of Cambodia with regard to the Special Representative's recommendations.

Role of OHCHR

In a report [E/CN.4/1998/94] on the 1997 activities and programmes of the Cambodia office of OHCHR, the Secretary-General said that assistance was being provided for legislative reform, the administration of justice, national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, treaty reporting and international obligations, human rights NGOs, education and training programmes, the production and dissemination of human rights information and the activities of three new provincial offices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/135 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Situation of human rights in Cambodia

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling the Agreement on a Comprehensive Political Settlement of the Cambodia Conflict, signed in Paris on 23 October 1991, including part III thereof, relating to human rights,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/49 of 11 April 1997, and recalling General Assembly resolution 51/98 of 12 December 1996 and previous relevant resolutions, including Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/6 of 19 February 1993, in which the Commission recommended the appointment of a special representative for human rights in Cambodia, and the subsequent appointment by the Secretary-General of a special representative,

Recognizing that the tragic history of Cambodia requires special measures to assure the promotion and protection of the human rights of all people in Cambodia and the non-return to the policies and practices of the past, as stipulated in the Agreement signed in Paris on 23 October 1991,

Desiring that the United Nations respond positively to assist efforts to investigate Cambodia's tragic history, including responsibility for past international crimes, such as acts of genocide and crimes against humanity,

Welcoming the continuing role of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights in Cambodia,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, through his Special Representative for human rights in Cambodia, in collaboration with the office in Cambodia of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to assist the Government of Cambodia in ensuring the protection of the human rights of all people in Cambodia, to ensure adequate resources for the enhanced functioning of the operational presence in Cambodia of the Office of the High Commissioner and to enable the Special Representative to continue to fulfil his tasks expeditiously;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Cambodia, in particular the section concerning the role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in assisting the Government and the people of Cambodia in the promotion and protection of human rights, and encourages the Government of Cambodia to continue to cooperate with the Office;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in Cambodia, in particular his concerns for a legislative framework for the forthcoming national elections and his concerns about the problem of impunity, the independence of the judiciary and the establishment of the rule of law, the use of torture, the administration of prisons and the ill-treatment of prisoners and child prostitution and trafficking;

4. Notes with concern the lack of response by the Government of Cambodia to several of the recommendations contained in the previous reports of the Special Representative, and urges that it respond as soon as possible;

5. Expresses grave concern about numerous instances of violations of human rights, including extrajudicial executions, torture, including rape, illegal arrest and detention, as detailed in the reports of the Special Representative and his predecessor, and calls upon the Government of Cambodia to prosecute, in accordance with due process of the law and international standards relating to human rights, all those who have perpetrated human rights violations;

6. Also expresses grave concern about the serious violations of human rights committed during the armed violence of early July 1997 and in its aftermath, as reported by the Special Representative and by the office in Cambodia of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in its memorandum on summary executions, torture and missing persons, and urges the Government of Cambodia as a high priority to investigate thoroughly and impartially and to bring to justice those responsible for such serious crimes;

7. Notes that the perpetrators of the violence in Phnom Penh, on 30 March 1997, against a peaceful and lawful opposition rally exercising its democratic rights which resulted in numerous deaths and injuries have not been identified and brought to justice, and urges the Government of Cambodia to take action;

8. Notes with serious concern the comments of the Special Representative concerning corrupt practices within the judicial system and in the prison administration, and strongly urges the Government of Cambodia to address the problem of corrupt practices and to increase its efforts to create a functioning and impartial system of justice, including convening the Supreme Council of Magistracy, to institute a system to guarantee the essential sustenance of prisoners and to continue its efforts to improve the physical environment of prisons;

9. Stresses that addressing the continuing problem of impunity, as detailed by the Special Representative, including the repeal of article 51 of the law on civil servants of 1994 and bringing to justice those responsible for human rights violations, together with ensuring security of persons and rights of association, assembly and expression, is a matter of critical and urgent priority and essential to the creation of an atmosphere conducive to the holding of free, fair and credible elections;

10. Notes that national elections are scheduled to be held in May 1998, and strongly urges the Government of Cambodia to promote and uphold the effective functioning of multi-party democracy, including the right to form political parties, to stand for election, to take part freely in a representative Government, as well as the right to freedom of expression and the right to information, in accordance with the principles set out in paragraphs 2 and 4 of annex 5 to the Agreement signed in Paris on 23 October 1991;

11. Expresses support for the Secretary-General's efforts in Cambodia, including the role of United Nations offices in monitoring the return of political leaders currently outside the country and their unfettered resumption of political activity, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to consider any request from the Government of Cambodia for assistance with the holding of the elections, including coordination and monitoring;

12. Welcomes the proposed measures outlined by the Government of Cambodia in its comments on the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session to ensure that the forthcoming national elections are free and fair and the assurances given by the Cambodian leaders to the Secretary-General stating their commitment to holding elections and to guaranteeing the security and safety of all returning political leaders, as well as their full resumption of political activities, and expresses the hope that this will facilitate the return of political leaders from abroad;

13. Emphasizes the need for the legislative framework for the elections, in accordance with established international standards, to be agreed upon and adopted by the National Assembly, for the security forces to remain neutral during the election campaign, for free and equal access to the electronic and print media, for the individual vote to be confidential, for full cooperation to be given to local and international observers and for all parties to act in a constructive manner and to accept the outcome of the elections;

14. Strongly encourages the Government of Cambodia to establish an independent body to supervise the holding of the elections, to ensure that the elections are free, fair and credible and to ensure that the Constitutional Council will be convened in order to resolve election disputes;

15. Endorses the comments of the Special Representative that the most serious human rights violations in Cambodia in recent history have been committed by the Khmer Rouge and that their crimes, including the taking and killing of hostages, have continued to the present, and notes with concern that no Khmer Rouge leader has been brought to account for his crimes;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to examine the request by the Cambodian authorities for assistance in responding to past serious violations of Cambodian and international law, including the possibility of the appointment, by the Secretary-General, of a group of experts to evaluate the existing evidence and propose further measures, as a means of bringing about national reconciliation, strengthening democracy and addressing the issue of individual accountability;

17. Urges the Government of Cambodia to take concrete action to combat child prostitution and trafficking and, in this connection, to work with the office in Cambodia of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund and non-governmental organizations to develop an action plan;

18. Welcomes the signature in May 1997 of a memorandum of understanding between the International Labour Organization and the Government of Cambodia to formalize areas of cooperation in the field of child labour;

19. Encourages the Government of Cambodia to include Cambodian non-governmental organizations active in the field of human rights in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Cambodia, and recommends that their skills be drawn upon to assist in ensuring that forthcoming elections are free, fair and credible;

20. Also encourages the Government of Cambodia to request the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide advice and technical assistance with respect to the creation of an independent national institution for the promotion and protection of human rights, and looks forward to the establishment of such an institution;

21. Notes with appreciation the use by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for a Human Rights Education Programme in Cambodia to finance the programme of activities of the office in Cambodia of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as defined in resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights, and invites Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, foundations and individuals to consider contributing funds to the Trust Fund;

22. Expresses grave concern about the devastating consequences and destabilizing effects of the use of anti-personnel landmines on Cambodian society, encourages the Government of Cambodia to continue its support and efforts for the removal of these mines, and urges the Government of Cambodia to give priority to banning all anti-personnel landmines;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in assisting the Government and the people of Cambodia in the promotion and protection of human rights and on the recommendations made by the Special Representative on matters within his mandate;

24. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Cambodia at its fifty-third session.

Guatemala

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 1997/51], the Commission expressed appreciation to the Government of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca (URNG) for concluding the 1996 peace negotiations [YUN 1996, p. 168] and asked them to familiarize the Guatemalan people with the agreements as quickly as possible to ensure their full participation in establishing a democratic society with social justice, initiating a period of sustained and sustainable economic and social development and ensuring civilian authority in decision-making (see PART ONE, Chapter III). The Government was asked to continue to develop concrete measures against extreme poverty and judicial authorities were asked to expedite the restructuring and consolidation of the judicial system.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to send a mission to Guatemala at the end of the year and to submit a report on the evolution of the situation of human rights there. That request was approved on 22 July by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/261.

Subcommission action. On 20 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (dec. 1997/105)], the Subcommission authorized its Chairman to issue a statement on the respect for human rights and the conclusion of the peace process in Guatemala and to allow the observer for the Government and a representative of URNG to address the Subcommittee in that regard. The Chairman's statement was issued on the same day.

Report of mission. In accordance with the Commission's request, a mission visited Guatemala from 8 to 19 December [E/CN.4/1998/93] to report on the evolution of the human rights situation.

The three-member mission, accompanied by an official of OHCHR, concluded that the trend towards a gradual improvement in respect for human rights in Guatemala had continued through 1997. Human rights violations were no longer part of State policy, and the inter-agency coordination developed during the year between the Supreme Court of Justice, the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Ministry of the Interior was a step forward that should achieve results in preventing and punishing crime, particularly organized crime. Serious deficiencies in the administration of justice continued, however, and the judicial reform referred to in the 1996 Agreement on the Strengthening of Civilian Power and on the Role of the Armed Forces in a Democratic Society [YUN 1996, p. 167] remained a priority; it was essential for judicial and administrative functions to be separated. The mission recommended continued strengthening of the Judicial Training School and the training unit of the Public Prosecutor's Office. It proposed increasing budgetary resources to strengthen the investigatory capacity of the Office of the Human Rights Procurator.

The mission believed that citizen insecurity was one of the greatest threats to the peace process and recommended strengthening the National Civil Police and the Police Academy through expansion of in-service training programmes. It called on the international community to support the establishment of specialized police bodies to combat extortion and abduction. Programmes to reintegrate former army members as productive members of society should be expanded.

As to social and economic matters, the Government had made social spending a priority in areas such as health, education, housing, employment and improving the infrastructure. Nevertheless, some delays and the slow rate at which certain planned investments were being made had had an adverse effect. The mission called for accelerating constitutional and legal reforms regarding the rights of indigenous peoples.

The mission recommended that OHCHR continue to give advisory assistance and training.

Haiti

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 1997/52], the Commission asked the Government of Haiti to adopt a civics education programme to promote confidence between the population and the National Police, and to adopt urgent measures to ensure respect for judicial guarantees in order to end illegal and arbitrary detention. The General Assembly was requested to study the possibility of extending the mandate of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti (MICIVIH), which was to expire in July (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

Welcoming the establishment of the programme of technical cooperation by the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the programme in 1998. The independent expert was asked to report to the Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998. The Special Rapporteur on violence against women was invited to consider the invitation by Haiti to visit the country. The requests to the Assembly and to the independent expert were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/262 of 22 July.

Report of independent expert. On 17 October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the independent expert, Adama Dieng (Senegal) [A/52/499]. He had visited the country (28 August-5 September) where he met with high-level government officials, including the President.

Based on indicators of civil and political rights, the human rights situation had improved considerably, the expert observed. Although there were still some instances of political violence and violations, they were no longer massive. Efforts had been made to improve the police force and prison conditions but much remained to be done and progress could be obliterated unless there was reform of the judicial system. The independent expert considered a competent and effective judicial system to be the top priority in Haiti.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General, on 22 October, reported to the General Assembly on the implementation of the human rights technical cooperation programme in Haiti [A/52/515]. He stated that a number of UN bodies were involved in projects for the promotion of human rights in Haiti, including MICIVIH, whose activities included training in, and monitoring observance of, human rights, and the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, which was responsible for training the Haitian National Police. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) was concerned with strengthening national capacities, particularly in the prison and judicial systems, and was promoting coordinated efforts on the part of the UN system as a whole. The High Commissioner was providing human rights training at the grass-roots level and assistance with the revision of criminal legislation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/6447Add.3], adopted resolution 52/138 without vote [agenda item 112 (c)].

Human rights in Haiti

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its resolution 51/110 of 12 December 1996, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/52 of 15 April 1997,

Recognizing the interdependence and the mutual reinforcement between democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the commitment of the international community to supporting, strengthening and promoting this principle,

Taking note of the reports of the independent expert of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Haiti, Mr. Adama Dieng, who was appointed to assist the Government of Haiti to consider the development of the human rights situation in Haiti and to verify its compliance with its obligations in that field, and the recommendations contained therein,

Welcoming and bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the programme of technical cooperation aimed at strengthening the institutional capacity of Haiti in the field of human rights,

Recognizing the important contributions of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti, the United Nations Support Mission in Haiti, the United Nations Transition Mission in Haiti and the National Commission for Truth and Justice to the establishment of a climate of freedom and tolerance propitious to the respect for human rights and the restoration and spread of democracy in Haiti,

Welcoming the renewal by the General Assembly, in its resolution 51/196 B of 31 July 1997, of the mandate of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti,

Welcoming also the efforts of the Government to improve the situation of human rights in Haiti, and noting the policy statements by Haitian authorities that the Government of Haiti remains committed to upholding human rights and improving accountability,

Expressing the hope that the Haitian people will shortly be able to express themselves once again through free, honest and transparent elections,

Expressing concern at the continuing problem of common crime, and noting the ongoing need for technical training of the Haitian National Police and for the strengthening of the judicial system,

1. Expresses its thanks to the Secretary-General, to his Special Representative for Haiti and to the independent expert of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Haiti for their continuing efforts in favour of the consolidation of democratic institutions in Haiti and the respect for human rights in that country;

2. Welcomes the report of the National Commission for Truth and Justice, as well as the reports of the International Civilian Mission to Haiti on Haitian justice and on respect for human rights by the Haitian National Police, and urges the Government of Haiti, with the support of the international community, to take appropriate follow-up action on the recommendations contained in those reports;

3. Requests the Government of Haiti to publish the complete report of the National Commission for Truth and Justice and to make it widely available throughout the country, as well as to initiate legal action in serious cases;

4. Expresses concern at the security problems faced by Haitian society, which contribute to the shortcomings of the judicial system and the police apparatus, as noted in the reports of the independent expert;

5. Supports the reform of the judicial system currently being carried out by the Government of Haiti, which includes training in international humanitarian law and human rights, and emphasizes the priority of that reform in the framework of the bilateral and multilateral assistance provided by the international community, including that of the United Nations Development Programme;

6. Welcomes the establishment of the programme of technical cooperation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, aimed at strengthening institutional capacity in the field of human rights, in particular in the areas of legislative reform, training of justice administration personnel and human rights education, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the programme to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

7. Invites the international community, including the Bretton Woods institutions, to continue their involvement in the reconstruction and development of Haiti, having regard for the fragility of the political, social and economic situation of the country;

8. Encourages the Government of Haiti to ratify the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

9. Once again invites the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences to consider favourably the invitation to visit the country extended to her by the Government of Haiti;

10. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Haiti at its fifty-third session.

Liberia

On 16 April [E/1997/23], the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights urged the Centre for Human Rights to provide, at the end of general elections scheduled for May and at the request of the Government of Liberia, advisory services and technical cooperation to enable the Government to revive its human rights structures and mechanisms.

(For details of the political situation in Liberia, see PART ONE, Chapter II)

Somalia

Report of independent expert. In a March report [E/CN.4/1997/88 & Corr.1], independent expert Mona Rishmawi (Jordan) assessed the situation of human rights in Somalia following her visit to the country (10-13 February). She stated that the human rights dimension of the internal armed conflict was ignored and sometimes undermined. There were several opportunities to render useful human rights technical assistance to Somalia, particularly in the administration of justice. The independent expert recommended that the Commission on Human Rights strengthen the examination of the human rights situation in Somalia and renew its request to her to assess ways of how best to implement a programme of advisory services and technical assistance, including the administration of justice.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/47], the Commission strongly urged all parties in Somalia to respect human rights and humanitarian law, to apply criminal justice standards and to protect UN personnel, humanitarian relief workers and NGO and international media representatives. It asked the independent expert to report in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to provide adequate resources to fund the activities of the independent expert and the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, and Governments and organizations in a position to do so were asked to respond positively to requests for assistance in implementing the Commission's resolution.

On 22 July, by decision 1997/258, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests to the expert and to the Secretary-General.

Further report of independent expert. The independent expert visited Nairobi, Kenya, as well as Hargeisa in north-west Somalia, also known as "Somaliland", and Bosaso in north-east Somalia (1-13 November) [E/CN.4/1998/96]. She had also planned to go to Mogadishu but the visit was cancelled because of fighting there. The expert met with UN agencies, the Secretary-General's Special Representative, the UN Humanitarian Relief Coordinator and various foreign government representatives, international and Somali NGOs and experts.

During the course of the year, two matters required action by the expert. The first concerned media reports of alleged violations of human rights and humanitarian law by international forces present in Somalia from 1992. In addition to reports of violations by Canadian soldiers that led to the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces in Somalia, allegations against Belgian and Italian soldiers also surfaced. In October, the expert wrote to the Governments concerned requesting information on the allegations. An acknowledgment was received from Belgium and replies from Canada and Italy. However, the expert called for a full investigation of the alleged abuses.

The second matter related to the discovery in Hargeisa of mass graves containing the bodies of at least 250 individuals. Two international forensic experts visited the area at year's end to determine the nature of the graves, assess the condition of the remains and the types of injury to the bodies, conduct a one-day workshop for local authorities and report to the expert on their findings upon completion of the project.

The expert recommended a programme of technical cooperation for Somalia, which would: support human rights advocates groups; provide OHCHR assistance to the UNDP office in Somalia for its project on legal awareness and the judiciary; assist UN agencies in integrating human rights in their work; and support efforts to rehabilitate the militias and create law and order. In order to achieve those goals, she recommended strengthening UN system-wide coordination; placing a permanent human rights officer in Somalia; and continued consideration by the Commission of the human rights situation in the country.

Public information

In a January report [E/CN.4/1997/36], the Secretary-General described public information activities in the area of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, launched by General Assembly resolution 43/128 [YUN 1988, p. 539] and carried out by the High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights (HCHR/CHR) and the UN Department of Public Information (DPI). He provided details of the HCHR/CHR publications programme; the use of electronic means to maximize the impact of information; external relations, including briefings, exhibitions and human rights observances, fellowships, internships and training courses; and coordination and cooperation with other UN bodies, NGOs and academic and research institutions. DPI's human rights activities from January 1995 to December 1996 included production and distribution of brochures, pamphlets, backgrounders, booklets, fact sheets, feature articles, posters and information kits. Press conferences were organized for the High Commissioner and press releases were issued. Films and radio and television programmes were produced and disseminated, and training programmes for journalists and broadcasters were held.

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/41)], the Commission on Human Rights called on the High Commissioner to coordinate and harmonize human rights information strategies within the UN system. It asked the Secretary-General to make available adequate resources from the UN regular budget to allow HCHR/CHR and DPI to implement fully their publications programme. The Economic and Social Council approved that request on 22 July in decision 1997/254. The Secretary-General was also asked to report to the Commission in 1999 on activities relating to the World Public Information Campaign and on those for the fiftieth anniversary in 1998 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see above).

Human rights education

Report of High Commissioner. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/46], the High Commissioner updated information submitted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 594] on the implementation of the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039].

HCHR/CHR continued to disseminate information on the Decade by answering inquiries from government representatives, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, academics, students and others. It solicited the views of Governments on ways to increase support to the Decade, which included the possible establishment of a voluntary fund for human rights education activities. An expert meeting organized by the High Commissioner in January revised draft guidelines to assist Governments in developing national plans of action for human rights education. In addition, HCHR/CHR enhanced the production of human rights publications and materials and their dissemination among governmental organizations and NGOs. Work continued on six packages to support training activities for professional and other target groups, including prison officers, primary and secondary schoolteachers, judges and lawyers, NGOs, journalists and human rights monitors. HCHR/CHR also continued to collect materials for human rights education and access to the collection was made available to human rights educators.

The High Commissioner described action taken by seven Member States to promote human rights education.

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (dec. 1997/111)], the Commission on Human Rights deferred consideration of the Decade to allow time for the implementation of its 1996 resolution on the subject [YUN 1996, p. 594].

Subcommission action. On 22 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (res. 1997/7)], the Subcommission decided to place the right to education, particularly human rights education, on its agenda for the duration of the Decade. It asked Mustapha Mehedi (Algeria) to prepare a working paper on the subject for consideration in 1998.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/52/469], the Secretary-General summarized activities to implement the Plan of Action for the Decade carried out between January and August 1997.

OHCHR was planning a survey on existing programmes, materials and organizations for human rights education. Targeted questionnaires for Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs had been finalized, and materials produced for human rights education were collected. The Office continued to disseminate information on the Decade and on human rights education. Within the UN system, action to promote human rights education was being taken by the specialized agencies and human rights treaty bodies. Collaboration was ongoing with human rights institutes and NGOs. Work continued on the six packages to support training activities addressed to professional and other target groups. In addition, the Office was working on a training package for journalists to increase the incorporation by the media of human rights information and public education into their work. An expert meeting (Geneva, 11-12 March) to revise the first draft version of the training manual on human rights monitoring for UN field operations was held, as was a second expert meeting to review the draft human rights manual for judges and lawyers (Geneva, 5-8 May). The Secretary-General also summarized action taken by nine Member States.

An addendum [A/52/469/Add.1 & Corr.1] to the Secretary-General's report contained the guidelines for national plans of action for human rights education.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/127 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Guided by the fundamental and universal principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 26 of which states that "education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms", and the provisions of other international human rights instruments, such as those of article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, article 10 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, article 7 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, article 29 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, article 10 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and paragraphs 78 to 82 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reflect the aims of the aforementioned article,

Recalling the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights concerning the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, public information activities in the field of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, the project of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "Towards a culture of peace", the implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Believing that the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights is a valuable complement to the activities of the United Nations aimed at the further promotion and protection of human rights, and recalling the importance attached by the World Conference on Human Rights to human rights education and information,

Convinced that each woman, man and child, in order to realize their full human potential, must be made aware of all their human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Convinced also that human rights education should involve more than the provision of information and should constitute a comprehensive lifelong process by which people at all levels of development and in all societies learn respect for the dignity of others and the means and methods of ensuring that respect,

Recognizing that human rights education and information are essential to the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms and that carefully designed programmes of training, dissemination and information can have a catalytic effect on national, regional and international initiatives to promote and protect human rights and prevent human rights violations,

Convinced that human rights education and information contribute to a concept of development consistent with the dignity of women and men of all ages that takes into account particularly vulnerable segments of society such as children, youth, older persons, indigenous people, minorities, rural and urban poor, migrant workers, refugees, persons with the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome infection and disabled persons,

Taking into account the efforts to promote human rights education made by educators and non-governmental organizations in all parts of the world, as well as by intergovernmental organizations, including the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Children's Fund,

Recognizing the invaluable and creative role that non-governmental and community-based organizations can play in disseminating public information and engaging in human rights education, especially at the grass-roots level and in remote and rural communities,

Aware of the potential supportive role of the private sector in implementing at all levels of society the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights, through creative initiatives and financial support for governmental and non-governmental activities,

Convinced that the effectiveness of existing human rights education and public information activities would be enhanced by better coordination and co-operation at the national, regional and international levels,

Recalling that it is within the responsibility of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to coordinate relevant United Nations education and public information programmes in the field of human rights,

Considering that the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1998 constitutes an invaluable opportunity for all members of the international community to enhance human rights education and information activities throughout the world,

Welcoming the decision of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to place the question of the right to education, and in particular human rights education, on its agenda for the duration of the Decade,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and public information activities in the field of human rights;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education and to develop public information activities in the field of human rights, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Urges all Governments to contribute further to the implementation of the Plan of Action, in particular by establishing, in accordance with national conditions, broadly representative national committees for human rights education responsible for the development of comprehensive, effective and sustainable national plans of action for human rights education and information, taking into consideration the guidelines for national plans of action for human rights education contained in the addendum to the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Urges Governments to encourage, support and involve national and local non-governmental and community-based organizations in the implementation of their national plans of action;

5. Calls upon Governments, in accordance with their national conditions, to accord priority to the dissemination in their relevant national and local languages of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments, human rights materials and training manuals, as well as reports of States parties under the human rights treaties, and to provide information and education in those languages on the practical ways in which national and international institutions and procedures may be utilized to ensure the effective implementation of those instruments;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to coordinate and harmonize human rights education and information strategies within the United Nations system, including the implementation of the Plan of Action, and to ensure maximum effectiveness and efficiency in the use, processing, management and distribution of human rights information and educational materials, including through electronic means;

7. Encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to support national capacities for human rights education and information through its technical cooperation programme in the field of human rights, including the organization of training courses and the development of targeted training materials for professional audiences, as well as the dissemination of human rights information materials as a component of technical cooperation projects;

8. Urges the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat to continue to utilize United Nations information centres for the timely dissemination, within their designated areas of activity, of basic information, reference and audio-visual materials on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the reports of States parties under human rights instruments, and, to this end, to ensure that the information centres are supplied with adequate quantities of those materials;

9. Stresses the need for close collaboration between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Office of Communications and Public Information in the implementation of the Plan of Action and the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and the need to harmonize their activities with those of other international organizations such as the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization with regard to its project entitled "Towards a culture of peace" and the International Committee of the Red Cross and relevant non-governmental organizations with regard to the dissemination of information on international humanitarian law;

10. Invites the specialized agencies and relevant United Nations programmes and funds to contribute, within their respective spheres of competence, to the implementation of the Plan of Action and the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights and to cooperate closely with the Office of the High Commissioner in that regard;

11. Encourages the human rights treaty bodies, when examining reports of States parties, to place emphasis on obligations of States parties in the area of human rights education and information and to reflect this emphasis in their concluding observations;

12. Calls upon international, regional and national non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental organizations, in particular those concerned with women, labour, development, food, housing, education, health care and the environment, as well as all other social justice groups, human rights advocates, educators, religious organizations and the media, to undertake specific activities of formal, non-formal and informal education, including cultural events, alone and in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, in implementing the Plan of Action;

13. Encourages Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to undertake human rights education and information initiatives in accordance with the Plan of Action and the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights as a contribution to the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

14. Encourages the Commission on Human Rights to consider jointly, for the duration of the Decade, the question of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and public information activities in the field of human rights, including the World Public Information Campaign on Human Rights;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, to consider appropriate ways and means, including the possibility of establishing a voluntary fund, to support human rights education activities, including those undertaken by non-governmental organizations;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General, through the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community and of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights education and public information and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Culture of peace

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/101 [YUN 1996, p. 596], the Secretary-General in September [A/52/292] transmitted a report of the Director-General of UNESCO on educational activities under the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace".

The project comprised four units: education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance; promotion of human rights and democracy—struggle against discrimination; cultural pluralism and intercultural dialogue; and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace-building.

The Director-General's report presented elements for a draft provisional declaration and programme of action, indicating how the United Nations could take up the issue. In addition, it proposed that the United Nations might wish to declare a year and decade for a culture of peace and non-violence, during which the Secretary-General would lead a campaign involving all levels of society, especially youth, to promote the values, attitudes and behaviours of a culture of peace.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 37], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1997/47 without vote [draft: E/1997/L.37] [agenda item 6 (I)].

International Year for the Culture of Peace, 2000

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 50/173 of 22 December 1995, entitled "United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education: towards a culture of peace", in which it expressed satisfaction with the transdisciplinary project, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, entitled "Towards a culture of peace",

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 51/101 of 12 December 1996 on a culture of peace, in which it called for the promotion of a culture of peace based on the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations and the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Expressing its deep concern about the persistence and proliferation of violence and conflicts of a diverse nature in various parts of the world,

Emphasizing the link between peace and development and the need for a culture of peace that can lead, through education, science and communication, to respect for all human rights and the promotion of democracy, tolerance, dialogue, reconciliation and solidarity, as well as to international cooperation and economic development, and thus to sustainable human development,

Aware of the need to mobilize public opinion at the national and international levels for the purpose of establishing and promoting a culture of peace and the central role that the United Nations system could play in this regard,

Bearing in mind the memorandum of understanding between the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, signed in Paris on 19 October 1995,

Convinced that an international year for the culture of peace at the turn of the millennium would provide the opportunity to boost the efforts of the international community to establish and promote an everlasting culture of peace,

1. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its fifty-second session, proclaim the year 2000 as International Year for the Culture of Peace;

2. Also recommends that the programme of activities and the scope of the Year should focus on respect for cultural diversity and the promotion of tolerance, solidarity, cooperation, dialogue and reconciliation and should be based on activities at the national and international levels;

3. Further recommends that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization should be designated as the focal point for the Year and should bear the responsibility for coordinating the inter-organizational aspects of the programmes and activities of the other bodies within the United Nations system and other organizations concerned and for mobilizing resources to meet the budgetary requirements for the Year;

4. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to submit to the Council, at its substantive session of 1998, a report on the state of preparations for the Year to enable it to make appropriate proposals to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 November [meeting 50], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/13 without vote [draft: A/52/L.4/Rev.1 & Add.1] [agenda item 156].

Culture of peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations and the purposes and principles of the United Nations, and recalling also that the creation of the United Nations system itself, based upon universally shared values and goals, has been a major act towards transformation from a culture of war and violence to a culture of peace and non-violence,

Aware that the task of the United Nations to save future generations from the scourge of war requires transformation towards a culture of peace, which consists of values, attitudes and behaviours that reflect and inspire social interaction and sharing based on the principles of freedom, justice and democracy, all human rights, tolerance and solidarity, that reject violence and endeavour to prevent conflicts by tackling their root causes to solve problems through dialogue and negotiation and that guarantee the full exercise of all rights and the means to participate fully in the development process of their society,

Recalling its resolutions 50/173 of 22 December 1995 and 51/101 of 12 December 1996 on a culture of peace and 51/104 of 12 December 1996 on the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education and public information activities in the field of human rights,

Noting that the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on educational activities under the project entitled "Towards a culture of peace" with elements for a draft provisional declaration and programme of action on a culture of peace, indicates that the transition from the culture of war to a culture of peace has been taken up as a priority by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and is also being promoted at many levels by the United Nations system as it enters the twenty-first century,

1. Takes note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as transmitted by the Secretary-General and submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/101, which is set within the framework of United Nations actions for peace-building, including the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and the United Nations Year for Tolerance, as well as the programmes of action of recent United Nations world conferences;

2. Calls for the promotion of a culture of peace based on the principles established in the Charter of the United Nations and on respect for human rights, democracy and tolerance, the promotion of development, education for peace, the free flow of information and the wider participation of women as an integral approach to preventing violence and conflicts, and efforts aimed at the creation of conditions for peace and its consolidation;

3. Notes that the report includes:

(a) Elements for a draft United Nations declaration on a culture of peace, including the historical basis, the meaning and significance of a culture of peace and the major fields and main actors for its promotion;

(b) Elements for a programme of action, including the relevant aims as well as the strategies and actions needed to implement each of those aims;

(c) A presentation of the progress of projects within the framework of the transdisciplinary project entitled "Towards a culture of peace";

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and taking into account the debate in the General Assembly, the specific suggestions of Member States and the comments, if any, of member States in the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-ninth session, to submit a consolidated report containing a draft declaration and programme of action on a culture of peace to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Culture of peace".

On the same date [meeting 50], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/15 without vote [agenda item 12].

Proclamation of the year 2000 as the International Year for the Culture of Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/47 of 22 July 1997, Proclaims the year 2000 as the International Year for the Culture of Peace.

National institutions and regional arrangements

National institutions for human rights promotion and protection

Report of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/41], the Secretary-General provided information from six States on possible forms of participation by national institutions in UN meetings dealing with human rights. Views of national institutions were also presented. He pointed out that in view of the contribution of national institutions, it might be appropriate for the Commission on Human Rights to consider granting them a certain status or certain rights. He suggested that it might be appropriate for them to participate as a separate category of participant or even as a separate entity within official delegations. The latter option was somewhat anomalous in view of the fact that national institutions should, according to the Principles relating to the status of national institutions, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/134 [YUN 1993, p. 900], operate independently from Governments. Irrespective of the precise status granted to national institutions, it was strongly recommended that the Commission continue its practice of allocating speaking time to them.

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/40)], the Commission on Human Rights requested HCHR/CHR to continue to provide technical assistance to States wishing to establish or strengthen their national institutions and to organize training programmes for national institutions that requested them. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure that national institutions were informed of CHR activities involving national institutions; to continue to provide assistance for meetings of the Coordinating Committee, created in 1993 at the second International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights [YUN 1993, p. 898] to promote the establishment and strengthening of national human rights mechanisms; and to provide assistance for regional meetings of national institutions. Considering it appropriate for national institutions that conformed with the Principles relating to the status of national institutions to be able to participate in their own right in its meetings and those of its subsidiary bodies, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit a report containing options for arrangements to implement that. The Commission reiterated its request to him to convene a fourth international workshop on national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, to be held in Mexico during 1997, and to report in 1998 on the implementation of its resolution.

The Commission's requests concerning assistance for meetings of the Coordinating Committee, the provision of funds for regional meetings and the holding of a fourth international workshop were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 22 July by decision 1997/253.

Further reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/176 [YUN 1995, p. 719], the Secretary-General reported in October on action taken by OHCHR to establish and strengthen national institutions and on related measures taken by Governments and national institutions. In Africa, progress towards the establishment of a human rights commission was under way in Burundi, Malawi and Uganda. The focus of a technical cooperation project in South Africa was its newly established Human Rights Commission. Advice was provided to Liberia, Madagascar, Mauritius and Zambia on the establishment or strengthening of a national institution. In Asia and the Pacific, a project to facilitate a human rights commission in Papua New Guinea began, and the Special Adviser to the High Commissioner provided assistance to Bangladesh and Mongolia and advice to Nepal, Sri Lanka and Thailand on the establishment of institutions. In Central and Eastern Europe, advice was provided on establishing national institutions in Armenia, Belarus, Georgia and the Russian Federation. Many of the activities were conducted in collaboration with UNDP. The Coordinating Committee held its second (February 1995), third (April 1996) and fourth (April 1997) meetings, all in Geneva. In 1997, discussions focused on the possible expansion of the Principles; a possible draft constitution for the Committee; the Fourth International Workshop on National Institutions (see below); regional arrangements for the establishment and strengthening of national institutions; the activities of OHCHR; and consideration of the status of national institutions in UN human rights forums.

In a December report [E/CN.4/1998/47], the Secretary-General presented options concerning arrangements for national institutions which conformed to the Principles to participate in meetings of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies. He proposed that they might be part of the delegation of their Government and be granted part of the delegation's speaking time; part of the delegation of their Government and be granted separate speaking time, in addition to that of the delegation; or participate in meetings in their own right with separate speaking time.

The Secretary-General also discussed the Fourth International Workshop on National Institutions and the second Asia-Pacific regional workshop of national institutions (see below).

Fourth International Workshop. The Fourth International Workshop on National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (Merida, 17-29 November) [E/CN.4/1998/47], organized by the National Commission on Human Rights of Mexico, focused on cooperation between national institutions; particularly vulnerable groups; migration movements and the fight against racism and xenophobia; and economic, social and cultural rights and the right to development. It adopted the Merida Declaration in which national institutions recognized that underdevelopment constituted a barrier to the enjoyment of human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/128 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

tion of Human Rights, held at Copenhagen in January 1997, the third International Workshop on Ombudsman and National Human Rights Institutions, held at Riga in June 1997, and the second meeting of the Asia-Pacific Regional Workshop of National Human Rights Institutions, held at New Delhi in September 1997, as well as the holding of the fourth International Workshop on Ombudsman and National Human Rights Institutions, at Merida, Mexico, in November 1997,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to requests from Member States for assistance in the establishment and strengthening of national human rights institutions as part of the programme of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of human rights;

10. Notes the role of the Coordinating Committee created by national institutions, as recognized in Commission on Human Rights resolution 1994/54 of 4 March 1994, in close cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, in assisting Governments and national institutions, when requested, to follow up on relevant resolutions and recommendations concerning the strengthening of national institutions;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Regional arrangements

Pursuant to a 1995 Commission on Human Rights request [YUN 1995, p. 720] to the Secretary-General to report in 1997 on the state of regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, the Secretary-General drew the attention of the Commission [E/CN.4/1997/35] to his 1996 report to the General Assembly [YUN 1996, p. 598] and to his report on regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific (see below) [E/CN.4/1997/44].

Commission action. On 11 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/34)], the Commission asked HCHR/CHR to continue to pay attention to ways of assisting, at their request, countries of the different regions under the programme of advisory services and to make relevant recommendations. It asked the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen exchanges between the United Nations and regional intergovernmental organizations dealing with human rights, and to report in 1999.

Asia and the Pacific

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 599], the Secretary-General submitted a January report [E/CN.4/1997/44] describing regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region. Under the UN programme of technical cooperation, fellowships were awarded to government representatives of Bhutan, Cambodia, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, India, Jordan, Malaysia, Pakistan and the Philippines. Technical cooperation was provided to Bhutan, Cambodia, Kuwait, Mongolia, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines and Viet Nam.

The fifth workshop on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region (Amman, Jordan, 5-7 January) agreed to develop a regional technical cooperation programme to strengthen national and regional human rights capacities through the sharing of expertise, experiences and best practices; and to a process for designing the regional programme and future work in developing a regional arrangement through the establishment of a working group.

In a December report [E/CN.4/1998/47], the Secretary-General stated that the second Asia-Pacific regional workshop of national institutions (New Delhi, 10-12 September), organized by the National Human Rights Commission of India in cooperation with the Asia-Pacific Forum of National Institutions and OHCHR, reaffirmed the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated nature of human rights; emphasized that the status and responsibilities of national institutions should be consistent with the Principles relating to the status of national institutions; stressed the importance of human rights jurisprudence; condemned the practice of child sexual exploitation and called on Governments to take measures to combat it; and asked the secretariat of the Asia-Pacific Forum to give prominence to the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535, GA res. 217 A (III)] in its technical cooperation and information activities. In addition, the workshop noted the proposal submitted by the Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission of Australia for an advisory panel to the Forum on international human rights law and agreed in principle to set one up.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/45], the Commission endorsed the conclusions of the fifth workshop on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights in the Asian and Pacific region and asked the Secretary-General to establish an open-ended team, composed of representatives of interested Governments of the region and CHR, national institutions and NGOs, to prepare for the next workshop and to design a regional technical cooperation programme to facilitate the development of regional arrangements. Welcoming Iran's invitation to host the sixth workshop, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to facilitate holding it in Tehran under the regular UN budget. The Secretary-General was also asked to allocate more resources from existing UN funds to enable countries to benefit from the advisory services and technical assistance programme, to support the regional technical cooperation programme and to provide resources for its implementation, and to maintain a continuing flow of human rights material to the library of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. The above-mentioned requests to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council on 22 July by decision 1997/256. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1998 on progress made in implementing its resolution.

Cooperation with UN human rights bodies

In accordance with a 1996 Commission request [YUN 1996, p. 600], the Secretary-General, in a February report [E/CN.4/1997/50], summarized information covering situations in which persons had been intimidated or had suffered reprisals for having cooperated with UN human rights bodies; availed themselves of international procedures; provided legal assistance for that purpose; and/or had been relatives of victims of human rights violations.

Commission action. On 15 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/56)], the Commission on Human Rights urged Governments to refrain from acts of intimidation or reprisal against persons who sought to cooperate or had cooperated with representatives of UN human rights bodies, or who had provided testimony or information to them; individuals who availed themselves of UN procedures and those who had provided legal assistance to them; those who submitted communications under procedures established by human rights instruments; and relatives of victims of human rights violations. It asked representatives of UN human rights bodies and human rights treaty bodies to help prevent the hampering of access to UN human rights procedures and to continue to take urgent steps to prevent intimidation or reprisal. It also asked them to include in their reports references to allegations of intimidation or reprisal, as well as an account of action taken. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to draw its resolution to the attention of UN human rights and treaty bodies and to report in 1998.

Chapter II

Protection of human rights

In 1997, the United Nations continued to protect human rights worldwide through efforts to combat racism and racial discrimination, and religious and other forms of intolerance; to ensure the right of people to self-determination; to establish and promote democratic societies through the implementation of civil and political rights; and to secure for all people economic, social and cultural rights.

Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary body, the Sub-commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, examined, among other questions, the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations; independence of the judicial system; conditions during states of emergency; allegations of torture; extra-legal executions; human rights and extreme poverty; the right to adequate housing; environmental issues; violence against women; practices affecting the health of women and children; sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; and protection of indigenous heritage and indigenous land rights.

Working groups considered arbitrary detention, enforced or involuntary disappearances, as well as the administration of justice, the right to development, contemporary forms of slavery, and indigenous populations.

The General Assembly, in December, decided to proclaim 26 June as United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture.

Racism and racial discrimination

Third Decade against racism

The General Assembly had proclaimed in 1993 the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1993-2003) and adopted the Decade's Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 853]. The Third Decade's goals and objectives were those adopted by the Assembly in 1973 for the first Decade [YUN 1973, p. 524]. The revised Programme of Action for the Decade was adopted by the Assembly in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 988].

