Within the UN system, many organizations supported Member States in improving shelter and services. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) continued to provide funds under regional and country programmes for improvements in shelter, infrastructure and services, with particular emphasis on capacity-building. The International Labour Organization cooperated with the Centre on research regarding employment generated through shelter programmes. The urban basic services programme of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) was closely linked to improvements in shelter and living conditions. UNEP launched a joint project with the Centre to address issues at the municipal level such as shelter and environmental services. The United Nations Industrial Development Organization implemented technical cooperation projects for industrial production of building materials in developing countries. The World Bank assisted Governments in applying the urban and housing indicators. The World Health Organization (WHO) collaborated with the Centre in research on the links between housing and health. As for the regional commissions, the Economic Commission for Africa issued a continental shelter atlas containing an analysis of shelter in the region, including building materials and shelter finance. The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific organized the second Asia-Pacific Urban Forum and was implementing an urban poverty programme. The Economic Commission for Europe issued a series of guidelines on housing policy, land administration, urban renewal and housing modernization and sustainable human settlements planning and management, with a focus on application in economies in transition. The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean continued to support the annual meeting of ministers of housing and human settlements. The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia integrated its human settlements programme with other activities in socioeconomic development.

The proposed plan of action for 1998-1999 for the implementation of the Global Strategy was designed to achieve a smooth transition from the Global Strategy to the implementation of the shelter-related parts of the Habitat Agenda.

The report concluded that countries were at different stages in the implementation of their national shelter strategies. In many countries, the decision of the State to withdraw from providing housing and to leave it to the market had not been accompanied by the required strengthening of the public sector's role as a facilitator. Facilitating action, such as revised legislation, institutional strengthening, reforms in land policy and new financial mechanisms for infrastructure and housing development, had proved to be difficult policy areas but there were signs of progress. The wide application of the urban and housing indicators was a positive trend and had the potential to become an important policy tool. Governments, however, needed to adapt the indicators to the specific needs of their countries and to increase national capacity to extend their application to all major settlements. An increasing number of countries were addressing the key issues of land supply, security of tenure and housing finance but action was still limited. Many developing countries were unable to devote the resources required for infrastructure to improve existing settlements and to open up new lands for housing development.

Commission action. The Commission on Human Settlements, having considered the draft fifth report on implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, decided on 7 May [A/52/8 (dec. 16/26)] to incorporate additions and amendments by delegations and to submit the revised report to the General Assembly.

Also on 7 May [res. 16/1], the Commission adopted the draft report and asked the Executive Director of the Centre to transmit it to the Assembly. The Commission recommended that Governments extend the application of the urban and housing indicators to all cities and rural settlements, and prepare annual progress reports on implementation of the Habitat Agenda for submission to the Executive Director. The Executive Director was asked to continue to support countries by collecting and disseminating information on successful country experiences in shelter delivery, and to provide assistance, including training, on sustainable enabling policies and on practical ways of formulating, adopting and implementing them. The Commission asked him to report on implementation of the next phase of the Global Strategy in 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 771, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Settlements [A/52/8] and the Second Committee [A/52/628/Add.5], adopted resolution 52/191 without vote [agenda item 97 (e)].

Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/181 of 20 December 1988, in which it adopted the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 and designated the Commission on Human Settlements as the United Nations intergovernmental body responsible for coordinating, evaluating and monitoring the Strategy, and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) as the lead agency for the Strategy,

Noting that the conclusions of the mid-term review of the Strategy, conducted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), were incorporated into the Habitat Agenda,

Having considered the fifth report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000,

Noting with satisfaction the support given to the implementation of the Global Strategy by donor Governments, international bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Commends Governments that are already revising, consolidating, formulating or implementing their national shelter strategies based on the enabling principles of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, as elaborated in the Habitat Agenda;

2. Urges Governments, in connection with the implementation of their national plans of action on human settlements, to adopt or strengthen integrated national shelter strategies based on the enabling approach and sustainable development;

3. Also urges Governments to integrate fully the environmental dimension in the formulation and implementation of national shelter strategies, taking into account the relevant components of Agenda 21;

4. Recommends that Governments extend the application of urban and housing indicators to cities and rural settlements for monitoring the progress of their national shelter strategy and the performance of the shelter sector, taking into account local conditions and sensitivity to gender considerations;

5. Urges the international community to strengthen its support for national efforts to formulate and implement enabling shelter strategies in developing countries, as recommended in Agenda 21;

6. Urges the organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, and other multilateral and bilateral agencies to provide, on the basis of an approach consistent with the Global Strategy, increased financial and other support to Governments for achieving the objective of adequate shelter for all;

7. Adopts the plan of action for the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000 during the biennium 1998-1999, and urges Governments, relevant United Nations and private sector organizations, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to prepare and implement their specific plans of action;

8. Decides to subsume the sixth report of the Commission on Human Settlements to the General Assembly on the implementation of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000, as called for in Assembly resolution 43/181, under the report of the Secretary-General to the Assembly on the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, to be submitted pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/177 of 16 December 1996.

UN Centre for Human Settlements

Activities

The operational activities of UNCHS in 1997 were focused on supporting Governments in formulating policies and strategies to create a self-reliant management capacity at both national and local levels. Technical and managerial expertise was provided for the assessment of human settlements development constraints and opportunities; the identification and analysis of policy options; the design and implementation of housing and urban development projects; and the mobilization of national resources, as well as external support for improving human settlements conditions. The national capacity-building process involved not only central government institutions but also other partners, such as community-based and non-governmental organizations, universities and research institutions, as well as municipalities. Emphasis was also being placed on strengthening the monitoring capacities of Governments in human settlements management.

In accordance with the 1996-1997 work programme, UNCHS focused on (in order of priority) promoting housing for all, improving urban governance, reducing urban poverty, improving the living environment, and managing disaster mitigation and post-conflict rehabilitation. Acting as a catalyst in the mobilization of technical cooperation, the Centre was supporting the implementation of five-year national plans of action at local, national and regional levels.

Current activities included 10 global programmes, 5 interregional programmes, 8 regional programmes, and programmes under execution in 86 countries.

Cooperation with UNEP

On 7 May [A/52/8 (res. 16/20)], the Commission, having considered the joint progress report of the Executive Directors of UNCHS and UNEP on cooperation between the two bodies [HS/C/16/14] and the report on the implementation of resolutions adopted by the Commission in 1995 [HS/C/16/2/Add.1 & Corr.1], commended UNEP for its positive role in the preparatory process for Habitat II, as well as for its participation in and contribution to the Conference. The Executive Director of UNCHS was asked to continue and to develop further the cooperation between the Centre and UNEP, as exemplified by the Sustainable Cities Programme, in order to ensure that a synergy of effort could be achieved in all activities. He was also asked to report to the Commission on the implementation of its resolution in 1999.

Administrative and financial matters

OIOS review

In an April report [A/51/884], the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) reviewed the programme and administrative practices of UNCHS and made recommendations aimed at enabling the Centre better to discharge its responsibilities. The report noted that UNCHS suffered from significant shortcomings in management systems and staffing, and there was a need for continuity in management to overcome them. From March 1993 to mid-1996, the Centre had been operating in an environment that did not facilitate continuity and consistency in management. An attempt to set up a new organizational structure had not yielded the expected results.

The absence of internal instruments to provide collective guidance was apparent, as was the lack of horizontal and vertical communication between those responsible for programme delivery and resource use, OIOS stated. There seemed to be little overall policy strategy planning. Decisions relating to personnel and financial matters lacked transparency. The Office of Programme Coordination did not fulfil its main functions of coordination and oversight, and there was no effective system for monitoring implementation, assessing results or providing feedback to upper management.

The internal control system over resources was weak and dispersed, which was reflected in the placement and promotion of staff and the awarding of contracts, as well as in the handling of a case of conflict of interest raised by the auditors in 1994. Noting the low morale throughout the secretariat and the movement of the Centre's financial position into deficit, the report stated that the situation was serious and should not be allowed to continue.

Since the Centre was currently reviewing its programme to address the post-Habitat II requirements, OIOS recommended a programme that was more focused, better integrated and reflected the links between research and technical cooperation. Other recommendations included: reorganizing the secretariat along programmatic lines, taking into account financial constraints; clearly articulating in a document the functions of the organizational elements and the lines of authority between them; documenting the authority delegated to senior officials and spelling out their responsibilities and accountability; strengthening regional activities; developing a mechanism to monitor organizational performance; separating project appraisal from monitoring and evaluation; adding consideration of lessons learned to the design process of projects; recruiting and promoting staff through a review body; reviewing job descriptions to align functions with responsibilities; and establishing regular cabinet meetings and other internal institutional mechanisms to advise management on policy issues relating to programmes. In order to strengthen financial control, a segregation should be introduced between certifying and approving responsibilities. Accordingly, all accounts should be approved by the Finance Section of the United Nations Office at Nairobi, which should also control the staffing table. Management training was also recommended.

Commission action. In May [A/52/8 (res. 16/19)], the Commission on Human Settlements, having reviewed the OIOS report, called for corrective measures in administrative and budgetary matters. It insisted that the Executive Director reimburse the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation for any advances made to Habitat II. The Commission urged the Executive Director to: bring the budget into line with work programme priorities; revise future income estimates on a realistic basis; devise a new budget format; address disputed issues pending with the Central Emergency Revolving Fund and the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs; consider placing non-earmarked and earmarked Foundation and financial reserve funds in disaggregated accounts; report in writing on the proposed increase in regional offices and its financial and mandate implications; strengthen internal evaluation and oversight mechanisms; revise the staffing table; reduce administrative costs; ensure a more balanced gender distribution within the staff; and merge the roster of women experts with the existing roster of experts. The Executive Director was asked to provide a progress report on actions taken to redress the deficiencies in the Centre's financial administration. The secretariat was asked to prepare a revised draft work programme and an additional version organized according to the structure of the Habitat Agenda.

The Bureau of the Commission, the Committee of Permanent Representatives and all Member States were asked to monitor the implementation of the Commission's resolution and to evaluate the Executive Director's report.

The Commission, in another May resolution [res. 16/8], asked the Secretary-General to take into account a series of guiding principles in undertaking the comprehensive and in-depth assessment of the Centre called for by General Assembly resolution 51/177 [YUN 1996, p. 1002]. The Commission also asked him to consider its recommendations regarding general management, financial management, financial resources, administrative management, staff policies and programme management. It noted that the findings of OIOS were incomplete in several respects, especially with regard to the organizational structure of the Centre and the actions of individuals. With regard to OIOS recommendations, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to ensure their prompt implementation. The Secretary-General was also requested to address the Centre's serious management and financial situation and to take all necessary measures, including the appointment of a special expert, to ensure that it could meet its responsibilities in implementing the Habitat Agenda. The Bureau of the Commission was asked to monitor the improvements in the administrative and financial management of the Centre and to report in 1999. The Executive Director was also requested to report in 1999.

By decision 51/468 G of 13 June, the Assembly took note of the OIOS report and the Commission's resolution on the revitalization of the Centre. It also took note of the Executive Director's assurances [A/C.5/51/SR.60] that the Centre had started to implement all the OIOS recommendations and encouraged the Centre to implement them fully.

Notes by Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in an October note [A/52/539] submitted in response to Assembly resolution 51/177 [YUN 1996, p. 1002], stated that he had submitted a preliminary report [HS/C/16/5] to the Commission on the proposed terms of reference for the report on a comprehensive and in-depth assessment of the Centre and that the assessment would be undertaken under the guidance of the Executive Coordinator for United Nations reform. However, given the transition of the executive leadership of the Centre and since the exercise needed to be completed in the light of the ongoing process of UN reform, he would submit the final report on the assessment to the Assembly in 1998.

With regard to an alleged conflict of interest in the case of the role played by a staff member of the Centre in initiating, evaluating and certifying the work undertaken by her spouse, a consultant, on projects emanating from the unit, the Secretary-General, by a September note [A/52/339], forwarded to the Assembly the OIOS report on the matter. OIOS reported that, given the available evidence, the situation gave the appearance of a conflict of interest in awarding consultancy contracts, but it did not appear that the UN staff rules addressed the facts of the situation. The report concluded that the staff rules failed to protect the interests of the United Nations. Further, the lack of clear guidelines had created confusion as to what constituted a conflict of interest. The evidence did not support a finding of retaliation against a staff member for raising the issue of conflict of interest, or that he had suffered any consequent damage to his career. OIOS recommended that the staff rules relating to conflict of interest be strengthened; the staff member in question should have no involvement with decisions on consultancy contracts with the firm involved; the Centre should consult with the Office of Legal Affairs on the continuation of the decision to suspend all contracts with the consultants of that firm; and the Centre staff were to be advised that no further contracts were to be awarded to the consultant in question. The Secretary-General concurred with those recommendations.

In January [HS/C/16/11], the Executive Director submitted to the Commission a draft work programme of the Centre for 1998-1999, which was composed of four subprogrammes focusing on substantive issues of the Habitat Agenda: shelter and social services; urban management; environment and infrastructure; and assessment, monitoring and information. The subprogrammes brought into focus a strategy to support the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and were based on the principles of enablement, participation of civil society, capacity-building and institutional development. The cornerstone of the strategy was the strengthening of partnership between Governments and local authorities, NGOs, the private sector and all other interested actors.

The activities of the proposed programme were designed to achieve maximum impact within the limited human and financial resources available from the UN regular budget, from general and earmarked voluntary contributions to the UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, from specific projects and programmes funded by UNDP and other sources of funds within and outside the UN system. The programme was designed to support national policy-making, including global monitoring of trends and emerging issues; services to intergovernmental bodies; research in critical human settlements areas; training and capacity-building through workshops, seminars and the provision of fellowships; the preparation and dissemination of public information material, best-practice knowledge, expertise and experience; consultations and technical cooperation with national- and local-government institutions and with partners from civil society, including the private sector, on matters of mutual concern; and operational projects and programmes.

The proposed 1998-1999 programme budget for human settlements, submitted to the General Assembly in May [A/52/6 (Sect. 13)], reflected significant programmatic changes from that of 1996-1997, due to the incorporation of the Habitat II recommendations. The number of subprogrammes had been reduced from eight to four. The resources proposed for human settlements reflected a growth of $63,900, or 0.5 per cent, resulting from increases and decreases under various objects of expenditure, notably the deletion of the resources originally appropriated in 1996-1997 in connection with Habitat II, the provision of increased resources for general operating expenses, supplies, materials and equipment, and the proposed abolition of two Professional and five local-level posts that had become redundant as a result of the reorganization of the Centre and its programme of work. The total requirement for the biennium was $94.2 million, of which $81 million would come from extrabudgetary resources. The estimated figure for the previous biennium was $90.7 million.

The Commission, on 7 May [A/52/8 (dec. 16/28)], requested the secretariat to prepare a revised work programme, based on the revised allocation of funds from the Foundation (see below) and taking into account the resolutions of the Commission with broader budget implications. The Commission asked that, when preparing future work programmes, the secretariat should provide all relevant financial data on new and ongoing activities, more descriptive information in the narrative part of the work programme, an evaluation in line with the Habitat Agenda's priorities, and a parallel version of the work programme with a clear indication of the links between the Agenda and the programme.

Regional offices and centres

In May, the Commission established a regional training centre in Amman (Jordan) [A/52/8 (res. 16/5)] and a Centre office in the Asia and Pacific region [res. 16/25]. With regard to the training centre, the Commission asked the Executive Director to initiate by year's end, in collaboration with the host Government, the League of Arab States, bilateral and multilateral donors and regional organizations, and without affecting the budget of the Centre or of the Foundation, the development of a training programme for the next two years. As to an office in the Asia and Pacific region, the Commission welcomed the offer by Japan to establish such an office in Fukuoka. It expressed appreciation for support provided by Japan, the Fukuoka prefectural government, the City of Fukuoka, the Fukuoka International Exchange Foundation and the private sector for providing adequate resources for the office, including staff and facilities. The Executive Director was asked to provide support to ensure the operation of the office, within existing resources.

The Commission, also in May [res. 16/14], asked the Executive Director to consider upgrading the Regional Information Office for Arab States in Amman to a regional centre for Arab States. He was also asked to report in 1999, in consultation with the League of Arab States and the host country, on the upgrading, including the identification of a mandate, a plan of action and financial and administrative implications.

Human settlements and political, economic and social issues

Sustainable human settlements development

In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I) a report on promoting sustainable human settlement development [E/CN.17/1997/27Add.6]. The report, prepared by UNCHS, reviewed progress in implementing the objectives set out in chapter 7 (promoting sustainable human settlement development) of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The report noted that rapid urbanization, the concentration of urban populations in large cities, the spread of cities into wider geographical areas and the rapid growth of megacities were among the most significant transformations of the time. Urban settlements held promise for the protection and careful use of the world's natural resources through their ability to support large numbers of people while limiting their impact on the natural environment. Human settlements should therefore be at the centre of concern for sustainable development, as they were essential for social and economic progress and, in an increasingly interdependent world, critical for the well-being of both urban and rural populations.

The report described four priorities to advance sustainable human settlements development that had emerged since UNCED: shelter for all; improved urban management capacity; improved environmental infrastructure and services; and inclusive and gender-sensitive human settlements plans and strategies. Since UNCED, 80 countries had drafted new or reformulated their existing housing policies in line with the recommendations of the Global Strategy for Shelter to the Year 2000. A major objective of the strategies was to accelerate construction and improve housing for low-income groups. The focus was on strategies that were environmentally sustainable, especially in regard to land use, building technologies and materials. Emphasis was given to developing efficient land and housing markets that broadened access of security of tenure and credit. The Urban Management Programme had emerged as the principal UN system effort to improve urban management capacity in developing countries and was active in 55 countries, with the support of 10 bilateral external support agencies. Infrastructure for the urban poor was an increasing concern, particularly water supply and sanitation. There was a growing awareness that urban technical cooperation should focus on developing the capacity of national and local Governments to plan, invest in and manage urban infrastructure, and on mobilizing the resources of all local actors, especially the private sector. UN programmes that involved the affected population were the WHO Healthy Cities Programme, the UNCHS/UNEP Sustainable Cities Programme, the UNICEF Basic Urban Services Programme and the UNDP Local Initiative Facility for Urban Environment. Regarding national and local human settlements strategies, the report noted that, as a result of the Habitat II preparatory process, 138 countries had prepared reports on the state of their human settlements, and 127 of those had developed five-year national plans of action for sustainable human settlements development. For developing countries, the direct links between environmental improvement and the reduction of poverty through the provision of basic infrastructure, such as water supply, sanitation and waste management, were given priority attention. The reports of industrialized countries, on the other hand, reflected their concern with the sustainability of production and consumption cycles in human settlements and their impact on the quality of life. In all countries, resource mobilization and identification of new sources of finance for sustainable human settlements development were a prime necessity.

The Habitat Agenda provided a useful organizing framework for integrated and holistic approaches for implementing Agenda 21. However, implementation would require that the UN system become more systematic in promoting participatory processes. By using the framework provided by the Habitat Agenda and the national plans of action, support would be based increasingly on cross-sectoral and cross-institutional linkages and should provide, through the use of indicators and best practices, the means to assess the local impacts of the social, economic and environmental dimensions of Agenda 21.

Capacity-building, particularly at the local level, would include implementation of national shelter strategies to achieve adequate shelter for all; land management to achieve well-functioning land markets and security of tenure; financing for urban development; legal frameworks in support of public-private partnerships; policies and technologies for waste management; policies for water management; enhancing the role of women in settlements management and decision-making; and policies for disaster preparedness. Effective information and communication systems, using new information technologies where possible, would facilitate the sharing of knowledge gained at the national and local levels.

Commission action. The Commission on Human Settlements, on 7 May [A/52/8 des. 16/24]], called on the General Assembly, at its special session for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21 (see PART THREE, Chapter I), to take into account that action in cities and human settlements was necessary to secure sustainable human settlements and safe and healthy living conditions, especially for urban populations. The Commission invited all relevant UN agencies and organizations and the Bretton Woods institutions to adjust their activities to take into account the follow-up to Habitat II. The Executive Director of the Centre was asked to promote cooperation and exchange of information between the Centre and the UN Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development. He was also requested to submit his report on the implementation of Agenda 21 to the Assembly. The final report was issued in June [A/S-19/17] as a document of the Assembly's special session.

Also on 7 May [res. 16/13], the Commission urged the international community to mobilize financial resources and to strengthen cooperation channelled through the UN system for shelter provision and sustainable human settlements development. It invited the Executive Director to mobilize financial and technical support from the international community, especially the industrialized countries and the private sector, for implementing the Habitat Agenda and related national plans of action.

Disaster mitigation

The Commission on Human Settlements, on 6 May [res. 16/3], asked the Executive Director to continue the activities of the Disaster Management Programme, within the approved 1998-1999 work programme, in collaboration with Member States and relevant UN organizations, as a UNCHS contribution to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda at the local, national, regional and global levels, and to conduct periodic evaluations of those activities.

Countries with economies in transition

On 6 May [res. 16/4], the Commission invited the Executive Director, in implementing the resolutions adopted by Habitat II, to pay due regard to the needs of countries with economies in transition. It asked him to continue to cooperate with regional organizations and to provide policy advice and technical assistance, especially in capacity-building, to those countries paying special attention to: sustainable development of human settlements in areas of severe environmental degradation; sustainable development of a transport infrastructure in cities and regions in the process of privatization; the need for urban land censuses to establish a price and tax structure in cities; the mechanisms of attracting investments from the low- and medium-income groups of the population to solve housing problems; the need for a retraining system for professionals in the city service sectors; and the need for analysing the experience of countries with economies in transition in housing reform. The Executive Director was asked to report in 1999.

Women in human settlements development

The Commission, on 7 May [res. 16/6], urged Governments to ensure gender-sensitive implementation of their national plans of action. It asked the Executive Director of UNCHS to integrate fully a gender perspective into all Centre activities. The Commission also requested the creation of a gender coordination unit directly under the Executive Director in order to mainstream the gender perspective in all policies, projects, programmes and activities of the Centre, with adequate resources allocated from within the existing resources of the Centre, but without diverting any resources from the Centre's Women in Human Settlements Development Programme. It further requested him to ensure gender balance in the Centre in accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/67 [YUN 1996, p. 1330] on improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat. The Commission urged Governments to encourage equal participation of women in decision-making to ensure their contribution to sustainable human settlements development and ensure that the benefits of development were equally shared by all members of society. Confirming that governmental institutions and civil society organizations might play an important advisory role to the Centre on human settlements matters from the perspective of women, the Commission stated that a process might be initiated by the Executive Director to maximize the contribution of women's civil society organizations to such an advisory role. The Executive Director was asked to include a section on women in human settlements development in his progress report to the Commission in 1999.

In January [HS/C/16/2/Add.2], the Executive Director reported to the Commission on a strategy for the progressive realization of the right to adequate housing (see also PART TWO, Chapter II), as requested by the Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1110]. The report noted that paragraphs 26 and 61 of the Habitat Agenda spelled out the commitment of Governments and what they were expected to do for the progressive realization of the right to adequate housing. The proposed UNCHS strategy called for promotional activities and the provision of advisory services; documentation and analysis of housing legislation; organization of seminars and expert group meetings; monitoring of housing conditions; and liaison with human rights organizations inside and outside the UN system.

The Commission, on 7 May [res. 16/7], recommended that, in addition to existing approved elements of their work programmes, a joint programme be developed by UNCHS and the United Nations Centre for Human Rights to assist States in implementing their commitments as provided for in international instruments and the Habitat Agenda, taking into account the proposed housing rights strategy of UNCHS and relevant parts of the Habitat Agenda. The Commission asked UNCHS and the Centre for Human Rights to cooperate and coordinate with other relevant UN agencies and international housing organizations to promote the full and progressive realization of the right to adequate housing. States were requested to take action to promote, protect and ensure that right and were invited to provide to the Commission information on progress achieved. The Executive Director was requested to report in 1999.

Private sector and NGO support

The Commission considered a report of the Executive Director on the contribution of the private sector and non-governmental sectors to shelter delivery for low-income groups [HS/C/16/7 & Corr.1]. The report discussed the advantages of the private sector in producing shelter for low-income groups, as well as the unique role of NGOs in facilitating shelter development and related processes so that poor people could better benefit from housing markets. A similar analysis was made of the activities of community-based organizations, highlighting the role played by private and non-governmental sector organizations. The report presented issues for discussion or further research and action, focusing on the need to build capacities for learning and negotiation among private, public and community organizations. The Executive Director concluded that it had become common practice to call for increased involvement by the private sector and NGOs in shelter delivery for low-income groups. Increasing their involvement was a complex task and further research was needed to evaluate practical experiences with diverse conditions prevailing in different countries. He stated that the Commission might wish to define the fundamental issues at stake in setting the terms of the relationship between public and private sectors, between market and non-market objectives and between growth and equity; examine how to maximize the synergies that came from greater collaboration between different actors in shelter delivery for the poor; and explore how to promote monitoring systems and actions, research to analyse, document and disseminate innovations and lessons learned.

The Commission, on 6 May [res. 16/15], called on Governments to implement shelter policies and strategies that promoted the contributions of the public, private and non-governmental sectors, and urged them to adopt policies in support of land and housing markets and businesses that protected and promoted the interests of low-income groups. Governments were encouraged to develop monitoring actions for the study, analysis, documentation and dissemination of innovations and lessons of experience in promoting the contribution of those sectors to the shelter delivery process, especially for low-income groups. The Executive Director was asked to intensify research, monitoring and evaluation of progress in the delivery of shelter to low-income groups, focusing on improving the contributions of the private and non-governmental sectors.

Management of natural resources

The Commission had before it a report of the Executive Director on the management of natural resources in the context of human settlements [HS/C/16/8]. The report reviewed current conditions and trends of exploitation and consumption of natural resources in human settlements in developing regions as well as in the industrialized world. It focused on the critical areas of water, forest-based and mineral resources, energy, and waste generation linked to resources consumption. The review highlighted the emerging danger zones where resource deficiency or excessive consumption patterns were posing imminent threats to sustainability. It addressed the growing challenge of managing the use of natural resources in human settlements in a sustainable manner and outlined the strategic interventions required to achieve the goals of the Habitat Agenda in sustainability. The Executive Director invited the Commission to deliberate on possible actions at the country level and by the international community. Those actions, he said, should promote the principles of sustainable development.

On 7 May [res. 16/16], the Commission called on Governments to adopt policies and measures to promote the development of sustainable human settlements, including: monitoring and assessing the exploitation and consumption of natural resources in human settlements; strengthening planning and development control activities, including land-use planning and protection of land resources; strengthening conservation of fragile ecosystems; promoting measures that combined resource recovery with environmental protection and employment generation; and promoting eco-efficiency in industry. The Commission called on Governments to promote and support broad-based partnerships of all interested parties for the efficient use of resources.

The Executive Director was asked to review regularly trends in the exploitation and sustainable consumption of natural resources related to the development and management of human settlements. It also asked him to support Governments by promoting energy/material efficiency standards and other approaches conducive to the sustainable consumption of natural resources relating to the development and management of human settlements, and by assisting developing countries to identify and access eco-efficient technologies.

Children's housing rights

In a January report [HS/C/16/9], the Executive Director presented an overview of the Centre's activities on the rights of the child with respect to shelter and related services, conducted in collaboration with UNICEF, in implementation of a 1995 Commission resolution [YUN 1995, p. 1108]. The report outlined issues to be considered when promoting child-centred human settlements development and described an agenda for action and how to measure progress by developing indicators.

On 7 May [res. 16/17], the Commission called on States parties to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560], to advance the right of the child to an adequate standard of living. It urged Governments to adopt and implement appropriate measures for the fulfilment of children's rights with respect to shelter and related services. It also urged them to ensure that children were given appropriate opportunities to participate in the formulation of national and local plans of action related to the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, and to promote policies conducive to the fulfilment of the rights of the child, as stipulated in relevant international agreements and conventions. The Commission asked the Executive Director to give attention to children's issues concerning sustainable human settlements development and to report on implementation of the resolution. The Centre was asked to continue to collaborate with UNICEF and other UN agencies in developing programmes for child-friendly human settlements.

illegal Israeli settlements

The Commission, in a May resolution [res. 16/18] on illegal Israeli human settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories, adopted by a vote of 23 to 1 with 23 abstentions, called on the Israeli authorities to implement measures to enable the Palestinian people, in the territories occupied since 1967, to secure their housing needs. In that regard, the Commission called for the end of confiscation of Palestinian lands and the establishment of settlements to house immigrants in the occupied territories; the halt of Israeli construction to establish a new settlement in Jebel Abu Ghneim to the south of East Jerusalem; and the end of policies that prevented the issuance of building permits to the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. The Commission called for increased financial assistance for an overall solution to the housing problems in the occupied Palestinian territories. It asked the Executive Director to cooperate with the Secretary-General in monitoring the situation and to report on his contribution to the Commission in 1999.

Eradication of poverty

In a May resolution [res. 16/22], the Commission, recognizing the contribution made by the Centre to achieving the eradication of poverty, stressed the importance of developing specific policies targeting vulnerable groups, addressing social integration and security and enhancing the participation of people living in poverty, as part of a coordinated effort for implementing the outcomes of recent global UN conferences, which had given priority to the goal of poverty eradication. It called on Governments to address poverty by facilitating the integration of the rural and urban poor into labour markets and their access to urban services, urban land and social benefits. The Executive Director was asked to contribute to the International Forum on Urban Poverty and to report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

International Forum. The International Forum on Urban Poverty, organized by UNCHS, the City of Florence (Italy) and the International Child Development Centre, was launched in November. The central mission of the Forum was to provide international, national and local support to partnership action aimed at reducing poverty.

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

In March [HS/C/16/12], the Executive Director of the Centre submitted to the Commission the proposed 1998-1999 budget of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation. Expected income for the biennium was $32.1 million and total expenditure was estimated at $30 million. The budget was based on the expected level of voluntary contributions to the Fund's general and earmarked funds, as well as the level of expenditures required to supplement the UN regular budget resources to implement the Centre's programme and to provide necessary programme support. The final estimates for 1998-1999 consisted of the level of expenditure approved for 1996-1997, to which was added an amount required to maintain that level of resources in 1998-1999 at 1997 prices, plus resource growth for a limited number of items and an allowance for inflation.

ACABQ action. On 22 April [HS/C/16/12/Add.1], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) presented its comments on the proposed budget. The Committee noted that the activities of the Foundation had been functionally integrated and formed part of the Centre's work programme on human settlements. The Foundation provided extra-budgetary support for its implementation. In the view of ACABQ, the format of the report hampered the analysis and evaluation of the budgetary proposals. The explanations and justifications were largely inadequate and incomplete.

ACABQ requested that the Executive Director explain in future budget submissions which ACABQ recommendations had been implemented, as well as the follow-up actions taken with regard to the 1996 recommendations of the Board of Auditors [A/51/533]. Specific concerns raised by ACABQ included: insufficient efforts to reduce administrative costs; unrealistic expectations from prior commitments carried over as income for the following budget; overly optimistic projection of resources for both general-purpose funds and earmarked projects; use of Foundation resources for non-project activities; excessive travel and communication costs; and excessive costs for rental of office space. ACABQ noted that it had requested but did not receive information on steps taken by the Executive Director to raise funds for the purpose of returning the advance made to Habitat II during 1994-1995 in the amount of $900,000 in order to reimburse the Foundation. That issue had also been raised by the General Assembly in resolution 51/225 B of 3 April, in which it noted the serious irregular financial practices of the Centre and the decision to divert $900,000 in Foundation funds for Habitat II.

The Executive Director, in a report of 27 April [HS/C/16/12/Add.3], discussed proposals for revisions to the proposed 1998-1999 Foundation budget, which had been prepared after reviewing the ACABQ recommendations. He stated that the secretariat planned to implement all ACABQ recommendations, some immediately and some over a longer time-frame, possibly the whole of the 1998-1999 biennium. As an immediate measure, the levels of income and expenditure in the proposed budget had been revised downwards. The new budget for 1998-1999 totalled $29.7 million, as compared to the revised figure for 1996-1997 of $26.7 million. Expenditures for 1998-1999 were expected to be $27.7 million, and the revised figure for total expenditures during the previous biennium was $24.9 million.

Commission action. By a 7 May decision [dec. 16/29], the Commission on Human Settlements, taking note of General Assembly and ACABQ concerns about the proposed budget, asked the Executive Director to take corrective action and to avoid recurrence. It asked the Secretary-General to provide the Centre with the capacity to audit its books and manage its finances and to provide all information necessary to make responsible budget decisions. The Commission asked the Executive Director to put on a sound basis the administrative and financial management of the Centre, complying with ACABQ and the Board of Auditors recommendations. It approved an allocation for expenditure of $23,044,167 for 1996-1997. It also approved an allocation for expenditure of $24 million for 1998-1999, with the understanding that for the next biennium the most likely level of expenditure could be estimated to be around $21 million, although the $24 million might be achieved, or even exceeded, if the Centre addressed its deficiencies, thus restoring the confidence of Member States and attracting new pledges. The Executive Director was instructed to reduce administrative expenses, allocations for consultants, provisions for official travel, and communication charges, and to revise the staffing table in accordance with the ACABQ recommendations. Efforts should be made to reduce the number of staff in the Foundation performing administrative tasks; high-level management positions should be filled only on an acting basis during restructuring of the Centre; and all posts should be advertised internally and externally and be fully competed for, in order to ensure transparency.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resource development

During 1997, the United Nations continued to undertake activities to advance social, cultural and human resource development, and to strengthen its crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

The Commission for Social Development met (New York, 25 February-6 March) under a revised mandate and new agenda since it was accorded primary responsibility for follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development. The Commission focused on the Summit priority theme of productive employment and sustainable livelihoods. In December, the General Assembly decided to hold a special session in 2000 to review and appraise the implementation of the Summit outcome. Other social issues addressed by the Assembly included follow-up to the 1994 International Year of the Family and implementation of the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons. Regarding cultural development, the Assembly reviewed implementation of the World Decade for Cultural Development, 1988-1997, and addressed issues related to the return and restitution of cultural property. It also proclaimed the year 2000 as the International Year of Thanksgiving.

On the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which held its sixth session in April/May, the Assembly adopted a set of Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. In other action on crime, the Assembly established a group of experts to begin the process of drafting an international convention against organized transnational crime. It also endorsed a new set of complementary provisions for the Model Treaty on Extradition and urged cooperation against corruption and bribery. Preparations were under way for the Tenth United Nations Congress for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, scheduled for 2000.

Human resources development was the focus of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations University. In 1997, the Assembly reviewed progress towards the goal of education for all.

Social policy and cultural issues

Social aspects of development

The Commission for Social Development held its thirty-fifth session (New York, 25 February-6 March) [E/1997/26] under a revised mandate and new agenda, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/7 [YUN 1996, p. 1009]. The Commission recommended five draft resolutions and one draft decision for adoption by the Council. It also adopted agreed conclusions on productive employment and sustainable livelihoods.

On 21 July, by decision 1997/230, the Council took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its resolutions and decisions. It also approved the agenda and documentation for the Commission's thirty-sixth session in 1998.

Follow-up to 1995 World Summit for Social Development

In 1997, the UN system continued to carry out activities at the international and national levels to implement the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113].

Commission action. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/7 [YUN 1996, p. 1009], which accorded the Commission for Social Development primary responsibility for Summit follow-up and implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, the Commission in 1997 considered the priority theme of productive employment and sustainable livelihoods, and reviewed UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups. The Commission held two panel meetings on the priority theme and a dialogue with the chairmen of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) inter-agency task forces on follow-up to recent international conferences in the economic, social and related fields.

The Commission considered a January report of the Secretary-General on follow-up action to the World Summit taken by the Council and the General Assembly in 1996 [E/CN.5/1997/2]. In another January report [E/CN.5/1997/5], he informed the Commission of emerging issues, trends and new approaches to issues affecting social development, including the situation of specific groups such as youth, ageing persons, persons with disabilities and families. He noted that rapid growth in East and South-East Asia had diminished the incidence of poverty. The world's poor were increasingly concentrated in sub-Saharan Africa, South Asia and some regions of Latin America, where growth rates were lower and distribution patterns more skewed. There had been some improvement in the situation of youth since the observance in 1985 of International Youth Year [YUN 1985, p. 978], such as increased attendance by young women in tertiary level education, increased health services and increased opportunities to vote and participate in political processes. At the same time, however, young people continued to encounter employment difficulties and to suffer from poor health as a result of societal conditions. The provision of sufficient and relevant educational opportunities for young people still remained a serious problem.

The approach to ageing was evolving conceptually in the context of preparations for the International Year of Older Persons in 1999 (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), encompassing sectoral adjustments for lifelong self-reliance, family and community solidarity, and new social welfare and security arrangements. Efforts were being made to involve new actors, such as the private sector, academia and the development community in ageing and the situation of older persons.

Major advances were made in the manner in which disability issues were viewed by societies and Governments, and in the development of policies to address the needs and rights of persons with disabilities. At the same time, the situation of the majority of persons with disabilities showed little concrete progress. They still faced barriers to full participation and in most developing countries lacked rudimentary technical aids and access to rehabilitation services.

The report described the related programme activities of the Secretariat and, in a February addendum [E/CN.5/1997/5/Add.1 & Corr.1], those of the regional commissions.

The Secretary-General, in a January report on productive employment and sustainable livelihoods [E/CN.5/1997/3], drew to the Commission's attention several interlocking themes. Annexed to the report was a report prepared by the International Labour Organization on promoting the goal of full employment.

In March, the Commission adopted a set of agreed conclusions on productive employment and sustainable livelihood [E/1997/26 (res. 35/2)]. It suggested a number of actions for Governments to take regarding strategies to achieve full employment; poverty eradication, equality and social justice; national economic and social policies; education, training, labour market policies and patterns of work; child labour; groups with special needs; and international cooperation. The Commission called on all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the UN system to be involved in the follow-up to the Summit, and invited specialized agencies and related UN organizations to strengthen and adjust their activities, programmes and medium-term strategies to take into account the follow-up to the Summit. The Secretary-General was asked to give attention to the cross-sectoral themes identified in Council resolution 1996/7 in preparing the annual analytical report on the thematic issues before the Commission. He was also asked to assist the Commission and the Council to broaden and deepen the policy debate on employment issues.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/36 [YUN 1996, p. 1260] and Assembly resolutions 51/171 [Ibid., p. 1131] and 51/177 [Ibid., p. 1002], the Secretary-General, in a June report on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major UN conferences and summits [E/1997/73], presented an overview of the work of the ACC inter-agency task forces and summarized the main outcome of the work of the Council's functional commissions in 1997. Regarding the Commission for Social Development, the Secretary-General noted that it had transmitted its agreed conclusions on productive employment and sustainable livelihoods as an input to the Council's 1997 high-level segment. Noting that there remained scope for further promoting a coordinated approach among the functional commissions, the Secretary-General stated that significant overlap and duplication continued in some aspects of their work, although each commission might be focusing on a somewhat different dimension of an issue.

As to progress at the inter-agency level, the ACC Inter-Agency Task Force on Employment and Sustainable Livelihoods had produced a report for resident coordinators summarizing lessons of experience at the country level and across countries with a view to suggesting ways to improve inter-agency collaboration and provide an understanding of the elements that worked to promote employment and sustainable livelihoods and of the necessary indicators to monitor progress. It held organizational meetings and completed country-level reviews and seminars in Chile, Hungary, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal and Zambia. The main finding from the analysis of the issues in those countries was that significant reductions in unemployment and poverty would require a strong commitment of the Government. Apart from country-level action for conference follow-up, the Task Force highlighted issues of global concern that remained challenges for the UN system, including a fuller appreciation of the significance of globalization and technological change for employment, the role of full employment as the means to promote sustainable livelihoods, and the need for indicators that could better reflect the notions of employment, underemployment and sustainable livelihoods.

In response to Assembly resolution 51/202 [YUN 1996, p. 1012], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/52/305], provided an overview of follow-up activities to the World Summit initiated in 1997 by 40 Governments, the UN system, members of civil society and other actors. It also described action taken by the Council in 1997.

Regional initiatives included the First Regional Conference in Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development (Sao Paulo, Brazil, 6-9 April), organized by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, and the Fifth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Development (Manila, Philippines, 5-11 November), organized by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

The report discussed the mobilization of financial resources to implement the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and noted the Microcredit Summit Declaration (Washington, D.C., February) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), a nine-year campaign to expand the reach of credit for self-employment and other financial and business services to 100 million of the world's poorest families by 2005. Subsequently, the United Nations examined the impact that microcredit could have on food security, women's economic empowerment, employment and self-employment, as well as the provision of basic social services. Ways of linking the traditional banking system to microcredit to facilitate access by the poor to credit were also examined. An earlier report of the Secretary-General [A/52/203-E/1997/85] described new and innovative ideas for generating funds for globally agreed commitments and priorities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 56], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/25 [draft: A/52/L.25 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 46].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/139 of 17 December 1991, 47/92 of 16 December 1992, 48/100 of 20 December 1993, 50/161 of 22 December 1995, 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 51/202 of 17 December 1996,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991, resolutions 1992/27 of 30 July 1992, 1995/60 of 28 July 1995, 1996/7 of 22 July 1996, 1996/36 of 26 July 1996 and 1997/56 of 23 July 1997 and agreed conclusions 1995/1 of 28 July 1995, 1996/1 of 26 July 1996 and 1997/1 of 25 July 1997,

1. Reaffirms the commitments adopted by heads of State and Government at the World Summit for Social Development, contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, and their pledge to give the highest priority to national, regional and international policies and actions for the promotion of social progress, social justice, the betterment of the human condition and social integration, based on full participation by all;

2. Emphasizes the need to create a framework for action to place people at the centre of development and direct economies to meet human needs more effectively;

3. Stresses the need for renewed and massive political will at the national, regional and international levels to invest in people and their well-being in order to achieve the objectives of social development;

4. Emphasizes that democracy, respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, transparent and accountable governance and administration in all sectors of society, and effective participation by civil society, are an essential part of the necessary foundations for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

5. Also emphasizes that an equitable and favourable national and international economic, political, social and legal environment, in accordance with the provisions of chapter I of the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, is essential for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development;

6. Stresses that social development is clearly linked to the development of peace, freedom, stability and security, both nationally and internationally;

7. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and on the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty (1996) and recommendations for the rest of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty;

Critical importance of national action and international cooperation for social development

8. Stresses that social development and the implementation of the Programme of Action of the Summit are primarily the responsibility of Governments and that international cooperation and assistance are essential for their full implementation;

9. Notes with satisfaction the initiatives and actions taken by Governments towards the implementation of the commitments made at the Summit;

10. Reiterates its call to Governments to define and implement time-bound goals and targets for reducing overall poverty and eradicating absolute poverty, expanding employment and reducing unemployment and enhancing social integration, within each national context;

11. Urges national Governments to formulate or strengthen comprehensive cross-sectoral strategies for implementing the Summit outcome and national strategies for social development;

12. Acknowledges the key role of developing country actors and institutions in creating and implementing effective programmes to maximize the positive impact of investments in social development;

13. Stresses the importance of putting full employment at the centre of policy-making in conjunction with other goals, while emphasizing the need for enhancing employment opportunities for women and for groups with specific needs;

14. Reiterates the call of the Summit for Governments to assess on a regular basis national progress towards implementing the outcome of the Summit, and encourages them to submit such information on a voluntary basis to the Commission for Social Development, which serves, inter alia, as a forum for the exchange of national experiences;

15. Stresses its solidarity with people living in poverty in all countries, and reaffirms that the satisfaction of basic human needs is an essential element of poverty eradication, those needs being closely interrelated and comprising nutrition, health, water and sanitation, education, employment, housing and equal opportunities for participation in political, economic, cultural and social life;

16. Reaffirms the need to strengthen, in a spirit of partnership, international, regional and subregional cooperation for social development and implementing the outcome of the Summit;

17. Calls upon all Governments and the United Nations system, in particular the relevant funds, programmes and agencies, to promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective and to use gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into the planning and implementation of policies, strategies and programmes on social development;

Mobilization of financial resources

18. Recognizes that the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action will require the mobilization of financial resources at the national and international levels, as set out in commitments 8 and 9 of the Declaration and paragraphs 87 to 93 of the Programme of Action;

19. Recognizes also that the implementation of the Declaration and Programme of Action in developing countries, in particular in Africa and the least developed countries, needs additional financial resources from all sources and more effective development cooperation and assistance;

20. Calls upon all countries to develop economic policies that promote and mobilize domestic savings and attract external resources for productive investment and to seek innovative sources of funding, both public and private, for social programmes, while ensuring their effective utilization, and in the budgetary process, to ensure transparency and accountability in the use of public resources and to give priority to providing and improving basic social services;

21. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on new and innovative ideas for generating funds for globally agreed commitments and priorities;

22. Welcomes the holding of the Micro-credit Summit in Washington, D.C., from 2 to 4 February 1997, and the adoption of the Micro-credit Declaration and Plan of Action, and encourages its full implementation as appropriate by all concerned;

23. Calls upon the international community, including international financial institutions, to implement fully and effectively all initiatives that will contribute to a durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, and thus to support their efforts to achieve social development and, in this context, reaffirms the need to make further progress towards the implementation of the recommendations of the World Summit for Social Development by the Bretton Woods institutions, including the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative;

24. Reaffirms the need to continue to evaluate the impact of structural adjustment programmes by, inter alia, integrating the social dimensions involved and, in this context, welcomes the recent initiatives of the World Bank, including the Structural Adjustment Participatory Review Initiative, which brings together a tripartite team in a number of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to review at the national level structural adjustment experiences and to identify problems;

25. Also reaffirms that a strong political commitment by the international community is needed to implement strengthened international cooperation for development, including social development, that the mobilization of domestic and international resources for development from all sources is an essential component for the comprehensive and effective implementation of development, that enhanced efforts should be made for the mobilization and provision of new and additional financial resources for the development of developing countries and that, despite an increase in private capital flows, official development assistance remains an essential source of external funding, and notes that developed countries reaffirm the commitments undertaken to fulfil as soon as possible the agreed United Nations targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance and 0.15 per cent of the gross national product for official development assistance for the least developed countries, that donor countries that have met the 0.15 per cent target will seek to undertake to reach 0.20 per cent, and that further efforts are also needed to improve the effectiveness of official development assistance and to focus such aid on the poorest countries;

26. Further reaffirms the importance of agreeing on a mutual commitment between interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes, and recalls the outcome of the meeting held at Oslo from 23 to 25 April 1996, which reaffirmed that promoting access for all to basic social services was essential for sustainable development and should be an integral part of any strategy to overcome poverty;

27. Recognizes the necessity of providing appropriate technical cooperation and other forms of assistance to the countries with economies in transition, as set out in the provisions of the Declaration and Programme of Action;

Involvement of civil society and other actors

28. Reaffirms the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments and the relevant actors of civil society, the social partners, the major groups as defined in Agenda 21, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the implementation of and follow-up to the Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, and for ensuring their involvement in the planning, elaboration, implementation and evaluation of social policies at the national level;

29. Encourages non-governmental organizations to participate in the work of the Commission for Social Development, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996 and decisions 1996/315 of 14 November 1996 and 1997/298 of 23 July 1997, and in the implementation process related to the Summit to the maximum extent possible;

The role of the United Nations system

30. Recalls Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/7, by which the Council decided that the Commission for Social Development, as a functional commission of the Council, shall have the primary responsibility for the follow-up to and review of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit;

31. Invites Governments to support the work of the Commission, including through the participation of high-level representatives on social development issues and policies;

32. Takes note of the request made by the Commission to the Secretary-General, in the framework of United Nations system-wide coordination, to assist the Commission and the Council to broaden and deepen the policy debate on employment issues;

33. Welcomes in this regard resolution 35/2 adopted by the Commission on the priority theme "Productive employment and sustainable livelihoods" and the agreed conclusions contained therein, in which the Commission recognized, inter alia, the importance of generated, and freely chosen employment as a central objective of economic and social policies, defining time-bound goals and targets for expanding employment and reducing unemployment, and preparing policies for the achievement of those goals and targets;

34. Also welcomes agreed conclusions 1997/1, adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its high-level segment on the theme "Fostering an enabling environment for development: financial flows, including capital flows, investment and trade" and calls for their implementation;

35. Further welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/60 of 25 July 1997, entitled "Eradication of poverty", and the decision of the Council therein to carry out in 1999 an overall review of the theme of poverty eradication in order to contribute to the special session of the General Assembly in 2000 for the overall review of the Summit and to the five-year review of the Beijing Platform for Action;

36. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/61 of 25 July 1997, on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations international conferences and summits, in which the Council reaffirmed the need to continue to ensure the harmonization and coordination of the agendas and work programmes of the functional commissions by promoting a clearer division of labour among them and by providing clear policy guidance to them;

37. Welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1997/302 of 25 July 1997 on the convening of a session of the Council in 1998 to consider further the theme of integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations international conferences and summits;

38. Renews its call to all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to be involved in the follow-up action to the Summit, and invites funds and programmes, specialized agencies and related organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen and adjust their activities, programmes and medium-term strategies, as appropriate, to take into account the follow-up to the Summit;

39. Takes note with appreciation of the work of the inter-agency task forces established by the Administrative Committee on Coordination, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations international conferences and summits;

40. Takes note of the emphasis placed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1997/61 on the need for the Administrative Committee on Coordination to ensure that there is effective inter-agency support for the work of the intergovernmental bodies dealing with conference follow-up, including the Council and its functional commissions, that there is regular updating and feedback on the incorporation of the work of the task forces at the country level, and that the Council is kept fully informed of the work and decisions of that Committee concerning integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations international conferences and summits;

41. Urges the continued involvement and support by the regional commissions in the promotion of the implementation of the objectives of the World Summit for Social Development at the regional and subregional levels, and reiterates its invitation to the commissions, in accordance with their mandates and in cooperation with the regional intergovernmental organizations and banks, to convene on a biennial basis a meeting at a high political level to review the progress made towards implementing the outcome of the Summit, to exchange views on their respective experiences and to adopt appropriate measures;

42. Welcomes in this context the convening by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean of the first regional meeting to evaluate the World Summit for Social Development, held at Sao Paulo from 6 to 9 April 1997, with the participation of high-level representatives of Latin American and Caribbean countries, and takes note with appreciation of the final document of the meeting, known as the Sao Paulo Consensus;

43. Also welcomes the convening by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific of the Fifth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Development at Manila, from 5 to 11 November 1997, to review national progress achieved and regional action taken in the implementation of the outcome of the Summit;

44. Further welcomes the convening of the expert group meeting on employment questions at Vienna, from 2 to 6 February 1998, as a follow-up to the Summit in the European region;

45. Urges the Economic Commission for Africa to convene in the forthcoming year a regional meeting to evaluate the follow-up of the World Summit for Social Development in the African region;

46. Welcomes the efforts of funds and programmes in assisting countries in implementing all Summit commitments at the national, regional and international levels;

47. Also welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the implementation of Summit commitments aimed at poverty eradication in developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries;

48. Takes note with appreciation of the contribution of the International Labour Organization to the consideration by the Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-fifth session, of the theme "Productive employment and sustainable livelihoods" and reiterates its invitation to the International Labour Organization to continue to contribute to the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action and to the work of the Commission for Social Development;

Special session of the General Assembly in 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit

49. Recalls its resolution 50/161, in which it decided to hold a special session in 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit and to consider further actions and initiatives;

50. Also recalls its resolution 51/202, in which it decided on the preparatory process of the special session;

51. Decides to establish a Preparatory Committee open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly, and that the Preparatory Committee will hold an organizational session of four days' duration, from 19 to 22 May 1998;

52. Also decides that, at its organizational session, the Preparatory Committee will consider and decide on the process to be followed to achieve the purpose of the special session with respect to an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit, and the consideration of further actions and initiatives and that, in this context, the Preparatory Committee will decide, inter alia, on the programme and organization of its work, including issues such as documentation, national contributions and input from the United Nations system, the election of its Bureau, the participation of non-governmental organizations, the dates for the special session and other organizational issues;

53. Reaffirms that the Preparatory Committee will initiate its substantive activities in 1999 on the basis of input by the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, and that account will be taken of contributions by all relevant organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system;

54. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare the necessary documentation for the Preparatory Committee at its organizational session and in particular to present a report at the organizational session, containing recommendations and proposals on the organization of the work of the Preparatory Committee;

55. Reaffirms that the follow-up to the Summit will be undertaken on the basis of an integrated approach to social development and within the framework of a coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the results of the major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields;

56. Invites Governments to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development in support of the implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, including the preparation for the special session of the Assembly;

57. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the preparatory process for the special session benefits from the active involvement of all concerned and that the secretariat is adequately supported;

58. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the outcome of the Summit;

59. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development".

Report on the World Social Situation 1997

The Report on the World Social Situation 1997 [Sales No. E.97.IV.1] surveyed the current socio-economic situation, including trends in the world economy, population patterns, health, education, and hunger and malnutrition. In addition, it examined the core issues of concern to all countries identified at the World Summit—poverty, unemployment, discrimination—in order to provide background to the discussion of the measures needed or taken to advance the Summit's objectives.

Under economic trends, the Report reviewed regional economic performance and the economies of developed and developing countries, as well as those in transition from centrally planned to market economies. It examined population trends in the areas of size and growth, fertility rates, mortality rates and international migration. Global health issues that had come to the forefront included changes in life expectancy, the global burden of health and new and infectious diseases. General trends and policy issues regarding hunger and malnutrition, which referred mainly to developing regions where hunger was most prevalent, were considered.

The Report reviewed the current status of formal education, examining enrolment, quality of education and public expenditures in the sector. Adult illiteracy was briefly examined.

A separate section presented main trends in global absolute poverty and its relationship to world economic growth and provided an assessment of progress made towards the goal of global poverty eradication, as well as an overview of key elements in a comprehensive strategy for poverty reduction. It also examined the problem of unemployment in developing countries and among youth and women, in addition to child labour. Lastly, it described how discrimination operated, identified discrimination against various groups and reviewed policy options for combating discrimination.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

The United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to engage in research on the social dimensions of development problems. Its activities included the programme on information technologies and social development, which began early in the year; sponsorship of conferences and papers on globalization and citizenship, including a conference on the relationship between globalization and citizenship (Melbourne, Australia, May); and the programme on gender, poverty and well-being, which began in 1997, for which UNRISD commissioned thematic review papers and country-specific case studies on the gender/poverty nexus that were presented at a workshop organized by UNRISD and the Centre for Development Studies (Trivandrum, India, 24-27 November).

UNRISD and the Universidad Nacional in Costa Rica co-hosted an international workshop on business responsibility for environmental protection in developing countries; and the programme on grass-roots initiatives and knowledge networks for land reform in developing countries, which began in April, sought to document activities of civil society organizations involved in promoting land reform or improving land tenure arrangements to benefit the poorer and weaker sections of the rural population.

A UNRISD project considered the socio-economic, cultural and environmental implications of emerging national and regional mass tourism in the South; the war-torn societies project which had activities in Eritrea, Guatemala, Mozambique and Somalia, explored innovative approaches to rebuilding such societies; and the vulnerability and coping strategies in Cambodia project consisted of three independent studies on food security, psycho-social vulnerability and the role of international and national institutions in the transition to democracy and a market economy.

As follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, UNRISD organized a public conference in Geneva on 9 and 10 July. Efforts were made to highlight approaches in mobilizing resources for social development; learning from successful attempts to provide universal social services; promoting harmony in multi-ethnic societies; dealing with the legacy of hatred in countries torn by civil war; and developing community-based approaches to urban social problems.

Research continued on national social development plans of sub-Saharan African countries. In West Africa, work progressed on a programme developed at a March regional workshop.

The community perspectives on urban governance project continued to identify instances of, and constraints on, collaboration between community-based/volunteer organizations and local governments in designing, implementing and evaluating social and economic policy at the local level. A number of case studies were conducted in cities worldwide in preparation for the UNRISD workshop on comparative perspectives on decentralized governance in a globalizing world (Shanghai, China, October).

UNRISD expenditures in 1997 grew by 6.4 per cent over the previous year and were expected to expand by another 6 per cent in 1998, reaching a total of $5.36 million.

Follow-up to International Year of the Family

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/142 [YUN 1995, p. 1128], the Secretary-General in a January report [A/52/57-E/1997/4], described follow-up activities to the 1994 International Year of the Family [YUN 1994, p. 1144] at the national, regional and international levels and made proposals for follow-up action by the Secretariat. The report also provided an analysis of family-related provisions from the outcomes of the international conferences held in the 1990s.

Recommendations related to the decisions of the conferences included encouraging Governments to develop family-impact assessments in their development activities and to draw up, implement and evaluate family-sensitive policies. The Commission for Social Development was called on to give appropriate attention to the development of family-sensitive policies and programmes in the context of its agenda, particularly during the period 1997-2000. In addition, the activities of the focal point of the UN system to promote family issues, as the successor to the secretariat of the International Year of the Family, should concentrate on implementing family-related provisions of the international declarations and plans of action of the global conferences.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/205 of 7 February, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/1997/26], adopted resolution 1997/21 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Follow-up to the International Year of the Family

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 52/81 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Special, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/634], adopted resolution 52/81 without vote [agenda item 102].

Follow-up to the International Year of the Family

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/82 of 8 December 1989, 46/92 of 16 December 1991, 47/237 of 20 September 1993 and 50/142 of 21 December 1995 concerning the proclamation, preparations for and observance of the International Year of the Family,

Recognizing that the basic objective of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family should be to strengthen and support families in performing their societal and developmental functions and to build upon their strengths, in particular at the national and local levels,

Noting that the family-related provisions of the outcomes of the world conferences of the 1990s provide policy guidance on ways to strengthen family-centred components of policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

Emphasizing that equality between women and men and respect for the rights of all family members is essential to family well-being and to society at large,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the International Year of the Family, and welcomes the proposals contained therein;

2. Invites Governments to continue their actions to build family-friendly societies, inter alia, by promoting the rights of individual family members, in particular gender equality and the rights of the child;

3. Emphasizes the need for a more focused and coordinated approach towards family issues within the United Nations system;

4. Calls upon Governments, non-governmental organizations, other organizations of civil society, the private sector and individuals to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund on Family Activities;

5. Urges Governments to take sustained action at all levels concerning families, including studies and applied research on families, and to promote the role of families in development, and invites Governments to develop concrete measures and approaches to address national priorities to deal with family issues;

6. Recommends that all relevant actors in civil society, including research and academic institutions, contribute to and participate in action on families;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to play an active role in facilitating international cooperation within the framework of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family, to facilitate the exchange of experiences and information among Governments on effective policies and strategies, to facilitate technical assistance, with a focus on least developed and developing countries, and to encourage the organization of subregional and interregional meetings and relevant research;

8. Calls upon Governments to encourage the active follow-up to the International Year of the Family at the national and local levels;

9. Reaffirms Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/7 of 22 July 1996, in which the Council decided that the follow-up to the International Year of the Family should be an integral part of the multi-year programme of work of the Commission for Social Development.

International Day of Families

The International Day of Families, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 47/237 [YUN 1993, p. 1003], was observed annually on 15 May. In 1997, the theme focused on building families based on partnership.

Persons with disabilities

The Economic and Social Council in 1997 decided to renew for an additional three years the mandate of the Special Rapporteur appointed in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1130] to monitor the implementation of the 1993 Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 977].

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/1997/26], adopted resolution 1997/19 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, which designates a focal point within the United Nations for coordinating and monitoring the implementation of the Programme of Action, including its review and appraisal, and General Assembly resolution 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities,

Recalling also the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other international human rights instruments which proclaim that the rights therein should be ensured equally to all individuals, without discrimination,

Recalling further the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, in which Governments are requested to promote the Standard Rules and to develop strategies for their implementation and in which it is emphasized that policies concerning persons with disabilities should focus on their abilities rather than their disabilities,

Recalling that children with disabilities and their families or other caretakers have special needs,

Noting with great satisfaction that the Standard Rules play an important role in influencing legislation, policies, action and evaluations at both the national and international levels,

Acknowledging the active role played by non-governmental organizations, including organizations of persons with disabilities, in support of the Standard Rules and their contribution to the implementation and monitoring of the Rules,

Concerned about the effects of the current budgetary constraints of the United Nations on its disability activities,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the valuable work done by the Special Rapporteur of the Commission for Social Development on monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, and welcomes his comprehensive report;

2. Urges the United Nations, Governments and the non-governmental organizations concerned to strengthen their efforts to implement at all levels, by appropriate legal, administrative, financial and other measures, the goal of full participation and equality for persons with disabilities, in accordance with the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development and the Standard Rules;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to give higher priority to disability activities and to allocate the resources necessary to enable the Secretariat to fulfil its function as focal point in a forceful way;

4. Urges the Secretary-General and Governments to further the effective implementation of the standard Rules and to emphasize the dimension of human rights, including that dimension for persons with developmental and psychiatric disabilities;

5. Also urges the Secretary-General and Governments to give full attention to a gender perspective in all policies and programmes related to disability;

6. Further urges the Secretary-General and Governments to give full attention to the rights of children with disabilities;

7. Encourages the United Nations and Governments to involve organizations of persons with disabilities in policy planning and decision-making processes regarding education, communications, employment and health services;

8. Also encourages the United Nations and Governments to enhance cooperation, through appropriate mechanisms, with organizations of persons with disabilities or concerned with disability issues so as to improve the implementation of the Standard Rules;

9. Urges the United Nations, Governments and the non-governmental organizations concerned to combat the sexual abuse of persons with disabilities;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite appropriate United Nations bodies to provide advisory services and support to Governments in their efforts to develop disability policies based on the Standard Rules and thereby collaborate with the focal point in its role as policy-coordinating body and with organizations of persons with disabilities;

11. Encourages the United Nations Development Programme and other entities of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions and inter-agency mechanisms, to mainstream disability issues in their development activities and in their efforts to eradicate poverty;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to ensure that the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and all other relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system take into account, in their policies and programmes, the rights of children with disabilities and mainstream the particular needs of such children;

13. Invites the Special Rapporteur and the Committee on the Rights of the Child to pursue and enhance their cooperation to ensure that the rights of children with disabilities are addressed fully in the Committee's reporting process;

14. Calls upon Governments, when formulating national policies and strategies during the International Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, to combat the social exclusion of persons with disabilities, to promote their employment and to include disability measures in poverty eradication programmes;

15. Urges all Governments to provide education for disabled children, youth and adults, regardless of the nature of the disability, in accordance with the Salamanca Statement and Framework for Action on Special Needs Education;

16. Urges Governments that have not ratified International Labour Organization Convention No. 159 concerning Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) to consider doing so, in order to strengthen their policies, and to use the opportunity to obtain technical assistance from the International Labour Organization, and urges Governments that have ratified the Convention to seek further guidance when implementing it, in the accompanying Recommendation No. 168;

17. Encourages donors to provide assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their efforts to address the needs of persons with disabilities, and encourages Governments of recipient countries to include disability matters in their applications for such assistance;

18. Decides to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a further period of three years, so as to make it possible to continue the monitoring of the implementation of the Standard Rules in accordance with section IV of the Rules, and to request the Special Rapporteur, assisted by the Secretariat and in consultation with the panel of experts established by six major international non-governmental organizations in the disability field, to prepare a report for submission to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-eighth session;

19. Requests the Special Rapporteur to pay special attention to the situation of children with disabilities when monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules;

20. Urges States to make contributions to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability so as to support initiatives on disability, and also urges them to support, by financial and other means, the important work of the Special Rapporteur;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his reports to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh sessions information on activities within the United Nations system that relate to the Commission's priority themes of promoting the social integration of disabled persons and of social services for all, and to counteract the social exclusion facing persons with disabilities and eradicate poverty among them.

On the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/1997/26], the Economic and Social Council, on 21 July [meeting 36], adopted resolution 1997/20 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Children with disabilities

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which proclaim that the rights therein should be ensured equally to all individuals, without discrimination,

Recalling also the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities and the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond, as well as the various resolutions and declarations adopted by the General Assembly relating to persons with physical, mental and psychological disabilities, including the Declaration on the Rights of Mentally Retarded Persons and the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons,

Recalling further the disability provisions in the results of international conferences, including the World Conference on Special Needs Education: Access and Quality, held at Salamanca, Spain, in 1994 and the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen in 1995,

Welcoming the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission for Social Development on monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities,

Noting with appreciation the activities in support of disability issues carried out by non-governmental organizations,

Convinced that disability is not inability and that it is critically important to take a positive view of abilities as the basis of planning for persons with disabilities, in particular children with disabilities,

1. Recognizes the need for special attention to be directed towards children with disabilities and their families or other caretakers;

2. Notes with concern the large numbers of children who have become disabled physically or mentally, or both, as a consequence of, inter alia, poverty, disease, disasters, landmines and all forms of violence;

3. Urges both Governments and the Secretary-General to give full attention to the rights, special needs and welfare of children with disabilities;

4. Invites Governments, concerned United Nations organizations and bodies, including the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, and non-governmental organizations, especially those of persons with disabilities, to conduct awareness-raising activities, with a view to combating and overcoming discrimination against children with disabilities;

5. Encourages further cooperation among Governments, in coordination, where appropriate, with the United Nations Children's Fund, other relevant United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations, to nurture the talents and potential of children with disabilities by developing and disseminating appropriate technologies and know-how;

6. Encourages Governments to include data on children when implementing rule 13 on information and research of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities;

7. Urges Governments to ensure, in accordance with rule 6 of the Standard Rules, that children with disabilities have equal access to education and that their education is an integral part of the educational system, and also urges Governments to provide vocational preparatory training appropriate for children with disabilities;

8. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue its programme activities aimed at the integration of children and youth with disabilities into mainstream education and to provide appropriate assistance to Governments, at their request, in designing and setting up programmes to encourage the creative, artistic and intellectual potential of children, including those with disabilities;

9. Calls upon Governments to ensure the participation of children with disabilities in recreational activities and sports;

10. Emphasizes the right of children with disabilities to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, and urges Governments to ensure the provision of equal access to comprehensive health services and the adoption of holistic approaches to the total well-being of all children with disabilities, in particular children at highest risk, including refugee, displaced or migrant children, children living in situations of violence and its immediate aftermath, children living in disaster areas, street children and children in squatter colonies;

H. Encourages Governments to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability;

12. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules, to pay special attention to the situation of children with disabilities, to pursue close working relations with the Committee on the Rights of the Child in its monitoring role with respect to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to include in his report to the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-eighth session his findings, views, observations and recommendations on children with disabilities.

Follow-up to the World Programme of Action

In a September report [A/52/351], the Secretary-General presented the findings of the third quinquennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 37/52 [YUN 1982, p. 981]. The two earlier reviews were undertaken in 1987 [YUN 1987, p. 647] and in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 821].

The review and appraisal assessed recent trends and emerging issues in disability policies and programmes since the end of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 37/53 [YUN 1982, p. 983]; documented initiatives of Governments, NGOs and the United Nations since 1992 that had interacted with disability issues and trends; and submitted recommendations to further the implementation of the World Programme of Action to the year 2000 and beyond. The report also examined options to improve policy development and monitoring of programme implementation, including issues related to the development of information, statistics and indicators on disability.

It was concluded that there was widespread policy-level support for the goals and objectives of the World Programme of Action and the need to address disability issues in the context of overall development and with reference to human rights issues was recognized. Constituencies concerned with disability issues had expanded, and the content of the World Programme maintained its validity. One issue that had emerged since the end of the Decade but which had not received detailed attention in the World Programme was the relationship among population ageing, impairment and disability.

The report suggested that effective strategies for the implementation of the World Programme were characterized by their linking of disability issues with overall development variables and within the broader human rights framework of the United Nations. In particular, there were three strategic areas in which further action and resource commitments were expected to result in improved implementation: data collection and statistics on disability; indicators for monitoring and evaluation; and national capacity-building and institutional development for the disability perspective within the framework of a society for all.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/634], adopted resolution 52/82 without vote [agenda item 102].

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons: towards a society for all in the twenty-first century

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 49/153 of 23 December 1994 and 50/144 of 21 December 1995, in which it called upon Governments, when implementing the World Programme of Action, to take into account the elements suggested in the Long-term Strategy to Implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons to the Year 2000 and Beyond,

Recalling also its resolution 48/96 of 20 December 1993, by which it adopted the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities,

Welcoming the inclusion of measures to address questions of disability in the programmes, plans and platforms for action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996,

Mindful of the need to adopt and implement effective public policies and programmes to promote the rights of persons with disabilities,

Convinced that the end of the century provides an opportunity for considering which issues to address in order to implement fully the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities,

Welcoming initiatives to hold international conferences related to disabled persons, in particular the holding of the Fifth World Assembly of Disabled Peoples' International at Mexico City in December 1998, on the theme "Towards an inclusive twenty-first century",

Recognizing the importance of timely and reliable data on disability for disability-sensitive policies, programme planning and evaluation and the need for further development of practical statistical methodology for data collection and compilation on populations with disabilities,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the third quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and welcomes the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Takes note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1997/19 of 21 July 1997 on equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities and 1997/20 of 21 July 1997 on children with disabilities;

3. Notes with appreciation the valuable work undertaken by the Special Rapporteur for monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities of the Commission for Social Development, and welcomes the second round of monitoring the implementation of the Standard Rules, the cooperation of the Special Rapporteur with the Commission on Human Rights, and especially with the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

4. Encourages Governments and the non-governmental community to examine key social and economic policy issues related to the equalization of opportunities for persons with disabilities, in particular, (a) accessibility, (b) social services and social safety nets and (c) employment and sustainable livelihoods;

5. Urges Governments to cooperate with the Statistics Division of the Secretariat in the continued development of global statistics and indicators, and encourages them to avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Division, as needed;

6. Urges relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, including relevant treaty bodies, such as the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the regional commissions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and institutions, to work closely with the United Nations in the promotion of the rights of persons with disabilities by sharing experiences and findings on disability issues;

7. Decides that the next quinquennial review and appraisal of the World Programme of Action, in 2002, shall consider the issues mentioned in paragraph 4 above;

8. Invites Governments, concerned non-governmental organizations and the private sector to continue to support the United Nations Voluntary Fund on Disability, with a view to providing additional support to the implementation of the Standard Rules, including further assistance in national capacity-building and support for the work of the Special Rapporteur;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to develop a plan to increase the accessibility of the United Nations and its offices and meetings to persons with disabilities;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-seventh session, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Cultural development

In response to General Assembly resolution 41/187 [YUN 1986, p. 624], the Secretary-General, in September [A/52/382], transmitted the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the implementation of the World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997) during 1994-1997. The Decade was proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 41/187 and UNESCO was designated as the lead agency.

The report described the activities of the World Commission on Culture and Development, a research project on the integration of cultural factors in development strategies and regional and intercultural projects.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/205 of 7 February, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/52/628/Add.9], adopted resolution 52/197 without vote [agenda item 97 (i)].

Cultural development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/187 of 8 December 1986, in which it proclaimed the period 1988-1997 the World Decade for Cultural Development, 46/158 of 19 December 1991, in which it requested the Secretary-General to cooperate with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in establishing an independent World Commission on Culture and Development, and expected the World Commission to submit its final report to the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and to the United Nations General Assembly no later than three years after it began its work, and 51/179 of 16 December 1996, concerning the report of the World Commission,

Noting the fact that public opinion throughout the world as well as Governments and non-governmental organizations have become much more sensitive to the need for better integration of the cultural dimension into the entire development process,

Recognizing that this awareness of the central importance of culture is, nevertheless, insufficiently present in development policy and practice,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the active participation of Member States, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals in the implementation of projects of national, regional and interregional scope, aiming at the promotion of the objectives of the Decade, and in the work of the World Commission and its follow-up,

Taking note of the first meeting of Ministers of Culture of non-aligned countries, held at Medellin, Colombia, on 4 and 5 September 1997 A/52/432,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on the progress of the World Decade for Cultural Development during the period 1994-1997;

2. Invites all Member States, intergovernmental bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations:

(a) To ensure that the lessons and experiences gained and the momentum generated through the World Decade and the World Commission on Culture and Development are reflected in all their development strategies, as appropriate;

(b) To submit their comments to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the report of the World Commission on Culture and Development, entitled Our Creative Diversity;

(c) To intensify their efforts to integrate cultural factors into their development programmes and projects, so as to ensure sustainable development that fully respects cultural diversity, taking into account their cultural values and identity;

3. Stresses the importance of the question of interaction between culture and development, and encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to accord priority to this theme in its work;

4. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to pursue its ongoing task of promoting throughout the United Nations system a greater awareness of the crucial relationship between culture and development, taking into account the diversity of cultures;

5. Welcomes the convening in Stockholm in 1998 of an intergovernmental conference on cultural policies for development, organized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in the elaboration of the international development strategy for the next United Nations development decade, to include recommendations for the integration of the cultural dimension in development activities;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to include the outcome of the Stockholm conference in his report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Cultural property

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/56 [YUN 1995, p. 1131], the Secretary-General transmitted a June report of the Director-General of UNESCO on action taken by UNESCO to promote the return of cultural property to countries of origin or its restitution in cases of illicit appropriation [A/52/211]. The report summarized the main topics discussed at the ninth session of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation (Paris, 16-19 September 1996), which resulted in the adoption of eight recommendations. Those recommendations dealt with Greece's request to the United Kingdom to return the marbles from the Parthenon; training programmes on illicit trafficking; use of the Committee's good offices in settling international claims for the return of cultural property; coordinating action with other concerned institutions; the establishment of a international ly exported cultural objects for countries unable to bear the related financial costs; a draft code of ethics for dealers in cultural property; the return of cultural property smuggled from Iraq; and a handbook on standards for documentation of African collections.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November [meeting 55], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/24 [draft: A/52/L.12 & Add.1] by recorded vote (87-0-23) [agenda item 27].

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981, 38/34 of 25 November 1983, 40/19 of 21 November 1985, 42/7 of 22 October 1987, 44/18 of 6 November 1989, 46/10 of 22 October 1991, 48/15 of 2 November 1993 and 50/56 of 11 December 1995,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Welcoming the Medellin Declaration for Cultural Diversity and Tolerance and the Plan of Action on Cultural Cooperation adopted at the first Meeting of the Ministers of Culture of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Medellin, Colombia, on 4 and 5 September 1997 A/52/432,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for the return or restitution of cultural property, the preparation of inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms that the restitution to a country of its objets d'art, monuments, museum pieces, archives, manuscripts, documents and any other cultural or artistic treasures contributes to the strengthening of international cooperation and to the preservation and flowering of universal cultural values through fruitful cooperation between developed and developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to continue to develop all possibilities for bringing about the attainment of the objectives of resolution 50/56;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

Olympic Truce

On 25 November [meeting 54], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/21 [draft: A/52/L.23/Rev.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 24].

Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/13 of 7 November 1995, in which it decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" and to consider this item every two years in advance of each Summer and Winter Olympic Games,

Recalling also its resolution 48/11 of 25 October 1993, which, inter alia, revived the ancient Greek tradition of ekcheiria or "Olympic Truce", calling for all hostilities to cease during the Games, thereby mobilizing the youth of the world in the cause of peace,

Recognizing the valuable contribution that the appeal launched by the International Olympic Committee for an Olympic Truce, with which the National Olympic Committees of the Member States are associated, could make towards advancing the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking into account resolution CM/Res.1608(LXII), adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 21 to 23 June 1995, and endorsed by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of that organization, which supports the appeal for an Olympic Truce,

Reaffirming that the Olympic ideal promotes international understanding, particularly among the youth of the world, through sport and culture in order to advance the harmonious development of humankind,

Noting with satisfaction the increasing number of joint endeavours of the International Olympic Committee and the United Nations system, for example in the fields of development, humanitarian assistance, protection of the environment, health promotion and education, in which the United Nations Development Programme, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization have participated,

1. Urges Member States to observe the Olympic Truce during the XVIII Olympic Winter Games, which will be held in Nagano, Japan, from 7 to 22 February 1998, the vision of which is to be a link to the twenty-first century, inspiring the search for wisdom for the new era, respect for the beauty and bounty of nature and the furtherance of peace and goodwill;

2. Takes note of the idea of the Olympic Truce, as dedicated in ancient Greece to the spirit of fraternity and understanding between peoples, and urges Member States to take the initiative to abide by the Olympic Truce, individually and collectively, and to pursue in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations the peaceful settlement of all international conflicts;

3. Calls upon all Member States to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in its efforts to promote the Olympic Truce;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to promote the observance of the Olympic Truce among Member States, drawing the attention of world public opinion to the contribution such a truce would make to the promotion of international understanding and the preservation of peace and goodwill, and to cooperate with the International Olympic Committee in the realization of this objective;

5. Welcomes the decision of the International Olympic Committee to fly the United Nations flag at all competition sites of the Olympic Games;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Building a peaceful and better world through sport and the Olympic ideal" and to consider this item before the Games of the XXVII Olympiad in Sydney, Australia, in the year 2000.

International Year of Thanksgiving

On 22 July [meeting 3] the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1997/46 [draft: E/1997/L.35] without vote [agenda item 6 (i)].

International Year of Thanksgiving, 2000

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the dedication of a year to the act of giving thanks gives us the opportunity to remember the development of a rich and harmonious international life and that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as expressed in its Charter, is to achieve international cooperation in solving international problems in the economic, social, cultural and humanitarian areas without creating any distinctions based on race, sex, language or religion.

Convinced that the observance of the year 2000 as an international year of thanksgiving within the United Nations will bring together the efforts of nations to achieve full tolerance and strengthen universal peace,

Mindful that the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations includes the practice of tolerance as one of the principles that need to be applied to prevent war and maintain peace,

Affirming that this initiative will contribute to international cooperation by creating an awareness among peoples and Governments of the importance of gratitude, as much in the personal and civic life of every human being as in the relations between the countries and cultures of the world,

Affirming also that the proposal to begin the twenty-first century and the new millennium with an international year of thanksgiving to celebrate the gift of life as the most noble expression of the human spirit is intended to promote friendship and solidarity between nations,

1. Reaffirms that such an expression of gratitude will bring together national and international efforts to achieve full tolerance and strengthen universal peace and international cooperation;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly, at its fifty-second session, proclaim the year 2000 as International Year of Thanksgiving;

3. Invites all Member States and interested intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to do whatever they can in their respective areas of expertise to contribute to the preparations for the Year and to publicizing it.

On 20 November, the General Assembly, by resolution 52/16, proclaimed the year 2000 as the International Year of Thanksgiving.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice held its sixth session in Vienna from 28 April to 9 May [E/1997/30 & Corr.1]. The Commission, the principal policy-making body of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, recommended five draft resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly and 10 draft resolutions and one draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below). It also adopted a resolution regarding its strategic management of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/232, took note of the Commission's report on its sixth session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its seventh (1998) session. The Council decided that each session of the Commission should have one prominent theme and that the themes for the 1998, 1999 and 2000 sessions should be, respectively, organized transnational crime, crime prevention and the results of the Tenth (2000) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders. It decided that the Commission, from its seventh session onwards, in addition to plenary meetings, should be provided with full interpretation services for 12 meetings for informal consultations on draft proposals and for meetings of open-ended working groups, with the precise allocation of time for the different types of meetings to be determined by the Commission at its seventh session, on the understanding that no more than two meetings would be held concurrently, in order to ensure maximum participation of delegations.

UN Programme on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/63 [YUN 1996, p. 1021], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, particularly its technical cooperation capacity [A/52/295].

The report described the Programme's advisory services, training activities, fellowship programme and publications, as well as efforts to assist Member States to implement the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 51/60 [YUN 1996, p. 1028]. It also covered efforts to strengthen the Programme and to mobilize resources, activities financed through the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, and cooperation and coordination of activities between the Programme and other relevant UN bodies.

The Programme activities described in the report included the implementation of recommendations made at the Ninth (1995) Crime Congress [YUN 1995, p. 1132] and preparations for the Tenth (2000) Congress. Other Programme activities focused on: international cooperation in combating transnational crime; corruption and bribery; measures to regulate firearms; computerization of criminal justice operations and the development, analysis and policy use of crime and criminal justice information; elimination of violence against women; measures to prevent illicit trafficking in children; and the use and application of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice.

In his concluding remarks, the Secretary-General noted that, as part of his 1997 UN reform programme (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), Vienna would become the locus for UN efforts against crime, drugs and terrorism. The Division for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice was to be reconstituted as the Centre for International Crime Prevention and proposals would be submitted to Member States on strengthening its capacities. The new Centre and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme would together form a new Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/90 without vote [agenda item 103].

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, particularly its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in which it approved the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to the resolution,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating crime, including drug-related crimes, such as money laundering, illicit arms trade and terrorist crimes, and bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase technical cooperation activities in order to assist countries, in particular developing countries and countries in transition, with their efforts in translating United Nations policy guidelines into practice,

Recalling its relevant resolutions in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to provide the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandate, in conformity with the high priority attached to the Programme,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/63 of 12 December 1996;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the crucial role it has to play in promoting effective action to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and in assisting Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the priority of the Programme, in accordance with relevant resolutions, and requests the Secretary-General to further strengthen the Programme by providing it with the resources necessary for the full implementation of its mandate, including follow-up action to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994, and to the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995;

4. Reaffirms the high priority attached to technical cooperation and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and stresses the need to continue to improve the operational activities of the Programme, in particular in developing countries and countries in transition, in order to meet the needs of Member States, at their request, for support in crime prevention and criminal justice;

5. Calls upon States and United Nations funding agencies to make significant financial contributions for the operational activities of the Programme, and encourages all States to make voluntary contributions for that purpose to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Trust Fund, also taking into account the activities required for the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime;

6. Calls upon all relevant programmes, funds and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies, to support technical operational activities in this field and to include such activities in their programmes, utilizing the expertise of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme in such activities and cooperating closely on relevant technical assistance projects and advisory missions;

7. Takes note with appreciation of the contributions of the Programme to United Nations peacekeeping and special missions, as well as its contributions to the follow-up to those missions, inter alia, through advisory services, and encourages the Secretary-General, as a way of strengthening the rule of law, to recommend the inclusion of the re-establishment and reform of criminal justice systems in peacekeeping operations;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in this field, in performing its activities, including cooperation and coordination with other relevant bodies, such as the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women;

9. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to improve the strategic management of the Programme and to exercise more vigorously its mandated function of resources mobilization, and calls upon the Commission to further strengthen its activities in that direction;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Strategic management and programme questions

In a March report [E/CN.15/1997/19], the Secretary-General provided an overview of the inter-sessional activities undertaken by the Commission to strengthen its strategic management of the Programme and presented proposals to measure the impact of Programme activities and to maximize the existing resource potential. The Secretary-General called for definition of standards and indicators, which would vary in different contexts and which would be directly related to objectives. A fairly comprehensive evaluation of the Programme and its impact could be achieved over time through a variety of existing mechanisms and low-cost measurement tools, he stated. Regarding the Programme's resource potential, the Secretary-General suggested changing the utilization of existing resources so that they were used in the most effective and efficient manner possible, and called for the generation of additional funds so that there was a more appropriate match between mandates and resources.

A March note of the Secretary-General summarized the proposed 1998-1999 programme of work in crime prevention and criminal justice for consideration by the Commission [E/CN.15/1997/20]. The programme would focus on technical assistance and advisory services, the control of organized transnational crime, criminal justice systems management and information, crime prevention strategies, and preparations for the Tenth Congress. The note outlined activities based on the submission to the proposed 1998-1999 budget, including servicing of intergovernmental and expert bodies; international cooperation and inter-agency coordination and liaison; technical cooperation; and other activities such as the promotion of legal instruments, issuing publications, maintaining and expanding databases and technical information, and carrying out public information activities.

On 9 May [E/1997/30 des. 6/1]), taking note of the Secretary-General's March note, the Commission decided to submit the comments reflected in its report to relevant UN bodies and asked the Secretary-General to ensure the provision of sufficient resources for the implementation of programme activities. The Commission also took note of the Secretary-General's report on strategic management and endorsed the recommendations of its bureau [E/CN.15/1997/CRP.2] with respect to streamlining the Commission's agenda and organization of work. The bureau was asked to develop recommendations, for the Commission's consideration in 1998, concerning criteria that the Commission could use to determine which types of agenda items should be submitted to the session that immediately followed.

The Commission asked its Chairman to convene an informal working group of its members to review the programme mandates and resources with a view to establishing a more realistic relationship between them, and asked the working group to report in 1998. The Secretary-General was asked to measure the impact of programme activities and to report thereon to the Commission on a biennial basis, starting in 1999. In addition, the Commission called on the Secretary-General to redeploy savings in administration and conference services to the Programme and asked him to issue a consolidated appeal on crime prevention and criminal justice requirements to Governments. The Commission called for contributions from Member States to cover the cost of support for developing and administering the Programme's technical cooperation component.

Technical cooperation and coordination

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/22 [YUN 1992, p. 842] and a 1996 Commission resolution [YUN 1996, p. 1023], the Secretary-General, in a February report [E/CN.15/1997/17], reviewed technical cooperation activities undertaken during 1996 by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, including the advisory services provided by the two interregional advisers for crime prevention and criminal justice based in Vienna and the regional adviser based at the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

The Secretary-General stated that the number of technical assistance activities undertaken by the Division had steadily increased. The activities consisted mainly of needs assessment and fact-finding missions, training, development of curricula and training material, workshops, seminars and expert meetings, expert assistance and advisory services on substantive, legal and administrative issues, and the exchange and dissemination of information. The Division had also provided its services and assistance through UN peacekeeping and peace-building operations.

The report contained information on the coordination of activities and cooperation between the Programme and other UN entities and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The Secretary-General observed that a more systematic approach towards cooperation and coordination was followed. However, financial and human resource limitations imposed constraints on optimal cooperation and coordination.

Regarding the establishment of a resource mobilization mechanism, the chairmen of the regional groups, after consultations with their member States, expressed the view that there was no need to establish another mechanism in addition to the informal consultative group on resource mobilization and that the needs expressed in the Commission's 1996 resolution could be served by the group.

The Secretary-General stated that the Commission might wish to invite Member States to treat crime prevention and criminal justice as an essential element of the whole development process, and to call on States to include crime prevention and criminal justice in their requests for technical assistance. It might also wish to invite them to contribute to the further operationalization of the Programme, and to encourage the regular exchange of information among donor Governments and funding agencies both to mobilize resources and to ensure the coordination of activities.

In accordance with Council resolution 1994/21 [YUN 1994, p. 1174], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [E/CN.15/1997/18] on the activities of the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, which included the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute, the affiliated regional institutes and the associate institutes and centres. The report also covered the activities of the International Scientific and Professional Advisory Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, acting on a draft proposed by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/35 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Technical cooperation and interregional advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/63 of 12 December 1996 on strengthening the United Nations

Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity,

Recalling also its resolution 1995/15 of 24 July 1995 and resolution 5/2 of 31 May 1996 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, on technical cooperation and interregional advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Stressing the direct relevance of crime prevention and criminal justice to sustained development, stability, improved quality of life, democracy and human rights, which is increasingly recognized by other United Nations entities, specialized agencies and international organizations,

Aware of the continued increase in requests for technical assistance forwarded to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat by least developed countries, developing countries, countries with economies in transition and countries emerging from conflict,

1. Commends the efforts of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat, in cooperation with the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network and others, in responding to the increasing requests for assistance, as reported by the Secretary-General, and expresses appreciation for the operationalization of the Programme, including the elaboration of a number of important project proposals that urgently require new funding;

2. Welcomes the work done by the informal consultative group on resource mobilization in accordance with resolution 5/3 of 31 May 1996 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

3. Commends the increased cooperation between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network and other entities of the United Nations, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, and calls upon those entities, together with the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies, to support technical cooperation activities devoted to crime prevention and criminal justice as a means of guaranteeing effective and sustainable development, utilizing the expertise of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

4. Welcomes the cooperation between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in particular in the area of action against money laundering, and calls upon the two programmes to continue to undertake joint activities, in particular the elaboration and execution of technical cooperation projects;

5. Expresses its concern at the lack of adequate resources, which may impede progress in the further operationalization of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and hamper the implementation of those projects that have been elaborated so far in response to urgent requests from countries in need;

6. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that contribute to the activities of the Programme by providing funding, the services of associate experts, consultants and experts for training purposes, advisory missions and the implementation of technical assistance projects, by developing training manuals and other material, by offering fellowship opportunities and by hosting action-oriented workshops and expert group meetings;

7. Calls upon potential donors and relevant funding agencies to make significant and regular financial and/or other contributions for the formulation, coordination and implementation of technical assistance projects elaborated within the framework of the Programme and to strengthen the mandated role of the Programme as facilitator of bilateral assistance;

8. Invites developing countries and countries with economies in transition to include in their requests for assistance from the United Nations Development Programme, in particular as part of its country programme framework, projects and/or elements on crime prevention and criminal justice, with a view to upgrading national institutional capacity and professional expertise in that field;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the plan for strategic management of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in accordance with Commission resolutions 1/1 of 29 April 1992 and 4/3 of 9 June 1995, to enhance further the resources required for the operational activities of the Programme, including travel funds for the mobilization of resources and special efforts for fund-raising;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his programme budget proposals for the biennium 1998-1999, under the section on technical cooperation, adequate funds for maintaining two posts of interregional advisers in crime prevention and criminal justice and for further strengthening the interregional advisory services to support technical assistance activities, including short-term advisory services, needs assessments, feasibility studies, field projects, training and fellowships.

UN African crime prevention institute

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/61 [YUN 1996, p. 1048], the Secretary General, in a September report [A/52/327] on the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI), described its 1996-1997 programme activities, funding and a consultative mission to the Institute by the Economic Commission for Africa. The report was the sixth since 1991, when the Institute became operational and began efforts to promote and coordinate regional activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice in Africa.

Programme activities during 1996-1997 focused on developing innovative approaches to raise the awareness of Governments regarding new strategies in crime prevention and criminal justice, training and human resources development, comparative research and policy development, information and documentation services, providing advisory services to Governments and technical cooperation, cooperation with other institutes, and participation in conferences and seminars.

UNAFRI was funded by assessed contributions from its 28 members, a grant from the United Nations and income generated by the rental of the Institute's premises. By 31 July, only two members had paid their assessed contributions for 1996-1997. The Secretary-General noted that despite the various appeals by different bodies and authorities, the outstanding balance of unpaid assessed contributions amounted to over 85 per cent of expected collections. He emphasized the role of UNAFRI in assisting African countries in strengthening their capacity in crime prevention and criminal justice since high crime rates and malfunctioning justice systems were detrimental to sustainable development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/89 without vote [agenda item 103].

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/61 of 12 December 1996 and all other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and further acknowledging the assistance rendered to the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

1. Commends the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for its efforts to promote and coordinate regional technical cooperation activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

2. Reiterates the need for strengthening the capacity of the Institute to support a national mechanism for crime prevention and criminal justice in African countries in view of the contribution that the Institute can make to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

3. Urges the States members of the Institute to make every possible effort to meet their obligations to the Institute;

4. Appeals to all Member States and non-governmental organizations to adopt concrete practical measures to support the Institute in the development of the requisite capacity and in the elaboration and implementation of programmes and activities aimed at strengthening crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to mobilize all relevant entities of the United Nations system to provide the necessary financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to enhance regional cooperation, coordination and collaboration in the fight against crime, especially in its transnational dimension, which could not be adequately dealt with by national action alone;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to make concrete proposals to strengthen the programmes and activities of the Institute and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational crime

In 1997, UN efforts to combat organized transnational crime continued to focus on implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted in 1994 by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Crime [YUN 1994, p. 1160]. In a February report [E/CN.15/1997/7], submitted pursuant to Council resolution 1996/27 [YUN 1996, p. 1025], the Secretary-General provided information received from Member States, the UN Secretariat, other entities of the UN system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on action they had taken to combat organized transnational crime. The Secretary-General proposed activities for consideration by the Commission to assist the international community in consolidating and strengthening action against organized transnational crime, including expanding the central repository. The Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division could provide assistance to Member States to collect and systematize information; carry out a comparative study on the situation of organized crime in selected countries; and develop model legislation and training manuals for law enforcement personnel.

International convention

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/120 [YUN 1996, p. 1027], the Secretary-General submitted an April report [E/CN.15/1997/7/Add.1] summarizing the views of Member States on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, as well as the substantive comments on the draft framework convention proposed by Poland in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1027], which was annexed to the report.

Also in April [E/CN.15/1997/7/Add.2], the Secretary-General submitted proposals on articles of the draft text made by participants at the informal meeting on the question of the elaboration of a convention against organized transnational crime (Palermo, Italy, 6-8 April).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], by resolution 1997/22, the Economic and Social Council, acting without vote on a draft resolution recommended by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], approved the draft for adoption by the General Assembly [agenda item 7 (c)].

Follow-up to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

"The General Assembly,

[Same text as General Assembly resolution 52/85 below, except for the second preambular paragraph, operative paragraph 17 and annexes I to VI.]

"Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/27 of 24 July 1996,

"17. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division with adequate resources for the preparation and servicing of the meeting of the intergovernmental group of experts;

"ANNEX I

"Recommendations of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight

"To combat transnational organized crime efficiently, the members of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight recommended the following:

"1. States should review their laws governing criminal offences, jurisdiction, law enforcement powers and international cooperation, as well as their measures dealing with law enforcement training and crime prevention, to ensure that the special problems created by transnational organized crime are effectively addressed.

"2. With the aim of improving mutual assistance, States should, as needed, develop mutual legal assistance arrangements or treaties and exercise flexibility in the execution of requests for mutual assistance.

"3. States should, where feasible, render mutual assistance, notwithstanding the absence of dual criminality.

"4. States developing mutual assistance treaties should ensure that the treaties:

"(a) Provide a clear description of the scope of the assistance available;

"(b) Encourage a speedy process for assistance;

"(c) Are as comprehensive as possible in terms of assistance available;

"(d) Reflect the principle that evidence will be gathered in the manner sought by the requesting State, unless the procedures are contrary to the fundamental principles of the law of the requested State.

"In order further to facilitate cooperation against transnational organized crime, States should consider negotiating arrangements in areas that are not covered by mutual legal assistance treaties.

"5. States should establish a central authority structured to provide speedy coordination of requests. The central authority should provide a quality-control and prioritizing function for both incoming and outgoing requests to take into account both the seriousness of the offence and the urgency of the request. At the same time, the central authority should not be seen as an exclusive channel for assistance between States. Direct exchange of information between law enforcement agencies should be encouraged to the extent permitted by domestic laws or arrangements.

"6. States should prepare and distribute to other States materials that would describe the channels of communication for mutual assistance and extradition and the process for obtaining such assistance from them.

"7. In cases where a criminal activity occurs in several countries, States with jurisdiction should coordinate their prosecutions and the use of mutual assistance measures in a strategic manner so as to be more efficient in the fight against transnational criminal groups.

"8. States should be encouraged to develop, through treaties, arrangements and legislation, a network for extradition. They should modernize their extradition treaties by eliminating the lists of crimes and allowing for extradition for conduct punishable in both States by deprivation of liberty in excess of an agreed minimum period. They should make every effort to ensure that their domestic arrangements for extradition are flexible enough to permit extradition to States with a different legal tradition. They should seek to identify and eliminate obstacles to extradition, including those that may arise from the differences between legal systems, for example, by simplifying evidentiary and procedural requirements.

"9. States should ensure that their domestic arrangements for extradition are as effective and expeditious as possible. They should also consider the possibility of extradition without a treaty.

"10. If the extradition of nationals is not permitted by the requested State, and the extradition of one of its nationals is requested, the requested State should:

"(a) Allow for conditional extradition provided that it is only for trial and that its national will be returned promptly after trial to its territory to serve any sentence within the limits of the law of the requested State; or

"(b) Allow for transfer/surrender, when it is permitted by domestic law, only for trial and on condition that its national will be returned promptly after trial to its territory to serve any sentence within the limits of the law of the requested State; or

"(c) Apply the rule of aut dedere aut judicare by submitting the case, at the request of the requesting State, to its competent authorities in order that proceedings may be initiated if they are considered appropriate.

"11. States should promote other techniques for mutual education that will facilitate mutual assistance and extradition, such as language training, secondments and exchanges between personnel in central authorities or between executing and requesting agencies. Training courses, joint seminars and information exchange sessions should be encouraged on a bilateral, regional and worldwide basis.

"12. Consideration should also be given to posting in other States representatives of prosecuting agencies or of judicial authorities.

"13. States should provide effective protection for individuals who have given or have agreed to give information or evidence, or who participate or have agreed to participate in an investigation or prosecution of an offence, and for the relatives and associates of those individuals who require protection because of risk to their security of person.

"14. States should consider, as appropriate, reciprocal arrangements for the protection of witnesses and other endangered persons.

"15. States should consider adopting appropriate measures to ensure the protection of witnesses during criminal proceedings. These might include such methods as testifying by telecommunications or limiting the disclosure of the address and identifying particulars of witnesses. Consideration should be given to the temporary transfer as witnesses of persons in custody, enlargement of the admissibility of written statements and the use of modern technology, such as video links, to overcome some of the current difficulties in obtaining the testimony of witnesses located outside the prosecuting State.

"16. States should review their laws in order to ensure that abuses of modern technology that are deserving of criminal sanctions are criminalized and that problems with respect to jurisdiction, enforcement powers, investigation, training, crime prevention and international cooperation in respect of such abuses are effectively addressed. Liaison between law enforcement and prosecution personnel of different States should be improved, including the sharing of experience in addressing these problems. States should promote study in this area and negotiate arrangements and agreements to address the problem of technological crime and investigation.

"17. States should take all other lawful steps available under domestic legislation to ensure that they do not provide safe havens for criminals.

"18. We commend the work done by the International Criminal Police Organization and the World Customs Organization, and call upon these organizations to maintain and develop their support for operational activity, facilitating as rapid as possible an exchange of information between law enforcement agencies. We also call upon them to focus on a strategic overview of the methods of, and trends in, transnational organized crime for the benefit of all their member countries.

"19. In order to facilitate the work of law enforcement practitioners we will, on request, provide brief guides on our respective legal systems and on the mandates of relevant agencies.

"20. States should identify central contact points within their existing structures for the purpose of facilitating contact between their operational agencies. It may be useful to locate these points in liaison with the National Central Bureau of the International Criminal Police Organization.

"21. We stress the important contribution that liaison officers can make to the fight against transnational organized crime. We encourage States to make the most effective use possible of their liaison officers in other countries and to consider additional postings. We stress the need for liaison officers to have access, in accordance with the law of the host country, to all agencies of that country with relevant responsibilities.

"22. We reiterate our condemnation of drug trafficking, which is a major source of finance for transnational organized criminal groups.

"Therefore we:

"(a) Reaffirm the importance of the three United Nations conventions that are fundamental to action against illicit drugs, namely, the Single Convention on

Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the Protocol of 1972, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

"(b) Call upon all states to adopt and implement fully legislation in accordance with those conventions;

"(c) Believe in the value of giving the widest publicity to information issued by official international bodies, such as the International Narcotics Control Board, on illicit drug production, trafficking and the proceeds of the illicit drug trade;

"(d) Will work in all relevant forums to prevent the diversion of chemical precursors used in illicit drug production and take the necessary steps to implement fully all relevant international agreements.

"(e) Welcome and support implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme Working Group on Maritime Cooperation.

"23. In order to ensure more effective transnational crime prevention and foster public safety, we will develop strategies to identify and combat the illicit traffic in firearms. In furtherance of this goal, and in support of the specific recommendations contained in resolution 9 of 7 May 1995 of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995, we will review and encourage other States to review existing firearms laws and regulations to facilitate discussion at an international level. We will promote information exchange among our relevant law enforcement authorities. We will encourage States to enhance the exchange of information useful for law enforcement purposes (for example, data for the identification of illicit firearms and specific information on tests conducted on firearms and ammunition which have been used in the course of criminal activities).

"24. States should ensure that immigration services play their part in the fight against transnational organized crime. We note the involvement of transnational organized crime in alien smuggling and call upon all States to enact legislation to criminalize such smuggling of persons. Immigration services and other agencies should exchange information on the transnational movement of organized criminals, have as full as possible an exchange of information on forged and stolen documents used by traffickers and consider the most effective means for its communication. We will take the necessary steps to improve the quality of our travel documents. We encourage other States to improve theirs and will assist them in doing so.

"25. We support the exchange of law enforcement expertise regarding scientific and technological developments such as advances in the forensic sciences.

"26. We emphasize the relevance and effectiveness of techniques such as electronic surveillance, undercover operations and controlled deliveries. We call upon States to review domestic arrangements for those techniques and to facilitate international cooperation in these fields, taking full account of human rights implications. We encourage States to exchange experiences concerning their use.

"27. We emphasize the importance of giving the fullest possible protection to sensitive information received from other countries. The competent authorities of different States should advise each other on the requirements regarding the disclosure of information in the course of judicial and administrative proceedings and should discuss in advance potential difficulties arising from those requirements. A transmitting State may make conditions for the protection of sensitive information before deciding whether to transmit it. A receiving State must abide by the conditions agreed with the transmitting State.

"28. Building on current cooperative arrangements, the different agencies in our countries will develop their work together in specific law enforcement projects targeted on transnational organized crime. We have formulated practical guidance on project-based action and commend this approach to all States. Project-based action involves bilateral and multilateral priority-setting, targeting, resourcing and assessment of law enforcement operations, drawing on the strength of the full range of competent agencies.

"29. We welcome the resolve of the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering to extend criminalization of money laundering to other serious offences.

"30. States should consider adopting legislative measures for the confiscation or seizure of illicit proceeds from drug trafficking and other serious offences, asset forfeiture, as required, and the availability of provisional arrangements such as the freezing or seizing of assets, always with due respect for the interests of bona fide third parties. States should also consider the introduction of arrangements for the equitable sharing of such forfeited assets.

"31. States should consider implementing measures to detect and monitor the physical transportation of cash and bearer-negotiable instruments at the border, subject to strict safeguards to ensure proper use of information and without impeding in any way the freedom of legitimate capital movements.

"32. States should adopt the necessary legislative and regulatory measures to combat corruption, establish standards of good governance and legitimate commercial and financial conduct and develop cooperation mechanisms to curb corrupt practices.

"33. We agree to share information on practical anti-money-laundering techniques and to draw on the experience gained to adapt and improve national and international training activities in this area, in conjunction with the action of the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering.

"34. In order to improve understanding and information on the detection of financial networks linked to transnational organized crime (in particular, investments by transnational organized crime), we encourage States to take measures to gather financial information and, as much as possible, facilitate the exchange of such information, including exchanges between law enforcement agencies and regulatory bodies.

"35. We urge States to adhere to and implement fully the existing relevant multilateral conventions whose provisions effectively contribute to the fight against all forms of transnational organized crime, in particular the conventions concerning the control of illicit drugs.

"36. We will keep under review the possibility of supplementing existing conventions and adopting new instruments in response to developing needs in the fight against transnational organized crime.

"37. We support and encourage the provision and reporting of clear and accessible information on adherence to and implementation of the main conventions.

"38. In order to avoid wasteful duplication and to ensure that limited resources are used to best effect, we urge international organizations to coordinate their programmes of work and to concentrate their efforts within their areas of competence on activities of practical value to member States.

"39. We will work together in the governing bodies of international organizations whenever possible in order to give more coherent impetus and coordination to the fight against transnational organized crime.

"40. We will seek to ensure that all international organizations that play an effective role in the fight against transnational organized crime have adequate resources to fulfil their mandate. We will also examine possibilities for providing appropriate financial resources for specific, practical and viable projects developed by the competent international organizations.

"ANNEX II

"Methodological points and categorization of data

"1. Methodological points:

"(a) Exploitation of methods to collect texts other than the issuance of notes verbales, especially taking into account potential burdens imposed on those States whose languages are not working languages of the United Nations or which do not have any texts translated into such languages;

"(b) Coordination with the work already done by other United Nations entities or relevant international organizations in order to avoid duplication;

"(c) Identification of access points to the depositories of the texts prepared by other United Nations entities and relevant international organizations.

"2. Categorization of data:

"(a) Substantial provisions:

"(i) Participation in a criminal organization (that is, conspiracy, criminal association);

"(ii) Confiscation and provisional measures;

"(iii) Money laundering;

"(iv) Sentencing;

"(b) Procedural provisions:

"(i) Search and seizure;

"(ii) Electronic surveillance;

"(iii) Undercover operations;

"(iv) Controlled delivery;

"(v) Immunity;

"(vi) Witness protection;

"(vii) Mutual assistance and extradition;

"(c) Other provisions:

"(i) Victim compensation;

"(ii) Bank secrecy;

"(iii) Reporting of suspicious transactions;

"(iv) Border control of proceeds of crime;

"(v) Immigration control;

"(vi) Control over criminal organizations.

"ANNEX III

"Draft United Nations Framework Convention against Organized Crime

"The States Parties to the present Convention,

"Concerned about the growing threat of organized crime, including the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, money laundering and the illicit traffic in arms, nuclear material and explosive devices, motor vehicles and objects of art,

"Concerned also with the increasing threat of organized crime to global security and criminal justice,

"Aware that organized crime, in its national and transnational dimensions, destabilizes international relations, including interregional, regional, sub-regional and bilateral cooperation, by exerting an influence on politics, the media, public administration, judicial authorities and the economy by establishing commercial or business-like structures,

"Convinced that a flexible and efficient framework for multilateral and bilateral cooperation is required to intensify law enforcement, criminal justice and crime prevention activities of Member States,

"Recalling General Assembly resolution 49/159 of 23 December 1994, in which it approved the Naples Political Declaration and the Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organizational Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994,

"Recalling also the recommendations of the Regional Ministerial Workshop on Follow-up to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, held at Buenos Aires from 27 to 30 November 1995,

"Bearing in mind the United Nations model legal arrangements, such as the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters, the Model Treaty on Extradition, the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released and the Model Treaty for the Prevention of Crimes that Infringe on the Cultural Heritage of Peoples in the Form of Movable Property,

"Mindful of other existing criminal justice and human rights instruments that provide legal protection to offenders and victims of crime,

"Affirming that the matters regulated by the present Convention continue to be governed by the rules and principles of general international law,

"Have agreed on the following:

"Article 1

"1. For the purpose of this Convention 'organized crime' means group activities of three or more persons, with hierarchical links or personal relationships, which permit the group leaders to earn profits or control territories or markets, internal or foreign, by means of violence, intimidation or corruption, both in furtherance of criminal activity and to infiltrate the legitimate economy, in particular through:

"(a) Illicit traffic in narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances and money laundering, as defined in the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

"(b) Traffic in persons, as defined in the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949;

"(c) Counterfeiting currency, as defined in the International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency of 1929;

"(d) Illicit traffic in or stealing of cultural objects, as defined in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property of 1970, and the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law Convention on Stolen or Illegally Exported Cultural Objects of 1995;

"(e) Stealing of nuclear material, its misuse or threats to misuse to harm the public, as defined in the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material of 1980;

"(f) Terrorist acts;

"(g) Illicit traffic in or stealing of arms and explosive materials or devices;

"(h) Illicit traffic in or stealing of motor vehicles;

"(i) Corruption of public officials.

"2. For the purpose of the present Convention, 'organized crime' includes the commission of an act by a member of a group as part of the criminal activity of such an organization.

"Article 2

"1. Each Contracting State shall make the offences enumerated in article 1 of the present Convention punishable by appropriate penalties that take into account their grave nature.

"2. Each Contracting State shall make punishable acts consisting of participation in or association with an organized crime group whose purpose it is to commit offences.

"3. Each Contracting State shall take necessary measures to create the possibility of the confiscation of the profits deriving from organized crime.

"Article 3

"Each Contracting State shall consider establishing in its domestic penal legislation the possibility of criminal liability of corporate persons who derive profits from organized crime or function as a cover for the criminal organization.

"Article 4

"Each Contracting State shall take legislative measures to recognize, in its domestic law, the previous foreign conviction for offences referred to in article 1 of the present Convention for the purpose of establishing the criminal history of the alleged offender.

"Article 5

"1. Each Contracting State shall take legislative measures to establish its jurisdiction over the crimes mentioned in article 1 of the present Convention in the following cases:

"(a) When the crime is committed in the territory of that State or on board a vessel or aircraft registered in that State;

"(b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State. Such jurisdiction shall be independent of the punishability of the act in the place of its commission;

"(c) When the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him. Such jurisdiction shall be independent of the punishability of the act in the place of its commission.

"2. The present Convention does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with the domestic law.

"Article 6

"1. The offences mentioned in article 1 of the present Convention shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty between the Contracting States. The Contracting States undertake to include the offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.

"2. If a Contracting State that makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another Contracting State with which it has no extradition treaty, it shall consider the present Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences mentioned in article 1 of the present Convention. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided for by the law of the requested State.

"3. The Contracting States which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences mentioned in article 1 of the present Convention as extraditable offences between them, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

"4. The Contracting States, subject to their domestic legislation, shall consider simplifying the extradition of consenting persons who waive formal extradition proceedings by allowing direct transmission of extradition requests between appropriate ministries and extraditing persons based only on warrants of arrest or judgements.

"Article 7

"1. Each Contracting State shall consider necessary legislative measures, including extradition of its nationals, if the extradition is requested in respect of any offence defined in article 1 of the present Convention.

"2. Extradition of a national may be granted on the condition that the sentence pronounced abroad will be executed in the requesting State.

"Article 8

"1. The offences mentioned in article 1 of the present Convention shall not be considered political offences for the purpose of extradition.

"2. Extradition shall not be granted if the requested Party has substantial grounds for believing that a request for extradition has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of his or her race, religion, nationality or political opinion or that a person's position may be prejudiced for any of these reasons.

"Article 9

"Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, the Contracting State in whose territory the alleged offender is present shall take a person whose extradition is sought into custody, or take other appropriate measures under its domestic law, so as to ensure his or her presence for the purpose of extradition.

"Article 10

"1. The Contracting States shall afford one another the widest measure of mutual legal assistance, within the conditions prescribed by domestic legal assistance in investigations, prosecutions and judicial proceedings in relation to the offences mentioned in article 1 of the present Convention, and shall exercise flexibility in the execution of requests for such mutual assistance.

"2. Subject to domestic legislation, legal assistance shall also include the delivery of information constituting bank secrecy.

"Article 11

"1. The Contracting States shall consider entering into bilateral and multilateral agreements, including direct cooperation between their police agencies and joint operations in the territory of each Contracting State.

"2. The Contracting States shall strengthen cooperation in law enforcement training and crime prevention to facilitate mutual assistance and extradition through, inter alia, language training, secondments and exchanges.

"3. In the case of existing bilateral and multilateral agreements, the Contracting States shall strengthen efforts to maximize operational and training activities within the International Criminal Police Organization and within other relevant bilateral and multilateral agreements or arrangements.

"Article 12

"1. The Contracting States shall consider entering into bilateral and multilateral agreements on cooperation between criminal justice authorities on the exchange of information concerning all aspects of the criminal activity of persons involved in organized crime as defined in article 1 of the present Convention, including information from their registers of convicted persons.

"2. The Contracting States shall facilitate such exchange of information on the basis of their domestic legislation.

"3. The Contracting States shall consider the establishment of a common data bank on organized criminality, including information on the activities of criminal groups and their members and information on convicted persons.

"4. The collection of information mentioned above shall be carried out with due regard for the need for legal protection of personal files, in accordance with domestic and international provisions.

"Article 13

"The Contracting States shall cooperate in the establishment and implementation of their respective witness protection programmes, including the protection of witness families, in particular by creating the possibility of the settlement of a foreign protected witness in their territories.

"Article 14

"A Contracting State may adopt stricter or more severe measures than those provided for by the present Convention if, in its opinion, such measures are desirable or necessary for the prevention or suppression of organized crime.

"Article 15

"1. For the purpose of examining the progress made by the Contracting States in achieving the realization of the obligations undertaken in the present Convention, these States shall provide periodic reports to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.

"2. The Contracting States undertake to provide such reports within two years of the entry into force of the present Convention for the Contracting State concerned, and thereafter, every five years.

"3. Reports made under the present article shall indicate factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the degree of fulfilment of the obligations under the present Convention. Reports shall also contain sufficient information to provide the Commission with a comprehensive understanding of the implementation of the present Convention in the country concerned.

"4. A Contracting State that has submitted a comprehensive initial report to the Commission need not, in its subsequent reports submitted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article, repeat basic information previously provided.

"5. The Commission may request from the Contracting States further information relevant to the implementation of the present Convention.

"6. The Commission shall make its recommendations and submit to the Economic and Social Council reports on its activities, in accordance with existing provisions.

"7. The Contracting States shall make their reports widely available to the public in their own countries.

"Article 16

"In order to foster the effective implementation of the present Convention and to encourage international cooperation in the field covered by the Convention:

"(a) Intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, and other invited multilateral organizations, shall be entitled to be represented at the consideration of the implementation of such provisions of the present Convention as fall within the scope of their mandate. The Commission may invite the specialized agencies and other United Nations organs to submit reports on the implementation of the present Convention in areas falling within the scope of their activities;

"(b) The Commission shall transmit, as it may consider appropriate, to the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to other multilateral organizations and to the specialized agencies, any reports from the Contracting States that contain a request, or indicate a need, for technical advice or assistance, along with the observations and suggestions of the Commission, if any, on these requests or indications;

"(c) The Commission may recommend to the Economic and Social Council that it request the Secretary-General to undertake on its behalf studies on specific issues relating to the control and prevention of organized crime;

"(d) The Commission may make suggestions and general recommendations based on information received pursuant to article 14 of the present Convention. Such suggestions and general recommendations shall be transmitted to any Contracting Party concerned and reported to the Economic and Social Council, together with comments, if any, from the Contracting States.

"Article 17

"The present Convention shall be open to all States for signature from ___ to ___, and thereafter at the Headquarters of the United Nations in New York until

"Article 18

"The present Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

"Article 19

"1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

"2. For each Contracting State ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the present Convention after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of such action, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the deposit by such State of that relevant instrument.

"Article 20

"1. A Contracting State may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the Contracting States with a request that they indicate whether they favour a conference of Contracting States for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that, within four months from the date of such communication, at least one third of the States favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of Contracting States present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly for approval.

"2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall enter into force when it has been approved by the General Assembly and accepted by a two-thirds majority of Contracting States.

"3. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted it, other Contracting States still being bound by the provisions of the present Convention and any earlier amendments they have accepted.

"Article 21

"1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall receive and circulate to all States the text of reservations made by Contracting States at the time of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

"2. A reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the present Convention shall not be permitted.

"3. Reservations may be withdrawn at any time by notification to that effect addressed to the Secretary-General, who shall then inform all States. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received by the Secretary-General.

"Article 22

"A Contracting State may denounce the present Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

"Article 23

"The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated as the depository of the present Convention.

"Article 24

"The original of the present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention.

"ANNEX IV

"Report of the Chairman of the Open-ended Working Group of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the Implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and the Question of the Elaboration of an International Convention against Organized Transnational Crime

"1. The Open-ended Working Group of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the Implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and the Question of the Elaboration of an International Convention against Organized Transnational Crime was established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/27 of 24 July 1996 and its mandate was set out in paragraph 10 of that resolution. The General Assembly, in its resolution 51/120 of 12 December 1996, requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider as a matter of priority the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, taking into account the views of all States on that matter, with a view to finalizing its work on this question as soon as possible. The Commission was also requested to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the results of its work on that question. The Working Group was therefore given the task of assisting the Commission in implementing the above-mentioned requests of the General Assembly.

"2. The Working Group had before it the following documents:

"(a) Report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime;

"(b) Report of the Secretary-General on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime;

"(c) Report of the informal meeting on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, held at Palermo, Italy, from 6 to 8 April 1997;

"(d) Report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition, held at Siracusa, Italy, from 10 to 13 December 1996.

"3. The Working Group was also provided with the following documents:

"(a) Views of the Government of the United States of America on the most effective means for discussion by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session of the issue of elaboration of conventions (annex V);

"(b) Views of the Government of Germany on an alternative solution for a draft United Nations framework convention on combating organized transnational crime (annex VI);

"(c) The forty recommendations elaborated and endorsed by the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight, which met at Lyon, France, from 27 to 29 June 1996 (annex I);

"(d) Non-paper containing a tentative idea of the Japanese delegation in relation to the elaboration of a convention on measures against organized crime.

"4. The Working Group first discussed the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime. The Working Group was of the view that its contribution would be most useful to the Commission if it considered the scope and content of such a convention, rather than engaging in a drafting exercise, which would be outside the mandate given by the Council and the Assembly and would require significantly more time than was available. The Working Group felt that organized crime presented grave global dangers to development and security and that the challenges it posed were becoming greater with time. In determining the scope and content of such a convention, the international community could draw on the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, but should be able to come up with new and more innovative and creative responses.

"5. The Working Group recognized that it was desirable to develop a convention that would be as comprehensive as possible. In this connection, several States indicated that their remaining reservations on the effectiveness and usefulness of a convention were contingent upon its scope of application and the measures for concerted action that such an instrument would include. Several States stressed the importance they attached to the nature of a convention as a framework instrument. One difficult issue would be arriving at an acceptable definition of organized crime. It was indicated, however, that that issue was not insuperable, especially in the presence of a strong and sustained political will. Several States were of the view that the definition was not necessarily the most crucial element of a convention and that the instrument could come into being without a definition of organized crime. In this connection, it was also suggested that the phenomenon of organized crime was evolving with such rapidity that a definition would limit the scope of application of a convention by omitting activities in which criminal groups might engage. Other States felt that the absence of a definition would send the wrong signal regarding the political will and commitment of the international community. In addition, avoiding the issue would eventually create problems regarding the implementation of a convention. In view of all this, concerted efforts to arrive at a solution should be made. There were several very important advances made at the regional level, where the matter of some of the constituent elements of a workable definition had been satisfactorily resolved. One example was the solution found for defining participation in organized criminal groups, used in the European Convention on Extradition. The problem of definition could be solved by looking at each of its elements separately. It was suggested that a first step towards a definition might be to use the definitions of offences contained in other international instruments. It was agreed that the work required in connection with the definition could not be carried out by the Working Group but should be undertaken by governmental experts at a future time. There was also discussion about whether, in elaborating the definition, the focus should be on the transnational aspects of organized crime or on organized crime in general. It was pointed out that the mandate of the Commission was related to organized transnational crime but that the issue required further serious consideration in the context of determining the overall scope of a convention.

"6. In the context of the discussion on whether such a convention should include a list of offences, some States expressed their support for the inclusion of terrorist acts in such a list. Many States were of a contrary view, recalling the initiatives currently under way in the United Nations and other forums on terrorism and the conclusions of the Commission at its fifth session.

"7. The Working Group agreed that it would be useful to focus on widely accepted constituent elements of organized crime. In the discussion that ensued, the elements identified included some form of organization, continuity, the use of intimidation and violence, a hierarchical structure of groups, with division of labour, the pursuit of profit and the exercise of influence on the public, the media and political structures.

"8. The Working Group decided that the best way to proceed for the purpose of advancing the issue was to seek common ground, utilizing as many previous contributions as possible and building on the positive experience and valuable work done at other forums, such as the European Union and the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight. The draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime (annex III) was a useful point of departure and a good basis for further work. In this connection, the Working Group decided to discuss matters related to international cooperation in criminal matters that would form an essential part of an international legally binding instrument. The overriding concern would be to equip the international community with an effective instrument to strengthen action against organized crime.

"9. The Working Group agreed that extradition was crucial to international cooperation against organized crime and, as such, it would form a central component of such a convention. A number of States indicated that the extradition of nationals presented several legal and constitutional problems. While some States were in the process of studying the matter in depth, with a view to finding more efficient solutions and improving international cooperation, it would be difficult for them to comply with a provision envisaging extradition of nationals. It was consequently deemed important to incorporate in a convention a more detailed provision regarding the application of the principle aut dedere aut judicare. Since there were a number of countries where extradition of nationals was possible and it was also believed that a trend in that direction might develop in the future, it was agreed that the provision of article 7 of the draft United Nations framework convention was a good basis for discussion and should be retained. It was also agreed that the option of extraditing nationals should be left open, while specifying that extradition would be governed by national constitutional and legal provisions. It was suggested that, in finding an acceptable solution to this matter, the formula regarding extradition contained in the draft convention on terrorist bombings could be relied upon. Inspiration could also be drawn from the statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. In addition, reference was made to article 6 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, which could be used as a model to arrive at a more comprehensive extradition regime.

"10. On the question of corporate criminal liability (contained in article 3 of the draft United Nations framework convention), several States indicated that the concept was still not reflected in their legislation. In those States, criminal liability was personal and corporate entities could be held accountable only under civil and administrative law. Even where the concept of corporate criminal liability had begun to be introduced, such liability was attached to the person of the executive responsible for the management of the corporate entity. It was explained that the problem was one of legal tradition and philosophy, while it was recognized that corporate criminal liability was a powerful deterrent, in particular in view of the tendency of criminal groups to operate using corporate entities, either infiltrated or set up for the purpose of masking the nature of their illicit activities. The issue of corporate criminal liability was considered important but it required further clarification and elaboration in order to take into account the varying legal traditions of countries.

"11. Regarding the recognition of foreign convictions (contained in article 4 of the draft United Nations framework convention), it was indicated that there were a number of issues that required clarification and further work. It was clarified that the term 'conviction' was used in the sense of a finding of guilt and that the article tried to capture the essence of and build upon the concept reflected in paragraph 5 (h) of article 3 of the 1988 Convention. While the issue of prior criminal history was deemed important, because of its potential usefulness to the expeditious judicial processing of organized crime cases, it was necessary to discuss in detail the modalities for the exchange of the relevant information and the weight to be given to previous convictions within the framework of each jurisdiction. It was also indicated that the matter was directly related to the scope of application of such a convention, in particular regarding substantive law. It was important to formulate a provision on this issue that would ensure avoidance of problems related to double jeopardy or to offences existing in one jurisdiction but not in another.

"12. On police cooperation (article 11 of the draft United Nations framework convention), the issue of joint police operations merited further discussion, as it created a number of concerns for several countries. The desirability of closer cooperation between law enforcement agencies had been expressed in the Naples

Political Declaration and Global Action Plan, but it was deemed important to stress that such cooperation would be pursued in accordance with national legislation. Similar provisions were included in the 1988 Convention and could be useful to the discussion of this question. With regard to paragraphs 2 and 3 of article 11, it was pointed out that the concept they contained was valid, but further work would be necessary in specifying modalities for application, especially in the context of a legally binding instrument such as a convention.

"13. Regarding article 12 of the draft United Nations framework convention, it was agreed that the idea was very important in view of the essential role reliable information played in action against organized crime. The provision, however, required considerably more work because the issue of databases involved a number of important matters, such as accessibility, protection of data and safeguards related to the protection of privacy, in addition to costs for the creation and maintenance of such databases. All these issues needed to be resolved in a manner acceptable to all, while retaining the usefulness of a database.

"14. There was general acceptance of the importance of witness protection (reflected in article 13 of the draft United Nations framework convention). Some States took the opportunity to indicate their intention to establish witness protection programmes, while others advised caution in approaching the matter, because of the risks associated with this mechanism, which related to the social conditions prevailing in countries and the possibility of diminished credibility of certain witnesses.

"15. The Working Group then discussed the issue of mutual legal assistance (article 10 of the draft United Nations framework convention), which was deemed one of the most important cooperation mechanisms to feature in a convention against organized crime. Article 10 was similar to the provisions of other United Nations instruments, but in view of the more comprehensive nature of the proposed convention, the provisions on mutual assistance should be more detailed and more innovative. The 1988 Convention could be used as a source of inspiration in order to arrive at the level of detail that was necessary. In this connection, reference was also made to the report of the informal meeting held at Palermo, which had discussed this issue extensively and included material for further consideration.

"16. The Working Group agreed that considerable work was required on the issue of the convention. For this purpose, it proposed that an open-ended intergovernmental inter-sessional group of experts should be established to consider all pending proposals related to the issue of conventions, as well as all elements thereof and appropriate cooperation modalities and mechanisms.

"17. The Working Group discussed and endorsed the proposals of the Secretary-General on the follow-up action for the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime. The Working Group expressed its support for the maintenance and expansion of the central repository on national legislation and other information and data related to organized transnational crime. It was suggested that the Secretariat should make efforts to identify methods for collecting information and legislative texts rather than merely addressing requests to States in the form of notes verbales. Concern was expressed regarding the resources necessary to undertake the activities required for follow-up action. In this connection, the importance attached to practical action to foster the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan was reiterated.

"ANNEX V

"Views of the Government of United States of America on the most effective means for discussion by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session of the issue of the elaboration of conventions

"1. The Government of the United States of America considers it very important that discussion of all proposals for the elaboration of multilateral conventions to combat criminal conduct, in particular the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized crime, take place in the Open-ended Working Group of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the Implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and the Question of the Elaboration of an International Convention against Organized Transnational Crime. Such a discussion will be useful as a means for stimulating thought on the extent to which the various proposals can and should be incorporated into a single instrument. In addition, it will enable delegations to focus on the priority to be set concerning the criminal conduct governed by these different proposals.

"2. In addition to the proposal presented by the Government of Poland for a United Nations framework convention against organized crime (annex III), the following five proposals for multilateral conventions are either the subject of draft resolutions to be considered by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session or have been broached in informal discussions among Member States: the proposal presented by the Government of Argentina for a convention to combat trafficking in children, the recommendation of the Buenos Aires expert group on combating corruption, a possible multilateral convention on firearms, a possible convention on trafficking in illegal migrants and a possible convention on theft of motor vehicles. However, the framework convention on organized crime proposed by Poland is intended to cover all of the other proposals, in whole or in part, by including, under article 1, trafficking in persons, corruption of public officials, illicit trafficking in or stealing of arms and illicit trafficking in or stealing of motor vehicles. Thus, these or any other potential single-issue conventions may be to some degree duplicative of the proposal made by Poland and, if consensus is reached on inclusion of such types of criminality in a framework convention on organized crime, it may subsequently be unnecessary to negotiate further instruments.

"3. Moreover, as is more fully set forth in the appendix to the present annex, certain types of cooperation mechanisms cannot be dispensed with in combating organizations that engage in multiple forms of criminality; such mechanisms include law enforcement information exchange, training and technical assistance, mutual assistance, asset seizure and forfeiture, witness protection, extradition and harmonization of substantive criminal laws. The international community may decide that a single instrument would best ensure that all of these areas are addressed with sufficient consistency, that limited resources for negotiating conventions and fighting organized crime are used most efficiently and that the fight against organized crime is carried out in a comprehensive and logical fashion. If so, it would be inadvisable to continue to discuss the elaboration of other instruments separately.

"4. Finally, discussion of the merits of all potential instruments in the Working Group will be useful for the purpose of comparing the gravity of the various forms of criminality and determining which aspects constitute the most significant transnational criminal problems. The discussion of the level of prioritization that should be given to each form of criminality may assist the Commission in determining the extent to which other multilateral conventions should be pursued separately from a framework convention on organized crime, or whether they should be pursued at all.

"APPENDIX

"Implementation of recommendations 35 and 36 of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight

"Recommendations for combating transnational organized crime: the supplementation of existing multilateral conventions or adoption of new conventions to assist in the fight against transnational organized crime

"Introduction

"1. Recommendation 35 of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight calls for States to adhere to and implement relevant existing multilateral conventions whose provisions contribute to the fight against all forms of transnational organized crime, while recommendation 36 contemplates a review of the feasibility of updating existing conventions and adopting new instruments in order to enhance the ability of States to fight transnational organized crime.

"2. Among the existing conventions that the Senior Experts Group has catalogued for the purpose of considering whether updating is feasible are: the Slavery Convention of 1926 as amended by the 1953 Protocol, the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956, the International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency of 1929, the Forced Labour Convention adopted in 1930 by the General Conference of the International Labour Organization, the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949, the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property of 1970 and the International Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance for the Prevention, Investigation and Repression of Customs Offences of 1977.

"3. In addition, the Government of Poland introduced, at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, a draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime. The proposal raises issues regarding the feasibility of adopting a single convention to combat transnational organized crime, in contrast with the updating of existing instruments or the adoption of a number of new instruments, each dealing with a separate type of criminal conduct.

"4. Various options available for using multilateral instruments to fight transnational organized crime are briefly analysed below. Section I discusses the above-mentioned existing conventions, outlining some of the modifications that would be required to update them effectively to address contemporary phenomena of transnational organized crime. Section II examines additional multilateral instruments that could be adopted in order to combat transnational organized crime. Finally, section III contains a discussion of the potential benefits and drawbacks arising from the elaboration of a single consolidated framework convention on organized crime.

"I. Updating existing instruments

"A. Slavery Convention of 1926 as amended by the 1953 Protocol and the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956

"5. The Slavery Convention of 1926 as amended by the 1953 Protocol defines slavery and slave trading, obligating States parties to take various actions, including criminalization, to suppress those practices. The Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery of 1956 defines a number of practices akin to slavery (including debt bondage, serfdom, marriage practices exploitative of women's labour and exploitation of children's labour by their parents or guardians); it also obligates States parties to abolish those practices, criminalize certain specified conduct integral to the perpetuation of slavery and the slave trade and cooperate with each other in carrying out the purposes of the Convention. The conventions have been widely ratified.

"6. Neither the Slavery Convention nor the Supplementary Convention as currently drafted deals specifically with transnational organized crime, nor can they readily be interpreted as imposing an obligation upon States parties to criminalize such related manifestations of modern organized crime as the exploitation of illegal immigrants by organized criminal groups that have smuggled them across international boundaries, the use by criminal groups of compulsion as part of their perpetuation of the international prostitution trade or the compelling of minors to participate in international pornography rings. However, amendment of these instruments may be of assistance in combating these forms of trafficking in persons.

"7. Effective broadening of these conventions will require States to reach agreement both on the need to criminalize a number of additional classes of conduct and on general definitions of those offences. In addition, since both the Slavery Convention and the Supplementary Convention lack specific cooperation mechanisms between national law enforcement authorities to suppress such conduct, supplementation would require the drafting of a number of such mechanisms.

"8. On balance, effective modernization would appear to require negotiation of a significant number of new provisions. Negotiating a supplemental instrument could also be complicated if some States regarded the occasion as an opportunity to reopen the debate on issues resolved at the time the conventions were originally concluded. Given these factors, the Senior Experts Group should weigh whether supplementation would be preferable to the elaboration of a new instrument or instruments to combat these forms of criminal conduct.

"B. Forced Labour Convention of 1930

"9. The Forced Labour Convention of 1930 limits the conditions under which 'forced or compulsory labour' can be required and obligates States parties to suppress and criminalize those forms of compelled labour not sanctioned by the Convention.

"10. Although the exploitation of compelled labour by criminal groups described in section I.A above may be violative of the terms of the Forced Labour Convention in its present form, few States parties have established these forms of exploitation as discrete offences or have provided for enhanced penalties to deter sophisticated criminal groups from committing such offences. Thus, to be an effective means of suppressing the exploitation of persons controlled by organized criminal groups, the Convention would have to be amended accordingly.

"11. As in the case of the slavery conventions, given the need to define and punish additional classes of criminal conduct and to include provisions related to law enforcement cooperation, adoption of a supplemental or amended instrument may require as extensive an effort as the elaboration of a separate new instrument or instruments.

"C. Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949

"12. The Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others of 1949 obligates States parties to criminalize the procuring of persons to engage in prostitution and other conduct integral to the propagation of prostitution. It contains more extensive provisions for law enforcement cooperation than the Slavery Convention or the Forced Labour Convention, including provisions requiring: (a) covered offences to be considered extraditable between States parties; (b) prosecution of offenders by a State party that declines to extradite on the basis of the nationality of the offender; (c) cooperation by States parties (subject to domestic law) in the execution of letters of request regarding covered offences; (d) establishment of central authorities to coordinate implementation of the Convention and cooperate with other States; and (e) sharing of information regarding offences and offenders between States parties.

"13. Effective updating of this Convention could prove difficult, given that a significant number of States have not ratified it. In any case, substantial modification seems required to ensure the broad criminalization of such phenomena as the exploitation of minors in conjunction with the production of pornographic materials or sex tourism and to ensure that States parties are obligated to impose suitably enhanced punishment on participants in organized criminal schemes to engage in such conduct. Moreover, although this instrument focuses on cooperation mechanisms to a greater extent than either the Slavery Convention or the Forced Labour Convention, many additional forms of cooperation recommended by the Senior Experts Group as useful in fighting transnational organized crime are not currently included and a number of them could presumably be inserted.

"D. International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency of 1929

"14. The International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency of 1929 obligates States parties to criminalize counterfeiting or alteration of domestic or foreign currency, as well as the distribution of counterfeit or altered currency. It also provides for: (a) confiscation of such currency; (b) covered offences to be considered extraditable between States parties; (c) prosecution of offenders by States parties that decline to extradite on the basis of the nationality of the offender; (d) cooperation between States parties (subject to domestic law) in the execution of letters of request regarding covered offences; (e) establishment of central authorities to coordinate implementation of the Convention and cooperate with States; and (f) sharing of information between States parties regarding offenders and evidence of offences.

"15. The application of this instrument is limited in scope to counterfeit or altered currency. Significant supplementation or the adoption of new instruments would be required to address such issues of concern as counterfeiting or alteration of credit cards, electronic transfers and other negotiable instruments and the need to provide for enhanced cooperation mechanisms in combating such criminal conduct.

"E. Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property of 1970

"16. The Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property of 1970 obligates States parties to suppress illicit traffic in archaeological, historical, artistic and other property designated by States as being of particular cultural value, without explicitly requiring criminalization of proscribed conduct. The Convention also provides for, inter alia, the confiscation and return of cultural property to States parties from which it was removed and the designation of authorities for implementation of the Convention.

"17. Effectively updating this Convention could prove difficult in practice, for a significant number of States have not ratified it. In addition, given that it contains no explicit criminalization or law enforcement cooperation requirements, modernization seems to entail as much effort as would the creation of new instruments governing other related areas.

"F. International Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance for the Prevention, Investigation and Repression of Customs Offences of 1977

"18. The International Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance for the Prevention, Investigation and Repression of Customs Offences of 1977 provides a broad framework for joint investigation, exchanges of information and other mutual assistance between States parties in connection with violations of customs laws, including smuggling of narcotics, cultural property and other contraband. It does not obligate States to criminalize particular forms of conduct.

"19. The Convention has been ratified by three members of the Political Group of Eight and thirty-one other States. Although additional States have expressed an interest in ratifying the Convention since it was amended in 1995 to permit contracting parties to make reservations, permitting reservations may hamper any effort to achieve broad implementation. Nonetheless, many of the forms of cooperation set forth in the Convention are useful mechanisms for international law enforcement and can serve as examples of cooperation mechanisms that might be drafted for insertion in other instruments governing transnational smuggling.

"II. Adoption of instruments addressing other forms of criminal conduct

"20. In addition to supplementing and modernizing existing conventions, Senior Experts Group recommendation 36 calls for consideration of the adoption of new instruments to respond to developing needs in the fight against transnational organized crime. In a number of other recommendations, the Senior Experts Group has already identified additional forms of criminal conduct for which there is a need for a concerted international law enforcement response to the infiltration of organized crime. Similar expressions of concern have been made in other international forums and by various States in their individual efforts to combat transnational organized crime. Some of the areas in which the need for action may be particularly acute and regarding which the Senior Experts Group may wish to evaluate the utility of adopting a new instrument or instruments are as follows:

"(a) Extortion and other violent crimes carried out by organized groups for profit;

"(b) Bribery and other corrupt practices;

"(c) Smuggling of and trafficking in nuclear materials for weapons of mass destruction;

"(d) Intellectual property violations;

"(e) Money laundering;

"(f) Crimes involving computers and other advanced technologies;

"(g) Illicit trafficking in firearms;

"(h) Auto theft.

"21. Such an evaluation will require weighing such factors as the likelihood of elaborating an instrument that will enjoy widespread acceptance within the international community, the likely degree of effectiveness the instrument will have in aiding the suppression of the targeted conduct and the commitment of time and resources that will be required to elaborate a series of instruments governing these types of criminal conduct.

"III. Adoption of a single instrument on transnational organized crime

"22. Consideration could also be given to the alternative approach of adopting a single integrated instrument on various forms of criminal conduct engaged in by transnational groups. As previously stated, the Government of Poland introduced such a draft convention at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly.

"23. The major advantage of a single instrument creating obligations to criminalize and cooperate in combating a number of categories of conduct is the advantage it offers in terms of preserving time and resources over the negotiation of a series of new or supplemental instruments, each addressing a limited class of criminal conduct. Since each separate convention would be likely to contain a number of similar (if not identical) provisions, for example, with regard to extradition of fugitives, legal assistance and other cooperation mechanisms, the negotiation of a single instrument could be expected to save considerable time and avoid needless renegotiation of such common provisions. In addition, the promulgation of a single instrument seems useful in order to arrive at an integrated response to particularly serious forms of transnational organized crime, since specialists in a number of law enforcement disciplines would collaborate in devising an effective unified strategy for cooperation in combating these phenomena and since a single secretariat administering the convention would be more easily able to identify and correct practical problems arising in the implementation of the strategy.

"24. The structure of the convention itself could take several possible forms. One approach could be for it to address a specific list of offences of the type set forth in section II above. Another approach might be to draft a convention that, like the proposal by the Government of Poland, seeks to define the term 'organized crime', and to include specific types of conduct under its rubric.

"25. The former approach, by virtue of being less complex, may enjoy some advantages over the latter. Initially, it may be difficult to arrive at a definition of 'organized crime' that enjoys widespread acceptance. As illustrated in the inventory of documents prepared by the Senior Experts Group, numerous different definitions of the term 'organized crime' have been devised. Given the great diversity among modern criminal groups, reaching a single meaningful definition will probably prove elusive and may interfere with the successful conclusion of the convention. Moreover, great care would have to be taken to ensure that the definition of 'organized crime' did not inadvertently legitimize actions by undemocratic Governments to suppress legitimate political opposition.

"26. In addition, a number of States may wish the definition of 'organized crime' to encompass terrorism, leading to problematic results. For example, the inclusion of terrorism may lead to an effort to define it more precisely, a task that will be extremely difficult, given the traditional divide between those States that consider acts of violence carried out by 'national liberation movements' to be permissible and those that wish to proscribe such conduct. The effort to define terrorism will thus divert attention from other issues and ultimately will not be conducive to achieving consensus. The inclusion of terrorism may also result in the duplication of provisions contained in the significant number of existing instruments aimed at combating terrorism.

"27. Even if no effort is made to define these terms, there may be some difficulty in reaching agreement on the list of conduct to be proscribed under the convention. The convention may be seen by some States as an opportunity to seek the inclusion of modes of criminality with respect to which there can be at best a marginal claim that they constitute a significant transnational criminal problem. For example, a small number of States have called for conventions to combat illicit international adoption, trafficking in body parts or racial hatred. However, any effort to broaden the convention too greatly would divert focus from types of criminality that need to be addressed most urgently and could also make it more difficult to identify appropriate cooperation mechanisms for combating the conduct proscribed by the convention.

"28. The Government of the United States has prepared a discussion draft of a convention for the suppression of transnational organized crime, illustrating how a convention adhering to the recommendations of the Senior Experts Group could be structured. It is hoped that consideration of that document, together with the proposal by Poland, may be useful to the discussion of this issue.

"29. It is conceivable that there are other approaches that might be viable in this area, including the elaboration of a single instrument addressing a much more limited list of criminal activities than that described either in the discussion draft of the United States, presented below, or in the proposal by Poland, on which there is clear consensus that immediate criminalization and enhanced cooperation are required.

"Draft Convention for the Suppression of Transnational Organized Crime

"The States Parties to the present Convention,

"Deeply concerned about the threat posed by the rapid development of transnational organized crime,

"Convinced that the rapid growth and geographical extension of transnational organized crime is a major concern of all countries and that it calls for a concerted response from the international community,

"Desiring to conclude an effective international convention directed specifically against serious transnational organized crime,

"Have agreed as follows:

"Article 1

"Offences and sanctions

"1. Each State Party shall make punishable, by appropriate penalties that take into account their grave nature, the following conduct:

"[Insert definition of transnational organized crime or offences covered by the present Convention]

"2. The provisions of the present article shall not affect the obligations regarding the criminalization of offences pursuant to any other multilateral treaty.

"Establishment of jurisdiction

"1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention when the offence is committed in the territory of that State.

"2. A State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

"(a) The alleged offender is a national of that State;

"(b) The offence was committed against a national of that State; or

"(c) The offence has substantial effects in that State.

"3. Each State Party shall also take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over these offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite or transfer that person for trial pursuant to article 5, paragraph 6, of the present Convention to any of the States Parties that have established their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article.

"4. The present Convention does not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its domestic law.

"5. The provisions of the present article shall not affect the obligations with regard to the establishment of jurisdiction over offences pursuant to any other multilateral treaty.

"Extradite or prosecute

"1. The State Party in the territory of which the offender or the alleged offender is found, if it does not extradite that person or transfer that person for trial pursuant to article 5, paragraph 6 of the present Convention shall be obliged, upon request of the State Party seeking extradition or transfer, in cases where article 2 above applies without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case without delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.

"2. Any person regarding whom proceedings are being carried out in connection with any of the offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings, including enjoyment of all the rights and guarantees provided by the law of the State in the territory of which that person is present.

"Additional requirements

"1. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, any State Party in the territory of which the offender or the alleged offender is present shall, in accordance with its laws, take that person into custody or take other measures to ensure the presence of that person for such time as is necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted. Such State shall immediately make a preliminary inquiry, in accordance with its own laws.

"2. Any person regarding whom the measures referred to in paragraph 1 of the present article are being taken shall be entitled:

"(a) To communicate with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which that person is a national or which is otherwise entitled to establish such communication or, if that person is a stateless person, the State in the territory of which that person habitually resides;

"(b) To be visited by a representative of that State.

"3. The rights referred to in paragraph 2 of the present article shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and regulations of the State in the territory of which the offender or the alleged offender is present, subject to the provision that the said laws and regulations must enable full effect to be given to the purposes for which the rights accorded under paragraph 1 of the present article are intended.

"Article 5

"Rules relating to extradition

"1. The offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between any of the States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.

"2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested State Party may, at its option, consider the present Convention as a legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth in article 1 above. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

"3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

"4. The offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention shall be treated, for the purposes of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in a place within the jurisdiction of the State Party requesting extradition.

"5. For purposes of extradition between the States Parties, none of the offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention shall be regarded as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence or as an offence inspired by political motives.

"6. If a State Party denies extradition to another State Party for an offence set forth in article 1 of the present Convention because the person sought is a national of the requested Party, the requested Party shall, upon request of the requesting Party, transfer the person to the requesting Party for trial or other proceedings and the person transferred shall be returned to the requested Party to serve any sentence imposed in the requesting Party as a result of the trial or proceedings for which transfer was made.

"7. With respect to the offences as defined in the present Convention, the provisions of all extradition treaties and arrangements applicable between States Parties are modified as between States Parties to the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of the present Convention.

"Article 6

"Mutual legal assistance

"1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention, including assistance in obtaining evidence at their disposal that is necessary for the proceedings.

"2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 above in conformity with any treaties on mutual assistance that may exist between them or pursuant to domestic law.

"3. For offences established in accordance with the present Convention, a State Party shall not decline to render mutual legal assistance on the ground of bank secrecy or on the ground that there is an absence of dual criminality.

"4. States Parties shall adopt measures sufficient to enable a person in the custody of one State Party, whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of assistance under the present Convention, to be transferred if the person consents and if the competent authorities of both States agree. For purposes of the present paragraph:

"(a) The State to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise authorized by the State from which the person was transferred;

"(b) The State to which the person is transferred shall return the person to the custody of the State from which the person was transferred as soon as circumstances permit or as otherwise agreed by the competent authorities of both States;

"(c) The State to which the person is transferred shall not require the State from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person;

"(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence imposed in the State from which he was transferred for time served in the custody of the State to which he was transferred.

"5. In order to ensure the protection of witnesses, States Parties shall, on request, limit disclosure of the addresses or identifying particulars of persons who testify. States Parties shall also adopt measures to permit, upon request, persons to testify by telecommunications or video link or use other modern technology in order to provide testimony to the prosecuting State.

"Article 7

"Confiscation

"1. States Parties shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to enable confiscation of:

"(a) Proceeds derived from offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention or property, the value of which corresponds to that of such proceeds;

"(b) Property, equipment or other instrumentalities used in or intended for use in offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention.

"2. States Parties shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to enable the identification, freezing or seizure of any item referred to in paragraph 1 of the present article for the purpose of eventual confiscation.

"3. The State Party that has custody over proceeds or instrumentalities of offences shall dispose of them in accordance with its laws. A Party may transfer all or part of such assets or the proceeds of their sale to another Party, to the extent permitted by the laws of the transferring Party and upon such terms as it deems appropriate.

"4. The provisions of the present article shall not be construed as prejudicing the rights of third parties.

"Article 8

"Transfer of proceedings

"States Parties shall give consideration to transferring to one another proceedings for criminal prosecution of offences established in accordance with the present Convention in cases where such transfer is considered to be in the interests of a proper administration of justice.

"Article 9

"Other forms of cooperation and assistance

"States Parties shall cooperate closely with one another, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, to enhance the effectiveness of law enforcement action to combat offences set forth in the present Convention. Each State Party shall, in particular, adopt effective measures:

"(a) For the purposes of carrying out the cooperation and assistance provided for under the present Convention, including the making and receiving of requests for cooperation and assistance, to designate a central authority that shall communicate directly with the central authorities of other States Parties;

"(b) To establish and maintain channels of communication between their competent authorities, agencies and services to facilitate the secure and rapid exchange of information concerning all aspects of the offences set forth in the present Convention, including, if the States Parties concerned deem it appropriate, links with other criminal activities;

"(c) To cooperate with one another in conducting inquiries, with respect to offences set forth in the present Convention, concerning:

"(i) The identity, whereabouts and activities of persons suspected of involvement in the offences set forth in the present Convention;

"(ii) The movement of proceeds or property derived from the commission of such offences;

"(d) In appropriate cases and if not contrary to domestic law, to establish joint teams, taking into account the need to protect the security of persons and operations, in order to carry out the provisions of the present paragraph. Officials of any State Party participating in such teams shall act as authorized by the appropriate authorities of the Party in whose territory the operation is to take place; in all such cases, the States Parties involved shall ensure that the sovereignty of the Party in whose territory the operation is to take place is fully respected;

"(e) To provide, when appropriate, necessary items or quantities of substances for analytical or investigative purposes;

"(f) To establish arrangements for electronic surveillance, undercover operations and controlled deliveries with a view to gathering evidence and taking legal action against persons involved in the offences set forth in the present Convention;

"(g) To provide protection for persons who have given or have agreed to give information or evidence or who participate or who have agreed to participate in an investigation or prosecution of an offence established in accordance with the present Convention and for the relatives and associates of such persons who require protection because of risks to their security of person. States Parties should consider, as appropriate, reciprocal arrangements for the protection of witnesses and other endangered persons;

"(h) To permit the competent authorities, when considering punishment, to consider as a mitigating factor the extent of cooperation provided by an accused in the investigation and prosecution of other persons or the ability and intention of the accused to provide such cooperation;

"(i) To facilitate effective coordination between their competent agencies and services and to promote the exchange of personnel and other experts, including the posting of liaison officers.

"Article 10

"Law enforcement training

"1. Each State Party shall, to the extent necessary, initiate, develop or improve a specific training programme for its law enforcement personnel, including prosecutors and investigating magistrates, and other personnel charged with the suppression of the offences set forth in the present Convention. Such programmes shall deal, in particular, with the following:

"(a) Methods used in the detection and suppression of the offences set forth in the present Convention;

"(b) Techniques used by persons suspected of involvement in offences set forth in the present Convention;

"(c) Detection and monitoring of the movements of proceeds, property and instrumentalities derived from offences set forth in the present Convention and methods used for the transfer, concealment or disguise of such proceeds, property and instrumentalities;

"(d) Collection of evidence;

"(e) Modern law enforcement techniques.

"2. States Parties shall assist one another to plan and implement research and training programmes designed to share expertise in the areas referred to in paragraph 1 of the present article and, to this end, shall also, when appropriate, use regional and international conferences and seminars to promote cooperation and stimulate discussion on problems of mutual concern.

"3. States Parties shall promote other techniques for mutual education that will facilitate extradition and mutual legal assistance, including language training, secondments and exchanges between personnel in central authorities or agencies with relevant responsibilities.

"Article 11

"Transparency of transactions

"1. States Parties shall implement measures to detect and monitor the physical transportation of cash and bearer-negotiable instruments at the border, subject to strict safeguards to ensure proper use of information and without impeding in any way the freedom of legitimate capital movements.

"2. In order to improve understanding and information on the detection of financial networks linked to transnational organized crime, States Parties shall take measures to gather financial information and, as much as possible, facilitate the exchange of such information, including exchanges between law enforcement agencies and regulatory bodies.

"Article 12

"Other forms of cooperation

"1. States Parties shall cooperate closely in the prevention, investigation and prosecution of the offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention. In particular, they shall, in accordance with their domestic laws or pursuant to bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements:

"(a) Take all appropriate measures to prevent preparation in their respective territories for the commission of those offences within or outside their territories;

"(b) Exchange information in accordance with their national law and coordinate administrative and other measures taken, as appropriate, to prevent the commission of offences set forth in article 1 of the present Convention.

"2. States Parties shall consider the establishment of a common data bank concerning transnational organized crime, including information gathered regarding activities of criminal groups, their members and convicted persons.

"Article 13

"Application of cooperation provisions to other multilateral conventions

"States Parties may apply articles 3 to 12 of the present Convention to other multilateral conventions to the extent agreed between States Parties.

"Article 14

"Dispute settlement

"1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If, within six months from the date of the request for arbitration, those States Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.

"2. Each State may, at the time of ratification or accession to the present Convention, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of the present article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 of the present article with respect to any State Party which has made such a reservation.

"3. Any State which has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to [the Secretary-General of the United Nations].

"Article 15

"Signature, ratification, accession

"1. The present Convention shall be open for signature by all States until [date] at [United Nations Headquarters in New York].

"2. The present Convention is subject to ratification. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the [Secretary-General of the United Nations].

"3. The present Convention is subject to accession by any State. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with [the Secretary-General of the United Nations].

"Article 16

"Entry into force

"1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of deposit of the [twenty-fifth] instrument of ratification or accession with [the Secretary-General of the United Nations].

"2. For each State ratifying or acceding to the present Convention after the deposit of the [twenty-fifth] instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification or accession.

"Article 17
"Denunciation

"1. Any State Party may denounce the present Convention by written notification to [the Secretary-General of the United Nations].

"2. Denunciation shall take effect one year following the date on which notification is received by [the Secretary-General of the United Nations].

"Article 18
"Languages and depositary

"The original of the present Convention, of which the [Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish] texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with [the Secretary-General of the United Nations], who shall send certified copies thereof to all States.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention, opened for signature at [place] on [date].

"ANNEX VI

"Views of the Government of Germany on an alternative solution for a draft United Nations framework convention on combating organized transnational crime

"1. Organized transnational crime threatens both the economic and political structures of States. It is a global menace endangering industrial and developing societies alike and requires a global response. The draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime, submitted to the General Assembly by the Government of Poland (annex III), offers a good basis for discussion of this urgent problem by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

"2. So far, national and international efforts to produce a workable definition of organized transnational crime have been unsuccessful. The definition contained in article 1 of the draft United Nations framework convention is, from the perspective of the Government of Germany, in part too narrow, in part too broad. Germany considers organized transnational crime not as a clearly definable criminal offence but as a complex phenomenon of criminality. Elements of a description could probably be agreed upon and set out in the preamble of such a convention. It is problematic even to give a paradigmatic list of specific crimes because, whereas everyone can agree on what constitutes murder, there is no international consensus on what constitutes, for example, corruption of public officials. This would lead to insuperable difficulties in penalizing such criminal behaviour and establishing jurisdiction.

"3. From the point of view of the Government of Germany, these difficulties could be circumvented by the following alternative solution:

"(a) The elaboration of a comprehensive United Nations convention on organized transnational crime should be based on the Model Treaty on Extradition and the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters;

"(b) Such a convention should refrain from reference to specific crimes but the point of reference would be the framework given by article 2 of the Model Treaty on Extradition, at least for extraditable offences. For the granting of legal assistance, probably no specific point of reference would be necessary;

"(c) A gap in the international armoury against organized transnational crime seems to stem from the fact that some legal systems do not penalize criminal behaviour that is not directly aimed at a concrete crime and therefore cannot qualify as participation in a crime, whereas the laws of Germany, France and Italy, for example, penalize participation on the basis of membership in a 'criminal association'. The convention ought to contain an obligation to penalize on these lines. This could follow the formulation of article 3, on conspiracy and association to commit offences, of the Convention, drawn up on the basis of article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, relating to extradition between the member States of the European Union of 27 September 1996, for example:

'Each party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as a criminal offence under its domestic law, when committed intentionally, the participation as an accomplice in or the organization or direction of others to commit an offence in the field of drug trafficking or other forms of organized crime.'

"(d) Adequate provisions for skimming off the proceeds of crime are indispensable for an effective fight at the national and international levels against organized transnational crime. The convention should, therefore, oblige Member States to legislate to this effect;

"(e) In all international forums, there is general agreement that the scope for the imposition of penalties for money laundering in connection with drug trafficking is unsatisfactory. The convention should provide that, in principle, any other serious offence, in addition to drug-related offences, can be considered a predicate offence for money laundering;

"(f) Following the model of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, the convention should contain provisions for the domestic implementation of foreign forfeiture measures;

"(g) A precondition for fighting organized transnational crime at the national or international level is an effective witness protection programme; in this regard, see the relevant European Union recommendations, the forty recommendations of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight (annex I) and the idea underlying article 13 of the draft United Nations framework convention submitted by the Government of Poland;

"(h) In addition, the convention should make provision for police cooperation and training (see article 11 of the draft United Nations framework convention and article 9 of the 1988 Convention);

"(i) Finally, some new ideas put forward by the Council of Europe, the European Union and other international forums in the area of extradition and mutual assistance could be taken up in a United Nations convention."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/85 without vote [agenda item 103].

Follow-up to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/159 of 23 December 1994, in which it approved the Naples Political Declaration and the Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/27 of 24 July 1996, and bearing in mind Council resolution 1997/22 of 21 July 1997,

Recalling further its resolution 51/120 of 12 December 1996 on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime,

Convinced of the importance of continuous action by Member States aimed at the full implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan,

Reiterating the need for increased technical cooperation activities and the provision of practical assistance to requesting Member States for the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General, submitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session, on the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime;

2. Takes note also of the forty recommendations elaborated and endorsed by the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime, which met at Lyon, France, from 27 to 29 June 1996, which are contained in annex I to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/22;

3. Takes note further of the report of the informal meeting on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, held at Palermo, Italy, from 6 to 8 April 1997, and expresses its appreciation to the Fondazione Giovanni e Francesca Falcone for organizing and acting as host to the meeting;

4. Reiterates the high priority accorded to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme as well as to its work on action against organized transnational crime in general and the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan in particular;

5. Urges States to continue making every effort possible to implement the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan fully by taking the most appropriate legislative, regulatory and administrative measures, including those aimed at prevention;

6. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to continue its review of the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan as a matter of high priority;

7. Invites developing countries and countries with economies in transition to undertake action against organized transnational crime and to promote international cooperation in this field as priorities in their development efforts and to include in their requests for assistance to the United Nations Development Programme, as part of the country programme framework of the Programme, projects on action against organized transnational crime and money laundering, with a view to upgrading national institutional capacities and professional expertise in these fields;

8. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies to give favourable consideration to project proposals on strengthening national or regional capacities and creating the expertise required for the prevention and control of organized transnational crime and money laundering that are elaborated and submitted to them by the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his work on the central repository established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/27, with a view to increasing, maintaining and updating the data and other information contained in the repository and making such information available to States and, for this purpose, to continue collecting information and material, taking into account the methodological points and categorization of data listed in annex II to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/22, including legislative and regulatory texts on the prevention and control of organized transnational crime, as well as reports on preventive measures;

10. Calls upon all States and relevant international organizations and institutes affiliated and associated with the United Nations to assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of paragraph 9 above by providing him with data and other information, as well as legislative and regulatory texts, and to keep such data up to date;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide States with advisory services and other forms of assistance on request in the field of prevention and control of organized transnational crime;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to assist States in collecting and systematizing data and other information on the occurrence, dimensions and patterns of organized transnational crime by designing and undertaking a comparative study on the situation of organized transnational crime throughout the world;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to review the data submitted to the central repository and to take that data into account in developing model legislation against organized transnational crime as well as technical manuals for law enforcement and judicial personnel and for agencies engaged in preventive activities;

14. Decides to establish an inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts, from within existing resources or, where possible, funded by extrabudgetary resources, if made available, for the purpose of elaborating a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime, which would submit a report thereon to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh session;

15. Welcomes the generous offer of the Government of Poland to organize and host a meeting of the intergovernmental group of experts;

16. Requests the intergovernmental group of experts, when elaborating the preliminary draft:

(a) To take into account existing multilateral instruments, the draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime presented by the Government of Poland at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly, contained in annex III to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/22, the report of the Chairman of the Working Group on the Implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime and the Question of the Elaboration of an International Convention against Organized Transnational Crime, contained in annex IV to Council resolution 1997/22, the principles indicated in the forty recommendations mentioned in paragraph 2 above and the observations and proposals made by other member States during the sixth session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, including those contained in annexes V and VI to Council resolution 1997/22, as well as those contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime and the principles contained in the report of the Secretary-General on measures to prevent trafficking in children;

(b) To give priority consideration to the following issues:

- (i) Measures for judicial and police cooperation, particularly in relation to mutual assistance, extradition, money laundering and confiscation of illicit assets, protection of witnesses, information sharing, training and other forms of technical assistance;
- (ii) Identification of the scope of application of the above-mentioned measures, having particular regard to the documents contained in annexes III and IV to Council resolution 1997/22, referred to in subparagraph (a) above;
- (iii) Provisions related to criminal offences, particularly in the areas of criminal associations, conspiracy and money laundering;

(c) Also to consider indicating the need for special provisions related to specific types of crime, such as trafficking in children, corruption, offences related to firearms, trafficking in illegal migrants and theft of motor vehicles, that may be the subject of international instruments, whether associated with or separate from the draft convention;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat with adequate resources for the preparation and servicing of the meeting of the intergovernmental group of experts;

18. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to report through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the progress achieved in its work on this question.

UN Declaration on Crime and Public Security

In a February report on technical cooperation activities [E/CN.15/1997/17], the Secretary-General stated that the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division had made efforts to gear its technical cooperation activities towards providing Member States with services that would enhance their capacity to implement the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 51/60 [YUN 1996, p. 1028]. In addition, the Division undertook needs assessment missions regarding effective national measures to combat serious transnational crime to Angola, Kyrgyzstan, Romania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. Subsequently, four project proposals were developed. At the request of the Government of Ukraine, the Division developed a project to improve the country's criminal justice system. The Secretary-General noted that the Division planned to continue developing operational activities related to the broad range of issues covered by the Declaration, which was warranted by the increased number of requests received from Member States for assistance in that area.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/34 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Implementation of the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/60 of 12 December 1996, by which the Assembly, convinced that the adoption of a declaration on crime and public security would contribute to the enhancement of the struggle against serious transnational crime, approved the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security,

Noting that the General Assembly, in its resolution 51/60, urged Member States to make every effort to ensure that the Declaration became generally known and was observed and implemented in full in accordance with their respective national legislation,

Noting also that the General Assembly, in its resolution 51/60, invited the Secretary-General to inform all States and the relevant specialized agencies and organizations of the adoption of the Declaration,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on technical cooperation and coordination of activities setting forth the information provided to date by Member States on their efforts to observe and implement in full General Assembly resolution 51/60 and the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security in accordance with their national legislation;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, utilizing a questionnaire or other means to ensure standardized responses, to seek from Member States, as well as from any interested intergovernmental organizations or United Nations institutes, information related to the implementation of the Declaration, including in particular, in the case of Member States, the following:

(a) A summary of existing legislation and pending legislative proposals to combat serious transnational crime, including organized crime, illicit drug and arms trafficking, smuggling of other illicit articles, organized trafficking in persons, terrorist crimes and the laundering of proceeds from serious crimes;

(b) A summary of bilateral, regional, multilateral and global extradition, mutual legal assistance and other types of law enforcement cooperation arrangements;

(c) A summary of involvement or participation in law enforcement training and education activities at the international level;

(d) A status report on adherence to the principal existing international treaties relating to various aspects of the problem of international terrorism and to the international drug control conventions;

(e) A summary of existing or proposed victim assistance programmes or systems;

(f) A summary of existing or proposed legislation to combat the transnational flow of the proceeds of serious transnational crime, including measures to require adequate record-keeping and reporting of suspicious transactions by financial and related institutions, to permit the seizure and forfeiture of the proceeds of crime, to limit the application of any bank secrecy laws with respect to criminal operations and to obtain the cooperation of financial institutions in detecting any operations that may be used for money laundering;

(g) A summary of measures undertaken to combat and prohibit corruption and bribery;

3. Urges all Member States to respond fully to the request by the Secretary-General for information on their efforts to implement the Declaration, either in their initial responses if they have not yet responded or, if necessary, in an amended version of any previous response;

4. Recognizes that the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat should continue to provide technical assistance to Member States in their efforts to implement the Declaration, drawing on extrabudgetary resources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to compile the responses received for submission as a report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session, if possible within existing resources;

6. Decides that the Declaration should be included in the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice when the Compendium is next published in any of the official languages of the United Nations;

7. Invites Member States to give serious consideration, in their efforts to implement the Declaration, to the means and methods for combating organized transnational crime set forth in the forty recommendations endorsed by the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight at Lyon, France, in June 1996;

8. Decides that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its eighth session, should review the report of the Secretary-General and should continue to consider the implementation of the Declaration.

Extradition

In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission the report on the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition (Siracusa, Italy, 10-13 December 1996) [E/CN.15/1997/6 & Corr.1], convened in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27 [YUN 1995, p. 1138].

The Expert Group surveyed the problems encountered in extradition practice, including administrative, legal and technical, as well as policy and political, concerns. Several key areas were identified, including clarity of procedures, dual criminality, especially in relation to complex crimes, the political offence exception in a modern context, problems relating to the rule of speciality, conflicting claims of jurisdiction, non-extradition of nationals and differences in evidentiary standards and burdens. The Group stated that improving the effectiveness of extradition practice could be achieved by raising the professional standards and competence of officials involved in the extradition process, including central authorities, police, prosecutors and judges, especially in developing countries and countries in transition. It recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Commission.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], by resolution 1997/26, the Economic and Social Council, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime and Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], approved a draft text for adoption by the General Assembly [agenda item 7 (c)].

International cooperation in criminal matters

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 52/88 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/88 without vote [agenda item 103].

International cooperation in criminal matters

The General Assembly,

Acknowledging the benefits of the enactment of national laws providing the most flexible basis for extradition, and bearing in mind that some developing countries and countries with economies in transition may lack the resources for developing and implementing treaty relations on extradition, as well as appropriate national legislation,

Bearing in mind that United Nations model treaties on international cooperation in criminal matters provide important tools for the development of international cooperation,

Convinced that existing arrangements governing international cooperation in law enforcement must be continuously reviewed and revised to ensure that the specific contemporary problems of fighting crime are being effectively addressed at all times,

Convinced also that reviewing and revising the United Nations model treaties will contribute to increased efficiency in combating criminality,

Commending the work of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition, held at Siracusa, Italy, from 10 to 13 December 1996, to implement, in part, Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995 by reviewing the Model Treaty on Extradition and by proposing complementary provisions for it, elements for model legislation in the field of extradition and training and technical assistance for national officials engaged in the field of extradition,

Commending also the International Association of Penal Law and the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences for providing support for the Expert Group Meeting and the Governments of Finland, Germany and the United States of America and the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute for their cooperation in its organization,

Recognizing that the work of the Intergovernmental Expert Group could not be fully completed given the limited amount of time available and that its work was therefore ultimately limited to the field of extradition,

Determined to implement section I of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of an intergovernmental expert group to explore ways of increasing the efficiency of extradition and related mechanisms of international cooperation,

I

Mutual assistance

1. Requests the Secretary-General to convene, using extrabudgetary funds already offered for this purpose, a meeting of an intergovernmental expert group to examine practical recommendations for the further development and promotion of mutual assistance in criminal matters;

2. Recommends that the expert group should, in accordance with section I of Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27, explore ways and means of increasing the efficiency of this type of international cooperation, having due regard for the rule of law and the protection of human rights, including by drafting alternative or complementary articles for the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, developing model legislation and providing technical assistance in the development of agreements;

3. Also recommends that the expert group submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice no later than at its eighth session;

II

Extradition

1. Welcomes the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition, held at Siracusa, Italy, from 10 to 13 December 1996;

2. Decides that the Model Treaty on Extradition should be complemented by the provisions set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Encourages Member States, within the framework of their national legal systems, to enact effective extradition legislation, and calls upon the international community to give all possible assistance in achieving that goal;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to elaborate, in consultation with Member States and subject to extrabudgetary resources, for submission to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, model legislation to assist Member States in giving effect to the Model Treaty on Extradition in order to enhance effective cooperation between States, taking into account the contents of model legislation recommended by the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting;

5. Invites States to consider taking steps, within the framework of national legal systems, to conclude extradition and surrender or transfer agreements;

6. Urges States to revise bilateral and multilateral law enforcement cooperation arrangements as an integral part of the effort to effectively combat constantly changing methods of individuals and groups engaging in organized transnational crime;

7. Urges Member States to use the Model Treaty on Extradition as a basis in developing treaty relations at the bilateral, regional or multilateral level, as appropriate;

8. Also urges Member States to continue to acknowledge that the protection of human rights should not be considered inconsistent with effective international cooperation in criminal matters, while recognizing the need for fully effective mechanisms for extraditing fugitives;

9. Invites Member States to consider, where applicable and within the framework of national legal systems, the following measures in the context of the use and application of extradition treaties or other arrangements:

(a) Establishing and designating a national central authority to process requests for extradition;

(b) Undertaking regular reviews of their treaty or other extradition arrangements and implementing legislation, as well as taking other necessary measures for the purpose of rendering such arrangements and legislation more efficient and effective in combating new and complex forms of crime;

(c) Simplifying and streamlining procedures necessary to execute and initiate requests for extradition, including the provision to requested States of information sufficient to enable extradition;

(d) Reducing the technical requirements, including documentation, necessary to satisfy the tests for extradition in cases where a person is accused of an offence;

(e) Providing for extraditable offences to extend to all acts and omissions that would be criminal offences in both States carrying a prescribed minimum penalty and not to be individually listed in treaties or other agreements, particularly with respect to organized transnational crime;

(f) Ensuring effective application of the principle of aut dedere aut judicare;

(g) Paying adequate attention, when considering and implementing the measures mentioned in subparagraphs 9 (b) to (f) above, to furthering the protection of human rights and the maintenance of the rule of law;

10. Encourages Member States to promote, on a bilateral, regional or worldwide basis, measures to improve the skills of officials in order to facilitate extradition, such as specialized training and, whenever possible, secondment and exchanges of personnel, as well as the appointment in other States of representatives of prosecuting agencies or of judicial authorities, in accordance with national legislation or bilateral agreements;

11. Reiterates its invitation to Member States to provide the Secretary-General with copies of relevant laws and information on practices related to international cooperation in criminal matters and in particular to extradition, as well as updated information on central authorities designated to deal with requests;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) Subject to extrabudgetary resources, to regularly update and disseminate the information mentioned in paragraph 11 above;

(b) To continue to provide advisory and technical cooperation services to Member States requesting assistance in the development, negotiation and implementation of bilateral, subregional, regional or international treaties on extradition, as well as in the drafting and application of appropriate national legislation, as necessary;

(c) To promote regular communication and exchanges of information between central authorities of Member States dealing with requests for extradition and to promote meetings of such authorities on a regional basis for Member States wishing to attend;

(d) To provide, taking into account the recommendations for a training programme contained in the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting, in cooperation with relevant intergovernmental organizations, with the participation of interested Member States at the intergovernmental organizational meeting referred to in the recommendations and subject to extrabudgetary resources, training for personnel in appropriate governmental agencies and central authorities of requesting Member States on extradition law and practice designed to develop necessary skills and to improve communications and cooperation aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of extradition and related practices;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, subject to extrabudgetary resources and in cooperation with other relevant intergovernmental organizations, the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute and the other institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to develop appropriate training materials for use in providing to requesting Member States the technical assistance referred to above;

14. Commends the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences for its offer to organize and host a coordination meeting for the purpose of developing the training material referred to in paragraph 13 above, as well as training courses on extradition law and practice;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full implementation of the provisions of the present resolution, and urges Member States and funding agencies to assist the Secretary-General in implementing the present resolution through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition together with the present resolution to the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court for consideration.

ANNEX

Complementary provisions for the Model Treaty on Extradition

1. Move the text of footnote 96 to the end of subparagraph (a) and add a new footnote reading: "Countries may wish to exclude certain conduct, e.g., acts of violence, such as serious offences involving an act of violence against the life, physical integrity or liberty of a person, from the concept of political offence".

2. Add the following sentence to footnote 97: "Countries may also wish to restrict consideration of the issue of lapse of time to the law of the requesting State only or to provide that acts of interruption in the requesting State should be recognized in the requested State".

3. Add the following footnote to subparagraph (a): "Some countries may also wish to consider, within the framework of national legal systems, other means to ensure that those responsible for crimes do not escape punishment on the basis of nationality, such as, inter alia, provisions that would permit surrender for serious offences or permit temporary transfer of the person for trial and return of the person to the requested State for service of sentence".

4. Add to subparagraph (d) the same aut dedere aut judicare (either extradite or prosecute) provisions as are found in subparagraphs (a) and (f).

5. Add the following footnote to the title of article 5: "Countries may wish to consider including the most advanced techniques for the communication of requests and means which could establish the authenticity of the documents as emanating from the requesting State".

6. Replace existing footnote 101 with the following text: "Countries requiring evidence in support of a request for extradition may wish to define the evidentiary requirements necessary to satisfy the test for extradition and in doing so should take into account the need to facilitate effective international cooperation".

7. Add the following footnote to the title of article 6: "Countries may wish to provide for the waiver of speciality in the case of simplified extradition".

Article 14

8. Add the following footnote to subparagraph 1 (a): "Countries may also wish to provide that the rule of speciality is not applicable to extraditable offences provable on the same facts and carrying the same or a lesser penalty as the original offence for which extradition was requested".

9. Delete footnote 103.

10. Add the following footnote to paragraph 2: "Countries may wish to waive the requirement for the provision of some or all of these documents".

Article 15

11. Add the following sentence to footnote 105: "However, countries may wish to provide that transit should not be denied on the basis of nationality".

Article 17

12. Add the following sentence to footnote 106: "There may also be cases for consultation between the requesting and requested States for the payment by the requesting State of extraordinary costs, particularly in complex cases where there is a significant disparity in the resources available to the two States".

Criminal law and protection of the environment

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/10 [YUN 1996, p. 1030], the Secretary-General, in a February report with later addenda [E/CN.15/1997/10 & Add.1,2], summarized the views of Governments, UN organizations, and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations on the feasibility of establishing appropriate machinery for applying criminal law for the protection of the environment.

The Secretary-General concluded that criminal law had a crucial role to play in protecting the environment, particularly in combating and deterring crimes involving illegal trafficking in hazardous and nuclear substances and endangered species. Several countries had taken steps to create uniform and effective legislation to counter-act environmental crime. However, criminal enforcement was still in its relative infancy in most countries. The Secretary-General stated that the guidance of the Commission was needed in developing a strategy. He suggested that the Commission consider preparing, in cooperation with relevant UN agencies and programmes, a model law on environmental offences, as well as a manual for practitioners, in order to ensure a quick response to requests for assistance from Member States.

Alien smuggling

In a February report with later addendum [E/CN.15/1997/8 & Add.1], the Secretary-General summarized information received from Governments and the UN system regarding measures and initiatives taken or envisaged to combat the smuggling of illegal migrants. He stated that the Commission might be in a position to consider whether the information acquired from States might be sufficient to determine the course of future international action on the matter. Additional information might be sought to determine patterns of transborder smuggling of migrants and the various criminogenic factors involved. In that way, the Commission would be apprised not only of the measures taken or envisaged by States to combat the problem but also its forms and dimensions.

By a 16 September letter [A/52/357] to the Secretary-General, Austria transmitted the draft of an international convention against the smuggling of illegal migrants, prepared by Austrian legal experts, taking into account comments of international organizations and legal experts of various countries.

Trafficking in motor vehicles

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27 [YUN 1995, p. 1138], the Secretary-General, in a February report [E/CN.15/1997/9], provided an overview of the dimensions of illicit trafficking in motor vehicles and a summary of responses received from Governments and relevant organizations on measures they had taken to prevent and suppress such trafficking. The report stated that the criminal activity was increasing as it was considered low-risk and generated high profits. A major area for international cooperation was the recovery of stolen or embezzled vehicles. The Conference on Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles (Warsaw, Poland, 2-3 December 1996) recommended, among other things, that States be urged to negotiate and conclude bilateral and/or multilateral agreements for a simplified and effective procedure to recuperate stolen vehicles. The Conference adopted a resolution containing a model treaty for the return of stolen and embezzled vehicles.

The Secretary-General drew attention to the Conference on International Cooperation in the Prevention and Control of the Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles (Moscow, 28 February-2 March 1997).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/29 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Measures on the prevention and control of illicit trafficking in motor vehicles

The Economic and Social Council,

Alarmed by the rapid growth and geographical expansion of the illicit trafficking in motor vehicles, which increasingly transcends national borders,

Concerned about the increasing role of organized transnational crime in the theft of and illicit trafficking in motor vehicles,

Recognizing that car theft and illicit trafficking in motor vehicles, with their high costs, have adverse effects on the safety and national economies of Member States,

Recalling section II, paragraph 1, of its resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995, in which it requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider measures on the prevention and suppression of illicit trafficking in motor vehicles,

Emphasizing the need for strengthened and more effective international cooperation at all levels to fight illicit trafficking in motor vehicles,

Acknowledging, in particular, the importance of international police cooperation in the prevention of and the fight against illicit trafficking in motor vehicles and the need for a rapid exchange of information between States on the status and origins of motor vehicles,

Recognizing the work already undertaken by the International Criminal Police Organization in establishing a worldwide stolen vehicle database,

Welcoming the participation of and contributions made by representatives of the private sector, particularly insurance companies, insurance crime bureaux and car manufacturers, in the prevention and control of illicit trafficking in motor vehicles,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Poland for acting as host to the Conference on Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles, held at Warsaw on 2 and 3 December 1996, and to the Government of the United States of America for providing financial support for that conference;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to the Government of the Russian Federation for acting as host to the Conference on International Cooperation in the Prevention and Control of the Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles, held at Moscow from 28 February to 2 March 1997, and to the Government of the United States of America, the United Nations Development Programme and the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, for providing financial support for that conference;

3. Takes note of the recommendations of the Warsaw Conference, contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General on measures for the prevention and suppression of illicit trafficking in motor vehicles, and the Moscow Declaration, contained in annex I to the present resolution;

4. Urges Member States:

(a) To improve international cooperation in the prevention and control of theft of, trafficking in and other offences in connection with stolen vehicles and to negotiate and conclude, as appropriate, in compliance with domestic law, bilateral and/or multilateral agreements or arrangements on a simplified and effective procedure for recovering stolen vehicles that clearly define, inter alia, the documentation required, certification procedures, translation requirements, authorized expenses and the applicability of value-added tax, taking into account the Model Bilateral Treaty for the Return of Stolen or Embezzled Vehicles, contained in annex II to the present resolution, and other bilateral treaties, as well as the United Nations model treaties, such as the Model Treaty on Extradition, the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters and the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released, as necessary, as useful tools in improving international cooperation in the investigation and prosecution of cases involving illicit trafficking in motor vehicles;

(b) To improve the exchange of information on the theft of and illicit trafficking in motor vehicles, to explore the possibility of establishing national databases on stolen vehicles and other pertinent information, to support the efforts of the International Criminal Police Organization by supplying their national data on stolen vehicles to its Automated Search Facility International Stolen Vehicle Database, to exchange information among themselves on a bilateral, subregional or regional basis and, through international law enforcement entities, to fight illicit trafficking in motor vehicles more effectively;

(c) To consider developing compatible registration and titling procedures and documents for motor vehicles in order to facilitate the identification of rightful owners of such vehicles by competent national authorities, to harmonize the elements contained in the registration documents of motor vehicles as a means of preventing the illicit trafficking in motor vehicles, to consider the possibility of integrating their national stolen vehicle databases into the international stolen vehicle database, to explore the possibility of establishing salvage control procedures to ensure that the title documents of wrecked vehicles are not used on stolen vehicles and to exchange information on how to improve the security features of car registration documents;

(d) To consider making the necessary changes in their national laws and procedures to improve the response of the justice system to vehicle theft and trafficking and reduce to a minimum conflicting property issues derived from the international repatriation of stolen vehicles, giving due consideration to the interests of bona fide third parties;

(e) To make all possible efforts to strengthen their cooperation in this field at the bilateral, regional and interregional levels, inter alia, by:

(i) Promoting actively close operational cooperation and exchange of information among competent national authorities across national borders to detect, apprehend and bring to justice persons engaged in trafficking in stolen vehicles and to promote close cooperation among other relevant agencies to ensure the return of stolen vehicles to their rightful owners, in accordance with national laws;

(ii) Responding promptly to requests by law enforcement agencies in other States for assistance in the recovery of stolen vehicles;

(f) To study the possibility of adopting a standard world vehicle identification number system to be applied to all vehicles manufactured within or exported to Member States;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, within existing resources or subject to the availability of extrabudgetary resources:

(a) To elaborate a training manual for law enforcement and customs personnel on the prevention and control of trafficking in stolen and misappropriated vehicles, for use in the provision of practical assistance to requesting Member States, as well as a comprehensive training manual on vehicle identification;

(b) To develop and carry out, in States requesting technical assistance for law enforcement and customs personnel, training programmes on the recovery of stolen vehicles;

(c) To provide advisory services to requesting Member States for the elaboration or reform of pertinent legislation, as well as for the development of bilateral, multilateral and/or regional treaties in this area;

(d) To continue to conduct research on the scope, methods and organization of groups engaged in the theft of and illicit trafficking in motor vehicles;

6. Invites Member States and the private sector to assist the Secretary-General in undertaking the activities contained in paragraph 5 above;

7. Recommends that the fight against the theft of and trafficking in stolen vehicles should take into account recent progress in anti-theft and immobilizing systems, as well as other possibilities offered by new technologies;

8. Also recommends that authorities, vehicle manufacturers, insurance companies and equipment manufacturers should, in conjunction with the efforts made by government authorities, further study and improve systems for identifying vehicles and spare parts, sharing their findings with the relevant law enforcement agencies;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX I Moscow Declaration

We, participants gathered at the Conference on International Cooperation in the Prevention and Control of the Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles, held at Moscow from 28 February to 2 March 1997,

1. Endorse the recommendations of the Conference on Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles, held at Warsaw on 2 and 3 December 1996 and, among the various issues emerging from the Warsaw Conference, recommend the following points for immediate action by Governments:

(a) As a first priority, to support the development of the Automated Search Facility International Stolen Vehicle Database of the International Criminal Police Organization;

(b) To establish national centralized vehicle registration systems based on a standard set of data, which includes the physical description and identifying numbers of the motor vehicle as well as details of the registered owner or keeper;

(c) To request that vehicles written off by insurers are reported to the centralized vehicle registration system or, alternatively, that authorities check with private databases that keep such records, in order to prevent the vehicle identification number of a vehicle that has been written off from being used to hide the identity of a stolen vehicle;

(d) To find appropriate means in order to ensure that, prior to registration of an imported vehicle, national authorities confirm that a vehicle has not been reported stolen in any country of prior registration, inter alia, using the Automated Search Facility system of the International Criminal Police Organization;

(e) To promote the adoption of a standard format for a world vehicle identification number system applying to all vehicles manufactured within the country or exported to other countries, to provide for the secure marking of identifying numbers on component parts of the vehicles, and to encourage the keeping of such records by manufacturers and the practice of making them available to relevant law enforcement agencies;

(f) To consider mandating the installation of effective security devices by manufacturers, including effective immobilizers and perimeter security;

(g) To conclude on a bilateral or multilateral basis agreements on the return of stolen vehicles, based on the Model Bilateral Treaty for the Return of Stolen or Embezzled Vehicles, contained in annex II below;

(h) To promote better operational cooperation and exchange of information among the relevant law enforcement and other agencies at the national and international levels.

2. Draw the attention of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to the following:

(a) The elaboration and the implementation of the technical cooperation activities to be requested of the Secretary-General, in accordance with paragraph 2 (g) of the recommendations of the Warsaw Conference; such activities should include the elaboration of a comprehensive training manual on vehicle identification;

(b) In the context of technical assistance and training, the continuation of research on the scope, methods and organization of groups engaged in vehicle theft and trafficking.

3. Urge States and the private sector to assist the Secretary-General in undertaking the activities referred to in paragraph 2 above.

4. Invite the United Nations Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to keep this topic and the measures taken by Governments to implement the recommendations contained in the present Declaration under constant review.

ANNEX II Model Bilateral Treaty for the Return of Stolen or Embezzled Vehicles

(The Government of [country name] and the Government of [country name],) or

(The States Parties to the present Treaty,)

Recognizing the growing problem of the theft of and illicit trafficking in motor vehicles,

Considering the difficulties faced by innocent owners in securing the return of motor vehicles stolen or embezzled in the territory of one Party that are recovered in the territory of another Party,

Desiring to eliminate such difficulties and to regularize procedures for the expeditious return of such vehicles,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Treaty:

(a) A "vehicle" shall mean any automobile, truck, bus, motorcycle, motorhome, or trailer;

(b) A vehicle shall be considered "stolen" when possession thereof has been obtained without the consent of the owner or other person legally authorized to use such motor vehicle;

(c) A vehicle shall be considered "embezzled" when:

(i) It is unlawfully converted by the person who had rented it from an enterprise legally authorized for that purpose and in the normal course of business; or

(ii) It is unlawfully converted by a person with whom it has been deposited by official or judicial action;

(d) All references to "days" shall mean calendar days.

Each Party agrees to return, in accordance with the terms of the present Treaty, vehicles that are:

- (a) Registered, titled or otherwise documented in the territory of a Party;
- (b) Stolen or embezzled in the territory of a Party; and
- (c) Found in the territory of a Party.

1. Whenever police, customs or other authorities of a Party impound or seize a vehicle that they have reason to believe is registered, titled or otherwise documented in the territory of another Party, the first Party shall, within [thirty] days of such impoundment or seizure, notify, in writing, [the Embassy] of the other Party that its authorities have custody of the motor vehicle.

2. Such notification shall include all available identifying data about the vehicle of the type listed in appendix I, a description of the condition of the vehicle, the current location of the vehicle, the identity of the authority with physical custody of the vehicle and [any] information that indicates whether it was being used in connection with the commission of a crime.

Authorities of the Party who have impounded or seized a vehicle that they have reason to believe is registered, titled or otherwise documented in the territory of another Party shall promptly take it to a storage area and shall take reasonable steps regarding the safekeeping of the vehicle. Thereafter, the said authorities shall not operate, auction, dismantle or otherwise alter or dispose of the vehicle. However, the present Treaty shall not preclude the said authorities from operating, auctioning, dismantling or otherwise altering or disposing of the vehicle if:

(a) No request for the return of the vehicle is filed within [sixty] days of the notification made pursuant to article 3 above;

(b) A determination is made in accordance with article 7, paragraph 1, below that a request for the return of the vehicle does not meet the requirements of the present Treaty and notification of such determination has been made in accordance with article 7, paragraph 3, below;

(c) The vehicle has not been retrieved within the time period stated in article 7, paragraph 2, below by the person identified in the request for return as the owner or the authorized representative of the owner after the vehicle has been made available as provided for in article 7, paragraph 2, below; or

(d) There is no obligation under the present Treaty pursuant to article 8, paragraphs 2 or 3, below to return the vehicle.

1. After receiving a notification made pursuant to article 3 above, a Party may submit a request for the return of the vehicle.

2. The request for return [shall be transmitted under seal of a consular officer of the Requesting Party and] shall follow the form shown in appendix II. A copy of the request shall be transmitted under cover of a note to the [Ministry of Foreign Affairs] of the Requested Party. A request shall be made only after receipt by the consular officer of properly notarized certified copies of the following documents:

- (a) (i) The title of ownership to the vehicle, if the vehicle is subject to titling, but, if a title is not available, a certified statement from the titling authority affirming that the motor vehicle is titled and specifying the person or entity to whom it is titled;
- (ii) The certificate of registration of the vehicle, if the vehicle is subject to registration, but, if the registration document is not available, a certified statement from the registering authority affirming that the vehicle is registered and specifying the person or entity to whom it is registered;
- (iii) The bill of sale or other documentation that establishes ownership of the vehicle, in the event the vehicle is not titled or registered;

(b) The document of transfer if, subsequent to the theft or embezzlement of the vehicle, the owner at the time of the theft or embezzlement has transferred ownership to a third party;

(c) The theft report, made within a reasonable time to a competent authority in the Requesting Party, and a translation thereof. In the event that the theft report is made after the vehicle is seized or otherwise comes into the possession of the Requested Party, the person seeking its return shall furnish a document justifying the reasons for the delay in reporting the theft and may provide any supporting documentation therefor; and

(d) In cases in which the person requesting the return of a vehicle is not the owner, a power of attorney, granted in the presence of a notary public by the owner or his or her legal representative, authorizing that person to recover the vehicle.

3. Except as noted in paragraph 2 (c) above, translations of documents need not be provided. The requirement for translation of a theft report may be waived by authorities of the Requested Party. No further legalization or authentication of documents will be required by the Requested Party.

If a Party learns, through means other than a notification made pursuant to article 3 above, that the authorities of another Party may have impounded, seized or otherwise taken possession of a vehicle that may be registered or otherwise documented in the territory of the first Party, that Party:

(a) May, through a note to the [Ministry of Foreign Affairs] of the other Party, seek official confirmation of this and may request the other Party to provide the notification described in article 3, in which case the other Party shall either provide the notification or explain, in writing, why notification is not required; and

(b) May also, in appropriate cases, submit a request for the return of the vehicle as described in article 5 above.

1. Except as provided for in article 8 below, the Requested Party shall, within [thirty] days of receiving a request for the return of a stolen or embezzled vehicle, determine whether the request for return meets the requirements of the present Treaty and shall notify [the Embassy] of the Requesting Party of its determination.

2. If the Requested Party determines that the request for the return of a stolen or embezzled vehicle meets the requirements of the present Treaty, the Requested Party shall within [fifteen] days of such determination make the vehicle available to the person identified in the request for return as the owner or the authorized representative of the owner. The vehicle shall remain available for the person identified in the request for return as the owner or the authorized representative of the owner to take delivery for at least [ninety] days. The Requested Party shall take the necessary measures to permit the owner or the authorized representative of the owner to take delivery of the vehicle and return it to the territory of the Requesting Party.

3. If the Requested Party determines that the request for return does not meet the requirements of the present Treaty, it shall provide written notification to [the Embassy] of the Requesting Party.

1. If a vehicle whose return is requested is being held in connection with a criminal investigation or prosecution, its return pursuant to the present Treaty shall be effected when its presence is no longer required for purposes of that investigation or prosecution. The Requested Party shall, however, take all practicable measures to ensure that substitute pictorial or other evidence is used wherever possible in such investigation or prosecution so that the vehicle may be returned as soon as possible.

2. If the ownership or custody of a vehicle whose return is requested is the subject of a pending judicial action in the Requested Party, its return pursuant to the present Treaty shall be effected at the conclusion of that judicial action. However, a Party shall have no obligation under the Treaty to return the vehicle if such judicial action results in the award of the vehicle to a person other than the person identified in the request for return as the owner of the vehicle or the authorized representative of the owner.

3. A Party shall have no obligation under the present Treaty to return a vehicle whose return is requested if the vehicle is subject to forfeiture under its laws because it was used in its territory for the commission of a crime. The Requested Party shall not forfeit the vehicle without giving the owner or the authorized representative of the owner reasonable notice and an opportunity to contest such forfeiture in accordance with its laws.

4. A Party shall have no obligation under the present Treaty to return a stolen or embezzled vehicle if no request for return is made within [sixty] days of a notification made pursuant to article 3 above.

5. If the return of a stolen or embezzled vehicle whose return is requested is postponed, pursuant to paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article, the Requested Party shall so notify [the Embassy] of the Requesting Party in writing within [thirty] days of receiving a request for the return of the vehicle.

Article 9

1. The Requested Party shall not impose any import or export duties, taxes, fines or other monetary penalties or charges on vehicles returned in accordance with the present Treaty, or on their owners or authorized representatives, as a condition for the return of such vehicles.

2. Actual expenses incurred in the return of the vehicle, including towing, storage, maintenance and transportation costs, as well as the costs of translation of documents required under the present Treaty, shall be borne by the person or entity seeking its return and shall be paid prior to the return of the vehicle. The Requested Party shall use its best efforts to keep such expenses at reasonable levels.

3. In particular cases, the expenses of return may include the costs of any repairs or reconditioning of a vehicle which may have been necessary to permit the vehicle to be moved to a storage area or to maintain it in the condition in which it was found. The person or entity seeking the return of a vehicle shall not be responsible for the costs of any other work performed on the vehicle while it was in the custody of the authorities of the Requested Party.

The mechanisms for the recovery and return of stolen or embezzled vehicles under the present Treaty shall be in addition to those available under the laws of the Requested Party. Nothing in the Treaty shall impair any rights for the recovery of stolen or embezzled vehicles under applicable law.

Article 11

1. Any differences regarding the interpretation or application of the present Treaty shall be resolved through consultations between the Parties.

2. The present Treaty shall be subject to ratification. It shall enter into force on the date of exchange of instruments of ratification.

3. The present Treaty may be terminated by either Party upon a minimum of [ninety] days' written notification.

DONE at [site], this _____ day of _____, ____, in duplicate, in the _____ and _____ languages, both texts being equally authentic.

APPENDIX I

Identifying information to be provided in a notification made pursuant to article 3 of the present Treaty

1. Vehicle identification number.
2. Name of manufacturer of vehicle.
3. Vehicle model and year of manufacture, if known.
4. Colour of vehicle.
5. Licence plate number of vehicle and jurisdiction of issuance, if available.

Corruption

Action against corruption and bribery

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/59 [YUN 1996, p. 1036] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/14 [YUN 1995, p. 1154], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a March report on corruption and bribery [E/CN.15/1997/3], in which he presented an overview of the phenomenon and described initiatives taken by relevant international bodies to prevent it. The Secretary-General concluded that corruption in all its forms had commanded such international attention and concern that it had led to an emerging consensus regarding the urgency of concerted action at all levels. Even though international organizations were lending help in fighting corruption through aid for democratic reform, more competitive economies and the improvement of governance, a more focused effort was needed, involving a systematic attack on systematic corruption. At the international level in particular, it was essential to enhance the momentum for advancing international agreements and cooperation arrangements, while devoting energy and resources to creating an environment in which corrupt practices would no longer be tolerated.

In an April addendum to the Secretary-General's report [E/CN.15/1997/3/Add.1] was the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Corruption (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 17-21 March). The Expert Group recommended a series of measures for States to prevent and control corruption. Technical cooperation programmes to assist States in strengthening their capacity to meet the threat posed by corruption should be a component of the efforts of the international community, including the United Nations and other international organizations, to improve action against corruption. The Group considered the elaboration of an international convention against corruption and bribery to be the most effective response to the problem. It recommended that the Commission be requested to undertake that task as a matter of high priority.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/25 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

International cooperation against corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 52/87 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/87 without vote [agenda item 103].

International cooperation against corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions

The General Assembly,

Disturbed by the bribery of public officials by individuals and enterprises of other States in relation to international commercial transactions,

Convinced that such practices undermine the integrity of state bureaucracies and weaken social and economic policies by promoting corruption in the public sector, thus diminishing its credibility,

Convinced also that the fight against corruption must be supported by sincere international cooperation efforts,

Recalling its resolution 3514(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which it, inter alia, condemned all corrupt practices, including bribery, by transnational corporations and other corporations, their intermediaries and others involved, in violation of the laws and regulations in host countries, reaffirmed the right of any State to adopt legislation and to investigate and take appropriate legal action, in accordance with its national laws and regulations, against such corrupt practices and called upon all Governments to cooperate to prevent corrupt practices, including bribery,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/14 of 24 July 1995 on action against corruption,

Recalling further its resolution 50/225 of 19 April 1996 on public administration and development,

Recalling in particular its resolution 51/59 of 12 December 1996, in which it adopted the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials, annexed thereto, and recommended it to Member States as a tool to guide their efforts against corruption,

Recalling that by its resolution 51/191 of 16 December 1996 it adopted the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions,

Recalling also that in its resolution 51/191 it requested the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies, in particular the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, to examine ways to further the implementation of that resolution and the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, to keep the issue of corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions under regular review and to promote the effective implementation of that resolution,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on action against corruption and bribery and of the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Corruption, held at Buenos Aires from 17 to 21 March 1997,

Welcoming developments that have advanced international understanding and cooperation regarding bribery in transnational business, such as the Inter-American Convention against Corruption adopted by the Organization of American States on 29 March 1996, which includes an article on the prohibition of foreign commercial bribery; the ongoing work of the Council of Europe against corruption, including the elaboration of several international conventions containing provisions on bribery in international commercial transactions; the ongoing work of the World Trade Organization to improve transparency, openness and due process in government procurement procedures; and the ongoing work of the States members of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, including, as elements, the agreement to prohibit the tax deductibility of bribes paid to foreign public officials in international commercial transactions, and the commitment to criminalize the bribing of foreign public officials in international business transactions,

1. Agrees that all States should take all possible measures to further the implementation of the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions and of the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials;

2. Urges Member States that have not yet done so to implement relevant international declarations and to ratify, where appropriate, international instruments against corruption;

3. Also urges Member States to criminalize, in an effective and coordinated manner, the bribery of public office holders of other States in international commercial transactions, and encourages them to engage, as appropriate, in programmatic activities to deter, prevent and combat bribery and corruption, for example, by diminishing institutional barriers through the development of integrated management systems and the promotion of legal reform, in accordance with their fundamental legal principles in both the public and private sectors, by encouraging a greater role for citizens in the development of transparent and accountable government, by supporting the active participation of non-governmental organizations in the identification, planning and implementation of initiatives that raise ethical standards and practices in both government and business transactions and by providing training and technical assistance to other States, as appropriate, and to develop and implement standards of good governance, in particular, accountability and transparency, legitimate commercial and financial conduct and other anti-corruption measures;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite each Member State to provide a report on steps taken to implement the provisions of the Declaration, including those dealing with criminalization, effective sanctions, tax deductibility, accounting standards and practices, development of business codes, illicit enrichment, mutual legal assistance and bank secrecy provisions, as well as on national anti-corruption strategies and policies, for compilation by the Secretary-General and consideration by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, with a view to examining further steps to be taken for the full implementation of the Declaration;

5. Invites competent international, regional and non-governmental organizations to provide relevant information to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on international efforts to combat corruption and bribery;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds, to intensify technical assistance to combat corruption, providing advisory services to Member States that request such services, and urges Member States to provide the Secretariat with the necessary extrabudgetary funds for such technical assistance;

7. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to give attention to the question of the bribery of public office holders of other States in international commercial transactions and to include in its agenda for a future session a review of action taken by States to implement the Declaration.

UN standards and norms

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/16 [YUN 1996, p. 1040], the Secretary-General, in a March report with later addendum [E/CN.15/1997/14 & Add.1], presented an overview of the current system for gathering information on the use and application of UN standards and norms for crime prevention and criminal justice. The report provided additional replies from Member States to the 1996 surveys [YUN 1996, p. 1040] on the use and application of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners [YUN 1955, p. 209]; the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials [YUN 1979, p. 779] and the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials [YUN 1990, p. 701]; the 1985 Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power [YUN 1985, p. 743]; and the 1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary [YUN 1985, p. 757]. The surveys had provided, for the first time, quantitative and qualitative data on major trends, with suggestions for follow-up activities.

The report incorporated comments received from Member States on the desirability of establishing an inter-sessional working group, which most States supported. The Secretary-General suggested that the Commission urge those States that had not replied to the surveys to do so, so that the information could be summarized, State by State, and the country reports disseminated via the World Wide Web database facilities of the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network.

The report highlighted activities of the Secretariat to promote the standards and norms, including training courses, advisory services and dissemination of information, as well as cooperative efforts with other UN programmes and relevant organizations.

The Secretary-General concluded that effective implementation of the standards and norms could be achieved only through wide dissemination and promotion at the international, regional and national levels. Measures to improve the efficacy of the use and application of the standards and norms included strengthening the role of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, enhancing cooperation and coordination between the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division and the UN Centre for Human Rights, and improving the dissemination of publications. The Commission might wish to recommend the establishment of national focal points to promote the widest possible use and application of the norms, and to call on Member States to make available additional funds for technical cooperation activities geared towards the further use and application of the standards and norms.

As requested by the Commission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1041], the Secretary-General submitted a March report with later addendum [E/CN.15/1997/15 & Add.1] summarizing the views received from Member States regarding the utility of formulating draft minimum rules for the administration of criminal justice, the utility of convening an expert group to review the draft minimum rules and specific areas in which an expert group could consider making changes thereto. The Secretary-General concluded that, in the light of the overall assessment of the replies and the results of the previous inquiries, a general trend had emerged towards promulgating common minimum rules for the administration of criminal justice (or criminal proceedings).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/32 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Reaffirming the importance of United Nations standards, norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Recalling its resolution 1993/34 of 27 July 1993, in section III of which it requested the Secretary-General to commence without delay a process of information-gathering to be undertaken by means of surveys,

Recalling also its resolution 1996/16 of 23 July 1996, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue to promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Invites Governments to promote and disseminate the Compendium of United Nations Standards and Norms in Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the languages of their countries;

2. Recommends that the relevant national authorities promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

3. Invites Governments that have not yet replied to the questionnaires on the four standards in crime prevention and criminal justice referred to in its resolution 1996/16, namely the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials together with the Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, to submit their replies in order to enable the Secretariat to summarize that information and to disseminate it through the World Wide Web database facility of the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network;

4. Requests the Secretariat to prepare the relevant survey instruments on the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules), the Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors and the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers for submission to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh session;

5. Calls upon Member States to consider making available funds for technical cooperation activities that are aimed at promoting the further use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

6. Recommends that the cooperation and coordination between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights be further improved, not only to avoid overlapping in the implementation of their programmes, but also to reinforce existing collaboration;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of government experts in crime prevention and criminal justice, attending in their personal capacity, funded by extrabudgetary resources, to review the draft minimum rules for the administration of criminal justice, without prejudice to the future work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, paying special attention to the following:

(a) Whether those draft minimum rules duplicate or contradict existing conventions or standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

(b) The necessity of elaborating such an instrument;

(c) The diversity of legal systems and practices in each Member State.

Responsible crime prevention

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/33 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Recalling also its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992 on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 46/152 concerning operational activities and coordination in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in section VI of which it determined that crime prevention in urban areas and juvenile and violent criminality would be one of the priority themes that should guide the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the development of a detailed programme,

Recalling further its resolution 1995/9 of 24 July 1995 on guidelines for the prevention of urban crime,

Taking into account the fact that a growing and undermining criminality highlights the inadequacy of conventional criminal policies and the need urgently to devise preventive approaches,

Considering that the challenge and the magnitude of modern crime, including organized crime, combined with the insufficient resources of the criminal justice system, for example, the overpopulation of prisons and overburdened criminal justice systems, reinforce the need for non-repressive crime prevention,

Considering also that an international effort is necessary to develop an effective strategy on responsible crime prevention,

1. Takes note of the preliminary draft of elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms, annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek comments from Member States, relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, on the draft contained in the annex to the present resolution, including the advisability of elaborating such an instrument;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at a future session, on the comments received;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to organize, drawing upon extrabudgetary funds, an ad hoc expert group meeting to examine the comments, to elaborate proposals for further action and to report thereon to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

5. Urges Member States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to extend to the Secretary-General their full support in implementing the present resolution.

ANNEX

Elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms

I. The concept of crime prevention

1. The prevention of crime through non-punitive measures is to be considered an important complement to the administration of criminal law. It constitutes a legitimate response by society to threats to the safety of citizens posed by criminal acts.

2. The concept of crime prevention should not be limited to conventional forms of crime, including domestic violence, but should encompass new forms of crime, such as organized crime, terrorism, illegal trafficking in migrants, computer crime and cybercrime, environmental crime, corruption and illegal commerce related to the acquisition and development of weapons of mass destruction.

3. The concept of crime prevention should take into account the growing internationalization of criminal activities and the relationship between the global economy, advanced technologies and national phenomena of crime, with special consideration for developing countries.

II. Responsible crime prevention

4. Under all circumstances, measures of crime prevention should be carried out in strict conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and international standards of human rights.

5. Crime prevention should respect principles such as the rule of law, the protection of individual rights and freedoms, the principle of equality before the law and due process.

6. Whenever preventive measures are adopted which do not infringe upon the principles set out in paragraphs 4 and 5 above but which affect human rights, they must be implemented in strict accordance with the principle of the rule of law and of proportionality.

7. If the impact of a preventive measure on human rights is comparable to that of a penal measure, there should be provision for the same legal guarantees, including controls by the courts or by an ombudsman.

8. Measures which touch upon the rights of those who are considered to be at risk of becoming offenders should be handled in strict accordance with the principles set out in paragraphs 4 and 5 above [with great restraint]. Prediction of future criminality at the individual level requires a high degree of caution and stigmatization should be avoided. However, this should not obviate the development of secondary prevention programmes for persons with known risk factors.

9. In the planning and implementation of preventive measures, affirmative action may play a role but discrimination should always be avoided.

10. If the police are a partner in the implementation of prevention programmes, their participation should not be hidden and any confusion of roles should be avoided. Data collected in relation to prevention programmes should be used for the criminal investigation of serious crime only.

11. The limits within which the private security sector may act should be defined by law. The private security sector, in accordance with human rights standards, should not exercise any function which, by its nature, is incompatible with the rule of law and the principle that the use of force is reserved for the State.

12. Codes of conduct for public officials and other persons involved are useful supplements to legal regulations in order to reduce the risks connected with preventive measures.

13. Preventive measures that do not in any way affect the rights of individuals need little legal regulation. Over-regulation in this respect would unduly limit the development of these types of measures.

III. The promotion of responsible crime prevention

14. Governments should take appropriate steps to promote and to regulate crime prevention through the establishment of special councils or other agencies, provisions for funding and the dissemination of information. Crime prevention programmes should be developed and implemented in collaboration with the police, municipalities, the private sector and other interested parties in a manner that clearly sets objectives and defines roles.

15. Crime prevention strategies at the national, local and community levels should also address the root causes of crime through social, economic, public health and educational policies. Where appropriate, crime prevention programmes should be linked to comprehensive programmes addressing social marginalization and exclusion.

16. Community-based programmes of crime prevention that include the active participation of citizens, the business sector, the police and other relevant parties should be encouraged and developed. These programmes should avoid activities with the potential to affect the rights of others.

17. Crime prevention measures which target groups at risk of becoming offenders, especially youth, should be promoted and should include educational opportunities, employment, housing and leisure facilities.

These measures should avoid stigmatization of the target groups.

18. Where necessary, educational support, such as instruction in parental skills, and special medical care should be offered as early as possible to families with children at risk. Steps should be taken to ensure that these provisions do not stigmatize the clients or infringe upon their rights.

19. Situational crime prevention programmes should be developed, to include target hardening, environmental design and surveillance. These programmes should not unduly reduce the quality of the built environment or limit free access to the public domain or public facilities.

20. Victim-oriented crime prevention consisting of, inter alia, the provision of information and advice to potential victims should be promoted. Steps should be taken to avoid the undue rise of fear of crime or the stigmatization of the target groups.

21. Victims of crime should be offered protection, where necessary, and should be informed of possible ways to reduce the risks of future victimization, with due consideration for the rights of offenders. Due regard should be given to means of avoiding the tendency to blame the victim, as well as to reparation by the offender.

22. To promote prevention, provisions should be made available or strengthened for out-of-court mediation in appropriate penal matters, if this option is foreseen in national legislation. Procedures should comply with the principles of due process.

23. Research on crime prevention, including evaluation studies, should be promoted, taking into account the interests and rights of all parties involved. The international exchange of information on best practices, in terms of both effectiveness and respect for human rights, should be facilitated.

Administration of juvenile justice

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/13 [YUN 1996, p. 1033], the Secretary-General, in a March report [E/CN.15/1997/13], summarized information received from Governments regarding the development of a programme of action to promote the effective use and application of international standards and norms in juvenile justice. Drawing on that information, a group of experts met (Vienna, 23-25 February) and developed a draft Programme of Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System, which was annexed to the report. The report described activities of the Secretariat in the area of administration of juvenile justice, such as advisory services to Governments, participation in regional consultations, workshops and international meetings, and finalizing a manual on UN standards and norms in juvenile justice.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

[E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/30 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Administration of juvenile justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 50/181 of 22 December 1995 on human rights in the administration of justice, Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1996/85 of 24 April 1996 and 1997/78 of 18 April 1997, on the rights of the child, and resolution 7 of the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling also its resolution 1996/13 of 23 July 1996 on the administration of juvenile justice,

Recalling further Commission on Human Rights resolution 1996/32 of 19 April 1996 on human rights in the administration of justice, in particular with regard to children and juveniles in detention,

Welcoming the fact that the Committee on the Rights of the Child attaches particular importance to the question of the administration of juvenile justice and that it has made concrete recommendations concerning the improvement of juvenile justice systems, through action by the Secretariat and other relevant United Nations entities, including the provision of advisory services and technical cooperation,

Noting the importance of advisory services and technical cooperation programmes for assisting States in implementing such recommendations,

Expressing its appreciation to the Government of Austria for having hosted an expert group meeting at Vienna from 23 to 25 February 1997 on the elaboration of a programme of action to promote the effective use and application of international standards and norms in juvenile justice,

Recognizing the need further to strengthen international cooperation and technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice,

1. Welcomes the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System, annexed to the present resolution, which were elaborated by the expert group meeting on the elaboration of a programme of action to promote the effective use and application of international standards and norms in juvenile justice, held at Vienna from 23 to 25 February 1997, in response to Council resolution 1996/13 and were amended by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session, and invites all parties concerned to make use of the Guidelines for Action in the implementation of the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child with regard to juvenile justice;

2. Encourages Member States to make use of the technical assistance offered through United Nations programmes, including in particular the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in order to strengthen national capacities and infrastructures in the field of juvenile justice, with a view to implementing fully the provisions of the Convention relating to juvenile justice, as well as making effective use and application of the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice;

3. Invites the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund and other relevant United Nations bodies and programmes to give favourable consideration to requests by Member States for technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice;

4. Calls upon Member States to contribute financial and other resources to project activities designed to assist in the use of the Guidelines for Action;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to strengthen the system-wide coordination of activities in the field of juvenile justice, including the prevention of juvenile delinquency, in particular with regard to research, dissemination of information, training and the effective use and application of existing standards and norms, as well as the implementation of technical assistance projects;

6. Also invites the Secretary-General to consider establishing a coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice, subject to the availability of regular budget or extrabudgetary funds, as recommended in the Guidelines for Action, which could be convened at least annually with a view to coordinating such international activities in the field of juvenile justice and could consist of representatives of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights and the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, together with representatives of the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and other relevant United Nations organizations and specialized agencies, as well as of other interested intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations, including international networks concerned with juvenile justice issues and academic institutions involved in the provision of technical advice and assistance;

7. Further invites the Secretary-General to undertake, subject to the availability of regular budget or extrabudgetary funds and in cooperation with interested Governments, needs-assessment missions on the basis of recommendations made by the Committee on the Rights of the Child, with a view to reforming or improving the juvenile justice systems of requesting States, through joint initiatives involving, as required, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank and other international and regional financial institutions and organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and academic institutions, including existing international networks concerned with juvenile justice issues, taking into account the advice of any panel established pursuant to paragraph 6 above;

8. Requests those organizations and bodies, subject to the availability of regular budget or extrabudgetary funds, as well as interested Governments, to offer assistance through short-, medium- and long-term projects to those States parties to the Convention which the Committee on the Rights of the Child considers to be in need of improvement in their juvenile justice systems, and recommends that such projects be undertaken in the context of the report of the States parties concerned on the implementation of the Convention, in accordance with article 44 of the Convention;

9. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations and bodies referred to in paragraph 7 above to include in their programme activities a component on juvenile justice, with a view to ensuring the implementation of the present resolution;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on a biennial basis on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System

1. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/13 of 23 July 1996, the present Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System were developed at the expert group meeting on the elaboration of a programme of action to promote the effective use and application of international standards and norms in juvenile justice, held at Vienna from 23 to 25 February 1997 with the financial support of the Government. In developing the Guidelines for Action, the experts took into account the views expressed and the information submitted by Governments.

2. Twenty-nine experts from eleven States in different regions, representatives of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, as well as observers for non-governmental organizations concerned with juvenile justice, participated in the meeting.

3. The Guidelines for Action are addressed to the Secretary-General and relevant United Nations agencies and programmes, States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as regards its implementation, as well as Member States as regards the use and application of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines) and the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty, hereinafter together referred to as "United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice".

I. Aims, objectives and basic considerations

4. The aims of the Guidelines for Action are to provide a framework to achieve the following objectives:

(a) To implement the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to pursue the goals set forth in the Convention with regard to children in the context of the administration of juvenile justice, as well as to use and apply the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice and other related instruments, such as the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;

(b) To facilitate the provision of assistance to States parties for the effective implementation of the Convention and related instruments.

5. In order to ensure effective use of the Guidelines for Action, improved cooperation between Governments, relevant entities of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations, professional groups, the media, academic institutions, children and other members of civil society is essential.

6. The Guidelines for Action should be based on the principle that the responsibility for implementing the Convention clearly rests with the States parties thereto.

7. The basis for the use of the Guidelines for Action should be the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

8. In the use of the Guidelines for Action at both the international and national levels, consideration should be given to the following:

(a) Respect for human dignity, compatible with the four general principles underlying the Convention, namely: non-discrimination, including gender-sensitivity, upholding the best interests of the child, the right to life, survival and development and respect for the views of the child;

(b) A rights-based orientation;

(c) A holistic approach to implementation through maximization of resources and efforts;

(d) The integration of services on an interdisciplinary basis;

(e) The participation of children and concerned sectors of society;

(f) The empowerment of partners through a developmental process;

(g) Sustainability without continuing dependency on external bodies;

(h) Equitable application and accessibility to those in greatest need;

(i) Accountability and transparency of operations;

(j) Proactive responses based on effective preventive and remedial measures.

9. Adequate resources (human, organizational, technological, financial and information) should be allocated and utilized efficiently at all levels (international, regional, national, provincial and local) and in collaboration with relevant partners, including Governments, United Nations entities, non-governmental organizations, professional groups, the media, academic institutions, children and other members of civil society, as well as other partners.

II. Plans for the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the pursuit of its goals and the use and application of international standards and norms in juvenile justice

A. Measures of general application

10. The importance of a comprehensive and consistent national approach in the area of juvenile justice should be recognized, with respect for the interdependence and indivisibility of all rights of the child.

11. Measures relating to policy, decision-making, leadership and reform should be taken, with the goal of ensuring that:

(a) The principles and provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice are fully reflected in national and local legislation policy and practice, in particular by establishing a child-oriented juvenile justice system that guarantees the rights of children, prevents the violation of the rights of children, promotes children's sense of dignity and worth and fully respects their age, their stage of development and their right to participate meaningfully in and contribute to society;

(b) The relevant contents of the above-mentioned instruments are made widely known to children in language accessible to children. In addition, if necessary, procedures should be established to ensure that each and every child is provided with the relevant information on his or her rights set out in those instruments, at least from his or her first contact with the criminal justice system, and is reminded of his or her obligation to obey the law;

(c) Understanding on the part of the public and the media of the spirit, aims and principles of justice centred on the child is promoted in accordance with the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice.

B. Specific targets

12. States should ensure the effectiveness of their birth registration programmes. In those instances where the age of the child involved in the justice system is unknown, measures should be taken to ensure that the true age of a child is ascertained by independent and objective assessment.

13. Notwithstanding the age of criminal responsibility, civil majority and the age of consent as defined by national legislation, States should ensure that children benefit from all their rights, as guaranteed to them by international law and, specifically in this context, those set forth in articles 3, 37 and 40 of the Convention.

14. Particular attention should be given to the following points:

(a) There should be a comprehensive child-centred juvenile justice process;

(b) Independent expert or other types of panels should review existing and proposed juvenile justice laws and their impact on children;

(c) No child who is under the legal age of criminal responsibility should be subject to criminal charges;

(d) States should establish juvenile courts with primary jurisdiction over juveniles who commit criminal acts and special procedures should be designed to take into account the specific needs of children. As an alternative, regular courts should incorporate such procedures, as appropriate. Wherever necessary, national legislative and other measures should be considered to accord all the rights of and protection for the child, where the child is brought before a court other than a juvenile court, in accordance with articles 3, 37 and 40 of the Convention.

15. A review of existing procedures should be undertaken and, where possible, diversion or other alternative initiatives to the classic criminal justice systems should be developed to avoid recourse to the criminal justice systems for young persons accused of an offence. Appropriate steps should be taken to make available throughout the State a broad range of alternative and educative measures at the pre-arrest, pre-trial, trial and post-trial stages, in order to prevent recidivism and promote the social rehabilitation of child offenders. Whenever appropriate, mechanisms for the informal resolution of disputes in cases involving a child offender should be utilized, including mediation and restorative justice practices, in particular processes involving victims. In the various measures to be adopted, the family should be involved, to the extent that it operates in favour of the good of the child offender. States should ensure that alternative measures comply with the Convention and the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice, as well as other existing standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, such as the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules), with special regard to ensuring respect for due-process rules in applying such measures and for the principle of minimum intervention.

16. Priority should be given to setting up agencies and programmes to provide legal and other assistance such as interpretation services to children, if necessary, free of charge, and, in particular, to ensure that the right of every child to have access to such assistance from the moment that the child is detained is respected in practice.

17. Appropriate action should be ensured to alleviate the problem of children in need of special protection measures, such as children working or living on the streets or children permanently deprived of a family environment, children with disabilities, children of minorities, immigrants and indigenous peoples and other vulnerable groups of children.

18. The placement of children in closed institutions should be reduced. Such placement of children should only take place in accordance with the provisions of article 37 (b) of the Convention as a matter of last resort and for the shortest period of time. Corporal punishment in the child justice and welfare systems should be prohibited.

19. The United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty and article 37 (d) of the Convention also apply to any public or private setting from which the child cannot leave at will, by order of any judicial, administrative or other public authority.

20. In order to maintain a link between the detained child and his or her family and community and to facilitate his or her social reintegration, it is important to ensure easy access by relatives and persons who have a legitimate interest in the child to institutions where children are deprived of their liberty, unless the best interests of the child would suggest otherwise.

21. An independent body to monitor and report regularly on conditions in custodial facilities should be established, if necessary. Monitoring should take place within the framework of the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice, in particular the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty. States should permit children to communicate freely and confidentially with the monitoring bodies.

22. States should consider positively requests from concerned humanitarian, human rights and other organizations for access to custodial facilities, where appropriate.

23. In relation to children in the criminal justice system, due account should be taken of concerns raised by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other interested parties, in particular systemic issues, including inappropriate admissions and lengthy delays that have an impact on children deprived of their liberty.

24. All persons who have contact with or are responsible for children in the criminal justice system should receive education and training in human rights, the principles and provisions of the Convention and other United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice as an integral part of their training programmes. Such persons include police and other law enforcement officials, judges and magistrates, prosecutors, lawyers and administrators, prison officers and other professionals working in institutions where children are deprived of their liberty, health personnel, social workers, peacekeepers and other professionals concerned with juvenile justice.

25. In the light of existing international standards, States should establish mechanisms to ensure a prompt, thorough and impartial investigation into allegations against officials of deliberate violation of the fundamental rights and freedoms of children. States should equally ensure that those found responsible are duly sanctioned.

C. Measures to be taken at the international level

26. Juvenile justice should be given due attention internationally, regionally and nationally, including within the framework of the United Nations system-wide action.

27. There is an urgent need for close cooperation between all bodies in this field, in particular, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization. In addition, the World Bank and other international and regional financial institutions and organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and academic institutions, are invited to support the provision of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice. Cooperation should therefore be strengthened, in particular with regard to research, the dissemination of information, training, the implementation and monitoring of the Convention and the use and application of existing standards, as well as with regard to the provision of technical advice and assistance programmes, for example, by making use of existing international networks on juvenile justice.

28. The effective implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as the use and application of international standards through technical cooperation and advisory service programmes, should be ensured by giving particular attention to the following aspects related to protecting and promoting the human rights of children in detention, strengthening the rule of law and improving the administration of the juvenile justice system:

- (a) Assistance in legal reform;
- (b) The strengthening of national capacities and infrastructures;
- (c) Training programmes for police and other law enforcement officials, judges and magistrates, prosecutors, lawyers, administrators, prison officers and other professionals working in institutions where children are deprived of their liberty, health personnel, social workers, peacekeepers and other professionals concerned with juvenile justice;

(d) The preparation of training manuals;

(e) The preparation of information and education material to inform children about their rights in juvenile justice;

(f) Assistance with the development of information and management systems.

29. Close cooperation should be maintained between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat in view of the relevance of the protection of the rights of children in peacekeeping operations, including the problems of children and youth as victims and perpetrators of crime in peace-building and post-conflict or other emerging situations.

D. Mechanisms for the implementation of technical advice and assistance projects

30. In accordance with articles 43, 44 and 45 of the Convention, the Committee on the Rights of the Child reviews the reports of States parties on the implementation of the Convention. According to article 44 of the Convention, these reports should indicate factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the degree of fulfilment of the obligations under the Convention.

31. States parties to the Convention are invited to provide in their initial and periodic reports comprehensive information, data and indicators on the implementation of the provisions of the Convention and on the use and application of the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice.

32. As a result of the process of examining the progress made by States parties in fulfilling their obligations under the Convention, the Committee on the Rights of the Child may make suggestions and general recommendations to the States parties to ensure full compliance with the Convention (in accordance with article 45 (d) of the Convention). In order to foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international cooperation in the area of juvenile justice, the Committee transmits, as it may consider appropriate, to the specialized agencies, the United Nations Children's Fund and other competent bodies any reports from States parties that contain a request, or indicate a need, for advisory services and technical assistance, together with the observations and suggestions of the Committee, if any, on those requests or indications (in accordance with article 45 (b) of the Convention).

33. Accordingly, should a State party report and the review process by the Committee reveal any necessity to initiate reform in the area of juvenile justice, including through assistance by the United Nations technical advice and assistance programmes or those of the specialized agencies, the State party may request such assistance, including assistance from the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division, the Centre for Human Rights and the United Nations Children's Fund.

34. In order to provide adequate assistance in response to those requests, a coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice should be established, to be convened at least annually by the Secretary-General. The panel will consist of representatives of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

Division, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network and other relevant United Nations entities, as well as other interested intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations, including international networks on juvenile justice and academic institutions involved in the provision of technical advice and assistance, in accordance with paragraph 39 below.

35. Prior to the first meeting of the coordination panel, a strategy should be elaborated for addressing the issue of how to activate further international cooperation in the field of juvenile justice. The coordination panel should also facilitate the identification of common problems, the compilation of examples of good practice and the analysis of shared experiences and needs, which in turn would lead to a more strategic approach to needs assessment and to effective proposals for action. Such a compilation would allow for concerted advisory services and technical assistance in juvenile justice, including an early agreement with the Government requesting such assistance, as well as with all other partners having the capacity and the competence to implement the various segments of a country project, thus ensuring the most effective and problem-oriented action. This compilation should be developed continuously in close cooperation with all parties involved. It will take into account the possible introduction of diversion programmes and measures to improve the administration of juvenile justice, to reduce the use of remand homes and pre-trial detention, to improve the treatment of children deprived of their liberty and to create effective reintegration and recovery programmes.

36. Emphasis should be placed on formulating comprehensive prevention plans, as called for in the United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines). Projects should focus on strategies to socialize and integrate all children and young persons successfully, in particular through the family, the community, peer groups, schools, vocational training and the world of work. These projects should pay particular attention to children in need of special protection measures, such as children working or living on the streets or children permanently deprived of a family environment, children with disabilities, children of minorities, immigrants and indigenous peoples and other vulnerable groups of children. In particular, the placement of these children in institutions should be proscribed as much as possible. Measures of social protection should be developed in order to limit the risks of criminalization for these children.

37. The strategy will also set out a coordinated process for the delivery of international advisory services and technical assistance to States parties to the Convention, on the basis of joint missions to be undertaken, whenever appropriate, by staff of the different organizations and agencies involved, with a view to devising longer-term technical assistance projects.

38. Important actors in the delivery of advisory services and technical assistance programmes at the country level are the United Nations resident coordinators, with significant roles to be played by the field offices of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Development Programme. The vital nature of the integration of juvenile justice technical cooperation in country planning and programming, including through the United Nations country strategy note, is emphasized.

39. Resources must be mobilized for both the coordinating mechanism of the coordination panel and regional and country projects formulated to improve observance of the Convention. Resources for those purposes (see paragraphs 34 to 38 above) will come either from regular budgets or from extrabudgetary resources. Most of the resources for specific projects will have to be mobilized from external sources.

40. The coordination panel may wish to encourage, and in fact be the vehicle for, a coordinated approach to resource mobilization in this area. Such resource mobilization should be on the basis of a common strategy as contained in a programme document drawn up in support of a global programme in this area. All interested United Nations bodies and agencies as well as non-governmental organizations that have a demonstrated capacity to deliver technical cooperation services in this area should be invited to participate in such a process.

E. Further considerations for the implementation of country projects

41. One of the obvious tenets in juvenile delinquency prevention and juvenile justice is that long-term change is brought about not only when symptoms are treated but also when root causes are addressed. For example, excessive use of juvenile detention will be dealt with adequately only by applying a comprehensive approach, which involves both organizational and managerial structures at all levels of investigation, prosecution and the judiciary, as well as the penitentiary system. This requires communication, inter alia, with and among police, prosecutors, judges and magistrates, authorities of local communities, administration authorities and with the relevant authorities of detention centres. In addition, it requires the will and ability to cooperate closely with each other.

42. To prevent further overreliance on criminal justice measures to deal with children's behaviour, efforts should be made to establish and apply programmes aimed at strengthening social assistance, which would allow for the diversion of children from the justice system, as appropriate, as well as for improving the application of non-custodial measures and reintegration programmes. To establish and apply such programmes, it is necessary to foster close cooperation between the child justice sectors, the different services in charge of law enforcement and the social welfare and education sectors.

III. Plans concerned with child victims and witnesses of crime

43. In accordance with the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, States should undertake to ensure that child victims and witnesses of crime are provided with appropriate access to justice and fair treatment, restitution, compensation and social assistance. If applicable, measures should be taken to prevent the settling of penal matters through compensation outside the justice system, when doing so is not in the best interests of the child.

44. Police, lawyers, the judiciary and other court personnel should receive training in dealing with cases in which children are victims. States should consider establishing, if they have not yet done so, specialized offices and units to deal with cases involving offences against children. States should establish, as appropriate, a code of practice for the proper management of cases involving child victims.

45. Child victims should be treated with compassion and respect for their dignity. They are entitled to access to the mechanisms of justice and to prompt redress, as provided for by national legislation, for the harm they have suffered.

46. Child victims should have access to assistance that meets their needs, such as advocacy, protection, economic assistance, counselling, health and social services, social reintegration and physical and psychological recovery services. Special assistance should be given to those children who are disabled or ill. Emphasis should be placed upon family- and community-based rehabilitation rather than institutionalization.

47. Judicial and administrative mechanisms should be established and strengthened where necessary to enable child victims to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are prompt, fair and accessible. Child victims and/or their legal representatives should be informed accordingly.

48. Access should be allowed to fair and adequate compensation for all child victims of violations of human rights, specifically torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including rape and sexual abuse, unlawful or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, unjustifiable detention and miscarriage of justice. The legal representation needed to bring an action within an appropriate court or tribunal, as well as interpretation into the native language of the child, if necessary, should be available.

49. Child witnesses of crime need assistance in the judicial and administrative processes. States should review, evaluate and improve, as necessary, the situation for children as witnesses of crime in their evidential and procedural law to ensure that the rights of children are fully protected. In accordance with the different law traditions, practices and legal frameworks, direct contact between the child victim and the offender should be avoided as far as possible during the process of investigation and prosecution as well as during trial hearings. The identification of the child victim in the media should be prohibited, where necessary, to protect the privacy of the child. Where prohibition is contrary to the fundamental legal principles of Member States, such identification should be discouraged.

50. States should consider, if necessary, amendments to their penal procedural codes to allow for, inter alia, videotaping of testimony by the child and presentation of the videotaped testimony in court as an official piece of evidence. In particular, police, prosecutors, judges and magistrates should apply more child-friendly practices, for example, in police operations and interviews of child witnesses.

51. The responsiveness of judicial and administrative processes to the needs of child victims and witnesses of crime should be facilitated by:

(a) Informing child victims of their role and the scope, timing and progress of the proceedings and of the disposition of their cases, especially where serious crimes are involved;

(b) Encouraging the development of child witness preparation schemes to familiarize children with the criminal justice process prior to giving evidence. Appropriate assistance should be provided to child victims and witnesses throughout the legal process;

(c) Allowing the views and concerns of child victims to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of the proceedings where their personal interests are affected, without prejudice to the accused and in accordance with the relevant national criminal justice system;

(d) Taking measures to minimize delays in the criminal justice process, protecting the privacy of child victims and witnesses and, where necessary, ensuring their safety from intimidation and retaliation.

52. Children displaced illegally or wrongfully retained across borders are, as a general principle, to be returned to their country of origin. Due attention should be paid to their safety and they should be treated humanely and should receive necessary assistance, pending their return. They should be returned promptly to ensure compliance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child. Where the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction of 1980, the Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Inter-country Adoption of 1993 or the Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Cooperation in respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of the Child of 1996, approved by the Hague Conference on Private International Law, is applicable, the provisions of the convention in question with regard to the return of the child should be promptly applied. Upon the return of the child, the country of origin should treat the child with respect, in accordance with international principles of human rights, and offer adequate family-based rehabilitation measures.

53. The United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, including the institutes constituting the Programme network, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Bank and interested non-governmental organizations should assist Member States, at their request, from within the overall appropriations of their regular budgets or from extrabudgetary resources, in developing multidisciplinary training, education and information activities for law enforcement and other criminal justice personnel, including police officers, prosecutors, judges and magistrates.

Victims of crime and abuse of power

The Secretary-General, in a February note with later addendum [E/CN.15/1997/16 & Add.1], provided the Commission with an overview of recent developments related to the use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, adopted by General Assembly resolution 40/34 [YUN 1985, p. 742], in particular with regard to the implementation of the mandates contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/14 [YUN 1996, p. 1043].

The Secretary-General noted that an Expert Group Meeting on Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power in the International Setting (Tulsa, Oklahoma, United States, 10-12 August 1996) had prepared the first version of the draft "International victim assistance training manual on the use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power". The draft outlined the main elements for the provision of assistance to victims, including: the development of effective victim service programmes; the responsibilities of professionals and volunteers to victims; integration of victim needs in national law, policy and planning, as well as technical assistance projects; and international cooperation to reduce victimization and assist victims. In order to elaborate the final text of the manual and to develop a longer version as a handbook, another Expert Group Meeting was held in The Hague, Netherlands, on 6 and 7 March 1997. The main purpose of both the manual and the handbook was to enable countries to establish programmes to provide emotional and financial support and effectively intervene on behalf of victims. The expert groups began work on establishing a database on promising practices and legislation on victim-related issues as a supplement to the draft manual.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/31 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Victims of crime and abuse of power

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985, by which the Assembly adopted the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power,

Considering that the adoption of the Declaration is an important landmark in international efforts to improve the treatment of victims,

Recalling that the General Assembly, in its resolution 40/34, called upon Member States to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions contained in the Declaration and urged United Nations entities, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to cooperate in the implementation of those provisions,

Mindful of the serious consequences of various forms of crimes, including those committed in cases of armed conflict or military occupation, for the victims,

Bearing in mind all relevant Security Council resolutions, in particular resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 and 955(1994) of 8 November 1994,

Taking into account section IV, paragraph 2, of its resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995 and its resolution 1996/14 of 23 July 1996, in which it noted the usefulness of the manuals published and disseminated by the Secretariat under the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme,

Taking into account also the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power in the International Setting, held at Vienna from 18 to 22 December 1995,

1. Takes note of the progress made in the work on the use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, as reflected in the note by the Secretary-General;

2. Welcomes the establishment of a victim and witness unit as reported in the 1995 yearbook of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991;

3. Recommends that, during armed conflicts, the rights of victims as contained in relevant international law, in particular in international humanitarian law, should be rigorously enforced, that universal adherence to the corresponding treaties and protocols should be promoted and that proper consideration should be given to those issues by the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994;

4. Welcomes the positive developments related to the work of the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, and recommends that, in the statute and rules of procedure of the court, appropriate attention should be given to the principles contained in the Declaration;

5. Also welcomes the fact that the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions has relied on the Declaration in accomplishing his task;

6. Urges Governments to make effective use of the provisions contained in the Declaration and, to that end, to provide for legislation and other mechanisms for their effective use and application, including access to justice and fair treatment, reparation, restitution and compensation, as well as physical, medical and social assistance;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of the Netherlands and the United States of America for having acted as host to two expert group meetings on victims of crime and abuse of power in the international setting, one organized by the United States Department of Justice at Tulsa, United States of America, from 10 to 12 August 1996 and the other organized by the Ministry of Justice of the Netherlands at The Hague on 6 and 7 March 1997;

8. Takes note of the results of those two expert group meetings, which proposed the elaboration of a manual as a strategic guide for policy makers and of a handbook as a resource tool for practitioners and other relevant parties;

9. Welcomes the invitation of the Government of the United States of America to act as host to a fourth expert group meeting, in 1997, in order to complete the work on the proposed handbook;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the proposed manual and the proposed handbook and, drawing on the observations received, to finalize their texts for submission to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh session;

11. Invites Governments to provide the Secretary-General with information on promising practices and legislation concerning victim-related issues with a view to establishing a database and a clearing house for the provision of a continuing service for governmental agencies and non-governmental organizations, as proposed by the above-mentioned expert group meetings;

12. Also invites Governments to make proposals regarding the elaboration of a plan of action with emphasis on the activities of the United Nations, such as technical cooperation activities, so as to promote the effective use and application of the Declaration, as well as the use of the proposed manual and handbook, including new modalities for funding involving also the private sector and non-governmental organizations, such as the establishment of a foundation;

13. Requests the relevant United Nations bodies, programmes and specialized agencies, the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other entities to provide their substantive and technical contributions to such proposals, drawing also on work already done in that field, with a view to ensuring the integration and coordination of activities among the various parties involved;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the above-mentioned entities as well as funding agencies and potential donor countries on the desirability of establishing mechanisms to facilitate the coordination of technical cooperation initiatives to prevent victimization and to assist victims of crime and abuse of power;

15. Reiterates the importance of technical cooperation in providing assistance to those Governments requesting it, as noted in the report of the Secretary-General on the use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, in particular in the form of advisory services, training and assistance in the review or promulgation of national legislation, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide such assistance, drawing on extrabudgetary resources, in close collaboration with the Programme network;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other crime prevention and criminal justice issues

Trafficking in children

In a February report with later addendum [E/CN.15/1997/12 & Add.1], the Secretary-General provided additional information received from Governments since his 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 1034] concerning possible elements to be included in an international convention against trafficking in children. The report also contained the results of a survey, based on existing international conventions, analysing the extent to which children were protected from becoming victims of international trafficking. The analysis also drew on the work accomplished by the working group of the Commission on Human Rights on a draft optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

The Secretary-General concluded that, based on the information received, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice might feel the need to develop an international convention. He suggested that the Commission might wish to establish an open-ended inter-sessional working group to elaborate elements of a draft convention; or establish a pre-sessional working group to identify the scope and main content of a possible convention; or ask the Secretariat to organize a meeting of experts to develop a set of specific proposals for the Commission's consideration in 1998 and to seek the views of Member States on the possible elements of a convention and on the main issues to be covered, and to provide data on the extent to which children became victims of transborder trafficking in practice.

Violence against women

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/12 [YUN 1996, p. 1068], the Secretary-General, in a March report with later addendum [E/CN.15/1997/11 & Add.1], presented the views of Member States, institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, relevant UN entities and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the draft practical measures, strategies and activities for the elimination of violence against women. The draft measures, strategies and activities were considered by the Commission in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1068] under the title "Draft plan of action on the elimination of violence against women". Annexed to the report was the revised text of the draft measures, strategies and activities, taking into account the views submitted to the Secretary-General. The report proposed a series of actions for the Commission, among them, to consider the revised draft measures with a view to adopting them; focus on ways of implementing the measures with the support of the Secretariat; and improve coordination with various partners in the UN system. (See PART TWO, Chapter II, and PART THREE, Chapter X.)

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/24 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/86 without vote [agenda item 103].

Crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind its resolution 48/104 of 20 December 1993, in which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, and recalling the definition of violence against women contained in articles 1 and 2 of the Declaration,

Strongly condemning all forms of violence against women,

Stressing that the effective implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women contributes to the elimination of violence against women and that the implementation of the Declaration strengthens and complements that process,

Recalling the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women and, in particular, the determination of Governments to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls,

Recognizing the need to implement fully the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and to develop strategies and practical measures in that field,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/44 of 11 April 1997 on the elimination of violence against women,

Welcoming the renewal of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, by the Commission on Human Rights,

Recalling the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Rapporteur, stressed by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1997/44, that States have an affirmative duty to promote and protect the human rights of women and must exercise due diligence to prevent violence against women,

Reaffirming Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/12 of 23 July 1996 on the elimination of violence against women,

Expressing deep concern about the high social, health and economic costs to the individual and society that are associated with violence against women,

Bearing in mind that criminal justice agencies should work closely with practitioners in other sectors, including health, social services and education, and with members of the community to deal with the problem of violence against women,

Acknowledging the valuable contribution made by non-governmental organizations, organizations seeking women's equality and community agencies in working towards the elimination of violence against women,

1. Urges Member States to review and evaluate their legislation and legal principles, procedures, policies and practices relating to criminal matters, in a manner consistent with their legal systems, to determine if they have a negative impact on women and, if they have such an impact, to modify them in order to ensure that women are treated fairly by the criminal justice system;

2. Also urges Member States to undertake strategies, develop policies and disseminate materials to promote women's safety in the home and in society at large, including specific crime prevention strategies that reflect the realities of women's lives and address their distinct needs in such areas as social development, environmental design and educational prevention programmes;

3. Further urges Member States to promote an active and visible policy of integrating a gender perspective into the development and implementation of all policies and programmes in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, which may assist in the elimination of violence against women so that, before decisions are taken, an analysis may be made to ensure that they entail no unfair gender bias;

4. Calls upon the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, through the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat and the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to cooperate with all relevant organs, bodies and other entities of the United Nations system and to coordinate their activities on issues relating to violence against women and to the removal of gender bias in the administration of criminal justice;

5. Calls upon the institutes comprising the Programme network to continue training in the field of violence against women and to consolidate and disseminate information on successful intervention models and preventive programmes at the national level;

6. Requests the Commission to ensure that Strategies for Confronting Domestic Violence: A Resource Manual is published in all official languages of the United Nations, subject to the availability of regular budget or extrabudgetary funds, and acknowledges the contribution of Canada in that respect;

7. Calls upon Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to translate Strategies for Confronting Domestic Violence: A Resource Manual into local languages and to ensure its wide dissemination for use in training and education programmes;

8. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the elimination of violence against women, including the revision of the draft practical measures, strategies and activities in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice for the elimination of violence against women, based on comments received from Member States, United Nations entities, including the specialized agencies and associate entities, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

9. Adopts the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, annexed to the present resolution, as a model for guidelines to be used by Governments in their efforts to address, within the criminal justice system, the various manifestations of violence against women;

10. Urges Member States to be guided by the Model Strategies and Practical Measures in developing and undertaking strategies and practical measures to eliminate violence against women and in promoting women's equality within the criminal justice system;

11. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, through the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat, to assist Member States, at their request, in utilizing the Model Strategies and Practical Measures;

12. Calls upon the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to continue to consider the elimination of violence against women within the training and technical assistance efforts of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the wide dissemination of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures, with a view to promoting their use;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to transmit the Model Strategies and Practical Measures to the relevant United Nations organizations and bodies, such as the Commission on the Status of Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Commission on Human Rights, including the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and its consequences, and invites those organizations and bodies to develop strategies and practical measures on the elimination of violence against women in their areas of expertise;

15. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider including the question of violence against women at the high-level segments of one of its forthcoming sessions, in the context of its discussion on the human rights of women;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

1. The multifaceted nature of violence against women suggests that different strategies are required for different manifestations of violence and the various settings in which it occurs. The practical measures, strategies and activities described below can be introduced in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to deal with the problem of violence against women. Except where otherwise specified, the term "women" encompasses "girl children".

2. Recalling the definition of violence against women contained in the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and reiterated in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice build upon the measures adopted by Governments in the Platform for Action, bearing in mind that some groups of women are especially vulnerable to violence.

3. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures specifically acknowledge the need for an active policy of bringing into the mainstream a gender perspective in all policies and programmes related to violence against women and of achieving gender equality and equal and fair access to justice, as well as establishing the goal of gender balance in areas of decision-making related to the elimination of violence against women. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures should be applied as guidelines in a manner consistent with relevant international instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with a view to furthering their fair and effective implementation.

4. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures should be implemented by Member States and other entities, without prejudice to the principle of gender equality before the law, in order to facilitate the efforts by Governments to deal with the various manifestations of violence against women within the criminal justice system.

5. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures are aimed at providing de jure and de facto equality between women and men. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures do not give preferential treatment to women but are aimed at ensuring that any inequalities or forms of discrimination that women face in achieving access to justice, particularly in respect of acts of violence, are redressed.

I. Criminal law

6. Member States are urged:

(a) To periodically review, evaluate and revise their laws, codes and procedures, especially their criminal laws, to ensure their value and effectiveness in eliminating violence against women and to remove provisions that allow for or condone violence against women;

(b) To review, evaluate and revise their criminal and civil laws, within the framework of their national legal systems, in order to ensure that all acts of violence against women are prohibited and, if not, to adopt measures to do so;

(c) To review, evaluate and revise their criminal laws in order to ensure that:

- (i) Persons who are brought before the courts on judicial matters in respect of violent crimes or who are convicted of such crimes can be restricted in their possession and use of firearms and other regulated weapons, within the framework of their national legal systems;
- (ii) Individuals can be prohibited or restrained, within the framework of their national legal systems, from harassing, intimidating or threatening women.

II. Criminal procedure

7. Member States are urged to review, evaluate and revise their criminal procedure, as appropriate, in order to ensure that:

(a) The police have, with judicial authorization where required by national law, adequate powers to enter premises and conduct arrests in cases of violence against women, including confiscation of weapons;

(b) The primary responsibility for initiating prosecutions lies with prosecution authorities and does not rest with women subjected to violence;

(c) Women subjected to violence have an opportunity to testify in court proceedings equal to that of other witnesses and that measures are available to facilitate such testimony and to protect their privacy;

(d) Rules and principles of defence do not discriminate against women and such defences as honour or provocation do not allow perpetrators of violence against women to escape all criminal responsibility;

(e) Perpetrators who commit acts of violence against women while voluntarily under the influence of alcohol or drugs are not absolved of all criminal or other responsibility;

(f) Evidence of prior acts of violence, abuse, stalking and exploitation by the perpetrator is considered during court proceedings, in accordance with the principles of national criminal law;

(g) Courts, subject to the constitution of their State, have the authority to issue protection and restraining orders in cases of violence against women, including removal of the perpetrator from the domicile, prohibiting further contact with the victim and other affected parties, inside and outside the domicile, and to impose penalties for breaches of these orders;

(h) Measures can be taken when necessary to ensure the safety of victims and their families and to protect them from intimidation and retaliation;

(i) Safety risks are taken into account in decisions concerning non-custodial or quasi-custodial sentences, the granting of bail, conditional release, parole or probation.

III. Police

8. Member States are urged, within the framework of their national legal systems:

(a) To ensure that the applicable provisions of laws, codes and procedures related to violence against women are consistently enforced in such a way that all criminal acts of violence against women are recognized and responded to accordingly by the criminal justice system;

(b) To develop investigative techniques that do not degrade women subjected to violence and that minimize intrusion into their lives, while maintaining standards for the collection of the best evidence;

(c) To ensure that police procedures, including decisions on the arrest, detention and terms of any form of release of the perpetrator, take into account the need for the safety of the victim and others related through family, socially or otherwise, and that these procedures also prevent further acts of violence;

(d) To empower the police to respond promptly to incidents of violence against women;

(e) To ensure that the exercise of police powers is undertaken according to the rule of law and codes of conduct and that the police may be held accountable for any infringement thereof;

(f) To encourage women to join police forces, including at the operational level.

IV. Sentencing and correction

9. Member States are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To review, evaluate and revise sentencing policies and procedures in order to ensure that they meet the goals of:

(i) Holding offenders accountable for their acts related to violence against women;

(ii) Stopping violent behaviour;

(iii) Taking into account the impact on victims and their family members of sentences imposed on perpetrators who are members of their families;

(iv) Promoting sanctions that are comparable to those for other violent crimes;

(b) To ensure that a woman subjected to violence is notified of any release of the offender from detention or imprisonment where the safety of the victim in such disclosure outweighs invasion of the offender's privacy;

(c) To take into account in the sentencing process the severity of the physical and psychological harm and the impact of victimization, including through victim impact statements where such practices are permitted by law;

(d) To make available to the courts through legislation a full range of sentencing dispositions to protect the victim, other affected persons and society from further violence;

(e) To ensure that the sentencing judge is encouraged to recommend treatment of the offender at the time of sentencing;

(f) To ensure that there are appropriate measures in place to eliminate violence against women who are detained for any reason;

(g) To develop and evaluate offender treatment programmes for different types of offenders and offender profiles;

(h) To protect the safety of victims and witnesses before, during and after criminal proceedings.

V. Victim support and assistance

10. Member States are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To make available to women who have been subjected to violence information on rights and remedies and on how to obtain them, in addition to information about participating in criminal proceedings and the scheduling, progress and ultimate disposition of the proceedings;

(b) To encourage and assist women subjected to violence in lodging and following through on formal complaints;

(c) To ensure that women subjected to violence receive, through formal and informal procedures, prompt and fair redress for the harm that they have suffered, including the right to seek restitution or compensation from the offenders or the State;

(d) To provide for court mechanisms and procedures that are accessible and sensitive to the needs of women subjected to violence and that ensure the fair processing of cases;

(e) To establish a registration system for judicial protection and restraining orders, where such orders are permitted by national law, so that police or criminal justice officials can quickly determine whether such an order is in force.

VI. Health and social services

11. Member States, in cooperation with the private sector, relevant professional associations, foundations, non-governmental and community organizations, including organizations seeking women's equality, and research institutes are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To establish, fund and coordinate a sustainable network of accessible facilities and services for emergency and temporary residential accommodation for women and their children who are at risk of becoming or who have been victims of violence;

(b) To establish, fund and coordinate services such as toll-free information lines, professional multidisciplinary counselling and crisis intervention services and support groups in order to benefit women who are victims of violence and their children;

(c) To design and sponsor programmes to caution against and prevent alcohol and substance abuse, given the frequent presence of alcohol and substance abuse in incidents of violence against women;

(d) To establish better linkages between medical services, both private and emergency, and criminal justice agencies for purposes of reporting, recording and responding to acts of violence against women;

(e) To develop model procedures to help participants in the criminal justice system to deal with women subjected to violence;

(f) To establish, where possible, specialized units with persons from relevant disciplines especially trained to deal with the complexities and victim sensitivities involved in cases of violence against women.

VII. Training

12. Member States, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations, including organizations seeking women's equality, and in collaboration with relevant professional associations, are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To provide for or to encourage mandatory cross-cultural and gender-sensitivity training modules for police, criminal justice officials, practitioners and professionals involved in the criminal justice system that deal with the unacceptability of violence against women, its impact and consequences and that promote an adequate response to the issue of violence against women;

(b) To ensure adequate training, sensitivity and education of police, criminal justice officials, practitioners and professionals involved in the criminal justice system regarding all relevant human rights instruments;

(c) To encourage professional associations to develop enforceable standards of practice and behaviour, which promote justice and equality for women, for practitioners involved in the criminal justice system.

VIII. Research and evaluation

13. Member States and the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, relevant entities of the United Nations system, other relevant international organizations, research institutes and non-governmental organizations, including organizations seeking women's equality, are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To develop crime surveys on the nature and extent of violence against women;

(b) To gather data and information on a gender-disaggregated basis for analysis and use, together with existing data, in needs assessment, decision-making and policy-making in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in particular concerning:

(i) The different forms of violence against women, its causes and consequences;

(ii) The extent to which economic deprivation and exploitation are linked to violence against women;

(iii) The relationship between the victim and the offender;

(iv) The rehabilitative or anti-recidivistic effect of various types of intervention on the individual offender and on the reduction of violence against women;

(v) The use of firearms, drugs and alcohol, particularly in cases of violence against women in situations of domestic violence;

(vi) The relationship between victimization or exposure to violence and subsequent violent activity;

(c) To monitor and issue annual reports on the incidence of violence against women, arrest and clearance rates, prosecution and case disposition of the offenders;

(d) To evaluate the efficiency and effectiveness of the criminal justice system in fulfilling the needs of women subjected to violence.

IX. Crime prevention measures

14. Member States and the private sector, relevant professional associations, foundations, non-governmental and community organizations, including organizations seeking women's equality, and research institutes are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To develop and implement relevant and effective public awareness, public education and school programmes that prevent violence against women by promoting equality, cooperation, mutual respect and shared responsibilities between women and men;

(b) To develop multidisciplinary and gender-sensitive approaches within public and private entities that participate in the elimination of violence against women, especially through partnerships between law enforcement officials and services specialized in the protection of women victims of violence;

(c) To set up outreach programmes for offenders or persons identified as potential offenders in order to promote the peaceful resolution of conflicts, the management and control of anger and attitude modification about gender roles and relations;

(d) To set up outreach programmes and offer information to women, including victims of violence, about gender roles, the human rights of women and the social, health, legal and economic aspects of violence against women, in order to empower women to protect themselves against all forms of violence;

(e) To develop and disseminate information on the different forms of violence against women and the availability of programmes to deal with that problem, including programmes concerning the peaceful resolution of conflicts, in a manner appropriate to the audience concerned, including in educational institutions at all levels;

(f) To support initiatives of organizations seeking women's equality and of non-governmental organizations to raise public awareness of the issue of violence against women and to contribute to its elimination.

15. Member States and the media, media associations, media self-regulatory bodies, schools and other relevant partners, while respecting the freedom of the media, are urged, as appropriate, to develop public awareness campaigns and appropriate measures and mechanisms, such as codes of ethics and self-regulatory measures on media violence, aimed at enhancing respect for the rights of women and discouraging both discrimination against women and stereotyping of women.

X. International cooperation

16. Member States and United Nations bodies and institutes are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To exchange information concerning successful intervention models and preventive programmes in eliminating violence against women and to compile a directory of those models;

(b) To cooperate and collaborate at the regional and international levels with relevant entities to prevent violence against women and to promote measures to effectively bring perpetrators to justice, through mechanisms of international cooperation and assistance, in accordance with national law;

(c) To contribute to and support the United Nations Development Fund for Women in its activities to eliminate violence against women.

17. Member States are urged:

(a) To limit the extent of any reservations to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to those that are formulated as precisely and as narrowly as possible and that are not incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention;

(b) To condemn all violations of the human rights of women in situations of armed conflict, to recognize them as being violations of international human rights and humanitarian law and to call for a particularly effective response to violations of that kind, including, in particular, murder, systematic rape, sexual slavery and forced pregnancy;

(c) To work actively towards ratification of or accession to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women for the States that are still not parties to it, so that universal ratification can be achieved by the year 2000;

(d) To give full consideration to integrating a gender perspective in the drafting of the statute of the international criminal court, particularly in respect of women who are victims of violence;

(e) To cooperate with and assist the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences in the performance of his or her mandated tasks and duties, to supply all information requested and to respond to the Special Rapporteur's visits and communications.

XL Follow-up activities

18. Member States, United Nations bodies, subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funds, the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, other relevant international organizations, research institutes and non-governmental organizations, including organizations seeking women's equality, are urged, as appropriate:

(a) To encourage the translation of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures into local languages and to ensure its wide dissemination for use in training and education programmes;

(b) To utilize the Model Strategies and Practical Measures as a basis, a policy reference and a practical guide for activities aimed at eliminating violence against women;

(c) To assist Governments, at their request, in reviewing, evaluating and revising their criminal justice systems, including their criminal legislation, on the basis of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures;

(d) To support the technical cooperation activities of the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network in eliminating violence against women;

(e) To develop coordinated national, regional and subregional plans and programmes to put the Model Strategies and Practical Measures into effect;

(f) To design standard training programmes and manuals for the police and criminal justice officials, based on the Model Strategies and Practical Measures;

(g) To periodically review and monitor, at the national and international levels, progress made in terms of plans, programmes and initiatives to eliminate violence against women in the context of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures.

Prison conditions

On 21 July [meeting 36], on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1997/36 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

International cooperation for the improvement of prison conditions

The Economic and Social Council,

Gravely alarmed by the serious problem confronting many Member States as a result of prison overcrowding,

Convinced that conditions in overcrowded prisons may affect the human rights of prisoners,

Bearing in mind the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 663 C (XXIV) of 31 July 1957 and 2076 (LXII) of 13 May 1977,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/111 of 14 December 1990, adopted on the recommendation of the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, by which the Assembly affirmed the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, annexed to that resolution,

Recognizing that prison overcrowding requires the implementation of effective policies directed towards the rehabilitation of prisoners and their social reintegration, as well as the application of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and the Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners,

Mindful of the fact that the physical and social conditions associated with prison overcrowding may result in outbreaks of violence in prisons, a development that could pose a grave threat to law and order,

Recalling the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules),

Recalling also the resolutions on the conditions of prisoners adopted by United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, in particular resolution 16 on reduction of the prison population, alternatives to imprisonment and social integration of offenders and resolution 17 on the human rights of prisoners, both adopted on 6 September 1985 by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Taking note of the resolution adopted at the seminar entitled "Criminal justice: the challenge of prison overcrowding", organized by the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders with the support of the European Commission, and held at San Jose, Costa Rica, from 3 to 7 February 1997, in which it was recommended, inter alia, that the number of prisoners should not exceed the number that could be held in decent conditions,

Taking note also of the Kampala Declaration on Prison Conditions in Africa, annexed to the present resolution,

Noting the nomination of a special rapporteur on prisons in Africa by the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, in accordance with recommendations contained in the Kampala Declaration,

Mindful that many Member States lack the necessary resources to resolve the problem of prison overcrowding,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to provide assistance to countries, at their request and within existing resources or, where possible, funded by extrabudgetary resources if available, for the improvement of their prison conditions in the form of advisory services, needs assessment, capacity-building and training;

2. Invites other entities of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, as well as intergovernmental organizations, to assist the Secretary-General in implementing the request contained in paragraph 1 above;

3. Urges Member States, if they have not yet done so, to introduce appropriate alternatives to imprisonment in their criminal justice systems;

4. Recommends that Member States, if they have not yet done so, adopt appropriate effective measures to reduce pre-trial detention;

5. Invites international and regional financial institutions such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to incorporate into their technical assistance programmes measures to reduce prison overcrowding, including the construction of adequate infrastructure and the development of alternatives to imprisonment in criminal justice systems;

6. Requests the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to discuss the issue of prison overcrowding in the context of technical cooperation at its eighth session, with a view to achieving greater international cooperation in that area;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Kampala Declaration on Prison Conditions in Africa

Prison conditions

Considering that in many countries in Africa the level of overcrowding in prisons is inhuman, that there is a lack of hygiene, insufficient or poor food, difficult access to medical care, a lack of physical activities or education, as well as an inability to maintain family ties,

Bearing in mind that any person who is denied freedom has a right to human dignity,

Bearing in mind also that the universal norms on human rights place an absolute prohibition on torture of any description,

Bearing in mind further that some groups of prisoners, including juveniles, women, the old and the mentally and physically ill, are especially vulnerable and require particular attention,

Bearing in mind that juveniles must be separated from adult prisoners and that they must be treated in a manner appropriate to their age,

Remembering the importance of proper treatment for female detainees and the need to recognize their special needs,

The participants in the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held at Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That the human rights of prisoners should be safeguarded at all times and that non-governmental agencies should have a special role in this respect;

2. That prisoners should retain all rights which are not expressly taken away by the fact of their detention;

3. That prisoners should have living conditions which are compatible with human dignity;

4. That conditions in which prisoners are held and the prison regulations should not aggravate the suffering already caused by the loss of liberty;

5. That the detrimental effects of imprisonment should be minimized so that prisoners do not lose their self-respect and their sense of personal responsibility;

6. That prisoners should be given the opportunity to maintain and develop links with their families and the outside world;

7. That prisoners should be given access to education and skills training in order to make it easier for them to reintegrate into society after their release;

8. That special attention should be paid to vulnerable prisoners and that non-governmental organizations should be supported in their work with these prisoners;

9. That all the norms of the United Nations and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the treatment of prisoners should be incorporated into national legislation in order to protect the human rights of prisoners;

10. That the Organization of African Unity and its member States should take steps to ensure that prisoners are detained in the minimum conditions of security necessary for public safety.

Remand prisoners

Considering that in most prisons in Africa a great proportion of prisoners are awaiting trial, sometimes for several years,

Considering also that for this reason the procedures and policies adopted by the police, the prosecuting authorities and the judiciary can significantly influence prison overcrowding,

The participants in the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held at Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That the police, the prosecuting authorities and the judiciary should be aware of the problems caused by prison overcrowding and should join the prison administration in seeking solutions to reduce this;

2. That judicial investigations and proceedings should ensure that prisoners are kept in remand detention for the shortest possible period, avoiding, for example, continual remands in custody by the court;

3. That there should be a system for regular review of the time detainees spend on remand.

Prison staff

Considering that any improvement in conditions for prisoners will be dependent on staff having pride in their work and a proper level of competence,

Bearing in mind that this will only happen if staff are properly trained,

The participants in the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held at Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That there should be a proper career structure for prison staff;

2. That all prison personnel should be linked to one government ministry and that there should be a clear line of command between the central prison administration and the staff in prisons;

3. That the State should provide sufficient material and financial resources for staff to carry out their work properly;

4. That in each country there should be an appropriate training programme for prison staff to which the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders should be invited to contribute;

5. That there should be a national or subregional institution to deliver this training programme;

6. That the penitentiary administration should be directly involved in the recruitment of prison staff.

Alternative sentencing

Noting that, in an attempt to reduce prison overcrowding, some countries have been trying to find a solution through amnesties or pardons or by building new prisons,

Considering that overcrowding causes a variety of problems, including difficulties for overworked staff,

Taking into account the limited effectiveness of imprisonment, especially for those serving short sentences, and the cost of imprisonment to the whole of society,

Considering the growing interest in African countries in measures which replace custodial sentences, especially in the light of human rights principles,

Considering that community service and other non-custodial measures are innovative alternatives to imprisonment and that there are promising developments in Africa in this regard,

Considering also that compensation for damage done is an important element of non-custodial sentences,

Considering further that legislation can be introduced to ensure that community service and other non-custodial measures will be imposed as an alternative to imprisonment,

The participants in the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held at Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That petty offences should be dealt with according to customary practice, provided this meets human rights requirements and that those involved so agree;

2. That, whenever possible, petty offences should be dealt with by mediation and should be resolved between the parties involved without recourse to the criminal justice system;

3. That the principle of civil reparation or financial recompense should be applied, taking into account the financial capability of the offender or of his or her parents;

4. That the work done by the offender should, if possible, recompense the victim;

5. That community service and other non-custodial measures should, if possible, be preferred to imprisonment;

6. That there should be a study of the feasibility of adapting successful African models of non-custodial measures and applying them in countries where they are not yet being used;

7. That the public should be educated about the objectives of these alternatives and how they work.

African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights

Considering that the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights has the mandate to ensure the promotion and the protection of human and peoples' rights in Africa,

Considering also that the Commission has shown on many occasions its special concern on the subject of poor prison conditions in Africa and that it has adopted special resolutions and decisions on this question previously,

The participants in the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held at Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend that the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights:

1. Should continue to attach priority to the improvement of prison conditions throughout Africa;

2. Should nominate a Special Rapporteur on Prisons in Africa as soon as possible;
3. Should make the member States aware of the recommendations contained in the present Declaration and publicize United Nations and African norms and standards on imprisonment;
4. Should cooperate with non-governmental organizations and other qualified institutions in order to ensure that the recommendations contained in the present Declaration are implemented in all the member States.

Measures to regulate firearms

In a response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/28 [YUN 1996, p. 1044], the Secretary-General, in March, submitted to the Commission a report [E/CN.15/1997/4 & Corr.1] on measures to regulate firearms. Information collected from Member States on measures to regulate firearms was used to establish a database on the subject, which was available through the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network. An Expert Group Meeting was held (Vienna, 10-14 February) to discuss the finalization of the international study on firearm regulation, prepared in response to Council resolution 1995/27 [YUN 1995, p. 1138]; to make recommendations on firearm regulation; to help finalize the summary of the study; and to improve the survey instrument.

Three regional workshops were held: for Europe (Ljubljana, Slovenia, 22-26 September); for Africa (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 3-7 November); and for the Americas (Sao Paulo, Brazil, 8-12 December) [E/CN.15/1998/4]. A regional workshop for Asia was scheduled for 1998. The workshops reviewed regional developments and priorities of firearm regulation, as well as a number of issues raised in the draft international study. Annexed to the report were the results of the February Expert Group Meeting and a summary of an international study on general firearm regulation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/28 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Firearm regulation for purposes of crime prevention and public health and safety

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 9 of 7 May 1995 adopted by the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995,

Recalling also section IV.A of its resolutions 1995/27 of 24 July 1995 and its resolution 1996/28 of 24 July 1996,

Mindful of the need for effective implementation of those resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on measures to regulate firearms,

Taking note also of the findings contained in the draft "United Nations international study on firearm regulation", prepared by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat,

Taking note further of the work of the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States on the question of control of the international movement of illicit firearms and explosives, including the proposal for a model regulation for the control of the international movement of firearms,

1. Urges Member States that have not already replied to the questionnaire related to the draft "United Nations international study on firearm regulation" to do so by 30 September 1997;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the data collection and dissemination of information on firearm regulation, including the revised survey format referred to in the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Gathering Information on and Analysis of Firearm Regulation, held at Vienna from 10 to 14 February 1997, and the ongoing and regular maintenance of a list of contact persons and organizations in each Member State with the responsibility of providing such information and enhancing the existing database on firearm regulation;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the proposal of the Secretary-General to convene an ad hoc meeting of representatives of relevant international organizations with a view to better coordinating the data collection that is necessary for a more complete understanding of the issues affecting firearm regulation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to promote, within existing resources, technical cooperation projects that recognize the relevance of firearm regulation in addressing violence against women, in promoting justice for victims of crime and in addressing the problem of children and youth as victims and perpetrators of crime, and in re-establishing or strengthening the rule of law in post-conflict peacekeeping projects;

5. Encourages Member States to consider, where they have not yet done so, regulatory approaches to the civilian use of firearms that include the following common elements:

(a) Regulations relating to firearm safety and storage;

(b) Appropriate penalties and/or administrative sanctions for offences involving the misuse or unlawful possession of firearms;

(c) Mitigation of or exemption from criminal responsibility, amnesty or similar programmes that individual Member States determine to be appropriate, so as to encourage citizens to surrender illegal, unsafe or unwanted firearms;

(d) A licensing system, including the licensing of firearm businesses, to ensure that firearms are not distributed to persons convicted of serious crimes or other persons who are prohibited under the laws of the respective Member States from owning or possessing firearms;

(e) A record-keeping system for firearms, including a system for the commercial distribution of firearms and a requirement for appropriate marking of firearms at manufacture and upon import, to assist criminal investigations, discourage theft and ensure that firearms are distributed only to persons who may lawfully own or possess firearms under the laws of the respective Member States;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the provisional agendas for the four regional workshops on firearm regulation to be organized in 1997 in accordance with the work plan approved by the Council in its resolution 1996/28, within existing resources or subject to the availability of extrabudgetary funding, the possible development of a United Nations declaration of principles, based on the regulatory approaches suggested above, the collection of comparable information on firearm regulation, the provision of technical assistance, training and information sharing and the need for implementing bilateral, regional or multilateral agreements or arrangements on combating illicit trafficking in firearms, in order to ensure that all Member States have sufficient capacity in the area of firearm regulation, and requests that interested non-governmental organizations should each be allowed to make a statement at the regional workshops on subjects covered in their agenda but should not be permitted to attend workshop meetings where sensitive law enforcement issues will be discussed;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States, the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, relevant United Nations entities and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on the development of a declaration of principles, based on the regulatory approaches suggested above, and to submit a report containing the views received to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh session;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to explore ways and means of developing a programme of continuing education for criminal justice administrators and of public education and awareness-building in relation to the links between firearms in civilian use and the unacceptable levels of violence in cities, communities and families and to disseminate that information in order to encourage Member States to undertake similar programmes;

9. Encourages Member States to ensure the tracing of illegal firearms and accurate and prompt responses to requests from other Member States for firearm-tracing;

10. Invites the International Criminal Police Organization to review the firearm- and ballistic-tracing capabilities of its member States, with a view to advising the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the adequacy of those capabilities, and to clarify and compile common firearm terminology and descriptions, preferably in the form of an index, in order to enhance the sharing of investigative information on illegal firearms among Member States;

11. Invites the United Nations Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, established in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 50/70 B of 12 December 1995, and other relevant specialized intergovernmental organizations to provide the Commission with available information about the results of their work in relation to the proliferation of illegal military small arms in Member States;

12. Invites the Customs Cooperation Council, also called the World Customs Organization, to review international customs practices relating to the movement of firearms for civilian purposes and worldwide trends in firearm smuggling, including such matters as import and export licensing, monitoring, standard protocols, including a common import and export certificate, and an advance notification system, with a view to advising the Commission on the effectiveness of controls concerning the international movement of firearms;

13. Invites other relevant intergovernmental organizations to re-analyse their data on issues related to firearms, within the scope of the United Nations international study on firearm regulation, with a view to informing the Commission, through the Secretary-General, of possible steps towards improving the collection and analysis of the related interdisciplinary statistics;

14. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to publish the "United Nations international study on firearm regulation", as scheduled in the work plan approved in Council resolution 1996/28, and to disseminate the study as widely as possible;

15. Encourages Member States to disseminate the report of the Secretary-General on measures to regulate firearms and the "United Nations international study on firearm regulation" in their own countries and to consider the usefulness of the report and the study in evaluating whether to undertake new initiatives in firearm regulation;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it to the Commission at its seventh session;

17. Decides that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice should consider the item entitled "Measures to regulate firearms" at its seventh session, drawing on the report of the Secretary-General referred to in paragraph 16 above.

Statistics and computerization

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/11 [YUN 1996, p. 1045], the Secretary-General, in a March report [E/CN.15/1997/5], reviewed the computerization of criminal justice operations and the development, analysis and policy use of crime and criminal justice information. He described the status of the Fifth United Nations Survey of Crime Trends and Operations of Criminal Justice Systems covering the period 1990-1994, which was being conducted jointly by the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division and the Statistics Division. The report described other data collection and statistical activities and analysed replies received from Member States to a survey of national capacities for the collection of crime statistics. The replies indicated that all respondents were keeping statistics on reported or detected crimes. The report summarized the views of Member States on the establishment of an advisory steering group and a standing pool of experts to implement technical cooperation activities. As for future activities, the Secretary-General suggested that the next step in expanding the exchange of information within the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network should be the broader and more systematized electronic provision of information to Commission members.

In April [E/CN.15/1997/5/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Criminal Justice Management and Information Projects: Improving National and International Data Collection and Exchange (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 10-13 March). The Group made recommendations on the implementation of the Fifth United Nations Survey, on the survey of national capacities for the collection of data on crime prevention and criminal justice, and on the establishment of an advisory steering group and a standing pool of experts. It also made recommendations on the Guide on Development and Analysis of Criminal Justice Statistics and the question of transnational crime.

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/27 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme with regard to the development of crime statistics and the operations of criminal justice systems

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1996/11 of 23 July 1996, entitled "International cooperation and assistance in the management of the criminal justice system: computerization of criminal justice operations and the development, analysis and policy use of crime and criminal justice information", in which it urged Member States to assist the Secretary-General in strengthening the technical cooperation capacity of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network,

Recalling also the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Criminal Justice Management and Information Projects: Improving National and International Data Collection and Exchange, held at Buenos Aires from 10 to 13 March 1997,

Considering the importance of the exchange of information and technical assistance with regard to the computerization of operational information in criminal justice,

Mindful that the development of adequate national capacities is vital to the reliability of global statistics,

Considering the urgent need for statistics on conventional types of crime and on transnational crime that can be used for comparative purposes,

Considering also that crime and criminal justice statistics that can be used for comparative purposes are an indispensable tool for designing criminal policies,

Taking into account the fact that modern information technologies offer new opportunities both for improved operational information systems and for the collection, analysis and dissemination of statistical information,

Noting with appreciation the directory of computerized criminal justice information systems published by the European Institute for Crime Prevention and Control, affiliated with the United Nations, and the draft model of the European Sourcebook of Crime and Criminal Justice Statistics, to be published by the Council of Europe,

Noting with appreciation also the interregional training course entitled "The United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network: Providing Information to and from Developing Countries", hosted by the Government of the Republic of Korea, which was held at Seoul from 9 to 13 September 1996,

1. Urges Member States to designate offices or bodies responsible for the coordination of data collection at the country level, with a view to improving cooperation with the United Nations, and to communicate information on the designated coordinating offices or bodies to the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide assistance, upon request, to those Member States that might have difficulties in replying to the questionnaires related to the United Nations surveys of crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems;

3. Recommends that the Secretary-General carry out the Sixth United Nations Survey of Crime Trends and Operations of Criminal Justice Systems for the period 1995-1997 and that subsequent core surveys be conducted every three or four years and include, when needed, supplementary surveys on selected topics;

4. Urges Member States and the relevant institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network to assist the Secretary-General in establishing an advisory steering group, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/11, drawing upon extrabudgetary resources, to carry out the following operational tasks:

(a) Assisting Member States, at their request, through, inter alia, a standing pool of experts, in the review and assessment of experiences in the computerization of criminal justice operations and/or in the implementation of actual computerization projects;

(b) Assisting Member States, at their request, through, inter alia, a standing pool of experts, in technical cooperation projects to strengthen national capacities for the collection, analysis and dissemination of crime and criminal justice statistics, including participation in the United Nations surveys of crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems and the international surveys of victims of crime;

(c) Assisting Member States, at their request, in the training, at the national, regional and interregional levels, of experts in the collection, analysis, dissemination and policy use of crime and criminal justice statistics;

(d) Assisting the Secretary-General in the design of a core questionnaire for future United Nations surveys of crime trends and operations of criminal justice systems and in the design of supplementary questionnaires on extensive ad hoc topics;

(e) Assisting the Secretary-General in the design of an effective framework for the collection of data on transnational crime;

(f) Assisting in the dissemination of statistical and other relevant policy information on crime and criminal justice by means of modern information technologies, in collaboration with the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network and the United Nations On-line Crime and Justice Clearing House;

(g) Assisting in the training of officials responsible for maintaining national crime and criminal justice statistics in order to improve national data collection capacities;

5. Welcomes the offer of the Governments of Argentina and the Netherlands to support the work of the advisory steering group by hosting regional and/or inter-regional meetings, and invites other Member States to provide similar support;

6. Also welcomes the offer of the Government of Canada to assist the Secretariat, which will work in cooperation with the members of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network and other interested experts, in the preparation of the Guide on the Development and Analysis of Criminal Justice Statistics;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to develop, in cooperation with the members of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network and other interested experts, an annex to the above-mentioned Guide that would include specific examples of basic statistical instruments used for data collection, such as questionnaires, information output, reports, classifications, definitions and victimological issues, with a view to making national approaches to data collecting more compatible, thus making data comparable.

Preparations for Tenth UN Crime Congress

A February report of the Secretary-General on preparations for the Tenth (2000) United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders [E/CN.15/1997/2 & Corr.1 & Add.1] summarized the views of Governments, relevant UN bodies and agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, regarding the theme, agenda items, workshop topics and possible venue of the Congress. The report provided an overview of experience gained in preparation for the Ninth (1995) Congress [YUN 1995, p. 1132] and outlined suggestions on substantive and organizational arrangements for the Tenth Congress.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1997/30], adopted resolution 1997/23 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 52/91 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/635], adopted resolution 52/91 without vote [agenda item 103].

Preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/145 of 21 December 1995 on the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Considering that, pursuant to its resolutions 415(V) of 1 December 1950 and 46/152 of 18 December 1991, the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be convened in the year 2000,

Recognizing the significant contributions of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders to the promotion and strengthening of international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Bearing in mind the new role of the congresses, as stipulated in paragraph 29 of the Statement of Principles and Programme of Action of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme contained in the annex to resolution 46/152,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/32 of 27 July 1993 and the draft rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders annexed to that resolution,

Recalling resolution 5/1 of 30 May 1996 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in which the Commission requested the Secretary-General to summarize the views received from Governments, relevant agencies and programmes of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerning the proposals for the theme, format, agenda items, workshop topics and possible venue of the Tenth Congress for consideration by the Commission at its sixth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on its sixth session and of its discussion on the preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

2. Decides that the Tenth Congress should be held in the year 2000 and that the following topics should be included in its provisional agenda, as recommended by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its sixth session:

(a) Promoting the rule of law and strengthening the criminal justice system;

(b) International cooperation in combating transnational crime: new challenges in the twenty-first century;

(c) Effective crime prevention: keeping pace with new developments;

(d) Offenders and victims: accountability and fairness in the justice process;

3. Also decides that four workshops on the following issues should be held within the framework of the Tenth Congress:

(a) Combating corruption;

(b) Crimes related to the computer network;

(c) Community involvement in crime prevention;

(d) Women in the criminal justice system;

4. Welcomes the offer by the Government of South Africa to host the Tenth Congress, and requests the Secretary-General to initiate consultations with the Government and to report to the Commission at its seventh session;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the statement made on behalf of the Government of Austria that, if consensus could be reached and questions of timing could be resolved, that Government would be honoured to host the Tenth Congress at Vienna;

6. Requests the Commission, at its seventh session, to finalize the programme for the Tenth Congress and to make its final recommendations, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly, taking into account the fact that the Tenth Congress should deal with a limited number of precisely defined substantive topics reflecting the urgent needs of the world community and should include practical technical workshops on well-focused issues related to the substantive agenda items;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a discussion guide for the consideration of the Commission, in cooperation with the institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders affiliated with the United Nations, and invites Member States to be actively involved in that process;

8. Invites the regional commissions, the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, government-appointed national correspondents in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, the specialized agencies and other entities within the United Nations system, the intergovernmental organizations concerned and relevant non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to become actively involved in the preparations for the Tenth Congress;

9. Invites Member States to be represented at the Tenth Congress at a high political level, for example by heads of State, government ministers and attorneys-general;

10. Decides to reserve the first two days of the plenary session at the Tenth Congress following its opening primarily for statements by such representatives at a high political level on the main themes of the Congress;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare an overview of the state of crime and criminal justice worldwide for presentation at the opening of the Tenth Congress;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General to facilitate the organization of ancillary meetings of non-governmental and professional organizations participating in the Tenth Congress, in accordance with past practice, as well as meetings of professional and geographical interest groups, and to take appropriate measures to encourage the participation of the academic and research community at the Tenth Congress;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to provide the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat, serving as the secretariat of the Tenth Congress, with the resources necessary to undertake, in an effective and timely manner, within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, the preparatory activities for the Tenth Congress, as directed by the Commission, including the organization of regional preparatory meetings, and to ensure adequate resources for the biennium 2000-2001 for other requirements and the conduct of the Tenth Congress itself;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to provide resources, as required, in accordance with established United Nations budgetary practice and within the overall appropriations of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, and adequate resources for the biennium 2000-2001, in order to ensure an appropriate programme of public information relating to the preparations for the Tenth Congress;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available the necessary resources for the participation of the least developed countries in the regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth Congress and in the Congress itself, in accordance with past practice;

16. Invites the Commission, as the preparatory body for the United Nations congresses, to finalize all organizational arrangements for the Tenth Congress at its seventh session, including its dates, duration, documentation and venue;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure proper follow-up action to the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh session.

Human resources

UN research and training institutes

In his July report outlining a programme of reform for the United Nations [A/51/950] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), the Secretary-General stated that he would initiate, in consultation with the United Nations University (UNU) and other research institutes of the UN family, measures for coordinating and rationalizing their activities and ensuring that they contributed more fully and effectively to UN policies, programmes and priorities. Recommendations might be made to Member States to improve governance arrangements in respect of those institutes, possibly including amendments to the UNU Charter. In addition, the United Nations Staff College (UNSC) would be requested, in preparing programmes for international civil servants throughout the UN system, to make full use of the research and capacity-building experience of the research institutes.

JIU report. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/188 [YUN 1996, p. 1051], the Secretary-General, in November [A/52/559], transmitted the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on training institutions in the UN system.

JIU called for the establishment of an effective and flexible division of labour among the main UN system training and research institutions: the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), UNU and the UNSC. The Inspectors suggested that UNITAR should be the clearing house for the needs of personnel from Member States for general training and UNSC should serve the same function for UN staff members. They recommended that UNU conduct research that could be used by all UN training institutions, thus stimulating cooperation and co-ordination among them. Training programmes could best be strengthened through cooperation among UNITAR, UNSC and UNU. JIU also recommended that the Assembly consider all major training issues under a single agenda item, with a view to enhancing the transparency of the activities of training institutions and stimulating cooperation among them.

UN Institute for Training and Research

In October [A/52/367], the Secretary-General transmitted a report approved by the Board of Trustees of UNITAR on the completion of its restructuring, which was carried out in compliance with General Assembly resolution 47/227 [YUN 1993, p. 996]. During the restructuring process, UNITAR transferred its headquarters from New York to Geneva; established a liaison office in New York; continued to operate with no financial assistance from the UN regular budget, as it had for five years; downgraded the post of Executive Director; downsized and streamlined its staff; phased out research functions not related to training; and made efforts to establish closer cooperation with other entities of the UN system.

UNITAR's programmes were aimed at enhancing the functions and performance of national civil servants; some 4,000 people participated in about 70 training events annually in five continents. In identifying and designing its programmes, UNITAR was guided by the following objectives: inter-institutional cooperation and networking; avoiding duplication and building on existing resources; ensuring a valuable contribution in a cost-effective manner; and responding to the needs of recipient countries and inter-governmental organizations.

The Board had launched a fund-raising campaign to expand the Institute's core funding and called on Member States to contribute, in particular those industrialized States that had utilized UNITAR services. The Institute's general fund, which amounted to some $1 million, was not sufficient to allow UNITAR to systematically develop new programmes, share its innovations and experience with other institutions and participate more fully in crafting a more system-wide approach to capacity-building.

In response to Assembly resolution 51/188 [YUN 1996, p. 1051], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/52/492], discussed UNITAR's role within the UN system. In recent years, the UNITAR Board of Trustees had given increasing attention to enhancing the Institute's inter-agency cooperative links and, in September, had reviewed a document by the Executive Director on UNITAR's principal axes of cooperation. He stated that the Institute's cooperative links with the UN Secretariat and with the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the system, were diverse in nature, ranging from occasional events to well-structured, long-term joint ventures. UNITAR had greatly expanded its network of cooperation with regional, national, public and non-governmental institutes, especially research institutions.

The report suggested that the experience of UNITAR in terms of training methods and pedagogical materials would be of value to the UNSC project, established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1050] and inaugurated by the Secretary-General in April 1997. As the Staff College was conceived as a global network of institutions, partnership arrangements would be key to development of the project. The Secretary-General observed that, despite the completion of the restructuring of UNITAR, it remained vulnerable, owing to the fragility of its general fund.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/52/631], adopted resolution 52/206 without vote [agenda item 100].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/227 of 8 April 1993, 48/207 of 21 December 1993, 49/125 of 19 December 1994, 50/121 of 20 December 1995 and 51/188 of 16 December 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, the report of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on the activities of the Institute and the report of the Joint Inspection Unit,

Welcoming the successful restructuring of the Institute and the recent progress made by the Institute in its various programmes and activities, including the improved cooperation that has been established with other organizations of the United Nations system and with regional and national institutions,

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Reiterating that the funding of training programmes offered at the specific request of States or departments and units of the Organization and other organs of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies should be arranged by the requesting parties,

Recognizing that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in view of the growing importance of training within the United Nations and the training requirements of States, and the pertinence of research activities related to training undertaken by the Institute within its mandate;

2. Invites the Institute to strengthen further its cooperation with other United Nations institutes and relevant national, regional and international institutions, as well as with projects;

3. Renews its appeal to all Governments and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in the light of the successful restructuring and revitalization of the Institute;

4. Stresses the need for an effective division of labour among the main training and research institutions of the United Nations system, taking into account the distinct and complementary mandates of the United Nations University, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations Staff College Project, and in this regard notes the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

5. Also stresses the need for better coordination among the main training and research institutions of the United Nations system, and in this regard notes the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit;

6. Further stresses in this regard the need for the General Assembly to consider all major training issues in a coherent manner without prejudice to its resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996;

7. Welcomes the initiative of the Board of Trustees and the Executive Director to explore the possibilities for the Institute to become a partner of the agencies and bodies of the United Nations system with respect to their training programmes, especially for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, consistent with the division of labour;

8. Requests the Board of Trustees to attract, to the extent possible, experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the preparation of the relevant training materials for the programmes and activities of the Institute;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to explore all possible ways and means to provide additional facilities to the Institute for conducting programmes and training courses that are provided at no cost to States and to their representatives accredited to United Nations offices in New York, Nairobi, Geneva and Vienna;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Institute, as well as with the United Nations funds and programmes, to explore ways and modalities to utilize systematically the Institute in the execution of training and capacity-building programmes;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

United Nations University

UNU activities

During 1997, the United Nations University (UNU) continued its research, capacity-building and dissemination activities, as described in a report of the UNU Council to the General Assembly [A/53/31]. UNU carried out global activities in four programme areas: environment, science and technology, development, and peace and governance. The Council's report described UNU efforts in postgraduate training, dissemination of research findings and institutional development and reviewed UNU work in cooperation with other UN organizations. Academic activities were carried out by a decentralized network of scholars working at UNU headquarters in Tokyo, Japan, and by the UNU's eight research and training centres and programmes around the world: the World Institute for Development Economics Research (Helsinki, Finland); the Institute for New Technologies (Maastricht, Netherlands); the International Institute for Software Technology (Macau); the Institute for Natural Resources in Africa (Accra, Ghana); the Institute of Advanced Studies (Tokyo); the International Leadership Academy (Amman, Jordan); the International Network on Water, Environment and Health (Hamilton, Canada); and the Programme for Biotechnology in Latin America and the Caribbean (Caracas, Venezuela).

In March, the Secretary-General appointed Hans van Ginkel (Netherlands) as the fourth Rector of the UNU, effective 1 September 1997.

UNU Council

The UNU Council, at its forty-fourth session (Tokyo, 1-5 December) [A/53/31], focused on the new Rector's assessment of the University's strengths and weaknesses. It also discussed the 20-year external peer evaluation of UNU planned for 1998 to assess the extent to which the University had fulfilled the objectives set out in its charter over the 11-year period from 1987 to 1997; the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) review (see below); and the adoption of the 1998-1999 budget and academic programme.

On 18 December, the General Assembly (decision 52/450), decided that, beginning in 1998, the report of the UNU Council would be considered directly by the Assembly's Second Committee, in accordance with its programme of work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 22 July [meeting 3] the Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the UNU Council for 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1053], adopted resolution 1997/43 [draft E/1997/L.38, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 6 (h)].

Report of the Council of the United Nations University

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3081 (XXVIII) of 6 December 1973,

Stressing the need to rationalize further the agenda of its substantive session in accordance with the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996,

1. Takes note of the report of the Council of the United Nations University for 1996;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the outgoing Rector of the University for his contribution to the work of the University during his term in office;
3. Recommends that the General Assembly adopt a decision whereby, beginning in 1998, the report of the Council of the University would be considered directly by the Second Committee of the General Assembly in accordance with its programme of work.

JIU report. In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the JIU work programme for 1997-1998 [A/52/267], in which JIU stated that it was prepared to undertake a comprehensive review of UNU since it had been in existence for more than 20 years without a proper external evaluation. The report would cover the functioning of UNU and issues facing it, focusing among other things, on the management, organizational structure, governance arrangements and the relevance of its activities to the emerging needs of the larger UN community.

Human resources for development

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/105 [YUN 1995, p. 1162], the Secretary-General, in an October note [A/52/540], described further action taken by the UN system with regard to developing human resources for development (HRD), with a special focus on inter-agency coordination. The Secretary-General noted two significant developments that had a direct impact on the substance and process of HRD within the UN system: the active efforts under way within the system to coordinate assistance to countries in the follow-up to the major global conferences held during the 1990s and the package of UN system reform proposals announced by the Secretary-General in July 1997 (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). The UN conferences of the 1990s had innovative themes that bore directly on HRD policies and practice. The concept of sustainable livelihoods for all offered a fresh framework for development strategies that could guide HRD and address some of the shortcomings of earlier HRD strategies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/52/628/Add.8], adopted resolution 52/196 without vote, as orally amended [agenda item 97 (h)].

Developing human resources for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/105 of 20 December 1995, 48/205 of 21 December 1993, 46/143 of 17 December 1991 and 45/191 of 21 December 1990, as well as the relevant sections of the Agenda for Development,

Recognizing that people are at the centre of concerns for sustainable development and that the development of human resources is an essential component in the achievement of sustainable development, and stressing that effective human resources development should strengthen people's capabilities and competencies and enlarge the choices available to them in developing their lives and fulfilling their aspirations so as to reach total human development,

Recognizing also that there is a need to integrate human resources development into comprehensive strategies that mainstream a gender perspective, taking into account the needs of all people, in particular, the needs of women and the girl child,

Stressing that Governments have the primary responsibility for defining and implementing appropriate policies for human resources development and that there is a need for continued support from the international community to complement the efforts of Governments of developing countries to promote human resources development in pursuit of their national programmes, plans and strategies for development,

Stressing also that there is a need for a supportive and favourable national and international economic environment that will enhance human resources development in developing countries and promote sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences,

Recognizing that economic reforms and structural adjustment programmes are aimed at benefiting those countries which undertake them but that these programmes can also affect the capacity of Governments to implement appropriate policies that promote human resources development, and that there is a need, in the formulation of these programmes, to continue to integrate measures that mitigate such an effect,

Recognizing also the vital role of South-South cooperation in supporting national efforts at human resources development,

Emphasizing the continued need for coordination and integration among the organs and organizations of the United Nations system in assisting developing countries, in particular the least developed among them, to foster the development of their human resources, especially that of the most vulnerable, and for the United Nations to continue to give priority to human resources development in developing countries,

Recognizing the importance accorded to the human component of development in the declarations and programmes of action adopted at all the major United Nations conferences and summits since 1990,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;
2. Emphasizes that, in the development of human resources, an overall, well-conceived and integrated approach that mainstreams a gender perspective and takes into account the needs of all people should be adopted, incorporating such vital areas as population, health, nutrition, water, sanitation, housing, communications, education and training, and science and technology, as well as taking into account the need to create more opportunities for employment in an environment that guarantees political freedom, popular participation, respect for human rights, justice and equity, all of which are essential for enhancing human capacity to meet the challenge of development;
3. Encourages all countries to apply the requisite policies to ensure the development of their human resources, through education and training and by seeking, where possible, to increase receptivity to technological innovations, including those in the field of information technology;
4. Emphasizes the need to ensure the full participation of women in the formulation and implementation of national policies to promote human resources development;
5. Acknowledges the efforts of developing countries in promoting human resources development, and, in this regard, emphasizes the need for international cooperation to advance human resources development and the need for concerted efforts to support the efforts of developing countries, especially those in Africa and the least developed countries, to develop their human resources;
6. Encourages all countries to accord priority, in particular in national budgets, to human resources development in the context of the adoption of economic and social policies;
7. Emphasizes that human resources development and institution-building can be promoted through South-South cooperation, and calls upon countries to take action in this regard;
8. Invites international organizations, including international financial institutions, to continue to give priority to supporting the objectives of human resources development and to integrating them into their policies, programmes and operations;
9. Emphasizes that structural adjustment programmes should support social development goals, in particular the eradication of poverty, the promotion of full and productive employment and the enhancement of social integration, with due regard to the implementation of sound economic policies;

10. Calls upon the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in accordance with their mandates, work programmes and priorities, to coordinate effectively their activities in support of national and regional action in the area of human resources development and capacity-building, both among themselves and with other development partners, and to strengthen the impact of their development activities on human resources development;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session an assessment of the effectiveness of the contribution made by the United Nations system to advance human resources development through its operational activities, and to make recommendations to further enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of its contribution to human resources development, including the identification of possible new approaches that will enhance their impact;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Sustainable development and international economic cooperation", the sub-item entitled "Human resources development".

Education for all

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/143 [YUN 1995, p. 1129], the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), issued a June progress report on the implementation process of the education for all objectives [A/52/183-E/1997/74]. The report included the conclusions and recommendations of the mid-decade meeting of the International Consultative Forum on Education for All (Amman, Jordan, 16-19 June 1996), and of the third global meeting of the Education for All Forum, established to follow up the 1990 World Conference on Education for All [YUN 1990, p. 763]. Annexed to the report was the Amman Affirmation, which summarized the gains, shortfalls and emerging challenges identified by the Forum following its mid-decade review of progress towards education for all.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/634], adopted resolution 52/84 without vote [agenda item 102].

Education for all

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention on the Rights of the Child the right of every individual to education is recognized as inalienable,

Recalling also its resolutions 42/104 of 7 December 1987, by which it proclaimed 1990 as International Literacy Year, 44/127 of 15 December 1989, 46/93 of 16 December 1991 and 50/143 of 21 December 1995, in which it called for continuing international efforts to promote literacy,

Recalling further its resolution 45/126 of 14 December 1990, in which it called for strengthening efforts towards the elimination of illiteracy of women of all ages,

Mindful of the fact that eradication of illiteracy is one of the paramount objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade,

Deeply concerned about the persistence of the gender gap in education which is reflected by the fact that nearly two thirds of the world's adult illiterates are women,

Convinced that literacy, especially functional literacy and adequate education, represents an indispensable element for the development and harnessing of science, technology and human resources for economic and social progress,

Recalling its resolution 49/184 of 23 December 1994, entitled "United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education", and taking note with satisfaction of resolution 1997/7 of 22 August 1997 of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights on the realization of the right to education, including education in human rights,

Confident that the International Literacy Year and the World Conference on Education for All, held at Jomtien, Thailand, in 1990, resulted in increased awareness and support for literacy efforts and became a turning point in the struggle for a literate world,

Underlining the importance of sustaining and further promoting the progress achieved since the International Literacy Year and the Jomtien Conference,

Welcoming the Amman Affirmation, the final communique of the mid-decade meeting of the International Consultative Forum on Education for All, adopted at Amman in June 1996, which reaffirmed the necessity for and possibility of bringing the benefits of education to all,

Recognizing that, despite the significant progress in basic education, especially the increase in primary school enrolment coupled with a growing emphasis on the quality of education, major problems, both emerging and continuing, still persist which require even more forceful and concerted action at the national and international levels so as to achieve the goal of education for all,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization entitled "Progress report on the implementation process of the education for all objectives";

2. Reaffirms that basic education for all is essential for achieving the goals of eradicating poverty, reducing child mortality, curbing population growth, achieving gender equality and ensuring sustainable development, peace and democracy;

3. Acknowledges the efforts of the mid-decade review of progress towards achieving the goals of education for all in identifying both continuing and emerging challenges, and stresses the need to meet those challenges and to accelerate the efforts to meet the basic needs of people of all age groups, particularly girls and women;

4. Appeals to all Governments to step up their efforts to eradicate illiteracy and to direct education towards the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Also appeals to all Governments to redouble their efforts to achieve their own goals of education for all by setting firm targets and timetables, where possible, including gender-specific education targets and programmes to combat the illiteracy of women and girls, and by working in active partnership with communities, associations, the media and development agencies, to reach those targets;

6. Appeals anew to Governments and to economic and financial organizations and institutions, both national and international, to lend greater financial and material support to the efforts to increase literacy and achieve education for all;

7. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to further intensify their efforts to effectively implement the World Declaration on Education for All, the Amman Affirmation and the Hamburg Declaration and the Agenda for the Future adopted at the Fifth International Conference on Adult Education, held at Hamburg, Germany, from 14 to 18 July 1997, as well as the relevant commitments and recommendations to promote literacy made at major United Nations-sponsored international conferences, with a view to better coordinating their activities and increasing their contribution to development;

8. Recommends that all Member States and relevant organizations of the United Nations, as well as non-governmental organizations, provide the necessary information on the implementation of the strategies of education for all to the Secretary-General and to the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization so as to enable them to report on the overall progress achieved and the shortfalls encountered in attaining the goal of education for all;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and in consultation with Member States, to consider effective ways and means for achieving the goal of education for all, including the desirability and the feasibility of launching a United Nations decade to eradicate illiteracy, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the question of cooperation towards education for all under the item on social development.

University for Peace

On 4 November [meeting 44], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/9 [draft: A/52/L.10 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 26].

University for Peace

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in its resolution 34/111 of 14 December 1979 it approved the idea of establishing the University for Peace as a specialized international centre for post-graduate studies, research and the dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training and education for peace and its universal promotion within the United Nations system,

Recalling also that in its resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980 it approved the establishment of the University for Peace in conformity with the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace,

Recalling further its resolutions 45/8 of 24 October 1990 and 46/11 of 24 October 1991, on the tenth anniversary of the University for Peace and the report of the Secretary-General on that anniversary, its resolution 48/9 of 25 October 1993, in which it decided to include in the agenda of its fiftieth session the item entitled "University for Peace", and its resolution 50/41 of 8 December 1995, in which it decided to include in the agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "University for Peace" and requested the Secretary-General to consider ways of strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the University for Peace and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session,

Recognizing once again that the University has suffered from financial limitations which have impeded the full development of the activities and programmes necessary for carrying out its important mandate,

Recognizing also the important and varied activities carried out by the University during the period 1995-1997, largely thanks to the financial contributions made by Canada, Costa Rica and Spain and contributions by foundations and non-governmental organizations,

Noting that in 1991 the Secretary-General, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, established a Trust Fund for Peace consisting of voluntary contributions in order to provide the University with the means necessary to extend its sphere of activity to the rest of the world, to take full advantage of its potential capacity for education, research and support of the United Nations and to carry out its mandate of promoting peace in the world,

Noting also that the University has placed special emphasis, in the context of the report of the Secretary-

General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", on the area of conflict prevention, peacekeeping and peace-building, as well as on the peaceful settlement of disputes, and that it has launched programmes in the area of democratic consensus-building and in the training of academic experts in the techniques of the peaceful settlement of conflicts, as well as a broad programme in Central America and the Caribbean on the building of cultures of peace,

Considering the importance of promoting an education for peace which will help to foster respect for the values inherent in peace and universal coexistence among human beings, such as respect for life, friendship and solidarity between peoples and the dignity and integrity of persons irrespective of their nationality, race, sex, religion or culture,

Considering with appreciation that the Government of Uruguay established in 1997 in the city of Montevideo a World Centre for Research and Information on Peace, by agreement with the University for Peace, which gave that Centre the status of regional sub-headquarters of the University for Peace for South America,

Taking into account the efforts being made by the United Nations and by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the development and promotion of a new culture of peace,

Recalling that in its resolution 46/11 it decided to include in the agenda of its forty-eighth session and biennially thereafter an item entitled "University for Peace",

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the intense work done by the University for Peace, to consider ways of strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the University for Peace and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

2. Invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and intergovernmental bodies, as well as interested organizations and individuals, to contribute directly to the Trust Fund for Peace and to the budget of the University;

3. Invites Member States to accede to the International Agreement for the Establishment of the University for Peace, thereby demonstrating their support for a global peace studies institution whose mandate is the promotion of a global culture of peace;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "University for Peace".

Chapter X

Women

In 1997, United Nations efforts to advance the status of women and ensure their rights continued to focus on implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, a comprehensive plan for women's empowerment adopted at the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, China.

The General Assembly took action on follow-up activities to the Conference, including ways to enhance the capacity of the United Nations to implement the Conference outcomes. In addition, the Assembly adopted resolutions on protecting women and ensuring their rights in a variety of situations, including women migrant workers, the girl child, women in rural areas, women in development, traditional practices affecting women's health and trafficking in women and girls.

The Economic and Social Council adopted a comprehensive set of agreed conclusions on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system. It endorsed agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women on 4 of the 12 critical areas of concern identified in the Beijing Platform for Action. The Council also addressed the situation of Palestinian women.

In 1997, the Commission on the Status of Women commemorated its fiftieth anniversary as the only intergovernmental body devoted to women's advancement. During its forty-first session (10-21 March), the Commission continued to monitor implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, in particular the strategic objectives related to the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform for Action. The 45-member Commission also addressed emerging issues related to women's equality, took action to protect the status of women in particular situations, and reviewed the status of women in the United Nations Secretariat (see also PART FIVE, Chapter III).

For the first time, in 1997 the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women held two 3-week annual sessions. At its sixteenth (13-31 January) and seventeenth (7-25 July) sessions, the Committee examined reports from States parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women

Critical areas of concern

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-first session (New York, 10-21 March) [E/1997/27], assessed progress achieved in implementing four of the critical areas of concern contained in the Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] adopted at the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women: women and the environment; women in power and decision-making; women and the economy; and the education and training of women. The remaining critical areas of concern related to poverty, health, violence against women, armed conflict, mechanisms to promote the advancement of women, human rights, the media and the girl child. The Commission adopted a set of agreed conclusions on the four areas considered.

Regarding women and the environment [E/1997/27 (agreed conclusions 1997/1)], the Commission recognized that gender equality was essential in order to achieve sustainable development and called for measures to ensure the active participation of women on an equal footing with men in sustainable development at all levels. The Commission stated that the involvement of women was essential for the development and implementation of policies aimed at promoting and protecting the environmental aspects of human health, and in the development of sustainable and ecologically sound consumption and production patterns and approaches to natural resource management. It proposed a series of actions for Governments, the private sector and the international community.

In its agreed conclusions on women in power and decision-making [agreed conclusions 1997/2], the Commission called for accelerated implementation of strategies promoting women's full and equal participation in decision-making in the political, economic and social spheres. A gender balance should be promoted in governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs), including the United Nations, as well as in the business sector. Political parties should fund training programmes to enable women to run for, be elected to and serve in public office. Structural changes in the work environment were needed to promote reconciliation of work and personal life for women and men.

As to women and the economy [agreed conclusions 1997/3], the Commission stated that economic policies and structural adjustment programmes should be formulated and monitored in a gender-sensitive way, with input from women most impacted by those policies. It recommended that Governments, international organizations, the private sector, NGOs, employers' organizations and labour unions adopt a systematic approach to accelerating women's full participation in economic decision-making and ensure the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in the implementation of economic policies. It called for comprehensive policy-making on the use of analytical tools, effective legislation, transparency of women's and men's wages, changing the gender-based division of labour and the stereotyped choices of men and women; and effective guidance for employers. Governments should ensure women's equal access to economic resources, develop strategies to increase the well-being of low-waged workers, ensure the protection of migrant women workers, and enforce equal opportunity policies and labour laws.

On the education and training of women [agreed conclusions 1997/4], the Commission suggested that Governments, international bodies, donors and NGOs make special efforts to achieve the benchmarks contained in the Platform for Action regarding universal access to basic education. Other actions called for reducing the female illiteracy rate; providing women with labour market information; programme development in education, technical training and lifelong learning; the development of gender-sensitive teaching materials, classroom practices and curricula; and support for women's studies. The Secretary-General should continue to analyse and widely disseminate to Governments and NGOs information on the education and training of women and girls.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/6 [YUN 1996, p. 1060], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission a February report on thematic issues related to the four critical areas of concern [E/CN.6/1997/3]. Drawing on the recommendations of expert group meetings convened by the UN Division for the Advancement of Women, the report presented strategies for accelerating implementation of the Platform for Action in the four areas.

A February note by the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1997/6] described activities already planned or undertaken by the Commission regarding poverty eradication, a critical area of concern that it had considered in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1055], and offered options for further action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1997/27], adopted resolution 1997/17 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on the critical areas of concern identified in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 50/203 of 22 December 1995 and 51/69 of 12 December 1996 on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Conference,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/6 of 22 July 1996 on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, by which a multi-year programme of work for the Commission on the Status of Women was adopted as a framework for assessing the progress achieved in the implementation of the Platform for Action,

Noting that the Commission at its forty-first session reviewed progress achieved in the implementation of the Platform for Action in the critical areas of concern: women and the environment, women in power and decision-making, women and the economy and the education and training of women, and proposed ways and means to accelerate implementation in those four areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on thematic issues before the Commission on the Status of Women and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Calls upon Governments, United Nations agencies and bodies and other international organizations, non-governmental organizations and civil society to co-operate in implementing the strategies adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women and other recent international conferences;

3. Calls upon Governments, the United Nations system and other international organizations to mainstream a gender perspective into all policies and programmes, while maintaining institutional arrangements to carry out research and develop methodologies and tools for mainstreaming, and to advocate gender equality and the enjoyment by women of their human rights;

4. Endorses the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on women and the environment, women in power and decision-making, women and the economy and the education and training of women.

Mainstreaming gender concerns

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/69 [YUN 1996, p. 1062], the Secretary-General in a February report [E/CN.6/1997/2] reviewed progress in the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and in mainstreaming a gender perspective within the UN system. The report focused on the activities of the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Secretariat and the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality, and included information on the joint work plan of the Division for the Advancement of Women and the Centre for Human Rights, which aimed at facilitating the mainstreaming of women's human rights. It also discussed national action plans of Governments and activities of NGOs to implement the outcome of the Conference. In accordance with Council resolution 1996/5 [YUN 1996, p. 393], the Secretary-General presented information on social and economic developments that had a gender impact, in particular the situation of Palestinian women and the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts and subsequently imprisoned.

In accordance with Council decision 1996/310 [YUN 1996, p. 1331], the Secretary-General submitted a June report on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all UN policies and programmes as well as mainstreaming by intergovernmental bodies [E/1997/66]. The report stressed the need to bring a gender perspective not only into socio-economic areas and activities within the responsibility of the Council and its subsidiary bodies, but also into areas where gender issues had not or had only infrequently been considered. It described mainstreaming efforts by the Secretariat and the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the UN system. A series of recommendations were made to the Assembly, the Council and its functional commissions, the regional commissions, UN planning and budgeting programmes and policies, the Division for the Advancement of Women, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW), the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) and gender units and focal points. Proposals were presented regarding capacity-building for mainstreaming, information in support of mainstreaming, gender balance, lessons learned, integrated follow-up to global UN conferences and accountability.

Commission action. In March [E/1997/27 (res. 41/6)], the Commission on the Status of Women, reaffirming that mainstreaming a gender perspective was integral to the empowerment of women and to achieving gender equality, asked the Secretary-General to give due attention to the implementation of the Platform for Action, including mainstreaming. It called on all UN bodies and agencies, in implementing their programmes and assistance, to respect fully the human rights of women and the girl child. UNIFEM was asked to bring its experience in programme countries to the attention of other UN organizations with a view to strengthening the gender perspective of development programmes in developing countries and increasing synergy with other UN organizations. The Secretary-General was asked, in his thematic report to the Commission in 1998 on violence against women, women and armed conflict, the human rights of women and the girl child, to draw special attention to the full participation of women in all aspects of humanitarian assistance programmes. Stressing the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective in the individual programmes of the 1998-2001 medium-term plan [YUN 1996, p. 1299], the Commission encouraged the Committee for Programme and Coordination to examine the issue when reviewing the medium-term plan. The Commission encouraged the Economic and Social Council to develop specific recommendations for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all UN system activities. The Secretary-General was asked to report on the implementation of the Commission's resolution.

Also in March [res. 41/2], the Commission decided to ensure that the contributions and needs of women of all ages, including those of older women, were taken into account when monitoring the mainstreaming of a gender perspective into all UN system policies and programmes.

In other March action [dec. 41/101], the Commission supported the increased efforts by the Division for the Advancement of Women to contribute actively to mainstreaming a gender perspective in all UN activities, programmes and policies and supported the increased cooperation between the Division, the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council and UN bodies and agencies, including the Centre for Human Rights. The intensified activities in coordination and outreach by the Division, including its recurrent publications, were appreciated, in particular the proposal to continue the publication Women 2000 in its new streamlined format, as well as the Women Watch Web site being developed jointly by the Division, UNIFEM and INSTRAW.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

At its July session, the Economic and Social Council [A/52/3/Rev.1] devoted part of the coordination segment to mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system.

It adopted agreed conclusions 1997/2 on the subject, which defined the concept of gender mainstreaming and presented principles for the UN system. Recommendations were made for the intergovernmental process of the United Nations, institutional requirements for mainstreaming in all policies and programmes, gender units and focal points, capacity-building and mainstreaming in the integrated follow-up to global UN conferences.