Implementation of Decade

Reports of Secretary-General. In January [E/CN.4/1997/68], the Secretary-General summarized information provided by the General Assembly, Governments, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN Department of Public Information, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on measures taken to combat racism and racial discrimination.

In a December report [E/CN.4/1998/77/Add.1], the Secretary-General discussed a seminar on immigration, racism and racial discrimination (Geneva, 5-9 May), organized by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights in accordance with General Assembly resolution 49/146 [YUN 1994, p. 988]. The seminar covered contemporary forms and manifestations of racism and racial discrimination; globalization and immigration; protection of immigrants; protection of immigrants against employment discrimination; and integration and/or preservation of immigrants' cultural identities in host countries. Among the recommendations of the seminar were educational programmes to promote cultural understanding; recourse procedures for victims of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia; measures enabling immigrants to participate in local elections; legal reforms to protect immigrants from racial discrimination; non-discrimination training for law enforcement officials; priority given by the High Commissioner to rights of immigrant children; declaring illegal and prohibiting any transmission by audio-visual or electronic media that incited racial hatred or racial violence; exerting pressure on States where flagrant human rights violations occurred; and priority to be given by the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to a seminar on the role of the mass media in combating racism.

The Commission on Human Rights also considered the annual report on racial discrimination submitted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) [E/CN.4/1997/70].

Commission action. On 18 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/74)], the Commission on Human Rights declared that all forms of racism and racial discrimination were among the most serious violations of human rights and had to be combated. It welcomed the designation by the European Union of 1997 as European Year against Racism.

The Commission was of the view that financial contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination had proven inadequate and that the General Assembly should consider ways to finance the Programme of Action, including through the UN regular budget. It asked the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly a report on resources required to implement the Programme and asked the Assembly to consider providing the resources. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to establish a focal point to coordinate the activities of the Third Decade (see Economic and Social Council decision 1997/293).

Subcommission action. On 21 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 des. 1997/5], the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities asked the Secretary-General to ensure the establishment of a focal point on racism within the Centre for Human Rights to coordinate activities under the Third Decade. It proposed to hold in 1998, jointly with the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), an expert seminar that would explore the issues put forward by CERD for further study by the Subcommission [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/31].

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Assembly in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 853], the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in July his annual report on activities undertaken or planned by Governments, the UN system, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to implement the Programme of Action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination [E/1997/87]. Regarding the Trust Fund for the Programme of Action, the Secretary-General stated that contributions remained below the levels hoped for. Therefore, very few of the planned 1994-1997 activities were carried out.

In his conclusions, the Secretary-General stated that the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights should give priority to organizing a seminar on the right to equality before the courts and other judicial institutions, including the right to compensation for injuries suffered as a result of discrimination. A seminar on the role of the media in combating racism, with particular reference to the situation of immigrants, should also be given priority.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/240, took note of the Secretary-General's July report.

In response to Assembly resolution 51/81 [YUN 1996, p. 602], the Secretary-General, in October [A/52/528], supplemented information contained in his July report to the Council. As requested by the Commission, information on the resources required to implement the Programme of Action would be issued as an addendum. The Secretary-General described activities carried out by the UN system, among them a seminar (Geneva, 10-14 November) to assess the role of the Internet in the light of the provisions of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, contained in Assembly resolution 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440] (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

World conference

On 18 April [res. 1997/74], the Commission on Human Rights made a series of recommendations to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on convening a world conference on racism and racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, all of which the Council approved (decision 1997/293). Subsequently, some of them were adopted by the Assembly (resolution 52/111). In addition, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit a report in 1998 on the implementation of its resolution.

On 21 August [res. 1997/5], the Subcommission, expressing support for the convening of a world conference not later than 2001, called on Member States to respond positively to the proposal. It asked the High Commissioner to submit to the Commission a report on the status of preparations for the conference and ways in which the Subcommission and other bodies could contribute to the preparations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1997/23], adopted decision 1997/293 without vote [agenda item 7 (d)]. Proposed amendments to the draft [E/1997/L.47], submitted by the United States, were rejected by a roll-call vote of 27 to 1, with 21 abstentions.

Racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

At its 39th plenary meeting, on 23 July 1997, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/74 of 18 April 1997:

- (iii) That the World Conference be action-oriented and focus on practical measures to eradicate racism, including through measures of prevention, education and protection and the provision of effective remedies, taking into full consideration the existing human rights instruments;
- (iv) That it decide that the Commission on Human Rights should act as the preparatory committee for the World Conference and that its deliberations should be open-ended, allowing for the full participation of all States Members of the United Nations, members of specialized agencies and observers, in accordance with established practice;

(d) Approved the Commission's recommendation that the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance be conducted effectively and efficiently and that its size, duration and other cost factors be determined with due regard for economy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee

[A/52/642], adopted resolution 52/111 without vote [agenda item 110].

Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and the convening of a world conference against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objectives as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations of achieving international cooperation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming also its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism, in all its forms, and racial discrimination,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention against Discrimination in Education, adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also the outcome of the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and in 1983,

Welcoming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and, in particular, the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Stressing the importance and sensitivity of the activities of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling its resolutions 48/91 of 20 December 1993 and 49/146 of 23 December 1994, by which, respectively, it proclaimed the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and adopted the revised Programme of Action for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with grave concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the two previous Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Noting with great concern that, despite the efforts undertaken by the international community at various levels, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related forms of intolerance, ethnic antagonism and acts of violence are showing signs of increase,

Noting with concern that the dissemination of racist and xenophobic propaganda is also being channelled through new communication technologies, including such computer networks as the Internet,

Having considered the report submitted by the Secretary-General within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Firmly convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained measures at the national and international levels for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Recognizing the importance of strengthening national legislation and institutions for the promotion of racial harmony,

Deeply concerned about the fact that the phenomenon of racism and racial discrimination against migrant workers continues to increase despite efforts undertaken by the international community to improve the protection of the human rights of migrant workers and members of their families,

Recalling the adoption at its forty-fifth session of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families,

Acknowledging that indigenous people are at times victims of particular forms of racism and racial discrimination, and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

I

21. Considers that all parts of the Programme of Action should be given equal attention in order to attain the objectives of the Third Decade;

34. Also decides to keep the item entitled "Elimination of racism and racial discrimination" on its agenda and to consider it as a matter of high priority at its fifty-third session.

Contemporary forms of racism

Reports of Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Maurice Glèlè-Ahanhanzo (Benin) continued to examine incidents of contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination and any form of discrimination against Blacks, Arabs and Muslims, xenophobia, negrophobia, anti-Semitism and related intolerance, as well as governmental measures to overcome them.

The Commission on Human Rights considered the Special Rapporteur's January report [E/CN.4/1997/71 & Corr.1], in which he discussed his 1996 activities, including missions to Colombia and Kuwait (see below), each at the invitation of the Government. His report included submissions by Governments and public bodies on action taken to combat racism, as well as communications regarding allegations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia that he had sent to 12 countries and replies received. The Special Rapporteur concluded that racism and racial discrimination persisted. He recommended the convening of a world conference on racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia, and studies, research and joint action on the use of the Internet as a vehicle for racist propaganda. Following consideration of the report, the Commission, on 18 April [dec. 1997/125], expressed its indignation and protest at an offensive reference to Islam and the Holy Qur'an in the Special Rapporteur's report, which was extracted from a report of the Government of Israel. The reference stated, "The use of Christian and secular European anti-Semitism motifs in Muslim publications is on the rise, yet at the same time Muslim extremists are turning increasingly to their own religious sources, first and foremost the Qur'an, as a primary anti-Jewish source". The Commission affirmed that the reference should have been excluded and requested its Chairman to ask the Special Rapporteur to take corrective action.

The Special Rapporteur visited Colombia (28 June-15 July 1996) [E/CN.4/1997/71/Add.1] to study, together with the authorities, obstacles preventing the implementation of measures to combat racism and racial discrimination. He focused on the Afro-Colombian and Amerindian communities who were reportedly most exposed to racism and discrimination, and who numbered 6 million and 600,000, respectively, of an estimated total population of 37 million. There was a growing awareness among the authorities of the problems of Afro-Colombians and the indigenous populations, which had led to efforts to improve their participation and political representation and the establishment of ministerial or other departments to examine their problems and find solutions. However, serious obstacles prevented far-reaching change, including contradictory legislation and regulations, administrative delays due to conflicts of interest, differing concepts of economic and social development, ineffective consultation with the populations concerned, notably on the use of territorial resources, and endemic violence.

The Special Rapporteur recommended adopting an act on racism and racial discrimination; banning the weekly television programme Sábados Felices, which contained racist content; accelerating the distribution of land to the Afro-Colombian and indigenous populations; resolving administrative problems connected with subsidies to resguardos, territorial entities under Amerindian authority; developing human rights awareness in the army and the police and providing training; more participation by the Afro-Colombian and indigenous populations in decisions of concern to them; showing them more respect when drawing up and implementing development plans; and protecting those populations from violence in areas of conflict.

Regarding his mission to Kuwait (17-27 November 1996), the Special Rapporteur reported in January [E/CN.4/1997/71/Add.2] that he had investigated allegations concerning racial discrimination and xenophobia towards migrant workers, particularly housekeepers from Bangladesh, India, the Philippines and Sri Lanka. The Special Rapporteur's attention had also been drawn to the situation of the Bidun, who were variously described as undocumented persons, stateless persons and illegal residents.

There were serious problems regarding the situation of foreign and, particularly, unskilled workers as their status was not governed by legislation. The estimated population of 2 million comprised some 700,000 Kuwaitis and 1.3 million foreigners, including nationals from between 100 and 145 countries. Less than 20 per cent of the country's manpower was Kuwaiti, although 10,000 graduates were unemployed. Although Kuwait needed skilled and unskilled foreign manpower, it felt crushed under the weight of foreigners.

The Special Rapporteur stated that there were no signs of discrimination against foreigners in Kuwait, but rather an unacknowledged national preference by people who were a minority in their own country and sensitive to a foreign presence that outweighed their own in employment numbers. The legislative and social systems resulted in the exploitation of workers, particularly unskilled and domestic workers. The administration had broad powers and there were no judicial guarantees to protect employees, undocumented persons and Bidun. There were suggestions of non-violent xenophobia aimed at protecting Kuwaitis from foreigners. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government find an equitable solution to the problem of the Bidun; adopt legislation and a uniform labour code in conformity with international conventions; set up a national agency to employ and recruit foreign skilled and unskilled labour and domestic workers, replacing the many private agencies; offer instruction in conversational Arabic to domestic workers; adopt measures to ensure regular wage payment; provide legal protection and assistance for foreign workers; produce and broadcast cultural programmes on the countries that exported manpower; continue to promote and strengthen democracy; and ratify human rights conventions.

By a note of 16 October [A/52/471], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Special Rapporteur, prepared in response to Assembly resolution 51/79 [YUN 1996, p. 607]. The Special Rapporteur described his activities and stated that he had received a positive response to his request to Australia to undertake a mission to that country. He had asked to visit South Africa but the Government had not yet replied. The Special Rapporteur discussed discrimination against immigrants and migrant workers; human rights violations in holding areas in France; the role of the media in inciting racial violence; racial discrimination against Roma; and the discriminatory application of the death penalty in the United States. He provided summaries of measures taken or envisaged by Governments and legislative and judicial bodies.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the use of new communication technologies, particularly the Internet, had led to new forms of racism and racial discrimination. He reiterated his recommendations regarding the convening of a world conference on racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/73], the Commission expressed its profound concern at and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism, racial discrimination and all racist violence. It supported the efforts of Governments to eradicate such practices and called on them to enact and enforce legislation to prevent and sanction acts of racism and racial discrimination. The Commission called on the Special Rapporteur to continue his exchange of views with Member States and relevant UN mechanisms and treaty bodies, and to make the fullest use of all appropriate sources of information. It regretted that he continued to encounter difficulties in fulfilling his mandate, owing to the lack of resources. It asked the Secretary-General to assist in enabling the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly and a comprehensive report to the Commission in 1998. On 22 July, by decision 1997/277, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

Also on 18 April [res. 1997/74], the Commission urged the High Commissioner to provide, at their request, advisory services and technical assistance to those countries which the Special Rapporteur visited.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/642], adopted resolution 52/109 without vote [agenda item 110].

Measures to combat contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/79 of 12 December 1996, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1997/73 and 1997/74 of 18 April 1997,

Bearing in mind the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, in particular the attention given in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and other forms of intolerance,

Aware that racism, as one of the exclusionist phenomena plaguing many societies, requires resolute action and cooperation for its eradication,

Having examined the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including its conclusions and recommendations,

Deeply concerned that, despite continued efforts, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as acts of violence, persist and even grow in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity,

Deeply concerned also that those advocating racism and racial discrimination misuse new communication technologies, including the Internet, to disseminate their repugnant views,

Noting that the use of such technologies can contribute to combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Conscious of the fundamental difference between, on the one hand, racism and racial discrimination as governmental policy or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity and, on the other hand, other manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance that are increasingly visible in segments of many societies and are perpetrated by individuals or groups, some of which manifestations are directed against migrant workers and members of their families,

Noting that the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, in its general recommendation XV(42) of 17 March 1993 on article 4 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, holds that the prohibition of the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or racial hatred is compatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression as outlined in article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 5 of the Convention,

Conscious that impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and tends to encourage the recurrence of such crimes,

Emphasizing the importance of creating conditions that foster greater harmony and tolerance within societies,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

2. Requests the Special Rapporteur to continue his exchange of views with Member States, relevant mechanisms, related United Nations organs and the specialized agencies in order to further their effectiveness and mutual cooperation;

3. Welcomes the recommendation of the Special Rapporteur to convene, without further delay, a world conference on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

4. Affirms that acts of racist violence against others stemming from racism do not comprise expressions of opinion but rather offences;

5. Expresses its profound concern about and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination, in particular all racist violence, and related acts of random and indiscriminate violence;

6. Also expresses its profound concern about and unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination, including propaganda, activities and organizations based on doctrines of superiority of one race or group of persons that attempt to justify or promote racism and racial discrimination in any form;

7. Expresses its profound concern about and condemnation of manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrant workers and members of their families, persons belonging to minorities and members of vulnerable groups in many societies;

8. Encourages all States to include in their educational curricula and social programmes at all levels, as appropriate, knowledge of, and tolerance and respect for, foreign cultures, peoples and countries;

9. Recognizes that the increasing gravity of different manifestations of racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia in various parts of the world requires a more integrated and effective approach on the part of the relevant mechanisms of United Nations human rights machinery;

10. Encourages Governments to take appropriate measures to eradicate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

11. Categorically deplores the misuse of print, audio-visual and electronic media and new communication technologies, including the Internet, to incite violence motivated by racial hatred;

12. Recognizes that Governments should implement and enforce appropriate and effective legislation to prevent acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

13. Calls upon all Governments and intergovernmental organizations, with the assistance of non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to supply relevant information to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to fulfil his mandate;

14. Commends non-governmental organizations for the action that they have taken against racism and racial discrimination and for the continuous support and assistance that they have provided to the victims of racism and racial discrimination;

15. Urges all Governments to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur with a view to enabling him to fulfil his mandate;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all the necessary human and financial assistance to carry out his mandate efficiently, effectively and expeditiously and to enable him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Right to nationality

On 11 April [res. 1997/36], the Commission on Human Rights, reaffirming the right to nationality of every person as an inalienable human right, called on States to refrain from taking measures and from enacting legislation that discriminated against persons or groups of persons on grounds of race, colour or national or ethnic origin by nullifying or impairing the exercise of their right to nationality, and to repeal such legislation if it already existed. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to request their views thereon.

On 28 August [res. 1997/31], the Subcommission, reaffirming the right of everyone to a nationality, urged all States to respect and promote the right to a nationality. It asked the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to take steps, in line with the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533], to ensure that refugees did not become stateless. Governments were called on to revise their citizenship laws to bring them into accord with international human rights law and the 1961 Convention.

Other forms of intolerance

On 16 April [dec. 1997/118], the Commission on Human Rights deferred until 1998 consideration of the question of tolerance and pluralism as indivisible elements in the promotion and protection of human rights, in order to allow time for the implementation of its 1996 resolution [YUN 1996, p. 608] on the subject.

Discrimination against minorities

Declaration

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1997/82], the Secretary-General presented information received from Governments, UN organs and bodies, human rights treaty bodies, special rapporteurs and NGOs describing their activities to promote and give effect to the 1992 Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, contained in General Assembly resolution 47/135 [YUN 1992, p. 723].

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/16], the Commission on Human Rights urged States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the 1992 Declaration. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to continue to improve the coordination and cooperation of UN programmes and agencies that dealt with minority issues, and was called on to promote the implementation of the Declaration and to continue to engage in dialogue with Governments. States, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs and specialized agencies were called on to participate in the work of the Working Group on Minorities. The Commission invited the Working Group to submit a comprehensive report in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to make available, at the request of Governments, qualified expertise on minority issues, including the prevention and resolution of disputes, and to report in 1998 on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

Working Group activities. The five-member Working Group on Minorities held its third session in 1997 (Geneva, 26-30 May) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/18], during which it reviewed the promotion of the 1992 Declaration and examined possible solutions to problems involving minorities, including the promotion of mutual understanding between and among minorities and Governments.

The Working Group recommended to the Subcommission the preparation of a manual in minority languages that would include the text of the Declaration, a note setting out and interpreting the Declaration's principles, and procedures and mechanisms by which minorities could address regional and international organizations with their concerns. It also recommended that the Subcommission establish a database of information on good practices and another on national, regional and international recourse mechanisms. Regarding education rights for minorities, the Group recommended that the Subcommission transmit the Hague Recommendations regarding the Education Rights of National Minorities [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/1997/WP.3] to Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments, and request the Chairman-Rapporteur to prepare for the Group's fifth session an analytical review of the recommendations. It decided that its future sessions would be devoted to one or more major themes. Other recommendations were made concerning human rights treaty bodies, wider use of bilateral treaties, regional mechanisms, conflict prevention, the provision of technical cooperation, multicultural and intercultural education and minority women.

Subcommission action. On 27 August [res. 1997/23], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission request the Economic and Social Council to authorize the extension of the Working Group's mandate, with a view to its holding one session annually. It asked the Commission to invite States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide their comments on the Hague Recommendations and on good practices organized according to the principles contained in the 1992 Declaration. Welcoming the 1997 seminar on multicultural and intercultural education (Geneva, 23-24 May) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.5/1997/WR.5], it invited the Working Group to organize further seminars, and recommended that minority rights issues and programmes for intercultural education be made a core component of the action plans for the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education (1995-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/184 [YUN 1994, p. 1039].

The Subcommission recommended that the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, CERD and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, when considering States parties' reports, give particular attention to implementation of, respectively, article 27 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], and article 15 of the 1966 International Covenant; article 2 of the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, contained in Assembly resolution 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440]; and article 30 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560]. It also recommended that they include in their guidelines an item concerning minorities. UN organs and bodies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs were asked to intensify their efforts to disseminate information on the Declaration and to continue to submit information on its application to the Working Group. The Subcommission recommended that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) be strengthened to enable it to provide adequate services to the Group and to undertake relevant studies, evaluation and action. It further recommended that the Group continue to consider the issue of citizenship and nationality within the context of minority rights. The Group was asked to develop and submit guidelines concerning the content and scope of the principles contained in the Declaration, including recommendations to implement them.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/91 [YUN 1996, p. 611], the Secretary-General reported in October [A/52/498] on action taken to promote the Declaration through human rights technical cooperation projects; cooperation of OHCHR with UN programmes and agencies dealing with minority issues; human rights treaty bodies; and the work of special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/123 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Effective promotion of the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/135 of 18 December 1992, as well as its subsequent resolutions on the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities,

Considering that the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities contribute to political and social stability and peace and enrich the cultural heritage of society as a whole in the States in which such persons live,

Concerned by the growing frequency and severity of disputes and conflicts concerning minorities in many countries and their often tragic consequences, and concerned also that persons belonging to minorities are particularly vulnerable to displacement through, inter alia, population transfers, refugee flows and forced relocation,

Acknowledging that the United Nations has an increasingly important role to play regarding the protection of minorities by, inter alia, taking due account of and giving effect to the Declaration,

Noting that the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights held its third session from 26 to 30 May 1997,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the obligation of States to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law, in accordance with the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities;

3. Urges States and the international community to promote and protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, as set out in the Declaration, including through the facilitation of their participation in all aspects of the political, economic, social, religious and cultural life of society and in the economic progress and development of their country;

4. Also urges States to take, as appropriate, all the necessary constitutional, legislative, administrative and other measures to promote and give effect to the Declaration;

5. Recognizes that respect for human rights and the promotion of understanding and tolerance by Governments as well as between and among minorities are central to the protection and promotion of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

6. Appeals to States to make bilateral and multilateral efforts, as appropriate, in order to protect the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities in their countries, in accordance with the Declaration;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to make available, at the request of Governments concerned, qualified expertise on minority issues, including the prevention and resolution of disputes, to assist in existing or potential situations involving minorities;

8. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to promote, within her mandate, the implementation of the Declaration and to continue to engage in a dialogue with Governments concerned for that purpose;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to continue her efforts to improve the coordination and cooperation among United Nations programmes and agencies on activities related to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities and to take the work of relevant regional organizations active in the field of human rights into account in her endeavours;

10. Welcomes the inter-agency consultation of the High Commissioner with United Nations programmes and agencies on minority issues, and calls upon those programmes and agencies to contribute actively to this process;

11. Urges all treaty bodies to give due regard, within their respective mandates, to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

12. Calls upon all special representatives, special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give attention, within their respective mandates, to situations involving minorities;

13. Encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to contribute to the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to national or ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities;

14. Expresses its expectation that the Working Group on Minorities of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights will further implement its mandate with the involvement of a wide range of participants;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Religious intolerance

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1997/91] of the Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance, Abdelfattah Amor (Tunisia). He updated the status of communications sent to Governments about allegations of intolerance or discrimination based on belief and their replies. Since the Commission's 1996 session, he had sent communications to 49 States, including five urgent appeals to four States. The communications concerned violations of: the principle of non-discrimination with regard to religion and belief; the principle of tolerance; freedom of thought, conscience and religion or belief; freedom to manifest one's religion or belief; freedom to dispose of religious property; and the right to life, physical integrity and health of persons (clergy and believers). The deadline had not yet expired for 12 States to reply, and the Special Rapporteur had received 13 replies from the 34 States for which it had expired. The Special Rapporteur drew conclusions and made recommendations regarding the right to change religion; the right to conscientious objection; protection of religious freedom and human rights; religion and politics; religious freedom and religious extremism; and religious freedom and sects. He recommended setting up a documentation centre in the Centre for Human Rights and establishing a department on religious freedom and human rights.

In a September report [E/CN.4/1998/6/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described his visit to Australia (17 February-1 March) made at the invitation of the Government. He focused on the treatment of tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion or belief in the Australian legal system in the context of the country's Constitution and of Federal laws and State and Territory laws. During the mission, the Special Rapporteur met officials at the Federal, State and Territory levels, and held consultations with human rights NGOs and representatives of the Aboriginal, Baha'i, Christian, Hindu, Jewish and Muslim communities and with the Church of Scientology and The Family.

The Special Rapporteur considered that the situation in Australia with regard to tolerance and non-discrimination based on religion was satisfactory. However, there were a few exceptions concerning minorities and, especially, Aborigines. The construction of places of worship or religious training centres for Muslim, Hindu and Buddhist minorities faced obstacles and there were outbreaks of anti-Semitism. The intolerance manifested was not religious, however, but racial, founded on ignorance and encouraged by extremist political speeches. The Special Rapporteur proposed the development of a national education policy, coordinated at the Federal, State and Territory levels, and an educational campaign for the benefit of the media. Regarding the Aborigines, the Special Rapporteur recommended pursuing the official policy of reconciliation, with further strengthening in the area of religion. He proposed ensuring uniformity of legislation at the Federal and State levels for the protection of land and sacred sites, including religious objects, and for the return of the religious and cultural heritage. The Special Rapporteur called for special protection to the Aboriginal community, especially by encouraging a change in attitudes in order to arrive at a compromise between economic considerations and religious practice. He welcomed the application by authorities of the principle of positive discrimination.

In a December report [E/CN.4/1998/6/Add.2 & Corr.1], the Special Rapporteur discussed his visit to Germany (17-27 September), made at the invitation of the Government, during which he studied legislation relating to tolerance and non-discrimination in religion or belief, its enforcement and the policy in force. He met with Government officials and representatives of the Catholic and Protestant Churches and the Jewish, Orthodox and Muslim minorities, and with the Bhagwans, Baha'is, Hare Krishnas, Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses, the Church of Unification and the Church of Scientology. NGOs, particularly those providing assistance to victims of sects and psycho-groups, and academics and eminent independent persons were also consulted.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the Constitution guaranteed freedom of religion and belief. He concluded that the Jewish community was satisfied with its situation. It was able to flourish as a religious minority and enjoyed active political, institutional and financial support from the State. The situation of the Muslim minority was markedly less favourable, although on the whole it was not unsatisfactory. According to the representatives of the groups and communities, with the exception of those of the Church of Scientology, there was no obstacle to the exercise of their activities. Many representatives stated, however, that there was a climate of mistrust, or latent intolerance, towards all religious minorities. Concerning competition between the major churches and other groups and communities, the Special Rapporteur believed that there was a need for an ongoing dialogue to avoid continuing a climate of mistrust or even intolerance. The Special Rapporteur believed that the State should promote and develop a culture of tolerance and human rights, with lasting progress achieved mainly through an educational strategy. In addition, he recommended a campaign to develop awareness among the media, and the organization of a high-level intergovernmental meeting to arrive at a collective approach to sects and religions that respected human rights.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/18], the Commission on Human Rights, condemning all forms of discrimination based on religion or belief, urged States to: provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief; ensure that no one, because of religion or belief, was deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person, or was subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention; combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercions motivated by religious intolerance; recognize the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief; ensure that members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respected different religions and beliefs; ensure that religious places, sites and shrines were respected and protected; and promote and encourage tolerance. The Commission called on Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and to consider inviting him to visit their countries. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate, submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1997 and report to the Commission in 1998. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/245 of 22 July, approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General.

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/52/477], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report, prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/93 [YUN 1996, p. 615]. The Special Rapporteur described the missions he had carried out since 1994 and updated the status of communications since the Commission's 1997 session (10 March-18 April). He had sent communications to 48 States and urgent appeals to two countries. The deadline for receiving replies had not expired for 20 States, and of the 33 States for which it had expired, 8 had replied. The communications fell into the same categories as those in his earlier report. The Special Rapporteur stressed that religious freedom included the right to change one's religion, and the importance of an inter-faith dialogue to combat all extremism and ensure religious tolerance. He considered it necessary to remind States of the right of conscientious objection to military service as a legitimate exercise of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. He stated that it was essential to develop a culture of tolerance through an international school strategy to combat all forms of discrimination based on religion or belief.

By a November note [A/52/477/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted an addendum to the Special Rapporteur's report containing recommendations that were sent to Greece and India as follow-up to his 1996 visits [YUN 1996, pp. 614 & 615] to those countries. In addition, the report contained the responses of the Sudan to the Special Rapporteur's recommendations following his visit there in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 614] and of Pakistan, which he had visited in 1995 [YUN 1996, p. 612].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/122 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Recalling that all States have pledged themselves, under the Charter of the United Nations, to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming that discrimination against human beings on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter,

Reaffirming also its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Emphasizing that the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is far-reaching and profound and that it encompasses freedom of thought on all matters, personal conviction and the commitment to religion or belief, whether manifested individually or in community with others,

Reaffirming the call of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, for all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including practices of discrimination against women and the desecration of religious sites, recognizing that every individual has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, expression and religion,

Calling upon all Governments to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief to enable him to carry out his mandate fully,

Alarmed that serious instances of intolerance and discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, including acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance, occur in many parts of the world and threaten the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply concerned that, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, the rights violated on religious grounds include the right to life, the right to physical integrity and to liberty and security of person, the right to freedom of expression, the right not to be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and the right not to be arbitrarily arrested or detained,

Believing that further efforts are therefore required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief and to eliminate all forms of hatred, intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a human right derived from the inherent dignity of the human person and guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of religion or belief is violated;

3. Also urges States to ensure, in particular, that no one within their jurisdiction is, because of his or her religion or belief, deprived of the right to life or the right to liberty and security of person or subjected to torture or arbitrary arrest or detention;

4. Further urges States, in conformity with international standards of human rights, to take all necessary action to prevent such instances, to take all appropriate measures to combat hatred, intolerance and acts of violence, intimidation and coercion motivated by religious intolerance and to encourage, through the educational system and by other means, understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

5. Recognizes that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of human rights, including the right to freedom of religion or belief;

6. Emphasizes that, as underlined by the Human Rights Committee, restrictions on the freedom to manifest religion or belief are permitted only if limitations are prescribed by law, are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others and are applied in a manner that does not vitiate the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

1. Urges States to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, members of law enforcement bodies, civil servants, educators and other public officials respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

8. Calls upon all States to recognize, as provided in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for those purposes;

9. Expresses its grave concern at any attack upon religious places, sites and shrines, and calls upon all States, in accordance with their national legislation and in conformity with international human rights standards, to exert utmost efforts to ensure that such places, sites and shrines are fully respected and protected;

10. Recognizes that the exercise of tolerance and non-discrimination by persons and groups is necessary for the full realization of the aims of the Declaration;

11. Encourages the continued efforts on the part of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief appointed to examine incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world that are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures as appropriate;

12. Encourages Governments to give serious consideration to inviting the Special Rapporteur to visit their countries so as to enable him to fulfil his mandate even more effectively;

13. Also encourages Governments, when seeking the assistance of the United Nations Programme of Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights, to consider, where appropriate, including requests for assistance in the field of the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;

14. Welcomes and encourages the efforts of non-governmental organizations and religious bodies and groups to promote the implementation of the Declaration, and invites them to consider what further contribution they could make to its implementation and dissemination in all parts of the world;

15. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration;

16. Requests the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Special Rapporteur receives the necessary staffing, financial and material resources to enable him to discharge his mandate in full and on time;

18. Decides to consider the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance at its fifty-third session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

HIV- and AIDS-related discrimination

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/33], the Commission on Human Rights, welcoming the report of the Secretary-General on the Second International Consultation on HIV/AIDS and Human Rights [YUN 1996, p. 617] containing 12 Guidelines for States to protect HIV-related human rights and to achieve public health goals, invited States to consider the Guidelines. It called on the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), its co-sponsors and other partners to provide technical cooperation to States, upon their request, for the promotion and protection of human rights in the context of HIV/AIDS. It asked the Secretary-General to solicit the opinions of Governments, specialized agencies, international organizations and NGOs and to prepare a progress report on the follow-up to its resolution.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/40], the Subcommission called on special rapporteurs, representatives and working groups, as well as other UN human rights bodies, to continue to address all HIV/AIDS-related issues within their mandates, with particular attention to women, children and vulnerable groups, and to incorporate the Guidelines into their activities. It urged the Commission to ask the Secretary-General to transmit the Guidelines to heads of State and to the heads of relevant UN bodies and agencies for action, and to keep under review the issue of HIV/AIDS-related human rights violations and discrimination. The High Commissioner was asked to incorporate HIV/AIDS-related issues, as appropriate, in all the Centre's activities, including participating in a seminar on exploring ways to assess implementation of the Guidelines. UNAIDS was asked to continue the integration of a strong human rights component in all its activities.

Civil and political rights

The right to self-determination

In March [res. 1997/5], the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the right of all peoples to self-determination and independence, in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) [YUN 1960, p. 49], containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Under the item, it adopted resolutions pertaining to Palestine [res. 1997/4], Western Sahara [res. 1997/5] and the Middle East peace process [res. 1997/6], and considered information provided by the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination (see below).

In an October report [A/52/485], the Secretary-General summarized action taken by the Commission on the right of peoples to self-determination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/643], adopted resolution 52/113 without vote [agenda item 111].

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, forty-fourth, forty-fifth, forty-sixth, forty-seventh, forty-eighth, forty-ninth, fiftieth, fifty-first, fifty-second and fifty-third sessions,

Reaffirming its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983, 39/18 of 23 November 1984, 40/24 of 29 November 1985, 41/100 of 4 December 1986, 42/94 of 7 December 1987, 43/105 of 8 December 1988, 44/80 of 8 December 1989, 45/131 of 14 December 1990, 46/88 of 16 December 1991, 47/83 of 16 December 1992, 48/93 of 20 December 1993, 49/148 of 23 December 1994, 50/139 of 21 December 1995 and 51/84 of 12 December 1996,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the right of peoples to self-determination,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention in and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of those acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted as a result of the aforementioned acts, and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this question to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session under the item entitled "Right of peoples to self-determination".

Middle East peace process

On 26 March [res. 1997/6], the Commission on Human Rights, emphasized that the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East was vital to the full implementation of human rights. It called on all parties to protect the human rights and well-being of detained persons under their control and to work to advance a free civil society under the rule of law to the Palestinian Authority. The Centre for Human Rights was called on to make available to the Palestinian Authority, on request, its programme of advisory services and technical assistance. Governments were invited to contribute to the programme. (For details of political developments in the Middle East, see PART ONE, Chapter VI.)

Rights of Palestinians

On 26 March [res. 1997/4], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 1, with 21 abstentions, reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination without external interference and called on Israel to comply with its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, and to withdraw from the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, in accordance with UN resolutions. It asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to Israel and all other Governments, to distribute it as widely as possible, and to make available to the Commission, prior to its 1998 session, information pertaining to its implementation by the Government of Israel.

In response to a 1996 request by the Commission [YUN 1996, p. 618], the Secretary-General stated that he had received no reply to his request to Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1996 resolution on the situation in occupied Palestine [E/CN.4/1997/23].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Western Sahara

On 26 March [res. 1997/5], the Commission on Human Rights, expressing serious concern about the persistent obstacles to a settlement plan for Western Sahara, encouraged direct talks between the two parties concerned, Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberación de Saguia el-Hamra y de Río de Oro (POLISARIO). It expressed support for the Secretary-General's efforts to organize and supervise, in cooperation with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), a referendum for self-determination of the people of Western Sahara. (See PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Mercenaries

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/83 [YUN 1996, p. 620], the Secretary-General, by an October note [A/52/495], transmitted a report by the Special Rapporteur on the question of the use of mercenaries, Enrique Bernales Ballesteros (Peru). The Special Rapporteur described his activities, the situation regarding the use of mercenaries and the evolution of mercenary activities.

Mercenary activities had become diversified and were undergoing a transformation, acquiring characteristics that made them more of a threat to the enjoyment of human rights, the report stated. In what appeared to be a new international trend, legally registered companies were providing security and military advisory and training services to the armed forces and police of legitimate Governments. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Assembly: reaffirm its condemnation of mercenary activities; suggest to States that they incorporate measures in their legislation to prohibit the use of their territory for the recruitment, training, assembly, transit, financing and use of mercenaries; appeal to States to ratify or accede to the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/34 [YUN 1989, p. 825]; specify that the preservation of the territorial integrity of a State did not authorize granting to private companies functions and powers that went beyond the provision of advisory services and military assistance and included participation in combat; call for a study on ways of reinforcing international prevention, action and intervention machinery to strengthen the exercise of human rights and promote the rule of law in countries threatened or weakened by armed conflicts; and request the Special Rapporteur to investigate more closely the possible involvement of mercenaries in the international sale of military assistance and security, with a view to making proposals for a better legal classification of private companies that offered those services internationally, precluding the presence of mercenaries.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/31], the Special Rapporteur discussed his 1997 activities and gave an update of the mercenary situation.

In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur stated that the Commission on Human Rights should reaffirm its condemnation of mercenary activities; propose to Member States the adoption of legislation to prohibit mercenary activities and the use of national territory for such unlawful acts; call for a study on ways of reinforcing international prevention, action and intervention machinery to strengthen the exercise of human rights and promote the rule of law in countries threatened or weakened by armed conflicts; and formulate proposals for a better legal definition of private companies that offered security services. He also recommended the close monitoring of the evolution of private companies providing security and military advisory and training services to the armed forces and police of legitimate Governments, the relevant legislation of States and the conditions under which States agreed to conclude contracts with those companies.

As at 31 December, the 1989 International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries had been ratified or acceded to by 14 States and had a total of 16 signatories. The Convention was to enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the twenty-second instrument of ratification or accession.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/643], adopted resolution 52/112 by recorded vote (113-18-41) [agenda item 111].

Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the rights of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/150 of 23 December 1994, 50/138 of 21 December 1995 and 51/83 of 12 December 1996,

Recalling also all of its relevant resolutions in which, inter alia, it condemned any State that permitted or tolerated the recruitment, financing, training, assembly, transit and use of mercenaries with the objective of overthrowing the Governments of States Members of the United Nations, especially those of developing countries, or of fighting against national liberation movements, and recalling further the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and the Organization of African Unity,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations concerning the strict observance of the principles of sovereign equality, political independence, territorial integrity of States, the non-use of force or threat of use of force in international relations and self-determination of peoples,

Alarmed and concerned about the danger which the activities of mercenaries constitute to peace and security in developing countries, in particular in Africa and in small States, where democratically elected Governments have been overthrown by mercenaries or through mercenary international criminal activities,

Deeply concerned about the loss of life, the substantial damage to property and the negative effects on the polity and economies of affected countries resulting from mercenary aggression and criminal activities,

Convinced that it is necessary for Member States to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the General Assembly in 1989, and to develop and maintain international cooperation among States for the prevention, prosecution and punishment of mercenary activities,

Further convinced that, notwithstanding the way in which mercenaries or mercenary-related activities are used or the form they take to acquire some semblance of legitimacy, they are a threat to peace, security and the self-determination of peoples and an obstacle to the enjoyment of human rights by peoples,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination concerning the use of mercenaries and mercenary-related activities to topple sovereign Governments and to violate the human rights of peoples and impede the exercise of self-determination despite resolution 51/83;

2. Reaffirms that the use of mercenaries and their recruitment, financing and training are causes for grave concern to all States and violate the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Urges all States to take the necessary steps and to exercise the utmost vigilance against the menace posed by the activities of mercenaries and to take appropriate legislative measures to ensure that their territories and other territories under their control, as well as their nationals, are not used for the recruitment, assembly, financing, training and transit of mercenaries for the planning of activities designed to destabilize or overthrow the Government or threaten the territorial integrity and political unity of sovereign States or to promote secession or to fight the national liberation movements struggling against colonial or other forms of alien domination or occupation;

4. Calls upon all States that have not yet done so to consider taking the necessary action to sign or to ratify the International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries;

5. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur in the fulfilment of his mandate;

6. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as a matter of priority, to publicize the adverse effects of mercenary activities on the right to self-determination and, when requested and where necessary, to render advisory services to States that are affected by the activities of mercenaries;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Governments to make proposals towards a clearer legal definition of mercenaries;

8. Requests the Special Rapporteur to report his findings on the use of mercenaries to undermine the right of peoples to self-determination, with specific recommendations, to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

9. Decides to consider at its fifty-third session the question of the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination under the item entitled "Rights of peoples to self-determination".

Democratic processes

Periodic and genuine elections

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/85 [YUN 1995, p. 739], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/52/474] on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections.

Over the previous two years, the United Nations had received a significant number of requests from Member States for electoral assistance. However, as more States had passed through the initial phase of first-time multi-party elections, the focus was shifting from the specific events surrounding election day to the consolidation of institutions and processes that were essential to viable democracies. During the period under review, electoral assistance was provided to the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) [YUN 1996, p. 318] and the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia (UNOMIL) (see PART ONE, Chapters V and II, respectively). Since October 1995, the United Nations had coordinated international observers for elections in Algeria, Azerbaijan, Chad, the Comoros, Kyrgyzstan, Mali, Sierra Leone and the United Republic of Tanzania. Advice and technical assistance, provided mostly through the UN Electoral Assistance Division, the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, were provided to some 17 Member States on issues such as election organization and budgets, procurement, electoral laws, registration, training, computerization and comparative electoral systems.

The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations should develop new forms of assistance to suit the more specific demands of increasingly well-informed and capable electoral administrators. More attention should be directed to ensuring that all aspects of election organization and administration were supported domestically. Indigenous capacity-building was important in terms of expertise and in procuring election materials.

The UN Trust Fund for Electoral Observation, established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 588] for cases in which requesting Member States were unable to finance in whole or in part the process of electoral verification, had a balance of $1,364,262 as at 31 December 1996.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report were details of specific assistance projects between 18 October 1995 and 16 September 1997.

International conference. The Third International Conference of the New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development (Bucharest, Romania, 2-4 September) [A/52/334] recommended guidelines for strengthening policies and principles to achieve the consolidation of democracy. Those guidelines, addressed to the Governments of the new or restored democracies, included action in the areas of human rights, judicial reform, corruption, organized crime, managing globalization, decentralization, political opposition, political parties, elections, gender equality, civic education, accountability and transparency, the media and civil service reform. The Conference also made recommendations related to civil society and the private sector, and addressed others to donor countries, the international community, the UN system and international financial organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/129 by recorded vote (157-0-15) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the subject, in particular resolutions 49/190 of 23 December 1994 and 50/185 of 22 December 1995,

Reaffirming that United Nations electoral assistance and support for the promotion of democratization are provided only at the specific request of the Member State concerned,

Recognizing the usefulness of a comprehensive and balanced approach in the activities carried out by the United Nations in this field in order to contribute to the strengthening of both democracy and all human rights within the country concerned,

Acknowledging that United Nations electoral assistance has facilitated the holding of successful elections in several Member States, which has resulted in the orderly and non-violent assumption of office by elected officials, recognizing that elections can be free and fair only if held free of coercion and intimidation, and underlining the importance of respect for the results of elections that have been verified as free and fair,

Taking note of the progress review and recommendations adopted by the Third International Conference of the New or Restored Democracies on Democracy and Development, held at Bucharest from 2 to 4 September 1997, in particular the recognition that the organization and administration of elections in the new or restored democracies often benefit from the help of outside resources and expertise and the request that higher priority be given in resource allocation to governance, democracy and participation programmes in order to sustain the momentum of current progress in holding elections,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in particular the recognition therein that assistance provided upon the request of Governments for the conduct of free and fair elections is of particular importance in the strengthening of a pluralistic civil society,

Noting the establishment of the Association of African Election Authorities, which held its founding meeting at Kampala from 14 to 16 January 1997,

Welcoming the support provided by States to the electoral assistance activities of the United Nations, inter alia, through the provision of electoral experts and observers, as well as through contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation,

Noting the continuing submission and evolving nature of requests for electoral assistance by Member States,

Noting also that first-time democratic elections have already been held in many Member States, creating a need for reassessment and adaptation of the forms of assistance routinely provided previously, in particular to meet the needs of supporting subsequent elections,

Recognizing the need for strengthening national capacity-building, electoral institutions and civic education in the requesting countries in order to consolidate and regularize the achievements of previous elections,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on enhancing the effectiveness of the principle of periodic and genuine elections,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the electoral assistance provided to Member States at their request by the United Nations, and requests that such assistance continue on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the guidelines on electoral assistance, recognizing that the fundamental responsibility for organizing free and fair elections lies with Governments;

3. Requests the Electoral Assistance Division of the Department of Political Affairs of the Secretariat to continue to inform Member States on a regular basis about the requests received, responses given to those requests and the nature of the assistance provided;

4. Requests that the United Nations continue its efforts to ensure, before undertaking to provide electoral assistance to a requesting State, that there is adequate time to organize and carry out an effective mission for providing such assistance, that conditions exist to allow a free and fair election and that provisions can be made for adequate and comprehensive reporting of the results of the mission;

5. Commends the steps taken by the United Nations to ensure the continuation and consolidation of the democratization process in certain Member States requesting assistance, including the provision of technical advice on such issues as, inter alia, election organization and budgets, electoral laws, domestic procurement, training, computerization and comparative electoral systems, before and after elections have taken place, as well as needs-assessment missions aimed at recommending programmes that might contribute to the consolidating of the democratization process, and requests that such efforts be strengthened;

6. Recommends that the Electoral Assistance Division continue to provide post-election assistance, as appropriate, to requesting States and electoral institutions, in order to contribute to the sustainability of their electoral processes, as provided for in the report of the Secretary-General, and that it study, in cooperation with relevant United Nations offices, ways of defining more clearly the activities related to democratic consolidation that the United Nations might usefully undertake in assisting the efforts of interested States in this regard;

7. Also recommends that United Nations electoral assistance be geared towards comprehensive observation of the electoral process, beginning with registration and other pre-election activities and continuing through the campaign, election day and the announcement of the election results, in instances where more than technical assistance is required by the requesting State;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take further steps to support States that request assistance by, inter alia, enabling the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in accordance with her mandate, to support democratization activities related to human rights concerns, including human rights training and education, assistance for human rights-related legislative reform, strengthening and reform of the judiciary, assistance to national human rights institutions and advisory services on treaty accession, reporting and international obligations as related to human rights;

9. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to continue its commendable programmes of assistance for governance, in particular those for strengthening democratic institutions and participation and linkages between concerned sectors of society and Governments;

10. Recalls the establishment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Trust Fund for Electoral Observation, and calls upon Member States to consider contributing to the Fund;

11. Stresses the importance of reinforced coordination within the United Nations system, including cooperation with all relevant departments within the Secretariat, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Volunteers, which provide advisory services and technical assistance to requesting Member States, underlines the need for the prompt exchange of information concerning requests for electoral assistance by Member States directed to any of the aforementioned entities, and encourages the Electoral Assistance Division to strengthen its collaboration with those entities, including through an exchange of personnel when appropriate;

12. Notes with appreciation additional efforts being made to enhance cooperation with other international, governmental and non-governmental organizations in order to facilitate more comprehensive and need-specific responses to requests for electoral assistance, and expresses appreciation to those Member States, regional organizations and non-governmental organizations that have provided observers or technical experts in support of United Nations electoral assistance efforts;

13. Encourages the Secretary-General, through the Electoral Assistance Division, to respond to the evolving nature of requests for assistance and the growing need for specific types of medium-term expert assistance aimed at supporting and strengthening the existing capacity of the requesting Government, in particular through enhancing the capacity of national electoral institutions;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Electoral Assistance Division with adequate human and financial resources to allow it to carry out its mandate and to continue to ensure that the Office of the High Commissioner is able to respond, within its mandate and in close coordination with the Electoral Assistance Division, to the increasing number of requests from Member States for advisory services;

15. Recommends that the Secretary-General consider ways to continue to improve coordination and to strengthen further the efforts of the Electoral Assistance Division, the Office of the High Commissioner and the United Nations system in general to respond to its increased and evolving responsibilities in the field of electoral assistance and democratization, as reflected in the present resolution, and to include his recommendations in this regard in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on the status of requests from Member States for electoral assistance and verification, and on his efforts to enhance the Organization's support of the democratization process in Member States.

National sovereignty and non-interference

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/119 by recorded vote (96-58-12) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Respect for the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States in their electoral processes

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purpose of the United Nations to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Recalling also its resolution 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, by which it approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further the principle enshrined in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations, which establishes that nothing contained in the Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter,

Reaffirming the obligation of Member States to comply with the principles of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations regarding the right to self-determination, by virtue of which all peoples can freely determine, without external interference, their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

Recognizing that the principles of national sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of any State should be respected in the holding of elections,

Recognizing also that there is no single political system or single universal model for electoral processes equally suited to all nations and their peoples and that political systems and electoral processes are subject to historical, political, cultural and religious factors,

Convinced that the establishment of the necessary mechanisms and means to guarantee full and effective popular participation in electoral processes corresponds to States,

Recalling all its previous resolutions in this regard, particularly its resolution 50/172 of 22 December 1995,

Welcoming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the processes of promoting and protecting human rights should be conducted in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

1. Reiterates that, by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right, freely and without external interference, to determine their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development and that every State has the duty to respect that right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter;

2. Reaffirms that it is the concern solely of peoples to determine methods and to establish institutions regarding the electoral process, as well as to determine the methods for its implementation according to their constitution and national legislation and that, consequently, States should establish the necessary mechanisms and means to guarantee full and effective popular participation in those processes;

3. Also reaffirms that any activities that attempt, directly or indirectly, to interfere in the free development of national electoral processes, in particular in the developing countries, or that are intended to sway the results of such processes, violate the spirit and letter of the principles established in the Charter and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Further reaffirms that electoral assistance to Member States should be provided by the United Nations only at the request and with the consent of specific sovereign States, in strict conformity with the principles of sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of States, or in special circumstances such as cases of decolonization or in the context of regional or international peace processes;

5. Strongly appeals to all States to refrain from financing or providing, directly or indirectly, any other form of overt or covert support for political parties or groups and from taking actions to undermine the electoral processes in any country;

6. Condemns any act of armed aggression or threat or use of force against peoples, their elected Governments or their legitimate leaders;

7. Reaffirms that all countries have the obligation under the Charter to respect the right of others to self-determination and to determine freely their political status and pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

Establishment of a democratic society

As requested by the Subcommission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 621], Osman El-Hajjé (Lebanon) in June submitted an expanded working paper on ways to promote democracy; ensure economic, social, cultural and political rights through democracy; and overcome obstacles to democracy [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/30]. The working paper contained possible elements for a study on the topic.

Freedom of speech

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/31], the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Abid Hus-sain (India), described his activities and summarized the texts of communications he had sent to 10 States. The Special Rapporteur concluded that despite the rising trend in favour of defending the right to freedom of expression, violations of that right occurred in all parts of the world. He remained deeply concerned with cases brought to his attention in relation to the right to freedom of opinion and expression of women, and called on States to ensure that women were welcomed as active participants in public life. Governments were urged to ensure that measures were taken to eliminate the atmosphere of fear that often prevented many women victims of violence from communicating freely. Organizations and associations working with women's human rights were encouraged to establish closer links with NGOs, for which freedom of opinion and expression was the primary mandate, and to coordinate their communications with the two mechanisms; the Special Rapporteur asked that the Commission on Human Rights consider how the initiative could best be implemented within the United Nations and provide any additional resources for that purpose. He recommended that future discussions on the right to development take account of the need for all Governments to fully promote and protect the rights to freedom of opinion and expression and to seek and receive information. He expressed concern regarding the imbalance between the requirements of his mandate and the inadequate resources made available to him.

In later reports, the Special Rapporteur described his visits to Poland (24-28 May) [E/CN.4/1998/40/Add.2] and to Belarus (28 May-1 June) [E/CN.4/1998/40/Add.1].

Following his visit to Poland, the Special Rapporteur welcomed the reform of the legal and institutional framework for the protection of human rights, and concluded that the right to freedom of opinion and expression found the protection it warranted; any attempt at restriction was closely scrutinized by all sectors of society. He found the most prevalent concerns to be the perceived negative impact of liberalization and free market forces on freedom of expression, and the internationalization of the media. He expressed concern regarding alleged restrictions on journalists' freedom of access to information, allegations of political influence in television, and the increased level of violence on television and such matters as pornography, which had led to calls for restrictions. The Special Rapporteur noted that the issue of insult and defamation had received increasing attention, and voiced concern over certain provisions in the Penal Code regarding insult to government institutions and officials. The Special Rapporteur urged the Government to ensure the independence of the National Broadcasting Council. He proposed avoiding legislation that provided special protection against insult or criticism of government institutions, their members, officials or the head of State; encouraging initiatives by media professionals to establish independent and voluntary professional associations; and not forcing journalists to reveal their sources except in the most limited and clearly defined circumstances.

Regarding his visit to Belarus, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern that while the right to freedom of opinion and expression was guaranteed in the Constitution and the Law on the Press, certain provisions of the latter were ambiguous and based on an unduly broad view of the legitimacy of restrictions. He was particularly concerned at the government monopoly and control over the national radio and television broadcast system and the large-circulation daily newspapers, particularly the biased coverage of the opposition and the limited access of opposition politicians to State television, especially during elections and referenda or other important political events. He noted that the decree on border controls imposed restrictions on the free flow of information and expressed concern that freedom of expression had been impeded by restrictions on demonstrations as well as on the activities of NGOs attempting to develop independent civil society. The Special Rapporteur encouraged the Government to ensure the protections promulgated in the Constitution and the Law on the Press and urged it to take measures to lift restrictions on the independent media's use of State-owned printing and distribution services and to consider liberalizing State control over those facilities; ensure the public's right to receive complete and reliable information; and provide a facilitating environment for the establishment and operation of professional associations and NGOs.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/27], the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the extensive occurrence of detention and extrajudicial killing, persecution and harassment of, as well as threats, acts of violence and discrimination against, persons who exercised the right to freedom of opinion and expression and the intrinsically linked rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, peaceful assembly and association and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs. It appealed to States to ensure respect and support for those rights; to ensure non-discrimination against persons seeking to exercise those rights and freedoms; and to cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur.

The Commission expressed concern at the problem of inadequate resources for the Special Rapporteur and asked the Secretary-General to assist him. It invited the Special Rapporteur to draw the attention of the High Commissioner to those situations which were of particularly serious concern; to pay particular attention to the situation of women and the relationship between the promotion and protection of the right of freedom of opinion and expression and incidents of discrimination based on sex; to cooperate with other UN mechanisms and procedures; to develop further his commentary on the right to seek and receive information and to expand his observations and recommendations arising from communications; to seek the views and comments of the Governments and others concerned; and to consider, in his next report, the impact that the new information technology might have on the equality of opportunity of access to information and on the exercise of the right to freedom of expression as set out in the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423]. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a report in 1998.

Conscientious objectors

In a January report [E/CN.4/1997/99], prepared pursuant to a 1995 request of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 1995, p. 742], the Secretary-General summarized replies to his request for information from States on conscription, conscientious objection to military service, and alternative service. The report updated information contained in a 1983 report [YUN 1983, p. 850].

The Secretary-General stated that 69 States or territories had no conscription, in comparison with 67 listed in the 1983 report. However, in 13 States selective conscription existed but military service was, in principle, voluntary. The number of States in which provision was made for civilian and/or unarmed military service had increased from 15 to 24. At the same time, the number of countries in which there was conscription without alternative service had increased from 40 to 47, explained by the fact that the relevant legislation of a greater number of States was reviewed in the 1997 report than in the earlier one. Two States had conscription in law, but did not enforce it. Information was also received concerning legislation that had been developed and submitted for adoption in States where conscription existed in order to provide for recognition of conscientious objection.

On 16 April [dec. 1997/117], the Commission deferred consideration of conscientious objection to military service until 1998.

Administration of justice

Working Group activities. The five-member sessional Working Group on the administration of justice held three meetings in 1997, on 6, 11 and 15 August in Geneva [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/21]. The Subcommission had decided to establish the group on 5 August [dec. 1997/102].

The Working Group considered the deprivation of the right to life, namely the death penalty, measures to give full effect to the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (III) [YUN 1948, p. 959], juvenile justice and the privatization of prisons. It also discussed habeas corpus, amparo and similar procedures, such as non-derogable rights and the recognition of gross and massive violations of human rights perpetrated on the orders of Governments or sanctioned by them as an international crime, and recommended draft decisions on those subjects to the Subcommission, which were adopted on 27 August [decs. 1997/115 & 1997/116] (see below). The Group postponed to its 1998 session consideration of follow-up measures to the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 47/133 [YUN 1992, p. 744].

Subcommission action. On 27 August [dec. 1997/115], the Subcommission decided to transmit to the Human Rights Committee the Working Group's report containing a recommendation that the Committee consider preparing a new general comment on article 4 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], reaffirming the developing consensus that habeas corpus and the related aspects of amparo, as well as cognate rights, should be considered non-derogable in all circumstances; and to call on all States to incorporate in their domestic law provisions making habeas corpus a non-derogable right in all circumstances.

On 28 August [res. 1997/26], the Subcommission requested authorization to appoint Ali Khan (India) as special rapporteur to undertake an in-depth study on all issues relating to the privatization of prisons in time for consideration by the Subcommission in 2000.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/124 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Aware of the need for special vigilance with regard to the vulnerable situation of children and juveniles, as well as women and girls in detention,

1. Reaffirms the importance of the full and effective implementation of all United Nations standards on human rights in the administration of justice;

8. Invites the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to coordinate closely their activities relating to the administration of justice;

9. Decides to consider the question of human rights in the administration of justice at its fifty-fourth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Compensation for victims

Pursuant to a 1996 request of the Commission on Human Rights [YUN 1996, p. 623], the Secretary-General submitted a January report, with later addendum [E/CN.4/1997/29 & Add.1], describing legislation adopted or planned by States relating to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Secretary-General summarized replies from 10 States.

By a January note [E/CN.4/1997/104], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the draft revised basic principles and guidelines on the right to reparation for victims of gross violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, which were prepared pursuant to a 1996 Subcommission request [YUN 1996, p. 623].

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/29], the Commission called on the international community to give increased attention to the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights. It asked States that had not done so to provide information to the Secretary-General on legislation adopted or in the process of being adopted relating to that right and asked the Secretary-General to submit a report with additional replies in 1999. It also asked him to request all States to submit their views on the revised draft basic principles and guidelines on the subject [E/CN.4/1997/104] and to report in 1998.

Rule of law

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/48], the Commission on Human Rights, affirming that the High Commissioner, with the assistance of the Centre for Human Rights, remained the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention for human rights, democracy and the rule of law, encouraged him to continue to explore the possibility of obtaining from all relevant UN institutions, including financial institutions, the technical and financial means to strengthen the Centre's capacity to provide assistance to national projects aiming at the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law. It asked the High Commissioner to accord high priority to the Centre's technical cooperation with regard to the rule of law. It took note of a proposal by the High Commissioner to convene a high-level meeting of UN agencies and programmes to analyse means, modalities, financing and allocation of responsibilities to implement a comprehensive UN programme of assistance for the rule of law [YUN 1996, p. 624].

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/96 [YUN 1996, p. 624], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/55/475], described assistance provided by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) to strengthen the rule of law and UN system-wide coordination of assistance in promoting human rights, democracy and the rule of law.

The OHCHR technical cooperation programme was developed to respond to requests from Member States seeking to strengthen the rule of law. Among other things, assistance was provided in incorporating international human rights standards in national laws, policies and practices and building national capacities and regional structures to promote and protect human rights, democracy and the rule of law. As part of its efforts to develop training materials in support of rule of law technical cooperation activities, OHCHR finalized a major training package for the police, including a training manual for police trainers, training tools, visual aids and the Pocket Guide on Human Rights Standards for the Police. Human rights training guides were also produced for civilian police and military trainers of peacekeepers and were being prepared for members of the legal professions (judges, magistrates, prosecutors and lawyers) and prison officers.

As to the coordination of assistance, OHCHR, in close cooperation with other UN entities and regional organizations, including UNDP, OAU, the UN Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Andean Commission of Jurists, the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations and UNESCO, was carrying out technical cooperation projects involving the rule of law in Argentina, Armenia, Bhutan, Burundi, Cambodia, El Salvador, Guinea, Malawi, Namibia, Nepal, Palestine, Rwanda, South Africa and Togo. Regarding consultations within the UN system, OHCHR deepened the ongoing dialogue with other UN entities with a view to integrating human rights concerns into all aspects of the Organization's work and to enhancing system-wide coordination in promoting human rights, democracy and the rule of law.

The report drew attention to the Secretary-General's July report on the UN programme for reform [A/51/950] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), which stated that better coordination of human rights-related assistance among UN entities would enhance the impact of those activities and reduce their overall costs. To that end, the Secretary-General directed the High Commissioner to undertake an analysis of technical assistance provided by UN entities in areas related to human rights and to formulate proposals for improving complementarity of action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/125 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Strengthening of the rule of law

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, by adopting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in cooperation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Firmly convinced that the rule of law is an essential factor in the protection of human rights, as stressed in the Declaration, and should continue to attract the attention of the international community,

Convinced that, through their own national legal and judicial systems, States must provide appropriate civil, criminal and administrative remedies for violations of human rights,

Recognizing the importance of the role that can be played by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in supporting national efforts to strengthen the institutions of the rule of law,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, the General Assembly entrusted the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with, inter alia, providing advisory services and technical and financial assistance in the field of human rights, enhancing international cooperation for the promotion and protection of all human rights and coordinating human rights activities throughout the United Nations system,

Recalling the recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights, which was held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, that a comprehensive programme be established within the United Nations with a view to helping States in the task of building and strengthening adequate national structures that have a direct impact on the overall observance of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law,

Recalling also its resolution 51/96 of 12 December 1996, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/48 of 11 April 1997,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Praises the efforts made by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to accomplish its ever-increasing tasks with the limited financial and personnel resources at its disposal;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the scarcity of means at the disposal of the Office of the High Commissioner for the fulfilment of its tasks;

4. Notes that the United Nations Programme of Advisory Services and Technical Assistance in the Field of Human Rights does not have sufficient funds to provide any substantial financial assistance to national projects that have a direct impact on the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law in countries that are committed to those ends but that face economic hardship;

5. Affirms that the Office of the High Commissioner remains the focal point for coordinating system-wide attention on human rights, democracy and the rule of law;

6. Welcomes the deepening of the ongoing dialogue initiated by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with other relevant bodies and programmes of the United Nations system, with a view to enhancing system-wide coordination of assistance in human rights, democracy and the rule of law;

7. Encourages the High Commissioner to continue this dialogue, taking into account the need to explore new synergies with other organs and agencies of the United Nations system with a view to obtaining increased financial assistance for human rights and the rule of law;

8. Also encourages the High Commissioner to continue to explore the possibility of further contact with and support of financial institutions, acting within their mandates, with a view to obtaining technical and financial means to strengthen the capacity of the Office of the High Commissioner to provide assistance to national projects aiming at the realization of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law;

9. Requests the High Commissioner to accord high priority to the technical cooperation activities undertaken by the Office of the High Commissioner with regard to the rule of law;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the proposal contained in the report of the Secretary-General that an analysis be undertaken of technical cooperation provided by the United Nations in the field of human rights with the aim of formulating recommendations for inter-agency coordination, funding and allocation of responsibilities in order to improve efficiency and complementarity of action concerning, inter alia, assistance to States in strengthening the rule of law;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the results of the contacts established in accordance with the present resolution, as well as on any other developments pertaining to the implementation of the above-mentioned recommendation of the World Conference on Human Rights.

State of siege or emergency

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/110], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1996 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1996, p. 625], requested the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and states of emergency to submit in his tenth annual report an updated list of States that had proclaimed, extended or terminated a state of emergency, together with final conclusions on the protection of human rights during states of emergency and specific recommendations on how the question should be dealt with in the future. On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/286, endorsed the Commission's request.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and states of emergency, Leandro Despouy (Argentina), submitted his tenth annual report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/19 & Add.1], containing information on 100 States or territories which, since 1 January 1985, had proclaimed, extended, maintained or terminated a state of emergency.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that States that had not yet done so: bring their domestic legislation into line with the norms and principles of international law in respect of states of emergency; guarantee proper implementation of the norms; use in their legislation the principles and norms prepared by the Special Rapporteur contained in the report; request assistance from the Centre for Human Rights; and continue to cooperate with him. He welcomed the new rules of procedure of the Human Rights Committee, under which Governments that had declared a state of emergency might be requested to submit a report, and proposed that the Committee consider establishing a mechanism to maintain under consideration those countries that had adopted emergency measures. The Special Rapporteur also proposed drafting a new general comment on article 4 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200A(XXI)[YUN1966,p.423], covering the developments that had occurred, norms and principles, monitoring criteria and the extension resulting from precedents of non-derogable rights.

The Commission might consider convening a meeting to establish more effective mechanisms for containing, preventing and attenuating the effects of crises and conflicts, and might develop minimum humanitarian norms applicable to all situations. The Special Rapporteur proposed that the Subcommission maintain the study of human rights and states of emergency as one of the highest priority items on its agenda; appoint another of its members to prepare the annual lists until the Commission appointed a special rapporteur; and organize a meeting of experts to discuss the subject and include the participation of special rapporteurs and members of working groups whose work encompassed the implementation of article 4 of the 1966 International Covenant. He suggested that the special rapporteurs and working groups pay attention to the impact of emergency situations on the specific area covered by their respective mandates and avail themselves of the collaboration provided by the on human rights and states of emergency. The Special Rapporteur suggested that the High Commissioner for Human Rights: give high priority to advisory assistance relating to states of emergency; increase the presence of human rights observers in the field and prepare for them a consistent set of guidelines; focus on activities relating to conflict prevention, peaceful settlement of conflicts, mediation and other preventive diplomacy mechanisms; consider organizing, in coordination with other UN agencies, an international seminar of experts to examine the question of conflicts; and establish a responsive mechanism for exchange of information between the Special Rapporteur on states of emergency and the Human Rights Committee, as well as the special rapporteurs and working groups whose work encompassed the implementation of article 4.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/27], the Subcommission recommended to the Commission that it request the Secretary-General to publish the Special Rapporteur's report in all UN official languages. The Subcommission decided to request Ioan Maxim (Romania) to serve as the new Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and states of emergency and to submit in the eleventh annual report an updated list of States that had proclaimed or extended a state of emergency, and a list, to be submitted every five years, of States that had terminated a state of emergency, together with further recommendations on the protection of human rights during states of emergency.

Humanitarian standards

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General and related addenda [E/CN.4/1997/77 & Add.1,2] summarizing information provided by Governments, UN specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on legislation relevant to situations of public emergency with a view to ensuring that it met the requirements of rule of law and that it did not involve discrimination on the ground of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin. One of the addenda [E/CN.4/1997/77/Add.1] contained the report of the International Workshop on Minimum Humanitarian Standards (Cape Town, South Africa, 27-29 September), organized by Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, in cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). The Workshop concluded that the Commission should ask the Secretary-General to undertake, in coordination with ICRC, an analytical study of the issues addressed at the Workshop.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/21], the Commission invited all States to consider reviewing their national legislation pertaining to situations of public emergency with a view to ensuring that it met the requirements of the rule of law and that it did not discriminate on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin. It asked the Secretary-General, in coordination with ICRC, to submit in 1998 an analytical report on fundamental standards of humanity, taking into consideration the issues raised at the Workshop and identifying common rules of human rights law and international humanitarian law that were applicable in all circumstances. It also asked him to seek the views of and information from Governments, UN bodies, human rights treaty bodies and intergovernmental organizations, as well as regional organizations and NGOs.

Detention

Arbitrary detention

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 1997/50], the Commission on Human Rights renewed the mandate of the five-member Working Group on Arbitrary Detention for a three-year period, and asked the Secretary-General to provide the Working Group with all the assistance it needed. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its request to the Secretary-General by decision 1997/260 of 22 July. The Commission invited the Group to continue to: seek and gather information from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as from the individuals concerned, their families or their legal representatives; re-examine its methods of work; carry out its task with discretion, objectivity, impartiality and independence and respond effectively to credible and reliable information; and take gender-specificity into account in all its reports. It also asked the Group to report in 1998 and to devote all necessary attention to reports concerning the situation of immigrants and asylum seekers who were being held in prolonged administrative custody without the possibility of administrative or judicial remedy, and include observations thereon in its next report. The Commission took note of the Group's decision to give views rather than take decisions. Governments concerned were asked to take account of the Group's views and, where necessary, to take steps to remedy the situation of persons arbitrarily deprived of their liberty and inform the Group of measures they had taken. They were also asked to give the necessary attention to the urgent appeals addressed to them. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to extend his assistance to Governments that wished to receive it, as well as to special rapporteurs and working groups.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Arbitrary Detention held its eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth sessions in Geneva in 1997 (May, September, November/December) [E/CN.4/1998/44]. During the year, the Working Group transmitted 26 communications concerning 119 new cases of alleged arbitrary detention to 20 Governments, of which 9 provided information on all or some of the cases transmitted to them. Regarding the sources that had reported alleged cases of arbitrary detention to the Group, 15 of the 119 individual cases were based on information communicated by the detained persons or by members of their families, 46 on information communicated by local or regional NGOs, and 58 on information provided by NGOs in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council. As to urgent appeals, the Group transmitted 55 such communications concerning 563 individuals to 37 Governments and to the Palestinian Authority. Replies to those appeals were received from 13 Governments. Decisions adopted in November/December 1996 and the opinions adopted in May and September 1997 were contained in a separate addendum to the Group's report [E/CN.4/1998/44/Add.1].

The Working Group visited China (6-16 October) [E/CN.4/1998/44/Add.2], at the invitation of the Government, where it gathered information in Beijing, Chengdu, Lhasa (Tibet) and Shanghai. The visit was in follow-up to a preparatory mission conducted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 627]. The Group held talks with senior-level Government officials, local authorities, lawyers and scholars in Beijing, and visited a detention house in Shanghai. In Lhasa, the Group was received by a regional government leader and visited a prison on the outskirts.

The Group concluded that the revision of the Criminal Procedural Law had helped move China from an inquisitorial system of criminal justice towards a more adversarial system but believed that much still needed to be done in the area of criminal law. It noted with concern that many of the offences were vague and jeopardized the fundamental rights of those wishing to exercise their right to hold an opinion or exercise their freedoms of expression, the press, assembly and religion. The Group believed that the absence of an independent tribunal or a judge at the time of committing a person to re-education through labour might fall short of accepted international standards. The Group recommended that the Government revise the Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure Law and, in particular, regarding the Criminal Procedure Law, incorporate a provision stating that a person was presumed innocent until proved guilty by a court or tribunal at the end of a trial, and define the crime of endangering national security in precise terms. It also proposed incorporating in the criminal law an exception to the effect that the law would not regard as criminal any peaceful activity in the exercise of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, contained in Assembly resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], and establishing a permanent independent tribunal for, or associating a judge with, all proceedings under which authorities might commit a person to re-education through labour.

Juvenile detention

Report of Secretary-General. At its 1997 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1997/26] on human rights in the administration of justice, in particular of children and juveniles in detention, providing replies received from Governments, the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, the League of Arab States and Human Rights Watch.

The Secretary-General pointed out that in several countries either a juvenile justice system did not exist or it existed in a rudimentary state. The area of juvenile justice continued to be laden with reforms, which reflected an interest in the issue but carried a lack of coordination that risked negatively affecting the implementation of the administration of juvenile justice. Preventive measures to diminish the risk of involvement of juveniles in criminal activities included reducing the participation of juveniles in adults' criminal activities, through reinforced action against the use of juveniles by adult criminals as accomplices, and ensuring the protection of youth, through such measures as free phone lines. The age for criminal responsibility, which varied from 10 to 21 years, was still one of the main points of contention. There was an increasing trend towards a mixed composition of the courts where judges could also be welfare officers, pedagogues, psychologists, etc. The same was true of assistance extended to juveniles in detention pending trial or charge. Special training courses existed for police officers dealing with juveniles. Legislation concerning migrant workers' and/or refugees' children was reported. The disposition of a juvenile case without resorting to a formal trial was increasing but for serious crimes custodial measures were applied in all countries. The report stated that separation of adults and juveniles in detention should be guaranteed. However, in certain countries, the social contact among adults and juveniles was encouraged because it enriched the human experience of juveniles, particularly in the case of female juvenile detainees. (See also PART THREE, Chapter IX.)

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/106], the Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit an updated report in 1998. It decided to resume in 1998, on a biennial basis, consideration of children and juveniles in detention.

Subcommission action. On 27 August [res. 1997/25], the Subcommission called on States to provide for the establishment of juvenile courts. It decided to request Lucy Gwanmesia (Cameroon) to submit in 1998 a working paper on juvenile justice.

Detained UN staff members

Report of Secretary-General. In January, the Secretary-General submitted a report [E/CN.4/1997/25] to the Commission on Human Rights updating developments pertaining to the detention of international civil servants and their families. He stated that the arrest or detention of staff members continued to raise serious concern, in particular in Rwanda (see PART ONE, Chapter II), where numerous locally recruited UN staff continued to be detained. The report contained a list of the status of signatures and ratifications of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1288] (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), and a list of 10 staff members killed on duty since 1 July 1995. Annexed to the report was a consolidated list of staff members under arrest and detention or missing. In an addendum [E/CN.4/1997/25/Add.1], the Secretary-General expressed his sorrow at the death of five staff members of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda who were killed in an attack carried out on 4 February.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/25], the Commission called on States to consider becoming parties to the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel. States and others concerned were called on to: ensure respect for the rights of UN and other personnel acting in fulfilment of the mandate of a UN operation and to ensure their safety and security, as well as the inviolability of UN premises; provide adequate and prompt information concerning their arrest or detention; grant immediate access to such personnel by representatives of international organizations; allow independent medical teams to investigate the health of detained UN and other personnel acting to fulfil the mandate of a UN operation and afford them medical assistance; allow representatives of international organizations to attend hearings; ensure the speedy release of arrested or detained UN and other personnel; and ensure that the perpetrators of unlawful acts against them were held accountable.

The Commission asked the Secretary-General to: ensure full respect for the human rights, privileges and immunities of UN and other personnel acting to fulfil the mandate of a UN operation and, when violations occurred, ensure that such personnel were restored to their organization and could seek redress and compensation; implement the recommendations contained in a 1992 report [YUN 1992, p. 739] of the Special Rapporteur on the protection of the human rights of UN staff members, experts and their families; seek in negotiations on headquarters and other mission agreements concerning UN and associated personnel the inclusion of the relevant principles on protection in the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, contained in General Assembly resolution 22 A (I) [YUN 1946-47, p. 100], the 1947 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, contained in Assembly resolution 179 C (II) [YUN 1947-48, p. 190], and the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel; submit to the Assembly, at its fifty-second (1997) session, a report on the situation of UN and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a UN operation who were imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, on new cases that had been successfully settled and on the implementation of the measures in its resolution; and to commission a study on the safety and security problems faced by such personnel.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/52/548 & Corr.1] covering the period from 1 July 1995 to 9 June 1997, discussed the situation of UN and other personnel carrying out activities in the fulfilment of a mandate of a UN operation who were imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, on new cases that had been successfully settled and on the implementation of the measures referred to in the Commission's resolution. There remained unresolved 98 cases of staff members detained, imprisoned, missing or presumed dead.

Impunity

As requested by the Subcommission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 628], the Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights (civil and political), Louis Joinet (France), submitted his final report in June [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/20], containing a revised set of principles for the protection of human rights through action to combat impunity. The set of principles was based on three fundamental rights of victims: the right to know, the right to justice and the right to reparation. Those rights comprised three of the five parts of the set of principles, and were the main substance of the text. The other two parts included a preamble and definitions essential for the interpretation of the principles. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council propose to the General Assembly adoption of the set of principles as a broad strategic framework for the campaign against impunity and as an aid to those negotiating peace agreements. On 28 August [res. 1997/28], the Subcommission transmitted the revised set of principles to the Commission's 1998 session, with a view to its possible transmission to the Assembly, through the Council.

In October [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/20/Rev.1], the Special Rapporteur submitted the text of the set of principles, revised in the light of comments received.

In June, the Special Rapporteur on the question of the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations (economic, social and cultural), El Hadji Guissé (Senegal), submitted his final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/8]. The report dealt with violations of economic, social and cultural rights and of so-called collective rights, such as the right to development and the right to a healthy environment. He also discussed the campaign against impunity for violations of those rights, encompassing both preventive action, which included political, economic, legislative and administrative measures, and repressive and/or remedial action, which aimed at penalizing violations that had already been committed.

The Special Rapporteur suggested cancelling part of the debt and debt-servicing of the States that were colonized or subjected to slavery as compensation for the injury suffered; declaring violations of economic, social and cultural rights to be international crimes; drawing up an optional protocol on economic, social and cultural rights requiring States to report on measures adopted or planned for genuine implementation and improved protection of those rights; ensuring that States that had not done so ratify the International Labour Organization (ILO) conventions and recommendations concerning the rights to work, to social security and to secure and stable employment, thereby providing workers and their families with conditions for a decent life; proposing more elaborate standards to States to combat impunity in cases of corruption, misappropriation of public or private funds, abuse of trust by public officials, and tax and customs fraud, and giving greater consideration to the harm suffered by victims; and establishing and improving machinery for monitoring the management of public affairs. He also suggested holding a high-level international meeting on the impunity of perpetrators of violations of economic, social and cultural rights and encouraging NGOs to create a body for monitoring implementation and protection of economic and social rights.

On 27 August [res. 1997/20], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Special Rapporteur's report to the Commission and recommended that the Commission consider appointing a special rapporteur on the impunity of perpetrators of violations of economic, social and cultural rights.

Independence of the judicial system

Reports of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Param Cumaraswamy (Malaysia), submitted in February his third annual report [E/CN.4/1997/32], in which he discussed his 1996 activities.

The Special Rapporteur transmitted 17 communications to 14 countries and 21 urgent appeals to 16 countries. Replies to urgent appeals were received from 11 countries. The report contained summaries of the communications and urgent appeals, as well as replies received from the Governments to allegations. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the threat to the independence of judges and lawyers was evident in both underdeveloped and developed countries and needed constant international vigilance. He stressed the importance of preparing a standard global training manual for judges and lawyers that would be acceptable in all regions of the world.

The Special Rapporteur visited Peru (9-15 September 1996) [E/CN.4/1998/39/Add.1] to study the use of "faceless" judges for civil and military courts to try civilians charged with terrorist-related crimes and treason. In civil "faceless" tribunals, defence attorneys claimed that they had restricted access to evidence. Furthermore, they were not allowed to cross-examine police or military witnesses whose identities were not revealed prior to, during or after the trial. The Special Rapporteur also studied aspects of the ongoing judicial reform, including procedures for appointing judges, their security of tenure, discipline and dismissal, remuneration, and the role of lawyers and the extent of their independence.

The Special Rapporteur welcomed the establishment by the Government of the Ad Hoc Commission for Pardons in an attempt to correct the wrong done to people who were tried and sentenced by "faceless" civil and military tribunals. He made a series of recommendations, including restoration of the authority of the judiciary, elimination of impunity, establishment of mechanisms to depoliticize the appointment and dismissal of judges, security of tenure for judges, provision of continuing legal education for judges during their tenure, and training in national and international human rights standards for members of the judiciary.

The Special Rapporteur visited Colombia (15-27 September 1996) [E/CN.4/1998/39/Add.2] to study the regional courts system created by the Government to prosecute civilians charged with terrorist-related crimes and drug trafficking in the light of accepted international standards concerning the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, and the right to due process. He also addressed the problem of impunity, in particular in military tribunals in cases concerning human rights violations by members of the armed forces, and of intimidation of the judiciary.

In the regional court system, witnesses for the prosecution were anonymous, as were judges and prosecutors. It was alleged that the system of regional courts was used to persecute social and political activists, as well as human rights defenders. The Special Rapporteur felt that the procedures of the regional courts fell short of international standards on the independence of the judiciary and the use of secret witnesses was of serious concern. The Government intended to discontinue the system by 30 June 1999. Regarding conditions of service for the judiciary, the lack of security of judges created a situation in which judges were intimidated and could not render impartial judgements. Similarly, prosecutors needed security to conduct fair, independent and impartial investigations. As for impunity, given the 99.5 per cent rate of impunity at military tribunals, the Special Rapporteur felt that the Government had failed to punish members of the army who committed human rights violations, as required by international law.

The Special Rapporteur recommended the implementation of recommendations made by the Human Rights Committee in April 1997, as well as those of the Special Rapporteur on the question of torture and of the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions contained in their joint report on their visit to Colombia. The recommendations, which were excerpted in the Special Rapporteur's report, dealt with impunity, the abolition of the regional judicial system, strengthening the justice system, and the independence, impartiality and competence of the military justice system.

Based on a fact-finding mission to Belgium (14-17 October 1997) [E/CN.4/1998/39/Add.3], the Special Rapporteur concluded that, as a result of a 1996 case involving child prostitution, kidnapping and murder, a series of events concerning the judiciary demonstrated that there was a crisis of public confidence in the administration of justice. The Special Rapporteur considered that the root cause was the neglect of the judicial system by successive Governments. Public confidence should be restored by a reform process under way to ensure an independent and impartial judiciary. As the process was ongoing, the Special Rapporteur could not draw final conclusions or make recommendations. Accordingly, he would continue to monitor developments.

The Special Rapporteur carried out a fact-finding mission to the United Kingdom (20-31 October 1997) [E/CN.4/1998/39/Add.4] to examine reports of alleged systematic abuse of defence lawyers in Northern Ireland and in England and other abuses within the judicial system.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) had engaged in activities that constituted intimidation, hindrance, harassment or improper interference. Accordingly, he recommended an independent and impartial investigation of those threats to legal counsel in Northern Ireland; Government protection in cases of threats to solicitors or barristers, and investigation of those threats; defence of solicitors by the Bar Council and the Law Society for those subjected to harassment and intimidation; the lodging of formal complaints by lawyers; and the organization by RUC of training seminars for police officers on the role of defence lawyers in the administration of justice. Other recommendations called for: respect for the right to immediate access to counsel; the presence of a solicitor during police interrogations and an end to the practice of closed visits in England and Wales; the installation of video and audio-recording equipment in holding centres in Northern Ireland; an independent judicial inquiry into the murder of Patrick Finucane, a Belfast solicitor; respect for privileged communications between an attorney and client; adequate provision of resources to the Police Ombudsman; and training programmes on international human rights standards and on the jurisprudence of international human rights bodies.