Women in the Secretariat

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/67 [YUN 1996, p. 1330], the Secretary-General, in a February report [E/CN.6/1997/7], updated information on the status of women in the Secretariat.

The Secretary-General had appointed a Special Adviser on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women, who assisted him in ensuring the system-wide coordination of policy for implementing the Platform for Action and for mainstreaming a gender perspective in all UN activities. The year 1996 had proved to be very difficult for improving the status of women in the Secretariat due to the recruitment freeze, ongoing restructuring, retrenchment and early separation programmes. Nevertheless, the percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution made a slight gain.

Recently, efforts had been made to implement the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) [YUN 1994, p. 1383], which aimed at achieving gender equality by the beginning of the twenty-first century; the issuance and review of special measures for the achievement of gender equality; information-sharing; and staff development and training (see PART FIVE, Chapter III).

Commission action. The Commission on the Status of Women took note of the Secretary-General's report on 21 March [E/1997/27 (dec. 41/102)].

Also on 21 March [dec. 41/101], the Commission stated that efforts should be made to improve service to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and to hold two regular annual sessions of the Committee, starting in 1997. Sufficient resources should be made available to the Division for the Advancement of Women to provide substantive support to the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women.

Enhancing UN capacity

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 51/69 [YUN 1996, p. 1062], the Secretary-General in May reported on ways to enhance the capacity of the Organization and the UN system to support the ongoing follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women [E/1997/64]. The report focused on implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] in intergovernmental forums reporting to the Economic and Social Council, by the regional commissions and in the ACC Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality.

Also in response to resolution 51/69, the Secretary-General in August submitted another report on the subject [A/52/281]. The report described measures taken and progress achieved in implementing the Declaration and Platform for Action by the UN system since the submission to the Assembly of his 1996 report on the subject [YUN 1996, p. 1060]. It also described factors related to the capacity of the UN system in terms of human and financial requirements.

The Secretary-General concluded that significant progress had been made since the submission of his previous report. He stated that the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of agreed conclusions 1997/1 on gender mainstreaming stood out as the most comprehensive intergovernmental action to date on gender mainstreaming. The Council was planning to hold a session in 1998 to further consider integrated conference follow-up, which should provide an opportunity to build upon the agreed conclusions. The consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women of a synthesized report on national action plans in 1998 would provide a comprehensive assessment of action at the national level and a stepping stone for the initiation of the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Platform for Action, scheduled for 2000. The mid-term review of the system-wide medium-term plan on the advancement of women, 1996-2001, by the Commission and the Council in 1998 should accomplish the same purpose with regard to action within the UN system.

Inter-Agency Committee on Women

The ACC Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality held its second session (New York, 5-6 March) [ACC/1997/8] to consider mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the UN system. The Committee was established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1060] to address, system-wide, all aspects of the implementation of the Platform for Action as well as gender-related recommendations emanating from other international conferences.

The Committee decided to establish an inter-sessional working group on gender mainstreaming and entrusted the group with preparing draft guidelines for budgeting processes and coding of budgets. It also decided to continue monitoring the inclusion of gender aspects in the ACC task forces for integrated conference follow-up. The Committee entrusted its Chairman with preparing a draft mission statement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/638], adopted resolution 52/100 without vote [agenda item 106].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/42 of 8 December 1995, 50/203 of 22 December 1995 and 51/69 of 12 December 1996,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolutions 1996/6 of 22 July 1996 on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and 1996/34 of 25 July 1996 on the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, as well as the Council's agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system,

Reaffirming that the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women will require immediate and concerted action by all to create a peaceful, just and humane world based on all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the principle of equality for all people of all ages and from all walks of life, and, to that end, recognizing that broad-based and sustained economic growth in the context of sustainable development is necessary to sustain social development and social justice,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women are important contributions to the advancement of women worldwide and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned, as well as by non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Platform for Action rests primarily at the national level, that Governments, non-governmental organizations and public and private institutions should be involved in the implementation process and that national mechanisms also have an important role to play, and bearing in mind the fact that promotion of international cooperation is essential for the effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

Reaffirming its decision that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with their respective mandates and with its resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and other relevant resolutions, constitute a three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism that plays the primary role in the overall policy-making and follow-up and in coordinating the implementation and monitoring of the Platform for Action, and reaffirming the need for a coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the results of major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Reaffirming that the Commission on the Status of Women has a central role as a functional commission assisting the Economic and Social Council in the monitoring, within the United Nations system, of the implementation of the Platform for Action and in advising the Council thereon and should therefore be strengthened,

Reaffirming also that the Economic and Social Council should continue to oversee system-wide coordination on the basis of an integrated approach in the implementation of the Platform for Action, including the mainstreaming of a gender perspective, and should ensure overall coordination of the follow-up to and implementation of the results of all United Nations international conferences in the economic, social and related fields and report thereon to the General Assembly,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

2. Welcomes the initiatives and actions taken by Governments, the United Nations system and other international organizations, including their secretariats, as well as by non-governmental organizations and other actors of civil society, towards the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Conference;

3. Stresses that Governments have the primary responsibility for implementing the Platform for Action, and reaffirms that Governments should continue to commit themselves at the highest political level to its implementation and should take a leading role in coordinating, monitoring and assessing progress in the advancement of women;

4. Calls once again upon States, the United Nations system and all other actors to implement the Platform for Action, in particular by promoting an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective at all levels, including in the design, monitoring and evaluation of all policies and programmes to ensure effective implementation of all critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action;

5. Calls for intensified efforts at the international level to integrate the equal status and all human rights of women into the mainstream of United Nations system-wide activity and to address those issues regularly and systematically throughout the relevant United Nations bodies and mechanisms;

6. Draws attention to the need to give due consideration to the human rights of women and the girl child in the preparations for the five-year review of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, and the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

7. Welcomes the adoption, by the Economic and Social Council, of agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, to serve as a comprehensive basis for concrete steps to achieve measurable progress in gender mainstreaming at all levels and in all areas, and endorses the definition, set of principles and specific recommendations for gender mainstreaming contained therein;

8. Welcomes also the steps already taken by the Secretary-General to draw the attention of all senior managers in the United Nations system to agreed conclusions 1997/2 of the Economic and Social Council and to the need to ensure full accountability for their implementation, urges the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure that managers are held accountable for gender mainstreaming in their areas of responsibility, and requests the Secretary-General and his senior managers to ensure, inter alia, in the work of the executive committees, that gender mainstreaming is systematically integrated in the reform process of the United Nations;

9. Reiterates that gender mainstreaming as a strategy for achieving gender equality must become an integral part of all policies and programmes in the United Nations system and of national activities to follow up and implement the Platform for Action and the outcomes of other recent United Nations conferences;

10. Directs all of its committees and bodies, and draws the attention of other bodies of the United Nations system to the need to mainstream a gender perspective systematically into all areas of their work, in particular in such areas as macroeconomic questions, operational activities for development, poverty eradication, human rights, humanitarian assistance, budgeting, disarmament, peace and security and legal and political matters;

11. Requests all bodies that deal with programme and budgetary matters, including the Committee for Programme and Coordination, to ensure that all programmes, medium-term plans and programme budgets visibly mainstream a gender perspective;

12. Invites other intergovernmental bodies, such as the governing bodies of the United Nations funds and programmes, to monitor the way in which the concerned agencies, funds and programmes implement gender mainstreaming in their respective medium-term plans and programme budgets, including at the field level;

13. Reiterates the Council's request to the Secretariat to present issues and approaches in a gender-sensitive manner when preparing reports, so as to provide the intergovernmental machinery with an analytical basis for gender-responsive policy formulation;

14. Emphasizes that the role of gender focal points as catalysts for gender mainstreaming and in providing advice, guidance and assistance in monitoring of progress needs to be strengthened, including through adequate resources and through support at the most senior levels of management and decision-making;

15. Requests the Economic and Social Council to ensure that gender mainstreaming is an integral part of all its activities concerning integrated follow-up to recent United Nations conferences, building upon its agreed conclusions 1997/2;

16. Urges Governments that have not yet done so to establish or strengthen appropriate national mechanisms for the advancement of women at the highest political level, appropriate intra- and inter-ministerial procedures and staffing and other institutions with the mandate and capacity to broaden women's participation and integrate gender analysis into policies and programmes;

17. Notes with appreciation that many Governments have developed national strategies and action plans, some of them in consultation with non-governmental organizations, and urges those Governments that have not yet done so to prepare national action plans as strategic planning instruments, and to do so in consultation with non-governmental organizations, in full implementation of the Platform for Action, and to participate in the discussion by the Commission on the Status of Women in 1998 of a synthesis of national action plans as a first step in the comprehensive review and appraisal of the implementation of the Platform for Action;

18. Encourages non-governmental organizations, including women's organizations, to contribute to the design and implementation of these strategies or national plans of action in addition to their own programmes that complement government efforts;

19. Calls upon Governments to invite and encourage the active support and participation of all women and men and a broad and diverse range of institutional actors, including legislative bodies, academic and research institutions, professional associations, trade unions, local community groups and the media, as well as financial and non-profit organizations, in the implementation of the Platform for Action, while emphasizing the principle of shared responsibility between women and men for the achievement of gender equality;

20. Recognizes the importance attached to the regional and subregional monitoring of the global and regional platforms for action by regional commissions and other subregional or regional structures, within their mandates, in consultation with Governments, as well as the necessity of promoting cooperation among Governments of the same region in that respect;

21. Calls upon States to take action to fulfil the commitments for the advancement of women and for the strengthening of international cooperation made at the Fourth World Conference on Women, and reaffirms that adequate financial resources should be committed at the international level for the implementation of the Platform for Action in developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries;

22. Invites the Secretary-General, in the implementation of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for Africa, to pay special attention to the needs and role of women as actors and beneficiaries in the development process;

23. Recognizes that implementation of the Platform for Action in the countries with economies in transition requires continued international cooperation and assistance, as indicated in the Platform for Action;

24. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, a reformulation of policies and reallocation of resources may be needed, but that some policy changes may not necessarily have financial implications;

25. Also reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, adequate mobilization of resources at the national and international levels, as well as new and additional resources to the developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries, from all available funding mechanisms, including multilateral, bilateral and private sources for the advancement of women, will also be required;

26. Calls upon Member States to allocate sufficient resources for undertaking gender impact analyses in order to develop successful national implementation strategies for the Platform for Action;

27. Recognizes that the creation of an enabling environment at the national and international levels is necessary to ensure the full participation of women in economic activities, and calls upon States to remove obstacles for the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;

28. Requests Governments and the international community to implement specific programmes for the eradication of poverty and illiteracy, ensuring women's equal access to education, training, credit, employment and the promotion of entrepreneurial activities, and strongly urges the international community to support national efforts towards the advancement of women in developing countries, particularly those in Africa and the least developed countries;

29. Stresses that full and effective implementation of the Platform for Action will require a political commitment to make available human and financial resources for the empowerment of women, the integration of a gender perspective in budgetary decisions on policies and programmes and adequate financing of specific programmes for securing equality between women and men;

30. Calls upon Member States to commit themselves to achieving gender balance by, inter alia, aiming at gender balance in the composition of delegations to the United Nations and other international forums and by presenting, promoting and appointing women candidates in all government-appointed committees, boards and other relevant official bodies, as well as in all international bodies, institutions and organizations;

31. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to formulate a new system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women to cover the period 2002-2005, to submit a new draft plan to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2000, taking into consideration the results of the Council's 1998 comprehensive mid-term review of the plan covering the period 1996-2001, in order to provide guidance for the medium-term plans of the individual organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, and to submit the draft plan to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-fourth session for comments;

32. Invites the Economic and Social Council to devote one high-level segment and one operational segment to the advancement of women and the implementation of the Platform for Action, taking into account the multi-year programme of work of the Commission on the Status of Women and all other functional commissions of the Council and the need for a system-wide approach to the implementation of the Platform for Action;

33. Welcomes the Council's decision to monitor annually, under an item entitled "Integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits", the way in which its functional commissions and subsidiary bodies mainstream a gender perspective, on the basis of the annual report on the follow-up to the Fourth World

Conference on Women, and once again invites all functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, within their mandates, to take due account of the Platform for Action and to ensure the integration of gender aspects in their respective areas of work;

34. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat can effectively carry out all the tasks foreseen for it in the Platform for Action by, inter alia, providing sufficient human and financial resources within the regular budget of the United Nations and to ensure that the Division can play a catalytic role in support of gender mainstreaming in the new Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and through policy advisory services at the request of Governments, in cooperation with other bodies of the United Nations system;

35. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that resident coordinators, in the execution of their mandates, fully incorporate a gender perspective, in particular into the coordinated follow-up to recent global United Nations conferences, fully utilizing all the expertise available in the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women and other organizations of the United Nations system;

36. Notes the importance of the activities undertaken by the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women in the implementation of the Platform for Action, and encourages the strengthening of their cooperation and coordination within their respective mandates;

37. Encourages the Division for the Advancement of Women, acting as the secretariat of the Commission on the Status of Women, to play an especially active role in generating new ideas, proposing practical suggestions and promoting constructive implementation of the Platform for Action, including gender mainstreaming;

38. Welcomes the growing number of ratifications to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the withdrawal of reservations, invites States parties to include information on measures taken to implement the Platform for Action in their reports, and encourages the Division for the Advancement of Women to provide to Governments, at their request, advice on reporting under the Convention;

39. Urges States to limit the extent of any reservations they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any such reservations as precisely and as narrowly as possible, to ensure that no reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise incompatible with international treaty law, to review their reservations regularly with a view to withdrawing them and to withdraw reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or that are otherwise incompatible with international treaty law;

40. Welcomes the progress made by the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality in strengthening system-wide coordination for implementation of the Platform for Action and gender mainstreaming, and encourages the Committee to continue its cooperation with Administrative Committee on Coordination bodies to develop strategies, tools and methodologies, such as gender-sensitive budgeting, to enhance implementation of the Platform for Action and for gender mainstreaming, in particular at the field level;

41. Notes with appreciation the work done by the Division for the Advancement of Women and by the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women, inter alia, in her role as the Chairperson of the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality, for the system-wide implementation of the Platform for Action, for increased system-wide attention to gender mainstreaming and towards the achievement of gender balance in the Secretariat and system-wide, and, in that regard, stresses the importance of increasing human and financial resources from all available funding sources;

42. Encourages international financial institutions to review and revise policies, procedures and staffing to ensure that investments and programmes benefit women;

43. Invites the World Trade Organization to consider how it might contribute to the implementation of the Platform for Action, including activities in co-operation with the United Nations system;

44. Decides to appraise progress on an annual basis and to retain on the agenda of its forthcoming sessions the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women";

45. Decides also to convene, in the year 2000, a high-level plenary review to appraise and assess the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Platform for Action, five years after its adoption, and to consider further actions and initiatives, and requests the Secretary-General, with a view to ensuring participation at a high political level, to explore, in a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, the possibility, among other options, of convening the review (a) at the start of the fifty-fifth session of the General Assembly, (b) within the framework of the proposed millennium Assembly, if agreed upon by the General Assembly, (c) following the annual session of the Commission on the Status of Women or (d) as a special session of the General Assembly;

46. Decides further that the Commission on the Status of Women shall serve as the preparatory committee for the high-level review and as such will be open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations, members of the specialized agencies and observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly, and invites the Commission to take appropriate action towards that end, including giving attention to appropriate arrangements for the involvement and participation of non-governmental organizations in the review;

47. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to consider at its forty-second session the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 45 above, thus enabling the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, to decide on this issue, as soon as possible, at its fifty-second session;

48. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Economic and Social Council on follow-up to and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action.

Women's rights

The 30-article Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], set forth constitutional, legislative and other measures to promote equality for women. It also set standards by which countries could improve the situation of women, especially their living and working conditions.

The girl child

In 1997, the General Assembly again adopted a resolution on the girl child, a subject that was dealt with during the year by the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/640], adopted resolution 52/106 without vote [agenda item 108].

The girl child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/42 of 8 December 1995, 50/154 of 21 December 1995, 50/203 of 22 December 1995 and 51/76 of 12 December 1996,

Also recalling the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s of the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, the World Declaration on Education for All and the Framework for Action to Meet Basic Learning Needs adopted at the World Conference on Education for All and the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996,

Deeply concerned that girls, in particular adolescent girls, continue to be silent and invisible victims of violence, abuse and exploitation and that some legal systems do not adequately address the vulnerability of girls in the administration of justice, including the need for better protection of child victims and witnesses,

Recalling that in 1998 the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights will be observed, the mid-term review of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development will be carried out and the Commission on the Status of Women will review, at its forty-second session, the implementation of the sections of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women on the girl child and the human rights of women,

Welcoming the appointment of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General on the impact of armed conflict on children, in accordance with section II of its resolution 51/77 of 12 December 1996,

Stressing that discrimination and neglect of the girl child can initiate a lifelong downward spiral of deprivation and exclusion from the social mainstream,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child, which often result in less access for girls to education, nutrition, physical and mental health care and in girls enjoying fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence than boys and often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices such as incest, early marriage, female infanticide, prenatal sex selection and female genital mutilation,

Deeply concerned also that, in situations of poverty, war and armed conflict, girl children are among the victims most affected and that thus their potential for full development is limited,

Concerned that the girl child has become a victim of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome and sexually transmitted diseases, which affect the quality of her life and leave her open to further discrimination,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men as enshrined, inter alia, in the preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

1. Stresses the need for full and urgent implementation of the rights of the girl child as guaranteed to her under all human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Urges all States to take all necessary measures and to institute legal reforms to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by the girl child of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to take effective action against violations of those rights and freedoms;

3. Also urges all States to enact and enforce legislation protecting girls from all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, female genital mutilation, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography, and to develop age-appropriate safe and confidential programmes and medical, social and psychological support services to assist girls who are subjected to violence;

4. Calls upon all States and international and non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively:

(a) To set goals and to develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies to address the rights and needs of children, in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child, to take into account the rights and particular needs of the girl child, especially in education, health and nutrition, and to eliminate negative cultural attitudes and practices against the girl child;

(b) To take measures to ensure the non-discrimination and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of the girl child with disabilities;

(c) To generate social support for the enforcement of laws on the minimum legal age for marriage, in particular by providing educational opportunities for girls;

(d) To give attention to the rights and needs of adolescent girls, which call for special action for their protection from sexual and economic exploitation and abuse, harmful traditional and cultural practices, teenage pregnancy and vulnerability to the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome and sexually transmitted diseases and for the development of life skills and self-esteem, reaffirming that the advancement and empowerment of women throughout the life cycle must begin with the girl child at all ages;

(e) To take measures to increase awareness of the potential of the girl child and to promote gender-sensitive socialization of boys and girls from early childhood, with the aim of achieving gender equality, development and peace within the family and the community;

(f) To ensure the equal participation of girls and young women on the basis of non-discrimination and as partners with boys and young men in social, economic and political life and in the development of strategies and the implementation of action aimed at achieving gender equality, development and peace;

(g) To strengthen and reorient health education and health services, in particular primary health-care programmes, including in sexual and reproductive health, and to design quality health programmes that meet the physical and mental needs of girls and attend to the needs of young expectant and nursing mothers;

5. Urges States to enact and strictly enforce laws to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses, to enact and strictly enforce laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

6. Also urges States to eliminate all barriers so as to enable girls, without exception, to develop their full potential and skills through equal access to education and training;

7. Encourages States to consider ways and means to ensure the continuing education of married women, pregnant women and young mothers;

8. Urges States to take special measures for the protection of children, in particular to protect girls from rape and other forms of sexual abuse and gender-based violence in situations of armed conflict, paying special attention to refugee and displaced girls, in line with the recommendations of the expert appointed by the Secretary-General to study the impact of armed conflict on children, and to take into account the special needs of the girl child in the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

9. Urges States parties to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to protect women and girls from all forms of violence, including domestic violence, sexual trafficking and child prostitution;

10. Urges States to implement measures to protect women and girls from all forms of violence, in line with the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

11. Requests all States to implement, on an urgent basis, measures to protect children from all forms of sexual exploitation, including measures in line with those outlined in the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children;

12. Calls upon Governments, civil society, including the media, and non-governmental organizations to promote human rights education and the full respect for and enjoyment of the human rights of the girl child, inter alia, through the translation, production and dissemination of age-appropriate information materials on these rights to all sectors of society, in particular to children;

13. Calls upon Governments to encourage efforts by civil society and non-governmental organizations, including women's organizations, to establish community-based groups or local committees which could assist with the safety and welfare of children;

14. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to ensure that all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, individually and collectively, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Health Organization, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, take into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child, especially in education, health and nutrition, and eliminate negative cultural attitudes and practices against the girl child in the implementation of the outcomes of all recent global conferences, in particular the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, and of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001;

15. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights, while considering, in accordance with agreed conclusions 1996/1 of 26 July 1996 of the Economic and Social Council, its input to the Commission on the Status of Women on ensuring women's equal enjoyment of their human rights, in particular those relating to economic resources, to pay particular attention to all the human rights of the girl child;

16. Requests all human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to regularly and systematically adopt a gender perspective in the implementation of their mandates and to include in their reports information on and qualitative analysis of violations of human rights of women and girls, and encourages the strengthening of cooperation and coordination in that regard;

17. Calls upon States and international and non-governmental organizations to mobilize all necessary resources, support and efforts to realize the goals, strategic objectives and actions set out in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

18. Calls upon all States, all relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to implement commitments to goals and actions relating to the girl child and to report on initiatives and progress to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-second session, pursuant to the decision of the Commission to review, in 1998, the progress made in the implementation of the provisions of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women relating to the girl child.

In February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) on its role in eliminating violence against women [E/CN.6/1997/8], as requested in General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188].

During 1996-1997, UNIFEM continued to facilitate regional initiatives to eliminate violence against women, including support for two projects in Brazil, assistance to produce and disseminate information in Ecuador and public awareness initiatives in Senegal. During that period, UNIFEM was also working to establish a Trust Fund to support actions to eliminate violence against women. The Trust Fund would support national, regional and international actions, including those undertaken by Governments and non-governmental organizations. Activities to be supported by the Fund included awareness-raising, capacity-building, legal literacy, training, action-related research, and innovative and catalytic support for efforts geared towards the prevention and deterrence of violence against women. Financial and organizational mechanisms for administering the Trust Fund had been established at the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNIFEM. Pledges were received in excess of $1 million.

On 21 July, the Economic and Council, by resolution 1997/24, recommended for adoption by the General Assembly a draft text on crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women, which the Assembly adopted as resolution 52/86.

(For details of action taken by the Commission on Human Rights, see PART TWO, Chapter II, and of action relating to crime prevention and criminal justice, see PART THREE, Chapter IX.)

Women migrant workers

In March [E/1997/27 (res. 41/4)], the Commission on the Status of Women took note of a 1996 expert group meeting on violence against women migrant workers [YUN 1996, p. 1070], and encouraged Member States to consider signing and ratifying the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594]. The Secretary-General was asked to reflect in his thematic report to the Commission in 1998 the major findings and recommendations from all of his reports to the Assembly on the issue of violence against women migrant workers, in order for the Commission to make recommendations thereon.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report [A/52/356], the Secretary-General described measures taken to implement Assembly resolution 51/65 [YUN 1996, p. 1071] concerning violence against women migrant workers, based on information received from Member States, UN bodies and organizations and intergovernmental organizations. The report concluded that although Member States had introduced measures to ameliorate the situation of migrant workers and to combat discrimination and violence against women, few had adopted measures to combat violence against women migrant workers. More information and data were required on the situation of women migrant workers so that concrete strategies could be introduced. The analysis of national action plans by the Commission would broaden the information base against which strategies could be developed. (See also PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/97 without vote [agenda item 105].

Violence against women migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Recalling all previous resolutions on violence against women migrant workers adopted by the General Assembly, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women,

Reaffirming the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development and the Fourth World Conference on Women, specifically as the results pertain to women migrant workers,

Emphasizing the need for accurate, objective and comprehensive information, as well as for a wide exchange of experiences and lessons learned by individual countries in protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers for policy formulation and joint action,

Acknowledging the results of the Expert Group Meeting on Violence against Women Migrant Workers, held at Manila from 27 to 31 May 1996, and the comments thereon by Member States and relevant international organizations,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries and some countries with economies in transition who continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic conditions, and acknowledging the duty of the sending States to work for conditions that provide employment and security to their citizens,

Acknowledging the economic benefits that accrue to sending and receiving States from the employment of women migrant workers,

Recognizing the importance of joint and collaborative approaches at the bilateral, regional, interregional and international levels in protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers,

Underlining the important role of relevant United Nations treaty bodies in monitoring the implementation of human rights conventions and the relevant special procedures, within their respective mandates, in addressing the problem of violence against women migrant workers and in protecting and promoting their rights and welfare,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on violence against women migrant workers;

2. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of sending and receiving countries, to develop, as appropriate, systematic data collection methods and to update and share information on violence against women migrant workers;

3. Urges concerned Governments, in particular those of sending and receiving countries, to strengthen their national efforts to protect and promote the rights and welfare of women migrant workers, including through sustained bilateral, regional, interregional and international cooperation, by developing strategies and joint action and by taking into account the innovative approaches and experiences of individual Member States;

4. Also urges concerned Governments, in particular those of sending and receiving countries, to support and allocate appropriate resources for programmes aimed at strengthening preventive action, in particular information for relevant target groups and education and campaigns to increase public awareness of this issue at the national and grass-roots levels, in cooperation with non-governmental organizations;

5. Encourages concerned Governments, in particular those of sending and receiving countries, to support training programmes for public officials dealing with the problem of violence against women migrant workers, in particular law enforcers, to assist women migrant workers who are victims of violence, to provide, in the reporting of such cases and the prosecution of the perpetrators, adequate consular, counselling, legal and welfare services and to consider adopting approprate legal measures against intermediaries who deliberately encourage the clandestine movement of workers and who exploit women migrant workers;

6. Encourages Member States to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, as well as the Slavery Convention of 1926;

7. Invites all relevant United Nations human rights treaty bodies, in particular the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, relevant thematic and country rapporteurs, in particular the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and its working groups, within their respective mandates, to address the problem of violence against women migrant workers in their deliberations and findings, with a view to promoting and protecting their rights and welfare;

8. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women to address the issue of violence against women migrant workers at its forty-second session under the thematic issues on violence against women and/or human rights of women;

9. Invites the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, at their sessions in 1998, to address the protection and promotion of the rights and welfare of women migrant workers in connection with the five-year review of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the problem of violence against women migrant workers, taking into account the views of Member States and based on the expertise and all available information from the organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the International Organization for Migration and other relevant sources, including non-governmental organizations, as well as to report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Women in armed conflict

In March [E/1997/27 des. 41/1)], the Commission on the Status of Women, condemning violent acts in contravention of international humanitarian law against civilian women and children in areas of armed conflict, called for an effective response to such acts, including the immediate release of women and children taken hostage or imprisoned. The Secretary-General and relevant international organizations were asked to facilitate their release. The Secretary-General was also asked to report to the Commission in 1998.

Traffic in women and girls

In a March resolution [E/1997/27 des. 41/5)], the Commission on the Status of Women expressed serious concern about the unabating traffic in women and girl children. It called for the accelerated implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action by Governments of countries of origin, transit and destination and international organizations through: ratification and enforcement of international conventions on trafficking in persons and on slavery; measures to address the root factors that encouraged trafficking in women and girls for prostitution, forced marriages and forced labour; stepped up cooperation and action by law enforcement authorities to dismantle trafficking networks; allocating resources to programmes designed to rehabilitate into society victims of trafficking; and education and training programmes. The Commission called on Governments to criminalize trafficking in women and girls, to penalize offenders and to prevent misuse and exploitation by traffickers in such economic activities as the development of tourism and the export of labour. It decided to examine in 1998 the reports of the Special Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and of other relevant organizations and bodies, with a view to making appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/66 [YUN 1996, p. 1072], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/52/355], summarized information received from Member States, the UN system and intergovernmental organizations on measures taken to prevent trafficking in women and girls.

The report concluded that the information received revealed evidence of significant trafficking activity as well as the need for further data on the issue before effective strategies could be designed and implemented. The strategies thus far introduced had been predominantly legal measures and bilateral agreements. Strategies to confront trafficking in women and children were often affected by the international nature of the activity and the reluctance of the victims to complain or be involved in measures to address it.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/98 without vote [agenda item 105].

Traffic in women and girls

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the principles set forth in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, Recalling the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others,

Recalling also its resolution 51/66 of 12 December 1996 on traffic in women and girls,

Reaffirming the provisions of the outcome of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995, pertaining to the traffic in women and children,

Noting with concern the increasing number of women and girl children from developing countries and from some countries with economies in transition who are being victimized by traffickers, and acknowledging that the problem of trafficking also includes the victimizing of young boys,

Emphasizing the need for more concerted and sustained national, regional and international action on the alarming levels of trafficking in women and girls,

Acknowledging the continuing work of Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in combating trafficking in women and girls through preventive education, dissemination of information, research and the provision of shelters and programmes to rehabilitate and reintegrate survivors in society,

Deeply concerned with the increasing unabated use of new information technologies for purposes of prostitution, child pornography, paedophilia, sex tourism and trafficking in women as brides,

Convinced of the need to eliminate all forms of sexual violence and sexual trafficking, including for prostitution and other forms of commercial sex, and convinced also that sexual violence and sexual trafficking are violations of the human rights of women and girl children and are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person,

Stressing the need for Governments to accord standard minimum humanitarian treatment to trafficked persons consistent with human rights standards,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the traffic in women and girls;

2. Welcomes national, regional and international efforts to implement the recommendations of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, and calls upon Governments to take further measures in that regard;

3. Also welcomes actions undertaken by Governments to implement the provisions on trafficking in women and girls contained in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, and calls upon Governments, particularly those of countries of origin, transit and destination, as well as regional and international organizations, as appropriate, to undertake immediate action or to strengthen efforts in their implementation by:

(a) Considering the ratification and enforcement of international conventions on trafficking in persons and on slavery;

(b) Taking appropriate measures to address the root factors, including external factors, that encourage trafficking in women and girls for prostitution and other forms of commercialized sex, forced marriage and forced labour, so as to eliminate trafficking in women, including by strengthening existing legislation, with a view to providing better protection of the rights of women and girls and to punishing perpetrators, through both criminal and civil measures;

(c) Stepping up cooperation and concerted action by all relevant law enforcement authorities and institutions with a view to dismantling national, regional and international networks in trafficking;

(d) Allocating resources to provide comprehensive programmes designed to heal and rehabilitate into society victims of trafficking, including through job training, legal assistance and confidential health care, and by taking measures to cooperate with non-governmental organizations to provide for the social, medical and psychological care of the victims of trafficking;

(e) Developing educational and training programmes and policies and considering enacting legislation to prevent sex tourism and trafficking, giving special emphasis to the protection of young women and children;

4. Calls upon Governments to criminalize trafficking in women and girls in all its forms, to condemn and penalize all those offenders involved, including intermediaries, whether their offence was committed in their own or in a foreign country, while ensuring that the victims of those practices are not penalized, and to penalize persons in authority found guilty of sexually assaulting victims of trafficking in their custody;

5. Urges concerned Governments to support and allocate resources for programmes to strengthen preventive action, in particular education and campaigns to increase public awareness of the issue at the national and grass-roots level, and for programmes which provide shelter and helplines to victims or potential victims;

6. Encourages Governments to develop systematic data-collection methods and to continuously update information on trafficking in women and girls, including the analysis of the modus operandi of trafficking syndicates;

1. Urges Governments to strengthen national programmes to combat trafficking in women and girls through sustained bilateral, regional and international cooperation, taking into account innovative approaches and best practices;

8. Invites Governments once again, with the support of the United Nations, to formulate training manuals for law enforcement and medical personnel and judicial officers who handle cases of trafficked women and girls, taking into account current research and materials on traumatic stress and gender-sensitive counselling techniques, with a view to sensitizing them to the special needs of victims;

9. Invites Governments and civil society, especially non-governmental organizations, to the extent consistent with freedom of expression, to promote the responsible use of new information technologies, in particular the Internet, to prevent trafficking in women and girls;

10. Invites States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child to include information and statistics on trafficking in women and girls as part of their national reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, taking into account the general recommendation of the Committee, and to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, respectively;

11. Invites the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to continue addressing, within their respective mandates, the problem of trafficking in women and girls as a priority concern and to recommend, in their reports, measures to combat such phenomena;

12. Encourages the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality to continue to address the issue as part of the integrated follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women;

13. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women, at its next session, to address the subject of the traffic in women and girls under the thematic issues on violence against women and the human rights of women;

14. Invites the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, at their sessions in 1998, to address trafficking in women and girls in connection with the five-year review of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular the implementation of the relevant provisions on trafficking in women and girls in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action.

Traditional practices affecting women's health

The Commission on the Status of Women decided in March to review the theme women and health in 1999.

(For information on action by the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission, see PART TWO, Chapter II.)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/99 without vote (agenda item 105).

Traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls

The General Assembly,

Recalling:

(a) General Assembly resolution 843(IX) of 17 December 1954, Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/24 of 21 July 1997, Commission on Human Rights decision 1997/108 of 22 August 1997, and Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities resolutions 1983/1 of 23 August 1983, 1995/20 of 24 August 1995, 1996/19 of 29 August 1996 and 1997/8 of 22 August 1997,

(b) The reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children and of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences,

(c) The reports of the United Nations Regional Seminars on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children, which were held in Burkina Faso in 1991 and Sri Lanka in 1994, and the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children,

(d) The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, which proclaims, inter alia, that gender-based violence and all forms of sexual harassment and exploitation, including those resulting from cultural prejudice, are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person and which stresses the importance of working towards the eradication of any conflicts which may arise between the rights of women and the harmful effects of certain traditional or customary practices,

(e) The Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, which calls upon Governments and communities to take steps urgently to stop the practice of female genital mutilation and to protect women and girls from all such similar dangerous practices,

(f) The Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, which, inter alia, call upon Governments to enact and enforce legislation against the perpetrators of practices and acts of violence against women, such as female genital mutilation, female infanticide, prenatal sex selection and dowry-related violence, and to give vigorous support to the efforts of non-governmental and community organizations to eliminate such practices,

(g) The commitment of all States to fulfil their obligations to promote universal respect for and observance of all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

(h) Article 5 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which provides that States parties shall take all appropriate measures to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women, with a view to achieving the elimination of prejudices and customary and all other practices that are based on the idea of the inferiority or the superiority of either of the sexes or on stereotyped roles for men and women, as reiterated in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

(i) General recommendation 14 of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women concerning female genital mutilation,

(j) Article 24 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which provides that States parties shall take all effective and appropriate measures with a view to abolishing traditional practices prejudicial to the health of children,

(k) The Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995, in particular its resolution 8 of 7 May 1995 on the elimination of violence against women,

(l) The extensive work of the Inter-African Committee on Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children,

Reaffirming that certain traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls constitute a definite form of violence against women and girls and a serious violation of their human rights, and expressing concern at the continuing large-scale existence of such practices,

1. Welcomes:

(a) The progress achieved by a number of Governments in their struggle against harmful traditional or customary practices, in particular against female genital mutilation, and encourages the Governments in question to continue and to increase their efforts aimed at the eradication of these practices;

(b) The work carried out by the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children;

(c) The joint statement by the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Population Fund on female genital mutilation, which expresses a common purpose in supporting the efforts of Governments and communities to promote and protect the health and development of women and children by promoting awareness of the problem and by educating the public, health workers and those who carry out the practice, on all its health consequences;

(d) The appointment of a special ambassador of the United Nations Population Fund for the elimination of female genital mutilation;

(e) The efforts undertaken by the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and other United Nations bodies, programmes and organizations to raise awareness of this issue;

(f) The work carried out by non-governmental and community organizations in raising awareness of the harmful effects of female genital mutilation and other traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls;

(g) The fact that the Commission on the Status of Women will address the critical areas of concern, namely, "Violence against women", "The girl child" and "Human rights of women", at its session in 1998 and "Women and health" at its session in 1999, and invites the Commission to address the issue of harmful traditional or customary practices during those sessions;

2. Emphasizes:

(a) The need for Governments to analyse, from a gender perspective, all policies and programmes, particularly those relating to poverty, health and violence against women, with a view to assessing their implications for women and men;

(b) The need for national legislation and/or measures prohibiting harmful traditional or customary practices as well as for their implementation, inter alia, through appropriate measures against those responsible;

(c) The need to improve women's position in society and to promote their economic independence;

(d) The importance of education and the dissemination of information in raising awareness, in all sectors of society, of the serious consequences of traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls and the responsibilities of Governments in this regard;

(e) The necessity of involving, among others, public opinion leaders, educators, religious leaders, medical practitioners, women's health and family planning organizations and the media in publicity campaigns, with a view to promoting a collective and individual awareness of the human rights of women and girls and of how harmful traditional or customary practices violate those rights;

(f) That information and education with regard to harmful traditional or customary practices should also be targeted at men and that they should be encouraged to be responsive to such information and education;

(g) The importance of coordination between the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the relevant treaty bodies, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences and the Commission on the Status of Women, including through the exchange of information, and encourages them, within their respective mandates, to continue to pay attention to traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls;

(h) The need for financial and technical assistance for developing countries from United Nations funds and programmes, as well as from international and regional financial institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, so as to assist Governments in combating such practices;

3. Calls upon all States:

(a) To implement their international commitments in this field, inter alia, under the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children;

(b) To ratify, if they have not yet done so, the relevant human rights treaties, in particular the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and to respect and fully implement their obligations under the relevant human rights treaties to which they are parties, emphasizing the incompatibility between the continuation of these harmful traditional or customary practices and the obligations they have voluntarily undertaken through the ratification of such international human rights instruments;

(c) To include specific information on measures taken to eliminate traditional or customary practices harmful to the health of women and girls in their reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and to the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

(d) To intensify efforts to raise awareness of and to mobilize international and national public opinion concerning the harmful effects of female genital mutilation and other traditional or customary practices affecting the health of women and girls, in particular through education, the dissemination of information and training, with the aim of achieving the total elimination of these practices;

(e) To develop and implement national legislation and policies prohibiting traditional or customary practices harmful to the health of women and girls, particularly female genital mutilation;

(f) To support women's organizations, at the national and local levels, working for the elimination of female genital mutilation and other traditional or customary practices harmful to the health of women and girls;

(g) To cooperate closely with the Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on traditional practices affecting the health of women and children and to submit information on such practices with a view to enabling her to assess the progress achieved and obstacles encountered in implementing the Plan of Action for the Elimination of Harmful Traditional Practices Affecting the Health of Women and Children;

(h) To cooperate closely with relevant United Nations funds, programmes and the specialized agencies, such as the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as with relevant non-governmental and community organizations, in a joint effort to eradicate harmful traditional or customary practices affecting women and girls;

4. Decides:

(a) To invite the Commission on Human Rights to address this issue at its fifty-fourth session;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to make the outcome of the discussions in the Commission on the Status of Women on this issue available to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session, if necessary, in the form of an oral report;

(c) To also request the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Women in development

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report on action taken to incorporate a gender perspective into economic policies [A/52/345], in response to General Assembly resolution 50/104 [YUN 1995, p. 1184]. It stated that promoting gender equality by removing restrictions on women's access to, and control over, resources, opportunities, incentives, income and wealth should be pursued, not only as a human right and for reasons of social justice, but also as a strategy to promote economic efficiency and sustainable development. The report outlined ways in which mainstreaming the gender perspective into economic policies might offer insights into macro-economic policy-making, and set forth principles that were a prerequisite for such mainstreaming. It was recommended that mainstreaming the gender perspective into economic policies should be effected in line with the following conditions: incorporating the gender perspective into programme design, implementation and evaluation, and the policy development process of all inter-governmental and multilateral development entities; undertaking measures to achieve gender balance between women and men in economic decision-making; strengthening national machineries; demonstrating commitment to gender mainstreaming at the highest level of State throughout the whole government system by adequately allocating resources, training and development of staff and measures of accountability; creating an enabling environment that allowed opportunities for women to have input into national and sectoral policies, programmes and budget processes; generating and maintaining all relevant data disaggregated by sex; developing indicators, conceptual tools and methods for gender analysis and applying them to economic policies by statistical services, economic agencies and UN bodies; and measuring and valuing unpaid work.

By decision 1997/319 of 18 December, the Economic and Social Council decided that its high-level meeting of the operational activities segment of its 1998 substantive session would be devoted to "Advancement of women: implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 77], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/52/628/Add.7], adopted resolution 52/195 without vote [agenda item 97 (g)].

Women in development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/104 of 20 December 1995 and all other relevant Assembly resolutions on the integration of women in development, and also the resolutions and the agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women on the integration of women in development,

Reaffirming the Beijing Platform for Action and the outcomes of recent major United Nations conferences and summits,

Reaffirming also that gender equality is of fundamental importance for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences,

Recognizing the significant contribution that women make to economic activities and the major force that they represent for change and development in all sectors of the economy, especially in key areas such as agriculture, industry and services,

Concerned that the continued discrimination against women, the denial or lack of equal rights and access to education, training and credit facilities and the lack of control over land, capital, technology and other areas of production impede their full and equal contribution to, and equal opportunity to benefit from, development,

Recognizing that discrimination in education and training, hiring, remuneration and promotion, and horizontal mobility practices, continue to restrict employment, economic, professional and other opportunities and mobility for women and impede women in achieving their full potential,

Reaffirming that investing in the development of women and girls has multiplier effects on productivity, efficiency and sustained economic growth,

Recognizing that the difficult socio-economic conditions that exist in many developing countries, particularly those in Africa and the least developed countries, have resulted in the acceleration of the feminization of poverty, especially in rural areas and among female-headed households,

Reaffirming that women are key contributors to the economy and to combatting poverty through both remunerated and unremunerated work at home, in the community and in the workplace and that the empowerment of women is a critical factor in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing the continued need to review the impact of structural adjustment programmes in order to reduce any adverse impact on women, especially in terms of cutbacks in social services, education and health and the removal of subsidies on food and fuel,

Aware that, although globalization and liberalization processes have created employment opportunities for women in some countries, they have also created risks to and marginalization of women in developing countries,

Recognizing that the informal sector is a major source of entrepreneurship and employment for women in developing countries and that data collection on its important contribution should be improved,

Expressing its concern about the poor representation of women in economic decision-making, including in the formulation of monetary and fiscal policies as well as rules governing pay,

Emphasizing the promotion of programmes aimed at financial intermediation with a view to ensuring the equal access of rural women to credit and to agricultural inputs and implements and, in particular, to easing collateral requirements for access to credit by women,

Stressing the need for a family-friendly work environment, including appropriate working hours, affordable childcare and flexible working hours, and emphasizing the principle of shared responsibility between women and men for the achievement of gender equality,

Stressing also that neglecting a gender perspective in policy formulation and implementation exacerbates the feminization of poverty and economic inefficiency and has a high social cost,

Noting the importance of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, particularly the Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, in facilitating the advancement of women in development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Calls for the urgent implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the relevant provisions contained in the outcomes of all other major United Nations conferences and summits;

3. Stresses that a favourable and conducive international and national economic, financial, political, social and legal environment and a positive investment climate are necessary for the effective integration of women in development;

4. Reiterates its call to all Governments and all actors of society to implement the commitment made at Beijing to create an enabling environment by, inter alia, removing discriminatory barriers and ensuring the full and equal participation of women in economic activities through, inter alia, the adoption of gender-sensitive policies and legal measures and the provision of other necessary structures;

5. Stresses the importance of developing national strategies for promoting sustainable and productive entrepreneurial activities to generate income among disadvantaged women and women living in poverty;

6. Urges Governments to develop and promote methodologies for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all aspects of policy-making, including economic policy-making;

7. Stresses the need to ensure that women and girls have full and equal access to all levels of education, vocational training and retraining programmes in order to improve their employment opportunities;

8. Urges all Governments to ensure women's equal rights with men and access to economic resources and to increase the access of women to credit by instituting innovative lending practices, including practices that integrate credit with services and training for women and that provide flexible credit facilities to women, in particular rural women, women in the informal sector, young women and women who lack access to traditional sources of collateral;

9. Invites Governments to enact legislation to ensure that women have equal access to and control over land, unmediated by male relatives, in order to end land rights discrimination, that women are accorded secure use rights and are fully represented in the decision-making bodies that allocate land and other forms of property, credit, information and new technologies, that in the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action women are accorded full and equal rights to own land and other property, inter alia, through inheritance, and that land reform programmes begin by acknowledging the equality of the rights of women to land and that other measures are taken to increase land availability to poor women and men;

10. Requests Governments to ensure that the priorities of women are included in, and that women fully participate in, decisions on public investment programmes for economic infrastructure, technology, water supply and sanitation, electrification and energy conservation, transport and road construction and to promote greater involvement of women beneficiaries at the project planning and implementation stages to ensure their access to jobs and contracts;

11. Urges Governments to promote and strengthen microenterprises, new small businesses, cooperative enterprises, expanded markets and other employment opportunities, to facilitate, where appropriate, the transition from the informal to the formal sector, especially in rural areas, to provide outreach programmes to inform low-income and poor women, particularly in rural and remote areas, of opportunities for market and technology access and to provide women with assistance in taking advantage of such opportunities;

12. Calls upon Governments to promote, inter alia, through legislation, family-friendly and gender-sensitive work environments and also to promote the facilitation of breastfeeding for working mothers;

13. Urges the international community, the United Nations system and other relevant organizations to give priority to assisting the efforts of developing countries to ensure the full and effective participation of women in deciding and implementing development strategies, through, inter alia, the increased access of women to health care, capital, education, training and technology and full and equal participation in decision-making;

14. Urges multilateral donors, international financial institutions and regional development banks to review and implement policies in support of national efforts to ensure that a higher proportion of resources reach women, in particular women in rural and remote areas;

15. Calls upon the United Nations system to support developing countries in their efforts to integrate gender concerns into national programmes and to implement those programmes, including by providing adequate resources for operational activities for development;

16. Also calls upon the United Nations system to integrate gender mainstreaming into all its programmes and policies, including in the integrated follow-up to United Nations conferences, in accordance with agreed conclusions 1997/2 on gender mainstreaming adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1997;

17. Requests the United Nations development system to continue working towards establishing a more coherent approach to its support for the income-generating activities of women, in particular credit schemes;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the sub-item entitled "Women in development";

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the outcome of the implementation of the present resolution, including the impact of the globalization and liberalization processes on the integration of women in development, the implementation of operational activities for development of the United Nations system in enhancing the participation of women in national development programmes and the gender mainstreaming of United Nations programmes and policies.

Women in rural areas

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/165 [YUN 1995, p. 1185], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on progress in improving the situation of women in rural areas [A/52/326]. The report examined issues deemed to be of growing importance for rural women, including the role of women in agriculture and food security, access to productive resources, female-headed households and migration, and participation in community activities and decision-making processes.

The report underlined the importance of strengthening the productive and reproductive capacity of women farmers and entrepreneurs. The development of legal measures, policies and administrative regulations to guarantee rural women equal and secure rights of access to land was a priority. The report emphasized the importance of disaggregated data by sex on differentials in access to productive resources, including land and credit, as a prerequisite for effective policy formulation. Recommendations included increasing the number of women in decision-making positions and providing training in gender sensitivity and gender mainstreaming for policy makers. In order to maximize the role rural women played in household and national food security, they should be guaranteed access to productive resources; the report presented a series of measures for Governments to promote gender equality in access to those resources.

On 7 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/205, had authorized the Secretary-General to transmit his report directly to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/93 without vote [agenda item 105].

Improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 34/14 of 9 November 1979, in which it endorsed the Declaration of Principles and the Programme of Action as adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development, and its resolutions 44/78 of 8 December 1989, 48/109 of 20 December 1993 and 50/165 of 22 December 1995,

Recalling also the importance attached to the problems of rural women by the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and by the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Recalling further its resolution 47/174 of 22 December 1992, in which it welcomed the adoption of the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women by the Summit on the Economic Advancement of Rural Women, held at Geneva in February 1992, and urged all States to work for the achievement of the goals endorsed in that Declaration,

Welcoming the growing awareness of Governments of the need for strategies and programmes to improve the situation of women in rural areas,

Welcoming also the Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Microcredit Summit, held in Washington in February 1997, in which micro-finance was identified as an important instrument of poverty alleviation, including for rural women,

Noting with deep concern that the economic and financial crises in many developing countries have severely affected the socio-economic status of women, especially in rural areas, and the continuing rise in the number of rural women living in poverty, including girls and older women,

Mindful of the need for fuller recognition and appreciation of the contribution of rural women to socio-economic development, including human capital development,

Mindful also that, despite the global trend towards rapid urbanization, many developing countries are still largely rural,

Recognizing the urgent need to take appropriate measures aimed at further improving the situation of women in rural areas,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas;

2. Invites Member States, in their efforts to implement the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, the World Conference on Human Rights, the International Conference on Population and Development, the World Summit for Social Development, the Fourth World Conference on Women, the World Food Summit and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), and bearing in mind the Geneva Declaration for Rural Women, to attach greater importance to the improvement of the situation of rural women, including older women, in their national development strategies, paying special attention to both their practical and strategic needs, by, inter alia:

(a) Integrating the concerns of rural women into national development policies and programmes, in particular by placing a higher priority on budgetary allocation related to the interests of rural women;

(b) Strengthening national machineries and establishing institutional linkages among governmental bodies in various sectors and non-governmental organizations concerned with rural development;

(c) Increasing the awareness of rural women of their rights and their role in political and socio-economic development;

(d) Increasing the participation of rural women in the decision-making process at the local and national levels;

(e) Designing and revising laws to ensure that women have equal access to and control over land, unmediated by male relatives, in order to end land rights discrimination; according women secure use rights and full representation in the decision-making bodies that allocate land and other forms of property, credit, information and new technologies; in the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, according women full and equal rights to own land and other property, inter alia, through inheritance; acknowledging, in the context of land reform programmes, the equality of women's rights to land and taking other measures to increase land availability to poor women and men;

(f) Investing in the human resources of rural women, particularly through health and literacy programmes and social support measures;

(g) Promoting and strengthening micro-financing policies and programmes, cooperatives and other employment opportunities;

(h) Ensuring that women's unpaid work and contributions to on-farm and off-farm production, including income generated in the informal sector, are visible and recorded in economic surveys and statistics at the national level;

3. Requests the international community and relevant United Nations organizations and bodies to promote further the realization of the programmes and projects aimed at the improvement of the situation of rural women within the overall framework of integrated follow-up to recent global conferences;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with Member States and relevant United Nations organizations, a report on the implementation of the present resolution and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

Older women

In March [E/1997/27 (res.41/2)], the Commission on the Status of Women decided that in 1998, when examining the human rights of women, it would also pay attention to the violation of older women's rights. Similarly, under the item "Emerging issues, trends and new approaches to issues affecting the situation of women or equality between women and men", it would consider the status of older women and make substantive recommendations thereon. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1999 on the key global issues regarding the differential impact of population ageing on men and women as a contribution to the 1999 International Year of Older Persons (see PART THREE, Chapter XI).

Palestinian women

On 21 July, by resolution 1997/16, the Economic and Social Council, reaffirming that the Israeli occupation remained a major obstacle for Palestinian women with regard to their advancement, self-reliance and integration in the development planning of their society, asked the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to monitor and implement the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 937] and the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action. The Secretary-General was asked to continue to review the situation, to assist Palestinian women and to report in 1998.

As at 31 December 1997, 161 States were parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. During the year, Algeria, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Mozambique, Myanmar, Switzerland and Turkmenistan became parties. Also at year's end, 19 States parties had accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), which had been adopted by the States parties in May 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1178]. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

The Secretary-General submitted his annual report [A/52/337] to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention, which contained information on signatures, ratifications, successions and accessions as at 1 August 1997. The report also included reservations and declarations and withdrawals thereof, objections, extensions of application and communications received by States parties between 1 August 1996 and 1 August 1997. On 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/420, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Optional protocol

The Open-ended Working Group on the Elaboration of a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, at meetings held between 10 and 20 March, considered two reports of the Secretary-General regarding the protocol, which would introduce complaint procedures to the Convention. A January report [E/CN.6/1997/4] contained a comparative summary of existing communications and inquiry procedures and practices under international human rights instruments and under the Charter of the United Nations. A February report [E/CN.6/1997/5] presented a synthesis of replies from Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on an optional protocol, as well as additional views related to the elements of the draft optional protocol as suggested by CEDAW in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1176].

The Working Group included a revised draft optional protocol as an appendix to its report to the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1997/27]. The revised draft included an inquiry procedure enabling CEDAW to request State parties to explain and remedy complaints about serious violations of women's rights.

On 21 March [res. 41/3], the Commission, noting the progress achieved by the Working Group, commended the representative of CEDAW on her contribution to the work of the Working Group as a resource person. The Secretary-General was asked to submit in 1998 a report containing an annotated comparison of the draft optional protocol and the proposed amendments thereto with the provisions of existing international human rights instruments.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1997/27], adopted decision 1997/227 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Renewal of the mandate of the Open-ended Working Group on the Elaboration of a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

At its 36th plenary meeting, on 21 July 1997, the Economic and Social Council decided:

(a) To renew the mandate of the in-session Open-ended Working Group on the Elaboration of a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, so that it might continue its work, pursuant to Council resolution 1995/29 of 24 July 1995, during the forty-second and forty-third sessions of the Commission on the Status of Women;

(b) To authorize the Working Group to meet in parallel with the Commission at its forty-second and forty-third sessions;

(c) To invite a representative of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to attend those meetings as a resource person.

CEDAW

During 1997, the 23-member Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, established in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 1149] to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention, at its sixteenth session (New York, 13-31 January), considered the initial and/or periodic reports of Canada, Denmark, Morocco, the Philippines, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Slovenia, Turkey and Venezuela on measures they had taken to implement the Convention. On an exceptional basis, Zaire submitted an oral report on the situation of women in the country. The Committee adopted general recommendation 23 on articles 7 and 8 of the Convention related to women in public life. In addition, it adopted three decisions and two suggestions related to its work.

CEDAW increased its annual meeting time from one to two regular sessions, each of three weeks' duration preceded by a pre-session working group. The convening of a second session was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 51/68 [YUN 1996, p. 1075] as an interim measure pending the acceptance by two thirds of the States parties of the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention.

At its seventeenth session (New York, 7-25 July), the Committee considered the initial and/or periodic reports of Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Bangladesh, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg and Namibia. It also adopted two decisions related to the submission and consideration of reports from States parties.

On 7 February, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/205, had authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report of CEDAW [A/52/38/Rev.1] directly to the Assembly, which took note of it on 12 December (decision 52/420).

Commission on Status of Women

The 45-member Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-first session (New York, 10-21 March) [E/1997/27], continued to focus on monitoring follow-up action to the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women and on the development of a draft optional protocol to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (see above). It adopted six resolutions, two decisions, and four sets of agreed conclusions. It recommended two draft resolutions and three draft decisions to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

On 21 July, by decision 1997/229, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on its forty-first session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-second (1998) session.

On 23 July, by decision 1997/298, the Council decided, as an interim measure, to invite NGOs that were accredited to the 1995 Conference to attend the forty-second session, provided they had started the process of applying for consultative status in accordance with Council decision 1996/315 [YUN 1996, p. 1368]. The Secretary-General was asked to draw the attention of those NGOs to the provisions of the Council's decision and to the process established under resolution 1996/31 [ibid., p. 1360].

Communications on status of women

On 20 March, at a closed meeting, the Commission reviewed and adopted the report of its Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women [E/1997/27], established in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1050] to consider ways to make the communications procedure more transparent and efficient. The Working Group considered non-confidential communications and noted the continued absence of women in decision-making processes, particularly in the context of war and conflict resolution. It expressed concern at recurring situations of armed conflict, which sometimes amounted to genocide, leading to physical and psychological abuses of women and the continuing use of rape as a weapon of war. Concern was also expressed about the brutal treatment of women, incommunicado and arbitrary detention, prolonged detention without trial, rape and sexual abuse by security forces and prison officials, violence against pregnant women, sexual enslavement, and the number of arbitrary killings and torture of women. It noted that specific forms of violence against women continued to exist, as did discrimination against women in employment practices and harmful practices directed against women. The Group pointed out that the rights of migrant women workers and of internally displaced and vulnerable groups, including indigenous women, continued to be violated. It recommended that, in order to provide continuity in the review of communications, the Commission should nominate the same members to serve on the Group for two years.

UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)

During 1997, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) focused on organizational reassessment and giving greater coherence and clarity to its programme directions. It developed its strategy and business plan, which delineated areas of focus and operations for the period 1997-1999. UNIFEM's programme strategy was designed and guided by an empowerment framework and based on the promotion of women's rights, opportunities and capacities.

In fulfilment of the recommendations of the 1995 Beijing Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170] to strengthen its operational work and maximize the impact of its projects, UNIFEM's programmes continued to focus on: strengthening women's economic capacity; engendering governance and leadership; and promoting women's human rights and eliminating all forms of violence against women.

During the year, the Fund enhanced work on promoting women's empowerment and gender mainstreaming. It laid the groundwork for placing gender advisers to the resident coordinator system in 10 countries. In addition, UNIFEM, the United Nations Volunteers and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had fielded 15 gender specialists to strengthen support for national-level implementation of the Platform for Action.

WomenWatch (www.un.org/womenwatch), a collaborative project of the UN Division for the Advancement of Women, UNIFEM and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW), was developed to provide UN information on women's empowerment and gender mainstreaming. UNIFEM also developed its own Web site (www.unifem.undp.org).

In August [A/52/300], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on UNIFEM's activities in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1977].

Strategy and business plan

A March report to the UNDP Executive Board [DP/1997/18] contained the Fund's strategy and business plan for the period 1997-1999. The plan set forth the strategic objectives and activities of the Fund and provided an overview of the market niche, challenges, opportunities and parameters that shaped the UNIFEM programme. The Fund's three-year work plan and resource requirements were annexed to the report.

The strategic objectives would focus on increasing options for women, especially those living in poverty, through strengthening women's economic capacity, promoting the realization of women's human rights and the elimination of violence against women, and engendering governance and leadership. The Fund would strengthen its effectiveness by building on strategic links to field-level experience and incorporating the principles of a learning organization. The strategy also aimed to strengthen UN capacity to support women's empowerment and gender mainstreaming in its policies and programmes, as well as to strengthen partnerships with key stakeholders. Other aspects of the strategy dealt with ensuring that UNIFEM personnel and financial and programme management systems supported its goals and programmes, and building a larger and more diversified resource base.

On 23 May [E/1997/33 (dec. 97/18)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the UNIFEM strategy and business plan, and asked UNIFEM to support innovative and experimental activities in implementing the plan within the context of the Beijing Platform for Action. UNIFEM was also asked to develop further and strengthen its role as a catalyst with a view to strengthening the gender perspective of development programmes in recipient countries and increasing synergy with other UN agencies. It was further asked to focus on strategic interventions and build upon its comparative advantages in order to promote systemic change, in particular with regard to political and economic empowerment, and to maintain a balance between potential impact and the needs of women in the application of the criteria for programme selection. The Board decided that UNIFEM should report orally in 1998 and in writing every alternate year and progress made in implementing its strategy and business plan should be described in the annual report of the UNDP Administrator.

On 17 January [dec. 97/4], the Executive Board, noting a conference room paper on the applicability of a partial funding system to UNIFEM, endorsed the methodology for determining project approval and operational reserve levels for UNIFEM under the partial funding system, which was annexed to the Board's decision. It approved its use, on a provisional basis, beginning in 1997, and its continuation on a no-objection basis, pending the discussion of the response to the evaluation of the Fund. The Board further decided that an appropriate monitoring mechanism should be established by UNIFEM in consultation with UNDP and that the Fund should report on the functioning of the partial funding modality in the annual financial report of UNDP and its administered funds, to be presented at each third regular session.

The Executive Board, on 19 September [dec. 97/24], approved $10.7 million for the UNIFEM 1998-1999 biennial support budget.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/94 without vote [agenda item 105].

United Nations Development Fund for Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 31/133 of 16 December 1976, in which it established the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, which reaffirmed that the Fund had the mandate to increase options and opportunities for women's economic and social development in developing countries,

Recalling also its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, in which it decided to transform the Voluntary Fund into the United Nations Development Fund for Women and to make the Fund a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme,

Stressing the important contribution the Fund continues to make in providing technical assistance to enable Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to formulate and support policies and innovative activities that directly benefit and empower women,

Considering the innovative and experimental activities of the Fund directed towards strengthening both governmental and non-governmental institutional capacities to ensure women access to development co-operation resources and full participation at all levels in the development process,

Taking note of the importance of the work of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women in policy and programme directions, in accordance with the mandate of the Fund,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

2. Emphasizes the important work of the Fund in women's empowerment and gender equality within the framework of implementing the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, and, in that context, notes the recently adopted strategy and business plan;

3. Reaffirms the catalytic role of the Fund in further developing and strengthening women's empowerment by enhancing the integration of a gender perspective into all development programmes, in accordance with its mandate;

4. Stresses the role of the Fund as a development fund in supporting activities related to women's economic and social development in developing countries;

5. Notes the intention of the Fund further to focus its interventions in support of women's empowerment and gender equality;

6. Encourages the Fund to continue to contribute to mainstreaming a gender perspective into all development efforts of Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and civil society;

7. Also encourages the Fund to strengthen its work within the United Nations system at the national level through the resident coordinator system, focusing on strategic interventions and building upon its comparative advantages, in order to promote systemic change, in particular with regard to women's political and economic empowerment;

8. Endorses the role of the Fund in strengthening women's economic capacity, encouraging women to become key economic players in combating the feminization of poverty and strengthening women's leadership and political empowerment so as to increase their participation in decision-making processes;

9. Recognizes the important role the Fund plays in promoting the realization of women's civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights so as to facilitate their full participation in society;

10. Welcomes the operationalization of the Trust Fund in Support of Action to Eliminate Violence against Women, and requests the United Nations Development Fund for Women to disseminate information on best practices and strategic interventions funded under that initiative which should contribute to the eradication of violence against women as an obstacle to development;

11. Encourages the United Nations Development Fund for Women, in order to fulfil its mandate, to continue to mobilize resources for its activities in a comprehensive manner from all available sources, including the private sector, and urges all Member States to contribute and to consider increasing their contributions to the Fund;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the activities of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, to be submitted in accordance with resolution 39/125.

International Research and Training Institute (INSTRAW)

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women held its seventeenth session at the Institute's headquarters in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 17 to 21 February 1997 [E/1997/53]. INSTRAW began work in 1979 [YUN 1979, p. 901] as an autonomous institution conducting research and training programmes for the advancement and mobilization of women in development.

At its 1997 session, the Board reviewed the implementation of the INSTRAW programme of activities during 1996, as well as the framework for research and training for the 1998-1999 biennium and the financial situation. It also discussed the extent and quality of INSTRAW networking with focal points and inter-agency cooperation. The Board recommended that high priority be given to women in situations of armed conflict, violence against women and follow-up to the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements [YUN 1996, p. 992], and suggested that the girl child be included in the Institute's research programme. Other recommendations dealt with networking between INSTRAW and its focal points and enhancing the Institute's visibility through better distribution of its publications. The Board also adopted recommendations related to operational and budgetary issues.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/163 [YUN 1995, p. 1181], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/52/352], described activities of INSTRAW during 1996-1997, during which period programmes focused on women's empowerment; statistics and indicators on gender issues; women, environment and sustainable development; women, media and communications; other inter-agency and collaborative activities; and information, documentation and communication. The report concluded that the Institute's activities in research, training, information and documentation placed a high priority on the obstacles that limited or impeded women from becoming equal partners in development. INSTRAW was at the forefront in establishing new concepts and methods for understanding the specific situation of women in the development process and in broadening the empirical and analytical parameters for such understanding. The developmental context required more research to better understand the complexities affecting women. Continued efforts in training and information were also necessary to promote women's essential contribution to development and to bridge the gap between the situation of women and the prevailing development practices. The Institute's activities were an integral part of UN efforts to mainstream gender into both policy and operational activities and hence to contribute to the implementation of the Platform for Action.

On 12 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/420, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/95 without vote [agenda item 105].

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/163 of 22 December 1995,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/39 of 25 July 1996,

Taking note also of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its seventeenth session,

Reaffirming paragraph 334 of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women on 15 September 1995,

Concerned about the declining resource base of the Institute,

1. Welcomes the appointment of the Director of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, and takes note with appreciation of the work done by the previous Acting Director;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to fill the existing vacancies in the Institute in order to permit it to carry out its mandate;

3. Emphasizes the role of the Institute as the only gender unit for research and training within the United Nations system, and reiterates the relevant provisions contained in the agreed conclusions 1997/3 of 21 July 1997 of the Economic and Social Council;

4. Requests the Institute to continue its cooperation with relevant entities of the United Nations system;

5. Also requests the Institute to better coordinate its activities for gender mainstreaming with relevant entities of the United Nations system with a view to developing joint activities and work plans in appropriate areas;

6. Welcomes the fact that in its activities the Institute places a high priority on the obstacles that limit or impede women from becoming equal partners in development;

7. Expresses its appreciation to those Governments and organizations that have contributed to and supported the activities of the Institute;

8. Invites Member States, intergovernmental organizations, the private sector and civil society to contribute generously to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, thus enabling the Institute to respond effectively to its mandate;

9. Requests the Director of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women to develop a funding strategy and to establish a link between the activities of the Institute and its resource base;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter XI

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 1997, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued its work to improve the situation of children worldwide, particularly those living in conditions of poverty. It reinforced coordination with Governments, civil society organizations and other entities to ensure that children received a just proportion of society's resources and that their rights were protected. Particular areas of concern in 1997 were strengthening health systems, reducing maternal mortality, improving basic education, and providing a secure and sanitary water supply.

UNICEF joined other UN bodies in continuing to promote adherence to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (see PART TWO, Chapter I), and was concerned with the protection of children's human rights (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

In its efforts to promote programmes and policies relating to youth, the United Nations focused in 1997 on implementation of the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which called on Governments to adopt a national youth policy and a cross-sectoral approach in addressing youth's concerns. The Economic and Social Council, in July, called on States, UN bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the Programme of Action. In December, the General Assembly took similar action, and stressed the need to involve youth in implementing it.

The United Nations continued its activities in support of ageing persons, mainly through preparations for the International Year of Older Persons (1999). Both the Economic and Social Council, in July, and the Assembly, in December, encouraged States, the UN system and others to take advantage of the International Year to increase awareness of the challenge of the demographic ageing of societies, the individual and social needs of older persons and the contribution of older persons to societies.

tions and other partners to advance children's rights to survival, protection, development and participation in society. Much of its work involved mobilizing political will and support to ensure that children received a just proportion of society's resources. During the year, UNICEF and its partners helped focus worldwide attention on children who suffered from malaria and malnourishment; children who served in armies or worked at hazardous or exploitative jobs; the scourge of landmines, discrimination and violence against girls and women; and the deaths of adolescent girls and women from causes related to pregnancy and childbirth.

UNICEF cooperated in programmes in 161 countries, areas and territories during the year: 46 in sub-Saharan Africa; 35 in Latin America and the Caribbean; 33 in Asia; 20 in the Middle East and North Africa; and 27 in Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States and the Baltic States.

Programme expenditures totalled $822 million in 1997, of which 33 per cent was spent on child health; 24 per cent on planning, advocacy and cross-sectoral support; 14 per cent on education and early childhood care and development; 12 per cent on community development, women's programmes and children in need of special protection measures; 11 per cent on water supply and sanitation; and 6 per cent on child nutrition. In addition, $97 million was spent on management and administration and write-offs and other charges. UNICEF operations in 1997 were described in the 1998 UNICEF Annual Report and the report of the Executive Director [E/ICEF/1998/4 (Parts I & II)].

The UNICEF Executive Board held its first regular session of 1997 from 20 to 24 January, the second on 18 and 19 March, the annual session from 2 to 6 June, and the third regular session from 9 to 12 September, all in New York [E/1997/32/Rev.1]. During those sessions, the Board adopted 30 decisions.

Children

UN Children's Fund

In 1997, the United Nations Children's Fund worked with Governments, civil society organiza-

Programme policies

In decisions related to UNICEF's programme policies, the Executive Board endorsed an approach for dealing with children and women in emergencies, and for the implementation of UNICEF policies and strategies on children in need of special protection. In addition, it called for certain follow-up action to the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797].

Emergency humanitarian assistance

The UNICEF Executive Board, during its discussion on emergency humanitarian assistance (see also PART THREE, Chapter III), considered a report on strengthening the coordination of emergency assistance [E/ICEF/1997/5], as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1996/33 [YUN 1996, p. 797]. The report described UNICEF's role and operational responsibilities in responding to emergencies, how it coordinated its work with other UN bodies, and measures being taken to improve UNICEF's internal efficiencies. The report emphasized that the child-centred mandate and long-term orientation of UNICEF complemented the roles of other partners in humanitarian action. UNICEF would continue to pursue closer cooperation with its UN partners and to work with partners in the field and through the Inter-Agency Standing Committee Working Group, the Inter-Agency Task Force and its related working groups to ensure that cooperative humanitarian action was based on complementarity, predictability and clear division of labour.

On 21 January [E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/1)], the Executive Board took note of the report and transmitted it, together with comments made by delegations, to the Secretary-General for inclusion in his report on the subject to the Council.

The Board also considered a report on the strategic priorities and operational concerns for UNICEF relating to children and women in emergencies [E/ICEF/1997/7], prepared in response to a 1996 Executive Board decision [YUN 1996, p. 1082]. The main focus of the report was the consequences of complex emergencies for children. The report stated that UNICEF brought a developmental perspective to its emergency action, which had four primary elements: advocacy; assessment; care (including the provision of essential social services); and protection of vulnerable children and women from intentional harm. It outlined progress made towards clarifying UNICEF's role and responsibilities in emergencies; the effective execution of UNICEF's advocacy role for children and women at risk in emergencies; upgrading the UNICEF programmatic capacity; partnership commitment and participation in a coordinated emergency response; and ensuring management effectiveness, fiscal responsibility, transparency and accountability.

The Board, on 23 January [dec. 1997/7], endorsed the approach set out in the report. It asked the Executive Director, in implementing the approach and in elaborating operational guidelines, to take into consideration the views expressed by delegations. She was also asked to report in 2000 on the experiences gained through the approach and the guidelines.

In her report on UNICEF programmes and operations in 1997 [E/ICEF/1998/4(Part II)], the Executive Director stated that, during the year, 26 countries in crisis received funds earmarked as emergency resources, but priority attention focused on Afghanistan, Angola, Burundi, the Congo, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Iraq, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and the Sudan, where the humanitarian situation continued to be very precarious. UNICEF had been implementing the strategic priorities and operational concerns for children in emergencies as contained in the report considered by the Board (see above). Those concerns addressed the continuing basic needs of the affected population, some of which had fallen outside the main focus of emergency field responses, including the needs of internally displaced persons, very young children, youth and adolescents. Particular attention was being paid to the short- and long-term psychosocial and educational needs of populations. The unique concerns of women and girls in relation to health, education, social status, child soldiers, sexual violence and the threats of gender discrimination were also key issues for UNICEF.

In addition to continued assistance to meet urgent basic needs in 1997, UNICEF sought to play a stronger role in terms of advocacy for the special needs of displaced children based on the principles of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 560]. It sought to complement traditional emergency relief with actions in the Sudan to promote respect for humanitarian principles and in the establishment of participatory mechanisms focused on women in displaced camps and settlements. In Liberia (see PART ONE, Chapter II), UNICEF coordinated the initial disarmament and demobilization of over 4,300 child soldiers. The UNICEF mine action programme in Angola promoted a mine ban, supported 20 national and 5 international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in their work, and promoted mine awareness through the school curriculum. Education became a component of all sustained UNICEF emergency programmes in eastern and southern Africa. Burundi and Uganda were among the emergency programmes that included expansion of education facilities through the construction of temporary schools. In Burundi and Rwanda, psychosocial support was provided for children affected by war and conflict through the training of teachers and religious leaders in assisting traumatized children; creating structured social activities for children; providing a family environment or its alternative to children whose family members had died or from whom they had been separated; and promoting peace education. In Iraq, UNICEF addressed the impact of sanctions on children (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

In March, UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board its annual progress report [E/ICEF/1997/14 & Corr.1,2] on follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797], covering 1996.

The report provided an updated summary of progress at mid-decade and highlighted the major challenges that remained for the fulfilment of the goals for the year 2000, and contained information on the cost of supporting the review to UNICEF and its country programmes.

At mid-decade, striking progress had been made in the areas of immunization, control of diarrhoeal diseases, polio, dracunculiasis eradication, iodine deficiency control and promotion of breastfeeding. The 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child had been ratified by almost every country in the world (see PART TWO, Chapter I). However, progress towards goals for child survival, education and nutrition was lagging. In the coming years, while sustaining progress made in the control of preventable diseases, efforts had to be intensified to narrow the gap regarding child development. Among the key next steps to achieve the goals for the year 2000 were to strengthen links between the Convention and the Summit goals by developing indicators to monitor progress on the realization of children's rights covering all areas identified by the Convention; prioritize goals and strategies more closely to local realities; build national capacity; mobilize additional resources; increase inter-agency coordination, including follow-up to international conferences; modify the UNICEF system for allocation of general resources; and prepare for a special session of the General Assembly in 2001 to review achievements of the goals of the World Summit, in accordance with Assembly resolution 51/186 [YUN 1996, p. 1083].

On 6 June [E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/20)], the Executive Board, noting the progress made towards the mid-decade goals and recognizing the enormous challenges ahead to meet the end-decade goals, asked UNICEF to give due consideration to children requiring special protection measures, such as those affected by child labour, sexual exploitation and disabilities. The Board urged Governments, the international community, the private sector, NGOs and other actors in civil society, the media and communities to reaffirm their commitment to children and to allocate additional resources to achieving the Summit goals for 2000. It also urged Governments to adopt strategies to ensure that children's rights were guaranteed, in conformity with the 1989 Convention, by strengthening their national and subnational programmes of action. In that connection, UNICEF was invited to continue its cooperation with the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in facilitating national implementation and monitoring of the Convention, as well as its reporting system.

The Executive Director was asked to work with Governments to strengthen further national capacities for the collection and use of data, including data disaggregated by gender and age, to identify indicators that were relevant, comparable and timely to monitor progress towards the realization of children's rights and the World Summit goals, developing core indicators that would enable comparison between countries and additional indicators to reflect the country's reality. She was also asked to support the implementation of Assembly resolution 51/186 regarding the World Summit; to take action, as part of the country programme process, to support efforts by Governments and others to achieve the Summit goals within the framework of national and subnational programmes of action; and to report in 1998 on the steps taken to implement the strategy for improved nutrition of children and women in developing countries, and on the implementation of the Board's current decision.

Child protection policy review

In response to a 1996 Executive Board request [YUN 1996, p. 1086], the UNICEF secretariat submitted, in March, a report on steps taken to implement UNICEF policies and strategies for children in need of special protection measures [E/ICEF/1997/16]. The concept of special protection measures was developed by CRC to guide States parties to the 1989 Convention in responding to situations such as war and violence, exploitation, abuse, separation from family, detention or imprisonment and disability. The report outlined a two-pronged strategy. Firstly, the mainstream of social services needed to be adapted to reach and to provide support to children at risk, since gross violations of children's rights were often associated with overall poverty and inadequacies of social services. Secondly, targeted initiatives to reach disadvantaged children who were missed by, or left out of, mainstream programmes needed to be established.

The implementation plan, a key component of the evolving child rights approach to programming, focused on the establishment of technical support networks (TSN) to ensure support to Governments in addressing special protection issues. Specific steps were described to enhance programmatic responses in the relevant areas, including the revision of guidelines and the strengthening of strategic partnerships with Governments, UN agencies, NGOs and other civil society organizations.

The report described UNICEF activities in selected special protection areas, including economic exploitation, the impact of armed conflict on children, sexual abuse and exploitation, childhood disability and juvenile justice.

Within UNICEF, organizational support was provided by regional child protection advisers or focal points to country offices and country programmes. The headquarters advisory team had been strengthened and focused on childhood disability, child labour and the impact of armed conflict on children. Specific tasks for 1997 included: programme knowledge acquisition; programme knowledge dissemination; a bulletin board on the UNICEF home page; development of a basic set of indicators as tools for situation assessment, analysis and monitoring; and the development of global partnerships.

On 6 June [E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/21)], the Executive Board, having reviewed the report, endorsed its overall approach for implementing the policy on children in need of special protection measures, taking into account the comments made by delegations, in particular with regard to the need for priority-setting, the definition and adaptation of implementation mechanisms, financial implications, and criteria and mechanisms for continuous monitoring and evaluation. The Board asked the Executive Director to report in 1998.

Health strategy

UNICEF, in a report to the Executive Board [E/ICEF/1997/3], described the implementation plan of the health strategy for UNICEF, as requested by the Board in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1249]. The strategy responded to changing requirements for approaches to health that could realize the health rights outlined in the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child and consequent gains in health status.

In order to play a strategic role in seeking to achieve the universality that was a core principle of the Convention, UNICEF actions in health would focus on the poorest and most vulnerable. To give coherence to programming, the UNICEF interventions would involve a dynamic relationship between three priority populations—children, young people and women—and three major intervention methodologies—monitoring, services and health promotion.

The organization of health actions around the 1989 Convention would modify the approach to programming at the country level. UNICEF could go beyond the specific health objectives of child survival and infant/child mortality reduction to the broader objectives of improving the quality of life and addressing health concerns of infants, children, adolescents and women, taking into consideration non-discrimination with regard to gender, minority, ethnic, socio-economic and religious factors; the best interests of the child; quality of information and participation of stakeholders, especially women and children; and universality of rights.

The health strategy's implementation would involve strengthening and widening partnerships at both institutional and programme levels. Partnerships had to be developed with new actors, such as private entities and decentralized authorities in various countries. Many of them had already started and were in a development process. The advocacy component of the health strategy should target Governments and regional and municipal authorities.

On 24 January [E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/9)], the Executive Board endorsed the approach for implementing the health strategy. The Executive Director was asked to encourage Governments, the international community, NGOs and other members of civil society to mobilize more resources to implement the health strategy, and to report to the Board in 2000 on progress made.

Maurice Pate Award

In January [E/ICEF/1997/9], the Executive Director recommended that the Maurice Pate Award for 1997 be presented to the Legal Assistance Centre of Namibia and that the Executive Board approve an allocation of $25,000 from general resources for that purpose. The Award, which was established in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 385], was made to the Centre, a public interest law firm, in recognition of its key role in lobbying for legal reforms, and in the drafting of the Children Care and Protection Act and lobbying for its adoption by the legislature. By a decision of 18 March [E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/12)], the Board agreed with the recommendation and approved the allocation.

UNICEF programmes by region

During 1997, programme expenditure in Africa totalled $305 million, representing 37 per cent of total UNICEF programme expenditure.

In Africa, UNICEF adopted a modified allocation system for general resources to give greater priority to countries with high under-five mortality and low income. Thus, the priority general resources allocations to Africa would increase in line with the agreement that UNICEF should give highest priority to the most disadvantaged children and the countries in greatest need.

UNICEF cooperation continued to emphasize participatory and integrated approaches to strengthen essential social services at the community level. Increasing efforts were made to help national partners to reform civil and penal legislation in the light of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and to promote the participation of children and youth in public debates on issues that concerned them. Guided by the child rights principles of non-discrimination and universality, programmes in Botswana, Eritrea, Kenya, Mali and other countries were helping to extend basic social services to remotely located and underserved populations.

In response to a 1995 Executive Board request [YUN 1995, p. 1198], UNICEF submitted a March report on ensuring children's rights to survival, development and protection in Africa [E/ICEF/1997/15]. The report discussed the current socio-economic situation in Africa and reviewed progress towards the goals of the 1990 World Summit and other areas of concern to children and women. UNICEF responses were described in the areas of health and nutrition, basic education, water supply and environmental sanitation, emergency operations, gender-related concerns, child protection, communication and social mobilization strategies, collaboration with civil society and NGOs, and management and funding. The report discussed future directions for UNICEF and its partners in Africa, which would focus on primary health care and nutrition; basic education, with an emphasis on girls; water supply and environmental sanitation; and the care and protection of the most vulnerable children and women. Priority would be given to assisting countries to reach the goals of the World Summit.

The UNICEF Executive Board, on 6 June [E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/19)], taking note of the report on children's rights to survival, protection and development in Africa, as well as the Executive Director's report on follow-up to the World

Summit (see above), urged the Executive Director to advocate for additional resources from private and public sources for programmes in Africa to support the World Summit goals. It called on her to work with Governments in Africa, multilateral and bilateral agencies and NGOs to increase capacity in health services using the community-participation approach of the 1987 Bamako Initiative [YUN 1987, p. 859]; to expand efforts to control and eliminate malaria; to improve accessibility and quality of primary education, particularly for girls; to strengthen nutrition; and to accelerate progress in water supply and sanitation. The Executive Director was urged to expand UNICEF support for African children in need of special protection, and to work in all sectors and with all its partners to build African capacity to prevent and control the spread of HIV/AIDS. The Board called on her to ensure that UNICEF continued to play an active role in inter-agency work to implement the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). UNICEF was called on to continue working with Governments to promote the reallocation of national resources in favor of social sectors. The Board urged the Executive Director to advocate for measures to reduce the official debt burden of African countries, and asked her to report in 1999 on progress made in implementing the current decision.

In West and Central Africa, civil wars in Sierra Leone and the Congo, and conflict spilling over from the Great Lakes region and into the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) (formerly Zaire), continued to disrupt the lives of hundreds of thousands of children and women (see PART ONE, Chapter II). During the war in the Congo, UNICEF maintained supplies of essential drugs to two hospitals and six health centres and provided emergency food to 15 camps for displaced people. In Sierra Leone, it provided similar support for 120 primary health centres, helping to contain a measles outbreak and to prevent cholera. In the eastern part of the DRC, UNICEF worked with a multi-agency group supplying food and other supplies to 400,000 refugees and 200,000 families displaced by violence. In May 1997, when the DRC ended 32 years of dictatorship, 80 per cent of the population was in poverty, 70 per cent of infants were not immunized and a third of children under five were malnourished. When the new Government took office, UNICEF helped with immunization, education and other basic services. Among other measures, it provided school equipment for 48,000 children and trained some 2,000 teachers. As peace took hold in Liberia during the year, families displaced by violence began returning home. UNICEF helped support government efforts to restore social services. It provided nine country health teams with training, essential drugs and other equipment that helped them make 75 health centres operational. UNICEF also assisted with the rehabilitation of more than 300 wells and handpumps and trained more than 27,000 people in health and hygiene practices. A UNICEF-backed drive to immunize children against polio and measles reached 90 per cent of those under five in 47 urban centres. Also, when peace returned, UNICEF oversaw the demobilization of child soldiers and launched the first programmes to reintegrate them into civilian life. UNICEF urged Governments to earmark 20 per cent of their national budgets to basic social services, but that remained a formidable challenge for countries of West and Central Africa.

In eastern and southern Africa, natural disasters and armed conflict caused suffering for millions during the year. The El Niño weather pattern brought torrential rain or drought that devastated harvests from Ethiopia to southern Africa. In Somalia, where flood waters endangered several hundred thousand people, UNICEF assumed management of an inter-agency team that rescued victims, treated water sources and provided basic drugs to health centres. In Kenya, Mozambique, Somalia, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania, flooding helped create a cholera epidemic. Working with the World Health Organization (WHO), UNICEF assisted national cholera task forces.

In 1997, a Regional Emergency Support Unit was set up to handle complex emergencies in the Great Lakes region and to help countries anticipate and respond to human and natural disasters. During the year, the Unit supported surveys in several countries to determine their levels of preparedness for floods and droughts. While peace efforts moved forward in Angola and Somalia, violence continued to plague hundreds of thousands of families in the Great Lakes region and in parts of Uganda. Ethiopia and the United Republic of Tanzania hosted the largest number of refugees in the region—about 340,000. In 1997, 50,000 Burundi children in Tanzanian refugee camps were able to continue their education as a result of agreements between the Governments of Burundi and the United Republic of Tanzania, which were negotiated by UNICEF and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. In Burundi, UNICEF assisted in the construction of 146 temporary classrooms and provided funds for tuition subsidies and school supplies. Malnutrition remained a problem in about half of the countries of the region. Sub-Saharan Africa had a higher percentage of children dying before the age of five than any other region of the world, and about half of those deaths were associated with malnutrition. In the United Republic of Tanzania, a child survival and development programme, assisted by UNICEF, was aimed at combating malnutrition by monitoring the growth of children, planting home gardens and improving the treatment of diarrhoea, hygiene standards and the nutrition content of food. In Zambia, UNICEF assisted the Government's reform of the health sector to ensure the participation of communities and civil society organizations in developing primary health care and nutrition programmes. Many efforts to improve nutrition focused on deficiencies of iron, iodine and vitamin A. To help ensure adequate vitamin A in the diet, UNICEF gave technical advice to private companies that fortified sugar and other foods in several countries. The HIV/AIDS pandemic continued to grow, especially in southern Africa. UNICEF responded to the needs of children who had lost one or both parents to the disease. In Botswana and Zimbabwe, UNICEF supported several pilot schemes that explored various care alternatives for orphans, especially foster placement.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1997, UNICEF programme expenditure for the Americas and the Caribbean amounted to $100 million, or 12 per cent of the total.

Inequality of income level and of access to social services was the main barrier to development in the region. UNICEF encouraged Governments to direct more resources to social services and poor communities. In Nicaragua, UNICEF's work in 33 impoverished municipalities brought together governments, civil society groups and communities to benefit some 140,000 people through activities that included training in child rights, upgrading the skills of health workers and the installation of water systems. In Guatemala, UNICEF provided essential drugs and supported a door-to-door effort to educate families about immunization. As a result, immunization levels for diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis and polio rose from 12 to 90 per cent of targeted groups in affected areas. The Integrated Management of Childhood Illness initiative was introduced by UNICEF and the WHO/Pan American Health Organization in Latin America and other regions to improve the knowledge and skills of health workers and parents. In Bolivia, UNICEF assisted with training for 60 trainers and 350 health workers, and helped the country's three main medical schools to incorporate the new child-centred strategy into their curricula. A programme in Bolivia, introduced with UNICEF support, provided poor families with free access to health care for children under five and for women during pregnancy and childbirth. During 1997, UNICEF assisted with training in health, nutrition, child-care, reproductive health and hygiene for almost 3,000 community volunteers and over 50,000 family members (86 per cent women) from more than 120 municipalities. UNICEF worked with schools and health authorities in Belize, Costa Rica, Peru and Saint Lucia, among other countries, to provide education in life skills such as problem-solving and conflict resolution to adolescents and to make health information and services more accessible to that age group. In Costa Rica, training for 80 health workers and teachers focused on understanding adolescents and their needs, improving their access to appropriate information and adapting prenatal care to the needs of pregnant teens.

Early childhood programmes were launched in Peru, with community-based day care centres for 50,000 children. UNICEF assisted in the production of education materials for non-formal pre-schools across the country, benefiting about 360,000 girls and boys. In Guatemala, 1,000 community schools offering basic education to 60,000 students opened in rural areas with support from a multi-agency group that included UNICEF. Many of the schools had been rehabilitated following damage during years of armed conflict. In Brazil, a UNICEF-supported Government campaign was expected to bring 2.7 million working children into primary schools.

Asia and the Pacific

UNICEF programme expenditure for Asia and the Pacific amounted to $235 million in 1997, or 29 per cent of the total.

Home to more children than any other region, South Asia faced some of the greatest child rights challenges, including poverty, malnutrition, child labour and discrimination against girls and women. In Bangladesh, over half of under-fives suffered moderate to severe stunting from malnutrition. In areas where iodine deficiency was a problem, many thousands of children suffered mental and physical disabilities. UNICEF assisted communities with a range of interrelated programmes, including growth monitoring, encouraging better care for children, increasing the nutritional status and education levels of girls and women, promoting breastfeeding and ensuring the availability of key micronutrients such as vitamin A, iron and iodine. In India, UNICEF and the World Bank assisted the Government in launching a Women and Child Development project in five states, and supported training in combating child malnutrition for 20,000 women in another five. UNICEF worked with WHO and other organizations to assist the Government's campaign to immunize 128 million children against polio. In addition, India reported no cases of Guinea worm disease. Several problems remained to be addressed, however, including child deaths from diarrhoeal diseases. In Sri Lanka, UNICEF provided 500,000 nutrition leaflets, 500,000 handbills on iodine deficiency disorders, 7,000 iodine-testing kits and 350,000 growth-monitoring charts. Routine immunization programmes were maintained or expanded. Agreements to stop hostilities made possible the immunization of 1.5 million children nationwide. Reducing maternal mortality was the aim of several programmes in South Asian countries, where girls and women had at least a one-in-ten risk of dying as a result of pregnancy or childbirth. In India, a safe motherhood programme represented the largest component of UNICEF's support for women's health. In Bangladesh, UNICEF was helping to improve essential obstetric care. In Bhutan, efforts to reduce maternal mortality were based on a national plan of action that was drawn up at a workshop supported by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), UNICEF and WHO. Child labour was another concern in South Asia, where UNICEF was working with other organizations to provide education for children in the labour force. In Bangladesh, UNICEF helped 35 NGOs set up over 2,000 learning centres providing informal schooling each day for over 60,000 children working in all occupations, more than half of them girls. In Nepal, UNICEF and the Nepal Rugmark Foundation agreed to provide child workers in the carpet industry with non-formal schooling through local NGOs. In India, a similar UNICEF-sponsored initiative helped loom workers attend school. UNICEF provided training for 100,000 women in local government in India and promoted girls' education in 50 districts with low female literacy rates. Despite the continued fighting in Afghanistan, UNICEF cooperated in projects aimed at providing water supply and other services to internally displaced people, a landmine-awareness project and immunization against polio.

In East Asia and the Pacific, positive gains were made towards the World Summit goals. Six countries appeared on track to achieve goals on infant and under-five mortality, while seven countries were likely to achieve the targeted level of 80 per cent of children completing primary school. However, continued economic uncertainty threatened the region's considerable human development achievements. Hardest hit were Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand. Forest fires in Indonesia affected people in that country as well as parts of Brunei Darussalam, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand, posing a particular hazard to children. UNICEF Malaysia ordered particle-filtering masks for distribution in Sarawak state. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, a severe drought placed 800,000 infants and young children at risk and 80,000 in danger of dying from starvation or disease. Working with the World Food Programme (WFP) and other organizations, UNICEF airlifted 150 metric tons of high-energy milk, supplementary food, medicines and other supplies. Another 350 tons of supplies arrived by sea or rail. At the same time, UNICEF supported long-standing programmes in health, nutrition, water and environmental sanitation, and small-scale food production.

Low enrolment in schools remained a problem in the region. In Myanmar, leaders of the parent-teacher associations in rural villages were trained in collecting household data on enrolment, monitoring school enrolment and completion, and follow-up on out-of-school students. A UNICEF-supported cluster school project in Cambodia provided resources and expertise to 332 schools and 135,000 students. In Thailand, a project mobilized pupils, teachers, families and community members to create children's learning profiles to plan programmes tailored to children's needs. By the end of 1997, the project had benefited 25 schools catering to 3,000 students from 31 communities. China, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand were making progress towards achieving the World Summit goals to reduce maternal mortality, whereas Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Papua New Guinea needed major efforts to reach the targets. In Indonesia, UNICEF joined an initiative to sensitize local communities to problems that could arise in childbirth and established programmes to provide emergency care to women facing high-risk deliveries. Transmission of HIV/AIDS from mother to child had increased in Cambodia, Myanmar and Thailand, where UNICEF provided confidential counselling and other support for affected women and children. Youth services were incorporated into many health care centres to help prevent and treat sexually transmitted diseases among the young. In Thailand, UNICEF cooperated with health experts and several UN agencies to produce a video training package for health and community workers to counsel people living with the disease. It was also adapted for use in other countries of the region.

Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States

Programme expenditure in Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States totalled $47 million, or 6 per cent of the total programme expenditure.

Access to health services was a major concern in the region, and there had been an upsurge in sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS, deficiencies of micronutrients such as iron, iodine and vitamins C and D, and large numbers of maternal deaths. Initiatives in Croatia, the Russian Federation and Ukraine focused on adolescent health and development issues such as HIV/AIDS prevention, drug and alcohol abuse, suicide and crime. The transition to market economies led to a discontinuation of State-run programmes to prevent and control iodine deficiency disorders and to an increase in goitre prevalence, which was treated by iodizing salt in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, the Czech Republic, Poland, Slovakia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and progress was made in other countries.

New initiatives were launched to combat rises in infant and maternal deaths, including a maternal and child health forum in the Central Asian Republics and Kazakhstan, a national five-year perinatal care programme in the Republic of Moldova, and the UNICEF/UNFPA safe motherhood programme in Romania. The region again had high immunization coverage following a period of decline. Since 1995, UNICEF had been working with WHO and other partners to contain polio in 16 countries and diphtheria epidemics in all 15 newly independent States, leading to a reduction in cases of the two diseases. UNICEF also assisted health sector reform. In Azerbaijan, primary health care reform had progressed towards assuring equity, affordability and universal coverage. Reforms ensured free services for the poor, pregnant women and children and gave the health centres' chief doctors responsibilities for management and finance. Community councils were set up to provide links with health centres and identify those in need of free services. Similar projects were planned for Georgia, the Republic of Moldova and Ukraine.

In the area of education, UNICEF and its partners assisted the development of an interactive learning programme for pre-schools and primary schools in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, which reached 44 schools by year's end. In Romania, UNICEF-assisted kindergartens promoted early childhood care and development through methods that encouraged student participation, self-reliance and creativity, and the involvement of parents. Those centres had reached 24,000 children by the end of 1997. In Turkey, UNICEF continued to cooperate with the World Bank on the rural component of a basic education pilot project. In Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia, UNICEF sponsored landmine-awareness kits, which were distributed to all schools. UNICEF worked with Governments to establish foster care and adoption alternatives to institutionalization. In Romania, where the abandonment of children to public care remained widespread, UNICEF organized a conference that brought together professionals and policy makers from 11 countries in the region as well as experts from Western Europe to discuss ways to protect the rights of children living in settings outside the home. With UNICEF advice, Romania set up a Department for Child Protection, which aimed to regulate the care received by children in residential units, help families in crisis and develop community-based alternatives to institutionalization. UNICEF assisted orphans and disabled children in Albania, helped children in Bosnia and Herzegovina to alleviate the trauma experienced from war, and provided polio vaccines and emergency medical supplies to maternity centres, children's institutions and children's hospitals in Bulgaria.

Middle East and North Africa

Total UNICEF expenditure for programmes in the Middle East and North Africa amounted to $85 million, or 10 per cent of the total expenditure.

Progress was made in most countries in the region towards achieving the World Summit goals, but the three poorest countries—Djibouti, the Sudan and Yemen—had encountered difficulties in the areas of universal education, reduction of maternal mortality and elimination of Guinea worm disease. On the other hand, Jordan, Lebanon and Tunisia were among several countries that had met most of the goals ahead of schedule.

A national vaccination campaign in Iran, conducted by the Government with support from UNICEF, WHO and other organizations, reached over 7 million children. In Lebanon, the post-war recovery programme was aided by the private sector, which raised funds for immunization, salt iodization and other UNICEF programmes.

UNICEF worked with WFP and Iraq to carry out major surveys to assess the impact on children of both the 1991 Gulf War and international sanctions. The surveys showed that the percentage of underweight children under five had jumped from 9 to 26 per cent since 1991. They also showed that almost a third of children in that age group were chronically malnourished or stunted, and more than a tenth were acutely malnourished, representing an increase of almost 300 per cent since 1991. As part of its efforts to reduce malnutrition, UNICEF supported the establishment of 1,200 community child care units, where local volunteers monitored the growth of under-fives. In collaboration with the Netherlands, UNICEF helped rebuild 150 schools in south-central Iraq, benefiting 40,000 children.

In Algeria, thousands of children had been affected by violent civil conflict. In 1997, UNICEF began working with Government ministries and others to develop children's trauma counselling and psychosocial therapy programmes. In the Sudan, which had also endured years of civil conflict, UNICEF worked with WFP and NGOs to provide emergency food and medical supplies to about 2 million people.

UNICEF worked with a number of Governments to enrol more girls in school and help them complete their education. A project in Egypt, which started in 1992, had brought education to 4,000 girls in about 150 small villages in remote rural areas where girls' enrolment had been low. The project, with foreign aid, would be expanded nationally. Reaching girls in rural areas was also a goal in Yemen, where a UNICEF-assisted programme reached 7,000 children in some of the country's most remote provinces.

Regarding the integration of child rights into the legal systems of countries, UNICEF, in Morocco, trained 60 judges, probation officers, educators and others in ways to incorporate child rights into their work. UNICEF child rights and legal advisers worked with Djibouti in introducing child rights into a new body of law known as the Family Code, which would combine tenets of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Sharia, or religious law, and traditional laws.

UNICEF programmes by sector

The major focus of UNICEF programme activity during 1997 continued to be guided by the global agenda for children adopted at the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797]. In several instances where progress towards achieving the World Summit goals had been lagging, the data collected through multiple indicator cluster surveys had highlighted significant disparities, often rooted in discrimination of various forms, but especially those based on gender and ethnic origin.

Child and adolescent health

UNICEF cooperation with national partners continued to focus on the survival, health and development of the young child. Several countries reported significant progress during 1997. In Bhutan, the under-five and infant mortality rates (U5MR and IMR) since 1995 decreased from 189 to 133 per 1,000 live births and from 122 to 93 per 1,000 live births, respectively, while in Nepal U5MR and IMR had fallen to 118 and 79 per 1,000 live births, respectively, despite the severe poverty of both countries.

During 1997, many country programmes made serious efforts to work in an integrated way on the survival, early care and development of children, combined with efforts to make basic preventive and curative health services available to all children, ensuring adequate nutrition, hygiene, household sanitation and waste disposal, the availability of safe water, and promotion of family knowledge about the feeding, care and stimulation of infants and young children. A programme approach known as Integrated Management of Childhood Illnesses (IMCI) since 1992 had been evolving to integrate disease control programmes within a coordinated approach to the management of child health. In 1997, it included an emphasis on prevention and health promotion within the family and at the community level.

UNICEF, in collaboration with WHO, refined strategies to reduce measles mortality. It also continued to support global polio eradication efforts. In 1997, nearly three quarters, or over 450 million, of the world's children received at least one dose of oral polio vaccine (OPV) as part of that initiative. The number of polio cases reported in 1997 was expected to be some 3,500, nearly a 90 per cent decrease since 1988.

During the year, UNICEF increased its activities to combat malaria, which remained a growing threat to the lives of young children and pregnant women. An informal consultation meeting (New York, 18-20 June) reached consensus that key elements of UNICEF efforts should be the accelerated provision and distribution of insecticide-treated bednets, improved case management in homes and health facilities, community participation and social mobilization, health promotion and monitoring and evaluation. The majority of efforts were directed towards country programmes in West and Central Africa and eastern and southern Africa.

It was estimated that close to 500 million under 14 years old were infected with helminths, a worm infestation that reduced normal growth of children, contributed to their overall ill health and negatively affected school performance. WHO and UNICEF were in the process of finalizing technical guidelines for helminths control. Since inadequate sanitation and poor hygiene were major factors in the transmission of helminths, a renewed focus on sanitation was developing within the context of efforts to attain goals related to women's health and child mortality.

Regarding adolescent health, many UNICEF country offices continued to support programmes to promote the health and development of young people by engaging in national planning and policy development and by supporting education and service provision activities through multiple channels. Regional initiatives included the eastern and southern Africa regional HIV/AIDS/Youth Network meeting on youth-friendly health services, a communication project and the eastern and southern Africa regional training meeting on life skills education. The West and Central Africa region organized a meeting on young people, HIV/AIDS and rights. The Regional Office for Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States supported a number of reviews of the situation of young people in the region. A regional consultation in Latin America and the Caribbean region examined the problem of adolescent pregnancy from a rights perspective.

UNICEF experiences in the area of youth health programming over the previous four years were recorded in the publication Youth Health-for a Change: a Notebook on Programming for Young People's Health and Development, which formed the basis for the Young People's Programme Knowledge Network. Two important global meetings took place during 1997: a global consultation on young people's participation; and the first meeting of the UNICEF Interregional Programming Group on Meeting the Health and Development Rights of Young People in Crisis.

UNICEF continued to play an advocacy role in relation to young people's health. Tobacco use received particular attention during 1997 as it undermined children's rights to health and development and was creating an additional burden of disease for poorer developing countries.

Maternal mortality

Although overall global progress towards the goal of reducing maternal mortality had been disappointing, there was a heightened awareness and greater consensus on the most effective interventions to reduce maternal and neonatal mortality. In several countries, national programmes of cooperation were supported by UNICEF and other partners and were expected to show positive results in the next two to five years.

The importance of good nutrition and the linkages between women's nutritional status and maternal survival were beginning to be better understood. UNICEF programmes were making explicit links between the education and health of women and girls and efforts to reduce micronutrient deficiencies and promote good nutrition through community-based systems. During 1997, UNICEF promoted family and community support for delayed marriage and childbearing, opportunities for expanding girls' access to education and training, and women's income-earning and opportunities.

In Bangladesh, Bolivia, Egypt and Mali, programmes helped to increase the quality and availability of prenatal and delivery care. In Benin, communities were involved directly in the management of services at district hospitals and health centres and referral systems were strengthened to treat complications. In Viet Nam, communities were assisted to form networks that would support women in the event of obstetric complications. In a number of countries, UNICEF provided support for training health staff, equipping and managing health facilities, establishing monitoring systems and improving women's access to quality services. In Bolivia, the utilization of health services by women rose through a health insurance system for pregnant women and young children. In Peru, training and supervision of maternal and child health workers in the Andean areas improved their ability to recognize danger signs and doubled the number of referrals to health facilities. In Burundi, subsidized sales of delivery kits to pregnant women reduced maternal infections and neonatal tetanus, while the revenues were used by health centres to transport women with obstetric emergencies to hospitals.

HIV/AIDS control

UNICEF continued to respond to the HIV/AIDS pandemic within the context of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII). The issues that concerned UNICEF most directly during 1997 included the search for effective and affordable ways to prevent HIV transmission; the promotion of safe behaviour to reduce the risk of infection, especially among children and adolescents; and efforts to develop and strengthen affordable community-based strategies to help families, especially women and children, cope with the impact of HIV/AIDS.

Many country programmes promoted healthy behaviour in formal and non-formal education programmes, making use of various media and building partnerships with organizations and individuals that influenced youth. The Caribbean Regional Health and Family Life Education Programme focused on efforts to mainstream the development of life skills, such as decision-making abilities, in the school system through cooperation with multiple partners, including government ministries, teachers' organizations, the Caribbean Community and UNICEF. The rate of HIV/AIDS infection in the Caribbean was second after Africa, and the incidence among adolescent girls was one of the highest.

The Mekong project for HIV/AIDS activities used innovative approaches such as collaboration to develop training materials for young people and support peer group education on issues of youth health and responsible behaviour to reduce the risks of HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. In Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, UNICEF and WHO collaborated to bring together representatives from 18 African countries to review experiences and assess lessons learned from programme activity in Uganda and Zimbabwe.

The issue of vertical transmission of HIV was of importance to UNICEF, given its leadership in promoting breastfeeding. UNICEF joined other agencies in searching for ways to reduce the risks of infection in infants born to HIV-positive mothers and to maximize their survival if they were infected. UNICEF also helped health systems to develop the capacity to manage the new drug regimens to reduce vertical transmission and expand women's access to voluntary and confidential testing and counselling services. Clinical trials in Thailand had proved that a short-course regimen of the drug AZT could effectively reduce vertical transmission.

Progress continued to be made in basic education around the world, but the pace was uneven and millions of children were still denied basic education. Enrolment rates had increased overall, but access was still a major problem in sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia. It also remained a problem for various groups of marginalized and excluded children who were poor and often victims of discrimination based on gender and ethnic origin. In most countries, girls were still the most marginalized. Two thirds of children not in school were girls, although in some countries the rates of boys' enrolment and retention were falling. Special conditions such as disability, armed conflict and the exploitation of child labour created additional hurdles.

UNICEF emphasized programmes to improve the quality of basic education, and especially to give girls equal access to quality education. In Zambia, the curriculum was under review to ensure that it responded to the learning needs of girls and boys and overcame the gender bias of many curricula. The Dominican Republic was also involved in textbook revision and teacher training to address gender issues. In Nigeria, the issue of promoting and assessing learning achievement was being addressed. Guatemala was focusing on critical language issues through its bilingual education programme, the Philippines had a programme to address multi-grade teaching, and Papua New Guinea was working with community-level school boards to improve school management.

In 1997, UNICEF clarified the programmatic links and approaches to education and child labour, based largely on programme experience in countries such as Bangladesh, Brazil, India, Morocco and the United Republic of Tanzania. Those countries had demonstrated that it was possible to improve the lives of working children by providing quality education combined with other interventions. Education also remained a key aspect of working with children affected by emergencies and conflicts. Liberia and Sierra Leone were among countries trying to reconstitute education systems. UNICEF had an intranet network of educators engaged in emergencies and post-conflict situations, including in Angola, Colombia, Croatia and Somalia.

Water, environment and sanitation

UNICEF programmes in many countries paid special attention to the issue of sanitation in 1997. Three national training events in low-cost sanitation technologies took place in Burkina Faso, Guinea-Bissau and Nigeria for Governments, NGOs and private sector professionals from 18 countries of the West and Central Africa region and the Comoros and Haiti. A consolidated plan was developed to promote sanitation in those countries. In eastern and southern Africa, training sessions on hygiene evaluation procedures took place in Asmara, Eritrea.

In November, a workshop on women's participation and gender considerations in water supply and sanitation services was organized for southern African countries in Pretoria, South Africa, by UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the World Bank and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). A handbook for programme implementers entitled Mainstreaming Gender in Water, Environment and Sanitation programming was completed to ensure the integration of gender issues in UNICEF programming.

With regard to the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for Africa, a memorandum of understanding was signed between UNICEF and the World Bank on water supply and sanitation in Africa to pave the way for country-level cooperation.

UNICEF and WHO proposed a Global Environmental Sanitation Initiative aimed at promoting awareness and behaviour change to address the global sanitation gap and its impact on health and development, which was endorsed at the Water Supply and Sanitation Collaborative Council Global Forum (Manila, Philippines, October). In India, freshwater case studies were completed in five ecozones, which examined the freshwater crisis in India resulting from declining water tables, widespread pollution and environmental degradation. UNICEF country programmes in Cuba, Honduras, Liberia, Mozambique and Pakistan continued to focus on improving water supply systems and sanitation in urban slum areas. In collaboration with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), UNICEF was developing a handbook for field-level operations on how to select and apply appropriate urban sanitation technologies. UNICEF also collaborated with UNCHS on the consultation with African countries on developing public/private partnerships in water supply and sanitation in urban areas.

Organizational and administrative matters

UNICEF finances

In 1997, UNICEF income amounted to $902 million, which was $13 million (1.4 per cent) less than the $915 million income estimated in the financial medium-term plan for 1997-2000 and $42 million (4.4 per cent) less than 1996 income. The decrease in total income was due mainly to a decline in supplementary funds income. The main sources of income were Governments and intergovernmental organizations, which contributed 66 per cent of total income; and non-governmental/private sector sources, which provided 31 per cent. The remaining 3 per cent came from UN agencies and other miscellaneous sources.

Budget appropriations

In September [(E/1997/32/Rev.1 (dec. 1997/22)], the Executive Board approved the following respective amounts for general resources and supplementary funding for programme cooperation: Africa, $54,524,800 and $86,640,000; Americas and the Caribbean, $17,511,460 and $115,625,000; Asia, $44,393,000 and $70,500,000; Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, $6,000,000 and $5,000,000; and the Middle East and North Africa, $15,361,250 and $18,050,000.

The Board, also in September [dec. 1997/24], approved the medium-term plan as a framework of projections for 1997-2000 [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.10], including the preparation of up to $379 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted in 1998. The amount was subject to the availability of resources and to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure made in the plan continued to be valid.

Again in September [dec. 1997/25], the Board, taking note of its January decision [dec. 1997/3] that, in order to maintain the integrity of both the country programme recommendation and the integrated budget processes, the "Biennial support budget" for 1998-1999, on an exceptional basis, be reviewed by the Executive Board at its first regular session in January 1998, approved an interim one-month budget allocation for January 1998 in the amount of $22 million pending the approval of the biennial budget for 1998-1999. It stated that the interim allocation did not include any proposed changes that might be contained in the 1998-1999 budget proposal and agreed that the allocation would be absorbed in the 1998-1999 budget proposals.

The Board, in June [dec. 1997/18], endorsed a modified system for the allocation of general resources available for programmes, as outlined in an annex to its decision, and asked the Executive Director to implement it, beginning in 1999.

The modified system applied only to regular resources, thus not to those for the support budget or to supplementary funds. It continued to be based on the three existing core criteria-U5MR, GNP per capita and child population. It aimed at giving higher priority to children of low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries and those of sub-Saharan Africa; advocating for children's rights and needs as well as ensuring high-quality policy and advice; allocating general resources sufficient to strengthen implementation of programmes in the respective countries; and accommodating evolving needs and special circumstances of children through an appropriate degree of flexibility.

At least two thirds of general resources would be allocated on the basis of the three core criteria, and each country with a UNICEF programme would receive an allocation based on those criteria. Each country would receive a minimum allocation of $600,000 for core programming. Countries having reached a combined threshold of GNP per capita above $2,895 and a U5MR of less than 30 per 1,000 live births would gradually be phased out of the allocation of general resources for programme assistance. Seven per cent of the general resources would be set aside to respond flexibly to the diversity in country situations and to evolving needs and special circumstances. Allocations from that portion would be decided upon by the Executive Director. The Executive Director would monitor and evaluate the implementation of the modified system on the lives of children in all programme countries, particularly the situation of children in countries reaching the combined thresholds for income and U5MR. The modified system would be reviewed by the Board in 2003, for which the Executive Director would provide a comprehensive report.

In January [dec. 1997/4], the Board decided that $470,000 would be transferred from Greeting Card and related Operations (GCO) budgets for 1 May 1996 to 30 April 1997 and an additional $945,000 would be added to the headquarters and regional offices budget for the 1996-1997 biennium, to cover the costs of the posts and general operating costs for activities transferred from GCO. With the addition, the total expenditure for the 1996-1997 biennium would be $347,415,000. The Board, in another September decision on budget matters [dec. 1997/26], took note of the interim financial report and statements for 1996 [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.11].

Harmonization of budgets

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the UNFPA Executive Director and the UNICEF Executive Director issued a report to their Executive Boards on their proposal for a biennial support budget [DP/1997/2-E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.3 & Add.1]. They reported that their organizations had agreed on a common format for presentation of their biennial support budgets; common terms and definitions relating thereto; and a common methodology for the preparation of budget estimates. The UNICEF Executive Board in January [dec. 1997/5] approved the proposed format as contained in the report. In November [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.1], the Executive Director presented the UNICEF biennial support budget for 1998-1999 within the agreed format. The proposed budget totalled $527.5 million and reflected no growth over 1996-1997.

The Executive Board in January considered a report of the Executive Director on integrated budgeting in UNICEF [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.4]. She presented the planning, cost structure and approval process for integrated budgeting, in particular in the context of developing the integrated budget for field offices. The Executive Director sought approval from the Board to submit the support budget for the 1998-1999 biennium to the Board's first regular 1998 session instead of to the third regular 1997 session to enable the secretariat to link the country programme recommendation and the integrated budget processes.

The Board in January [dec. 1997/3] agreed that the support budget should not be formulated before the programme had been sufficiently articulated through the development of the master plan of operations and the draft country programme recommendation. It decided to review the biennial support budget for 1998-1999 at its first regular session in January 1998.

Audits

On 23 January [dec. 1997/6], the Executive Board took note of the UNICEF financial report and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1995 and the report of the Board of Auditors [A/51/5/Add.2]; and the UNICEF report to the UN Board of Auditors and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [E/ICEF/1996/AB/L.14]. On 21 January [dec. 1997/2], the Board took note of the report on the audit of the Kenya country office by the Office of Internal Audit [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.2], with the understanding that the secretariat would issue a final report on that subject at the appropriate time.

The Executive Board, on 24 January [dec. 1997/10], took note of the comments made by UNICEF [E/ICEF/1996/AB/L.14] in response to recommendations made by the Board of Auditors. It requested the secretariat to present in 1998 an oral update on the implementation of those recommendations and an updated timetable indicating when follow-up action would be completed.

Greeting Card Operation

Following the 1996 decision of the Executive Board [YUN 1996, p. 1093] to change the fiscal year of the Greeting Card and related Operations from 1 May-30 April to 1 January-31 December, UNICEF submitted to the Board a financial report and statements for the eight-month period ended 31 December 1997 [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.11]. The contribution of GCO to UNICEF general resources was $93.5 million, compared with $139.5 million in 1996, representing a 32.9 per cent decrease. Gross proceeds from the sale of UNICEF greeting cards and other products were $147.1 million, a decrease of $15.9 million over 1996. The decrease was due primarily to the negative impact of the continued strength of the United States dollar.

The Executive Board, in June [dec. 1997/15], took note of the GCO financial report and statements for the year ended 30 April 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1093].

Also in June [dec. 1997/14], the Board approved for the fiscal period from 1 May to 31 December 1997 budgeted GCO expenditures of $85.3 million, as presented in the proposed budget [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.8]. It authorized the Executive Director to incur expenditures as outlined in the proposed budget and to increase expenditures up to a maximum proposed in the report, should there be an apparent net proceeds increase from product sales and/or private sector fund-raising and, accordingly, to reduce expenditures should the net proceeds decrease. She was also authorized to transfer funds when necessary between the various budgets and to spend an additional amount between sessions of the Board owing to currency fluctuations, to ensure continued GCO operations. The Board approved the proposed changes in posts contained in the budget and renewed the Market Development Programme with $3 million for 1997 and the Fund-raising Development Programme with $7.8 million established for 1997. It also renewed the Central and Eastern European National Committees Development Programme with a budget of $0.7 million for 1997. The Executive Director was authorized to incur expenditures in the 1997 fiscal period related to cost of goods delivered for the fiscal year 1998 up to $42.3 million.

In November [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.3], the Executive Director issued the GCO work plan and proposed budget for 1998. Anticipated 1998 income from GCO was $179.9 million in net consolidated income for general resources, and an additional $115.8 million to be raised from private sector fund-raising activities for supplementary funds.

The sixth meeting of the UNESCO/UNICEF Joint Committee on Education (JCE) (Bucharest, Romania, 5-6 May) [E/ICEF/1997/18] reviewed co-operation between the two agencies since the fifth meeting in May 1996, considered future collaborative initiatives and adopted recommendations. JCE recommended that work focus on a series of principles, including paying greater attention to the implications of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, and commitment to activities that could make a difference to Education for All (EFA) and which reflected national priorities. Topical areas of work stressed educational opportunities for girls and women, particularly working with NGOs; the development of country-level educational data on progress towards EFA; education equality and learning achievement; education in emergencies and for reconstruction; the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa; and enhancing the learning opportunities of all children.

In March [dec. 1997/13], the Executive Board elected two members and their alternates to JCE for the 1997-1998 biennium. In June [dec. 1997/16], it took note of the report of the meeting and its recommendations.

The thirty-first session of the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (JCHP) (Geneva, 19-20 May) [E/ICEF/1997/19] considered two areas that were critical for reaching and sustaining primary health care goals—district health system development, and the implementation of a joint strategy for water supply and sanitation. Regarding the former, JCHP indicated that activities would include more detailed analysis of the country situation and further joint work by WHO and UNICEF to support innovative activities in such areas as malaria control and safe motherhood.

The Committee reviewed recent resolutions relevant to improving the health of women and children, adopted by WHO, and the decisions of the UNICEF Executive Board. It welcomed the expansion of its membership to include UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board members [E/ICEF/1997/6], and noted that the UNICEF Executive Board would soon consider the draft terms of reference of the expanded Committee, which would be called the WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordination Committee on Health (CCH), as approved by the WHO Executive Board in January and recommended by the UNICEF Executive Board, also in January [dec. 1997/8].

In June [dec. 1997/17], the Executive Board took note of the JCHP recommendations. In March [dec. 1997/13], the Board elected four members and their alternates to JCHP (to be reconstituted as CCH) for the 1997-1998 biennium.

Following consultations between the UNFPA, UNICEF and WHO secretariats [E/ICEF/1997/6], draft terms of reference for CCH were consolidated by WHO for approval by the three Executive Boards. They were approved by the WHO Executive Board in May [E/ICEF/1997/21]. In September [dec. 1997/27], the UNICEF Executive Board suggested amendments to the proposed terms of reference. It requested the Executive Director to transmit the Board's position to the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA and to discuss with WHO, UNFPA and the World Bank the possibility of the World Bank joining CCH. The Executive Director was also requested to discuss with WHO and UNFPA the appropriate division of tasks among the agencies and the frequency and site of CCH meetings.

In response to a 1995 Executive Board request [YUN 1995, p. 1206], the Board considered a report describing progress in implementing decisions of the management excellence programme [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.1], especially in the area of internal governance. It also examined actions taken in response to the external consultancies on information technology, financial management and supply operations.

A July report on the implementation of management excellence [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.12], prepared in response to a 1996 request of the Board [YUN 1996, p. 1095], described the framework and accountability system for performance monitoring and oversight in UNICEF. Key roles and responsibilities of country offices, regions and headquarters were outlined for performance monitoring, evaluation, audit and investigation activities. Information was provided on the recent and planned activities of the Office of Internal Audit. The report also reviewed the role of the Division of Evaluation, Policy and Planning in strategic planning, monitoring and evaluation.

The Executive Board, in September [dec. 1997/28], endorsed the framework of roles, responsibilities and accountabilities for performance monitoring and oversight set out in the report. It welcomed the proposal by the Executive Director to issue an annual report on internal audit activities starting in 1998. The secretariat was requested to produce information on budget implications, human resources implications, and efficiency and effectiveness gains in connection with the new roles and responsibilities of headquarters, regional offices and country offices, prior to consultations on the 1998-1999 UNICEF budget. The Board requested an assessment of the results achieved by the management excellence process to date, at the headquarters, regional and, in particular, field levels, emphasizing programme impact, for submission in 1998.

Supply operations

A July report to the Executive Board on supply operations [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.14] stated that the overall priority of UNICEF as a development partner in the supply function was to enhance national capacities in meeting children's essential supply needs. UNICEF strategies depended on the particular situation of each country.

The report discussed the Supply Division as a global action centre in children's supplies. The Division was repositioning the supply function to tackle the special needs of children and would focus on commodities most relevant to children, including vaccines and safe injection; essential drugs; micronutrients; therapeutic food; medical and health supplies; water equipment; sanitation supplies; education; school supplies; and household products.

UNICEF had provided an effective supply response to the emergency in the Great Lakes region of Africa, positioning materials in Uganda for fast forwarding to specific areas when called for. The Supply Division had supported the rapid response team in training and materials management. A process of continuous improvement, based on lessons learned, had been instituted with the Office of Emergency Programmes and other agencies involved in emergency response.

The Executive Board, in September [dec. 1997/23], took note of the report on supply operations.

Communication and information

In response to a 1996 Executive Board decision [YUN 1996, p. 1095], the Executive Director, in March [E/ICEF/1997/17], presented an outline of a UNICEF information and publication policy.

The policies guiding print and electronic publishing were a subset of those guiding the UNICEF information and communication policy. Principles and guidelines for the organization's communication work were captured in the UNICEF information manual, which covered such topics as selecting and targeting audiences to ensure maximum outreach, working with the media in emergencies, dealing with radio and television, launching global advocacy publications and conferences and how to support fund-raising activities. Details on those policies were to be included in a more comprehensive paper on the information and publication policy.

The Executive Board considered the report in June and agreed to defer presentation of a more detailed paper on information and publication policy until 1998 [E/1997/32/Rev.1].

Partnership between Board and secretariat

A small "Group of Volunteers" composed of representatives of UNICEF Executive Board member countries and observer delegations began meeting in March 1996 for consultations on the relationship between the Board and the UNICEF secretariat. In a July report [E/ICEF/1997/AB/L.13], the Group issued the final version of proposed guidelines for an effective partnership. The proposed guidelines divided issues such as policies and strategies, operations, organization, structure of the office, budget and funding, and staffing between the Board and secretariat into three categories: those for decision by the Board; for consultation with the Board; and for the Board's information only.

The Executive Board, in September [dec. 1997/29], decided to take up the issue of proposed guidelines no later than its 1998 annual session, based on a revised proposal by the Group.

Annual reports

In March [dec. 1997/11], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's annual report to the Economic and Social Council [E/ICEF/1997/10 (Part I)] and of the document on follow-up to the Council's decisions at its 1996 substantive session [E/ICEF/1997/4]. The Board transmitted the reports to the Council, together with comments made, for consideration at its 1997 substantive session.

In September [dec. 1997/30], the Board adopted the dates and programme of work for its 1998 sessions. The first regular session would be held from 26 to 30 January, the annual session from 1 to 5 June and the second regular session from 8 to 11 September.

Youth

Implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth

In 1997, UN efforts to promote policies and programmes involving youth focused on implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted in 1995 by General Assembly resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211]. In response to a request made in that resolution, the Secretary-General submitted a January report on progress in implementing the Programme of Action [A/52/60-E/1997/6], based on information received from Member States, UN organizations and agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned with youth.

According to the report, of a total of 185 Member States, 144, or 78 per cent, had formulated a national youth policy of a cross-sectoral character. Two years earlier, 141 Member States, or 77 per cent, had taken such action. Similarly, there was no major change in the number of Member States that had designated a national youth coordinating mechanism: 164, or 89 per cent of the total, the same number as in 1994. However, a major change concerned the number or percentage of Member States that had implemented a national youth programme of action, which was 73, or 40 per cent of the total, an increase of 19 States.

The report reviewed the major obstacles to effective governmental action to implement the Programme of Action and made recommendations to overcome them. At the national level, it suggested that the United Nations Youth Fund and other UN youth-related funds could support national review meetings, especially in the least developed countries. At the regional level, the regional commissions were invited to become more involved in intergovernmental and non-governmental review meetings, and to support and follow up the regional youth programmes of action adopted by such meetings. As stated in the Programme of Action, regional organizations were called on to consider meeting biennially to discuss issues and trends and to identify proposals for regional and subregional cooperation. The regional commissions were invited to provide a suitable venue and appropriate input.

The report noted that the Programme of Action had called on the Commission for Social Development to continue its policy-level dialogue on youth for policy coordination and periodic monitoring of issues and trends; to organize meetings at the international level, under the aegis of the United Nations, of ministers responsible for youth affairs, building on current regional and interregional conferences; to hold annual meetings of the existing ad hoc inter-agency group on youth, in which all UN bodies concerned and related intergovernmental organizations could discuss ways to promote the implementation of the Programme of Action on a coordinated basis; and to organize meetings of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System to contribute to the implementation of the Programme of Action through identification and promotion of joint initiatives so that they better reflected the interests of youth. The report concluded that the time had come to implement those global recommendations and to report to the General Assembly through the Commission on progress achieved and obstacles encountered.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/205 of 7 February, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the report directly to the Assembly.

In a July report [E/1997/103], the Secretary-General described cooperation between the United Nations and the Government of Portugal in planning a World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth, to be held in Lisbon from 8 to 12 August 1998. The Conference, which was proposed by the Assembly in resolution 50/81, was intended to provide a forum for a focused global dialogue on youth-related issues and a specific means to review, appraise and further promote the implementation of the World Programme of Action. The Secretary-General discussed pre-conference preparations and agreements reached on arrangements, with Portugal confirming its intention to bear most of the cost.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/1997/26], as amended by Portugal [E/1997/L.29], adopted resolution 1997/55 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, including a World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth

Recalling General Assembly resolution 50/81 of 14 December 1995, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, annexed thereto, as an integral part of that resolution,

Noting especially that in paragraph 123 of the Programme of Action current regional and interregional conferences of ministers responsible for youth affairs in Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean and Western Asia were invited to intensify cooperation among each other and to consider meeting regularly at the international level under the aegis of the United Nations to provide an effective forum for a focused global dialogue on youth-related issues,

Noting that in paragraph 124 of the Programme of Action youth-related bodies and organizations of the United Nations system were invited to cooperate with the above-mentioned conferences,

Welcoming the second session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System, held at Vienna from 25 to 29 November 1996, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 44/59 of 8 December 1989 and 50/81, which was convened by the United Nations in partnership with the Austrian Federal Youth Council, and taking note of the report of the Forum,

Mindful that the Secretary-General, in his report on the implementation of the Programme of Action, recommended that action be taken to implement the global recommendations of the Programme of Action and that a report be submitted to the General Assembly, through the Commission for Social Development, on progress achieved and obstacles encountered,

Reiterating the call on all States that have not already done so to formulate and adopt an integrated national youth policy, in consultation with youth and youth-related organizations, as reflected in paragraph 112 of the Programme of Action,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond and of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation of the United Nations with the Government of Portugal in holding the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth;

2. Calls upon all States, all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to make all possible efforts for the implementation of the Programme of Action, in accordance with their experience, situation and priorities;

3. Encourages the regional commissions, within their mandates, pursuant to the Programme of Action, to convene biennial meetings of regional non-governmental youth organizations, regional offices of youth-related bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and regional intergovernmental organizations to review and discuss issues and trends as well as regional action;

4. Stresses again the importance of the active and direct participation of youth and youth organizations at the local, national, regional and international levels in promoting and implementing the Programme of Action and in evaluating the progress achieved and obstacles encountered in its implementation, as well as the need to support the activities of youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations;

5. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Portugal to host the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth, to be held at Lisbon from 8 to 12 August 1998 in cooperation with the United Nations, as well as its support to the holding of the third session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System, which is to be convened by the United Nations in partnership with the Portuguese National Youth Council at Braga, Portugal, from 3 to 7 August 1998;

6. Notes with appreciation that the Government of Portugal has agreed to support the participation of ministers responsible for youth in the least developed countries as identified by the General Assembly;

7. Invites all States, youth-related bodies, organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, the intergovernmental organizations concerned, as well as non-governmental youth organizations, to support that Conference;

8. Recommends that the report of the Conference be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session through the Commission for Social Development at its thirty-seventh session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/634], adopted resolution 52/83 without vote [agenda item 102].

Policies and programmes involving youth

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/81 of 14 December 1995 by which it adopted the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond,

Recalling also its resolutions 49/152 and 49/154 of 23 December 1994,

Reaffirming the importance of involving youth and youth organizations in all matters of concern to them,

Welcoming the report of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations system on its second session, convened by the United Nations in partnership with the Austrian Federal Youth Council, and held at Vienna from 25 to 29 November 1996,

Noting that the third session of the World Youth Forum, convened by the United Nations in partnership with the Portuguese National Youth Council, will be held at Braga, Portugal, from 2 to 6 August 1998,

Reiterating the call, in paragraph 112 of the World Programme of Action, to all States that have not already done so to formulate and adopt an integrated national youth policy, in consultation with youth and youth-related organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond;

2. Calls upon all Member States to undertake all possible efforts to implement the World Programme of Action;

3. Stresses again the importance of the active and direct participation of youth and youth organizations at the local, national, regional and international levels in promoting and implementing the World Programme of Action and in evaluating the progress achieved and the obstacles encountered in its implementation and of the need to support the activities of youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations;

4. Welcomes the initiative of the Government of Portugal to host the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth, to be held at Lisbon from 8 to 12 August 1998, and takes note with appreciation of the ongoing collaboration between the Government of Portugal and the United Nations, including its agencies, funds and programmes, in that regard;

5. Stresses the need to involve youth and youth organizations in all stages of preparation for the World Conference, at the local, national, regional and international levels, and welcomes initiatives taken in that respect;

6. Acknowledges the activities undertaken at the regional level in preparation for the World Conference;

7. Recommends that the results of the second session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations system be duly taken into account at the World Conference;

8. Notes with interest that the outcome of the third session of the World Youth Forum will be presented at the World Conference;

9. Reiterates the call made in the World Programme of Action to Member States to consider including youth representatives in their delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings, thus broadening the channels of communication and enhancing the discussion of youth-related issues, and requests the Secretary-General to convey this invitation to Member States;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to make the reports of the third session of the World Youth Forum and of the World Conference available to all Member States;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, on progress made in the implementation of the World Programme of Action.

Ageing persons

International Year of Older Persons (1999)

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/141 [YUN 1995, p. 1225], the Secretary-General reported in September on an operational framework for the International Year of Older Persons [A/52/328], to be held in 1999, declared by the Assembly in resolution 47/5 [YUN 1992, p. 889].

The report outlined a schedule for preparations, which would begin with the launching of the Year on the International Day of Older Persons on 1 October 1998. Four plenary meetings of the Assembly in 1999 would be devoted to follow-up of the Year. In 2001, three assessments were planned to evaluate target strategies that had been adopted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 889]. The Commission for Social Development would review in 1998 options for the future review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1982 International Plan of Action on Ageing [YUN 1982, p. 1184], in preparation for the fifth review of the implementation of the Plan mandated to occur in 2001. The report described key players and selected activities and supporters of the Year. The UN programme on ageing (in the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs) served as the lead agency for the Year by adapting its ongoing activities and collaborating with interested parties.

By August 1997, nearly 50 national focal points had been established for the Year to prepare plans and activities. At the regional level, various entities had begun activities for the Year. For example, the Pan American Health Organization/World Health Organization, in collaboration with the Latin American Parliament and the Government of Uruguay, held a two-day forum on health care and the ageing population. Within the UN system, activities for the Year were launched at an inter-agency meeting in August, which considered collaboration through the Internet; maintaining a database of research, policies and programmes; issuing a conceptual papers series; preparing an information kit; and devising a "2020 strategy".

Five global networks of NGOs were supporting initiatives for the Year. Two of them were established especially for the Year. The networks, close collaborators with the UN programme on ageing, spanned the world and helped to make preparations for the Year all-inclusive.

The operational framework for 1999 and beyond was designed to facilitate mainstreaming and encourage activities within a long-term perspective. Its objectives were to raise awareness, focusing on a society for all ages, of the Year's theme; encourage looking ahead, beyond 1999, identifying a vision and priorities for the long term; reach out to non-traditional actors, such as the development community, the media, the private sector and youth; and improve networking in order to achieve greater consistency and comparability of data and research, and better collaboration among the major global networks.

The report recommended strategic measures to achieve the broad objectives of the operational and conceptual frameworks for the Year, which was a society for all ages. Research, policies and programmes should address active ageing, or opportunities for older persons to participate in the socio-economic and cultural life of their societies, and an appropriate caregiving mix for frail older persons, distributing tasks equitably among State, community, family and the primary caregiver. The report also recommended that the international community of experts, practitioners and policy makers develop guidelines supporting lifelong individual development, with longevity in mind, multigenerational relationships and the integration of ageing into government policies. The General Assembly should consider adopting in 1999 a text on the society for all ages to underscore the dimensions of individual and population ageing. Governments, NGOs, foundations and the private sector were asked to support the efforts of the UN programme on ageing to catalyse a debate, reach out to non-traditional actors, including youth, and provide core services for information exchange and research coordination. The report called on all concerned to give priority to activities at the national and local levels, improve regional collaboration and explore opportunities for "twinning" between countries, cities and institutions on well-defined projects.

Annexed to the report were suggestions for activities at the national level.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission for Social Development [E/1997/26], adopted resolution 1997/18 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

International Year of Older Persons: towards a society for all ages

The Economic and Social Council,

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

"17. Welcomes the continuing efforts of the Secretariat to promote information exchange for 1999 and beyond, inter alia, through regular publication of the Bulletin on Ageing, and invites the agencies, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system to consider placing special emphasis on the theme 'A society for all ages' in their publications, including the Human Development Report;

"18. Invites the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to consider producing a logo and press kit as well as an exhibit for the Year, and invites the United Nations Postal Administration to consider producing stamps on the theme 'A society for all ages';

"19. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the system-wide implementation of the present resolution;

"20. Also requests the Secretary-General officially to launch the International Year of Older Persons in 1998, on the occasion of the International Day of Older Persons;

"21. Decides to devote four plenary meetings at its fifty-fourth session to the follow-up to the Year, which should take place at an appropriate global policy-making level."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/634], adopted resolution 52/80 without vote [agenda item 102].

International Year of Older Persons: towards a society for all ages

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/5 of 16 October 1992, in which it decided to observe the year 1999 as the International Year of Older Persons,

Recalling also its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it expressed its conviction that older persons must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society,

Mindful of the need to promote adherence to the United Nations Principles for Older Persons, as adopted by its resolution 46/91 of 16 December 1991,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/22 of 27 July 1993, in which the Council invited Member States to strengthen their national mechanisms on ageing, inter alia, to enable them to serve as national focal points for the preparations for and observance of the Year,

Also recalling the relevant provisions of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, as well as of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Habitat Agenda adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996,

Keeping in mind that the ageing of societies in the twentieth century, unprecedented in the history of humankind, is a major challenge for all societies and requires a fundamental change in the way in which societies organize themselves and view older persons,

1. Encourages all States, the United Nations system and all other actors, in reaching out for a future society for all ages, to take advantage of the International Year of Older Persons to increase awareness of the challenge of the demographic ageing of societies, the individual and social needs of older persons, the contribution of older persons to societies and the need for a change in attitudes towards older persons;

2. Welcomes the activities undertaken by States, United Nations organizations and bodies and non-governmental organizations in preparation for the observance of the Year, and encourages them to continue their efforts;

3. Invites States to take account of the increasing number, in absolute figures and in percentages, of older persons in need of help;

4. Also invites States to develop comprehensive strategies at the national, regional and local levels to meet the increase in demand for care and support for older persons as individuals, within their families and communities and within institutions, bearing in mind the changing socio-economic, technological and cultural environment;

5. Encourages States, with the support of United Nations organizations, bodies and programmes and of non-governmental organizations, to formulate policies and programmes on ageing with a view to offering older persons opportunities to utilize their experience and knowledge to promote a society for all ages based on solidarity between generations, so that they can contribute to and benefit from full participation in society;

6. Also encourages States to establish a national focal point and formulate national programmes for the Year, bearing in mind the conceptual framework referred to in its resolution 50/141 of 21 December 1995;

7. Calls upon States to include a gender dimension in their national programmes for the Year;

8. Encourages States to consider establishing ad hoc, broad-based national coordinating mechanisms for the Year in order to enhance, inter alia, collaboration with representatives of civil society;

9. Invites States to consider convening high-level and other meetings at the regional level to discuss the theme "A society for all ages";

10. Invites non-governmental organizations, including those specialized in the question of older persons, to develop programmes and projects for the Year, particularly at the local level, in cooperation, inter alia, with local authorities, community leaders, enterprises, the media and schools, and encourages them to support and participate in the appropriate national coordinating mechanisms;

11. Encourages relevant United Nations funds and programmes and the specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to support local, national and international programmes and projects for the Year, and also encourages them, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, as well as international financial institutions, to ensure that the concerns and contributions of older persons are integrated into their development programmes;

12. Emphasizes that activities for the Year should be initiated primarily at the national level;

13. Invites national and international development agencies, bodies and international financial institutions to explore feasible approaches to improving the access of older persons to credit, training and appropriate technologies for income generation and the participation of older persons in family enterprises, community enterprises and microenterprises;

14. Welcomes contributions by the Commission on the Status of Women on the topic of older women in relation to the Year;

15. Encourages the Secretary-General to allocate sufficient resources for promoting and coordinating activities for the Year, bearing in mind its resolution 47/5, in which it was decided that observance of the Year would be supported from resources of the regular budget for the biennium 1998-1999 and from voluntary contributions;

16. Invites States to consider actively supporting the Secretariat in the preparation and implementation of the projects for the Year, inter alia, through voluntary financial or personnel contributions;

17. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Operational framework for the International Year of Older Persons, 1999";

18. Welcomes the initiative of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the American Association of Retired Persons to collaborate on a worldwide poster competition for the Year, in which artists will portray their vision of "A society for all ages";

19. Also welcomes the continuing efforts of the Secretariat to promote information exchange for 1999 and beyond, inter alia, through regular publication of the Bulletin on Ageing, and invites the agencies, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system to consider placing special emphasis on the theme "A society for all ages" in their publications, including the Human Development Report;

20. Invites the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat to consider producing a logo and a press kit as well as an exhibit for the Year, and invites the United Nations Postal Administration to consider producing stamps on the theme "A society for all ages";

21. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the system-wide implementation of the present resolution;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to officially launch the International Year of Older Persons in 1998, on the occasion of the International Day of Older Persons;

23. Decides to devote four plenary meetings at its fifty-fourth session to the follow-up to the Year, which should take place at an appropriate global policy-making level.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing

The International Plan of Action on Ageing was adopted by the World Assembly on Ageing in 1982 and endorsed the same year by the General Assembly in resolution 37/51 [YUN 1982, p. 1186]. The Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission for Social Development, to review the implementation of the Plan of Action every four years beginning in 1985. Accordingly, reviews were conducted in 1985 [YUN 1985, p. 984], 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 686] and 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1067].

In a January report on the fourth review and appraisal of the Plan's implementation, [E/CN.5/1997/4], the Secretary-General stated that, based on information received from 21 developed and 34 developing countries, 13 UN entities and 55 NGOs, nearly three quarters of the countries surveyed, up from two thirds in the third review, reported the presence of a national coordinating mechanism on ageing. Although a slight decline in developed countries had been noted, there had been an increase from some 60 to 70 per cent in developing countries. Over four fifths of the countries reported that they had multiple NGOs of, and/or for, older persons, and more than four fifths of the Governments surveyed had promoted a national day of older citizens. Nearly three quarters of the Governments had promulgated either the United Nations Principles for Older Persons [YUN 1991, p. 699] or other legislation on the rights of older citizens. Several findings, however, indicated that progress in implementing the Plan of Action remained modest. In more than a quarter of the reporting countries, there was no identifiable national coordinating mechanism for ageing. Only half the countries reported a national plan of action, and a country-based research or training centre dealing with issues on ageing was reported in less than half the countries covered. Developing countries generally lagged significantly behind developed countries in infrastructure for addressing the ageing of their populations.

In over two thirds of the countries, population ageing had been addressed in national development plans, including its potential impact on pensions and costs of caring for frail older persons. There was also a growing recognition that older persons could be assisted by expanding their income-generating potential and by employment training and placement. Health-care services specifically designed to deal with the needs of older persons, together with geriatric training, were available in developed countries but were available only in about one third of developing countries. Geriatric training for health and social professionals was available in only half the reporting developing countries.

Less than one fifth of developing countries reported a housing policy for older persons, down from one third in the previous review. Governments reported only limited programmes whose aim was to support the continued integration of older persons in their families. The available support focused on social services for families providing care and educational programmes to assist family members caring for older relatives. Developing countries focused on educational programmes for families and on promoting inter-generational income-generating projects. Two thirds of developing countries reported the availability of social welfare services for older persons, such as centres or clubs, meal programmes and home help. NGOs were particularly important in providing those services in developing countries. One fourth of the developing countries reported having a universal pension or social security scheme, a slight increase over previous reports. Those in the informal work force generally received no pension benefits. Only between one third and one half of the countries covered reported that educational opportunities were available to older persons.

In view of the similar findings of each of the four reviews and the inherent weakness of a review that was self-reporting and voluntary, the report suggested complementing the review by conducting sample household surveys in each region, and/or by elaborating a global ageing index based on already available information.

While the review and appraisal process moved in four-year cycles, two demographic trends suggested that a longer-range vision was imperative. Firstly, the speed of ageing in developing countries, which was projected to yield an increase in the number of their older persons almost 10 times faster than in developed countries. Secondly, the rising old-age dependency ratio in developed countries. Thus, measures to promote implementation of the Plan of Action would best be conceived within a long-term perspective to the year 2020 that developed concepts, outlined principles and suggested policy options based on the Plan of Action and the United Nations Principles for Older Persons.

The Commission for Social Development, at its thirty-fifth session (February/March) [E/1997/26 (res. 35/1)], expressed concern that the number of countries responding to the review and appraisal had declined, and that implementation remained a largely incomplete task, particularly in developing countries. It invited the Secretary-General to make recommendations on different options for the next review and appraisal.

In December [E/CN.5/1998/3], the Secretary-General presented those options. All four reviews had indicated that the world's aged population continued to grow, global and national responses had not kept pace with the ageing of populations, particularly in developing countries where population ageing was most rapid, and the number of responding countries had been low.

Options proposed in the report were to continue the review and appraisal process every five years beginning in 2005, complemented by a report on the world ageing situation in the following year and focused on priority areas of the 2020 perspective plan, to be identified by the Commission for Social Development. Additionally, the review and appraisal process could be supported by establishing a permanent database on the Internet of public policies on ageing, enabling continuous updating and access by Member States. Household surveys could also support the review and appraisal process by enabling selected hypotheses to be tested in selected geographical areas. Another proposal involved the development of an ageing-related development index. Certain ageing-specific indicators were already widely used—life expectancy (at birth and at age 60), dependency ratios, retirement ages, adult literacy rates, morbidity trends, use of long-term care facilities and, in some places, statistics on active ageing showing the extent of older persons' contributions to the socio-economic and cultural development of communities and their roles in the maintenance of families.

The report concluded that the review and appraisal process should be maintained but adjusted incrementally. Such adjustments would make the process more relevant to emerging socio-economic realities and might help promote implementation of the Plan of Action.

Chapter XII

Refugees and displaced persons

In 1997, the number of persons of concern to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) totalled 21 million. Of those, some 12 million were refugees, 3.3 million were repatriating refugees in the early stages of their reintegration, 3.6 million were internally displaced persons and 1.2 million others were humanitarian cases, for the most part victims of conflict. During the year, more than 676,000 refugees returned voluntarily to their countries of origin, highlighting the fact that repatriation was the preferred solution for many of the world's refugees.

Although there had been a distinct reduction in the number and scale of refugee-producing conflicts over the previous several years, the potential for large-scale displacement remained ever present in several regions and the increase in the number and intensity of ethnically based conflicts within States continued to be the subject of concern.

Africa continued to host the largest number of refugees of any continent in 1997, with some 7 million refugees, internally displaced persons and other people being helped by UNHCR. It was also in Africa that the number of people returning to their countries was the highest. The situation in the Great Lakes region remained a serious concern for UNHCR, due to continued violence against refugees and gross violations of human rights, which compelled UNHCR to suspend activities related to Rwandan refugees in the Congo in early September. Large-scale movements of more than 1.3 million returnees to Rwanda reduced the number of refugees in camps but created reintegration and security problems.

Some positive developments in other areas of Africa also eased the refugee situation during the year. After eight years of civil conflict, elections were held in Liberia in July, which led to the spontaneous return of some of the 500,000 refugees. Despite the slow pace of the peace process in Angola in 1997, some 53,000 Angolans spontaneously returned home. The repatriation of Togolese refugees officially ended in September, after almost all of the 300,000 refugees who had fled in 1993 returned to their country. In East Africa, the repatriation of some 65,000 Ethiopian refugees from the Sudan was also expected to finish by the end of 1997.

Elsewhere, the repatriation of Tajik refugees from Afghanistan restarted following the signing of a peace agreement in June, leading to the return of 6,600 refugees to Tajikistan despite a difficult security situation in both countries.

Security constraints also affected UNHCR operations in the North Caucasus, but over 20,000 internally displaced Chechens were assisted in returning home during 1997 from the surrounding republics in the Russian Federation. The repatriation from Bangladesh of Muslim refugees from Rakhine State in Myanmar continued, leaving 21,000 refugees who did not wish to return. Following political violence and military conflict in 1997, over 60,000 Cambodians sought refuge in Thailand.

In Central America, there was further progress in repatriating Guatemalan refugees from Mexico. During the year, 3,573 Guatemalans returned.

Of the 3 million persons uprooted by the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, more refugees were able to be repatriated, particularly to Bosnia and Herzegovina where some 174,000 returned. Repatriation elsewhere in the region was slow. By the end of 1997, only 1,125 refugees had returned to Croatia from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

The UNHCR Executive Committee, in October, considered repatriation challenges as its annual theme, including such issues as refugees from civil conflicts, forcible displacement within countries and threats to the institution of asylum, as well as threats to the security of humanitarian personnel. The Committee emphasized that refugee protection was primarily the responsibility of States and called on States to ensure that refugees were protected effectively.

Those issues were also raised by the Security Council, which in June expressed its grave concern at the increase in the use of force against refugees and other civilians in conflict situations, and called on those involved to comply with international law and to ensure the safety of refugees, displaced persons and other civilians, and to guarantee the unimpeded and safe access of UN and other humanitarian personnel to those in need.

The General Assembly also stressed that refugee protection was primarily the responsibility of States, whose cooperation and political resolve were required to enable UNHCR to fulfil its mandated functions.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

At its forty-eighth session (Geneva, 13-17 October 1997) [A/52/127Add.1], the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme emphasized that refugee protection was primarily the responsibility of States, and that the mandated role of UNHCR in that regard could not substitute for effective action, political will and full cooperation on the part of States, including host States and countries of origin, as well as other international organizations and the international community as a whole. The Committee called on States to take all necessary measures to ensure that refugees were protected effectively, including through national legislation and compliance with their obligations under international human rights and humanitarian law instruments having a direct bearing on refugee protection, as well as through full cooperation with UNHCR in the exercise of its international protection function and its role in supervising the application of international conventions for the protection of refugees. It encouraged States and UNHCR to continue to promote regional initiatives for refugee protection and durable solutions and to ensure that regional standards conformed fully with universally recognized standards and responded to particular regional circumstances and protection needs. Noting that voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement were the traditional durable solutions for refugees, it affirmed that voluntary repatriation was the preferred solution and called on countries of origin, countries of asylum, UNHCR and the international community to enable refugees to exercise freely their right to return to their homes in safety and dignity. It noted that a comprehensive approach to refugee protection comprised, inter alia, respect for human rights; the principle of non-refoulement, which prohibited expulsion and return of refugees to places where they would be in danger; access of asylum-seekers to fair procedures for determining status and protection needs; and provision of material assistance where necessary. The Committee called on the High Commissioner to continue to strengthen the Office's refugee law promotion work, with the active support of States and through increased cooperation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs), academic institutions and other relevant organizations.

In her opening statement to the Committee, the High Commissioner remarked on the apparent contradictions between humanitarian principles and State interest, especially in a situation of mass displacement across conflict lines. As examples of lessons drawn from past experiences, she stated that refugee camps should be located well away from border areas; the civilian character of refugee settlements should be preserved by not allowing armed elements and political extremists to live with and control refugees; and those who had committed crimes against humanity should be brought to justice. The lack of response to UNHCR proposals to implement such measures had contributed to further insecurity and conflict. In that context, she proposed to States and to regional organizations, primarily the Organization of African Unity, a two-way effort: her Office was ready to discuss with Governments practical measures that needed to be adopted to facilitate respect for humanitarian principles and that took into account their concerns.

The High Commissioner emphasized that UNHCR efforts to carry out repatriation under diverse circumstances had led it to confront the challenge of reintegration of uprooted populations. The Office had grappled with the need to develop a comprehensive approach to the requirements of the transition from war to peace, joining the UN system-wide search for a strategy for post-conflict peace-building.

Describing human resources as the mainstay of UNHCR's mission and operations, the High Commissioner noted that the Office had launched on 1 September the Career Management System, which attempted to optimize the utilization of staff resources while enhancing the Office's support for career planning, individual objective-setting and performance evaluation. The new system was closely linked to the "change management" exercise, initiated in 1995 and known as the Delphi project, and dealt with the areas of new technologies, human resources and financial management tools.

Coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance

The Standing Committee of the UNHCR Executive Committee, at a meeting in January, discussed inter-agency follow-up to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/56 [YUN 1995, p. 927] on strengthening coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance, based on a conference room paper presented by the Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) (renamed the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs). As a result of the inter-agency process outlined in the paper, the Secretary-General submitted to the Council a July report [E/1997/98] on the review of the capacity of the UN system for humanitarian assistance.

UNHCR was affected both by the new management tools proposed and implemented by the Secretary-General and by the key sectoral measures proposed in the humanitarian field, within the context of his proposals for UN reform (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). UNHCR was a member of two of the four executive committees set up by the Secretary-General, namely the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs and the Executive Committee on Peace and Security. The relatively frequent meetings of both allowed for improved coordination of UN initiatives, particularly where there was an interface between political/peacekeeping and humanitarian activities.

On the implementation of reform in the humanitarian sector, UNHCR, along with DHA, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Food Programme (WFP), was a member of a working group set up by the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs. The working group had been asked to examine how General Assembly resolution 46/182 [YUN 1991, p. 421], which set out guiding principles and methods for UN emergency humanitarian assistance, could best be implemented, given the experience of the preceding five years. The recommendations of the group were for the main part accepted by the new Emergency Relief Coordinator. As reported by UNHCR [A/53/12], reform in the humanitarian sector was expected to lead to a strengthened Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) on international emergency assistance (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Within that context, UNHCR looked forward to the development of a clear system-wide policy on coordination options for complex emergencies, especially with regard to the combined roles of the resident coordinator and humanitarian coordinator, the lead agency, and the placing of the humanitarian coordinator within the administrative framework of one of the operational agencies.

UNHCR agreed that the issue of internally displaced persons should be included within the scope of the priorities established by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs for 1998, as proposed by the Emergency Relief Coordinator. In the view of UNHCR, progress should be made on the less contentious matters, such as a manual of best practices and the development of training modules, as well as on decision-making, the division of labour and allocation of responsibilities in respect of internally displaced persons.

In 1997, UNHCR continued to develop linkages with other members of the UN system. In that respect, global or country-specific memoranda of understanding were updated (WFP and the World Health Organization (WHO)) or concluded. Joint consultations on new agreements, with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), for example, were pursued. Country-specific agreements were concluded in Eritrea (the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA)), Liberia (UNDP), Rwanda (UNDP) and Uganda (UNICEF) in an effort to improve the delivery of assistance to refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons. In the case of Algeria, an agreement on common premises was signed with UNDP. Globally, memoranda of understanding with some of the major partners of UNHCR (UNDP, WFP and WHO) were updated, while new ones were signed with the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and the International Organization for Migration.

Evaluation of UNHCR

UNHCR inspection and evaluation activities were outlined in a July report [A/AC.96/886] to the Executive Committee. The reporting period was a time of consolidation for the Inspection and Evaluation Service, which finalized, tested, improved and integrated procedures with oversight work. A major achievement in consolidating the inspection function was the finalization of the Service's computerized database project. The database allowed for comprehensive periodic analyses of compliance with inspection recommendations. Several such analyses were prepared and presented to the High Commissioner and senior management. Follow-up mechanisms for evaluation reports were also reassessed and would make use of the database.

During the period under review, inspection missions were undertaken in 15 countries in Africa, Asia, Central America, Europe and the Middle East. Particular emphasis was placed on managerial effectiveness, including accountability, cost-effectiveness and monitoring. A number of thematic evaluations were completed. They included reviews of UNHCR implementing arrangements, UNHCR refugee education activities, UNHCR project staff arrangements and UNHCR assistance to older refugees, and an evaluation of UNHCR efforts on behalf of children and adolescents, which was conducted in cooperation with the International Save the Children Alliance. The Service also participated in two joint evaluations with WFP and UNICEF. In addition, general evaluation guidelines were produced for UNHCR staff to encourage and facilitate field-based evaluation initiatives.

The UNHCR Executive Committee, in a decision on a number of administrative and financial matters [A/52/12/Add.1], took note of the report on inspection and evaluation activities.

Relations with NGOs

During 1997, UNHCR concluded 931 implementing agreements with 443 NGOs, covering operational activities with refugee and other populations of concern to UNHCR in 131 countries. The majority of projects were implemented by some 322 national NGOs. UNHCR continued to promote the UNHCR/NGO Partnership in Action (PARinAC) process [YUN 1993, p. 1072], aimed at enhancing the cooperation and coordination of activities in favour of refugees, including through regular protection and other briefings, meetings on specific issues and UNHCR/NGO consultations prior to Executive Committee sessions. Those consultations were extended to two and a half days in 1997, and were attended by over 150 NGOs, including PARinAC NGO focal points and southern hemisphere NGOs. In April, the High Commissioner hosted a one-day meeting with major implementing and operational NGO partners. Two regional PARinAC meetings took place during the year, one in Jordan, covering the countries of North Africa and the Middle East, and the second in Brazil, covering the South American countries. UNHCR/NGO regional recommendations for joint action were drawn up for both areas.

At the eighth meeting of the UNHCR Standing Committee, in June 1997, it was decided that NGOs registered as observers at the plenary session of the Executive Committee would be allowed to participate as observers in meetings of the Standing Committee, following their written request to do so. During the year, over 5,000 NGO staff members worldwide benefited from UNHCR-sponsored training. While the majority of them undertook protection training, other training included emergency management, programme management, people-oriented planning, food aid, registration, nutrition, logistics, security awareness, environmental awareness, resettlement and various other workshops.

The UNHCR Executive Committee, in an October decision [A/52/12/Add.1], supported UNHCR proposals to enhance the capacity of national NGOs to enable them to participate more actively in refugee and refugee-related operations and to develop with NGOs an operational partnership agreement that would set out standards governing the work of the respective parties in refugee and refugee-related situations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/639], adopted resolution 52/103 without vote [agenda item 107].

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of her Office and the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its forty-eighth session,

Recalling its resolution 51/75 of 12 December 1996,

Reaffirming the fundamental importance of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, in particular their implementation in a manner fully compatible with the object and purpose of those instruments, and noting with satisfaction that one hundred and thirty-five States are now parties to one or both instruments,

Commending the High Commissioner and her staff for the competent, courageous and dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, paying tribute to those staff members whose lives have been endangered in the course of their duties, and deploring the deaths of staff members as a consequence of violent events in several countries around the world,

1. Endorses the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its forty-eighth session;

2. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental importance and the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the function of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of providing international protection to refugees and seeking permanent solutions to the problem of refugees;

3. Deplores the immense human suffering and loss of life that have accompanied refugee flows and other forced displacements, in particular the numerous serious threats to the security or well-being of refugees, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion, physical attacks and detention under unacceptable conditions, and calls upon States to take all measures necessary to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the humane treatment of asylum-seekers in accordance with internationally recognized human rights and humanitarian norms;

4. Emphasizes that refugee protection is primarily the responsibility of States, whose full and effective cooperation, action and political resolve are required to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to fulfil its mandated functions;

5. Reaffirms that everyone is entitled to the right to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution, and, as asylum is an indispensable instrument for the international protection of refugees, calls on all States to refrain from taking measures that jeopardize the institution of asylum, in particular by returning or expelling refugees or asylum-seekers contrary to international human rights and to humanitarian and refugee law;

6. Stresses the importance of international solidarity and burden-sharing in reinforcing the international protection of refugees, and urges all States and relevant non-governmental and other organizations, in conjunction with the Office of the High Commissioner, to cooperate in efforts to lighten the burden borne by States that have received large numbers of asylum-seekers and refugees;

7. Condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security of refugees and asylum-seekers, and calls upon States of refuge, in cooperation with international organizations where appropriate, to take all necessary measures to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements is maintained, as well as to abstain from any activity likely to undermine this, inter alia, through effective measures to prevent the infiltration of armed elements, the identification and separation of any such armed elements from refugee populations, the settlement of refugees in secure locations and by affording to the Office of the High Commissioner and other appropriate humanitarian organizations prompt, unhindered and safe access to them;

8. Calls upon States and all concerned parties to refrain from any actions that prevent the staff of the Office of the High Commissioner and other humanitarian personnel from performing the functions required under their mandates or obstruct them in so doing, to take all possible measures to safeguard their physical security and property, to investigate fully any crime committed against them, to bring to justice persons responsible for such crimes and to facilitate the discharge of the mandated functions of the Office of the High Commissioner as well as of other humanitarian organizations;

9. Urges all States and relevant organizations to support the High Commissioner's search for durable solutions to refugee problems, including voluntary repatriation, integration in the country of asylum and resettlement in a third country, as appropriate, and welcomes in particular the ongoing efforts of her Office to pursue, wherever possible, opportunities to promote conditions conducive to the preferred solution of voluntary repatriation;

10. Acknowledges the desirability of comprehensive approaches by the international community to the problems of refugees and displaced persons, including addressing root causes, strengthening emergency preparedness and response, providing effective protection and achieving durable solutions;

11. Recognizes the value of comprehensive regional approaches in which the High Commissioner has played a significant part in both countries of origin and countries of asylum, and encourages States, in coordination and cooperation with each other and with international organizations, if applicable, to consider adopting protection-based comprehensive and regional approaches that conform fully with universally recognized standards and respond to particular regional initiatives, circumstances and protection needs;

12. Reaffirms that voluntary repatriation is the ideal solution to refugee problems, and calls upon countries of origin, countries of asylum, the Office of the High Commissioner and the international community as a whole to do everything possible to enable refugees to exercise their right to return home in safety and with dignity;

13. Reiterates the right of all persons to return to their country, and emphasizes in this regard the prime responsibility of countries of origin for establishing conditions that allow voluntary repatriation of refugees in safety and with dignity, and, in recognition of the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls upon all States to facilitate the return of their nationals who have sought asylum and have been determined not to be refugees;

14. Calls upon all States to promote conditions conducive to the return of refugees and to support their sustainable reintegration by providing countries of origin with necessary rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction, as appropriate, with the Office of the High Commissioner and relevant development agencies, urges the Office of the High Commissioner, within its mandate and at the request of the Government concerned and in view of the relationship between safeguarding human rights and preventing conditions that give rise to refugee outflows, to strengthen its support of national efforts at legal and judicial capacity-building, where necessary, in cooperation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and, in view of creating conditions furthering reconciliation and long-term development in countries of return, also urges the Office of the High Commissioner to strengthen its cooperation and co-ordination with relevant development agencies;

15. Calls upon States to adopt an approach that is sensitive to gender-related concerns and to ensure that women whose claims to refugee status are based upon a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons enumerated in the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, including persecution through sexual violence or other gender-related persecution, are recognized as refugees, and encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue and to strengthen its efforts for the protection of refugee women;

16. Urges States and relevant parties to respect and observe principles of international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law that are of particular relevance to safeguarding the rights of child and adolescent refugees, and, noting the particular vulnerability of refugee children to being forcibly exposed to the risks of injury, exploitation and death in connection with armed conflict, urges all States and concerned parties to take all possible measures to protect child and adolescent refugees, including, in particular, from all forms of violence, exploitation and abuse, and to prevent their separation from their families;

17. Calls upon all Governments and other donors to demonstrate their international solidarity and burden-sharing with countries of asylum through efforts aimed at continuing to alleviate the burden borne by States, in particular developing countries, countries in transition and countries with limited resources, that, due to their location, host large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, to contribute to the programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the effects on countries of asylum of the increasing requirements of large refugee populations and the need to widen the donor base and to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors, to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional and timely income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector in order to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner are fully met.

In accordance with resolution 47/104 [YUN 1992, p. 894], the General Assembly reviewed the arrangements for UNHCR to determine whether it should be continued beyond 31 December 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/639], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/104 without vote [agenda item 107].

Continuation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 47/104 of 16 December 1992, in which it decided to review, not later than at its fifty-second session, the arrangements for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 1998,

Recognizing the need for concerted international action on behalf of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Considering the outstanding work that has been performed by the Office of the High Commissioner in providing international protection and material assistance to refugees and displaced persons as well as in promoting permanent solutions to their problems,

Noting with deep appreciation the effective manner in which the Office of the High Commissioner has been dealing with various essential humanitarian tasks entrusted to it,

1. Decides to continue the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for a further period of five years from 1 January 1999;

2. Also decides to review, not later than at its fifty-seventh session, the arrangements for the Office of the High Commissioner with a view to determining whether the Office should be continued beyond 31 December 2003.

Financial and administrative questions

In 1997, UNHCR's final budget (covering both General and Special Programmes) was just under $1.2 billion [A/53/12], compared to $1.3 billion in 1996. Donors provided some $806 million, compared with total contributions of $970 million in 1996.

As in previous years, funding of the General Programmes remained a priority in 1997. Those programmes were core activities for refugees and provided the High Commissioner with the flexibility needed to deal with emergencies and voluntary repatriation operations. However, the upward trend of funding for General Programmes experienced until 1996 did not continue. As at 31 December 1997, the Office had received $320 million for General Programmes, compared with the previous year's figure of $351 million. A number of important donors were not able to maintain their previous funding levels, particularly those contributing in a currency other than the United States dollar.

Special Programmes accounted for some 60 per cent of UNHCR operational activities. Appeals were launched, in conjunction with the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, for operations in the former Yugoslavia, for the Afghan repatriation programme, the emergency in the Great Lakes region of Africa and programmes in the Horn of Africa. UNHCR also issued appeals for Central America, for repatriations to Angola, Liberia and Myanmar, and for a number of other operations. The lack of contributions and the timing of pledges for repatriations in Africa and operations in the former Yugoslavia presented great challenges to the Office during 1997. Those programmes were, at times, short of finances, which hampered operations in the field. UNHCR raised some $486 million for special operations, repatriations and emergencies, in addition to the funds under General Programmes.

Regional apportionments for UNHCR expenditure in 1997 were as follows: Africa, $429.4 million; Europe, $254.1 million; Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, $78.2 million; Asia and the Pacific, $62.2 million; and the Americas, $34.8 million.

For 1998, UNHCR faced projected budgetary requirements of some $1 billion. A 1998 General Programmes target of $440 million was approved, the first reduction in a number of years of the General Programmes level. For Special Programmes, UNHCR required some $635 million. Requirements for operations in the Great Lakes region of Africa and the former Yugoslavia, as well as repatriation operations in Africa and Asia, remained priorities, as did programmes in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

In an October decision [A/52/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee approved the revised 1997 General Programmes budget, amounting to $452,612,000. It also approved the regional/country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets under 1998 General Programmes, amounting to $359,100,000, as well as a programme reserve of $35,900,000 (representing 10 per cent of programmed activities), $25,000,000 for the Emergency Fund and $20,000,000 for the Voluntary Repatriation Fund, which constituted a 1998 total General Programmes budget of $440,000,000 [A/AC.96/884/Add.2]. The Committee authorized the High Commissioner, within the approved level, to make adjustments in project, regional/country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets as might be required by changes affecting refugee/returnee programmes. The Committee requested UNHCR to respond flexibly and efficiently to the needs indicated under the 1998 General and Special Programmes, which were estimated at $995.9 million, bearing in mind the statute of the Office and the priority to be accorded to statutory activities, and the financial rules for voluntary funds. UNHCR was requested to present further proposals to ensure a more appropriate and transparent categorization of expenditure and posts and the harmonization of its budget presentation with that of other relevant UN agencies, with a view to seeking the Committee's approval at its next annual session and, subject to such approval, the introduction of the proposals in the 1999 budgetary documentation for the year 2000.

The audited financial statements on voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 1996 [A/52/5/Add.5] showed total expenditures of $1,143 million and total income of $1,034 million, with a reserve balance of $346.2 million.

The Board of Auditors reviewed the statements and issued its comments in July [A/52/5/Add.5], which included recommendations to be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. Its findings were also communicated to UNHCR, which provided explanations and answers to the Board's queries [A/AC.96/885/Add.1]. Among its recommendations on financial management, the Board said that UNHCR should ensure that audit certificates were submitted by the implementing partners in sufficient time for the Administration to ensure that the expenditure was reflected in the financial statements. UNHCR was also urged to review its system of recording of expenditure by implementing partners, and to focus more attention on timely review and cancellation of obligations no longer required. In regard to programme management, the Board recommended that programme delivery and administrative support costs in the budgets of country programmes should be reviewed and norms should be established. Project objectives needed to be clearly defined and quantified so that there was no conflict between objectives and inputs and the executing agency had a clear idea of the targets to be achieved.

The Board's examination of the accounts maintained by the various implementing partners indicated deficiencies in the maintenance of accounting records and preparation of cash and bank accounts. The Board called for the maintenance of separate accounts for UNHCR funds by the implementing partners and adequate control by field offices.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in an October report [A/52/518], reviewed both the financial reports and the audited financial statements for 1996 of the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR. As it had mentioned in the past, ACABQ pointed out that the timely submission of audit certificates for expenditures by implementing partners continued to be a concern, and it recommended an assessment of the capabilities of individual implementing partners contracted for major projects. ACABQ requested the High Commissioner to take into account the Board's recommendations on management of assets through a software/hardware system. It expressed concern at the observations made by the Board regarding the use of consultants and noted the deficiencies in the settlement of travel claims.

In its general decision on programme, administrative and financial matters [A/52/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee noted both the Board of Auditors' and ACABQ's reports on UNHCR activities financed from voluntary funds, and requested that it be kept informed of measures taken to address the recommendations raised. In addition, the Committee expressed support for the UNHCR proposals to improve the audit certification of implementing partners, and asked to be kept informed of further progress.

Standing Committee

The Standing Committee held four meetings in 1997 (30-31 January; 30 April-1 May; 24-26 June; 9-10 September and 8 October) [A/AC.96/880, 881, 888, 894]. It reviewed UNHCR programmes in different regions, refugees and the environment, refugee children and adolescents, protection, governance issues, and management and financial issues, and adopted decisions on programme and funding projections, the social and economic impact of large refugee populations on host developing countries, the annual theme of "repatriation challenges" for the 1997 session of the Executive Committee, and NGO observer participation in the Executive and Standing Committees.

In October [A/52/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee decided to include a number of issues in the programme of work of its Standing Committee in 1998, and requested that UNHCR include in its documentation on each item the relevant recommendations of the auditors and ACABQ, as well as the steps taken to implement those recommendations and related Executive Committee decisions and conclusions. Those issues were: international protection; protection/programme policy issues; follow-up to the debate in the Executive Committee on the 1997 annual theme; programme and funding matters; management, financial and human resource matters; oversight issues; coordination issues; and governance issues.

Safety of staff

At its October session [A/52/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee adopted a conclusion on the safety of UNHCR staff and other humanitarian personnel. It called on States and all parties concerned to refrain from preventing or obstructing humanitarian personnel from performing their functions, and to safeguard the physical security and property of such personnel. States were requested to investigate any crime committed against those staff and to bring to justice persons responsible for those crimes. The High Commissioner was urged to bring the issue to the attention of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, with a view to drawing up, in consultation with the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator, recommendations on improving security for humanitarian personnel.

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

The primary functions of UNHCR were to provide international protection and to seek permanent solutions to the problem of refugees by assisting Governments to facilitate their voluntary repatriation, or their assimilation within new national communities.

International protection meant securing respect for the basic rights of refugees, including admission to safety and non-refoulement, as well as ensuring that refugees were accorded favourable treatment in countries of asylum. Another important aspect of protection was promoting ratification of the relevant international instruments by States and incorporation of those instruments into national legislation. The protection of refugees was linked to the search for and the attainment of durable solutions to the refugee problem.

In a July note on international protection [A/AC.96/882], the High Commissioner said that contemporary refugee flows were characterized by flight from war and human rights abuses; the very objective of some civil conflicts was the forcible expulsion of targeted populations. That type of violence had caused particular dilemmas for refugee protection. The resulting mass displacements had included civilians, fighters and persons active or complicit in genocide, making asylum placement difficult. The report noted that, during the preceding year, there had been numerous incidents of refoulement and serious abuses of refugee rights. Refugees and asylum-seekers had been expelled, rejected at borders, interdicted on the high seas and otherwise involuntarily returned, and major human rights violations had occurred during forced relocations.

The High Commissioner stated that it was essential that persons in need of international protection be admitted and identified; such persons needed to be protected against refoulement as well. Another concern, refugee security, was evident in situations where the peaceful nature of asylum was not respected, whether through armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements or their militarization. Failure to implement international standards in respect of the civilian nature of camps and protected populations had contributed to the perception of refugee influxes as a threat to national and regional stability.

In securing protection for refugees, the High Commissioner said, a first step would be to distinguish persons who required international protection from those who did not, and giving at least temporary protection in cases of mass influx. In mass influx situations, military elements had to be disarmed from the outset. Camps or settlements should be situated at a proper distance from frontiers, and refugees' adherence to national law ensured. The international community needed to support proper access to camps and their monitoring as critical aspects of securing protection and assistance for both refugees and returnees. It also needed to share the burden in situations when refugee influx overwhelmed the capacity of host States.

As part of the work of the Executive Committee [A/53/12], UNHCR continued consultations with a number of States on such issues as international protection for all who needed it, statelessness, burden-sharing and detention of refugees and asylum-seekers. In accordance with UNHCR guidelines on detention, interventions were undertaken by the Office with various Governments on the subject of unjustified detention. UNHCR continued to participate in intergovernmental consultations aimed at harmonizing national laws and procedures, especially in Europe, and sought to promote comprehensive regional approaches to protection and immigration policies. The return of persons not in need of international protection remained a problematic issue for UNHCR, amidst disagreements between Governments as to the desirability of involving UNHCR in the return of such persons.

The Executive Committee, in an October conclusion [A/52/12/Add.1], reaffirmed the right of all persons to return to their countries and the responsibility of States to facilitate the return and reintegration of their nationals; recommended to States that strategies for facilitating the return, in safety and dignity, of persons not in need of international protection be examined within the framework of international cooperation; and encouraged UNHCR to continue, in cooperation with other appropriate international organizations, to look into ways in which the return process of individuals, determined through fair and effective procedures not to be in need of international protection, could be facilitated. The Committee emphasized that refugee protection was primarily the responsibility of States and it called on States to take measures to ensure that refugees were protected, including through national legislation and compliance with international human rights instruments. The Committee noted that voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement were the traditional durable solutions for refugees; affirmed that voluntary repatriation was the preferred solution, when feasible; and called on countries of origin, countries of asylum, UNHCR and the international community to enable refugees to exercise freely their right to return to their homes in safety and dignity.

In another conclusion on safeguarding asylum, the Committee, noting with concern that the growing complexity of refugee crises posed serious and novel challenges to the institution of asylum, reiterated the need for full respect to be accorded to the institution of asylum, including, inter alia, the principle of non-refoulement, the need to admit refugees into States, access of UNHCR to persons in need, the responsibility of host States to separate any armed or military elements from refugee populations, and the duty of refugees to respect the laws of host States.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

The Security Council, having considered the matter of protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees on 21 May and 19 June [meetings 3778 and 3790], issued a statement through its President [S/PRST/1997/34]:

The Security Council has considered the matter of protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations and has given careful consideration to the views expressed in the debate on the matter at its 3778th meeting on 21 May 1997.

The Council notes that massive displacement of civilian populations in conflict situations may pose a serious challenge to international peace and security. The Council, in seeking protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, underlines the importance of pursuing a coordinated and comprehensive approach in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

The Council expresses its grave concern at the recent increase in attacks or use of force in conflict situations against refugees and other civilians, in violation of the relevant rules of international law, including those of international humanitarian law. The Council reiterates its condemnation of such acts and once again calls upon all those concerned to comply strictly with the relevant rules of international law. In particular, it calls upon all parties concerned to ensure the safety of refugees, displaced persons and other civilians, and guarantee the unimpeded and safe access of United Nations and other humanitarian personnel to those in need.

The Council also expresses its grave concern at all attacks or use of force against United Nations and other personnel associated with United Nations operations, as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations, in violation of the relevant rules of international law, including those of international humanitarian law. In this context, the Council recalls its resolution 868(1993) and the statement by its President of 12 March 1997. It also recalls the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1994. In this context, it calls upon all parties concerned to ensure the safety and security of these personnel as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations, and encourages all States to consider ways and means to strengthen the protection of such personnel.

The Council reminds all States and others concerned of the need to bring to justice those who violate international humanitarian law. In this context, it recalls the resolution on the establishment of an international criminal court adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1996.

The Council supports further exploration of ways and means by which the international community may enhance the compliance by parties concerned with the relevant rules of international law, including those of international humanitarian law.

The Council encourages States to consider acceding to the relevant international conventions designed to address the problems of refugees.

The Council underlines the importance of ensuring clear, appropriate and realistic mandates to be implemented in an impartial manner as well as adequate resources for United Nations peacekeeping operations. In this context, the Council, in establishing or authorizing an operation to protect humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, reaffirms the principles of full respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the States concerned. The Council also underlines the importance of ensuring the proper discharge of the mandates conferred upon peacekeeping operations.

The Council stresses the importance of ensuring closer coordination between the relevant United Nations bodies and other international agencies, acting in accordance with their own mandates and status, with a view to effectively providing or protecting humanitarian assistance to those in need. In this context, the Council encourages an enhanced role for the Special Representatives of the Secretary-General in coordination to this end.

The Council stresses the importance of the activities of the relevant United Nations bodies, agencies and other international humanitarian organizations and the need for these activities to continue to be carried out in accordance with the principles of humanity, neutrality and impartiality of humanitarian assistance.

The Council also stresses the importance of crisis prevention, including by addressing the root causes of such crises. It therefore encourages the Secretary-General and all States to look further into practical ways to enhance the United Nations capacity and capability in this regard.

The Council encourages the Secretary-General to study further how to improve the protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations.

International instruments

In 1997, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania acceded to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477], bringing the number of States parties to one or both instruments to 131. The Executive Committee, by a conclusion adopted in October [A/52/12/Add.1], welcomed the accession of those three States, and noted with appreciation that a number of States not party to the Convention and the Protocol continued to maintain a generous approach to asylum. Nevertheless, considering that over 50 States had not acceded to those instruments, the Committee encouraged the High Commissioner to continue to promote further accessions. It urged States that had not done so to accede to and implement those instruments, as well as relevant regional instruments for the protection of refugees. Welcoming the growing number of accessions to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 4161 and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533], the Committee encouraged UNHCR to continue to promote further accessions, to provide technical and advisory services and training globally, and to disseminate information on statelessness and nationality issues. Spain acceded to the 1954 Convention in 1997.

In Central and Eastern Europe in particular, UNHCR continued to promote accession to the 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol, providing training and advice on refugee legislation and status determination procedures. The Office also participated in drafting the 1997 European Convention on Nationality and provided technical and advisory services on nationality laws and their implementation to a number of States in Central and Eastern Europe.

Promotional activities

In 1997, UNHCR increased its promotional efforts at the regional level, participating in various seminars and conferences on refugee issues and organizing refugee law and protection courses for government officials, implementing partners, academic institutions and NGOs in all regions of the world. It continued to monitor the work of the six treaty bodies, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. It also supported a study carried out by the Subcommission on forced displacements.

Assistance measures

The overall number of persons of concern to UNHCR in 1997 stood at 21 million. That figure represented some 12 million refugees, 3.3 million repatriating refugees in the early stages of their reintegration, 3.6 million internally displaced persons and 1.2 million others of humanitarian concern, for the most part victims of conflict. Over 676,000 refugees returned voluntarily to their countries of origin in 1997, highlighting the fact that repatriation was the preferred solution for many of the world's refugees. Over the previous few years, there had been a reduction in the number and scale of refugee-producing conflicts around the world. However, the potential for large-scale displacement existed in several regions and the increase in the number and intensity of ethnically based conflicts within States continued to be of concern. Solutions were tailored to meet specific characteristics of refugee movements, whether mass outflows from civil war, individuals seeking asylum from persecution, or movements of non-refugees. The Office also continued to develop its institutional capacity to manage voluntary repatriation, seeking to ensure the reintegration of returnees and facilitation of peace and reconciliation. In that regard, UNHCR advocated the creation of conditions conducive to return and reintegration through UN system-wide efforts that included institution-building, strengthening civil society, promoting equity, eliminating landmines and more effective control of small arms.

UNHCR assistance activities were grouped under two broad categories: General Programmes (including a Programme Reserve, the Voluntary Repatriation Fund and the Emergency Fund) and Special Programmes. General Programmes activities were considered statutory, that is, activities relating to the protection of and assistance to refugees and the pursuit of durable solutions for them. In addition, those activities had to be sufficiently stabilized to allow predictable programming and realistic funding. Total voluntary fund obligations for 1997 activities amounted to $973.1 million, with $385.1 million for General Programmes and $588 million for Special Programmes, which included programmes under funding appeals issued by the United Nations. Some 29 per cent of Special Programmes pertained to the UNHCR programme of humanitarian assistance in the former Yugoslavia and a further 36.5 per cent to operations in the Great Lakes region of Africa.

The Emergency Preparedness and Response Section of UNHCR acted as the Office's focal point for both emergency preparedness and response. In 1997, the Section dispatched Emergency Response Teams to Cambodia, the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Kenya, Liberia, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Thailand, Turkmenistan and Zambia. Emergency Management Training Programme (EMTP) workshops, an important element of emergency preparedness, were held in Georgia (for the Caucasus countries), Turkey (for Central Asia, South-West Asia and Middle East countries) and the United Republic of Tanzania (for countries of East Africa). A country-specific EMTP was organized in Japan. Those training workshops were designed for staff from Governments, other UN agencies, operational partners and UNHCR. In 1997, total expenditure on emergency assistance amounted to $10.4 million, of which $4.7 million was under General Programmes and $5.7 million under Special Programmes.

One form of assistance, referred to as care and maintenance programmes, followed the emergency phase of an operation. The majority of those programmes in 1997 were implemented in Africa, with substantial programmes carried out in the Great Lakes region, Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Guinea and Kenya. Major care and maintenance programmes were also carried out in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Pakistan, the Russian Federation and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). Care and maintenance assistance continued to be provided in South-East Asia to Vietnamese populations, pending their repatriation or resettlement.

During 1997, more than half of UNHCR General Programme expenditure ($234.2 million) was in the form of care and maintenance activities, while the amount spent for care and maintenance assistance under Special Programmes was $241.3 million.

As part of its efforts to seek durable solutions to refugee problems, UNHCR, in 1997, established the Reintegration and Self-Reliance Unit, which assisted returning populations in post-conflict situations. During the year, UNHCR spent $282.7 million on voluntary repatriation, including assistance to returnees in countries of origin.

UNHCR also provided assistance to refugee populations where Governments had permitted them some degree of local integration into national society. Those projects were intended to promote socio-economic self-reliance of the refugee group. The largest projects were implemented in Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ethiopia, Iran, Mexico, the Sudan and Uganda. Total expenditures amounted to $119.1 million.

In 1997, some 30,250 refugees were resettled under UNHCR auspices, including refugees accepted for resettlement but who did not travel before the end of the year. Almost half of those resettled were from the Middle East. UNHCR expenditure on those activities totalled $3.5 million.

Refugees and the environment

The Environmental Guidelines, promulgated by UNHCR in June 1996, continued to be the principal policy framework for integrating sound environmental management practices into UNHCR activities. Efforts were under way to develop environmental indicators, which would become a part of planning, monitoring and evaluation of the environmental impact of refugees and returnees. Throughout 1997, a project entitled "Towards sustainable environmental management practices in refugee-affected areas" allowed UNHCR to identify environmental lessons learned from refugee operations. Large, integrated environmental projects were being implemented in several countries, including Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. Model projects were implemented to demonstrate the principles of the Environmental Guidelines in those countries, as well as in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kyrgyzstan, Nepal, the Sudan and Zambia. Those projects focused on such matters as environmental planning; geographical information system environmental databases; demarcation of nature reserves and other protected areas; selective guided firewood harvesting; promotion of energy-efficient cooking practices and cooking devices; firewood and stove provision in exchange for environmentally sound work; environmental education and awareness raising; erosion control; protection of areas to allow for natural regeneration; tree planting; agro-forestry and home gardening; and environmental health.

Refugee women

In 1997, UNHCR continued to implement activities in relation to the four areas of concern for UNHCR under the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted at the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. Those four areas were: women and armed conflict; violence against women; human rights of women; and the girl child. UNHCR sought to integrate gender perspectives into all policies and programmes. A total of 1,794 Professional staff members and implementing partners had been trained in using gender analysis for programme planning. To combat violence against women, especially sexual violence, UNHCR and its implementing partners had introduced and promoted a crisis prevention and intervention programme in several refugee situations, such as in Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania.

In an effort to aid refugee women affected by armed conflict to reconstruct their lives, UNHCR encouraged special initiatives for refugee and returnee women under the Bosnian Women's Initiative (BWI) and the Rwanda Women's Initiative (RWI). Both BWI and RWI facilitated and supported local and national governmental and non-governmental peace-building initiatives. They also enhanced the integration and participation of women in economic, social and cultural development processes through income-generating activities, education programmes, health care (including reproductive health care), shelter programmes, and management and leadership training. In addition, UNHCR supported inter-agency initiatives worldwide that increased the number of women participating in peace-building, conflict resolution and reconstruction. In December, UNHCR facilitated an inter-agency meeting in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, which sought to document the best practices of women in peace-building.

Women's rights awareness training was implemented in Guatemala, Kenya, Mexico and Nepal to inform women of their rights to protection from domestic, sexual and other forms of violence. In Ankara, Turkey, UNHCR assisted the Government to modify its asylum criteria to include women who refused to marry pre-selected husbands, divorced women denied child custody and women who advocated women's liberation.

UNHCR presented a progress report on activities in favour of minors to the Standing Committee at its seventh meeting (30 April-1 May). The report also described UNHCR follow-up to the UN study on the impact of armed conflict on children, the "Machel study" [YUN 1996, p. 663]. Child rights-based performance objectives were established for all phases of UNHCR operations in complex emergencies. To implement those objectives and the Machel study's recommendations, the High Commissioner issued a policy instruction to each country operation calling for the creation of a plan of action, focusing on five critical issues: sexual exploitation and violence; under-age military recruitment; education; unaccompanied minors; and adolescents. In October, the Executive Committee adopted a conclusion on refugee children and adolescents in which it made a number of recommendations to States, UNHCR and other concerned parties to enhance the protection of and assistance to minors, and to take measures to protect child and adolescent refugees.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/73 [YUN 1996, p. 1110], the Secretary-General submitted a report in August [A/52/273] on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors, a term referring to persons under 18 years of age or under a country's legal age of majority, who were separated from both parents and were not being cared for by a guardian or other adult legally responsible for them. The report reviewed inter-agency cooperation in this field; some issues of concern, including violence against refugee minors, military recruitment, sexual exploitation, the best interests of unaccompanied minors, and their situation in countries practising individual refugee status determination; and current responses.

The Secretary-General reported that UNHCR, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and NGOs, having recognized the situation of unaccompanied minors, had identified three goals—to prevent separations, to reunify unaccompanied minors with their families, and to ensure adequate care of those minors. In the Great Lakes region, agencies dealt with an exceptionally high proportion of unaccompanied minors. Of the 12,000 minors identified as unaccompanied during the mass repatriation from the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the United Republic of Tanzania at the end of 1996 and the beginning of 1997, about 80 per cent had since been reunited with their families. From March to June 1997, 5,200 unaccompanied Rwandan minors were repatriated from Kisangani and other collection points in the eastern part of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, while the number of such minors remaining in that country was unknown.

In his description of inter-agency cooperation, the Secretary-General noted the memorandum of understanding signed in March 1996 by UNICEF and UNHCR, which provided a framework for cooperation for the development and use of global programming guidelines to ensure protection, care and family reunification of unaccompanied minors. UNHCR took the lead in countries of asylum, while UNICEF had the lead role in countries of origin; in both situations, they worked with NGOs. The memorandum paved the way for increased cooperation, including possible joint missions to assess and address the needs of separated minors. UNHCR worked with several NGOs on emergency deployment of community service officers, country evaluations and training, as they related to children and adolescents. Among current UN responses to situations involving unaccompanied minors, the report stated that inter-agency collaboration in the Great Lakes region was ongoing in response to the ever-changing situation. In the former Yugoslavia, plans were under way for an inter-agency conference to discuss best-interest standards. The UNHCR/International Save the Children Alliance country evaluations and capacity-building programmes aimed to ensure that children's and adolescents' needs were properly accounted for in programming and protection activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/639], adopted resolution 52/105 without vote [agenda item 107].

Assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/172 of 23 December 1994, 50/150 of 21 December 1995 and 51/73 of 12 December 1996,

Aware of the fact that the majority of refugees are children and women,

Bearing in mind that unaccompanied refugee minors are among the most vulnerable refugees and the most at risk of neglect, violence, forced military recruitment, sexual assault and other abuses and therefore require special assistance and care,

Mindful of the fact that the ultimate solution to the plight of unaccompanied minors is their return to and reunification with their families,

Noting the revised Guidelines on Refugee Children issued by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in May 1994 and the development of an emergency kit to facilitate coordination and to enhance the quality of responses to the needs of unaccompanied minors by the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Children's Fund and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner in the identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors, and welcoming its efforts in reunifying family members of refugees,

Welcoming the efforts exerted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the reunification of family members of refugees,

Noting the efforts of the High Commissioner to ensure the protection of and assistance to refugees, including children and unaccompanied minors, and noting that further efforts need to be exerted to this effect,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its deep concern at the continued plight of unaccompanied refugee minors, and emphasizes once again the urgent need for their early identification and for timely, detailed and accurate information on their number and whereabouts;
3. Expresses the hope once again that adequate resources will be provided for programmes of identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors;
4. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations bodies, to incorporate into its programmes policies that aim at preventing refugee family separation, considering the importance of family unity;
5. Calls upon all Governments, the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to exert the maximum effort to assist and protect refugee minors and to expedite the return to and reunification with their families of unaccompanied refugee minors;
6. Urges the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to take appropriate steps to mobilize resources commensurate with the needs and interests of unaccompanied refugee minors and towards their reunification with their families;
7. Calls upon all States and other parties to armed conflict to respect international humanitarian law, and, in this regard, calls upon States parties to respect fully the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and related instruments, while bearing in mind resolution 2 adopted at the twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held at Geneva from 3 to 7 December 1995, and to respect the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which accord children affected by armed conflict special protection and treatment;
8. Condemns all acts of exploitation of unaccompanied refugee minors, including their use as soldiers or human shields in armed conflict and their forced re-recruitment into military forces, and any other acts that endanger their safety and personal security;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organizations and international organizations to mobilize adequate assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors in the areas of relief, education, health and psychological rehabilitation;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution and to give special attention to the girl-child refugee in his report.

Regional activities

Africa

In a September 1997 report [A/52/360] on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, the Secretary-General, quoting UNHCR statistics, stated that at the end of 1996 Africa hosted 4.1 million refugees, some 2 million internally displaced persons of concern to UNHCR and 1.66 million returnees in the early stages of reintegration. In 1997, the largest refugee flows were in the Great Lakes region (see below). In West Africa, a major breakthrough came in Liberia with the agreement by the warring factions to demobilize and disarm before holding elections (see PART ONE, Chapter II). UNHCR and its operational partners recommenced preparations for the voluntary repatriation of 527,000 Liberian refugees in neighbouring countries. Organized repatriation was launched in December 1997. The situation in Sierra Leone deteriorated severely following a military coup that overthrew the elected civilian Government on 25 May; consequently all repatriation activities there were suspended, leaving 380,000 refugees outside the country. The repatriation of some 300,000 Togolese refugees who sought asylum in Benin and Ghana in 1993 was expected to be completed by the end of 1997. In the case of Malian refugees, of whom nearly 100,000 had returned, assistance in countries of asylum would cease at the end of 1997, while reintegration activities would continue in Mali until the end of 1998. In Mauritania, a programme facilitated the reintegration of 30,000 returnees who spontaneously returned from Mali and Senegal. No progress was made during 1997 with regard to the repatriation of an estimated 320,000 Eritrean refugees residing in the Sudan.

In the Horn of Africa, some countries of origin were unwilling to receive their own citizens back unless they were provided with what the Government considered adequate assistance from the international community for reintegration.

Some 10,000 Somali refugees were repatriated at the end of July, and it was expected that an additional 90,000 Somali refugees would return from Ethiopia beginning in June. By the end of 1997, it was estimated that some 452,000 Somalis remained in exile.

An unprecedented heavy rainfall in the Da-daab area of Kenya, where more than 125,000 refugees were located in three camps, required airlifting of food and other relief supplies at high cost.

Uganda was one of the few Governments that offered land for local settlement of refugees. Refugees, mainly Sudanese, were transferred from transit centres to settlements as land was made available and infrastructures were created. In 1997, UNHCR focused its activities in Uganda on local settlement activities, with a view to achieving self-sufficiency.

The objective of the UNHCR operation in Angola was the repatriation of 240,000 Angolan refugees in neighbouring countries and their reintegration in Angola. Due to the slow pace of the peace process in Angola in 1997, however, UNHCR revised its estimated requirements for the year downward, from $38.2 million to $21 million. Despite that, some 53,000 Angolans spontaneously returned home from Zambia and the Democratic Republic of the Congo in 1997. In southern Africa, most countries were experiencing a steady increase in arrivals of urban refugees, the majority of whom came from Angola. In South Africa alone, there were over 38,000 registered asylum-seekers from 52 different countries.

Among other UN bodies supporting refugee programmes, the World Food Programme (WFP) was the principal international channel for the provision of food aid in emergencies for refugees, displaced persons and returnees. UNICEF supported a range of emergency programmes focusing on the most vulnerable children, including those among locally affected families in conflict areas, internally displaced groups, returnees and refugees. In Angola, Mozambique and Rwanda, UNICEF worked with UN partners and international and local NGOs to integrate emergency interventions into long-term programming measures. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) worked towards the reintegration of uprooted populations, assisting Governments by providing those populations with a working infrastructure following their return.

Throughout Africa, UNHCR cooperated with various agencies, particularly UNICEF and WFP, to implement policies and guidelines on refugee women, refugee children and the environment. Special attention was given to protection, access to food, access to appropriate health care, education, self-reliance through skills training, income generation, participation in decision-making in camp management and other related activities. UNHCR and WFP, along with the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs, tried to ensure effective and complementary response in major emergencies. UNHCR, UNICEF, WFP and the United Republic of Tanzania ensured that children under five years of age, pregnant and lactating women and unaccompanied children received emergency health, water, nutrition and sanitation assistance. UNHCR and UNDP signed a memorandum of understanding in Rwanda for activities relating to repatriation and initial reintegration of refugees until the end of 1997. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, UNHCR focused on quick-impact projects that could be implemented immediately and at modest expense, while UNDP took the lead in re-initiating earlier projects that were halted owing to deteriorating security conditions.

In addition, UNHCR cooperated with African subregional organizations. Joint activities between UNHCR and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) enhanced cooperation on humanitarian and refugee issues. OAU granted $50,000 to UNHCR to assist Somali refugees in the eastern part of Ethiopia. A memorandum of understanding outlining the framework for cooperation in responding to refugee and returnee issues was signed in June between UNHCR and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). In the Horn of Africa, UNDP worked on a programme that would upgrade the capacity of IGAD to prevent, manage and resolve conflicts and to alleviate humanitarian crises. In southern Africa, UNHCR collaborated with the Southern African Development Community in areas of mutual concern, such as refugees, returnees, displaced persons and undocumented migration in southern Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/639], adopted resolution 52/101 without vote [agenda item 107].

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/71 of 12 December 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Noting with appreciation the efforts expended by countries of asylum in accommodating refugees,

Convinced of the necessity of strengthening the capacity within the United Nations system for the implementation of relief programmes for refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

Welcoming the ongoing process of voluntary repatriation of refugees in some parts of Africa,

Welcoming also decision CM/Dec.362(LXVI) on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-sixth ordinary session, held at Harare from 28 to 31 May 1997,

Welcoming further the outcome of the ministerial meeting of the Security Council on the situation in Africa, held on 25 September 1997, and the attention that was given at that meeting to the issue of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa,

Taking note of the memorandum of understanding signed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Southern African Development Community in July 1996 concerning refugees, returnees, displaced persons and undocumented migration in southern Africa,

Taking note also of the memorandum of understanding signed by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in June 1997 on refugees and returnee issues,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2312(XXII) of 14 December 1967, by which it adopted the Declaration on Territorial Asylum,

Recalling also the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969 and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Recognizing the need for States to create conditions conducive both to the prevention of flows of refugees and displaced persons and to solutions, especially voluntary repatriation,

Recognizing also the positive outcome of the conflict resolution efforts carried out in the subregion by the Economic Community of West African States, in creating a conducive environment for the voluntary repatriation of refugees and displaced persons,

Bearing in mind that the majority of refugees and displaced persons are women and children,

Noting with great concern that, despite all the efforts deployed so far by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa, especially in the West African and Great Lakes regions and in the Horn of Africa, remains precarious,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes with concern that the declining socio-economic situation, compounded by political instability, internal strife, human rights violations and natural disasters, such as drought, has led to increased numbers of refugees and displaced persons in some countries of Africa;

3. Expresses deep concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons in the receiving countries and the implications for security, long-term socio-economic development and the environment;

4. Expresses concern at instances where the fundamental principle of asylum is jeopardized by the unlawful expulsion or refoulement or by threats to the life, physical security, integrity, dignity and well-being of refugees;

5. Expresses its appreciation and strong support for those African Governments and local populations that, in spite of the general deterioration of socio-economic and environmental conditions and over-stretched national resources, continue to accept the additional burden imposed upon them by increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons, in compliance with the relevant principles of asylum;

6. Commends the Governments concerned for their sacrifices in providing assistance and protection to refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons and for their efforts to promote voluntary repatriation and other durable solutions;

7. Expresses its gratitude to the international community, and to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in particular, for the humanitarian assistance it has continued to render to refugees and displaced persons and to the countries of asylum;

8. Welcomes the strengthening of cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Organization of African Unity at all levels, and urges the two organizations, in conjunction with United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the international community and the Governments concerned, to increase efforts aimed at facilitating voluntary repatriation in a dignified and orderly manner and at addressing the root causes of the refugee problem and working out modalities for a lasting solution;

9. Reiterates that the Plan of Action adopted by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held at Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February 1995, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/149, continues to be a viable framework for the resolution of the refugee and humanitarian problems in that region;

10. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner and other concerned entities to intensify protection activities by, inter alia, supporting the efforts of African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles and providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees;

11. Appeals to Governments, the United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community to create conditions to facilitate the voluntary return and the early rehabilitation and reintegration of refugees;

12. Appeals to the international community to respond positively, in the spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing, to the third-country resettlement requests of African refugees;

13. Commends the Governments of the Great Lakes and West African regions and of the Horn of Africa and the Office of the High Commissioner for their initiatives to promote repatriation within the framework of tripartite agreements on voluntary repatriation of refugees in the regions;

14. Encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within their respective mandates, in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in emergency humanitarian situations in Africa;

15. Welcomes the ongoing efforts undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with host Governments, the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and the international community in concentrating on the environment and ecosystems of countries of asylum;

16. Notes with satisfaction the voluntary return of millions of refugees to their homelands following the successful repatriation and reintegration operations carried out by the Office of the High Commissioner, with the cooperation and collaboration of countries hosting refugees and countries of origin, and looks forward to other programmes to assist the voluntary repatriation of all refugees in Africa;

17. Expresses its concern about the long stay of refugees in certain African countries, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to keep its programmes under review, in conformity with its mandate in the host countries, taking into account the increasing requirements there;

18. Urges the international community to continue to fund the general refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa;

19. Calls upon Governments, United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and the international community as a whole to strengthen the emergency response capacity of the United Nations system on the basis of the experience of the emergency in the Great Lakes region and to continue to provide needed resources and operational support to refugees and countries of asylum in Africa until a durable solution can be found;

20. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure in areas affected by refugees in countries of asylum;

21. Requests all Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay particular attention to meeting the special needs of refugee women and children;

22. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner and intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations to increase the capacity for coordination and delivery of humanitarian emergency assistance and disaster relief in general with States and others concerned in respect of asylum, relief, repatriation, rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, including refugees in urban areas;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive and consolidated report on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, taking fully into account the efforts expended by countries of asylum, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions" and to present an oral report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1998.

Great Lakes operations

During 1997, in the Great Lakes region of Africa, thousands of refugees, many of whom had first dispersed in various locations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), returned to their own countries (see also PART ONE, Chapter II). Their return by air and by land to Rwanda was more often an evacuation as a last-resort solution rather than voluntary repatriation. Other refugees continued to resist returning to Rwanda and further dispersed throughout the Great Lakes region and some 10 other African countries. Smaller numbers of Burundi refugees were found along with the Rwandan refugees.

UNHCR was called upon to provide international protection and care for 75,000 refugees from the DRC who arrived in the United Republic of Tanzania, while some 31,000 refugees from the eastern part of the DRC remained in western Rwanda. In June, some 40,000 refugees arrived in Kinshasa as a result of the civil war in the Congo. Among them, approximately 15,000 were assisted in a refugee camp. The Burundi refugees in the United Republic of Tanzania became the single largest group of refugees in the region. While some 100,000 of them repatriated spontaneously, a similar number arrived from provinces where new outbreaks of fighting had occurred. In Burundi, the security situation improved to such an extent that UNHCR considered it safe for an increased number of refugees to return in the course of the year. UNHCR assisted communities as well as returnees and provided emergency assistance for new displacements. Repatriation to the Congo also became possible in December, with the signing of a tripartite memorandum of understanding.

During 1997, the total number of refugees in camps decreased enormously as a result of those large-scale movements. The only large-scale programme in the region at the end of the year was in the United Republic of Tanzania, where UNHCR assisted 450,000 refugees from Burundi and the DRC.

In an effort to reduce the large residual group of Rwandan refugees in the DRC, over 70,000 people were returned to Rwanda from May to June by a mass air evacuation. Thousands of others continued their trek in search of safety, gathering in smaller groups in the Congo (15,000), Angola (2,000), the Central African Republic and other countries. UNHCR conducted screening in the Central African Republic and Malawi, aimed at excluding those persons from refugee status who had been involved in the 1994 genocide. Among the many thousands of Rwandan and Burundi refugees who had not been located, small numbers continued to return from dense forest areas throughout 1997. In the United Republic of Tanzania, intimidation and political activities in the camps for Burundi refugees had been observed; some of the persons concerned were returned forcibly to their home countries, and over 30,000 refugees were relocated to refugee camps by the Government.

UNHCR continued throughout 1997 with the rehabilitation of areas in the United Republic of Tanzania that had accommodated large numbers of refugees from 1994 to 1996. It provided assistance for schools, medical centres, water supply systems, repairs to key roads and measures to restore the environment. The massive return of refugees to Rwanda required an immense effort on the part of the international community and of UNHCR, in particular to assist the Government in receiving and reintegrating the more than 1.3 million citizens who returned in a matter of months. The primary purpose of the UNHCR rehabilitation programme in Rwanda was to maximize the protection of returnees, promote reconciliation, avoid new conflict and thus ensure smooth and successful reintegration. Serious incidents in the north-west of the country during 1997, however, often impeded access for UNHCR and NGO staff to returnees and directly affected returnees and refugees from the DRC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 73], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/169 B [draft: A/52/L.16/Rev.2] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Special assistance to Central African countries receiving refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/24 of 2 December 1994,

Deeply concerned by the massive flow of refugees, returnees and other displaced persons in Central Africa,

Welcoming the prospects for the voluntary return, repatriation and reintegration of refugees in safety and dignity and efforts made to find durable solutions to their plight,

Recognizing the need for States to create conditions conducive to an early and sustainable solution to the flow of refugees, returnees and other displaced persons,

Bearing in mind the evident impact of these massive flows of refugees on the basic infrastructure and on the life and property of local populations in the host countries,

Also bearing in mind the deterioration of the economic, social and health infrastructure and the ecological impact in the areas receiving refugees,

Realizing the importance of assisting the host countries, in particular those countries that have been hosting refugees for a long time, to remedy environmental deterioration and the negative effects on public services and the development process,

Gravely concerned by the effects which epidemics are having on the health of refugees and local communities in certain areas,

Observing that the humanitarian aid dispatched should as far as possible take into consideration the scale of the needs of the local populations,

Recognizing that the countries receiving refugees, most of them least developed countries, continue to experience an extremely critical economic situation,

Expressing again its appreciation to the countries which have received refugees for the sacrifices which they are making in granting refuge and hospitality to them,

Stressing the need to continue providing special assistance to the local populations of the countries receiving refugees,

1. Congratulates the Secretary-General for the efforts he has made to draw the attention of the international community to the situation of refugees in Central African countries;

2. Expresses its gratitude to all States, organizations and bodies of the United Nations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have done so for the financial, technical and material assistance they have been delivering to those countries that have been receiving refugees since the onset of the crisis and for the humanitarian assistance they have continued to render to refugees and the host countries, and calls upon them to continue to provide assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and social infrastructure in areas affected by the massive presence of refugees in those host countries;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the serious social, economic, health and ecological impact that the massive and unexpected presence of refugees can have;

4. Calls upon all African Governments and in particular those of Central Africa to do their utmost to assist refugees, notwithstanding the constraints which their limited resources place upon them;

5. Urges the Governments of the region and all concerned parties to provide safe and unhindered access for United Nations and other humanitarian personnel to the populations in need in all areas of the region;

6. Calls upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international financial and development institutions to facilitate the restoration of the basic services destroyed in the countries receiving refugees;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the follow-up to the present resolution.

The Americas and the Caribbean

In 1997, 3,573 Guatemalan refugees were repatriated with UNHCR assistance, for the most part from Mexico, thus bringing the total of returnees repatriated through UNHCR since 1984 to some 38,000. Organized collective repatriation was expected to close in 1999, although there were still approximately 28,000 Guatemalan refugees in south-eastern Mexico. UNHCR supported Mexico's plan for the permanent settlement of Guatemalan refugees in Campeche and Quintana Roo, which focused on upgrading and transferring the basic infrastructure and services of the refugee settlements to the local administration, and on addressing the question of land titles.

In Belize and Panama, UNHCR promoted plans for individual voluntary repatriation and permanent local settlement by securing permanent residence permits or citizenship. In 1997, in Belize, a programme of community-based quick impact projects consisted of 24 micro-projects in the water, infrastructure, education, health, crop-production and income-generation sectors benefiting 4,810 refugees and their Belizean host communities.

In Colombia, UNHCR was concerned about the forced displacement resulting from the escalation of armed violence. The High Commissioner agreed to Colombia's request for a permanent UNHCR presence in Bogota. The UNHCR Liaison Office in Caracas, Venezuela, focused on statutory activities related to Colombia as a country of asylum and as a country of origin.

UNHCR continued to follow the implementation of the asylum-related provisions contained in the 1996 immigration legislation enacted by the United States, providing technical advice on international standards to the Immigration and Naturalization Service with respect to the regulatory framework, policy guidelines and their practical application. In Canada, UNHCR was invited to comment on a report resulting from an independent review of Canada's Immigration Act. In the Caribbean region, UNHCR was reorienting its activities from the largely completed task of achieving durable solutions for the small residual Haitian and Cuban refugee caseloads.

Asia and the Pacific and the Arab States

South Asia

Some 9,400 Muslim residents of Rakhine State in Myanmar voluntarily repatriated from camps in Bangladesh during the first quarter of 1997, bringing the total number of persons returning from camps in Bangladesh under UNHCR auspices since 1994 to 230,000. However, voluntary repatriation and alternative durable solutions for some 21,000 individuals remaining in two camps were adversely affected by obstructive action against repatriation taken by minority elements in the camps.

The escalation of armed conflict in Sri Lanka during 1997 prevented a continuation of the voluntary repatriation of over 65,000 Sri Lankan refugees from India. Some 20,000 newly displaced persons were provided shelter and relief assistance in UNHCR-assisted Open Relief Centres in Mannar District. Over 428,000 persons also benefited from 224 micro-projects, which focused on water supply/sanitation, education and income-generating activities in six northern districts.

In India, efforts to promote self-reliance among some 18,000 urban refugees, mainly from Afghanistan, continued during 1997, and the number of refugees receiving monthly subsistence support was reduced from 10,000 to some 2,200 persons. India also provided shelter to some 65,000 Sri Lankans and 98,000 asylum-seekers from the Tibet region.

There were no significant developments regarding the situation of some 93,000 refugees from southern Bhutan accommodated in seven camps in eastern Nepal.

East Asia and the Pacific

Throughout 1997, UNHCR continued to support repatriation, resettlement and self-reliance measures aimed at achieving durable solutions for the relatively small residual caseload of Indo-Chinese refugees in the region. A total of 755,857 Vietnamese refugees had been resettled in third countries since 1975, some 109,198 Vietnamese had repatriated to their country of origin since the inception of the Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 707] and some 27,658 Laotian refugees had returned to their country of origin since 1981.

Under an agreement reached between Thailand and the Lao People's Democratic Republic in March 1997, an individual case status review of the Ban Napho population was in progress. Repatriation counselling was being continued in view of indications that many individuals would not meet internationally recognized refugee criteria and would be expected to return to their countries. In Viet Nam and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, returnee reintegration and monitoring assistance continued.

At the end of 1997, some 103,100 refugees from Myanmar were residing on the Thailand side of the border between Myanmar and Thailand, comprising 91,300 Karen and 11,800 Karenni. UNHCR supported ongoing initiatives by the Thai authorities to relocate and consolidate camps that were vulnerable to cross-border incursions or were difficult to access during the wet season.

Following political violence in July 1997 in Phnom Penh, and subsequent military conflict in north-western Cambodia, over 60,000 Cambodians sought refuge in Thailand. UNHCR, in conjunction with the Government of Thailand, provided emergency relief to the Cambodian refugees in three camps. In China, UNHCR assistance for Indo-Chinese refugees focused on sustainable local settlement through the creation of employment opportunities.

UNHCR sponsored the Expert Meeting on Regional Approaches to Refugees and Displaced Persons in Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, July). Convened in partnership with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), it considered the causes, nature and consequences of population movements and was aimed at facilitating communication, understanding and cooperation among States on refugee and displacement issues, at a time when the economic crisis in the region had created higher levels of legal and illegal migration in several countries.

Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

As a result of the continuing civil war in Afghanistan, which had prolonged the human tragedy for more than 17 years, involuntary movements of displaced persons and new refugees and violations of basic human rights continued and were the main concerns of UNHCR in the country. In 1997, some 87,000 Afghan refugees repatriated voluntarily. UNHCR remained concerned by the continued presence of 2.6 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan and Iran, whose return depended on a peaceful solution to the conflict in Afghanistan, as well as the restoration of stability and reconstruction in areas of return. In Tajikistan, the signing of the General Peace Agreement in June 1997 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) created a political framework for peace and national reconciliation. Subsequently, UNHCR was able to recommence the voluntary repatriation of Tajik refugees from northern Afghanistan in July. By mid-November, some 10,200 Tajiks had returned home safely and their repatriation from northern Afghanistan was completed. The number of Iraqi refugees returning from Iran increased significantly in 1997 and further returns were expected.

UNHCR planned to begin in 1998 a repatriation operation under the 1990 United Nations Settlement Plan for Western Sahara [YUN 1990, p. 919]. However, the voluntary repatriation operation could begin only when certain key activities of the Plan were completed and with the full co-operation of the parties concerned.

In northern Iraq, the Atroush camp was closed in early 1997 and Turkish refugees of Kurdish origin received alternative assistance in Ain Sufni (6,800 persons) and 19 other locations. During the year, some 1,000 persons repatriated from northern Iraq to Turkey.

UNHCR continued to implement its capacity-building and prevention objectives in all five Central Asian States, consistent with the Programme of Action of the CIS Conference (see below). Close coordination had been established with the new Governments and other agencies in such matters as resolving and mitigating refugee migration and forced population movements.

Europe

According to UNHCR figures [A/53/12], Western Europe witnessed a 10 per cent growth in the number of asylum-seekers in 1997, reaching 270,000, compared with 245,000 in 1996. The highest relative increases were in Ireland, Greece and Italy, where the number of applicants more than doubled. Other significant increases occurred in Sweden, the Netherlands, Finland and Switzerland. UNHCR hoped that the entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty, signed on 2 October 1997, would facilitate the adoption of a comprehensive European asylum policy, based on common standards of protection that were consonant with internationally agreed standards.

Of the 3 million persons uprooted by the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, some 815,740 refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina remained in asylum countries at the beginning of 1997. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia hosted nearly a quarter of a million refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina and also provided asylum to some 300,000 refugees from Croatia. The numbers of refugees and displaced persons who returned home to Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1997 totalled 120,000 and 53,810, respectively. By the end of 1997, only 1,125 refugees had returned to Croatia from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Within Croatia, over 11,000 internally displaced persons had returned home. By the end of the year, the number of refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina in need of durable solutions had decreased to 602,000. The main objective of UNHCR was to seek a breakthrough on the voluntary return of minorities to their homes. To that end, the concept of "Open Cities" was introduced in the first half of 1997, whereby municipalities that agreed to accept the return of minorities would be given assistance by the international community. In 1997, 4,443 persons were resettled in third countries.

Over 1.3 million persons (both internally displaced and refugees) were registered in the Russian Federation, most of whom were from the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). It was estimated that an additional 2.8 million unregistered persons resided in the Russian Federation. Since 1992, some 30,000 refugees and asylum-seekers from outside CIS had been registered by UNHCR.

In the North Caucasus region, UNHCR delivered assistance to over 90,000 internally displaced persons from Chechnya (Russian Federation) residing in neighbouring republics and regions. Cross-border assistance was provided to some 150,000 internally displaced persons in Chechnya itself. Over 35,000 internally displaced persons from Prigrodny district of North Ossetia were still residing in Ingushetia and had benefited from legal and individual assistance. In addition, there were 29,300 registered Georgian refugees in North Ossetia. UNHCR organized a repatriation programme to move that caseload back to South Ossetia and Georgia. The UNHCR humanitarian assistance programme in Georgia catered for some 300,000 refugees and internally displaced persons.

The main migration issue facing Ukraine was the return to and reintegration in the Crimea of formerly deported persons, numbering 248,700. To prevent a statelessness situation among the formerly deported peoples, UNHCR launched a plan of action to assist the Crimean Tatars and others to acquire Ukrainian citizenship.

In support of the policy of integration of the Government of Armenia, UNHCR continued to provide assistance, addressing the needs of some 150,000 of the most vulnerable. The humanitarian programme of UNHCR in Azerbaijan moved towards a post-emergency phase, with a stronger emphasis on promotion of self-reliance and targeted assistance for 150,000 of the most vulnerable.

Conference on refugees of CIS countries and neighbouring States

In an August report [A/52/274 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General described follow-up to the 1996 Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States [YUN 1996, p. 1117]. The report was submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 51/70 [YUN 1996, p. 1118], by which the Assembly also requested UNHCR, in cooperation with IOM and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), to steer the activities in implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the Conference. Under a joint operational strategy for 1996-2000, national implementation plans in each CIS country were drawn up. UNHCR and IOM made a joint appeal for funds in November 1996, thus providing a channel through which States or interested organizations could support implementation of the Programme of Action.

Most CIS countries had elaborated or revised legislation on migration and displacement, the Secretary-General reported, and many had promoted human rights. Some paid particular attention to minority rights and had made efforts to reduce statelessness. UNHCR strengthened its own regional policies and approaches, developing strategies and practical tools for capacity-building, enhancing or launching programmes to address such issues as statelessness, citizenship, involuntarily displaced persons and formerly deported peoples. IOM concentrated on migration management, integration assistance, migration assistance, and research and information activities. Other organizations active in the region included UNDP, which assisted internally displaced persons in Georgia and the reintegration of returnees in Crimea, Ukraine, focusing on improving the infrastructure and access to social services. Also in Crimea, UNICEF provided educational and medical supplies for community centres and polyclinics.

The Steering Group set up in October 1996 to monitor progress in implementing the Programme of Action met on 2 July 1997. Participants included 45 States, 21 international organizations, 73 NGOs and 4 other entities. A report compiled by UNHCR and IOM outlining progress made in each CIS country provided the basis for the review.

UNHCR and OSCE organized an expert meeting on freedom of movement (Kiev, Ukraine, December), with the participation of government representatives and independent experts from all the CIS countries and some others. Potential changes were considered in residence registration systems that impacted particularly negatively on asylum-seekers and refugees. UNHCR initiated a number of programmes in cooperation with other international organizations and NGOs to strengthen the capacities of local NGOs in implementing the Programme of Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/639], adopted resolution 52/102 without vote [agenda item 107].

Follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/113 of 20 December 1993, 49/173 of 23 December 1994, 50/151 of 21 December 1995 and, in particular, 51/70 of 12 December 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the acuteness of the migration and displacement problems in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration in developing strategies and practical tools for more effective capacity-building and enhancing programmes to address the needs of various categories of concern to the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States,

Convinced of the necessity for the further strengthening of practical measures towards the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States,

Reaffirming the view of the Conference that the primary responsibility for tackling population displacement problems lies with the affected countries themselves and that these issues are to be regarded as national priorities, while at the same time recognizing the need for enhancing international support for the national efforts of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States aiming at the effective implementation of such responsibilities within the framework of the Programme of Action of the Conference,

Recalling that the protection and promotion of human rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions are essential to prevent mass population displacement,

Mindful of the fact that effective implementation of the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action of the Conference should be facilitated and can be ensured only through cooperation and coordinated activities undertaken in this respect by all interested States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other actors,

Noting and reaffirming the importance of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes the positive results achieved by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in the implementation of the Programme of Action adopted by the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States, and invites these organizations to continue to steer the ongoing and future activities relating to the follow-up to the Conference;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the Governments of those countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States that, in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner, the International Organization for Migration, tion, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Council of Europe, have undertaken practical steps in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

4. Invites all countries that have not yet done so to accede to and implement fully the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees;

5. Appreciates the efforts made by the Office of the High Commissioner, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to support the implementation of the Programme of Action in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and underlines the necessity of an appropriate response by the international community to appeals for funds by the Office of the High Commissioner and the International Organization for Migration;

6. Calls upon States and interested international organizations, in a spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing, to provide appropriate forms and levels of support for the practical implementation of the Programme of Action;

7. Invites international financial and other institutions to contribute to the financing of projects and programmes within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

8. Invites the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to intensify bilateral and subregional cooperation in maintaining the balance of commitments and interests in the process leading up to the implementation of the Programme of Action;

9. Calls upon the Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to continue to strengthen their commitment to the principles underpinning the Programme of Action, in particular human rights and refugee protection principles, and to lend high-level political support to ensure progress in its implementation;

10. Emphasizes the necessity of fulfilling the recommendations of the Programme of Action relating to ensuring respect for human rights as an important factor in the management of migration flows, the consolidation of democracy, the rule of law and stability;

11. Urges the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in coordination with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to take into account those elements of the Programme of Action that are relevant to her mandate;

12. Encourages the involvement of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the follow-up to the Conference, and invites them to demonstrate stronger support for the process of the multinational constructive dialogue among a wide range of the countries concerned and further action with a view to the full implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

13. Calls upon the Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States as well as international organizations to strengthen further their cooperation with non-governmental organizations and to increase their involvement in the implementation of the outcome and the follow-up to the Conference;

14. Requests the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to enhance its relationship with other key international actors, such as the Council of Europe, the European Commission and other human rights, development and financial institutions, in order to better address the wide-ranging and complex issues in the Programme of Action;

15. Recognizes the importance of undertaking measures, on the basis of strict adherence to all of the principles of international law, including humanitarian law and international human rights standards, to prevent situations leading to new flows of refugees and displaced persons and other forms of involuntary displacement;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on progress achieved in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

17. Decides to continue examination of this question at its fifty-third session.

Chapter XIII

Health, food and nutrition

In 1997, the United Nations continued to take action to promote human health, coordinate food aid and food security, and support research in nutrition.

Efforts to combat the AIDS epidemic remained a major concern for the United Nations. Those efforts were coordinated by the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, which focused on strengthening United Nations capacity to assist Governments and civil society to respond to HIV/AIDS. According to statistics made available in 1997, the epidemic continued to expand despite some advances in medical treatment. Another major health concern for the United Nations was the effects of tobacco on health. In that regard, the UN focal point on tobacco or health intensified dialogue with organizations of the UN system and Member States in order to strengthen tobacco control policies.

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations—provided food aid to 52.9 million people in 1997. WFP expenditure totalled $1,199 million during the year, of which 69 per cent was spent for relief activities and 31 per cent for development activities. The total amount of food delivered was 2.7 million tons.

Follow-up to the 1996 World Food Summit included action at the country level and at headquarters level to promote food security.

Health

AIDS prevention and control

The Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS), which became fully operational in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1121], continued to coordinate UN activities for the prevention and control of AIDS. The Programme, which served as the main advocate for global action on HIV/AIDS, was developed by six co-sponsors: the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Bank and the World Health Organization (WHO). Its focus was to: strengthen UN capacity to assist Governments and civil society to respond to HIV/AIDS; build worldwide political commitment to respond to the epidemic; and improve the content, access and use of the body of knowledge needed to accelerate the global response.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/47 [YUN 1996, p. 1122], the Secretary-General, by a note of 21 May [E/1997/63], transmitted a report of the UNAIDS Executive Director describing the status of the epidemic, the UN response to it and challenges facing the Organization.

According to the report, the HIV/AIDS epidemic continued to expand in 1996 with an estimated 3.1 million new infections—approximately 8,500 a day. Nearly half of the new infections occurred in women, and the majority of newly infected adults were under 25 years old. Of the estimated worldwide total of 22.6 million people living with HIV/AIDS, 21.8 million were adults and 830,000 were children. HIV/AIDS-associated illnesses caused the deaths of an estimated 1.5 million people during 1996, including 350,000 children. That represented about 25 per cent of all HIV-related mortality since the beginning of the epidemic. Although the introduction of anti-retroviral combination therapy was a major breakthrough in terms of treatment and had led to reduced mortality in several industrialized countries, the cost made it unaffordable to 90 per cent of the people living with HIV/AIDS. While the epidemic continued to worsen in many parts of the world, in an increasing number of developing countries prevention efforts appeared to have reduced HIV transmission. Much more could be done to provide access to effective, inexpensive drugs, care and counselling. In the area of vaccine development, which was still underfunded both in academia and in industry, there was little real progress.

In addition to specific HIV/AIDS activities, the UNAIDS co-sponsors were integrating or mainstreaming HIV/AIDS activities into programmes and programme areas. Other agencies, including the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, were also addressing HIV/AIDS. A key element in the global strategy of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) was to ensure that HIV/AIDS services were an integral part of the basic health services provided to refugees and displaced populations. HIV/AIDS was addressed in the personnel policies of all the organizations in the UN system, and workshops and training courses were provided to increase staff awareness of HIV/AIDS. Special HIV/AIDS-related training was also provided to UN peacekeepers.

The UNAIDS secretariat and co-sponsors worked together at the global, regional, inter-country and country levels, interacting and co-operating with Governments, bilateral agencies, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), the private sector and the media. At the global level, mechanisms for joint planning included inter-agency working groups on several issues, including global surveillance of HIV/AIDS and sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), communication, gender, children and HIV/AIDS, integrating HIV/STD prevention in schools, and especially vulnerable young people. At the country level, assistance was provided to strengthen national capacities to develop a more effective response to the epidemic, mainly through theme groups supported by country programme advisers, drawn from UNDP and other co-sponsors.

The estimated financial support provided by the Programme secretariat and co-sponsors for HIV/AIDS activities in 1996 totalled $208 million, excluding staff costs, the report stated. That figure included some $85 million in loans provided by the World Bank in 1995-1996. The biggest recipients were Kenya ($40 million) and Indonesia ($24.8 million). In addition to the headquarters staff, the Programme had 12 intercountry technical advisers and 37 country programme advisers working at the regional and country levels.

The report described selected UNAIDS activities in research and surveillance, information exchange, education and training, advocacy and public information, guidelines and publications on HIV/AIDS, and capacity-building and policy advice.

The continuing denial of the epidemic in some countries, as well as the new complacency that was eroding the urgency of the response as successful treatments were made known, created challenges to the mobilization of a global response to the epidemic. Another challenge was the failure in many places to accept the evidence that HIV prevention worked and that the tools required were available and cost-effective. The development of a vaccine against HIV infection should remain a global priority of the first order, the report stated. Research and development efforts should be intensified so as to develop a vaccine and other technological tools required to control the epidemic. UNAIDS would need to continue to promote the goal of equity in the development of an international research agenda and in the testing of, and timely access to, its products.

At its fourth meeting (Geneva, 7-9 April 1997), the Programme Coordinating Board endorsed the proposed programme budget and work plan for the 1998-1999 biennium. The success of the Programme would be dependent on substantially increased resources to support HIV/AIDS activities in those countries most affected or threatened by the epidemic.

The Secretary-General, in the note transmitting the report, stated that he intended to monitor the progress of the Programme through the Administrative Committee on Coordination. The UN Secretariat had held consultations with UNAIDS representatives and had established an interdepartmental working group to coordinate the support to be provided by the Secretariat, particularly in the area of greater advocacy, and to study the socio-economic dimensions of the epidemic. That would entail coordination of units from the areas of policy coordination, economic and social information and policy analysis, peacekeeping, human rights, communications and media services, and personnel and medical services. The Secretary-General suggested the establishment of a UN focal point within the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development to provide for closer interaction between the Secretariat and the Programme.

On 23 July [meeting 39], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1997/52 [draft. E/1997/L.46] without vote [agenda item 6 (e)].

Human immunodeficiency virus/ acquired immunodeficiency syndrome

Recalling its resolutions 1994/24 of 26 July 1994, 1995/2 of 3 July 1995 and 1996/47 of 26 July 1996,

Noting with concern the continuing spread of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS), in particular HIV/AIDS-associated deaths in 1996, which represent approximately 25 per cent of all HIV-related mortality since the beginning of the epidemic, the severe impact on development prospects and the worsening impact on individuals, households and society,

Recognizing that women and men are affected differently by HIV/AIDS and that in 1996 nearly half of the new infections occurred in women,

Recognizing also that special efforts are needed to help developing countries to combat AIDS,

Noting with concern the increasingly dramatic situation of millions of children worldwide who are living under the threat of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, and welcoming the theme of the 1997 World AIDS Campaign on Children Living in a World with AIDS,

Noting with appreciation the progress achieved in the implementation of the activities of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome by its co-sponsoring organizations during its first full year of operation, and acknowledging the continued efforts made by Governments in response to HIV/AIDS at the national level as well as the financial support provided by countries for these efforts,

Noting that the Programme, which was established to provide a coordinated United Nations response to the epidemic, constitutes an important example of effective system-wide coordination in the context of United Nations reform efforts,

Taking note of the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Executive Director of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, which discusses the HIV/AIDS activities of the organizations of the United Nations system, and welcoming the increased involvement of the Secretary-General in the response to HIV/AIDS and his support to the Programme,

1. Urges the co-sponsors of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen their commitment to the response to the epidemic by integrating HIV/AIDS components throughout their operational activities at the global, regional and country levels and in their follow-up activities to global conferences;

2. Requests co-sponsoring organizations and the Programme to disseminate clear guidance to country-level staff on the role and functions of the United Nations theme groups on HIV/AIDS and their respective roles in providing technical assistance and to report back to their respective governing bodies and to the Programme Coordinating Board on measures undertaken in this respect;

3. Requests the United Nations funds and programmes, and invites the specialized agencies, in consultation with the host countries, to ensure effective co-ordination of HIV/AIDS-related activities in the context of the resident coordinator system;

4. Urges the co-sponsoring organizations to share costs related to administrative support for the effective functioning of theme groups within the framework of the United Nations resident coordinator system;

5. Appeals to Governments and the co-sponsors, and encourages other interested actors, to broaden their programme activities in the area of HIV/AIDS in order to cover all aspects of the epidemic, in particular addressing its social and economic dimensions, especially in developing countries, and emphasizing, in this context, a gender-based approach;

6. Urges all donors to continue their support and those not contributing substantially to increase their support to the Programme, giving priority to funding the core budget in order to ensure sustainable financing of the Programme;

7. Welcomes the support of other countries, and urges all those in a position to do so to contribute to the Programme;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Council, at its substantive session of 1999, a comprehensive report prepared by the Executive Director of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome in collaboration with other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, drawing upon the biennial report on HIV/AIDS to be issued in 1998, on the progress made in the response to HIV/AIDS and its impact on the countries affected.

Tobacco or health

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/62 [YUN 1995, p. 1259], the Secretary-General reported in May [E/1997/62] on progress made by the UN focal point in the implementation of multisectoral collaboration on tobacco or health. The report summarized information gathered by the UN focal point on tobacco or health, designated in accordance with Council resolution 1993/79 [YUN 1993, p. 988], within the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), based on contacts with Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs, as well as over 30 UN entities.

The report concluded that, over the two-year period under review, there had been a growing awareness of the public health risks associated with tobacco consumption. An international struggle to control the operations of major tobacco multinationals reached a turning point when a number of them met with anti-smoking groups and officials of the United States to discuss the terms of a settlement on a large number of liabilities. Another major change in the past two years was the impact of the development of the Internet, which provided generally reliable global information on tobacco. Concerning the future of the tobacco or health programme, a commitment to providing a minimal level of resources for such activities would be essential if the UN system was to respond to all the new requests for action on tobacco-related issues. One option would be to establish a voluntary trust fund to finance the main activities of the UN focal point. A small amount of resources allocated to mobilize a coordinated international response to developing tobacco control policies could make a significant impact due to the networking arrangements and links established with governmental, intergovernmental, non-governmental and civil society organizations.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/303 of 25 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Inter-agency coordination in health policy

In 1997, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered a note by its President [DP/FPA/1997/5] on the follow-up to a 1996 Board decision [YUN 1996, p. 11261 requesting the President to ascertain the views of the Executive Boards of WHO and UNICEF on the possible membership of the UNDP/UNFPA Board in the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy (JCHP) and to take action to enable the UNFPA secretariat to participate as an observer in the JCHP meeting in January 1997. The meeting was later rescheduled for May 1997. In response to a request for their views and assistance, the UNICEF Executive Director and the WHO Director-General issued a joint response stating that they planned to submit to their respective Executive Boards the following proposed arrangements: the UNICEF/WHO JCHP would be known as the UNICEF/WHO/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health and its terms of reference would be amended accordingly, and the meeting of the Committee would be organized in such a way that matters of direct reference to UNFPA were clustered together so that UNFPA could organize the attendance of its Board members and staff most economically and effectively.

By a 16 January decision [E/1997/33 (dec. 97/1)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board endorsed the proposed arrangements and recommended that it become a member of the UNICEF/WHO/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health. It requested its President to bring the decision to the attention of the UNICEF and WHO Executive Boards. Its secretariat was asked to circulate, when available, the amended terms of reference of the Committee.

At its thirty-first session (Geneva, 19-20 May) [E/ICEF/1997/19], the UNICEF/WHO JCHP welcomed the expansion of its membership to include UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board members. JCHP noted that the UNICEF Executive Board was to consider the draft terms of reference of the new Committee, as approved by the WHO Executive Board. It was understood that the new Committee would continue to review the common concerns of WHO and UNICEF in addition to the newly added areas of concern to UNFPA. The new Committee would be called the WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health (CCH).

In addition to expanding its membership, JCHP discussed district health system development and the implementation of a joint strategy for water supply and sanitation (see PART THREE, Chapter VI). Regarding district health system development, JCHP considered a document [JCHP31/97.2] that analysed trends in the functioning of those systems in developing countries, reviewed country-level progress in the context of a changing world environment, and presented a two-year joint WHO-UNICEF work plan for strengthening district health systems. JCHP recommended that work should continue according to the proposed two-year work plan, bearing in mind the need to focus on practical activities that produced verifiable outcomes. Activities would include more detailed analysis of the current situation in countries, as well as further joint work by WHO and UNICEF to support selected districts in implementing innovative activities in such areas as malaria control and safe motherhood.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, by a decision of 19 September [E/1997/33 (dec. 97/28)], took note of the proposed draft terms of reference of CCH [DP/FPA/1997/17] and recommended that the Committee meet as soon as possible to discuss its functioning, including proposed amendments to its terms of reference, taking into account UNFPA core programme areas, as well as substantive issues common to the mandates of WHO, UNICEF and UNFPA. The Board called on the secretariats of the three organizations to facilitate the convening of such a meeting. It recommended that any agreed amendments to the proposed draft terms of reference be submitted for the Board's consideration. The Board's President was requested to convey the decision to the UNICEF and WHO Boards.

Protecting and promoting health

In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I) a report [E/CN.17/1997/2/Add.5] prepared by WHO as task manager for chapter 6 (protecting and promoting health) of Agenda 21, adopted at the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672].

Of the 74 countries that reported on progress in implementing chapter 6, just over one third had incorporated health into their reports. In some countries, health and environment-related plans had been prepared for inclusion in the national plans for sustainable development. In others, sectoral plans had been reviewed and modified to include health and environment-related concerns.

A result of UNCED was the large number of local Agenda 21 initiatives, especially in cities but also in villages and even islands, many of which featured health and health-related objectives.

The WHO Regional Office for the Americas was promoting methodologies for primary environmental health care, aiming at greater and more systematic community attention to environmental health risks. A parallel initiative was the Healthy Cities movement, which promoted health in cities by building on local resources and capacities, and linking such actions to the local Agenda 21.

In the area of health implications of climate change and depletion of the ozone layer, WMO, the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection issued a joint recommendation on the potential harm of exposure to sun and the need to adopt protective measures. They initiated an international research project to measure the harmful effects of excessive solar ultraviolet radiation on the eyes and skin.

In the area of protecting the food supply from environmental hazards, the FAO/WHO Codex Alimentarius Commission had developed, since 1962, food standards, guidelines and other recommendations, which included maximum limits on pesticides, contaminants and other environmental hazards.

Promising changes were seen in further commitments by ministers of health and the environment to attaining long-term environment and health policy objectives. The WHO Information for Decision-making in Environment and Health initiative focused on capacity-building, methodology development and improved information access. The incorporation of health concerns within the context of development projects was promoted by WHO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) Panel of Experts on Environmental Management of Vector Control. Guidelines were prepared outlining how development project planners should incorporate health in their impact assessments. In response to the need expressed in chapter 19 of Agenda 21 to produce guidelines for acceptable exposure to a greater number of chemicals, the Joint FAO/WHO Expert Committee on Food Additives and the FAO/WHO Joint Meeting on Pesticide Residues continued to develop guidelines for tolerable intake levels for contaminants and acceptable intake levels for pesticides, respectively. WHO updated guidelines on drinking-water quality and air quality in Europe. Environmental determinants of emerging diseases was another area where work had been done. Recognizing that environmental factors such as land use and water management often played an important role in disease epidemiology and risk, the UNDP/World Bank/WHO Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases had funded research on means for reducing the impact of development projects on the risk for tropical diseases, in particular malaria, Schistosomiasis, leishmaniasis and onchocerciasis.

In evaluating the progress achieved in health since UNCED, the report found a number of emerging priorities. It stated that the overriding goal for the future had to remain the incorporation of health in national sustainable development plans. At the present stage in the implementation of Agenda 21, it said, the Commission on Sustainable Development should reaffirm its commitment to incorporating health in national sustainable development plans, while giving priority to areas where it had the greatest influence. Three priorities were proposed: improving the understanding of the relationship between health and social, economic and environmental driving forces; incorporating health in environmental impact assessments; and strengthening the role of local government.

Food and agriculture

Food aid

World Food Programme

The Executive Board of the World Food Programme (WFP) reported to the Economic and Social Council in June [E/1997/34] on WFP activities. The report was divided into three parts: the annual report of the Board on its 1996 activities; a report on financial matters; and reform and revitalization measures in WFP. A July addendum [E/1997/34/Add.1] contained the Board's 1997 decisions and recommendations.

The Executive Director recommended for the Board's approval a pledging target for WFP's development activities for 1999-2000, covering both food and cash, of $1 billion. That was a reduction from the $1.3 billion target set for 1997-1998 due to the decreasing level of resources made available for development, particularly by major donors. The target amount was approved by the Board in May. The Executive Director stated that there were approximately 800 million chronically malnourished people in the world and that that level was likely to persist in the coming years unless action was taken. During the previous biennium (1995-1996), over 20 million people were reached through WFP development activities annually. A similar level was expected for the 1997-1998 biennium.

In the area of organizational reform, WFP had taken steps to place more senior and specialized staff in the field, delegate more authority to the field, expand training and improve communication within the organization.

The WFP Executive Board, at its first (Rome, 21-23 January) and second (Rome, 24-26 March) regular sessions and resumed second regular session (Rome, 26 and 29 May) of 1997, decided on organizational and programme issues and approved a number of projects. In January, it recommended to the Secretary-General and the FAO Director-General that Catherine Bertini be reappointed to serve a second term as WFP Executive Director. It agreed with measures to support national food assistance programmes and took note of several evaluation reports and country strategy outlines. In a May decision, the Board endorsed the general orientation of the Strategic and Financial Plan, 1998-2001, and approved the preparation of a consolidated budget of $2.6 billion, including programme support and administrative costs for 1998-1999. Calling for certain improvements in the budgetary performance report, the Board requested the Executive Director to present a paper on the use of interest income. By another decision, the Board set out its policy in regard to monetization.

During 1997 [WFP/EB.A/98/3-A], 52.9 million people received food assistance from WFP. In addition, WFP provided relief assistance to 29.1 million people. Of those, 21.4 million were reached through emergency operations and 7.7 million through protracted relief operations; 19.1 million were victims of man-made disasters (4.2 million refugees/returnees and 14.9 internally displaced persons) and 10 million were affected by natural disasters such as drought, floods and crop failure. WFP development assistance reached an additional 23.8 million people: 9.8 million through human resource development projects and 14 million through infrastructure, agricultural or rural development projects. Some 39 per cent of the beneficiaries were in Africa, 37 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 15 per cent in the Mediterranean, Middle East and Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) region and 9 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean.

There were 17 per cent more beneficiaries in 1997 than in 1996. The increase in beneficiaries was mainly in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), with an additional 3 million beneficiaries, and in Africa and Latin America as a consequence of the El Niño climatic phenomenon (see PART THREE, Chapter III). The increase in food deliveries to development projects also enabled the Programme to reach more people with development assistance.

In 1997, resources made available to WFP totalled $1,311 million; 44.4 per cent of those funds were contributed to emergencies, 26.4 per cent to development, 24.3 per cent to protracted relief operations, and 4.9 per cent to other activities. Expenditure amounted to $1,199 million, of which 69 per cent was spent for relief activities and 31 per cent for development activities. Operational expenditures in least developed countries represented 60 per cent of expenditures.

Total quantities of food shipped or purchased locally amounted to 2.7 million tons, an increase of almost 28 per cent as compared to 1996. The increase was due mainly to exceptionally large carry-overs from 1996: large food contributions confirmed late in 1996 were delivered in early 1997.

By the end of 1997, WFP had operational activities in 76 countries, 8 fewer than in 1996.

Sub-Saharan Africa. Sub-Saharan Africa continued to receive the major share of WFP assistance. Some 47 per cent of WFP's operational expenditures were spent in 35 countries of the region and reached 20.5 million beneficiaries. In countries where prospects for peace improved (Angola, Liberia and Rwanda), WFP embarked on an effort to consolidate recovery. Assistance was targeted to the resettlement of displaced people, and food-for-work microprojects aimed at the rehabilitation of infrastructure, environmental protection and income-generating activities.

The regional approach to the Great Lakes crisis (see PART ONE, Chapter II) had allowed WFP to meet in a flexible manner the rapidly changing food requirements of beneficiaries in the six countries covered by the operation: Burundi, the Congo, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. In addition to the 1.6 million beneficiaries assisted under the regional operation, WFP assisted 1.4 million drought victims in the United Republic of Tanzania, 200,000 drought victims in Uganda, 165,000 Sudanese refugees in Uganda and 257,000 people displaced by conflict in northern Uganda.

While the improved security conditions allowed rehabilitation activities to start in Liberia, the situation in Sierra Leone worsened during 1997 (see PART ONE, Chapter II), obliging WFP to revert to a strategy of emergency assistance. All WFP international staff were evacuated and food stores were looted. In the Sudan, where poor food harvests prevailed in 1996/97, WFP improved access to more reliable sources of drinking water for households and livestock through the construction and rehabilitation of rural water schemes, satisfied the immediate food needs of the most vulnerable people, contributed to the empowerment of women by providing skills training for income-generating activities, and improved the educational infrastructure of targeted villages.

Asia and the Pacific. The largest proportion of WFP contributions for food aid for development went to Asia and the Pacific; 28 per cent of WFP operational expenditures in 1997 were spent in the region, reaching 19.4 million people. As in the past, WFP supported major food-for-work programmes, enabling poor rural people to improve their household food security. The assistance included: support of disaster mitigation programmes and credit schemes for poor women (Bangladesh); strengthening of rural communities in local infrastructure (China, India and Nepal); rehabilitation programmes for war-affected people (Cambodia and Tajikistan); nutrition and health support to targeted vulnerable groups (India, Pakistan and Viet Nam); support to education (Bhutan, Nepal and Pakistan); and emphasis on women's activities (Afghanistan).

Natural disasters that occurred in the DPRK in 1995, 1996 and 1997 severely set back agriculture, compounding underlying structural problems in food production. In March 1997, the WFP Executive Director visited the DPRK to assess the situation. Conditions were critical; in particular, the health and nutritional status of children had become of grave concern. As a consequence, WFP increased its commitment to provide 100 grams of cereal per day as emergency rations to 2.6 million children aged seven and under, and supplementary food aid to 2.1 million others.

WFP also provided relief assistance to farmers who were victims of typhoons and floods in the Lao People's Democratic Republic during the planting and harvest period, and to 1.2 million Afghans affected by the escalating conflict in that country. Although on a smaller scale than in the past, assistance continued to be provided to refugees (Bhutanese refugees in Nepal, Afghan refugees in Pakistan, and refugees from Myanmar in Bangladesh) and to displaced persons in Sri Lanka.

Mediterranean, Middle East and CIS. With 8.3 million beneficiaries, the Mediterranean, Middle East and CIS region accounted for 20 per cent of WFP's operational expenditures. Development activities were focused on those with the greatest food aid need: West Bank and Gaza Strip and Yemen. In countries with higher levels of development (Egypt, Jordan, Morocco and the Syrian Arab Republic), WFP focused on strengthening local and national capacities. In the territory of the former Yugoslavia and CIS countries, WFP increased rehabilitation activities for vulnerable groups. As of 1 January, WFP took over the remaining distribution activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) for food aid in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In Iraq, as food distribution approached planned levels under Security Council resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475] (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), WFP gradually reduced its emergency assistance programme from 2,150,000 beneficiaries to just over 1 million people, distributing 79,000 tons of emergency food to malnourished children and other vulnerable people.

Latin America and the Caribbean. WFP development and relief activities in Latin American and the Caribbean reached 4.7 million people and represented 5 per cent of WFP operational expenditures in 1997. During the year, WFP supported government and local communities' efforts to increase income-generating activities for the poor. In economically more advanced countries, WFP assisted Governments to create new structures for food security. Human development activities focused on pre-school children, and expectant and nursing mothers. In 8 of the 12 countries of the region, WFP added micronutrient components to enhance the nutritional value of its programme. In Haiti, children received an enhanced nutritional product known as Akamil. A project in Bolivia was aimed at adding iron supplements to all wheat flour milled in the country. Further to a study on WFP projects in the region, the Executive Board agreed that WFP should continue focusing on indigenous people who lived in extreme poverty. Other development projects focused on watershed management.

Relief assistance helped the victims of hurricane Lili in Cuba, drought-affected persons in Haiti, and returnees and displaced persons in Guatemala. The opening of the Central America Cluster in Managua, Nicaragua, enabled WFP to launch a regional El Niño emergency rehabilitation project in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama to assist farmers suffering from crop shortfalls. Following floods that caused mud slides, erosion and crop destruction, WFP launched an emergency operation in Ecuador and sent missions to assess the problems in Bolivia, Paraguay and Peru.

Administrative and financial matters

Resources and financing

The authorized level of WFP's consolidated budget for 1996-1997 was $3.1 billion. From that amount, $2,861 million was projected for commodifies, transport, delivery and other direct support costs, and $228.9 million for the corresponding Programme Support and Administration component of the budget. That component was later reduced to $226.4 million to align it with operational levels.

During 1997, WFP's overall expenditure amounted to $1,199 million, which covered the costs of: commodities; ocean transport; landside transport, storage and handling; and direct and indirect support costs. Most of the expenditure ($700 million) was for food. By programme category, emergency operations accounted for $468 million, followed by development ($340 million), protracted relief operations ($235 million) and programme support ($119 million).

Total food commodities purchased by WFP for 1997 amounted to 1,366,000 tons—an increase of 40 per cent over 1996. Following very high prices for cereals in 1995/96, 1997 saw more normal prices. The cost of the food commodities purchased in 1997 amounted to $323 million, compared with $269 million in 1996.

Contributions in 1997 totalled $1,311 million, 44.4 per cent of which was given for emergency aid, 26.1 per cent for development activities and 24.3 per cent for protracted relief operations. In 1997, donors made fewer non-directed multilateral donations to development projects. Only 65 per cent of resources for development projects were multilateral in 1997, down from 75 per cent in 1996. WFP was concerned about the trend to direct multilateral funds to specific countries and/or projects, which made it difficult to target resources to the neediest projects.

Forty new emergency operations were approved in 1997 with a total requirement of 1.97 million tons of food, valued at $1,031 million, representing significant increases over 1996.

Revision of General Regulations

By an April note [E/1997/49], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the WFP Executive Board containing proposals on the revision of WFP General Regulations. The proposals were the result of the Open-ended Working Group formed by the Board in 1996 and were aimed at: bringing the General Regulations into line with the recent relevant UN and FAO decisions on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in economic, social and related fields; removing outdated or superseded provisions from the General Regulations; and updating them to reflect the decisions of the Board and the functions that WFP was called on to discharge. The Working Group held five sessions between November 1996 and March 1997.

While recognizing that the United Nations and FAO should have the final responsibility in all matters relating to the basic "constitution" of WFP and its role in the UN system, the Working Group stated that it should be possible to distinguish those matters in the General Regulations from points of detail and operational issues. The basic constitution and the WFP role could be set forth in the General Regulations and be amended following current procedures. Other matters, such as operational issues, modalities of cooperation within the UN system, financial planning, staffing and country programme planning, could be contained in rules that would be promulgated under and consistent with the General Regulations, with the Executive Board having the authority to adopt and amend those rules. The Board requested the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council to endorse the Working Group's proposals and recommend their adoption to the General Assembly and the FAO Conference.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/217 of 8 July, took note of the Secretary-General's note, endorsed the revisions and decided to transmit them to the General Assembly.

On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/449, endorsed the revisions.

Food security

Follow-up to 1996 World Food Summit

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/171 [YUN 1996, p. 1131], the Secretary-General transmitted a report [A/52/132-E/1997/57] of the FAO Director-General on the outcome of the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129]. The Summit adopted the Rome Declaration on World Food Security, which set forth seven commitments for achieving sustainable food security for all, and the Plan of Action, which spelt out the objectives and actions relevant for the implementation of those commitments.

After the Summit, a proposal for inter-agency coordination was made to the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) by FAO and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) with a view to ensuring maximum cost-effectiveness, country-level focus, flexibility and efficiency, avoiding institutional additionality at a time of shrinking budgets within and outside the UN system, respecting the FAO Conference and Assembly resolutions noting that the Summit should not call for new funding mechanisms or new institutions, and adhering to the principle that had guided the ACC subsidiary machinery. Consultations would be carried out through the establishment, within the resident coordinator system, of thematic groups with participation of national Governments and the partners, including NGOs, to support national action. The sharing of country-level experiences and the provision of headquarters support to the field-level groups would derive from networking arrangements among relevant organizations, with FAO assuming responsibility for operation of the network. Extensive use of electronic communication, with periodic on-line posting of progress reports, was expected to reduce the need for formal meetings and would permit involvement of non-UN partners.

At its first 1997 regular session (Geneva, 10-11 April) [E/1997/73], ACC endorsed the arrangements proposed for inter-agency follow-up to the World Food Summit. Under those arrangements, the resident coordinator system would constitute, at the country level, thematic groups covering food security and related issues and, at headquarters level, FAO and IFAD would assume responsibility for overall operation of a network of interested organizations to support those country-level groups and promote common approaches.

The Plan of Action called on Governments, in cooperation with others, to establish, through the Committee on World Food Security (CFS) set up by FAO, a timetable, procedures and standardized reporting formats for reporting on national, sub-regional and regional implementation of the Plan of Action. At its twenty-third session (Rome, 14-18 April), CFS considered institutional arrangements for such reporting, and was informed of action already taken by FAO and its partners. Those arrangements included, in addition to the ACC decision, a report on the outcome of a technical consultation convened by FAO on the Food Insecurity and Vulnerability Information and Mapping System (FIVIMS) with the participation of nine UN organizations, five national institutions and 15 experts from 11 countries. The Committee agreed on a provisional reporting procedure to be used in 1997, based on three sources: reports from national Governments, reports on UN agency follow-up and inter-agency coordination, and reports from other relevant international institutions. The reporting would follow the structure of the commitments and objectives of the Plan of Action, and would cover actions, the actors and, where available, results under each of the objectives. The reports, covering the period up to the end of 1997, were expected to reach the Secretariat by the end of January 1998. In 1998, CFS would consider a standard reporting format for successive periods.

The General Assembly, by decision 52/447 of 18 December, adopted on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/52/627], took note of the Secretary-General's note transmitting the report of the FAO Director-General.

Nutrition

ACC activities

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Nutrition held its twenty-fourth session from 17 to 21 March [ACC/1997/9] in Kathmandu, Nepal. It kept under review nine working groups on such questions as micronutrients, breastfeeding, nutrition of refugees and displaced people, and household food security. The Subcommittee discussed its programme and budget for 1998-1999, which comprised two components: the Subcommittee's core activities; and the programme activities to be carried out subject to funds being raised. The budget for the biennium totalled $976,000 compared with $900,000 in 1994-1995.

The Subcommittee's work in progress included the third Report on the World Nutrition Situation, which contained an update of the current nutrition situation and trends, micronutrients, and nutrition in refugees and displaced people. The Subcommittee considered revisions to The Nutrition Challenge in the Twenty-First Century: What Role for the United Nations? and agreed that it would retain a strong focus on problems of undernutrition. It decided to continue publication of its quarterly Report on the Nutrition Situation of Refugees and Internally Displaced People, which provided comparisons between different emergency situations and highlighted trends over time.

The United Nations University (UNU) continued its food and nutrition programme in 1997, as described in the report of the UNU Council to the General Assembly [A/53/31]. The UNU programme, undertaken in collaboration with WHO, UNICEF and FAO, addressed major nutrition concerns in developing countries. During 1997, the programme maintained four major global projects and numerous smaller ones. It provided 15 fellowships for advanced training and published quarterly issues of two journals, Food and Nutrition Bulletin and The Journal of Food Composition and Analysis. The programme's mission statement and goals were reassessed during the year as part of a planned transition from a UNU Centre programme coordinated out of Boston, United States, to a permanent Research and Training Coordinating Centre at Cornell University, Ithaca, United States. The programme would be designated the Centre for International Nutrition Action and Knowledge.

The project on an International Network of Food Data Systems (INFOODS) almost attained its goal of involving every country in its network of regional food composition databases, through which data on food composition could be exchanged electronically around the world.

Under the UNU Overcoming Critical Micronutrient Deficiencies project, 10 studies on iron supplementation in test groups made up of women and children in Bolivia, China, Guatemala, Indonesia, Malaysia and the United States were completed. The results indicated that haemoglobin levels were the same after two or three months with either daily or weekly supplementation unless there were complicating factors, such as malaria. That meant that the more cost-effective weekly supplementation should be used.

In March, in cooperation with a research institute and a government ministry of India, UNU organized the International Conference on Traditional Foods, with participants from Africa, Asia and Europe, the purpose of which was to promote scientific investigation into traditional foods that were consumed by the majority of people in developing countries.

The International Dietary Energy Consultative Group (IDECG) was sponsored by UNU in collaboration with the International Union of Nutritional Sciences. The report of a seminal 1996 workshop on the causes and consequences of intrauterine growth retardation, originally published as a supplement to The European Journal of Clinical Nutrition, would be reprinted as an IDECG monograph. The 1997 IDECG workshop on the lower and upper limits of adaptation to energy intake and its principal substrates, carbohydrates and lipids, was held in Rome in December.

Chapter XIV

International drug control

During 1997, the United Nations, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) of the Secretariat, continued to further strengthen international cooperation and increase efforts regarding the cultivation for illegal purposes, illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances, including synthetic drugs. It also pursued ways to control and prevent the diversion of precursors and essential chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic and psychotropic substances, in accordance with obligations of States under the UN drug control conventions.

UNDCP continued to focus on regional, sub-regional and national strategies for drug abuse control, and provided Member States with legal assistance, as well as assistance in training personnel and in establishing or strengthening national drug detection laboratories. It reported on illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, assessing worldwide trends in illicit traffic and transit, including changes in methods and routes used, and recommended ways to improve the capacity of States to deal with all aspects of the drug problem. The Programme's responsibilities also included monitoring the implementation of the 1990 Global Programme of Action by States and UN entities and carrying out activities under the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, which was also established in 1990.

INCB continued to oversee the implementation of the three major international drug control conventions, analysed the drug situation worldwide, drew attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, and made suggestions and recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels. The Board stressed the importance of demand reduction measures in addition to supply reduction, and drew Governments' attention to their responsibilities to start effective and comprehensive prevention programmes, encouraging them to seek the cooperation of the media, which had always been an influential force in public education. For the first time, it established assessments of annual licit domestic requirements for psychotropic substances for countries that had not submitted them.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the main UN policy-making body on drug control matters—acted as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly on drug control, to be convened in 1998, and devoted several days of its annual session to that task. It also addressed a number of substantive issues, primarily the reduction of both the demand for and the supply of narcotic drugs and illicit drug trafficking issues. The Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East adopted the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors. In July, the Economic and Social Council urged Member States to implement the Accord and to promote public campaigns to enhance public awareness of drug abuse and drug prevention programmes.

International and regional cooperation

Conventions

International efforts to control narcotic drugs in 1997 were governed by three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382], which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended in 1972 by a Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397] intended to strengthen the role of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB); the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]; and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690], which entered into force in 1990.

As at 31 December 1997, 147 States were parties to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. During the year, five States—Kazakhstan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Tajikistan and Viet Nam—became parties.

The Convention, as amended, established a dual drug control obligation for Governments: to ensure adequate availability of narcotic drugs, including opiates, for medical and scientific purposes, while at the same time preventing the illicit production of, trafficking in and the use of such drugs. To implement those responsibilities, Governments enacted laws and took administrative and enforcement measures. Each Government estimated annually the amount of narcotic drugs needed to satisfy all medical and scientific requirements in the country for the coming year. INCB evaluated, confirmed and published the amount of narcotic drugs for each Government. Each Government could then manufacture or import narcotic drugs within that amount and distribute them to medical facilities for the treatment of patients. In case of unforeseen increases in medical demand, Governments could submit supplementary estimates to the Board at any time; requests for supplementary estimates were acted on expeditiously.

To prevent and detect diversions of narcotic drugs from licit to illicit channels, INCB monitored the cultivation, manufacture, import, export and consumption of such drugs throughout the world. If the treaty requirements for drug control were to be implemented consistently, the potential for diverting narcotic drugs to illicit channels would be reduced to a minimum without interfering with their availability for treatment of patients who needed them. Given the large number of national and international transactions, the number of incidents involving diversion of narcotic drugs was considered small.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances stood at 153 as at 31 December 1997. Six States became parties during the year: Austria, Kazakhstan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Oman, Tajikistan and Viet Nam.

As at 31 December 1997, 144 States and the European Union (EU) were parties to the 1988 Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances. Six States—Austria, Benin, Iceland, Kazakhstan, Singapore and Viet Nam—became parties during the year.

By a March resolution [E/1997/28/Rev.1 (res. 2(XL))], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs encouraged Governments to adopt and implement comprehensive and effective legislation and adequate procedures for criminal investigation and prosecution, and to target participants in organized drug-trafficking groups, with a view to: bringing to justice the heads and the members of criminal organizations involved in illicit drug-related criminal activities; permitting the seizure and confiscation of criminal instrumentalities and proceeds; providing for adequate penalties to ensure that major producers and traffickers of illicit drugs received punishment commensurate with their criminal activities; promoting effective international cooperation in information exchange, extradition and mutual legal assistance; and enhancing the capabilities of law enforcement and judicial authorities with regard to the investigation and prosecution of drug-trafficking and money-laundering organizations. The Commission also requested the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) to continue to assist Member States to develop and implement domestic legislation that would achieve the above objectives, in accordance with article 2 of the 1988 Convention. The Executive Director of UNDCP was asked to report to the Commission in 1998 on progress achieved by the meetings of international expert groups on model legislation organized by the Programme, including any recommendations designed to ensure compliance with the international drug control treaties. The Commission requested the General Assembly, at its special session on drug control to be held in 1998, to consider ways to promote the adoption of legislation designed to enhance judicial and law enforcement cooperation in conformity with the 1988 Convention. It further requested the Secretary-General to transmit the resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

In its report covering 1997 [E/INCB/1997/1], INCB welcomed the fact that a growing number of Governments had taken steps to establish mechanisms to implement the provisions of the 1988 Convention and to accede to it. It noted, however, that among the States that had not become parties were some major manufacturing, exporting and importing countries. The Board requested all States that had not done so to accede to the Convention as soon as possible. It also expressed the hope that countries that had not done so would soon accede to the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs as amended and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances.

To encourage adherence to and implementation of the international drug control treaties, UNDCP continued to provide States with legal assistance during 1997.

International Narcotics Control Board

The International Narcotics Control Board met twice in 1997, for its sixty-second (5-16 May) and sixty-third (3-20 November) sessions. Its activities, observations and recommendations were reflected in its report for 1997 [E/INCB/1997/1].

In carrying out its responsibilities under the international conventions, the 13-member Board maintained a continuous dialogue with Governments. The information provided by Governments enabled the Board to study the licit movement of narcotic drugs, thereby ensuring that the provisions of the drug conventions were strictly observed. That information, published annually by the Board, was used by Governments to verify whether or not they were adequately applying the conventions' provisions. In its annual report, the Board drew attention to gaps and weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance, and made suggestions and recommendations for improvements at both the national and international levels.

The Board also collaborated with UNDCP, of which its secretariat formed a part, and with other international bodies concerned with drug control, including the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and UN specialized agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO). It also cooperated with bodies outside the UN system, such as the International Criminal Police Organization and the World Customs Organization.

In 1997, the Board encouraged Governments to seek the cooperation of the media and work with them as partners in fighting drug abuse and illicit trafficking; Governments were also called on to use new forms of communication, particularly the Internet, to disseminate objective information about drug abuse. Noting the importance of demand reduction measures, the Board stressed that prevention programmes, to be effective, had to start early, be comprehensive and tailor their messages to the market; they should also be sustained and maintain their credibility by not exaggerating or understating the consequences of drug abuse. The Board drew Governments' attention to their responsibility to counteract and limit the promotion of messages favouring the use of licit as well as illicit drugs, because the promotion of licit drug consumption also had ramifications concerning people's attitudes towards illicit consumption.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/30 [YUN 1996, p. 1159], the Board, for the first time, established assessments of annual licit domestic requirements for psychotropic substances for countries that had not submitted them. All Governments concerned were invited to review the assessments established for their countries, to provide the Board with any comments on the appropriateness of the assessments and to establish their own assessments as soon as possible.

With regard to preventing the diversion of drugs and chemicals into illicit channels, the Board noted that no attempts to divert narcotic drugs from manufacture and international trade had come to its attention in 1997, although diversion from some inadequately functioning domestic distribution channels continued to occur. During the year, the Board, together with the authorities of several exporting countries, carried out inquiries into the legitimacy of more than 80 commercial orders for psychotropic substances, thereby preventing their diversion. The Board requested all Governments to investigate the activities of companies involved in attempted diversion in order to identify and prosecute the individuals who planned and facilitated such attempts. As a result of closer and increasing cooperation among Governments and with the Board, it was noted that large quantities of precursors were prevented from being diverted from licit manufacture and trade to clandestine drug manufacture.

In July, the Board convened a meeting in Vienna on information exchange systems for precursor control, in order to enhance government action required under the 1988 Convention to prevent the diversion of precursors. Among the results of the meeting was an agreed set of procedures for sharing information, based on previous recommendations of the Board, that might be applied voluntarily by Governments. The approach of institutionalizing standard procedures to facilitate the exchange of information was endorsed by Governments at the first informal open-ended inter-sessional meeting, held in Vienna in July by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly to be held in 1998.

The Board again stated that the scheduling procedure under the 1971 Convention was too lengthy and that Governments had been hesitant to include new substances in the schedules. Unscrupulous drug producers and traffickers had often exploited the situation by offering drugs similar to those under international control, thereby escaping prosecution. To deal with the problem, some Governments had established national scheduling mechanisms for analogues of substances under international control and for other new synthetic drugs. Concerned that that development could lead to the establishment of a variety of different national control systems, a situation exploitable by drug traffickers, the Board welcomed section I of Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/41 (see below), in which the Council invited Governments to co-

On 21 July, the Council, by decision 1997/236, took note of the report of INCB for 1996 [Sales No. E.97.XI.3].

In accordance with decision 1997/208 of 7 February, in which the Economic and Social Council decided that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, acting as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly, to be held in 1998, should devote two days of its fortieth session to preparing for the special session, the Commission held its first meetings for that purpose in Vienna on 26 and 27 March [E/1997/48]. The General Assembly, in resolution 51/64 [YUN 1996, p. 1139], had decided to convene a special session to consider the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and propose new strategies, methods, practical activities and specific measures to strengthen international cooperation in addressing the problem of illicit drugs.

At its two-day meeting, the Commission considered a number of procedural matters on the basis of a report of the UNDCP Executive Director [E/CN.7/1997/PC.2]. It recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption two draft decisions: one on the proposed dates of the special session and the other on the provisional agenda for the Commission's second session as preparatory body (see below). The Commission decided to hold informal open-ended inter-session meetings from 7 to 9 July, from 7 to 9 October and on 5 December 1997.

The Commission also considered a report of the Executive Director on substantive issues to be considered at the special session [E/CN.7/1997/PC.3]. Those issues were: a review of progress in implementing the Global Programme of Action adopted at the Assembly's seventeenth special session in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 855]; adherence to and implementation of international drug control treaties; reduction of illicit demand; eradication of illicit crops and alternative development; and strengthened international cooperation.

As decided in March (see above), the Commission, acting as the preparatory body, held three informal open-ended inter-session meetings in 1997. The first meeting (Vienna, 7-9 July) [E/CN.7/1997/PC.5] discussed measures to counter illicit manufacture of, trafficking in and abuse of stimulants and measures to enhance the control and monitoring of precursors frequently used in the manufacture of illicit drugs. The second (Vienna, 7-9 October) [E/CN.7/1997/PC.7] discussed the promotion of judicial cooperation and countering money-laundering, and the third (Vienna, 3-5 December) [E/CN.7/1997/PC.9] considered the eradication of illicit narcotic crops and promotion of alternative development programmes and other matters.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/238, recommended to the General Assembly that the special session be held from 8 to 10 June 1998. By decision 1997/239 of 21 July, the Council took note of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as the preparatory body on its first session [E/1997/48] and approved the provisional agenda for the second session. Also on 21 July, by decision 1997/234, the Council decided that at its forty-first (1998) session the Commission should devote at least five days to the preparations for the special session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/636], adopted resolution 52/92 without vote [agenda item 104].

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/148 of 21 December 1995 and 51/64 of 12 December 1996,

Gravely concerned that, despite continued increased efforts by States and relevant international organizations, there is a global expansion of illicit demand for, production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including synthetic and designer drugs, which threatens the health, safety and well-being of millions of persons, in particular young people, in all countries, as well as the political and socio-economic systems and the stability, national security and sovereignty of an increasing number of States,

Deeply alarmed by the growing and spreading violence and economic power of criminal organizations and terrorist groups engaged in drug trafficking activities and other criminal activities, such as money laundering and illicit traffic of arms and precursors and essential chemicals, and by the increasing transnational links between them, and recognizing that enhanced international cooperation and effective strategies are essential to achieve results against all forms of transnational criminal activities,

Convinced of the growing need for closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating drug-related crimes, such as terrorism, illicit arms trade and money laundering, and bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Fully aware that States, the relevant organizations of the United Nations system and multilateral development banks need to accord a higher priority and political determination to dealing with this scourge, which undermines development, economic and political stability and democratic institutions, and the combat against which entails increasing economic costs for Governments and the irreparable loss of human lives,

Reaffirming and stressing the need for increased efforts to implement the comprehensive framework for international cooperation in drug control provided by the existing drug control conventions, the Declaration of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, which was devoted to the question of international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic and psychotropic substances, the declaration adopted by the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994, and other relevant international standards,

Underlining the importance of a balanced approach in efforts undertaken by Member States in the fight against illicit demand, production and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Recognizing the efforts of countries that produce narcotic drugs for scientific, medicinal and therapeutic uses to prevent the diversion of such substances to illicit markets and to maintain production at a level consistent with licit demand in line with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961,

Convinced that civil society, including non-governmental organizations, can make an effective contribution to addressing the illicit drug problem,

Recognizing that the use of the Internet poses new opportunities and challenges to international cooperation in combating drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking,

Acknowledging that there are links, under certain circumstances, between poverty and the increase in the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that the promotion of the economic development of countries affected by the illicit drug trade requires appropriate measures, including strengthened international cooperation in support of alternative and sustainable development activities in the affected areas of those countries, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production,

Stressing that respect for human rights is and must be an essential component of measures taken to address the drug problem,

Emphasizing the need for a continued analysis of transit routes used by drug traffickers, which are constantly changing and expanding to include a growing number of countries and regions in all parts of the world,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues, the leadership role and commendable work of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted international action and the important role of the International Narcotics Control Board as an independent monitoring authority, as set out in the international drug control treaties,

Recalling the important and central role of relevant United Nations bodies in evaluating the implementation by States parties of their obligations under the United Nations drug control treaties, as set out in those treaties,

Also recalling that in resolution 51/64, section IV, it decided to convene, for three days in June 1998, a special session of the General Assembly to consider the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities and to propose strategies, methods, practical activities and specific measures to strengthen international cooperation in addressing the problem of illicit drugs, and convinced that the special session will make a significant contribution to the effectiveness of the United Nations and its Member States in the fight against this global problem,

I

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

1. Reaffirms that the fight against drug abuse and illicit trafficking must be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, particularly respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the non-use of force or the threat of force in international relations;

2. Calls upon all States to intensify their actions to promote effective cooperation in the efforts to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving that end, on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect;

II

International action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking

1. Renews its commitment to further strengthening international cooperation and substantially increasing efforts against the cultivation for illegal purposes, illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotics and psychotropic substances, including synthetic drugs, and to controlling and preventing the diversion of precursors and essential chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic and psychotropic substances, in accordance with obligations of States under the United Nations drug control conventions, based on the principle of shared responsibility and taking into account experience gained;

2. Urges all States to ratify or accede to and implement all the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt adequate national laws and regulations, to strengthen national judicial systems and to carry out effective drug control activities in cooperation with other States in accordance with those international instruments;

4. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme:

(a) To continue to support the focus on regional, subregional and national strategies for drug abuse control, in particular the master-plan approach, and to complement those strategies with effective interregional strategies;

(b) To undertake additional measures to strengthen the dialogue and cooperation with multilateral development banks so that they may undertake lending and programming activities related to drug control in interested and affected countries and to keep the Commission on Narcotic Drugs informed on further progress made in this area;

(c) To continue to provide legal assistance to Member States that request it in adjusting their national laws, policies and infrastructures to implement the international drug control conventions, as well as assistance in training personnel responsible for applying the new laws;

(d) To continue providing assistance to Member States requesting support in establishing or strengthening national drug detection laboratories;

(e) To continue to include in its report on illicit traffic in drugs an assessment of worldwide trends in illicit traffic and transit in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including methods and routes used, and to recommend ways and means for improving the capacity of States along those routes to deal with all aspects of the drug problem;

5. Reaffirms the danger and threat posed to civil society by illicit drug trafficking and its links to terrorism, transnational crime, money laundering and the illicit arms trade, and encourages Governments to deal with this threat and to cooperate to prevent the channelling of funds to and between those engaged in such activities;

6. Calls upon States to adopt effective measures to stem the illicit trade in small arms, which, as a result of its close link to the illicit drug trade, is generating extremely high levels of crime and violence within the societies of some States, threatening the national security and economies of those States;

7. Acknowledges that there are links between the illicit production of, demand for and traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the economic and social conditions in the affected countries and that there are differences and diversity in the problems of each country;

8. Calls upon the international community to provide increased economic and technical support to Governments that request it for programmes of alternative and sustainable development, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production and which take fully into account the cultural traditions of peoples;

9. Recalls the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1995, and stresses the importance of participation of youth organizations and youth in decision-making processes, in particular in relation to demand reduction programmes for illicit drugs;

10. Stresses the need for effective government action to prevent the diversion to illicit markets of precursors and essential chemicals, materials and equipment used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

11. Commends the valuable work, the reports and recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board in monitoring the production and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances so as to limit their use to medical and scientific purposes, and urges increased efforts to implement its mandate under article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 concerning the monitoring of the movement of precursors and essential chemicals;

12. Notes that the International Narcotics Control Board needs sufficient resources to carry out its mandate, including under article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, and therefore urges Member States to commit themselves in a common effort to assign adequate and sufficient budgetary resources to the Board, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/20 of 23 July 1996;

13. Calls upon States to increase efforts, with international cooperation, to reduce and eliminate illegal crops from which narcotics are obtained, as well as to prevent and reduce the demand for and the consumption of illicit drugs, in accordance with their obligations under the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

14. Underlines the need for Governments, with international cooperation, to increase and implement alternative development programmes with the objective of reducing and eliminating the production of illicit drugs, taking into account the economic, social, cultural, political and environmental aspects of the area concerned;

15. Emphasizes the need to maintain the capacity of the International Narcotics Control Board, including through the provision of appropriate means by the Secretary-General and adequate technical support by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

16. Reaffirms the importance of achieving the objectives of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, 1991-2000, under the theme "A global response to a global challenge", by Member States, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations system;

17. Urges the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to complete its work on the draft declaration on the guiding principles of demand reduction being developed by the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in consultation with Member States, and to submit it for adoption by the General Assembly at its special session in 1998, and calls upon Member States to continue to cooperate with the Programme by providing relevant information and their views on the draft declaration with due regard to the linkages between demand and supply reduction activities;

18. Also urges the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, acting as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly, to complete its work concerning money laundering, judicial cooperation, precursors, stimulants, alternative development and on a political commitment, in preparation for the special session;

19. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/41 of 21 July 1997 on the implementation of comprehensive measures to counter the illicit manufacture, trafficking and abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors, and calls upon Member States to strengthen their efforts to control precursors and their substitutes in cooperation with the International Narcotics Control Board and to implement as a high priority the measures contained in that resolution;

20. Takes note of the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and their Precursors, and welcomes the contribution of the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East on international action to combat drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking;

III

Global Programme of Action

1. Reaffirms the importance of the Global Programme of Action as a comprehensive framework for national, regional and international action to combat illicit production of, demand for and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances;

2. Calls upon States to implement the mandates and recommendations of the Global Programme of Action, with a view to translating it into practical action for drug abuse control at the national, regional and international levels;

3. Urges all Governments and competent regional organizations to develop a balanced approach within the framework of comprehensive demand reduction activities, giving adequate priority to prevention, treatment, research, social reintegration and training, in the context of national strategic plans to combat drug abuse, which should include raising public awareness concerning the detrimental effects of drug abuse;

4. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, the international financial institutions and other concerned intergovernmental organizations and all actors of civil society, notably non-governmental organizations, community-based organizations, sports associations, the media and the private sector, to cooperate more closely with and to assist States in their efforts to promote and implement the Global Programme of Action;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to facilitate reporting by Governments on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action, and encourages them to pursue those efforts so as to increase the number of Governments that report on a regular basis;

6. Notes the efforts being made by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and other United Nations bodies to obtain reliable data on drug abuse and illicit trafficking, including the development of the International Drug Abuse Assessment System, encourages the Programme, in cooperation with other United Nations bodies, to take further steps to facilitate the efficient collection of data so as to avoid duplication of effort, and also encourages the increased and timely provision of updated information by Member States;

7. Reaffirms the importance of strengthening the role of the International Narcotics Control Board and development of a unified information system for the collection and analysis of data concerning the nature, patterns and trends of the global problem of drug abuse, as called for by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1996/20 of 23 July 1996;

8. Invites the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to continue providing assistance to Member States that request it in their efforts to establish appropriate mechanisms to collect and analyse data and to seek voluntary resources for this purpose;

9. Underlines the importance of precise and reliable information on the impact of the drug problem on the world economy;

10. Calls upon Member States to continue to make efforts to provide systematic, precise and updated information to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme on the various ways in which the drug problem affects their economies;

IV

Special session of the General Assembly devoted to the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities;

2. Decides that the special session will be held, as recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1997/238 of 21 July 1997, from 8 to 10 June 1998, and calls upon Member States to participate at a high political level;

3. Stresses that the special session should be devoted to assessing the existing situation within the framework of a comprehensive and balanced approach that includes all aspects of the problem, with a view to strengthening international cooperation to address the problem of illicit drugs within the framework of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 and other relevant conventions and international instruments;

4. Reaffirms that, at its special session, it will address the issues on the basis of the principle of shared responsibility and with full respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law, in particular respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States;

5. Invites the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to continue to take all necessary measures to ensure adequate preparation of the special session;

6. Takes note of Economic and Social Council decision 1997/234, of 21 July 1997, in which the Council decided that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs should devote at least five days at its forty-first session to the preparation of the special session;

7. Notes with appreciation the initiatives of Member States aimed at providing inputs to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in its capacity as the preparatory body for the special session, including the convening of groups of high-level governmental experts;

8. Recognizes the important role played by non-governmental organizations in the implementation of the Global Programme of Action contained in the annex to its resolution S-17/2 of 23 February 1990, and recognizes the need for their active involvement in preparations for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements for their substantive contribution and active involvement during the special session, and, in that context, invites the President of the General Assembly to propose to Member States, in consultation with them, appropriate modalities for the effective involvement of non-governmental organizations in the special session;

9. Decides to invite States members of the specialized agencies of the United Nations that are not members of the United Nations to participate in the work of the special session in the capacity of observers;

10. Reaffirms the objectives of the special session contained in section IV, paragraphs 11 and 12, of resolution 51/64, which provide the basis for the draft agenda of the special session;

11. Welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1997/239 of 21 July 1997 on the preparations for the special session;

12. Invites the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in its capacity as the preparatory body, to report to the General Assembly at its special session on the preparations for the special session;

13. Stresses the importance of taking into account a gender perspective in preparing the reports of the special session;

14. Urges organs, organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including multilateral development banks, to contribute fully to the preparations for the special session, in particular by submitting, as soon as possible, to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, acting as the preparatory body for the special session, through the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, concrete recommendations on the issues to be addressed by the special session;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary support to ensure the success of the special session and to give particular attention to the need for raising global awareness of the holding of the special session and of its importance;

V

Implementation of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control: action by organizations of the United Nations system

1. Supports the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control as a vital tool for the coordination and enhancement of drug abuse control activities within the United Nations system;

2. Reaffirms the role of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in coordinating and providing effective leadership for all United Nations drug control activities so as to increase cost-effectiveness and ensure coherence of action within the Programme as well as coordination, complementarity and non-duplication of such activities throughout the United Nations system;

3. Urges the United Nations organizations associated with the System-wide Action Plan to collaborate further with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to integrate the drug control dimension and assistance into their programming and planning processes in order to ensure that the drug problem is being addressed in all its aspects in relevant programmes;

4. Takes note of the recent action taken by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to ensure the increased commitment by the specialized agencies, programmes and funds, as well as international financial institutions, to include the drug control dimension in their programmes of work;

5. Invites Member States to engage United Nations agencies and multilateral development banks in addressing the drug problem in all its aspects and to promote due consideration by governing bodies of requests for assistance for drug control programmes at the national level;

VI

United Nations International Drug Control Programme

1. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to implement its mandate within the framework of the international drug control treaties, the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Global Programme of Action and relevant consensus documents;

2. Also welcomes the publication of the World Drug Report prepared by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

3. Notes with concern the decline of available resources for the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

4. Welcomes Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 6(XL) of 25 March 1997 concerning the revised budget for the biennium 1996-1997 and outline for the biennium 1998-1999 for the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the programme support cost, and urges all Governments to provide the fullest possible financial and political support to the Programme by widening its donor base and increasing voluntary contributions, in particular general-purpose contributions, to enable it to continue, expand and strengthen its operational and technical cooperation activities;

5. Invites Governments and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to consider ways and means of improving the coordination of United Nations activities related to drug control;

6. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to comply with the approved format and methodology of the programme budget of the Fund and to improve the budget presentation for the biennium 1996-1997 and the proposed outline for the biennium for 1998-1999, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the General Assembly and the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and encourages the Executive Director to continue his efforts to improve the presentation of the budget;

7. Stresses the importance of the meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies, and encourages them to consider ways to improve their functioning and to strengthen their impact so as to enhance cooperation in the fight against drugs at the regional level;

8. Also stresses the need to strengthen United Nations activities in the field of narcotic drugs, and takes note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/37 of 21 July 1997 entitled "Review of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme: strengthening the United Nations machinery for international drug control within the scope of the existing international drug control treaties and in accordance with the basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations";

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the promotion of integrated reporting:

(a) To include in his annual report on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action recommendations on ways and means to improve implementation and provision of information by Member States;

(b) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session an updated report on the status of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988.

World drug situation

In its 1997 report [E/INCB/1997/1], the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) presented a regional analysis of world drug abuse trends and current control efforts, so that Governments would be kept aware of existing and potential situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug control treaties.

Africa

Drug abuse was on the increase in Africa, particularly in big cities, and cannabis, which continued to be the main drug of abuse, grew wild and was illicitly cultivated, said INCB. Despite eradication efforts and significant seizures in some countries, widespread cannabis abuse was reported in every subregion in Africa, which remained a major supplier of cannabis and cannabis resin to domestic illicit markets, to Europe and, more recently, to North America. African seaports and airports were frequently used by illicit traffickers for the trans-shipment of cannabis resin from Asia to Europe or North America, and African countries had also become major transit centres for cocaine from South America destined for Europe, and for heroin from Asia to Europe and North America.

South Africa was a large producer of cannabis and Egypt reported the eradication of more than 230 million plants in 1996. Large amounts of cannabis were produced in western Africa for illicit trafficking; in Senegal, it was suspected that new hybrid cannabis varieties had been introduced that had a higher tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) content than the local varieties. Morocco remained one of the world's largest producers of cannabis resin; in 1996, 38.5 tonnes of cannabis and 65 tonnes of cannabis resin, destined for black markets in Europe, were seized.

Cocaine abuse was on the increase mainly in some big cities in western Africa having direct flight connections with cities in Brazil. The manufacture of "crack" (cocaine base) from South American cocaine in clandestine laboratories was reported in Senegal and South Africa. "Crack" was reportedly becoming available in an increasing number of western African countries.

As to psychotropic substances, there were reports of the illicit traffic in and abuse of stimulants (ephedrine, pemoline, amphetamine and amphetamine derivatives) from several countries in the region, mainly in western Africa. The import of large amounts of ephedrine into some African States continued; in 1996, over 4 tonnes were imported into Sierra Leone from one Asian country alone and in 1997 orders of ephedrine totalling over 5.6 tonnes were placed from Sierra Leone, with the consent of the national authorities. The Board urged African Governments to evaluate their real medical needs for ephedrine and invited the World Health Organization (WHO) to assist in fulfilling that task. Significant seizure of benzodiazepines, mainly diazepam, seemed to indicate the abuse of sedatives in Africa. The Board again appealed to Governments to study and assess the drug abuse situation in their countries, with the assistance of international organizations.

INCB carried out missions to three African countries in 1997—Angola, Mozambique and Nigeria. Angola was a major centre for the trans-shipment of cocaine, with flights connecting Luanda with Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and Lisbon, Portugal, frequently being used to transport illicit drugs. African drug trafficking organizations had taken advantage of the civil war to expand their operations in Angola. The Board encouraged the Government to strengthen customs controls at its airports and seaports, as well as the control of its border with the former Zaire. The abuse of cocaine was on the rise in Angola as a consequence of the illicit transit traffic in that drug. The Board encouraged the Government to assess the drug abuse situation and develop prevention programmes.

The Board reported that Mozambique had adopted a new law on the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in 1997. It invited the Government to accede to the three international drug control treaties, which had been approved by the Mozambican parliament. Noting the lack of controls along the long coast of Mozambique, the Board stated that the main seaports were used by illicit traffickers as transit points for transporting drugs, mainly destined for South Africa. It welcomed the Government's decision to establish a system for the control of all seaports and the railway network, which constituted an important link to neighbouring landlocked countries.

The Board appreciated the strengthening of the import authorization system for psychotropic substances in Nigeria and the increased cooperation with authorities of exporting countries and with INCB. Those developments had contributed to preventing the diversion of significant amounts of psychotropic substances into illicit channels. However, because of the tightened controls, traffickers were using neighbouring countries as transit points to smuggle such substances into Nigeria. During the first eight months of 1997, significant amounts of diverted psychotropic substances were seized by the Nigerian authorities. The Board recommended that the Government further strengthen the capacity and capabilities of its law enforcement services and continue its cooperation with the Governments of neighbouring countries. The Board noted the continuation of Nigeria's cannabis eradication campaign; between January 1994 and August 1997, over 60 tonnes of cannabis had been destroyed.

Americas

Central America and the Caribbean

With the major drug trafficking routes from South America to North America and Europe passing through the Caribbean, the abuse of cocaine (in some countries in the form of "crack") was spreading quickly in Central America and the Caribbean.

Cannabis, the most widely abused drug, continued to be cultivated domestically, although eradication campaigns were regularly carried out in most countries in the Caribbean. Most of the cannabis smuggled out of the Caribbean originated in Jamaica and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines. Illicit cannabis cultivation in Nicaragua was concentrated in the northern part of the country; it supplied the illicit demand within the country and, to some extent, in other Central American countries. The only areas in Central America from which cannabis was smuggled out of the region were in the Peten rain forest, shared by Belize and Guatemala.

Although large-scale trafficking in cocaine continued, the determination of Central American countries, together with Mexico, to cooperate was translated into practice, and coordinated action led to major seizures. Illicit coca bush cultivation was reported only in Panama, where 200 hectares were eradicated. As a consequence of the illicit transit traffic, the abuse of "crack" increased in Central America; its easy availability and low prices contributed to the spread of its abuse in the region.

Illicit poppy cultivation seemed to have been significantly reduced in Guatemala, due to regular eradication efforts. Only small amounts of heroin were seized, but seizures continued to rise and the Board was concerned that the increasing transit traffic in heroin could lead to the spread of heroin abuse, as was the case with cocaine.

Inadequate prescribing practices and insufficient controls were contributing to the spread of the abuse of pharmaceutical preparations containing psychotropic substances; in large urban centres in Central America, such as Panama City, methamphetamine abuse was on the increase. The Board reiterated its appeal to Governments in the region to strengthen supervision and control over the prescribing, distribution and dispensing of psychotropic substances.

Some States in the region had introduced measures against money-laundering: in Panama such measures had led to the first trials and sentences; in El Salvador, progress was made towards developing legislation against money-laundering; and in Antigua and Barbuda, a country heavily affected by money-laundering operations, a bill to prevent it was adopted in December 1996. Although legislative measures against money-laundering were introduced in several Caribbean countries, non-bank financial institutions were increasingly being used for money-laundering purposes.

With regard to regional cooperation, the Board noted that a declaration was signed in San Jose, Costa Rica, in May by the Presidents of the seven Central American States, together with the Dominican Republic and the United States, committing those States to developing an action plan to combat common drug- and crime-related problems. Also in May, 12 Caribbean States, together with Belize, Guyana, Suriname and the United States, signed the Bridgetown (Barbados) declaration of principles, which included provisions for the promotion of demand reduction programmes, for action against corruption and money-laundering and for the improvement of criminal justice systems.

North America

In North America, comprehensive national drug control programmes covering many areas related to drug control were being systematically carried out, with many law enforcement actions conducted jointly among the three States of the region (Canada, Mexico, United States). The number of demand reduction programmes was increasing, the funding of youth-oriented drug prevention programmes was becoming a priority issue, and efforts were being made in all three countries to improve data collection. Cooperation was particularly strong between law enforcement services. According to INCB, the level of drug abuse was different in each of the three countries: the prevalence of illicit drug abuse was highest in the United States (6 per cent) and lowest in Mexico (0.45 per cent). The abuse of cannabis, cocaine, heroin and lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) among youth appeared to be increasing slightly in Canada and the United States.

Cannabis remained the most widely abused drug in North America. In the United States, a significant proportion of the illicit cannabis supply was produced locally, cultivated mainly indoors using hydroponics. Large amounts of cannabis were smuggled into the United States, mostly out of Mexico, where 22,760 hectares were destroyed and more than 1,000 tonnes were seized in 1996.

Despite Mexico's introduction of a comprehensive strategy to combat illicit drug trafficking and related criminal activities, and notwithstanding the many significant seizures and the arrest of more than 11,000 persons from September 1996 to August 1997, cocaine and heroin continued to be smuggled on a large scale through the territory of Mexico. Nearly 24 tonnes of cocaine were seized by the Mexican authorities in 1996. Mexico was on one of the main routes used to smuggle cocaine out of South America and into the United States, where 123 tonnes of that drug were seized in 1996, compared with 109 tonnes in 1995. In the United States, there were no major changes in the level of cocaine abuse in 1996; however, among teenagers the perception of cocaine as risky was diminishing, with the consequent danger of a future increase in cocaine abuse among youth.

tivation sites on its territory, destroying about 14,600 hectares in 1996. In the same year, Mexican law enforcement services seized 363 kilograms of heroin, an increase of almost 90 per cent over 1995. The share of South-East Asian heroin on the black market in the United States, which dominated that market in the late 1980s and early 1990s, was declining, and most of the heroin seized in the United States seemed to be of Colombian origin. The average purity of the heroin sold on the street significantly increased in the United States, from 7 per cent 10 years earlier to 36 per cent in 1996. The share of heroin of high purity, which could be snorted, sniffed or smoked more easily than adulterated heroin, was increasing. The easy availability of such heroin seemed to have contributed to the significant increase in the number of new heroin abusers in the United States, mainly teenagers and young adults.

Methamphetamine continued to be illicitly manufactured in Mexico and the United States and abused in Canada and the United States, where the abuse of it seemed to be growing despite the introduction of a comprehensive law enforcement, treatment and prevention strategy. In the United States, significant amounts of methamphetamine were seized in 1996 along the border with Mexico and elsewhere. The Board reiterated its concern in respect of the dangers of the overprescribing and widespread use of methylphenidate (used for the treatment of attention deficit disorder) in the United States; the abuse of that substance appeared to be on the rise. The Board noted that stimulants were widely used as appetite suppressants (anorectics) in the United States and welcomed the withdrawal from that market of fenfluramine and dexfenfluramine, anorectics not under international control, and it hoped that that action would be followed by the revision of the large-scale prescribing of stimulants for weight control. Some increase in the abuse of hallucinogens, mainly LSD, was reported in Canada and the United States. Several LSD laboratories were dismantled and the equivalent of about 370,000 doses of LSD was seized in the United States in 1996. The abuse of sedatives continued in Canada and the United States; the abuse of flunitrazepam, which was not marketed domestically but smuggled into the United States from other countries in the Americas, was of great concern to the Government.

South America

Joint transborder operations led to the seizure of substantial amounts of drugs and to the dismantling of trafficking organizations in South America, where several States concluded a number of bilateral and multilateral mutual assistance agreements. Despite the geographical obstacles in the region, INCB observed that a more comprehensive mechanism for the exchange of information and better coordination of law enforcement activities could enhance efforts to combat illicit drug trafficking, particularly in the Amazon and Parana basins. Illicit coca bush cultivation, coca leaf production and manufacture of and trafficking in coca derivatives continued, and the abuse of coca base, coca paste, cocaine hydrochloride and "crack" was spreading in the region.

During the preceding two years, legislation against money-laundering was enacted in several countries; however, more concrete regulations and improved organizational systems were needed to achieve more practical results. Noting that proliferation of casinos had been reported in the region, the Board drew the attention of Governments to the risk of their use as money-laundering "front" companies. It regretted that in Brazil money-laundering was still not considered a crime. However, it noted the prosecution of cases involving money-laundering in Bolivia.

Increasing transborder operations carried out in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay led to the seizure in 1996 of cannabis and cocaine in much larger amounts than in any previous year. Cannabis, the principal drug of abuse in South America, continued to be cultivated for international trafficking in Brazil, Colombia, Guyana, Paraguay and Suriname. In 1996, about 3.7 million cannabis plants were eradicated in Brazil, about 30 per cent more than in 1995.

Large-scale illicit coca bush cultivation continued in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru. Peru remained the largest producer of coca leaves, followed by Colombia, which continued its large-scale illicit crop eradication programme throughout 1997. Colombia reported a significant increase in cocaine seizures in the first half of 1997—the amount was almost the same as that seized during the whole of 1996. Illicit cultivation of the epadú variety of coca bush seemed to be increasing in Brazil, mainly in areas close to its borders with Colombia and Peru.

Clandestine laboratories in Colombia appeared to be using mostly locally produced coca base or coca paste for the manufacture of cocaine hydrochloride. That had led to a significant reduction in the import of raw materials from Bolivia and Peru, resulting in a drop in the price of coca leaves and an expansion in the manufacturing capacity of clandestine cocaine laboratories. Mainly because of the migration and changing lifestyle of the traditional coca-leaf-chewing population in Bolivia and Peru, that practice appeared to be on the decrease. However, the abuse of coca base and cocaine hydrochloride increased in several countries, such as Bolivia, where the annual prevalence of cocaine abuse increased from 0.2 to 1.2 per cent between 1992 and 1996. In Chile, however, the annual prevalence of illicit drug abuse remained stable (at 4.3 per cent). In many countries, a significant increase in cases involving "crack" abuse was reported; easy availability and low prices contributed to its popularity and that of coca paste.

Large-scale illicit poppy cultivation continued in Colombia and had spread to the Venezuelan part of the Perija mountain range. In Colombia, 81 kilograms of heroin were seized in 1996 and 87.5 kilograms during the first half of 1997 alone. Most of the heroin manufactured in clandestine laboratories in Colombia was smuggled into the United States; however, heroin abuse, previously unknown in Colombia, had started to occur in its ports and had been reported in several cities in Brazil.

Non-compliance with national regulations concerning the manufacture, prescribing and sale of psychotropic substances continued in several countries in South America. In Brazil, several cases involving the diversion of psychotropic substances from licit to illicit channels were discovered, more than 300 unauthorized pharmaceutical laboratories were detected and, despite the adoption of new regulations to control anorectics, the dispensing of such amphetamine-type stimulants continued. The Board again urged Governments of the region to ensure the enforcement of regulatory controls.

INCB carried out missions to Ecuador and Peru in 1997. It noted that the extent of illicit drug production and trafficking in Ecuador was much lower than in some other South American countries and expressed satisfaction that the Government continually updated its legal framework by introducing regulations on seizure, confiscation and use of assets, money-laundering, judicial co-operation and precursor control.

The Board was of the opinion that the establishment of a national drug control commission in Peru had greatly improved coordination and exchange of information between relevant government agencies. It appreciated the Government's efforts to update the national legal framework, but noted with concern that national policy and legislation regarding coca bush cultivation and coca leaf production and distribution were not in line with the 1961 Convention. The Board repeated its recommendation that Peru should strengthen the authorities in charge of controlling licit activities connected with narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

Illicit opium poppy cultivation, opium production, heroin manufacture and opiate trafficking remained major drug problems in South-East Asia, particularly in Myanmar. Heroin injecting was spreading in the region, especially in some southern provinces of China. The illicit manufacture of and traffic in amphetamines were on the rise and the spread of methamphetamine abuse posed a major challenge to some Governments. The prevalence of the abuse of methamphetamine and other amphetamine derivatives seemed to be significantly lower in Japan and the Republic of Korea than in most European countries, and the level of heroin and cocaine abuse also remained very low despite the high purchasing power of the population. Illicit traffic in acetic anhydride (used for the manufacture of heroin) and in ephedrine and pseudoephedrine (used for the production of methamphetamine) continued in the region.

Cannabis grew wild in several countries and was also cultivated in many South-East Asian countries, with large-scale cannabis cultivation being reported in the Philippines. Substantial amounts of cannabis originating in Cambodia were seized in the region, as well as in Australia and several countries in Africa and Europe. Cannabis was also widely abused within the region.

Although there were no reliable estimates of opium production in Myanmar, opium poppy was grown illicitly as a major cash crop by farmers in the hilly border areas of that country, which remained one of the largest opium producers in the world. The levels of poppy cultivation and opium production in other South-East Asian countries were not comparable to those in Myanmar; they remained low in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Thailand and Viet Nam. Although heroin was manufactured on a large scale in South-East Asia, mainly in Myanmar, worldwide seizures of heroin originating in the region had declined and many of the consignments of acetic anhydride that were seized in Myanmar were reported to have been smuggled into that country out of China. The territories of Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Philippines, Thailand and Viet Nam, as well as some southern provinces of China, were used as transit points and storage places for heroin destined for Europe and North America. Although the number of opium abusers was falling in South-East Asia, the abuse of heroin was on the rise. The practice of injecting heroin increased in certain parts of China, and the spread of HIV infection among drug abusers was of particular concern in Viet Nam and in some parts of Myanmar.

The increasing illicit manufacture of, traffic in and abuse of amphetamines were major problems in the region. Seizure data indicated that illicit manufacture of methamphetamine was taking place mainly in China, but several clandestine laboratories had been detected in the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar and other countries. China was efficiently controlling licit exports of ephedrine, had prevented the diversion of several large consignments and was increasing efforts to curb the diversion of that precursor into illicit domestic channels. Reacting to the increasing spread of methamphetamine abuse, Thailand had tightened controls over the licit trade in ephedrine. In Japan and the Republic of Korea, the abuse of methamphetamine remained a concern despite the fact that both countries had clamped down on all illicit manufacturing capacities. Seizures of MDMA ("ecstasy") of European origin were reported in several countries.

INCB carried out three missions to East and South-East Asia in 1997, to Cambodia, Indonesia and Viet Nam. The Board noted with concern that drug trafficking activities originating in Cambodia, in addition to transit activity, were increasing and there were indications that money-laundering was also increasing. Strong measures against drug abuse and trafficking in neighbouring countries had led traffickers to move their operations to Cambodia, taking advantage of its weak legislative, enforcement and administrative structures. The Board noted with appreciation the coming into force of a comprehensive drug control law in Cambodia at the beginning of 1997, meaning that Cambodia could become a party to the international drug control treaties. However, efficient application of the new law would require strengthening of the national judiciary and of law enforcement, cooperation with neighbouring countries and bilateral and multilateral assistance.

The Board appreciated the efforts of the Indonesian Government to bring national legislation on drug control in line with international drug control treaties. Although drug abuse in the country did not appear to be significant, the Board noted with concern that the abuse of psychotropic substances, particularly "ecstasy", had spread among the younger segments of the population.

The Board was pleased to note that the Government of Viet Nam was in the process of acceding to the international drug control treaties and that new drug control legislation was due to be adopted in 1997. The Board appreciated the Government's commitment to addressing drug problems and its achievements in eradicating illicit opium poppy cultivation. However, it noted that drug trafficking and abuse were no longer limited to ethnic minorities but had developed into nationwide problems.

South Asia

Strict control measures and law enforcement action in India had curtailed the large-scale smuggling of methaqualone out of that country into Africa, said INCB. Cooperation between national law enforcement authorities aimed at preventing the cross-border smuggling of drugs, including cooperation between India and Pakistan, significantly increased in response to a recent sharp increase in the illicit traffic in heroin and cannabis across the border. The abuse of and traffic in codeine-based cough syrups and buprenorphine, diverted from licit channels, as well as cannabis and heroin, continued in the region. International trade in psychotropic substances was under strict control in India, but in the other South Asian countries domestic trade, distribution and dispensing of those substances were not regulated or the regulations were not adequately implemented. India was also the only country in South Asia where the manufacture, export and import of precursors were regulated; their relatively free availability in the rest of the region resulted in illicit manufacturers exploiting the situation.

Cannabis grew wild and was also illicitly cultivated in South Asia. In Sri Lanka, significant quantities of cannabis were used in traditional ayurvedic medicine and Sri Lankan authorities regularly conducted campaigns to eradicate illicit cannabis cultivation in remote jungle areas. Cannabis resin produced in Nepal was smuggled mainly into India. In Nepal, the number of seizures of cannabis and cannabis resin and the number of persons arrested for drug offences had increased since the beginning of the 1990s; however, Nepal's border with India was virtually open, making the fight against illicit traffic in cannabis resin and other drugs more difficult.

Licit opium poppy cultivation and opium production took place under governmental control in India, where the production of opiate raw materials exceeded 100 tonnes in morphine equivalent in 1997. There were no reports of seizure of Indian opium outside the country, and continued efforts by the Government kept to a minimum the diversion of opium from licit cultivation and limited illicit cultivation mainly to some northern areas of the country. Some of the morphine base illicitly manufactured in Pakistan was smuggled into India, where it was converted into heroin in clandestine laboratories (such as the ones dismantled in Gujarat and Maharashtra) or was smuggled into other countries. Heroin was also smuggled into India out of Pakistan and, to a lesser extent, out of Myanmar. Buprenorphine and cough syrups containing codeine were smuggled out of India, the manufacturing country, into Bangladesh and Nepal, where the abuse of those products continued, as it did in India.

An import/export authorization system covering all psychotropic substances, ephedrine and pseudoephedrine in India, and the close collaboration of the Government with the Board, prevented the diversion of very large amounts of those substances into illicit markets. Efforts also continued to strengthen controls over other precursors, such as those used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine and amphetamine-type stimulants. There was a sharp decrease in methaqualone seizures in India, and seizures in African countries of methaqualone of Indian origin had become rare. In Nepal, persons who formerly abused heroin had shifted to nitrazepam and other hypnotics as they were less expensive, easier to obtain and perceived as less harmful than heroin.

INCB carried out a mission to Sri Lanka in 1997. It noted that no illicit manufacture of drugs and no reports of any major abuse of psychotropic substances had appeared there, but the unregulated availability of those substances indicated a risk of such abuse developing. The Board called for the introduction of the controls required under the 1971 Convention and requested Sri Lanka to comply with the provisions of the 1961 Convention with regard to cannabis use.

West Asia

Adherence to the three main international drug control treaties by the majority of countries in West Asia was a promising development, said INCB. Their determination to cooperate with each other was being translated into a number of cross-border operations and into bilateral and multilateral agreements, such as the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors, which the Economic and Social Council took note of and annexed to resolution 1997/39 (see below). However, the lack of systems to detect money-laundering continued to be a major problem in several countries. The Board noted that Turkey had adopted legislation against money-laundering and that it had become an offence in Pakistan.

The illicit cultivation and abuse of cannabis were widespread in the region, where it grew wild in vast areas. One of the largest producers of cannabis resin in the world was Afghanistan, where, due to civil war, political turmoil and lack of administrative structures, large-scale illicit opium poppy cultivation, opium production and heroin manufacture also continued. Opium production in South-West Asia exceeded that in South-East Asia.

Although illicit cannabis cultivation took place mostly in Afghanistan, it was also reported in Pakistan and in several central Asian countries; in 1996, more than 100 tonnes of locally grown cannabis plants were destroyed in Armenia and more than 900 tonnes in Georgia. Many countries were used to trans-ship large amounts of cannabis resin, originating mostly in Afghanistan, to different regions, mainly Europe.

Illicit opium poppy cultivation and opium production took place mainly in Afghanistan, but opium poppy was also illicitly cultivated in some member States of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), in central Asia and in Armenia, Azerbaijan and Pakistan. In 1997, Afghanistan issued a ban on poppy cultivation, opium production and heroin manufacture. However, the extent to which the illicit traffic could be reduced depended mainly on the law enforcement services of its neighbouring countries and their ability to stop or at least hinder the flow of illicit opium and morphine from there into or through their territories. The Board noted that Pakistan had prohibited the export of opium poppy seeds in September 1997, but regretted that illicit opium poppy cultivation was not eliminated in Pakistan's Dir district. In Tajikistan, some illicit cultivation sites were destroyed in 1996, and in Armenia and Azerbaijan significant eradication campaigns were conducted in the same year.

Illicit heroin manufacture and trafficking continued unabated in West Asia. The existence of clandestine heroin laboratories in some countries in central Asia was suspected by local authorities, and such laboratories were detected in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Turkey. Large quantities of heroin were smuggled into Europe, mainly out of and through Pakistan and Turkey and through Iran, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. In addition to existing trafficking routes, illicit traffickers had started to use areas in the Caucasus (Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia) for the transportation of illicit drugs from South-West and central Asia to Europe. The widespread abuse of heroin continued in Pakistan, where smoking and inhalation were still the most common methods used to administer the drug. However, heroin abuse by injection was emerging among youth. Increasing heroin abuse was reported in Israel, Turkey and the countries in the Persian Gulf area. Injection of poppy straw extracts remained the usual form of opiate abuse in central Asia, but the abuse of synthetic opioids was reported in Armenia and Azerbaijan. Although the abuse of cocaine remained negligible in most countries in the region, increasing abuse was reported in Israel, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and the United Arab Emirates.

With regard to psychotropic substances, an organization engaged in the illicit manufacture of methaqualone on a large scale was dismantled in the United Arab Emirates, leading to the seizure of 5 tonnes of that substance destined for Africa. Seizures in Saudi Arabia, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey indicated that the smuggling of fenetylline out of Europe into countries in the Persian Gulf area continued. Increasing abuse of stimulants and LSD and a high prevalence of the abuse of "ecstasy" were reported in Israel. Increasing illicit manufacture and abuse of methcathinone (ephedrone) were reported in central Asia. In 1996, 40 clandestine laboratories engaged in the manufacture of methcathinone from wild-growing Ephedra plants were dismantled in Kyrgyzstan. During the first three months of 1997, 10 tonnes of Ephedra plants were seized in Kazakhstan.

INCB missions visited four countries in the West Asia region during 1997. Following a May mission to Armenia, the Board noted the significant progress achieved by that country in the control of licit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and recommended strengthening its administrative structures for the control of precursors. The Board invited the Government to adopt a national drug control programme and trusted that the adoption of adequate drug control legislation, including provisions against money-laundering, would be expedited. The Government was encouraged to establish a system to collect information on the rapidly deteriorating drug abuse situation and to provide resources for treating drug addicts.

The Board appreciated the recent strengthening of the drug control coordination mechanism at the interministerial level in Azerbaijan and encouraged the Government to adopt adequate drug control legislation, including provisions against money-laundering. There was an urgent need for effective control over precursors listed in the 1988 Convention, since Azerbaijan had a large chemical industry. The Board recommended that Azerbaijan develop services for the treatment of drug addicts and adapt the administrative structures for the control of licit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances to the conditions of a market economy.

The Board appreciated the achievements of the Government of Kyrgyzstan, such as developing a control system for licit narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors, creating an effective coordinating body and drafting new comprehensive drug control legislation that had been presented to its parliament. It recommended the adoption of legislation to prevent money-laundering and the introduction of provisions for the immediate, pre-trial destruction of seized drugs to prevent such drugs from accumulating.

Noting that before Turkmenistan's accession to the international drug control treaties all of its activities related to the control of the licit movement of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors were carried out on its behalf by the Russian Federation, the Board encouraged Turkmenistan to create its own national control structures and to speed up the drafting and adoption of national drug control legislation and the development of a national drug control policy. The Board appreciated Turkmenistan's efforts to fight illicit drug trafficking. The country's geographical location, which made it attractive to drug traffickers and the large-scale smuggling of cannabis resin, opium and heroin out of Afghanistan, through Turkmenistan and into the Russian Federation, posed a major challenge. More than 1 tonne of opium, 68 kilograms of heroin and more than 24 tonnes of cannabis resin were seized in Turkmenistan in 1996 and Turkmen law enforcement officers were frequently confronted with well-equipped and heavily armed groups of traffickers. The absence of national drug control legislation hindered action against the smuggling of chemicals from the Russian Federation into Afghanistan and other West Asian countries where heroin laboratories were located. The Board urged Turkmenistan to introduce legal provisions for precursor control as soon as possible.

Europe

INCB noted that there were signs of some important changes in drug abuse trends in Europe. In some western European countries, the number of occasional abusers of stimulants and hallucinogens was increasing, while the number of regular heroin abusers was decreasing. The number of hard-core drug addicts seemed to be stable and in some countries smoking, instead of injecting, had become the prevalent route of administration of heroin among young abusers. Despite changing trends and successful law enforcement interventions, Europe remained a major illicit market for drugs. Indoor and outdoor cultivation of highly potent cannabis was spreading and amphetamine and "ecstasy"-type amphetamine derivatives were being produced in a number of clandestine laboratories for trafficking within Europe and elsewhere. Central and eastern European countries were making progress in adapting their legal systems and administrative structures for the control of licit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances to the market-economy situation, but they had great difficulties preventing the abuse of illicit drugs. In the Russian Federation, the activities of drug-trafficking and other criminal organizations were among the biggest threats to the security of the country and had become a major challenge for the international community. Among member States of the European Union (EU), differences between national drug control policies as well as the promotion of the liberalization or legalization of the non-medical use of drugs threatened the consensus needed for meaningful measures against drug abuse and trafficking, especially in the area of demand reduction.

Cannabis, the principal drug of abuse in Europe, was illicitly cultivated in many countries, above all in the Netherlands, where 180 indoor cultivation sites were detected and 500,000 plants seized in 1996. The Netherlands was used as the main point of entry for cannabis smuggled into Europe, and Belgian ports were also frequently used for that purpose. About 75 per cent of the cannabis seizures reported in 1996 were made in those two countries. Albania had become a major supplier of cannabis to Greece and Italy. In addition, the seizure of 35 tonnes of cannabis in Colombia on a ship destined for Poland was a possible sign of the opening of new trafficking routes. A total of 410 tonnes of cannabis resin were seized in 1996, 243 tonnes of which, mostly of Moroccan origin, were seized in Spain. Significant quantities of cannabis resin were also smuggled into Europe out of Pakistan.