The United Kingdom submitted a response [E/CN.4/1998/153] to the Special Rapporteur's report, providing details on Government action as to the issues raised and requesting further information.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/23], the Commission on Human Rights extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a three-year period and asked him to submit a report in 1998. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was invited to continue to provide technical assistance to train judges and lawyers and to assist the Special Rapporteur in developing a manual on the training of judges and lawyers in human rights. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/246, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and its request that he submit a report in 1998.

Right to a fair trial

On 11 April [dec. 1997/109], the Commission on Human Rights endorsed a 1996 Subcommission request [YUN 1996, p. 630] that Special Rapporteurs Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation) and David Weissbrodt (United States) compile and update the study entitled "The right to a fair trial: current recognition and measures necessary for its strengthening" so that it could be published in all official UN languages. On 22 July, by decision 1997/285, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision.

Capital punishment

By a roll-call vote of 27 to 11, with 14 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 3 April [res. 1997/12], urged States that still maintained the death penalty to comply with their obligations under the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], notably not to impose the death penalty for any but the most serious crimes, not to impose it for crimes committed by persons under the age of 18, to exclude pregnant women from capital punishment and to ensure the right to seek pardon or commutation of sentence. It called on States parties to the 1966 International Covenant that had not yet done so to consider acceding to or ratifying the Second Optional Protocol, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, contained in Assembly resolution 44/128 [YUN 1989, p. 484]. States that still retained the death penalty were called on to: observe the 1984 safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty [YUN 1984, p. 710]; restrict the number of offences for which the death penalty might be imposed; consider suspending executions; and make available to the public information regarding the imposition of the death penalty. The Secretary-General was asked to submit a yearly supplement of changes in law and practice concerning the death penalty worldwide to his quinquennial report [YUN 1996, p. 630] on capital punishment, containing information on the implementation of the 1984 safeguards.

Other issues

Terrorism

Notes by Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a 1996 note of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1997/39], in which he provided views concerning human rights and terrorism submitted by nine Governments and one UN body. The Secretary-General had sought information from States and relevant UN bodies, in accordance with the Commission's 1996 request [YUN 1996, p. 630].

By a note of October 1997 [A/52/483], the Secretary-General transmitted the 1996 note to the General Assembly.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/42], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 28 to none, with 23 abstentions, condemned all acts, methods and practices of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, as well as incitement to ethnic hatred, violence and terrorism. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to collect information on terrorism and to make it available for consideration by special rapporteurs and working groups concerned and to the Commission.

Subcommission action. As requested by the Subcommission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 630], Kalliopi Koufa (Greece) submitted in June a working paper on terrorism and human rights [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/28]. She presented issues that would need to be examined in a study on the subject, including the nature of contemporary terrorism, the criminal aspects of terrorism, the human rights dimension of terrorism and the definition of international terrorism. Other issues could be addressed, such as the connection between terrorist groups and transnational organized crime, or the growth in the post-cold-war era of terrorist activity by ethnic and national minorities.

On 28 August [res. 1997/39], the Subcommission, condemning all acts, methods and practices of terrorism, called on Governments to take measures to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism. It recommended that the Commission authorize the appointment of Ms. Koufa as Special Rapporteur to conduct a comprehensive study on terrorism and human rights on the basis of her working paper. It asked her to submit a preliminary report in 1998, a progress report in 1999 and a final report in 2000. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her and to invite Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide her with information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/133 by recorded vote (115-0-57) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Hostage-taking

On 11 April [res. 1997/28], the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned all acts of hostage-taking and demanded that all hostages be released immediately and without any preconditions. It called on States to take all measures necessary to prevent, combat and punish acts of hostage-taking, and invited relevant NGOs to join States in condemning such acts. All thematic special rapporteurs and working groups were urged to address the consequences of hostage-taking in their forthcoming reports.

Extra-legal executions

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Commission on Human Rights had before it a report [E/CN.4/1997/60 & Add.1] submitted by its Special Rapporteur on summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal), updating his activities since his 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 630]. He discussed his mandate and activities, and described situations covering the period from 25 November 1995 to 1 November 1996, where urgent appeals and other communications alleging violations of the right to life had been transmitted to Governments, together with replies or observations received from them. Issues of special concern to the Special Rapporteur related to capital punishment, impunity, and cooperation with the High Commissioner for Human Rights and with other UN bodies.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the persistent magnitude of the occurrence of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions was reflected in the transmission of 131 urgent appeals and allegations of violations of the right to life on behalf of more than 1,300 individuals, as well as follow-up communications to more than 50 countries. One of the most prevalent targets of such executions continued to be persons involved in struggles to secure rights to land or to prevent or combat racial, ethnic or religious discrimination and ensure respect for social, cultural, economic, civil and political rights. He made a series of recommendations to States and to the Commission regarding capital punishment, death threats, death in custody, excessive use of force by law enforcement officials, violations of the right to life during armed conflict, genocide, the imminent expulsion of persons to countries where their lives were in danger, impunity and victims' rights.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/61], the Commission, strongly condemning all extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, demanded that Governments end those practices and take action to combat and eliminate them. It asked the Special Rapporteur to: continue examining situations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary detention and to report annually; respond to information he received; enhance his dialogue with Governments and follow up on his recommendations after country visits; continue to pay special attention to extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of children and women and to allegations concerning the right to life; pay special attention to executions where the victims were carrying out peaceful activities in defence of human rights and fundamental freedoms; continue monitoring the implementation of international standards on safeguards and restrictions relating to the imposition of capital punishment; and apply a gender perspective in his work. Governments were urged to assist the Special Rapporteur and to respond to communications he transmitted to them.

The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to continue to ensure that personnel specialized in human rights and humanitarian law issues formed part of UN missions in order to deal with serious human rights violations, such as extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. Those requests to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/270 of 22 July. The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 9, 14 and 15 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], appeared not to be respected.

Freedom of movement

In July, the Special Rapporteur on the right to freedom of movement, Volodymyr Boutkevitch (Ukraine), submitted a working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/22] in which he reviewed the right to freedom of movement and related issues contained in international legal instruments, including the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [YUN 1965, p. 440], the 1975 Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in Their Relations with International Organizations of a Universal Character [YUN 1975, p. 880] and the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child [YUN 1989, p. 560]. He also discussed the right at the national level and examined the situation during the last 10 years.

The Special Rapporteur called for a new study on the basis of those previously conducted. The scope of the study should not extend beyond the limits of articles 12 and 13 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [YUN 1966, p. 423].

On 28 August [res. 1997/30], the Subcommission recommended to the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council the appointment of Mr. Boutkevitch as Special Rapporteur to prepare an analysis of current trends and developments in respect of the right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return, to have the possibility to enter other countries without discrimination, and to seek and enjoy asylum, and to study in particular the extent of restrictions permissible under article 12 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a preliminary report in 1999.

On the same date [res. 1997/31], the Subcommission reaffirmed the fundamental right of refugees and internally displaced persons to return voluntarily to their country of origin and/or within it to their place of origin or choice.

Mass exoduses

Report of High Commissioner. In a January report [E/CN.4/1997/42], the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights provided information on solutions that Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs had found to be effective regarding mass exoduses. He presented a compilation of information and recommendations from human rights mechanisms on problems resulting in mass exoduses of populations or impeding their voluntary return home. Information on international co-operation was provided by Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs.

The High Commissioner stated that efforts were being made to develop a system-wide approach to fill gaps in the existing response to the needs of victims in emergency situations. An increasing role was being given to regional organizations, which was often necessary as mass exoduses rarely affected one country in isolation. He recommended strengthening cooperation between international agencies, focusing on the mobilization of a response to early-warning signals, preventing ethnic conflicts, and preventing and resolving crises of displacement.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/75], the Commission on Human Rights, strongly deploring ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of migratory movements, urged States to ensure respect for human rights. It invited special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission and UN human rights treaty bodies to seek information on problems resulting in mass exoduses of populations or impeding their voluntary return home, to include such information, together with recommendations, in their reports, and to bring that information to the attention of the High Commissioner for Human Rights. All UN bodies, the specialized agencies and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were asked to cooperate with all Commission mechanisms and to provide them with information on human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons. The Secretary-General was urged to give high priority and to allocate resources to strengthening the system for undertaking early-warning activities to identify all human rights abuses that contributed to mass outflows of persons, and to invite comments on the issue. On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by deci- sion 1997/278, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

The Commission asked the High Commissioner to pay attention to situations that caused or threatened to cause mass exoduses and to address them effectively through emergency preparedness and response mechanisms. The High Commissioner was also asked to invite Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to provide information and to submit in 1998 an update of his report.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 50/182 [YUN 1995, p. 751], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/52/494] on human rights and mass exoduses in which he described efforts instituted to enhance the UN capacity to avert new refugee flows and to tackle the root causes of such outflows. He stated that steps had been taken to include in a more systematic manner all UN entities that possessed expertise or the capacity to contribute to a comprehensive response. Specific entities at Headquarters had been made responsible for ensuring that a response was mobilized and for facilitating decision-making in the field. Increased authority and responsibility had been delegated at the field level to formulate strategies and set priorities for action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/132 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the scale and magnitude of exoduses and displacements of people in many regions of the world and by the human suffering of refugees and displaced persons,

Recalling its previous relevant resolutions, as well as those of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular Commission resolution 1997/75 of 18 April 1997, and the conclusions of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which recognized that gross violations of human rights, including in armed conflicts, are among the multiple and complex factors leading to the displacement of people,

Noting with satisfaction the participation of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in the framework for coordination activities and projects organized by the United Nations system aimed at evolving a comprehensive approach to address root causes and effects of movements of refugees and other displaced persons and the strengthening of emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, Conscious of the fact that mass exoduses of populations are caused by multiple and complex factors, which may include human rights violations, political, ethnic and economic conflicts, famine, insecurity, violence, poverty and environmental degradation, indicating that comprehensive approaches, in particular early warning, require an intersectoral and multidisciplinary approach to enable a coherent response, particularly at the international and regional levels,

Recognizing that the human rights machinery of the United Nations, including the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the human rights treaty bodies, has important capabilities for addressing human rights violations which cause movements of refugees and displaced persons or prevent durable solutions to their plight,

Convinced that the activities of these mechanisms, with a view, inter alia, to preventing mass exoduses and to strengthening emergency preparedness and response mechanisms of the United Nations system as a whole, should be encouraged and further developed and coordinated at both the international and regional levels, with priority given to the systematization of early-warning information collection,

Welcoming the continuation of inter-agency consultations on early warning of mass flows of refugees, pursuant to the decision of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, with the purpose of serving in both prevention of and preparedness for humanitarian emergencies,

Recognizing the complementarity between the systems for the protection of human rights and for humanitarian action and that the work of humanitarian agencies makes an important contribution to the achievement of human rights,

Welcoming the cooperation between the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant United Nations entities to ensure effective coordination of activities within their mandates and expertise with respect to returnee promotion and monitoring, technical advice, institution-building and rehabilitation activities,

Recognizing that women and children constitute the majority of most refugee populations and that, in addition to the problems they share in common with all refugees, women and girls in such circumstances are vulnerable to gender-based discrimination and gender-specific violations of human rights,

Recalling that States parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees undertake, under article 35, to provide information on the implementation of the Convention to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, as was recalled by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in its general conclusions 77(XLVI) of 1995, 79(XLVII) of 1996 and 81(XLVIII) of 1997 on international protection,

Distressed by the widespread violation of the principle of non-refoulement and of the rights of refugees, in some cases resulting in loss of refugee lives, and by reports indicating that large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers have been subjected to refoulement and expelled in highly dangerous situations, and recalling that the principle of non-refoulement is not subject to derogation,

Recalling all relevant human rights standards, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the principles of international protection for refugees, the above-mentioned general conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on international protection and the fact that asylum applicants should have access to fair and expeditious status-determination procedures,

Welcoming the continuing efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in meeting the protection and assistance needs of refugees worldwide and in working to make it possible for refugees to exercise their fundamental right to return to and to stay in their own countries, in safety and dignity,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Recalls with satisfaction its endorsement, in its resolution 41/70 of 3 December 1986, of the call upon all States to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms and to refrain from denying these to individuals in their population because of nationality, ethnicity, race, religion or language, and urges States to refrain from denying them because of gender;

3. Strongly deplores ethnic and other forms of intolerance as one of the major causes of forced migratory movements, and urges States to take all necessary steps to ensure respect for human rights, especially the rights of persons belonging to minorities;

4. Again invites all Governments and regional, inter-governmental and humanitarian organizations concerned, where appropriate, to intensify their cooperation and assistance in worldwide efforts to address the serious problems resulting from mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons and the causes of such exoduses;

5. Emphasizes the responsibility of all States and international organizations to cooperate with those countries, particularly developing countries, affected by mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons, and calls on Governments and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to continue to respond to the assistance needs of countries hosting large numbers of refugees until durable solutions are found;

6. Urges all bodies involved in inter-agency consultations on early warning to cooperate fully in and to increase the necessary commitment and resources to the successful operation of the consultations;

7. Invites the special rapporteurs, special representatives and working groups of the Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations human rights treaty bodies, acting within their mandates, to seek information, where appropriate, on human rights problems which may result in mass exoduses of populations or impede their voluntary return home, to include, where appropriate, such information, together with recommendations thereon, in their reports and to bring such information to the attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for appropriate action in fulfilment of her mandate, in consultation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

8. Requests all United Nations bodies, including the human rights treaty bodies, acting within their mandates, the specialized agencies and governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to cooperate fully with all mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and, in particular, to provide them with all relevant information in their possession on the human rights situations creating or affecting refugees and displaced persons;

9. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in the exercise of her mandate, as set out in General Assembly resolution 48/141 of 20 December 1993, to coordinate human rights activities throughout the United Nations system and, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to pay particular attention to situations which cause or threaten to cause mass exoduses and to contribute to efforts to address such situations effectively through protection measures, emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, including information sharing with the United Nations early-warning mechanisms, and the provision of technical advice, expertise and cooperation in countries of origin as well as in host countries;

10. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to contribute to the creation of an environment viable for return in post-conflict societies through initiatives such as the rehabilitation of the justice system, the creation of national institutions capable of defending human rights, broad-based programmes of human rights education and strengthening of local non-governmental organizations through programmes of advisory services and technical cooperation;

11. Urges the Secretary-General to give high priority and to allocate the necessary resources within the regular budget of the United Nations for the consolidation and strengthening of emergency preparedness and response mechanisms, including early-warning activities in the humanitarian area, for the purpose of ensuring, inter alia, that effective action is taken to identify all human rights abuses which contribute to mass outflows of persons and to invite comments on this issue;

12. Welcomes with appreciation the contributions of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to the deliberations by the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-third session and to other international human rights bodies and mechanisms and the Commission's invitation to her to address its fifty-fourth session;

13. Encourages States that have not already done so to consider acceding to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and to other relevant regional refugee instruments, as applicable, and to relevant international human rights instruments;

14. Notes with appreciation that a number of States not parties to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol continue to maintain a generous approach to asylum;

15. Encourages States parties to the 1951 Convention to provide information to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in accordance with article 35 of the Convention;

16. Calls upon States to ensure effective protection of refugees by, inter alia, respecting the principle of non-refoulement;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution as it pertains to all aspects of human rights and mass exoduses, including detailed information on the programmatic, institutional, administrative, financial and management efforts instituted to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to avert new flows of refugees and to tackle the root causes of such flows;

18. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fourth session.

Internally displaced persons

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/39], the Commission on Human Rights, expressing concern about the number of internally displaced persons who received inadequate protection and assistance, recalled the compilation and analysis of legal norms [YUN 1996, p. 633] submitted by the Secretary-General's representative, which concluded that there were several significant areas in which the law failed to provide sufficient protection. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to publish the compilation and analysis in all UN working languages and to disseminate it widely and encouraged Governments to translate it into other languages. The Inter-Agency Standing Committee and its Task Force on Internally Displaced Persons and other organizations were urged to continue to focus on problems relating to and solutions for internally displaced persons, including the setting up of a more comprehensive and coherent system of collecting data on their situation, and to strengthen their collaboration with the representative. Welcoming the attention paid by relevant rapporteurs, working groups, experts and treaty bodies to issues of international displacement, the Commission called on them to continue to seek information on situations that had already created or could create internal displacement and to include relevant information and recommendations in their reports and make them available to the representative. It called on the High Commissioner for Human Rights to develop projects, in cooperation with Governments, relevant international organizations and the Secretary-General's representative, to promote the human rights of internally displaced persons, as part of the programme of advisory services and technical cooperation. The Secretary-General was asked to assist his representative, and the representative was encouraged to seek the contribution of local, national and regional institutions.

The Economic and Social Council, on 22 July, approved the Commission's request for publication of the compilation and analysis (decision 1997/252).

Report of Secretary-General's representative.

In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/43], the Secretary-General's representative, Francis M. Deng (Sudan), provided an update of his activities regarding the development of a legal framework for addressing the needs of the internally displaced, the promotion of effective institutional arrangements for protecting and assisting the internally displaced and undertaking country visits.

The representative had studied the specific form for a legal framework and was in the process of drafting guiding principles. Regarding institutional arrangements, there was no institution with exclusive responsibility for the internally displaced. The representative urged the Commission to strengthen the Centre for Human Rights to allow it to take a more active approach to addressing the protection concerns of the internally displaced in the field. Humanitarian agencies should collaborate with human rights organizations to ensure an integrated and comprehensive approach that addressed both assistance and protection concerns. Country visits deepened understanding of the various dimensions of internal displacement and helped to develop global and region-specific standards and strategies towards its resolution. They also provided an opportunity for a constructive exchange of views with Governments and for raising the level of awareness within the country affected. The representative stated that he intended to continue to focus on developing a legal framework, improving institutional arrangements and visiting countries.

In accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1995/273 [YUN 1995, p. 753], the Secretary-General transmitted, by a November note [A/52/506], his representative's report on internally displaced persons to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/130 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Protection of and assistance to internally displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Deeply disturbed by the alarmingly high numbers of internally displaced persons throughout the world who receive inadequate protection and assistance, and conscious of the serious problem this is creating for the international community,

Conscious of the human rights and the humanitarian dimensions of the problem of internally displaced persons and the responsibilities this poses for States and the international community to explore methods and means better to address their protection and assistance needs,

Recalling the relevant norms of international human rights instruments, of international humanitarian law and analogous refugee law, and emphasizing the need for their better implementation with regard to internally displaced persons,

Recalling also the emphasis in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, on the need to develop global strategies to address the problem of internal displacement,

Noting the progress made thus far by the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons in developing a legal framework, analysing institutional arrangements, undertaking dialogue with Governments and issuing a series of reports on particular country situations, together with proposals for remedial measures,

Welcoming the request made by the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1997/39 of 11 April 1997, to the Secretary-General to ensure the rapid publication and the wide dissemination of the compilation and analysis of legal norms prepared by his representative,

Welcoming also the decision by the Inter-Agency Standing Committee to extend a standing invitation to the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons to participate in its meetings and those of its subsidiary bodies, and encouraging further strengthening of this collaboration in order to promote better assistance, protection and development strategies for internally displaced persons,

Recalling its resolution 50/195 of 22 December 1995,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons;

2. Commends the representative of the Secretary-General for the activities undertaken so far, despite the limited resources available to him, and for the catalytic role he continues to play in raising the level of consciousness about the plight of internally displaced persons;

3. Encourages the representative of the Secretary-General to continue his analysis of the causes of internal displacement, the needs of those displaced, measures of prevention and ways to increase protection, assistance and solutions for internally displaced persons;

4. Also encourages the representative of the Secretary-General to continue to pay specific attention in his review to the protection and assistance needs of women and children, bearing in mind the relevant strategic objective in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

5. Looks forward to the comprehensive study being prepared by the representative of the Secretary-General to promote a comprehensive strategy for better protection, assistance and development for internally displaced persons;

6. Welcomes Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/39, in which the Commission encouraged the representative of the Secretary-General to continue, on the basis of his compilation and analysis of legal norms, to develop a comprehensive framework for the protection of internally displaced persons, and takes note of his preparations for guiding principles to this end;

7. Calls upon all Governments to continue to facilitate the activities of the representative of the Secretary-General, in particular Governments with situations of internal displacement, encourages them to give serious consideration to inviting the representative to visit their countries so as to enable him to study and analyse more fully the issues involved, and thanks those Governments which have already done so;

8. Invites Governments to give due consideration, in dialogue with the representative of the Secretary-General, to his recommendations and suggestions addressed to them, in accordance with his mandate, and to inform him of measures taken thereon;

9. Urges all relevant United Nations humanitarian assistance and development organizations concerned to enhance their collaboration with the representative of the Secretary-General by developing frameworks of cooperation to promote protection, assistance and development for internally displaced persons and to provide all possible assistance and support to him;

10. Also urges those organizations, especially through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, to develop a more comprehensive and coherent system of collecting data on the situation of internally displaced persons, in cooperation with the representative of the Secretary-General;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the representative to carry out his mandate effectively;

12. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fourth session.

Population transfer

Report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur on human rights and population transfer, Awn Shawkat Al-Khasawneh (Jordan), submitted in June his final report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23 & Corr.1]. He discussed the views and recommendations of an expert seminar on population transfer and the implantation of settlers (Geneva, 17-21 February); the findings of the seminar on the principles violated by population transfer and the human rights standards that population transfers and the implantation of settlers violated; outstanding issues concerning the impact of territorial changes on population transfers and the implantation of settlers; State succession and nationality upon the dissolution of States; the problem of military necessity in relation to the issue; violations of economic, social and cultural rights in instances of population transfer; and civil remedies for situations of population transfer and the implantation of settlers. Annexed to the report was a draft declaration on population transfer and implantation of settlers developed by the experts for the Subcommittee's consideration.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Subcommittee consider preparing an international instrument to set or codify international standards applicable to population transfer and the implantation of settlers; establishing a working group to monitor compliance with the declaration; using a flexible, investigative and monitoring process for population transfers; and establishing an international trust fund for the rehabilitation of the survivors of population transfer. Other options were the development of an additional protocol to the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 419 & 423], setting forth the right to one's homeland and the right to voluntary repatriation, or a convention on the prevention and punishment of the crime of mass expulsion.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/29], the Subcommission decided to convene a further expert seminar, and recommended to the Commission that it publish and widely disseminate the Special Rapporteur's final report.

Disappearance of persons

Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [F/CN.4/1997/103], the Secretary-General described action taken by him to disseminate and promote the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, contained in General Assembly resolution 47/133 [YUN 1992, p. 744].

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/26], the Commission on Human Rights deplored the fact that some Governments had never provided substantive replies concerning cases of enforced disappearances in their countries or acted on the recommendations concerning them made by the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, established in 1980 [YUN 1980, p. 843]. Governments were urged to cooperate with the Group and invited to take steps to implement the 1992 Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and provide information on measures taken to give effect to the Declaration, as well as obstacles encountered.

The Commission reminded the Group: that its primary role was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and the Governments concerned; to observe UN standards and practices regarding the handling of communications and the consideration of government replies; to continue to consider the question of impunity; to pay particular attention to cases of children subjected to enforced disappearance and children of disappeared persons; and to apply a gender perspective in its reporting process. The Commission asked the Group to report in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and keep it and the Commission informed of steps taken to disseminate and promote the 1992 Declaration.

Working Group activities. In 1997, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances held three sessions: its fifty-first in New York (12-16 May) and its fifty-second and fifty-third in Geneva (18-22 August, 12-21 November) [E/CN.4/1998/43]. In addition to its original mandate, which was to act as a channel of communication between families of disappeared persons and Governments concerned, with a view to ensuring that sufficiently documented and clearly identified individual cases were investigated and the whereabouts of the disappeared persons clarified, the Working Group monitored States' compliance with the 1992 Declaration.

The total number of cases under active consideration stood at 44,940 in 1997 and the number of countries with outstanding cases of alleged disappearance was 63. During the period under review—up to 21 November, the last day of the Group's third annual session—the Group had received 1,111 new cases of disappearance in 26 countries. The Group sent urgent action appeals to Governments regarding 140 cases.

In order to make the 1992 Declaration better known and draw Governments' attention to their responsibilities, the Group adopted general comments on article 19, concerning the right to compensation for victims and for dependants in the case of the death of the victim, in which it stressed that the right to obtain redress for acts of enforced disappearance included not only punishment of the perpetrators and monetary compensation, but also medical, psychological, legal and social rehabilitation; restoration of personal liberty, employment and property; and other forms of restitution, satisfaction and reparation that might remove the consequences of the enforced disappearance.

The Group followed progress made in the drafting of an international convention on the prevention and punishment of enforced disappearance. It believed that one of the existing treaty-monitoring bodies or the Group should be entrusted with monitoring compliance.

The Group pointed out that, since its establishment in 1980, it had transmitted a total of 47,758 cases to 76 Governments. Out of those, only 2,801 cases could be clarified (1,822 by Governments and 979 by non-governmental sources); 17 cases had been discontinued. At the date of clarification, 1,681 persons were at liberty, 442 were in detention, and 678 had died. Many of the unresolved disappearances, particularly in Latin America, dated back to the 1970s or the 1980s.

Most of the victims had probably been dead for a long time. Therefore, the Group had intensified efforts to mediate between the families of missing persons and the respective Governments to find a solution to the old cases that might be acceptable to all sides concerned, by means of a judicial declaration of presumption of death, with the concurrence of the families, and the payment of adequate compensation to them. Another way to clarify old cases was the exhumation and identification of remains from mass graves and other places where victims of enforced disappearances had been clandestinely buried.

The Group, stressing that impunity was one of the root causes of enforced disappearances and a major obstacle to clarifying past cases, recommended that Governments comply with their obligations under the 1992 Declaration not to impede investigations by enacting amnesty laws. It also recommended that the Commission take action in relation to countries that did not cooperate with the Group.

Missing persons in the former Yugoslavia

The expert member of the Working Group in charge of the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia resigned on 26 March, stating as the cause a lack of support by the international community for his efforts to clarify cases of disappearance by all available means, including exhumation. Since the discontinuation of the special process, the Group decided that cases of disappearance that occurred in Croatia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina until 14 December 1995, the date of entry into force of the Dayton-Paris Peace Agreement [YUN 1995, p. 544], would not be dealt with by the Group. However, the Group would examine cases in other successor States of the former Yugoslavia and cases that occurred in Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina after 14 December 1995.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 1997/57], the Commission expressed its appreciation to the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for his contribution to the problem of missing persons in the former Yugoslavia and asked, in consideration of his resignation, that the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in the former Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter III), the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the Office of the High Representative (see PART ONE, Chapter V), the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia [YUN 1996, p. 638] and other parties consult the expert so that arrangements could be made for those organizations to assume his functions.

The Commission called on the countries under the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to release all individuals held as a result of any conflict between or among them; release immediately to ICRC and other relevant organizations information, including but not limited to all medical, dental and autopsy records necessary to resolve the fate of missing persons as a result of the conflict; and to cooperate with the International Commission on Missing Persons in the Former Yugoslavia, the Expert Group on Exhumations and Missing Persons of the Office of the High Representative and the ICRC Working Group on Missing Persons.

On 27 March, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) transmitted to the Commission its comments [E/CN.4/1997/133] on the expert's report on the 1996 situation of missing persons in the former Yugoslavia [YUN 1996, p. 638].

Torture and cruel treatment

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January, Special Rapporteur Nigel S. Rodley (United Kingdom) submitted his annual report [E/CN.4/1997/7] to the Commission on Human Rights concerning torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. He made urgent appeals on behalf of persons who were allegedly being tortured or whom it was feared might be and transmitted 130 such appeals to 45 Governments concerning 490 individuals, of whom at least 50 were known to be women and 10 minors, as well as several groups of persons with regard to whom fears of torture had been expressed. The Special Rapporteur also sent 68 letters to 61 Governments containing some 669 cases or incidents of alleged torture, about 67 of which were known to be women and 55 minors. In addition, 42 countries provided the Special Rapporteur with replies on some 459 cases for 1996, whereas 24 did so regarding some 363 cases submitted in previous years. The Special Rapporteur provided brief summaries of general allegations, statistics of numbers of individual cases transmitted and responses received, as well as his observations where applicable. More complete summaries were contained in an addendum to his report [E/CN.4/1997/7/Add.1].

In 1997, the Special Rapporteur visited Mexico (7-16 August) [E/CN.4/1998/38/Add.2], where he met with government officials and with persons who or whose relatives allegedly had been tortured. He interviewed prisoners who claimed they had been tortured and received verbal and written information from NGOs.

The Special Rapporteur stated that torture and similar ill-treatment were frequent occurrences in many parts of Mexico, although the information he received would not allow him to conclude that it was systematically practised in all parts of the country. Torture was inflicted mainly for the purpose of eliciting confessions or information. Sometimes, it was attendant on brutally executed arrests. The practice continued to occur despite the fact that Mexico had in place an important array of legal safeguards that should make torture a rare event. The Special Rapporteur urged Mexico to ratify the Optional Protocol to the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200A (XXI) [YUN 1996, p. 419], and to make the declaration provided for in article 22 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, contained in Assembly resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813] (see below). He also recommended: independent inspection of places of detention by experts and respected community members; videotaping of interrogations; requiring statements by detainees to be made before a judge in order to have probative value; overhauling the public defender system; monitoring the database of dismissed police officers to ensure they had not transferred to another jurisdiction; establishing a system of rotation among police and of the Public Prosecutor's Office; subjecting to civilian justice cases of serious crimes committed by military personnel; employing doctors independently of the institution in which they practised; improving the law on compensation for victims of human rights violations; establishing an independent prosecution service; enacting legislation to enable victims to challenge, before the judiciary, the failure of the Public Prosecutor's Office to initiate proceedings on human rights cases; legally establishing a limit to the duration of investigations on human rights cases; taking measures to ensure that the recommendations of human rights commissions were complied with; and investigating threats and intimidation against human rights defenders.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/38], the Commission on Human Rights asked the General Assembly, in preparing for the fiftieth anniversary of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter I), to proclaim 26 June a UN international day in support of the victims of torture and the total eradication of torture, and the effective functioning of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/251 of 22 July, approved the Commission's request.

The Commission called on Governments to prohibit torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and reminded them that corporal punishment could amount to inhuman or degrading punishment or even torture. It also reminded them that prolonged incommunicado detention might facilitate the perpetration of torture and could constitute a form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

The Special Rapporteur was invited to continue to examine questions concerning torture directed against women and children and conditions conducive to such torture. It approved the methods of work used by the Special Rapporteur and called on him to include in his report information on the follow-up by Governments to his recommendations, visits and communications. The Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to report in 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/149 [draft: A/52/L.66] without vote [agenda item 12].

United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 1997/251 of 22 July 1997, in preparing for the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Proclaims 26 June United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture, with a view to the total eradication of torture and the effective functioning of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which entered into force on 26 June 1987.

Voluntary Fund for torture victims

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/38], the Commission on Human Rights called on the Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981 [YUN 1981 p. 906], to present in 1998 an updated assessment of the global need for international funding for rehabilitation services for torture victims. It expressed appreciation for previous contributions to the Fund, and appealed to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute annually to it. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to include the Fund among the programmes receiving donations at the annual UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities; transmit to Governments Commission appeals for contributions; ensure an adequate level of staffing and technical facilities for the Fund; and continue to keep the Commission informed of the Fund's operations on an annual basis.

By decision 1997/251 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's requests.

Report of Secretary-General. In his annual report on the status of the Fund [A/52/387], submitted in September, the Secretary-General stated that contributions received from 31 countries between September 1996 and August 1997 totalled $3,210,267.

The Board of Trustees held its sixteenth session in Geneva (20-30 May). The total amount then available for grants to assist victims of torture came to $3,036,054, of which $100,000 was earmarked for urgent grants falling between the Board's annual sessions. In 1997, $6.8 million was requested for 117 projects in 64 countries. On 9 June, the High Commissioner for Human Rights, on behalf of the Secretary-General, approved the Board's recommendations on grants to 104 projects submitted by 94 humanitarian organizations. Grants totalling $2,936,854 were distributed in Western Europe (30 projects, 11 countries, $938,907); Latin America and the Caribbean (21 projects, 11 countries, $561,000); Asia, Pacific and the Middle East (15 projects, 10 countries, $534,000); Africa (14 projects, 14 countries, $384,947); North America (14 projects, 2 countries, $383,000); and Central and Eastern Europe (10 projects, 8 countries, $135,000). On 12 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report by decision 52/423.

In a December report [E/CN.4/1998/37], the Secretary-General stated that, since 15 August, the Fund had received additional contributions totalling $536,489 from seven countries.

Weapons of mass destruction

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Subcommission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 642], the Secretary-General submitted a June report with later addendum [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/27 & Add.1] summarizing information received from Governments, UN bodies and NGOs on the use of nuclear weapons, chemical weapons, fuel-air bombs, napalm, cluster bombs, biological weaponry and weaponry containing uranium, on their consequential and cumulative effects, and on the danger they presented to life, physical security and other human rights.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/36], the Subcommission urged States to be guided in their national policies by the need to curb the testing, production and spread of weapons of mass destruction. It decided to authorize Clemencia Forero Ucos (Colombia) to prepare a working paper assessing the utility, scope and structure of a study on weapons of mass destruction or with indiscriminate effect, or of a nature to cause superfluous injury or unnecessary suffering.

On the same date [res. 1997/37], the Subcommission authorized the inclusion of the question of the prevention and control of the illicit transfer of arms, in the context of human rights and humanitarian norms, in the preliminary document on weapons of mass destruction.

Anti-personnel landmines

On 28 August [res. 1997/33], the Subcommission urged States that had not yet done so to sign and ratify the 1980 Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects and the Protocol thereto [YUN 1980, p. 76], including Protocol II on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby Traps and Other Devices, as amended on 3 May 1996 [YUN 1996, pp. 484 & 485]. Governments were urged to participate in the Diplomatic Conference to Negotiate a Total Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines, and to sign an international treaty banning anti-personnel mines (see PART ONE, Chapter VII). Encouraging Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the UN mine-clearance programme, the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments its appeal for contributions to the programme and to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 823].

Economic, social and cultural rights

Right to development

Reports of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/21], the Secretary-General described measures taken to implement General Assembly resolution 51/99 on the right to development [YUN 1996, p. 644]. He stated that the High Commissioner for Human Rights had requested information relating to the implementation of the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 41/128 [YUN 1986, p. 717]. The report contained replies to the High Commissioner's request received from several UN bodies. Regarding coordination of activities in relation to the implementation of the Declaration, the High Commissioner was continuing to promote inter-agency cooperation and coordination throughout the UN system.

By an October note [A/52/473], the Secretary-General stated that, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/99, the Secretariat had sent a note verbale seeking information relevant to the implementation of the 1986 Declaration and that the Commission in 1997 had before it the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.4/1997/21] containing the replies to his request.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/72], the Commission on Human Rights, reaffirming the importance of the right to development for everyone, urged States to eliminate obstacles to development by pursuing the promotion and protection of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights and by implementing development programmes and promoting international cooperation. It asked the High Commissioner to examine ways to provide the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development with a profile commensurate with its importance and to invite the views of Governments, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, members of treaty bodies and academic institutions on ways to do so, including the Declaration's relationship with important human rights instruments. The High Commissioner was asked to continue to accord priority to the right to development and to ensure widespread dissemination and promotion of the Declaration. The Commission, noting that the High Commissioner had initiated a dialogue with the World Bank with regard to the right to development, called on him to inform Member States regularly through informal meetings on progress made. Welcoming the High Commissioner's initiative to organize regional seminars, the Commission called on him to ensure that the seminars focused on all aspects of the realization of the right to development.

The Commission called on the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Right to Development, established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 643], to: encourage participation of Member States, international institutions and NGOs in its deliberations, through a greater use of public meetings; continue to consider recommendations for the elimination of obstacles already identified to the realization of the right to development; continue to explore ways to promote international cooperation, dialogue and partnership for the realization of that right; and consider establishing a follow-up mechanism, or enhancing existing ones, to the Declaration.

The Secretary-General was asked to submit to the General Assembly and the Commission in 1998 a report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution. The Commission's request was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/276 of 22 July.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [dec. 1997/109], the Subcommission, recalling its 1996 resolution [YUN 1996, p. 643] requesting the Secretary-General to invite all relevant UN bodies and specialized agencies to step up their activities aimed at international cooperation for the realization of the right to development in the context of the UN Decade for the Elimination of Poverty (1997-2006) (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and to provide him with information, noted that it had not received the requested information. It decided to transmit the full text of its 1996 resolution to the Secretary-General for action.

Intergovernmental Group of Experts. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Right to Development held its second session in Geneva from 29 September to 10 October [E/CN.4/1998/29]. The Group discussed suggestions for a global strategy for the promotion and implementation of the right to development, the elements of a global strategy and the establishment of a follow-up mechanism to ensure promotion and implementation of the 1986 Declaration. On 10 October, the Group adopted its suggestions for a global strategy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/136 by recorded vote (129-12-32) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Right to development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Right to Development, which it proclaimed at its forty-first session, and noting that the Declaration represents a landmark and a meaningful instrument for countries and people worldwide;

Reaffirming also the commitment contained in the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights relating to the right to development,

Also recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, which reaffirms the right to development as a universal and inalienable right and as an integral part of fundamental human rights and reaffirms that the human person is the central subject of development,

Emphasizing that development-oriented approaches to the promotion of human rights, as expressed by the Declaration on the Right to Development, constitute an important contribution to the development and strengthening of alternative approaches to the promotion and protection of all human rights,

Recalling that, in order to promote development, equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and recognizing that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that the universality, objectivity, impartiality and non-selectivity of the consideration of human rights issues must be ensured,

Also recalling that democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance in all sectors of society, as well as effective participation by civil society, are essential parts of the necessary foundation for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development,

Further recalling the principles proclaimed in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development of 14 June 1992, and taking note of the deliberations of the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session,

Acknowledging that, in this regard, a number of positive results have been achieved, but deeply concerned that the overall trends with respect to sustainable development are worse today than they were in 1992,

Mindful that the Commission on Human Rights continues to consider this matter and that the second session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts established by the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a strategy for the implementation and promotion of the right to development, as set forth in the Declaration on the Right to Development, in its integrated and multidimensional aspects, was held at Geneva from 29 September to 10 October 1997, with a view to further enhancement and implementation of the right to development,

Noting the need for improved coordination and co-operation throughout the United Nations system for more effective promotion and realization of the right to development,

Recognizing that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights has an important role to play in the promotion, protection and realization of the right to development, including in seeking enhanced support from the relevant bodies of the United Nations system for this purpose,

Reaffirming that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level, as well as equitable economic relations and a favourable economic environment at the international level,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development requires effective development policies and support at the international level through the effective contribution of States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations active in this field,

Expressing its concern about the lack of participation of developing countries at the global level in the decision-making process on macroeconomic policy issues, with far-reaching impacts on the world economy and with negative implications for the exercise of the right to development in developing countries,

Reaffirming the need for action by all States at the national and international levels for the realization of all human rights and the need for relevant evaluation mechanisms to ensure the promotion, encouragement and reinforcement of the principles contained in the Declaration on the Right to Development,

Also reaffirming that all States should promote the establishment, maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security and, to that end, should do their utmost to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control and to ensure that the resources released by effective disarmament measures are used for comprehensive development, in particular that of developing countries,

Noting that aspects of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, adopted by the Conference on 13 September 1994, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, adopted by the Summit on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) at Istanbul, Turkey, on 14 June 1996, are relevant to the universal realization of the right to development, within the context of promoting and protecting all human rights,

Affirming the need to apply a gender perspective in the implementation of the right to development, inter alia, by ensuring that women play an active role in the development process,

Expressing concern that, more than ten years after the adoption of the Declaration on the Right to Development, obstacles to the realization of the right to development still persist at both the national and international levels and that new obstacles to the rights stated therein have emerged, including, inter alia, the negative effects of globalization on the right to development, particularly in developing countries,

Expressing further concern that the Declaration on the Right to Development is insufficiently disseminated and should be taken into account, as appropriate, in bilateral and multilateral cooperation programmes, national development strategies and policies and activities of international organizations,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the right to development, prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/99 of 12 December 1996,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;
2. Reaffirms the importance of the right to development for every human person and for all peoples in all countries, in particular the developing countries, as an integral part of fundamental human rights, as well as the potential contribution its realization could make to the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;
3. Recognizes that the Declaration on the Right to Development constitutes an integral link between the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action through its elaboration of a holistic vision integrating economic, social and cultural rights with civil and political rights;
4. Reiterates its commitment to implementing the results of the World Conference on Human Rights, which reaffirm that all human rights are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated and that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing;

5. Also reiterates that lasting progress towards the implementation of the right to development requires effective development policies at the national level, as well as an equitable economic environment at the international level;

6. Reaffirms the need for States to cooperate with a view to promoting, encouraging and strengthening universal respect for and observance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without any distinction as to race, sex, language or religion;

7. Stresses that human rights should not be used as an instrument of trade protectionism;

8. Takes note of the importance given to human rights by the Secretary-General in his measures and proposals for the reform of the United Nations, and urges him to give high priority to the promotion and realization of the right to development;

9. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to consider carefully the report of the second session of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts to elaborate a strategy for the implementation and promotion of the right to development, as set forth in the Declaration on the Right to Development, in its integrated and multi-dimensional aspects, bearing in mind the conclusions of the Working Group on the Right to Development established by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1993/22 of 4 March 1993 and the conclusions of the World Conference on Human Rights, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

10. Notes the efforts made by the High Commissioner, within her mandate, and encourages her to continue the coordination of various activities with regard to the implementation of the right to development;

11. Notes also that measures taken for the promotion and realization of the right to development should be more effective, and calls upon the High Commissioner to explore further ways and means to achieve this objective;

12. Requests the High Commissioner, within her mandate, to continue to take steps for the promotion, protection and realization of the right to development by, inter alia, drawing on the expertise of the funds, programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system related to the field of development;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session and the General Assembly at its fifty-third session of the activities of the organizations, funds, programmes and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system for the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development, as well as obstacles identified by them to the realization of the right to development;

14. Calls upon all Member States to make further concrete efforts at the national and international levels to remove obstacles to the realization of the right to development;

15. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to make proposals to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the future course of action on the question, in particular on practical measures for the implementation and enhancement of the Declaration on the Right to Development, including comprehensive and effective measures to eliminate obstacles to its implementation, taking into account the conclusions and recommendations of the Global Consultation on the Realization of the Right to Development as a Human Right, the reports of the Working Group on the Right to Development and the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts to elaborate a strategy for the implementation and promotion of the right to development;

16. Notes that the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is an ideal occasion for the international community to assess the progress achieved in:

(a) Realizing freedom from fear and freedom from want as the highest aspiration of the common people;

(b) Promoting the advent of a world where the inherent dignity of all members of the human family is recognized;

17. Affirms, in the above regard, that the inclusion of the Declaration on the Right to Development in the International Bill of Human Rights would be an appropriate means of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

18. Encourages all States to address, within the declarations and programmes of action adopted by the relevant international conferences convened by the United Nations, the elements for the promotion and protection of the principles of the right to development as set out in the Declaration on the Right to Development;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

20. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-third session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Effects of debt on living standards

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report [E/CN.4/1997/17] of the Secretary-General containing the views of Governments, UN specialized agencies and NGOs on measures to be implemented in order to achieve a durable solution to the debt crisis of developing countries. The information provided included a discussion of consultations held in July 1996 between the World Bank and the High Commissioner.