Since 1996, cannabis had been increasingly used in food and beverages, and some products containing it were advertised mostly by underlining its virtues. The Board called on Governments and the industries concerned to counteract such practices, which appeared to be aimed at legalizing the non-medical use of cannabis. In the opinion of the Board, the continuous debate about the liberalization and depenalization of cannabis abuse and the aggressive publicity in favour of legalization were major factors contributing to the attitude of many young people towards cannabis abuse.

Illicit opium poppy cultivation was reported mainly in CIS countries. In 1996, 4,500 hectares of opium poppy were eradicated in Ukraine and 3,500 hectares in the Russian Federation, where the number of persons abusing drugs regularly was estimated at about 2 million. In the Republic of Moldova, about 4 tonnes of poppy straw were seized. The abuse of poppy straw extracts continued in Belarus, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, the Russian Federation and Ukraine; in the Russian Federation, more than 500 clandestine laboratories engaged in the extraction of poppy straw were dismantled in 1996. The extracts were usually injected, contributing to the growing number of cases of HIV infection. Although the Balkan route remained the most frequently used by heroin traffickers, as illustrated by the significant heroin seizures made in 1996 in Bulgaria, Greece, Hungary, Romania and Yugoslavia, the largest amounts were seized in Italy.

A significant increase in the number of methadone abusers was reported in some western European countries, mainly as a consequence of the indiscriminate prescribing of methadone and the uncontrolled use of it for maintenance purposes.

In 1996, 31.1 tonnes of cocaine were seized in Europe, mainly in Spain and the Netherlands. Increasing cocaine abuse was reported in Denmark, France and Germany, and cocaine also appeared on the black markets in Belarus, Latvia and the Russian Federation.

Clandestine laboratories engaged in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine and/or MDMA or other "ecstasy-type" hallucinogenic amphetamine derivatives were dismantled in several countries. The Netherlands was the principal source of the MDMA supply in the region. Increasing abuse of amphetamine, "ecstasy" and LSD, mainly by young people attending "rave" parties, was reported. In some countries, the prevalence of the abuse of amphetamine was second only to that of cannabis, and a significant increase in the number of hepatitis C infections was recorded among intravenous amphetamine abusers. The illicit manufacture and abuse of methcathinone (ephedrone) continued in Belarus, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova and the Russian Federation, where ephedrine was used as a starting material for the illicit manufacture of methcathinone. The abuse of ephedrine itself was also reported in those countries. Except for the United Kingdom, there were very few reports on the abuse of sedatives in Europe; however, in the opinion of the Board, the extent of such abuse was underestimated in many European countries.

With regard to national legislation and policy, the Board expressed doubts about a new Swiss policy of distributing heroin to addicts and recommended that the results of that experiment be evaluated by WHO. In July 1997, the Swiss Government made public its own evaluation of the project, claiming that for a limited number of addicts medical distribution had led to some positive results. The Board regretted that, before the WHO evaluation of the project, pressure groups and some politicians were already promoting the expansion of such programmes in Switzerland and their proliferation in other countries.

The Board noted that the Netherlands had increased efforts to curb cannabis demand and that the authorities in that country were investigating a company that had started to use the Internet for the sale of cannabis products and seeds.

In July 1997, a Board mission visited Romania, which had become an important transit route for illicit drug trafficking and a storage area for illicit drugs in transit as a consequence of the turmoil in the former republics of Yugoslavia. The Board noted that, although the administrative structures for drug control matters were still in the development phase, international trade in narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors was under control. Several attempts to divert precursors had recently been detected by the authorities. During the preceding few years, drug abuse had emerged in Romania; cannabis and cannabis resin were the most abused drugs, but cases involving heroin and benzodiazepines had also been reported.

Oceania

Cooperation in drug control was increasing in Oceania, with Australia and New Zealand assisting other countries in the region. Most of the drug problems in the region were reported in Australia and New Zealand. The Board welcomed initiatives for the strengthening of measures against money-laundering, as the situation in several Pacific island countries offered many opportunities for such activities by drug traffickers. It also welcomed the drafting of a new criminal code in Micronesia that included provisions for preventing money-laundering and the forfeiture of assets, and the adoption of a new law on controlled delivery in Australia.

Cannabis grew wild in several countries in Oceania and was illicitly cultivated in Fiji, Papua New Guinea, Samoa and Vanuatu. Indoor cultivation of potent cannabis took place mainly in Australia and New Zealand. Cannabis remained the most widely abused drug in all the countries of the region, and the prevalence of its abuse in Australia and Papua New Guinea, among the highest in the world, was aggravated by the abuse of cannabis hybrids cultivated indoors and of cannabis oil. Those substances had an even higher THC content than seized cannabis that already tested higher than the average reported in any other country in the world. In the light of that situation, the Board noted with concern the discussion on the legalization of cannabis consumption in Australia, where already, in some states, its possession for personal use was not prosecuted. Cannabis oil was produced in Oceania, mainly in Australia and New Zealand, or was smuggled into the region from Asia.

In Australia, opium poppy was grown under governmental control for the licit manufacture of alkaloids from poppy straw. There were only a few reports of small-scale illicit poppy cultivation and heroin manufacture in Australia, as was the case in New Zealand. Heroin was smuggled into the region mainly out of South-East Asia. Most was destined for Australia, where its abuse remained a major problem, together with the widespread abuse of other opioids, rated second behind that of cannabis. The overprescribing and diversion of opioids from the licit trade into illicit channels had led the Government of Australia to review the methods of control over them.

In 1995 and 1996, more than 60 laboratories engaged in the clandestine manufacture of amphetamine or its derivatives were detected in Australia. Precursors for the illicit manufacture of amphetamines were obtained by diversion of those chemicals from licit domestic sources. The abuse of methamphetamine, "ecstasy" and other amphetamine derivatives was spreading fast among young people, mainly in Australia and also in New Zealand. Substantial amounts of "ecstasy"-type amphetamines and other hallucinogens were smuggled into those two countries, mainly from Europe.

UN programmes to combat drug abuse

UN International Drug Control Programme

During 1997, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 721] as a centre of competence and the international reference point for drug control, played a catalytical role in stimulating action at the national, regional and international levels. Through a portfolio of technical cooperation programmes undertaken by a network of field offices located in key regions and countries, it promoted subregional cooperation and fostered bilateral cooperation and direct consultations between Governments. It also served as both an instrument of and support for the international community in pursuing its drug control objectives within the framework of the international drug control treaties (see above). UNDCP applied a balanced strategy, with demand reduction and supply reduction as mutually reinforcing elements, and pursued it in close cooperation with Governments, civil society, specialized agencies and other UN entities, international financial institutions, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) working at the grass-roots level and local communities and institutions.

Under UNDCP's participatory approach, which aimed at involving Governments and local communities in the process of defining and developing programmes, local ownership of programmes and activities remained an important element in UNDCP technical cooperation efforts, ensuring their sustainability. At the national level, UNDCP supported institution-building, particularly the preparation, adoption and application of national drug control master plans, the establishment of coordinating and planning capacities and the strengthening of national capacities in demand reduction and law enforcement.

The Programme continued to give priority to assisting Member States in applying international drug control treaties, including training for law enforcement personnel and national administrators, as well as for judges, magistrates and prosecutors. An important challenge was to ensure that the global programme against money-laundering fulfilled its critical role of assisting Member States in countering money-laundering and in overcoming obstacles to law enforcement cooperation in that area.

Demand reduction remained another fundamental element in the UNDCP global strategy to counter illicit drugs. In 1997, UNDCP had 80 country-level projects in demand reduction, compared with 31 for supply reduction and 72 for the suppression of illicit drug trafficking. To complement the national projects, UNDCP undertook demand reduction activities through global programmes in cooperation with other UN entities, particularly the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the International Labour Organization (ILO) and WHO. The joint UNDCP/WHO project to mobilize local communities in preventing drug abuse among young people was valued at $5 million.

With regard to the elimination of narcotic crops, UNDCP successfully acted as both catalyst and expert in efforts to eliminate the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, as evidenced by the achievements of countries such as Iran, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Pakistan, Thailand, Turkey and Viet Nam. It launched a special initiative to eliminate the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy and the cocoa bush worldwide over the next 10 years. The illicit cultivation of cannabis would be dealt with in a different framework.

The Programme resumed its operations in Afghanistan in 1997, where it involved local authorities in programmes covering demand reduction, alternative development, institution-building and combating drug trafficking. In resolution 52/211 B on the situation in Afghanistan and its implications for international peace and security (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), the General Assembly commended UNDCP's efforts and called for full compliance by Afghanistan with its commitments regarding the banning of the cultivation, use of and trade in opium.

Promoting regional cooperation as a vehicle for strengthening political commitment to counter the drug problem remained an important cornerstone of UNDCP's strategy. The challenge was to ensure that the global network of memoranda of understanding, which UNDCP promoted, became in practice an effective framework of cooperation between Governments.

UNDCP would continue to promote bilateral cooperation and understanding in drug control by playing the role of "honest broker", sponsoring direct consultations between the parties concerned. In order to reach out to Member States, and to involve the widest possible representation of society in its undertakings, the Programme had developed a strategy to better communicate its mission and achievements. It had mapped out a series of public information activities to raise the awareness of individuals and societies to the drug problem, and, to make its achievements known to the public, a publication entitled UNDCP: Facing the Challenge was issued.

UNDCP strengthened its ties with NGOs, particularly those directly involved in demand reduction activities at the grass-roots level. To ensure broad-based support for drug control, it promoted partnerships with the business community, particularly in support of programmes in the workplace.

The UNDCP Executive Director, in a report [E/CN.7/1998/2] to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, outlined UNDCP activities in 1997 on a regional basis, summaries of which follow.

Africa

In 1997, increased collaboration between Governments in drug control was promoted by using regional organizations as vehicles for fostering cooperation. UNDCP provided assistance to the Organization of African Unity secretariat in order to facilitate the application of the Plan of Action on Drug Abuse Control and Illicit Drug Trafficking in Africa, adopted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 115]. It also supported the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and the Southern African Development Community (SADC) in increasing cooperation between their member States in applying their joint drug control strategies. UNDCP began to elaborate a strategy to provide and coordinate assistance to sub-Saharan Africa for the period 1998-2001 and to strengthen the empirical basis for drug policy development in Africa. To support that initiative, the Programme launched a study of social, economic and political issues and their impact on trends in illicit trafficking and drug abuse in sub-Saharan Africa.

At the country level, UNDCP provided legal assistance to 44 countries between 1990 and 1997, helping in the drafting of drug control laws and regulations and in providing training for their application. It also assisted Governments in establishing national drug control coordinating bodies; that had been accomplished in 16 ECOWAS member States and in 10 of the 12 SADC countries. Assistance was also provided to the Governments of Cape Verde, Kenya and Zambia in the preparation of comprehensive drug control master plans. UNDCP continued to promote the development of effective drug demand reduction strategies by Governments in Africa and the formulation of culturally appropriate programmes targeting high-risk groups. With UNDCP assistance, the Governments of Cameroon, Egypt, Ethiopia and Kenya completed rapid drug abuse assessment surveys; assistance in that regard was being provided to Angola, Chad and the Congo.

To address the problem of drug trafficking, UNDCP supplied training, equipment and advisory services to the customs and law enforcement agencies of several countries, in collaboration with other organizations, such as the World Customs Organization and the International Criminal Police Organization. As part of its efforts to integrate the issue of drug control in national socio-economic frameworks, UNDCP collaborated in the convening in Nigeria in March of a national workshop with the theme "Women: combating drug problems in Nigeria". In order to increase public awareness and involve civil society in countering the drug problem, it provided grants to 10 NGOs, management training to the staff of 25 NGOs and advisory services and information to 149 NGOs in 14 countries in eastern and southern Africa. As part of its capacity-building initiatives, UNDCP funded the training of trainers and supported workshops and expert group meetings for professionals from various countries. In July, a training seminar on drug law enforcement intelligence for law enforcement officers from western Africa was organized in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire. In eastern and southern Africa, some 100 law enforcement and customs officers were trained in intelligence gathering, investigative techniques and legislation and court proceedings. Since 1994, 23 training sessions had been held for senior staff from governmental and non-governmental organizations in ECOWAS member States. To counter the smuggling of large consignments of cannabis and increasing amounts of cocaine out of northern Africa into Europe, the Programme helped Algeria and Tunisia by providing equipment and training to handlers of drug-scenting dogs.

Central and South-West Asia

As the production and manufacture of and trafficking in illicit drugs from Afghanistan posed a regional security threat, UNDCP initiated a programme to enhance law enforcement cooperation between States situated along the Afghan border: Iran, Pakistan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. It also continued to support initiatives to strengthen drug law enforcement cooperation between Iran and Pakistan, particularly along their common border. Following the conclusion in 1996 of a memorandum of understanding [YUN 1996, p. 1151], UNDCP launched, on 7 May 1997, a subregional law enforcement project involving Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, which aimed to strengthen law enforcement capacity and enhance cooperation among the agencies in charge of countering illicit drug trafficking. In order to obtain reliable information on the extent of the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy and to assist Governments in elaborating countermeasures, a two-year project to map the area under illicit cultivation was initiated in the subregion in July.

At the country level, in central Asia, UNDCP supported the efforts of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan in institution-building, strengthening national interdiction capacities and establishing national drug control structures. In Uzbekistan, it supported research undertaken at the Institute of Genetics and Plants and Experimental Biology of the Academy of Sciences on the development of an environmentally safe and reliable biological control agent to be used to eradicate illicit opium poppy cultivation.

The 1997 UNDCP opium poppy survey in Afghanistan—the world's largest producer of illicit opium and heroin—showed that opium production had increased by 25 per cent, although the area under cultivation had increased only marginally. In March, UNDCP launched a four-year programme, valued at $16.3 million, aimed at reducing illicit opium poppy cultivation in four key provinces, reducing drug abuse in the whole country, institution-building, countering illicit drug trafficking and establishing a monitoring capacity. It also re-established its presence in Afghanistan and was encouraging bilateral and multilateral agencies to coordinate the channeling of their assistance to opium-growing areas and to incorporate drug control elements into their own programmes. In October, UNDCP reached agreement with the Taliban on the priorities and targets to be achieved in 1998, as part of its conditionality policy by which the enforcement of the ban on illicit cultivation of the opium poppy would be conditional on the provision of support to the affected local communities. UNDCP committed itself to reinstating a substation for electric power and refurbishing the wool factory in Kandahar; it had succeeded in integrating the gender issue into that initiative, which would provide 200 women with employment outside their homes.

In Pakistan, a government survey showed a decrease in illicit poppy cultivation; since approximately 40 per cent of the area under cultivation was located in the Dir district, where UNDCP was undertaking alternative development activities, an independent evaluation team concluded that the UNDCP programme had contributed significantly to the reduction of opium poppy cultivation.

During the year, UNDCP also assisted Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan in preparing or completing their national drug control master plans.

South-East Asia and the Pacific

Following the adoption in 1995 of a subregional plan of action for drug control cooperation in South-East Asia [YUN 1995, p. 1280] by Cambodia, China, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam, UNDCP in 1997 continued to support the formulation and application of the projects outlined in the plan. In order to further the application of the plan, it convened a ministerial meeting for the six countries (Bangkok, Thailand, July), which addressed the rise in drug abuse and trafficking in heroin and stimulants in the subregion, particularly amphetamine-type stimulants. Work continued on other subregional projects, begun in 1992, to strengthen the drug control agencies of China, Myanmar and Thailand by providing transportation and telecommunications equipment and related training. Improved cross-border cooperation resulted in a significant increase in seizures of opium, heroin and precursors.

A project, begun in 1996 to reduce drug abuse in the highlands of East Asia [YUN 1996, p. 1152], led to the implementation of community-based demand reduction and social development activities. In 1997, country-specific pilot activities were initiated under the project. At the subregional level, a project to develop institutional capacity in demand reduction among high-risk groups was executed under a cost-sharing arrangement with the United Nations Development Programme. UNDCP provided technical assistance to the nine States of the South Pacific Forum in drafting legislation against money-laundering and related activities; it also arranged training in drug law enforcement for senior customs and police officers.

At the country level, alternative development activities in the Xieng Khouang province of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, close to the border with Viet Nam, contributed to a decrease of 23 per cent in opium production compared with 1992, when the UNDCP activities started. To enable the management of national drug control efforts supported by bilateral and multilateral assistance, UNDCP supported the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic in strengthening national drug control agencies; it convened a national training seminar for prosecutors and customs and police officers from 18 provinces on the application of new drug control legislation, following the adherence of the Government to the international drug control treaties. Based on the findings of a 1996 rapid assessment of drug abuse that showed high addiction rates among returning refugees, UNDCP also assisted the Government and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in setting up a demand reduction programme for that population group. A national treatment and rehabilitation training centre was established in 1997.

UNDCP supported four demand reduction initiatives in Viet Nam, giving special attention to strengthening the Government's capacity to coordinate inter-agency efforts. A national drug control committee was established and UNDCP was providing training in the planning and coordination of drug control activities. A project to improve the mobility and communications capacities of the Vietnamese police and customs services and to enhance cooperation between the two services in drug investigations began.

In Myanmar, to discourage the practice of heroin injection and other related high-risk behaviour, UNDCP supported a programme in Kachin State to educate people and raise their awareness of drug abuse prevention. In July, China and Myanmar, together with UNDCP, agreed to a five-year alternative development project to counter heroin traffickers operating along the border between the two countries and to eliminate the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy in north-eastern Myanmar, a major opium-producing area. In eastern Shan State, some 150 hectares of poppy were eradicated between 1993 and 1997, and UNDCP assisted farmers in developing alternative sources of income.

A community-based project aimed at reducing drug abuse in 85 hill-tribe villages was completed in northern Thailand. UNDCP supported Cambodia in improving its institutional and human resources capacity in drug control by providing legislative assistance and training for drug control officials.

UNDCP assisted Indonesia in developing a national drug control plan; and in the Pacific, Fiji, Micronesia, Papua New Guinea and Samoa initiated the preparation of a master plan to be completed in 1998.

Europe and the Middle East

As follow-up to a memorandum of understanding signed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1281], UNDCP provided support to the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia through a framework provided by the Subregional Drug Control Cooperation Programme. A project to strengthen cross-border cooperation among drug law enforcement agencies in central Europe was initiated and, in cooperation with the Council of Europe, UNDCP assisted countries of the subregion in conducting drug abuse surveys, designing demand reduction strategies and training health-care professionals. UNDCP also cooperated closely with the European Commission in its drug control initiatives, such as the Commission's high-level missions to Belarus, the Republic of Moldova and countries in central Asia. In the Baltic States, UNDCP promoted cross-border cooperation through training workshops organized to enhance the impact of country-level projects in drug control. All three Baltic States also benefited from a UNDCP-organized workshop at which outlines of national drug control master plans were prepared.

At the country level, expert advice and training were provided to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria and Croatia to strengthen their drug law enforcement capacity, creating in each country a corps of trained drug law enforcement professionals.

UNDCP supported Turkey in developing a balanced drug control programme; guidelines were prepared for a new customs control concept and support was given to develop capacity in training drug-scenting dogs. To prevent an escalation of illicit drug trafficking to the west through the transcaucasian subregion, UNDCP undertook a multisectoral programme of activities in Azerbaijan, focusing on enhancing law enforcement capacities and addressing demand reduction and institution-building.

In response to increased drug trafficking through the Russian Federation, UNDCP organized, jointly with the Government, the International Conference on Drug Control Cooperation with the Russian Federation (Moscow, April), which highlighted the magnitude of the drug problem facing that country, the firm commitment of the Government and the support of the international community in assisting in the application of the federal drug control programme.

A two-year multisectoral programme of assistance to the Palestinian Authority aimed to increase the interdiction capacities of law enforcement services, promote drug abuse awareness and enhance existing rehabilitation and treatment services. UNDCP trained two Palestinian police chemists in drug analysis and identification.

Implementation of the second phase of the Baalbek-Hermel integrated area development programme in Lebanon began in 1997, focusing on the consolidation of activities in the social and health sectors and the promotion of drug abuse awareness and prevention. During the first phase, illicit opium poppy cultivation, which peaked at 2,000 to 3,500 hectares in the early 1990s, was totally eliminated.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The signatories of a 1996 memorandum of understanding on subregional drug control cooperation between Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Peru, Uruguay and UNDCP initiated joint subregional programmes of cooperation to counter illicit drug trafficking and drug abuse. They launched joint programmes for training in drug abuse prevention and treatment, the rehabilitation of drug abusers, precursor control and investigation techniques, including techniques for investigating money-laundering. A training seminar on drug abuse prevention and community mobilization (La Paz, Bolivia) received UNDCP support. As follow-up to the Plan of Action for Drug Control Coordination and Cooperation in the Caribbean, adopted in May 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1152], a technical assistance programme in drug control, valued at $15 million, was launched. UNDCP assumed the coordinating functions under the Caribbean Drug Control Coordination Mechanism, which began operating in February 1997, and convened a meeting of the Coordination Mechanism in Bridgetown, Barbados, in October.

At the country level, UNDCP continued to provide to Colombia technical support in drug abuse prevention. Its intervention strategy, which also aimed at establishing operational links and coordination between local and national initiatives, led to the institutionalization by local and national authorities of past and current UNDCP-supported initiatives. UNDCP also supported the Colombian Government in strengthening the capacity of the public prosecutor to analyse seized drugs and precursors through the establishment of seven forensic laboratories and the training of personnel. Early in 1997, UNDCP completed 12 years of alternative development activities in Colombia, which had provided support to 10,000 small farmers and their families, substituting crops in an area in which an estimated 5,400 hectares of coca bush had been illicitly cultivated.

In Brazil, demand reduction activities focused on two main strategies: drug abuse prevention for intravenous drug users, with emphasis on AIDS prevention, and drug abuse prevention in the workplace. In cooperation with the Government, UNDCP organized an international seminar on drug abuse prevention in October, which was attended by 500 experts in different fields of drug control, including experts from neighbouring countries.

In the Caribbean, UNDCP support to education programmes resulted in the inclusion of drug prevention in school curricula and the promotion of awareness-raising activities for young people out of school. Demand reduction programmes included significant community and private-sector contributions.

In Ecuador, often used as a transit State by traffickers of illicit drugs and precursors, UNDCP supported the convening of a national precursor control workshop as part of a series of training events planned for law enforcement officials. The Programme also organized a series of cross-border cooperation meetings between the law enforcement agencies of Colombia and Ecuador.

The elimination of illicit cultivation of the coca bush through alternative development remained a cornerstone of UNDCP programmes in Peru, where UNDCP estimated that 200,000 small farmers' families were involved in illicit cultivation.

UNDCP directly supported local communities and assisted farmers' organizations and local farmers in consolidating alternative agro-industries, leading to the introduction of integrated farming systems in areas where coca leaves used to be the only crop. UNDCP gave priority to strengthening the institutional capacity of the national drug control commission of Peru, providing support to the elaboration of the national plan for alternative development, drug abuse prevention and the rehabilitation of drug abusers.

In Bolivia, an estimated 50,000 farmers' families depended on cultivation of the coca bush for their livelihood. UNDCP was continuously adjusting its alternative development activities, and for the first time it included forestry among the economically sustainable income-generating activities aimed at substituting for illicit coca cultivation.

UNDCP assisted Belize, Bolivia, Dominica, El Salvador, Grenada, Nicaragua, Panama and Saint Kitts and Nevis in updating or completing their national drug control plans in 1997.

Administrative and budgetary matters

Programme and support budgets

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its March 1997 session (see below), had before it a report of the UNDCP Executive Director on the proposed revised budget for the biennium 1996-1997 and the proposed outline for the biennium 1998-1999 for extrabudgetary resources of the Fund of UNDCP [E/CN.7/1997/9].

The Executive Director stated that the initial budget for 1996-1997 had been revised from $152,448,500 to $141,235,100, reflecting an increase of $2,664,000 for recosting and a decrease for volume adjustments of $13,877,400. Headquarters and field operation budgets were maintained at the initial estimated levels, except for some increases resulting from recosting. Additional priority requirements had been fully offset by corresponding savings, including the strengthening of audit planning, preparation and follow-up at headquarters and the establishment of a regional office in Cairo, Egypt.

The proposed outline for 1998-1999 of $162,298,000 reflected a resource growth of $10,000,000 or 7 per cent and an increase of $11,062,900 for recosting. Assisting Governments in fighting drug abuse, production and trafficking would continue to be the main priority. That would require placing renewed emphasis on strengthening UNDCP's competence in international drug control, supporting accession to and implementation of drug control conventions and promoting subregional cooperation within the context of a balanced approach to international drug control. A programme approach, rather than project support, would be introduced for technical cooperation, and operational concerns would be decentralized from headquarters to the field office network.

Although the financial situation in the six-year period 1994-1999 could be characterized by stagnation in income and programme support charges, said the Executive Director, a number of improvements could be noted: new fund-raising initiatives had yielded promising results and were expected to contribute to an improved funding base; the donor base had widened somewhat and that was expected to continue; and cost-sharing contributions had increased considerably. However, the funding base remained volatile and small, and having a large share of earmarked contributions limited the Executive Director's flexibility in responding to priority requirements. Moreover, activities up to 1999 were partly funded through the adjustment of the fund balance; to maintain or even increase the level of activities beyond that year would require additional income, particularly general-purpose funds, in excess of currently anticipated funding.

Also before the Commission was the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [E/CN.7/1997/10] on the Executive Director's proposals.

By a 25 March resolution [E/1997/28/Rev.1 des. 6(XL)], the Commission approved the revised budget estimates for 1996-1997, totalling $27,918,200 for the Fund of UNDCP and $4,204,500 for the programme support cost; it took note with approval of the revised budget estimates for project activities for 1996-1997, totalling $109,112,400. It also took note of the proposed outline for the 1998-1999 biennium, totalling $162,298,000 for the Fund and the programme support cost.

On 21 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission, adopted decision 1997/235, by which it decided that a reconvened session of the Commission should be held in December 1997 to approve the initial programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium and the second and final revision of the programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium for the Fund of UNDCP. Similar reconvened sessions should in future be held in December of odd years to approve the initial programme budget for the following biennium and the final version of the programme budget for the biennium that was drawing to a close, and to deal with any related administrative or budgetary matters.

support and programme budgets for 1996-1997 and 1998-1999.

In his report containing the proposed final biennial support budget for 1996-1997 and proposed initial biennial support budget for 1998-1999 for the Fund [E/CN.7/1997/14], the Executive Director stated that the initial biennial support budget for 1998-1999 amounted to $34,292,200, compared with $32,272,400 (final biennial support budget) and $32,122,700 (approved revised budget) for 1996-1997. The initial 1998-1999 support budget reflected an increase of $2,019,800, including volume increases of $1,052,400 (3.2 per cent) and cost increases of $967,400 (2.9 per cent). The volume increases resulted from organizational and technical adjustments. In a November report [E/CN.7/1997/16], ACABQ commented on the support budgets for the two bienniums.

By a 4 December resolution [E/1997/28/Rev.1 (res. 7(XL))], the Commission approved an amount of $32,272,400 for the final 1996-1997 support budget from the UNDCP Fund, and $34,292,200 for the initial 1998-1999 support budget under the Fund.

In his report containing the programme budgets for the two bienniums [E/CN.7/1997/15], the Executive Director proposed a final programme budget for 1996-1997 amounting to $74,542,900 and an initial programme budget for 1998-1999 of $110,502,000, to be funded from the UNDCP Fund.

By a 4 December resolution [res. 8(XL)], the Commission endorsed the final resource allocation for programme activities in the amount of $74,542,900 for 1996-1997 and noted with approval the initial resource allocation for programme activities in the amount of $110,502,000 for 1998-1999 under the Fund. It urged Governments to provide the fullest possible financial and political support to UNDCP by widening the donor base and increasing voluntary contributions, particularly general-purpose contributions. The Executive Director was urged to move forward with the resource mobilization strategy as soon as possible in order to widen the donor base and increase voluntary contributions. The Commission acknowledged that the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/37 (see below) might have implications for the Fund's budget process.

Review of UNDCP

During the general debate at the fortieth session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in March [E/1997/28/Rev.1], several representatives indicated that the special session of the General Assembly on international drug control, to be convened in 1998 (see above), would provide the international community with an opportunity to reaffirm its determination to ensure the implementation of the international drug control treaties. With regard to UNDCP, the special session should consider ways in which it could be provided with sufficient funding and how its catalytic and leadership role within the UN system could be further expanded.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1997/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1997/37 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Review of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme: strengthening the United Nations machinery for international drug control within the scope of the existing international drug control treaties and in accordance with the basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the question of international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the adoption by the Assembly, on 23 February 1990, during that special session, of the Political Declaration and the Global Programme of Action, including the proclamation of the period from 1991 to 2000 as the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse,

Taking note of the existing international drug control treaties, the Global Programme of Action and the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, which contain a sound and comprehensive framework for drug control activities by States and all the relevant international organizations, and stressing the need for consistency in efforts to implement those activities,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 45/179 of 21 December 1990, by which the Assembly established the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the single body with the exclusive responsibility for coordinating all drug control activities within the United Nations system and for providing effective leadership in promoting international cooperation in drug control, thereby producing a catalytic impact on other international and national bodies,

Recognizing with appreciation the valuable work done by the International Narcotics Control Board in encouraging Member States to adhere to the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 and to ensure the comprehensive implementation of the provisions of that Convention,

Recognizing that Governments have the main responsibility for implementing the international drug control treaties, and emphasizing that the United Nations system has an important role in strengthening the national capacity to do so,

Deeply alarmed by the magnitude of the increasingly rising trend in the illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which are a grave and persistent threat to the health and well-being of millions of people, in particular youth, in all countries of the world,

Noting that contributions to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme have hitherto been made by a limited number of States and that the future of the Programme depends on the retention of existing donors and an enhanced donor base,

Expressing appreciation to donors for their contributions, which have been essential to the growth of the Programme as a centre of excellence,

Recognizing that to maintain and enhance its activities, the Programme depends on general-purpose funds as well as earmarked funds,

Recognizing also that the provision of appropriate and sufficient policy guidance is essential to the success of the Programme, and recalling its resolution 1991/38 of 21 June 1991, in which it called upon the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to give policy guidance to the Programme and to monitor its activities,

Noting the progress of the ad hoc open-ended informal inter-sessional working group established by the Commission at its thirty-ninth session for the purpose of considering options for improving the work of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies, in particular its agenda and organization, and of examining the role of the Commission as the governing body of the Programme, as well as possible options designed to enhance active participation by more Member States,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/64 of 12 December 1996, in which the Assembly decided to convene a special session in June 1998 to consider, inter alia, special measures to strengthen international co-operation in addressing the problem of illicit drugs,

1. Recognizes that the extraordinary and unrelentingly high levels of illicit use, cultivation, production and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and of illicit drug trafficking necessitate a comprehensive review of the international drug control machinery in place, including institutional arrangements and approaches in the light of the work of the task force on reform of the United Nations established by the Secretary-General, giving due consideration to questions of governance and improved policy guidance from Member States, in particular with reference to the threat to the security of States arising from the use, consumption and production of and trafficking in illicit drugs;

2. Concludes that the general decline in resources allocated to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme from both regular and extrabudgetary sources seriously impairs the efforts of the international community against illicit trafficking in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and requires innovative solutions for funding;

3. Reaffirms the leadership role of the Programme as the main focus for concerted international action for drug abuse control and as the international coordinator of drug control activities, in particular within the United Nations system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

- (a) To convene a small group of experts, selected after appropriate consultations, inter alia, with Governments, and with due regard to equitable geographical distribution and relevant sectoral expertise, to undertake a comprehensive review of how the efforts against illicit drugs have evolved within the United Nations system since the creation of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme pursuant to General Assembly resolution 45/179, with the aim of identifying measures to strengthen future international cooperation against illicit drugs;

- (b) To instruct the expert group, inter alia, to identify any measures necessary to strengthen the core activities of the Programme, taking into account the work of the task force on reform of the United Nations established by the Secretary-General and the ability of the United Nations system to perform its increasing tasks in the light of existing mandates;

- (c) To prepare a progress report on the issues identified by the expert group, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its special session devoted to the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, to be held in June 1998;

- (d) To prepare a final report based on the work of the expert group, taking into account the views expressed during the special session of the General Assembly, on how to strengthen the United Nations machinery for international drug control, to be submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-second session;

5. Decides that the work of the expert group should be financed entirely through voluntary funds, and urges Member States to provide financial and other support.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 52/92, the General Assembly stressed the need to strengthen UN activities in the field of narcotic drugs and took note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/37.

UNDCP cooperation with other bodies

Zone of Peace and Cooperation of the South Atlantic

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in a 24 March resolution [E/1997/28/Rev.1 (res.1(XL))], commended the Governments of the States members of the Zone of Peace and Cooperation of the South Atlantic for deciding to develop and implement an anti-drug initiative, within the context of the Zone, and expressed support for it. It requested UNDCP, within existing resources and taking into account the worldwide threat, to examine forms of assistance that could be extended to States members of the Zone within the framework of the proposed anti-drug initiative. The Programme's Executive Director was asked to report to the Commission at its forty-second (1999) session on progress in implementing the resolution.

System-wide Action Plan

The Subcommittee on Drug Control of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its fifth session (Vienna, 29 September-1 October) [ACC/1997/17], reviewed progress on the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control (SWAP). SWAP, which was established in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 870, E/1990/39 & Corr.1,2 & Add.1], consisted of two main parts: the first dealt with operational activities, in particular those of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control; the second outlined the role of the substantive drug control units of the UN Secretariat and of other UN entities and the specialized agencies. It focused on five areas: strengthening the licit drug control system; prevention and reduction of illicit demand for drugs; treatment and rehabilitation; elimination of the supply of drugs from illicit sources; and suppression of illicit drug traffic.

The Subcommittee was informed that nine subsectoral plans of action were in place and that it was time, after two years of the new SWAP, prepared with revised methodology in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1283], to evaluate the situation, especially in the light of UN reforms and the introduction of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework exercise. In that context, UNDCP had offered to have the SWAP process evaluated in 1998.

The Subcommittee adopted the following strategy for strengthening SWAP: the SWAP process would be evaluated, with prior consultation with Subcommittee members on the terms of reference, and the results would be made available to the Subcommittee at its sixth (1998) session; the applicability of existing plans of action would be checked by UNDCP with selected field duty stations; the monitoring questionnaire would be revised by the secretariat and sent to task forces for completion by the end of November; and the secretariat would report to the Committee on Narcotic Drugs in 1998 on the inclusion of the three new plans of action.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/92, urged UN organizations associated with SWAP to collaborate further with UNDCP to integrate the drug control dimension and assistance into their programming and planning processes. It took note of the action by ACC to ensure the increased commitment by the specialized agencies, programmes and funds, as well as international financial institutions, to include the drug control dimension in their programmes of work and invited Member States to engage UN agencies and multilateral development banks in addressing the drug problem in all its aspects and to promote due consideration by governing bodies of requests for assistance for drug control programmes at the national level.

Global Programme of Action

An August report of the Secretary-General [A/52/296] described action taken by States individually or at the bilateral, regional and international levels to implement the Global Programme of Action, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-17/2 [YUN 1990, p. 857]. The report, structured thematically along the lines of the Programme of Action and based on information received from Governments in response to a questionnaire, contained recommendations on ways to improve implementation and an evaluation of progress made with regard to: prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to the elimination of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug addicts; control of supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; suppression of illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; measures to be taken against the effects of money derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking, illegal financial flows and illegal use of the banking system; strengthening of judicial and legal systems, including law enforcement; measures to be taken against the diversion of arms and explosives and illicit drug trafficking by vessels, aircraft and vehicles; the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse (1991-2000); and UN resources and structure.

The report stated that in the preceding year an increasing number of Governments had made improvements in the quality of their demand reduction programmes, focusing on practical measures such as the development of master plans, as well as national policies and programmes of action, including demand reduction. It was recommended that Member States devote more resources to support various aspects of demand reduction and seek bilateral and international assistance to complement their national efforts in that endeavour. High priority should be given to early prevention measures and Governments should design comprehensive programmes and sustainable national demand reduction strategies that encompassed prevention, education, treatment and rehabilitation programmes, allocating sufficient resources for their implementation. Those programmes should promote a multisectoral and intersectoral approach as an integral part of national development planning, with particular emphasis on the protection of the young.

Although many Governments provided treatment for drug abusers, few provided training for personnel employed in treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration. More efforts needed to be made in treatment beyond detoxification. Improved linkage between Government and the private sector was also necessary to strengthen programmes of rehabilitation and social reintegration. The need for guidelines on treatment, training and the development of programmes of rehabilitation and social reintegration had been identified by a number of Governments. Governments should also provide alternatives to treatment and avenues for drug offenders other than imprisonment, said the report.

International criminal activities associated with illicit drug trafficking, such as the arms trade, trafficking in persons and terrorist acts, not only threatened populations but also destabilized institutions and undermined law and order. The report suggested that Governments might wish to emphasize in future reports on the implementation of the Programme of Action their efforts to identify new modalities for securing close cooperation, mutual legal assistance and joint operations. They could also improve the interaction of various types of law enforcement agencies involved in the suppression of illicit traffic.

Despite the efforts of drug law enforcement agencies, substantial amounts of smuggled drugs continued to escape detection. Although unprecedented numbers and quantities of seizures had recently been made, they represented only a fraction of the total amount of drugs being trafficked. Those seizures could have been indicative of either more rigorous and vigilant enforcement or increased trafficking. The exchange of information both within and between regions was vital to ensure broader cooperation in suppressing illicit drug trafficking; regular contact between operational counterparts, as well as advanced communication and information systems and networks, needed to be vigorously promoted and sustained.

The report stated that, in their national reports on activities undertaken to implement the Global Programme of Action, Governments had provided insufficient detail on their efforts to develop and intensify cooperation in law enforcement and mutual legal assistance. The international community had to accord priority to ensure the flow of information for operational and intelligence purposes; that would enhance the capacity of communication and information systems to fortify border and internal controls against the flow of drug traffic. It was recommended that modern information technology should be incorporated as a basic tool of day-to-day law enforcement operations.

The Secretary-General observed that since a simplified questionnaire for the submission of national reports had been introduced four years earlier, only 26 States and one Territory had reported to UNDCP on a regular basis. A further 36 States had reported sporadically and some major players on the international scene had failed to report. To enable the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the General Assembly to monitor and analyse in depth government efforts to implement the Global Programme of Action, there was a need for more Governments to submit replies to the questionnaire conscientiously and promptly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1997/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1997/40 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Contribution to the strengthening of the Global Programme of Action: anti-drug strategy in the Americas

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the importance of the implementation of the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on 23 February 1990, and recognizing the necessity of strengthening the mechanisms and principles contained therein,

1. Welcomes the joint efforts of States of the Americas to achieve the approval and adoption of a strategy for dealing with the drug problem in the Americas, in strict conformity with the principles of international law and with due regard for the principles of shared responsibility, comprehensiveness and a balanced approach to action aimed at reducing both demand and supply, on a global and multidisciplinary basis;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the document entitled "Anti-drug strategy in the hemisphere", approved by the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States at its twentieth regular session, held at Buenos Aires in October 1996, and signed at Montevideo in December 1996;

3. Urges the international community to take due account of the anti-drug strategy in the hemisphere as a significant contribution to the strengthening of the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its fortieth annual session in Vienna from 18 to 25 March. It adopted six resolutions on various drug control issues and recommended to the Eco-conomic and Social Council for adoption six draft resolutions and five draft decisions.

The Council, by decision 1997/237 of 21 July, took note of the Commission's report on its fortieth session [E/1997/28/Rev.1]. On the same date, by decision 1997/233, the Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's forty-first session in 1998. Also, by decision 1997/235 of 21 July, the Council decided that a reconvened session should be held in December to approve the initial programme budget for 1998-1999 and the second and final revision of the programme budget for 1996-1997 for the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP). The reconvened session took place on 3 and 4 December (see above, under "Administrative and budgetary matters").

By decision 1997/234 of 21 July, the Council decided that, in its capacity as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, to be held in 1998 (see above), the Commission should meet for five days in a special segment.

Major issues in 1997

Demand reduction

At its fortieth session in March, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a report on the world situation with regard to drug abuse [E/CN.7/1997/3], which stated that, generally speaking, the abuse of amphetamines, cannabis and opiates seemed to be on the increase, while the abuse of cocaine and hallucinogens was stable but at high levels. Cannabis was the most frequently reported drug of abuse, with all regions of the world reporting its abuse; it seemed also to be the most prevalent drug among the general population. Oceania was the subregion with the highest reported annual prevalence of cannabis abuse, while East and South-East Asia had the lowest rates. Most of the countries reporting opiate abuse also reported a steadily increasing trend.

Opiate-type drugs were the second most frequently reported drugs of abuse, with 69 countries reporting 1.2 million abusers. However, since several major opiate consumption countries did not provide any figures, the reported number represented a considerable underestimation. High rates of opiate abuse were reported by all regions of the world except the Caribbean. High prevalence of heroin abuse was reported by Brazil, Portugal and the United States. Cocaine abuse was reported by 51 countries with an estimated 10.9 million abusers; consumption seemed to be stabilizing. Many countries also reported a gradual stabilization of illicit consumption of sedatives. Abusers of amphetamine-type drugs were estimated at 6 million from among 37 reporting countries, with Europe being the leading region, followed by the Americas. There were some 2.9 million hallucinogen abusers reported from 26 countries, covering most regions except western Asia.

With few exceptions, countries reporting seizures of drugs usually also reported illicit consumption of the same types of drug, an exception being some types of sedatives, for which many countries in South America reported illicit consumption without corresponding reports of seizures. The reason, suggested the report, could be that some of those drugs were domestically manufactured, or it could also be the result of insufficient enforcement of prescription rules and regulations.

As a result of the increased awareness of the risk of contracting infections like HIV or hepatitis through the injection of drugs, there had been a slight increase in inhaling, smoking or sniffing as opposed to injecting; however, injecting drug use was reported by 121 countries and territories, and injecting drug users were the second largest group at risk for HIV infection in the Americas and Europe.

There had been an increase in drug abuse by young people in several countries, said the report, and the initiation into drug abuse was taking place at an earlier age than before. Globally, there was a greater availability of drugs as well as an increased variety, and drug abuse behaviour patterns were becoming more homogeneous around the world. School activities appeared to be the most widespread form of prevention across the world; approaches focused on factors that could lead to drug taking or could protect young people from drug use. However, although street children and school drop-outs were recognized as being at the highest risk for drug abuse, only a few activities were reported as targeting those groups.

Most countries had stated that they did not have an articulated treatment policy, and treatment for drug abuse was carried out in psychiatric hospitals, general hospitals and residential treatment centres. In addition to medicated detoxification, traditional medicine models and acupuncture treatment were available in some countries. Methadone was by far the most commonly prescribed drug for maintenance purposes. In general, social reintegration seemed to be the least addressed aspect of demand reduction, and demand reduction programmes and treatment support for prisoners with drug-related problems were not commonly available.

The Commission also had before it a Secretariat report on the effects on individuals, society and international drug control of the prescription of narcotic drugs to drug addicts [E/CN.7/1997/7]. The report contained the position of the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) on the controlled distribution of heroin to drug addicts, prepared in response to a 1995 Commission request [YUN 1995, p. 1286]. WHO had also been asked to provide an opinion on the subject, but it was not yet officially available. The INCB President stated that the international drug control system had evolved with the common understanding that free and unrestricted availability of narcotic drugs to people for non-medical purposes led to widespread abuse with serious public health consequences, and he pointed out that the expansion of clinical trials or treatment schemes involving heroin presented a danger to that system.

The report also contained an overview of current practices in the prescription of narcotic drugs to drug addicts in different countries, noting that such drugs were prescribed to address the long-term problem of chronic drug addiction and to respond to a sharp increase in injecting drug use. Methadone was the most commonly prescribed drug; although some States found methadone prescription to be effective in changing the behaviour of drug addicts, others doubted its effectiveness or instead concentrated on policies designed to influence the behaviour of people so that they did not take part in any drug abuse. In only a few States was heroin prescribed to drug addicts.

In a 25 March resolution [res. 5(XL)] on regional and global demand reduction strategies, the Commission encouraged UNDCP to continue providing information and statistics on the worldwide situation with regard to demand reduction. The UNDCP Executive Director was asked, in collaboration with WHO and international non-governmental organizations, and drawing on extrabudgetary resources, to continue to gather data about and to assess the existing modalities and techniques of treatment of drug abuse, as well as their application at the regional level, including an assessment of results and efficacy. Such an analysis should be widely disseminated, in particular to States that lacked relevant experience.

Supply reduction

Availability of opiates for licit needs

In 1997, INCB examined the issues affecting the supply of opiate raw materials and the demand for opiates for licit requirements and the means of maintaining a lasting balance between the two. In its report for 1997 [E/INCB/1997/1], the Board stated that, judging from the trends of recent years, the annual aggregate consumption of opiates was likely to rise gradually in the next few years, with some fluctuations. In 1997, it was estimated that global production of opiate raw materials could reach a new record level of 298.2 tonnes in morphine equivalent. In response to the need to build up sufficient stocks of opiate raw materials to ensure adequate supply in years of poor harvest, three of the five main producing countries (Australia, France and Turkey) further increased their estimates for the areas to be under opium poppy cultivation in 1998; for 1997, a surplus of 58 tonnes in morphine equivalent was expected, whereas for 1998, the projected surplus would be about 130 tonnes. In contrast, India had reduced its estimate for 1998 in view of the fact that its opium stocks had built up again. In Spain, the estimate for 1998 was at the same level as that of 1997.

The Board noted that information, including advance statistical data furnished on the licit cultivation of opium poppy and on the production and stocks of opium and poppy straw for the manufacture of narcotic drugs, was not always complete or provided in a timely manner. As such information was a basic and important element for the projection of the global production of opiate raw materials, the Board urged the Governments of producer countries to ensure that the required information was as accurate as possible and submitted in a timely manner, with a view to enabling the Board to make more meaningful projections and provide Governments with more reliable data.

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/19 [YUN 1996, p. 1158], an informal consultation was organized during the Commission's March session. It was concluded that the increased areas for opium poppy cultivation in the major producing countries in 1997 had brought about a positive impact on the situation regarding stocks of opiate raw materials. However, the current stock level in respect of concentrate of poppy straw was still not sufficient to meet the world demand should there be a poor harvest.

In a 24 March resolution [res. 3(XL)], the Commission urged all Governments to consider, as a matter of priority, adopting the recommendations contained in the INCB special report entitled Availability of Opiates for Medical Needs [YUN 1996, p. 1158]. The Commission requested UNDCP to implement the report's recommendations, in particular when assisting Governments in the drafting of national drug control legislation, and by including relevant provisions in national drug control master plans. INCB was commended for its efforts in promoting adherence to the provisions of the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382], which required the adequate availability of opiates for legitimate medical needs. The Commission encouraged the Board to pursue implementation of the relevant measures specified in the special report. It also invited WHO to implement the recommendations of the special report, within the system of control established under the 1961 Convention. The Commission requested INCB to reassess the situation by the year 2000 and asked the Secretary-General to transmit its resolution to all Governments and relevant international organizations for consideration and implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1997/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1997/38 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986, 1987/31 of 26 May 1987, 1988/10 of 25 May 1988, 1989/15 of 22 May 1989, 1990/31 of 24 May 1990, 1991/43 of 21 June 1991, 1992/30 of 30 July 1992, 1993/37 of 27 July 1993, 1994/5 of 20 July 1994, 1995/19 of 24 July 1995 and 1996/19 of 23 July 1996,

Emphasizing that the need to balance the global licit supply of opiates against the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes is central to the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control,

Noting the fundamental need for international co-operation and solidarity with the traditional supplier countries in drug abuse control in general and in the universal application of the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 in particular,

Having considered the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1996, in which it is stated that in 1995 global consumption of opiates exceeded the production of opiate raw materials, and noting that efforts were made by the two traditional supplier countries, India and Turkey, to maintain, together with other producing countries, the balance between supply and demand,

Noting the importance of opiates in pain relief therapy as advocated by the World Health Organization,

1. Urges all Governments to continue to contribute to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific needs, the achievement of which would be facilitated by maintaining, insofar as their constitutional and legal systems permit, support to the traditional supplier countries, and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production and manufacture for export;

2. Urges Governments of all producing countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and to take effective measures to prevent illicit production or diversion of opiate raw materials to illicit channels;

3. Urges consumer countries to assess their needs for opiates realistically and to communicate those needs to the International Narcotics Control Board in order to ensure easy supply;

4. Commends the Board for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and in particular:

(a) In urging the Governments concerned to adjust global production of opiate raw materials to a level corresponding to actual licit needs and to avoid unforeseen imbalances between the licit supply of and demand for opiates caused by the sales of products manufactured from seized and confiscated drugs;

(b) In arranging informal meetings during sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs with the main States importing and producing opiate raw materials;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

Amphetamine-type stimulants

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a report [E/CN.7/1997/6] of the Expert Meeting on Amphetamine-type Stimulants (ATS) (Shanghai, China, November 1996) [YUN 1996, p. 1161] which had reviewed national and international regulatory regimes pertaining to ATS and their precursors, recognized and drew attention to the grave threat posed by the abuse of ATS and recommended policies and countermeasures.

During the general debate at its March session [E/1997/28/Rev.1], the Commission expressed concern at the deteriorating trends in illicit traffic in and abuse of stimulants, particularly ATS, and strongly supported the recommendations adopted by the Expert Meeting in Shanghai. UNDCP was invited to support and coordinate, in collaboration with INCB, the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/29 [YUN 1996, p. 1161], on action to strengthen international co-operation to control precursors and their substitutes used in the illicit manufacture of controlled substances, in particular ATS, and to prevent their diversion, and the recommendations of the Expert Meeting. The Commission also invited UNDCP to assist in the dissemination and exchange of information on specific cases of clandestine manufacture, including new methods of manufacturing, the precursors used and illicit trafficking routes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1997/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1997/41 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Implementation of comprehensive measures to counter the illicit manufacture, trafficking and abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned about the economic and social consequences of the rapid and widespread increase in the illicit manufacture, trafficking and abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants listed in the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and their analogues,

Concerned about the continued availability to drug traffickers of chemicals listed in tables I and II of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, and about the emergence of substitute chemicals and different processes used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants,

Aware of the progress made in the regulation and monitoring of shipments of controlled chemicals, resulting from cooperation between the competent national and regional authorities of a number of States and the assistance of the International Narcotics Control Board,

Recognizing the need for the establishment of a mechanism for the rapid exchange of information on shipments of concern of listed precursor chemicals and on suspicious shipments of those chemicals in particular,

Recognizing also the important role of the Board in monitoring and facilitating the implementation of measures designed to strengthen cooperation in preventing the diversion of chemicals into illicit manufacture of psychotropic substances and the diversion of psychotropic substances from licit manufacture and trade into illicit trafficking,

Welcoming the continuing efforts of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Board to address, in a comprehensive way, problems of amphetamine-type stimulants, including activities related to the recommendations contained in the report of the Expert Meeting on Amphetamine-type Stimulants, held at Shanghai, China, from 25 to 29 November 1996,

Taking note with appreciation of the study entitled Amphetamine-type Stimulants: A Global Review, the report of the Expert Meeting, the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1996 and the report entitled Precursors and Chemicals Frequently Used in the Illicit Manufacture of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances: Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1996 on the Implementation of Article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988,

Welcoming the multifaceted nature of the recommendations contained in the report of the Expert Meeting, which cover prevention, education, information, precursor control, legislation and regulation of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors,

Welcoming also the multilateral initiative jointly proposed by the United States of America and the European Union to prevent the diversion of precursor chemicals from international commerce,

Stressing the importance of the initiative of the European Union involving the launching of an early warning mechanism, and welcoming its willingness to share experiences with Member States and with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme,

Recalling its resolutions 1995/20 of 24 July 1995 and 1996/29 of 24 July 1996,

I

General measures

1. Takes note with appreciation of the recommendations of the Expert Meeting on Amphetamine-type Stimulants, held at Shanghai, China, from 25 to 29 November 1996, and encourages Governments to review the report of the Expert Meeting and all its recommendations thoroughly, with a view to the adoption of an appropriate decision on those recommendations by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-first session;

2. Urges Governments to give serious consideration to implementing, to the extent possible, prior to their endorsement by the Commission, the recommendations of the Expert Meeting;

3. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources:

(a) To continue work in the field of amphetamine-type stimulants and to translate the recommendations of the Expert Meeting into a practical action plan for subregional, regional and international implementation, as appropriate;

(b) To develop the recommendations of the Expert Meeting into an appropriate format for consideration by the Commission at its forty-first session, with a view to making recommendations for endorsement by the General Assembly at its special session devoted to the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, to be held in June 1998;

4. Requests Governments and regional organizations, as they establish mechanisms for the collection of data on the licit and illicit manufacture, trafficking and use of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors, to cooperate and coordinate with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the International Narcotics Control Board;

5. Urges Governments to take the necessary measures for effective compliance with the provisions of the international drug control treaties relating to the advertisement of drugs, in particular those described in the report of the Expert Meeting;

6. Invites the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources, to consider the use of the Internet and other media tools to disseminate accurate and reliable information on amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors;

7. Urges Governments to ensure rational use of medically prescribed amphetamine-type stimulants and, in particular, to monitor the safety and efficacy of their long-term administration.

II

Measures to counter the illicit manufacture, trafficking and abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants

1. Invites Governments and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources where necessary, in collaboration with interested non-governmental organizations, to initiate and evaluate regularly public awareness campaigns, targeted at all levels of society, on the adverse health, social and economic consequences of amphetamine-type stimulants and, in general, to strengthen demand reduction efforts at both the national and international levels;

2. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources, and the Director-General of the World Health Organization, with the assistance of Governments:

(a) To identify, document and disseminate information on evidence-based practices applied in primary and secondary intervention in cases involving the abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants;

(b) To continue to improve the level of understanding of, and to develop the scientific basis necessary for, adequate policy-making by undertaking, and coordinating as necessary, studies of an international nature on the health consequences, including treatment, and on the social, cultural and economic consequences of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants;

3. Urges concerned Governments, in cooperation with relevant international organizations, such as the International Criminal Police Organization and the World Customs Organization, to establish regional and subregional initiatives for the exchange of information and technical cooperation, in order to promote coordinated international action in the fight against illicit demand for and supply of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors;

4. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources, to promote the further development of the drug profiling/signature analysis project in support of scientific approaches to law enforcement and to provide Member States with technical support for profiling programmes designed to identify the sources and routes of illicit manufacture and trafficking;

5. Requests Governments to provide available evidence and data to the International Narcotics Control Board on chemicals frequently used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants, and requests the Board to assess that information for possible inclusion in a limited international special surveillance list to be established for use by the international community;

6. Urges Governments:

(a) To consider applying civil, criminal and administrative sanctions to those who knowingly supply non-controlled chemicals for the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants;

(b) To establish mechanisms for international cooperation between law enforcement and other relevant agencies in order to support investigations where competent national authorities were able to determine that non-controlled chemicals were being used for the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants;

7. Urges Governments, in States where illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants exists:

(a) To improve, in particular by a system of licensing and inspection, the monitoring of the domestic manufacture and distribution of key precursors of amphetamine-type stimulants listed in table I of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

(b) To support research by competent authorities in order to determine which non-controlled chemical substances are being used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants;

8. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources, in consultation with the International Narcotics Control Board, to assist Governments, as required, by providing technical advice on ways of establishing which non-controlled chemical substances are being used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants;

9. Urges Governments to establish the necessary legal basis for the prevention of the clandestine manufacture of and trafficking in new amphetamine-type stimulants and for that purpose:

(a) To exchange information about the new non-controlled amphetamine-type stimulants with other concerned Governments;

(b) To consider developing flexible and anticipatory scheduling approaches for analogues of controlled substances and other substitutes, for example, by the emergency scheduling of structurally similar groups or by the establishment of controls based on similarities in structure or pharmacological effects;

(c) To cooperate in ensuring the compatibility of such legislation;

10. Urges the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, drawing on extrabudgetary resources, to initiate a review of the various means, such as generic scheduling, used by Governments to control amphetamine-type stimulants and their by-products or analogues that can be obtained by chemical modification and that produce similar pharmacological effects, with the aim of facilitating discussion at all levels within the United Nations system, in order to curb the proliferation of those substances.

Verification of the legitimacy of transactions

1. Requests Governments to make every effort to verify the legitimacy of individual transactions involving the precursors of amphetamine-type stimulants listed in table I and, where possible, those listed in table II of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, using the guidelines disseminated by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme for use by national authorities in preventing the diversion of precursors and essential chemicals, which were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1993/40 of 27 July 1993;

2. Requests Governments of States exporting those precursors referred to in paragraph 1 above, prior to permitting shipments to proceed, to inquire with the authorities of importing States about the legitimacy of transactions of concern and to inform the International Narcotics Control Board of the action taken, in particular when they do not receive any reply to their inquiries;

3. Also requests Governments of States exporting such precursors to inform the States concerned and the Board, as soon as possible, if export orders are cancelled pending a reply to inquiries made to importing States;

4. Requests Governments of both importing and exporting States, in cooperation with the Board, to take appropriate action to protect the legitimate interests of industries that cooperate in inquiries to verify the legitimacy of transactions involving the precursors specified in paragraph 1 above;

5. Also requests Governments of importing and exporting States to take steps to initiate a cooperative, rapid and effective exchange of information, with each other and with the Board, concerning stopped or cancelled shipments of such precursors, in order to alert Governments of other States that might be targeted as points of diversion;

6. Encourages Governments to consider making voluntary contributions to assist the Programme in the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation as a matter of priority.

Illicit trafficking

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a Secretariat report on illicit drug trafficking [E/CN.7/1997/4 & Corr.1], which provided an overview of global trafficking trends and patterns and outlined new routes and modes of transportation used by traffickers, who increasingly took advantage of enhanced international trade and transportation networks to transport drugs to different parts of the world. It also explored law enforcement methods, such as controlled delivery and profiling operations, as possible means of counteracting the threat of drug trafficking.

Noting that its statistics related mainly to 1995, the report stated that the geographical spread of illicit drug trafficking had grown significantly over the preceding decade, with trafficking and abuse being reported in countries previously unaffected. The report noted that drug traffickers were taking advantage of trade and economic liberalization trends to increase the volumes of drug shipments using international trade and transportation. In 1995, the number of countries reporting cocaine seizures was 100 per cent higher than in the early 1980s, and 89 per cent more countries were affected by heroin seizures; for amphetamine-type stimulants, the increase in reporting countries was 60 per cent. Only for cannabis, cultivated in almost all regions, did the extent of globalization remain unchanged.

Key trafficking regions and new trafficking patterns for heroin and cocaine were developing in countries of Africa, the Caribbean, central and eastern Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States. Africa and eastern Europe were also increasingly affected by traffic in psychotropic substances and their diversion to illicit purposes.

Among the areas identified in the report as being in need of attention was the use of commercial air, land and sea trade by drug traffickers. In particular, the use of containerized cargo shipments to conceal significant amounts of drugs was a growing problem worldwide.

The implementation of advanced law enforcement techniques and countermeasures against drug trafficking remained limited, according to the Secretariat. UNDCP records indicated that less than 25 per cent of all countries reporting significant heroin and cocaine trafficking problems actually implemented controlled delivery and a similar situation applied with regard to the use of risk assessment and profiling programmes.

The report stated that an accurate assessment of the extent of illicit drug trafficking remained limited by the quality and reliability of available data. Relevant time-series data, which were necessary for policy-relevant cross-national comparative analysis of trends and patterns of illicit drug trafficking, had not been provided to UNDCP.

Maritime cooperation

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in a 25 March resolution [E/1997/28/Rev.1 (res. 4(XL))], noting the grave danger posed by the illicit traffic by sea of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, expressed its appreciation to UNDCP for holding, through its pilot project on maritime drug law enforcement training and models for legislation, an expert group meeting to elaborate a training guide on maritime drug law enforcement. It encouraged Governments to avail themselves of the training guide, once it was finalized, to organize national and regional maritime training programmes. Governments able to support those programmes were encouraged to provide maritime law enforcement trainers, individually or on the basis of existing regional cooperation mechanisms, such as the European Union MAR-info. The Commission requested UNDCP to organize seminars, similar to the trial regional maritime training seminar for Asia and the Pacific planned for October in Japan, in other regions of the world. It looked forward to the convening of an expert group meeting, envisaged by the pilot project, to prepare appropriate models for maritime drug law enforcement legislation for Governments to consider in their implementation of articles 2 and 17 of the 1988 Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690]. The Commission noted the important contribution made to the successful preparation of the training guide by an expert group and the generosity of Governments in providing self-funded experts for that group. It commended the pilot project as an efficient and cost-effective example of multi-lateral cooperation to assist Governments in implementing the provisions of the international drug control treaties, and urged UNDCP to use it as a model for other projects.

Subsidiary bodies

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a note by the Secretariat [E/CN.7/1997/4/Add.1] containing a summary of recent action by Governments to improve regional and sub-regional cooperation in drug control activities, as reflected in meetings of subsidiary bodies held since the Commission's thirty-ninth (1996) session. Two regional meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies (HONLEA) were convened in 1996: the Ninth Meeting of HONLEA, Africa (Cairo, Egypt, 16-20 June); and the Twenty-first Meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific (Manila, Philippines, 4-8 November).

The topics discussed in the working groups of the two meetings were illicit manufacture and distribution of stimulants, drug courier profiling, controlled delivery, coordination and improved liaison between law enforcement agencies, gathering of intelligence data at entry and exit control points, control of postal and courier parcels and prevention of corruption within drug law enforcement agencies. Those topics were of general interest and relevance to all the regions. However, illicit manufacture and distribution of stimulants were growing problems of special concern to the meeting of HONLEA, Asia and the Pacific, and were examined in one of its working groups.

Most of the recommendations of the meetings highlighted the need to collect, disseminate, share and exchange information and intelligence in a timely and organized manner at the national, bilateral, regional and international levels. A clear policy on transborder cooperation was deemed necessary to promote effective cooperation among law enforcement agencies and specialized intergovernmental organizations such as the Universal Postal Union and the World Customs Organization.

After the Ninth Meeting of HONLEA, Africa, two important cooperation instruments were concluded in the region: the Plan of Action on Drug Abuse Control and Illicit Drug Trafficking in Africa, adopted by the Organization of African Unity at its Thirty-second Assembly of Heads of State and Government (Yaounde, Cameroon, July 1996) (see above, under "UN International Drug Control Programme"); and the Protocol on Combating Illicit Drug Trafficking in the Southern African Development Community (SADC) Region, adopted by the SADC States members (Maseru, Lesotho, August 1996).

Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East

The Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East held its thirty-second session in Baku, Azerbaijan, from 17 to 21 February [E/CN.7/1997/4/Add.2]. It recommended to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs the approval of two draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, one concerning the Baku Accord and the other relating to the Subcommission's working languages (see below); it also accepted the withdrawal of Sweden as a member of the Subcommission, noting with appreciation Sweden's contribution to the early development of its work.

The issues addressed by the Subcommission's working groups were: illicit drug trafficking by sea and smuggling of drugs in containers; review of the establishment and functioning of cooperation mechanisms in the region; exchange of views and information on drug-trafficking organizations; illicit trafficking in precursors; and illicit cultivation, production and manufacture of drugs in the region. The central themes of the discussions were the promotion of cooperation in law enforcement and the exchange of information on drug traffickers; harmonization of various bilateral, multilateral and regional approaches to controlling substances used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; and the eradication of illicit crops and the development of programmes to advance crop substitution and alternative development projects.

A major outcome of the Subcommission's session was the adoption of the Baku Accord, the focus of which was regional and cross-regional collaboration on a range of technical matters concerning illicit cultivation, production, distribution, trafficking and consumption of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. It was envisaged that the Accord would provide the basis for stepping up concerted measures to suppress illicit drugs through a multidisciplinary, inter-agency approach designed to achieve more effective coordination of transborder activities.

On 21 July [meeting 36], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1997/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1997/39 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors

The Economic and Social Council,

Convinced that the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors will contribute to the enhancement of the struggle against illicit trafficking in drugs,

1. Takes note of the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution;

2. Urges Member States, in accordance with the provisions of the Baku Accord, to take all appropriate measures at the national and international levels to continue to combat the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in all its forms;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to inform all Member States, relevant specialized agencies and entities of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations of the adoption of the Baku Accord;

4. Urges Member States to take, as appropriate, all necessary measures to implement the Baku Accord in accordance with their national legislation;

5. Invites Member States to promote public campaigns, including the use of the mass media, to enhance public awareness of drug abuse and drug prevention programmes.

ANNEX

Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors

A. Nature and extent of the problem

1. The Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East opened its thirty-second session at Baku on 17 February 1997 with an expanded membership, better representing the diverse character of the region as a whole and of its subregions, and affording greater possibilities for more in-depth discussion of the illicit drug-trafficking situation and its impact on the region and of new cooperative modalities for effective counteraction. The new composition of the Subcommittee is indicative of global developments in illicit drug trafficking, which are reflected in conditions in some States in the Near and Middle East.

2. The expanding and complex system of global organized drug crime, involving cultivation, production, trafficking, distribution and consumption activities, which penetrate various sectors, has already left its mark on the region. Associated criminal activities, especially narcotics-related terrorism and the arms trade, have assumed alarming proportions in spite of law enforcement efforts.

3. The consequences of illicit drug trafficking in the Near and Middle East are a mirror image of developments at the global level, characterized by the erosion of the hard-won benefits of development, the diversion of some countries from their developmental path, the destabilization of the socio-economic order, the destruction of the moral and social fabric of society and the undermining of the quality of life of the peoples of the region.

4. As the illicit traffic in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances are serious and growing concerns in the region, the development of an accurate annual estimate of the situation and trends is essential to the successful development and implementation of regional strategies and subregional programmes. An accurate assessment of the magnitude and dimensions of the illicit drug problem in the region is the necessary starting point for both rational policy-making and the promotion of public awareness. In the absence of a reliable and comprehensive intelligence assessment, substantial misconceptions might arise and resources might be misallocated. Moreover, early detection and subsequent action aimed at controlling emerging problems might become extremely difficult.

B. Declaration

We, representatives of the States members of the Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East,

Having gathered at the thirty-second session of the Subcommittee, held at Baku from 17 to 21 February 1997, to consider the Baku Accord on Regional Cooperation against Illicit Cultivation, Production, Trafficking, Distribution and Consumption of Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances and Their Precursors,

Deeply concerned about the spread of drug abuse in the region and its effects on youth and on future generations,

Deeply concerned also about the rising illicit cultivation of narcotic crops and the illicit production of and trafficking in drugs, which pose the main threat to the political, economic, social and cultural structure and stability of the region,

Reaffirming our commitment to combat the multidimensional problems involving illicit drugs,

Convinced that concerted action and comprehensive, well-coordinated programmes are the only means by which to fight problems involving illicit drugs,

Have agreed on the following:

1. Nationally and regionally coordinated strategies should be developed for the implementation of the mandates and recommendations contained in the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session, on 23 February 1990, the Tehran Declaration adopted by the Ministerial-level Conference at the twenty-ninth session of the Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East, held at Tehran from 24 to 28 October 1992, and other relevant international drug control instruments;

2. Training in the field of drug law enforcement is a priority for many States of the region, and interested national authorities should seek the assistance of competent intergovernmental bodies in the development of inter-agency multidisciplinary training courses for law enforcement officials of the region, taking into account socio-economic differences, as well as evaluating on an ongoing basis the relevance and impact of all training material and programmes in their respective national circumstances;

3. Efforts should be made by the international community and intergovernmental bodies and organizations to establish cooperative relations with the authorities in Afghanistan in order to assist in the eradication of illicit cultivation, production and trafficking of narcotic drugs, especially in the drug-producing areas of the country, and to provide them with packages of aid and the means of economic reform, such as human development and capacity-building, mobilization of resources and industrial development, to enable them to resort to alternative sources of income, which would provide better economic possibilities for future generations;

4. Focal points should be established in the capital cities of States members of the Subcommission in order to improve cooperation and coordination at the national and regional levels, and their titles and addresses should be communicated to their counterparts in the region to enable them to undertake the following action:

(a) To discuss with one another, as frequently as necessary, operational drug control matters and other modi operandi;

(b) To develop drug intelligence networks to ensure the rapid and secure exchange of information on all illicit drug-trafficking operations;

(c) To share expertise and knowledge in drug law enforcement;

(d) To promote field visits for drug control officers in the region in order to build up mutual confidence and trust, which are conducive to smooth operations;

(e) To exchange information on drug-trafficking trends and trend indicators, as well as intelligence information on the movement of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances, precursors and methods of concealing assets, bearing in mind the fact that criminal organizations employ a wide range of sophisticated financial mechanisms, including corporate entities and offshore financial havens, to conceal the origin of their funds;

(f) To exchange skills and techniques used in the detection, investigation and suppression of offences involving illicit drug trafficking and the collection of evidence;

(g) To cooperate and coordinate efforts towards the use of controlled delivery in cases relating to trafficking in narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors and to money laundering;

(h) To harmonize drug legislation, in particular with regard to the application of adequate penalties for drug offences;

(i) To facilitate mutual cooperation regarding the identification, seizure, forfeiture and sharing of proceeds proved to be derived from drug-related criminality;

5. All States should be urged to take effective action to control and prevent the diversion of substances frequently used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as the materials and equipment used in their manufacture. In particular, States of the region should:

(a) Consider notifying the Secretary-General, under the provisions of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, article 12, paragraph 10 (a), that any country exporting to them a substance in table I of the Convention should supply them with advance notification of such export, and request that such notification be extended to cover substances in table II as well;

(b) Accede, if they are exporters of substances in table I or table II of the 1988 Convention, to the request of the International Narcotics Control Board to provide such pre-export notifications voluntarily to importing countries, even in the absence of a specific request for such notification;

6. States of the region should require import authorizations for all substances in schedules III and IV of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

7. All States in the region should be urged to adopt further legislative and administrative measures to prevent and sanction money laundering;

8. All States members of the Subcommission should be urged to make every effort to ensure that the present Accord becomes generally known and is observed and implemented in full in accordance with their domestic laws;

9. The international community should be requested to assist and cooperate in the development of illicit crop eradication programmes and to promote alternative development programmes;

10. As proposed in the international drug control treaties, the international community, including intergovernmental bodies, should assist transit countries in enhancing their capabilities to suppress illicit drug trafficking;

11. The international community, including intergovernmental bodies, should provide financial assistance to States of the region that lack technical equipment and in which the Government exercises control over licit drugs and combats illicit trafficking;

12. To stem the flow of illicit drugs, reducing illicit drug demand is as important as reducing illicit drug supply and trafficking. Significant progress in drug control cannot be made without that balanced approach. Prevention and demand reduction must be intensified and accorded the high priority that they deserve;

13. Comprehensive preventive programmes must be designed to emphasize a multisectoral and intersectoral approach as an integral part of national development planning. They should focus on protecting young people, who are at risk of becoming consumers and traffickers, and should safeguard their well-being and quality of life, thereby maintaining a drug-free society. Using all preventive, educational, medical and legal information available, such programmes should raise the awareness of youth of the negative consequences of drug abuse and should be tailored individually to target specific groups of potential young abusers;

14. In order to maintain the traditional privacy of the family recognized in most States in the region, States members of the Subcommission should consider ensuring anonymity to any abuser who undergoes medical examination, treatment and rehabilitation;

15. All States should be called upon to strengthen their national legal and judicial systems in conformity with the existing international drug control treaties, in order to improve and carry out effective drug control activities in cooperation with other States;

16. States in the region should consider facilitating the extradition of persons accused of drug-trafficking offences and refrain from granting political asylum or other forms of protection to such persons;

17. All States should recognize the negative impact on anti-trafficking activities by customs, border-control and law enforcement authorities created by the absence or loss of effective exercise of sovereignty in any part of a State because of internal strife, foreign occupation or other causes, which may give rise to illicit transit traffic in drugs, and should condemn any violation of national borders and territorial integrity;

18. The Subcommittee should continue to meet on an annual basis in a capital city of the region;

19. The Secretary-General is invited to consider, upon request by interested Governments, how the various elements contained in the present Accord might be carried out and to examine with them the most suitable modalities for following up appropriate activities at the national, regional and international levels;

20. The Secretary-General is also invited to transmit the text of the present Accord to all States Members of the United Nations to serve as a background document for the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, to be held in June 1998.

On 25 July [meeting 42], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1997/28/Rev.1], adopted resolution 1997/64 without vote [agenda item 7 (c)].

Working languages of the Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decisions 1993/246 of 27 July 1993 and 1996/248 of 23 July 1996, by which it authorized the enlargement of the membership of the Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East,

Noting that, of a total membership of twenty-four States, six of them, namely Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan, use Russian as the working lingua franca of their drug law enforcement agencies,

1. Decides that the Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East shall use Arabic, English and Russian as its working languages for future sessions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to adopt the necessary measures and provide the financial resources required for the implementation of the present resolution.

Chapter XV

Statistics

In 1997, further work was undertaken by the United Nations in the area of statistics, with special attention paid to international cooperation. At its February session, the Statistical Commission, the 24-member body that guided UN statistical activities, adopted revised international recommendations for statistics in the fields of construction, international trade and international migration, as well as population and housing censuses. In regard to trade statistics, the Commission recommended that all countries using an international commodity description and coding system supply their international trade statistics to the United Nations Statistics Division. Preparations continued for the 2000 world population and housing census, and the Commission endorsed the provisional principles and recommendations for the national censuses which were to be carried out by national authorities with UN assistance for developing countries. As a follow-up to recent major UN conferences, the Commission adopted 15 indicators, known as the Minimum National Social Data Set, as a way of measuring progress in certain areas of social development.

Work of Statistical Commission

The Statistical Commission held its twenty-ninth session in New York from 11 to 14 February 1997 [E/1997/24]. The Commission, which normally meets biennially, adopted revised international recommendations for construction statistics, international trade statistics, international migration statistics and population and housing consensus. It also adopted a revised Central Product Classification, as well as the Minimum National Social Data Set. After consideration of a number of initiatives undertaken by groups of countries and international organizations on a range of issues in economic statistics, such as globalization and informal sector statistics, the Commission agreed on the need to conduct an evaluation of the International Comparison Programme and appointed a steering committee to supervise the evaluation process. The Commission agreed that the Task Forces on national accounts, international trade statistics, environment statistics, service statistics and finance statistics should continue their work, but that the Task Force on Industrial and Construction Statistics, having largely accomplished its goals, should be discontinued. The Commission established a group of countries to explore new approaches to its own structure and activities, with the aim of strengthening the relationship between the regional commissions and the Commission and other international organizations. Taking into account the importance of wide and quick dissemination of statistical information, the Commission encouraged all international statistical agencies and bodies, task forces and other groups to use current communications technology, such as computer bulletin boards. The Commission endorsed the proposed work programme of the United Nations Statistics Division for the 1998-1999 biennium.

On 18 July, by decision 1997/219, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's 1997 report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its thirtieth (1999) session.

An in-depth evaluation of the UN statistics programme was carried out by the Office of Internal Oversight Services, which issued its report in March (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Economic statistics

Critical problems in economic statistics

During its February session, the Statistical Commission considered a report of the Expert Group on Critical Problems in Economic Statistics [E/CN.3/1997/2], submitted by the Secretary-General in October 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1167], and reports on selected critical problems in economic statistics [E/CN.3/1997/3], submitted by the Secretary-General in January 1997 in response to a 1995 request of the Commission [YUN 1995, p. 1292].

The Expert Group's report addressed the issues of user confidence in official economic statistics, fundamental principles of official statistics, and user confidence in the coverage, periodicity and timeliness and in the quality and relevance of official economic statistics.

The reports on selected critical problems contained information on the issues of globalization and economics of intangibles, which were prepared by the national statistical offices of Canada and the United Kingdom, respectively. Three informal consultation groups—the Voorburg Group, the London Group and the Ottawa Group—reported on their work on the quality of labour, resource accounting and the measurement of price change. The Australian Bureau of Statistics, the Department of Statistics of India and the Institut national de la statistique et des études économiques of France described their proposals for forming three such informal consultation groups in the areas of capital, informal sector statistics, and labour and compensation, respectively.

In an addendum [E/CN.3/1997/3/Add.1] to the reports on selected critical problems in economic statistics, the Secretary-General presented the terms of reference for a comprehensive review of the International Comparison Programme (ICP), which had been prepared by the UN Statistics Division in collaboration with the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) and the Statistical Office of the European Community (Eurostat) after consultations with experts. The terms of reference were developed in response to a 1996 request of the Statistical Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination [YUN 1996, p. 1166].

The Commission agreed on the need to conduct an evaluation of the global ICP to address the reservations by certain Member States about ICP implementation and the uses of ICP results, and the need to seek ways to improve the credibility of ICP data. It noted that the timing of an evaluation was appropriate since the regional and global results of the current round were expected to be available by the end of 1997. A steering committee was appointed to supervise the review process; the Commission suggested that the committee review the terms of reference as prepared by the Statistics Division in order to take into account the special problems involved in making comparisons between highly developed and developing countries, such as how to ensure that the items chosen reflected common characteristics and were representative of all countries being compared.

The Commission took note of the IMF work on the elaboration of standards for the dissemination of economic and financial statistics, and the work of the International Labour Organization on the dissemination of standards for labour statistics.

International economic and social classifications

The Statistical Commission considered the Secretary-General's 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 1170] on international economic and social classifications, which it had requested in 1995. Annexed to the report was the report of the second meeting of the Expert Group on International Classifications (New York, June 1996).

The Commission endorsed the development of a module on basic principles for use in the Common Code of Statistical Practice in the United Nations System. It also endorsed the recommendation that the name of the Expert Group be changed to Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications, reflecting the decision to consider international economic and social classifications as a family.

The Commission also considered a report of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics on the revised Provisional Central Product Classification (CPC), submitted by the Secretary-General in December 1996 [E/CN.3/1997/5]. The Group stated that it had reviewed CPC in the light of its members' experience, comments received from UN Member States, results of consultations with international organizations, and developments in other international classifications. Even though not all parts of CPC and its structure had been fully reviewed and revised, the Group found that significant improvements had been made, mainly to the services part of the classification. The revision also resulted in improvements at the more detailed levels of the classification and some changes to the higher-level groupings. The explanatory notes had been expanded to cover all the classes of CPC and had been changed from descriptive notes to itemized lists of products. The Group recognized that the structure of the goods part of CPC should be reviewed and revised in the light of the need to create a classification based on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System (HS) that could be better used to analyse domestic production and international trade statistics. Some of the goods part of CPC had already been updated.

The Commission recommended that the revised CPC be published as CPC Version 1.0, on the understanding that users would be alerted to plans for further improvement. It encouraged Member States to start implementing Version 1.0. It emphasized the importance of keeping the goods part of CPC in step with future revisions of HS, and recognized the need to continue to consult the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics in order to utilize its technical expertise for future revisions of CPC.

The third meeting of the Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications [ESA/STAT/AC.60/4] (New York, 1-3 December) considered the development plans and key problems of agencies responsible for international economic and social classifications and reviewed experiences in national implementation of international classifications, such as CPC and the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities. The meeting focused on reviewing proposals for identifying a set of best practices in classifications and made recommendations on the basic principles to guide classification work.

Environment statistics

The Task Force on Environment Statistics submitted a 3 December 1996 report [E/CN.3/1997/6] to the 1997 session of the Statistical Commission. The Commission had recommended in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1296] that the Task Force—which had been unable to hold its second meeting in 1996 as planned due to the absence of a majority of its members [YUN 1996, p. 1169]—develop a framework for the various activities, indicating their relative priority and links to the policy agenda of national and international environmental agencies. The report included information supplied by the members of the Task Force (UN and other organizations) and invited non-governmental organizations in response to a Statistics Division questionnaire.

The report summarized the plans and priorities of the various organizations under a common format, listing for each three categories of activities: basic environment statistics, environmental indicators and environmental accounting. Environment statistics comprised statistical variables collected through monitoring and primary statistical surveys and records. Environmental indicators were a selection from primary statistics and were typically targeted on key environmental concerns or policy objectives. Environmental accounting presented environmental data in a national accounting system that facilitated aggregation and cross-sectoral comparison.

After consideration of the report at its February session, the Commission stressed that the future work of the Task Force should focus on improved coordination of its programmes and activities and that there was a need to develop a closer linkage between environmental indicators and environmental accounting. The Commission considered basic environmental statistics to be of the highest priority, followed by environmental indicators and accounting. It also endorsed the establishment of a computer bulletin board system for sharing information on technical cooperation activities.

Service statistics

The Statistical Commission had before it in 1997 the progress report of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Service Statistics, which described the outcome of its fifth meeting in May 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1169]. The Task Force had come to the conclusion that the preparation of a yearbook on trade-in-services statistics would be premature and decided to draft a manual on the same subject instead. The Commission stressed the importance of ensuring consistency between the fifth edition of the IMF Balance of Payments Manual, CPC Version 1.0, the 1993 System of National Accounts (SNA) and the manual on trade-in-services statistics proposed by the Task Force, and requested that the contents of the proposed manual be consistent with the findings of the OECD Industry Committee on industrial statistics on globalization.

The Task Force met in New York on 26 and 27 June to discuss the draft manual [E/CN.3/AC.1/1998/L.2]. It made a number of recommendations regarding revisions and additions to the main chapters already drafted as well as on the content of the two remaining chapters. The four international organizations which were jointly funding the preparation of the manual—IMF, the World Trade Organization, Eurostat and OECD—were aiming to have the complete manual ready for the approval of the Statistical Commission in 1999.

Members of the Task Force agreed to change its name to Task Force on Statistics of International Trade in Services in order to reflect more accurately its current mandate.

Industrial and construction statistics

At its February session, the Statistical Commission considered a November 1996 report [E/CN.3/1997/9] of the Secretary-General on the revised International Recommendations for Construction Statistics. It had been prepared in response to a 1995 request of the Commission [YUN 1995, p. 1294] that the Statistics Division proceed with the revision of the Recommendations, and contained a brief description of the differences between the original and the revised recommendations.

According to the report, the revised version was similar in nature and content to the original version but differed in a number of important respects. The differences reflected a greater awareness of the methodological problems in the statistical surveys of construction activities. In particular, the revised version contained a more comprehensive discussion of statistical units, including the use of unregistered units, construction sites, and building projects and permits, as well as specific requirements for data on taxes on production and subsidies. The revised version took explicit account of own-account construction by households, considered important for developing countries, and recommended methodology for surveys of that component of construction activity. The special circumstances of developing countries were addressed in many instances throughout the revised version.

The Commission endorsed the work of the Task Force and agreed that it had largely accomplished its goals and should therefore be discontinued. It also recommended that the revised International Recommendations for Construction Statistics be published as part of the collection of UN recommendations.

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, at its thirty-first session (Geneva, 16-18 September) [ACC/1997/16], took note of the Task Force's discontinuation; however, it stated that OECD was continuing to investigate definitions of statistical units used by its member countries and would report to the Commission's Working Group.

International trade statistics

During its discussion on international trade statistics at its February session, the Statistical Commission considered a 1996 report of the Task Force on International Trade Statistics and the Secretary-General's 1996 report on the revised concepts and definitions for international merchandise trade statistics [YUN 1996, p. 1168].

The Commission decided on the order of priority for carrying out methodological work: first, preparation of a compilers' manual; second, a revision of Customs Areas of the World [Sales No. E.89.XVII.12]; and third, collection of technical information on index numbers of international trade statistics. The Commission encouraged all countries to supply the commodity breakdown of their current and past international trade statistics to the Statistics Division so that the Division could complete its database based on HS. It adopted the draft revised concepts and definitions for international merchandise trade statistics [PROV/ST/ESA/SER.M/52/Rev.2], subject to the Secretariat's incorporating amendments that would clarify the draft text while maintaining its structural integrity, and requested the Secretariat to publish and distribute it. The Commission also requested the Secretariat to harmonize further the concepts and definitions with SNA and the fifth edition of the IMF Balance of Payments Manual.

The ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities in September [ACC/1997/16] welcomed the report of the Task Force, noted its achievements and requested it to investigate the issue of inconsistency between the reported imports and reported exports of trading partners.

National accounts

Since the adoption of the System of National Accounts (SNA) in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1112], the Statistical Commission had been concerned with formulating a strategy to support SNA implementation at the international level. As requested by the Commission in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1293], the Task Force on National Accounts issued a report on progress in SNA implementation, which was transmitted to the Commission by the Secretary-General in November 1996 [E/CN.3/1997/12]. The report introduced the milestones for SNA implementation elaborated by the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA), and described how those milestones had been applied in a country-by-country assessment to determine the current state of national accounting. As a next step, the report proposed various options for the formulation of global implementation targets in the medium term (5-10 years). It was expected that, once the target had been identified, a plan of action would be developed to meet the objective. The report outlined the ISWGNA work programme and reviewed proposed priority areas for future work in the light of expressed country needs.

The main thrust of ISWGNA efforts had been to make the 1993 SNA known and understood. The SNA text had been disseminated in English, Arabic and Chinese. The French, Spanish and Russian translations had been completed. In addition to the printed version, the Statistics Division had produced a CD-ROM with features such as hyperlinks and search functions. The newsletter SNA News and Notes, issued biannually, was an important medium of information exchange. The Division had also set up a Web site and an e-mail address for easy communication. A series of regional and subregional workshops and training seminars were organized by ISWGNA members, in particular the regional commissions, aimed at enabling countries to formulate their own medium-term development strategies, taking into account the possible necessary reorientation of basic data collection.

The Statistical Commission, at its February 1997 session, commended the milestones defined by the Task Force as an appropriate tool for monitoring progress in the implementation of the 1993 SNA and suggested that a similar milestone approach be used for the implementation of other international statistical standards. It endorsed the proposed support system for the Task Force, noting in particular the need to develop guidelines and data for the household sector, including the informal sector. It agreed with the proposal to present the updated milestone assessment of countries to its future sessions. The Commission also decided that the new UN data questionnaire for national accounts, based on the 1993 SNA, should be implemented in 1999.

In September [ACC/1997/16], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities recognized the concern of regional commissions that countries would have difficulty with the new national accounts data questionnaire. It noted that the Statistics Division would work with those commissions to help them to deal with that development.

Finance statistics

At its February session, the Statistical Commission considered a November 1996 report [E/CN.3/1997/13] of the Task Force on Finance Statistics. The Task Force described its work on statistical methodologies, in particular on the fifth edition of the Balance of Payments Manual, as well as on revised manuals on monetary and financial statistics and on government finance statistics. A major effort was being made to ensure as complete a harmonization with the 1993 SNA as possible. The Task Force also outlined modalities for its further work.

The Commission took note of efforts to harmonize concepts and definitions in the areas of balance of payments, monetary and financial statistics and government finance statistics as used in the manuals with the 1993 SNA. In addition, the Commission endorsed proposed amendments to the Task Force's terms of reference, in order to incorporate a request that work programmes of international organizations in the field of finance statistics be presented periodically as a means of providing updated information and as the basis of discussion on particular issues.

In September, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities [ACC/1997/16] endorsed the extension of the Task Force's terms of reference, as proposed by the Task Force. However, the Subcommittee agreed that that extension would be subject to review at a later stage if the reporting on work programmes were to be done through a different process, such as the planned integrated presentation of work programmes.

Demographic and social statistics

2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme

In a December 1996 report on demographic and social statistics [E/CN.3/1997/14], the Secretary-General informed the Statistical Commission about the Secretariat's preparation for the 2000 World Population and Housing Census Programme and described the contents of the draft revised Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses.

Under the planned activities of the 2000 Census Programme, the Secretariat submitted a proposal for funding a project entitled "Training on the application of new technologies in population census operations" to be implemented from 1997 to 2000. It was aimed at organizing a series of training workshops for participants from developing countries on the use of microcomputers in various stages of population census operations. Another project, "Application of new technology in population data collection, processing, dissemination and presentation", would be carried out under the auspices of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific.

The Secretary-General also reported that the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), with support from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), had begun a project which included training workshops and advisory services to improve the capacity of the countries in transition to conduct population and housing censuses.

The Secretariat continued its work in preparing the revised Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses. An Expert Group meeting (New York, 9-13 September 1996) to review the draft revised principles and recommendations made a number of suggestions and recommended some refinements, clarifications and additions, which were incorporated in the version submitted to the Commission. The revised draft consisted of four parts on: operational aspects of censuses; topics for population censuses; topics for housing censuses; and census products and data utilization.

In February, the Commission endorsed the provisional principles and recommendations for censuses, adopted them for use in the 2000 round censuses and in future census decades, and requested the Secretariat to publish them in all official UN languages. It also requested the Statistics Division to prepare, in collaboration with the regional commissions, a report on the cost of conducting a decennial census.

tistical Programmes and Coordination, the Secretary-General said that there had been little systematic cross-national study of the costs of collecting statistics, particularly through censuses. That was partly due to the fact that census activities extended beyond the routine operations of a single unit of government and involved the contribution of many organizations so that the full costs of a census could not be easily determined. ECE had prepared a study entitled Costing Aspects of Population and Housing Censuses in Selected Countries in the UN/ECE Region [Sales No. E.96.II.E.15] which attempted to compare the census costs of France, Hungary, Sweden and the United Kingdom. Emphasizing the difficulty of obtaining costs on a comparable basis, the Secretariat suggested that, rather than compare census costs among countries, a more useful approach would be to provide guidance to countries on ways to accurately estimate census costs in a systematic manner, and proposed that a report be prepared along those lines for the Commission at its 1999 session.

In September, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities [ACC/1997/16] noted that the revised principles and recommendations had been amended by the Statistics Division, as requested by the Commission, and had been submitted for editing, translation and printing.

Demographic, social and migration statistics

At its February session, the Statistical Commission considered a November 1996 report [E/CN.3/1997/15] of the Secretary-General on the activities of the UN Secretariat under the demographic and social statistics programme during 1995-1996. The report contained sections on civil registration and vital statistics; human settlements and city statistics; crime and criminal justice statistics; impairment, disability and handicap statistics; and gender statistics. In a later addendum [E/CN.3/1997/15/Add.1], the Secretary-General summarized the draft revised recommendations on statistics of international migration. The report presented a set of improved definitions for the purpose of gathering information on international migration flows. The three definitions adopted were on country of usual residence, long-term migrant and short-term migrant. Those definitions were intended to be more straightforward than earlier versions, and they relied on the concept of residence to distinguish international migrants from other international travellers. The implementation of the revised definitions by existing statistical systems was expected to occur gradually. The draft also included a compilation of information on asylum-seekers and addressed the issue of measuring stocks related to the study of international migration.

By another addendum [YUN 1996, p. 1171], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission the results of the review of the draft recommendations on statistics of international migration by the 1996 ECE/Eurostat work session on migration statistics. The recommendations were viewed as a tool for improving migration statistics in some countries and as providing a basis for international comparability in that field.

The Commission at its February session adopted the draft revised recommendations on statistics of international migration and agreed on a set of revisions to be incorporated. The United Nations Population Division, which had collaborated with the Statistics Division in preparing those recommendations, was revising the recommendations, to be submitted for publication in 1998 (see also PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

UN conferences statistics

By a July 1996 note [E/CN.3/1997/16], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission a January 1996 report of the Expert Group on the Statistical Implications of Recent Major United Nations Conferences [YUN 1996, p. 1171]. The report was initially considered by the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in April 1996. The Working Group supported the report's emphasis on strengthening national capacities for collecting social statistics and using them for monitoring implementation of the social programmes of action adopted at recent major UN conferences.

The Statistical Commission, at its February 1997 session, endorsed the Minimum National Social Data Set (MNSDS), as recommended by the Working Group, with the substitution of the indicator "Contraceptive prevalence rate" in place of the indicator "Percentage of infants weighing less than 2,500 grams at birth, by sex". The Commission emphasized that the 15 indicators of MNSDS [YUN 1996, p. 1171] should be considered as a minimum and not a maximum list of indicators, and invited users to build on MNSDS to meet national needs and circumstances, as well as requirements in specific fields.

The Statistics Division undertook work in 1997 to implement MNSDS, as reported by the Secretary-General in an October note [E/CN.3/AC.1/1998/L.5]. Letters were sent to countries and to UN bodies and other international organizations, informing them of MNSDS and its use in responding to the needs highlighted by global conferences to collect and present more and better data describing progress for individual countries.

MNSDS was being prepared for dissemination on the Statistics Division home page maintained on the UN World Wide Web site. IMF was using MNSDS as a suggested framework for the sociodemographic portion of its proposed general data dissemination system. The Statistics Division had participated in a country analysis mission in Sri Lanka in 1997 to assess the quality, adequacy and timeliness of disseminated data related to MNSDS.

Technical cooperation

In January [E/CN.3/1997/18], the Secretary-General submitted a report on technical cooperation in statistics. In preparing the report, the Statistics Division had sent a questionnaire requesting information on technical cooperation to 25 donor countries, 25 international donor organizations and 158 recipient countries as well as four countries that had been grouped as both donors and recipients.

Responses were received from 33 donor countries and organizations and 41 developing countries and countries with economies in transition. However, only eight donor countries, four donor organizations and the European Communities, and 27 recipient countries were able to supply values of technical assistance provided and received. According to the Division, it was not feasible to classify technical cooperation funding information precisely in a uniform manner, given the varying methods and definitions adopted in the process of accounting for technical cooperation by different donors and recipients as well as the different accounting periods. Some countries and organizations provided only descriptive material of their technical assistance activities without value indicators. Therefore, while value figures of technical assistance were provided in the report, they were not considered to be complete and accurate. Furthermore, most recipient countries provided only sporadic value figures for certain statistical projects for some years, making it difficult to analyse the situation. For the donor countries listed, technical assistance increased from $11 million to $15 million from 1992 to 1994, then fell to under $9 million in 1995. With regard to donor organizations, there was a 30 per cent decline in 1994, followed by a further 30 per cent drop in 1995 to $6.6 million, with an additional $33.5 million from the European Communities.

In an addendum [E/CN.3/1997/18/Add.1] to the report, the Secretary-General reported on crucial issues on technical cooperation in statistics. He stated that in deciding on a potential technical cooperation project, both the donor country or agency and the recipient country should consider not only technical feasibility but also the usefulness of the project in the political and public decision-making arena. The recipient country was in the best position to coordinate its own requirements; however, donors needed to be informed of what was being proposed so that they could make good decisions. A coordinating mechanism would be useful, the report said. For effective capacity-building, there should be a substantial technology transfer between donor and recipient. Furthermore, the objectives of the project needed to be clear, measurable and of a substantially statistical nature.

The Statistical Commission also considered a January note [E/CN.3/1997/18/Add.2] by Statistics Canada entitled "Crucial issues on technical cooperation: a framework for the description and analysis of technical assistance".

The Commission, at its February session, decided that an informal group of representatives of 11 countries, as well as the UN Statistics Division, Eurostat and the regional commissions, should work on holding a seminar/symposium on good practices related to technical cooperation. Responding to the Commission's request, Statistics Netherlands convened in April and September in Voorburg two meetings of the Workshop on Improving Technical Cooperation in Statistics [E/CN.3/1999/19], aimed at adopting draft guiding principles for good practices in technical cooperation [E/CN.3/AC.1/1998/L.7].

Other statistical programmes

Coordination and integration of international statistical programmes

In January [E/CN.3/1997/23], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Statistical Commission a report on the implementation of the Review Group proposals on strengthening international statistical cooperation. The report concluded that the implementation of the Review Group recommendations had been uneven. While the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, a key coordinating body, was performing effectively, the task forces set up under its auspices—with the exception of the Task Force on International Trade Statistics—had not been very active. According to the report, much thinking needed to be done by Member States about the international coordination that was needed across the various subject fields, and, to date, very little progress had been made on that front. It remained the responsibility of the Statistical Commission to plan and implement action to further improve the organization of international statistical coordination as envisaged in the Review Group report.

After consideration of the item at its February session, the Commission established a group, consisting of Brazil, Canada, France, Germany, India, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, to explore new approaches to the structure and operation of the Commission, as well as to the relationship between the regional commissions and the Statistical Commission and other international organizations.

In November [E/CN.3/AC.1/1998/L.8], the ad hoc group submitted to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination a report containing its recommendations on new approaches to the Commission's structure and operation, as well as comments on the role of other important forums—the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, the regional commissions and the statistical divisions of UN bodies, including IMF and the World Bank. Among its recommendations, the group suggested that the Statistical Commission should develop an integrated programme of statistical (methodological) work and more precisely define the role of the various actors (United Nations, non-UN organizations, city groups, inter-secretariat groups and others) in implementing the programme, in particular in terms of the outputs expected from them, and time-frames. For the sake of enhancing continuity, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination should function as a continuation of the Commission between sessions. The Bureau of the Commission should meet following the biennial sessions to translate the Commission's decisions into a list of concrete actions. The group also proposed the establishment of an electronic information and discussion forum as a mechanism to involve more countries and to avoid undue travel costs, by creating the World Electronic Statistics Platform on the Internet, an "international cyber platform".

Strengthening regional commissions

In a January report [E/CN.3/1997/22] on strengthening the role of the regional commissions in statistics, the Secretary-General described their statistical activities in developing and implementing methodologies, technical assistance, data collection, data analysis and coordination of regional statistical development. Noting the lack of sufficient resources to carry out assigned tasks, he recommended that member countries take an active role in the commissions' work and that international organizations work more with and through the regional commissions. As the main UN funding agencies, UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) could provide extrabudgetary resources to the regional commissions by using them as executing agencies for some projects. In addition, UN regular budgets could be allocated more flexibly between staff and other costs.

The Statistical Commission in February emphasized that active country involvement was essential to the success of the regional commissions and encouraged countries to consider augmenting the resources of regional commissions by deploying personnel from national statistical offices on a temporary basis.

Coordination of statistical data collection

The Secretary-General, in a January report [E/CN.3/1997/25] on coordination of statistical data collection, informed the Statistical Commission of the results of the Statistics Division survey among members of the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination as to the usefulness and effectiveness of the Inventory of Statistical Data-collection Activities, in particular in the field of coordination. Taking into consideration the fact that the Inventory had been used very little, the Secretary-General suggested that the Commission decide on its continuation.

The Commission in February expressed its satisfaction in regard to the usefulness of the Inventory, and encouraged the Statistics Division to continue its work in the area in order to make that coordination tool more useful and effective.

World statistics day

In accordance with a 1996 request of the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination [YUN 1996, p. 1172], the Secretary-General, by a September 1996 note [E/CN.3/1997/26], submitted a summary of the views expressed by the Working Group in 1996 on the holding of a world statistics day.

The Statistical Commission considered the matter in February 1997 and found no consensus in favour of holding it. However, the Commission expressed support for the holding of national and regional statistical days in those countries and regions that had already held such days, and encouraged the holding of national statistical days in any countries that might wish to establish such days.

Programme questions

During its February session, the Statistical Commission reviewed a January report [E/CN.3/1997/27] of the Secretary-General on the plans of international organizations in statistics, as well as the draft programme of work of the UN Statistics Division for the 1998-1999 biennium and related information, and the Division's medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001. The Commission endorsed the Division's proposed programme of work and priorities, while recognizing its resource limitations. It also endorsed the proposal of the Bureau of the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities to develop a pilot integrated presentation of work for use by international agencies and regional commissions.

Inter-agency coordination

In response to a 1996 request [E/CN.3/1997/19] of the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, the Secretary-General submitted a January 1997 report [E/CN.3/1997/24 & Corr.1] which provided an account of the origins, mandates and achievements of the inter-agency task forces established by the Statistical Commission over the 1993-1994 period. During that time, altogether eight task forces were established on: the system of national accounts; industrial and construction statistics; international trade statistics; finance statistics; price statistics; environment statistics; service statistics; and the measurement of poverty. In 1996, the Commission's Working Group discontinued the Task Force on Price Statistics [YUN 1996, p. 1169] and the Task Force on the Measurement of Poverty [YUN 1996, p. 1171] and, in 1997, the Commission took the same action in regard to the Task Force on Industrial and Construction Statistics (see above).

A review of the remaining task forces' work was made by the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities during its session in September [ACC/1997/16].

PART FOUR

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1997, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered one Judgment and made two Orders. It had nine contentious cases before it. During the year, Counter-Claims were presented in two of the pending cases.

On 6 February, the Court elected Judge Stephen M. Schwebel of the United States as President and Judge Christopher G. Weeramantry of Sri Lanka as Vice-President of the Court, each for a term of three years.

In a 27 October address to the General Assembly, the President of the Court noted that, for the first time in its history, ICJ had made a working visit to a site of a dispute when it spent four days travelling to locations along the Danube River. The case, brought by special agreement between Hungary and Slovakia, concerned a project for the joint construction of dams on the River. The Judgment on the case was given on 24 September.

The President observed that the Court was gratified that its role as a partner in preventive diplomacy, and not only a judicial last resort in settling disputes among Member States, was continuing to develop. It was important, in assessing the Court's work, to take account not only of disputes that had resulted in Judgments, but also of cases that had resulted in negotiated settlements.

Judicial work of the Court

During 1997, the Court rendered a Judgment in the case concerning the Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia). In the same case, it made an Order concerning a site visit by the Court.

In a second Order, the Court found that the Yugoslav Counter-Claims in the case concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) were admissible and formed part of the proceedings, and directed the submission of further pleadings, fixing time-limits therefor.

Hearings were held in the cases concerning the Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia), Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America).

The 1997 activities of ICJ were covered in two reports to the General Assembly, for the periods from 1 August 1996 to 31 July 1997 [A/52/4] and from 1 August 1997 to 31 July 1998 [A/53/4]. By decision 52/405 of 27 October 1997, the Assembly took note of the 1996/97 report.

Maritime delimitation and territorial questions (Qatar v. Bahrain)

Qatar instituted proceedings in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 820] against Bahrain in respect of disputes relating to sovereignty over the Hawar islands, sovereign rights over the shoals of Dibal and Qit'at Jaradah and the delimitation of the maritime areas of the two States.

In August 1991, Bahrain contested the basis of jurisdiction invoked by Qatar. By an October 1991 Order [YUN 1991, p. 820], the President of the Court decided that written proceedings should first be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and of the admissibility of the Application, and fixed the time-limits for the filing of a Memorial by Qatar and a Counter-Memorial by Bahrain, which were filed accordingly in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982]. Also in 1992, Qatar and Bahrain filed their respective Reply and Rejoinder within the time-limits fixed by a June 1992 Order [YUN 1992, p. 982]. Qatar chose Jose Maria Ruda and Bahrain chose Nicolas Valticos to sit as judges ad hoc in the case.

Following hearings held in February and March 1994, the Court delivered, on 1 July 1994, a Judgment [YUN 1994, p. 1279], by which it found that the exchanges of letters between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amir of Qatar, dated 19 and 21 December 1987, and between the King of Saudi Arabia and the Amir of Bahrain, dated 19 and 26 December 1987, and the document headed "Minutes", signed in Doha on 25 December 1990 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Bahrain, Qatar and Saudi Arabia, were international agreements creating rights and obligations for the Parties; and that, by the terms of those agreements, the Parties had undertaken to submit to the Court the whole of the dispute between them, as circumscribed by the Bahraini formula. Having noted that it had before it only an Application from Qatar setting out that State's specific claims in connection with that formula, the Court decided to afford the Parties the opportunity to submit to it the whole of the dispute. It fixed 30 November 1994 as the time-limit within which the Parties were jointly or separately to take action to that end and reserved any other matters for subsequent decision.

On 30 November 1994, the Court received a letter from Qatar transmitting an "Act to comply with paragraphs (3) and (4) of the operative paragraph 41 of the Judgment of the Court dated 1 July 1994". On the same day, Bahrain transmitted a "Report of the State of Bahrain to the International Court of Justice on the Attempt by the Parties to Implement the Court's Judgment of 1 July 1994". In view of those communications, the Court resumed dealing with the case.

At a public sitting held on 15 February 1995, the Court delivered a Judgment on jurisdiction and admissibility [YUN 1995, p. 1305], by which it found that it had jurisdiction and that the Application of Qatar as formulated on 30 November 1994 was admissible.

Judge ad hoc Valticos resigned as of the end of the jurisdiction and admissibility phase of the proceedings.

By an Order of 28 April 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1306], the Court, having ascertained the views of Qatar and having given Bahrain an opportunity to state its views, fixed 29 February 1996 as the time-limit for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial on the merits. By an Order of 1 February 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1176], that time-limit was extended to 30 September 1996. The two Memorials were filed within that extended time-limit. By an Order of 30 October 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1176], the President of the Court fixed 31 December 1997 as the time-limit for the filing by each of the Parties of a Counter-Memorial on the merits.

Bahrain chose Mohamed Shahabuddeen and, following his resignation, Yves L. Fortier, to sit as judge ad hoc.

By a letter dated 25 September 1997, Bahrain informed the Court that it challenged the authenticity of 81 documents produced by Qatar as annexes to its Memorial and submitted detailed analyses in support of its challenge. Stating that the matter was "distinct and severable from the merits", Bahrain announced that it would disregard the content of those documents for the purposes of preparing its Counter-Memorial. Qatar, by a letter of 8 October 1997, stated that in its view the objections raised by Bahrain were linked to the merits, but that the Court could not "expect Qatar, at the present stage of preparation of its own Counter-Memorial, to comment on the detailed Bahraini allegations". After Bahrain, in a subsequent letter, had stated that the use by Qatar of the challenged documents gave rise to "procedural difficulties that strike at the fundamentals of the orderly development of the case" and that a new development relevant to assessment of the authenticity of the documents concerned had taken place, the President of the Court held, on 25 November 1997, a meeting with the Parties at which it was agreed, inter alia, that the Counter-Memorials would not deal with the question of the authenticity of the documents produced by Qatar and that other pleadings would be submitted by the Parties at a later date. The Counter-Memorials of the Parties were duly filed and exchanged on 23 December 1997.

Questions of interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the aerial incident at Lockerbie
(Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom)
(Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States)

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya instituted separate proceedings in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982] against the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of a dispute over the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation [YUN 1971, p. 739], which arose from its alleged involvement in the crash of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on 21 December 1988.

In the Applications, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya referred to the charging and indictment of two of its nationals, by the Lord Advocate of Scotland and by a United States Grand Jury, with having caused a bomb to be placed aboard Pan Am flight 103. The bomb subsequently exploded, causing the aircraft to crash, killing all persons aboard. Libya requested the Court to adjudge and declare that it had complied fully with all of its obligations under the Montreal Convention, which it claimed to be the only appropriate Convention in force between the Parties, and which required it to establish its own jurisdiction over alleged offenders present in its territory and submit the case to its authorities for prosecution, as there was no extradition treaty between it and the other Parties; that the United Kingdom and the United States were in breach of the Convention by rejecting Libya's efforts to resolve the matter within the framework of international law and placing pressure on it to surrender the two Libyan nationals for trial; and that the United Kingdom and the United States were under a legal obligation to cease and desist from such breaches and from the use of force or threats against Libya and from all violations of its sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence.

It also made two separate requests for an indication of provisional measures in each case. By two Orders of 2 April 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982], the Court found that the circumstances of the case were not such as to require the exercise of its power to indicate provisional measures. By Orders of 19 June 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982], the Court fixed 20 December 1993 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by Libya and 20 June 1995 for Counter-Memorials by the United Kingdom and the United States. Libya filed its Memorial within the prescribed time-limit and chose Ahmed S. El-Kosheri to sit as judge ad hoc in the cases.

On 16 and on 20 June 1995, respectively [YUN 1995, p. 1306], the United Kingdom and the United States filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the Applications of Libya. By virtue of Article 79, paragraph 3, of the Rules of the Court, the proceedings on the merits were suspended when preliminary objections were filed; proceedings then had to be organized for the consideration of those preliminary objections in accordance with the provision of that Article.

Following a meeting on 9 September 1995 between the President of the Court and the Agents of the Parties to ascertain the Parties' views, the Court, by Orders of 22 September 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1306], fixed, in each case, 22 December 1995 as the time-limit within which Libya might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States. Libya filed such statements within the prescribed time-limits.

The Secretary-General of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), which had, in accordance with Article 34, paragraph 3, of the Court's Statute, been informed that the interpretation of the 1971 Montreal Convention was in issue in the two cases, and been communicated copies of the proceedings, informed the Court that ICAO had "no observation to make for the time being", requesting, however, to be kept informed of the developments of the two cases, in order to determine whether it would be appropriate to submit observations at a later stage.

The public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States were held from 13 to 22 October 1997.

Oil platforms (Iran v. United States)

Iran instituted proceedings against the United States in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 983] regarding a dispute in which Iran alleged that the destruction by United States warships, on 19 October 1987 and 18 April 1988, of three offshore oil production complexes owned and operated by the National Iranian Oil Company constituted a breach of international law and of the 1955 Iran/United States Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights. Iran requested the Court to rule on the matter.

By an Order of 4 December 1992, the time-limits were fixed at 31 May 1993 for the filing of a Memorial by Iran and 30 November 1993 for a Counter-Memorial by the United States. By an Order of 3 June 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], those time-limits were extended to 8 June and 16 December 1993, respectively. Iran, which chose François Rigaux to sit as judge ad hoc, filed its Memorial within the prescribed time-limit, while the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court. In accordance with the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended. By an Order of 18 January 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1280], the Court fixed 1 July 1994 as the time-limit within which Iran could present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the United States objections. That written statement was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

After hearings had been held between 16 and 24 September 1996, the Court, at a public sitting of 12 December 1996, delivered its Judgment [YUN 1996, p. 1178] by which it rejected the preliminary objection of the United States, and found that it had jurisdiction, on the basis of article XXI, paragraph 2, of the Treaty of 1955, to entertain the claims made by Iran under article X, paragraph 1, of the Treaty.

By an Order of 16 December 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1178], the President of the Court fixed 23 June 1997 as the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of the United States. Within the time-limit thus fixed, the United States filed the Counter-Memorial and a Counter-Claim, requesting the Court to adjudge and declare:

"1. That in attacking vessels, laying mines in the Gulf and otherwise engaging in military actions in 1987-88 that were dangerous and detrimental to maritime commerce, the Islamic Republic of Iran breached its obligations to the United States under Article X of the 1955 Treaty, and

2. That the Islamic Republic of Iran is accordingly under an obligation to make full reparation to the United States for violating the 1955 Treaty in a form and amount to be determined by the Court at a subsequent stage of the proceedings."

By a letter of 2 October 1997, Iran informed the Court that it had "serious objections to the admissibility of the United States counter-claim", taking the position that the Counter-Claim as formulated by the United States did not meet the requirements of Article 80, paragraph 1, of the Rules of Court. At a meeting that the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, held on 17 October 1997 with the Agents of the Parties, it was agreed that their respective Governments would submit written observations on the question of the admissibility of the United States Counter-Claim. On 18 November and 18 December 1997, respectively, Iran and the United States submitted those written observations.

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia)

In 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide [YUN 1948-49, p. 959, GA res. 260 A (III)].

Bosnia and Herzegovina requested the Court to adjudge and declare that Yugoslavia had violated and was continuing to violate several provisions of the Genocide Convention, as well as of the Charter of the United Nations, the four 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims and their 1977 Additional Protocol I [YUN 1977, p. 706], the 1907 Hague Regulations on Land Warfare and the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights [YUN 1948-49, p. 535, GA res. 217 A (III)]; that Yugoslavia was using force and the threat of force against Bosnia and Herzegovina; that Bosnia and Herzegovina had the sovereign right under the Charter and customary international law to defend itself and to request assistance of any State in doing so, which was not to be impaired by Security Council resolution 713(1991) [YUN 1991, p. 215] and subsequent resolutions imposing and reaffirming an arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia; that those resolutions should not be construed as imposing an arms embargo on Bosnia and Herzegovina; that, pursuant to the right to collective self-defence, other States had the right to come to the immediate defence of Bosnia and Herzegovina at its request; that Yugoslavia should cease and desist immediately from its breaches of the foregoing legal obligations; and that Yugoslavia should pay reparations for damages sustained by Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Bosnia and Herzegovina also requested the Court to indicate provisional measures to the effect that Yugoslavia should, inter alia, cease and desist immediately from all acts of genocide against the people and State of Bosnia and Herzegovina. By an Order of 8 April 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], the Court indicated that Yugoslavia should immediately take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide; and should ensure in particular that any armed units under its control did not commit any acts of genocide or acts leading up to genocide. The Court also indicated that neither of the Parties should in any way aggravate or extend the dispute. The time-limits for the filing of the Memorial by Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Counter-Memorial by Yugoslavia were fixed at 15 October 1993 and 15 April 1994, respectively, by an Order of 16 April 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138], and were extended to 15 April 1994 and 15 April 1995, respectively, by an Order of 7 October 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139].

In July 1993, Bosnia and Herzegovina made a second request for indication of provisional measures, while Yugoslavia, in August, requested the Court to indicate provisional measures requiring Bosnia and Herzegovina to prevent acts of genocide against the Bosnian Serbs. Acting on those requests, the Court, by an Order of 13 September 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139], held that the situation demanded the immediate implementation of provisional measures indicated in its April 1993 Order rather than an indication of additional measures. In declining Bosnia and Herzegovina's requests related to the partition and annexation of its territory and the means of preventing acts of genocide and partition, the Court pointed out that such claims were beyond the scope of its jurisdiction in that case, conferred on it by the Genocide Convention.

The Memorial of Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time-limit. Bosnia and Herzegovina chose Elihu Lauterpacht and Yugoslavia chose Milenko Kreca to sit as judges ad hoc in the case.

By an Order of 21 March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307], the President of the Court, upon a request of the Agent of Yugoslavia and after the views of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been ascertained, extended to 30 June 1995 the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Yugoslavia. Within that extended time-limit, Yugoslavia filed certain preliminary objections. The objections related, first, to the admissibility of the Application and, second, to the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the case. By virtue of the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended.

By an Order of 14 July 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307], the President of the Court fixed 14 November 1995 as the time-limit within which Bosnia and Herzegovina might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Yugoslavia. Bosnia and Herzegovina filed such a statement within the prescribed time-limit.

After hearings had been held between 29 April and 3 May 1996, the Court, at a public sitting on 11 July 1996, delivered its Judgment on the preliminary objections [YUN 1996, p. 1179], by which it rejected the objections raised by Yugoslavia, finding that, on the basis of article XI of the Genocide Convention, it had jurisdiction; dismissed the additional bases of jurisdiction invoked by Bosnia and Herzegovina; and found that the Application was admissible.

By an Order of 23 July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1179], the President of the Court fixed 23 July 1997 as the time-limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Yugoslavia. The Counter-Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit. It included Counter-Claims, by which Yugoslavia requested the Court to adjudge and declare:

"3. Bosnia and Herzegovina is responsible for the acts of genocide committed against the Serbs in Bosnia and Herzegovina and for other violations of the obligations established by the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide:

—because it has incited acts of genocide by the 'Islamic Declaration', and in particular by the position contained in it that 'there can be no peace or coexistence between "Islamic faith" and "non-Islamic" social and political institutions';

—because it has incited acts of genocide by the Novi Vox, paper of the Muslim youth, and in particular by the verses of a 'Patriotic Song' which reads as follows:

'Dear mother, I'm going to plant willows,
We'll hang Serbs from them.

'Dear mother, I'm going to sharpen knives,
We'll soon fill pits again';

—because it has incited acts of genocide by the paper Zmaj od Bosne, and in particular by the sentence in an article published in it that 'Each Muslim must name a Serb and take oath to kill him';

—because public calls for the execution of Serbs were broadcast on radio 'Hajat' and thereby acts of genocide were incited;

—because the armed forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, as well as other organs of Bosnia and Herzegovina have committed acts of genocide and other acts prohibited by the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide against the Serbs in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which have been stated in Chapter Seven of the Counter-Memorial;

—because Bosnia and Herzegovina has not prevented the acts of genocide and other acts prohibited by the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide against the Serbs on its territory, which have been stated in Chapter Seven of the Counter-Memorial.

4. Bosnia and Herzegovina has the obligation to punish the persons held responsible for the acts of genocide and other acts prohibited by the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

5. Bosnia and Herzegovina is bound to take necessary measures so that the said acts would not be repeated in the future.

6. Bosnia and Herzegovina is bound to eliminate all consequences of the violation of the obligations established by the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and provide adequate compensation."

By a letter of 28 July 1997, Bosnia and Herzegovina informed the Court that "the Applicant [was] of the opinion that the Counter-Claim submitted by the Respondent... [did] not meet the criterion of Article 80, paragraph 1, of the Rules of Court and should therefore not be joined to the original proceedings". At a meeting that the President of the Court held on 22 September 1997 with the Agents of the Parties, both Parties accepted that their respective Governments would submit written observations on the question of the admissibility of the Yugoslav Counter-Claims. After Bosnia and Herzegovina and Yugoslavia, in communications dated 9 October and 23 October 1997, respectively, had submitted written observations, the Court, by an Order of 17 December 1997 [Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Counter-Claims, Order of 17 December 1997, ICJ Sales No. 693], found that the Counter-Claims submitted by Yugoslavia in its Counter-Memorial were admissible as such and formed part of the proceedings. It further directed Bosnia and Herzegovina to submit a Reply and Yugoslavia to submit a Rejoinder, fixing the time-limits for those pleadings at 23 January and 23 July 1998, respectively. Judge ad hoc Kreca appended a declaration to the Order; Judge Koroma and Judge ad hoc Lauterpacht appended separate opinions; and Vice-President Weeramantry appended a dissenting opinion.

Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia)

In 1992, Hungary applied to the Court in a dispute with the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic concerning the projected diversion of the Danube River, inviting the Republic to accept the Court's jurisdiction.

Following negotiations between Hungary and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, which dissolved into two States on 1 January 1993, Hungary and Slovakia—the sole successor State of the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic with respect to the Project dispute—requested the Court on 2 July 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139] to decide whether Hungary had been entitled to suspend and subsequently abandon in 1989 the work on the Nagymaros Project and on the part of the Gabčíkovo Project for which it was responsible under the 1977 Budapest Treaty on the Construction and Operation of the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Barrage System; and whether the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic had been entitled to execute, in 1991-1992, the "provisional solution"—a system damming up the Danube on Czechoslovak territory. The Court was also requested to determine the legal effects of the termination of the Treaty by Hungary in 1992 and the legal consequences of the Court's Judgment in that case.

Each Party filed a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial within the time-limits of 2 May 1994 and 5 December 1994, respectively, fixed by an Order of the Court of 14 July 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139]. By an Order of 20 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], the President of the Court fixed 20 June 1995 as the time-limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties. Those Replies were filed within the prescribed time-limit. Slovakia chose Krzysztof J. Skubiszewski to sit as judge ad hoc.

In June 1995, the Agent of Slovakia asked the Court, by letter, to visit the site of the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros hydroelectric dam project on the Danube River with regard to the obtaining of evidence in the above case. The Agent of Hungary thereupon informed the Court that his country would be pleased to cooperate in organizing such a visit. In November 1995, in Budapest and New York, the two Parties signed a "Protocol of Agreement" on the proposal for a visit by the Court, which, after dates had been fixed with the approval of the Court, was supplemented by Agreed Minutes on 3 February 1997.

By an Order of 5 February 1997 [Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia), Order of 5 February 1997, I.C.J. Sales No. 685], the Court decided to "exercise its functions with regard to the obtaining of evidence by visiting a place or locality to which the case relates" (cf. Art. 66 of the Rules of Court) and to "adopt to that end the arrangements proposed by the Parties". The visit, which was the first in the Court's 50-year history, took place from 1 to 4 April 1997, between the first and second round of oral hearings.

The first round of those hearings took place from 3 to 7 March and from 24 to 27 March 1997. A video-film was shown by each of the Parties. The second round took place on 10 and 11 and on 14 and 15 April 1997.

At a public sitting held on 25 September 1997, the Court delivered its Judgment [Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia), Judgment of 25 September 1997, I.C.J. Sales No. 692], the operative paragraph of which read as follows:

For these reasons,

The Court,

(1) Having regard to Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Special Agreement,

A. Finds, by 14 votes to 1, that Hungary was not entitled to suspend and subsequently abandon, in 1989, the works on the Nagymaros Project and on the part of the Gabčíkovo Project for which the Treaty of 16 September 1977 and related instruments attributed responsibility to it;

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Shi, Fleischhauer, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: Judge Herczegh;

B. Finds, by 9 votes to 6, that Czechoslovakia was entitled to proceed, in November 1991, to the "provisional solution" as described in the terms of the Special Agreement;

In favour: Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Guillaume, Shi, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: President Schwebel; Judges Bedjaoui, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Fleischhauer, Rezek;

C. Finds, by 10 votes to 5, that Czechoslovakia was not entitled to put into operation, from October 1992, this "provisional solution";

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Kooijmans, Rezek;

Against: Judges Oda, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

D. Finds, by 11 votes to 4, that the notification, on 19 May 1992, of the termination of the Treaty of 16 September 1977 and related instruments by Hungary did not have the legal effect of terminating them;

In favour: Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: President Schwebel; Judges Herczegh, Fleischhauer, Rezek;

(2) Having regard to Article 2, paragraph 2, and Article 5 of the Special Agreement,

A. Finds, by 12 votes to 3, that Slovakia, as successor to Czechoslovakia, became a party to the Treaty of 16 September 1977 as from 1 January 1993;

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: Judges Herczegh, Fleischhauer, Rezek;

B. Finds, by 13 votes to 2, that Hungary and Slovakia must negotiate in good faith in the light of the prevailing situation, and must take all necessary measures to ensure the achievement of the objectives of the Treaty of 16 September 1977, in accordance with such modalities as they may agree upon;

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: Judges Herczegh, Fleischhauer;

C. Finds, by 13 votes to 2, that, unless the Parties otherwise agree, a joint operational regime must be established in accordance with the Treaty of 16 September 1977;

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: Judges Herczegh, Fleischhauer;

D. Finds, by 12 votes to 3, that, unless the Parties otherwise agree, Hungary shall compensate Slovakia for the damage sustained by Czechoslovakia and by Slovakia on account of the suspension and abandonment by Hungary of works for which it was responsible; and Slovakia shall compensate Hungary for the damage it has sustained on account of the putting into operation of the "provisional solution" by Czechoslovakia and its maintenance in service by Slovakia;

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: Judges Oda, Koroma, Vereshchetin;

E. Finds, by 13 votes to 2, that the settlement of accounts for the construction and operation of the works must be effected in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Treaty of 16 September 1977 and related instruments, taking due account of such measures as will have been taken by the Parties in application of points 2 B and C of the present operative paragraph.

In favour: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Shi, Koroma, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski;

Against: Judges Herczegh, Fleischhauer.

President Schwebel and Judge Rezek appended declarations to the Judgment. Vice-President Weeramantry and Judges Bedjaoui and Koroma appended separate opinions. Judges Oda, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin and Parra-Aranguren and Judge ad hoc Skubiszewski appended dissenting opinions.

Land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria

On 29 March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], Cameroon instituted proceedings against Nigeria in a dispute concerning the question of sovereignty over the peninsula of Bakassi, and requested the Court to determine the course of the maritime frontier between the two States in so far as that frontier had not already been established in 1975.

In its Application, Cameroon referred to "an aggression" by Nigeria, whose troops were "occupying" several Cameroonian localities on the Bakassi Peninsula, resulting "in great prejudice to Cameroon", and requested the Court to adjudicate and declare that sovereignty over the Bakassi Peninsula was Cameroonian; that Nigeria had violated and was violating the fundamental principle of respect for frontiers inherited from colonization and its obligations under international law by using force against Cameroon and by militarily occupying the Bakassi Peninsula; and that Nigeria should withdraw its troops and pay reparation. Cameroon also asked the Court to prolong the course of its maritime boundary with Nigeria up to the limit of the maritime zones of the two States.

On 6 June 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], Cameroon filed an Additional Application for the purpose of extending the subject of the dispute to a further dispute described as relating essentially to the question of sovereignty over a part of the territory of Cameroon in the area of Lake Chad, while also asking the Court to specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea. It further requested the Court to examine the two Applications as one case. On 14 June, Nigeria indicated that it had no objection to that request.

By an Order of 16 June 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1282], the Court fixed 16 March and 18 December 1995 as the time-limits for the filing of Cameroon's Memorial and Nigeria's Counter-Memorial, respectively. The Memorial was filed within the prescribed time-limit.

On 13 December 1995, within the time-limit for the filing of its Counter-Memorial, Nigeria filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and to the admissibility of the claims of Cameroon. By virtue of the Rules of Court (see above, under section on Libya v. United Kingdom/United States), the proceedings on the merits were suspended.

By an Order of 10 January 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1180], the President of the Court fixed 15 May 1996 as the time-limit within which Cameroon might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Nigeria. Cameroon filed such a statement within the prescribed time-limit.

On 12 February 1996, Cameroon, referring to "serious armed incidents" that had taken place between Cameroonian and Nigerian forces in the Bakassi Peninsula beginning on 3 February 1996, requested the Court to indicate the following provisional measures:

- "(1) the armed forces of the Parties shall withdraw to the position they were occupying before the Nigerian armed attack of 3 February 1996;
- (2) the Parties shall abstain from all military activity along the entire boundary until the judgment of the Court is given;
- (3) the Parties shall abstain from any act or action which might hamper the gathering of evidence in the present case."

After hearings had been held between 5 and 8 March 1996, the Court, by an Order of 15 March 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1180], indicated that "both Parties should ensure that no action of any kind, and particularly no action by their armed forces, is taken which might prejudice the rights of the other in respect of whatever judgment the Court may render in the case, or which might aggravate or extend the dispute before it"; that they "should observe the agreement reached between the Ministers for Foreign Affairs in Kara, Togo, on 17 February 1996, for the cessation of all hostilities in the Bakassi Peninsula"; that they "should ensure that the presence of any armed forces in the Bakassi Peninsula does not extend beyond the positions in which they were situated prior to 3 February 1996"; that they "should take all necessary steps to conserve evidence relevant to the present case within the disputed area"; and that they "should lend every assistance to the fact-finding mission which the Secretary-General of the United Nations has proposed to send to the Bakassi Peninsula" [YUN 1996, p. 146].

Fisheries jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada)

On 28 March 1995, Spain instituted proceedings against Canada in a dispute relating to the Canadian Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, as amended on 12 May 1994, and to the implementing regulations of that Act, as well as to certain measures taken on the basis of that legislation, more particularly the boarding on the high seas, on 9 March 1995, of a fishing boat, the Estai, sailing under the Spanish flag.

The Application indicated, inter alia, that by the amended Act "an attempt was made to impose on all persons on board foreign ships a broad prohibition on fishing in the Regulatory Area of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization (NAFO), that is, on the high seas, outside Canada's exclusive economic zone"; that the Act "expressly permits (article 8) the use of force against foreign fishing boats in the zones that article 2.1 unambiguously terms the 'high seas'"; that the implementing regulations of 25 May 1994 provided, in particular, for "the use of force by fishery protection vessels against the foreign fishing boats covered by those rules ... which infringe their mandates in the zone of the high seas within the scope of those regulations"; and that the implementing regulations of 3 March 1995 "expressly permit [. . .] such conduct as regards Spanish and Portuguese ships on the high seas". The Application alleged the violation of various principles and norms of international law and stated that there was a dispute between Spain and Canada that, going beyond the framework of fishing, seriously affected the very principle of the freedom of the high seas and, moreover, implied a very serious infringement of the sovereign rights of Spain.

Spain requested the Court to declare that the legislation of Canada, in so far as it claimed to exercise a jurisdiction over ships flying a foreign flag on the high seas, outside the exclusive economic zone of Canada, was not opposable to Spain; to adjudge and declare that Canada was bound to refrain from any repetition of the acts complained of and to offer reparation to Spain; and to declare that the boarding on the high seas, on 9 March 1995, of the ship Estai flying the flag of Spain and the measures of coercion and the exercise of jurisdiction over that ship and over its captain constituted a concrete violation of the principles and norms of international law.

By a letter dated 21 April 1995, the Ambassador of Canada to the Netherlands informed the Court that, in the view of his Government, the Court manifestly lacked jurisdiction to deal with the Application filed by Spain by reason of paragraph 2 (d) of the Declaration, dated 10 May 1994, whereby Canada accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

Taking into account an agreement concerning the procedure reached between the Parties at a meeting with the President of the Court, held on 27 April 1995, the President, by an Order of 2 May 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1309], decided that the written proceedings should first be addressed to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and fixed 29 September 1995 as the time-limit for the filing of the Memorial of the Kingdom of Spain and 29 February 1996 for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Canada. The Memorial and Counter-Memorial were filed within the prescribed time-limits.

Spain chose Santiago Torres-Bernárdez and Canada Marc Lalonde to sit as judges ad hoc.

The Spanish Government subsequently expressed its wish to be authorized to file a Reply; the Canadian Government opposed that. By an Order of 8 May 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1181], the Court, considering that it was "sufficiently informed, at this stage, of the contentions of fact and law on which the Parties rely with respect to its jurisdiction in the case and whereas the presentation by them, of other written pleadings on that question therefore does not appear necessary", decided by 15 votes to 2 not to authorize the filing of a Reply by the Applicant and a Rejoinder by the Respondent on the question of jurisdiction.

Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia)

On 29 May 1996, Botswana and Namibia jointly submitted to the Court a dispute concerning the boundary around Kasikili/Sedudu Island and the legal status of that island.

A Special Agreement, signed by the two States in Gaborone, Botswana, on 15 February 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1181] for the submission of the dispute, referred to a Treaty between the United Kingdom and Germany respecting the spheres of influence of the two countries, signed on 1 July 1890, and to the appointment, on 24 May 1992, of a Joint Team of Technical Experts "to determine the boundary between Namibia and Botswana around Kasikili/Sedudu Island" on the basis of that Treaty and of the applicable principles of international law. Unable to reach a conclusion on the question, the Joint Team recommended "recourse to the peaceful settlement of the dispute on the basis of the applicable rules and principles of international law". At a summit meeting held in Harare, Zimbabwe, on 15 February 1995, President Masire of Botswana and President Nujoma of Namibia agreed "to submit the dispute to the International Court of Justice for a final and binding determination".

By an Order of 24 June 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1181], the Court fixed 28 February and 28 November 1997, respectively, as the time-limits for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial. They were filed by each of the Parties within the prescribed time-limits.

Chapter II

International tribunals

Two international tribunals, created by the United Nations to prosecute persons responsible for mass violation of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia and in Rwanda, continued their work during 1997. The International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (ICTY), based in The Hague (Netherlands), and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (ICTR), based in Arusha (United Republic of Tanzania), had a common Prosecutor and a common Appeals Chamber.

ICTY, which comprised the Judiciary of 11 Judges assigned to two Trial Chambers and one Appeals Chamber, the Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry, consisting of a Judicial Department and an Administrative Department, continued to carry out investigations and prosecutions. It also began an exhumation programme in early July. The first ICTY Judges completed their four-year terms in 1997; in May, the General Assembly elected new Judges to replace them as of 17 November.

ICTR, consisting of the Chambers (two Trial Chambers and an Appeals Chamber), the Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry, continued to hand down indictments and hold trial proceedings. The construction of a second courtroom, which became operational on 19 August, expedited its work.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

On 18 September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the fourth annual report of ICTY [A/52/375-S/1997/729], which was established under Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440]. The Assembly took note of the report, which covered the period from 1 August 1996 to 31 July 1997, by decision 52/408 of 4 November.

The report stated that the principal role of ICTY, namely, to bring to justice those responsible for atrocities committed in the war in the former Yugoslavia (see PART TWO, Chapter V), had gained considerable momentum. The main markers of progress were: the handing down of two sentences; the start of two more trials; and the arrests of accused persons by Croatia, the Stabilization Force (SFOR) and the Prosecutor, with the cooperation of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES). In addition, Italy and Finland had signed agreements allowing persons convicted by ICTY to serve their sentences in their national prisons. However, the vast majority of indictees remained free, causing growing dissatisfaction in the former Yugoslavia and abroad.

The Chambers

During the reporting period, the Prosecutor did not publicly submit any indictments for confirmation. Therefore, the Chambers had not publicly confirmed any new indictments or publicly issued any arrest warrants in respect of new indictments. The indictment of Slavko Dokmanovic, however, which was confirmed in 1996, was made public only in June 1997. Another indictment, which was confirmed and made public during the reporting period, charged Milan Kovacevic, as well as Simo Drljaca, with complicity in genocide for the operation of detention camps and ethnic cleansing of the Muslim population of the Prijedor area of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The main type of judicial order issued, aside from non-disclosed indictments and arrest warrants, was the subpoena, regarding which there were a number of motions, hearings and decisions.

Trials and cases

The Appeals Chamber, on 7 October [A/53/219-S/1998/737], delivered its judgement on the appeal by Drazen Erdemovic against the sentence of 10 years' imprisonment pronounced on 29 November 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1186]. A majority found that the initial guilty plea entered by Mr. Erdemovic was not informed and that the case should be remitted to a new Trial Chamber so that the accused could replead. The Chamber also found that duress could not afford a complete defence to a soldier charged with crimes against humanity or war crimes in international law involving the taking of innocent lives. Duress might, however, constitute a mitigating factor in determining the sentence.

The final judgement in the case of Dusko Tadic [YUN 1995, p. 1314] was rendered by the Trial Chamber on 7 May. Mr. Tadic was acquitted of charges made pursuant to articles of the Geneva Conventions because the Chamber was unable to hold that the Bosnian civilian victims were in the hands of the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY). Had they been, they would have been in the hands of a party to the conflict of which they were not nationals, a requirement for "protected person" status under the Conventions. The Trial Chamber held that the accused was not guilty on a number of counts, including each of the charges of murder as a violation of the laws or customs of war and as a crime against humanity, since proof that the victims died as a result of the accused's acts was deemed insufficient. However, the Trial Chamber found that the accused had caused the deaths of two policemen. It also found him guilty on numerous other counts, including cruel treatment as a violation of the laws or customs of war and inhumane treatment as a crime against humanity, for his involvement in the beatings and deportation of detainees in towns, villages and detention camps in north-western Bosnia and Herzegovina. On 14 July, Mr. Tadic became the first accused to be sentenced by the Tribunal after a trial following a not-guilty plea. The Trial Chamber imposed a number of concurrent sentences, the maximum being 20 years for a crime against humanity involving, among other things, the killing of the two Bosnian policemen.

The joint trial of Zejnil Delalic, Zdravko Mucic, Hazim Delic and Esad Landzo began on 10 March before the Trial Chamber. The accused were indicted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1186] for offences committed in 1992 at the Celebici camp in Bosnia. On 5 June, the Trial Chamber issued an important decision of principle relating to evidence in cases of sexual assault by determining that the introduction of evidence concerning prior sexual conduct was forbidden. The trial, also known as the Celebici trial, would continue into 1998.

The alleged ethnic cleansing of the Bosnian Muslim population of the Lasva River Valley region in central Bosnia and Herzegovina from May 1992 to May 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 945] formed the background to four separate indictments: Kordic and Others; Blaskic; Kupreskic and Others; and Furundzija.

Under the Kordic and Others indictment, Zlatko Aleksovski, charged in 1995 with two counts of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and one count of violations of the laws or customs of war, was arrested in 1996 and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal in early 1997. He pleaded not guilty during his initial appearance on 29 April 1997. On 25 September, the Trial Chamber granted the motion of the accused for the separation of his trial from that of the other accused under the Kordic and Others indictment. The trial was due to start in 1998. Dario Kordic and Mario Cerkez voluntarily surrendered to the custody of the Tribunal on 6 October, and pleaded not guilty on 8 October.

In the case of General Tihofil Blaskic, who pleaded not guilty on 3 April 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1186], the issue of protection of victims and witnesses had been a constant source of contention between the parties. On 27 January, the Trial Chamber rendered a decision concerning the disclosure obligations of the parties in its decision on the production of discovery materials. It ordered the Prosecutor to disclose to the Defence the list of names of the witnesses she intended to call at trial and all the previous statements of the accused and the witnesses. The Chamber reminded the Prosecutor of her obligation to disclose any exculpatory evidence or to inform the Chamber if its confidentiality should be protected. The Chamber also rendered four decisions on 4 April in response to preliminary motions of the accused concerning liability for failure to punish subordinates for violations of international humanitarian law; the mens rea requirement for charges alleging command responsibility; alleged vagueness of the indictment; and the alleged Internationality of the armed conflict at issue. During the trial, which began in June, the Prosecution called over 90 witnesses. In an effort to expedite proceedings, the Trial Chamber, on 17 December, allocated the Prosecution 39 full hearing days from 1 January 1998, to complete the presentation of its evidence. The length of the Prosecution case would accordingly total 75 days. The Defence, in turn, was given 60 days to present its evidence. In other action relating to the Blaskic trial, the Chamber, on 25 August, held that the Prosecution's disclosure obligations did not extend to such documents as diaries, radio logs and maps with the personal annotations of the witness.

Concerning Kupreskic and Others, the alleged ethnic cleansing of the village of Ahmici was the basis of the 1995 indictment of six indictees—Zoran and Mirjan Kupreskic, Vladimir Santic, Drago Josipovic, Dragan Papic and Marinko Katava. They surrendered voluntarily to the Tribunal on 6 October and pleaded not guilty at their initial appearance. On 18 December, Vlatko Kupreskic was arrested by SFOR. The Prosecutor was granted leave to withdraw the charges against Mr. Katava on 19 December because of insufficient evidence, and against Stipo Alilovic on 23 December because he had died in 1995. On 15 December, the Trial Chamber denied the motions for the provisional release of the remaining six accused, finding that considerations of family responsibility were not sufficient to constitute exceptional circumstances. Anto Furundzija, alleged to have been the commander of a special forces group within the Croatian Defence Council (HVO) at the time of the attack on the Bosnian Muslim population of the Lasva Valley area, was arrested by SFOR on 18 December and pleaded not guilty during his initial appearance the next day. He was charged with one count of a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and two counts of violations of the laws of customs of war (torture and outrages upon personal dignity including rape).

Slavko Dokmanovic, who was arrested by UNTAES and Tribunal investigators in Eastern Slavonia and delivered to the Tribunal's custody on 27 June, was indicted jointly with Mile Mrksic, Miroslav Radic and Veselin Sljivancanin. Mr. Dokmanovic was the President of the Vukovar municipality in November 1991 when Yugoslav People's Army forces and Serb paramilitary soldiers removed from the Vukovar hospital some 260 men, who were later transported to a site close to Ovcara where they were allegedly executed. The accused's temporary counsel, assigned by the Registrar, filed a preliminary motion on 7 July on various matters on his behalf concerning the legality of his arrest, the form of the indictment and a separate trial. At his initial appearance before the Trial Chamber on 30 July, Mr. Dokmanovic pleaded not guilty to all charges. On 2 August, the Chamber granted safe conduct for certain defence witnesses. The accused's motion for release was denied by a 22 October decision of the Trial Chamber, which concluded that UNTAES legitimately executed the arrest warrant and that the Office of the Prosecutor had informed him of his rights. The Chamber further found that the means used to arrest the accused had not violated the principles of international law or the sovereignty of FRY. The Appeals Chamber, on 11 November, refused to grant leave to appeal the Trial Chamber's decision. Later in November, the Prosecution sought leave to amend the indictment by clarifying and adding information obtained as a result of the exhumation of the site at Ovcara. It also filed a motion to further advertise the indictment against the three absent co-accused, seeking their immediate arrest or surrender to the Trial Chamber. A trial against all four co-accused could then proceed. The request was granted by a newly constituted Trial Chamber on 19 December and advertisements were published and circulated in the region. A number of procedures were implemented to expedite the trial, which was to begin in 1998.

Milan Kovacevic was charged in a non-disclosed indictment on 13 March with complicity in genocide for crimes committed against the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat populations of the Prijedor municipality in Bosnia and Herzegovina during 1992. The accused, who was arrested by SFOR in July and transferred to the Tribunal on 10 July, pleaded not guilty during his initial appearance on 30 July.

Communication. On 28 February, FRY transmitted to the Secretary-General a report on war crimes committed in the territory of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia [A/52/83-S/1997/173].

Judicial orders

The main type of judicial order issued, aside from non-disclosed indictments and arrest warrants, was the subpoena, regarding which there were a number of motions, hearings and decisions, particularly in the Blaskic case.

On 19 December, the Prosecutor was granted leave to withdraw charges made in indictments issued in 1995 against four accused. Three of them, Marinko Katava, Pero Skopljak and Ivan Santic, had surrendered voluntarily to the Tribunal on 6 October 1997. The Prosecutor stated that there was insufficient basis to justify proceeding to trial and that no further charges were outstanding against them. The fourth accused, Stipo Alilovic, was confirmed to have died in 1995.

The Appeals Chamber entertained two State requests for review. On 29 October, it handed down its Judgement on the Request of Croatia for Review of the Decision of Trial Chamber II of 18 July 1997, regarding the power of the Tribunal to issue subpoenas to States and State officials.

Election of judges

The first Judges elected to serve at ICTY completed their four-year terms in 1997. In May, new Judges were elected by the General Assembly to serve the next four-year term, which began on 17 November.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 April [meeting 3763], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1104(1997). The draft [S/1997/283] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993 and 827(1993) of 25 May 1993,

Having decided to consider the nominations for Judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia received by the Secretary-General by 13 March 1997,

Forwards the following nominations to the General Assembly in accordance with article 13, paragraph 2 (d) of the statute of the International Tribunal:

Mr. Masoud Mohamed Al-Amri (Qatar)

Mr. George Randolph Tissa Dias Bandaranayake (Sri Lanka)

Mr. Antonio Cassese (Italy)

Mr. Babiker Zain Elabideen Elbashir (Sudan)

Mr. Saad Saood Jan (Pakistan)

Mr. Claude Jorda (France)

Mr. Adolphus Godwin Karibi-Whyte (Nigeria)

Mr. Richard George May (United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland)

Ms. Gabrielle Kirk McDonald (United States of America)

Ms. Florence Ndepele Mwachande Mumba (Zambia)

Mr. Rafael Nieto Navia (Colombia)

Mr. Daniel David Ntanda Nsereko (Uganda)

Ms. Elizabeth Odio Benito (Costa Rica)

Mr. Fouad Abdel-Moneim Riad (Egypt)

Mr. Almiro Simões Rodrigues (Portugal)

Mr. Mohamed Shahabuddeen (Guyana)

Mr. Jan Skupinski (Poland)

Mr. Wang Tieya (China)

Mr. Lal Chand Vohrah (Malaysia)

On 8 April [A/51/867], the Council transmitted the text of its resolution to the General Assembly.

Memorandum by Secretary-General. On 15 April [A/51/877], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the list of candidates for judges and the procedure for electing them. The curricula vitae of the candidates were transmitted to the Assembly in April [A/51/878].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 May [meeting 98], the General Assembly adopted decision 51/319 A without vote [agenda item 166].

At its 98th plenary meeting, on 20 May 1997, the General Assembly, in accordance with article 13 of the statute of the International Tribunal, elected the following eleven persons as judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 for a four-year term of office beginning 17 November 1997:

Mr. Antonio CASSESE (Italy)

Mr. Claude JORDA (France)

Mr. Richard George MAY (United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland)

Ms. Gabrielle Kirk McDONALD (United States of America)

Ms. Florence Ndepele Mwachande MUMBA (Zambia)

Mr. Rafael NIETO NAVIA (Colombia)

Mr. Fouad Abdel-Moneim RIAD (Egypt)

Mr. Almiro Simões RODRIGUES (Portugal)

Mr. Mohamed SHAHABUDDEEN (Guyana)

Mr. Lal Chand VOHRAH (Malaysia)

Mr. WANG Tieya (China)

Communication. In identical letters dated 30 July [A/51/958-S/1997/605], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly and the Council that the President of the Tribunal, on 18 June, had requested the extension of the three judges sitting in the Celebici case, who had not been re-elected, for a 12-month period beginning 17 November 1997, in order for them to complete the trial and deliver a judgement. The annual budgetary costs were estimated at $668,480.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 August [meeting 3813], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1126(1997). The draft [S/1997/667] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Taking note of the letter dated 30 July 1997 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, to which was annexed the letter to him dated 18 June 1997, from the President of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia,

Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General that Judges Karibi-Whyte, Odio Benito and Jan, once replaced as members of the International Tribunal, finish the Celebici case which they have begun before expiry of their terms of office, and takes note of the intention of the Tribunal to finish the case before November 1998.

Communication. By a letter of 27 August [A/51/976], the Council transmitted to the Assembly the text of its resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 September [meeting 11] the General Assembly adopted decision 51/319 B without vote [agenda item 166].

At its 107th plenary meeting, on 15 September 1997, the General Assembly decided to endorse the recommendation of the Secretary-General, which was endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution 1126(1997) of 27 August 1997, that Judges Karibi-Whyte, Odio Benito and Jan, once replaced as members of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, would finish the Celebici case, which they had begun before expiry of their terms of office, and took note of the intention of the International Tribunal to finish the case before November 1998.

With the exception of Judge Shahabuddeen, who assumed office on 16 June 1997, the new judges assumed office on 17 November.

Regulatory activity

Regarding ICTY's Rules of Procedure and Evidence, substantive amendments were made to 22 rules and three new rules were adopted in July. In November, the judges amended a significant number of rules and adopted five new ones relating to suspension of indictment in case of proceedings before national courts, service of indictment, guilty pleas, general provision on time and variation of time limits.

Two new rules were added to the Rules of Detention concerning the searching and the monitoring of detainees' cells. Another rule was modified in order to control visits to the detainee by media representatives. In November, modifications were made to various procedural and financial provisions of the Directive on the Assignment of Defence Counsel, which addressed issues relating to the appointment of counsel for indigent accused.

Office of the Prosecutor

The Office of the Prosecutor continued to investigate and prosecute persons, especially those in positions of authority or leadership, who were responsible for the planning and implementation of the most serious violations of international humanitarian law that had occurred in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991.

On 6 October, 10 former members of the political and military bodies of the then Croatian community of Herzeg-Bosna surrendered to the Tribunal; they were charged in two separate indictments, Kordic and Others and Kupreskic and Others. Many investigators were redeployed in October to assist with preparing the trials of the 10 accused. The redeployment led to the temporary suspension of a number of investigations. In December, SFOR apprehended two further accused, Vlatko Kupreskic and Anto Furundzija.

Following the receipt of $2.2 million from Member States in response to an extraordinary appeal by the Prosecutor, the exhumation programme for 1997 began in early July. All sites were located in Bosnia and Herzegovina (Kratine, Brcko and Bosanski Samac). In total, 70 bodies were recovered from two sites. At the third site, investigators were unable to establish whether a grave was present. In addition to the exhumation work, a number of other crime scenes were examined and forensic evidence recovered.

In June, the Office of the Prosecutor and the International Committee of the Red Cross began to cooperate in a project to retrieve information about the identity of missing persons from the database established to help investigators search for and retrieve information essential to their cases. The International Police Task Force (see PART ONE, Chapter V) reached an agreement with the Office to retrieve information from its database on candidates for the new Bosnian police force. During December, investigators from the Office obtained search warrants from the judges of the Tribunal, authorizing the search and seizure of certain specified documentary evidence from identified locations within Republika Srpska in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

A rules of the road project was set up in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1187], which maintained that persons other than those already indicted by ICTY might be arrested and detained for serious violations of international humanitarian law only pursuant to a previously issued order, warrant or indictment that had been reviewed and deemed consistent with international legal standards by the Tribunal. Under the project, the Office reviewed 40 cases and made recommendations to the submitting State.

The Prosecutor convened a round table (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 24-26 March) to discuss the use of evidence of sexual violence in the investigations and prosecutions conducted by the Offices of the Prosecutor in ICTY and ICTR. A particular aim was to identify measures that would further normalize investigation and prosecution approaches to sexual violence. A second workshop (Arusha, 4-6 October) discussed interviewing sexual assault victims, maintaining contact with them and the role of local non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the Prosecutor's work.

The Registry

The Registry was responsible for the administration and servicing of the Chambers, the Office of the Prosecutor and the defence counsel. In addition to its court management functions, it administered a legal aid system of assigning defence counsel to indigent accused, supervised the UN detention unit and maintained diplomatic contacts with States and their representatives.

Budgetary matters also fell within the Registry's purview (see below).

Financing ICTY

1997 resource requirements

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/214 A [YUN 1996, p. 1192], the Secretary-General submitted to the fifty-first resumed session the revised 1997 resource requirements for ICTY [A/C.5/51/30/Add.1] totalling $49,983,100 net ($54,948,400 gross). The Assembly also had before it the performance report of ICTY for 1 January to 31 December 1996 [A/C.5/51/50].

In a related report [A/51/7/Add.7 & Corr.1,2], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended an additional appropriation of $4,587,200 (net) for the Tribunal's operations in 1997. An additional amount of $4,894,000 would be required for staff assessment, to be offset by income from staff assessment of the same amount.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/51/743/Add.1], adopted resolution 51/214 B without vote [agenda item 137].

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Office of Internal Oversight Services,

Concerned that the report of the Secretary-General and the related performance report for 1996 were not available on a timely basis,

Concerned also that the revised 1997 budget proposals were not prepared on a full-cost basis,

Noting that information on the actual annual cost of new posts was not included in the budget proposals,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the report on the conditions of service of the judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, no later than 30 November 1997;

3. Decides to defer its consideration of the pension entitlements for members of the International Tribunal pending receipt of the report requested in paragraph 2 above, and to consider this question in the context of the 1998 budget proposals for the Tribunal;

4. Notes that the full cost of the new posts recommended by the Advisory Committee would add to the appropriations a further annual requirement of 1,297,200 United States dollars net;

5. Notes also that the standard salary cost equivalent of the 45 gratis personnel serving with the International Tribunal would amount to 2,011,700 dollars gross for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in submitting budgetary proposals for 1998, to make such recommendations as are required to fulfil the mandate of the International Tribunal as soon as possible;

7. Recognizes the importance of continuing to improve arrangements through which the International Tribunal receives proper guidance and assistance from Headquarters to implement and enforce the financial rules, personnel rules and all other applicable administrative issuances of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

8. Approves the budgetary recommendations of the Advisory Committee;

9. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 a total amount of 29,825,500 dollars gross (27,440,100 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997;

10. Decides also that the appropriation for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997 under the Special Account referred to in paragraph 9 above shall be financed according to the methodology established by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/242 B of 20 July 1995, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

11. Decides further that Member States shall waive their respective shares in the remaining credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Protection Force in the amount of 14,912,750 dollars gross (13,720,050 dollars net), to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal from the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force;

12. Decides to apportion the amount of 14,912,750 dollars gross (13,720,050 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1997;

13. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,192,700 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997.

1998 requirements

On 21 October, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the revised 1998 resource requirements for ICTY [A/C.5/52/4 & Corr.1], totalling $64,216,200 net ($71,094,700 gross). The Assembly also had before it a related ACABQ report [A/52/696], which recommended an appropriation of $68,829,800 gross ($62,331,600 net of staff assessment of $1,059,700 and rental income of $438,500) for 1998. ACABQ based that recommendation on ICTY's prior staff vacancy rates and other information.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/724], adopted resolution 52/217 without vote [agenda item 135].

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious
 Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and on conditions of service for the judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the improvement in the presentation of the report of the Secretary-General, which was made available in a timely manner and prepared on a full-cost basis with information on the annual cost of new posts and performance indicators, as recommended by the Advisory Committee,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Notes that the Secretary-General will phase out by the end of 1998 the use of gratis personnel in the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 51/243 of 15 September 1997;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide in the budget performance report for 1997 the actual performance indicators, with a view to facilitating the assessment of the activities for the International Tribunal;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the budget performance report for 1997 the information requested in paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 51/214 B of 13 June 1997;

5. Agrees that the consideration of the pension entitlement for members of the International Tribunal should be deferred until the review of the report of the Secretary-General on the emoluments and pension scheme of members of the International Court of Justice to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session in accordance with Assembly resolution 50/216 of 23 December 1995;

6. Approves the budgetary recommendations of the Advisory Committee as contained in paragraph 21 of its report;

7. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 a total amount of 68,829,800 United States dollars gross (62,331,600 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998;

8. Recalls its resolutions 49/242 B of 20 July 1995, 50/212 A of 23 December 1995, 50/212 B and C of 11 April and 7 June 1996, 51/214 A of 18 December 1996 and 51/214 B of 13 June 1997, in which it decided, as an ad hoc and exceptional arrangement, that Member States should waive their respective shares in the credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Protection Force, to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal from the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force;

9. Recognizes that the unencumbered balance of the Special Account for the United Nations Protection Force has now been depleted;

10. Decides that the financing of the appropriation for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998 under the Special Account for the International Tribunal shall take into account the cumulative surplus fund balance of 5.6 million dollars as at 31 December 1995 and the anticipated availability of an unencumbered balance of 10,873,800 dollars gross (10 million dollars net) for 1997, and shall be set off against the aggregate amount of the appropriation, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

11. Takes note of the information on the expected unencumbered balance at the end of 1997, and decides to take up this issue in the context of its consideration of the budget performance report for 1997;

12. Decides to apportion the amount of 26,178,000 dollars gross (23,365,800 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to the regular budget of the United Nations for the year 1998;

13. Decides also to apportion the amount of 26,178,000 dollars gross (23,365,800 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to peacekeeping operations for the year 1998;

14. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraphs 12 and 13 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 5,624,400 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998.

OIOS review

As requested in General Assembly resolution 50/212 C [YUN 1996, p. 1191], the Secretary-General transmitted a March report by the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the review of the 1997 resource requirement for ICTY [A/51/824].

The original budget proposal totalled $68.7 million net, which reflected an increase of $33.3 million (94 per cent) and an additional 197 posts over the 1996 appropriation and authorized staffing level.

OIOS identified some $6 million worth of reductions in ICTY's proposed budget, consisting of 39 unsubstantiated and duplicate post requests, as well as instances of non-essential expenditure projections. While OIOS endorsed the assignment of additional investigative resources to individual teams, it expressed reservations about establishing posts that were unlikely to have a measurable effect on the progress of individual investigations and the possibility of duplicated functions.

Regarding the Office of the Prosecutor, OIOS recommended the establishment of benchmarks for investigations as judicial precedent and work processes became more defined. It supported the establishment of an institutionalized tracking system and noted that any extra coverage afforded by additional staff should be monitored closely. The Office should more adequately justify the size of the Strategy Team in the Investigation Section.

Other recommendations related to: exploring less expensive staffing arrangements in the field; clearly defining the roles for certain posts and seconded personnel in the Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry; assessing the construction of a second courtroom (estimated at $5.5 million) against less expensive alternatives; possibly revising downward expenditure projections for travel, rental, electronic data-processing equipment and the costs of the Detention Unit; restricting technical equipment needs to basic operational requirements; pooling administrative and support functions for each of the Tribunal's organs; and exploring outsourcing and cost-sharing arrangements to minimize unnecessary expenditures.

International Tribunal for Rwanda

ICTR, established by the Security Council under resolution 955(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 299], prosecuted persons responsible for having committed one or more of the following crimes in Rwanda between 1 January and 31 December 1994: genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of article 3 common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.

By a 13 November note, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Council the second annual report of ICTR [A/52/582-S/1997/868 & Corr.1] covering the period from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. On 8 December, by decision 52/412, the Assembly took note of the report.

The Chambers

The two Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber were composed of three each and five judges, respectively.

Trials and indictments

Following the Prosecutor's presentation of her case against Jean-Paul Akayesu [YUN 1996, p. 1195], which began on 9 January, the Trial Chamber, on 17 June, granted the Prosecutor's request to amend the indictment to include three counts of crimes against humanity and violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions/Additional Protocol II for rape, inhumane acts and indecent assault. At the trial's resumption on 13 October, the accused pleaded not guilty to all of the new counts and the defence called its first witness on 17 November. The trial continued into 1998.

The trial of Georges Anderson Rutaganda [ibid.], which began on 18 March with the presentation of the Prosecutor's case, was adjourned on 27 March to give the defence more time to prepare. It resumed on 29 September.

The trial of Clement Kayishema [ibid.] and Obed Ruzindana, which began on 9 April, was adjourned to allow more time for the defence to prepare. The trial entered its second phase between 29 September and 27 November, during which the Prosecutor called 22 witnesses, bringing to 36 the number of witnesses appearing in 1997. The Prosecutor tendered 294 exhibits, as against 12 submitted by the defence. The trial adjourned until 1998.

Indictments of Laurent Semanza and Jean Bosco Barayagwiza, who were arrested in Cameroon in 1996, were confirmed on 23 October. The detainees were subsequently transferred to the seat of ICTR in Arusha.

In July, seven accused persons and suspects were arrested during the Nairobi-Kigali (NAKI) operation organized on the Prosecutor's initiative. Pauline Nyiramasuhoko and her son Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, both of whom had already been indicted, were transferred to the seat of the Tribunal, where their initial appearances took place on 3 September and 17 October, respectively. They both pleaded not guilty to all the charges. Hassan Ngeze, Sylvain Nsabimana, Aloys Ntabakuze and Gratien Kabiligi were also arrested in the course of the NAKI operation and their indictments were confirmed. All pleaded not guilty during their initial appearances before the Tribunal.

The indictments of Georges Ruggiu and Samuel Imanishimwe were confirmed. The accused, who had been arrested and transferred to ICTR's Detention Facility, both pleaded not guilty during their initial appearances before the Tribunal.

Thirteen other individuals whose indictments had been confirmed had not yet been arrested. Arrest warrants and transfer and provisional detention orders had been issued for two other suspects. One of the accused, Elizaphan Ntakirutimana, was arrested in the United States.

Communication. By identical letters of 15 October to the General Assembly and the Security Council [A/52/504-S/1997/812], the Secretary-General transmitted a 1 August letter from the ICTR President stating that, because 20 detainees were incarcerated in the Detention Facility in Arusha, a revision of the judicial calendar was necessary. Of the 20 detainees, 14 had been indicted. An assessment showed that if all of them were indicted, it would take at least 88 months to conclude the trials, making it difficult, if not impossible, to judge the suspects before the expiration of the ICTR mandate in May 1999. Thus, there was an overwhelming necessity to increase the number of judges in order to compose a third Trial Chamber, as provided for in Security Council resolution 955(1994) [YUN 1994, p. 299].

Regulatory activities

ICTR's fourth plenary session (Arusha, 2-6 June) adopted a number of amendments to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. It also adopted a new rule that authorized the ICTR President to report to the Security Council any failure by a State to assist the Tribunal on the basis of a request from the Trial Chamber, a judge or the Prosecutor.

Office of the Prosecutor

The Office of the Prosecutor comprised the Prosecution Section, the Legal Section and the Investigation Section. The Prosecution Section was composed of three Senior Trial Attorneys and five Trial Attorneys. The Legal Section, consisting of five lawyers and working closely with the Legal Section in The Hague, advised on matters of indictments, motions and all legal issues related to the statute or the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. The Investigation Section, headed by the Director of Investigations, who was assisted by two Commanders, was divided into eight teams. The investigative teams were chiefly responsible for collecting evidence implicating State and political authorities in crimes committed in Rwanda in 1994 that fell within ICTR's jurisdiction. Two teams were particularly concerned with sexual crimes and with the role played by the media in the events in question. The Section had 52 investigators, some 20 of whom were seconded to the Office of the Prosecutor by their respective Government. The investigators were recruited by their Government for a period of only six months, which raised a problem of continuity. A seven-member investigative support team and nine lawyers were assigned to the investigative teams to provide legal counsel and to draft indictments.

Security was of great concern, as two witnesses in the Akayesu and Rutaganda cases (see above) had been killed. A special security unit that would work in cooperation with the Government of Rwanda had been created.

At the initiative of the Prosecutor, a workshop on sexual violence was held from 23 to 26 March, following which a special team on sexual violence was established. A workshop on investigative strategies was held from 19 to 21 May.

The Registry

Following the 1996 review by OIOS [YUN 1996, p. 1199], the Registry was reorganized to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of ICTR's operations. Four sections were created: the Court Management Section; the Lawyers and Detention Facilities Management Section; the Victims and Witnesses Unit; and the General Legal Services and Chambers Support Section.

Regarding judicial activities, the construction of a second courtroom, which became operational on 29 August, had made it possible for the two Trial Chambers to operate simultaneously, thus speeding up proceedings.

The Group on Gender Issues was established to provide advisory services on questions related to gender issues within ICTR and to victims and witnesses. It was also responsible for developing strategies for improving support for victims and witnesses. The Group represented the Tribunal at a meeting on equality issues arising from the genocide in Rwanda and the trials in Arusha and at the second workshop on crimes of sexual violence; both meetings were held in Arusha in October. In August, the Group carried out an evaluation of the needs of victims and potential witnesses.

The Administrative and Technical Services Division provided support to Tribunal activities relating to budget and finance, personnel, general services, language services, transport, electronic data processing, security and communications.

Financing ICTR

1997 resource requirements

In May [A/C.5/51/29/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly the revised resource requirements of ICTR for 1 January to 31 December 1997 amounting to $41,366,600 net ($46,435,000 gross). The amount reflected a net increase of $4,871,900 and an additional 56 posts over the 1996 appropriation and authorized staffing level. In a related report [A/51/7/Add.8 & Corr.1,2], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly approve an additional appropriation of $22,002,450 gross ($18,703,700 net), bringing the total appropriation for 1997 to $45,117,400 gross ($39,574,800 net) for the maintenance of the Tribunal for 1997. Also before the Assembly was the 1997 OIOS review of ICTR (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/744/Add.1], adopted resolution 51/215 B without vote [agenda item 139].

Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Office of Internal Oversight Services,

Noting with deep concern the serious problems identified by the Office of Internal Oversight Services in its report,

Noting the initial steps taken in response to the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, as set out in the report of the Advisory Committee,

Concerned that the report of the Secretary-General and the related performance report for 1996 were not available on a timely basis,

Concerned also that the revised 1997 budget proposals were not prepared on a full-cost basis,

Noting that information on the actual annual cost of new posts was not included in the budget proposals,

Noting also that the Secretary-General intends to transmit further reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on a periodic basis,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Notes with concern the shortcomings and deficiencies in the operations of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 reported by the Office of Internal Oversight Services, and requests the parties concerned to ensure the full and immediate implementation of the recommendations of the Office;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide such advice and guidance as is required to ensure the effective administrative functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the conditions of service of the judges of the International Tribunal for Rwanda to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, no later than 30 November 1997;

5. Decides to defer its consideration of the pension entitlements for members of the International Tribunal for Rwanda pending receipt of the report requested in paragraph 4 above, and to consider this question in the context of the 1998 budget proposals for the Tribunal;

6. Notes that the full cost of the new posts recommended by the Advisory Committee would add to the appropriations a further annual requirement of 2,218,800 United States dollars net;

7. Notes also that the standard salary cost equivalent of the 34 gratis personnel serving with the International Tribunal for Rwanda would amount to 1,729,100 dollars gross for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997;

8. Stresses the importance of recruiting qualified personnel with the relevant knowledge, skills and experience to perform the responsibilities required under the applicable job descriptions;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the question of the delegation of authority to recruit staff in the Professional category and above in the context of the proposed budget for 1998;

10. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to consider the recommendations of the Advisory Committee contained in paragraph 9 of its report and to report to the General Assembly at the earliest opportunity;

11. Decides that staff of the International Tribunal for Rwanda assigned to Kigali shall continue to be subject to the established compensation and benefit provisions of the United Nations common system pending consideration by the International Civil Service Commission of the question mentioned in paragraph 10 above;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in submitting budgetary proposals for 1998, to make such recommendations as are required to fulfil the mandate of the International Tribunal for Rwanda as soon as possible;

13. Recognizes the importance of continuing to improve arrangements through which the International Tribunal for Rwanda receives proper guidance and assistance from Headquarters to implement and enforce the financial rules, personnel rules and all other applicable administrative issuances of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

14. Approves the budgetary recommendations of the Advisory Committee, subject to the provision in paragraph 15 below;

15. Notes that an estimated unencumbered balance of 3.6 million dollars would remain at the end of June 1997;

16. Notes also that the recommendations of the Advisory Committee in paragraph 23 of its report would not provide for all the security resources requested, and decides that, should the need arise, the Registrar would be authorized to redeploy the necessary resources within the overall budgetary provisions of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to address the question of security resources, as necessary, in the budget submission for 1998;

18. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 a total amount of 18,402,500 dollars gross (15,103,700 dollars net) for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997;

19. Decides also that the appropriation for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997 under the Special Account referred to in paragraph 18 above shall be financed according to the methodology established by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/251 of 20 July 1995, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

20. Decides further that Member States shall waive their respective shares in the remaining credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda in the amount of 9,201,250 dollars gross (7,551,850 dollars net), to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda from the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda;

21. Decides to apportion the amount of 9,201,250 dollars gross (7,551,850 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments for the year 1997;

22. Decides also that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraph 21 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 1,649,400 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for Rwanda for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1997.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/215 B, the Secretary-General, in December [A/C.5/52/13 & Corr.1], submitted the resource requirements of ICTR for 1998 amounting to $52,856,400 net ($58,993,700 gross) and reflecting an increase of $16,881,600 net and an additional 167 posts over the 1997 appropriation and authorized staffing level.

In a related report [A/52/697], ACABQ recommended that the Assembly appropriate to the Special Account for ICTR the amount of $56,736,300 gross ($50,879,100 net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/726], adopted resolution 52/218 without vote [agenda item 137].

Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, and on conditions of service for the judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the improvement in the presentation of the report of the Secretary-General, which was made available in a timely manner and prepared on a full-cost basis with information on the annual cost of new posts and performance indicators, as recommended by the Advisory Committee during its previous consideration of the matter,

1. Endorses the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Notes that the Secretary-General will phase out by the end of 1998 the use of gratis personnel in the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 51/243 of 15 September 1997;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide in the budget performance report for 1997 the actual performance indicators, with a view to facilitating the assessment of the activities of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in the budget performance report for 1997 the information requested in paragraph 13 of General Assembly resolution 51/215 B of 13 June 1997;

5. Requests the Board of Auditors, in accordance with articles X and XII of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, to report on the ex gratia payments referred to in paragraph 11 of the report of the Advisory Committee;

6. Agrees that the consideration of the pension entitlement for members of the International Tribunal for Rwanda should be deferred until the review of the report of the Secretary-General on the emoluments and pension scheme of members of the International Court of Justice to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session in accordance with Assembly resolution 50/216 of 23 December 1995;

7. Approves the budgetary recommendations of the Advisory Committee as contained in paragraph 24 of its report;

8. Decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 a total amount of 56,736,300 United States dollars gross (50,879,100 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998;

9. Recalls its resolutions 49/251 of 20 July 1995, 50/213 A of 23 December 1995, 50/213 B and C of 11 April and 7 June 1996, 51/215 A of 18 December 1996 and 51/215 B of 13 June 1997, by which it decided, as an ad hoc and exceptional arrangement, that Member States should waive their respective shares in the credits arising from previous budgets of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda, to be transferred to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda from the Special Account for the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda;

10. Recognizes that the unencumbered balance in the Special Account for the Assistance Mission is 2,060,700 dollars gross;

11. Decides to apportion the amount of 28,368,150 dollars gross (25,439,550 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to the regular budget of the United Nations for the year 1998, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

12. Decides also to apportion the amount of 26,307,450 dollars gross (23,894,050 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to peacekeeping operations for the year 1998, after taking into account the unencumbered balance of 2,060,700 dollars gross (1,545,500 dollars net) in the Special Account for the Assistance Mission referred to in paragraph 10 above;

13. Decides further that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraphs 11 and 12 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 5,342,000 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for Rwanda for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998.

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/213 C [YUN 1996, p. 1197], the Secretary-General transmitted, by a 6 February note [A/51/789], a report conveyed to him by the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services on the audit and investigation of ICTR. The Secretary-General agreed with the report's overall findings.

The report stated that the evidence adduced did not confirm allegations of corrupt practices or misuse of funds but mismanagement in almost all areas of ICTR, and frequent violations of United Nations rules and regulations had been disclosed. It indicated that in the Tribunal's Registry not a single administrative area functioned effectively. The Finance Section had no accounting system and could not produce allotment reports, so that neither the Registry nor Headquarters had budget expenditure information; lines of authority were not clearly defined; internal controls were weak in all sections; personnel in key positions did not have the required qualifications; there was no property management system; and procurement actions largely deviated from UN procedures. In addition, UN rules and regulations were widely disregarded, the Kigali office did not receive the administrative support it needed, and construction work for the second courtroom had not started.

The Office of the Prosecutor had administrative, leadership and operational problems and the Administrative Office in Kigali did not operate effectively and efficiently because it had lacked delegation of authority from the Registry in Arusha to which it reported. Functions were also hampered by lack of experienced staff and lack of vehicles, computers, other office equipment and supplies. Lawyer posts were vacant and only 30 investigator posts of approximately 80 had been filled. Prosecution strategy deficiencies were noted and the witness-related programmes had not been fully developed.

The effective establishment of ICTR had been affected by the short-term funding arrangements, by the geographical separation of the Prosecutor's Office from the other organs of the Tribunal and by the lack of adequate infrastructure in both Arusha and Kigali. Difficulties were exacerbated by the recruitment of inexperienced or otherwise unqualified staff, decisions for which both the Registrar and the Secretariat bore responsibility. OIOS acknowledged that the financial conditions in Arusha and Kigali did not facilitate the recruitment of qualified staff.

OIOS made a series of recommendations, including that ICTR and ICTY should share common expertise; the UN Department of Administration and Management should be designated to support and guide the Registry; and the ICTY Registry should serve as a model and a contact for issues still unresolved in the ICTR Registry.

In resolution 51/215 B, the Assembly noted with concern the deficiencies in the operations of ICTR and requested the parties concerned to implement the OIOS recommendations.

Chapter III

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1997, the United Nations continued work on legal aspects of international political and State relations.

The International Law Commission, which marked its fiftieth anniversary in 1997, completed the first reading of draft articles on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States and of the preliminary conclusions on reservations to normative multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties. The General Assembly, in May, adopted the Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of International Watercourses.

The creation of an international criminal court to try individuals accused of international crimes came closer to fruition in 1997 with the successful conclusion of three meetings of the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court. The Assembly accepted Italy's invitation to host the 1998 diplomatic conference to adopt the statute.

As to measures to eliminate international terrorism, the Assembly, in December, adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings and urged all States to sign and ratify, accept, approve or accede to it.

The Secretary-General and the Assembly continued to work towards enhancing the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives.

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission (ILC), at its forty-ninth session (Geneva, 12 May-18 July) [A/52/10], held 75 public meetings. It considered and adopted on first reading a set of 27 draft articles and a draft preamble, with commentaries, on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States and transmitted them to Governments for comments and observations. The Commission considered the second report on reservations to treaties and adopted preliminary conclusions on reservations to normative multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties, and decided to complete work on the topic of State responsibility by the end of the quinquennium; it also discussed procedural and methodological issues. In addition, the Commission decided to proceed with the topic of international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, considering first the prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/160 [YUN 1996, p. 1203], the Commission examined diplomatic protection (see below) and unilateral acts of States and took note of a more detailed outline on the scope of the topic of diplomatic protection proposed by a working group. It decided to initiate the codification and progressive development of the applicable legal rules on unilateral acts of States. An outline was prepared by a working group and certain issues, as well as the main objective and effects of the study, were clarified, including identification of the elements and effects of unilateral legal acts of States and establishment of the rules applicable to them.

ILC maintained relationships with the International Court of Justice, the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Inter-American Juridical Committee, the Committee of Legal Advisors on Public International Law, and the European Committee on Legal Cooperation.

In accordance with resolution 51/160, the Secretariat prepared for the Commission's attention a topical summary [A/CN.4/479 & Add.1] of the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee discussion of the Commission's 1996 report.

The thirty-third session of the International Law Seminar for postgraduate students, young professors or government officials dealing with international law was held (Geneva, 16 June-4 July), with 22 participants of different nationalities, mostly from developing countries. The participants attended meetings of the Commission and lectures specifically organized for them. Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Iceland, Norway and Switzerland made voluntary financial contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Law Seminar, thus making it possible to award 18 full fellowships and 1 partial fellowship. Since the first seminar in 1965, fellowships had been awarded to 408 of the 736 participants representing 142 nationalities.

To commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of ILC, the Secretary-General organized a colloquium on the progressive development and codification of international law (28-29 October).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/52/648], adopted resolution 52/156 without vote [agenda item 147].

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-ninth session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-ninth session,

Emphasizing the importance of furthering the progressive development of international law and its codification as a means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Emphasizing also the role of the International Law Commission in the fulfilment of the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Recognizing the desirability of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission for closer examination, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contribution to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Stressing the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention to each of the main topics dealt with in the report,

Wishing to enhance further the interaction between the Sixth Committee as a body of government representatives and the International Law Commission as a body of independent legal experts, with a view to improving the dialogue between the two organs,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-ninth session, and expresses its appreciation to the Commission for the work accomplished at that session, in particular for the completion of the first reading of draft articles on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States and for the preliminary conclusions on reservations to normative multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties;

2. Draws the attention of Governments to the importance for the International Law Commission of having their views on all the specific issues identified in chapter III of its report and in particular on:

(a) The draft articles on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States adopted on first reading by the Commission, and urges them to submit their comments and observations in writing by 1 October 1998;

(b) The preliminary conclusions of the Commission on reservations to normative multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties;

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments and observations of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme;

4. Takes note of the invitation by the International Law Commission to all treaty bodies set up by normative multilateral treaties that may wish to do so to provide, in writing, their comments and observations on the preliminary conclusions of the Commission on reservations to normative multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties, and takes note of the views expressed by Member States on the matter;

5. Invites Governments to submit comments and observations on the practical problems raised by the succession of States affecting the nationality of legal persons in order to assist the International Law Commission in deciding on its future work on this portion of the topic of "Nationality in relation to the succession of States";

6. Recalls the importance for the International Law Commission of having the views of Governments on the draft articles on State responsibility adopted on first reading by the Commission at its forty-eighth session in 1996;

7. Takes note of the decision by the International Law Commission to proceed with its work on the topic of "International liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law", undertaking, as a first step, the issue of prevention, and to reiterate its request to Governments to provide in writing, if they have not previously done so, their comments and observations on the topic, including the draft articles prepared by the Working Group of the Commission at its forty-eighth session in 1996, in order to assist the Commission in its work on that topic;

8. Endorses the decision of the International Law Commission to include in its agenda the topics "Diplomatic protection" and "Unilateral acts of States";

9. Welcomes with appreciation the steps taken by the International Law Commission in relation to its internal matters, and encourages it to continue enhancing its efficiency and productivity, taking into consideration the discussion held by the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

10. Takes note of the comments of the International Law Commission on the question of a split session for 1998, as presented in paragraphs 225 to 227 of its report;

11. Takes note also of the position of the International Law Commission contained in paragraph 228 of its report on the duration of its future sessions;

12. Requests the International Law Commission to continue to pay special attention to indicating in its annual report, for each topic, those specific issues, if any, on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest in providing effective guidance for the Commission in its further work;

13. Takes note with appreciation of the International Law Commission's ongoing review of its cooperation and relationship with other bodies concerned with international law, and requests the Commission, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to consider further the implementation of article 16, paragraph (e), and article 26, paragraph 2, of its statute;

14. Notes that consulting with national organizations and individual experts concerned with international law may assist Governments in considering whether to make comments and observations on drafts submitted by the Commission and in formulating their comments and observations;

15. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

16. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the seminars with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the fifty-second session of the General Assembly, together with such written statements as delegations may circulate in conjunction with their oral statements, and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate, following established practice;

18. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the organization of a colloquium on the progressive development and codification of international law which was held on 28 and 29 October 1997 in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the International Law Commission;

19. Welcomes the decision of the International Law Commission to hold a two-day seminar at Geneva on 22 and 23 April 1998 to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Commission;

20. Recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly commence on 26 October 1998.

State succession

ILC had before it the Special Rapporteur's third report [A/CN.4/480 & Add.1 & Add.1/Corr.1], containing a set of 25 draft articles with commentaries on the nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States. The draft articles were divided in two parts. Part I dealt with general principles concerning nationality in relation to the succession of States and part II with principles applicable in specific situations of succession of States. The Special Rapporteur also proposed a draft preamble and a provision concerning definitions.

The Commission considered the report and transmitted it to the Drafting Committee. The Commission then considered the report of the Drafting Committee and adopted on first reading a draft preamble and a set of 27 draft articles on nationality of natural persons in relation to the succession of States.

On 14 July, ILC decided to transmit the draft articles, through the Secretary-General, to Governments for comments and observations, with the request that such comments and observations be submitted to the Secretary-General by 1 January 1999.

State responsibility

On 15 May, the Commission established a Working Group on State Responsibility to address matters dealing with the second reading of the topic of State responsibility. The Working Group decided to limit its discussion to certain procedural and methodological questions, as the topic dealt with a number of important and delicate issues and Governments had not yet responded. On 3 July, the Commission considered and endorsed the report of the Working Group.

On the recommendation of the Working Group, the Commission decided to: design its work plan for the quinquennium, allowing completion of the second reading and thus giving the topic the appropriate priority; take into account comments by Governments; appoint a Special Rapporteur to prepare reports for consideration by the Commission; and follow the usual practice of debates in plenary followed by the reference of articles to the Drafting Committee. In addition, the Committee decided that comments by Governments were of particular relevance as regards the treatment of key issues, and that examination of case law and literature could serve as a useful guide in determining whether there were any lacunae in the articles, or whether particular articles might require modification in the light of recent developments in international law.

International liability

During its forty-ninth session, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/160 [YUN 1996, p. 1203], ILC established a working group to consider the question of how the Commission should proceed with its work on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law and to make a recommendation to the plenary to that effect.

The Working Group had before it the report of the 1996 Working Group of the Commission on the topic [A/51/10, annex I], the topical summary of the discussion held in the Sixth Committee at its fifty-first session [A/CN.4/479, sect. C], and the written comments submitted by Governments [A/CN.4/481 & Add.1]. The Commission considered and endorsed the report of the Working Group.

In its report, the Working Group reviewed the work of the Commission since 1978. It pointed out that the scope and the content of the topic remained unclear due to such factors as conceptual and theoretical difficulties, appropriateness of the title and the relation of the subject to State responsibility. The Working Group further agreed that prevention and international liability were two distinct issues, though related, and that they should be dealt with separately. The Working Group noted that the work of the Commission on prevention was at an advanced stage, and it was possible to proceed with the completion of the first reading of the draft articles on prevention in the next few years. In its view, international liability had to be considered as the core issue of the topic as originally conceived. On the basis of the recommendation of the Working Group, the Commission decided to proceed with its work on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, undertaking first the issue of prevention under the subtitle "Prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities". ILC also reiterated its request to Governments, if they had not previously done so, to submit comments on the issue of international liability in order to assist the Commission in finalizing its views.

Non-navigational uses of international watercourses

During its resumed fifty-first session, the General Assembly considered the report of the Sixth Committee convened as the Working Group of the Whole [A/51/869] and expressed its gratitude for the work done. The Assembly adopted the Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of International Watercourses, requested the Secretary-General as depositary to open it for signature and invited States and regional economic integration organizations to become parties to the Convention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 May [meeting 99], the General Assembly adopted resolution 51/229 [draft: A/51/L.72] by recorded vote (103-3-27) [agenda item 144].

Convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 2669(XXV) of 8 December 1970, in which it recommended that the International Law Commission should take up the study of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses with a view to its progressive development and codification,

Recalling also that the International Law Commission submitted a final set of draft articles on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses in chapter III of its report on the work of its forty-sixth session,

Recalling further its resolutions 49/52 of 9 December 1994 and 51/206 of 17 December 1996, by which it decided that the Sixth Committee should convene as a working group of the whole, open to States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies, to elaborate a framework convention on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses, and that on completion of its mandate the Working Group of the Whole should report directly to the General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Sixth Committee convened as the Working Group of the Whole, and expressing its gratitude for the work done,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation to the International Law Commission for its valuable work on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses and to the successive special rapporteurs for their contribution to that work;

2. Adopts the Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of International Watercourses, contained in the annex to the present resolution, and requests the Secretary-General as depositary to open it for signature;

3. Invites States and regional economic integration organizations to become parties to the Convention.

ANNEX

Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of International Watercourses

The Parties to the present Convention,

Conscious of the importance of international watercourses and the non-navigational uses thereof in many regions of the world,

Having in mind Article 13, paragraph 1 a, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Considering that successful codification and progressive development of rules of international law regarding non-navigational uses of international watercourses would assist in promoting and implementing the purposes and principles set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Taking into account the problems affecting many international watercourses resulting from, among other things, increasing demands and pollution,

Expressing the conviction that a framework convention will ensure the utilization, development, conservation, management and protection of international watercourses and the promotion of the optimal and sustainable utilization thereof for present and future generations,

Affirming the importance of international cooperation and good-neighbourliness in this field,

Aware of the special situation and needs of developing countries,

Recalling the principles and recommendations adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development of 1992 in the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development and Agenda 21,

Recalling also the existing bilateral and multilateral agreements regarding the non-navigational uses of international watercourses,

Mindful of the valuable contribution of international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, to the codification and progressive development of international law in this field,

Appreciative of the work carried out by the International Law Commission on the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses,

Bearing in mind United Nations General Assembly resolution 49/52 of 9 December 1994,

Have agreed as follows:

Part I. Introduction

Article 1

Scope of the present Convention

1. The present Convention applies to uses of international watercourses and of their waters for purposes other than navigation and to measures of protection, preservation and management related to the uses of those watercourses and their waters.

2. The uses of international watercourses for navigation is not within the scope of the present Convention except insofar as other uses affect navigation or are affected by navigation.

Article 2

Use of terms

For the purposes of the present Convention:

(a) "Watercourse" means a system of surface waters and groundwaters constituting by virtue of their physical relationship a unitary whole and normally flowing into a common terminus;

(b) "International watercourse" means a watercourse, parts of which are situated in different States;

(c) "Watercourse State" means a State Party to the present Convention in whose territory part of an international watercourse is situated, or a Party that is a regional economic integration organization, in the territory of one or more of whose Member States part of an international watercourse is situated;

(d) "Regional economic integration organization" means an organization constituted by sovereign States of a given region, to which its member States have transferred competence in respect of matters governed by the present Convention and which has been duly authorized in accordance with its internal procedures, to sign, ratify, accept, approve or accede to it.

Article 3

Watercourse agreements

1. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, nothing in the present Convention shall affect the rights or obligations of a watercourse State arising from agreements in force for it on the date on which it became a party to the present Convention.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1, parties to agreements referred to in paragraph 1 may, where necessary, consider harmonizing such agreements with the basic principles of the present Convention.

3. Watercourse States may enter into one or more agreements, hereinafter referred to as "watercourse agreements", which apply and adjust the provisions of the present Convention to the characteristics and uses of a particular international watercourse or part thereof.

4. Where a watercourse agreement is concluded between two or more watercourse States, it shall define the waters to which it applies. Such an agreement may be entered into with respect to an entire international watercourse or any part thereof or a particular project, programme or use except insofar as the agreement adversely affects, to a significant extent, the use by one or more other watercourse States of the waters of the watercourse, without their express consent.

5. Where a watercourse State considers that adjustment and application of the provisions of the present Convention is required because of the characteristics and uses of a particular international watercourse, watercourse States shall consult with a view to negotiating in good faith for the purpose of concluding a watercourse agreement or agreements.

6. Where some but not all watercourse States to a particular international watercourse are parties to an agreement, nothing in such agreement shall affect the rights or obligations under the present Convention of watercourse States that are not parties to such an agreement.

Article 4

Parties to watercourse agreements

1. Every watercourse State is entitled to participate in the negotiation of and to become a party to any watercourse agreement that applies to the entire international watercourse, as well as to participate in any relevant consultations.

2. A watercourse State whose use of an international watercourse may be affected to a significant extent by the implementation of a proposed watercourse agreement that applies only to a part of the watercourse or to a particular project, programme or use is entitled to participate in consultations on such an agreement and, where appropriate, in the negotiation thereof in good faith with a view to becoming a party thereto, to the extent that its use is thereby affected.

Part II. General principles

Article 5

Equitable and reasonable utilization and participation

1. Watercourse States shall in their respective territories utilize an international watercourse in an equitable and reasonable manner. In particular, an international watercourse shall be used and developed by watercourse States with a view to attaining optimal and sustainable utilization thereof and benefits therefrom, taking into account the interests of the watercourse States concerned, consistent with adequate protection of the watercourse.

2. Watercourse States shall participate in the use, development and protection of an international watercourse in an equitable and reasonable manner. Such participation includes both the right to utilize the watercourse and the duty to cooperate in the protection and development thereof, as provided in the present Convention.

Article 6

Factors relevant to equitable and reasonable utilization

1. Utilization of an international watercourse in an equitable and reasonable manner within the meaning of article 5 requires taking into account all relevant factors and circumstances, including:

- (a) Geographic, hydrographic, hydrological, climatic, ecological and other factors of a natural character;
- (b) The social and economic needs of the watercourse States concerned;
- (c) The population dependent on the watercourse in each watercourse State;
- (d) The effects of the use or uses of the watercourses in one watercourse State on other watercourse States;
- (e) Existing and potential uses of the watercourse;
- (f) Conservation, protection, development and economy of use of the water resources of the watercourse and the costs of measures taken to that effect;
- (g) The availability of alternatives, of comparable value, to a particular planned or existing use.

2. In the application of article 5 or paragraph 1 of this article, watercourse States concerned shall, when the need arises, enter into consultations in a spirit of cooperation.

3. The weight to be given to each factor is to be determined by its importance in comparison with that of other relevant factors. In determining what is a reasonable and equitable use, all relevant factors are to be considered together and a conclusion reached on the basis of the whole.

Article 7

Obligation not to cause significant harm

1. Watercourse States shall, in utilizing an international watercourse in their territories, take all appropriate measures to prevent the causing of significant harm to other watercourse States.

2. Where significant harm nevertheless is caused to another watercourse State, the States whose use causes such harm shall, in the absence of agreement to such use, take all appropriate measures, having due regard for the provisions of articles 5 and 6, in consultation with the affected State, to eliminate or mitigate such harm and, where appropriate, to discuss the question of compensation.

Article 8

General obligation to cooperate

1. Watercourse States shall cooperate on the basis of sovereign equality, territorial integrity, mutual benefit and good faith in order to attain optimal utilization and adequate protection of an international watercourse.

2. In determining the manner of such cooperation, watercourse States may consider the establishment of joint mechanisms or commissions, as deemed necessary by them, to facilitate cooperation on relevant measures and procedures in the light of experience gained through cooperation in existing joint mechanisms and commissions in various regions.

Article 9

Regular exchange of data and information

1. Pursuant to article 8, watercourse States shall on a regular basis exchange readily available data and information on the condition of the watercourse, in particular that of a hydrological, meteorological, hydrogeological and ecological nature and related to the water quality as well as related forecasts.

2. If a watercourse State is requested by another watercourse State to provide data or information that is not readily available, it shall employ its best efforts to comply with the request but may condition its compliance upon payment by the requesting State of the reasonable costs of collecting and, where appropriate, processing such data or information.

3. Watercourse States shall employ their best efforts to collect and, where appropriate, to process data and information in a manner which facilitates its utilization by the other watercourse States to which it is communicated.

Article 10

Relationship between different kinds of uses

1. In the absence of agreement or custom to the contrary, no use of an international watercourse enjoys inherent priority over other uses.

2. In the event of a conflict between uses of an international watercourse, it shall be resolved with reference to articles 5 to 7, with special regard being given to the requirements of vital human needs.

Part III. Planned measures

Article 11

Information concerning planned measures

Watercourse States shall exchange information and consult each other and, if necessary, negotiate on the possible effects of planned measures on the condition of an international watercourse.

Article 12

Notification concerning planned measures with possible adverse effects

Before a watercourse State implements or permits the implementation of planned measures which may have a significant adverse effect upon other watercourse States, it shall provide those States with timely notification thereof. Such notification shall be accompanied by available technical data and information, including the results of any environmental impact assessment, in order to enable the notified States to evaluate the possible effects of the planned measures.

Article 13

Period for reply to notification

Unless otherwise agreed:

(a) A watercourse State providing a notification under article 12 shall allow the notified States a period of six months within which to study and evaluate the possible effects of the planned measures and to communicate the findings to it;

(b) This period shall, at the request of a notified State for which the evaluation of the planned measures poses special difficulty, be extended for a period of six months.

Article 14

Obligations of the notifying State during the period for reply
During the period referred to in article 13, the notifying State:

(a) Shall cooperate with the notified States by providing them, on request, with any additional data and information that is available and necessary for an accurate evaluation; and

(b) Shall not implement or permit the implementation of the planned measures without the consent of the notified States.

Article 15

Reply to notification

The notified States shall communicate their findings to the notifying State as early as possible within the period applicable pursuant to article 13. If a notified State finds that implementation of the planned measures would be inconsistent with the provisions of articles 5 or 7, it shall attach to its finding a documented explanation setting forth the reasons for the finding.

Article 16

Absence of reply to notification

1. If, within the period applicable pursuant to article 13, the notifying State receives no communication under article 15, it may, subject to its obligations under articles 5 and 7, proceed with the implementation of the planned measures, in accordance with the notification and any other data and information provided to the notified States.

2. Any claim to compensation by a notified State which has failed to reply within the period applicable pursuant to article 13 may be offset by the costs incurred by the notifying State for action undertaken after the expiration of the time for a reply which would not have been undertaken if the notified State had objected within that period.

Consultations and negotiations concerning planned measures

1. If a communication is made under article 15 that implementation of the planned measures would be inconsistent with the provisions of articles 5 or 7, the notifying State and the State making the communication shall enter into consultations and, if necessary, negotiations with a view to arriving at an equitable resolution of the situation.

2. The consultations and negotiations shall be conducted on the basis that each State must in good faith pay reasonable regard to the rights and legitimate interests of the other State.

3. During the course of the consultations and negotiations, the notifying State shall, if so requested by the notified State at the time it makes the communication, refrain from implementing or permitting the implementation of the planned measures for a period of six months unless otherwise agreed.

Article 18

Procedures in the absence of notification

1. If a watercourse State has reasonable grounds to believe that another watercourse State is planning measures that may have a significant adverse effect upon it, the former State may request the latter to apply the provisions of article 12. The request shall be accompanied by a documented explanation setting forth its grounds.

2. In the event that the State planning the measures nevertheless finds that it is not under an obligation to provide a notification under article 12, it shall so inform the other State, providing a documented explanation setting forth the reasons for such finding. If this finding does not satisfy the other State, the two States shall, at the request of that other State, promptly enter into consultations and negotiations in the manner indicated in paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 17.

3. During the course of the consultations and negotiations, the State planning the measures shall, if so requested by the other State at the time it requests the initiation of consultations and negotiations, refrain from implementing or permitting the implementation of those measures for a period of six months unless otherwise agreed.

Urgent implementation of planned measures

1. In the event that the implementation of planned measures is of the utmost urgency in order to protect public health, public safety or other equally important interests, the State planning the measures may, subject to articles 5 and 7, immediately proceed to implementation, notwithstanding the provisions of article 14 and paragraph 3 of article 17.

2. In such case, a formal declaration of the urgency of the measures shall be communicated without delay to the other watercourse States referred to in article 12 together with the relevant data and information.

3. The State planning the measures shall, at the request of any of the States referred to in paragraph 2, promptly enter into consultations and negotiations with it in the manner indicated in paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 17.

Part IV. Protection, preservation and management

Article 20

Protection and preservation of ecosystems

Watercourse States shall, individually and, where appropriate, jointly, protect and preserve the ecosystems of international watercourses.

Article 21

Prevention, reduction and control of pollution

For the purpose of this article, "pollution of an international watercourse" means any detrimental alteration in the composition or quality of the waters of an international watercourse which results directly or indirectly from human conduct.

2. Watercourse States shall, individually and, where appropriate, jointly, prevent, reduce and control the pollution of an international watercourse that may cause significant harm to other watercourse States or to their environment, including harm to human health or safety, to the use of the waters for any beneficial purpose or to the living resources of the watercourse. Watercourse States shall take steps to harmonize their policies in this connection.

3. Watercourse States shall, at the request of any of them, consult with a view to arriving at mutually agreeable measures and methods to prevent, reduce and control pollution of an international watercourse, such as:

- (a) Setting joint water quality objectives and criteria;
- (b) Establishing techniques and practices to address pollution from point and non-point sources;
- (c) Establishing lists of substances the introduction of which into the waters of an international watercourse is to be prohibited, limited, investigated or monitored.

Article 22

Introduction of alien or new species

Watercourse States shall take all measures necessary to prevent the introduction of species, alien or new, into an international watercourse which may have effects detrimental to the ecosystem of the watercourse resulting in significant harm to other watercourse States.

Article 23

Protection and preservation of the marine environment

Watercourse States shall, individually and, where appropriate, in cooperation with other States, take all measures with respect to an international watercourse that are necessary to protect and preserve the marine environment, including estuaries, taking into account generally accepted international rules and standards.

Article 24

Management

1. Watercourse States shall, at the request of any of them, enter into consultations concerning the management of an international watercourse, which may include the establishment of a joint management mechanism.

2. For the purposes of this article, "management" refers, in particular, to:

- (a) Planning the sustainable development of an international watercourse and providing for the implementation of any plans adopted; and
- (b) Otherwise promoting the rational and optimal utilization, protection and control of the watercourse.

Article 25

Regulation

1. Watercourse States shall cooperate, where appropriate, to respond to needs or opportunities for regulation of the flow of the waters of an international watercourse.

2. Unless otherwise agreed, watercourse States shall participate on an equitable basis in the construction and maintenance or defrayal of the costs of such regulation works as they may have agreed to undertake.

3. For the purposes of this article, "regulation" means the use of hydraulic works or any other continuing measure to alter, vary or otherwise control the flow of the waters of an international watercourse.

Article 26

Installations

1. Watercourse States shall, within their respective territories, employ their best efforts to maintain and protect installations, facilities and other works related to an international watercourse.

2. Watercourse States shall, at the request of any of them which has reasonable grounds to believe that it may suffer significant adverse effects, enter into consultations with regard to:

(a) The safe operation and maintenance of installations, facilities or other works related to an international watercourse; and

(b) The protection of installations, facilities or other works from wilful or negligent acts or the forces of nature.

Part V. Harmful conditions and emergency situations

Article 27

Prevention and mitigation of harmful conditions

Watercourse States shall, individually and, where appropriate, jointly, take all appropriate measures to prevent or mitigate conditions related to an international watercourse that may be harmful to other watercourse States, whether resulting from natural causes or human conduct, such as flood or ice conditions, water-borne diseases, siltation, erosion, salt-water intrusion, drought or desertification.

Article 28

Emergency situations

1. For the purposes of this article, "emergency" means a situation that causes, or poses an imminent threat of causing, serious harm to watercourse States or other States and that results suddenly from natural causes, such as floods, the breaking up of ice, landslides or earthquakes, or from human conduct, such as industrial accidents.

2. A watercourse State shall, without delay and by the most expeditious means available, notify other potentially affected States and competent international organizations of any emergency originating within its territory.

3. A watercourse State within whose territory an emergency originates shall, in cooperation with potentially affected States and, where appropriate, competent international organizations, immediately take all practicable measures necessitated by the circumstances to prevent, mitigate and eliminate harmful effects of the emergency.

4. When necessary, watercourse States shall jointly develop contingency plans for responding to emergencies, in cooperation, where appropriate, with other potentially affected States and competent international organizations.

Part VI. Miscellaneous provisions

Article 29

International watercourses and installations in time of armed conflict

International watercourses and related installations, facilities and other works shall enjoy the protection accorded by the principles and rules of international law applicable in international and non-international armed conflict and shall not be used in violation of those principles and rules.

Article 30

Indirect procedures

In cases where there are serious obstacles to direct contacts between watercourse States, the States concerned shall fulfil their obligations of cooperation provided for in the present Convention, including exchange of data and information, notification, communication, consultations and negotiations, through any indirect procedure accepted by them.

Article 31

Data and information vital to national defence or security

Nothing in the present Convention obliges a watercourse State to provide data or information vital to its national defence or security. Nevertheless, that State shall cooperate in good faith with the other watercourse States with a view to providing as much information as possible under the circumstances.

Article 32

Non-discrimination

Unless the watercourse States concerned have agreed otherwise for the protection of the interests of persons, natural or juridical, who have suffered or are under a serious threat of suffering significant transboundary harm as a result of activities related to an international watercourse, a watercourse State shall not discriminate on the basis of nationality or residence or place where the injury occurred, in granting to such persons, in accordance with its legal system, access to judicial or other procedures, or a right to claim compensation or other relief in respect of significant harm caused by such activities carried on in its territory.

Article 33

Settlement of disputes

1. In the event of a dispute between two or more Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention, the Parties concerned shall, in the absence of an applicable agreement between them, seek a settlement of the dispute by peaceful means in accordance with the following provisions.

2. If the Parties concerned cannot reach agreement by negotiation requested by one of them, they may jointly seek the good offices of, or request mediation or conciliation by, a third party, or make use, as appropriate, of any joint watercourse institutions that may have been established by them or agree to submit the dispute to arbitration or to the International Court of Justice.

3. Subject to the operation of paragraph 10 of the present article, if after six months from the time of the request for negotiations referred to in paragraph 2, the Parties concerned have not been able to settle their dispute through negotiation or any other means referred to in paragraph 2, the dispute shall be submitted, at the request of any of the parties to the dispute, to impartial fact-finding in accordance with paragraphs 4 to 9, unless the Parties otherwise agree.

4. A Fact-finding Commission shall be established, composed of one member nominated by each Party concerned and in addition a member not having the nationality of any of the Parties concerned chosen by the nominated members who shall serve as Chairman.

5. If the members nominated by the Parties are unable to agree on a Chairman within three months of the request for the establishment of the Commission, any Party concerned may request the Secretary-General of the United Nations to appoint the Chairman who shall not have the nationality of any of the parties to the dispute or of any riparian State of the watercourse concerned. The person so appointed shall constitute a single-member Commission.

6. The Commission shall determine its own procedure.

7. The Parties concerned have the obligation to provide the Commission with such information as it may require and, on request, to permit the Commission to have access to their respective territory and to inspect any facilities, plant, equipment, construction or natural feature relevant for the purpose of its inquiry.

8. The Commission shall adopt its report by a majority vote, unless it is a single-member Commission, and shall submit that report to the Parties concerned setting forth its findings and the reasons therefor and such recommendations as it deems appropriate for an equitable solution of the dispute, which the Parties concerned shall consider in good faith.

9. The expenses of the Commission shall be borne equally by the Parties concerned.

10. When ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the present Convention, or at any time thereafter, a Party which is not a regional economic integration organization may declare in a written instrument submitted to the Depositary that, in respect of any dispute not resolved in accordance with paragraph 2, it recognizes as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement in relation to any Party accepting the same obligation:

(a) Submission of the dispute to the International Court of Justice; and/or

(b) Arbitration by an arbitral tribunal established and operating, unless the parties to the dispute otherwise agreed, in accordance with the procedure laid down in the appendix to the present Convention.

A Party which is a regional economic integration organization may make a declaration with like effect in relation to arbitration in accordance with subparagraph (b).

Part VII. Final clauses

Article 34

Signature

The present Convention shall be open for signature by all States and by regional economic integration organizations from 21 May 1997 until 20 May 2000 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

Article 35

Ratification, acceptance, approval or accession

1. The present Convention is subject to ratification, acceptance, approval or accession by States and by regional economic integration organizations. The instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Any regional economic integration organization which becomes a Party to the present Convention without any of its member States being a Party shall be bound by all the obligations under the Convention. In the case of such organizations, one or more of whose member States is a Party to the present Convention, the organization and its member States shall decide on their respective responsibilities for the performance of their obligations under the present Convention. In such cases, the organization and the member States shall not be entitled to exercise rights under the Convention concurrently.

3. In their instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, the regional economic integration organizations shall declare the extent of their competence with respect to the matters governed by the Convention. These organizations shall also inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of any substantial modification in the extent of their competence.

Article 36

Entry into force

1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day following the date of deposit of the thirty-fifth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. For each State or regional economic integration organization that ratifies, accepts or approves the Convention or accedes thereto after the deposit of the thirty-fifth instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the deposit by such State or regional economic integration organization of its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

3. For the purposes of paragraphs 1 and 2, any instrument deposited by a regional economic integration organization shall not be counted as additional to those deposited by States.

Article 37

Authentic texts

The original of the present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto, have signed the present Convention.

DONE at New York, this _____ day of _____ one thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven.

APPENDIX

Arbitration

Article 1

Unless the parties to the dispute otherwise agree, the arbitration pursuant to article 33 of the Convention shall take place in accordance with articles 2 to 14 of the present appendix.

Article 2

The claimant party shall notify the respondent party that it is referring a dispute to arbitration pursuant to article 33 of the Convention. The notification shall state the subject matter of arbitration and include, in particular, the articles of the Convention, the interpretation or application of which are at issue. If the parties do not agree on the subject matter of the dispute, the arbitral tribunal shall determine the subject matter.

Article 3

1. In disputes between two parties, the arbitral tribunal shall consist of three members. Each of the parties to the dispute shall appoint an arbitrator and the two arbitrators so appointed shall designate by common agreement the third arbitrator, who shall be the Chairman of the tribunal. The latter shall not be a national of one of the parties to the dispute or of any riparian State of the watercourse concerned, nor have his or her usual place of residence in the territory of one of these parties or such riparian State, nor have dealt with the case in any other capacity.

2. In disputes between more than two parties, parties in the same interest shall appoint one arbitrator jointly by agreement.

3. Any vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed for the initial appointment.

Article 4

1. If the Chairman of the arbitral tribunal has not been designated within two months of the appointment of the second arbitrator, the President of the International Court of Justice shall, at the request of a party, designate the Chairman within a further two-month period.

2. If one of the parties to the dispute does not appoint an arbitrator within two months of receipt of the request, the other party may inform the President of the International Court of Justice, who shall make the designation within a further two-month period.

Article 5

The arbitral tribunal shall render its decisions in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and international law.

Article 6

Unless the parties to the dispute otherwise agree, the arbitral tribunal shall determine its own rules of procedure.

Article 7

The arbitral tribunal may, at the request of one of the Parties, recommend essential interim measures of protection.

Article 8

1. The parties to the dispute shall facilitate the work of the arbitral tribunal and, in particular, using all means at their disposal, shall:

(a) Provide it with all relevant documents, information and facilities; and

(b) Enable it, when necessary, to call witnesses or experts and receive their evidence.

2. The parties and the arbitrators are under an obligation to protect the confidentiality of any information they receive in confidence during the proceedings of the arbitral tribunal.

Article 9

Unless the arbitral tribunal determines otherwise because of the particular circumstances of the case, the costs of the tribunal shall be borne by the parties to the dispute in equal shares. The tribunal shall keep a record of all its costs, and shall furnish a final statement thereof to the parties.

Article 10

Any party that has an interest of a legal nature in the subject matter of the dispute which may be affected by the decision in the case may intervene in the proceedings with the consent of the arbitral tribunal.

Article U

The arbitral tribunal may hear and determine counterclaims arising directly out of the subject matter of the dispute.

Article 12

Decisions both on procedure and substance of the arbitral tribunal shall be taken by a majority vote of its members.

Article 13

If one of the parties to the dispute does not appear before the arbitral tribunal or fails to defend its case, the other party may request the tribunal to continue the proceedings and to make its award. Absence of a party or a failure of a party to defend its case shall not constitute a bar to the proceedings. Before rendering its final decision, the arbitral tribunal must satisfy itself that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

1. The arbitral tribunal shall render its final decision within five months of the date on which it is fully constituted unless it finds it necessary to extend the time limit for a period which should not exceed five more months.

2. The final decision of the arbitral tribunal shall be confined to the subject matter of the dispute and shall state the reasons on which it is based. It shall contain the names of the members who have participated and the date of the final decision. Any member of the tribunal may attach a separate or dissenting opinion to the final decision.

3. The award shall be binding on the parties to the dispute. It shall be without appeal unless the parties to the dispute have agreed in advance to an appellate procedure.

4. Any controversy which may arise between the parties to the dispute as regards the interpretation or manner of implementation of the final decision may be submitted by either party for decision to the arbitral tribunal which rendered it.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 51/229:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belarus, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Estonia, Finland, Gabon, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia.

Against: Burundi, China, Turkey.

Abstain: Andorra, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Belgium,* Bolivia, Bulgaria, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Ghana, Guatemala, India, Israel, Mali, Monaco, Mongolia, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Rwanda, Spain, United Republic of Tanzania, Uzbekistan.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

France abstained because the text was negotiated in haste and contained legal ambiguities, particularly with regard to the system of responsibility.

India regretted that the Assembly was bypassing the importance of consensus. It had reservations on articles 3, 5, 32 and 33 in particular.

Ethiopia abstained because the text did not achieve the required balance, particularly in safeguarding the interests of upper riparian States.

Israel stressed that the parties to a dispute had to be allowed to choose the mechanism most appropriate for their specific needs and circumstances.

Spain said that the wording of articles 5, 6 and 7 was not sufficiently explicit and could give rise to friction and disputes.

Rwanda abstained because of the inconsistencies and imbalances that had already been pointed out in the draft resolution. In its view, the Convention was flawed and required immediate correction.

Unilateral acts of States

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/160 [YUN 1996, p. 1203], ILC examined the topic of unilateral acts of States and indicated its scope and content, in the light of the comments and observations made by the Sixth Committee and by Governments. The Commission established a working group on the topic, considered the Group's report and endorsed it.

In its report, the Working Group decided to focus the scope and content of the topic on those unilateral acts of States that were intended to produce legal effects, creating, recognizing, safeguarding or modifying rights, obligations or legal situations. Other possible topics for future study included the law applicable to resolutions of international organizations and control of their validity. The Working Group considered that the main objective of the study was to identify the constituent elements and effects of unilateral legal acts of States and to set forth rules generally applicable to them.

The Commission indicated that the topic should be considered as reported by the Working Group and that the first reading of a draft might be completed within the present quinquennium and, therefore, invited Governments to make their opinions known.

International State relations and international law

Principles of international negotiations

Following a request by Mongolia, submitted in June [A/52/141], the General Assembly included in its agenda an item entitled "Draft guiding principles for international negotiations". In its explanatory memorandum, Mongolia maintained that international negotiations played an increasingly important role in the management of international relations, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the creation of the new international norms of conduct of States. In its view, therefore, it was necessary for the international community to identify and elaborate a set of principles to guide States in the conduct of international negotiations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/647], adopted resolution 52/155 without vote [agenda item 146 (c)].

Draft guiding principles for international negotiations

The General Assembly,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of cooperation among States, as well as Article 13, paragraph 1, of the Charter, whereby the General Assembly is called upon to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of promoting international cooperation,

Taking into account the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Reaffirming the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that in their negotiations States should be guided by the relevant principles of international law,

Bearing in mind the important role that constructive and effective negotiations can play in attaining the purposes of the Charter by contributing to the management of international relations, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the creation of new international norms of conduct of States,

Noting that the identification and harmonization of guiding principles for international negotiations could contribute to enhancing the predictability of negotiating parties, reducing uncertainty and promoting an atmosphere of trust at negotiations, and could offer a frame of reference for negotiations,

Having considered the sub-item entitled "Draft guiding principles for international negotiations",

1. Underlines the importance of conducting effective negotiations in managing international relations, in the peaceful settlement of disputes and in the creation of new international norms of conduct of States;

2. Takes note of the draft guiding principles for international negotiations contained in document A/52/141 and the comments and proposals made during the consideration of the question, including the need for its further consideration;

3. Decides to continue the consideration of the question in the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law during the fifty-third session of the General Assembly;

4. Invites all States and relevant international organizations to submit in writing to the Secretary-General, before 1 August 1998, comments and proposals on the content of the draft guiding principles for international negotiations;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the comments and proposals mentioned in paragraphs 2 and 4 above to the Working Group for its consideration;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session, under the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law", the sub-item entitled "Draft guiding principles for international negotiations".

Jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

In 1997, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 46/61 [YUN 1994, p. 1296], the General Assembly resumed consideration of a convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property. In March, the Secretary-General invited Governments to submit their comments on the draft convention. Those comments were reproduced in an August report [A/52/294] and submitted to the Sixth Committee for consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/645], adopted resolution 52/151 without vote [agenda item 144].

Convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/61 of 9 December 1994,

Considering that the codification and progressive development of international law contributes to the implementation of the purposes and principles set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to consider again at its fifty-third session the item entitled "Convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property" with a view to the establishment of a working group at its fifty-fourth session, taking into account the comments submitted by States in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 49/61;

2. Urges States, if they have not yet done so, to submit their comments to the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 49/61.

International criminal jurisdiction

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/207 [YUN 1996, p. 1205], the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, which was established by the Assembly in resolution 50/46 [YUN 1995, p. 1328], met three times in New York in 1997 (11-21 February, 4-15 August and 1-12 December).

At its February meeting [A/AC.249/1997/L.5], the Preparatory Committee established a working group on the definition of crimes and a working group on general principles of criminal law and penalties. The Preparatory Committee welcomed the proposal to hold the diplomatic conference for the creation of the Court in Rome.

The Preparatory Committee, at its August meeting [A/AC.249/1997/L.8/Rev.1], established the Working Group on Complementarity and Trigger Mechanism and the Working Group on Procedural Matters. It noted that certain issues relating to article 35 and to the role of the Prosecutor would have to be discussed at a future session. It also took note that, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/207, the Secretary-General had created a trust fund for the participation of the least developed countries in the work of the Preparatory Committee and in the diplomatic conference.

At its December meeting [A/AC.249/1997/L.9/Rev.1], the Preparatory Committee established working groups on definitions and elements of crimes, general principles of criminal law, international cooperation and juridical assistance, and penalties. Each working group submitted a report to the Preparatory Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/651], adopted resolution 52/160 without vote [agenda item 150].

Establishment of an international criminal court

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/33 of 25 November 1992, 48/31 of 9 December 1993, 49/53 of 9 December 1994 and 50/46 of 11 December 1995,

Considering that, in its resolution 51/207 of 17 December 1996, it decided to reaffirm the mandate of the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court and decided also that the Preparatory Committee should meet from 11 to 21 February, 4 to 15 August and 1 to 12 December 1997, and from 16 March to 3 April 1998, in order to complete the drafting of a widely acceptable consolidated text of a convention, to be submitted to a diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries,

Recalling that, in its resolution 51/207, it further decided that a diplomatic conference of plenipotentiaries should be held in 1998, with a view to finalizing and adopting a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court,

Recognizing the importance of concluding the work of the conference through the promotion of general agreement on matters of substance,

Noting that, at its fifty-first meeting, on 21 February 1997, the Preparatory Committee welcomed the offer by the Government of Italy to hold the conference at Rome and recommended to the General Assembly that, pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/207 and after consideration by the Committee on Conferences, a decision in accordance with the offer should be made when dealing with the necessary arrangements for the conference, on the understanding that the organization of the conference at Rome would proceed on the basis of the usual practice concerning the funding of such events taking place away from United Nations Headquarters or other United Nations offices,

Taking note of the report of the Committee on Conferences, in which the Committee recommended to the General Assembly that it should adopt the draft biennial calendar of conferences and meetings for 1998-1999 contained in the report,

Welcoming the steps taken, and the suggestions made, by the Government of Italy following its offer to host the conference in June 1998, including the proposal to hold the conference during the period from 15 June to 17 July 1998 at the headquarters of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at Rome,

1. Accepts with deep appreciation the generous offer of the Government of Italy to act as host to the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court;

2. Requests the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court to continue its work in accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/207 and, at the end of its sessions, to transmit to the Conference the text of a draft convention on the establishment of an international criminal court prepared in accordance with its mandate;

3. Decides that the Conference, open to all States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency, shall be held at Rome from 15 June to 17 July 1998, with a view to finalizing and adopting a convention on the establishment of an international criminal court, and requests the Secretary-General to invite those States to the Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare the text of the draft rules of procedure of the Conference, to be submitted to the Preparatory Committee for its consideration and for recommendations to the Conference, with a view to the adoption of such rules by the Conference in accordance with the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, and to provide for consultations on the organization and methods of work of the Conference, including rules of procedure, prior to the convening of the last session of the Preparatory Committee;

5. Urges participation in the Conference by the largest number of States so as to promote universal support for an international criminal court;

6. Notes with appreciation the establishment by the Secretary-General, pursuant to resolution 51/207, of a trust fund for the participation of the least developed countries in the work of the Preparatory Committee and in the Conference, welcomes the decision by a number of States to make contributions to the trust fund, and encourages States to contribute voluntarily to it;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to establish a trust fund for voluntary contributions towards meeting the cost of participation in the work of the Preparatory Committee and the Conference of those developing countries not covered by the trust fund referred to in paragraph 6 above, and invites States to contribute voluntarily to this trust fund;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to invite to the Conference representatives of organizations and other entities that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly pursuant to its relevant resolutions to participate, in the capacity of observers, in its sessions and work, on the understanding that such representatives would participate in the Conference in that capacity, and to invite, as observers to the Conference, representatives of interested regional intergovernmental organizations and other interested international bodies, including the international tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite non-governmental organizations, accredited by the Preparatory Committee with due regard to the provisions of part VII of Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, and in particular to the relevance of their activities to the work of the Conference, to participate in the Conference, along the lines followed in the Preparatory Committee, on the understanding that participation means attending meetings of its plenary and, unless otherwise decided by the Conference in specific situations, formal meetings of its subsidiary bodies except the drafting group, receiving copies of the official documents, making available their materials to delegates and addressing, through a limited number of their representatives, its opening and/or closing sessions, as appropriate, in accordance with the rules of procedure to be adopted by the Conference;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Establishment of an international criminal court".

Safety and security of UN and associated personnel

During 1997, the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations Personnel and Associated Personnel [GA res. 49/59], which was adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1288], was ratified by the Czech Republic, Germany, the Philippines and Romania and acceded to by Chile and the Republic of Korea. The Convention was to enter into force 30 days after 22 instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession had been deposited with the Secretary-General.

By the end of 1997, a total of 16 States were parties to the Convention, while 43 had signed it.

Measures to eliminate terrorism

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/53 [YUN 1995, p. 1330], the Secretary-General, in August and October, submitted a report [A/52/304 & Corr.1 & Add.1] on the implementation of the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, contained in Assembly resolution 49/60 [YUN 1994, p. 1293].

The report provided information from Member States and international organizations on measures taken regarding the prevention and suppression of international terrorism and information on incidents of international terrorism. It also discussed the status of international conventions pertaining to international terrorism and recent developments in that area, and provided information on workshops and training courses on combating crimes connected with terrorism.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/653], adopted resolution 52/165 without vote [agenda item 152].

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and resolutions 50/53 of 11 December 1995 and 51/210 of 17 December 1996,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the persistence of terrorist acts, which have taken place worldwide,

Stressing the need further to strengthen international cooperation between States and between international organizations and agencies, regional organizations and arrangements and the United Nations in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed,

Mindful of the need to enhance the role of the United Nations and the relevant specialized agencies in combating international terrorism, and of the proposals of the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the Organization in this respect,

Recalling that in the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 49/60 the General Assembly encouraged States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there was a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Bearing in mind the possibility of considering in the near future the elaboration of a comprehensive convention on international terrorism,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Strongly condemns all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomsoever committed;

2. Reiterates that criminal acts intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public, a group of persons or particular persons for political purposes are in any circumstance unjustifiable, whatever the considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other nature that may be invoked to justify them;

3. Reiterates its call upon all States to adopt further measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of international law, including international standards of human rights, to prevent terrorism and to strengthen international cooperation in combating terrorism and, to that end, to consider, in particular, the implementation of the measures set out in paragraphs 3 (a) to (f) of its resolution 51/210;

4. Also reiterates its call upon all States, with the aim of enhancing the efficient implementation of relevant legal instruments, to intensify, as and where appropriate, the exchange of information on facts related to terrorism and, in so doing, to avoid the dissemination of inaccurate or unverified information;

5. Further reiterates its call upon States to refrain from financing, encouraging, providing training for or otherwise supporting terrorist activities;

6. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider, as a matter of priority, becoming parties to relevant conventions and protocols as referred to in paragraph 6 of resolution 51/210, and calls upon all States to enact, as appropriate, domestic legislation necessary to implement the provisions of those conventions and protocols, to ensure that the jurisdiction of their courts enables them to bring to trial the perpetrators of terrorist acts and to cooperate with and provide support and assistance to other States and relevant international and regional organizations to that end;

7. Reaffirms the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 49/60 and the Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 51/210, and calls upon all States to implement them;

8. Reaffirms also the mandate of the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996;

9. Decides that the Ad Hoc Committee shall meet from 16 to 27 February 1998 to continue its work in accordance with the mandate provided in paragraph 9 of resolution 51/210, and recommends that the work continue during the fifty-third session of the General Assembly from 28 September to 9 October 1998 within the framework of a working group of the Sixth Committee;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the International Atomic Energy Agency to assist the Ad Hoc Committee in its deliberations;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the necessary facilities for the performance of its work;

12. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on progress made in accomplishing its mandate;

13. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee be convened in 1999 to continue its work as referred to in paragraph 9 of resolution 51/210;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Measures to eliminate international terrorism".

International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings

The Ad Hoc Committee established in 1996 by General Assembly resolution 51/210 [YUN 1996, p. 1208] to elaborate an international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings and, subsequently, an international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, as well as to address means of further developing a comprehensive legal framework of conventions dealing with international terrorism, met in New York (24 February-7 March). The Committee considered the draft of an international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings submitted by France on behalf of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries and the Russian Federation, and a draft convention on the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism submitted by the Russian Federation [A/52/37].

The Ad Hoc Committee continued its work during the fifty-second session of the Assembly (22 September-3 October), in the framework of a working group of the Sixth Committee, and finalized a draft text [A/C.6/52/L.3], which it submitted to the Committee.

By a 25 November report [A/52/653], the Sixth Committee proposed that the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings be adopted by the Assembly, thereby creating a major new instrument to the international legal regime regulating international terrorism. The Convention sought to further criminalize acts of international terrorism while harmonizing international cooperation in combating such acts.

The Sixth Committee further recommended that the Ad Hoc Committee on International Terrorism meet in February 1998 to continue its work on nuclear terrorism and suggested that the work be pursued further during the Assembly's fifty-third session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/653], adopted resolution 52/164 without vote [agenda item 152].

International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and its resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996,

Having considered the text of the draft convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings prepared by the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and the Working Group of the Sixth Committee,

1. Adopts the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings annexed to the present resolution, and decides to open it for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 12 January 1998 until 31 December 1999;

2. Urges all States to sign and ratify, accept or approve or accede to the Convention.

ANNEX

International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings

The States Parties to this Convention,

Having in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations concerning the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of good-neighbourliness and friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Deeply concerned about the worldwide escalation of acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Recalling the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations of 24 October 1995,

Recalling also the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, annexed to General Assembly resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, in which, inter alia, "the States Members of the United Nations solemnly reaffirm their unequivocal condemnation of all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomever committed, including those which jeopardize the friendly relations among States and peoples and threaten the territorial integrity and security of States",

Noting that the Declaration also encouraged States "to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there is a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter",

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and the Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism annexed thereto,

Noting that terrorist attacks by means of explosives or other lethal devices have become increasingly widespread,

Noting also that existing multilateral legal provisions do not adequately address these attacks,

Being convinced of the urgent need to enhance international cooperation between States in devising and adopting effective and practical measures for the prevention of such acts of terrorism and for the prosecution and punishment of their perpetrators,

Considering that the occurrence of such acts is a matter of grave concern to the international community as a whole,

Noting that the activities of military forces of States are governed by rules of international law outside the framework of this Convention and that the exclusion of certain actions from the coverage of this Convention does not condone or make lawful otherwise unlawful acts, or preclude prosecution under other laws,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For the purposes of this Convention:

1. "State or government facility" includes any permanent or temporary facility or conveyance that is used or occupied by representatives of a State, members of Government, the legislature or the judiciary or by officials or employees of a State or any other public authority or entity or by employees or officials of an intergovernmental organization in connection with their official duties.

2. "Infrastructure facility" means any publicly or privately owned facility providing or distributing services for the benefit of the public, such as water, sewage, energy, fuel or communications.

3. "Explosive or other lethal device" means:

(a) An explosive or incendiary weapon or device that is designed, or has the capability, to cause death, serious bodily injury or substantial material damage; or

(b) A weapon or device that is designed, or has the capability, to cause death, serious bodily injury or substantial material damage through the release, dissemination or impact of toxic chemicals, biological agents or toxins or similar substances or radiation or radioactive material.

4. "Military forces of a State" means the armed forces of a State which are organized, trained and equipped under its internal law for the primary purpose of national defence or security and persons acting in support of those armed forces who are under their formal command, control and responsibility.

5. "Place of public use" means those parts of any building, land, street, waterway or other location that are accessible or open to members of the public, whether continuously, periodically or occasionally, and encompasses any commercial, business, cultural, historical, educational, religious, governmental, entertainment, recreational or similar place that is so accessible or open to the public.

6. "Public transportation system" means all facilities, conveyances and instrumentalities, whether publicly or privately owned, that are used in or for publicly available services for the transportation of persons or cargo.

1. Any person commits an offence within the meaning of this Convention if that person unlawfully and intentionally delivers, places, discharges or detonates an explosive or other lethal device in, into or against a place of public use, a State or government facility, a public transportation system or an infrastructure facility:

(a) With the intent to cause death or serious bodily injury; or

(b) With the intent to cause extensive destruction of such a place, facility or system, where such destruction results in or is likely to result in major economic loss.

2. Any person also commits an offence if that person attempts to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article.

3. Any person also commits an offence if that person:

(a) Participates as an accomplice in an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article; or

(b) Organizes or directs others to commit an offence as set forth in paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article; or

(c) In any other way contributes to the commission of one or more offences as set forth in paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article by a group of persons acting with a common purpose; such contribution shall be intentional and either be made with the aim of furthering the general criminal activity or purpose of the group or be made in the knowledge of the intention of the group to commit the offence or offences concerned.

Article 3

This Convention shall not apply where the offence is committed within a single State, the alleged offender and the victims are nationals of that State, the alleged offender is found in the territory of that State and no other State has a basis under article 6, paragraph 1 or paragraph 2, of this Convention to exercise jurisdiction, except that the provisions of articles 10 to 15 shall, as appropriate, apply in those cases.

Article 4

Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary:

(a) To establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in article 2 of this Convention;

(b) To make those offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the grave nature of those offences.

Article 5

Each State Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary, including, where appropriate, domestic legislation, to ensure that criminal acts within the scope of this Convention, in particular where they are intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public or in a group of persons or particular persons, are under no circumstances justifiable by considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other similar nature and are punished by penalties consistent with their grave nature.

Article 6

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 when:

(a) The offence is committed in the territory of that State; or

(b) The offence is committed on board a vessel flying the flag of that State or an aircraft which is registered under the laws of that State at the time the offence is committed; or

(c) The offence is committed by a national of that State.

2. A State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

(a) The offence is committed against a national of that State; or

(b) The offence is committed against a State or government facility of that State abroad, including an embassy or other diplomatic or consular premises of that State; or

(c) The offence is committed by a stateless person who has his or her habitual residence in the territory of that State; or

(d) The offence is committed in an attempt to compel that State to do or abstain from doing any act; or

(e) The offence is committed on board an aircraft which is operated by the Government of that State.

3. Upon ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to this Convention, each State Party shall notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the jurisdiction it has established under its domestic law in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article. Should any change take place, the State Party concerned shall immediately notify the Secretary-General.

4. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 2 in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite that person to any of the States Parties which have established their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of the present article.

5. This Convention does not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its domestic law.

Article 7

1. Upon receiving information that a person who has committed or who is alleged to have committed an offence as set forth in article 2 may be present in its territory, the State Party concerned shall take such measures as may be necessary under its domestic law to investigate the facts contained in the information.

2. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, the State Party in whose territory the offender or alleged offender is present shall take the appropriate measures under its domestic law so as to ensure that person's presence for the purpose of prosecution or extradition.

3. Any person regarding whom the measures referred to in paragraph 2 of the present article are being taken shall be entitled to:

(a) Communicate without delay with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which that person is a national or which is otherwise entitled to protect that person's rights or, if that person is a stateless person, the State in the territory of which that person habitually resides;

(b) Be visited by a representative of that State;

(c) Be informed of that person's rights under subparagraphs (a) and (b).

4. The rights referred to in paragraph 3 of the present article shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and regulations of the State in the territory of which the offender or alleged offender is present, subject to the provision that the said laws and regulations must enable full effect to be given to the purposes for which the rights accorded under paragraph 3 are intended.

5. The provisions of paragraphs 3 and 4 of the present article shall be without prejudice to the right of any State Party having a claim to jurisdiction in accordance with article 6, subparagraph 1 (c) or 2 (c), to invite the International Committee of the Red Cross to communicate with and visit the alleged offender.

6. When a State Party, pursuant to the present article, has taken a person into custody, it shall immediately notify, directly or through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the States Parties which have established jurisdiction in accordance with article 6, paragraphs 1 and 2, and, if it considers it advisable, any other interested States Parties, of the fact that that person is in custody and of the circumstances which warrant that person's detention. The State which makes the investigation contemplated in paragraph 1 of the present article shall promptly inform the said States Parties of its findings and shall indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.

1. The State Party in the territory of which the alleged offender is present shall, in cases to which article 6 applies, if it does not extradite that person, be obliged, without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case without undue delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.

2. Whenever a State Party is permitted under its domestic law to extradite or otherwise surrender one of its nationals only upon the condition that the person will be returned to that State to serve the sentence imposed as a result of the trial or proceeding for which the extradition or surrender of the person was sought, and this State and the State seeking the extradition of the person agree with this option and other terms they may deem appropriate, such a conditional extradition or surrender shall be sufficient to discharge the obligation set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article.

1. The offences set forth in article 2 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between any of the States Parties before the entry into force of this Convention. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be subsequently concluded between them.

2. When a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested State Party may, at its option, consider this Convention as a legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth in article 2. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences set forth in article 2 as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

4. If necessary, the offences set forth in article 2 shall be treated, for the purposes of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territory of the States that have established jurisdiction in accordance with article 6, paragraphs 1 and 2.

5. The provisions of all extradition treaties and arrangements between States Parties with regard to offences set forth in article 2 shall be deemed to be modified as between State Parties to the extent that they are incompatible with this Convention.

Article 10

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in article 2, including assistance in obtaining evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.

2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 of the present article in conformity with any treaties or other arrangements on mutual legal assistance that may exist between them. In the absence of such treaties or arrangements, States Parties shall afford one another assistance in accordance with their domestic law.

Article 11

None of the offences set forth in article 2 shall be regarded, for the purposes of extradition or mutual legal assistance, as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence or as an offence inspired by political motives. Accordingly, a request for extradition or for mutual legal assistance based on such an offence may not be refused on the sole ground that it concerns a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence or an offence inspired by political motives.

Article 12

Nothing in this Convention shall be interpreted as imposing an obligation to extradite or to afford mutual legal assistance, if the requested State Party has substantial grounds for believing that the request for extradition for offences set forth in article 2 or for mutual legal assistance with respect to such offences has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion or that compliance with the request would cause prejudice to that person's position for any of these reasons.

Article 13

1. A person who is being detained or is serving a sentence in the territory of one State Party whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of testimony, identification or otherwise providing assistance in obtaining evidence for the investigation or prosecution of offences under this Convention may be transferred if the following conditions are met:

(a) The person freely gives his or her informed consent; and

(b) The competent authorities of both States agree, subject to such conditions as those States may deem appropriate.

2. For the purposes of the present article:

(a) The State to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise requested or authorized by the State from which the person was transferred;

(b) The State to which the person is transferred shall without delay implement its obligation to return the person to the custody of the State from which the person was transferred as agreed beforehand, or as otherwise agreed, by the competent authorities of both States;

(c) The State to which the person is transferred shall not require the State from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person;

(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence being served in the State from which he was transferred for time spent in the custody of the State to which he was transferred.

3. Unless the State Party from which a person is to be transferred in accordance with the present article so agrees, that person, whatever his or her nationality, shall not be prosecuted or detained or subjected to any other restriction of his or her personal liberty in the territory of the State to which that person is transferred in respect of acts or convictions anterior to his or her departure from the territory of the State from which such person was transferred.

Article 14

Any person who is taken into custody or regarding whom any other measures are taken or proceedings are carried out pursuant to this Convention shall be guaranteed fair treatment, including enjoyment of all rights and guarantees in conformity with the law of the State in the territory of which that person is present and applicable provisions of international law, including international law of human rights.

States Parties shall cooperate in the prevention of the offences set forth in article 2, particularly:

(a) By taking all practicable measures, including, if necessary, adapting their domestic legislation, to prevent and counter preparations in their respective territories for the commission of those offences within or outside their territories, including measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize, knowingly finance or engage in the perpetration of offences as set forth in article 2;

(b) By exchanging accurate and verified information in accordance with their national law, and coordinating administrative and other measures taken as appropriate to prevent the commission of offences as set forth in article 2;

(c) Where appropriate, through research and development regarding methods of detection of explosives and other harmful substances that can cause death or bodily injury, consultations on the development of standards for marking explosives in order to identify their origin in post-blast investigations, exchange of information on preventive measures, cooperation and transfer of technology, equipment and related materials.

Article 16

The State Party where the alleged offender is prosecuted shall, in accordance with its domestic law or applicable procedures, communicate the final outcome of the proceedings to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit the information to the other States Parties.

Article 17

The States Parties shall carry out their obligations under this Convention in a manner consistent with the principles of sovereign equality and territorial integrity of States and that of non-intervention in the domestic affairs of other States.

Article 18

Nothing in this Convention entitles a State Party to undertake in the territory of another State Party the exercise of jurisdiction and performance of functions which are exclusively reserved for the authorities of that other State Party by its domestic law.

Article 19

1. Nothing in this Convention shall affect other rights, obligations and responsibilities of States and individuals under international law, in particular the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international humanitarian law.

2. The activities of armed forces during an armed conflict, as those terms are understood under international humanitarian law, which are governed by that law, are not governed by this Convention, and the activities undertaken by military forces of a State in the exercise of their official duties, inasmuch as they are governed by other rules of international law, are not governed by this Convention.

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation within a reasonable time shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If, within six months from the date of the request for arbitration, the parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice, by application, in conformity with the Statute of the Court.

2. Each State may at the time of signature, ratification, acceptance or approval of this Convention or accession thereto declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of the present article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 with respect to any State Party which has made such a reservation.

3. Any State which has made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article may at any time withdraw that reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

1. This Convention shall be open for signature by all States from 12 January 1998 until 31 December 1999 at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

2. This Convention is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. The instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. This Convention shall be open to accession by any State. The instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 22

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. For each State ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twenty-second instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after deposit by such State of its instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession.

Article 23

1. Any State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Denunciation shall take effect one year following the date on which notification is received by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 24

The original of this Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall send certified copies thereof to all States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed this Convention, opened for signature at United Nations Headquarters in New York on 12 January 1998.

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomats

As at 31 December 1997, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: 178 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512], 48 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality [YUN 1961, p. 516], and 61 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [YUN 1961, p. 516]. Eritrea acceded to the Convention in 1997.

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510] had 156 parties, 36 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the acquisition of nationality [YUN 1963, p. 512], and 44 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [YUN 1963, p. 512].

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents [YUN 1973, p. 770], had 96 States parties, with Brunei Darussalam, Lebanon, Qatar and the Republic of Moldova acceding in 1997.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/156 [YUN 1996, p. 1212], the Secretary-General invited Member States to communicate their views on measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as provided for in Assembly resolution 42/154 [YUN 1987, p. 1068]. In a September report [A/INF/52/6 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the texts and an analytical summary of the information received.

Five new reports of violations were submitted by States. In connection with two reported cases in respect of which no information had been received within a reasonable period of time, the Secretary-General addressed reminders to those States. One follow-up report was received. Four States submitted views regarding the enhancement of diplomatic relations.

ILC action. On 15 May, ILC, in accordance with resolution 51/160 [YUN 1996 p. 1203], established a working group to examine further the topic of diplomatic protection and to indicate the scope and the content of the topic in the light of comments and observations made during the debate on the subject in the Sixth Committee and written comments by Governments.

In the view of the Working Group, the topic concerned the basis, conditions, modalities and consequences of diplomatic protection: claims brought by States on behalf of their nationals against another State. A similar mechanism had been extended by analogy to claims by international organizations for the protection of their agents. The Working Group decided to retain material dealing only with indirect harm (harm caused to natural or legal persons whose case was taken up by a State) and not with direct harm (harm caused directly to the State or its property). It also drew attention to the distinction between diplomatic protection and a formal claim made by a State in respect of an injury to one of its nationals which had not been redressed through local remedies, and certain diplomatic and consular activities for the assistance and protection of nationals as envisaged by articles 3 and 5, respectively, of the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512] and the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510]. The topic of diplomatic protection dealt with at least four major areas: the basis of diplomatic protection; claimants and respondents in diplomatic protection; the conditions under which diplomatic protection might be exercised; and the consequences of diplomatic protection.

The Commission recommended that the Special Rapporteur submit in 1998 a preliminary report on the basis of the outline proposed by the Working Group. It decided that the Working Group should endeavour to complete the first reading of the topic by the end of the quinquennium.

Treaties and agreements

Reservations to treaties

In 1997, ILC had before it once again the second report [YUN 1996, p. 1213] of the Special Rapporteur, Alain Pellet (France), on the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties. The report had been introduced to the Commission in July 1996 but owing to lack of time the Commission had been unable to consider the report and the draft resolution.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/156 (see above), expressed its appreciation to the Commission for the preliminary conclusions on reservations to normative multilateral treaties, including human rights treaties, and drew the attention of Governments to the importance for ILC of having their views on the Commission's preliminary conclusion. The Assembly also recommended that the Commission continue its work on the topic, taking into account the comments of Governments.

Treaties involving international organizations

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], which had not yet entered into force, had 24 States parties as at 31 December 1997.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1997, some 1,057 international agreements and 904 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 571 registrations or formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded were published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1997, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed and recorded in 1981, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991 were issued:

Multilateral treaties

New multilateral treaties concluded under UN auspices

The following treaties, concluded under UN auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General during 1997:

Agreement concerning the Adoption of Uniform Technical Prescriptions for Wheeled Vehicles, Equipment and Parts which can be fitted and/or be used on Wheeled Vehicles and the Conditions for Reciprocal Recognition of Approvals Granted on the Basis of These Prescriptions, done at Geneva on 20 March 1958

Regulation No. 101: "Uniform provisions concerning the approval of passenger cars equipped with an internal combustion engine with regard to the measurement of the emission of carbon dioxide and fuel consumption"

Regulation No. 103: "Uniform provisions concerning the approval of replacement catalytic converters for power-driven vehicles"

Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, adopted on 23 May 1997 at the Seventh Meeting of the States Parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982

Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of International Watercourses, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 21 May 1997

Agreement concerning the Adoption of Uniform Conditions for Periodical Technical Inspections of Wheeled Vehicles and the Reciprocal Recognition of Such Inspections, opened for signature at Vienna on 13 November 1997

Protocol on Combined Transport on Inland Waterways to the European Agreement on Important International Combined Transport Liens and Related Installations (AGTC) of 1991, adopted at Geneva on 17 January 1997

International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 15 December 1997

Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, concluded at Oslo on 18 September 1997

Amendment to the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer, adopted at the Ninth Meeting of the Parties at Montreal from 15 to 17 September 1997

Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change adopted at New York on 9 May 1992, adopted at Kyoto (Japan) on 11 December 1997

Multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General

The number of multilateral treaties for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions stood at 494 at the end of 1997. During the year, 207 signatures were affixed to treaties for which he performed depositary functions and 798 instruments of ratification, accession, acceptance and approval or notification were transmitted to him. In addition, he received 221 communications from States expressing observations or declarations and reservations made at the time of signature, ratification or accession.

The following multilateral treaties in respect of which the Secretary-General acted as depositary came into force in 1997:

International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1994, concluded at Geneva on 26 January 1994

Protocol to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution concerning the Control of Emissions of Volatile Organic Compounds or Their Transboundary Fluxes, concluded at Geneva on 18 November 1991

International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1995, concluded at Geneva on 17 February 1995

Agreement concerning the Adoption of Uniform Technical Prescriptions for Wheeled Vehicles, Equipment and Parts which can be fitted and/or be used on Wheeled Vehicles and the Conditions for Reciprocal Recognition of Approvals Granted on the Basis of These Prescriptions, done at Geneva on 20 March 1958

Regulation No. 103: "Uniform provisions concerning the approval of replacement catalytic converters for power-driven vehicles"

Agreement on the Establishment of the International Vaccine Institute, opened for signature at New York on 28 October 1996

Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction, opened for signature at Paris on 13 January 1993

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

In 1997, the United Nations continued to pay special attention to the implementation of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, an important instrument for the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security, as well as for sustainable use of the world's seas and oceans. In November, the General Assembly reaffirmed its decision to undertake an annual review and evaluation of the implementation of the Convention and other developments relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea. It also noted with satisfaction the work of the International Seabed Authority and approved an agreement concerning the relationship between the United Nations and the Authority. The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, which was established in 1996 to settle disputes concerning the interpretation of the Convention, adopted its Rules, a resolution on internal judicial practice and guidelines for the preparation and presentation of cases before the Tribunal. Also in 1997, another important institution, the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, was established. During its second session, the Commission adopted its modus operandi and rules of procedure.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

In 1997, the number of parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea rose to 123 with Benin, Chile, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Mozambique, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, the Russian Federation, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain and the United Kingdom ratifying or acceding to it during the year.

The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 178], entered into force on 16 November 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1301]. It was closed for signature in 1984, having received 159 signatures [YUN 1984, p. 108].

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General, in his annual report on the law of the sea [A/52/487 & Corr.1], pointed out that the ratification of and accession to the Convention of two important maritime nations, the Russian Federation and the United Kingdom, contributed to the strengthening of the legal regime established by the Convention. He also observed that, although universal participation had not been achieved as yet, the trend and rate of ratification and accession augured well for the future.

Meetings of States parties. The sixth (10-14 March) [SPLOS/20] and seventh (19-23 May) [SPLOS/24] meetings of the States parties to the Convention were both held in New York. The sixth meeting considered the establishment of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf and elected its 21 members. It also considered a draft agreement on privileges and immunities of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, which was then adopted at the seventh meeting. Also at the seventh meeting, the States parties approved the Tribunal's 1998 budget, discussed the draft rules of procedure of the Commission and considered the role of the meetings of States parties in reviewing ocean and law of the sea issues.

Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention

During the year, the number of States parties to the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention, which was adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/263 [YUN 1994, p. 1301], reached 83. The Agreement was to be interpreted and applied together with the Convention as a single instrument and, in case of any inconsistency between the Agreement and Part XI of the Convention, the provisions of the Agreement were to prevail. Any ratification or accession to the Convention made after 28 July 1994 represented consent to be bound by the Agreement as well. States that were parties to the Convention prior to the adoption of the Agreement had to be bound by it by depositing an instrument of ratification or accession. The provisional application of the Agreement terminated on the date of its entering into force, 28 July 1996. However, States and entities that applied it provisionally, and for which it was not yet in force, were able to continue to be members of the International Seabed Authority on a provisional basis pending its entry into force. The Council of the Authority was empowered to approve extension of the provisional membership for periods not exceeding a total of two years. As at 30 September 1997, 14 States and one entity, the European Community, continued to be members of the Authority on a provisional basis.

Agreement on the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks

As at 30 September 1997, the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks [YUN 1995, p. 1334] had been ratified by 15 States, and would enter into force 30 days after the date of deposit of the thirtieth instrument of ratification or accession. In contrast with the 1994 Agreement on Part XI, the 1995 Agreement on fish stocks would be interpreted and applied in the context of and in a manner consistent with the Convention and there was no direct link between the Agreement on fish stocks and the Convention with respect to establishing the consent to be bound.

Reports of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in October [A/52/487 & Corr.1] that no State or entity had notified the depositary of its wish to apply for provisional standing. Also in October [A/52/555], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/35 [YUN 1996, p. 1216], presented information provided by States, specialized agencies and other UN bodies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 57], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/28 [draft: A/52/L.29 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39 (b)].

Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 47/192 of 22 December 1992, concerning the United Nations Conference on Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, and resolutions 50/24 of 5 December 1995 and 51/35 of 9 December 1996, concerning the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks,

Recalling also resolutions I and II adopted by the Conference,

Recognizing the importance of the Agreement for the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks and the need for the regular consideration and review of developments relating thereto,

Recognizing also the importance of artisanal and subsistence fishers,

Noting with appreciation the information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, international organizations, intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations in accordance with resolution 51/35,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Recognizes the significance of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks as an important contribution to ensuring the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks;

2. Emphasizes the importance of the early entry into force and effective implementation of the Agreement;

3. Calls upon all States and other entities referred to in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement that have not done so to ratify or accede to it and to consider applying it provisionally;

4. Also calls upon States to ensure that any declarations or statements that they have made or make when signing, ratifying or acceding to the Agreement are consistent with articles 42 and 43 of the Agreement;

5. Takes note with concern that many commercially important straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks have been subject to heavy and little-regulated fishing efforts and that some stocks continue to be overfished;

6. Welcomes the fact that a growing number of States and other entities, as well as regional and subregional fishery management organizations and arrangements, have adopted legislation, established regulations or taken other measures to implement the provisions in the Agreement, and urges them to enforce those measures fully;

7. Calls upon States and other entities and regional and subregional fishery management organizations and arrangements that have not done so to consider taking measures to implement the provisions of the Agreement;

8. Urges States, relevant specialized agencies, international organizations, intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to provide information to the Secretary-General to ensure as comprehensive a report as possible;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session and biennially thereafter on further developments relating to the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, including the status and implementation of the Agreement, taking into account information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements for the conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory fish stocks, as well as other relevant intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that reporting on all major fishery-related activities and instruments is effectively coordinated and duplication of activities and reporting minimized, and that relevant scientific and technical studies are disseminated to the international community, and invites the relevant specialized agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as regional and subregional fishery organizations and arrangements, to cooperate with the Secretary-General to that end;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under an item entitled "Oceans and law of the sea", the sub-item entitled "Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks".

Other developments relating to the Convention

In October [A/52/487 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General noted that, since the Convention's entry into force in 1994, the international community had devoted its attention mainly to the establishment of the institutions created under the Convention and to other institutional aspects. That period had also been one of ensuring consistent implementation of the Convention, harmonization of ongoing international legal and policy developments, and continued international cooperation, within the framework of the Convention, in dealing with emerging issues. The period under review was marked by an intensified call from the international community for a coordinated and integrated approach to oceans and the law of the sea issues, and a concerted search to define the role of the United Nations in that context. Two important institutional questions were emphasized—the periodic review of ocean issues and the strengthening of inter-agency cooperation in respect of the implementation of the Convention. The Secretary-General stressed the important role of the General Assembly not only in the development of the new treaty system of ocean institutions and effective implementation of the Convention, but also in promoting international cooperation on new issues in the field of law of the sea and ocean affairs.

The Secretary-General described the activities of the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. On a regional basis, he gave an account of claims to maritime areas, summarized claims to maritime zones and elaborated on the problem of access of landlocked States to and from the sea. A separate part of the report was devoted to all aspects of navigation, including safety of ships, safety of navigation and liability and compensation for damage. The report contained information on conservation and management of living marine resources and on protection and preservation of the marine environment from pollution, and provided a regional review of the status of fisheries. The Secretary-General stated that the issue of piracy and armed robbery against ships, as well as smuggling of aliens, continued to be a major source of concern. He provided information on actions taken by the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and the UN Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to deal with the problem.

Other subjects discussed dealt with marine technology, cooperative mechanisms, capacity-building and information systems.

Also in October [A/52/491], pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/34 [YUN 1996, p. 1218], the Secretary-General presented information received from 14 UN bodies and organizations on the impact of the entry into force of the Convention on related existing and proposed instruments and programmes throughout the UN system.

Institutions created by the Convention

International Seabed Authority

Through the International Seabed Authority, established by the Convention on the Law of the Sea, States organized and conducted activities for the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil beyond the limits of national jurisdiction. As of September 1997, there were 135 members of the Authority, including 15 members on a provisional basis.

The Authority, which in 1997 commenced its functional phase, held its third session in two parts (Kingston, Jamaica, 17-27 March and 18-29 August). All four of its organs—the Assembly, the Council, the Legal and Technical Commission and the Finance Committee—met during the sessions. The Authority made progress in a number of substantive and organizational areas, of which the most significant was the approval of plans of work for exploration by seven national and international organizations. For the first time, exploration activities for deep seabed minerals would be carried out under the new legal regime for the world's oceans established by the Convention and the 1994 Agreement on Part XI.

The Legal and Technical Commission of the Authority considered draft regulations on prospecting and exploration of polymetallic nodules, which also included the draft standard terms of exploration contracts. The draft regulations focused on three key areas: protection and preservation of the marine environment; annual reporting and the transfer of data by the contractors to the Authority; and confidentiality of the information submitted. The Authority also initiated work on data and information that could be used to estimate the magnitude of potentially recoverable polymetallic nodule resources and understand the probable environmental impacts of deep seabed mining.

The Authority was in the process of finalizing a number of organizational matters, including an agreement between the Authority and the Government of Jamaica regarding its headquarters, a protocol on privileges and immunities, and financial regulations.

In July 1997, the Secretary-General of the Authority issued his first annual report [ISBA/3/A/4], which covered all aspects of the Authority's activities since its establishment and outlined future plans. By an August report [ISBA/3/A/5], the Secretary-General of the Authority presented the proposed budget for 1998. While in 1997 the administrative expenses of the Authority had been met from the regular budget of the United Nations, in 1998 the budget was to be financed, for the first time, by the assessed contributions of its members.

During its resumed third session, the Authority's Assembly adopted that budget in the sum of $4,703,900 and decided to establish a working capital fund of $392,000. It also adopted a scale of assessments for contributions by members to its administrative budget and working capital fund, based on the scale used for the regular budget of the United Nations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/6 [YUN 1996, p. 1358], granted the Authority, an autonomous organization, observer status. On 14 March 1997, the UN Secretary-General and the Secretary-General of the Authority signed a relationship agreement between the United Nations and the Authority, which was applied provisionally from that date until its approval by the Assembly on 26 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 57], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/27 [draft: A/52/L.27 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 39 (a)].

Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/34 of 9 December 1996, in which, inter alia, it invited the Secretary-General to take steps to conclude a relationship agreement with the International Seabed Authority, to be applied provisionally pending its approval by the General Assembly and the Assembly of the Authority,

Noting the decision of the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority at its third session to approve the Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority signed on 14 March 1997 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the International Seabed Authority,

Having considered the Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority, Approves the Agreement, which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority

The United Nations and the International Seabed Authority,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly of the United Nations in its resolution 3067(XXVIII) of 16 November 1973 decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea for the adoption of a convention dealing with all matters relating to the law of the sea and that the Conference adopted the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which, inter alia, establishes the International Seabed Authority,

Recalling that the General Assembly of the United Nations in its resolution 48/263 of 28 July 1994 adopted the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982,

Mindful of the entry into force of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea on 16 November 1994 and the entry into force of the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 on 28 July 1996,

Noting General Assembly resolution 51/6 of 24 October 1996 inviting the International Seabed Authority to participate in the deliberations of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer,

Noting also article 162, paragraph 2 (f), of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982, General Assembly resolution 51/34 of 9 December 1996 and decision ISBA/C/10 of 12 August 1996 of the Council of the International Seabed Authority calling for the conclusion of a relationship agreement between the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority,

Desiring to make provision for an effective system of mutually beneficial relationships whereby the discharge of their respective responsibilities may be facilitated,

Taking into account for this purpose the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the provisions of the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

Purpose of the Agreement

This Agreement, which is entered into by the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority (hereinafter referred to as "the Authority"), pursuant to the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations (hereinafter referred to as "the Charter") and the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (hereinafter referred to as "the Convention") and the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 (hereinafter referred to as "the Agreement") respectively, is intended to define the terms on which the United Nations and the Authority shall be brought into relationship.

Article 2

Principles

1. The United Nations recognizes the Authority as the organization through which States parties to the Convention shall, in accordance with Part XI of the Convention and the Agreement, organize and control activities in the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction (hereinafter referred to as "the Area"), in particular with a view to administering the resources of the Area. The United Nations undertakes to conduct its activities in such a manner as to promote the legal order for the seas and oceans established by the Convention and the Agreement.

2. The United Nations recognizes that the Authority, by virtue of the Convention and the Agreement, shall function as an autonomous international organization in the working relationship with the United Nations established by this Agreement.

3. The Authority recognizes the responsibilities of the United Nations under the Charter and other international instruments, in particular in the fields of international peace and security and economic, social, cultural and humanitarian development and protection and preservation of the environment.

4. The Authority undertakes to conduct its activities in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter to promote peace and international cooperation and in conformity with the policies of the United Nations furthering these purposes and principles.

Article 3

Cooperation and coordination

1. The United Nations and the Authority recognize the desirability of achieving effective coordination of the activities of the Authority with those of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and of avoiding unnecessary duplication of activities.

2. The United Nations and the Authority agree that, with a view to facilitating the effective discharge of their respective responsibilities, they will cooperate closely with each other and consult each other on matters of mutual interest.

Article 4

Assistance to the Security Council

1. The Authority shall cooperate with the Security Council by providing to it at its request such information and assistance as may be required in the exercise of its responsibility for the maintenance or restoration of international peace and security. In case confidential information is provided, the Security Council shall preserve its confidential character.

2. At the invitation of the Security Council, the Secretary-General of the Authority may attend its meetings to supply it with information or give it other assistance with regard to matters within the competence of the Authority.

Article 5

International Court of Justice

The Authority agrees, subject to the provisions of this Agreement relating to the safeguarding of confidential material, data and information, to provide any information that may be requested by the International Court of Justice in accordance with the Statute of that Court.

Article 6

Reciprocal representation

1. Without prejudice to the decision of the General Assembly in its resolution 51/6 of 24 October 1996 granting observer status to the Authority, and subject to such decisions as may be taken concerning the attendance of their meetings by observers, the United Nations shall, subject to the rules of procedure and practice of the bodies concerned, invite the Authority to send representatives to meetings and conferences of other competent bodies, whenever matters of interest to the Authority are discussed.

2. Subject to such decisions as may be taken by its competent bodies concerning the attendance of their meetings by observers, the Authority shall, subject to the rules of procedure and practice of the bodies concerned, invite the United Nations to send representatives to all its meetings and conferences, whenever matters of interest to the United Nations are discussed.

3. Written statements submitted by the United Nations to the Authority for distribution shall be distributed by the secretariat of the Authority to all members of the appropriate organ or organs of the Authority in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure. Written statements presented by the Authority to the United Nations for distribution shall be distributed by the Secretariat of the United Nations to all members of the appropriate organ or organs of the United Nations in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure. Such written statements will be circulated in the quantities and languages in which they are made available to the respective secretariat.

Cooperation between the two secretariats

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Authority shall consult from time to time regarding the implementation of their respective responsibilities under the Convention and the Agreement. They shall consult, in particular, regarding such administrative arrangements as may be necessary to enable the two organizations effectively to carry out their functions and to ensure effective cooperation and liaison between their secretariats.

Article 8

Exchange of information, data and documents

1. The United Nations and the Authority shall arrange for the exchange of information, publications and reports of mutual interest.

2. In fulfilment of the responsibilities entrusted to him under article 319, subparagraphs 2 (a) and (b), of the Convention and assumed by him pursuant to General Assembly resolution 37/66 of 3 December 1982, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall report to the Authority from time to time on issues of a general nature that have arisen with respect to the Convention and shall regularly notify the Authority of ratifications and formal confirmations of and accessions to the Convention and amendments thereto, as well as of denunciations of the Convention.

3. The United Nations and the Authority shall cooperate in obtaining from States parties to the Convention copies of charts or lists of geographical coordinates of the outer limit lines of their continental shelf as referred to in article 84 of the Convention. They will exchange copies of such lists of coordinates or, to the extent practicable, charts.

4. Where the outer limits of the national jurisdiction of a State party are defined by the outer limit of the exclusive economic zone, the United Nations shall provide to the Authority copies of such lists of geographical coordinates or, to the extent practicable, charts, indicating the outer limit lines of the exclusive economic zone of such State party as may be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations pursuant to article 75, paragraph 2, of the Convention.

5. The Authority, to the extent practicable, shall furnish special studies or information requested by the United Nations. The submission of such reports, studies and information shall be subject to conditions set forth in article 14.

6. The United Nations and the Authority are subject to necessary limitations for the safeguarding of confidential material, data and information furnished to them by their members or others. Subject to article 4, paragraph 1, nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to require either the United Nations or the Authority to furnish any material, data and information the furnishing of which could, in its judgement, constitute a violation of the confidence of any of its members or anyone from whom it shall have received such information, or which would otherwise interfere with the orderly conduct of its operation.

Statistical services

The United Nations and the Authority, recognizing the desirability of maximum cooperation in the statistical field and of minimizing the burdens placed on Governments and other organizations from which information may be collected, undertake to avoid undesirable duplication between them with respect to the collection, analysis and publication of statistics, and agree to consult with each other on the most efficient use of resources and of technical personnel in the field of statistics.

Article 10

Technical assistance

The United Nations and the Authority undertake to work together in the provision of technical assistance in the fields of marine scientific research in the Area, transfer of technology and the prevention, reduction and control of pollution of the marine environment from activities in the Area. In particular, they agree to take such measures as may be necessary to achieve effective coordination of their technical assistance activities within the framework of existing coordinating machinery in the field of technical assistance, taking into account the respective roles and responsibilities of the United Nations and the Authority under their constitutive instruments, as well as those of other organizations participating in technical assistance activities.

Article 11

Personnel arrangements

1. The United Nations and the Authority agree to apply, in the interests of uniform standards of international employment and to the extent feasible, common personnel standards, methods and arrangements designed to avoid unjustified differences in terms and conditions of employment and to facilitate interchange of personnel in order to obtain the maximum benefit from their services.

2. To this end, the United Nations and the Authority agree:

(a) To consult together from time to time concerning matters of common interest relating to the terms and conditions of employment of the officers and staff, with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as may be feasible;

(b) To cooperate in the interchange of personnel when desirable, on a temporary or a permanent basis, making due provision for the retention of seniority and pension rights;

(c) To cooperate in the establishment and operation of suitable machinery for the settlement of disputes arising in connection with the employment of personnel and related matters.

3. Pursuant to decision ISEA/A/15 of 15 August 1996 of the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority, and upon the approval of the General Assembly of the United Nations, the Authority shall participate in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in accordance with the Regulations of the Fund and shall accept the jurisdiction of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal in matters involving applications alleging non-observance of those Regulations.

4. The terms and conditions on which any facilities or services of the Authority or the United Nations in connection with the matters referred to in this article are to be extended to the other shall, where necessary, be the subject of supplementary arrangements concluded for this purpose.

Article 12

Conference services

1. Unless the General Assembly of the United Nations, after giving reasonable notice to the Authority, decides otherwise, the United Nations will make available to the Authority, on a reimbursable basis, such facilities and services as may be required for the meetings of the Authority, including translation and interpretation services, documentation and conference services.

2. The terms and conditions on which any facilities or services of the United Nations in connection with the matters referred to in this article may be extended to the Authority shall, where necessary, be the subject of separate arrangements concluded for this purpose.

Article 13

Budgetary and financial matters

The Authority recognizes the desirability of establishing close budgetary and financial cooperation with the United Nations aimed at benefiting from the experience of the United Nations in this field,

Article 14

Financing of services

The costs and expenses resulting from the provision of services pursuant to this Agreement shall be the subject of separate arrangements between the Authority and the United Nations.

Article 15

United Nations laissez-passer

Without prejudice to the right of the Authority to issue its own travel documents, officials of the Authority shall be entitled, in accordance with such special arrangements as may be concluded between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Authority, to use the laissez-passer of the United Nations as a valid travel document where such use is recognized under the Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Seabed Authority or other agreements defining the privileges and immunities of the Authority.

Article 16

Implementation of the Agreement

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Authority may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of this Agreement as may be found desirable.

Article 17

Amendments

This Agreement may be amended by agreement between the United Nations and the Authority. Any such amendment agreed upon shall enter into force on its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Assembly of the Authority.

Article 18

Entry into force

1. This Agreement shall enter into force on its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Assembly of the Authority.

2. This Agreement shall be applied provisionally by the United Nations and the Authority upon signature by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Authority.

IN WITNESS THEREOF the undersigned, being duly authorized representatives of the United Nations and the International Seabed Authority, have signed the present agreement.

SIGNED this 14th day of March 1997 at New York in two originals in the English language.

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its second (3-28 February), third (2-29 April) and fourth (6-31 October) sessions in Hamburg, Germany [SPLOS/27]. The inaugural session was held in Hamburg in October 1996.

The primary task of the Tribunal was to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention. The programme of work of the Tribunal since October 1996 included the establishment of chambers, working groups and committees, consideration of the Rules of the Tribunal and other documents concerning the procedures and practice, privileges and immunities of the Tribunal, relations with other organizations, administrative arrangements, financial matters, library, facilities and publications.

The Tribunal constituted its Chamber of Summary Procedure at its first session. At the second session, the Working Group of the Whole on the Rules of the Tribunal was established and ad hoc working groups were formed to deal with organizational matters. In addition, the Tribunal established the Seabed Disputes Chamber, the Chamber for Marine Environment Disputes and the Chamber for Fisheries Disputes. During the third session, the following committees were established to replace the ad hoc working groups: Budget and Finance Committee, Committee on Rules and Judicial Practice, Committee on Staff and Administration, and Committee on Library and Publications. The fourth session was mainly devoted to the consideration and adoption of the Rules of the Tribunal. The Working Group of the Whole concluded its work successfully and, on 28 October, the Rules were adopted by the Tribunal. The Rules provided a set of procedural steps to be followed for the handling of cases from the institution of proceedings through the different stages of written pleadings and hearings to the delivery of a judgment. The Rules also set out the organization of the Tribunal, the responsibilities of the Registrar and the organization of the Registry. Pursuant to article 40 of the Rules, the Tribunal adopted the Resolution on the Internal Judicial Practice of the Tribunal, which stipulated the procedures by which the Tribunal should reach decisions on cases submitted to it. It also discussed and adopted guidelines concerning the preparation and presentation of cases before the Tribunal.

In May, the seventh meeting of States parties to the Convention adopted the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea [SPLOS/27]. The Agreement was deposited with the Secretary-

General and opened for signature at UN Headquarters for 24 months from 1 July. It would enter into force 30 days after the date of deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession. As at 31 December, three States had signed the Agreement and one had ratified it. In addition, the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal was signed by the Secretary-General and the President of the Tribunal on 18 December. The Agreement established a mechanism for cooperation between the United Nations and the Tribunal, with a view to facilitating the effective attainment of their mutual objectives and the coordination of their activities.

Pursuant to article 19 of the Statute of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, the expenses of the Tribunal were to be shared by the States parties, the International Seabed Authority and other entities. As at 31 December, 54 States parties had made their contributions to the 1996/97 budget totalling $5,911,624. The approved budget for 1998 amounted to $5,767,169 and comprised a recurrent expenditure of $5,627,169, including $1,971,330 for the remuneration of judges and $2,419,239 for salaries and related staff costs, and a non-recurrent expenditure of $140,000.

Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf

In March, the States parties to the Convention established the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf and elected the first 21 members of the Commission. At its first session (New York, 16-20 June) [A/52/487], the Commission elected its Chairman, two Vice-Chairmen and a Rapporteur, adopted several of its draft rules of procedure, and deferred the remainder for further discussion. At its second session (New York, 2-12 September), the Commission adopted a majority of the draft rules of procedure. The draft rules concerning the delimitation of disputes between States, and the issue of confidentiality, as well as protection from possible financial liability of members of the Commission arising from potential allegations of breach of the rules of confidentiality, required further consideration. The Commission requested the next meeting of States parties to the Convention to consider a recommendation for the establishment of a trust fund to be used to meet the travel and accommodation expenses of Commission members from developing countries. During its second session, the Commission also adopted its modus operandi, which dealt with the internal functioning of the Commission and established a number of technical working groups.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 November [meeting 57], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/26 [draft: A/52/L.26 & Add.1] by recorded vote (138-1-4) [agenda item 39 (a)].

Oceans and the law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/28 of 6 December 1994, 50/23 of 5 December 1995 and 51/34 of 9 December 1996 adopted subsequent to the entry into force of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea on 16 November 1994,

Emphasizing the universal character of the Convention and its fundamental importance for the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security, as well as for the sustainable use and development of the seas and oceans and their resources,

Conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Conscious also of the strategic importance of the Convention as a framework for national, regional and global action in the marine sector, as recognized also by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21,

Recalling its resolution S-19/2 of 28 June 1997, to which is annexed the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, in particular paragraph 36 thereof dealing with oceans and seas, as well as its decision that oceans and seas will be the sectoral theme discussed at the seventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in 1999,

Recalling also its resolution 49/131 of 19 December 1994 on the International Year of the Ocean,

Considering that, in its resolution 2749(XXV) of 17 December 1970, it proclaimed that the seabed and ocean floor, and the subsoil thereof, beyond the limits of national jurisdiction ("the Area"), as well as the resources of the Area, are the common heritage of mankind, and considering also that the Convention, together with the Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 ("the Agreement"), provides the regime to be applied to the Area and its resources,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in the number of States parties to the Convention and the Agreement,

Aware of the importance of the effective implementation of the Convention and its uniform and consistent application, as well as of the growing need to promote and facilitate international cooperation on the law of the sea and ocean affairs at the global, regional and subregional levels,

Recognizing the impact on States of the entry into force of the Convention and the increasing need, particularly of developing States, for advice and assistance in its implementation in order to benefit thereunder,

Recalling the provisions of Part XV of the Convention establishing a comprehensive dispute settlement system and article 287 regarding the choice of means for the settlement of disputes,

Recalling also the establishment of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea ("the Tribunal") in accordance with Annex VI to the Convention as a new means for the settlement of disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention and the Agreement,

Welcoming the establishment of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf ("the Commission") during the sixth Meeting of States Parties to the Convention,

Noting the progress in the work of the Commission during its first and second sessions, held in June and September 1997, on developing its rules of procedure and its modus operandi,

Recalling that the institutions established by the Convention shall be cost-effective,

Expressing its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for his efforts in support of the Convention and in its effective implementation, including providing assistance in the functioning of the institutions created by the Convention,

Noting the responsibilities of the Secretary-General under the Convention and related resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular resolution 49/28, and emphasizing the importance of the performance of such responsibilities for the effective and consistent implementation of the Convention,

Recalling its resolution 50/214 of 23 December 1995, in which it decided that savings in the programme budget would not affect the full implementation of mandated programmes and activities,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat to provide timely information on the oceans, marine affairs and the law of the sea through its Web site on the Internet,

Conscious of the need to promote and facilitate international cooperation, especially at the subregional and regional levels, in order to ensure the orderly and sustainable development of the uses and resources of the seas and oceans,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and reaffirming the importance of the annual consideration and review by the General Assembly of the overall developments pertaining to the implementation of the Convention, as well as of other developments relating to the law of the sea and ocean affairs,

1. Calls upon all States that have not done so, in order to achieve the goal of universal participation, to become parties to the Convention and the Agreement;

2. Calls upon States to harmonize their national legislation with the provisions of the Convention, to ensure the consistent application of those provisions and to ensure also that any declarations or statements that they have made or make when signing, ratifying or acceding are in conformity with the Convention and to withdraw any of their declarations or statements that are not in conformity;

3. Reaffirms the unified character of the Convention;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the Meeting of States Parties to the Convention from 18 to 22 May 1998;

5. Approves the convening by the Secretary-General of the third and fourth sessions of the Commission, to be held from 4 to 15 May and 31 August to 4 September 1998 respectively;

6. Notes with satisfaction the progress in the work of the International Seabed Authority, in particular the approval, during the third session of the Authority in 1997, of seven plans of work for exploration in the Area, and the progress being made by the Legal and Technical Commission towards the formulation of a draft mining code;

7. Notes with appreciation the adoption of the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Tribunal, the progress made towards the conclusion of a headquarters agreement between the Tribunal and Germany and the adoption by the Tribunal of the Rules of the Tribunal, the resolution on internal judicial practice and the guidelines for the preparation and presentation of cases before the Tribunal;

8. Encourages States parties to the Convention to consider making a written declaration choosing from the means set out in article 287 of the Convention for the settlement of disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention and the Agreement, and invites States to note the provisions of Annexes V, VI, VII and VIII to the Convention concerning, respectively, conciliation, the Tribunal, arbitration and special arbitration;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the annual comprehensive report on the law of the sea and the activities of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the mandate set forth in resolution 49/28;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the institutional capacity of the Organization adequately responds to the needs of States, the newly established institutions (including the International Seabed Authority and the Tribunal) and other competent international organizations by providing advice and assistance, taking into account the special needs of developing countries;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to carry out the responsibilities entrusted to him in the Convention and related resolutions of the General Assembly and to ensure that the performance of such activities is not adversely affected by savings as may be realized under the approved budget for the Organization; these activities include, inter alia:

(a) Preparing annually a comprehensive report for the consideration of the General Assembly on developments relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea;

(b) Preparing periodically special reports on specific topics such as fisheries, transit problems of the landlocked developing States or other topics of current interest, including those requested by intergovernmental conferences and bodies, taking into account the provisions of the Convention;

(c) Developing and maintaining the appropriate facilities for the deposit by States of charts and geographical coordinates concerning maritime zones, including lines of delimitation, and to give due publicity thereto, as required by article 16, paragraph 2, article 47, paragraph 9, article 75, paragraph 2, article 76, paragraph 9 and article 84, paragraph 2, of the Convention;

(d) Strengthening the existing system for the collection, compilation and dissemination of information on ocean affairs and the law of the sea and, in cooperation with the relevant international organizations, furthering the development of a centralized system for providing coordinated information and advice;

(e) Undertaking efforts to promote better understanding of the Convention and the Agreement in order to ensure their effective implementation;

(f) Ensuring appropriate responses to requests of States, in particular developing States, for advice and assistance in implementing the provisions of the Convention and the Agreement;

(g) Preparing for and convening the Meetings of States Parties to the Convention and providing the necessary services for such meetings, in accordance with the Convention;

(h) Preparing for and convening the meetings of the Commission and providing it with the necessary services in accordance with the Convention;

(i) Strengthening training activities in ocean and coastal area management and development;

12. Reaffirms the importance of ensuring the uniform and consistent application of the Convention and a coordinated approach to its overall implementation, and of strengthening technical cooperation and financial assistance for this purpose, stresses once again the continuing importance of the efforts of the Secretary-General to these ends, and reiterates its invitation to the competent international organizations and other international bodies to support these objectives;

13. Invites Member States and others in a position to do so to contribute to the further development of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship Programme on the Law of the Sea and of the training and educational activities on the law of the sea and ocean affairs established by the General Assembly in resolution 35/116 of 10 December 1980, as well as advisory services and assistance in support of effective implementation of the Convention;

14. Calls upon States to implement its resolution 51/189 of 16 December 1996 and to strengthen the implementation of existing international and regional agreements on marine pollution;

15. Also calls upon States to take actions, individually or collectively and through their participation in competent global, regional and subregional forums, to improve the quality and quantity of scientific data as a basis for effective decisions related to protection of the marine environment and the conservation of living marine resources;

16. Notes that it proclaimed the year 1998 as the International Year of the Ocean;

17. Reaffirms its decision to undertake an annual review and evaluation of the implementation of the Convention and other developments relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the implementation of the present resolution, including other developments and issues relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea, in connection with his annual comprehensive report on oceans and the law of the sea, and to circulate the report sufficiently in advance of consideration by the General Assembly of the item concerning oceans and the law of the sea;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Oceans and the law of the sea".

Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

During 1997, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs continued to fulfil its role as the substantive unit of the Secretariat responsible for the review and monitoring of all developments related to the law of the sea and ocean affairs, as well as for the implementation of the Convention. To that end, it focused on strengthening its existing system for the collection, compilation and dissemination of information on the law of the sea and related matters. It did that by providing a convenient means for obtaining cross-referenced materials on the subject. Its Web site contained many documents, including texts of the Convention, the 1994 Agreement on Part XI, and the 1995 Agreement on fish stocks, as well as information on their current status. Information on the new ocean institutions established under the Convention—the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf—was also available. The Division maintained and further developed a number of databases that allowed a powerful, full-text search capability and greatly facilitated States in the initial stages of their legislative process.

The Division participated in the work of and provided assistance to various international bodies dealing with ocean affairs, including the Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Environment Protection and the Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, and acted as a co-sponsoring partner of the Aquatic Sciences and Fisheries Abstracts, an international bibliographical information service.

The Division provided assistance to course development units (CDUs) of the Train-Sea-Coast programme in the form of quality control of the courses under preparation, and direct support to CDUs and to overall programme management and coordination. The first Train-Sea-Coast Coordination Conference (New York, 24-26 April) assessed progress made and adopted a detailed plan for the next biennium.

The 1997/98 Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, established in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 139], was presented to Dody Kusumonegoro of the Directorate of International Legal and Treaties Affairs, Department of Foreign Affairs of Indonesia.

Chapter V

Other legal questions

In 1997, the United Nations continued its work on various aspects of international law, including international economic law.

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met in January/February and discussed proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States. It invited the General Assembly to consider an organizational framework for addressing the implementation of Charter provisions relating to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII.

In anticipation of the end of the Decade of International Law in 1999, the Assembly approved the arrangements made by the Netherlands and the Russian Federation to mark both the end of the Decade and the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, held in 1899.

The Assembly adopted a programme of assistance in the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law. Various UN organs and agencies contributed to the programme by providing information on the latest developments of international law and through fellowships, seminars, symposia and workshops.

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law adopted the Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency.

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country discussed travel restrictions imposed by the host country, the parking situation for diplomatic vehicles and related matters.

International organizations and international law

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

Special Committee on UN Charter

At its 1997 session (New York, 27 January-7 February) [A/52/33], the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

continued to consider proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security, the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in those contexts, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 51/209 [YUN 1996, p. 1222]. It also continued to discuss implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII. In addition, it proposed an amendment to rule 103 of the Assembly's rules of procedure, based on a working paper submitted by Portugal (see below).

In connection with the maintenance of international peace and security, the Special Committee had before it the following documents submitted by the Russian Federation: a working paper regarding the implementation of the provisions of the Charter, including Article 50 on assistance to third States adversely affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII (see below), submitted in 1996 [A/51/33]; a working paper entitled "Some ideas on the basic conditions and criteria for imposing and implementing sanctions and other enforcement measures" [A/AC.182/L.94] (see below); a working paper entitled "Draft declaration on the basic principles and criteria for the work of United Nations peacekeeping missions and mechanisms for the prevention and settlement of crises and conflicts", submitted in 1996 [A/AC.182/L.89]; and an informal working paper entitled "Some views on the importance of an urgent need for the elaboration of a draft declaration on the basic principles and criteria for the work of the United Nations peacekeeping missions and mechanisms for the prevention and settlement of crises and conflicts" [A/AC.182/L.89/Add.1]. In addition, the Commission considered a revised version of a working paper submitted by Cuba in 1995 entitled "Strengthening of the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness" [A/AC.182/L.93], and a revised proposal submitted by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya in 1996 with a view to strengthening the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security [A/AC.182/L.90].

With regard to the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, the Special Committee had before it a proposal entitled "Establishment of a dispute settlement service offering or responding with its services early in disputes", submitted by Sierra Leone in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1342], together with an annotation to that proposal contained in a 1 September 1995 letter from Sierra Leone to the Secretary-General [A/50/403] and a revised proposal by Sierra Leone entitled "Establishment of a dispute prevention and early settlement service" [A/AC.182/L.96]. The Special Committee also considered a working paper submitted by Guatemala entitled "Possible amendments to the Statute of the International Court of Justice to extend its competence with respect to contentious matters to disputes between States and international organizations" [A/AC.182/L.95/Rev.1] and a working paper submitted by Costa Rica [A/AC.182/L.97] as an alternative to Guatemala's working paper.

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/209 [YUN 1996, p. 1222], the Secretary-General submitted an October progress report [A/52/317 & Corr.1] on his efforts to expedite the preparation and publication of supplements to the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council. He assessed the work required and proposed measures that might facilitate the process, including the merger of the two publications to eliminate duplication.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/52/652], adopted resolution 52/161 without vote [agenda item 151].

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its relevant resolutions adopted at subsequent sessions,

Recalling also its resolution 47/233 of 17 August 1993 on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 47/62 of 11 December 1992 on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council,

Recalling the elements relevant to the work of the Special Committee contained in its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993,

Recalling also its resolution 51/241 of 31 July 1997 on the strengthening of the United Nations system and its resolution 51/242 of 15 September 1997, entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", by which it adopted the texts on coordination and the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations, which are annexed to that resolution,

Recalling further that the International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, and reaffirming its authority and independence,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in the volume of cases before the Court,

Considering the desirability of finding practical ways and means of strengthening the Court,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 51/209 of 17 December 1996,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the work of its session held in 1997,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization;

2. Decides that the Special Committee will hold its next session from 26 January to 6 February 1998;

3. Requests the Special Committee, at its session in 1998, in accordance with paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 50/52 of 11 December 1995:

(a) To continue its consideration of all proposals concerning the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations and, in this context, to consider other proposals relating to the maintenance of international peace and security already submitted or which may be submitted to the Special Committee at its session in 1998, including the revised proposal on the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security, the revised working paper on the strengthening of the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness, the revised working paper entitled "Some ideas on the basic conditions and criteria for imposing and implementing sanctions and other enforcement measures" and the working paper on the draft declaration on the basic principles and criteria for the work of the United Nations peacekeeping missions and mechanisms for the prevention and settlement of crises and conflicts;

(b) To continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration the reports of the Secretary-General, the proposals submitted on this subject, the debate on this question in the Sixth Committee during the fifty-second session of the General Assembly and the text on the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations contained in annex II to General Assembly resolution 51/242, and also the implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 50/51 of 11 December 1995, 51/208 of 17 December 1996 and 52/152 of 15 December 1997;

(c) To continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and, in this context, to continue its consideration of proposals relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes between

States, including the proposal on the establishment of a dispute settlement service offering or responding with its services early in disputes and those proposals relating to the enhancement of the role of the International Court of Justice;

(d) To continue to consider proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council in the light of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with resolution 50/55, the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform" and the views expressed by States on this subject during the fifty-second session of the General Assembly;

4. Invites Member States, the States parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and the International Court of Justice if it so desires, to present, before the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, their comments and observations on the consequences that the increase in the volume of cases before the Court has on its operation, on the understanding that whatever action may be taken as a result of this invitation will have no implications for any changes in the Charter of the United Nations or the Statute of the International Court of Justice;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the views expressed and the practical suggestions made during the debate held within the framework of the Sixth Committee, to make every effort to implement in a timely manner the steps proposed in paragraph 59 of his report regarding the preparation and publication of the supplements to the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council with a view to updating them and to submit a progress report on the matter to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

6. Invites the Special Committee at its session in 1998 to continue to identify new subjects for consideration in its future work with a view to contributing to the revitalization of the work of the United Nations, to discuss how to offer its assistance to the working groups of the General Assembly in this field and, in this regard, to consider ways and means of improving coordination between the Special Committee and other working groups dealing with the reform of the Organization, including the role of the Chairperson of the Special Committee for this purpose;

7. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at the fifty-third session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Assistance to third States affected by Chapter VII sanctions

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/208 [YUN 1996, p. 1224], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the implementation of provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [A/52/308]. He outlined arrangements by the Secretariat to provide better information and early assessment to the Security Council and its organs about the actual or potential effects of sanctions on third States, noting that the arrangements first put in place in 1996 continued to apply.

With regard to developing a possible methodology for assessing the consequences actually incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures, the Secretary-General had invited a number of international organizations to provide ideas and suggestions. They confirmed that no uniform and internationally recognized methodology existed and gave him their views as to how it should be formulated. On the basis of that input, the Secretary-General proposed that the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs continue its efforts to develop a possible methodology and convene an ad hoc expert group meeting on the subject in the first half of 1998.

The Secretary-General had sought the assistance of relevant institutions both within and outside the Organization in collecting and coordinating information about international economic assistance available to affected third States. He also summarized recent developments related to the role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the area of assistance to those States.

In a 26 February note [S/1997/161], the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of Assembly resolution 51/208 [YUN 1996, p. 1224], which underlined the importance of consultations under Article 50 with third States that were or might be confronted with special economic problems resulting from measures imposed by the Council.

Sixth Committee action. In its report [A/52/33], the Special Committee on the Charter invited the Assembly to consider the question of an appropriate organizational framework for addressing further the implementation of the Charter provisions relating to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII, taking into account the reports of the Secretary-General as well as the proposals presented and views expressed in the Special Committee.

On 21 October [A/52/652], the Assembly's Sixth Committee established an informal Working Group on the question of the implementation of Charter provisions relating to third States affected by Security Council sanctions, which held five meetings between 24 October and 18 November.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/652], adopted resolution 52/162 without vote [agenda item 151].

Implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the special economic problems confronting certain States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against other States, and taking into account the obligation of Members of the United Nations under Article 49 of the Charter of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

Recalling the right of third States confronted with special economic problems of that nature to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter,

Recognizing the desirability of the consideration of further appropriate procedures for consultations to deal in a more effective manner with the problems referred to in Article 50 of the Charter,

Recalling:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular paragraph 41 thereof,

(b) Its resolution 47/120 A of 18 December 1992, entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters", its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993, entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section IV thereof entitled "Special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures", and its resolution 51/242 of 15 September 1997, entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", in particular annex II thereof entitled "Question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations",

(c) The position paper of the Secretary-General entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",

(d) The statement by the President of the Security Council of 22 February 1995,

(e) The report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to the statement by the President of the Security Council regarding the question of special economic problems of States as a result of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter,

(f) The reports of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and General Assembly resolutions 48/210 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 A of 2 December 1994, 50/58 E of 12 December 1995 and 51/30 A of 5 December 1996,

(g) The 1994, 1995, 1996 and 1997 reports of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization,

(h) The reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Taking note of the most recent report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/208 of 17 December 1996,

Recalling that the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions has been addressed recently in several forums, including the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and the Security Council,

Recalling also the measures taken by the Security Council in accordance with the statement by the President of the Security Council of 16 December 1994 that, as part of the Council's effort to improve the flow of information and the exchange of ideas between members of the Council and other States Members of the United Nations, there should be increased recourse to open meetings, in particular at an early stage in its consideration of a subject,

Stressing that, in the formulation of sanctions regimes, due account should be taken of the potential effects of sanctions on third States,

Stressing also, in this context, the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and the Council's primary responsibility under Article 24 of the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations,

Recalling that, under Article 31 of the Charter, any Member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected,

Recognizing that the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII has been causing special economic problems in third States and that it is necessary to intensify efforts to address those problems,

Recognizing also that assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions would further contribute to an effective and comprehensive approach by the international community to sanctions imposed by the Security Council,

Recognizing further that the international community at large and, in particular, international institutions involved in providing economic and financial assistance should continue to take into account and address in a more effective manner the special economic problems of affected third States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, in view of their magnitude and of the adverse impact on the economy of those States,

Recalling the provisions of resolutions 50/51 of 11 December 1995 and 51/208 of 17 December 1996,

1. Renews its invitation to the Security Council to consider the establishment of further mechanisms or procedures, as appropriate, for consultations as early as possible under Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations with third States which are or may be confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, with regard to a solution of those problems, including appropriate ways and means for increasing the effectiveness of its methods and procedures applied in the consideration of requests by the affected States for assistance;

2. Welcomes once again the further measures taken by the Security Council since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 50/51 aimed at increasing the effectiveness and transparency of the sanctions committees, invites the Council to implement those measures, and strongly recommends that the Council continue its efforts further to enhance the functioning of those committees, to streamline their working procedures and to facilitate access to them by representatives of States that find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of sanctions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/51 related to the possible guidelines that might be adopted on technical procedures to be used by the appropriate parts of the Secretariat, and paragraphs 4 to 6 of resolution 51/208, and to continue, on a regular basis, to collate and coordinate information about international assistance available to third States affected by the implementation of sanctions, to continue developing a possible methodology for assessing the adverse consequences actually incurred by third States and to initiate action in order to explore innovative and practical measures of assistance to the affected third States;

4. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General that an ad hoc expert group meeting be convened in the first half of 1998 with a view to developing a possible methodology for assessing the consequences actually incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures, in this connection requests that due regard be given by the expert group to the particular problems and needs of developing countries confronted by the special economic problems arising from carrying out enforcement measures, also endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General that the expert group explore innovative and practical measures of assistance that could be provided by the relevant organizations both within and outside the United Nations system to the affected third States, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the results of the expert group meeting to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

5. Reaffirms the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts by the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council and, as appropriate, in identifying solutions to the special economic problems of those States;

6. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions, other international organizations, regional organizations and Member States to address more specifically and directly, where appropriate, special economic problems of third States affected by sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter and, for this purpose, to consider improving procedures for consultations to maintain a constructive dialogue with such States, including through regular and frequent meetings as well as, where appropriate, special meetings between the affected third States and the donor community, with the participation of United Nations agencies and other international organizations;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its session in 1998, to continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration all the related reports of the Secretary-General, the proposals submitted on this subject, the debate on this question in the Sixth Committee during the fifty-second session of the General Assembly and the text on the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations contained in annex II to General Assembly resolution 51/242, as well as the implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 50/51 and 51/208 and the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

UN Decade of International Law

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/157 [YUN 1996, p. 1226], the Secretary-General submitted a September note [A/52/363] on the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999), which the Assembly had declared in resolution 44/23 [YUN 1989, p. 848]. The Decade's objectives were to promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law and encourage its progressive development and codification; to promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice (ICJ); and to encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law. In 1996, the Assembly adopted the programme of activities for the final term of the Decade (1997-1999) in resolution 51/157 [YUN 1996, p. 1226].

The Secretary-General, on the basis of information received from States and international organizations, outlined steps taken throughout 1997 to implement the Decade's programme, including activities to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the International Law Commission (see PART FIVE, Chapter III). He also described the various means used by the Organization to disseminate information on international law, including increased use of the Internet.

With regard to on-line access to the UN Treaty Series and the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, the Secretary-General, in response to Assembly resolution 51/158 [YUN 1996, p. 1230], proposed introducing a user-fee mechanism to recover the costs of posting those publications on the Internet. He also discussed the possibility of translating the list of titles of treaties appearing in the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General into all the official languages of the United Nations and their dissemination through the Internet.

Sixth Committee consideration. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/157 [YUN 1996, p. 1226], the Sixth Committee's Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law continued its work in 1997, holding nine meetings between 17 October and 13 November. In an oral report to the Sixth Committee, the Working Group's Chairman stated that the Group would consider the question of deposition of acts of formal confirmation of the 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], as recommended by the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/647], adopted resolution 52/153 without vote [agenda item 146 (a)].

United Nations Decade of International Law

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989, by which it declared the period 1990-1999 the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Recalling also that the main purposes of the Decade, according to resolution 44/23, should be, inter alia:

(a) To promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law,

(b) To promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice,

(c) To encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification,

(d) To encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law,

Recalling further its resolution 51/157 of 16 December 1996, to which was annexed the programme for the activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the Decade, and its resolution 51/158 of 16 December 1996, entitled "Electronic treaty database",

Expressing its appreciation for the note submitted by the Secretary-General, and having considered it,

Recalling that the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations of 21 March 1986 is one of the conventions adopted under the aegis of the United Nations which have codified the law of treaties, and recalling also the impact of the Convention on the practice of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations,

Recalling also that at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly the Sixth Committee established the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law with a view to preparing generally acceptable recommendations on the programme of activities for the Decade,

Noting that at the fifty-second session of the General Assembly the Sixth Committee reconvened the Working Group to continue its work in accordance with resolution 51/157 and all previous resolutions on the question,

Having considered the oral report of the Chairman of the Working Group to the Sixth Committee,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work done on the United Nations Decade of International Law at the fifty-second session of the General Assembly, and requests the Working Group of the Sixth Committee to continue its work at the fifty-third session in accordance with its mandate and methods of work;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to States and international organizations and institutions that have undertaken activities, including sponsoring conferences on various subjects of international law, in implementation of the programme for the activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the Decade;

3. Invites all States and international organizations and institutions referred to in the programme to provide, update or supplement information on activities they have undertaken in implementation of the programme, as appropriate, to the Secretary-General for inclusion in the report requested in paragraph 8 of resolution 51/157;

4. Encourages States to disseminate at the national level, as appropriate, information contained in the note submitted by the Secretary-General;

5. Also encourages States to consider ratifying or acceding to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, international organizations that have signed the Convention to deposit an act of formal confirmation of the Convention and other international organizations entitled to do so to accede to it at an early date;

6. Encourages States parties and international organizations or agencies, including depositaries, in order to facilitate further implementation of the obligation laid down in Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations to provide, where available, a copy of the text of any treaty in disk or other electronic format and to consider providing where available translations in English or French or both as may be needed, for the purpose of assisting with the timely publication of the United Nations Treaty Series;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to apply the provisions of article 12, paragraph 2, of the regulations to give effect to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations to multilateral treaties falling within the terms of article 12, paragraph 2 (a) to (c) of the regulations;

8. Encourages the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat to continue in its efforts to facilitate access to information concerning United Nations activities in the field of international law and to bring up to date the publication of the United Nations Juridical Yearbook;

9. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue developing a policy of providing Internet access to the United Nations Treaty Series and the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, keeping in mind especially the needs of developing countries in recovering the costs thereof;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed to translate and publish in the form of a report issued in the official languages of the United Nations a list of the titles of the treaties appearing in the publication Multi-lateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that hard copies of the publications mentioned in paragraph 9 above continue to be distributed to permanent missions free of charge in accordance with their needs;

12. Appeals to States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations working in the field of international law and to the private sector to make financial contributions or contributions in kind for the purpose of facilitating the implementation of the programme;

13. Once again requests the Secretary-General to bring the programme to the attention of States and international organizations and institutions working in the field of international law;

14. Notes with appreciation the activities undertaken by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the field of international humanitarian law, including with regard to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law".

First International Peace Conference Centennial and end of Decade

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/159 [YUN 1996, p. 1229], the Netherlands and the Russian Federation, in October 1997 [A/C.6/52/3], submitted to the Secretary-General a joint programme of action for the celebration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, held in The Hague (Netherlands) on the initiative of Russia in 1899. That centennial year would also mark the closing of the UN Decade of International Law and the celebration would cover both events. The major themes of the celebrations would include those of the 1899 Conference, namely, the armament question, humanitarian law and the laws and customs of war, and the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

Activities focusing on those themes were envisaged for the latter part of 1998 and the whole of 1999 and would take place in The Hague, in St. Petersburg, New York and Geneva. Several regional consultations were also planned for the months preceding the celebrations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/647], adopted resolution 52/154 without vote [agenda item 146 (b)].

Action dedicated to the 1999 centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once again the commitment of the United Nations and its Member States, as well as the States parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, to the goals of the United Nations Decade of International Law, expressed by the General Assembly in resolutions under that item of its agenda,

Mindful of the long and well-established tradition of progressive development and codification of international law, marked by the first and the second International Peace Conference, held at The Hague in 1899 and 1907 respectively,

Recalling that a third international peace conference, scheduled to be held at The Hague in 1915, was not held because of the outbreak of the First World War the previous year,

Recalling also the proposal by the Russian Federation for a third international peace conference with a view to considering international law and order in the post-cold-war world at the threshold of the twenty-first century, referred to in General Assembly resolution 51/159 of 16 December 1996, and the initiatives undertaken by the Kingdom of the Netherlands with regard to the commemoration of the first International Peace Conference,

Recalling further that in resolution 51/159 the General Assembly invited the Governments of the Russian Federation and the Netherlands to arrange, as a matter of urgency, a preliminary discussion with other interested Member States on the substantive content of action to be taken in 1999 and to seek, in that respect, the cooperation of the International Court of Justice, the Permanent Court of Arbitration, relevant intergovernmental organizations, as well as other relevant organizations,

Noting, in this respect, that a meeting of the "Friends of 1999" was held on 22 April 1997 at the Peace Palace, The Hague, to which representatives of twenty States from all regions of the world, the International Court of Justice, the Permanent Court of Arbitration, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the coalition of non-governmental organizations, The Hague Appeal for Peace, were invited for consultations on proposals for a draft programme of action for the centennial of the first International Peace Conference,

Noting with satisfaction that the realization of all those proposals in the programme of action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, presented by the Netherlands and the Russian Federation, is consistent with the goals of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Noting also that the programme of action, inter alia, calls for the presentation of the results of the centennial discussions to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, at the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Noting further that the programme of action does not entail budgetary implications for the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the programme of action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, presented by the Governments of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation, which aims at contributing to the further development of the themes of the first and the second International Peace Conference and could be regarded as a third international peace conference;

2. Encourages:

(a) The Governments of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation to proceed with the implementation of the programme of action;

(b) All States to participate in the activities set out in the programme of action, as well as to initiate such activities and to coordinate their efforts in this respect at the global level, as well as at the regional and national levels;

(c) All States to take appropriate measures to ensure universal participation in the activities pursuant to the programme of action, with special consideration for the participation of representatives of the least developed countries;

3. Encourages the competent United Nations organs, subsidiary organs, programmes and specialized agencies, including the International Court of Justice, the International Law Commission and the Secretariat, within their respective mandates, competencies and budgets, as well as other international organizations:

(a) To cooperate in the implementation of the programme of action and to coordinate their efforts in this respect;

(b) To consider participation in the activities envisaged in the programme of action;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure consistency of the activities of the Organization relating to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law with the programme of action and to direct his efforts accordingly;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session, under the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law", a sub-item entitled "Progress in the action dedicated to the 1999 centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law".

UN Programme for the teaching and the study of international law

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/43 [YUN 1995, p. 1355], the Secretary-General submitted an October 1997 report [A/52/524] on the implementation of the UN Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law during 1996-1997. The Advisory Committee on the Programme held its thirty-first and thirty-second sessions on 11 December 1996 and 16 October 1997, respectively.

During the biennium, staff members of the Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) carried out activities on various aspects of international law and the law of international organizations and issued numerous publications covering issues such as treaties, arbitral awards and the law of the sea.

Fellowship programmes for the study of international law offered by the United Nations included the Fellowship Programme in International Law, provided by OLA and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR); the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, awarded by OLA; and the UNITAR/International Peace Academy fellowship programme in peace-making and preventive diplomacy.

ILC organized the annual International Law Seminar for advanced students and young professors or government officials. The Law Seminars, held in Geneva, were funded by voluntary contributions from Member States and through national fellowships. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) conducted seminars and symposia to acquaint lawyers, government officials and scholars, particularly from developing countries, with the work of UNCITRAL and the legal texts that had emanated from it. The World Trade Organization (WTO) coordinated a workshop on the procedures for the settlement of trade disputes and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization issued a number of publications, mainly dealing with human rights questions, and established chairs on human rights, democracy and peace at universities in developing countries and in Eastern Europe.

The report also contained guidelines and recommendations for the execution of the Programme during the 1998-1999 biennium, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 50/43.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/646], adopted resolution 52/152 without vote [agenda item 145].

United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 16 of its resolution 50/43 of 11 December 1995 and paragraph 14 of section IV of the annex to its resolution 51/157 of 16 December 1996,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law and the guidelines and recommendations on future implementation of the Programme which were adopted by the Advisory Committee on the Programme and are contained in section III of that report,

Bearing in mind that the encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law is one of the main objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law, as declared in its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989 and further reaffirmed and expanded in section IV of the programme for the activities for the first term (1990-1992), the second term (1993-1994), the third term (1995-1996) and the final term (1997-1999), annexed to resolutions 45/40 of 28 November 1990, 47/32 of 25 November 1992, 49/50 of 9 December 1994 and 51/157, respectively,

Considering that international law should occupy an appropriate place in the teaching of legal disciplines at all universities,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by States at the bilateral level to provide assistance in the teaching and study of international law,

Convinced, nevertheless, that States and international organizations and institutions should be encouraged to give further support to the Programme and increase their activities to promote the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, in particular those activities which are of special benefit to persons from developing countries,

Reaffirming its resolutions 2464(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 2550(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, 2838(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 3106(XXVIII) of 12 December 1973, 3502(XXX) of 15 December 1975, 32/146 of 16 December 1977, 36/108 of 10 December 1981 and 38/129 of 19 December 1983, in which it stated or recalled that in the conduct of the Programme it was desirable to use as far as possible the resources and facilities made available by Member States, international organizations and others, as well as its resolutions 34/144 of 17 December 1979, 40/66 of 11 December 1985, 42/148 of 7 December 1987, 44/28 of 4 December 1989, 46/50 of 9 December 1991 and 48/29 of 9 December 1993, in which, in addition, it expressed or reaffirmed the hope that, in appointing lecturers for the seminars to be held within the framework of the fellowship programme in international law, account would be taken of the need to secure representation of major legal systems and balance among various geographical regions,

1. Approves the guidelines and recommendations contained in section III of the report of the Secretary-General and adopted by the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, in particular those designed to achieve the best possible results in the administration of the Programme within a policy of maximum financial restraint;

2. Also approves the establishment of the United Nations Audiovisual Library in International Law as proposed by the Secretary-General in paragraph 89 and the annex to his report;

3. Authorizes the Secretary-General to carry out in 1998 and 1999 the activities specified in his report, including the provision of:

(a) A number of international law fellowships in both 1998 and 1999, to be determined in the light of the overall resources for the Programme and to be awarded at the request of Governments of developing countries;

(b) A minimum of one scholarship in both 1998 and 1999 under the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, subject to the availability of new voluntary contributions made specifically to the fellowship fund;

(c) Subject to the overall resources for the Programme, assistance in the form of a travel grant for one participant from each developing country, who would be invited to possible regional courses to be organized in 1998 and 1999; and to finance the above activities from provisions in the regular budget, when appropriate, as well as from voluntary financial contributions earmarked for each of the activities concerned, which would be received as a result of the requests set out in paragraphs 14 to 16 below;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his constructive efforts to promote training and assistance in international law within the framework of the Programme in 1996 and 1997, in particular for the organization of the thirty-second and thirty-third sessions of the International Law Seminar, held at Geneva in 1996 and 1997, respectively, and for the activities of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat related to the fellowship programme in international law and to the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, carried out, respectively, through its Codification Division and its Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of admitting, for participation in the various components of the Programme, candidates from countries willing to bear the entire cost of such participation;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to consider the relative advantages of using available resources and voluntary contributions for regional, subregional or national courses, as against courses organized within the United Nations system;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary resources to the programme budget for the Programme for the next and the future bienniums with a view to maintaining the effectiveness of the Programme;

8. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Office of Legal Affairs to bring up to date the United Nations Treaty Series and the United Nations Juridical Yearbook, as well as efforts made to place on the Internet the Treaty Series and other legal information;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

10. Also expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for its participation in the Programme through the activities described in the report of the Secretary-General;

11. Further expresses its appreciation to the Hague Academy of International Law for the valuable contribution it continues to make to the Programme which has enabled candidates under the fellowship programme in international law to attend and participate in the Programme in conjunction with the Academy courses;

12. Notes with appreciation the contributions of the Hague Academy of International Law to the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, and calls upon Member States and interested organizations to give favourable consideration to the appeal of the Academy for a continuation of support and a possible increase in their financial contributions, to enable the Academy to carry out its activities, particularly those relating to the summer courses, regional courses and programmes of the Centre for Studies and Research in International Law and International Relations;

13. Urges all States and relevant international organizations, whether regional or universal, to make all possible efforts to implement the goals and carry out the activities contemplated in section IV of the programme of activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the United Nations Decade of International Law, dealing with the encouragement of the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law and contained in the annex to resolution 51/157;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to publicize the Programme and periodically to invite Member States, universities, philanthropic foundations and other interested national and international institutions and organizations, as well as individuals, to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme or otherwise to assist in its implementation and possible expansion;

15. Reiterates its request to Member States and to interested organizations and individuals to make voluntary contributions, inter alia, for the International Law Seminar, the fellowship programme in international law, the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea and the United Nations Audiovisual Library in International Law, and expresses its appreciation to those Member States, institutions and individuals which have made voluntary contributions for this purpose;

16. Urges in particular all Governments to make voluntary contributions for the organization of regional refresher courses in international law by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, especially with a view to covering the amount needed for the financing of the daily subsistence allowance for up to twenty-five participants in each regional course, thus alleviating the burden on prospective host countries and making it possible for the Institute to continue to organize the regional courses;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the Programme during 1998 and 1999 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee on the Programme, to submit recommendations regarding the execution of the Programme in subsequent years;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law".

Host country relations

In 1997, the Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to consider aspects of relations between the UN diplomatic community and the United States—the host country. At 10 meetings between 9 January and 13 November [A/52/26], the Committee considered the security of missions and the safety of their personnel; the question of privileges and immunities of mission personnel; the use of motor vehicles and parking; host country travel regulations and entry visas issued by the host country; insurance for diplomatic personnel; and other matters.

Security of missions and safety of their personnel

Cuba informed the Committee in July that its Mission continued to face security problems and mentioned the continuing offences by so-called demonstrators or by some United States authorities against the dignity of the Cuban Mission and its personnel.

The United States said that Cuba had implied that New York City police had signalled to demonstrators to initiate a "riot" so that Cuban delegates would be subjected to violence, but that nothing could be further from the truth; the United States was not ignoring legal instruments on diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Cuba drew attention to a particular incident when access to the Mission by a Cuban Government Minister was impeded by law-enforcement officials. The United States replied that its law-enforcement officials did not challenge visitors to the Mission.

The Committee appreciated the host country's efforts to assure the security of missions accredited to the United Nations and anticipated that the host country would continue to prevent any interference with their functioning.

Privileges and immunities

Belarus [A/AC.154/301] and the Russian Federation [A/AC.154/300] informed the Committee that two of their diplomats were unlawfully detained and battered by New York City police in December 1996, resulting in the serious injury of the Russian diplomat. That flagrant violation of diplomatic immunities took place despite the fact that the diplomats had produced their driver's licences and diplomatic identity cards.

The United States pointed out that in a letter addressed to the Permanent Representative of Belarus, the Mayor of New York City, Rudolph W. Giuliani, stated that the version of the incident presented by Belarus was disputed not only by the police officers themselves, but by seven witnesses to the event. One of the diplomats, who had attempted to drive, had been intoxicated, added the Mayor. Although the United States was committed to extending to diplomats the full scope of immunities available under international law, diplomatic immunity was not deemed a licence to endanger the public safety.

On 15 October, the Committee Chairman reported that the issue had been dealt with by the three Missions concerned and it was therefore not necessary for the Committee to consider the matter further.

In November, the Russian Federation informed the Committee of an act of harassment and intimidation against its Permanent Representative by New York City police, when an officer had stopped the Ambassador's car and commandeered the keys after the driver had sounded the horn at a police vehicle. The Ambassador was obliged to change cars and was late for a Security Council meeting. The incident was a flagrant violation of the international law as it related to diplomatic privileges and immunities. The United States shared many of the Russian Federation's concerns regarding the regrettable incident and noted that a meeting of senior police commanders would be convened to discuss the matter and related issues.

Transportation issues

In March, the United States informed the Committee that the United States State Department and New York City had developed a new parking programme [A/AC.154/305], according to which diplomats accredited to the United Nations faced, among other things, new sanctions such as a revocation of car registration if parking fines were not paid.

Costa Rica and the Russian Federation recalled that in the past tickets were automatically voided. Concerns that revocation of car registration would hamper the normal functioning of missions were also expressed by a number of other States.

Some countries indicated that while the diplomatic community had a duty to respect the host country's traffic laws and regulations, the latter had obligations as well. Honduras observed that missions should pay fines but coercive methods were unacceptable.

The Committee established an open-ended Working Group to examine all aspects of the parking problem; the Group appealed to the United States for a deferment of the programme's implementation.

In a legal opinion [A/AC.154/307], the Legal Counsel stated, among other things, that certain provisions of the new parking programme were inconsistent with international law.

In April, the Committee recommended that the General Assembly examine questions relating to the parking of diplomatic vehicles, on the understanding that if the United States deferred implementation of the elements of the programme that the Legal Counsel deemed not to be in full compliance with international law, the Assembly's consideration of the matter would also be deferred. In July, the Chairman informed the Committee that the United States had deferred implementation of the parking programme. Thus, the Assembly's consideration of the matter had also been deferred.

In October, the United States informed the Commission that the State Department and the City of New York were still working on procedures that would form the basis for a diplomatic parking programme that was fair, non-discriminatory, efficient and consistent with local and international law.

In November, the Committee requested the host country to take steps to resolve the problem of diplomatic parking in order to maintain appropriate conditions for the functioning of missions accredited to the United Nations.

Travel regulations and entry visas

In July, Cuba and Iraq complained that the host country continued to impose, and had even intensified, travel limitations on their Mission personnel without explanation. The United States pointed out that the applicable principles of international law neither prohibited the imposition of travel restrictions nor entitled affected individuals to unrestricted travel throughout the United States.

In July, Iraq informed the Committee of delays in the issuance of visas by the United States to their officials. The United States indicated that it would look into the matter.

Insurance and health

In October, the Chairman reported to the Committee that informal meetings had been held with representatives from the health insurance industry. The Committee endorsed the organization of an open-ended meeting of the entire diplomatic community with prospective health-care providers.

Other matters

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya brought to the attention of the Committee problems faced by its Mission, including delays in issuing visas, a reduction in diplomatic personnel, travel restrictions and taxation. The United States noted that the issue of personnel reduction had to be dealt with by the Security Council, since Libya had failed to comply with Council resolution 731(1992)[YUN 1992,p.52]. It also indicated that the imposition of travel restrictions did not contravene the host country's treaty obligations and that the matter of taxation had to be handled between the State Department and the protecting Power representing Libya.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/650], adopted resolution 52/159 without vote [agenda item 149].