Working group activities. The open-ended working group on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights, established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 646] to formulate policy guidelines on the subject, held its first session (Geneva, 3-7 March) [E/CN.4/1997/20]. The group based its work on a 1995 report of the Secretary-General [YUN 1995, p. 760] containing a preliminary set of basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights. It identified the principles that might be relevant and might be the subject of future discussion, with a view to establishing clear linkage between those principles and structural adjustment programmes as they impinged on economic, social and cultural rights.

The group made a series of recommendations to the Commission regarding its work, which the Commission, on 3 April [dec. 1997/103], recommended to the Economic and Social Council (see Council decision 1997/283 below).

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/10], by a roll-call vote of 34 to 15, with 3 abstentions, the Commission stressed the importance of continuing to implement immediate actions for alleviating the debt and debt-service burdens of developing countries within the framework of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. It considered that to find a durable solution to the debt crisis, a political dialogue within the UN system was needed between creditor and debtor countries, based on the principle of shared interests and responsibilities. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to submit in 1998 a report on the international debt strategy containing an analysis of the effects of the phenomenon on the enjoyment of human rights of the people of the developing countries, particularly of the most vulnerable and low-income groups. The High Commissioner was asked to continue to pay particular attention to the problem of the debt burden of developing countries, and especially the social impact of the measures arising from foreign debt. The Commission asked that within the Centre for Human Rights a unit be established to promote economic, social and cultural rights, in particular to implement the right to development, bearing in mind aspects relating to the debt burden of developing countries.

On 3 April [dec. 1997/103], the Commission, taking note of the report of the open-ended working group, by a vote of 36 to 13, with 3 abstentions, authorized the group to meet for a period of one week prior to its 1998 session to gather and analyse information on the effects of structural adjustment programmes on economic, social and cultural rights and to develop basic policy guidelines on the programmes and economic, social and cultural rights, which could serve as a basis for a continued dialogue between human rights bodies and international financial institutions, and to report in 1998. It asked its Chairman to appoint an independent expert to update previous work done on the subject and to submit in 1998 a consolidated study, including a draft set of guidelines. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to: circulate the study to Governments, UN bodies, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, particularly those involved in development, and academic institutions and organizations representing disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, and to invite them to submit their comments at the group's next session; invite NGOs involved in development and working in the field to participate actively in the group's session; and to assist the working group and the independent expert.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1997/23], adopted decision 1997/241 by recorded vote (27-17-4) [agenda item 7 (d)].

Effects of the economic adjustment policies arising from foreign debt on the full enjoyment of human rights and, in particular, on the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 22 July 1997, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/10 of 3 April 1997, approved the Commission's request that, taking advantage of the current restructuring of the Centre for Human Rights, a unit should be established for the promotion of economic, social and cultural rights, and in particular the implementation of the right to development, bearing in mind the aspects relating to the debt burden of the developing countries.

RECORDED VOTE IN COUNCIL AS FOLLOWS:

In favour. Bangladesh, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Djibouti, El Salvador, India, Jamaica, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda.

On the same date [meeting 38], the Council, also on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1997/23], adopted decision 1997/283 by recorded vote (29-19-1) [agenda item 7 (d)].

Effects of structural adjustment policies on the full enjoyment of human rights

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 22 July 1997, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights decision 1997/103 of 3 April 1997, endorsed the Commission's decision to authorize the open-ended working group on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights to meet for one week, at least four weeks before the fifty-fourth session of the Commission, with a mandate to gather and analyse information on the efforts of structural adjustment programmes on economic, social and cultural rights and to elaborate basic policy guidelines on structural adjustment programmes and economic, social and cultural rights, which could serve as a basis for a continued dialogue between human rights bodies and international financial institutions, and to report to the Commission at its fifty-fourth session. To enable the working group to carry out its mandate, the Council decided:

(a) To request the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, in consultation with the regional groups, to appoint an independent expert, preferably an economist specialized in the area of structural adjustment programmes, to study the effects of structural adjustment policies on economic, social and cultural rights in cooperation with the Centre for Human Rights. The expert should update previous work done on the subject within as well as outside the United Nations and submit a consolidated study, including a draft set of guidelines, to the Commission at its fifty-fourth session;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to circulate the study to Governments, United Nations bodies, in particular the regional commissions, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations, particularly those involved in development, and academic institutions and organizations representing disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, and to invite them to submit their comments thereon to the working group at its next session;

(c) To request the Secretary-General to invite and encourage, in particular, non-governmental organizations involved in development and working in the field to participate actively in the sessions of the working group;

(d) To request the Secretary-General to provide all the necessary assistance and resources to enable the working group to complete its work and to provide the independent expert with all the necessary assistance and resources to carry out his or her mandate.

RECORDED VOTE IN COUNCIL AS FOLLOWS:

In favour Bangladesh, Brazil, Cape Verde, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Djibouti, El Salvador, Gabon, India, Jamaica, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mexico, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Philippines, Republic of Korea, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Zambia.

Against: Australia, Belarus, Canada, Czech Republic, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Japan, Latvia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstain: Argentina.

Income distribution

Commission action. On 15 April [dec. 1997/115], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1996 Subcommission resolution on the impact of the enjoyment of human rights on income distribution [YUN 1996, p. 647], deferred a decision on the Subcommission's request to the Economic and Social Council that the Secretary-General organize a seminar of experts to develop appropriate indicators and to monitor the implementation of commitments made by Governments.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, Special Rapporteur Jose Bengoa (Chile) submitted his final report on the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights, and income distribution [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/9]. He discussed various aspects of globalization; income distribution at the international and national levels; and income distribution, exclusion, poverty and discrimination.

The Special Rapporteur stated that sustainable human development had to become the first priority of the international community. Globalization of the market risked having no meaning if its benefits were not shared among all sectors of the population. He emphasized the need to review and increase the level of international cooperation and appealed to governments, international agencies and NGOs to press for free trade agreements and treaties to include a chapter or special protocol on international cooperation. The Special Rapporteur also appealed for an increase in self-sustaining development programmes and in training and education of local management capacities. Countries were asked to step up their labour regulation controls to prevent new covert forms of slavery, and Governments that had not yet done so were asked to ratify International Labour Organization (ILO) conventions.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Subcommission establish a Forum on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (Social Forum) to which the following might be invited: representatives of observer governments, members of the Commission and other interested observer Governments; representatives of UN specialized agencies; representatives of international, regional and national organizations of workers, salaried staff, professionals and employers' organizations; and NGOs accredited to the Economic and Social Council and international development and cooperation agencies that were not accredited and would be offered a special accreditation procedure. The purpose of the Social Forum would be to: exchange information on the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and its relationship with globalization; follow up on the relationship between income distribution and human rights; follow up on situations of poverty; propose standards and initiatives of a juridical nature, guidelines and other recommendations for consideration by the Commission on Human Rights, the Working Group on the Right to Development, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the specialized agencies and other bodies of the UN system; and follow up to agreements reached at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672] on the fulfilment of questions relating to economic, social and cultural rights. The Subcommission should discuss whether to appoint a Special Rapporteur for economic, social and cultural rights, whose principal function would be to submit an annual report to the Social Forum.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [dec. 1997/107], the Subcommission, noting that it did not have enough time for a comprehensive discussion of the Special Rapporteur's final report, postponed until 1998 the Special Rapporteur's presentation of the report. It asked the Special Rapporteur to complete his report by preparing a supplementary document on the subject and decided to give full consideration in 1998 to the recommendation regarding the establishment of a social forum within the Subcommission.

Transnational corporations

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/11], the Subcommission entrusted El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal) with preparing a background document on the relationship between the enjoyment of human rights and the working methods and activities of transnational corporations, for submission in 1998.

Unilateral coercive measures

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 37 to 8, with 7 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 3 April [res. 1997/7], called on States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the UN Charter, particularly those of a coercive nature with extraterritorial effects, which created obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding realization of the rights set out in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right to development. Rejecting the application of such measures as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, particularly against developing countries, the Commission urged the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Right to Development to take into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures in its work on the implementation of the right to development. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to urgently consider its resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 12], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/120 by recorded vote (91-46-26) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Human rights and unilateral coercive measures

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/103 of 12 December 1996,

Reaffirming the pertinent principles and provisions contained in the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States proclaimed by the General Assembly in its resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, in particular article 32 thereof, in which it is declared that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Taking note of the report submitted by the Secretary-General pursuant to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/45 of 3 March 1995,

Recognizing the universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated character of all human rights, and, in this regard, reaffirming the right to development as an integral part of all human rights,

Recalling that the World Conference on Human Rights called upon States to refrain from any unilateral coercive measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations that creates obstacles to trade relations among States and impedes the full realization of all human rights,

Bearing in mind all the references to this question in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development, adopted by the World Summit for Social Development on 12 March 1995, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995, and the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda, adopted on 14 June 1996 by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II),

Deeply concerned that, despite the recommendations adopted on this issue by the General Assembly and at recent major United Nations conferences and contrary to general international law and the Charter of the United Nations, unilateral coercive measures continue to be promulgated and implemented with all their extraterritorial effects, inter alia, on the economic and social development of targeted countries and peoples and individuals under the jurisdiction of other States,

Noting the continuing efforts of the Working Group on the Right to Development, and reaffirming in particular its criteria according to which unilateral coercive measures are one of the obstacles to the implementation of the Declaration on the Right to Development,

1. Urges all States to refrain from adopting or implementing any unilateral measure not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations, in particular those of a coercive nature with all their extraterritorial effects, which create obstacles to trade relations among States, thus impeding the full realization of the rights set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, in particular the right of individuals and peoples to development;

2. Rejects unilateral coercive measures with all their extraterritorial effects as tools for political or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, because of their negative effects on the realization of all the human rights of vast sectors of their populations, in particular children, women and the elderly;

3. Calls upon Member States that have initiated such measures to commit themselves to their obligations and responsibilities arising from the international human rights instruments to which they are party by revoking such measures at the earliest time possible;

4. Reaffirms, in this context, the right of all peoples to self-determination, by virtue of which they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development;

5. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to take fully into account the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures, including enactment of national laws and their extraterritorial application, in its task concerning the implementation of the right to development;

6. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in discharging her functions relating to the promotion, realization and protection of the right to development, to give urgent consideration to the present resolution in her annual report to the General Assembly;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all Member States, to seek their views and information on the implications and negative effects of unilateral coercive measures on their populations and to submit accordingly a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

8. Decides to examine this question on a priority basis at its fifty-third session under the sub-item entitled "Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

Extreme poverty

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/11], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to ensure that the final report of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and extreme poverty (Leandro Despouy, Argentina), issued in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 649], was published by the United Nations in all official languages and widely distributed, and to convey the report to the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on Sustainable Development, the Trade and Development Board of the UN Conference on Trade and Development, the Executive Boards of the UN Development Programme (UNDP)/UN Population Fund and the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF), and the Executive Committee of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees for consideration at their next sessions, as well as to any other body to which the Secretary-General considered it should be communicated. The Council approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General by decision 1997/242 of 22 July. The Commission also asked him to make the report available to NGOs that wished to reproduce it in languages accessible to the greatest number of persons living in extreme poverty.

The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to: give high priority to human rights and extreme poverty within UN human rights bodies; ensure better cooperation between institutions and bodies involved in developing policies and strategies for protecting human rights and combating poverty; invite Governments, specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations to take account of the contradiction between the existence of situations of extreme poverty and exclusion from society and the duty to guarantee full enjoyment of human rights; collaborate closely with all organizations concerned; regularly inform the Assembly of the evolution of the question of human rights and extreme poverty; submit in 1998 a report, to be prepared by the Centre for Human Rights and the UN Division for the Advancement of Women, on the obstacles encountered and progress achieved in women's rights relating to economic resources, the elimination of poverty and economic development, particularly for women living in extreme poverty; submit information on human rights and extreme poverty at events such as the evaluation of the World Conference on Human Rights planned for 1998, the special session of the Assembly devoted to conclusions of the World Summit for Social Development (see PART THREE, Chapter IX), scheduled for 2000, and the evaluation, at the halfway point in 2002 and the end-point in 2007, of the first UN Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see PART THREE, Chapter I); and continue discussions with the World Bank and report in 1998 on the creation of microcredit programmes.

Right to adequate housing

Forced evictions

In July [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/7], the Secretary-General reported on the expert seminar on the practice of forced evictions (Geneva, 11-13 June).

The experts had drafted guidelines, which were annexed to the report, that addressed the human rights implications of the practice of forced evictions associated with development-based displacement. They outlined preventative obligations, the rights of all persons, including the integrity of the home and assurances of security of tenure, legal remedies, and monitoring of the guidelines.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/6], the Subcommission, urging Governments to eliminate the practice of forced eviction and to confer legal security of tenure on all persons, recommended that they provide immediate restitution, compensation and/or appropriate alternative accommodation or land to persons and communities that had been forcibly evicted. It asked the High Commissioner to give attention to the practice and take measures to persuade Governments to comply with relevant international standards, to prevent planned forced evictions, and to ensure the provision of adequate compensation. The Commission on Human Rights was asked to invite States to consider for their approval the human rights guidelines on development-based displacement.

Women and housing

On 27 August [res. 1997/19], the Subcommission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to take initiatives to promote the right of women to adequate housing and to land and property. It recommended that the Special Rapporteur on violence against women include in her next report an analysis of the relationship between violence against women and violations of the right to adequate housing and to land and property, including forced evictions. It also recommended that special rapporteurs and the special representative of the Secretary-General on internally displaced persons take into account the question of the housing, land and property rights of women in preparing their reports. The Subcommission asked Governments, UN bodies and organizations and specialized agencies to support initiatives, including the development of human rights indicators, aimed at assessing and improving the housing and living conditions of women.

(For other issues concerning women and human rights, see below under "Vulnerable groups".)

Right to food

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/8], the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that hunger constituted a violation of human dignity and, therefore, required the adoption of urgent measures to eliminate it. It stressed the need to mobilize and optimize technical and financial resources to reinforce national actions to implement sustainable food security policies. Encouraging the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to pay further attention to those rights recognized in article 11 of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], the Commission endorsed a request made in the World Food Summit Plan of Action [YUN 1996, p. 1129] to the High Commissioner for Human Rights to define better the rights related to food in article 11, and to propose ways to implement and realize those rights. The High Commissioner was asked to report in 1998.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [dec. 1997/108], the Subcommission, recalling its 1996 resolution on the subject [YUN 1996, p. 651], requested Asbjørn Eide (Norway) to review and update his 1987 study on the right to food [YUN 1987, p. 773] and to submit the updated study in 1998.

Scientific concerns

Human rights and the environment

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1997/18] summarizing the views of Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, an intergovernmental organization and an NGO on the issues raised in the final (1994) report of the Special Rapporteur on human rights and the environment [YUN 1994, p. 1123].

Commission action. On 3 April [dec. 1997/102], the Commission invited the Secretary-General to bring his 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 652] and 1997 (see above) reports on human rights and the environment and its consideration of the item to the attention of the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session (see PART THREE, Chapter I), the Commission on Sustainable Development, the UN Environment Programme (UNEP), UNDP and other relevant international bodies and organizations, and requested him to prepare a consolidated report for submission in 1999.

On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/282, approved the Commission's decision.

Toxic wastes

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/19], the Special Rapporteur on the adverse effects of the illicit movement and dumping of toxic and dangerous products and wastes on the enjoyment of human rights, Fatma Zohra Ksentini (Algeria), described her 1996 activities and summarized general comments received from Angola, Germany, Jordan, Nigeria, the Philippines, Slovakia and the United Kingdom. She reviewed information provided by States parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420], as well as further information received from States, some of which concerned allegations of human rights violations, such as the right to safe and healthy working conditions, the right to form and join trade unions, the right to strike and the right to bargain collectively. The Special Rapporteur concluded that there had been an increase in the movement of waste from the developed countries to the developing countries in the form of recycling or recovery operations. States parties to the 1989 Basel Convention had amended it in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1333] to prohibit the export of hazardous wastes, even for recycling, from Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) members to non-members. The ban was to enter into force at the end of 1997. She recommended the promulgation of strict legislation to control transboundary movements of dangerous wastes; provision to developing countries of legal aid and assistance to train magistrates and agents in drawing up relevant legislation; and consolidation of the role of NGOs, local communities and associations, trade unions, workers and victims. States should develop penal legislation and introduce administrative, civil and penal sanctions. In the case of transboundary movements of toxic wastes that had proved harmful to residents of a State other than the exporting country, the victims should have access to the administrative and judicial procedures of that country.

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/9], by a roll-call vote of 32 to 12, with 8 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, condemning the increasing rate of dumping toxic and dangerous products and wastes in developing countries, urged Governments to take legislative and other measures to prevent illegal trafficking. It asked the Special Rapporteur to undertake a study of existing problems of and solutions to illicit traffic in the transfer and dumping of toxic wastes and dangerous products and wastes in African and other developing countries, with a view to making recommendations, in her next report, on adequate measures to control, reduce and eradicate those problems. The Special Rapporteur was also asked to include in her report information on countries and enterprises engaged in such illicit movement and dumping, as well as information on persons killed, maimed or otherwise injured in developing countries through those acts. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to assist her.

Water and sanitation services

On 27 August [res. 1997/18], the Subcommission, affirming that the global and multidimensional approach, as defined in the 1986 Declaration on the Right to Development, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 41/128 [YUN 1986, p. 717], should constitute a basis for work to be carried out on the promotion of the realization of the right of access of everyone to drinking water supply and sanitation services, decided to entrust El-Hadji Guissé (Senegal) with preparing a working paper on the question. It asked him to report in 1998.

Bioethics

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights examined a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1997/66] covering legislation and other measures taken to ensure that the life sciences developed in a manner respectful of human rights, based on information received from 10 Governments, the United Nations Population Fund, one NGO and one academic institution. He discussed legislative, administrative and other measures aimed at protecting human rights in the bioethical context, including medical treatment, medical research involving humans and experiments on humans, organ and tissue transplants, and family planning, including artificial insemination and abortion. The Secretary-General also presented information received by Governments regarding developments in biotechnology and methods to promote ethical standards.

The Secretary-General concluded that legislation re-enforcing certain ethical principles had been introduced by an increasing number of States, which had also established machinery to implement legal rules and give effect to ethical standards. The report contained comments and recommendations made by the Government of Jordan.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/71], the Commission invited Governments, the specialized agencies and other UN organizations to inform the Secretary-General of activities being carried out to ensure that the life sciences developed in a manner respectful of human rights and benefiting humanity as a whole. Governments were invited to inform the Secretary-General of legislative or other measures taken to that end and to consider establishing committees to assess the ethical, social and human questions raised by the biomedical research undergone by humans and, in particular, research relating to the human genome and its applications, and to inform the Secretary-General of the establishment of such bodies with a view to promoting exchanges of experience. The Subcommission was asked to consider ways to ensure that the life sciences developed in a manner fully respectful of human rights and beneficial to humanity and to make recommendations to that effect. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to report in 1999.

Scientific progress and human rights

In accordance with a 1996 Subcommission decision [YUN 1996, p. 652], Osman El-Hajjé (Lebanon) submitted a July working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/34] on the potentially adverse consequences of scientific progress and its applications for the integrity, dignity and human rights of the individual. He identified medicine and health, computer technology and over-exposure to radiation as research areas that might produce undesirable effects. He discussed the need for scientific research to be free from limitations, the provision of ethical principles to researchers, State support for scientific research and the legal aspects of scientific and technical activity.

Mr. El-Hajjé recommended the drafting of universal legislation, beginning with guidelines for researchers, establishing limits they should not transgress. He advocated setting up ethics committees to supervise scientific activity, foresee possible excesses, alert the authorities and public opinion, and act in an advisory capacity to assist public authorities as well as scientific researchers and their professional organizations. An international committee on ethics should report to the General Assembly annually on the state of science and technology.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/42], the Subcommission recommended that the Commission authorize it to appoint Mr. El-Hajjé as Special Rapporteur to carry out a study on the potentially adverse and positive consequences of scientific progress and its applications for the integrity, dignity and human rights of the individual.

Computerized personal files

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1997/67], the Secretary-General summarized information received from Governments and UN organs, bodies and specialized agencies on the application of the guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal files, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/95 [YUN 1990, p. 621].

Commission action. On 16 April [dec. 1997/122], the Commission on Human Rights requested States and intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Secretary-General by providing him with information on the application of the guidelines. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to ensure the implementation of the guidelines in the UN system and to report in 1999, based on information collected from States, intergovernmental and regional organizations and NGOs, concerning the follow-up to the guidelines at the national and regional levels.

Slavery and related issues

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/20], the Commission on Human Rights, expressing grave concern at manifestations of contemporary forms of slavery, asked the Secretary-General to continue to examine the reliability of allegations regarding the removal of organs and tissues of children and adults for commercial purposes and to report in 1999 in order to enable the Commission to decide whether it should continue paying attention to the issue. He was also asked to designate the High Commissioner as the focal point to coordinate activities in the UN system for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery.

States were asked to consider taking action to protect groups of persons particularly vulnerable to slavery and slavery-like practices, such as children and women; consider adopting legal and administrative measures to protect, rehabilitate and reintegrate victims of contemporary forms of slavery; and to consider ratifying the ILO Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (Convention No. 29) and the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (Convention No. 138) [YUN 1973, p. 885].

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, at its twenty-second session (Geneva, 2-11 June) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/13], reviewed developments in the area of contemporary forms of slavery and measures to prevent and repress all its forms, including the suppression of traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others, illegal and pseudo-legal adoptions aimed at exploiting children, traffic in human organs and tissues, bonded labour and child labour, forced labour and migrant workers—particularly domestic workers (see below, under "Vulnerable groups"). It discussed the activities of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the 1996 World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children [YUN 1996, p. 660], as well as the activities of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women. Other matters considered by the group focused on early marriages, incest and detained juveniles. The Group concluded that despite the progress made in human rights protection, various forms of slavery still existed and new insidious forms were emerging. The Group made a series of recommendations on the issues considered by it during the session.

Reports of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/78], the Secretary-General summarized information received from two UN specialized agencies and one NGO on the reliability of allegations regarding the removal of organs and tissues of children and adults for commercial purposes. The Commission on Human Rights in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 653] had requested him to seek information to enable it to decide on possible follow-up to the matter.

The Secretary-General, in May [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1997/5], summarized information he had received from Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs regarding measures they had taken to prevent and repress contemporary slavery.

Subcommission action. On 27 August [res. 1997/22], the Subcommission adopted a resolution on issues of concern to the Working Group. It addressed the prevention of traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others; the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography; traffic in human organs and tissues; exploitation of child labour; the eradication of bonded labour; forced labour; migrant workers; illegal adoptions; and the elimination of violence against women.

The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs on proposals for the Group's future action. He was also asked to designate the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights as the focal point for the coordination of activities and the dissemination of information within the UN system for the suppression of contemporary forms of slavery.

Fund on slavery

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/20], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to appeal to Governments for contributions to the UN Voluntary Trust Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, established by the General Assembly in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 563].

Note by Secretariat. A May note by the Secretariat contained recommendations adopted by the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund on Contemporary Forms of Slavery at its third session (Geneva, 17-19 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.2/1997/4]. The recommendations, which had been approved by the Secretary-General on 27 March, dealt with travel and project grants, fund-raising, organization of the Board's sessions, cooperation with the Working Group, recommendations of the Board during the inter-sessional period and assistance to NGOs attending the Group's sessions.

Subcommission action. On 27 August [res. 1997/21], the Subcommission urged all Governments, NGOs and individuals to respond favourably to requests for contributions to the Trust Fund to enable the Fund to fulfil its mandate.

Sexual exploitation during periods of armed conflict

A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/12] stated that the Special Rapporteur on the situation of systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during periods of armed conflict had informed the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights that she was not in a position to submit her final report as requested by the Subcommission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 654]. She also informed the Secretariat of her resignation.

On 27 August [dec. 1997/114], the Subcommission decided to entrust Gay J. McDougall (United States) with the task of completing the study for submission in 1998.

Vulnerable groups

Women

Violence against women

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/47], the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), focused on all forms of violence against women in the community. She discussed State responsibility and human rights law; rape and sexual violence against women, including sexual harassment; trafficking in women and forced prostitution; violence against women migrant workers; and religious extremism.

The Special Rapporteur made a series of recommendations to States on those issues, which included: ratifying, without reservations, international instruments relating to the human rights of women; complying with their reporting obligations under human rights treaties and including gender-disaggregated data and information on the situation of women; amending their penal codes regarding sexual violence; implementing gender-sensitization and awareness-raising programmes for police and the judiciary; incorporating gender-sensitizing and awareness training in medical and legal education and changes in school curricula to create attitudes to help combat violence against women; allocating funds for victim support services; and lifting restrictions on women's reproductive rights, such as abortion, in cases of rape. Concerning trafficking and forced prostitution, she recommended that States formulate social policies to ensure that marginalized women were given alternative means for their livelihood; ensure that the police and judiciary were sensitized to those issues; ensure that special services were available to women victims of trafficking and prostitution; strengthen health education programmes, including awareness-raising on HIV/AIDS; and develop mechanisms to combat complicity by police and immigration officers.

As to violence against women migrant workers, she advocated that all States ratify the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as contained in General Assembly resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594]; establish migrant desks in embassies or consulates to assist migrant workers; prosecute employers abusing women migrant workers; and combat racist laws and attitudes that dehumanized immigrant populations. Regarding religious extremism, the Special Rapporteur stated that States should not invoke custom, religion or tradition to justify violence against women. Furthermore, they should make compatible with international standards laws relating to the criminal process, and ensure the elimination of traditional practices that violated women's human rights. Violations of women's reproductive health should be eliminated, and States should adopt legislation regulating prenatal sex determination. The Special Rapporteur recommended that studies should be commissioned to assess the impact of new technology on violence against women. States, in collaboration with NGOs, should raise awareness about how certain types of pornography were violent towards women and unacceptable within the community. States, research institutions and NGOs should collect data on violence against women regularly.

In an addendum to her report [E/CN.4/1997/47/Add.4], the Special Rapporteur provided summaries of communications concerning specific cases of alleged violence against women that she had transmitted to five Governments.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/54/Add.1] dealing with the genocide that took place in Rwanda in April 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 283] and its aftermath, the Special Rapporteur described her visit to the country (27 September-1 November 1997), made at the invitation of the Government, to study the issue of violence against women in wartime and in post-conflict situations. She also visited the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) in Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania (23-25 September), where she observed the testimony of a witness in the first trial to contain sexual violence in the indictment and met with the President of the Court, judges, the Registrar and other staff. In Rwanda, she gathered information on violence against women during the genocide, the status of women post-genocide, progress achieved in punishing perpetrators, and the conditions of women in detention.

The Special Rapporteur presented individual cases of women victims of violence resulting from the hostilities in Rwanda. Concerning the issue of punishing the perpetrators, she noted that the first indictment on the grounds of sexual violence at ICTR was issued only in August 1997.

There were few prosecutions for sexual violence, she stated, because the Office of the Prosecutor was not pro-active, women seemed hesitant to come forward with their testimonies, and women were frightened of repercussions and reprisals.

According to data provided by the UN Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR), 126,216 persons were detained in Rwanda, the vast majority of whom were charged under the Genocide Act. In the 19 central prisons in Rwanda, 2,687 prisoners out of a total of 77,349 (3.7 per cent) were women. HRFOR had also registered 158 detention centres around the country, where some 3.4 per cent of inmates were women (1,585 women out of 48,867 persons in custody). The Special Rapporteur expressed concern about the sanitary conditions for women and their children and overcrowding in the prisons and detention centres she had visited. There were reports of violence and sexual harassment of women by law enforcement officials during arrests and in detention. On the positive side, she observed that, in some instances, women were offered general medical services and social assistance.

Recommendations for action at the international level included ensuring the effective functioning of ICTR and the cooperation of States with the Tribunal by gathering evidence and by arresting and transferring individuals indicted by the Tribunal. Within those recommendations, the Special Rapporteur proposed measures for the Victims and Witness Protection Programme of ICTR, the Office of the Prosecutor in The Hague (Netherlands) and in Kigali (Rwanda), the Deputy Prosecutor's Office and the ICTR Office of Public Relations. She also recommended revising the HRFOR mandate to give it the dual role of monitoring and providing technical assistance. At the national level, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government of Rwanda should: implement the 1993 Arusha Peace Agreement [YUN 1993, p. 284] signed between the Government and the Rwandese Patriotic Front; stop arbitrary arrests; call on the international community to assist in training lawyers and the judiciary; amend its Genocide Act to meet international standards, including the right of the court to consider mitigating circumstances and to allow a full right of appeal; and, together with the international community, continue special programmes aimed at empowering women economically. She also recommended the prosecution of cases of sexual violence, setting up an interministerial task force on sexual violence during the genocide, and conducting the process of investigation and prosecution of perpetrators of genocide according to international human rights standards.

NGOs were urged to: sensitize women victims on the need to speak out to bring perpetrators to justice and coach women witnesses in legal procedures and in giving testimonies before courts; monitor conditions of women in detention; and provide free legal assistance for women accused of having participated in the genocide.

Communication. On 11 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/41], the Democratic People's Republic of Korea submitted its views on the provision of "comfort" women for members of the Japanese Imperial Army during the Second World War, following the Special Rapporteur's report on her 1995 visit to the two countries [YUN 1996, p. 655].

On 27 August [res. 1997/22], the Subcommission invited the Government of Japan to continue to cooperate with the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the matter and decided to continue to consider the issue in 1998.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/44], the Commission on Human Rights condemned all acts of gender-based violence against women, and emphasized the duty of Governments to refrain from engaging in violence against women and to prevent, investigate and punish those acts. It also condemned all violations of the human rights of women in situations of armed conflict and called for an effective response to them, particularly murder, systematic rape, sexual slavery and forced pregnancy. Stressing the Special Rapporteur's conclusions and recommendations in her report on violence against women, the Commission called on States to ratify and implement relevant international human rights instruments; include in reports information pertaining to violence against women and measures taken to implement the 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 48/104 [YUN 1993, p. 1046] and the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]; cooperate with all other mechanisms in the UN system in relation to violence against women; condemn violence against women and not invoke custom, tradition or practices in the name of religion to avoid obligations to eliminate such violence; take action to eradicate violence in the family and in the community; enact or reinforce penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls who were subjected to violence; enact or reinforce legislation protecting girls from all forms of violence; create, improve or develop, and fund training programmes for judicial, legal, medical, social, educational and police and immigrant personnel; enact and enforce legislation, and amend penal codes, to ensure protection against rape, sexual harassment and all other forms of sexual violence against women and support the efforts of NGOs and community organizations to eliminate such practices; and consider implementing the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur. The Commission asked Governments to support initiatives of women's organizations and NGOs to raise awareness of violence against women and to contribute to its elimination. It decided that the Special Rapporteur's mandate should be renewed for another three years and asked her to report annually beginning in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to ensure that her reports were brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women and of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

The Commission's decision to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/255 of 22 July.

On 15 April [res. 1997/52], the Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to consider the invitation of the Government of Haiti to visit the country.

Subcommission action. On 27 August [res. 1997/22], the Subcommission invited Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to disseminate widely the Special Rapporteur's report.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 52/86, adopted Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

Violence against women migrant workers

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/13], the Commission on Human Rights encouraged States in their legislation to punish and redress the wrongs done to women and girls who were subjected to violence, and to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594], as well as the 1926 Slavery Convention. It reiterated the need for States to identify problem areas in promoting and protecting the rights of women migrant workers and ensuring health, legal and social services for them. The High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Centre for Human Rights and the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, as well as all relevant UN bodies and programmes, were requested to give particular attention to the issue of violence perpetrated against women migrant workers. Regional commissions and the ILO regional offices were invited to examine ways, within their mandates, of dealing with concerns pertaining to women migrant workers. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1998 on the implementation of the Commission's resolution, including information received from UN organs and bodies, Member States, intergovernmental organizations and other concerned bodies.

Traditional practices affecting the health of women and children

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children, Halima Embarek Warzazi (Morocco), submitted a report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/10&Add.1] containing information received from Governments, UN bodies and specialized agencies, and NGOs on progress achieved and obstacles encountered in implementing the 1994 Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children [YUN 1994, p. 1123].

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/108], the Commission on Human Rights, recalling a 1996 Subcommission resolution [YUN 1996, p. 658], endorsed the Subcommission's decision to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional two years.

The Commission's decision was approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/284 of 22 July.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/8], the Subcommission, regretting the low number of replies received from Governments on the implementation of the 1994 Plan of Action, urgently appealed to them to implement it. It asked the Special Rapporteur to submit a follow-up report in 1998.

On 12 December, by resolution 52/99, the General Assembly asked the Commission to address the issue of traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls. The Secretary-General was asked to make available to the Commission in 1998 the outcome of the discussions on the matter in the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

Traffic in women and girls

Commission action. On 19 April [res. 1997/19], the Commission on Human Rights called on Governments of origin, transit and destination, and regional and international organizations, to implement the Platform for Action of the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170] by: ratifying and enforcing international conventions on trafficking in persons and on slavery; addressing the root factors of trafficking in women and girls; stepping up cooperation by relevant law enforcement authorities; allocating resources to provide programmes to rehabilitate victims of trafficking; and developing educational and training programmes and considering legislation aimed at preventing sex tourism and trafficking. It invited Governments, with UN support, to develop training manuals for personnel who received and/or held in temporary custody victims of gender-based violence, including trafficking, and encouraged UN bodies and organizations to contribute to the preparation of guidelines, in cooperation with intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, including those concerned with traumatic stress. The Subcommission was asked to encourage its Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery to continue to address the issue of traffic in women and girls.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in a September report on traffic in women and girls [A/52/355], described steps taken to implement General Assembly resolution 51/66 [YUN 1996, p. 1072], based on reports received from Member States, UN bodies and intergovernmental organizations. He reviewed national laws and policies, and highlighted measures to address trafficking taken by Member States, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. The Secretary-General noted that the Ministerial Conference of the European Union to prepare the European Code to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Women (The Hague, 24-26 April) adopted The Hague Ministerial Declaration on European Guidelines to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Women for the Purpose of Sexual Exploitation.

The Secretary-General concluded that information received revealed evidence of significant trafficking activity and that further data were required before effective strategies could be designed and implemented.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 52/98, called on Governments to criminalize trafficking in women and girls and to condemn and penalize all offenders. It invited them to develop training manuals for law enforcement, medical personnel and judicial officers who handled cases of trafficking in women and girls.

Women in the UN

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission on Human Rights considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.4/1997/40] on steps taken to integrate the human rights of women into the UN system. The report reviewed the background to the question of the human rights of women by examining the relevant recommendations of the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 908], adopted at the World Conference for Human Rights, and considered the main activities of the human rights monitoring bodies and the gender dimension reflected in the activities of the Commission and its Subcommission. In addition, it presented violations of women's rights as documented in the 1996 reports of thematic and country special rapporteurs and working groups. The report noted some progress in promoting and protecting women's human rights, as well as progress in integrating women's rights into existing mechanisms and procedures. Nevertheless, steps taken to mainstream the human rights of women into the human rights programme had been experimental and ad hoc. Strategies for mainstreaming needed to be formalized with guidelines, such as those developed by the 1995 expert group meeting on guidelines for integration of gender perspectives into UN human rights activities [YUN 1995, p. 767].

Treaty bodies were encouraged to: develop a gender analysis of each article of each treaty, cross-referenced to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, contained in General Assembly resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], including the development of gender-sensitive model questions to be used in the review of State parties' reports; develop a common strategy towards mainstreaming the human rights of women into their work; and prepare general comments that reflected a gender perspective. With regard to comprehensive recommendations, reference should be made to the recommendations of the 1995 expert group meeting.

UNIFEM report. By a letter of 21 March, the Director of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) submitted a report [E/CN.4/1997/131] suggesting steps that might be taken by the special rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups towards the goal of full integration of women's human rights into their reporting and other activities. It summarized general trends in reporting on women's human rights and presented recommendations concerning reporting and working methods. The report was prepared for a 1996 meeting [E/CN.4/1997/3] of special rapporteurs, representatives, experts and chairpersons of working groups of the special procedures of the Commission and of the advisory services programme.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/43], the Commission on Human Rights, welcoming UNIFEM's report on the integration of women's human rights in the work of the special rapporteurs and others, urged the implementation of the recommendations pertaining to working methods and reporting methodology, including sources of information and gender-specific analysis. It called for strengthened cooperation between the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X) and between the Centre for Human Rights and the UN Division for the Advancement of Women through regular inter-secretariat cooperation to ensure that the joint work plan of the Centre and the Division reflected all aspects of work under way and identified obstacles and areas for further collaboration. It asked that the plan be made available to both Commissions in 1998. Relevant UN entities and human rights bodies were urged to provide training in the human rights of women for all UN personnel and officials, especially those in human rights and humanitarian relief activities, and to promote their understanding of the issue. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure the availability of expertise on gender issues and the human rights of women in order to provide advice on integrating the human rights of women throughout the Centre, as well as to liaise with other relevant UN bodies. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1998.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/9], the Subcommission urged the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women, to strengthen the function of the Focal Point for Women, ensure the full implementation of the strategic action plan for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat, and fulfil his target of having women hold 50 per cent of managerial and decision-making positions by the year 2000.

The girl child

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to take measures and institute legal reforms to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by girls of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, to take effective action against violations, and to eliminate all forms of discrimination against girls and the root causes of son preference. States, international organizations and NGOs were called on to set goals and develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies to address the rights and needs of children, and to take into account the rights and needs of girls.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/9], the Subcommission called on Governments to eliminate biases in educational systems to counteract gender segregation of the labour market, improve women's skills and broaden their access to career choices. It also called on them to criminalize trafficking in women and girls and to condemn and penalize all offenders.

On 12 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 52/106, asked the Secretary-General to ensure that all UN organizations and bodies took into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child, especially in education, health and nutrition, and eliminate negative cultural attitudes and practices against her.