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Noting the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding that has guided the deliberations of the Committee on issues affecting the United Nations community and the host country,

Taking into account the increase in the profound interest and concern of many Member States as regards the work of the Committee,

Considering that meetings of the Committee and of the working group on the use of diplomatic motor vehicles were devoted to the consideration of the topic "Transportation: use of motor vehicles, parking and related matters",

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 118 of its report;

2. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interests of the United Nations and all Member States, and requests the host country to continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions, and to promote compliance of local authorities with international norms concerning diplomatic privileges and immunities;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country, and hopes that the concerns raised at the meetings of the Committee will continue to be resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

4. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee aimed at identifying affordable health care programmes for the diplomatic community;

5. Notes that during the reporting period the travel controls previously imposed by the host country on staff of certain missions and staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities remained in effect, again urges the host country to consider lifting such travel controls, and in this regard notes the positions of the affected States, of the Secretary-General and of the host country;

6. Calls upon the host country to review measures and procedures relating to the parking of diplomatic vehicles, with a view to responding to the growing needs of the diplomatic community, and to consult with the Committee on these issues, and requests the host country to take steps in conjunction with the competent authorities to resolve the problem of the parking of diplomatic vehicles, in order to maintain appropriate conditions for the functioning of the delegations and missions accredited to the United Nations in a manner that is fair, non-discriminatory, efficient and consistent with international law, with due regard to diplomatic privileges and immunities and to the proposals made in the Committee and its working group on the use of diplomatic motor vehicles;

7. Requests the Committee to review its membership and composition, with the participation of observers, to consider proposals regarding its membership and composition, and to report on the results of its deliberations to the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

9. Requests the Committee to continue its work, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

International economic law

In 1997, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly. Major action included the adoption of the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border insolvency.

International trade law

At its thirtieth session (Vienna, 12-30 May) [A/52/17], UNCITRAL adopted the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and considered privately financed infrastructure projects; electronic commerce; assignment in receivables financing; legislative implementation of the 1958 New York Convention on foreign arbitral awards; case law on UNCITRAL texts; training and technical assistance; the status and promotion of UNCITRAL texts; and relevant General Assembly resolutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/649], adopted resolution 52/157 without vote [agenda item 148].

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirtieth session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would contribute significantly to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and thereby to the well-being of all peoples,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development and from different legal systems in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the Commission on the work of its thirtieth session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the Commission within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, in particular as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

Concerned that activities undertaken by other bodies of the United Nations system in the field of international trade law without coordination with the Commission might lead to undesirable duplication of efforts and would not be in keeping with the aim of promoting efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, as stated in its resolution 37/106 of 16 December 1982,

Stressing the importance of the further development of the Case Law on United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Texts in promoting the uniform application of the legal texts of the Commission and its value for government officials, practitioners and academics,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirtieth session;

2. Notes with satisfaction the completion and adoption by the Commission of the Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency;

3. Commends the Commission for the progress made in its work on receivables financing, digital signatures and certification authorities, privately financed infrastructure projects and the legislative implementation of the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards;

4. Appeals to Governments that have not yet done so to reply to the questionnaire circulated by the Secretariat in relation to the legal regime governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards;

5. Invites States to nominate persons to work with the private foundation established to encourage assistance to the Commission from the private sector;

6. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field and, in this connection:

(a) Calls upon all bodies of the United Nations system and invites other international organizations to bear in mind the mandate of the Commission and the need to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law;

(b) Recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, continue to maintain close cooperation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

7. Also reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and technical assistance in the field of international trade law, such as assistance in the preparation of national legislation based on legal texts of the Commission;

8. Expresses the desirability for increased efforts by the Commission, in sponsoring seminars and symposia, to provide such training and technical assistance, and in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing seminars and briefing missions in Barbados, Egypt, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, South Africa, Thailand and Viet Nam;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments whose contributions enabled the seminars and briefing missions to take place, and appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Trust Fund for Symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries, and in the award of fellowships to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

9. Appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies responsible for development assistance, such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, as well as to Governments in their bilateral aid programmes, to support the training and technical assistance programme of the Commission and to cooperate and coordinate their activities with those of the Commission;

10. Appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund for travel assistance to developing countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

11. Decides, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to continue, in the competent Main Committee during the fifty-second session of the General Assembly, its consideration of granting travel assistance to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the effective implementation of the programme of the Commission;

13. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law, and to this end urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to those conventions.

Model law on cross-border insolvency

In 1997, UNCITRAL had before it the reports of the Working Group on Insolvency Law on the work of its twentieth (Vienna, 7-18 October 1996) [A/CN.9/433] and twenty-first (New York, 20-31 January 1997) [A/CN.9/435] sessions. At that latter session, the Working Group adopted and decided to submit to UNCITRAL the draft UNCITRAL Model Legislative Provisions on Cross-Border Insolvency.

In May, the Commission adopted the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency and annexed it to its 1997 report [A/52/17]. It requested the Secretary-General to transmit the text, together with the Guide to Enactment of the Model Law, to Governments and other interested bodies. The Commission recommended that States review their legislation on cross-border insolvency and give favourable consideration to the Model Law when they enacted or revised their laws, bearing in mind the need for internationally harmonized legislation governing the subject.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/52/649], adopted resolution 52/158 without vote [agenda item 148].

Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Noting that increased cross-border trade and investment leads to greater incidence of cases where enterprises and individuals have assets in more than one State,

Noting also that when a debtor with assets in more than one State becomes subject to an insolvency proceeding, there often exists an urgent need for cross-border cooperation and coordination in the supervision and administration of the insolvent debtor's assets and affairs,

Considering that inadequate coordination and cooperation in cases of cross-border insolvency reduce the possibility of rescuing financially troubled but viable businesses, impede a fair and efficient administration of cross-border insolvencies, make it more likely that the debtor's assets would be concealed or dissipated and hinder reorganizations or liquidations of debtors' assets and affairs that would be the most advantageous for the creditors and other interested persons, including the debtors and the debtors' employees,

Noting that many States lack a legislative framework that would make possible or facilitate effective cross-border coordination and cooperation,

Convinced that fair and internationally harmonized legislation on cross-border insolvency that respects the national procedural and judicial systems and is acceptable to States with different legal, social and economic systems would contribute to the development of international trade and investment,

Considering that a set of internationally harmonized model legislative provisions on cross-border insolvency is needed to assist States in modernizing their legislation governing cross-border insolvency,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law for completing and adopting the Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the Model Law, together with the Guide to Enactment of the Model Law prepared by the Secretariat, to Governments and interested bodies;

3. Recommends that all States review their legislation on cross-border aspects of insolvency to determine whether the legislation meets the objectives of a modern and efficient insolvency system and, in that review, give favourable consideration to the Model Law, bearing in mind the need for an internationally harmonized legislation governing instances of cross-border insolvency;

4. Recommends also that all efforts be made to ensure that the Model Law, together with the Guide, become generally known and available.

ANNEX

Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law

Preamble

The purpose of the present Law is to provide effective mechanisms for dealing with cases of cross-border insolvency so as to promote the objectives of:

(a) Cooperation between the courts and other competent authorities of this State and foreign States involved in cases of cross-border insolvency;

(b) Greater legal certainty for trade and investment;

(c) Fair and efficient administration of cross-border insolvencies that protects the interests of all creditors and other interested persons, including the debtor;

(d) Protection and maximization of the value of the debtor's assets;

(e) Facilitation of the rescue of financially troubled businesses, thereby protecting investment and preserving employment.

Chapter I. General provisions

Article 1

Scope of application

1. The present Law applies where:

(a) Assistance is sought in this State by a foreign court or a foreign representative in connection with a foreign proceeding; or

(b) Assistance is sought in a foreign State in connection with a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency]; or

(c) A foreign proceeding and a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] in respect of the same debtor are taking place concurrently; or

(d) Creditors or other interested persons in a foreign State have an interest in requesting the commencement of, or participation in, a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency].

2. The present Law does not apply to a proceeding concerning [designate any types of entities, such as banks or insurance companies, that are subject to a special insolvency regime in this State and that this State wishes to exclude from the present Law].

Article 2

Definitions

For the purposes of the present Law:

(a) "Foreign proceeding" means a collective judicial or administrative proceeding in a foreign State, including an interim proceeding, pursuant to a law relating to insolvency in which proceeding the assets and affairs of the debtor are subject to control or supervision by a foreign court, for the purpose of reorganization or liquidation;

(b) "Foreign main proceeding" means a foreign proceeding taking place in the State where the debtor has the centre of its main interests;

(c) "Foreign non-main proceeding" means a foreign proceeding, other than a foreign main proceeding, taking place in a State where the debtor has an establishment within the meaning of subparagraph (f) of the present article;

(d) "Foreign representative" means a person or body, including one appointed on an interim basis, authorized in a foreign proceeding to administer the reorganization or the liquidation of the debtor's assets or affairs or to act as a representative of the foreign proceeding;

(e) "Foreign court" means a judicial or other authority competent to control or supervise a foreign proceeding;

(f) "Establishment" means any place of operations where the debtor carries out a non-transitory economic activity with human means and goods or services.

Article 3

International obligations of this State

To the extent that the present Law conflicts with an obligation of this State arising out of any treaty or other form of agreement to which it is a party with one or more other States, the requirements of the treaty or agreement prevail.

Article 4

[Competent court or authority]^a

The functions referred to in the present Law relating to recognition of foreign proceedings and cooperation with foreign courts shall be performed by [specify the court, courts, authority or authorities competent to perform those functions in the enacting State].

Article 5

Authorization of [insert the title of the person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] to act in a foreign State

A [insert the title of the person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] is authorized to act in a foreign State on behalf of a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency], as permitted by the applicable foreign law.

Article 6

Public policy exception

Nothing in the present Law prevents the court from refusing to take an action governed by the present Law if the action would be manifestly contrary to the public policy of this State.

Article 7

Additional assistance under other laws

Nothing in the present Law limits the power of a court or a [insert the title of the person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] to provide additional assistance to a foreign representative under other laws of this State.

Article 8

Interpretation

In the interpretation of the present Law, regard is to be had to its international origin and to the need to promote uniformity in its application and the observance of good faith.

Chapter II. Access of foreign representatives and creditors to courts in this State

Article 9

Right of direct access

A foreign representative is entitled to apply directly to a court in this State.

Article 10

Limited jurisdiction

The sole fact that an application pursuant to the present Law is made to a court in this State by a foreign representative does not subject the foreign representative of the foreign assets and affairs of the debtor to the jurisdiction of the courts of this State for any purpose other than the application.

Article 11

Application by a foreign representative to commence a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency]

A foreign representative is entitled to apply to commence a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] if the conditions for commencing such a proceeding are otherwise met.

Article 12

Participation of a foreign representative in a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency]

Upon recognition of a foreign proceeding, the foreign representative is entitled to participate in a proceeding regarding the debtor under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency].

Article 13

Access of foreign creditors to a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency]

1. Subject to paragraph 2 of the present article, foreign creditors have the same rights regarding the commencement of, and participation in, a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] as creditors in this State.

2. Paragraph 1 of the present article does not affect the ranking of claims in a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency], except that the claims of foreign creditors shall not be ranked lower than [identify the class of general non-preference claims, while providing that a foreign claim is to be ranked lower than the general non-preference claims if an equivalent local claim (e.g. claim for a penalty or deferred-payment claim) has a rank lower than the general non-preference claims].^b

Notification to foreign creditors of a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency]

1. Whenever under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] notification is to be given to creditors in this State, such notification shall also be given to the known creditors that do not have addresses in this State. The court may order that appropriate steps be taken with a view to notifying any creditor whose address is not yet known.

2. Such notification shall be made to the foreign creditors individually, unless the court considers that, under the circumstances, some other form of notification would be more appropriate. No rogatory letters or other similar formality is required.

3. When a notification of commencement of a proceeding is to be given to foreign creditors, the notification shall:

- (a) Indicate a reasonable time period for filing claims and specify the place for their filing;
- (b) Indicate whether secured creditors need to file their secured claims;
- (c) Contain any other information required to be included in such a notification to creditors pursuant to the law of this State and the orders of the court.

Chapter III. Recognition of a foreign proceeding and relief

Article 15

Application for recognition of a foreign proceeding

1. A foreign representative may apply to the court for recognition of the foreign proceeding in which the foreign representative has been appointed.

2. An application for recognition shall be accompanied by:

- (a) A certified copy of the decision commencing the foreign proceeding and appointing the foreign representative; or

(b) A certificate from the foreign court affirming the existence of the foreign proceeding and of the appointment of the foreign representative; or

(c) In the absence of evidence referred to in subparagraphs (a) and (b), any other evidence acceptable to the court of the existence of the foreign proceeding and of the appointment of the foreign representative.

3. An application for recognition shall also be accompanied by a statement identifying all foreign proceedings in respect of the debtor that are known to the foreign representative.

4. The court may require a translation of documents supplied in support of the application for recognition into an official language of this State.

Article 16

Presumptions concerning recognition

1. If the decision or certificate referred to in paragraph 2 of article 15 indicates that the foreign proceeding is a proceeding within the meaning of subparagraph (a) of article 2 and that the foreign representative is a person or body within the meaning of subparagraph (d) of article 2, the court is entitled to so presume.

2. The court is entitled to presume that documents submitted in support of the application for recognition are authentic, whether or not they have been legalized.

3. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the debtor's registered office, or habitual residence in the case of an individual, is presumed to be the centre of the debtor's main interests.

Article 17

Decision to recognize a foreign proceeding

1. Subject to article 6, a foreign proceeding shall be recognized if:

- (a) The foreign proceeding is a proceeding within the meaning of subparagraph (a) of article 2;
- (b) The foreign representative applying for recognition is a person or body within the meaning of subparagraph (d) of article 2;
- (c) The application meets the requirements of paragraph 2 of article 15;
- (d) The application has been submitted to the court referred to in article 4.

2. The foreign proceeding shall be recognized:

- (a) As a foreign main proceeding if it is taking place in the State where the debtor has the centre of its main interests; or
- (b) As a foreign non-main proceeding if the debtor has an establishment within the meaning of subparagraph (f) of article 2 in the foreign State.

3. An application for recognition of a foreign proceeding shall be decided upon at the earliest possible time.

4. The provisions of articles 15, 16, 17 and 18 do not prevent modification or termination of recognition if it is shown that the grounds for granting it were fully or partially lacking or have ceased to exist.

Article 18

Subsequent information

From the time of filing the application for recognition of the foreign proceeding, the foreign representative shall inform the court promptly of:

- (a) Any substantial change in the status of the recognized foreign proceeding or the status of the foreign representative's appointment;

(b) Any other foreign proceeding regarding the same debtor that becomes known to the foreign representative.

Article 19

Relief that may be granted upon application for recognition of a foreign proceeding

1. From the time of filing an application for recognition until the application is decided upon, the court may, at the request of the foreign representative, where relief is urgently needed to protect the assets of the debtor or the interests of the creditors, grant relief of a provisional nature, including:

(a) Staying execution against the debtor's assets;

(b) Entrusting the administration or realization of all or part of the debtor's assets located in this State to the foreign representative or another person designated by the court, in order to protect and preserve the value of assets that, by their nature or because of other circumstances, are perishable, susceptible to devaluation or otherwise in jeopardy;

(c) Any relief mentioned in paragraph 1 (c), (d) and (g) of article 21 below.

2. [insert provisions (or refer to provisions in force in the enacting State) relating to notice.]

3. Unless extended under paragraph 1 (f) of article 21, the relief granted under the present article terminates when the application for recognition is decided upon.

4. The court may refuse to grant relief under the present article if such relief would interfere with the administration of a foreign main proceeding.

Article 20

Effects of recognition of a foreign main proceeding

1. Upon recognition of a foreign proceeding that is a foreign main proceeding:

(a) Commencement or continuation of individual actions or individual proceedings concerning the debtor's assets, rights, obligations or liabilities is stayed;

(b) Execution against the debtor's assets is stayed;

(c) The right to transfer, encumber or otherwise dispose of any assets of the debtor is suspended.

2. The scope, and the modification or termination, of the stay and suspension referred to in paragraph 1 of the present article are subject to [refer to any provisions of law of the enacting State relating to insolvency that apply to exceptions, limitations, modifications or termination in respect of the stay and suspension referred to in paragraph 1 of the present article].

3. Paragraph 1 (a) of the present article does not affect the right to commence individual actions or proceedings to the extent necessary to preserve a claim against the debtor.

4. Paragraph 1 of the present article does not affect the right to request the commencement of a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] or the right to file claims in such a proceeding.

Article 21

Relief that may be granted upon recognition of a foreign proceeding

1. Upon recognition of a foreign proceeding, whether main or non-main, where necessary to protect the assets of the debtor or the interests of the creditors, the court may, at the request of the foreign representative, grant any appropriate relief, including:

(a) Staying the commencement or continuation of individual actions or individual proceedings concerning the debtor's assets, rights, obligations or liabilities, to the extent they have not been stayed under paragraph 1 (a) of article 20;

(b) Staying execution against the debtor's assets to the extent it has not been stayed under paragraph 1 (b) of article 20;

(c) Suspending the right to transfer, encumber or otherwise dispose of any assets of the debtor to the extent this right has not been suspended under paragraph 1 (c) of article 20;

(d) Providing for the examination of witnesses, the taking of evidence or the delivery of information concerning the debtor's assets, affairs, rights, obligations or liabilities;

(e) Entrusting the administration or realization of all or part of the debtor's assets located in this State to the foreign representative or another person designated by the court;

(f) Extending relief granted under paragraph 1 of article 19;

(g) Granting any additional relief that may be available to [insert the title of a person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] under the laws of this State.

2. Upon recognition of a foreign proceeding, whether main or non-main, the court may, at the request of the foreign representative, entrust the distribution of all or part of the debtor's assets located in this State to the foreign representative or another person designated by the court, provided that the court is satisfied that the interests of creditors in this State are adequately protected.

3. In granting relief under the present article to a representative of a foreign non-main proceeding, the court must be satisfied that the relief relates to assets that, under the law of this State, should be administered in the foreign non-main proceeding or concerns information required in that proceeding.

Article 22

Protection of creditors and other interested persons

1. In granting or denying relief under article 19 or 21, or in modifying or terminating relief under paragraph 3 of the present article, the court must be satisfied that the interests of the creditors and other interested persons, including the debtor, are adequately protected.

2. The court may subject relief granted under article 19 or 21 to conditions it considers appropriate.

3. The court may, at the request of the foreign representative or a person affected by relief granted under article 19 or 21, or at its own motion, modify or terminate such relief.

Article 23

Actions to avoid acts detrimental to creditors

1. Upon recognition of a foreign proceeding, the foreign representative has standing to initiate [refer to the types of actions to avoid or otherwise render ineffective acts detrimental to creditors that are available in this State to a person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation].

2. When the foreign proceeding is a foreign non-main proceeding, the court must be satisfied that the action relates to assets that, under the law of this State, should be administered in the foreign non-main proceeding.

Article 24

Intervention by a foreign representative in proceedings in this State

Upon recognition of a foreign proceeding, the foreign representative may, provided the requirements of the law of this State are met, intervene in any proceedings in which the debtor is a party.

Chapter IV. Cooperation with foreign courts and foreign representatives

Article 25

Cooperation and direct communication between a court of this State and foreign courts or foreign representatives

1. In matters referred to in article 1, the court shall cooperate to the maximum extent possible with foreign courts or foreign representatives, either directly or through a [insert the title of a person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State].

2. The court is entitled to communicate directly with, or to request information or assistance directly from, foreign courts or foreign representatives.

Article 26

Cooperation and direct communication between the [insert the title of a person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] and foreign courts or foreign representatives

1. In matters referred to in article 1, a [insert the title of a person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] shall, in the exercise of its functions and subject to the supervision of the court, cooperate to the maximum extent possible with foreign courts or foreign representatives.

2. The [insert the title of a person or body administering a reorganization or liquidation under the law of the enacting State] is entitled, in the exercise of its functions and subject to the supervision of the court, to communicate directly with foreign courts or foreign representatives.

Article 27

Forms of cooperation

Cooperation referred to in articles 25 and 26 may be implemented by any appropriate means, including:

- (a) Appointment of a person or body to act at the direction of the court;
- (b) Communication of information by any means considered appropriate by the court;
- (c) Coordination of the administration and supervision of the debtor's assets and affairs;
- (d) Approval or implementation by courts of agreements concerning the coordination of proceedings;
- (e) Coordination of concurrent proceedings regarding the same debtor;
- (f) [The enacting State may wish to list additional forms or examples of cooperation].

Chapter V. Concurrent proceedings

Article 28

Commencement of a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] after recognition of a foreign main proceeding

After recognition of a foreign main proceeding, a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] may be commenced only if the debtor has assets in this State; the effects of that proceeding shall be restricted to the assets of the debtor that are located in this State and, to the extent necessary to implement cooperation and coordination under articles 25, 26 and 27, to other assets of the debtor that, under the law of this State, should be administered in that proceeding.

Article 29

Coordination of a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] and a foreign proceeding

Where a foreign proceeding and a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] are taking place concurrently regarding the same debtor, the court shall seek cooperation and coordination under articles 25, 26 and 27, and the following shall apply:

- (a) When the proceeding in this State is taking place at the time the application for recognition of the foreign proceeding is filed,
 - (i) Any relief granted under article 19 or 21 must be consistent with the proceeding in this State;
 - (ii) If the foreign proceeding is recognized in this State as a foreign main proceeding, article 20 does not apply;
- (b) When the proceeding in this State commences after recognition, or after the filing of the application for recognition, of the foreign proceeding,
 - (i) Any relief in effect under article 19 or 21 shall be reviewed by the court and shall be modified or terminated if inconsistent with the proceeding in this State;
 - (ii) If the foreign proceeding is a foreign main proceeding, the stay and suspension referred to in paragraph 1 of article 20 shall be modified or terminated pursuant to paragraph 2 of article 20 if inconsistent with the proceeding in this State;
 - (c) In granting, extending or modifying relief granted to a representative of a foreign non-main proceeding, the court must be satisfied that the relief relates to assets that, under the law of this State, should be administered in the foreign non-main proceeding or concerns information required in that proceeding.

Article 30

Coordination of more than one foreign proceeding

In matters referred to in article 1, in respect of more than one foreign proceeding regarding the same debtor, the court shall seek cooperation and coordination under articles 25, 26 and 27, and the following shall apply:

- (a) Any relief granted under article 19 or 21 to a representative of a foreign non-main proceeding after recognition of a foreign main proceeding must be consistent with the foreign main proceeding;
- (b) If a foreign main proceeding is recognized after recognition, or after the filing of an application for recognition, of a foreign non-main proceeding, any relief in effect under article 19 or 21 shall be reviewed by the court and shall be modified or terminated if inconsistent with the foreign main proceeding;

(c) If, after recognition of a foreign non-main proceeding, another foreign non-main proceeding is recognized, the court shall grant, modify or terminate relief for the purpose of facilitating coordination of the proceedings.

Article 31

Presumption of insolvency based on recognition of a foreign main proceeding

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, recognition of a foreign main proceeding is, for the purpose of commencing a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency], proof that the debtor is insolvent.

Article 32

Rule of payment in concurrent proceedings

Without prejudice to secured claims or rights in rem, a creditor who has received part payment in respect of its claim in a proceeding pursuant to a law relating to insolvency in a foreign State may not receive a payment for the same claim in a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] regarding the same debtor, so long as the payment to the other creditors of the same class is proportionately less than the payment the creditor has already received.

^a A State where certain functions relating to insolvency proceedings have been conferred upon government-appointed officials or bodies might wish to include in article 4 or elsewhere in chapter I the following provision:

"Nothing in the present Law affects the provisions in force in this State governing the authority of [insert the title of the government-appointed person or body]."

^b The enacting State may wish to consider the following alternative wording to replace paragraph 2 of article 13:

"2. Paragraph 1 of the present article does not affect the ranking of claims in a proceeding under [identify laws of the enacting State relating to insolvency] or the exclusion of foreign tax and social security claims from such a proceeding. Nevertheless, the claims of foreign creditors other than those concerning tax and social security obligations shall not be ranked lower than [identify the class of general non-preference claims, while providing that a foreign claim is to be ranked lower than the general non-preference claims if an equivalent local claim (e.g. claim for a penalty or deferred-payment claim) has a rank lower than the general non-preference claims]."

International commercial arbitration

Privately financed infrastructure projects

The Commission had before it a table of contents setting out the topics to be covered in the draft legislative guide on build-operate-transfer (BOT) and related types of projects and initial drafts of chapters I, II and V of the guide [A/CN.9/438 & Add.1-3]. The Commission generally approved the line of work proposed by the Secretariat and requested it to seek the assistance of outside experts in preparing future chapters. It invited Governments to identify experts who could be of assistance to the Secretariat.

Electronic commerce

The Commission considered the report of the Working Group on Electronic Commerce on the work of its thirty-first session (New York, 18-28 February) [A/CN.9/437]. It endorsed the Group's preliminary conclusion that it was feasible to prepare draft uniform rules on issues of digital signatures and certification authorities and possibly on related matters. The Working Group would consider the question of incorporation by reference at its thirty-second (1998) session.

Assignment in receivables financing

The Commission discussed the report of the Working Group on International Contract Practices on the work of its twenty-fifth (New York, 8-19 July 1996) [A/CN.9/432] and twenty-sixth (Vienna, 11-12 November 1996) [A/CN.9/434] sessions. It noted the progress achieved by the Working Group and observed that the draft on the Convention on Assignments in Receivables Financing had aroused the interest of the finance community and Governments, since it had the potential for increasing the availability of credit at more affordable rates.

Implementation of the 1958 New York Convention

The Commission received a progress report on the legislative implementation of the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards [YUN 1958, p.390]. In 1995, the Secretariat had sent to States parties a questionnaire relating to the legal regime governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign awards but had received only 40 replies out of 112 States parties. The Commission called on States parties to submit their replies and requested the Secretariat to prepare an analysis of the information gathered. It noted that a special commemorative meeting would be devoted to issues of arbitration on 10 June 1998 to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the Convention.

Case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT)

The Commission noted that sets of abstracts with court decisions and arbitral awards relating to the 1980 United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods, the United Nations Convention on the Carriage of Goods by Sea, 1978, and the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration had been published since its 1996 session.

Training and technical assistance

UNCITRAL had before it a Secretariat note [A/CN.9/439] on training and technical assistance activities that had taken place since its 1996 session, including seminars, briefing missions, conferences, workshops, technical assistance and internships. Seven seminars and briefing missions took place on various aspects of international trade law, while others were being planned for Africa, Asia, Latin America and eastern Europe.

The Commission noted that the Secretariat could provide technical assistance in such areas as review of preparatory drafts of legislation; preparation of drafts; comments on reports of law reform commissions; and briefings for legislators, judges, arbitrators and other users of UNCITRAL texts.

The Commission appealed once more to all States, international organizations and other interested entities to consider making contributions to the UNCITRAL Trust Fund for Symposia.

PART FIVE

Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations reform

United Nations reform efforts in response to changes in the external environment took a major step forward in 1997 when the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his two-track plan for managerial and institutional transformation. The first phase involved initiatives and decisions falling within his authority and which could be taken immediately, while the second targeted a longer-term programme of reform. The reforms focused on strengthening the Secretariat's leadership capacity, increasing its administrative efficiency, reducing non-programme costs and turning the savings into a "dividend for development" and reshaping the Organization's substantive work programmes. He also proposed that a Millennium Assembly be held in the year 2000 to review the role of the Organization vis-a-vis the challenges of the twenty-first century. The Assembly, in December, adopted those reforms recommended for immediate implementation and invited the Secretary-General to elaborate on his proposals for more fundamental change.

The Secretary-General's reform proposals complemented a number of measures proposed by the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System to streamline the Organization, which the Assembly adopted in July. The Secretary-General also submitted proposals for procurement reform at Headquarters.

The Economic and Social Council continued to review its subsidiary bodies and to consider the reform of the regional commissions. The Secretary-General presented to the Council proposals for generating funds globally.

Also as part of the continuing reform efforts, initiatives were taken to strengthen the Organization's internal and external oversight mechanisms. In July, the Assembly identified areas to which the oversight machinery should give early attention.

Programme of reform

In his first report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), Secretary-General Kofi Annan said that in the context of global transformation the past pattern of incremental adaptations followed by the United Nations would not suffice. To succeed in the new century, it would have to unleash its own major resource: the complementarities and synergies that existed within it. In order to undergo fundamental, not piecemeal, reform, three related steps were imperative: to create appropriate Secretariat structures that would permit the Organization to act as one within and across its diverse areas of activities; to reconfigure the balance of functions between the Organization's legislative bodies and the Secretary-General; and to establish a functioning career development programme for its staff.

Communications from Secretary-General. In a 17 March letter to the President of the General Assembly [A/51/829], the Secretary-General outlined his proposals for immediate management and organizational reform, which were the result of a thorough review of UN activities and the manner in which they were conducted, with a view to reconfiguring the Organization to meet the changing needs of the world community.

Among the management reform measures already taken were the creation of a Policy Coordination Group to assist him in the executive direction of the Organization's work; the grouping of all UN departments, offices, funds and programmes into four principal sectoral areas—peace and security, economic and social affairs, development operations and humanitarian affairs, with four Executive Committees to coordinate their work; the appointment of an Executive Coordinator for UN Reform to advise and assist him in overseeing the process; and establishment of a Management Reform Group to focus on furthering reform measures cutting across the Organization.

The reform agenda would be implemented through a two-track process: those managerial initiatives and decisions falling within the Secretary-General's authority for immediate implementation; and longer-term progressive reform measures, which required guidance from Member States or could only be decided by them. In developing his reform plans, he had taken into account proposals by Member States, independent commissions, the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) and the Board of Auditors.

The Secretary-General had directed that a plan be prepared for reducing at least one third of the resources devoted to administration and other non-programme costs by the year 2001; those savings would be made available for development activities. To strengthen development activities and realize further savings, he would consolidate UN departments working in the economic and social sectors. He also planned to establish a Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services, integrating the major technical support services for the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and their subsidiary bodies. The Department of Public Information would become an Office for Communications and Media Services and a detailed review and consultation process with Member States would be initiated. In addition, common services would be extended whenever possible.

At the country level, he had directed that: the position of resident coordinator be strengthened; all UN funds and programmes in a particular country be joined under the coordinator in a common programme and programme-resource framework; the establishment of common premises and services at the country level be intensified; and the mix of skills in the UN Country Team be compatible with the needs and priorities of UN country activities.

Documentation produced by the Secretariat would be reduced by 25 per cent by no later than the end of 1998 and the proposed budget for the 1998-1999 biennium would be $123 million less than the 1996-1997 budget. The goal was for the United Nations to achieve a negative nominal growth budget for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Member States would be asked to consider reducing some 1,000 posts in the 1998-1999 programme budget. The Secretary-General's intention was to strengthen the Secretariat's capacity to deliver programmes and to redeploy resources judiciously.

By a June letter [A/51/239 & Add.1], the Secretary-General requested inclusion of an item entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals" in the agenda of the General Assembly's resumed fifty-first (1997) session and in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second (1997) session.

On 17 June, by decision 51/402 B, the Assembly included in the agenda of its resumed fifty-first session that additional item, to be considered directly in plenary meeting.

Report of Secretary-General (July). On 14 July, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report [A/51/950] entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme of reform". The first part of the report contained a thematic overview of the main reform elements, highlighting the proposed new leadership and management structure and summarizing the key sectoral measures to be implemented. The second part discussed the entire set of reform measures and contained specific recommendations. He proposed strengthening the capacity of his Office to provide leadership and ensure accountability through establishing the position of Deputy Secretary-General and a Senior Management Group; developing and strengthening further the Executive Committees of the sectoral groups to include all UN departments, funds and programmes; establishing a Strategic Planning Unit; and decentralizing decision-making at the country level and consolidating the UN presence under "one flag".

To ensure the financial solvency of the Organization, he recommended establishing a Revolving Credit Fund of up to $1 billion, to be financed from voluntary contributions. The 12 Secretariat entities would be integrated into five and the five intergovernmental bodies consolidated into two.

The Secretary-General intended to institute a changed management culture accompanied by efficiency measures, which would eliminate 1,000 staff posts, reduce administrative costs by one third and improve performance. A thorough overhaul of human resources policies and practices would be instituted to ensure the skills and efficiency of the staff. In that regard, the Secretary-General noted that a number of important issues remained to be addressed, including reaching the goals of geographical and gender representation; training managers to enhance their capacity for leadership; and submission to the Assembly of a new Code of Conduct for staff members (see PART FIVE, Chapter III).

Other proposals included the promotion of sustained and sustainable development as a central priority through the grouping of UN funds and programmes with development operations into a UN Development Group; institution of a "development dividend" to shift resources from administration to development activities; establishment of an Office of Development Financing, under the leadership of the new Deputy Secretary-General, to initiate innovative means of mobilizing financial resources for development; assuring greater predictability and burden-sharing through multi-year negotiated and voluntary pledges for the financing of UN development programmes; and strengthening the environmental dimension of UN activities, particularly the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP).

An economic and social affairs sectoral group would be established to strengthen and focus the normative policy and knowledge-related functions of the Secretariat and its capacity to serve

UN intergovernmental bodies. The Organization's rapid reaction peacekeeping capacity would be improved and its capacity for post-conflict peace-building strengthened.

Other proposals concerned the various programmes in the UN system, including consolidation of Vienna-based activities under an Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention; reorganization and restructuring of the human rights secretariat and integrating human rights into all principal UN activities; the establishment of an Emergency Relief Coordination Office to replace the Department of Humanitarian Affairs; and the establishment of a Department for Disarmament and Arms Regulation. The Secretary-General also proposed a major shift in public information and communications strategy and functions to meet the changing needs of the Organization.

The Secretary-General recommended that Member States refocus the Assembly's work on issues of highest priority and reduce the length of its sessions; establish a ministerial-level commission to examine the need for fundamental change through review of the Charter and the legal instruments from which the specialized agencies derived their constitutions; and consider designating the Assembly's session in the year 2000 as a "Millennium Assembly" to prepare the Organization to meet the major challenges and needs of the world community in the twenty-first century, accompanied by a "People's Assembly".

General Assembly consideration. Presenting his report to the General Assembly on 16 July, the Secretary-General said that the unprecedented demands and opportunities faced by the United Nations required it, more than ever before, to be efficient, focused, coherent, responsive and cost-effective. The Organization was not working as it should and was slow to reflect changes in geopolitical realities; instead of being flexible and adaptable, it had all too often been bureaucratic. Now was the time for reform and Member States were showing the way for change by rethinking their practices and adapting their policies, seeking out new efficiencies and value for money. His proposed reforms were the most extensive and far-reaching in the 52-year history of the United Nations. Their aim was to transform the Organization and bring greater unity of purpose, greater coherence of efforts and greater reliability in responding to an increasingly dynamic and complex world.

The Assembly, by decision 51/473 of 4 August, included the item "United Nations reform: measures and proposals" in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session.

Further reports of Secretary-General. In an 11 September report [A/52/303 & Add.1], the Secretary-General outlined the programmatic and financial consequences of his reform plan and described the resultant changes that would be required to the proposed programme budget for 1998-1999 (see next chapter).

In a series of addenda to his July report [A/51/950/Add.1-7], the Secretary-General further refined his reform proposals on: the establishment of the post of Deputy Secretary-General; the rationalization of the subsidiary machinery of the Economic and Social Council; disarmament; the Revolving Credit Fund; creating a dividend for development; results-based budgeting; and the Millennium Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly considered the Secretary-General's reform proposals in open-ended informal consultations of the plenary. In a 4 November statement [A/52/585], the Secretary-General provided additional information on the position of Deputy Secretary-General, disarmament, human rights and the accreditation of resident coordinators. On 10 November [A/52/584], the Secretariat responded to comments and queries raised by delegations during consultations.

The Assembly also had before it summaries of statements or proposals by Luxembourg on behalf of the European Union [A/52/661], and by Colombia on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries [A/52/662], made in the informal consultations; and position papers of the Group of 77 and China [A/52/663].

On 12 November [meeting 49], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/12 A [draft: A/52/L.17] without vote [agenda item 157].

Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform

The General Assembly,

Affirming its determination to strengthen the role, capacity, effectiveness and efficiency of the United Nations and thus improve its performance in order to realize the full potential of the Organization, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and to respond more effectively to the needs and aspirations of the Member States,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General of 14 July 1997 entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform",

Having considered the actions described in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform" and the addenda thereto, with the clarifications to that report, as well as the statement by the Secretary-General in the open-ended informal consultations of the plenary on 4 November 1997,

Bearing in mind the rules of procedure of the General Assembly and the Financial Regulations and Rules of the Organization,

1. Commends the efforts and initiatives of the Secretary-General aimed at reforming the United Nations;

2. Calls upon the Secretary-General, while implementing the actions described in his report, to take full account of the views and comments expressed by Member States and groups of Member States, including those transmitted in their communications;

3. Stresses that the actions will be implemented with full respect for the relevant mandates, decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly, including in particular the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001;

4. Notes that the report of the Secretary-General of 11 September 1997 will be considered in the context of the examination of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

5. Affirms that programmatic implications of relevant actions will be considered in conjunction with related recommendations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the actions described in his report entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform" to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

7. Decides to continue its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform".

On 19 December, the Assembly continued to consider the reform proposals. Speaking in the plenary, the Secretary-General undertook to submit by the end of March 1998 measures of a longer-term nature within the framework of his reform report; outlines of a results-based budgeting system, together with illustrations on how it would function in the context of the United Nations; and concrete measures on specific time horizons for mandates, whose continuation would require explicit renewal by the Assembly (sunset provisions).

On the same date [meeting 78], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/12 B [draft: A/52/L.72/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 157].

The General Assembly,

Having considered further the report of the Secretary-General on renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform, and the recommendations contained therein,

Recalling its resolution 52/12 A of 12 November 1997,

Recalling also its resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996, 51/240 of 20 June 1997 and 51/241 of 31 July 1997, as well as all other relevant resolutions and decisions, which contain legislative mandates and programme guidance, and, in particular, the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001,

Reaffirming that financial implications of any reform measure or proposal on which the General Assembly is to take action should be considered in accordance with rule 153 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

A. Deputy Secretary-General

1. Decides to establish the post of Deputy Secretary-General as an integral part of the Office of the Secretary-General, as set out in addendum 1 to the report of the Secretary-General and in the statement made by the Secretary-General on 4 November 1997 to the open-ended informal consultations of the plenary on United Nations reform: measures and proposals, without prejudice to the mandate of the Secretary-General as provided by the Charter of the United Nations and, in accordance with the existing system of decision-making, with responsibilities delegated by the Secretary-General, including the following:

(a) To assist the Secretary-General in managing the operations of the Secretariat;

(b) To act for the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters in the absence of the Secretary-General and in other cases as may be decided by the Secretary-General;

(c) To support the Secretary-General in ensuring intersectoral and inter-institutional coherence of activities and programmes and to support the Secretary-General in elevating the profile and leadership of the United Nations in the economic and social spheres, including further efforts to strengthen the United Nations as a leading centre for development policy and development assistance;

(d) To represent the Secretary-General at conferences, official functions and ceremonial and other occasions as may be decided by the Secretary-General;

(e) To undertake such assignments as may be determined by the Secretary-General;

2. Notes that the Secretary-General will appoint the Deputy Secretary-General following consultations with Member States and in accordance with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations and that the term of office of the Deputy Secretary-General will not exceed that of the Secretary-General;

B. New approaches to policy formulation

3. Welcomes the recommendations of the Secretary-General aimed at the rationalization, streamlining and enhancement of the work of the General Assembly, taking into account the measures already undertaken towards this end in order to further strengthen the Assembly as the organ of the United Nations that most fully embodies the universal and democratic character of the Organization;

4. Decides, in this context, to continue during its fifty-second session its in-depth consideration of those recommendations under the item entitled "Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly", taking into account the report to be submitted by the Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 51/241;

C. Peace, security and disarmament

5. Invites Member States to improve the supply of information to the Secretary-General that could assist the Organization to prevent conflict and maintain international peace and security in full accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Stresses that enhancing the rapid deployment capacity of the United Nations in peacekeeping operations can play a valuable role in the effectiveness of its response to a conflict, and, in this context, requests the appropriate organs to consider, as a matter of priority, specific measures to that effect, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/69 of 10 December 1997 and taking into account the proposals to be submitted by the Secretary-General and the views of Member States;

7. Endorses the recommendation that the Security Council, in establishing a peacekeeping operation in the future, should prescribe a time-frame for the conclusion of the status-of-forces agreement between the United Nations and the host Government for the operation in question and that, pending the conclusion of such an agreement, a model status-of-forces agreement would apply provisionally unless otherwise agreed by the parties concerned, and invites the Security Council to consider the matter;

8. Decides that the Disarmament Commission and the First Committee of the General Assembly should undertake a review of their work, to be concluded before the end of the fifty-second session, with a view to its revitalization, rationalization and streamlining, taking into account discussions that have already taken place on this issue;

D. Economic and social affairs

9. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider, at its organizational and substantive sessions in 1998, as part of the review of the mandates, composition, functions and working methods of its functional commissions and expert groups and bodies, as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/227, the recommendations of the Secretary-General relating to the reform of its subsidiary bodies, including a time-frame for implementation of its decisions thereon, as well as his recommendations relating to the organization and methods of work of the Council, and to report thereon to the Assembly as early as possible during its fifty-second session;

10. Invites the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with Member States and appropriate inter-governmental regional bodies, to conduct a general review of the regional commissions at its substantive session of 1998, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of resolution 50/227 and the individual reviews each commission has already carried out, in order to consider the competencies of the regional commissions, taking into account the competencies of global bodies and other regional and subregional intergovernmental bodies, and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly before the end of its fifty-second session;

11. Endorses the recommendation of the Secretary-General to discontinue the High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development;

E. Development cooperation

12. Accepts that management of funds and programmes would be enhanced by greater integration of intergovernmental oversight, and requests the Economic and Social Council, in the context of the next triennial policy review of the United Nations, during its operational activities segment of 1998, to consider arrangements for closer integration of the governance oversight of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund and of the United Nations Children's Fund, with consecutive and/or joint meetings of the existing Executive Boards, bearing in mind the respective mandates of the Executive Boards of the funds and programmes;

13. Takes note, in this context, of the decision already taken by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund and by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund to organize a joint meeting in January 1998;

14. Recognizes the urgent need for resources for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, taking fully into account the principle of neutrality, and requests the Secretary-General to submit, by the end of March 1998, for consideration by the General Assembly, specific proposals for the establishment of a new system of core resources, taking into account the views expressed by Member States;

F. Humanitarian affairs

15. Decides to designate the Emergency Relief Coordinator as the United Nations Humanitarian Assistance Coordinator, who will, inter alia, retain responsibility for coordination of natural disaster relief;

16. Decides also to transfer to the United Nations Development Programme the responsibilities of the Emergency Relief Coordinator for operational activities for natural disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness, with the understanding that the resources for this task will be separate and additional to the resources of the United Nations Development Programme for development activities and that they will be provided by a grant from the regular budget of the United Nations for the biennium 1998-1999;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, before the end of the fifty-second session of the General Assembly, a report on the method of financing of natural disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness activities beyond the biennium 1998-1999;

18. Decides to establish a humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council, with effect from 1998, and, in this connection, requests the Council to consider expeditiously the related practical arrangements and make an early recommendation to the General Assembly, without prejudice to the work of the other segments of the Council;

G. Financing the Organization

19. Reaffirms the obligation of all Member States, in accordance with the Charter, to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without conditions;

20. Takes note of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that a revolving credit fund be established through voluntary contributions or any other means of financing that Member States may wish to suggest, and requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the views expressed by Member States, to submit by the end of March 1998 detailed proposals to the General Assembly, through the competent bodies, for the proposed establishment of such a fund, including its financing, management and operation, while emphasizing that the priority lies in the compliance by all Member States with their financial obligations to the United Nations;

21. Takes note also of the recommendation of the Secretary-General that, in future, any unspent balances under the regular budget at the end of the fiscal period be retained, and invites the competent bodies to consider the implications of such retention, as well as the appropriate use of such balances, including possible allocation to development programmes, on the basis of a report to be submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly, before the end of its fifty-second session;

H. Management

22. Decides to examine the recommendation of the Secretary-General on initiating a review of the International Civil Service Commission, and, on the basis of information to be provided by the Secretary-General, requests the competent intergovernmental bodies to consider the modalities for such a review and to report to the General Assembly before the end of its fifty-second session;

23. Notes that the Secretary-General has submitted the draft Code of Conduct for United Nations Staff to the General Assembly, and agrees to expedite its consideration;

24. Decides to establish, in the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, a development account to be funded from savings from possible reductions in administration and other overhead costs, without affecting full implementation of mandated programmes and activities, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a detailed report by the end of March 1998 identifying the sustainability of this initiative, as well as the modalities of implementation, the specific purposes and associated performance criteria for the use of such resources;

25. Takes note of the recommendation of the Secretary-General to shift United Nations programme budgeting towards a system of results-based budgeting, and requests him to submit, through the competent bodies, a more detailed report that will include a full explanation for the proposed change, and the methodology to be used, as well as a mock-up of one or more sections of the budget for consideration before the end of the fifty-second session of the General Assembly;

I. Longer-term changes

26. Recognizes that reform of the United Nations will be an ongoing process and that there is a need for the United Nations to consider changes of a more fundamental nature and other broader issues, and invites the Secretary-General to elaborate further his proposals, taking into account the views of Governments, and to present them to the General Assembly by the end of March 1998 on:

- (a) A new concept of trusteeship;
 - (b) A Millennium Assembly;
 - (c) A Millennium Forum;
 - (d) The United Nations system (a Special Commission at the ministerial level to examine the need for possible amendments to the Charter of the United Nations and the treaties from which the specialized agencies derive their mandates);
 - (e) Provisions whereby initiatives that involve new mandates and institutional machinery would be subject to specific time limits that would require explicit review and renewal by the General Assembly (sunset provisions);
27. Looks forward to the convening of the United Nations Conference of Plenipotentiaries to finalize and adopt a convention to establish an international criminal court as a step that would strengthen significantly the rule of law in the century ahead;

28. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals".

On 22 December [A/52/758], the Secretary-General submitted, in the context of the 1998-1999 proposed programme budget, proposals for the reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs. He outlined the various elements that constituted non-programme costs, together with measures aimed at reaching the objective within the indicated time-frame.

United Nations and civil society

At its first regular session (Geneva, 10-11 April) [ACC/1997/4], the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) reviewed the implications for the UN system of the Secretary-General's reform proposals. It agreed to prepare a report outlining reform processes in the system in time for consideration at its second regular session and by the General Assembly and to address the issue of strengthening the UN system's links with civil society as an important dimension of the reform agenda.

At its second regular session (New York, 31 October), ACC noted that UN system policies for interaction with civil society varied according to the nature of partner organization and type of activity and recommended that such policies be the subject of intensified inter-agency exchanges of information. ACC considered that the proposal to establish an inter-agency enterprise liaison service as a common clearing-house mechanism for cooperation with the business community needed further study. It requested further information on the "issue management system" advocated by the Secretary-General in his reform programme, which might provide a further window of opportunity for concrete collaboration with non-State partners.

Managerial reform and oversight

As part of the reform package announced in January (see above), the Secretary-General created a Management Reform Group (MRG) within the Department of Administration and Management to replace the Efficiency Board and its working group.

On 21 April, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly the first report [A/51/873] of MRG entitled "Accelerating managerial reform for results". MRG's goals were to accelerate and integrate managerial reform; reduce non-programme costs; modernize and enhance services and information provided to Member States; and increase the accountability and responsibility of programme managers.

In his letter of transmittal, the Secretary-General said that managerial reform was well under way and the measures described in the report were directly relevant to the follow-up to his reform initiatives. He was setting milestones to monitor progress systematically and was satisfied that the ongoing efficiency reviews were achieving meaningful and measurable results.

MRG reported that of the 450 projects to enhance effectiveness and efficiency that had been initiated across the United Nations, 213 had been completed by March 1997. Efficiency gains were helping to cushion the impact of 1996-1997 and 1998-1999 budget reductions and to protect and enhance the delivery of mandated programmes. Budget reductions included savings of $1.68 million by the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean by shifting to automated check-writing, electronic processing of travel authorizations and streamlining administrative support; savings of some $1.1 million at the UN Office at Geneva through the use of automation and outsourcing; and realization of over $300,000 in savings by the Economic Commission for Africa through technological change and more efficient procurement measures. Efforts to modernize and enhance services resulted in an improved UN Home Page and one-stop access to UN Web sites. Concerning responsibility and accountability, the Secretary-General had created the Policy Coordination Group and grouped departments, offices, funds and programmes into four principal areas (see above). OIOS had revised its programme evaluation guidelines to place greater emphasis on outputs and outcomes and to give departments and offices greater responsibility for monitoring performance in terms of results and not just inputs. Common-service arrangements were being extended.

By decision 52/456 of 22 December, the Assembly decided to continue consideration of the agenda item "Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations" at its resumed fifty-second (1998) session.

Procurement reform

In 1997, the General Assembly considered reports on procurement reform and the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) thereon that had been submitted to it in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1381]. The Board of Auditors had also examined the issue of procurement and the Secretary-General had reported on measures taken or envisaged to implement the Board's recommendations, including those on procurement [ibid., p. 1297]. Consideration of the matter was deferred by decision 51/462 [ibid., p. 1298].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 June [meeting 101], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/51/922], adopted resolution 51/231 without vote [agenda item 112].

Procurement reform

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/216 C of 23 December 1994 and its decision 50/479 of 11 April 1996, as well as its previous relevant resolutions,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on procurement reform and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having also considered the reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on procurement for the period from 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996, on the audit of procurement handled by the Contracts and Procurement Service of the Department for Development Support and Management Services of the Secretariat, on the investigation of the alleged misappropriation of United Nations assets at the United Nations Gift Centre and on the audit of Headquarters catering operations,

Having further considered the concise summary of the principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors, especially paragraphs 20 to 36 thereof, as regards procurement, in conjunction with comments on the subject contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the measures proposed by the Secretary-General to implement the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning procurement,

Noting the progress made in the efforts to prepare a new procurement manual,

Noting with concern the continuing weaknesses and deficiencies in the area of procurement,

Emphasizing the importance of establishing a supplier roster on as wide a geographical basis as possible,

Noting the observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 20 of its report,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on procurement reform and the reported actions already taken or in progress to implement the reform measures;

2. Regrets that more progress has not been made, in particular, in improving the procedures and the cost-effectiveness of the procurement process and in broadening the representativeness of the supplier base;

3. Welcomes the review by the Board of Auditors of the implementation of the recommendations previously made by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/216 C on measures to improve the procurement process;

4. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and endorses in particular the recommendation that procurement reform should be given the highest priority in the United Nations and its funds and programmes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite efforts to develop a single format for the provision of data and a common reporting system for procurement undertaken in the field and at Headquarters under the responsibility of the Secretary-General, in order to produce a complete set of statistics to be included in future reports on procurement to the General Assembly;

6. Expresses concern that over the last two years eight procurement-related arbitration claims have been instituted against the United Nations, totalling more than 90 million United States dollars, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a comprehensive report on procurement-related arbitration cases, taking into account the obligations of the United Nations under the Arbitration Rules of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to include in future reports on procurement also information on arbitration cases and the related costs;

8. Decides to revert to the question of the structure of the Procurement and Transportation Division of the Secretariat and the request of the Secretary-General that the Division be headed by a Director at the D-2 level during its consideration of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to fill the vacant posts relating to procurement as soon as possible;

10. Notes that there are officers on loan in the Procurement and Transportation Division, and decides to revert to this question during its consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on gratis personnel;

11. Notes also that a proposal is under consideration to introduce in the United Nations procurement system an incentive regarding equally qualified vendors from Member States;

12. Welcomes the efforts made to improve coordination within the United Nations procurement system, and encourages the further strengthening of such coordination;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take further steps to improve the availability and timeliness, including through electronic access, of information relating to current and forthcoming procurement opportunities;

14. Welcomes the electronic announcement of United Nations contract awards through Procurement Update, issued by the Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office on the Internet, and encourages the Secretary-General to make further use of this medium;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to report through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the establishment of a standard procedure for the preparation of performance evaluation reports on vendors, in particular those with major contracts;

16. Expresses its concern about the insufficient use of expertise in procurement planning in eight peacekeeping missions, including the United Nations Protection Force and the United Nations Operation in Somalia, which led to payments for aircraft services not utilized, assessed at 2.4 million dollars in the United Nations Angola Verification Mission and 0.4 million dollars in the United Nations Observer Mission in Liberia;

17. Regrets that, owing to deficiencies in procurement planning and failure to indicate specifications clearly, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees suffered a financial loss of about 3 million dollars;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services with the investigation of the situation mentioned in paragraphs 16 and 17 above and to report thereon through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

19. Endorses the concern of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions about the use of suppliers recommended by requisitioners, notes that this practice undermines the principle of segregation of responsibilities between requisitioning and procurement entities, and requests the Secretary-General to discontinue the practice;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that in no case will a consultant who has been engaged to prepare specifications and to assist in technical evaluation be allowed to recommend vendors for invitations to bid;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to redouble his efforts to streamline all aspects of the decision-making process in procurement at Headquarters;

22. Notes that the local committees on contracts have the authority to consider cases ranging from 50,000 dollars to 200,000 dollars, while the Headquarters Committee on Contracts will consider cases in amounts above 200,000 dollars;

23. Takes note of the information supplied in paragraphs 93 and 94 of the report of the Board of Auditors, indicating that 48 per cent of suppliers were from one Member State;

24. Invites Member States to encourage their national suppliers to be registered in the supplier roster;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite the steps being taken to establish a supplier roster on as wide a geographical basis as possible and to submit a report thereon, including a revised list of suppliers, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

26. Emphasizes that concerted efforts should be made to identify potential vendors in the developing countries and countries with economies in transition and to increase the representation from those countries in the bidding for and award of contracts, so as to develop a supplier base that is more representative of the membership of the Organization;

27. Takes note of paragraph 13 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and decides to revert to this question during its consideration of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to take immediate action to ensure compliance with the established procedures for procurement, based on international competitive bidding and the widest possible geographical base of procurement;

29. Appreciates the efforts being made to address the problem of ex postfacto cases, in particular for those offices away from Headquarters, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the approval of contracts on an ex post facto basis is kept to the minimum, with full justification for each such case;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to review the possibility of consolidating the procurement functions at Headquarters and to report thereon to the General Assembly as soon as possible and no later than September 1997;

31. Also requests the Secretary-General to develop an intensified training programme for all procurement personnel of the Secretariat and all its offices, including field offices of peacekeeping operations, to develop the capacity to dispatch in a timely manner qualified and trained procurement personnel to new or expanded missions and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on measures taken to enhance the training programme;

32. Further requests the Secretary-General to establish annual consolidated procurement plans as a part of procurement reform;

33. Requests the Secretary-General to complete the preparation of a new procurement manual as soon as possible and to provide the necessary training for procurement personnel;

34. Requests the Board of Auditors to monitor and report on the completion of the new procurement manual in its next report and to monitor closely the implementation of its recommendation that the Procurement and Transportation Division should establish detailed guidelines on methods of invitation to bid covering all aspects of procurement, including open tendering;

35. Also requests the Board of Auditors to report in the next audit report on peacekeeping operations, in January 1998, on the status of the implementation by the Secretary-General of its recommendations concerning the administration of letters of assist;

36. Welcomes the reports of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, notes that the Secretary-General concurs with the recommendations of the Office, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation;

37. Notes with concern the observations of the Office of Internal Oversight Services in paragraphs 37 to 42 of its report, and requests the Secretary-General to report on the precise action taken in this regard to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

38. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the audit of Headquarters catering operations, and requests the Secretary-General to take action to achieve consistency in policy and practice with regard to catering operations at Headquarters and at Geneva.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to resolution 51/231, submitted an October report [A/52/534 & Corr.1] on procurement reform. He stated that, effective July, the Transportation Section, including the Travel and Traffic Units, of the Procurement and Transportation Division was established as a separate service, reporting directly to the Assistant Secretary-General for Central Support Services. The Procurement and Transportation Division was renamed the Procurement Division. Within the context of his proposals for extending common services (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV), the Task Force on Common Services had established in May the Working Group on Procurement, which reviewed overall procurement functions within the Secretariat as well as in the funds and programmes of the UN system. The Secretary-General, effective 1 November, consolidated within the Procurement Division the relevant functions of the Contracts and Procurement Office of the former Department for Development Support and Management Services.

The Secretary-General was of the view that the staff resources for the Procurement Division, reflected in the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget, were adequate. It was, however, essential to intensify the training and the enhancement of the professional quality of the Division's personnel. He reiterated that the establishment of the post of Director of the Division remained critical to the success of the reforms and urged the Assembly to take decisive action on that question.

The draft of the new procurement manual, which was being finalized, updated the existing one and contained certain provisions—in particular those on delegation of authority, the procedures for the Headquarters Committee on Contracts and local committees on contracts and ex post facto cases, among others—which were already being implemented at Headquarters and at peacekeeping missions and offices away from Headquarters.

The Secretary-General had established a supplier roster on as wide a geographical basis as possible. Between November 1996 and September 1997, the number of registered suppliers had almost doubled. The revised list was annexed to the report. Concerted efforts were being made to widen further the geographical base of the supplier roster, to identify potential vendors in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition, and to increase the representation from those countries in the bidding for and award of contracts. On 15 July, the Procurement Division had established a home page on the Internet through which information on the supplier application forms could be obtained electronically. The Division had also been contacting potential suppliers identified through research, utilizing publications such as trade directories, professional journals, catalogues and product publications.

Between January and July 1997, the total volume of procurement at Headquarters considered by the Headquarters Committee on Contracts amounted to $172,142,382, of which $124,689,171, or 72.43 per cent, was obtained through competitive bidding and the remaining $47,453,211, or 27.57 per cent, through authorized exceptions, such as exigencies, requirements below the bidding threshold of $25,000, proprietary items and prices fixed by legislation.

The Secretary-General concluded that the recommendations and concerns expressed by the Assembly, ACABQ, the Board of Auditors and OIOS had, in most cases, either been addressed or were in an advanced stage of implementation. He reiterated that the reform of the procurement system, as urgent as it was, could not be brought about overnight. While there was a great emphasis on timely procurement with the best value for money, the current rules and regulations, the additional demands often imposed by oversight bodies and the budgetary constraints and unavailability of funds, particularly at the start of new operations, often created serious difficulties. The relevant UN departments and offices had been directed to review urgently the financial rules and regulations and established procedures in order to propose amendments, with a view to responding to exigency requirements of peacekeeping and other emergency operations. They were also directed to enhance advance procurement planning and review the question of timely availability of funds, which had an effect on procurement.

ACABQ's comments on the Secretary-General's report were submitted in December [A/52/7/Add.3]; it recommended that the Secretariat submit, as early as possible, proposals for amending or revising the Financial Rules and Regulations to take into account the procurement reform policies, procedures and instructions contained in the revised procurement manual.

Internal oversight

Office of Internal Oversight Services

The Secretary-General stated, in transmitting his report on the 1996/97 activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) to the General Assembly (see below), that the reports of OIOS, which was established by resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362] in order to enhance oversight functions within the UN system, had been a valuable source of reference and guidance in the development of the overall vision and specific measures concerned with the reform effort. He concurred with the observation of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services that OIOS was an important new element in the management culture of the Organization and that its creation was itself a most meaningful and effective reform step.

In response to Assembly resolution 48/218 B, the Secretary-General issued a final report [A/51/801] on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

On 13 June, the Assembly, by decisions 51/468 A-H, took note of the reports of OIOS on electronic mail in the Secretariat, UN global cargo and motor insurance programmes, outsourcing practices at the United Nations, the UN access control system and the UN Postal Administration (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV); seminars of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII); review of the United Nations Environment Programme and the administrative practices of its secretariat, including the United Nations Office at Nairobi (see PART THREE, Chapter VII); and review of the programme and administrative practices of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

On 31 July, the Assembly, in resolution 51/241, stated that there should be a more detailed and structured examination in the Main Committees of the relevant reports of the Board of Auditors, JIU and OIOS in relation to the substantive work of those Committees. Accountability and inter-governmental oversight should be improved by periodic coordination meetings between the Board of Auditors, ACABQ and JIU, with appropriate input from OIOS.

On 15 September (decision 51/458 B), the Assembly decided to continue at its fifty-second session consideration of the OIOS annual report for the period 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996 and JIU's related comments [YUN 1996, p. 1268], and the OIOS report on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes.

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the third annual report of OIOS covering activities from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997 [A/52/426]. The report stated that the strong emphasis by OIOS on the full implementation of its recommendations had caused some profound changes within the UN management culture; the sense of responsibility and accountability thus instilled could be expected to reduce further the occurrence of abuse and enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of management. The new policy regarding the audit function required that every audit assignment would result in a final audit report. Programme managers were increasingly aware that mere acceptance of recommendations was no longer sufficient and that meticulous implementation was required. The implementation rate of recommendations was 61 per cent at the end of June 1997 for the 513 audit recommendations issued between 1 July and 31 December 1996. During the reporting period, some 121 recommendations had been issued. Of the 37 recommendations issued during the first half of the reporting period, the implementation rate was 81 per cent. Although recommendations were usually accepted by receiving departments, implementation was delayed for reasons that included the need to obtain additional legal advice on implementing methods and processes; the protracted time some administrative and/or disciplinary processes took; the assessment of financial implications; and observation of all due processes. Investigations that involved criminal complaints required extensive consultations. Concerning his report on enhancing internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes, the Secretary-General said that the administrators had noted that their oversight functions were susceptible to improvement, and had requested and received OIOS assistance in audit and investigation functions. A number of them continued to secure their internal audit through OIOS, and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) had invited OIOS to join its Management Review and Oversight Committee. OIOS had signed a memorandum of understanding with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) for the provision of audit services, and concluded one with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD)/World Trade Organization (WTO) International Trade Centre (ITC) for the provision of internal audit services. OIOS had fully assumed the internal audit functions for the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme.

OIOS studies found that adequate monitoring and evaluation practices did not exist in many departments and offices. Draft guidelines had been circulated that were intended to codify good practice and make transparent managerial practices that OIOS staff would review in future audits. The proposed guidelines also established performance norms for support services, such as translation and reproduction, and the processing of entitlements, procurement actions and recruitment.

The report gave an overview of three OIOS priority areas for oversight: peacekeeping, humanitarian and related activities, and procurement, as well as the problem of establishing new bodies and responses to its recommendations. During the reporting period, OIOS undertook audits of 18 peacekeeping operations and 14 UNHCR country programmes and headquarters support functions. It also conducted an audit to assess progress in procurement reform and carried out a comprehensive investigation of aviation services procurement. It reviewed the outsourcing operations at Headquarters, offices away from Headquarters and selected peacekeeping missions, and audited the management of Headquarters catering facilities. OIOS also investigated the misappropriation in Kenya of a substantial amount of UN equipment by a vendor providing catering services to peacekeeping missions. (See PART FIVE, Chapter IV, for details.)

OIOS continued to give priority audit attention to the establishment of new bodies so that problems could be identified and resolved as soon as possible. As before, OIOS focused attention on the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (see PART FOUR, Chapter II). Audits were also conducted of the United Nations Special Coordinator for the Occupied Territories (see PART ONE, Chapter VI), the International Seabed Authority (see PART FOUR, Chapter IV) and the secretariat of the Convention on Biological Diversity (see PART THREE, Chapter VII) in Montreal, Canada, which revealed significant management problems.

As part of the oversight function, the OIOS Audit and Management Consulting Division audited assets of $402 million, income of $153 million and expenditures of $1.8 billion, identifying some $28 million in potential savings. The 162 audit assignments opened between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1997 resulted in 66 audit reports addressed to senior management, with 811 recommendations on compliance with rules, regulations and policies; economic and efficient use of resources; protection of assets; adequacy of internal controls; and the achievement of objectives.

There was a significant change in the sources and types of cases received by the Investigations Section, including serious cases of broader scope and greater complexity. Four of them were referred to law enforcement authorities. The Section received 172 reports and suggestions, compared to 205 in the previous reporting period, due to a decrease in the number of personnel grievances received, as the message that OIOS was not established to provide another layer of review of personnel issues was accepted. Of the caseload of 172, 69 were in the Americas, 49 in Europe, 44 in Africa, 6 in Asia and 4 in the Middle East. The Section investigated 33 reports by staff members of violations of UN rules, regulations and administrative issuances, which were found to be bona fide but resulted in the allegations not being proved for lack of sufficient evidence. Increasingly, the Section was being requested by departments, funds and programmes, and even by specialized agencies, to undertake investigations on their behalf and provide advice and consultation on problems and investigative issues in their offices. Six entities requested such assistance during the reporting period. Two cases of note were the investigation of UNCHS and UNCTAD.

In keeping with its mandate for oversight, OIOS conducted inspection reviews of the secretariats of UNEP [A/51/810] (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), UNCHS [A/51/884] (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII) and ITC [A/51/933] (see PART THREE, Chapter IV). It also conducted the triennial review of the in-depth evaluation of the UN programme on social development.

By an October note [A/52/464], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the comments of JIU on 16 OIOS reports.

By decision 52/456 of 22 December, the Assembly decided to continue consideration of the agenda item "Report of the Secretary-General on the activities of OIOS" at the resumed fifty-second session.

Legal aspects

The Secretary-General, on 23 October [A/C.5/52/12], transmitted to the Chairman of the General Assembly's Fifth Committee a memorandum from the Legal Counsel containing legal advice on certain aspects of Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], which established OIOS. The Secretary-General said that he had sought the Legal Counsel's advice when questions were raised in the Committee about certain aspects of that resolution, particularly the role played by legislative bodies in receiving and discussing reports on OIOS activities. The discussion, at the fifty-first session, had centred on the Secretary-General's report on enhancing the internal oversight mechanisms in operational funds and programmes [A/51/801] (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

The Legal Counsel stated that recommendations in OIOS reports were to be submitted to programme managers for implementation and the Assembly would then be informed of action taken. The annual report of OIOS was transmitted to the Assembly for reporting purposes. As to the report on the internal oversight mechanisms of operational funds and programmes, to the extent that existing authority was sufficient for them to implement particular recommendations, the funds and programmes could reasonably decide to implement them prior to any approval or endorsement by the Assembly.

External oversight mechanisms

JIU activities

The Joint Inspection Unit, in its twenty-ninth report to the General Assembly [A/52/34], gave an overview of its activities from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. During that period, it issued eight reports on the following topics: feasibility study on the relocation of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to the Turin (Italy) Centre [A/51/642]; inspection of the application of UN placement and promotion policies [A/51/656]; common services at UN Headquarters [A/51/686]; comparison of methods of calculating equitable geographical distribution within the UN common system [A/51/705]; coordination of policy and programming frameworks for more effective development cooperation [A/51/636-E/1996/104]; review of financial resources allocated by the UN system to activities by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) [A/51/655-E/1996/105]; strengthening field representation of the UN system [A/52/457]; and UN publications—enhancing cost-effectiveness in implementing legislative mandates [A/51/946]. In addition, JIU submitted the following four reports during the second half of 1997: execution of humanitarian assistance programmes through implementing partners [A/52/270]; the challenge of outsourcing for the UN system [A/52/338]; coordination at Headquarters and field level between UN agencies involved in peace-building: an assessment of possibilities [A/52/430]; and training institutions in the UN system: programmes and activities [A/52/559].

As follow-up to Assembly resolution 50/233 [YUN 1996, p. 1267], JIU continued to strive towards improving its performance, effectiveness and efficiency by identifying concrete managerial, administrative and programming questions aimed at providing the Assembly and other legislative organs of participating organizations with practical and action-oriented recommendations on precisely defined issues. The Unit continued to focus on system-wide issues but noted that those reports were more complex and required enormous data collection, analysis, inquiries and interviews since there were 23 participating organizations and affiliated bodies. The Unit also needed to gather information for comparison purposes from other organizations of the system that were not participating organizations, such as the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), as well as organizations external to the system. It continued to develop its internal information technology system to facilitate the issuance of timely reports and to make more effective Use of its staff resources.

Regarding concerns related to the mobility of staff, JIU believed that since it was a system-wide body its staff should be drawn from any of its participating organizations and that the matter needed to be addressed in consultation with ACC. JIU further developed procedures for the allocation of travel funds and established core travel cost estimates for each planned report.

Working relations and practical cooperation with other oversight bodies were strengthened in 1997 through meetings with OIOS and the Board of Auditors to review respective work programmes and prevent duplications and overlap. JIU and OIOS agreed that one effective way for the latter to carry out its functions of ascertaining compliance of programme managers with recommendations of external oversight bodies was to use pertinent JIU reports when conducting audits, inspections, evaluations and/or investigations.

A continuing JIU concern was the lack of a clear mechanism for following up the status of implementation of its recommendations by participating organizations. Therefore, the Unit submitted an official proposal entitled "Towards a more effective system of follow-up on reports of the Joint Inspection Unit", which was annexed to its report for consideration and action by the legislative organs of its participating organizations.

The Secretary-General submitted a 24 June report [A/52/206] containing information on the status of implementation of JIU recommendations on the reorganization of the Department of Public Information; an optical disk system for the United Nations; technical cooperation and the use of national professional project personnel; an integrated library network of the UN system; management of buildings in the UN system; working with NGOs; operational activities for development of the UN system with NGOs and Governments at the grass-roots and national levels; a review of the specific development needs of the small Member States and the responsiveness of the UN development system in meeting those needs; and UN system support for science and technology in Africa.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly, by an August note [A/52/267], the JIU work programme for 1997-1998 and the indicative list of potential items for 1998-1999.

On 13 June, by decision 51/469 A, the Assembly took note of the JIU reports entitled, "Accountability, management improvement and oversight in the UN system" [YUN 1995, p. 1375] and ACC's comments thereon [A/51/522] and "Management in the United Nations: work in progress" [YUN 1995, p. 1376] and the Secretary-General's comments thereon [A/50/507/Add.1].

By decision 51/487 of 15 September, the Assembly decided to resume consideration of the question of the strengthening of the external oversight mechanisms at the earliest possible stage of its fifty-second session.

On 22 December, by resolution 52/222, section II, the Assembly approved a gross budget for JIU for the biennium 1998-1999 in the amount of $8,174,000. On the same date, by decision 52/456, the Assembly decided to continue its consideration of the agenda item "Joint Inspection Unit" at its resumed fifty-second (1998) session.

Intergovernmental machinery

High-level Working Group. The Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System, established by General Assembly resolution 49/252 [YUN 1995, p. 1369], held one organizational meeting and 35 substantive meetings, organized in four substantive sessions between 23 October 1996 and 10 July 1997 [A/52/24].

In January, the Group established a Sub-group on NGOs to consider their participation in the work of the United Nations, in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1996/297 [YUN 1996, p. 1359], which failed to reach consensus on the question. The Group recommended that the Assembly, at its fifty-second session, consider the manner in which the matter was to be pursued. The Group resumed its substantive discussion of the Assembly and the Secretariat. Since many of the issues, particularly those dealing with the Secretariat, were directly relevant to questions that the Secretary-General might address in his reform plan (see above), the Group submitted to the Secretary-General in March an overview of its deliberations on ways to strengthen the Secretariat.

The Group continued its efforts to elaborate an agreed text of its working document. Among the subjects on which further discussions were required were: the use of personnel on loan; establishment of the post of Deputy Secretary-General; public information; the role and working methods of the Committee for Programme and Coordination; certain additional innovative mechanisms in the Assembly; and use of the veto in the selection of the Secretary-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 105], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of its Open-ended High-level Working Group [A/52/24], adopted resolution 51/241 without vote [agenda item 48].

Strengthening of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 49/252 of 14 September 1995, by which it established the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System,

Recalling in particular paragraph 2 of resolution 49/252,

Taking note of the report of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System,

1. Adopts the text contained in the annex to the present resolution for implementation effective from 1 January 1998;

2. Calls upon the relevant intergovernmental bodies to implement fully the measures specified in the text to strengthen the work of the United Nations system, in particular of the General Assembly and the Secretariat;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, as part of his ongoing efforts to improve the functioning of the Organization, to implement fully those measures specified in the text that are within his competence;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution;

5. Invites other principal organs, the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system to implement the measures for strengthening the system that are specified in the text and that are within their respective areas of competence, as appropriate;

6. Decides that the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System has completed its work as mandated in resolution 49/252.

ANNEX

I. Purpose

1. The Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System has undertaken its work in accordance with the perspective that its mandate for strengthening the United Nations system, derived from General Assembly resolution 49/252 of 14 September 1995, is to better enable the Organization to fulfil the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to meet the aspirations of its Members. It has focused on improving the capacity of the General Assembly to discharge effectively its functions, role and powers and that of the Secretariat to carry out effectively and efficiently the mandates of intergovernmental processes with the necessary transparency and accountability.

2. The Working Group has proceeded on the assumption that adequate resources will be provided to support the United Nations system. It has not seen its mandate as responding to the current financial crisis, which is being considered by the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations. It has also proceeded on the assumption that any Secretariat resources that are freed up as a result of strengthening measures proposed by the Working Group shall be reallocated according to priorities set by the General Assembly, in particular to the economic and social areas.

II. Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization

3. The report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization should be available not later than thirty days prior to the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly in all official languages of the Organization so as to permit due consideration.

4. The introduction to the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization should be in the nature of an executive summary highlighting main issues.

5. The main body of the report shall be comprehensive, informative and analytical in a way that will allow Member States to examine and assess, inter alia, through the debate on the report, the extent to which mandates given by the General Assembly have been fulfilled, as well as to set priorities in the context of the major political, economic and social, administrative and financial issues on its agenda.

6. The Secretary-General shall incorporate a new forward-looking section in his report on the work of the Organization. It shall describe the specific goals for the Secretariat in the year ahead in the context of the work plan for the Organization in the coming year, taking into account the medium-term plan and the fact that the responsibility for establishing priorities rests with the Member States.

7. The report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization shall be considered in plenary meetings of the General Assembly immediately after the general debate. The President of the Assembly should assess the debate on this item. In the light of that assessment, informal consultations shall be held, under the chairmanship of the President or one of the Vice-Presidents of the Assembly, to discuss action that may be required by the Assembly on the basis of the debate on the report.

8. The General Assembly in plenary meeting may refer sections of the report for more detailed consideration by the Main Committees.

9. The report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization shall, inter alia, contain an analytical and concise annex elaborating the costs by major programmes and activities of all bodies of the United Nations system, located both in and outside New York, according to their mandates, so as to improve Member States' overview of system-wide issues.

10. The Secretary-General is requested to introduce the report orally at an appropriate time under the agenda item entitled "Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization".

III. General Assembly consideration of the report of the Security Council

11. The agenda item entitled "Report of the Security Council" shall continue to be considered in plenary meetings of the General Assembly.

12. The President of the General Assembly shall assess the debate on this item and consider the need for further consideration of the report of the Security Council. In the light of that assessment, informal consultations shall be held after the debate in plenary meetings, under the chairmanship of the President or one of the Vice-Presidents of the Assembly, to discuss the need and content of any action by the Assembly based on the debate.

13. The agenda item shall not be closed but shall remain open to enable further discussion as necessary during the year, bearing in mind, inter alia, the submission of additional reports as and when necessary.

14. The monthly forecast of the programme of work of the Security Council shall be circulated for the information of members of the General Assembly.

IV. General Assembly consideration of the report of the Economic and Social Council

15. The report of the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly shall be prepared in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996. The report shall also contain an evaluation of the report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, taking into account the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination.

V. General Assembly consideration of the report of the International Court of Justice

16. The report of the International Court of Justice shall continue to be considered in plenary meetings of the General Assembly. The Assembly shall continue to support the role of the International Court of Justice as the principal judicial organ of the Organization, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. The Assembly shall also continue to encourage the progressive development and codification of international law.

VI. Timing of the plenary meetings of the General Assembly

17. The plenary meetings of the General Assembly shall be formally opened every year on the first Tuesday following 1 September, with the election of the President, Vice-Presidents and Chairmen of the Main Committees (the General Committee). The General Committee shall then meet as soon as possible after its election and shall present its report to the General Assembly before the commencement of the general debate.

18. The plenary meetings of the General Assembly shall reconvene in mid-September to consider the report of the General Committee.

VII. The general debate

19. There shall continue to be only one general debate each year, beginning in the third week of September.

20. The preparation of the list of speakers for the general debate shall be based on the following principles:

(a) The general debate shall be organized over a period of two weeks so as to maximize possibilities for interministerial contacts;

(b) Member States shall be invited to indicate three preferences for speaking times;

(c) Member States wishing to organize or participate in group meetings during the general debate period shall be encouraged to coordinate their responses to the request for preferences and to indicate this transparently in their responses;

(d) The Secretariat shall be requested to prepare a list of speakers based on existing traditions and expressions of preference to best accommodate Members' needs;

(e) The list of speakers for each day shall be completed and no speakers will be rolled over to the next day, notwithstanding the implications for hours of work.

VIII. Time limits

21. There shall be no time limits or specified themes for the general debate but the General Assembly will indicate a voluntary guideline of up to twenty minutes for each statement.

22. Outside the general debate there shall be a fifteen-minute time limit in plenary meetings and in the Main Committees.

IX. The agenda

23. Bearing in mind rule 81 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the requirements for reopening debate on an agenda item which the Assembly had decided was completed will continue to be as at present and should be made clear to delegations through a statement from the President of the Assembly. A delegation wishing to reopen debate on an agenda item should send a written request to the President of the Assembly. The President will then undertake soundings to ascertain whether the request enjoys wide support. In the light of these soundings, the President shall announce in the Journal of the United Nations the date of the meeting of the Assembly to consider the question of reopening debate on the item, bearing in mind the requirements of rule 81.

24. The General Assembly shall take further steps to rationalize and streamline the agenda, based on the Guidelines on the Rationalization of the Agenda of the General Assembly agreed to by the Assembly in annex I to its resolution 48/264 of 29 July 1994, and in particular shall make greater use of clustering, biennialization or triennialization of agenda items. Items that could be considered at a later session shall be identified, taking into account the priorities set by the medium-term plan.

25. As a general rule, agenda items that could be considered in the Main Committees shall be referred to the Main Committees rather than the General Assembly in plenary meetings.

26. The Main Committees shall give specific attention to rationalizing their future agenda and shall consider recommending any possible clustering, biennialization or triennialization of items.

X. Organization of work

27. The General Assembly is the highest political body with universal membership of the Organization. Consideration of agenda items directly in plenary meetings shall be reserved for urgent issues or issues of major political importance, bearing in mind paragraphs 1 and 2 of annex I to General Assembly resolution 48/264.

28. The President of the General Assembly, with a view to ensuring that there is a systematic and transparent process for participation by delegations in discussions on action to be taken on items considered directly in plenary meetings, shall assess the debate in plenary meetings and, where appropriate, organize open-ended informal consultations, under the chairmanship of the President or one of the Vice-Presidents of the Assembly, to discuss the need for and content of any action.

29. The Secretariat shall ensure, in consultation with the President, that priority is accorded to the availability of a meeting room and services to facilitate these consultations.

30. All Main Committees shall hold brief organizational sessions once the General Assembly has taken decisions on the agenda, before the commencement of the general debate. Bureaux of the Main Committees shall meet earlier to draw up recommendations on the organization and programme of work.

31. The Main Committees shall meet in substantive session only after the end of the general debate.

32. The number of reports requested shall be rationalized where possible so as to permit more focused consideration of issues. All bodies shall exercise restraint in making proposals containing requests for new reports and should consider integrating, biennializing or triennializing the presentation of reports, bearing in mind paragraphs 6 and 7 of General Assembly resolution 50/206 C of 23 December 1995.

XI. The General Committee

33. The General Committee shall use its authority and competence, taking into account rule 43 of the rules of procedure, by allowing Member States that are not represented on the General Committee to participate in its discussions. The process of decision-making will continue to be as at present.

34. The General Committee may, each year, prior to the closure of the session, prepare suggestions based on its experience for the consideration of the incoming General Committee.

35. The General Committee is requested to consider and recommend to the General Assembly methods and procedures for streamlining and rationalizing the Committee's work. The General Committee shall, in this context, in relation to each agenda item proposed, consider its rejection or its inclusion in the provisional agenda, taking into account previous recommendations of the General Committee and previous relevant decisions of the Assembly.

XII. Subordinate machinery

36. The First Committee and the Fourth Committee shall not meet simultaneously and may consider meeting in a sequential manner during the regular session of the General Assembly. This arrangement shall not apply if it affects their respective identities, programmes of work and effective consideration of their agendas.

37. The Disarmament Commission should continue to consider ways to organize its work better, including rationalizing the duration of its sessions.

38. The General Assembly should invite the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Health Organization to consider the functions and role of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation and to submit a recommendation to the Assembly at its fifty-third session. Meanwhile, the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation should be asked to submit its report to the International Atomic Energy Agency and World Health Organization as well as to the General Assembly. The Assembly would discuss the report along with any International Atomic Energy Agency and World Health Organization evaluation of the report.

39. The Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Mid-term Review of the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s shall conduct its final review and appraisal during the fifty-seventh session of the General Assembly.

XIII. The budget process and fulfilment of mandates

40. To ensure better transparency and accountability, the medium-term plan shall be the framework for the budget process.

41. The budget process shall be carried out in accordance with relevant General Assembly budget resolutions, in particular resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986, and the relevant provisions of the Financial Rules and Regulations. The importance of continuous and appropriate dialogue on the improvement of current administrative and budgetary practices and procedures is recognized.

42. The Secretary-General shall continue to have flexibility, without prejudice to the fulfilment of mandates, to redeploy, as necessary, within the limits prescribed by the General Assembly budget resolutions and the Financial Rules and Regulations, the human and financial resources necessary to fulfil mandates.

XIV. Role of the President of the General Assembly

43. The President of the General Assembly shall be encouraged to take appropriate opportunities to utilize the potential of the office of the President, consistent with the Charter and the mandates of the Assembly, to advance the purposes and principles of the Organization, including regular consultations between the President of the Assembly and the presidents of other organs, particularly the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.

44. In order to assist the President in the discharge of his responsibilities, the General Assembly shall request the Secretary-General, after consultation with the President, to include in the next programme budget a proposal for adequate resources to be made available to the President, including, if necessary, through enhanced administrative and personnel support to the office of the President.

XV. Technology

45. The Secretary-General is requested to pursue an information technology plan with a range of options to provide all permanent missions to the United Nations and the wider public with on-line access to documents and relevant United Nations information. Unless the General Assembly decides otherwise, hard copies of documents shall continue to be distributed to permanent missions in accordance with their needs. While welcoming the progress made by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council, further efforts in this direction could be pursued within a specified time-frame to harmonize and improve United Nations information systems. All countries, in particular developing countries, shall be assisted in making full use of this potential access. Adequate provision should be made for training delegates. Facilities for such access by delegations within the United Nations premises shall also be expanded as much as possible. Availability of information in this manner should be ensured in all official languages of the United Nations.

46. The Secretary-General is encouraged to include information on the impact of technological improvements in his report on the implementation of mandates, by means of comparing outputs with objectives.

XVI. System-wide coordination

47. The Secretary-General is requested to elaborate further ways to strengthen system-wide coordination and to report thereon to the General Assembly.

XVII. Oversight and accountability of the Secretariat: external and internal mechanisms

48. The Secretariat shall be held strictly accountable for implementing mandates within allocated budgets.

49. For the Secretariat to operate efficiently in fulfilling mandates, micromanagement of the Secretariat by the General Assembly should be avoided.

50. The Secretary-General is encouraged to submit proposals to the General Assembly to improve the presentation of the programme performance report so as to enable the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Main Committees of the General Assembly, without prejudice to the provisions of section VI of resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990, as reaffirmed in resolution 51/221 of 18 December 1996, to consider the portions of the report related to their substantive work with reference to the medium-term plan, with a view to facilitating the consideration of the programme performance report by the Fifth Committee.

51. There shall be a more detailed and structured examination in the Main Committees of the relevant reports of the Board of Auditors, the Joint Inspection Unit and the Office of Internal Oversight Services in relation to the substantive work of these Committees.

52. Accountability and intergovernmental oversight shall be improved by periodic coordination meetings between the Board of Auditors, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Joint Inspection Unit, with appropriate input from the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

53. "Question time" in all Main Committees would enable a dynamic and candid interchange with responsible Secretariat officials to facilitate the work of the Main Committees in their assessment of fulfilment of mandates, productivity and related issues.

54. Every effort should be made to ensure that the measures referred to above take into account and are mutually reinforcing of the programme evaluation activities carried out by other competent intergovernmental bodies.

XVIII. Areas for more intensive work by oversight machinery

55. The relevant bodies should request the external and internal oversight machinery to give early attention to, among others, the following areas and to report thereon periodically to the General Assembly:

- (a) Practice and procedures in the employment of consultants;
- (b) Practice and procedures in short-term contract employment;
- (c) Practice and procedures with respect to recruitment;

(d) Productivity gains actually achieved from investment in technology and the impact of the postponement/deferral of upgrading technological systems on the long-term functioning of the Organization;

(e) Practice and procedures for appointments at the senior level;

(f) Practice and procedures for procurement and the award of contracts;

(g) An evaluation of conflict of interest issues, in particular for personnel dealing with employment decisions and the award of procurement and contracts;

(h) Practice and procedures in the establishment and use of trust funds;

(i) Practice and procedures with regard to personnel on loan;

(j) Any other issue recommended by the General Assembly.

XIX. The Secretary-General

56. The process of selection of the Secretary-General shall be made more transparent.

57. The General Assembly shall make full use of the power of appointment enshrined in the Charter in the process of the appointment of the Secretary-General and the agenda item entitled "Appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations".

58. The duration of the term or terms of appointment, including the option of a single term, shall be considered before the appointment of the next Secretary-General.

59. In the course of the identification and appointment of the best candidate for the post of Secretary-General, due regard shall continue to be given to regional rotation and shall also be given to gender equality.

60. Without prejudice to the prerogatives of the Security Council, the President of the General Assembly may consult with Member States to identify potential candidates endorsed by a Member State and, upon informing all Member States of the results, may forward those results to the Security Council.

61. In order to ensure a smooth and efficient transition, the Secretary-General should be appointed as early as possible, preferably no later than one month before the date on which the term of the incumbent expires.

XX. Senior management

62. The senior management structure should be considered in the context of the overall structure of the Organization, desired lines of authority and decision-making.

63. The Organization shall have a clear pyramid structure. To that end, the functions and number of under-secretaries-general, special representatives of the Secretary-General and assistant secretaries-general should be reviewed and streamlined by the Secretary-General, and lines of authority and decision-making made transparent.

64. Member States note the Secretary-General's decision to establish a Policy Coordination Group as a means to enhance coordination in the terms explained by him to Member States.

65. The principles of equitable geographical distribution and gender balance shall be reflected in appointments to senior positions, including heads of programmes, funds and other United Nations bodies.

66. The principle enshrined in General Assembly resolution 46/232 of 2 March 1992 that there should be no monopoly on senior posts by nationals of any State or group of States should be strictly observed and implemented. The Secretary-General should keep the Assembly regularly informed of his/her actions on those matters.

67. The Secretary-General is encouraged to consider uniform terms and term limits in his appointments to senior management posts.

XXI. Heads of programmes, funds and other United Nations bodies

68. Affirming the role of the General Assembly in approving appointments and extension of terms, uniform terms of office of four years, renewable once, should be introduced for the executive heads of programmes, funds and other bodies of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

69. The specialized agencies are also encouraged to consider uniform terms and term limits for their executive heads.

XXII. General staffing issues

70. It is essential for the successful functioning of the Organization that it has a career international civil service for its core functions. There is also an important role for term contracts for various categories of staff.

71. The Secretary-General shall be encouraged, in accordance with legislative mandates, to ensure a judicious mix of career and fixed-term appointments, so as to have an appropriate balance between institutional memory, long-term commitment and independence and the ability to bring in fresh insights and expertise, and to dismiss non-performing staff.

72. Short-term appointments should not be used as an entry to career positions. A review should be undertaken of staff on short-term appointments.

73. Staff development and training shall be encouraged along with a cost-effective common training system to be developed for personnel of the Secretariat, funds and programmes.

74. The provisions of the Charter giving due regard to the importance of recruiting staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible shall be implemented. In this regard, the principle of gender balance shall be observed within the Organization. In achieving gender balance, the principle of equitable geographical distribution shall be respected.

75. The quality of the language services shall be enhanced, including through the provision of effective management practices, bearing in mind that all official languages of the United Nations are of equal importance in this regard.

XXIII. Personnel management

76. The system of in-career promotion shall be made more transparent.

77. A planned rotation among different departments as well as between Headquarters and the field level, as appropriate, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 49/222 A of 23 December 1994, as one way of enhancing experience and skills, should be developed and submitted to the Assembly.

78. The performance appraisal system shall be subject to periodic review and audit and comparative statistics should be maintained for review by the General Assembly.

XXIV. Secretariat remuneration

79. The General Assembly shall request the International Civil Service Commission to prepare proposals for a possible system of performance-based remuneration for its consideration.

80. The General Assembly shall reiterate that topping up of remuneration of their nationals in any way by Member States is not acceptable and shall request the Secretary-General to report on the matter.

XXV. Independence of the Secretariat

81. Further efforts shall be made, consistent with Article 101 of the Charter, to pay due regard to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

82. Compliance with Article 100 (2) of the Charter is of fundamental importance and it would be timely to call upon Member States scrupulously to observe Article 100 (2) and to request the Secretary-General to prepare guidelines on what constitutes acceptable representations to him and his staff on appointments.

83. Consistent with Article 101 of the Charter, Secretariat guidelines for staff members on financial interests shall include a requirement at all levels of senior management for specified financial disclosures at the time of appointment and on a regular basis. These financial statements shall be dealt with on a basis of confidentiality.

Review of Security Council membership and related matters

Open-ended Working Group. The Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council submitted a report on its work during the General Assembly's fifty-first session [A/51/47 & Corr.1]. Between 23 October 1996 and 18 July 1997, the Group held 42 meetings divided into three substantive sessions.

At the first session in March, the Group considered statements by the two Vice-Chairmen on informal discussions conducted with 165 Member States. The Vice-Chairmen indicated that although the Group was entering its fourth year, only about 30 per cent of the UN membership had addressed it. The Bureau of the Group felt it necessary to reach out and hear the views of as many as possible of the silent majority that constituted over 100 Member States. It also exchanged views with the rest of the membership whose views could be the subject of further clarification and exposition.

The major findings from the consultations were:

Council size and composition. A large majority of Member States supported an increase in both permanent and non-permanent categories of membership in the Security Council; a few Members advocated an increase in non-permanent membership only; a number of delegations that supported an increase in both categories also expressed readiness to support an increase in the non-permanent category as a first step, as long as the Working Group continued to address the increase in permanent membership. Safeguarding the Council's efficiency was a common concern of many delegations.

Decision-making, including veto. The vast majority of Member States felt that the veto was anachronistic and undemocratic, while acknowledging that it was not realistic to expect the veto to be abolished.

Charter amendments. A large majority of Member States supported moving ahead with improvements in the working methods of the Council and enhancement of the transparency of its work without having to wait for solutions on the expansion issue.

The Working Group received written proposals from Belgium, on behalf of Australia, Austria, Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Ireland, Portugal and Slovenia, and from Poland. The Movement of Non-Aligned Countries submitted a negotiating paper on cluster II issues (other matters related to the Council), which formed the basis for the Working Group's discussion. At the end of the session, the Chairman presented his paper on a reform of the Security Council.

At its second session in April/May, the Working Group considered written proposals by Mongolia and by Egypt, on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, and a non-paper by the Bureau on the working methods and transparency of the Council, prepared on the basis of the negotiating paper of the non-aligned countries on cluster II issues. At its third session in June/July, proposals were submitted by Lebanon, for the Group of Arab States, and by Italy. Senegal submitted the deliberations of the Organization of African Unity on the subject. The Bureau also submitted a conference room paper.

The Working Group affirmed that the work of the General Assembly on Council reform should be conducted in conformity with the relevant Assembly resolutions, respecting the need for transparency and open-endedness. Concluding its work, the Group recommended that consideration of the matter should continue at the Assembly's fifty-second session, building on the work done during all previous sessions.

The Assembly, by decision 51/476 of 15 September, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that the Group should continue its work, taking into account progress achieved at previous Assembly sessions and the views to be expressed during the fifty-second session. The Working Group would submit a report to that session, including any agreed recommendations.

On 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/459, decided that the item on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and related matters should remain for consideration during the fifty-second session.

Revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

In 1997, the process of restructuring and revitalization in the economic, social and related fields of the United Nations, which began in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 749], continued. In 1996, the General Assembly had adopted a number of measures to further the process, which were embodied in resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249].

In response to the Assembly's request that he report on measures taken to implement resolution 50/227, the Secretary-General, in a 29 May report [A/52/155-E/1997/68], provided information on efforts made by the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council with regard to the relevant provisions of that resolution. He also reported on action by the Executive Boards of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme to respond to the Assembly's recommendations in respect of their agendas, programmes of work, number and scheduling of meetings and sessions, reporting and documentation, rules of procedure and the participation of observers. In a June addendum [A/52/155/Add.1-E/1997/68/Add.1], the Secretary-General examined the difference in cost of holding meetings of the Council in New York and Geneva.

In another May report [E/1997/40], the Secretary-General reviewed some recent reform efforts undertaken by the regional commissions, provided an assessment of progress achieved and suggested further steps that could be initiated (see below). The Secretary-General also transmitted an IMF report on collaboration between the United Nations and that organization [E/1997/78] and an information note [E/1997/101] on the joint United Nations/Bretton Woods institutions review.

Communication. On 27 January [A/51/785], the Nordic countries (Denmark, Iceland, Finland, Norway, Sweden) transmitted to the Secretary-General a report entitled "The United Nations in development; strengthening the United Nations through change: fulfilling its economic and social mandate". The report gave their views on the need for reform in five areas: UN work at the country level; operations at Headquarters level; governance of the UN system; financial reform and adequate and predictable funding; and staff policy. The Nordic countries said they wanted to seek ways to make the United Nations more effective and relevant in order to strengthen and enable it better to fulfil its economic and social mandate.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/311 of 25 July, decided to continue consideration of the item on the implementation of Assembly resolution 50/227 at its resumed substantive (1997) session and to consider the item at an early date in future substantive sessions. It requested its Bureau to make suggestions regarding action on the Secretary-General's recommendations contained in his report and requested the Secretary-General to brief the Council on relevant issues after each session of ACC, beginning with the second regular session in late 1997.

By decision 1997/322 of 18 December, the Council decided to continue its consideration of the item and to request the Secretary-General to brief delegations on relevant issues considered at ACC's second regular session of 1997 at the Council's 1998 organizational session.

On 15 September, by decision 51/478, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields". By decision 52/459 of 22 December, it decided that the item would remain for consideration during the fifty-second session.

Review of subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

In July, the Economic and Social Council, in response to General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249], reviewed the mandates, composition, functions and working methods of its functional commissions and expert bodies, in particular the role, working methods and relationship with other bodies of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and the Committee on Natural Resources. It had before it a 1996 report [E/1996/97 & Add.1] by the Secretary-General on the establishment, terms of reference, membership and composition, term of office of members, reporting procedure and frequency of meetings of the subsidiary bodies of the Council and the Assembly in the economic, social and related fields.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1997/310 [draft: E/1997/L.58] without vote [agenda item 12].

Review of the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council

At its 42nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1997, the Economic and Social Council, recalling General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996, in which the Assembly, inter alia, decided that the Council should undertake a review of the mandates, composition, functions and working methods of its functional commissions and expert bodies and should consider, as a matter of priority, the role, working methods and relationship with other bodies of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and the Committee on Natural Resources, recalling its resolution 1996/41 of 26 July 1996 on the follow-up to General Assembly resolution 50/227, taking into account the work done during its substantive session of 1997, including preparatory consultations in New York and views and positions expressed by Member States as well as inputs provided by the Economic and Social Council secretariat and the substantive secretariats servicing the bodies under priority consideration:

(a) Decided to continue, at its resumed substantive session of 1997, consideration of its review in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/227, annex I, paragraphs 70 and 71, and Council resolution 1996/41;

(b) Took note of the summary of the review exercise undertaken at its substantive session of 1997, which was submitted by the Vice-President of the Council and is contained in the annex to the present decision;

(c) Requested the President of the Council to transmit the text of the present decision and the annex thereto to the Presidents of the General Assembly at its fifty-first and fifty-second sessions, for consideration under relevant items of the agenda of the Assembly.

ANNEX

Summary by the Vice-President of the Economic and Social Council, Mr. Anwarul Karim Choudhury (Bangladesh), of the informal consultations on the follow-up to General Assembly resolution 50/227: review of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and the Committee on Natural Resources

1. In the preparations for the substantive session of 1997 of the Economic and Social Council in New York and during the session itself in Geneva, several rounds of consultations were held, in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 50/227, relating to a review of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and the Committee on Natural Resources, as part of the Council's review of its subsidiary bodies. These consultations were assisted by the valuable background information, ideas and suggestions provided at the request of the Member States by the chairpersons of the bodies under priority review, the secretariat of the Council and other relevant substantive secretariats. The Group of 77 and China and the European Union also submitted written comments and proposals for consideration in the review exercise. On the basis of these various inputs, an informal outline for discussion (dated 30 June 1997) was presented by the Vice-President as mandated. During the substantive session, a comprehensive review of the mandates, composition and working methods of each of the four bodies under review was carried out.

2. The present summary, prepared by the Vice-President, of the issues addressed is intended to facilitate further consultations.

3. On process, the broad perception during the consultations was that:

(a) The intergovernmental process mandated by General Assembly resolution 50/227 should continue at the resumed substantive session of 1997; it was also observed, however, that the Council's review would benefit from further information, to be provided by the Secretary-General;

(b) There was a need to coordinate the intergovernmental process of the review to ensure there was no duplication.

4. On the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the main areas of concern were as follows:

(a) The role of the Commission, its profile and its impact;

(b) Intergovernmental oversight, its relationship with the Council and the Trade and Development Board as well as with other intergovernmental bodies, including the Commission on Sustainable Development;

(c) Coordination, inter alia, through its agenda and work programme;

(d) The relationship between the Commission and its substantive secretariat, and with organizations of the United Nations system;

(e) The size, composition and completion of membership (vacancies, regional balance and the like).

5. On the Committee for Development Planning, the main areas of concern were as follows:

(a) The role of the Committee in preparing for development discussions in the Council, particularly during its high-level segment, as well as its role in the identification and analysis of new and emerging trends and issues in the area of development;

(b) The name of the Committee: it could be changed to Committee for Development Policies, as suggested by the Committee itself, or to Committee for Development Issues;

(c) The role of the Committee in reviewing the list of the least developed countries: whether this function could be carried out by some other United Nations body;

(d) Clarification of the relationship between the Committee and the Secretary-General's High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development.

6. On the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, the main areas of concern were as follows:

(a) How to deal effectively, at an expert level, with the energy issue, which is of particular importance for the developing countries;

(b) The place of the Committee in the subsidiary machinery of the Council: should it report to the Council directly or through the Commission on Sustainable Development;

(c) Arrangements for dissemination and use of the reports of the Committee;

(d) Linkages with other United Nations bodies.

7. On the Committee on Natural Resources, the main areas of concern were as follows:

(a) The place of the Committee in the machinery of the Council and its relationship with other bodies, particularly the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development;

(b) Whether issues of freshwater management require separate consideration in the Committee or can be discussed in the Commission on Sustainable Development;

(c) How to address effectively the issue of minerals and whether it is feasible to combine this function with the work on energy in the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development;

(d) Arrangements for dissemination and use of the reports of the Committee.

Appendix

Informal outline for discussion on the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and the Committee on Natural Resources

A. Commission on Science and Technology for Development

1. The mandate established by the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Council should be retained. Particular attention should be focused on the issues of transfer of technology and capacity-building.

2. The size of the Commission should be reduced from 53 members to 24 members, who should be experts nominated by Member States.

3. The Commission should continue to report directly to the Council.

4. Coordination with other bodies, including the Commission on Sustainable Development, should be improved.

5. The dissemination of information should be improved.

B. Committee for Development Planning

1. The name of the Committee should be changed to Committee for Development Policies or Committee for Development Issues.

2. The Committee should perform as an independent advisory body to the Council, providing inputs with regard to various issues or themes being discussed in the Council. Its mandate on the least developed countries should continue.

3. Dissemination of information should be improved.

4. The Council should provide guidance regarding the programme of work of the Committee.

5. The composition of the Committee (24 members) should include people from a variety of economic and social disciplines of relevance to its think-tank role. The membership should include those who are able to provide newer perspectives on issues under consideration.

C. Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development and Committee on Natural Resources

1. These two Committees should be merged to form one Committee on Natural Resources and Energy for Development.

2. The new Committee should have two panels, one dealing with energy for development, including new and renewable sources of energy, and the other dealing mainly with water resources.

3. The Committee should act as an advisory expert body reporting to the Council.

4. The new Committee should be composed of 24 experts nominated by Member States: 12 members with adequate and appropriate expertise should serve on each panel.

5. The panels should focus on appropriate recommendations for action by the Council.

6. The Committee should meet annually for one week in view of the importance of the issues considered by the two panels.

7. Dissemination of information and coordination with other United Nations bodies should be improved.

By decision 1997/322 of 18 December, the Council decided to convene informal consultations in March and May/June 1998 to continue the review of its subsidiary bodies, taking into account the relevant parts of those resolutions relating to UN reform adopted by the Assembly at its fifty-second session. The Council requested the Secretary-General to submit a report on the question in 1998.

Reform of regional commissions

The Secretary-General, responding to General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/41 [ibid., p. 1257], submitted a May report [E/1997/40] in which he reviewed some of the recent reform efforts undertaken by the regional commissions, assessed progress achieved and suggested further steps to be initiated.

In July, the Council adopted several resolutions and a decision on the reform measures taken by the regional commissions (see PART THREE, Chapter V).

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B, invited the Council to conduct a general review of the regional commissions at its 1998 substantive session and to report to the Assembly before the end of its fifty-second session.

Innovative funding mechanisms

The Secretary-General reported to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly on new and innovative ideas for generating funds globally for agreed commitments and priorities, in particular those established at recent UN conferences and summits.

The question of financing for the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], was addressed in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the Assembly's nineteenth special session (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/48 [YUN 1996, p. 1271], the Secretary-General submitted a 23 June report [A/52/203-E/1997/85] on new and innovative ideas for generating funds globally: agreed commitments and priorities. The report focused on the financing of global development priorities resulting from recent major international conferences as part of the process of mobilizing additional resources for development cooperation. The Secretary-General said that while the report's emphasis was on the financing of multilateral, intergovernmental development cooperation objectives, the underlying premise was that the private sector was the primary source of financing for meeting those objectives. Of the many ideas and proposals presented to the Council in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1270] for generating resources for development funds, those relating to charges or taxes on international transactions did not appear viable. He therefore presented two broad groups of possible options: private-public partnership in mobilizing finance for achieving development objectives; and national charges and fees, drawing from national experiences in environmental protection.

Regarding the first option, the Secretary-General recommended that multilateral and bilateral development agencies should examine collateralized bond obligations-type mechanisms for promoting public-private partnerships for financing programmes and projects. Microcredit leaders, financial sector specialists and key government regulators should create facilitating frameworks and eliminate obstacles to linking microcredit to capital markets, taking into account the recommendation of the Microcredit Summit (see PART THREE, Chapter I). The regulatory environment, market imperfections, financial reporting, financial best practices, marketing, risk-management and credit rating were issues that should be examined. The community development practices of companies with subsidiaries abroad could be surveyed to determine whether they showed a globalization trend and whether companies maintained the good practice of assuming a certain measure of developmental responsibility for their neighbourhoods when they established such subsidiaries. Such practices could be encouraged through appropriate incentives. It might also be useful, said the Secretary-General, to evaluate the lessons learned from experience with different types of joint implementation arrangements and to undertake feasibility studies covering aspects of economic desirability and technical feasibility. The market for an emission trading scheme should be sufficiently wide and capable of expanding over time, with the addition of sophisticated monitoring and compliance control procedures. Other issues such as the allocation of initial quantities of "emission rights", the effect of the provisions of a potential global permit trading regime on developing countries and the expiry of carbon credits and the potential of changing "rules of the game" should also be examined. It would be useful in future, the Secretary-General stated, to distinguish more clearly between "aid", that is, assistance to poorer countries to help them attain their national objectives, and "global development financing", that is, meeting incremental costs. Such a distinction would provide a new rationale for international development cooperation and underline that much of it was not aid but investment in mutual concerns.

Under the second option, the Secretary-General discussed environmental charges or taxes as a source of revenue, including national carbon taxes, national conservation tax to finance biodiversity, service and user fees as possible funding options and the use of IMF gold holdings and special drawing rights to subsidize interest, enabling a substantial volume of semi-concessional finance to be made available to developing countries.

The Secretary-General recommended that special attention be accorded to developing enhanced technical cooperation services, including information sharing, which development assistance agencies could offer to strengthen the capacity of developing countries in terms of mobilizing and managing private capital and in using that capital to achieve sustainable development. The Economic and Social Council could consider how to review all the discussions held in various forums to identify the more promising ideas for further consideration. As the acceptability of any new ideas or mechanisms was directly linked to the uses to be made of the funds raised, it was important to carry out the discussions in the Council's functional commissions, particularly on those ideas that would help achieve the objectives of the global conferences, so that the funding methods were closely tied to the policy objectives of each sector. Consequently, the Council could request its functional commissions to report on new and innovative ways of funding, drawing attention to aspects requiring coordinated and coherent policy. As for the funding mechanisms of a cross-sectoral or non-sectoral-specific nature, the Council could continue to take up the issue but with narrower focus and greater depth and request the Committee for Development Planning to prepare a report.

The Council, on 25 July (decision 1997/313), and the Assembly, on 18 December (decision 52/451), took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Chapter II

United Nations financing and programming

Over the course of 1997, the financial situation of the United Nations showed no sign of improvement. The Secretary-General reported that the high levels of unpaid assessments for the regular budget, international tribunals and peacekeeping operations were undermining the financial stability and liquidity of the Organization. Unpaid assessments at the end of 1997 totalled $2 billion. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations continued its search for solutions but reached no agreed conclusions. However, the Secretary-General, in his proposed measures for United Nations reform, recommended the establishment of a revolving credit fund capitalized up to $1 billion and funded through voluntary contributions, as one means of providing liquidity as an advance on Member States' contributions.

The General Assembly, in December, adopted revised appropriations of $2.5 billion for the 1996-1997 biennium, $61.2 million less than it had originally approved, and budget appropriations of $2.5 billion for 1998-1999. The Assembly also considered the Secretary-General's proposals for reducing non-programme costs by 35 per cent and redirecting the funds to development and for introducing results-based budgeting.

The Committee on Contributions continued to review the methodology of the scale of assessments. In December, the Assembly decided on the scale of assessments for the period 1998-2000.

The Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors for the 1995-1996 biennium on the United Nations, on UN peacekeeping operations and on UN entities. The Board submitted to the Assembly proposals for improving the implementation of its recommendations.

Financial situation

Reports of Secretary-General. In March [A/51/515/Add.2], the Secretary-General reported that only 30 Member States had paid their new assessments in full by the due date of 31 January. By the end of February, that number had risen to 40 as against 33 in 1996 and 27 in 1995. The total of $555 million received for the regular budget assessments of $1.1 billion issued at the beginning of the year, compared with the $383 million collected for the same period in 1996, was due to a full 1997 contribution by France and a payment of $100 million by the United States. However, the Secretary-General cautioned that the surge in cash would not carry on through the entire year and that there would be a return to deep negative cash amounts. Therefore, 1997 was expected to be identical to 1996. He appealed to Member States for their best efforts to put the Organization back on a solid, reliable financial footing.

In May [A/51/515/Add.3], the Secretary-General reported that the Organization continued to be unable to pay its bills on a timely basis and was on the edge financially. Approximately one year's assessment remained uncollected and debts payable to Member States stood at around $900 million. As at 30 April, $637 million had been collected for the regular budget, representing a little over half of the 1997 assessment. On a month-by-month basis, collections in 1997 had outpaced those for the comparable period in 1995 and 1996. However, at the end of April, the usable cash balance of the General Fund totalled $92 million, less than the amount needed for one month of regular budget expenditures. Usable peacekeeping cash at the end of April amounted to $989 million, due for the most part to early and large inflows of assessed contributions. No significant payments had been made to troop and equipment contributors. It was forecast that the combined cash position would be $433 million, with a regular budget cash deficit of $201 million and a peacekeeping positive balance of $634 million, or barely enough for two months of expenditures at average monthly projected rates for 1997. At the end of April, prior years' outstanding contributions for peacekeeping totalled $1.4 billion. The regular budget arrears followed the same pattern. With no reserves and no capital to shore up the Organization, an already precarious situation would become even more unstable, said the Secretary-General.

Reporting again in October [A/52/444], the Secretary-General said that, against unpaid assessments of $2.416 billion as of 30 September, as-assessments issued aggregated $2.26 billion. Unpaid assessments thus exceeded the current year's assessments by a ratio of 1.07 to 1. In monetary terms, outstanding contributions to the regular budget amounted to $649 million as at 30 September, of which $382 million was for the current year and $267 million related to prior years.

At the end of September, collections totalled $972 million against regular budget assessments, comprising both payment of current year's assessments and prior years' assessments paid during the current year. Of the total assessed for 1997, 88 per cent had been collected by the end of September, which compared equally to the previous year. However, as expenditures were running $20 million higher than previously estimated, the deficit for 1997 was projected at $272 million and the outlook for 1998 showed no real change for the cash position of the regular budget. Usable peacekeeping cash aggregated $745 million, and projections showed disbursements exceeding receipts by $204 million due to expenditures connected with the liquidation of several peacekeeping operations and the application of some of the accumulated credits in respect of unencumbered balances of peacekeeping missions, which the General Assembly had earlier delayed. As a result, peacekeeping cash at the end of the year was projected to fall to $670 million, while the amount owed to troop- and equipment-contributing countries would total $907 million.

Concluding, the Secretary-General said that the Organization had reached a point where it had little, if any, financial flexibility and was highly illiquid. The collection of arrears remained the key to the restoration of the Organization's financial stability.

In a later report [A/52/444/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented an end-of-year review of the financial situation, noting that unpaid assessments at the end of 1997 totalled $2,048 million, slightly lower than the end of 1996 figure of $2,144 million. The number of Member States paying their regular budget assessment in full continued to climb. At the end of 1997, 100 Member States had done so, compared to 75 in 1994. There had also been a substantial decrease in the number of Member States owing more than their 1997 assessments at the end of the year, down from 75 in 1994 to 50 in 1997. However, the number of Member States making no regular budget payment in 1997 moved back to 17 from a 1996 low of 12.

Aggregate peacekeeping assessments outstanding at the end of 1997 totalled $1,574 million, a decrease of $150 million since 1995. However, amounts due to Member States for troops and contingent-owned equipment totalled $884 million, slightly worse than a year earlier, when amounts owed totalled $838 million.

Turning to the Organization's cash situation, the Secretary-General reported that the available cash balances, for the regular budget and peacekeeping accounts combined, remained relatively stable at $669 million at the end of 1997. Peacekeeping cash balances were favourably affected, although only temporarily, by lower than anticipated expenditures for several missions and by obligations recorded but not disbursed for other missions in liquidation. On the other hand, regular budget cash, including reserves, registered a negative balance of $122 million, smaller than the 1996 figure of $197 million. That was due to underspending for the 1996-1997 biennium and unexpected contributions from the United States and Ukraine.

The Secretary-General stated that the Organization's cash position was weak, and getting weaker, with unpaid assessments decreasing slowly. Debt to Member States had become resistant to change. As a result, the need for cross-borrowing from peacekeeping funds to cover regular budget deficits persisted as the level of funds declined.

High-level Working Group. The High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations, established in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1336], held 10 meetings between 23 October 1996 and 16 June 1997. It considered the payment by Member States of their contributions in full and on time; the problem of arrears in the payment of contributions; the procedure for the approval of peacekeeping budgets and appropriations; the cash-flow situation; and methods for calculating the scale of assessments. The Vice-Chairman submitted a working paper entitled "Payment of contributions in full and on time and reduction of arrears: a framework for discussion". He proposed another working paper, which contained a draft decision pertaining to the payment of contributions in full and on time, the problem of arrears and the cash-flow situation, and which listed questions for further discussion: methods of calculating the scales of assessments and the procedure for approval of peacekeeping budgets and appropriations.

The Working Group discussed the issues presented in the second working paper. Individual members and groups of Member States, while welcoming the efforts of the Vice-Chairman, nevertheless expressed differing views on all of the issues.

On 8 September, the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee took note of the Working Group's report [A/51/43] and transmitted it to the General Assembly for action.

The Assembly, by decision 51/474 of 15 September, took note of the Fifth Committee's report [A/51/973] transmitting the Working Group's report. The Assembly, by decision 51/475 of the same date, noted the Group's work on the understanding that it would be resumed after consultations with Member States.

On the same date, by decision 51/481, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-second session the item entitled "Improving the financial situation of the United Nations".

In a 19 November letter [A/52/701], the Secretary-General notified the Assembly that the issue of non-payment of arrears had become more acute since, contrary to expectations, the Congress of the United States was not able to reach a positive decision with regard to the payment of its arrears. He considered that the practice of borrowing from peacekeeping funds to cover shortfalls in the regular budget should not be regularized. He believed that Member States should fully consider the implications of the current situation for the Organization and urged the Assembly to convene the High-level Open-ended Working Group for that purpose and to explore options for ensuring timely payment by Member States of their assessments. He suggested that the Working Group report on its recommendations before the end of the Assembly's fifty-second session.

On 19 November [A/52/693], Luxembourg transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration of the Presidency of the European Union (EU), which stated that the fact that the United States was continuing not to pay its arrears perpetuated the serious financial crisis and seriously affected the climate of trust within the Organization. The EU was counting on all Member States to honour their obligations promptly, in full and unconditionally, as did the EU member States, whose combined contributions accounted for 35.4 per cent of the regular budget and 37.9 per cent of the peacekeeping budget.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B of 19 December on a programme for UN reform, reaffirmed the obligation of all Member States, in accordance with the Charter, to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without conditions.

By decision 52/456 of 22 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue in 1998 consideration of the item "Improving the financial situation of the United Nations".

Establishment of revolving credit fund

The Secretary-General, in his proposals for UN reform (see PART FIVE, Chapter I) announced in July [A/51/950], recommended the establishment of a revolving credit fund as a means of dealing with the financial crisis of the Organization. In the absence of an adequate level of capital or any reserves and in the light of the failure of some Member States to discharge their treaty obligations with regard to the payment of assessed contributions, the Secretary-General believed it essential to find immediate practical measures to complement the ongoing search for a more fundamental solution of the Organization's financial situation.

In October [A/51/950/Add.4], the Secretary-General recommended that the fund be capitalized initially at a level of up to $ 1 billion through voluntary contributions or any other means of financing that Member States might wish to suggest and be used to finance, on a recourse basis, any newly arising overdue assessment payments of Member States. The procedure for use of the fund would require the Secretary-General to notify any Member State that certain assessments had fallen past due by 90 days and request that Member State to specify the future date of payment. The notification and response would be used by the Secretary-General as a legally binding pledge for an advance from the fund, which he would then authorize up to the amount of the unpaid assessed contribution in question. Such an advance would not constitute payment of the assessment and would not affect the application of Article 19 of the Charter concerning the right to vote. The procedure would only be used for outstanding amounts greater than $250,000. Member States, against whose unpaid contributions advances had been made from the fund, would bear the opportunity cost of financing such advances through adjustments of amounts owed to them by the Organization for prior year surpluses, up to the level of their share of such surpluses. Conversely, the surplus balances of Member States providing voluntary contributions to the fund would be adjusted accordingly. The cost of financing advances exceeding the accumulated surpluses would not be allowed without General Assembly agreement. All authorized retained surpluses should therefore be consolidated into a new single retained surplus account.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B of 19 December, noted the Secretary-General's recommendation and requested him to submit by the end of March 1998 detailed proposals for the establishment of such a fund, including its financing, management and operation, while emphasizing that the priority was compliance by all Member States with their financial obligations. It also took note of the recommendation that any unspent balances under the regular budget at the end of the fiscal period be retained and invited the competent bodies to consider the implications of such retention as well as its use, including possible allocation to development programmes, on the basis of a report to be submitted by the Secretary-General before the end of the fifty-second session.

Management of resources and funds

The General Assembly, by decision 51/469 B of 15 September, took note of the Secretary-General's report on jurisdictional and procedural mechanisms for the proper management of the resources and funds of the United Nations and the report thereon [YUN 1994, p. 1358] of the Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts set up pursuant to Assembly resolution 48/218 A [YUN 1993, p. 1187]. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to submit to its fifty-third (1998) session a report on the follow-up of management irregularities causing financial losses to the Organization, as indicated by the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

UN budget

Results-based budgeting

Among his proposed measures for UN reform [A/51/950], the Secretary-General recommended that the Organization shift from the current methodology of input budgeting to results-based budgeting. He also recommended that the General Assembly review existing arrangements for planning, programming and budgeting to enhance their role in providing strategic direction, establishing better performance yardsticks and reporting and focusing more on accountability for performance than on input accounting.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in its first report [A/52/7/Rev.1] on the 1998-1999 programme budget, stated that the idea needed to be followed up with a detailed report on the proposed change and the new methodology to be used, as well as a mock-up of such a budget. There should also be an indication of what regulations, procedures and information systems (including performance indicators) should be in place before the introduction of output budgeting. ACABQ drew attention to resolution 51/221 B [YUN 1996, p. 1324], in which the Assembly decided that no changes to the budget methodology, procedures and practices could be implemented without prior review and approval by the Assembly.

In November [A/51/950/Add.6], the Secretary-General explained the basic concepts involved in results-based budgeting and how those ideas might be applied to the United Nations. The key identifying feature of results-based budgeting was the emphasis on outputs and consequent outcomes as opposed to input budgeting where the emphasis was on inputs. The programme manager would be able to change the expenditure input mix to take advantage of relative price, technology or other changes as long as the output could be produced within the budget. Results-based budgeting focused more on results to be achieved and less on how money was to be spent within the overall allocation. For results-based budgeting to work effectively in the Secretariat, it would require greater delegation of authority and responsibility to programme managers and thus a decentralized management structure. Programme managers would be required to produce least-cost outputs, in accordance with pre-approved performance dimensions.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B of 19 December, took note of the Secretary-General's recommendation to shift towards a system of results-based budgeting, and requested him to submit before the end of the fifty-second session a more detailed report that would include a full explanation for the proposed change, and the methodology to be used, as well as a mock-up of one or more sections of the budget.

Budget for 1994-1995

On 3 April, the General Assembly, by decision 51/463, concluded its consideration of the agenda item on the programme budget for the 1994-1995 biennium.

Budget for 1996-1997

Final appropriations

In 1997, the General Assembly adopted final budget appropriations for the 1996-1997 biennium, decreasing the amount of $2,603,280,900 approved in 1996 by resolution 51/222 A [YUN 1996, p. 1282] by $61,209,000. It reduced approved income estimates by $28,700,100 to $419,037,500. Increases were made in the budget areas of political affairs ($14,791,700), public information ($254,100), jointly financed activities and special expenses ($645,500) and capital expenditures ($827,000).

Reports of Secretary-General. Responding to Assembly resolution 50/214 [YUN 1995, p. 1386], the Secretary-General, in a June report [A/C.5/51/53], provided an update of the impact of approved savings measures on the implementation of mandated programmes and activities. He said that to achieve reductions of the magnitude of $ 154 million as requested by the Assembly, managers had to maintain vacancy rates significantly higher than budgeted for and effect reductions in the use of consultants, travel and operational costs. A review of the programmes of work towards their possible reorientation, reorganization and possible modification had also contributed to lessening the impact of the budget reductions. Although some of the programmed activities were affected in regard to their scope or timeliness of delivery, when compared with the total volume of the programme of activities only a very small number of outputs had been affected. The report outlined the specific impact of the reductions on each budget area.

In response to the Assembly's request in resolution 51/220 [YUN 1996, p. 1287], the Secretary-General issued an August report [A/C.5/51/57] on additional regular budget expenditures, including those relating to the maintenance of peace and security, inflation and currency fluctuation. The Secretary-General explained that legislative mandates relating to peace and security that were established after the preparation of the proposed programme budget and that gave rise to resource requirements were subject to additional appropriations outside the scope of the contingency fund, in accordance with resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024]. Such mandates tended to be valid for one year or less and had rarely extended beyond the end of a biennium. As a result, funds appropriated were not carried over to the next biennium but were relinquished, only to be sought again as additional appropriations in the context of revised estimates or statements of programme budget implications when the mandate was renewed or extended.

Given the recurring nature of such requirements over the last few bienniums, the Secretary-General sought to include in the outline of the programme budget for 1998-1999 a provision that would obviate the need for seeking additional resources, as and when such mandates were renewed or created in the course of the biennium. The General Assembly did not retain the proposal. Therefore, the Secretary-General stated, it was not only desirable but prudent to make such provision at the outset and offered two alternatives for doing so. First, include a one-line provision in the budget outline, and subsequently in the proposed programme budget. That amount would then be appropriated, but its utilization would be subject to individual legislative mandates and approval by the Assembly as and when it renewed such mandates. Alternatively, the contingency fund could be modified to include a component for such mandates and one for activities currently covered under the contingency fund. The first alternative appeared more suitable to the Secretary-General, since it would provide for appropriations at the outset and obviate the need for additional appropriations.

Regarding the issue of expenditures arising from inflation and currency fluctuation, it was recalled that extensive reviews and studies had been conducted over the years but because of its complexity there were no easy solutions. The Secretary-General recalled that the Working Group on Currency Instability in 1974 [YUN 1974, p. 913] had outlined a number of alternatives for dealing with the effect of continuing currency instability and inflation on the budgets of the UN system, and, although the subject had resurfaced on several occasions, there had been no new development in terms of a solution. The Secretary-General had also addressed the issue in a 1987 report [YUN 1987, p. 1111] in which he analysed the changes made to the programme budget as a result of changes in rates of inflation and exchange and standard cost adjustments over three bienniums, which were as high as $122.7 million in 1982-1983. Information for the 1994-1995 and the 1996-1997 bienniums confirmed that changes due to currency fluctuation and inflation were significant, reaching as high as $193.2 million and $211.8 million in the two bienniums, respectively. Although changes due to inflation and currency fluctuation had given rise to automatic adjustment in the budget, the renewed call to address the issue again might be seen as a desire for greater predictability. To ensure that predictability, two alternatives were suggested: to absorb the resultant increased costs, or establish a reserve fund, financed from assessed contributions and replenished from savings due to variations in the forecast included in the programme budget. When the adjustments represented additional requirements, they would be funded through the reserve, or credited to the reserve up to its approved level when they represented net reductions. However, it was recognized that the disadvantage was the unnecessary financial burden for Member States. The Secretary-General concluded that, under the circumstances, the current mechanism for dealing with inflation and currency fluctuation was the most appropriate.

ACABQ report. In a December report [A/52/7/Add.2] on the question of additional expenditures, ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General make provision in the budget outline for expenditure for missions related to peace and security expected to be extended or approved during the biennium and included in the proposed programme budget with explanations and justification. If the Assembly endorsed that recom-

mentation, then the Secretary-General should be requested to submit by February 1998 a technical proposal on the modalities for implementation, including the implication of budgeting and financing peace and security activities whose legislative mandate might be extended or approved in the biennium.

Regarding the issue of inflation and currency fluctuation, ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's conclusion that the current mechanism might still be the most appropriate and requested the Secretariat to collect and maintain data on the subject. Every effort should be made to monitor developments, especially in the currency markets, with a view to minimizing the impact of fluctuations on the United Nations.

Further report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in the second performance report on the 1996-1997 budget [A/C.5/52/32 & Corr.1], provided estimates of the anticipated final levels of expenditure and income for the biennium, based on actual expenditures for the first 18 months and projected requirements for the last six, as well as changes in inflation and exchange rates and cost-of-living adjustments. The estimates represented a net decrease of $25.1 million or 1.2 per cent, compared with the revised appropriations and estimates of income approved in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1282]. The net reduced requirement of $25.1 million reflected a combined effect of projected additional requirements in the amount of $31.6 million owing to changes in inflation assumptions ($1.6 million), commitments entered into under the provisions of resolution 50/217 [YUN 1995, p. 1396] on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses ($4.3 million) and commitments authorized by the Assembly ($25.7 million), and a decrease in income ($28.7 million). That was offset by an anticipated reduction of $85.4 million owing to changes in exchange-rate assumptions ($49.3 million), variations in post and common staff costs ($30.6 million) and adjustments to expenditures other than posts ($5.5 million). Proposed expenditures amounted to $2,549.4 million or a decrease of $53.8 million. That figure included additional expenditure of $10.4 million for the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS), the details of which were included in his ninth progress report on IMIS [A/52/711] (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV). Income was estimated at $419 million, or a decrease of $28.7 million. The Secretary-General recalled the Assembly request that savings in expenditures not affect the full implementation of mandated activities. While proposals were submitted to the Assembly during the biennium, it had simultaneously been noted that savings, other than significant reductions in staff, would require a longer lead time to address. Pending the Assembly's decision on the level of savings to be achieved during the biennium, the need to exercise restraint in incurring expenditures was stressed to managers when the initial release of allocations was made. In addition, to promote stability in programme delivery, greater implementation flexibility was provided to offices in 1997.

ACABQ report. In its comments on the Secretary-General's report [A/52/742], ACABQ expressed its intention to examine the requirements for the IMIS project during its next session and recommended a reduction of $10.4 million for IMIS under the expenditure section of the 1996-1997 programme budget. It felt that, considering the Organization's investments in technology, the Secretariat should base performance reporting on actual expenditures for the first 21 months, rather than 18. ACABQ requested that future performance reports indicate the amount of unliquidated obligations included in estimated expenditures for the biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/743], adopted resolutions 52/213 A and B without vote [agenda item 115].

A

Final budget appropriations for the biennium 1996-1997

The General Assembly

1. Takes note of the second performance report of the Secretary-General on the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, as presented orally;
2. Notes that the Advisory Committee has yet to review the ninth progress report of the Secretary-General on the Integrated Management Information System;
3. Approves the recommendation of the Advisory Committee concerning the second performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;
4. Requests the Advisory Committee to examine the ninth progress report of the Secretary-General on the Integrated Management Information System in conjunction with its consideration of the related report of the Board of Auditors, and, in this regard, invites the Advisory Committee to report to the General Assembly on the matter at its resumed fifty-second session;
5. Decides that, pending consideration by the General Assembly of the reports concerning the Integrated Management Information System at its resumed fifty-second session, the supplementary provision for the System of 3 million United States dollars, provided in the final budget appropriations for the biennium 1996-1997, should not be encumbered without the prior approval of the Advisory Committee;
6. Resolves that for the biennium 1996-1997:
 - (a) The amount of 2,603,280,900 dollars appropriated by its resolution 51/222 A of 18 December 1996 shall be decreased by 61,209,000 dollars as follows:

Final income estimates for the biennium 1996-1997

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the biennium 1996-1997:

(a) The estimates of income of 447,737,600 United States dollars approved by its resolution 51/222 B of 18 December 1996 shall be decreased by 28,700,100 dollars as follows:

Income section	Amount approved by resolution 51/222 B	Increase or (decrease)	Final estimates
(United States dollars)
1. Income from staff assessment	363,496,600	(23,461,600)	340,035,000

GRAND TOTAL	447,737,600	(28,700,100)	419,037,500

(b) The income from staff assessment shall be credited to the Tax Equalization Fund in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955;

(c) Direct expenses of the United Nations Postal Administration, services to visitors, catering and related services, garage operations, television services and the sale of publications, not provided for under the budget appropriations, shall be charged against the income derived from those activities.

Budget for 1998-1999

The programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium was the first to fall within the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 and followed the General Assembly mandate that it should reflect a real level of resources well below that of the 1996-1997 biennium.

Introducing the proposed programme budget to the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General said that the presentation came at a time when the Assembly was deliberating comprehensive measures for organizational reform (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), which were meant to revitalize the Organization so it could better serve the needs of the international community in the new millennium. Although the amount of $2,583 million requested represented a reduction in real terms of $124 million, it was possible to increase the resources earmarked for economic and social development, which had risen by about $56 million. The budget also reflected the abolition of 865 posts, the transfer of posts as a result of net budgeting (see below), conversions from temporary assistance to established posts and the proposed creation of new posts. The distribution of resources was guided by the priority areas in the medium-term plan and by the level of resources in the budget outline approved by the Assembly. The budget included no provision for special missions that had no legislative mandates in 1998-1999. In formulating his proposals, the Secretary-General had made efforts to reduce administrative costs, rationalize work programmes, reorganize structures and redistribute responsibilities and functions. The programmatic and financial implications of his reform proposals were primarily of an organizational and managerial nature and did not affect mandated activities. Once the Assembly had decided on those reforms, the Fifth Committee would advise on the implications of those decisions for the programme budget.

The Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), after considering the proposed programme budget at its 1997 session [A/52/16 & Add.1], expressed appreciation for the efforts made by the Secretary-General to present a programme budget that appeared to be consistent with the outline approved by the Assembly in resolution 51/220 [YUN 1996, p. 1287], and noted that the programme budget reflected the structure of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, as approved by the Assembly in resolution 51/219 [YUN 1996, p. 1306]. It noted also that the total amount of resources requested by the Secretary-General was significantly lower than the revised appropriations for 1996-1997 and his assurances that such reductions would not affect the full implementation of all mandated activities during 1998-1999. The Committee recommended that every effort be made to ensure that the abolition of posts did not adversely affect the entry-level posts available for the recruitment of junior staff through examination; and that the Assembly take into account the medium-term plan for 1998-2001 when considering the Secretary-General's reform proposals.

CPC recommended that the Assembly approve the narratives of the majority of the budget sections. In view of differences of opinion with regard to some sections, the Committee was unable to recommend approval of the narratives of section 11B (International Trade Centre), 22 (Human rights), 26 (Public information), 27 (Administrative services), 29 (Jointly financed administrative activities) and 31 (Construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance).

Net budgeting

The costs of activities included in the programme budget that were shared between the Organization and other entities had never been presented and handled in a uniform manner. In some cases, only the share of the UN costs was requested for appropriation under the relevant expenditure section, referred to as net budgeting, while in others, full costs were requested and the share of other entities was included under miscellaneous income. In the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget, provision was made for net budgeting for the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and its secretariat, the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) and its secretariat and the Vienna International Centre. Instead of being presented on a gross basis as in previous years, those expenditures were reflected in the expenditure sections of the programme budget on a net basis corresponding to the UN share of such expenses. The change in presentation resulted in a reduction of $35.2 million and the deletion from the staffing table of 356 posts, of which 39 were proposed for abolition.

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget [A/52/7/Rev.1], stated that since the Assembly would appropriate only the UN share of the budgets of those entities, a mechanism would have to be found to enable the United Nations to continue its current funding practices for them. It reiterated its request that the Secretary-General produce proposals to ensure the required cash flow for those entities and address the issue of the status of the budgets of ICSC and JIU, as presented in the new budget, against the requirements of their respective statutes. A clear format for the presentation of the related budgetary proposals needed to be developed. ACABQ recommended that, pending receipt of the report and a decision of the Assembly, the status quo should be maintained.

In November, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/C.5/52/15] to the Fifth Committee on net budgeting. He explained that the advantage of net budgeting was that it did not inflate the budget by showing under the UN budget expenditure requirements that belonged to other organizations. Responding to the concerns of ACABQ, the Secretary-General said that the application of net budgeting would have no material effect on the funding arrangements, since the assessments on UN Member States would be the same. In either case, the Organization would fund its share and participating agencies would fund theirs. Net budgeting reflected a more accurate picture of the requirements of the Organization and did not modify the authority of the Assembly in budgetary matters.

In December, ACABQ, in its second report [A/52/7/Add.1], said that the Secretary-General's report was not responsive to the issues raised in its first report. Accordingly, it suggested that the Assembly defer taking a decision on the matter. It recommended, pending further consideration, that the Assembly restore the amounts "netted out", the implications of which would be an addition of $11,066,300 under section 1 B (General Assembly affairs and conference services), $8,911,300 under section 27 G (Administration, Vienna) and $16,255,700 under section 29 (Jointly financed administrative activities), offset by increases in the same total amount under income section 2 (General income) of the 1998-1999 proposed programme budget.

Financial implications of UN reform measures

In September, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/52/303] describing changes to the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget [A/52/6/Rev.1] required to implement his proposed reform measures. Those changes related to the establishment of a post of Deputy Secretary-General and of a strategic planning unit within the Office of the Secretary-General; consolidation of entities within the Secretariat that supported the work of legislative bodies and conferences into a single Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services; establishment of a Department of Disarmament and Arms Regulations; consolidation of the Departments for Policy and Coordination and Sustainable Development, for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis, and Development Support and Management Services into the Department of Economic and Social Affairs; consolidation of the human rights programme; reconstitution of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division as the Centre for International Crime Prevention; reorientation of public information activities; discontinuance of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and establishment of the Office of the Emergency Relief Coordinator; and reorientation of the Department of Administration and Management as the Department of Management. The Secretary-General also proposed a reduction of 144 posts (164 proposed for abolition, offset by 20 new posts). The proposals would modify the proposed programme budget by $2,583 million. In December [A/52/303/Add.1], further revised estimates were presented for the establishment of a discrete Decolonization Unit within the Department of Political Affairs. The additional requirement of $8,500 in expenditure section 32 would be offset by an equal increase in the estimates for income section 1, which would change from $325,327,200 to $325,335,700.

CPC examined the Secretary-General's proposals and recommended to the General Assembly when considering the reform proposals to take into account the medium-term plan for 1998-2001. It was unable to reach agreement on a recommendation to the Assembly in respect of sections 2 B (Disarmament), 22 (Human rights), 25 (Humanitarian assistance) and 26 (Communications and public information).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744], adopted resolution 52/220 without vote [agenda item 116].

Questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999

I

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolution 48/228 A of 23 December 1993,

Recalling also its resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990, in which it reaffirmed that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibilities for administrative and budgetary matters,

Recalling further its resolutions 45/253 of 21 December 1990, 47/214 of 23 December 1992 and 51/219 of 18 December 1996,

Recalling its resolution 52/12 A of 12 November 1997 and the related resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997,

Reaffirming the respective mandates of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the consideration of the proposed programme budget,

Reaffirming also regulation 5.2 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation,

Stressing that the normal procedures established for the formulation, implementation and approval of the programme budget must be maintained and strictly followed,

Having considered the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, the report of the Secretary-General entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals" and the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Committee for Programme and Coordination thereon,

1. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the programme narrative of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 contained in the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-seventh and resumed thirty-seventh session, without prejudice to the priorities established by the General Assembly and subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Commends the efforts and initiatives of the Secretary-General aimed at reforming the United Nations;

3. Reiterates that the activities included in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 must be derived from the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, which is the principal policy directive of the Organization, taking into account regulation 5.2 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation;

4. Emphasizes that, for the sake of transparency and accountability, it is essential to establish clear relationships between the programmes as approved and the entity responsible for their delivery;

5. Reaffirms its support for maintaining the international character of the Organization and for the principles of efficiency, competence and integrity enshrined in Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations;

6. Stresses that the reform proposals approved in its resolutions 52/12 A and B will be implemented with full respect for the relevant mandates, decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001;

7. Also stresses the role of the relevant intergovernmental bodies in the consideration of the narrative of the proposed programme budget, as well as the necessity for a timely presentation of their recommendations on the budget;

8. Emphasizes that the budget proposals of the Secretary-General should reflect resource levels commensurate with the mandates for their full implementation;

9. Reiterates the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that resources are utilized strictly for the purposes approved by the General Assembly;

10. Emphasizes the need for Member States to provide adequate resources for the full implementation of mandated programmes and activities;

11. Reiterates that, when formulating the proposed programme budget, the Secretary-General must respect fully the priorities established by the General Assembly;

12. Notes with concern the observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that full justification for reductions of posts has not been provided, which should be done as in the case of the creation of new posts;

13. Reaffirms that, whenever a post becomes vacant, a proper programmatic/workload justification will be needed for its retention, abolition or redeployment;

14. Also reaffirms that the implementation of the reform measures and the reduction of posts must not entail involuntary separation of staff;

15. Notes that some of the posts proposed for abolition will not be vacant until the end of the first year of the biennium;

16. Decides that the staffing table for each year of the biennium 1998-1999 shall be as contained in annex LA to the present resolution;

17. Notes with concern the trend towards increases in high-level posts and reductions in lower-level posts, which may affect the potential for rejuvenation of the Organization and its capacity for full implementation of approved mandates;

18. Emphasizes that the reduction in posts should not affect full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, in accordance with the commitments undertaken in his report entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform", a report on developments in the post structure of the Secretariat over the past ten years, on the forward-looking human resources management policy that he intends to develop, for both the short and medium term, with a view to rejuvenating the Organization and on the impact that such a policy should have on developments in the post structure in the future;

20. Reaffirms that gratis personnel should be expeditiously phased out in accordance with resolution 51/243 of 15 September 1997;

21. Decides to delete the references to type II gratis personnel in budget documents;

22. Requests the Secretary-General, in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, to submit estimates of the total amount of resources that he should have at his disposal, from all sources of financing, in order to be able to implement fully the mandated programmes and activities;

23. Regrets that the reports requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 51/243 have not been submitted for consideration;

24. Expresses its concern that a number of sections in the proposed programme budget were not prepared in complete conformity with the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001;

25. Decides to make changes, as contained in annex II to the present resolution, to the programme narrative in the final published version of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, as reflected in the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-seventh session;

26. Also decides to make changes, as contained in annex III to the present resolution, to the programme narrative in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals";

II

Emphasizing that programmes and activities mandated by the General Assembly must be respected and implemented fully,

Emphasizing also the need for mandated programmes and activities to be delivered in the most effective and efficient manner,

1. Reiterates that the priorities for the biennium 1998-1999 are the following:

(a) Maintenance of international peace and security;

(b) Promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences;

(c) Development of Africa;

(d) Promotion of human rights;

(e) Effective coordination of humanitarian assistance efforts;

(f) Promotion of justice and international law;

(g) Disarmament;

(h) Drug control, crime prevention and combating international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

2. Approves the comments and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as expressed in its first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 and in its second report on the reform proposals of the Secretary-General, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Reaffirms the budgetary process as approved in its resolution 41/213;

4. Takes note of the observations of the Advisory Committee as reflected in paragraph 38 of its first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, and concurs with its request for the Secretary-General to ensure complete uniformity in the presentation of the various expenditures in future programme budgets;

5. Notes that the Secretary-General has provided a series of organizational charts for the various departments in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, and requests that this become standard practice for each budget section in future programme budgets and that the organizational charts include posts from all sources of funding;

6. Welcomes the format adopted by the Secretary-General in his report entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals" concerning the transfer of resources between sections with a view to establishing new departments, and requests the Secretary-General, in the interest of transparency, to ensure that proposed transfers of posts and other resources between budget sections are explained in the same manner in future programme budgets;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the proposals contained in the individual sections of future programme budgets include more precise information on the outputs and activities of the various departments, on the basis of which the General Assembly could later evaluate budget performance;

8. Requests that the individual sections of the programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 contain a summary of the relevant recommendations of the internal and external oversight bodies and, for each recommendation, information on the follow-up action taken;

9. Reaffirms its resolution 51/221 B of 18 December 1996;

10. Notes with deep concern that some of the proposals related to pilot projects imply changes in the existing budgetary practices and procedures;

11. Decides to consider the impact of the implementation of pilot projects on the budgetary practices and procedures as well as on the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, prior to their implementation, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on this matter through the Advisory Committee to the General Assembly at the first part of its resumed fifty-second session;

12. Also decides that, pending its consideration of the above-mentioned report, no action can be taken in the context of the pilot projects that represents changes in the budgetary practices and procedures or in the Financial Regulations and Rules without prior approval of all relevant legislative bodies;

13. Reaffirms that changes in mandated programmes and activities are the prerogative of the General Assembly;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to maintain proper inventory records for all United Nations assets;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to make careful use of resources for consultants and experts, general temporary assistance, travel, electricity and hospitality during the biennium 1998-1999 and to report on the outcome of those efforts in the context of the second performance report;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to improve quality control with regard to food served and equipment used in the United Nations cafeteria and to ensure, to the extent possible, respect for the dietary habits of users of those facilities;

17. Invites the Secretary-General to propose measures to improve the profitability of the commercial activities of the United Nations, in particular in the sale of publications at Geneva, and, where appropriate, to develop new income-generating measures, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

18. Requests the International Civil Service Commission to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the justification for the supplemental subsistence allowance, with a view to considering its possible phasing out or maintenance;

19. Regrets the tendency towards excessive use of consultants, in particular in areas where in-house expertise is available, and requests the Secretary-General to resort in future to the use of consultants only when in-house expertise is not available and in accordance with the existing rules and regulations and relevant resolutions;

20. Also regrets that the report requested by the General Assembly in paragraph 14 of its resolution 51/221 B on the use of consultants was not provided by 1 March 1997, and requests the Secretary-General to submit the report to the Assembly at the first part of its resumed fifty-second session;

21. Urges all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without imposing conditions, to avoid the financial difficulties being experienced by the Organization;

22. Endorses the observation of the Advisory Committee that a high vacancy rate hampers the delivery of mandated programmes and that deliberate management decisions to keep a certain number of posts vacant makes the budget process less transparent and management of staff resources more difficult;

23. Reaffirms that the vacancy rate is a tool for budgetary calculations and should not be used to achieve budgetary savings;

24. Notes that requirements in respect of the Joint Inspection Unit, the International Civil Service Commission and conference and security services at Vienna are presented for appropriation on a net basis;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all the funds approved in the budgets of the three entities are allotted to allow for full implementation of all of their mandated programmes and activities;

26. Approves the staffing table for the International Civil Service Commission, the Joint Inspection Unit and conference and security services at Vienna, as contained in annex I.B to the present resolution;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that funds from the participating organizations are received promptly;

28. Decides to keep under review all aspects of net budgeting, including its impact on the functioning of the entities concerned, and requests the Secretary-General to report on this subject to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

29. Notes with concern the ratio between regular budget and extrabudgetary resources, which reflects the trend towards financing core functions mainly from extrabudgetary resources;

III

Section 1A. Overall policy-making, direction and coordination

1. Decides to establish under the regular budget one P-5, one P-4 and one General Service (Other level) post in the secretariat of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to replace the existing posts financed from extrabudgetary resources;

2. Accepts the proposal to restore to the D-1 level the post of Executive Secretary of the Board of Auditors, taking into account the increased workload of the Board;

3. Decides to establish the post of Deputy Secretary-General in accordance with resolution 52/12 B, and also decides, with respect to salary and emoluments, to approve the recommendation contained in paragraph 5 (b) of the report of the Advisory Committee;

4. Approves the staffing proposal for the Office of the Deputy Secretary-General, subject to provision for just two of the three proposed General Service posts;

5. Also approves the establishment of one D-1, one P-5, one P-4 and one General Service post for the Strategic Planning Unit;

6. Decides to keep under review the level of resources for consultants and experts in the Strategic Planning Unit;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to delete the funds budgeted for joint meetings of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Administrative Committee on Coordination, since those meetings are no longer held;

Section IB. General Assembly affairs and conference services

8. Notes that the newly created Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services will not, for the present time, undertake the servicing of the Fifth and Sixth Committees of the General Assembly or of the Security Council, even though the rationalization of servicing arrangements should lead to greater unity of purpose, greater coherence of efforts at all levels and greater cost-effectiveness, which would result in economies of scale;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the above arrangements under review and to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report in this regard, with a view to considering the possible integration of all conference-servicing resources for all Main Committees of the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Economic and Social Council and their subsidiary and ad hoc bodies and special conferences into the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services;

10. Accepts the proposed reclassification of the D-2 post redeployed from the former Office of the Director of Conference Services to the assistant secretary-general level, the P-4 post of Special Assistant to the Under-Secretary-General to the P-5 level and a P-2 post to the P-3 level for the purpose of enhancing administrative support in the Executive Office;

11. Decides that the resources for the Office of the President of the General Assembly shall be presented on an object-of-expenditure basis, starting with the biennium 1998-1999, and approves the proposal of the Secretary-General regarding the level of resources for the biennium 1998-1999;

12. Also decides that the unit proposed for technical aspects of servicing meetings of the Trusteeship Council, the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee) of the General Assembly and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples shall comprise one Political Affairs Officer at the P-5 level, one at the P-3 level and two General Service staff;

13. Notes with concern the abolition of thirty posts of translator and interpreter;

14. Also notes with concern the practices noted with respect to self-revision, which may attain proportions of 80 per cent during periods of peak workload, whereas the specified standard is 45 per cent;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the two issues mentioned in paragraphs 13 and 14 above, in the light of its resolution 50/11 of 2 November 1995, and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, through the Committee on Conferences, on their impact on the quality of conference services provided;

Section 2A. Political affairs

16. Decides to retain the P-3 post proposed for abolition under subprogramme 7 (Question of Palestine), and requests the Secretary-General to fill the vacant Professional post under this subprogramme, taking into account the developments in the Middle East;

17. Notes that the redeployment of a P-5 post to assist the Department of Political Affairs with its role as convener of the Executive Committee for Peace and Security has been in effect since January 1997, and requests that the continuing need for the post for this function be monitored in the light of experience;

18. Takes note of the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraph 23 of its second report, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to review the division of responsibilities between the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations so as to guarantee the clear delineation of their respective tasks and to avoid duplication and overlap;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to make careful use of the resources for the regional seminars on decolonization;

20. Notes the establishment of a stand-alone Decolonization Unit in the Department of Political Affairs;

21. Also notes the need to ensure that the Decolonization Unit is an effective unit;

22. Decides that the Decolonization Unit in the Department of Political Affairs shall comprise one Principal Officer at the D-1 level, one Senior Political Affairs Officer at the P-5 level, one Political Affairs Officer at the P-4 level and two General Service staff;

23. Also decides that the status of the liaison office at Addis Ababa, as proposed in paragraph 2.50 of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, shall be a United Nations office at Addis Ababa and that it shall be transferred from section 2A to section 1A of the proposed programme budget;

24. Further decides to transfer the recommendation of the Committee for Programme and Coordination relating to paragraph 2.50 of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 to section 1A in accordance with paragraph 23 above;

Section 2B. Disarmament

25. Notes the establishment of the new Department for Disarmament Affairs;

26. Decides to retain the three P-5 posts of the Directors of the three regional centres for peace and disarmament, requests the Secretary-General to fill these posts in the shortest possible time, and invites Member States to support the centres; and also decides to have in the new Department two P-5 posts, one which had been proposed for abolition and another to be established;

27. Encourages the Directors of the centres, to be appointed, to establish contact, starting in the first quarter of 1998, with the United Nations Development Programme and the regional organs, as well as with Member States of the different regions, with a view to finding resources for the revitalization of the activities of the centres;

28. Decides that the organizational chart of the new Department for Disarmament Affairs should be as contained in the report of the Secretary-General, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

Section 3. Peacekeeping operations and special missions

29. Reiterates its request that gratis personnel be phased out in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 51/243;

30. Notes with concern that the high level of vacancies maintained in the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization has created management difficulties for it;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to fill the vacant posts, taking into account the standardized vacancy rate approved for the biennium 1998-1999;

32. Decides that the Lessons Learned Unit within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations may provide, upon request from Member States, advice on lessons learned from the tasks referred to in paragraph 3.19 (b) of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

33. Also decides to delete the funds requested for a study to draw upon lessons learned on disarmament and demobilization, and urges the Department of Peacekeeping Operations to make maximum use of related studies already conducted by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research and other organizations;

Section 5. International Court of Justice

34. Notes that the estimates relating to the statutory entitlements of the members of the International Court of Justice are scheduled for a comprehensive review by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, and, in view of this, decides that any resource change resulting from decisions taken by the Assembly with regard to emoluments and other conditions of service for the members of the Court will be reported in the performance report on the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

35. Requests the International Court of Justice to explore vigorously the introduction of modern technology, including methods used by regional and national judicial systems, as well as the experience of the Office of Legal Affairs, in reducing the backlog related to the printing of the Court's publications and the translation of its documents;

36. Requests the Secretary-General to review the financial arrangements associated with the dining room at the International Court of Justice and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

Section 6. Legal affairs

37. Accepts the reclassification of the D-2 post in the Office of the Legal Counsel to the assistant secretary-general level;

Section 7A. Economic and social affairs

38. Notes the creation of the new Department of Economic and Social Affairs;

39. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a new narrative for this section in full accordance with the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, taking into account regulation 5.2 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, to be considered by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-eighth session;

40. Requests the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-eighth session to review the new narrative and to submit its conclusions and recommendations thereon to the General Assembly for its consideration during the first part of its fifty-third session and no later than 1 October 1998;

41. Expresses its concern about the decrease in the level of resources devoted to technical cooperation;

42. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the structure and level of resources of the Department, taking into account the need to provide all the resources necessary for the full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities previously performed by the Department for Policy Coordination and Sustainable Development, the Department for Economic and Social Information and Policy Analysis and the Department for Development Support and Management Services;

43. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all the activities outlined in the ten subprogrammes under sections 7, 9 and 10 of the initial budget proposal are included in section 7A of the final version of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

44. Notes the allocation of resources by subprogramme, as contained in annex IV.A and B to the present resolution;

45. Decides to keep under review the level of resources and the number of posts in the Executive Office, taking into account the need to guarantee the capacity of the Organization to implement fully the activities related to technical cooperation;

46. Also decides to reclassify to the D-2 level a D-1 post in the Division for the Advancement of Women;

47. Further decides to establish a D-1 post in the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, to replace the existing post financed from extrabudgetary resources;

Section 8. Africa: New Agenda for Development

48. Takes note of the budget appropriation in the biennium 1998-1999 for the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, and calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize additional resources for the implementation of the programme of action contained in the New Agenda;

Section HA. Trade and development

49. Decides that the work programme on assistance to the Palestinian people of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development will continue to be carried out by a Special Coordinator at the P-5 level and a staff member at the P-4 level;

50. Also decides that the work programme for landlocked and island developing countries will continue to be carried out within the Office of the Special Coordinator under the overall supervision of a staff member at the D-1 level, supported by a staff member at the P-4 level, while a staff member at the P-5 level in the Division for Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency will continue to work solely on issues related to landlocked developing countries;

51. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate resources are allocated in the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 for activities specifically relating to the least developed countries, in accordance with the priority accorded thereto;

52. Recalls paragraph 33 of its resolution 51/167 of 16 December 1996, in which it requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, to submit a proposal on savings resulting from the improved overall cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to the decisions taken at the ninth session of the Conference, including the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery and reform of the secretariat, and to submit a proposal on how to reallocate a part of the savings in the 1998-1999 budget cycle, with a view to strengthening the capabilities of the Conference in priority areas, including in technical co-operation;

53. Regrets that the above-mentioned proposals have not been submitted;

54. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare expeditiously, in consultation with the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and Programme Budget of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, a report on the above-mentioned proposals, exploring ways and means, within the existing financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, of utilizing these savings during the biennium 1998-1999, and to submit it to the General Assembly at the first part of its resumed fifty-second session for its consideration;

Section 11B. International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO

55. Notes with concern that the arrangements entered into by the Secretary-General with the Director-General of the World Trade Organization in the exchange of correspondence of September 1995 have not yet been transmitted to the General Assembly, and, in this regard, considers that the agreement between the secretariats of the United Nations and the former General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is still in force until the Assembly reviews the agreement between the United Nations and the World Trade Organization;

Section 12. Environment

56. Decides to keep under review the level of resources for the United Nations Environment Programme, and requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals in this regard, taking into account General Assembly resolution 51/177 of 16 December 1996 and the decreasing trend in extrabudgetary resources;

57. Takes note of paragraphs IV.47 and IV.48 of the first report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, and requests the Secretary-General to act accordingly;

Section 13. Human settlements

58. Decides to keep under review the level of resources for the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), and requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals in this regard, taking into account General Assembly resolution 51/177 and the decreasing trend in extrabudgetary resources;

59. Takes note of paragraphs IV.54 and IV.55 of the first report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, and requests the Secretary-General to act accordingly;

Section 14. Crime control

60. Notes the establishment of the Centre for International Crime Prevention, and also notes that the Centre, together with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, will form the new Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention;

61. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General to strengthen the capacity of the new Centre for International Crime Prevention;

62. Stresses the need to promote the fundamental principles of the rule of law and the need to strengthen further international cooperation between States and between regional organizations, international organizations and agencies and the United Nations in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed, as well as its financing;

63. Approves the establishment of two new posts at the P-5 and P-4 levels for the Centre for International Crime Prevention and the redeployment of one D-1 post from the United Nations Office at Vienna to the Centre to strengthen its capacity to address issues related to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

Section 15. International drug control

64. Decides that the consolidation of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme should not undermine the critical importance of the comprehensive programme on drug control, which should be fully implemented in accordance with the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, and that adequate resources for this purpose should be provided;

65. Emphasizes that the realignment of the Centre for International Crime Prevention with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme should result in better coordination between these entities and should produce important synergies, while safeguarding the multidisciplinary aspects of drug control policy;

Sections 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20. Regional commissions

66. Concurs with the observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the use of short-term consultants and experts by the Economic Commission for Africa as reflected in paragraph V.19 of its first report, calls upon the Commission to take deliberate management action to ensure an effective transfer of knowledge and expertise from short-term consultants and experts to Commission staff, and encourages other regional commissions to take similar action;

67. Requests the Secretary-General to review the format of presentation of the programmes of activities of the regional commissions with a view to delineating more clearly substantive activities vis-a-vis programme support and harmonizing the budget presentation, and to present more clearly the description of activities and services provided by the regional commissions in order to permit a quantitative and qualitative monitoring of the progress of programme implementation;

Section 16. Economic and social development in Africa

68. Welcomes the restructuring and reorientation of programmes undertaken by the Economic Commission for Africa and, in particular, the decentralization of the activities of the Commission to subregional development centres, and, in this regard, stresses the need for additional resources from all sources of funding to strengthen the subregional centres and the capacity of the Commission to give appropriate guidance as a focal institution for these activities;

69. Expresses its concern that the Economic Commission for Africa has, in the course of the past few years, suffered greatly from a persistently high vacancy rate in critical areas, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all posts budgeted for the biennium 1998-1999 are filled;

70. Requests the Secretary-General to redeploy to the subregional centres any savings realized during the biennium as a result of reform measures and efficiency gains from within the Economic Commission for Africa;

Section 19. Economic and social development in Latin America and the Caribbean

71. Notes the initiative of the Secretary-General to present a new pilot management project aimed at improving the decision-making process of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean through decentralization of authority in certain areas of human resources and budget management;

72. Requests the Secretary-General to submit details of the new pilot management project to the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean at its twenty-seventh session for its final approval, as provided for in paragraph 4 of Commission resolution 563(PLEN.21) and recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph V.66 of its first report;

73. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all activities included in subprogramme 2 benefit all members of the region;

Section 22. Human rights

74. Notes that the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 includes activities that have no specific mandates approved by the General Assembly;

75. Reaffirms the use of the contingency fund as approved in its resolution 41/213, and its resolution 42/211 of 21 December 1987;

76. Recalls paragraph 2 of section XI of its resolution 44/201 B of 21 December 1989;

77. Regrets that the report requested in the above-mentioned resolution has not yet been submitted to the General Assembly;

78. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the above-mentioned report to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-second session;

79. Decides, pending its consideration of the above-mentioned report, to appropriate the resources requested by the Secretary-General in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to ensure that no funds directly related to these non-mandated activities are committed to them;

80. Also decides to amend the narrative of section 22, as indicated in annex II to the present resolution;

Section 23. Protection of and assistance to refugees

81. Notes with concern the steady decline of regular budget and extrabudgetary resources available to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

82. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor the flow of extrabudgetary resources to the Office of the High Commissioner and, based on his findings, to review the funding of the Office from the regular budget above the current proposed level;

Section 24. Palestine refugees

83. Reaffirms its support for the programme of work of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, decides to retain the eight posts proposed for abolition under this section, in the light of the difficulties facing the Agency resulting from the decrease in extrabudgetary resources, and invites the donor countries to fulfil their pledges to the Agency and to increase their contributions to it in order to support the full implementation of its programme of work;

Section 25. Humanitarian assistance

84. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the legislative basis and methodology for charging programme support costs for voluntary contributions, in cash or in kind;

85. Notes that the operational demining activities, as well as the Mine Action Service financed from the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, will be transferred to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, and stresses that humanitarian mine-clearance activities should be conducted under the responsibility of the Emergency Relief Coordinator;

Section 26. Communications and public information

86. Notes the transformation of the Department of Public Information into an Office of Communications and Public Information;

87. Decides that no action shall be taken on the proposal for abolition of the fifty-one local-level posts in the United Nations information centres and on the question of integration of the information centres with the United Nations Development Programme, including review of earlier cases, reiterates its request to the Secretary-General in paragraph 11 of its resolution 51/138 B of 13 December 1996 to continue the integration exercise in a cost-effective manner and, whenever feasible, on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the views of the host country and ensuring that the information functions and the autonomy of the information centres are not adversely affected, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

88. Also decides to establish a P-4 post in the Media Division for a Portuguese-language radio producer;

89. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-eighth session a new programme narrative for section 26, in the light of the recommendations of the Committee on Information regarding the conclusions and recommendations of the Task Force on the Reorientation of United Nations Public Information Activities;

Section 27A. Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Management

90. Decides that the staffing component of the Management Policy Office shall comprise one D-2, one D-1, three P-5 and two General Service posts;

91. Requests the Secretary-General to reflect in the budget performance report those expenditures related to compensation paid to staff as a result of judgments of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal;

92. Decides that the General Service post in the secretariat of the Fifth Committee and the Committee for Programme and Coordination currently funded from extrabudgetary resources shall henceforth be financed through the United Nations regular budget;

93. Also decides to undertake during its resumed fifty-second session a thorough review of the working methods of the Fifth Committee, with a view to rationalizing them and initiating efficiency measures that may enable the Committee to accomplish its tasks on time without resorting to extra meetings at night and on weekends;

Section 27B. Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts

94. Decides to establish two P-4 and two P-3 posts in the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts;

95. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with the Member States not acceding to section 18 (b) of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations on appropriate administrative arrangements for managing the Tax Equalization Fund and to report to the General Assembly on the outcome of such consultations;

Section 27C. Office of Human Resources Management

96. Endorses the restoration of one P-4 post and one General Service post in the Examinations and Tests Section as recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph VIII.34 of its first report on the proposed programme budget;

97. Notes the overall increase in allocations for staff training, and requests the Secretary-General to pursue this policy in future programme budgets, taking into account the growing number of persons to be trained;

98. Requests the Secretary-General to deploy all necessary human and financial resources to maintain the teaching at all levels of the official and working languages of the Secretariat and to maintain the training of the Organization's translators and revisers;

Section 27D. Support services

99. Recognizes the importance of the security system and guards in the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the level of resources allocated to this function;

100. Decides that all procurement-related functions should be performed only by United Nations staff, taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolution 51/243;

Section 27H. Administration, Nairobi

101. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the financial arrangements of the United Nations Office at Nairobi into line with those of similar United Nations administrative offices and to provide the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) with the capacity to improve its financial and administrative management;

Section 30. Special expenses

102. Requests the Secretary-General to apportion general operating expenses relating to the bank charges among the various sources of funds to which financial interests are credited, on a pro rata basis;

Section 31. Capital expenditures: construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance

103. Notes with concern the high proportion of projects deferred from the previous biennium in the total proposed requirements for alteration, improvement and major maintenance, and emphasizes that such deferral eventually proves expensive for the Organization because of the negative effect it has on fixed assets;

104. Endorses the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraph XI.4 of its first report to the effect that the Secretary-General should indicate in the next programme budget the value of United Nations-owned buildings and submit a comparison between United Nations and normal standards for the cost of maintenance vis-a-vis the value of buildings;

Section 34. Development account

105. Notes that arrangements and procedures for utilization of the development account are to be formulated, and calls upon the Secretary-General to report on the issue before the end of March 1998;

106. Decides that the amount of 362,000 United States dollars saved as a result of the abolition of the High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development shall be transferred to the development account.