Children

Sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography

Report of Special Rapporteur. A February report [E/CN.4/1997/95 & Corr.1] of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, Ofelia Calcetas-Santos (Philippines), focused on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including its causes, characteristics and effects on children. She reviewed national and international initiatives taken to combat the sale and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Special Rapporteur's report contained an analysis of and recommendations on problem areas of the criminal justice system, which were reproduced from her 1996 report to the General Assembly [YUN 1996, p. 660]. The Special Rapporteur set out proposals for follow-up to the Declaration and Agenda for Action adopted at the 1996 World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children [YUN 1996, p. 660]. In that regard, she endorsed the call by the Congress for States to urgently strengthen cross-sectoral and integrated measures with a view to developing by the year 2000 national agendas for action to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children; urged States to develop implementation and monitoring mechanisms; and emphasized the recommendations made by the Congress that focused on mobilizing the business sector, including the tourism industry, against the use of its networks and establishments for the commercial sexual exploitation of children and on encouraging the media to strengthen their role in providing high-quality information. Proposals for consideration by the Commission on Human Rights urged States to gather data reflecting various types of commercial sexual exploitation distinct from sexual abuse, and the gender and the age of victims; and to consider convening an international convention for media and child psychologists/psychiatrists to address the issue. The Special Rapporteur proposed involving private computer and information technology companies, as well as Internet service providers, as sponsors in initiatives to eliminate and raise awareness of the problem.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/101/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur described her visit to Kenya (25 August-1 September) to study the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the country. During her mission, she met with high-level government officials, law enforcement officials and representatives of children's organizations and NGOs, tourism associations and the Regional Child Rights Representative of UNICEF and the ILO International Programme for the Elimination of Children Labour. The Special Rapporteur also interviewed child victims of sexual exploitation.

The Special Rapporteur stated that, according to Human Rights Watch, a human rights organization, 40,000 Kenyan children were living on the streets; 38 per cent of all children were sexually abused by the age of 18; and 11 per cent of sexual abuse was perpetrated by a stranger, 29 per cent by a family member and 60 per cent by a person known to the victim. She examined the causes of the phenomenon and attributed it mainly to poverty, as well as abuse or rejection within families, which caused the increase in street children and the consequent vulnerability to commercial sexual exploitation. Other contributors were single-parent families; gender discrimination, which made girls more vulnerable; substance abuse; and persuasion or deception by adults. The lack of a sound legal basis in Kenyan national legislation further compounded the problem, as did under-reporting. In addition, there was a lack of high-level coordination among government ministries that provided services for children in different circumstances.

Steps taken by the Government included the initiation of projects focusing on rural development strategies, poverty alleviation and raising living standards of the rural poor to reduce migration from rural to urban areas; education and awareness-raising campaigns to discourage early marriages; the establishment of a crisis desk to handle cases of child abuse and neglect, as well as commercial sexual exploitation; the setting up of a National Coalition on Child Rights and Child Protection; and strengthening of the educational system. NGOs were actively working with street children and rehabilitation centres for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation had been set up by the Child Welfare Society of Kenya. However, police lacked training in how to address child victims, legislation did not distinguish between a child needing discipline and a child needing protection, and there was no training for members of the judiciary, including justices and magistrates, on juvenile issues.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government on ways to revise its legislation. Other recommendations dealt with: empowering the family; sensitizing the public to the dangers of the problem; sensitizing law enforcement personnel and the judiciary; increasing the percentage of female law enforcement officials; establishing a hotline and contact centres with trained personnel; examining traditional practices, such as early marriage; instituting sex education programmes within the school as part of the compulsory curriculum; and retaining girl children in schools by providing educational subsidies. NGOs were urged to forge a strong partnership between Government, NGOs, parents and children, appraise the numerous umbrella organizations and networks of organizations working on children's issues, and provide a directory of NGOs working with child victims to police officers.

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights, welcoming the Special Rapporteur's report, asked the Secretary-General to assist her to discharge her mandate fully and to enable her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1997 and a report to the Commission in 1998. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/281 of 22 July, approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General.

Report of Secretary-General. In a May report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/11], the Secretary-General presented information received from Governments on action they had taken to implement the 1992 Programme of Action for the Prevention of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography [YUN 1992, p. 814].

Interim report of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/52/482], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's interim report to the General Assembly. She provided information on developments that had come to her attention regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children throughout the world, and described the role of the media and education as catalysts in preventing the problem.

The Special Rapporteur urged Governments to: publicize laws to protect children; give prominent visibility to convictions of child sex offenders; promote a culture of rights and positive moral values for society; sensitize and educate children to identify aberrant behaviour; educate the public on the consequences of any form of sexual abuse; raise awareness among the communications and entertainment industries; conduct public information campaigns to encourage child victims or potential victims of sexual abuse to seek help, and publicize offices and agencies extending such assistance; sensitize policy makers, legislators, civic and professional groups and religious leaders and communities of the necessity of including sex education in school curricula, as well as HIV/AIDS awareness-raising; provide free compulsory primary and secondary education for children; establish a monitoring body to approve programmes intended to protect and assist child victims of sexual abuse and exploitation; and take steps to minimize the dangers of Internet use for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation of children. Persons involved in the media and education sectors were urged to: publicize mechanisms for reporting crimes against children; publicize existing response mechanisms, organizations and agencies providing assistance; design and implement training programmes for all those involved with children to detect early signs of physical or sexual abuse; ensure informed and sensitive reporting of cases of child sexual abuse; encourage the public to inform authorities of suspicious activities potentially endangering children; and make available hotlines to enable users to report potentially harmful materials on the Internet.

Regarding the recovery and reintegration into society of child victims, the Special Rapporteur recommended ensuring that rehabilitation and reintegration programmes were evaluated by child psychologists and psychiatrists or other qualified persons or organizations; providing free counselling services for child victims and their families; and enlisting the cooperation of teachers and other child victims to facilitate the return of child victims to school. The Special Rapporteur concluded with an outline of obstacles to effective networking between Governments and NGOs and among NGOs themselves.

(For details of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, see PART TWO, Chapter I.)

Child labour

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights called on States, among other things, to support the drafting by ILO of an instrument aimed at eradicating the most intolerable forms of child labour, to provide for a minimum age or minimum ages for admission to employment, and to set target dates for eliminating all forms of child labour that were contrary to accepted international standards. It asked the Secretary-General, when reporting on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/77 [YUN 1996, p. 665], to cooperate closely with UN specialized agencies, particularly ILO and UNICEF.

Report of Secretary-General. As requested by the Assembly in resolution 51/77, the Secretary-General reported in October [A/52/523] on the exploitation of child labour. He described the phenomenon of child labour, stating that recent surveys indicated that the number of working children worldwide, aged between 5 and 14 years, was 250 million, of whom at least 120 million worked full time and were doing work that was hazardous and exploitative. The Secretary-General reviewed instruments and mechanisms aimed at eliminating the phenomenon, particularly those of the Commission and its Subcommittee, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, ILO and UNICEF.

The Secretary-General proposed national and international action and mechanisms for coordinating policies with regard to protecting children from economic exploitation.

On 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/421, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Children and armed conflict

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to follow up the General Assembly recommendation in resolution 51/77 [YUN 1996, p. 665] to appoint for a three-year period a special representative on the impact of armed conflict on children.

(For information on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflicts, see PART TWO, Chapter I.)

Street children

Commission action. On 18 April [res. 1997/78], the Commission on Human Rights called on States to seek solutions to problems of children on the street; ensure their reintegration into society; provide adequate nutrition, shelter, health care and education; take measures to prevent the killing of street children and combat torture and violence against them; and ensure that legal and juridical processes respected children's rights. The international community was called on to support the efforts of States to improve the situation of children needing special protective measures.

Subcommission action. On 27 August [res. 1997/24], the Subcommission asked the Commission to consider appointing a special rapporteur on the human rights situation of street children.

Rights of the child

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/32], the Subcommission, expressing its conviction that it could best play a constructive role in promoting, realizing and protecting the rights of children and youth by drawing on the expertise of various UN organs, bodies and legal instruments, as well as of intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, decided to review in 1998 the promotion, full realization and protection of the rights of children and youth.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, following consideration of a broad range of issues relating to children's rights (see also PART TWO, Chapter I, and PART THREE, Chapters X and XI) and acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/640], adopted resolution 52/107 without vote [agenda item 108].

The rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/76 and 51/77 of 12 December 1996, 51/186 of 16 December 1996 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/78 of 18 April 1997,

Also recalling the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children and the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s adopted by the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, notably the solemn commitment to give high priority to the rights of children, to their survival and to their protection and development, and reaffirming the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which, inter alia, states that national and international mechanisms and programmes for the defence and protection of children, in particular those in especially difficult circumstances, should be strengthened, including through effective measures to combat exploitation and abuse of children, such as female infanticide, harmful child labour, sale of children and organs, child prostitution and child pornography, as well as other forms of sexual abuse, and which reaffirms that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal,

Underlining the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes relating to children,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of inadequate social and economic conditions, poverty, natural disasters, armed conflicts, displacement, exploitation, racism and all forms of intolerance, unemployment, rural-to-urban migration, illiteracy, hunger, disability and drug abuse, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Inviting Member States to promote the values of peace, understanding and dialogue in the education of children, as well as awareness of the urgent need to combat poverty, malnutrition and illiteracy worldwide,

Recognizing that legislation alone is not enough to prevent violations of the rights of the child, that stronger political commitment is needed and that Governments should implement their laws and complement legislative measures with effective action,

Recommending that, within their mandates, all relevant human rights mechanisms and all other relevant organs and mechanisms of the United Nations system and the supervisory bodies of the specialized agencies pay attention to particular situations in which children are in danger and where their rights are violated and that they take into account the work of the Committee on the Rights of the Child,

Stressing the need to strengthen partnerships between Governments, international organizations and all sectors of civil society, in particular non-governmental organizations, in order to achieve these objectives,

Reaffirming that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration in all actions concerning children,

I

Implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child

1. Welcomes the unprecedented number of one hundred and ninety-one States that have ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as a universal commitment to the rights of the child;

2. Once again urges all States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify or accede to the Convention as a matter of priority, with a view to reaching the goal of universal adherence established by the World Summit for Children and reiterated in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

3. Recognizes the important role of the Committee on the Rights of the Child in creating awareness of the principles and provisions of the Convention and in providing recommendations to States parties on its implementation;

4. Invites the Committee to enhance further the constructive dialogue with the States parties to the Convention and the transparent and effective functioning of the Committee;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of appropriate staff and facilities for the effective and expeditious performance of the functions of the Committee, and takes note of the Plan of Action of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to strengthen the implementation of the Convention;

7. Also calls upon States parties to the Convention to withdraw reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and to consider reviewing other reservations;

8. Recalls that the amendment to paragraph 2 of article 43 of the Convention, which would increase the membership of the Committee on the Rights of the Child from ten to eighteen experts, was adopted by the Conference of States Parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on 12 December 1995, that this amendment was approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/155 of 21 December 1995, and, therefore, calls upon States parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures so that acceptance of the amendment by a two-thirds majority of States parties may be reached as soon as possible in order that the amendment may enter into force;

9. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to ensure that the education of the child shall be carried out in accordance with article 29 of the Convention and that the education be directed, inter alia, towards the development of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, the Charter of the United Nations and for different cultures and towards the preparation of the child for responsible life in a free society, in the spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, gender equality and friendship among peoples, ethnic, national and religious groups and persons of indigenous origin;

10. Also calls upon States parties to the Convention, in accordance with their obligation under article 42 of the Convention, to make the principles and provisions of the Convention widely known to adults and children alike, and further calls upon States parties to encourage training on the rights of the child for those involved in activities concerning children, for example through the programme of advisory services and technical co-operation in the field of human rights;

11. Stresses that the implementation of the Convention contributes to the achievement of the goals of the World Summit for Children, as emphasized in the report of the Secretary-General on the progress at mid-decade on implementation of General Assembly resolution 45/217 of 21 December 1990 on the World Summit for Children;

12. Encourages the Committee, in monitoring the implementation of the Convention, to continue to pay attention to the needs of children in especially difficult circumstances; rights and fundamental freedoms by children with disabilities and to develop and enforce legislation against discrimination against children with disabilities;

3. Also calls upon all States to promote a full and decent life for children with disabilities, in conditions which ensure dignity, promote self-reliance and facilitate the child's active participation in the community;

4. Emphasizes the right to education as a human right, and calls upon States to make education accessible to children with special educational needs in a manner conducive to the child's achieving the fullest possible social integration and individual development and to adopt an integrated approach to providing adequate support and appropriate education for such children;

5. Welcomes the decision by the Economic and Social Council to request the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development, in monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, to pay special attention to children with disabilities and the invitation to enhance the cooperation between the Special Rapporteur and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, and requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Children's Fund to work closely with him;

6. Calls upon all States, in complying with their reporting obligations to the Committee under paragraph 1 of article 44 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to include, in accordance with the Committee's guidelines on the rights of the child, information on the situation and the needs of children with disabilities, including desegregated data, and on the measures taken to ensure to such children their enjoyment of the rights under the Convention;

III

Prevention and eradication of the sale of children and of their sexual exploitation, including child prostitution and child pornography

1. Welcomes the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and expresses its support for her work in examining, all over the world, the question of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary human and financial assistance to make the full discharge of the mandate possible and to enable her to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session and a report to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session;

3. Supports the work of the open-ended inter-sessional working group of the Commission on Human Rights on the elaboration of a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child related to the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and expresses the hope that it will make further progress prior to the fifty-fourth session of the Commission with a view to finalizing that work before the tenth anniversary of the Convention;

Indigenous populations

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/32], the Commission on Human Rights, urging the Working Group on Indigenous Populations of the Subcommission to continue its comprehensive review of developments and of the diverse situations and aspirations of the world's indigenous people, recommended that the Economic and Social Council authorize the Group to meet for five working days prior to the Subcommission's 1997 session. It invited the Group to continue to consider how the contribution of expertise from indigenous people to the work of the Working Group might be enhanced. The Commission welcomed the Group's proposal to highlight in its future sessions specific themes of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1994-2004), proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 48/163 [YUN 1993, p. 865]. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Group and to transmit its reports to Governments, organizations of indigenous people, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for specific comments and suggestions.

By decision 1997/249 of 22 July, the Council authorized the Working Group to meet five days prior to the Subcommission's 1998 session and approved the Commission's requests to the Secretary-General.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations, at its fifteenth session (Geneva, 28 July-11 August) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/14], reviewed developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Among the documents before it was a working paper on the concept of "indigenous peoples" [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1997/2], submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), and a note by the Secretariat regarding health and indigenous peoples [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1997/4]. The Group recommended that the Subcommission invite Governments, the UN system, indigenous organizations and NGOs, as well as relevant academic institutions, to contribute information concerning land rights to the Special Rapporteur on the study on indigenous people and their relationship to land prior to the Group's 1998 session. The Group decided to highlight in 1998 the issue of indigenous peoples: education and language. Expressing its concern about the financial status of the UN Voluntary Fund for the International Decade, the Group recommended that the High Commissioner for Human Rights consider holding a special fund-raising meeting with interested Permanent Missions to the United Nations and with members of the Advisory Group for the Fund to encourage financial contributions. Annexed to the report were guidelines relating to transnational corporations and indigenous peoples, submitted in July by the Indigenous Preparatory Meeting. The guidelines dealt with prior informed consent and consultation with indigenous peoples, written agreements, compensation, monitoring and recourse, transparency, and the full application of corporate environmental policies. Financial support was requested from the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights in order to develop, adopt and implement the guidelines by the year 2000.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/14], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Working Group's report on its 1997 session to indigenous organizations, Governments, concerned intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as to all thematic rapporteurs, special representatives, independent experts and working groups. It expressed its appreciation to the Chairperson-Rapporteur for her supplementary working paper on the concept of "indigenous peoples" [E/CN.4/AC.4/1997/2]. The Subcommission recommended that, in 1998, the Group continue to address health and land rights issues and to include "indigenous peoples: education and language" as the principal item on its agenda. The Secretary-General was asked to invite Governments, intergovernmental organizations, indigenous organizations and NGOs to provide information and data, particularly on matters relating to "indigenous peoples: education and language", as well as health and land rights, to be made available as background papers at the session. It also asked him to prepare an annotated agenda with the following items: standard-setting activities, with a sub-item on possible future standard-setting activities, including guidelines or codes of conduct for private sector energy and mining concerns; review of developments, including sub-items on "indigenous peoples: education and language" and "review of recent developments: health and indigenous peoples"; a study on indigenous peoples and their relationship to land; a permanent forum for indigenous peoples; the International Decade; and a study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous peoples.

The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to encourage studies regarding the rights to food and adequate nutrition of indigenous peoples as they related to their access to land, cultural heritage and health, and to call for an international workshop on the theme.

International Decade of the World's Indigenous People

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/32], the Commission on Human Rights, recommending that the High Commissioner for Human Rights assume responsibility for coordinating the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, asked him to consider organizing a workshop for research and higher education institutions focusing on indigenous issues in education, in consultation with indigenous people and in collaboration with UNESCO and other relevant UN bodies. It also asked the High Commissioner to report in 1998 on activities within the UN system under the programme of activities for the Decade. The Commission recommended that the High Commissioner give due regard to developing human rights training for indigenous people and encouraged him to cooperate with the UN Department of Public Information in preparing and disseminating information on the Decade. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations was invited to continue its review of activities undertaken during the Decade.

Governments were encouraged to consider contributing to the Fund for the Development of Indigenous Peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean. UN financial and development institutions, operational programmes and specialized agencies were asked to: give increased priority and resources to improve the conditions of indigenous peoples; launch special projects to strengthen their community-level initiatives and facilitate the exchange of information and expertise among indigenous people and other relevant experts; and designate focal points of other mechanisms to coordinate with the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights activities relating to the Decade.

By decision 1997/249 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's recommendation that the High Commissioner assume responsibility for coordinating the Decade and its request to him to consider organizing a workshop for research and higher education institutions.

Reports of High Commissioner. The Commission had before it a report [E/CN.4/1997/101] of the High Commissioner and the Coordinator of the Decade containing a review of activities undertaken in 1995 and 1996 to promote the Decade.

In a December report [E/CN.4/1998/107], the High Commissioner described activities carried out in 1997 for the Decade. She discussed action taken relating to the protection of the heritage of indigenous people and described the activities of the Voluntary Fund for the International Decade

(see below). As to NGO activities, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) participated in a meeting organized by the Kanak indigenous people of New Caledonia (September) and a meeting of the Advisory Board of the International Training Center of Indigenous Peoples (Copenhagen, Denmark, December).

The High Commissioner stated that governments, indigenous organizations, NGOs and other participants should submit annually information on their activities during the Decade in order to assess the Decade's progress. She noted that, at the time, little information was being received.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/15], the Subcommission recommended that special attention be given to improving indigenous peoples' participation in planning and implementing Decade activities, and that the draft UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples be adopted as early as possible in the Decade. Expressing its appreciation to Spain for its offer to host a workshop of indigenous journalists in Madrid in 1998, the Subcommission urged the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, in consultation with the Government, to hold the workshop early in 1998, with the participation of government representatives, indigenous journalists and competent UN agencies, including the Information Service of the UN Office at Geneva, the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and the International Press Institute. The Working Group was asked to make preparations for the mid-point review of the Decade in 1999.

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report [A/52/509], the Secretary-General discussed action taken to implement the programme of activities for the Decade adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 50/157 [YUN 1995, p. 772]. He also described the observance of the International Day of the World's Indigenous People (9 August) at Headquarters and in Geneva.

Within the UN system, ILO held consultations (25 July) with UN organizations on work relating to indigenous people. OHCHR launched a pilot programme on 1 July, which consisted of a six-month fellowship programme for indigenous people. The programme offered training for four interns in the High Commissioner's Office and other agencies such as the World Health Organization (WHO) and ILO. Preparations were under way for a draft manual on the UN system for indigenous and tribal people and an international workshop for indigenous journalists. UNESCO was developing a project in Guatemala, entitled "Mundo Maya" (Mayan World), in the areas of education, science and human rights. The WHO World Health Assembly adopted resolutions encouraging member States to develop health programmes for indigenous people. The World Bank was implementing a project on the compilation of laws concerning cultural property in China and Pakistan, which could be expanded to include such countries as Bangladesh, India, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Philippines. A second workshop was held on establishing a permanent forum for indigenous peoples in the UN system (Santiago, Chile, 30 June-2 July) (see below).

As to the activities of regional organizations, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights of the Organization of American States completed a draft inter-American declaration on the rights of indigenous people. The activities of Member States included: the convening by Bolivia, with the support of the Voluntary Fund, of the First Course on Indigenous Law (Sucre, 31 March-2 April), and the International Seminar on the Administration of Justice and Indigenous People (Sucre, 2-4 April); the establishment by Spain of a policy of cooperation with Ibero-American indigenous peoples; and consultations by Canada with local aboriginal leaders on the draft declaration. The Indigenous Parliament of America, the European Parliament Intergroup for Indigenous People, the UNESCO Institute of Education and the World Council of Churches held activities to advance the Decade.

The Secretary-General recommended strengthening the fellowship programme in OHCHR and other UN agencies, discussing the Decade's objectives at high-level international conferences, and developing mechanisms in the United Nations to give representation to indigenous organizations and people. He urged Governments, governmental organizations, NGOs, financial institutions and other bodies to contribute to the Voluntary Fund for the Decade.

The Working Group established to consider a UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples held its third session in Geneva from 27 October to 7 November [E/CN.4/1998/106 & Corr.1] and adopted two articles for the draft declaration by consensus at first reading. One article related to guaranteeing equally to indigenous men and women the rights contained in the declaration, and the other to the right of every indigenous person to a nationality.

Voluntary Fund

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/32], the Commission on Human Rights appealed to Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to consider contributing to the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations.

Note by Secretariat. A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1997/5] contained guidelines for project proposals and applications to the Indigenous Fellowship Programme adopted by the Fund's Advisory Group at its second meeting (16-18 April).

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/14], the Subcommission asked the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations to inform the Fund's Board of Trustees that, in 1998, the Working Group would highlight education and language issues, so that the Board could bear that in mind when it met.

On the same date [res. 1997/15], the Subcommission recommended that the Coordinator of the Decade consider holding a special fund-raising meeting with interested permanent missions and the Advisory Group to encourage financial contributions to the Fund, as well as the secondment of qualified staff, including indigenous persons, to assist with the work of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights relating to the programme for indigenous peoples.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in August [A/53/282] on the activities of the Board of Trustees of the UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations at its tenth session (Geneva, 21-25 April). The Fund provided financial assistance to representatives of indigenous communities and organizations who wished to participate in the deliberations of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and the Working Group to elaborate a UN draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

Having examined 47 applications with regard to the former Working Group and five for the latter, the Board recommended 22 grants ($77,924) and five grants ($24,760), respectively.

The Secretary-General stated that in 1997 the Fund had received contributions totalling $222,551, of which $206,434 had been received from eight Governments and $16,117 from two NGOs.

Permanent forum for indigenous people

Report of Secretary-General. In a January report [E/CN.4/1997/100], the Secretary-General described activities undertaken and information received in pursuance of a 1996 Commission resolution [YUN 1996, p. 675] on a permanent forum for indigenous people in the UN system.

Commission action. On 11 April [res. 1997/30], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of a 1995 General Assembly recommendation in resolution 50/157 [YUN 1995, p. 772] that the Commission, drawing on the results of the first workshop on the possible establishment of a permanent forum for indigenous people [YUN 1995, p. 779], consider holding a second workshop, welcomed Chile's offer to host the workshop. The High Commissioner was asked to convene the workshop for a three-day period prior to the 1997 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations, to transmit its report to the Working Group, and to submit the report, together with comments arising from the discussions in the Working Group, to the Commission in 1998. The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's request on 22 July by decision 1997/248. The Commission also asked the High Commissioner to transmit the report of the workshop to Governments, relevant UN bodies, organizations and specialized agencies, and indigenous organizations for their comments.

Workshop. The second workshop on a permanent forum for indigenous people within the UN system (Santiago, 30 June-2 July) [E/CN.4/1998/11] discussed the Secretary-General's 1996 review of UN mechanisms [YUN 1996, p. 676], and procedures and programmes concerning indigenous people. It also considered questions relating to the establishment of a forum. Participants suggested that the Commission should consider in 1998 how to further the process of establishing a permanent forum through, among other things, the drafting of concrete proposals, and the possibility of submitting the matter to the Economic and Social Council.

A September addendum to the report [E/CN.4/1998/11/Add.1] contained an outline of a permanent forum based on a working paper presented by Denmark; a concise indigenous perspective submitted by the Grand Council of the Crees; a statement submitted by the Saami Council; and the Declaration of the First International Indigenous Conference on a Permanent Forum in the UN system (Temuco, Chile, 6-9 May).

In a later addendum [E/CN.4/1998/11/Add.2], the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations presented proposals for the establishment of a permanent forum, including a suggested mandate and functions.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/10], the Subcommission recommended that a permanent forum be established in the early part of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and that its mandate include questions relating to all areas included in the Decade's programme of activities. It endorsed the recommendation that the Commission consider in 1998 how to further the process of establishing a permanent forum.

Study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/113], the Commission on Human Rights endorsed the Subcommission's 1996 recommendation [E/CN.4/1997(dec. 1996/118)] that Special Rapporteur Miguel Alfonso Martinez (Cuba) be asked to submit his final report on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations in time for it to be considered in 1997 by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and by the Subcommission. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur, in particular by providing specialized research assistance and special consultations with the Centre for Human Rights. The Commission's endorsement of the Subcommission's 1996 decision and its request to the Secretary-General were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/288 of 22 July.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [dec. 1997/110], the Subcommission took note of the Special Rapporteur's explanation for not submitting his final report to the 1997 session and urged him to submit it, preferably before year's end, so that it could be discussed by the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in 1998. The Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to assist him.

Protection of indigenous heritage

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/112], the Commission on Human Rights, having considered the recommendations submitted in 1996 by Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), Special Rapporteur on the protection of the heritage of indigenous people [YUN 1996, p. 677], decided to entrust her with a continuing mandate to exchange information with all parts of the UN system involved in activities concerned with the heritage of indigenous people. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/287 of 22 July, endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its request to the Secretary-General.

Technical meeting. In accordance with a 1996 Subcommission request [YUN 1996, p. 678], a technical meeting on the protection of the heritage of indigenous people (Geneva, 6-7 March) [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/15] took place between representatives of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, ILO, UNDP, UNEP, UNESCO, the World Bank, the World Intellectual Property Organization and the World Trade Organization and the Special Rapporteur. The meeting considered the draft principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people prepared by the Special Rapporteur in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 780].

The meeting recommended that the Special Rapporteur continue to collect information and data relating to the indigenous heritage from national, regional and international organizations and submit them annually to the Commission and the Subcommission, with a view to suggesting the adoption of additional measures for more effective protection of indigenous heritage. It was proposed that the Commission take action on the principles and guidelines and invite the Special Rapporteur to present and analyse them before the Commission. The meeting further recommended that the Special Rapporteur develop the draft mandate and scope of a trust fund to be established by the General Assembly to act as a global agent for the recovery of compensation for indigenous heritage. It also suggested that the concepts of "heritage of mankind" and "national sovereignty", which were not always compatible, should be analysed and considered.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/13], the Subcommission asked the Special Rapporteur to continue to exchange information with Governments, indigenous peoples and the UN system on the heritage of indigenous people. The High Commissioner was asked to convene, prior to the 1998 session of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and of the Subcommission, a seminar on the draft principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous peoples [YUN 1994, p. 1003] with the participation of the Special Rapporteur and representatives of Governments, UN bodies and organizations, specialized agencies, organizations of indigenous peoples and competent indigenous persons.

Indigenous land rights

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/114], the Commission on Human Rights approved the appointment of Erica-Irene A. Daes as Special Rapporteur to prepare a working paper on indigenous people and their relationship to land with a view to suggesting measures to address ongoing problems. It asked her to: submit a preliminary working paper to the Subcommission's 1997 session; transmit the working paper to Governments and indigenous organizations for their views; and submit her final working paper to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to assist her.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/289 of 22 July, endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its request to the Secretary-General.

Note by Secretariat. A June note by the Secretariat [E/CN.4/Sub.2/AC.4/1997/3/Add.1] contained information received from indigenous peoples and NGOs on matters relating to environment, land and sustainable development.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In June, the Special Rapporteur submitted to the Subcommittee a preliminary working paper on indigenous people and their relationship to land [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/17 & Corr.1]. She discussed information on the relationship of indigenous peoples to their lands, territories and resources; the dispossession and expropriation of indigenous peoples' lands; contemporary problems regarding the issue; and efforts to resolve indigenous land issues.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that there was an urgent need to find solutions to the long-standing problems that existed between Governments and indigenous peoples. She recommended that the working paper be transmitted to Governments and indigenous communities and organizations, as well as to UN bodies and organs, with the request to provide further information and submit comments to her for her final working paper.

On 18 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/42], Australia requested that updated information submitted by it relating to the paragraphs in the preliminary working paper concerning the situation in Australia be circulated as a background document to the Subcommittee.

Subcommission action. On 22 August [res. 1997/12], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the working paper to Governments, indigenous peoples, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments and suggestions. The Special Rapporteur was asked to prepare her final working paper and to submit it to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and to the Subcommittee in 1998.

Migrant workers

Commission action. On 3 April [res. 1997/15], the Commission on Human Rights established a five-member working group consisting of intergovernmental experts to meet for two periods of five working days prior to the Commission's 1998 session to gather information from Governments, NGOs and other sources on obstacles to the protection of the human rights of migrants and to develop recommendations to strengthen the promotion, protection and implementation of such rights.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/243 of 22 July, approved the Commission's decision to establish the working group and its request to submit a report.

Intergovernmental working group. The working group of intergovernmental experts on the human rights of migrants held its first session in Geneva from 17 to 21 November [E/CN.4/1998/76]. The main issues discussed were information-gathering, the main trends and developments relating to migration in various regions, the definition of migrants and the vulnerability of migrants.

Subcommission action. On 21 August [res. 1997/4], the Subcommission, condemning acts of violence against migrant workers, appealed to the States concerned to study the possibility of granting migrant workers dual nationality, which would constitute a positive factor for integration. It appealed to Governments to ratify the 1990 International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594] (for information on the status of the Convention, see PART TWO, Chapter I).

Family reunification

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/121 by recorded vote (94-1-73) [agenda item 112 (b)].

Respect for the right to universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Stressing that, as stated in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, family reunification of documented migrants is an important factor in international migration and that remittances by documented migrants to their countries of origin often constitute a very important source of foreign exchange and are instrumental in improving the well-being of relatives left behind,

Recalling its resolution 51/89 of 12 December 1996,

1. Once again calls upon all States to guarantee the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory;

2. Reaffirms that all Governments, in particular those of receiving countries, must recognize the vital importance of family reunification and promote its incorporation into national legislation in order to ensure protection of the unity of families of documented migrants;

3. Calls upon all States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to their relatives in the country of origin;

4. Also calls upon all States to refrain from enacting, and to repeal if it already exists, legislation intended as a coercive measure that discriminates against legal migrants by adversely affecting family reunification and the right to send financial remittances to relatives in the country of origin;

5. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-third session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Commission action. On 11 April [dec. 1997/107], the Commission on Human Rights, noting a 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 1124] of the Special Rapporteur on disability to the Commission for Social Development, decided to resume consideration of the question in 1998 and to invite the Special Rapporteur to be present. (See also PART THREE, Chapter IX.)

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in a number of countries were examined during 1997 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommittee on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as by special bodies, special rapporteurs and independent experts appointed to examine some of those allegations.

General aspects

Under a procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970 to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights [YUN 1970, p. 530, ESCres. 1503(XLVIII)], the Commission on Human Rights held closed meetings to study confidential documents and a confidential report by a working group established by Council resolution 1990/41 [YUN 1990, p. 648]. The documents dealt with human rights situations in Antigua and Barbuda, Botswana, Chad, the Czech Republic, Estonia, the Gambia, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Uzbekistan. The Commission discontinued consideration of the human rights situations in Antigua and Barbuda, Botswana, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, the Syrian Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, the United States and Uzbekistan.

Regarding the recognition of gross and massive human rights violations as perpetrated on the orders of Governments or sanctioned by them as an international crime, the Subcommittee had before it, as requested in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 681], an expanded working paper [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/29] by Stanislav Chernichenko (Russian Federation). Previous working papers were submitted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 810] and 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 962].

Mr. Chernichenko discussed international crimes as a special category of violations of international law; international crimes and human rights violations; and the responsibility of the State and of individuals for human rights violations recognized as international crimes. He concluded that it would be appropriate to state in a General Assembly declaration that any gross and massive human rights violations perpetrated on the orders of a Government or with its sanction constituted an international crime. Annexed to the report was a draft declaration on the recognition of gross and massive violations of human rights perpetrated on the orders of Governments or sanctioned by them as an international crime.

The Subcommittee, on 27 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (dec. 1997/116)], requested the sessional working group on the administration of justice (see PART TWO, Chapter II, under "Administration of justice") to continue to consider Mr. Chernichenko's working paper and to transmit it to the International Law Commission for comments, which would be considered at the working group's next session.

In other action, the Subcommittee, on 28 August [res. 1997/34], concerned by continued allegations of human rights violations by UN contingents engaged in peacekeeping operations, emphasized that the conduct of such military contingents should always be in conformity with international humanitarian law and international human rights law. It recommended that the rules of engagement applicable to UN peacekeeping operations should contain explicit references to those obligations and asked the Secretary-General to disseminate the Guidelines for United Nations Forces Regarding Respect for International Humanitarian Law, drafted in 1996 by the United Nations in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). (See also PART TWO, Chapter I, under "Technical co-operation programme" (Somalia).)

Africa

Burundi

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/12 & Corr.1], Special Rapporteur Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil) described the human rights situation in Burundi during the last three months of 1996, stating that the conflict and fighting had escalated between Burundi's two main ethnic communities—the Hutus and the Tutsis. Intensified fighting in November and December fuelled the constant stream of killings and massacres, and targeted assassinations, arbitrary arrests, enforced disappearances, looting and acts of banditry and the destruction of private property by both parties to the conflict. The Special Rapporteur described alleged cases of enforced disappearances and presented an overview of allegations regarding obstacles to the right to freedom of movement and freedom to choose one's residence; obstacles to freedom of expression and freedom of the press; violations of the right to an adequate standard of living and the right to health; and violations of the right to education. Allegations of the violations of the right to life and to physical integrity were so numerous that they were issued as a separate addendum [E/CN.4/1997/12/Add.1].

The Special Rapporteur appealed to the Burundi leaders to restore democracy and urgently requested the de facto authorities to end the violence and massacres and find and prosecute those responsible. He also urged them to prevent the Burundi army and security forces from carrying out extrajudicial or summary executions, enforced disappearances or arbitrary arrests accompanied by ill-treatment. The de facto Government was asked to lift restrictions on political freedoms and to take measures to prevent violations of the rights to life, physical integrity and freedom of opinion; defer 89 death sentences and 36 sentences of life imprisonment handed down during the first part of 1996, as well as 23 death sentences and 13 sentences of life imprisonment handed down in November; and ensure the right to a fair trial. At the international level, the Special Rapporteur requested an immediate embargo on the sale of arms to the country. He also urged the United Nations to convene a regional conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region (see also PART ONE, Chapter II).

Commission action. On 18 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/77)], the Commission on Human Rights, strongly condemning civilian massacres, summary, arbitrary and extrajudicial executions, enforced disappearances, arbitrary arrests and detention, violence and restrictions on movement committed by all parties, urged them to end the cycle of violence and killing, notably the indiscriminate violence against refugees, women, children and the elderly. It also condemned the illegal sale and distribution of weapons and related materials. The Government of Burundi was urged to respect the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to facilitate the activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). The Commission called on the Government to continue to cooperate with the UN Human Rights Field Operation in Burundi and urged the full deployment of 35 observers to that Operation.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1997 and a report to the Commission in 1998. The Special Rapporteur was further asked to apply a gender perspective in his work. On 22 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/280, endorsed those decisions.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's report [A/52/505] covering the period from 15 April to 31 August 1997.

He noted that a framework agreement was signed on 10 May between the Government and the Conseil national pour la defense de la démocratie concerning the negotiations to be held with a view to restoring peace and democracy (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The willingness of the Government to hold peace negotiations with all parties to the conflict set off a wave of protest. In several provinces, confrontations between rebels and soldiers continued, resulting in dozens of civilian deaths. The situation became particularly alarming in southern Burundi following violent clashes between military and rebel forces and army sweeps of the collines. At least 50,000 people were moved to "regroupement" camps, where they were cut off from all humanitarian assistance and exposed to cholera, malaria and dysentery epidemics. Towards the end of July, the community of humanitarian organizations in Burundi expressed concern that the policy of population regroupement might lead not to the return of those populations to their collines of origin but to their transfer and resettlement along some of the country's major roads in an attempt at enforced "villagization". It was estimated that 600,000 Burundians were living far from their homes, scattered around the country. More than half of them were thought to be in regroupement camps; the other 300,000 were displaced persons taking refuge in camps. Furthermore, over 100,000 displaced children received no assistance, according to the United Nations Children's Fund. The vast majority of those populations did not have the minimum food-stuffs to avoid malnutrition and diseases. The World Health Organization estimated that some 600,000 people in 10 of Burundi's 16 provinces were threatened with typhus. Sanctions had caused a substantial increase in the prices of goods and services and had a direct impact on education, agriculture, employment, industry, health services and the balance of payments.

The Special Rapporteur drew attention to a number of specific allegations transmitted to him during the reporting period concerning violations of the right to life and physical integrity, arbitrary arrest and detention, and torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment.

At the national level, the Special Rapporteur urged the implementation of the reforms that he had proposed in his previous reports concerning the reconstruction of the country's judicial system and the formulation of strategies for ending impunity; the reorganization of the functions of the army and security forces along separate lines; and unimpeded access by the majority of the people, who were excluded from the country's elite, to the major State institutions, such as education, justice and the army. He reiterated his appeal to the Burundian authorities to defer death sentences and sentences of life imprisonment, at least until the peace negotiations had been completed and a reformed judicial system established. He urgently appealed to the authorities to suspend the opening of new regroupement camps and to enable the population in the camps to return to their homes. The Burundian authorities were further requested to protect the physical security of those regrouped, to refrain from using constraints against them and to prevent them from being subjected to enforced or involuntary disappearances, arbitrary detention or extrajudicial or summary execution. The Special Rapporteur strongly encouraged the authorities to conduct independent investigations into alleged human rights violations committed during the process of regroupement, and appealed to the rebel groups to refrain from perpetrating attacks against civilians.

Recommendations to the international community included that sanctions should be eased once the Government had committed itself to the peace process; reintegration strategies for the regrouped population that promoted the reconstruction of housing in the places of origin of the population should be supported; UN agencies should continue to support local communities; an immediate embargo should be placed on the sale of arms to Burundi; and those involved in arms trafficking should be prosecuted.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/72], the Special Rapporteur described the human rights situation based on his visit to Burundi from 7 to 20 December. He noted that serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law attributable to members of the army or law enforcement agencies were still common. However, the victims no longer numbered in the hundreds as they had in the incidents of a few months earlier. The Burundian prison population had reached 10,000, causing a deterioration of conditions in the main prisons. Violence attributed to rebel groups included extorting money from the local population, stealing livestock, seizing crops, indiscriminately attacking civilians, kidnapping young men, who were enrolled by force in the rebel groups, and attacking local officials. The Special Rapporteur found that efforts had been made by the civilian and military authorities to involve the population more closely in rebuilding decent housing, especially for displaced persons. In general, however, living conditions for displaced or regrouped persons were still poor. Although there were still a number of obstacles to the process of democratization, the Special Rapporteur observed positive developments in the gradual implementation of the legal assistance programme operating since February and in the appointment of a new Minister for Human Rights, Institutional Reform and Relations with the National Assembly. There were also more regular contacts between the authorities and the human rights Observer Mission. Despite contradictory measures such as the suspension in December of the Front démocratique pour la défense du Burundi, the dialogue between the Government and the National Assembly had made progress.

The Special Rapporteur again appealed to the authorities to defer death sentences and terms of life imprisonment until the reform of the judicial system. He also recommended that they improve conditions of detention of those sentenced to death; complete judicial proceedings against the former President and the President of the National Assembly; improve and expedite investigation procedures in cases of summary execution, sexual abuse, torture or excessive use of force by the Burundian army and by the police, and initiate proceedings against the offenders; end strikes against civilians during military operations, indiscriminate attacks on them and the pillaging and arbitrary destruction of their property; resettle persons from regroupement sites and camps for displaced persons to their home collines; not recruit people under 18 years of age for the army or mandatory civic service and ensure that recruitment was never imposed by force; and prosecute the instigators of practices comparable with forced labour and the use of regroupement camp residents in tasks of a military nature. As to the rebels, the Special Rapporteur appealed to them to cease using mines and to demine the territories they frequented. The international community was called on to evaluate the utility of maintaining economic sanctions against the country, taking into account the authorities' concrete efforts to initiate an internal dialogue and a nationwide peace process. Other recommendations to the international community dealt with support for: social rehabilitation of the affected populations; the legal assistance programme; the human rights Observer Mission; and an international embargo on the sale of arms, military materiel and services to all parties to the conflict. The Special Rapporteur urged the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), in conjunction with the Tanzanian authorities, to move the refugee camps near the frontier with Burundi further into the United Republic of Tanzania, the refugees' presence being, in his view, a permanent factor of tension between the two countries. He proposed that the United Nations consider the question of an international criminal tribunal following a ceasefire, internal dialogue, the successful conclusion of negotiations and institutional reform in Burundi.

(For details on the political situation in Burundi, see PART ONE, Chapter II.)

Congo (Republic of the Congo)

By a secret ballot of 13 votes to 10, with 2 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 20 August [res. 1997/1], welcoming the mid-July ceasefire and the discussions in Libreville, Gabon, within the framework of the International Committee of Mediation for the Negotiated Resolution of the Conflict (see PART ONE, Chapter II), expressed concern at the reports of hundreds of deaths in the intercommunal strife that had occurred since early June 1997 and the continuing loss of life in Brazzaville; at the reports of thousands of people forced to leave their homes in Brazzaville during the intercommunal strife; at the allegations of torture by parties to the conflict; at the difficulties experienced by the Government of the Congo and humanitarian organizations in providing medical care and other social services in Brazzaville; and that the presidential elections could not be held. It called on the Government and all parties to the conflict to, among other things, abide by their obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law and to cease abuses. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission consider the situation of human rights in the Congo in 1998 and, if the Commission was unable to take action thereon, to consider the matter itself in 1998.

Democratic Republic of the Congo (Zaire)

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January 1997 [E/CN.4/1997/6], Special Rapporteur Roberto Garreton (Chile) described the human rights situation in Zaire (renamed the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) in May (see PART ONE, Chapter II)) and his visit to the country from 14 to 26 October 1996.

The Special Rapporteur stated that, with regard to civil and political rights, there had been no progress towards respect for the right to life, physical and mental integrity or freedoms; there had even been some regression. The country's economic decline had had a negative impact on economic, social and cultural rights. Concerning other human rights violations, the Special Rapporteur noted that deprivation of nationality was a way of punishing political dissent; ethnic groups were the target of arbitrary political discrimination; and the Government had not guaranteed the security of Rwandan refugees and Zairean refugees and displaced persons in the refugee camps. The Special Rapporteur recounted violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in respect of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 (international treaties designed for protection of victims of war, including wounded and sick military personnel, prisoners of war, and the civilian population in areas of conflict). The violations, committed by the Zairian Armed Forces, the rebel forces and former members of the Rwandan Armed Forces and the Interhamwe militia, involved killings, assault, mutilation, torture and cruel treatment or punishment; hostage-taking; arbitrary arrests and convictions without trial; attacks on civilians; and poor treatment of prisoners of war. In addition, children were used in the conflict.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Zairian authorities, among other actions, speed up the democratization process; ensure civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights; cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights; respect international humanitarian law; ratify Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions [YUN 1977, p. 706]; and participate in the peace process. The international community was urged to provide assistance for the return to democracy; support the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights; assist with the return of refugees and with rehabilitating the environment; and support non-governmental organizations (NGOs). As for action to be taken by the United Nations, the Special Rapporteur emphasized the need for greater coordination among UN bodies and suggested that the Economic and Social Council request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on the nationality of the Banyarwanda who were granted Zairian nationality collectively in 1972 and then stripped of their citizenship by a law adopted in 1981. The Special Rapporteur proposed holding an extraordinary session of the Commission on Human Rights to deal with the situation in the Great Lakes region. Alternatively, he suggested that one day of the Commission's 1997 session be devoted to the situation in Burundi, Rwanda and Zaire.

In an April report [E/CN.4/1997/6/Add.2], the Special Rapporteur discussed his 25-29 March mission, carried out at the request of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, to an area occupied by rebels in eastern Zaire. The mission was to investigate allegations of massacres of Hutu refugees in areas of Northern and Southern Kivu occupied by rebels from the Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaire (AFDL). The Special Rapporteur described specific incidents of mass murders, summary executions and enforced disappearances and discussed other human rights violations, including torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, violations of freedom of expression and of the right to property, rebel enlistment of children and impediments to humanitarian action. He concluded that AFDL was far from fulfilling its commitments to respect human rights. He noted that his mission was to investigate the alleged massacres of Hutu refugees but that the brevity of the mission had not allowed him to investigate violations of the right to life committed by the refugees themselves.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Commission on Human Rights investigate violations of the right to life in eastern Zaire against refugees and the local population by establishing a commission that comprised a member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and the Special Rapporteurs on extrajudicial executions, on the question of torture and on human rights in Zaire.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 1997/58], the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the lack of improvement in the human rights situation in Zaire in general; the continuing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms; the situation of human rights defenders; the armed conflict in eastern Zaire and the high number of civilian casualties; the continued use of force against civilians by the army and the Security forces and their enjoyment of impunity; discriminatory measures based on ethnic grounds; occurrences of arbitrary deprivation of nationality; the delay in the process of democratic transition and in the organizing of free and multi-party elections; and at the lack of follow-up to the Special Rapporteur's previous recommendations.

The Commission decided to: ask the Special Rapporteurs on the situation of human rights in Zaire and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and a member of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances to carry out a joint mission to investigate allegations of massacres and other issues affecting human rights that arose from the situation prevailing in eastern Zaire since September 1996 and to report to the General Assembly by 30 June 1997 and to the Commission in 1998; ask the High Commissioner for Human Rights to facilitate the activities of the joint mission, in particular with respect to its funding, and to provide appropriate technical expertise; extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for an additional year, and ask him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1997 and to report to the Commission in 1998, and also request him to continue to apply a gender perspective in his work; and ask the Secretary-General to continue to assist the Special Rapporteur. The Commission's decision was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/267 of 22 July.

Reports of joint mission. In July, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the joint mission [A/51/942] charged with investigating allegations of massacres and other human rights violations that occurred in eastern Zaire (renamed the DRC) since September 1996. The report described the origins and mandate of the joint mission and its activities on the ground. It presented the objections of AFDL to the Special Rapporteur's report on his March mission (see above), to the composition of the joint mission, particularly the inclusion of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Zaire, and to the mission's mandate with regard to time-frame and methods of investigation. Since the joint mission was refused entry into the DRC, it considered it difficult to regard its findings as definitive, even if there was supporting information. The mission was denied access by AFDL on the grounds that the Special Rapporteur had shown a lack of objectivity and had lied in the report describing his March mission.

In addition to the incidents detailed in that report, the joint mission received testimony and information on the perpetration of massacres and other serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. Since March, the number of allegations of massacres and mass grave sites had quadrupled. In addition, the mission noted the absence of prisoners of war and attacks on hospitals and medical centres. It concluded that the massacres and violations were the result of indiscriminate attacks on refugee camps; the systematic blockade of humanitarian assistance intended for the camps; the policy of war without quarter, which precluded the taking of prisoners; and intimidation measures aimed at forcing refugees to flee into the forests and towards hostile areas where access by humanitarian missions was impossible. According to the mission, the violations of international humanitarian law occurring between early September 1996 and 17 May 1997 were committed mainly by AFDL, the Banyamulenge and their allies (68.02 per cent of the allegations received); the Zairian armed forces (16.75 per cent); the former Rwandan armed forces and the Interahamwe (9.64 per cent); the Rwandan Patriotic Army (2.03 per cent); the armed forces of Burundi (2.03 per cent); and mercenaries fighting on the side of the Kinshasa Government (1.52 per cent). Some 30 cases remained in which the perpetrators could not be determined.

The mission recommended to the Government of the DRC that it condemn the atrocities described and pledge to end them; end the blockade of humanitarian assistance intended for refugees and displaced persons and take steps to end the suffering of the most disadvantaged refugees, particularly dispersed refugees, women, the elderly and children; guarantee the security and the right to life and physical integrity of anyone in the territory under its jurisdiction; cooperate unreservedly with the mission; order official, impartial investigations conforming to UN standards on the prevention and investigation of extrajudicial, arbitrary and summary executions and other applicable norms; promote the rule of law; establish a genuine civil service, particularly a civilian police force separate from the AFDL military forces; and enable UN agencies and other humanitarian organizations to carry out their work.

Recommendations to the United Nations and the international community included a proposal that the Security Council dispatch military and/or police observers to areas in need of security; that the investigation of massacres and other human rights violations be carried out with the Government, using all necessary technical and human resources; either the retention of the existing mission and the addition of professional investigators or the establishment, under the aegis of the Security Council, of a standing commission whose experts would be able to remain in the field for as long as their mandate required; the convening of a special session of the Commission on Human Rights; the establishment of humanitarian corridors so that refugees hiding in the forests could have access to humanitarian organizations and be repatriated to their own countries; efforts to ensure that persons accused of participating in the genocide in Rwanda (see PART ONE, Chapter II) and were currently mingled with the refugees appeared before the competent international criminal tribunal; and taking steps to halt arms trafficking in the Great Lakes region.

The joint mission recommended that the Governments of neighbouring countries take in refugees in their territory; protect them and disarm asylum-seekers who might be armed; and prevent their territory from being used to infiltrate and destabilize neighbouring countries. It proposed that the Government of Rwanda take in Rwandan refugees, particularly those repatriated from the DRC; order in-depth and impartial investigations in accordance with UN rules and bring the alleged perpetrators before the courts; and condemn the atrocities described in the report of the joint mission.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/64] to the Commission on Human Rights, the joint mission described acts of intimidation, arrest and other human rights violations committed by AFDL leaders and the DRC authorities against persons who cooperated with an established investigative team appointed by the Secretary-General on 15 July with a mandate similar to the joint mission (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The mission stated that without the determination of the international community to shed light on those serious allegations, the tradition of impunity in the DRC and in the Great Lakes region was likely to continue. It repeated the recommendations made in its earlier report.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/52/496], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report of the Special Rapporteur, as requested by the Commission on Human Rights in April. The Special Rapporteur requested permission to visit the DRC in August but had received no reply from the Government. He stated that, following his report on his March mission, the then rebel forces of AFDL refused to cooperate with him in any way. Once they were in power, the AFDL authorities declared the Special Rapporteur persona non grata.

The Special Rapporteur noted that, because the joint mission was refused entry into the DRC, the Secretary-General in July had established a team to investigate the serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law allegedly committed in the DRC since 1 March 1993 (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The joint mission learned that that investigative team encountered several obstacles set up by the Congolese authorities, with the result that it was not able to complete its work by the scheduled date and the submission of its report was postponed until 31 May 1998.

The Special Rapporteur described a series of events that had led to a new power structure in May. Following the occupation by AFDL troops of the capital city of Kinshasa and the fall of the city to the rebels, Laurent-Désiré Kabila, the AFDL leader, announced that he was assuming the office of the President of the Republic, citing as statutory authority the AFDL charter of October 1996. The name of the country was changed from the Republic of Zaire to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In addition to the conflicts arising out of the aftermath of the war and the change of Government, other armed conflicts continued, some of them on the wane, others in full swing and yet others in preparation.

The new State structure, based on an omnipresent State party, the absence of a short-, medium- or long-term democratic project, and the fact that nobody was capable of controlling the exercise of power led the Special Rapporteur to conclude that the Congolese people did not enjoy, and would not enjoy in the foreseeable future, the human right to democracy. The regime had eliminated the civil rights to life, liberty and physical integrity; the rights of political participation had been suspended; there were no measures to ensure the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights; and announcements of free elections were contradictory and no effort was being made to put them into effect. President Kabila exercised executive and legislative power and judges and magistrates were answerable to him; all laws that contradicted the new precepts laid down by the President had been repealed; one ethnic group predominated over hundreds of others, often resulting in conflict; discriminatory practices existed; the new armed forces and police were at the service of the political and ethnic power group in the Government and committed abuses against opponents and enemies; the courts were subject to the executive branch; political parties were banned, except for one that was identified with the State; and there was no freedom of information on radio and television. Violations of the right to life took the form of political murders, police brutality and disappearances; the use of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; attacks on the dignity of women; and restrictions on the freedoms of assembly, association, opinion and expression. Positive aspects of the arrival of AFDL were an end to extortion and looting, increased security in the cities and a drop in ordinary crime. However, the many negative aspects included the refusal of the current Government to cooperate with the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights or with those established by human rights treaties.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government begin the process of building democracy; agree on electoral timetables; implement an effective separation of powers; guarantee the independence of the judiciary and give it jurisdiction over the investigation of property misappropriated by the former Government; investigate crimes committed during the former regime and the current one, and ensure cooperation by the executive branch with the judicial branch; adopt measures to end impunity; stop summary executions, enforced disappearances, looting and torture; lift measures that restricted freedom of expression and opinion; permit NGOs to enjoy complete freedom in establishing themselves, electing their authorities, receiving contributions, determining their mandates and exercising their functions; recognize persons belonging to non-native ethnic groups as Congolese nationals; guarantee an end to legal, cultural and educational discrimination against women; and settle the ethnic conflicts in Kivu in conditions of justice and equality (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

The Special Rapporteur proposed that the international community provide assistance for internally displaced persons and environmental rehabilitation.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/65], the Special Rapporteur described the human rights situation in the DRC under the new power structure. The real power, he stated, rested with AFDL, which was dominated by members of the Tutsi ethnic group, including the Banyamulenge, and by people who lived in exile in Belgium, South Africa and the United States.

In addition to the recommendations in his earlier report, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government nationalize the army and the police; reintegrate AFDL child soldiers and put an end to their crimes; and change its attitude towards the United Nations. The international community was again urged to help rehabilitate the environment of the DRC and provide assistance to internally displaced persons.

Equatorial Guinea

Report of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1997/54], Special Rapporteur Alejandro Artucio (Uruguay) described the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea based on his sixth official visit to the country from 1 to 8 December 1996.

The Special Rapporteur's general impression was that there had been a slight improvement on the conditions described in his previous report [YUN 1996, p. 683] but that situations causing concern about the realization of human rights still existed. There were no substantial changes in the legal structure of the State that would enable the institutions to function more democratically. Similarly, the failure periodically and regularly to publish laws, decrees and governmental acts continued to be a source of uncertainty about the law. The excessive encroachment of military jurisdiction into criminal matters continued to lead to arbitrary acts and excesses, and jurisdiction by military courts over civilians charged with offences against the head of State curtailed freedom of expression and limited the exercise of political pluralism. The Special Rapporteur continued to be disturbed at the harmful discrimination against people belonging to ethnic minorities. The situation of children was extremely worrisome due to the social and economic situation of large sectors of the population who lived in extreme poverty. On the positive side, the Special Rapporteur noted that at the time of his visit no prisoners were being held on political or ideological grounds; improvements had been made in the conditions of imprisonment and the inmates' regimen; and efforts had been made to improve the situation of women and their position in society.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government publish periodically and regularly laws, decrees and governmental acts; improve the functioning of the judiciary; limit the jurisdiction of the military courts to trying military offences committed by military personnel; ensure that forces of order and security not make arbitrary arrests and respect the right of the individual to security, integrity and freedom; end all acts of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and impose criminal and disciplinary penalties on those responsible; dismantle the police and military checkpoints throughout the interior of Equatorial Guinea; terminate impunity; reform the Electoral Act; oppose discrimination against ethnic minorities; continue to improve prison conditions and the situation of women and children; and ensure the enjoyment by the whole population of economic, social and cultural rights.

The Special Rapporteur stated that it was extremely important for the Commission on Human Rights to ask the Secretary-General to continue to provide, through the Office of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights, technical assistance and advisory services. He congratulated and encouraged the Government for the progress already achieved.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/67], the Commission on Human Rights encouraged the Government of Equatorial Guinea to implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations. It asked the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to establish a technical cooperation programme to strengthen the national capacities of Equatorial Guinea in human rights and to continue their technical assistance projects in partnership with the Government and in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other UN agencies. Deciding to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate, the Commission asked him to report in 1998 and asked the Secretary-General to assist him.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/275 of 22 July, endorsed the Commission's decision and requests.

Nigeria

Report of Special Rapporteurs. In February, the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Bacre Waly Ndiaye (Senegal), and the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers, Param Cumaraswamy (Malaysia), submitted their final report on the human rights situation in Nigeria [E/CN.4/1997/62], an earlier report having been submitted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 685]. The reports summarized information received from the Nigerian Government on allegations of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions and allegations sent by the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers. The Special Rapporteurs postponed formulating final conclusions until such time as they could undertake a fact-finding mission to Nigeria. In their preliminary observations, they stated that, while they welcomed the invitation extended by the Government, they deeply regretted that no agreement had been reached on the dates of the visit and that the Government had not yet accepted the standard terms of reference.

In a March addendum [E/CN.4/1997/62/Add.1], the Special Rapporteurs deeply regretted that they were unable to report their findings based on a visit to the country. A mission was agreed upon and an advance party travelled to Nigeria in February, but it became obvious that the Government was not prepared to allow the Special Rapporteurs to meet certain detainees, which the Special Rapporteurs considered a violation of the standard terms of reference for fact-finding missions. Accordingly, they informed the Government that they would not carry out the mission under those circumstances. Their findings and recommendations were based on Nigerian legislation, international human rights instruments and the findings of other UN bodies, as well as credible and reliable information from NGOs and private individuals.

In their conclusions, the Special Rapporteurs noted that under the military Government the rule of law was on the verge of collapse in Nigeria. Power was vested solely in the hands of the military Government and it was impossible for an independent and impartial judiciary to exist as an institution and for independent judges and lawyers to function. The Bar Association of Nigeria had been seriously marginalized. Nigeria continued to violate provisions of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights to which it had voluntarily acceded. Death sentences had been passed by the courts, in particular by special tribunals, without the safeguard of fair trial required by the International Covenant. Furthermore, the death sentence was imposed for offences that did not constitute "the most serious crimes", as required by article 6 of the Covenant. The excessive use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials while carrying out their duties also constituted a violation of article 6. Poor conditions in places of detention contributed to an unacceptably high level of death in custody and constituted a violation of article 10, as well of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners [YUN 1955, p. 209].

The Special Rapporteurs recommended that the Government abrogate decrees revoking or limiting guarantees of fundamental rights and freedoms; have all courts and tribunals comply with the standards of fair trial and guarantees of justice under article 14 of the International Covenant; abrogate decrees that established special tribunals or ousted the jurisdiction of ordinary courts; pardon and release from detention those convicted and sentenced by special tribunals and compensate them; take effective measures to prevent extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, as well as torture, ill-treatment and arbitrary arrest and detention, by members of the security forces; investigate allegations against law enforcement officials; restore the independence of the Nigerian Bar Association; take measures to avoid further incidents of communal violence; reduce overcrowding in prisons and poor conditions of detention; allow detainees to have visits by family members and their attorneys, and grant them access to adequate medical care; consider the abolition of the death penalty; amend its Constitution concerning the right to life to conform with article 6 of the International Covenant; and fully implement the recommendations of the Secretary-General's fact-finding mission [YUN 1996, p. 684] concerning the implementation of the programme of transition to democracy.

The Special Rapporteurs recommended that the Commission on Human Rights renew the mandate on the situation of human rights in Nigeria and appoint a country-specific special rapporteur to monitor and report on human rights violations.

Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights on 15 April [res. 1997/53], by a roll-call vote of 28 to 6, with 19 abstentions, expressed deep concern at continuing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Nigeria, including arbitrary detention, as well as failure to report due process of law. It called on the Government to ensure the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms; ensure that all trials were held fairly and promptly; ensure the independence of the National Human Rights Commission; cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights and its mechanisms; and restore democratic government without delay.

The Commission invited its Chairman to appoint a special rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Nigeria, who would report to the General Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998; and asked the Secretary-General to continue his discussions with the Government and to report on progress made in implementing its present resolution and on possibilities for the international community to lend practical assistance to the country in restoring democratic rule and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Commission's decision was endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/263 of 22 July.

Notes of Secretary-General. By a note of 6 November [A/52/583], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly that on 24 June the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights had appointed Tiyanjana Maluwa (Malawi) as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Nigeria. Following Mr. Maluwa's resignation, on personal grounds, on 12 August, the Chairman appointed on 16 October Soli Jehangir Sorabjee (India) as his replacement. In view of the fact that the Special Rapporteur was only recently appointed, the Assembly would not have before it an interim report in 1997. Instead, a report would be submitted to the Commission in 1998.

In a note to the Assembly of 19 November [A/52/688], the Secretary-General stated that his good offices mission regarding Nigeria continued at the highest levels. He would consult with the Government of Nigeria, the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth and the High Commissioner for Human Rights on ways in which the international community might offer practical assistance to Nigeria to achieve the full enjoyment of human rights. Based on the fact that the Special Rapporteur was only recently nominated and that the principle of an in situ mission appeared to have a chance of materializing, the Special Rapporteur would submit a full report to the Commission in 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/644/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/144 by recorded vote (81-18-64) [agenda item 112 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Nigeria

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Recalling that Nigeria is a party to, inter alia, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling previous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights,

Welcoming the positive contribution which Nigeria has recently been making through the Economic Community of West African States in support of democratic government within the West African region, and expressing the hope that this reflects a determination to pursue the same aim in its domestic policies,

Noting that the Commonwealth has been concerned about the continued existence of a military government and the failure to observe fundamental human rights and has decided that Nigeria should remain suspended from the Commonwealth,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The declared commitment of the Government of Nigeria to civilian rule, multi-party democracy and freedom of assembly, press and political activity by 1 October 1998, and recalling, in this regard, the declaration by the Government of 1 October 1995 which the Government recently confirmed;

(b) The decision of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Nigeria;

(c) The note by the Secretary-General concerning the discharge of his good offices mandate, and requests him, in cooperation with the Commonwealth, to continue to undertake further discussion with the Government of Nigeria and to report on progress in the implementation of the present resolution and on the possibilities for the international community to offer practical assistance to Nigeria in achieving the restoration of democratic rule and the full enjoyment of human rights;

2. Expresses its deep concern:

(a) At continuing grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Nigeria, including arbitrary detention, as well as failure to respect due process of law;

(b) That the absence of representative government in Nigeria has led to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and is contrary to the popular support for democratic government as evidenced in the 1993 elections;

(c) That additional persons among those detained in Nigeria are to be tried by the same flawed judicial process which led to the arbitrary execution of Ken Saro-Wiwa and his associates;

(d) At the lack of preparatory steps by the Government of Nigeria to secure the reinstallation of a representative government following elections characterized by genuine popular participation in a multi-party context;

(e) At the past refusal of the Government of Nigeria to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights and its mechanisms;

3. Calls upon the Government of Nigeria:

(a) To ensure urgently the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including by respecting the right to life, by releasing all political prisoners, including those detained in connection with the 1993 presidential elections, among them Chief M. K. O. Abiola, trade union leaders, human rights advocates and journalists currently detained, by improving conditions of detention and by guaranteeing freedom of the press, freedom of opinion and association and respect for the rights of individuals, including persons belonging to minorities;

(b) To ensure that all trials are held fairly and promptly and in strict conformity with international human rights standards;

(c) To abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments, and notes with interest, in this regard, the recommendations of the Human Rights Committee to the Government of Nigeria;

(d) To take concrete and credible steps to restore democratic government without delay, to end rule by decree and to permit an observer presence during transition, as recommended by the United Nations fact-finding mission;

(e) To ensure the independence of the National Human Rights Commission, including in its investigations of human rights abuses;

(f) To implement fully its interim undertakings to the Secretary-General without further delay and to respond in full to the recommendations of the mission sent to Nigeria by the Secretary-General;

(g) To implement its obligations under the Convention concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise, 1948 (No. 87), of the International Labour Organization, while noting the special paragraph in the report of the International Labour Conference Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, as adopted by the International Labour Conference at its

85th session, on Nigeria's failure to comply with that Convention;

(h) To cooperate fully with the Commission on Human Rights and its mechanisms;

4. Decides to consider this question at its fifty-third session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Rwanda

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/661, the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and all other human rights violations perpetrated in Rwanda in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1070] and expressed its concern at the continuation of human rights violations there. It called on the Government to investigate, and where possible to prosecute and punish, cases of rape and other sexual violence that occurred during and after the genocide and to extend an invitation to the Special Rapporteur on violence against women to visit the country. The Commission expressed grave concern at the deterioration in the human rights situation since the beginning of January 1997, particularly the increase in the killing of and attacks against genocide survivors and witnesses by members of the former Forces armées rwandaises, Interahamwe militia or other insurgents, and the killing of unarmed civilians by some elements of the security forces.

The Chairman of the Commission was asked to appoint a special representative with the mandate to make recommendations on how to improve the human rights situation in Rwanda, to facilitate the creation and effective functioning of an independent national human rights commission, and to make recommendations on situations in which technical assistance to the Government might be appropriate. The special representative was asked to report to the General Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to report regularly on the activities and findings of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR), and to make those reports available to the Commission and the General Assembly. The High Commissioner was also asked to report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution to the Commission in 1998 and to the Assembly in 1997. Those requests were approved by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/274 of 22 July. The Commission called on all States to respond to the High Commissioner's appeal to contribute urgently to the costs of HRFOR and to work for lasting solutions to the problem of its financing.

On 20 June, Michel Moussalli (Switzerland) was named Special Representative [A/52/522].

Reports of Special Representative. By an October note [A/52/522], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Special Representative on his first visit to Rwanda (26 July-4 August).

The Special Representative observed that, in his meetings in Rwanda, he had sensed a willingness on the part of the Government to bring its practices into better conformity with international human rights standards, as was demonstrated in its agreement with the High Commissioner to accept the presence of HRFOR, which entailed the deployment of human rights field officers. HRFOR was charged with, among other things, implementing human rights technical cooperation programmes, particularly in the area of the administration of justice. The Special Representative pointed out that, following the worsening security situation in the north-western prefectures (see PART ONE, Chapter II) caused by armed insurgent groups and the assassination of five HRFOR members, the situation in those prefectures, as well as in parts of Byumba, Gikongoro, Gitarama, Kibungo and Kigali Rural, required security regulations that prohibited UN staff from visiting those areas and monitoring activities.

HRFOR's 1997 Action Programme pursued activities in the administration of justice and legal reform, penitentiary administration, training and institutional support, and genocide response and vulnerable groups. In August, HRFOR produced a global technical cooperation project document covering human rights education and training for the judiciary, the military, the gendarmerie, the police, prison administration personnel, other civil servants and members of local human rights NGOs; capacity-building in civilian and military justice; capacity support for human rights NGOs; the popularization of human rights through education and promotion activities; and support for genocide victims and vulnerable groups.

The Special Representative expressed deep concern at the conditions of detention and the large number of persons who were detained without dossiers setting out substantiated grounds for their arrest and detention. He noted, however, that efforts were under way to relieve the harshness of those conditions.

The Special Representative recommended enhanced cooperation between the Government and the international community to develop the most suitable conditions for promoting and protecting human rights; technical assistance for human rights projects; a lead role for the High Commissioner for Human Rights in establishing a strengthened framework of cooperation and a timetable of priority projects; adequate financial support for the priority projects and the effective functioning of HRFOR; assistance to the Government in establishing urgently a dossier for every detainee, improving conditions of detention and speeding up genocide trials; and the establishment of an independent and credible national human rights commission.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/60], the Special Representative discussed his second visit to the country from 1 to 8 November. By the beginning of November, the Government had arrived at a draft proposal for establishing a National Human Rights Commission, which was formally established by a Presidential Order of 11 November.

The Special Representative reiterated his earlier recommendations. He also recommended that: the international community condemn the insurgent forces, which had shown signs of resuming the genocide they had launched in 1994; all States cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, established by Security Council resolution 955(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 299], concerning the arrest and transfer of any person sought by the Tribunal; Government efforts to prosecute violations committed by some elements of its armed forces be encouraged and supported; a survey be conducted to identify the specific needs of genocide survivors and Member States contribute to a fund for them; the human rights component of all school curricula be strengthened; the international community provide development assistance to the countries of the Great Lakes region; and the international community initiate an assistance programme to support the Government's efforts to promote and protect human rights and provide for the people of Rwanda to live in peace and security.

Report of High Commissioner. In an overview of the human rights situation in Rwanda since March 1997 [E/CN.4/1998/61], the High Commissioner stated that in 1997 HRFOR had documented 5,952 killings compared with 1,575 reported killings in 1996. Of the 1997 figures, 3,140 were attributed to State agents, 1,536 to members of armed groups and 87 to members of the population carrying out "private justice". The perpetrators of the remaining 1,169 killings were unknown. The 1997 figure included attacks in which at least 269 genocide survivors and old-caseload returnees were killed. Attacks in August and in December resulted in the killing of at least 457 Congolese refugees of Tutsi origin by armed groups in northern Gisenyi prefecture. There were numerous other attacks in Gisenyi and Ruhengeri prefectures.

Military operations by the Rwandese Patriotic Army (RPA) resulted in the killing of 137 civilians in March and 2,022 persons in May and June, all in Ruhengeri prefecture. According to official sources, during May and June, 200 to 300 civilians, 1,800 members of armed groups and 90 RPA soldiers were killed during confrontations in the course of counter-insurgency operations conducted in Ruhengeri prefecture by RPA. In August, large-scale confrontations occurred between armed groups and RPA in Gisenyi prefecture. By 12 September, 29 RPA soldiers had been arrested for various crimes allegedly committed during those incidents.

As at 31 December, the detainee population in Rwanda's 19 central prisons totalled 77,439, compared with some 72,000 in August. HRFOR estimated the detainee population in cachots (communal detention centres) and gendarmerie brigades at around 48,863.

Conditions of detention remained poor in the majority of cachots, which lacked adequate light and ventilation and were severely overcrowded. Shortages of food, lack of access to water and health care, and inadequate hygiene were widely noted. In some places, however, overcrowding was eased by the work of itinerant judicial investigative personnel deployed by the Ministry of Justice to carry out preliminary investigations into genocide cases and to open case files for detainees.

As to genocide trials, between 3 January and 31 December 1997, the Specialized Chambers of the Courts of First Instance handed down judgments in respect of 322 defendants. By 5 December, 321 trials had been completed.

Progress had been made since the beginning of the genocide trials, including an increased number of witnesses testifying in court, an increase in legal representation, a growing use of the Confession and Guilty Plea Procedure, and an increase in granting reasonable requests for adjournment. However, several aspects of the proceedings remained cause for concern, particularly the lack of full respect for fair trial guarantees. Military trials were taking place and HRFOR awaited the completion of investigations and the beginning of additional military trials in cases of significant reported RPA abuses.

The High Commissioner called on the international community to strengthen its assistance to the Government to protect civilians of north-west Rwanda and to end the ongoing violence, and proposed that the Government should ensure that all security force members were well trained in the use of force and firearms during military operations and in the relevant international standards on the use of force. The High Commissioner encouraged the Government to ensure thorough, prompt and impartial investigations into allegations that members of the security forces and other State agents had violated domestic law and international human rights standards, particularly regarding the right to life. A moratorium on the use of the death penalty was urged and it was suggested that the Government seek alternatives to detention. The High Commissioner noted that the Government could also be provided with assistance in strengthening the judicial system.

Human Rights Field Operation

In March [F/CN.4/1997/52], the High Commissioner for Human Rights updated information on the activities of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR) since the previous report in October 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 688]. The High Commissioner visited the country on 18 February to assess the status, activities and future strategy of HRFOR, and to decide on measures that might be necessary to adapt the Operation to the deterioration in security conditions (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

HRFOR carried out investigations into alleged violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including possible acts of genocide; monitored the ongoing human rights situation; cooperated with other international agencies to re-establish confidence and thus facilitate the rebuilding of civil society; and implemented programmes of technical cooperation in human rights, particularly in the administration of justice.

In November and December 1996, there was a massive return to Rwanda of refugees [YUN 1996, p. 54], most of whom had fled to neighbouring countries during or shortly following the 1994 genocide and civil war. The mass return from the United Republic of Tanzania was characterized by a higher degree of tension than that experienced during the massive influx of returnees from Zaire. In January, the number of killings in Rwanda escalated and the general security situation deteriorated severely. The influx of criminals who had mingled with the legitimate refugees resulted in increased attacks against genocide survivors. There were also reported killings of returnees and other attacks against and cases of ill-treatment of them. In addition, from the beginning of 1997, there was a serious increase in security incidents involving expatriates working in Rwanda. A number of attacks were carried out against international observers, including the murder of five HRFOR personnel on 4 February. The Government explained the acts of violence against HRFOR staff and other expatriates by the fact that elements of the ex-FAR (former Rwandan Army soldiers) and Interahamwe militia among the returning refugees had established sufficient roots to carry out targeted terrorist activities. HRFOR was temporarily evacuated to Kigali and the Operation was restructured at the end of February.

On 27 December 1996, the first court proceedings began before Rwandan courts against persons accused of genocide or crimes against humanity. By mid-February, 18 judgements had been handed down, of which 11 were death sentences, 6 were life imprisonments and 1 was an acquittal.

As to the costs and financing of the Operation, for 1997 the HRFOR Trust Fund received $6,033,200 over and above the positive balance of $2,529,300 received in 1996, which together totalled $8,562,500. The amount would enable HRFOR to continue until the end of September 1997 at a level of 105 personnel.

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/114 [YUN 1996, p. 688], the Secretary-General, by an October 1997 note [A/52/486], transmitted the report of the High Commissioner covering the human rights situation in Rwanda since February 1997 and the activities of HRFOR since November 1996.

HRFOR had received reports of ethnically motivated attacks against persons on public buses and against schools. Numerous attacks on judicial personnel had become a cause for concern. In May and June, a further deterioration was seen in the security and human rights situation in Ruhengeri prefecture, where at least 2,022 persons were killed during RPA operations in several communes. In August, numerous large-scale confrontations took place between armed groups and RPA in communes in Gisenyi prefecture. At the end of that month, armed groups carried out the largest-scale attack against civilians since the 1994 genocide at a UNHCR-administered camp in northern Gisenyi prefecture, which reportedly claimed the lives of 128 Congolese refugees and resulted in the wounding of 102 others.

Regarding conditions of detention in Rwanda, the High Commissioner stated that the number of detainees registered by ICRC had reached 122,000 by mid-September, excluding an updated tally of detainees in Ruhengeri prefecture, which neither ICRC nor HRFOR had been able to visit since January. According to official figures, the total detainee population, which did not include detainees in communal cachots or military prisons, had reached 71,000 by the end of June. HRFOR noted improvements in a number of prison facilities but continued to receive reports of ill-treatment in others.

Progress had been made since the beginning of the genocide trials on 27 December 1996, including an increased number of witnesses testifying in court; improved access by detainees to case files; and an increase in granting reasonable requests for adjournments. However, several aspects of the proceedings remained cause for concern, particularly the lack of full respect for some fair trial guarantees and the lack of legal representation in many cases.

The High Commissioner concluded that although HRFOR had made significant progress in implementing its mandate, the human rights situation had worsened in Rwanda. Only a fraction of the number of persons accused of participating in the genocide had been brought to trial and the continued detention of persons without trial constituted a major human rights concern. HRFOR had documented the killings by State agents of numerous unarmed civilians, including the elderly, women and children, who took no part in hostilities. The indications were that RPA soldiers had not followed the most basic norms of international humanitarian law in carrying out cordon-and-search operations to flush out insurgents.

By a November note [A/52/486/Add.1/Rev.1], the Secretary-General transmitted an addendum to the High Commissioner's report containing the results of an expert assessment of the work of HRFOR, which was conducted to chart the future direction of the Operation. The High Commissioner had requested the former Chief of the Operation from October 1995 to September 1996 to visit Rwanda from 6 to 11 October 1997 to make the assessment.

The assessment mission recommended that the Operation should continue to combine a dissuasive local presence and monitoring with technical cooperation and capacity-building, and that monitoring should be conceived as a means of assisting the Government to address problems. Other recommendations included changing the Operation's reporting methods to contain more analytical material; continuing to investigate violations of international human rights and humanitarian law in a situation of internal armed conflict, making every effort to interview military commanders; enhancing the Operation's capacity-building and promotional role; according high priority to training and support to the military justice system; developing collaboration with Rwandan human rights NGOs; focusing on guarantees of a fair trial, the independence of the judiciary and other legal professionals, respect for lawful arrest and detention procedures, safeguards for the right to life and to physical integrity, and popular access to effective remedies for human rights violations; strengthening field teams; bringing greater professional experience and expertise to the Operation; and strengthening HRFOR security teams.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/61], the High Commissioner described the structure and state of operations of HRFOR since March 1997. Under the technical cooperation programme, which involved the principal elements of the administration of justice and legal reform, penitentiary administration, training and institutional support, and assistance to genocide survivors and vulnerable groups, human rights field officers had participated in the training of 150 new judicial police inspectors and 900 new communal police constables. On 24 April, HRFOR launched a series of seminars for judicial personnel organized jointly with UNHCR, the Ministry of Justice and the Supreme Court, with UNHCR funding. Also in April, the Operation conducted a seminar for all levels of military justice personnel. A conference on the role and responsibilities of the National Assembly in the protection and promotion of human rights (4-6 September) was organized jointly by HRFOR and the Transitional National Assembly. Two training sessions were organized for human rights NGOs on investigative methods, reporting techniques and the principles of international humanitarian law in the context of present-day Rwanda. HRFOR pursued its ongoing programme of human rights education and promotion through seminars, conferences and workshops to create widespread awareness of human rights among the population. Special emphasis was placed on rights relating to the genocide trials, such as fair trial guarantees and procedures for civil claimants. HRFOR continued to pay attention to the survivors of the 1994 genocide by focusing on providing assistance to certain local communities wishing to document and publish the history of the genocide in their communes; increasing awareness of the Rwandan legal system among genocide survivors; and monitoring and reporting on the current human rights situation of genocide survivors and vulnerable groups. It held a seminar on support for victims' rights to increase genocide survivors' knowledge of the Rwandan judicial system.

Sudan

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/58], Special Rapporteur Gáspár Bíró (Hungary) described human rights violations by the Government of the Sudan. The report was based on his mission to Asmara and Tesseney, Eritrea, and to Cairo, Egypt (4-12 January), where he met Sudanese citizens residing in those countries, Sudanese refugees who had recently fled the Sudan and UNDP and UNHCR representatives. On 13 January, he arrived in Khartoum and met with the Prosecutor General, representatives of the Ministry of Justice and the Consultative Council for Human Rights.

The Special Rapporteur presented a chronology of events between April 1996 and January 1997 detailing cases of slavery, the slave trade and similar practices; continuous bombardments by government aircraft in southern Sudan; interrogation under torture; the resumption of the amputation of hands of convicted thieves; arrests, torture and lack of due process of law; hostage-taking; arbitrary detention and summoning to the security offices; summary executions; violation of the right of freedom of the press; killings resulting from inter-tribal clashes; indiscriminate killings of Sudanese refugees and abductions from camps in northern Uganda; violent clashes between security forces and university students; the rounding up of street children and their transfer to isolated camps; violations of the rights of women; violations of religious freedom; and indiscriminate killings of civilians and devastation of villages in Blue Nile province.

The Special Rapporteur continued to receive reports and information on grave and widespread violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms by government agents, and abuses and atrocities committed against the life, liberty and security of individuals by members of different parties to the armed conflict in the country other than the Government in the areas under their control.

He recommended that the Government comply with its human rights obligations under international law and take steps to give effect to General Assembly and Commission on Human Rights resolutions; cease aerial bombardments of civilian targets; release all political detainees and prisoners, cease torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment, close down secret detention centres, ensure accused persons due process of law and allow them visits by lawyers and family members, and ratify, accede to or sign UN human rights instruments; ensure proper training for security forces, army and police forces and paramilitary or civil defence groups; stop the rounding up of children from the streets, release them from special camps and other places where they were being held and make efforts to reunite them with their families; provide free access to all areas of the country to humanitarian organizations and representatives of human rights organizations; investigate reported cases of slavery and institutions and practices similar to slavery; agree on a ceasefire; and address the problem of displaced persons and Sudanese refugees in neighbouring countries. The Special Rapporteur recommended that priority be given to placing human rights field officers in the country as monitors in order to facilitate improved information flow and assessment and to help in the independent verification of reporting.

By a 21 March response to the Special Rapporteur's report [E/CN.4/1997/126], the Sudan noted, among other things, that it was continuing its efforts to investigate human rights violations.

Commission action. On 15 April [res. 1997/59], the Commission on Human Rights expressed deep concern at continued serious human rights violations by the Government of the Sudan and called on it to comply with applicable international human rights instruments, to bring its national legislation into accord with those instruments to which it was a party, and to ensure that individuals in its territory and subject to its jurisdiction fully enjoyed the rights recognized in those instruments. All parties to the hostilities were called on to respect fully the applicable provisions of international humanitarian law.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked the Secretary-General to assist him. It asked the Special Rapporteur to report on the future need for human rights field officers, with the understanding that the Commission would reassess that need in 1998. He was also asked to report to the General Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 38], the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1997/23], adopted decision 1997/268 by a roll-call vote (31-3-14) [agenda item 7 (d)].

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

At its 38th plenary meeting, on 22 July 1997, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/59 of 15 April 1997, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend for an additional year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, approved its request to the Secretary-General to give the Special Rapporteur all necessary assistance, from within existing resources, in the discharge of his mandate, and also approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to report to the Commission on the future need for human rights field officers, with the understanding that at its fifty-fourth session the Commission would reassess such need, and to report his findings and recommendations to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session and to the Commission at its fifty-fourth session.

ROLL-CALL VOTE ON DECISION 1997/268:

In favour Argentina, Australia, Belarus, Brazil, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Czech Republic, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Jamaica, Japan, Latvia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Poland, Romania, Russian Federation, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: China, Cuba, Sudan.

Abstain: Bangladesh, Djibouti, Gabon, India, Jordan, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mozambique, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. By an October note [A/52/510], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's report describing his visit to the Sudan (2-10 September) to discuss with government officials and other parties the human rights dimensions of the Sudan Peace Agreement (known also as the Khartoum Agreement) signed on 21 April between the Government and representatives of several southern political organizations and rebel groups. He also examined information on the latest measures taken by the Government through its Consultative Council for Human Rights.

The Special Rapporteur stated that the Khartoum Agreement's provisions on fundamental human rights and freedoms were in accordance with international human rights standards. From a legal perspective, the regulation of the institution of citizenship in accordance with the principles laid down in the Agreement and contained in a 1997 constitutional decree was of crucial importance in giving effect to Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/59 (see above).

As to the general human rights situation, the Special Rapporteur continued to receive reports and information on human rights violations, which indicated that government agents were responsible for a broad range of violations in the areas controlled by them. Following the escalation of fighting between January and August, the human rights situation in the conflict zones had deteriorated. Reports continued of the displacement of tens of thousands fleeing the war and of massive civilian casualties. In areas of armed conflict, indications were that all parties were responsible for human rights violations, including the right to life, liberty and personal security of civilians, especially women, children and the elderly. On the positive side, the Consultative Council for Human Rights had established subcommittees dealing with detentions without trial, arrests, torture and lack of due process of law; religious persecution; forced displacement and bombardments; extrajudicial killings; access for relief organizations and humanitarian law; slavery and disappearances; women's rights; children's rights; freedom of expression and peaceful assembly; and the report of the Juba Commission (a judicial commission established to investigate and report to the President on the fighting between the Government of the Sudan army and the Sudanist People's Liberation Army that took place in Juba in 1992 and resulted in reports of extrajudicial killings and summary executions).

The Special Rapporteur noted that the Juba report did not address the treatment of detainees during detention and investigation, despite continuous public reports and information on torture, degrading and inhuman treatment, including testimonies received from victims of those practices, who were subsequently not sentenced, nor did it address in a convincing manner allegations of extrajudicial killings and summary executions. Also, the Special Rapporteur believed that further details on the creation, regulations and functioning of the special courts in 1992 in Juba should have been addressed by the Juba report.

Some positive developments were reported regarding the situation of street children, including the closing of one of the camps and the introduction of a new practice centred on rehabilitation and family reunification. The situation of women continued to raise questions, especially with regard to legislation in force on the status of women and its implementation by local authorities. Most of the reports and information, including testimonies received by the Special Rapporteur during his September 1997 mission to Khartoum, indicated that members of the Popular Defence Forces were responsible for the violations and abuses, especially the arbitrary roundup of women from the streets of Khartoum, the verbal harassment of them and the lashings carried out at the Khartoum Popular Police Forces Headquarters.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government ensure wide publicity of the activities of its Special Committee on Allegations of Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and Reported Cases of Slavery; ensure full transparency of the Committee by encouraging all civic groups to participate in its fact-finding activities; give free and unimpeded access to international human rights and humanitarian organizations and independent observers to all areas where enforced or involuntary disappearances or cases of slavery, slave trade and similar institutions and practices had been reported; and consider international participation in addressing reported cases of enforced or involuntary disappearances in the Nuba Mountains area. He also recommended establishing periodical contacts in Khartoum between representatives of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Government to ensure a prompt exchange and verification of information or reports. Regarding the conflict zones, he again requested the placement of human rights field officers as monitors.

On 20 November [A/C.3/52/10], the Government of the Sudan responded to the Special Rapporteur's report, noting, among other things, that it disagreed with his main conclusion that the human rights situation had not improved.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/66], the Special Rapporteur stated that until 13 December he had been receiving detailed information on all categories of human rights violations and abuses addressed in his previous reports. As in past years, torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment of detainees at the hands of security forces were reported throughout the year. Reports were received concerning arbitrary arrests and lack of due process of law; the abduction of people from southern Sudan; allegations concerning the demolition of Catholic centres by government authorities and other forms of religious intolerance; the abduction of young children by a rebel group; and violations of the rights of women.

Regarding children, the Special Rapporteur had not received any communication from the Government on steps taken to liberate and reunite children with their families, especially girls abducted from northern Uganda by a rebel group, nor on any measures taken by the Government to stop the practice and bring those responsible to justice. As to the Juba Commission, the Special Rapporteur believed that its report did not answer satisfactorily the problems raised by the reports of gross and mass human rights violations allegedly committed in Juba in 1992. The situation of women continued to raise questions.

The Special Rapporteur recommended support by the international community to implement measures to end human rights violations and abuses. He reiterated his previous recommendations and proposed the establishment of a field office of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Khartoum.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/140 by recorded vote (93-16-58) [agenda item 112 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to comply with the obligations laid down in the various instruments in this field,

Recalling the obligation of all parties to respect international humanitarian law,

Also recalling its resolution 51/112 of 12 December 1996, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/59 of 15 April 1997,

Noting with deep concern the human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law outlined in resolution 1997/59, including the aerial bombardment of civilians, slavery, slave trade, extrajudicial killings, arbitrary arrests, detentions without due process, enforced or involuntary disappearances, violations of the rights of women and children, forced displacement of persons, systematic torture and denial of the freedoms of religion, expression, association and peaceful assembly,

Expressing serious concern about continuing reports of religious persecution, including forced conversion of Christians and animists in Government-controlled areas of the Sudan,

Welcoming the visit to the Sudan by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief,

Especially concerned about the continuing reports of the abuse of children, including slavery, sexual abuse, forced conversion and the use of children as soldiers, despite repeated calls from the international community to put an end to this practice, as described in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Sudan,

Deeply concerned about policies, practices and activities which are directed against and particularly violate the human rights of women and girls, and noting the continuation of such practices, including civil and judicial discrimination against women, as reported by the Special Rapporteur,

Gravely concerned about reports that those practices have frequently been carried out by agents under government authority or have taken place with the knowledge of the Government of the Sudan,

Taking note of efforts reported by the Government of the Sudan to investigate such activities and practices, as well as measures proposed to eliminate verified instances of them, as urged in previous General Assembly resolutions,

Welcoming new practices regarding street children, which centre on rehabilitation and family reunification and the increasing involvement of the United Nations Children's Fund in projects with the Government of the Sudan,

Also welcoming the invitation extended by the Government of the Sudan to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression and to the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, and urging that the visit to the Sudan by the Special Rapporteur take place as soon as possible,

Further welcoming the support extended by the Government of the Sudan to the visit by a delegation of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights in December 1996,

Noting the establishment by the Government of the Sudan of national committees for human rights education, and encouraging the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to take into consideration requests for assistance by the Government of the Sudan, including assistance to help those committees to improve the observance of human rights in the Sudan,

Welcoming the establishment by the Consultative Council for Human Rights of subcommittees on detentions without trial, arrests, torture and lack of due process of law, religious persecution, forced displacement and bombardments, extrajudicial killings, access for relief organizations and humanitarian law, slavery and disappearances, the rights of women, the rights of the child and freedom of expression and peaceful assembly,

Taking note of the long-overdue report by the Government of the Sudan on the summary execution of aid workers in Juba in 1992, and regretting that it did not provide any evidence that a fair trial was given,

Also noting the work of the Special Investigation Committee on Allegations of Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and Reported Cases of Slavery,

Concerned that the continuation of civil war in the Sudan has caused the internal displacement of a large number of persons, including ethnic minorities, has resulted in the indiscriminate bombing and shelling of civilian targets and has been marked by gross violations of human rights by the Government of the Sudan and by lack of respect of international humanitarian law by all parties to the conflict,

Encouraged by the joint announcement by the Government of the Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement that they are engaged in peace talks, scheduled to resume early in 1998 under the sponsorship of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, and the acceptance by all parties of the Declaration of Principles as the basis for negotiation,

1. Expresses deep concern at the serious, widespread and continuing human rights violations in the Sudan, including extrajudicial killings and summary executions, detentions without due process, violations of the rights of women and children, forced displacement of persons, enforced or involuntary disappearances, torture and other forms of cruel and unusual punishment, slavery, practices similar to slavery and forced labour, denial of the freedoms of expression, association and peaceful assembly and discrimination based on religion;

2. Expresses its outrage at the use by all parties to the conflict of military force to disrupt or attack relief efforts, and calls for an end to such practices and for those responsible for such actions to be brought to justice;

3. Calls upon the Government of the Sudan to comply with applicable international human rights instruments to which the Sudan is a party, in particular the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Inter-

Afghanistan

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/1997/59], Special Rapporteur Choong-Hyun Paik (Republic of Korea) reported on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan based on his visit to that country (7-13 January) and to Pakistan (6-7 and 13-14 January).

Having outlined the country's political situation since the submission of his last report in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 695], the Special Rapporteur stated that Afghanistan was in a state of civil war (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). It continued not to have a legitimate, effective and functioning central government; an independent, impartial and unified judicial system; a constitution; institutions of civil society; rule of law; and accountability for human rights violations and mechanisms to provide redress to victims. The economy was virtually non-existent and unemployment had been rising steadily. Opium production was the main economic activity. Specific human rights problems in Afghanistan were summary or arbitrary executions; retaliation and individual acts of revenge; violations of the right to life, including torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, capital punishment and corporal punishment; violations of the right to liberty and security of the person, including arbitrary arrest and detention; kidnapping and disappearances; and violation of the freedoms of thought, expression, peaceful assembly and association. Violations of economic and social rights centred on the right to work; the right to education; gender-based discrimination; cultural issues; and self-determination. As to the refugee situation, it was estimated that 1.4 million Afghan refugees were in Iran and almost 900,000 were in Pakistan. Some 10 million landmines were scattered throughout the country, jeopardizing the right to life.

The Special Rapporteur stated that certain minimum internationally accepted human rights standards had to be respected at all times. He recommended that the Taliban authorities take measures to ensure women's rights; halt the production of dry opium; and provide assistance to displaced populations. The United Nations was urged to strengthen system-wide coordination to devise a strategy to promote and protect human rights in Afghanistan. The international community should make efforts to educate persons in authority about human rights.

Commission action. On 16 April [E/1997/23 (res. 1997/65)], the Commission on Human Rights, noting the intensification of armed hostilities in Afghanistan and the deterioration of the human rights situation, called on all Afghan parties to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report in 1998 and to consider reporting to the General Assembly in 1997. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Commission asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to ensure a human rights presence in Afghanistan.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/273 of 22 July, endorsed the Commission's decision, and approved its requests to the Special Rapporteur, the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In October [A/52/493], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report in which the Special Rapporteur described his visits to Afghanistan (27 July-3 August) and Pakistan (27 and 31 July and 1-2 August).

The Special Rapporteur stated that the political and military situation in Afghanistan remained extremely volatile and had negatively affected the human rights situation. The humanitarian crisis was chronic and the economy heavily dependent on international aid. The conflict had prevented the population from exercising its right to self-determination as well as its right to development. The situation of women had deteriorated further, particularly in areas controlled by the Taliban. The Special Rapporteur welcomed an amnesty decree for Afghan refugees living in Iran, Pakistan and other countries, issued by the Supreme Court of the Taliban in June, which provided guarantees for their safe and dignified return, respect for their basic human rights and exemption from prosecution for non-personal criminal offences committed before leaving the country. He also welcomed Taliban efforts to curb the cultivation and production of narcotics. He observed that the measures taken by the Taliban indicated they had realized that support for their movement had eroded further. Among those measures were forced displacement of populations, pre-emptive arbitrary arrests of persons based on their ethnic origin or political affiliation, stricter enforcement of the behaviour and dress code and preventing international aid from reaching areas not under its control.

The Special Rapporteur proposed deploying a human rights resource person in the field who would advise the resident coordinator and the United Nations on human rights issues; organizing information dissemination workshops for local authorities, project staff and NGOs; and identifying programme activities that would positively impact governance and human rights. He urged the Afghan authorities to act in accordance with international human rights instruments to which Afghanistan was a party. The Special Rapporteur recommended that education for all should be restored immediately; that awareness about the problem of landmines be maintained; that ICRC be granted access to all prisoners in Afghanistan; and that greater gender awareness be created. The international community was asked to pay greater attention to the implications of educational policies in Afghanistan; safeguard basic human rights; work within the constraints encountered in the country without compromising its non-derogable principles; examine the human rights record of the Taliban movement; and contribute to the betterment of orphans and disabled persons. The Special Rapporteur called for voluntary contributions to the Society for the Preservation of Afghanistan's Cultural Heritage and urged Afghanistan to sign the Convention for the Protection of the World's Cultural and Natural Heritage adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in 1972 [YUN 1972, p. 759].

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/71], the Special Rapporteur discussed his visits to Afghanistan (2-3 and 7-12 December) and Pakistan (30 November and 1, 5-6 and 13 December). He stated that the human rights situation in Afghanistan had deteriorated throughout 1997 and the armed hostilities had taken on the features of violent confrontation with ethnic and religious attributes. The right to life was under constant serious threat and was accompanied by flagrant violations of human rights such as executions, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, arbitrary detention, looting and unfounded persecution. The situation had led to unprecedented violence resulting in massive loss of life. The non-observance of the international laws of war and humanitarian norms in and outside the battle zones in Afghanistan was widespread.

In December, the Special Rapporteur visited a number of sites containing so-called "mass graves" in northern Afghanistan. The burial sites were reported to contain the remains of villagers allegedly killed by Taliban forces in a number of communities around Mazar-i-Sharif in September 1997. In November, sites were discovered where numerous people were buried, some of whom might have been summarily executed. A further thorough investigation of all the sites concerned was expected.

The Special Rapporteur noted that the infringements on women's rights were such that they posed serious threats to their enjoyment of even the most basic rights, including the right to life, particularly in Taliban-controlled areas where women continued to be denied access to education and employment. He further noted that the production, processing and export of narcotics in and from Afghanistan posed serious obstacles to the control of narcotics worldwide.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan should refrain from committing human rights violations, in particular those amounting to extrajudicial, summary and arbitrary executions and to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. All armed hostilities should cease immediately and a negotiated solution be sought. The international community should consider how to conduct a campaign of awareness and education about the international obligations and duties under the laws of war and international humanitarian law. The international community, including UN agencies and NGOs, should continue efforts to implement a policy of "constructive engagement" with their Afghan interlocutors concerning such issues as the right to equal opportunity and gender equality. A thorough and full-scale investigation of all killings, including the "mass graves" in northern Afghanistan, should be undertaken by the United Nations in order to seek out and punish those responsible. An assessment needed to be made by a neutral team of independent investigators to establish the identity and category of the victims, as well as the manner and cause of death.

(For details of the political situation in Afghanistan, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/644/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/145 without vote [agenda item 112 (c)].

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Notes with deep concern the intensification of armed hostilities in Afghanistan, which have resulted in the destruction of houses and in forced evictions, including on grounds of ethnicity, and calls upon all parties involved immediately to cease such hostilities and to engage in a political dialogue aimed at achieving national reconciliation and the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity;

3. Also notes with deep concern the ongoing further deterioration of the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, including the situation of women, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, and condemns the violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law, including the rights to life, liberty and security of person, freedom from torture and from other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, freedom of opinion, expression, religion, association and movement;

(f) Equal access for women to health facilities;

7. Also urges all the Afghan parties to work closely and to cooperate with the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan with a view to achieving a comprehensive political solution leading to the cessation of armed confrontation and to the establishment of a democratic Government elected through free and fair elections, based on the right to self-determination of the people of Afghanistan;

8. Further urges all the Afghan parties to ensure that United Nations programmes are carried out without discrimination against women either as participants or as beneficiaries;

15. Urges all States to respect the full national unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Afghanistan;

16. Bahrain

On 21 August [E/CN.4/1998/2 (res. 1997/2)], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 12 votes to 11, with 1 abstention, noting that Bahrain had been without an elected legislature for 22 years, that there were no democratic institutions there and that Bahrain was facing problems of internationally assisted terrorism, condemned all acts of terrorism in the country. Further noting information concerning a deterioration of the human rights situation in Bahrain, the Subcommission expressed deep concern about the alleged gross and systematic violations. It urged the Government to comply with international human rights standards and asked the Commission on Human Rights to consider in 1998 the situation of human rights in Bahrain.

Cambodia

For information on the human rights situation in Cambodia, see PART TWO, Chapter I.

China

On 15 April, the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 27 to 17, with 9 abstentions, accepted a motion by China that no action be taken on a draft resolution concerning the human rights situation in that country [E/1997/23].

By the text, the Commission would have called on China to ensure the observance of all human rights in accordance with its obligations under the human rights conventions to which it was a party; improve the impartial administration of justice; release political prisoners; preserve and protect the cultural, ethnic, linguistic and religious identity of Tibetans and others; and cooperate with the Commission's thematic special rapporteurs and working groups and engage in a dialogue with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

By a secret ballot of 13 votes to 9, with 3 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 21 August [res. 1997/3], expressing concern at the persistent allegations that grave human rights violations were being committed in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), including mass internments in administrative detention centres, and at serious restrictions on the right of everyone to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country, urgently called on the Government to ensure full respect for article 13 of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, contained in Assembly resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535], and article 12 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], both of which related to that right. It asked the international community to devote greater attention to the situation of human rights in the country and to furnish increased assistance to the DPRK to help it to overcome its food shortage and the suffering caused by it.

East Timor

Reports of Secretary-General. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/51], the Secretary-General updated his good-offices activities aimed at achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement of the question of East Timor. He also described action taken in 1996 by the Special Rapporteurs on the question of torture [E/CN.4/1997/7 & Add.1] and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions [E/CN.4/1997/60/Add.1], and by the Working Groups on Arbitrary Detention [YUN 1996, p. 626] and on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances [Ibid., p. 635].

Annexed to the report was information on the human rights situation in East Timor provided by the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal and NGOs.

In a March addendum [E/CN.4/1997/51/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted information provided by the Government of Indonesia concerning initiatives and measures taken to improve human rights in East Timor.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/63], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 20 to 14, with 18 abstentions, expressed deep concern at the continuing reports of human rights violations in East Timor and at the lack of progress made by the Indonesian authorities towards complying with their commitments undertaken at previous sessions of the Commission [YUN 1994, p. 1086; YUN 1995, p. 798]. It also expressed concern that Indonesia had not yet invited the Commission's thematic rapporteurs and working groups to East Timor and at the policy of systematic migration of persons to East Timor. The Commission called on Indonesia to ensure full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the people of East Timor; to ensure the early release of East Timorese detained or convicted for political reasons and to clarify further the circumstances surrounding the violent incident that took place in Dili in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 798]; to ensure that all East Timorese in custody were treated humanely and that all trials were conducted in accordance with international standards; to cooperate with the Commission and its thematic rapporteurs and working groups and to invite them to visit the country; to undertake action to upgrade the memorandum of intent of 1994 on technical cooperation into an envisaged memorandum of understanding; to bring about the assignment of a programme officer of the High Commissioner/Centre for Human Rights to the UNDP Jakarta office; and to provide access to East Timor for human rights organizations.

The Commission decided to consider the situation of East Timor in 1998 and encouraged the Secretary-General to continue his good-offices mission.

Iran

Report of Special Representative. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/63], the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights, Maurice Copithorne (Canada), discussed the state of human rights in Iran. He had asked to make a second visit to Iran, the first having been made in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 697], but his request was denied.

The Special Representative stated that the death sentence and/or its implementation seemed to continue at a high rate. There were widespread allegations that Iranian jails housed prisoners of conscience, those detained because of their race, religion, politics, language, beliefs or for similar reasons and who had neither used nor advocated violence. Allegations regarding the detention of religious clerics warranted further inquiry. Regarding extrajudicial groups, the Special Representative continued to receive reports of groups resorting to violence and threats of violence upon private individuals as a means of coercion. The status of women was not equal to that of men in very many ways. However, public debate on the subject seemed to be growing more vigorous and some change seemed to be occurring in the legal system. According to information received by the Special Representative, the number of disciplinary actions against newspapers and magazines, their editors and publishers had increased. The Special Representative received information that 12 Baha'is continued to be held in Iranian prisons allegedly because of their beliefs, and cases of discrimination against Baha'is in the court system continued to be reported. Private ownership of property by Baha'is was generally disregarded.

The Special Representative's recommendations stressed improving the status of women; introducing greater certainty and transparency in the press law; paying attention to the question of religious intolerance; accelerating consideration of Iranian requests for international technical assistance; and transferring to the general courts charges against a number of clerics and granting them the right to independent legal representation.

Annexed to the report was an exchange of letters between Iran and the Special Representative dealing with individual cases of human rights violations.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 26 to 7, with 19 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 15 April [res. 1997/54], expressed concern at the continuing human rights violations in Iran and at the lack of continuity in the Government's cooperation with the Commission. It called on the Government, among other things, to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under international human rights instruments; to implement the recommendations of the Special Representative; to eliminate discrimination against women; to refrain from violence against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad; and to ensure that capital punishment would not be imposed for apostasy or non-violent crimes.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for another year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/264 of 22 July, endorsed the Commission's decision to extend the Special Representative's mandate and approved its requests to him and to the Secretary-General.

Note by Secretary-General. In a May note [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/5], the Secretary-General, in response to a 1996 request [YUN 1996, p. 698], informed the Subcommission of relevant reports issued in 1996 and 1997 and of UN measures to prevent human rights violations in Iran.

Reports of Special Representative. By an October note [A/52/472], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the interim report of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in Iran.

A major event in Iran was the May election of the new President. The Special Representative highlighted the declaration of the intentions of the new Government in most, if not all, areas of human rights. He planned to observe how the policy statements were implemented.

The Special Representative stated that there were boundaries to the right to freedom of expression, with the rights of the press and the media, the film industry, authors, publishers and bookstores being significantly circumscribed. Within the legal system, the use of the death penalty had increased, apostasy was considered an offence and there were continuing reports of the use of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. While discrimination against women still existed, the new President had appointed a woman as one of eight Vice-Presidents. The Special Representative continued to receive reports of human rights violations against the Baha'is, including extrajudicial executions, arbitrary detentions, refusal of entry to universities, confiscation of property and dismissal from employment. The Special Representative again condemned the threat on the life of British writer Salman Rushdie that had been in effect since 1989. He also cited incidents of extraterritorial violence outside Iran and discrimination against religious minorities, namely the Sunnis.

Appended to the report was an exchange of correspondence between the Special Representative and Iran covering the period from February to August 1997, which dealt with individual cases.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/59], covering the period from September to December, the Special Representative stated that the new Government was making efforts to give substance to its commitments to develop a society that valued the rule of law and personal freedoms. The area in which that was most evident was freedom of expression, with the Government attempting to move towards a more liberal view of dissent. As to the status of women, all the indicators seemed to point towards change. The legal system was showing the least signs of change; the number of executions continued to grow and the use of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment continued unabated. The treatment of religious dissidents and the activities of extrajudicial groups remained of serious concern. There was little, if any, progress on the fatwa against Salman Rushdie. The situation of the Baha'is continued to violate accepted international norms.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/142 by recorded vote (74-32-56) [agenda item 112(c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all States Members of the United Nations have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, Recalling previous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights on the subject, and taking note of the most recent, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/54 of 15 April 1997,

1. Welcomes the report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran;

2. Notes with interest that presidential elections were held in the Islamic Republic of Iran in 1997, and calls upon the Government to meet expectations for tangible progress concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals;

3. Expresses its concern:

(a) At the continuing violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, in particular the large and increasing number of executions in the apparent absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including stoning, amputation and public executions, the failure to meet international standards in the administration of justice and the absence of due process of law;

(b) At the grave breaches of the human rights of the Baha'is, the discrimination against members of other religious minorities, including Christians, and the death sentences pronounced against Dhabihullah Mahrami, Musa Talibi and Ramadan-Ali Dhulfagari, on the charge of apostasy, and against Bihnam Mithaqi and Kayvan Khalajabadi because of their beliefs;

(c) At the lack of continuity in the cooperation of the Government with the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights;

(d) At the continuing threats to the life of Salman Rushdie, as well as to individuals associated with his work, which appear to have the support of the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, and deeply regrets the increase announced in the bounty offered for the assassination of Mr. Rushdie by the 15 Khordad Foundation;

(e) At violations of the right to peaceful assembly and restrictions on the freedoms of expression, thought, opinion and the press, as well as at the harassment and intimidation of writers and journalists seeking to exercise their freedom of expression, the sentencing of the writer Faraj Sarkuhi being only the most recent example of such unacceptable practices;

(f) At the lack of full and equal enjoyment by women of human rights, while noting efforts to integrate women more fully into the political, economic and cultural life of the country;

4. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran:

(a) To resume its cooperation with the mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular with the Special Representative to allow him to continue his inquiry at first hand and to continue his dialogue with the Government;

(b) To abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights and under other international instruments on human rights and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including members of religious groups and persons belonging to minorities, enjoy all the rights enshrined in those instruments;

(c) To implement fully the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance and of discrimination based on religion or belief relating to the Baha'is and to other minority religious groups, including Christians, until they are completely emancipated;

(d) To take effective measures to eliminate human rights violations against women, including all discrimination in law and in practice against them;

(e) To refrain from violence against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad and to cooperate wholeheartedly with the authorities of other countries in investigating and prosecuting offences reported by them;

(f) To provide satisfactory written assurances that it does not support or incite threats to the life of Mr. Rushdie;

(g) To ensure that capital punishment will not be imposed for apostasy or non-violent crimes or in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and United Nations safeguards;

5. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, at its fifty-third session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

Iraq

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a February report [E/CN.4/1997/57], Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) described the human rights situation in Iraq based on his visit to Jordan and Kuwait (20-27 January) and on information he had received from a variety of sources. Despite Iraq's lack of cooperation, the Special Rapporteur had benefited considerably from information gathered by staff members of the UN Centre for Human Rights who had travelled to neighbouring countries.

The Special Rapporteur stated there was no improvement in the human rights situation in Iraq; all power was in the hands of a dictatorship. He cited violations of the rights to life, liberty and personal security, and of the right to freedom of opinion and expression. The Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances had recorded 16,199 unresolved cases of disappearances, excluding the more than 600 Kuwaiti and third-country nationals who disappeared following the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait [YUN 1990, p. 189]. The Government had finally accepted the "food-for-oil" agreement, which authorized States to permit the limited import of Iraqi petroleum and petroleum products to provide for the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people (see PART ONE, Chapter IV); that augured well for an improvement in the enjoyment of the rights to food and health. However, significant change in the human rights situation would be possible only following a general process of democratization. To that end, the Government should abrogate all laws prescribing cruel, unusual, disproportionate and other violative penalties, and all laws that repressed the free expression and exchange of views and ideas. Also, the security apparatus and all other forms of government, including the executive branch, should be brought under the rule of law.

In addition to proposals contained in his earlier reports, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government cooperate in the search for missing Kuwaiti and third-country nationals by allowing ICRC full access to places of detention throughout Iraq. He also recommended that the Government cooperate in implementing Security Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] on the "food-for-oil" programme, in particular by ensuring the free movement of observers designated to monitor the distribution of humanitarian supplies throughout the country.

On 4 February [E/CN.4/1997/114] and 13 October [A/C.3/52/4], Iraq commented on the Special Rapporteur's 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 702] and his 1997 report, respectively. In both letters, Iraq attested that the Special Rapporteur had relied on unsubstantiated testimonies.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 31 to none, with 22 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 16 April [res. 1997/60], strongly condemned the Government of Iraq's massive and extremely grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law. It called on the Government to: abide by its obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law; bring its military and security forces into conformity with standards of international law; cooperate with UN human rights mechanisms; restore independence of the judiciary and abrogate laws granting impunity; ensure the end of torture and cruel punishment or treatment; cooperate to resolve the fate of missing persons; cease its repressive practices aimed at ethnic and religious groups; cooperate with aid agencies and NGOs to provide humanitarian assistance; release all detained Kuwaitis and other nationals; ensure equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds of Iraqi oil; and cooperate in identifying minefields in the country.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to approve the allocation of resources to send human rights monitors to locations that would facilitate improved information on the human rights situation in Iraq. By decision 1997/269 of 22 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision.

Subcommission action. On 28 August [res. 1997/351, the Subcommission, expressing concern about the adverse consequences of economic sanctions on human rights, appealed to States concerned to reconsider their adoption of or support for such measures if, after a reasonable period, they appeared not to be bringing about the desired changes in policy.

On the same date [dec. 1997/119], the Subcommission, noting with concern the delay in the supply of food and medicines to Iraq, appealed to the international community and to Governments to alleviate the suffering of the Iraqi population by facilitating the supply of those items.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq [A/52/476], based on information received as at 31 August 1997.

The Special Rapporteur presented details of alleged violations of civil and political rights, including cases of summary, arbitrary and extrajudicial executions, arbitrary arrest and detention, forced displacement and violations of the right to freedom of expression. Concerning the food-for-oil agreement, the Government was cooperating with the United Nations in ensuring the relatively free and unobstructed movement of observers; however, the Special Rapporteur expressed concern that they were not based permanently throughout the country with free access to any location and citizen without prior notification. In addition, while on duty the observers were always accompanied by local agents who were civil servants. As to the distribution of foodstuffs and medicines, a very complex and time-consuming registration process was required in order to receive rations. It was alleged that the system was being widely used by the Government to reward political supporters and to silence opponents. As at 31 August, a total of 1,831,101 tons of food and other items had reached Iraq, accounting for some 82 per cent of the total allocation, and 1,516,378 tons had been distributed to governorates.

The Special Rapporteur again recommended that Iraq should: bring its law into line with accepted international standards; take steps to facilitate the enjoyment of the freedoms of opinion, expression and association; give particular attention to prison conditions and allow international humanitarian organizations access; cease all discriminatory policies that interfered with the frequent and equal enjoyment of property; take urgent steps to end the enforced displacement of persons; continue to cooperate fully in implementing all relevant Security Council resolutions; ensure equitable distribution without discrimination of humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds of Iraqi oil; and accept the stationing of UN human rights monitors throughout the country.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/67], the Special Rapporteur stated that since August 1997 he had received numerous allegations of violations of civil and political rights perpetrated by the Government of Iraq, including reports of large-scale executions in prisons and violations of the rights of minorities. He had also received numerous reports confirming allegations of systematic forced displacements. As to economic and social rights, he expressed particular concern about the rights of children, especially the effect of the food situation on them, the growing number of children who were not in school, the disparities in the levels and extent of education enjoyed by girls and boys, and the increase in child labour. He recalled that, whatever the difficulties, the Government of Iraq remained responsible for implementing its obligations relating to the rights to food and health care to the maximum of its available resources. He reiterated his earlier recommendations and added that the Government should cooperate with the Secretary-General in devising a distribution plan that differentiated on the basis of the real needs of the most vulnerable and would allow for adequate food and medicines to flow to the intended beneficiaries.

Commenting on the Special Rapporteur's October report in a 14 November letter [A/C.3/52/7], Iraq stated that the Special Rapporteur, if he was fair and objective, would have demanded that the embargo be lifted, as that was the only way to ensure that the Iraqi people could enjoy their human rights.

(For political developments in Iraq, see PART ONE, Chapter IV.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Myanmar

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/1997/64], Special Rapporteur Rajsamoor Lallah (Mauritius) reviewed the human rights situation in Myanmar based on information he had received through 31 December 1996. He noted that since his appointment in June 1996 he had not been allowed by the Government of Myanmar to observe the situation on the ground, despite requests by the General Assembly and the High Commissioner for Human Rights that he have direct access to the Government and the people of the country.

The Special Rapporteur observed that the lack of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance was at the root of all major human rights violations in Myanmar. Detailed reports and photographs seen by the Special Rapporteur led him to conclude that extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the practice of torture, portering and forced labour continued to occur, particularly in the context of development programmes and of counter-insurgency operations in minority-dominated regions. He concluded that a significant percentage of all arrests and detentions were arbitrary and expressed deep concern over the continued detention of many political prisoners. There was essentially no freedom of thought, opinion, expression or association. There were also violations of freedom of movement and residence, including the right to leave and re-enter one's own country.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government fulfil its obligations under the United Nations Charter; consider acceding to the relevant international human rights instruments; bring Myanmar law concerning the protection of the right to physical integrity into line with accepted international standards; allow citizens to participate in the political process; accelerate the process of transition to democracy; try by an independent civilian court in an open and internationally accessible judicial process all political leaders and others arrested or detained under martial law after the 1988 and 1990 demonstrations or as a result of the 1993 National Convention; repeal laws rendering human rights violations legitimate; pay attention to prison conditions and allow humanitarian organizations access; take steps to facilitate and guarantee the freedoms of opinion, expression and association; remove restrictions on freedom of movement, association and assembly and on those relating to the entry and exit of citizens into and out of the country, as well as their movement within the country; cease discriminatory policies that interfered with the free and equal enjoyment of property; fulfil its obligations under the 1948 International Labour Organization Convention No. 87 concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize [YUN 1947-48, p. 823]; prohibit the practice of forced portering and forced labour; bring the acts of soldiers into line with accepted international human rights and humanitarian standards; end forced displacement; train military and law enforcement personnel as to their responsibilities in accordance with international human rights instruments and under humanitarian law; condemn acts by authorities involving human rights violations; and end impunity.

On 19 March [E/CN.4/1997/123], Myanmar presented its comments on the Special Rapporteur's report, noting, among other things, that little recognition had been given to positive changes in the country. On 20 March [E/CN.4/1997/124], Myanmar submitted a report explaining its human rights situation.

Report of Secretary-General (March). In response to General Assembly resolution 51/117 [YUN 1996, p. 705], the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Human Rights [E/CN.4/1997/129] on the good-offices activities he had undertaken to assist Myanmar to respond to human rights concerns and to achieve national reconciliation. The Director of the East Asia and the Pacific Division of the UN Department of Political Affairs visited the country from 17 to 21 February 1997; he held consultations with senior members of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and other high-level government officials and with leaders of political parties. Discussions focused on the National Convention, which had not met since March 1996; the resolution of the insurgencies that had plagued Myanmar since independence; military operations against the Karen National Union, considered to be the last remaining armed ethnic group; and cooperation with the Special Rapporteur. The Secretary-General expressed disappointment that he could not report progress on issues of concern to the Assembly and the Commission.

Commission action. On 16 April [res. 1997/64], the Commission on Human Rights expressed deep concern at the continuing human rights violations in Myanmar, the absence of significant steps towards the establishment of a democratic government following the democratic elections of 1990, and the restrictions placed on Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1997 and to the Commission in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Rapporteur and to continue his discussions with the Government and with anyone in Myanmar he might consider appropriate to assist in implementing Assembly resolution 51/117 [YUN 1996, p. 705] as well as the Commission's current resolution. The Commission decision and request were approved by the Economic and Social Council by decision 1997/272 of 22 July.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the Special Rapporteur's interim report [A/52/484], in which he stated that there was no improvement in the overall human rights situation in Myanmar and that, therefore, his previous conclusions remained valid. He had received well-documented reports, photographs and testimony leading him to conclude that extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions continued to occur, as well as the practice of torture, portering and forced labour. In addition, there was no freedom of thought, opinion, expression or association, or freedom of movement and residence. Laws relating to citizenship appeared to be discriminatory on the basis of religion, ethnicity, equality before the law and special measures of protection to which children were entitled.

In addition to his earlier recommendations, the Special Rapporteur urged the Government to re-establish constitutionality and the rule of law; cease discriminatory policies that interfered with the free and equal enjoyment of property; refrain from actions that contributed to insecurity affecting the population; and revise citizenship laws.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1998/70], the Special Rapporteur described developments based on information received up to 19 December 1997. He observed that, except for the easing of restrictions on political parties, especially the National League for Democracy (NLD)—the party that had won the majority of votes at the last general election in 1990—there had been no change in the human rights situation.

The Special Rapporteur reiterated his previous recommendations and added that the Government should ensure the safe return and resettlement of Myanmar Muslims and other minorities in their villages of origin; amend its laws, orders or decrees to ensure that its obligations regarding the rights of women were implemented; and guarantee the right of trade unions to exist and operate freely.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a November report [A/52/587], the Secretary-General updated his good-offices activities. His Envoy, Alvaro de Soto, visited the country from 7 to 10 May; he held consultations with the Secretary of the State Law and Order Restoration Council, the Foreign Minister and Chief Justice, and with authorities from various ministries and services, as well as with leaders of political parties, including NLD and its General Secretary, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the National Unity Party and the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy. The Secretary-General and his representatives held discussions with the Minister for Foreign Affairs on 27 June in New York, focusing on the main issues stressed by the General Assembly. A further round of talks took place on 1 October, also in New York, between the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Secretary-General's Envoy.

The Secretary-General expressed gratification at the visits to Myanmar by his representatives in the first half of 1997 and welcomed the contacts between the Government and NLD. He noted that NLD had been able to hold a party congress and hoped that the same tolerance would be shown in future towards other NLD events. He regretted that he could not report progress in other areas of concern to the Assembly and the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/137 without vote [agenda item 112 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the United Nations promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government,

Recalling its resolution 51/117 of 12 December 1996,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur to establish direct contacts with the Government and with the people of Myanmar, including political leaders deprived of their liberty, their families and their lawyers, with a view to examining the situation of human rights in Myanmar and following any progress made towards the transfer of power to a civilian Government and the drafting of a new constitution, the lifting of restrictions on personal freedoms and the restoration of human rights in Myanmar,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/64 of 16 April 1997, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Noting with concern that the Government of Myanmar has not yet agreed to a visit by the Special Rapporteur,

Gravely concerned that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Gravely concerned also about the travel and other restrictions placed on Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, the continued arrests and harassment of members and supporters of the National League for Democracy, trade unionists and students for peacefully exercising their right to freedom of expression, assembly and association, the forced resignations of elected representatives and the long closure of all universities and colleges following the student demonstrations in December 1996,

Recalling the withdrawal and subsequent exclusion from the National Convention of members of the National League for Democracy, late in 1995,

Welcoming the contact between the Government of Myanmar and political parties, in particular the National League for Democracy, but regretting the failure of the Government of Myanmar to engage in a substantive political dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, including representatives of ethnic groups,

Gravely concerned at the continuing violations of human rights in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, including extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, killings of civilians, torture, arbitrary arrest and detention, deaths in custody, absence of due process of law, including trial of detainees in secrecy without proper legal representation, severe restrictions on freedom of opinion, expression, assembly and association, violations of freedom of movement, forced relocation, forced labour of children as well as adults, including portering for the military, abuse of women and children by government agents and the imposition of oppressive measures directed, in particular, at ethnic and religious minorities,

Recalling the observation made by the Special Rapporteur that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance is at the root of all the major violations of human rights in Myanmar,

Recalling also the conclusion of ceasefire agreements between the Government of Myanmar and several ethnic groups,

Noting that the human rights situation in Myanmar has resulted in flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, thus creating problems for the countries concerned,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report, and urges the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with the Special Rapporteur and to ensure his access to Myanmar, without preconditions, in order to allow him fully to discharge his mandate;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report;

3. Deplores the continuing violations of human rights in Myanmar;

4. Notes that Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi was allowed to travel to the Thaketa township office of the National League for Democracy to peacefully conduct normal political activities on 21 October 1997, but was subsequently prevented from attending party meetings of the League, on 5 November 1997 in

Tamwe township and on 13 November 1997 in Hlaing township, and requests the Government of Myanmar to permit unrestricted communication with and physical access to Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders by members and supporters of the League and to protect their physical well-being;

11. 12. Also strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and assembly, the right to a fair trial and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, to put an end to violations of the right to life and integrity of the human being, to the practices of torture, abuse of women, forced labour and forced relocations and to enforced disappearances and summary executions, to fulfil its obligation to end the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military, and to investigate and prosecute alleged violations committed by government agents in all circumstances;