ANNEX II

Changes to the programme narratives of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, as reflected in the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-seventh session, and additional modifications

1. At the end of paragraph 1.41, add:

"The primary function of the Office of External Relations is outreach, promotion and maintenance of the relations of the United Nations in civil society, including non-governmental organizations, the business world, academic institutions, foundations, professional associations, parliamentarians, trade unions and the religious community. Its work is complementary to that of the Office of Communications and Public Information. While the latter disseminates information to the press and other media and the general public, as well as providing services to non-governmental organizations associated with it, the Office of External Relations focuses on an in-depth relationship between key institutions of civil society and the Secretary-General. It chairs an inter-departmental working group that provides advice to the Secretary-General on his relationship with non-governmental organizations. It works closely with the speech writers and the Spokesman for the Secretary-General and confers with the Protocol and Liaison Service in connection with requests and visits by leaders of civil society, but does not undertake protocol functions. In close cooperation and coordination with the Office of Communications and Public Information, the Office of External Relations develops a communication strategy and core message that is consistent, compelling and well coordinated."

2. In paragraph 2.50, after the second sentence, insert:

"The functions of the proposed liaison office at Addis Ababa would be:

"(a) To facilitate the exchange of information and the coordination of initiatives and efforts in the areas of preventive diplomacy and peacemaking, as well as in the democratization process in Africa:

"(i) Following closely the deliberations of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity and advising Headquarters of political initiatives of concern to the United Nations discussed by the Mechanism;

"(ii) Carrying out liaison with the Division for Conflict Resolution of the Organization of African Unity and the Department of Political Affairs at large, with a view to enhancing cooperation on specific political issues of priority concern to the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity;

"(iii) Supporting the activities of joint United Nations/Organization of African Unity special representatives;

"(b) To coordinate the implementation of the programmes of cooperation between the United Nations system and the Organization of African Unity agreed to at the annual meetings between their secretariats;

"(c) To perform such representational functions as may be required and necessary at relevant meetings of the Organization of African Unity at Addis Ababa."

3. In paragraph 2.120:

(a) The second sentence should read: "Since the end of the cold war, developments have taken place in a number of important areas in the field of arms control and disarmament.";

(b) In the last sentence, delete "and the need for their further integration into the broader international efforts to enhance peace and security".

4. In paragraph 2.124, at the end of the sixth sentence, add "in the field of arms control and disarmament".

5. Paragraph 3.10 should read:

"The Department must maintain a capacity to discharge effectively those tasks assigned to it, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and taking into account the important contribution that regional arrangements and agencies, within their respective mandates, scope and composition, can make to peacekeeping, in accordance with Chapter VIII of the Charter."

6. In paragraph 3.19 (b), replace "disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of armed forces" with "disarmament and demobilization".

7. In paragraph 6.58, after "Reports of International Arbitral Awards" insert", the update of summaries of judgments, advisory opinions and orders of the International Court of Justice".

8. In paragraph 11A.46, second sentence, after "certain developing countries" insert ", such as landlocked and small island developing countries,".

9. In paragraph 11A.60, add an additional subparagraph reading:

"(d) The capacity of island developing countries to alleviate special development constraints relating to the high transport costs will have been improved."

10. In paragraph 13.22, fourth sentence, replace "partners" with "local authorities, non-governmental organizations, the private sector".

11. Paragraph 14.2 (b) (ii) should read:

"Supporting the strengthening of the capacity of Governments, at their request, to improve their legislation and criminal justice systems;".

12. Paragraph 14.2 (c) (iii) should read:

"Elaborating and assisting Member States in the implementation of effective strategies and practical arrangements for consistent and efficient cooperation against major forms of criminality, such as organized transnational crime, including drug trafficking, corruption, terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, the smuggling of illegal migrants, trafficking in women and children, environmental offences, the laundering of the proceeds of crime, fraudulent operations and other forms of economic crime;"

13. In paragraph 15.8, delete "and help to set the agenda for international drug control for the following decade".

14. After paragraph 15.8, add a new paragraph reading:

"The Programme will provide services to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the preparatory body of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, to be held in June 1998."

and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

15. After former paragraph 15.12, add a new paragraph reading:

"At the 1998 session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at least five days will be devoted to the preparation of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities."

and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

16. In former paragraph 15.18 (a) (i), delete "Prepare for and participate in the high-level segment of the Economic and Social Council" and replace "on drug control" by "devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities".

17. In former paragraph 15.18 (a) (ii), add a new subparagraph reading:

"c. Documents for the preparatory process of the special session of the General Assembly;"

18. After former paragraph 15.18 (c), add a new subparagraph reading:

"(d) The Programme will compile the recommendations presented to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the preparatory body of the special session, by the organs, organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, as well as by multilateral development banks, on the issues to be addressed by the special session."

19. In former paragraph 15.28 (a) (ii) a., after "Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control;" delete "and" and, at the end of the paragraph, add "and documentation for the preparatory process of the special session".

20. At the end of former paragraph 15.28 (b) (iii), add ", including public relations material to promote the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities".

21. In former paragraph 15.36, second sentence, item (c), replace "special session of the General Assembly on international drug control" with "special session of the General Assembly devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities".

22. In former paragraph 15.37 (a) (ii) a., after "Global Programme of Action;" delete "and" and after "1988 Convention;" add "and report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the preparatory body of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to the combat against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, containing the recommendations for the special session".

23. In former paragraph 15.37 (a) (ii) c., after "bodies of the Commission;" delete "and" and after "its subsidiary bodies;" add "and documents on possible results of the special session of the General Assembly, in particular with possible measures to strengthen the implementation of the international drug conventions".

24. In former paragraph 15.42, first sentence, after "will focus" insert "in 1998 on the preparation of a draft of a declaration of the United Nations on the principles for the reduction of the demand, which could be approved at the special session of the General Assembly in June 1998. Furthermore, activities will focus".

25. In paragraph 19.58 (c), after "SIECA" insert ", CARICOM".

26. In paragraph 22.1:

(a) After the first sentence, insert a new sentence reading: "It is based on the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action.";

(b) In the second sentence, delete "at the national level", after "protection of" insert "all" and after "realization of" insert "all".

27. In paragraph 22.3:

(a) In the first sentence, replace "new global and integrated approach" with "global, integrated and balanced approach" and delete "and the Centre for Human Rights has been reorganized";

(b) In the third sentence, replace "It will be implemented through a new management structure" with "It will be implemented in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/121 of 12 December 1997 through a new management structure";

(c) Delete the last sentence.

28. In paragraph 22.4, first sentence, replace "By providing high-quality research and analysis, the programme of work will aim" with "The programme will provide high-quality research and analysis. The programme of work will also aim".

29. After paragraph 22.4, add a new paragraph reading:

"The programme will support the United Nations human rights bodies and organs and facilitate their deliberations by ensuring and enhancing their effective functioning and the analytical capacity of the treaty bodies."

and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

30. In former paragraph 22.5, second sentence, after "human rights activities;" delete "effective".

31. Former paragraph 22.24 should read:

"Resource requirements for the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families in 1998-1999 will be submitted when the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families enters into force."

32. In former paragraph 22.29, after "coordination of" insert "human rights" and after "New York-based organizations and departments" insert "in accordance with relevant mandates".

33. In former paragraph 22.33, delete "monitoring".

34. Replace former paragraph 22.37 with two new paragraphs reading:

"The primary objectives of this subprogramme will include promotion and protection of the right to development. In this regard, the objectives will be to develop an integrated and multidimensional strategy for the implementation, coordination and promotion of the right to development in accordance with the Declaration on the Right to Development and subsequent mandates and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action aimed at facilitating action to be taken by relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including treaty bodies, international development and financial institutions and non-governmental organizations, for the implementation of the right to development as an integral part of fundamental human rights, ensuring the realization of the right to development across the human rights programme and by specialized agencies and United Nations treaty bodies; to promote national implementation of the right to development through coordination with State-appointed officials; to identify obstacles at the national and international levels; and to promote awareness about the content and importance of the right to development, including through information and educational activities.

"With regard to research and analysis, the objectives will be to strengthen respect for human rights by increasing knowledge, awareness and understanding of human rights issues through data collection, research and analysis. These objectives will be pursued within the framework of the indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of all human rights and will be aimed at facilitating the implementation of standards, the work of treaty bodies, special rapporteurs and other bodies and the preparation of new standards; ensuring the recognition at the national and international levels of economic, social and cultural rights; promoting democracy and strengthening national human rights institutions and procedures for the rule of law; contributing to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and new forms of discrimination; strengthening the recognition of the human rights of women and children; and protecting vulnerable groups such as minorities, migrant workers and indigenous people."

and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

41. In paragraph 23.3, first sentence:

(a) Under item (a), replace "forced population movements as well as finding solutions" with "forced population displacement as well as finding comprehensive solutions";

(b) Insert a new item (d) reading: "the provision of humanitarian assistance for the care and maintenance of refugees in an appropriate manner, on the basis of the principle of international burden sharing and solidarity, with due attention being given to the prolonged presence of refugees, in particular in the developing countries;" and renumber the subsequent items accordingly.

42. At the end of former paragraph 23.7, add a new sentence reading: "Decentralization as well as delegation of authority and distribution of resources, where applicable, to regional offices would lead to better performance and provide the flexibility needed."

43. In former paragraph 23.10 (c) (vi), after the second sentence, insert a new sentence reading: "These solutions should be realistic and based on specific situations."

44. In former paragraph 23.11, first sentence, after "local settlement" insert, "resettlement".

45. In paragraph 26.39 (a) (i) a., replace "UN Chronicle (six issues annually, in English and French)" with "UN Chronicle (four issues annually, in all languages)".

ANNEX III

Changes to be made in the programme narratives contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals"

1. Replace paragraphs 2B.1 and 2B.2 of the report of the Secretary-General of 11 September 1997 entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals" with the following new paragraphs based on programme 26 of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly:

- "2B.1 The mandate for the programme on disarmament stems from the Charter of the United Nations and from the aims and purposes proclaimed by the General Assembly. The implementation of the programme should be guided by the priorities established in the relevant General Assembly resolutions and decisions. The new Department for Disarmament Affairs will be responsible for implementing the programme.
- "2B.2 The first objective of the programme is to provide organizational and substantive secretariat support to multilateral bodies entrusted with deliberation and/or negotiations on disarmament issues, including the meeting of States parties and other international meetings related to multilateral disarmament agreements.
- "2B.3 The second objective is to follow and assess current and future trends in the field of disarmament and international security in order to assist Member States, and to enable the Secretary-General also to assist them, in their search for agreement. Apart from substantive issues involved in the deliberative and/or negotiating process, this activity should address the challenges arising from the implementation of the relevant General Assembly resolutions as well as relevant treaties.
- "2B.4 The third objective will be to support and promote regional disarmament efforts and initiatives using approaches freely among the States of the region and taking into account the legitimate requirements of States for self-defence and specific characteristics of each region. Regional solutions will be more vigorously pursued as regional conflicts increasingly pose a threat to peace and security. Regional dialogue on crucial disarmament and security issues will be advanced through, inter alia, the organization of conferences.
- "2B.5 The fourth objective consists in providing impartial, factual information on the disarmament efforts of the United Nations to Member States, parliamentarians, research and academic institutions and specialized non-governmental organizations through the disarmament information programme and by providing Member States with full access to all relevant databases, including those on disarmament. This would include, as appropriate, organizing open-ended conferences, seminars and workshops for informal exchanges of views on arms control, disarmament and international security issues. The disarmament fellowship programme will continue to be pursued with the primary objective of promoting further the disarmament expertise of Member States, in particular in the developing countries. Member States will be assisted in addressing specific disarmament concerns through the provision of training and advisory services.

"2B.6 The fifth objective would be to continue to inform the public on an objective and updated basis of United Nations disarmament activities. In that context, the three regional centres for peace and disarmament established in Nepal, Peru and Togo should be utilized. Those centres should address the important security problems in their respective regions and subregions in a balanced manner.

"2B.7 This programme is expected to enable Member States to conduct deliberations and negotiations on disarmament issues in a smooth and efficient manner; to facilitate the task of the Secretary-General in the conduct of his relations with Member States on disarmament matters; to contribute to an integrated approach to issues relating to the maintenance of peace and security; and to facilitate the exchange of ideas between governmental and non-governmental sectors with a view to promoting a better understanding of United Nations endeavours in the field of disarmament."

2. In paragraph 14.1, last sentence, after "terrorism" insert "in all its forms and manifestations".

3. In paragraph 14.2, first sentence, replace "especially organized crime . . . and violence" by "in particular, organized transnational crime, economic crime, corruption, terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, environmental offences and illicit traffic in children and women".

4. In paragraph 14.3, first sentence, delete "national" and "the transition to".

5. At the end of paragraph 14.4, add "in all its forms and manifestations".

6. Paragraph 22.2 should read:

"The programme aims at a major strengthening of coordination for human rights throughout the United Nations system leading to a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of human rights based on the contributions of each of the United Nations organs, bodies and specialized agencies whose activities deal with human rights and on improved inter-agency cooperation and coordination. The coordinating role of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights also implies that the New York Office should be strengthened."

7. Delete paragraphs 22.3 and 22.4 and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

8. In paragraph 25.2 (b), delete ", notably the Security Council".

9. In subprogramme 2 (Complex emergencies), second sentence, replace "to include . . . operations" with "in accordance with the medium-term plan for 1998-2001 and subsequent legislative mandates".

10. In paragraph 25.7, at the end of the fourth sentence, add "in accordance with resolution 51/243 on gratis personnel".

11. In paragraph 26.3, at the end of the second sentence, add ", as well as the views of the host Government".

12. In paragraph 27A.9, first sentence, replace "The Unit . . . public sector" with "The Unit will also be responsible for ensuring that the Organization has the best possible managerial policies in place".

13. In paragraph 27A.10, second sentence, delete "national".

Appropriations

In his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 [A/52/6/Rev.1], the Secretary-General proposed expenditures amounting to $2,583 million and income totalling $40.4 million, as well as staff assessment income of $329.1 million, resulting in a net estimate of $2,213.5 million. The proposed budget represented a decrease of $20.3 million or 0.8 per cent from the revised 1996-1997 budget.

Extrabudgetary resources for 1998-1999 were estimated at $4,350,129,500, comprising $361,444,000 for support services, $306,921,700 for substantive services and $3,681,763,800 for operational projects.

ACABQ, in its first report on the proposed budget [A/52/7/Rev.1], stated that many uncertainties remained with regard to the proposed programme budget, chief among which was the impact the Secretary-General's reform proposals would have on the 1998-1999 estimates once those proposals had been acted on by the Assembly. It submitted its preliminary recommendations on the initial overall level of the programme budget in chapter II of its report and would revert to the proposed programme budget when it further examined the Secretary-General's proposals for reform and the related revised estimates, including his proposed measures to deal with the impact of fluctuations of currency and inflation and the report of the task force on the reorientation of UN public information activities.

In a September report [A/52/303], the Secretary-General presented revised estimates to reflect the changes that would be required to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 in order to implement the reforms. Those changes amounted to $2,583 million, plus an additional requirement of $8,500 for the establishment of a Decolonization Unit in the Department of Political Affairs.

In October, the ACABQ Chairman, in an oral report to the Fifth Committee, said that if the reform proposals were accepted by the Assembly, including the proposal to create a dividend account of $12.7 million (see below), the level of the estimate proposed by the Secretary-General for 1998-1999 would remain unchanged at $2,583 million. Since ACABQ's first report covered only the initial estimates, and in view of the ongoing discussion in the Assembly of the reform proposals, ACABQ would submit its recommendations, together with its views on the overall level of resources for 1998-1999, at a later stage. The net reduction of $123.9 million reflected in the 1998-1999 proposed budget was a combination of additions and deletions from the 1996-1997 revised appropriations, particularly the deletion of special missions funded from the regular budget, which in 1996-1997 had cost $49.8 million.

In a December report [A/C.5/52/34], the Secretary-General presented revised estimates to reflect the new costing assumptions, which reflected anticipated increases due to inflation and adjustments for changes in exchange rates, as well as adjustments arising from his report on UN reform measures [A/52/303 & Add.1], statements of programme budget implications on the situations in Afghanistan, Central America and Haiti, the report of the International Law Commission and revised estimates in respect of matters of which the Security Council was seized [A/C.5/52/24]. That resulted in estimated 1998-1999 appropriations of $2,522,588,200 and income of $356,051,300.

ACABQ, in a December report [A/52/7/Add.1], recommended revised estimates based on the 1998-1999 proposed programme budget and the Secretary-General's September report on UN reform measures. The appropriation as recommended by ACABQ totalled $2,630,898,200 compared to the initial total of $2,582,999,800 and total estimated income of $416,755,900, resulting in a net budget of $2,214,142,300.

The Fifth Committee, in its report [A/52/744], recommended approval of a gross appropriation of $2,532,331,200 and an estimate for income (other than income derived from staff assessment) of

3. Direct expenses of the United Nations Postal Administration, services to visitors, catering and related services, garage operations, television services and the sale of publications, not provided for under the budget appropriations, shall be charged against the income derived from those activities.

C

Financing of appropriations for the year 1998

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the year 1998:

1. Budget appropriations consisting of 1,266,165,600 United States dollars, being half of the appropriations of 2,532,331,200 dollars approved for the biennium 1998-1999 by the General Assembly under paragraph 1 of resolution A above, and 61,209,000 dollars, being the decrease in revised appropriations for the biennium 1996-1997 approved by the Assembly in its resolution 52/213 A of 22 December 1997, shall be financed in accordance with regulations 5.1 and 5.2 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations as follows:

(a) 13,938,300 dollars, consisting of 19,176,800 dollars, being the net of half of the estimated income other than staff assessment approved for the biennium 1998-1999 under resolution B above, less 5,238,500 dollars, being the decrease in income other than staff assessment for the biennium 1996-1997;

(b) 109,278 dollars, being the contributions of new Member States for 1995;

(c) 1,190,909,022 dollars, being the assessment on Member States in accordance with its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 on the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999;

2. There shall be set off against the assessment on Member States, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund in the total amount of 139,281,750 dollars, consisting of:

(a) 162,743,350 dollars, being half of the estimated staff assessment income approved for the biennium 1998-1999 under resolution B above;

(b) Less 23,461,600 dollars, being the decrease in income from staff assessment for the biennium 1996-1997 approved by the Assembly in its resolution 52/215 A.

Also on 22 December, by decision 52/456, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item and relevant reports at its resumed fifty-second session in 1998.

Other questions relating to the 1998-1999 programme budget

Working Capital Fund

In December, the General Assembly established the Working Capital Fund for the 1998-1999 biennium at $100 million, the same level as during 1996-1997. As in the past, the Fund was to be used to finance appropriations pending the receipt of assessed contributions, to pay for unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, as well as for miscellaneous and self-liquidating purchases and advance insurance premiums, and to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744], adopted resolution 52/224 without vote [agenda item 116].

Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1998-1999

The General Assembly
Resolves that:

1. The Working Capital Fund shall be established for the biennium 1998-1999 in the amount of 100 million United States dollars;

2. Member States shall make advances to the Working Capital Fund in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Member States to the budget for the year 1998;

3. There shall be set off against this allocation of advances:

(a) Credits to Member States resulting from transfers made in 1959 and 1960 from the surplus account to the Working Capital Fund in an adjusted amount of 1,025,092 dollars;

(b) Cash advances paid by Member States to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1996-1997 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/218 of 23 December 1995;

4. Should the credits and advances paid by any Member State to the Working Capital Fund for the biennium 1996-1997 exceed the amount of that Member State's advance under the provisions of paragraph 2 above, the excess shall be set off against the amount of the contributions payable by the Member State in respect of the biennium 1998-1999;

5. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending the receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments that may be duly authorized under the provisions of the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, in particular resolution 52/223 of 22 December 1997 relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing the Working Capital Fund;

(c) Such sums as may be necessary to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities that, together with net sums outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed 200,000 dollars; advances in excess of the total of 200,000 dollars may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee, such sums as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the biennium in which payment is made; the Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each biennium, during the life of the related policies, to cover the charges applicable to each biennium;

(e) Such sums as may be necessary to enable the Tax Equalization Fund to meet current commitments pending the accumulation of credits; such advances shall be repaid as soon as credits are available in the Tax Equalization Fund;

6. Should the provision in paragraph 1 above prove inadequate to meet the purposes normally related to the Working Capital Fund, the Secretary-General is authorized to utilize, in the biennium 1998-1999, cash from special funds and accounts in his custody, under the conditions approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 1341(XIII) of 13 December 1958, or the proceeds of loans authorized by the Assembly.

Contingency fund

The contingency fund, created to accommodate additional expenditures relating to each biennium that were derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget, was established by General Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024].

The Fifth Committee, on 18 December, considered a report [A/C.5/52/35] of the Secretary-General containing a consolidated statement of all programme budget implications and revised estimates subject to the criteria for the use of the contingency fund, as set out in Assembly resolution 42/211 [YUN 1987, p. 1098]. The amount of $245,200 fell within the available balance of $18,754,800. The Committee approved the required amount under section 6 (Legal affairs).

In resolution 52/222, section VI, adopted on 22 December, the Assembly noted that a balance of $18,754,800 remained in the contingency fund.

Establishment of a development account

The Secretary-General, in his proposals for UN reform [A/51/950 & Add.5], stated that the Organization was spending too high a percentage if its regular budget on administration and other overhead costs. He therefore set a goal to reduce such costs by one third and reallocate that "dividend" to economic and social activities, reducing those non-programme costs from 38 to 25 per cent. He proposed the creation of a development account to be funded from the resulting savings. That goal was expected to be achieved in the biennium starting 1 January 2002. Non-programme costs in the revised estimates for the 1998-1999 biennial budget were some $50 million less than in the original 1996-1997 budget. The Secretary-General proposed that, effective 1 January 1998, the development account be initially established at $12.7 million.

ACABQ, in its first report [A/52/7/Rev.1] on the 1998-1999 programme budget, requested a detailed report, which would define administrative expenses and non-programme costs and provide technical justification that they represented 38 per cent of the budget; indicate a plan and timetable for phasing in the reductions until the end of 2001; indicate measures to be taken to effect the reduction and its impact on support and other services to programmes and UN operations; show how to ensure it did not have an adverse effect on the control and oversight capacity of the Organization; and describe the procedures for redeploying the savings and determining how they would be spent. In its second report [A/52/7/Add.1], ACABQ recommended an appropriation of $12.7 million in respect of the development account, to be placed provisionally in a new section 34 of the 1998-1999 programme budget as the Assembly had not yet acted on the recommendation. It stated that there were a number of issues that had to be examined, including those raised in its first report.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B of 19 December, decided to establish in the 1998-1999 programme budget a development account to be funded from savings from possible reductions in administration and other overhead costs, without affecting full implementation of mandated programmes. It requested the Secretary-General to submit a report by the end of March 1998, identifying the sustainability of the initiative, the modalities of implementation, the specific purposes and associated performance criteria for the use of such resources. The Assembly, in resolution 52/220 of 22 December, decided that the amount of $362,000 saved as a result of the abolition of the High-level Advisory Board on Sustainable Development should be transferred to the development account.

Also on 22 December, the Assembly, in resolution 52/221 A, approved an amount of $13,065,000 under section 34 (Development account) of the 1998-1999 programme budget.

In response to ACABQ's request in its first report, the Secretary-General on 22 December submitted a report [A/52/758] on the reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs. The report clarified issues related to the definition of administrative expenses and other overhead costs and provided an outline of the magnitude and planning of anticipated reductions, with the intention of delivering some $200 million to be placed at the disposal of the Assembly. It also presented non-programme costs for the 1996-1997 biennium and for the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget and targets for 2000-2001 and for the biennium starting 1 January 2002. The total non-programme costs for 1996-1997 stood at $849 million, or 38 per cent of the computation base, and was used as base 100 for all future computations. By 1 January 2002, the accrued savings would total $182.2 million, to which would be added $12.7 million as proposed by the Secretary-General in the 1998-1999 budget, thus representing a total of some $195 million to be available to the development account by 2002.

Revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council decisions

In a November report [A/C.5/52/17], the Secretary-General indicated that the decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council during its sessions in 1997 did not give rise at that time to a need for additional appropriations under the programme budgets for 1996-1997 or 1998-1999. However, proposed requirements of $219,000 for travel and $952,800 for conference servicing relating to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights were recommended, pending a decision by the Council at its resumed substantive session in December. In that event, the Secretariat would submit an addendum with respect to any additional requirements.

The Council, by decision 1997/321 of 18 December, postponed consideration of the item to its 1998 organizational session and requested the Secretariat to provide additional information on the programme budget implications.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/222, section IV, of 22 December, took note of the report of the Secretary-General.

Subvention to UNIDIR

In November [A/C.5/52/14], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly for approval the recommendation of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) for a subvention of $213,000 from the regular UN budget to the Institute's 1998 work programme.

The Assembly approved the subvention on 22 December in resolution 52/222, section I.

Extension of the premises of the International Court of Justice

The Secretary-General reported [A/C.5/52/16] that increases in the UN contribution for office accommodation for the International Court of Justice at the Peace Palace in the Hague, Netherlands, owing to increases in the rate of inflation, were approved over the years by the General Assembly by supplementary agreements to the 1946 Agreement between the Carnegie Foundation and the United Nations. In January, the Carnegie Foundation informed the Secretary-General that enlarged premises had been put at the disposal of the Court from 1 January 1997, which would result in amendments to the Agreement relating to the annual contribution payable by the United Nations to the Foundation. The proposed amendment would change that contribution from its current figure of 100,000 to 1,843,582 Netherlands guilders (f.) net and introduce a qualification that the agreed amount was "subject to annual increases relating only to inflation". Requirements of $253,300 had been estimated for the 1996-1997 biennium for the enlarged premises. The total estimated contribution requested by the Carnegie Foundation, including that for new accommodation, would be increased to 3,826,585 per biennium in 1998-1999. Provisions of $2,178,500 before recosting had been made under section 5 of the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget for that purpose. A draft supplementary agreement was submitted for approval.

ACABQ [A/52/7/Add.5] considered the report of the Secretary-General and reiterated its view that the inflation rate applicable to the annual contribution paid by the United Nations to the Carnegie Foundation should be subject to review by the Committee and approval by the Assembly each time an increase was requested. It recommended approval of the draft supplementary agreement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, the General Assembly, by resolution 52/222, section VII, took note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations of ACABQ and approved the draft supplementary agreement between the United Nations and the Carnegie Foundation concerning the use of the Peace Palace in The Hague.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Under very specific circumstances, the Secretary-General was authorized by the General Assembly, in biennial resolutions, to enter into commitments for activities of an urgent nature, without reverting to the Assembly for approval of the required resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744], adopted resolution 52/223 without vote [agenda item 116].

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for the biennium 1998-1999

The General Assembly

1. Authorizes the Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subject to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations and the provisions of paragraph 3 below, to enter into commitments in the biennium 1998-1999 to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses arising either during or subsequent to the biennium, provided that the concurrence of the Advisory Committee shall not be necessary for:

(a) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of 5 million United States dollars in any one year of the biennium 1998-1999, as the Secretary-General certifies relate to the maintenance of peace and security;

(b) Such commitments as the President of the International Court of Justice certifies relate to expenses occasioned by:

(i) The designation of ad hoc judges (Statute of the International Court of Justice, Article 31), not exceeding a total of 300,000 dollars;

(ii) The calling of witnesses and the appointment of experts (Statute, Article 50) and the appointment of assessors (Statute, Article 30), not exceeding a total of 50,000 dollars;

(iii) The maintenance in office for the completion of cases of judges who have not been re-elected (Statute, Article 13, paragraph 3), not exceeding a total of 40,000 dollars;

(iv) The payment of pensions and travel and removal expenses of retiring judges, and travel and removal expenses and installation grant of members of the Court (Statute, Article 32, paragraph 7), not exceeding a total of 180,000 dollars;

(v) The work of the Court or its Chambers away from The Hague (Statute, Article 22), not exceeding a total of 50,000 dollars;

(c) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of 500,000 dollars, in the biennium 1998-1999, as the Secretary-General certifies are required for inter-organizational security measures pursuant to section IV of General Assembly resolution 36/235 of 18 December 1981;

2. Resolves that the Secretary-General shall report to the Advisory Committee and to the General Assembly at its fifty-third and fifty-fourth sessions all commitments made under the provisions of the present resolution, together with the circumstances relating thereto, and shall submit supplementary estimates to the Assembly in respect of such commitments;

3. Decides that, for the biennium 1998-1999, if a decision of the Security Council results in the need for the Secretary-General to enter into commitments relating to the maintenance of peace and security in an amount exceeding 10 million dollars in respect of the decision, that matter shall be brought to the General Assembly, or, if the Assembly is suspended or not in session, a resumed or special session of the Assembly shall be convened by the Secretary-General to consider the matter.

Contributions

Unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the UN budget totalled $2 billion at the end of 1997. That represented a slight decrease from the $2.1 billion at the end of 1996 and an improvement from the 1995 figure of $2.3 billion. The absolute level of unpaid regular budget assessments was reduced to $473 million at the end of 1997, a reduction of $91 million compared to 1995. A higher percentage of assessments were in arrears and remained uncollected.

On the other hand, the number of Member States paying their regular budget assessment in full continued to climb. At the end of 1997, 100 Member States had paid their assessments in full. There was also a substantial decrease in the number of Member States owing more than their 1997 assessments at year end, down from 75 in 1994 to 50 in 1997. Nevertheless, the number of Member States making no regular budget payment climbed to 17 from a low of 12 in 1996.

Aggregate peacekeeping assessments outstanding at the end of 1997 totalled $1,574 million, a decrease of $150 million since 1995. The overall improvement included an increase of $124 million for the United States and a decrease of $269 million for the Russian Federation.

Assessments

In 1997, the General Assembly continued its comprehensive review of all aspects of the methodology for determining the scale of assessments and in doing so considered various proposals and recommendations contained in the reports of Committee on Contributions at its special and regular sessions of 1996 [YUN 1996, pp. 1289 & 1292].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/747/Add.1], adopted resolution 51/212 B without vote [agenda item 119].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions and decisions on the scale of assessments, in particular resolutions 48/223 B and C of 23 December 1993,

Having considered the reports of the Committee on Contributions,

Reaffirming the fundamental principle that the expenses of the Organization should be apportioned broadly according to capacity to pay,

1. Requests the Committee on Contributions to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session eight proposals for a scale of assessments for the period 1998-2000 as follows:

(a) A proposal based on the methodology used for the scale of assessments for the period 1995-1997;

(b) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:

- (i) The scale to be based on estimates of gross national product, as a first approximation of the capacity to pay, and subject to adjustment for factors identified by the General Assembly;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of six years;
 - (iii) Uniform exchange rates, in accordance with the criteria contained in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 46/221 B of 20 December 1991;
 - (iv) The debt adjustment approach used in the preparation of the scale of assessments for the period 1995-1997;
 - (v) A low per capita income allowance formula with a per capita income limit of the average world per capita income for the statistical base period and a gradient of 85 per cent;
 - (vi) A minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent;
 - (vii) A ceiling rate of 25 per cent;
 - (viii) The phase-out of the scheme of limits in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 48/223 B of 23 December 1993 and 49/19 B of 23 December 1994;
 - (ix) The scale of assessments to be expressed to three decimal places of a percentage point;
 - (x) In phasing out the scheme of limits, the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application to be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out;
 - (xi) Individual rates of assessment for the least developed countries not to exceed the current level of 0.01 per cent;
- (c) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:
- (i) Use of gross national product instead of net national income;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of six years;
 - (iii) The debt adjustment approach and low per capita income allowance formula used in the preparation of the scale of assessments for the period 1995-1997;

- (iv) A floor rate of 0.001 per cent and a ceiling rate of 25 per cent;
- (v) The scale of assessments to be expressed to three decimal places of a percentage point;
- (vi) Market exchange rates to be used for the purpose of the scale, except where this causes excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of some Member States, when price-adjusted rates of exchange or other appropriate conversion rates, such as uniform exchange rates, in accordance with the criteria contained in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 46/221 B, are to be employed;
- (vii) Individual rates of assessment for the least developed countries not to exceed the current level of 0.01 per cent;
- (viii) The scheme of limits to be phased out in accordance with paragraph 1 (f) of General Assembly resolution 48/223 B, and the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application to be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out;
- (d) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:
 - (i) The scale to be based on data on gross national product;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of three years, with automatic annual updating;
 - (iii) A ceiling rate of 20 per cent;
 - (iv) A minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent;
 - (v) The scale of assessments to be expressed to three decimal places of a percentage point;
 - (vi) Use of market exchange rates, except where this causes excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of some Member States, when price-adjusted rates of exchange or other appropriate conversion rates are to be employed;
 - (vii) A low per capita income relief gradient of 75 per cent;
 - (viii) Non-eligibility of permanent members of the Security Council for relief based on low per capita income;
 - (ix) The scheme of limits to be phased out in 1998 and the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application to be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out;
 - (e) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:
 - (i) The scale to be based on data on gross national product, as a first approximation of capacity to pay;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of six years;
 - (iii) Uniform exchange rates, in accordance with the criteria contained in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 46/221 B;
 - (iv) Debt adjustment to be based on actual principal payments;
 - (v) A low per capita income allowance formula with a per capita income limit of the average world per capita income for the statistical base period and a gradient of 75 per cent;
 - (vi) A minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent;
 - (vii) A ceiling rate of 25 per cent;
- (viii) Individual rates of assessment for the least developed countries not to exceed the current level of 0.01 per cent;
- (ix) The effect of the scheme of limits to be phased out in equal instalments by the year 2000 and the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application to be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out;
- (x) Non-eligibility of permanent members of the Security Council for a low per capita income allowance in calculating the scale of assessments for the regular budget;
- (f) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:
 - (i) Use of data on gross national product;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of three years, with automatic annual recalculation;
 - (iii) Exchange rates in accordance with the following criteria:
 - a. Market exchange rates obtained from the International Monetary Fund for all Member States that are members of the Fund;
 - b. Exchange rates based on the technical advice of the International Monetary Fund for Member States that are not members of the Fund;
 - c. United Nations operational rates for Member States for which the criteria in subparagraphs (iii) a and b above are not applicable;
 - d. Price-adjusted rates of exchange or other appropriate conversion rates where the use of rates consistent with the criteria in subparagraphs (iii) a to c above would cause excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of some Member States;
 - e. The Committee on Contributions to provide detailed explanations for exchange rates not based on the criteria in subparagraphs (iii) a to c above;
 - (iv) No adjustment for external debt;
 - (v) A low per capita income allowance formula with a per capita income limit of the average world per capita income for the statistical base period and a gradient of 75 per cent;
 - (vi) The scale of assessments to be expressed to three decimal places of a percentage point;
 - (vii) A minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent;
 - (viii) A maximum assessment rate of 25 per cent;
 - (ix) No maximum assessment rate for the least developed countries;
 - (x) The scheme of limits to be fully phased out as at 1 January 1998;
 - (g) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:
 - (i) Estimates of gross national product, as a first approximation of capacity to pay, and subject to adjustment for factors identified by the General Assembly, as recommended by the Committee on Contributions in paragraph 28 of its report;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of three years;
 - (iii) Conversion rates as recommended by the Committee on Contributions in paragraph 38 of its report;

- (iv) The debt adjustment approach proposed by the Committee on Contributions in paragraph 41 of its report;
 - (v) A low per capita income allowance formula with a per capita income limit of the average world per capita income for the statistical base period and a gradient of 85 per cent below the limit, the additional points resulting therefrom to be absorbed progressively by countries with a per capita income above the limit, using a gradient of 25 per cent;
 - (vi) No floor rate;
 - (vii) A ceiling rate of 25 per cent;
 - (viii) The remaining effect of the scheme of limits to be phased out completely with effect from 1 January 1998, in accordance with paragraph 1 (f) of General Assembly resolution 48/223 B;
 - (ix) The scale of assessments to be expressed to four decimal places of a percentage point;
 - (x) Individual rates of assessment for the least developed countries not to exceed the current level of 0.01 per cent;
 - (h) A proposal to include the following elements and criteria:
 - (i) The scale to be based on data on gross national product;
 - (ii) A statistical base period of nine years;
 - (iii) The debt adjustment approach used in the preparation of the scale of assessments for the period 1995-1997;
 - (iv) The low per capita income allowance formula used in the preparation of the scale of assessments for the period 1995-1997, but excluding automatic application of the surtax for countries that cross the threshold until 10 years after the country has crossed the threshold;
 - (v) A minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent;
 - (vi) A ceiling rate of 25 per cent;
 - (vii) The scale of assessments to be expressed to three decimal places of a percentage point;
 - (viii) Market exchange rates to be used for the purpose of the scale, except where this causes excessive fluctuations or distortions in the income of some Member States, when price-adjusted rates of exchange or other appropriate conversion rates, such as uniform exchange rates, in accordance with the criteria contained in paragraph 3 (b) of General Assembly resolution 46/221 B, are to be employed;
 - (ix) A maximum individual rate of assessment of 0.01 per cent for the least developed countries;
 - (x) The scheme of limits to be phased out, in accordance with paragraph 1 (f) of General Assembly resolution 48/223 B, and the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application to be limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out;
- and to make appropriate recommendations thereon;

2. Decides that, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1 above, the Member State that is the subject of General Assembly decision 50/471 B of 23 December 1995 should not be subject to any increase in its rate of assessment for the period 1998-2000 as a result of the gradual phasing out of the scheme of limits during that period;

3. Requests the Committee on Contributions to keep a number of issues relating to the scale methodology under review.

Committee on Contributions. The fifty-seventh session of the Committee on Contributions was held in New York from 27 May to 20 June 1997 [A/51/11 & Corr.1,2]. Responding to the General Assembly request in resolution 50/207 B [YUN 1996, p. 1291], the Committee reviewed the procedural aspects of consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations, whereby a Member would lose its vote in the Assembly if the amount of its arrears should equal or exceed the amount of its contributions due for the preceding two full years. The Committee reviewed proposals corresponding to the elements and criteria outlined in resolution 51/212 B and reached agreement on several elements of a scale methodology, including a base period of six years, debt burden adjustment and the scheme of limits. However, no consensus was reached on all the major elements of the scale. Nevertheless, the Committee felt that tentative progress made on some of the outstanding issues could be helpful to the Assembly in deciding on its approach for the scale of assessments for 1998-2000.

In reviewing the procedural aspects of consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19, the Committee recalled that the determination of which Member States fell under Article 19 was made at the beginning of each year, while the Committee normally met in June. Member States requesting exemption under Article 19 were, therefore, liable to lose their right to vote until action was taken by the Committee and the Assembly, regardless of the outcome of their request. The problem had been exacerbated by the frequency of resumed sessions of the Assembly. Various suggestions were made for dealing with the problem of timing of the application, including automatic interim exemptions pending action by the Committee and Assembly; adjusting the period for calculating the application of Article 19 to a period closer to the annual sessions of the Committee; and holding special sessions of the Committee early in the year. The Committee urged that the fullest possible information be provided by Member States concerned when requesting exemptions. Relevant information would also be sought from the Secretariat. Also discussed by the Committee was the possibility of establishing guidelines for granting exemptions under Article 19. It agreed that the particular circumstances of each Member State concerned had to be considered when it reviewed such requests. It should draw on its review of other cases and endeavour to apply precedents as appropriate. Requests for extension of exemptions should be fully reviewed on their own merits.

The Committee took up the cases of Liberia, Tajikistan and the Comoros. It agreed that as a result of the devastating impact of the protracted civil war and the serious economic problems facing the country, Liberia's failure to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was due to conditions beyond its control. It therefore recommended that Liberia should be allowed to vote through the fifty-second session of the Assembly. In the case of Tajikistan, the Committee noted that its economic problems were still very serious and, taken with the political situation, the impact on government revenues was severe and there was evidence of the Government's difficulty in meeting national and international payment obligations. The Committee agreed that Tajikistan's failure to pay the amount necessary to avoid loss of its vote was due to conditions beyond its control and noted with appreciation its payment of approximately $100,000 in April. The Committee recommended to the Assembly that Tajikistan be permitted to vote through the fifty-second session. The Committee also recommended to the Assembly that, because of the severe economic, social and political impact of the mercenary invasion and its aftermath, the failure of the Comoros to pay was beyond its control and that it be permitted to vote through the fifty-second session.

The Committee noted that, at the conclusion of the fifty-first session, 17 Member States would be in arrears in the payment of their contributions under Article 19 of the Charter and would have no vote in the Assembly: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Iraq, Kyrgyzstan, Republic of Moldova, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Somalia, Togo and Yugoslavia. The Committee also noted that four Members were in arrears but were allowed to vote pursuant to resolutions 50/207 B and 51/212 A [YUN 1996, pp. 1291 & 1295]: Comoros, Liberia, Rwanda and Tajikistan. The Committee further noted that 11 Member States had availed themselves, under resolution 49/19 B [YUN 1994, p. 1353], of the opportunity of paying the equivalent of $3.5 million in currencies other than United States dollars.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 September, the General Assembly, by decision 51/454 B, deferred until its fifty-second session consideration of the observations contained in the report of the Committee on Contributions concerning the procedural aspects of consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter. It also decided that the failure of the Comoros, Liberia and Tajikistan to pay the amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was due to conditions beyond their control and that they should be permitted to vote through the fifty-second session of the Assembly and that any further extension should be subject to review by the Committee on Contributions.

On 22 December [meeting 79], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/745], adopted resolutions 52/215 A-D without vote [agenda item 120].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

A

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the obligation of Member States, under Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly,

Reaffirming the fundamental principle that the expenses of the Organization should be apportioned among Member States, broadly according to their capacity to pay, in accordance with rule 160 of its rules of procedure,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions on the work of its fifty-seventh session,

1. Decides that the scale of assessments for the period 1998-2000 shall be based on the following elements and criteria:

- (a) Data on the gross national product;
- (b) A statistical base period of six years;
- (c) Conversion rates as recommended by the Committee on Contributions;
- (d) A debt-burden adjustment in 1998 based on actual principal repayments and in 1999 and 2000 on the debt-adjustment approach employed in the scale of assessments for the period 1995-1997;
- (e) A low per capita income adjustment, with a per capita income limit of the average world per capita income for the statistical base period and a gradient of 80 per cent;
- (f) A minimum assessment rate of 0.001 per cent;
- (g) A ceiling rate of 25 per cent;
- (h) Individual rates of assessment for the least developed countries not to exceed the current level of 0.01 per cent;
- (i) The phasing out of the scheme of limits in accordance with General Assembly resolution 48/223 B of 23 December 1993;
- (j) In phasing out the scheme of limits before the year 2001, the allocation of additional points resulting therefrom to developing countries benefiting from its application limited to 15 per cent of the effect of the phase-out;
- (k) The limitation referred to in paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 51/212 B of 3 April 1997;

2. Resolves that the scale of assessments for the contributions of Member States to the regular budget of the United Nations for the years 1998, 1999 and 2000 shall be as follows:

3. Resolves also that:

(a) Notwithstanding the terms of regulation 5.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, the Secretary-General shall be empowered to accept, at his discretion and after consultation with the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions, a portion of the contributions of Member States for the calendar years 1998, 1999 and 2000 in currencies other than United States dollars;

(b) In accordance with regulation 5.9 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, States which are not Members of the United Nations but which participate in certain of its activities shall be called upon to contribute towards the 1998, 1999 and 2000 expenses of the Organization on the basis of the following rates:

Non-member State	Percentage
Holy See	0.001
Nauru	0.001
Switzerland	1.215
Tonga	0.001

These rates represent the basis for the calculation of the flat annual fees to be charged to non-member States in accordance with General Assembly resolution 44/197 B of 21 December 1989.

B

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/207 B of U April 1996,

1. Reaffirms the obligation of Member States under Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations to bear the expenses of the Organization as apportioned by the General Assembly, and urges all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without imposing conditions, to avoid the financial difficulties being experienced by the Organization;

2. Takes note of the observations of the Committee on Contributions concerning the procedural aspects of the consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter;

3. Calls upon Member States requesting exemption under Article 19 of the Charter to provide the Committee with the fullest possible information for its review of such requests, bearing in mind the observations in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the report of the Committee;

4. Requests the Committee to keep under review the procedural aspects of the consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter, and to make recommendations thereon, as appropriate;

5. Also requests the Committee to review current procedures for the application of Article 19 of the Charter, including the possibility of calculating and applying it at the beginning of each calendar year and at the beginning of the peacekeeping financial period on 1 July of each year, and to make recommendations thereon, as appropriate, to the General Assembly before the end of its fifty-third session.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/223 C of 23 December 1993, 49/19 A of 29 November 1994 and 51/212 B of 3 April 1997,

Recalling also the sections of the reports of the Committee on Contributions on its thorough and comprehensive review of all aspects of the methodology for preparation of the scale of assessments with a view to making it stable, simpler and more transparent while continuing to base it on reliable, verifiable and comparable data,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the work of its fifty-seventh session,

Notes the intention of the Committee on Contributions to review all elements of the scale methodology, including the base period, conversion rates, low per capita income adjustment (including the issue of discontinuity) and annual recalculation, and requests the Committee to take into account the views expressed by Member States.

D

Decides, without prejudice to rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, to consider reviewing the scale of assessments for the years 1999 and 2000 during its resumed fifty-second session, in the light of all relevant factors, including the periodic reports of the Secretary-General on the status of contributions, and to make a determination in this respect early enough to refer this matter to the Committee on Contributions during the fifty-second session of the General Assembly.

Throughout the year, the Secretary-General reported to the President of the Assembly on payments made by certain Member States to reduce their arrears below the amount specified in Article 19, so they could continue to vote in the Assembly. On 21 January [A/51/780], 43 Member States were in arrears under Article 19. By 15 September, that number was reduced to 14 [A/51/780/Add.1-8]. As at 16 September, the Secretary-General reported [A/52/350], 12 Member States remained below the gross amount owed for the preceding two full years (1995-1996). Of those, 5 later made the necessary payments between 29 September and 28 October [A/52/350/Add.1-5].

Accounts and auditing

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-first session, continued consideration of the financial reports and audited financial statements for the biennium 1994-1995 on the United Nations itself, its peacekeeping operations and UN funds and programmes, as well as the reports and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors, the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board and the report of ACABQ [YUN 1996, p. 1296].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/849], adopted resolution 51/225 without vote [agenda item 111].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered, for the period ended 31 December 1995, the financial reports and audited financial statements of the United Nations, including United Nations peacekeeping operations, the International Trade Centre and the United Nations University, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Office for Project Services, the reports and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors, the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on measures taken or to be taken to implement the current recommendations of the Board of Auditors and of the responses of the executive heads of the United Nations organizations and programmes to the recommendations of the Board,

Taking note also of the reports of the Secretary-General on accounting standards and on the inventory control system for non-expendable property at Headquarters,

Expressing deep concern about the persistence of problems and defects observed by the Board of Auditors in the financial administration and management of the United Nations,

Noting with concern the observation by the Board of Auditors that there had been no significant improvement in effective budgetary control with regard to trust funds despite the fact that the Board had drawn attention to this problem in its report for the biennium ended 31 December 1993,

Emphasizing the need to improve implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, as approved by the General Assembly,

Commending the Board of Auditors for carrying out its reviews in a comprehensive and efficient manner, in line with regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors regarding the aforementioned organizations, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Also accepts the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Notes with serious concern that the Board of Auditors has qualified its audit opinion on the financial statements of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation and the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

4. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes mentioned in paragraph 3 above to take steps to rectify the situation in order to avoid another qualification during the next audit;

5. Reiterates its request that the Board of Auditors continue its audit coverage of all peacekeeping operations;

6. Approves all the recommendations and conclusions of the Board of Auditors and the comments thereon contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

7. Requests the Board of Auditors to indicate more clearly in its future reports those recommendations which have not been fully implemented and to point out, with greater precision, incidences of malpractice and violations of rules and regulations;

8. Also requests the Board of Auditors to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session proposals for improving the implementation, by the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes, of the recommendations of the Board, as approved by the Assembly, and for possible changes in reporting on the progress of such implementation;

9. Notes with concern the delays in the submission to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, of the reports of the Board of Auditors and the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Board, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the necessary financial and administrative support is provided to assure the timeliness of the transmission of those reports in the future;

10. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes to provide timely responses to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and reiterates its request that the reports on measures taken or to be taken in response to the recommendations of the Board include timetables for their implementation;

11. Notes with deep concern the incidents of fraud and presumed fraud reported by the Board of Auditors;

12. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the organizations concerned to take the disciplinary measures necessary in cases of proven fraud and to enhance the individual accountability of United Nations personnel, including through stronger managerial control;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on measures taken to enhance accountability;

14. Notes with satisfaction the improvement in internal audit functions and structures in the United Nations, including the level of professional expertise, and requests the executive heads of those funds and programmes which continue to suffer deficiencies in this regard to take appropriate corrective measures;

15. Emphasizes the need for greater transparency and stricter controls for trust funds, including by ensuring, in particular, that expenditure from trust funds is not incurred without receipt of the corresponding income or on the basis of reimbursement to other accounts or the regular budget;

16. Welcomes the efforts made by organizations in the biennium 1994-1995 to comply with the United Nations common accounting standards;

17. Notes, however, that further work needs to be done in the biennium 1996-1997 to bring the financial statements fully in line with the United Nations common accounting standards, and requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations organizations and programmes to pursue their efforts to ensure full compliance with those standards, regarding, in particular, disclosure of valuation of property and cash held in non-convertible currencies, calculation and disclosure of end-of-service liability for termination benefits and better disclosure of delays in the collection of assessed contributions;

18. Takes note of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors concerning budgetary assumptions used in the preparation of biennial programme budgets and the comments of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee thereon, and requests them to keep the matter under review;

19. Takes note also of the comments of the Board of Auditors on the need to improve performance reporting, and concurs with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee that the Secretary-General should work towards improving the format of reports, in particular by providing more up-to-date information relating to actual expenditure figures;

20. Stresses the importance of the timely completion of the self-evaluation of subprogrammes, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure better coverage and monitoring of self-evaluations;

21. Requests the Board of Auditors, the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Joint Inspection Unit to maintain and enhance, whenever possible, their co-operation, while respecting the clear distinction between internal and external oversight responsibilities;

22. Regrets that there was a steady decline in net income from revenue-producing activities during the biennium 1994-1995;

23. Also regrets that the United Nations Postal Administration and the services to visitors incurred net losses during the biennium 1994-1995, and requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to redress the situation and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

24. Decides to consider the other substantive findings and recommendations of the Board of Auditors under the relevant agenda items, and decides also to consider in future, where appropriate, the substantive findings and recommendations of the Board under the relevant agenda items;

B

Expressing concern at the failure of some implementing and executing agencies to comply with funding and project agreements concluded with United Nations funds and programmes,

1. Notes with deep concern the serious irregular financial practices in the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements and the decision by the management of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation to divert $900,000 from Foundation funds in order to meet the financing requirements for the preparatory activities of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II);

2. Draws the attention of the Commission on Human Settlements to those irregularities with a view to its requesting immediate corrective action at its sixteenth session;

3. Notes the actions taken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its forty-seventh session with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

4. Welcomes initiatives taken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to improve the procedure for selecting implementing partners and auditing their activities, and emphasizes the need for improvement by other funds and programmes in the process of selecting implementing and executing partners;

5. Notes with grave concern the serious problems identified with regard to the United Nations Development Programme reserve for field accommodation;

6. Notes the actions taken by the Administrator and the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme at the first regular session of 1997 of the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and of the United Nations Population Fund with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

7. Notes also the actions taken by the Executive Director and the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund at the first regular session of 1997 of the Executive Board with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

8. Takes note of the recommendation that the United Nations Children's Fund review its policy of recording cash assistance in connection with programme expenditures for consistency with financial regulations and programme management procedures, and notes the finding that financial control over cash assistance was not being fully achieved;

9. Takes note also of decision 19/26, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on 7 February 1997, on the report of the Board of Auditors, and the Council's request that the Executive Director implement the necessary corrective actions recommended by the Board before the end of the biennium 1996-1997;

10. Notes with great concern the serious problems in the United Nations Environment Programme reported by the Board of Auditors, including the fact that eight out of twelve projects audited had suffered cost overruns and nine had undergone time overruns because of difficulties in identifying consultants;

11. Draws the attention of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to those irregularities with a view to its requesting immediate corrective action at its next scheduled sessions;

12. Notes the actions taken by the Executive Director of the United Nations Population Fund and the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and of the United Nations Population Fund with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors.

At the fifty-second session of the Assembly, the Fifth Committee considered the financial reports and audited financial statements on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) [A/52/5/Add.4] and voluntary funds administered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) [A/52/5/Add.5] for the financial period ended 31 December 1996. In July 1997, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a concise summary of the Board's principal findings, conclusions and recommendations [A/52/261]. In September, he reported the responses [A/52/381] of the executive heads of UNITAR and UNHCR on measures taken to implement the Board's recommendations.

In an October report [A/52/518], ACABQ submitted its comments on those reports. Concerning UNHCR, the Committee welcomed the introduction of a new section in the reports highlighting recommendations not fully implemented. It recommended that the Executive Committee of UNHCR examine the issue of the timely submission of audit certificates with a view to providing further policy directive, in particular with regard to government implementing partners. It pointed to the need to isolate the reasons for delays and lack of compliance with the audit requirements so that corrective measures might be taken. UNHCR should assess the capacity of implementing partners before agreement was reached with them. The proposal to establish a database of implementing partners should facilitate efforts to ascertain capacity. ACABQ requested the High Commissioner to take into account the Board's recommendations concerning asset management, bearing in mind the need to establish a fully integrated system to enable the tracking of assets. The High Commissioner should look into the system developed by the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations to determine its adaptability for use by UNHCR. ACABQ recommended that UNHCR take immediate steps to review its contracting policy regarding the use of consultants, prepare more precise terms of reference and establish and maintain an updated roster. Action should also be taken to ensure that travel claims were submitted and settled in a more timely manner. The Advisory Committee requested the Board to monitor the implementation of the arrangement under the memorandum of understanding signed between UNHCR and the Office of Internal Oversight Services regarding resources to ensure adequate audit coverage and to report on its adequacy and functioning.

With respect to the Board's observations on UNITAR, ACABQ requested the United Nations to review the matter of clearing outstanding charges of some $283,215 incurred on UNITAR's behalf at UN Headquarters to ascertain if the amount in question constituted an outstanding debt of UNITAR towards the United Nations and to seek the advice of the Office of Legal Affairs in order to settle it.

In December, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly, pursuant to a request by ACABQ, the report of the Board of Auditors on all aspects of its updated special audit of the Integrated Management Information System project [A/52/755].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December, [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/732], adopted resolution 52/212 A without vote [agenda item 113].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered, for the year ended 31 December 1996, the financial report and audited financial statements of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the related report of the Board of Auditors, the audited financial statements of the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the related report of the Board of Auditors, the report on measures taken or to be taken by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in response to the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations contained in the reports of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking into account the views expressed by delegations and the Board of Auditors during the debate in the Fifth Committee on the financial reports and audited financial statements and the reports of the Board of Auditors on the aforementioned organizations,

Taking note of the measures taken by the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to implement the current recommendations of the Board of Auditors,

Commending the Board of Auditors for carrying out its reviews in a comprehensive and efficient manner,

Recognizing the difficult conditions under which the Office of the High Commissioner does its work,

Noting the observation of the Board of Auditors, in paragraphs 25 to 30 of its report, that the administrative expenditures from the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research have been increasing even as its total income has been decreasing over the last several years,

Expressing concern that the headquarters of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees selected for submission of quotations vendors from a very narrow geographical base,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the audit opinions and reports of the Board of Auditors on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Also accepts the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the comments thereon contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, with the exception of the request in paragraph 17 of the report;

3. Requests the Board of Auditors to further improve its reports by including short executive summaries, highlighted text boxes and a more concise narrative;

4. Also requests the Board of Auditors to monitor compliance with the relevant provisions on consultants in General Assembly resolution 51/226, section VI, of 3 April 1997;

5. Welcomes the introduction of a new section, pursuant to section A, paragraph 7, of General Assembly resolution 51/225 of 3 April 1997, in the reports of the Board of Auditors, highlighting the previous recommendations which had not been fully implemented;

6. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to complete the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors;

7. Endorses the request of the Advisory Committee that the Executive Director of the Institute and the High Commissioner consult with the Board of Auditors on the implications of submitting biennial reports instead of annual reports, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

8. Reiterates its request that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees comply fully with the United Nations system accounting standards;

9. Expresses concern at the observations made by the Board of Auditors, in paragraphs 79 to 98 of its report, regarding the use of consultants, and endorses its recommendations thereon;

10. Recommends, in accordance with the relevant recommendations in the report of the Advisory Committee, that the Office of the High Commissioner take immediate steps to improve its contracting policy, to prepare more precise terms of reference and to establish and maintain an updated central roster;

11. Requests the Office of the High Commissioner fully to observe and implement the established proce-ture for procurement, including procurement of goods and services from as wide a geographical basis as possible, and the provisions of General Assembly resolution 51/231 of 13 June 1997.

On the same date, by decision 52/456, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at the resumed fifty-second session in 1998.

Improving implementation of Board recommendations

In a 26 December note [A/52/753], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly, pursuant to its resolution 51/225, the proposals of the Board of Auditors for improving the implementation of its recommendations.

To enhance the effective monitoring of the rate of implementation, the Board recommended that the United Nations, including the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) and UN funds and programmes, should provide in their reports timetables for implementation of the Board's recommendations. The progress reports should indicate individual officers accountable for implementation, and well-substantiated explanations should be provided in cases where the recommendation was not implemented in full and on time. Measures taken or envisaged for full implementation should be specified, accompanied by a revised implementation timetable and the designation of the official responsible. If the failure to implement a recommendation was attributable to negligence and mismanagement, the Administration should invoke sanctions against the responsible officer. To assist ACABQ in its oversight role, the United Nations and its funds and programmes, as well as the secretariat of UNJSPF, should establish a mechanism to strengthen oversight of the implementation of audit recommendations. The mechanism could be either a special committee comprising senior officials or a focal point for audit and oversight matters, which would submit quarterly reports on implementation for review. In addition, all progress reports should be submitted to the Assembly on an annual basis.

Financial Regulations and Rules

In December [A/52/727], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly for approval the revised text of paragraph 5 of the additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations contained in the annex to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations. The revised text governed the content of the audit opinion.

Chapter III

United Nations staff

In 1997, the General Assembly considered a number of questions related to the conditions of service of United Nations staff members, some of which resulted from the Secretary-General's proposals for UN reform. The Assembly established the post of Deputy Secretary-General as an integral part of the Office of the Secretary-General. It also considered the draft Code of Conduct for United Nations staff submitted by the Secretary-General. In other action, the Assembly agreed on measures to make the process of the selection and appointment of the Secretary-General more transparent and recommended uniform terms and term limits for heads of programmes, funds and other bodies of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. During the year, the Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council were seized with the problem of the safety and security of UN personnel on peacekeeping and humanitarian missions. The Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to commission a study on the subject.

The International Civil Service Commission made recommendations to the Assembly on matters related to the conditions of service of United Nations staff, including the base/floor salary scale, staff assessment and performance management, the education grant, appointments of limited duration and the non-pensionable component of salaries. The Assembly reviewed the implementation of the first cycle of the new performance appraisal system in the Secretariat and encouraged the Secretary-General to refine and simplify it. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to phase out the acceptance of certain types of gratis personnel.

The principal of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund stood at $14 billion at the end of 1997. In December, the Assembly admitted the International Seabed Authority to membership in the Fund as of 1 January 1998.

Appointments and terms of office

Secretary-General

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/241, section XIX, of 31 July on strengthening the United Nations system (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), stated that the process of selecting the Secretary-General of the United Nations should be more transparent. The duration of the term or terms of appointment, including the option of a single term, should be considered before the appointment of the next Secretary-General. Due regard should continue to be given to regional rotation and gender equality. The Assembly should make full use of its power of appointment and, in that regard, the President of the Assembly might consult with Member States to identify potential candidates endorsed by a Member State and forward those results to the Security Council. To ensure a smooth transition, the Secretary-General should be appointed no later than one month before the date on which the term of the incumbent expired.

Establishment of the post of Deputy Secretary-General

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B of 19 December on a programme of UN reform (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), decided to establish the post of Deputy Secretary-General as an integral part of the Office of the Secretary-General, with responsibilities delegated by the Secretary-General and for a term of office coinciding with that of the incumbent. The Secretary-General would make the appointment, following consultations with Member States and in accordance with Article 101 of the Charter.

The post of Deputy Secretary-General was formally established on 22 December by resolution 52/220.

Heads of programmes, funds and other UN bodies

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/241, section XXI, of 31 July, affirmed its role in approving appointments and extensions of terms of office. It stated that uniform terms of office of four years, renewable once, should be introduced for the executive heads of programmes, funds and other bodies of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Specialized agencies were encouraged to consider uniform terms and term limits for their executive heads.

Conditions of service

International Civil Service Commission

The International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), a 15-member body, was established by the General Assembly in resolution 3357(XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 875] to regulate and coordinate the conditions of service of the UN common system of salaries and allowances. Thirteen organizations had accepted the statute of the Commission: the United Nations; the International Labour Organization; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the Universal Postal Union; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the International Maritime Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; and the International Atomic Energy Agency. Two other organizations—the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the World Trade Organization—had not fully accepted the statute, but participated fully in the Commission's work.

In 1997, the Commission held its forty-fifth (Paris, 21 April-2 May) and forty-sixth (New York, 14-25 July) sessions. It examined issues that derived from decisions and resolutions of the General Assembly, as well as from its own statute. A summary of the Commission's deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its twenty-third annual report [A/52/30], on which the Assembly acted in December (resolution 52/216).

Noblemaire principle

Under a standing mandate from the General Assembly [YUN 1992, p. 1055], the Commission continued to review the relationship between the net remuneration of UN staff in the Professional and higher categories and that of the current comparator, the United States federal civil service employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C., and to clarify outstanding difficulties in making comparisons with the German civil service. ICSC reported to the Assembly that the margin between the United Nations and the United States staffs' net remunerations would be 115.7 for 1997; the comparator had not implemented its pay reforms. Preliminary estimates showed no significant changes from results reported in 1995 with regard to the German/United States total compensation comparison.

The Secretary-General, in a 2 December note [A/C.5/52/28], transmitted to the Assembly a statement by the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) on UN conditions of service, adopted at its second regular session (New York, 31 October), which acknowledged the complexity of changing comparators and proposed that the margin be used as the mechanism by which the Noblemaire principle would be applied effectively. Given that the gap between the remuneration levels of the German and the United States federal civil services was some 11 per cent, ACC requested the Assembly to revise the margin from its current range of 110-120 to 120-130 and to invite ICSC to propose adjustments in 1998 to bring the UN common system remuneration within the revised range.

The Assembly, by resolution 52/216 (see below), reconfirmed the continued application of the Noblemaire principle, reaffirmed the need to ensure competitiveness, recognized that the process of changing comparators was complex, acknowledged its option of margin management and decided to keep the question under review.

Functioning of ICSC

ICSC considered a request by the Coordinating Committee for International Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System (CCISUA) for the establishment of a tripartite working group to review the functioning of the Commission. After consultation, the Commission agreed to establish the Working Group on the Consultative Process and Working Arrangements and accepted the draft arrangements for its functioning. Arrangements were made and representatives named to participate in the first meeting of the Working Group scheduled for 7 July. On 2 July, the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations sought a postponement. That request was later joined by CCISUA. The Commission agreed that the first meeting of the Working Group should be held in early 1998, on the understanding that all parties agreed on the date and the facilitator at least two months prior to the actual meeting.

Remuneration issues

Emoluments of top-echelon officials

Secretary-General and UNDP Administrator

On 18 December [A/52/7/Add.8], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) reviewed the salaries and retirement benefits of the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). It recommended that the revised salary and retirement allowance of the Secretary-General and the revised salary and pensionable remuneration of the UNDP Administrator should be set at their 1 November 1998 levels effective 1 January 1998.

Deputy Secretary-General

In connection with the establishment of the post of Deputy Secretary-General (see above), the Secretary-General proposed that the salary be set at mid-point between that of the Secretary-General and that of the UNDP Administrator, with a representation allowance of $15,000 per year [A/C.5/52/36].

ACABQ, in a 2 December report [A/52/7/Add.1], pointed out the two options facing the Assembly in the establishment of the post of Deputy Secretary-General: create a new grade level and request ICSC to make recommendations regarding salary and other conditions of service; or set the salary and emoluments at those of an Under-Secretary-General, but with a special non-pensionable allowance in recognition of the special responsibilities of the position, in addition to the existing representation allowance of an Under-Secretary-General. The incumbent would have the grade of Under-Secretary-General but the title of Deputy Secretary-General and a new grade level would not be created.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/220 of 22 December, approved the second option.

Judges of the International Criminal Tribunals

The General Assembly, by resolutions 51/214 B and 51/215 B of 13 June, requested the Secretary-General to report on the conditions of service for judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) no later than 30 November. The Assembly deferred consideration of the pension entitlements for the members of those Tribunals, pending receipt of the Secretary-General's reports, and decided to consider those questions in the context of the 1998 budget proposals for the Tribunals.

The Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/52/520] containing the requested information, as well as conclusions and recommendations. He proposed that the annual pension entitlement for a judge who served a full four-year term should be $22,000 and increased to a maximum of $33,000 for a judge who was re-elected. The Secretary-General recalled that ACABQ had stated its intention to revert to the matter in the light of experience gained and newly available information. He urged that the Assembly, on the basis of article 13, paragraph 4, of the Statute of ICTY, which provided that the terms and conditions of service should be those of the members of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), adopt the proposed conditions with effect from 17 November 1993 for ICTY judges. He also urged the Assembly, on the basis of article 12, paragraph 5, of the Statute of ICTR, which provided that the terms and conditions of service should be those of ICTY, to adopt the proposed conditions with effect from 26 June 1995 for the judges of ICTR.

ACABQ, having considered the Secretary-General's report, was of the view that, since a comprehensive review of the emoluments and pension entitlements of members of ICJ was to be submitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly at its fifty-third (1998) session, in accordance with Assembly resolution 50/216 [YUN 1995, p. 1409], the review of the pension scheme of the judges of the Tribunals should be postponed until that report was taken up by the Committee in 1998 [A/52/696].

The Assembly, in resolutions 52/217 and 52/218 of 22 December, agreed with ACABQ's recommendations.

Other remuneration issues

Structure of salary scale and common staff assessment scale

ICSC reviewed the base/floor salary scale introduced by the General Assembly in resolution 44/198 [YUN 1989, p. 886] with effect from 1 July 1990. It provided a minimum level of remuneration for the UN system staff and served as a reference point for calculating certain separation payments as well as mobility and hardship allowances. The Commission was informed that, for 1997, the UN net base salary was $57,198; the equivalent in the comparator was $58,970, or 3.1 per cent higher. It was also informed that an upward adjustment by that percentage would be required. ICSC recommended that a revised base/floor salary scale for the Professional and higher categories be approved for implementation with effect from 1 March 1998, and that the revised rates of staff assessment be introduced on that date.

Post adjustment

In response to a 1996 General Assembly request [YUN 1996, p. 1318] to study the methodology for establishing a single post adjustment index reflecting prices in Geneva, while excluding those in the contiguous area of France, the Commission, in 1997, requested its Advisory Committee on Post Adjustment Questions (ACPAQ) to consult with the administrations of the Geneva-based organizations on the legal, administrative and technical issues involved. ACPAQ reported that all the Geneva-based organizations were in favour of maintaining the status quo. However, the Commission noted that a number of new facts had emerged and identified four possible approaches to respond to the Assembly's request. While it was technically feasible to construct a single post adjustment index based on prices of goods and services in Geneva and the neighbouring areas of France, each of the four approaches had legal problems, including: a lack of compatibility with the Geneva organizations' rules and regulations, which their governing bodies would need to discuss; and the potential for selective implementation, which would result in the break-up of the common system. The Commission suggested that the Assembly might wish to request the Geneva-based organizations to bring the matter to the attention of their governing bodies, and ask the Commission to study the savings that could be realized from implementation of a single post adjustment for Geneva, the expenditures associated with transitional measures, and the estimated costs of litigation before pursuing the matter further.

Methodologies for salary surveys

In response to resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], ICSC attempted to resolve inconsistencies between the General Service methodology, based on the Flemming principle, and that used for the determination of Professional salaries—the Noblemaire principle. It examined the overlap in remuneration between the two categories; the need for a broad cross-section of economic sectors; the criteria for the differentiation of labour markets at non-Headquarters duty stations; the benefit utilization criteria; and the interim adjustment process. ICSC concluded that the inconsistencies between the two principles resulted from the difference in their objectives, that the overlap was not a problem as long as it did not exceed generally acceptable levels, and that the Commission would keep that aspect under review during surveys. The Commission further decided to implement the revised methodology for non-Headquarters staff as of 1 January 1998, and to apply, in the next round of Headquarters surveys of General Service salaries, the current methodology using average salary data and the seventy-fifth percentile method and to test the minimum/maximum salaries approach.

Non-pensionable component

ICSC reviewed the criteria for establishing the non-pensionable component on the basis of the recommendations of the Working Group established for that purpose, with participation from members of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board. The Commission decided that the main criteria should be based on benefits and allowances that were regular, recurring and predictable; the ceiling for the non-pensionable component should be reduced from 25 to 20 per cent of net salary; the threshold for establishing the component should be the same at all duty stations—10 per cent of net salary with no established minimum; and transitional measures would apply as usual. The Standing Committee of the Pension Board concurred with the Commission's decisions regarding changes to the procedures.

Dependency allowances

Having reviewed the basis and methods for establishing the dependent children's allowance, ICSC concluded that the basis for calculating the allowance for staff in the General Service category should continue to reflect a combination of local practice and a social benefit policy; the methodology for determining the allowance should not be incorporated into survey methodologies; and the floor formula should be revised to 2.5 from the current 3 per cent from the midpoint of the local salary scale. General Service children's allowance amounts in effect as at 31 December 1997 would continue in effect until the scale of net salaries was revised as a result of either a comprehensive salary survey or an interim adjustment with effect from 1 January 1998. On the occasion of either of those two adjustments, the revised floor formula would be applied. If the children's allowance resulting from that application were equal to or higher than that in effect on 31 December 1997, the revised children's allowance would be used. However, if it were lower, the allowance in effect on 31 December would continue to be used until either a comprehensive salary survey, an interim adjustment or a calculation based on local practice produced a children's allowance that was equal or higher. The Commission agreed to review the matter further in 1999.

Education grant

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 47/216 [YUN 1992, p. 1055], ICSC reviewed the operation of the education grant on the basis of the revised methodology adopted in that resolution. The Commission had identified the following issues for consideration: capital assessment fees; the boarding element, including that at designated duty stations; the trigger point for an adjustment of maximum allowable expenses; allowable items of expenditure and the currency of payment; and procedures for handling exceptional situations. The Commission decided that those methodological changes should be taken into account beginning with the 1998 biennial review. The Commission also decided to request the Assembly to delegate authority to the ICSC Chairman to approve a special measure allowing the reimbursement of admissible expenses in cases where a duty station in the United States dollar area/outside the United States had experienced an exceptional increase in fees between two reviews of the level of the grant. It urged organizations to harmonize practices in respect of allowable and non-allowable expenses and currency of payment and to collect data on tuition fees from schools in the United States dollar area/outside the United States at the time of the biennial reviews.

Mission subsistence allowance

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/218 E, section IV, of 17 June on administrative and budgetary aspects of financing UN peacekeeping operations, requested the Secretary-General to phase out over six months the supplement to the mission subsistence allowance to senior officials and asked ICSC to develop a proposal to provide a post allowance and separate maintenance allowance for those personnel who left their families at their home duty stations while on mission assignment.

The Commission was unable to conduct a detailed study and decided to defer the matter to its next session. It requested its secretariat to look into the matter further, focusing particularly on the applicability of the mission subsistence allowance to other organizations in the common system, its relationships to post adjustment and to the daily subsistence allowance, and applicability to General Service staff.

Death and disability benefits

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/218 E, section II, of 17 June, established uniform and standardized rates for the payment of death or disability awards for troops in the service of UN peacekeeping operations: a one-time lump-sum award of $50,000 for service-incurred death, and a lump-sum award for service-incurred disability, calculated as a percentage of the death award according to the degree of loss of function, based on an established schedule. In September [A/52/369], the Secretary-General detailed proposals for implementing those rates, including administrative and payment arrangements. In October [A/52/538], he reported on progress made on clearing the backlog of death and disability claims.

On 18 December, the Assembly, in resolution 52/177, authorized the Secretary-General to implement those administrative and payment arrangements and requested him to settle claims no later than three months from the date of their submission (see also PART ONE, Chapter I).

Payment of honoraria

In a November report [A/52/699], the Secretary-General submitted the results of an interim study of the question of honoraria payable to members of organs and subsidiary organs of the United Nations. The Secretary-General proposed revising the rates of honoraria to reflect a 25 per cent increase over those in effect since 1 January 1981. The new rates would take effect from 1 January 1998 and would apply to the International Law Commission, the International Narcotics Control Board, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Committee on the Rights of the Child. Under the new rates, the honoraria would increase from $5,000 to $6,250 for chairmen (presidents); from $4,000 to $5,000 for the Vice-Chairman of the International Narcotics Control Board; from $3,000 to $3,750 for other members; and from $2,500 to $3,125 as the additional amount payable to members of the International Law Commission when acting as rapporteurs. The total of the proposed increases for the 1998-1999 biennium was $182,500.

In December [A/52/7/Add.7], ACABQ stated that it would be more appropriate if the question of honoraria was considered in the context of the Secretary-General's comprehensive report on the issue to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-third (1998) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/52/735], adopted resolution 52/216 without vote [agenda item 121].

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the International Civil Service Commission,

Reaffirming its commitment to a single, unified United Nations common system as the cornerstone for the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission in the regulation and ordination of the conditions of service of the common system,

Taking note of the statement of the Administrative Committee on Coordination,

I

Conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories

A. Examination of the Noblemaire principle and its application

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 44/198 of 21 December 1989 and section LA of its resolution 51/216 of 18 December 1996, by which it reaffirmed that the Noblemaire principle should continue to serve as the basis of comparison between United Nations emoluments and those of the highest-paying national civil service,

Recalling also its resolutions related to the study by the Commission of all aspects of the Noblemaire principle,

1. Reconfirms the continued application of the Noblemaire principle;

2. Reaffirms the need to continue to ensure the competitiveness of the conditions of service of the common system;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the study by the Commission to identify the highest-paying national civil service;

4. Takes note of the findings and recommendations of the Commission outlined in paragraph 47 of the addendum to its twenty-first annual report;

5. Notes that it has not been possible to narrow existing differences on the scope of the study or the applicability of the Master Standard without substantially modifying the approved methodology;

6. Takes note of the findings of the Commission outlined in paragraph 54 (c) of its twenty-third annual report;

7. Recognizes that the actual process of changing comparators is a complex one, with implications for pensions, the currency of record and the location of the base of the United Nations remuneration system;

8. Acknowledges its option of margin management;

9. Takes note of the observation of the Commission in paragraph 47 (c) of the addendum to its twenty-first annual report and the views expressed thereon by Member States;

10. Requests the Commission to continue to monitor the situation and to report to the General Assembly when appropriate, and decides to keep these questions under review;

B. Evolution of the margin

Recalling the standing mandate from the General Assembly, in which the Commission is requested to continue its review of the relationship between the net remuneration of the United Nations staff in the Professional and higher categories in New York and that of the United States federal civil service employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C. (referred to as "the margin"),

Notes that the margin between net remuneration of officials in the Professional and higher categories of the United Nations in New York and that of officials in comparable positions in the United States federal civil service for 1997 is 115.7;

C. Base/floor salary scale

Recalling section I.H of its resolution 44/198, by which it established a floor net salary level for staff in the Professional and higher categories by reference to the corresponding base net salary levels of officials in comparable positions serving at the base city of the comparator civil service (the federal civil service of the United States of America),

Approves, with effect from 1 March 1998, the revised base scale of gross and net salaries for staff in the Professional and higher categories, contained in annex I to the present resolution, and the consequential amendment to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as reflected in annex II to the present resolution;

D. Post adjustment at Geneva

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 50/208 of 23 December 1995 related to the establishment in 1996 of a single post adjustment index in respect of staff members whose duty station is Geneva,

Recalling also section LE of its resolution 51/216, in which it reiterated its request to the Commission urgently to complete its study regarding the methodology for establishing a single post adjustment index for Geneva and to complete the study needed to implement the single post adjustment at the earliest date, and no later than 1 January 1998,

1. Welcomes with appreciation the extensive information provided by the Commission and the organizations of the common system, as contained in the report of the Commission;

2. Notes that a number of elements have been raised that had not previously been reported upon, or discussed by the General Assembly;

3. Requests the Commission to review those elements, inter alia, the possibility for staff members of the common system (a) to reside in France, (b) to travel to France and (c) to transport goods between France and Switzerland, and the way in which transitional measures would be introduced under any option proposed by the Commission and approved by the General Assembly, so as to make the application of the post adjustment system more equitable for all staff members whose duty station is Geneva, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-third session;

4. Invites the executive heads of the organizations of the common system to bring this matter to the attention of their governing bodies with a view to considering changes as necessary to their staff regulations and rules;

II

Remuneration of the General Service and other locally recruited categories of staff

A. Methodologies for surveys of best prevailing conditions of employment at headquarters and non-headquarters duty stations

Recalling section III of its resolution 47/216 of 23 December 1992, in which it endorsed the reaffirmation by the Commission of the Flemming principle as the basis for determining the conditions of service of the General Service and related categories,

Recalling also section II of its resolution 51/216, in which it requested the Commission, as part of its review of the methodologies for salary setting for staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories, inter alia:

(a) To resolve, to the extent possible, inconsistencies between the methodologies applied pursuant to the Flemming principle and the one applied pursuant to the Noblemaire principle, inter alia, by examining the question of overlap in remuneration between the two categories,

(b) To study the feasibility of increasing the weight of public-sector employers in the salary surveys at headquarters duty stations,

(c) To submit a report based on the review of the methodologies to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session,

1. Reaffirms that the Flemming principle should continue to serve as the basis for determining the conditions of service of the General Service and related categories;

2. Endorses the conclusions of the Commission, and the refinements and modifications to the methodologies set out in paragraphs 126 to 131 of its report, noting that the revisions to the methodologies will be implemented as from 1 January 1998;

3. Notes that, at the conclusion of the next round of headquarters General Service salary surveys, the Commission will continue to review all aspects of the methodologies for salary setting for staff in the General Service and other locally recruited categories;

B. Non-pensionable component

Noting that the review of the non-pensionable component was carried out by the Working Group established by the Commission with the participation of the representatives of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and that the Standing Committee of the Pension Board concurred with the Commission's decisions regarding changes to the procedures used for determining it,

Endorses the modifications decided on by the Commission regarding the various aspects of the non-pensionable component and transitional measures as outlined in paragraph 139 of its report;

C. Review of the basis for the dependent children's allowance

Noting that the floor amount for the children's allowance for the staff in the General Service and related categories is currently based on 3 per cent of the mid-point of the local salary scale,

Taking note of the views expressed by Member States,

1. Endorses the conclusions and decisions of the Commission as contained in paragraph 150 of its report;

2. Welcomes the intention of the Commission to review this question further in its 1999 work programme;

III

Conditions of service applicable to all categories of staff

A. Education grant: review of the methodology for determining the level of the grant

Recalling section IV of its resolution 47/216 and section IV of its resolution 51/216, in which it endorsed the revised methodology for the determination of the education grant,

Acknowledging that the methodology for determining the level of the education grant introduced in 1992 has functioned reasonably well,

Noting the review of the methodology by the Commission based on the experience of its application during the past three reviews of the level of the grant,

1. Endorses the modifications to the methodology by the Commission, as contained in paragraph 163 of its report, and notes that the revised methodology will be taken into account beginning with the 1998 biennial review of the education grant;

2. Decides to delegate to the Chairman of the Commission the authority requested in paragraph 164 of the report of the Commission;

B. Performance management

Recalling section I.C of its resolution 51/216 and its request to the Commission to provide general comments on the concept of performance awards or bonuses to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session,

Recognizing the differing organizational strategies and cultures prevailing in the common system, and considering that a flexible approach to performance management would be desirable,

1. Welcomes the comprehensive information on performance management provided by the Commission in paragraphs 167 to 219 of its report and, in particular, the guidance and recommendations contained in paragraphs 213 and 219;

2. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General on a system of performance awards or bonuses under agenda item 153, entitled "Human resources management";

3. Invites the executive heads of the organizations of the common system to develop their performance management programmes within the parameters set by the Commission in paragraphs 213 and 219 of its report;

C. Appointments of limited duration

Recalling section V of its resolution 51/216, in which it requested the Commission to continue its work on the issue of appointments of limited duration without delay,

Endorses the principles and guidelines for the use of appointments of limited duration, and the decisions of the Commission as contained in paragraph 249 of its report;

D. Standards of travel and per diem

Recalling its decision 51/465 of 3 April 1997, in which it requested the Commission to review, at the earliest opportunity, taking into account the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Joint Inspection Unit, the question of travel entitlements of staff of the common system,

Having considered paragraphs 250 to 276 of the report of the Commission,

- 1. Takes note of the observations of the Commission as contained in paragraph 275 (a) of its report;
- 2. Invites the Commission to continue its consideration of this question;

E. Mission subsistence allowance

Recalling section IV of its resolution 51/218 E of 17 June 1997, in which it requested the Commission to develop a proposal to provide a post allowance and separate maintenance allowance for those personnel who leave their families at their home duty station while they are on mission assignment,

Notes the intention of the Commission to address this matter in 1998, and requests it to submit a report on the question to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

F. Staff participation in the work of the Commission

Recalling its resolution 51/216,

- 1. Recalls its request to the Coordinating Committee for International Staff Unions and Associations of the United Nations System and the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations to resume their participation in the work of the Commission in a spirit of cooperation and non-confrontation;
- 2. Takes note with appreciation of the progress made in this regard through the establishment by the Commission of the Working Group on the Consultative Process and Working Arrangements, comprising members of the Commission and representatives of the organizations and staff bodies, which will meet in January 1998;

G. New directions in human resources management

Recalling section IX of its resolution 51/216, in which it requested the Commission to take the lead in analysing new approaches in the human resources management field so as to develop standards, methods and arrangements that will respond to the specific needs of the organizations of the common system, and to report to the General Assembly thereon at its fifty-third session,

- 1. Welcomes the initiative taken by the Commission to hold a forum on new directions in human resources management in 1997;
- 2. Also welcomes the intention of the Commission to submit in 1998 a comprehensive report on new approaches to human resources management;

H. Gender balance in the common system

Recalling section VI of its resolution 47/216, in which it urged the organizations of the common system to introduce a coherent plan for improving the status of women in each organization,

- 1. Notes the intention of the Commission to submit in 1998 a report on the representation of women, which will include ways of improving the situation;
- 2. Also notes the intention of the Commission to continue to report on a regular basis both on the extent of implementation of previous recommendations in this area and on new initiatives proposed or introduced by the organizations to enhance the status of women in the common system.

Next 20,000 per year	36.1	44.2
Remaining assessable payments	37.0	47.4

By resolution 52/222, section III, of 22 December, the Assembly approved a gross budget for ICSC for the biennium 1998-1999 in the amount of $11,475,800.

Other staff matters

Personnel policies

Human resources management issues

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-first session, continued consideration of the agenda item on human resources management, including reports submitted by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) in 1996 on "The application of UN recruitment, placement and promotion policies (Part II-Placement and promotions)"; "Comparison of methods of calculating equitable geographic distribution within the UN common system"; and "Management-Staff Union relationships in the UN system". It also considered reports submitted by the Secretary-General on the implementation of his strategy for the management of the Organization's human resources and other human resources management issues and on the ratio between career and fixed-term appointments [YUN 1996, p. 1325].

D = Rate applicable to staff members with a dependent spouse or child.

S = Rate applicable to staff members with no dependent spouse or child.

*This scale will be implemented in conjunction with a consolidation of 3.1 per cent of post adjustment. There will be consequential adjustments in the post adjustment indices and multipliers at all duty stations, effective 1 March 1998. Thereafter, changes in post adjustment classifications will be effected on the basis of the movements of the consolidated post adjustment indices.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/653/Add.2], adopted resolution 51/226 without vote [agenda item 120].

Human resources management

The General Assembly,
Recalling Articles 8, 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolutions 47/226 of 8 April 1993 and 49/222 A and B of 23 December 1994 and 20 July 1995, as well as its other relevant resolutions and decisions,

Bearing in mind the views expressed by Member States on human resources management questions in the Fifth Committee during the fifty-first session of the General Assembly,

Having considered the relevant reports on human resources management questions submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session,

Having considered also the relevant reports of the Joint Inspection Unit,

Having heard the views expressed by the staff representative in the Fifth Committee in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/213 of 17 December 1980,

Reaffirming that the staff of the Organization is an invaluable asset of the United Nations, and commending its contribution to furthering the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Paying tribute to the memory of all staff members who have lost their lives in the service of the Organization,

1. Reiterates its full support for the Secretary-General as the chief administrative officer of the Organization, and underlines its full respect for his prerogatives and responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Reaffirms its support for the integrity and independence of the international civil service, and notes the efforts of the Secretary-General to preserve these;

I. Implementation of the Secretary-General's strategy for the management of the human resources of the Organization

Recalling the Secretary-General's strategy for the management of the human resources of the Organization,

Welcoming the adoption by the Secretary-General of the concept of an integrated approach to human resources planning and management, as reflected in his strategy,

Reaffirming the importance of the staff-management consultative process to the functioning and activities of the Secretariat,

1. Notes the steps taken to implement a number of elements of the strategy for the management of the human resources of the Organization as set out in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Regrets with deep concern that further progress in the implementation of the adopted strategy has not been achieved, and urges the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to ensure its full implementation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

3. Regrets the unsuccessful efforts to develop a management environment and culture in the Organization that enables staff members to contribute their maximum potential, effectiveness and efficiency;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to pursue the full implementation of his strategy as soon as possible, bearing in mind the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Notes, in this connection, the phasing-in of performance management, including the introduction in 1996 of a new performance appraisal system;

II. Role of the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat

Reaffirming its resolution 48/218 A of 23 December 1993, in particular the request therein for a mechanism ensuring that programme managers are accountable for the effective management of the human resources allocated to them,

Noting with appreciation that the Joint Inspection Unit in its report of 5 November 1996 has dealt with recruitment, placement and promotion policies in a comprehensive manner,

Reiterating the authority and responsibility of the Office of Human Resources Management of the Secretariat to enforce recruitment, placement and promotion policies throughout the Secretariat,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on staff representational activities,

1. Recognizes the role of the Office of Human Resources Management as the primary representative of the Secretary-General in establishing human resources policies and guidelines, and strongly requests the Secretary-General to maintain its central policy authority;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance managerial accountability with respect to human resources management decisions, including imposing sanctions in cases of demonstrated mismanagement of staff and wilful neglect of or disregard for established rules and procedures, while safeguarding the due process rights of all staff members, including managers;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to issue specific administrative instructions to establish clearly the responsibility and accountability of programme managers for proper use of human resources, as well as sanctions in accordance with staff rule 112.3 for any financial loss suffered by the United Nations as a result of gross negligence, including improper motivation, wilful violation of or reckless disregard for the Staff Regulations and Rules and established policies regulating recruitment, placement and promotion;

4. Deplores the high number of exceptions to the established procedures for the recruitment, placement and promotion of staff, in particular in the Office of Human Resources Management;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to announce all vacancies so as to give equal opportunity to all qualified staff and to encourage mobility, it being understood that the discretionary power of the Secretary-General of appointment and promotion outside the established procedures should be limited to his Executive Office and the under-secretary-general and assistant secretary-general levels, as well as special envoys at all levels;

6. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to streamline administrative procedures and eliminate duplication, in relation to human resources management, through delegation of authority to programme managers, and requests him to ensure, before delegating such authority, that well-designed mechanisms of accountability, including the necessary internal monitoring and control procedures, as well as training, are put in place, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite the simplification and streamlining of all personnel rules and procedures in order to make them transparent and easier to apply, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

8. Reaffirms the need for the Secretary-General to use, to the fullest extent possible, the staff-management consultative mechanisms set out in staff rule 108.2 and to strengthen the staff-management dialogue in the United Nations and all its funds and programmes, and requests him to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure in his proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 provision to the Office of Human Resources Management of the level of resources commensurate with the mandate set out above;

10. Recalls that the functions of staff representatives are official;

11. Also recalls that elected staff representatives are staff members of the United Nations;

12. Recognizes the fact that staff representatives are entitled to an opportunity for career advancement, decides that the period of their continuous release shall not exceed four years, and also decides to limit such release to elected staff representatives only, on either a full-time or a part-time basis;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly a report on the practice of Member States relative to the financing of national staff representation and on the proportion of staff representation;

III. Human resources planning, recruitment, status of women and career development

Recalling Articles 8 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

A. Human resources planning

Emphasizing the importance of human resources planning to both recruitment and career development,

1. Takes note of the preliminary work in human resources planning, especially in the projection of recruitment needs at the entry level from 1997 to 2001, and requests that these activities be continued and expanded;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with relevant staff regulations and rules, to use, to the fullest extent possible, existing mechanisms, such as agreed termination or granting leave without pay, to create opportunities for upward mobility for existing staff and for recruiting new staff;

B. Recruitment

Stressing the vital importance of the recruitment of new staff to meet the needs of the Organization,

1. Reaffirms that no post should be considered the exclusive preserve of any Member State or group of States, including at the highest level;

2. Recognizes that the system of desirable ranges is the mechanism for the recruitment of staff in posts subject to geographical distribution, in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take every available measure to ensure, at the senior and policy-making levels of the Secretariat, the equitable representation of Member States, in particular of developing countries and Member States with inadequate representation at those levels, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and to include relevant information thereon in future reports on the composition of the Secretariat;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in this regard, to exercise flexibility in the application of desirable ranges in individual recruitment cases, bearing in mind all parts of the present resolution;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity serve as the primary criteria in the recruitment of staff;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, while ensuring that the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity serve as the primary criteria in the recruitment of staff, to ensure also that the search for and the selection of candidates are conducted in accordance with the guiding principles of achieving equitable geographical distribution and providing equal opportunity for men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in the work of the Secretariat;

7. Reaffirms that secondment from government service is consistent with Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter and beneficial to both the Organization and Member States, and urges the Secretary-General to pursue this practice on a wider scale, as appropriate;

8. Notes the efforts of the Secretary-General to conduct a targeted search for candidates from Member States that are unrepresented or under-represented and below the mid-point of their desirable ranges, and requests that he continue to expand these efforts;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to restrict the practice of making temporary appointments against regular budget posts or extrabudgetary posts of one year or more to temporary needs, for example, replacement of staff on field mission assignment and authorized leave;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to take effective measures to prevent the placement of staff members against higher-level unencumbered posts for periods longer than three months, and further requests the Secretary-General to issue vacancy announcements within a three-month period;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to instruct all programme managers to inform the Office of Human Resources Management of all vacancies immediately and of all foreseen vacancies six months before the posts become vacant;

12. Notes that the posts subject to the desirable range formula are limited to the current level of 2,700 posts;

13. Requests that the Secretary-General not include staff members recruited against support account posts in the desirable range calculation;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to apply the requirements of Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter to recruit staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible to all posts outside the desirable ranges;

15. Reaffirms the policy of the Secretary-General that appointment to P-1 and P-2 posts and to posts requiring special language competence shall be made exclusively through competitive examinations and that appointment to posts at the P-3 level shall normally be made through competitive examinations;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to hold national competitive examinations for posts at the P-2 and P-3 levels as a useful tool for selecting the best qualified candidates from inadequately represented Member States; special attention should be paid to the prospects of staff for promotion to the P-3 level and to the need to conduct such examinations with maximum efficiency and economy;

17. Invites the Member States concerned to participate in those examinations;

18. Requests the Secretary-General not to decrease the proportion of entrance-level posts at the P-1 to P-3 levels for budgetary purposes;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General, notwithstanding the provisions of section V of the present resolution, to offer or to continue to offer probationary appointments to all staff members who have passed a competitive recruitment examination and to consider all such staff members for conversion to permanent appointment after completion of the period of probationary service;

20. Further requests the Secretary-General, in the case of staff recruited through competitive examinations, to ensure that only those who meet the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity established in the Charter are granted permanent appointments;

21. Requests the Secretary-General to complete the realignment with the national competitive examination of the competitive examination for promotion to the Professional category of staff members from other categories, in particular regarding academic qualifications;

22. Also requests the Secretary-General to make proposals on the introduction of a probationary period for successful candidates in the competitive examinations for promotion to the Professional category of staff members from other categories;

23. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on the question of geographical imbalance resulting from promotions, through the competitive examination for promotion to the Professional category of staff members from other categories, to posts subject to geographical distribution;

24. Urges the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures, including instructions to department heads, as needed, to place all successful candidates from the national competitive examinations within one year, subject to the availability of posts;

25. Requests the Secretary-General to accord priority consideration to successful candidates from the national competitive examinations who have not been placed within one year for all other vacancies, including those of short duration;

26. Also requests the Secretary-General to extend to consultants and to personnel provided on a non-reimbursable basis the current practice of barring interns from applying for or being appointed to posts in the Secretariat for a period of six months after the end of their internships, and decides that persons on short-term appointments filling regular budget posts or extrabudgetary posts of one year or more cannot apply for or be appointed to their current post within six months of the end of their current service;

27. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that persons serving in peacekeeping or other field missions become eligible for consideration for internal vacancies in the Secretariat after having served for at least twelve months; should they be considered for appointment, established recruitment criteria and relevant rules shall apply;

28. Requests the Secretary-General to resume normal recruitment activities at all levels as soon as possible;

C. Status of women in the Secretariat

Reaffirming that the Fifth Committee is the appropriate Main Committee of the General Assembly entrusted with responsibility for administrative, budgetary and human resources management matters, including, in this context, the question of the representation of women in the Secretariat,

Welcoming the achievement of the goal of a 35 per cent overall participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution,

Noting with concern that the goal set in its resolution 45/239 C of 21 December 1990 of a 25 per cent participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above by 1995 is still far from being achieved,

Recalling its resolution 51/67 of 12 December 1996, including the reaffirmation of the goal of a 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000,

Concerned that this goal may not be met, especially at the policy-making and decision-making levels of D-1 and above,

Noting that the overall percentage of representation of women in all Professional posts was 33.66 as at 31 December 1996,

Reaffirming that the Secretary-General, in his efforts to achieve this goal, should take into account the principle that the paramount consideration shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution,

1. Urges the Secretary-General fully to implement and monitor the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000);

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his work to create a gender-sensitive work environment, through the implementation of all appropriate human resources management policies and procedures, ensuring that managers are evaluated on their activities in this regard in the context of the performance appraisal system;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to develop a family leave programme for United Nations staff without creating supplementary leave entitlements, and to report thereon to the General Assembly as soon as possible;

4. Decides to consider, in the context of its consideration of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, the structure and source of funding for the Focal Point for Women, and requests the Secretary-General to make proposals in this regard with a view to ensuring the provision of an adequate level of resources commensurate with its mandate;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures, as soon as possible, to allow the mandate of the Focal Point for Women to be fulfilled;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General, consistent with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, to appoint more women at the D-1 level and above so as to reduce the gender gap and to reach the mandated General Assembly target of 25 per cent women in senior decision-making-level positions as soon as possible;

7. Urges the Secretary-General, consistent with Article 101 of the Charter, to increase the number of women employed in the Secretariat from developing countries, in particular those which are unrepresented or under-represented and from countries that have a low representation of women, including countries with economies in transition;

8. Strongly encourages Member States to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to increase the percentage of women in Professional posts, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and regularly presenting more women candidates and by encouraging women to apply for posts in the Secretariat of the United Nations and the specialized agencies;

D. Career development

Recognizing that career development is an indispensable part of effective human resources management,

Noting with concern the absence of progress in developing a fully integrated career development system,

1. Regrets that the Secretary-General has not yet established a career development policy in the Secretariat, and requests him to establish such a policy as soon as possible and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to meet the goals and objectives set by the General Assembly in various resolutions by establishing, as a matter of priority, a comprehensive career development and promotion system;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on how linguistic qualifications are taken into account in the performance appraisal system and the recruitment and promotion policy, including for language staff;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the feasibility of holding the national competitive examinations in the six official languages, without prejudice to the mandatory knowledge of English and French as working languages;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make proposals aimed at ensuring that nationals of Member States whose mother tongue is not an official or working language of the United Nations are not placed at a disad-vantage when taking the national competitive examinations;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to pursue the development and implementation of the managed re-assignment programmes for entry-level and other staff as outlined in his report on the implementation of his strategy, and to budget the required posts accordingly;

7. Notes that only modest progress has been made towards achieving greater staff mobility for internationally recruited staff as called for in the strategy, and reiterates the importance of making substantive progress towards that objective;

8. Regrets that the report on mobility requested in section V, paragraph 2, of resolution 49/222 A has not yet been submitted to the General Assembly, and requests the Secretary-General to submit that report to the Assembly at its fifty-third session;

9. Notes with concern the fact that delays in completion of performance appraisal reports have an adverse effect on staff members being considered by the appointment and promotion bodies, and requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that the managers preparing these reports are held accountable for any such delays;

10. Requests that, to the extent possible for a fair evaluation of staff members, the recruitment and promotion procedure not be postponed to the detriment of staff members for want of performance appraisal reports;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to utilize the performance appraisal system to foster staff-management dialogue, including the identification of staff development and career opportunities, and to report to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-first session on the findings of the review of the first cycle of the performance appraisal system;

12. Stresses the fact that the new performance appraisal system is only one of the elements of a comprehensive career development plan in the Secretariat;

13. Notes with appreciation the strengthened training programmes, inter alia, people management training, upgrading of substantive skills, information technology, communications and training in all six official languages on an equal basis, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to invest in the Organization's future capacity by sustaining and expanding these programmes in order to meet organizational needs and individual career development aspirations;

14. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to strengthen further the professional training of the staff, so as to foster management capacity and to ensure that staff continue to receive necessary refresher training over the course of their careers;

IV. Redeployment

1. Notes the impact of the economy measures on the personnel policies of the Organization;

2. Recognizes the need to maintain an adequate environment in the Secretariat and to sustain the morale of staff members;

3. Reiterates its request contained in paragraph 12 of its resolution 51/221 B of 18 December 1996, and decides to consider the report on the situation of staff members on the redeployment list as a matter of priority during the next part of its resumed fifty-first session;

4. Recognizes that measures related to personnel matters invoked in order to obtain savings should not entail changes in the Staff Regulations and Rules without the prior approval of the General Assembly;

V. Ratio between career and fixed-term appointments

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the ratio between career and fixed-term appointments,

1. Underlines the importance of the concept of career service for staff members performing continuing core functions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make efforts to achieve the level of 70 per cent of permanent appointments in posts subject to geographical distribution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

3. Decides that five years of continuing service as stipulated in its resolution 37/126 of 17 December 1982 do not confer the automatic right to a permanent appointment, and also decides that other considerations, such as outstanding performance, the operational realities of the organizations and the core functions of the post, should be duly taken into account;

• 4. Endorses in principle the introduction of a dual-track system of career and non-career appointments, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session detailed proposals for the implementation of that system, including a definition of continuing core functions with a full explanation of the manner in which such a definition would be applied and the text of any necessary amendments to the Staff Regulations and Rules that would be required in order to implement the new system;

VI. Consultants

Having considered the summary of the principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the related comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting with deep concern that, despite repeated recommendations by the Board, serious irregularities persist in the identification, terms of reference, hiring, remuneration and management of consultants, including lack of geographical balance,

1. Expresses its concern about the practice of using consultants to carry out functions assigned to established posts, and requests the Secretary-General to refrain from this practice;

2. Notes with concern the observations of the Board of Auditors that a number of findings warrant further investigation with a view to taking appropriate action against personnel responsible for such malpractice, and requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate action in this regard and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations organizations and programmes to ensure selection of consultants on a more competitive basis and to keep the instances of recourse to sole candidates to a strict minimum, each such case being formally approved at an appropriate level of authority, on an exceptional basis, prior to engagement;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare, no later than the end of 1997, comprehensive policy guidelines on the terms of reference (including objectives, targets and output delivery dates), selection, hiring and renewal of consultants and ensuring transparency and objectivity in the selection process, and to submit those guidelines to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for review before their consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-second session under the item entitled "Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors";

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to revise the assessment form on consultants to make it more detailed and more clearly indicative of the quality of the consultant's work and his or her ability to undertake future assignments;

6. Endorses the recommendations made by the Board of Auditors in its report, and requests the Secretary-General to implement them;

7. Also endorses the recommendation of the Advisory Committee that the Secretariat resume the past practice of submitting, on a biennial basis and in conjunction with the report requested by the Committee on the hiring of retired staff, a report on the hiring and use of consultants, following the format of past reports on the subject;

VII. Reporting to the General Assembly

Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, under the appropriate agenda items, reports on the following questions:

(a) As soon as possible

A family leave programme for United Nations staff;

(b) At its resumed fifty-first session

The findings of the review of the first cycle of the performance appraisal system;

(c) At its fifty-second session

(i) The appropriate action taken against personnel responsible for mal practices identified by the Board of Auditors;

(ii) Comprehensive policy guidelines on consultants, to be submitted through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(d) At its fifty-third session

(i) Information on measures taken to ensure equitable representation of Member States at the senior and policy-making levels of the Secretariat, to be included in the report on the composition of the Secretariat;

(ii) The full implementation of the strategy for the management of the human resources of the Organization;

(iii) Delegation of authority;

(iv) The simplification and streamlining of all personnel rules and procedures;

(v) Staff-management consultative mechanisms;

(vi) The practices of Member States relative to national staff representation;

(vii) Proposals on the introduction of a probationary period for successful candidates in the competitive examination for promotion to the Professional category of staff members from other categories;

- (viii) The question of geographical imbalance resulting from promotions of successful candidates in the competitive examination for promotion to the Professional category of staff members from other categories;
- (ix) Career development policy;
- (x) Linguistic qualifications in the context of the performance appraisal system and the recruitment and promotion policy;
- (xi) The feasibility of holding the national competitive examinations in the six official languages, including proposals to ensure that nationals of Member States whose mother tongue is not an official language of the United Nations are not placed at a disadvantage;
- (xii) Mobility;
- (xiii) The efforts made by the Secretary-General to achieve the level of 70 per cent of permanent appointments in posts subject to geographical distribution;
- (xiv) Detailed proposals for the implementation of a dual-track system of career and non-career appointments;
- (xv) The hiring of retirees and the hiring and use of consultants.

The Secretary-General, in a 3 May letter [A/51/893], assured the Assembly President of his full commitment to implement resolution 51/226, particularly concerning irregular or "back door" recruitment practices and the assurance of broader and fairer competition for all UN employees. However, he had been advised that, in applying the six-month rule regarding short-term appointments, staff hired against the support account posts and staff of the international tribunals, who could not have been hired for more than six months prior to 3 April 1997, would be treated unfairly retroactively as though they had been improperly recruited. To achieve the objective of closing "back door" recruitment and avoid exposing the Organization to successful challenges in the Administrative Tribunal, it would seem necessary to ensure that the provisions regarding short-term appointments were not applied retroactively to "regularly" recruited staff currently holding such appointments. It was in the best interests of the Organization to apply them to the staff concerned recruited after 3 April 1997. On 29 May [A/51/913], the Assembly President transmitted a letter of 28 May from the Chairman of the Fifth Committee stating that the Committee had requested that the Secretary-General implement resolution 51/226 as adopted, on the understanding that it would not be done retroactively.

Staff redeployment

On 3 April 1997, the General Assembly, in resolution 51/226, reiterated its 1996 request to the Secretary-General, made in resolution 51/221 B [YUN 1996, p. 1324], to report to the Fifth Committee during the resumed fifty-first session on progress achieved in the placement of the staff on the redeployment list [Ibid., p. 1323] and decided to consider the report as a matter of priority. It recognized that measures related to personnel matters to obtain savings should not entail changes in the Staff Regulations and Rules without the Assembly's prior approval.

In response to that request, the Secretariat informed the Fifth Committee that, in 1997, 24 staff members had been transferred or reassigned to established positions (16 in the Professional and 8 in the General Service categories). One General Service staff member had taken agreed termination. Consequently, as of May, 12 staff members (6 in the Professional and 6 in the General Service categories) were placed in temporary functions; the Secretariat was committed to placing those 12 staff members in established positions.

The Assembly, by decision 51/471 of 13 June, took note of the information on the status of redeployed staff members.

Appointments of limited duration

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], ICSC continued its review of appointments of limited duration on which it had previously given provisional approval, on a pilot project basis, for use in the United Nations and UNDP. The Working Group established by ICSC to explore the different aspects of the issue proposed a framework entailing guiding principles, guidelines and a basis for remuneration structures.

The Commission agreed that appointments of limited duration were appropriate as long as they did not interfere with the existence of the international civil service, endorsed the Working Group's recommended principles and guidelines for such appointments, and decided that, until a definitive review had been undertaken, the provisional schemes should remain in pilot status. It stressed the need for strict observation of a four-year limit for such appointments and decided that it should be kept fully informed of developments in regard to such appointments. It also decided that the managed renewable term contracts in the International Telecommunication Union should remain in pilot status.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/216 of 22 December, endorsed the principles and guidelines for appointments of limited duration and the related ICSC decisions.

Geographical distribution

The Secretary-General, in a February report [A/51/705/Add.1], submitted his response to the JIU report on methods of calculating equitable geographical distribution within the UN system [YUN 1996, p. 1326]. He shared the Inspectors' view that the ideas expressed in the report should prepare the groundwork for further discussions and progress on the matter of managing geographical distribution. He also concurred with the emphasis on the importance of a system-wide coordination of efforts to implement the principle of geographical distribution. However, the Secretary-General felt that consideration should be given to increasing the weight of the demographic factor to a level to be agreed upon by Member States and that any new system of desirable ranges should be flexible and meet a number of operational requirements. The proposals regarding the introduction of a new post-weighting principle should be examined at the technical and political levels, as changing the existing methodology would involve far-reaching modifications of quotas and desirable ranges. Furthermore, any principle adopted should not confront the Secretariat with a more rigid system that did not lend itself to practical implementation.

As to the recommendation regarding the application of equitable geographical distribution to smaller organizations within the common system, the Secretary-General welcomed it in principle but pointed out that there might be some impediments to its actual implementation, since many staff members in smaller organizations had permanent appointments and, staff members on fixed-term appointments were entitled to consideration for a career appointment after five years of continuous good service.

Performance appraisal system

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/226 of 3 April 1997, requested the Secretary-General to report at its resumed fifty-first session on the findings of the review of the first cycle of the performance appraisal system (PAS), which had been formally established in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1416]. The Assembly expressed concern that delays in the completion of performance appraisal reports had an adverse effect on staff members being considered for promotion and requested the Secretary-General to ensure that managers were held accountable for such delays. He was also asked to utilize PAS to foster staff-management dialogue, including the identification of staff development and career opportunities.

Responding to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General submitted a 4 August report

[A/C.5/51/55], describing the objectives of the system, its development and training, implementation status and feedback and proposed modifications.

PAS implementation commenced in 22 departments and offices throughout the Secretariat in 1996. Delays in some departments were due to financial measures instituted in 1995, ongoing restructuring and changes in leadership. Monitoring reports indicated that the majority of departments and offices had completed end-of-year appraisals or were in the process of doing so. Terms of reference had been established for the three monitoring bodies—the departmental Management Review Committees, the Joint Monitoring Committees and the Global Joint Monitoring Committees. At the end of the first full year of implementation, feedback was sought from managers, as well as from staff associations, Secretariat-wide, including during the twenty-first session of the Staff Management Coordination Committee, held in June 1997.

In general, feedback indicated that while the value of the PAS was recognized, significant obstacles had been encountered, particularly the processes, which were perceived to be complex and burdensome. However, the experience had served to focus attention and to promote discussion of the principles of performance management and of individual and managerial accountability. Therefore, while recognizing the sound principles on which the system was based, significant improvements were recommended, including: reduction of steps in the process; clearly written forms and guidelines that would be made available in English, French and Spanish; development of a user-friendly electronic version; development of a performance management handbook with guidance in setting goals for varied categories; change in the planning cycle from one to two years, with mid-year reviews every six months and yearly appraisals; using the existing narratives "fully meets expectations" and "frequently exceeds expectations" for appraisals rather than numerical ratings; introduction of incentives and rewards linked to PAS (see below); strengthening links between staff development, career support and PAS; and enhancement of training for managers and supervisors to strengthen skills in team building, work planning and provision of feedback and appraisal.

The Assembly, by decision 51/469 B of 15 September, requested the Secretary-General to submit an evaluation of PAS in 1998.

Performance management

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], ICSC undertook an in-depth review of performance management in the United Nations, noting the principles and associated guidelines it had developed in 1994. The Commission was of the view that the recognition of superior performance by whatever means (cash or non-cash awards) could not be seen in isolation from ongoing improvement of performance at all levels. Therefore, as important as the institution of bonus/award schemes, was the establishment of an environment in which learning, innovation and creativity were encouraged and nurtured, as well as the management of the minority of staff who were not making an effective contribution.

ICSC, noting that different organizational strategies and cultures called for a flexible approach to performance management, decided that its 1994 recommendations on cash awards should be replaced by a system in which: cash awards did not exceed 10 per cent of the mid-point of the base/floor salary for Professional staff and 10 per cent of the mid-point of the net salary for General Service staff; performance awards and bonuses should not be payable to more than 30 per cent of the workforce and non-cash awards should be subsumed within the ceiling, with symbolic awards, letters of appreciation and the like being considered in addition to the ceiling; the amounts should be differentiated according to performance level, with higher amounts payable to those rated as outstanding; the overall cost of the programme should not exceed 1.5 per cent of projected remuneration costs; and the basis for determining an award should be the ratings derived from PAS. The Commission also decided that any pay-based approach to performance recognition should be introduced on a pilot basis. To complement its 1994 recommendations on underperformance, ICSC requested organizations to present biennial reports on their performance management schemes, including cash awards, using a format to be developed by the ICSC secretariat, which would complete and circulate to organizations and staff a portfolio of best practice in performance management.

The Secretary-General, in response to Assembly resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], submitted an October report [A/52/439] on a system of performance awards and bonuses. He said that the introduction of performance management was a key part of his human resource management strategy, of which PAS was an important tool. The Secretary-General emphasized that, while the recognition of individual meritorious performance and special achievements was essential, the pursuit and recognition of overall enhanced performance, including managerial performance, efficiency and staff motivation, should continue to take precedence. Optimizing organizational and individual performance required the establishment of an effective performance management system. The introduction of PAS was a significant step in that direction; however, it was still in its initial stage and was not yet in a position to support a system of monetary awards. The Secretary-General therefore proposed a step-by-step approach, in full consultation with staff. While working to firmly institutionalize PAS, the Organization should begin introducing a range of non-monetary awards for individuals and teams, in line with those suggested by ICSC. In addition, steps should be taken to deal with underperformance. It was important that development of performance awards and bonuses should not be considered as a substitute for fair and adequate compensation and salary levels, which would ensure competitive conditions of service, enabling the United Nations to attract and retain staff of the highest calibre.

Family leave programme

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/226 (see above), requested the Secretary-General to develop a family leave programme for UN staff without creating supplementary leave entitlements and to report to the Assembly as soon as possible. In October [A/52/438], the Secretary-General stated that approaches taken by the comparator (the United States civil service) and the World Bank had been reviewed, as had previous discussions in ICSC and the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions. The Staff-Management Coordination Committee recommended several provisions, which the Secretary-General endorsed, including: use of uncertified sick leave within current provisions up to a maximum of seven days to attend to family-related emergencies, or for paternity leave in case of birth or adoption of a child; authorization of partial conversion of maternity leave to paternity leave in dual-career families where both parents were staff members; inclusion of a provision authorizing special leave without pay as parental leave for up to two years, possibly extended for an additional two years in exceptional circumstances, with all guarantees of reabsorption; and inclusion of a provision allowing staff special unpaid leave, including travel time, in the case of the death of an immediate family member, or of a serious family emergency. None of those provisions would apply to staff appointed under the 200 series who were not entitled to uncertified sick leave.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/739], adopted resolution 52/219 without vote [agenda item 153].

Human resources management

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on a family leave programme, on the implementation of the performance appraisal system, on a system of performance awards or bonuses and on amendments to the Staff Rules,

I. Family leave programme

Recalling paragraph 3 of section III.C of its resolution 51/226 of 3 April 1997, in which it requested the Secretary-General to develop a family leave programme for United Nations staff without creating supplementary leave entitlements, and to report thereon to the General Assembly as soon as possible,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Approves the recommendations of the Secretary-General in relation to the family leave programme, as contained in paragraph 12 of his report;

H. Implementation of the performance appraisal system

Having reviewed the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the performance appraisal system and the relevant section of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to refine and simplify the performance appraisal system, in particular its administrative aspects;
3. Reiterates that it is important that the performance appraisal system be implemented consistently throughout the Secretariat so as to achieve an effective and fair performance management and staff development tool, and requests the Secretary-General to monitor the application of the system and to report thereon to the General Assembly;

III. System of performance awards or bonuses

Having reviewed the report of the Secretary-General on a system of performance awards or bonuses,

1. Approves, and urges the Secretary-General to adopt a step-by-step approach to, the introduction, in full consultation with the staff, of a system of performance awards or bonuses, taking into account the comments and recommendations of the International Civil Service Commission on this matter, as contained in its report;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to keep under review the introduction of the system of performance awards or bonuses and to report to the General Assembly, in accordance with the step-by-step approach, at its fifty-third session;
3. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session for decision policy proposals to deal systematically and effectively with underperformance, taking into account the comments and recommendations made by the Commission in paragraph 213 of its report;

IV. Amendments to staff rules

Having reviewed the report of the Secretary-General on amendments to the Staff Rules,

Takes note of the amendments to the 100 and 200 series of the Staff Rules contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

V. Implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/226

1. Decides that the restrictions contained in paragraph 26 of section III.B of resolution 51/226, which preclude staff appointed for less than one year against regular budget posts or extrabudgetary posts of one year or longer from applying for or being appointed to their current post within six months of the end of their current service, shall apply to staff appointed after 3 April 1997 only;

2. Decides also that persons eligible to be considered for internal vacancies within the Secretariat after twelve months of service, as provided for in paragraph 27 of section III.B of resolution 51/226, shall be staff appointed in the Professional category or above under the 100 or 300 series of the Staff Rules to serve against peacekeeping support account posts at Headquarters or in peacekeeping or other field missions, and decides further that such eligibility shall be limited to vacant posts at the P-4 level and above;

3. Decides to continue consideration of the note by the Secretariat on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/226, as well as the application of the provisions of the preceding paragraphs, at the first part of its resumed fifty-second session.

Also on 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/456, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of human resources management at the resumed (1998) fifty-second session.

Gratis personnel

In a February report [A/51/813], ACABQ submitted its comments on the Secretary-General's 1996 report on gratis personnel [YUN 1996, p. 1327]. It welcomed the broader approach taken by the Secretary-General on the issue but noted that no mention was made of gratis military services provided for military operations in the field. It pointed out also that there were areas other than those specifically mentioned in General Assembly resolutions where gratis personnel had been accepted by the Secretary-General. ACABQ indicated it would continue to keep under review type I gratis personnel (those found mostly in technical cooperation areas, trust fund activities and programmes funded by voluntary contributions) in the context of its examination of the 1998-1999 proposed programme budget. However, the growth in numbers and scope of type II gratis personnel, who were mainly involved in mandated operations, raised important policy and management issues, including accountability and financial and legal issues. In that regard, ACABQ was of the view that gratis personnel should not be sought for positions kept vacant solely for financial reasons, nor should type II gratis personnel be accepted in excess of the needs of the Organization. Approved positions should be filled in the traditional manner in full compliance with personnel policies and procedures, and type II gratis personnel should be limited to two situations—in cases of urgency, prior to the preparation and/or approval of the budget of a start-up or expanded operation or in the provision of expertise in very specialized functions that were not available in the Secretariat.

ACABQ also recommended that the proposed guidelines annexed to the Secretary-General's report for the acceptance of gratis personnel should be redrafted to reflect its observations and recommendations, and that the draft guidelines should be submitted to the Assembly through ACABQ before administrative instructions were promulgated. The Secretary-General was asked to report annually on the use of gratis personnel, indicating their nationality and summarizing the duration of service and functions. ACABQ further recommended that, following a decision by the Assembly, current arrangements outside the new procedures should be phased out expeditiously.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

In April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/848], adopted decision 51/466 without vote [agenda items 116, 120, 137, 139 & 140].

Gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities

At its 95th plenary meeting, on 3 April 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Decided to defer until the second part of its resumed fifty-first session consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General, on an interim basis, and pending consideration of this question and a final decision thereon:

- (i) Not to expand the number of gratis personnel currently implementing mandated activities mentioned in paragraphs 24 to 40 of his report;
- (ii) In the case of new and/or expanded needs implying urgent requirements for expertise not available within the Organization, to resort to the use of gratis personnel with due regard to the importance of maintaining as wide a geographical basis as possible, for a very limited and specified period, and, in order to ensure transparency, to approach all Member States on the possibility of providing that expertise on a temporary basis;

- (iii) To review the proposed guidelines annexed to his report and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly before 12 May 1997 for its consideration during the second part of its resumed fifty-first session;
- (iv) To update the information provided in his report, including data on the nationality of gratis personnel and detailed descriptions of the functions entrusted to them, and to report on any change in the use of gratis personnel after 31 October 1996 to the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-first session;
- (v) To submit a comprehensive report before 12 May 1997 on the methodology and rate to be applied to the administrative support costs mentioned in paragraphs 51 to 66 of his report, including their legislative basis, and, in the interim, to maintain the status quo in this regard.

In a 6 May report [A/51/688], the Secretary-General outlined the methodology used for, and the level of, the application of administrative support costs. He stated that, since support costs arose with respect to the acceptance of gratis personnel, the difficulty was how much and where to provide for those costs. The question had arisen in relation to type II gratis personnel because voluntary contributions had always been related primarily to supplementary or non-assessed activities, but in the context of type II gratis personnel, voluntary contributions were linked to activities approved by the Assembly in assessed budgets, both regular and peacekeeping. He said that any change in the established policies for acceptance of voluntary contributions and for the charging of administrative support costs related to voluntary contributions, including gratis personnel, would require a decision by the Assembly, which would be dependent on a resolution concerning conditions under which the Secretary-General might accept gratis personnel in the first instance.

The Secretary-General provided information on type I and type II gratis personnel as of 31 March by department/office and nationality [A/51/688/Add.2]. Similar information was also presented for the Department of Peacekeeping Operations. He reported that, between 31 October 1996 and 31 March 1997, there was a net reduction of 30 in the number of gratis personnel. While the number of type I gratis personnel had decreased by 36 (from 238 to 202), the number of type II personnel had increased by 6 (from 328 to 334). He also submitted revised guidelines [A/51/688/Add.3] for the acceptance of gratis personnel.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (September)

On 15 September [meeting 107], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/922/Add.2], adopted resolution 51/243 without vote [agenda item 112].

Gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Expressing serious concern at the impact on the geographical balance in some parts of the Secretariat of the presence of gratis personnel, in particular in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations,

Recognizing that the use of gratis personnel, other than those performing supplementary activities, should be on an exceptional and temporary basis and for specialized functions only,

1. Emphasizes that gratis personnel are not a substitute for staff to be recruited against authorized posts for the implementation of mandated programmes and activities;

2. Reaffirms that the programme of work and mandates approved by Member States must be financed in the manner determined by the General Assembly, based upon proposals of the Secretary-General;

3. Decides that gratis personnel should not be sought for financial reasons;

4. Decides also that the Secretary-General can accept type II gratis personnel only in the following circumstances:

(a) After the approval of a budget, to provide expertise not available within the Organization for very specialized functions, as identified by the Secretary-General, and for a limited and specified period of time;

(b) To provide temporary and urgent assistance in the case of new and/or expanded mandates of the Organization, pending a decision by the General Assembly on the level of resources required to implement those mandates;

5. Decides further, in this regard, that the relevant budget resolutions and procedures relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenditures, peacekeeping operations and tribunals will govern the acceptance of the gratis personnel referred to in paragraph 4 above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on a quarterly basis to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, for appropriate action, on the acceptance of the gratis personnel referred to in paragraph 4 above, with a view to ensuring compliance with the provisions of the present resolution;

7. Emphasizes that the relevant General Assembly resolutions and financial regulations and rules should be fully respected when accepting gratis personnel in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

8. Emphasizes also that it is necessary that fully substantiated and comprehensive proposals on the total requirements from all sources of funding be presented so as to enable the General Assembly to decide on the level of resources required to implement fully all mandated programmes and activities, and requests the Secretary-General to present all future budgets and budget outlines in that manner, in accordance with Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to phase out expeditiously type II gratis personnel who fall outside the scope of paragraph 4 above and to report thereon to the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-second regular session;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to it at the main part of its fifty-second regular session, through the Advisory Committee, for appropriate action, on the methodology to be applied to, and the level of, administrative support costs and, in the interim, to maintain the status quo in this regard;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to revise the draft guidelines set out in his reports on gratis personnel in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution and taking into account the following principles, and to submit them to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, for its approval at the main part of its fifty-second regular session:

(a) Gratis personnel should be subject to the criteria laid down in Article 100 and in paragraphs 1 and 3 of Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations;

(b) In the performance of their duties, gratis personnel should have the same obligations and responsibilities as are applicable to staff members;

(c) Gratis personnel should carry out their functions in accordance with all applicable regulations, rules and procedures of the Organization;

(d) The selection process for gratis personnel should be transparent and conducted on as wide a geographical basis as possible, and, if there is a need for gratis personnel as provided for in the present resolution, all Member States should be informed;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually on the use of gratis personnel, indicating, inter alia, their nationality, the duration of their service and the functions performed;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the consideration by the General Assembly of the question of gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities, to report on the impact of the implementation of paragraphs 4 (b) and 9 above and to submit proposals in this regard to the Assembly at the main part of its fifty-second regular session, through the Advisory Committee, for appropriate action;

14. Decides to consider the question at the main part of its fifty-second regular session.

In response to the Assembly's request in resolution 51/243, the Secretary-General, on 21 November [A/52/709 & Corr.1], submitted revised guidelines for type II gratis personnel, setting out the conditions under which they might be accepted and outlining further conditions for their employ, including selection, functions, duration of functions, status, remuneration, annual leave, standards of conduct, accountability, performance of services, third-party claims and agreement with the United Nations. He also submitted a quarterly report [A/52/699] on the acceptance of type II gratis personnel and his annual report on the use of gratis personnel, both types I and II.

On 8 December [A/52/710], the Secretary-General discussed the phased plan of action to reduce and eliminate to the extent possible the use of gratis personnel in the Secretariat, in response to General Assembly resolution 51/243 of 15 September. He stated that he would ensure that type II gratis personnel were accepted only under the conditions set out in that resolution, while other gratis personnel would be phased out in accordance with the terms of existing agreements. Regarding the impact of the phasing out of type II gratis personnel upon the functioning of the International Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, it had been proposed that functions being performed by such personnel be covered by temporary posts within the 1998 budget proposals, with complete phasing out by 30 June 1998. As for the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, additional posts would be requested under the support account for peacekeeping operations for the period 1 July 1998 to 30 June 1999, following a review and in-depth evaluation of the use of those resources. Because the immediate large-scale withdrawal of such personnel would seriously jeopardize the ability of the Department to carry out its functions, the phasing-out process was to be completed by 31 December 1999.

Staff composition

On 6 November, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report [A/52/580 & Corrs.1-3] on staff composition of the UN Secretariat, by nationality, gender, grade and type of appointment. As at 30 June 1997, the staff totalled 14,136, of whom 8,605 were paid from the regular budget and 5,531 from extrabudgetary sources. There were 4,217 in the Professional category and above, 9,161 in the General Service and related categories and 758 project personnel.

Staff in posts subject to geographical distribution numbered 2,461. As at 30 June, 25 Member States were unrepresented, compared with 23 at 30 June 1996, and 20 were under-represented, compared with 22 the year before. Changes in representation derived not only from staff appointments and separations from service, but also from such factors as adjustments in desirable ranges resulting from an increase or decrease in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution, changes in the number of Member States, variations in assessed contributions or population of individual Member States, and changes in the status of some staff members. The report also provided information on groupings of Member States, representation of developing and other countries among staff at the senior levels, representation of women and recruitment activities.

Between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1997, 93 appointments were made to posts subject to geographical distribution. Of those, 1 (1.1 per cent) was a national of an unrepresented Member State; 15 (16.1 per cent) were nationals of under-represented Member States; 66 (77.1 per cent) of within-range Member States; and 11 (11.8 per cent) of over-represented Member States.

Status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/226, section III C, of 3 April (see above), decided to consider, within the context of the proposed budget for the 1998-1999 biennium, the structure and source of funding for the Focal Point for Women and requested the Secretary-General to make proposals for ensuring that the appropriate level of resources was commensurate with its mandate. It further requested him to take measures to allow the mandate of the Focal Point to be fulfilled. In addition, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue to create a gender-sensitive work environment and to develop a family leave programme for UN staff.

In a 26 February report [E/CN.6/1997/7] to the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X), the Secretary-General provided statistics and described developments that had taken place. He said that, in spite of the recruitment freeze, the percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution had made a slight gain. Since assuming office as Secretary-General, he had stated his commitment to the mainstreaming of a gender perspective in all policies and programmes and had appointed a Special Adviser on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women.

In a 30 September report [A/52/408], the Secretary-General provided statistics as at 30 June 1997 and described measures undertaken to achieve gender equality in the Secretariat. The percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution stood at 36.6, compared to 25.7 in 1987, an increase of 11.1 per cent. However, only 1 of the 18 Under-Secretaries-General was a woman and only 2 of the 12 Assistant Secretaries-General were female. In 1997, 20 per cent of the D-2 posts were women, compared with 19.7 per cent the previous year. At the D-1 and P-5 levels, the percentages were 22 and 33, respectively, compared with 19.3 and 27.8 in 1996.

The Secretary-General said that strategies to ensure that the gains made with regard to gender balance were preserved and strengthened continued to be implemented throughout the Secretariat. However, policies and mechanisms to translate commitment into practice needed further refinement to provide managers and staff with more effective tools for achieving and monitoring the established goals. A policy to ensure the achievement of gender balance required the strengthening of three areas: recruitment and promotion, monitoring and accountability, and the retention of women. He recommended that at least 50 percent of all recruitment in the Professional category should be women in all categories of posts, irrespective of type and duration of appointment; where there was no pool of viable internal women candidates, executive searches should be undertaken for all posts at the D-1 and D-2 levels; OHRM should maintain a skill database of all staff and build a pool of women candidates for senior-level positions; and in the selection of candidates for temporary assignment to encumbered higher posts, due regard should be given to the need to broaden the experience of women staff members. The Secretary-General also recommended that heads of departments should have primary responsibility for ensuring gender balance in their departments and offices, and that they inform OHRM of every vacancy foreseen six months in advance to ensure a timely search for female candidates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/52/637], adopted resolution 52/96 without vote [agenda item 105].

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as Article 8, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling also the goal, contained in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, of the achievement of overall gender equality, particularly at the Professional level and above, by the year 2000,

Recalling further its resolution 51/67 of 12 December 1996 and section C of its resolution 51/226 of 3 April 1997 on the status of women in the Secretariat,

Welcoming the achievement of the interim goal set in its resolution 45/125 of 14 December 1990 of a 35 per cent overall participation rate of women in posts subject to geographical distribution,

Concerned that the interim goal set in its resolution 45/239 C of 21 December 1990 of a 25 per cent participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above is still far from being achieved and that the representation of women at that level remains unacceptably low,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

2. Reaffirms the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 in all categories of posts within the United Nations system, especially at the D-1 level and above, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, and also taking into account the lack of representation or underrepresentation of women from certain countries, in particular from developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition;

3. Welcomes the personal commitment of the Secretary-General to meeting that goal and his assurance that gender balance will be given the highest priority in his continuing efforts to bring about a new management culture in the Organization;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to implement fully and to monitor the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) in order to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000, especially at the D-1 level and above;

5. Encourages the Secretary-General to appoint more women as special representatives and envoys and to pursue good offices on his behalf in matters related to peacekeeping, preventive diplomacy and economic and social development, as well as to appoint more women to other high-level positions;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that individual managers are held accountable for implementing the strategic plan within their areas of responsibility;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his work to create a gender-sensitive work environment supportive of the needs of his staff, both women and men, including through the development of policies for flexible working time, workplace possibilities, family leave, childcare and elder-care needs, as well as through training, particularly at senior levels, and the implementation of all appropriate administrative procedures, in particular the special measures outlined in his report, and through further development of a policy against sexual harassment;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to enable the Focal Point for Women in the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women to effectively monitor and facilitate progress on the implementation of the strategic plan, including by ensuring access to the information required to carry out that work;

9. Strongly encourages Member States to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and regularly submitting more women candidates and encouraging more women to apply for those positions within the Secretariat, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution, including by providing statistics on the number and percentage of women in all organizational units and at all levels throughout the United Nations system, to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-second session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Multilingualism

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 50/11 [YUN 1995, p. 1416], submitted a 6 November report [A/52/577] on efforts to promote multilingualism in the Secretariat. He said that he was committed to promoting the learning by staff of all official and working languages of the Secretariat and to ensuring adequate human and financial resources for doing so. He described the language training opportunities provided at Headquarters and all duty stations and the monetary incentives offered to staff to encourage the learning and use of official languages. The Secretary-General stated that the national competitive examination could be taken in either of the two working languages (English and French) and, for certain posts, specific language requirements were included as a job specification in the vacancy announcement. Linguistic proficiency was also one of the criteria used in the selection, assignment or promotion of staff. The end of the freeze of vacant posts in April had allowed management to resume the recruitment of translators. A programme was also in place for the further training of translators after recruitment, and translators were given the opportunity throughout their careers to expand or improve their language skills. The Secretariat also applied strictly the simultaneous distribution of documents in all official languages, including the electronic versions, which became accessible at the same time in all languages immediately following the release of their hard-copy equivalents. Interpretation services and conference facilities were accorded to regional and other groupings on an "as available" basis. Interpretation service was also provided on the same basis for other informal meetings, such as briefings for delegations and bodies. Meanwhile, the Dag Hammarskjöld Library continued to recognize and respond to the need for an equitable representation of and access to information in all the official languages of the Organization. The promotion of multilingualism remained an organizational imperative.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 November [meeting 55], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/23 [draft: A/52/L.35 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 23].

Multilingualism

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 50/11 of 2 November 1995 on multilingualism,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-fourth session a comprehensive report on the implementation of resolution 50/11;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Multilingualism".

On 22 December, the Assembly, in resolution 52/220, requested the Secretary-General to deploy all necessary human and financial resources to maintain the teaching at all levels of the official and working languages of the Secretariat and to maintain the training of the Organization's translators and revisers.

Staff rules and regulations

In November [A/52/574], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly amendments to the Staff Rules under the 100 series, amending the mobility and hardship allowance to reflect the terms of resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], which set a five-year limit on payment of the non-removal element at one duty station, with a possible extension of two years in exceptional circumstances. Another amendment dealt with special leave requested by staff members and sick leave modifications. Maternity leave was also revised.

Amendments to rules in the 200 series concerned the mobility and hardship allowance and special leave without pay on the death of a family member or in time of serious family emergency. Other amendments related to the cancellation of the group life insurance plan effective 1 February 1998 to ensure that staff in the 200 series participated in the same scheme as those serving under the 100 series; revised medical care entitlements to conform to existing terms for staff in the 100 series; and changes in special and maternity leave to apply the amendments enumerated above to staff in the 200 series.

The General Assembly, in resolution 52/219, section IV, took note of the amendments to the 100 and 200 series of the Staff Rules.

Code of Conduct

In his proposals for United Nations reform announced in January (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), the Secretary-General said that the commitment to excellence from managers and staff included adherence to the highest standards of conduct. In that regard, he announced that a draft Code of Conduct had been completed and was to be reviewed by staff representatives before submission to the General Assembly.

In October, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly his proposals for implementing the UN Code of Conduct [A/52/488] through revisions to article I of the Staff Regulations and the related changes he intended to make to chapter I of the Staff Rules. The provisions contained in those Regulations and Rules would govern the conduct and performance of staff, ensure their accountability, set forth in concrete terms their rights and obligations, and would apply to all UN staff members without exception.

The Code of Conduct was divided in four parts. The first reiterated provisions from the Charter and the 1946 Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, contained in Assembly resolution 22 A (I) [YUN 1946-47, p. 100]; the second dealt with the status of UN staff; the third dealt with the core values expected from international civil servants and set out the basic rights and obligations of staff; and the fourth dealt with expected performance to ensure that staff were accountable for their performance and provided that learning and development programmes would be made available to staff.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/12 B of 19 December, noted that the Secretary-General had submitted the draft Code of Conduct for United Nations Staff and agreed to expedite its consideration.

Privileges and immunities

In 1997, the issue of privileges and immunities of UN personnel, including attacks on them in peacekeeping and humanitarian operations, was considered by the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. In his report on the work of the Organization [A/52/1], the Secretary-General drew the attention of Member States to growing threats to the security of UN staff. He said that events over the past five years had exposed UN staff to an exponential increase in risks and deliberate violence. Since 1 September 1996, 21 civilian staff members had lost their lives in the performance of their duties. Hostage-taking continued to be a threat, while those detained or missing were of equal concern as well as those who had been attacked, harassed, injured, beaten or raped. Adequate funds had to be found for measures to ensure the safety of UN personnel.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 12 March [meeting 3750], the Security Council met to consider the issue of attacks on UN personnel. Following consultations among its members, the President made the following statement [S/PRST/1997/13] on behalf of the Council:

The Security Council recalls its resolution 868(1993) and expresses its grave concern at the recent increase in attacks and the use of force against United Nations and other personnel associated with United Nations operations, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations, including murder, physical and psychological threats, hostage-taking, shooting at vehicles and aircraft, mine-laying, looting of assets and other hostile acts. The Council is also gravely concerned at attacks on and violations of United Nations premises. The Council is concerned that these attacks and the use of force have in some instances been carried out by certain groups with the deliberate goal of disrupting negotiating processes and international peacekeeping activities and hampering humanitarian access.

The Council reiterates its condemnation of such acts. It emphasizes the unacceptability of any acts endangering the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations. The Council urges all Member States and others concerned to prevent and bring to an end all such acts. It stresses that the perpetrators of such acts bear responsibility for their actions and should be prosecuted.

The Council reaffirms the importance of ensuring the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel as well as the inviolability of United Nations premises, which are essential to the continuation and successful implementation of United Nations operations. In this context, it emphasizes that the host country and others concerned must take all appropriate steps to ensure the safety and security of United Nations personnel and premises. It reiterates that the cooperation of all Member States and others concerned is indispensable for the mandates of United Nations operations to be carried out and demands that they respect fully the status of United Nations and associated personnel.

The Council supports all efforts effectively to promote and protect the safety and security of United Nations and associated personnel. In this context, the Council recalls the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1994.

The Council pays tribute to all military, police and civilian staff of the United Nations and other personnel associated with United Nations operations, as well as personnel of international humanitarian organizations, for their courageous efforts to achieve peace and to alleviate the suffering of the people living in conflict areas.

In a statement of 19 June [S/PRST/1997/34], the Council called on parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted in Assembly resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289], to ensure the safety and security of UN personnel as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations and encouraged States to consider ways to strengthen their protection.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

At its resumed fifty-first session, the General Assembly considered the 1996 report [YUN 1996, p. 1332] of ACC on privileges and immunities of UN officials and their security and safety for the period 1 July 1995 to 30 June 1996.

On 3 April [meeting 95], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/

643/Add.2], adopted resolution 51/227 without vote [agenda item 120].

Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, under Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, all officials of the Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization,

Also recalling that, under Article 100 of the Charter, each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities,

Further recalling the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies, the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Development Programme Standard Basic Assistance Agreements,

Stressing that respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies is becoming even more imperative owing to the growing number of assignments entrusted by Member States to the organizations of the United Nations system,

Recalling its resolution 76 (I) of 7 December 1946, in which it approved the granting of the privileges and immunities referred to in articles V and VII of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations to all members of the staff of the United Nations, with the exception of those who are recruited locally and are assigned to hourly rates,

Also recalling its resolution 43/173 of 9 December 1988, to which is annexed the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, including the principle that all persons under arrest or detention shall be provided whenever necessary with medical care and treatment,

Reiterating the obligation of all officials of the Organization in the conduct of their duties to observe fully both the laws and regulations of Member States and their duties and responsibilities to the Organization,

Mindful of the responsibility of the Secretary-General to safeguard the functional immunity of all United Nations officials,

Mindful also of the importance in this respect of the immediate provision by Member States of adequate information concerning the arrest and detention of staff members and, more particularly, of their granting access to them,

Bearing in mind the responsibility of the Secretary-General to guarantee appropriate standards of justice and due process to United Nations officials,

Recalling the relevant conventions and also its resolution 49/59 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, and its resolution 51/137 of 13 December 1996,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations, as well as their security and safety, and of the statement made to the Fifth Committee by the United Nations Security Coordinator on 15 October 1996;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation to United Nations personnel, including those engaged in peacekeeping and humanitarian operations and locally recruited staff, for their efforts to contribute to achieving peace and security and to alleviating the suffering of the people living in areas of conflict;

3. Deplores the risks confronting United Nations personnel, including those engaged in peacekeeping and humanitarian operations and locally recruited staff;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session a report on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations as well as their security and safety;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to pay special attention to Member States' restrictions, which may impede the ability of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations to carry out their functions, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/247 of 22 July, took note of resolution 1997/25 of 11 April of the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter II) and endorsed its request to the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the situation of United Nations and other personnel who were imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, on new cases that had been successfully settled and on the implementation of measures referred to in the Commission's resolution. He was also asked to commission a study on the safety and security problems faced by UN personnel.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to the Assembly's request, the Secretary-General submitted a 24 September report [A/C.5/52/2] on behalf of and with the approval of ACC containing updated information about respect for the privileges and immunities of officials, as well as their security and safety, for the period 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. The Secretary-General said that 22 civilian staff members of different UN organizations and agencies had lost their lives in the performance of their duties during the period, while others were subject to attack, injury, abuse, harassment and rape. In view of the deteriorating security situation, it had become necessary to relocate and even evacuate dependants and/or staff from Burundi, the Central African Republic, all locations in the former Zaïre (Democratic Republic of the Congo), the Republic of the Congo, Sierra Leone and Tajikistan. To further improve staff security and security management in the field, the UN Security Coordinator convened an ad hoc inter-agency meeting on security (Rome, 6-8 May) to review the security measures that continued to be of concern (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV). The arrest and detention of staff members continued to be a major issue throughout the reporting period, particularly in Rwanda where numerous locally recruited staff members continued to be detained. Arrests and detentions of staff members of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East had declined.

The report also discussed the issue of taxation of UN officials by host countries and restrictions on their local travel.

The Secretary-General, responding to Economic and Social Council decision 1997/247, submitted a 30 October report [A/52/548 & Corr.1] on the situation of UN personnel and their families. There were still 98 unresolved cases of staff members detained, imprisoned, missing or presumed dead. One staff member, held hostage in Indonesia since January 1996, was released in May of that year. Since 1992, 131 UN staff members had died while performing their duties, 68 of whom died of gunshot wounds although no one had yet been indicted or brought to trial. From 1 January to 1 March 1997, there were nine fatal casualties. Between January 1994 and 11 March 1997, 35 abductions and hostage-takings took place.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December [meeting 70], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/52/644/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/126 without vote [agenda item 112 (b)].

Protection of United Nations personnel

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/137 of 13 December 1996 and 51/227 of 3 April 1997, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/25 of 11 April 1997,

Mindful that, owing to the growing number of assignments entrusted to the United Nations system by Member States, special attention for the safety and security of United Nations and other personnel acting under the authority of United Nations operations is required,

Gravely concerned at the recent increase in attacks and the use of force against United Nations and other personnel acting under the authority of United Nations operations, including murder, physical and psychological threats, hostage-taking, shooting at vehicles and aircraft, mine-laying, looting of assets and other hostile acts, and, in that context, welcoming the statement by the President of the Security Council on 12 March 1997 on the security of United Nations operations,

Guided by the relevant principles on protection contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,

Noting that since its adoption on 9 December 1994, only forty-three Member States have signed the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel and only fourteen have ratified it,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of United Nations personnel and their families and of the developments indicated therein;

2. Urges all States:

(a) To respect and ensure respect for the human rights of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation and to take the necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of those personnel, as well as the inviolability of United Nations premises, which are essential to the continuation and successful implementation of United Nations operations;

(b) To ensure the speedy release of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation who have been arrested or detained in violation of their immunity, in accordance with the relevant above-mentioned conventions and applicable international humanitarian law;

3. Calls upon all States:

(a) To consider becoming parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

(b) To provide adequate and prompt information concerning the arrest or detention of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation;

(c) To grant the representative of the competent international organization immediate and unconditional access to such personnel;

(d) To allow independent medical teams to investigate the health of detained United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation and to afford them the necessary medical assistance;

(e) To allow representatives of the competent international organization concerned to attend hearings involving United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation, provided that such attendance is consistent with domestic law;

4. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take the necessary measures to ensure full respect for the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation and to ensure, when those human rights, privileges and immunities are violated, that such personnel are restored to their organization and, where appropriate, to seek redress and compensation for the damage caused to them;

(b) To consider ways and means, until the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated

Personnel has entered into force, to strengthen the protection of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation, notably by seeking the inclusion, in negotiations of headquarters and other mission agreements concerning United Nations and associated personnel, of the applicable conditions contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

(c) To take the necessary measures, falling within his responsibilities, to ensure that security matters are an integrated part of the planning for an operation and that such precautions extend to all United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation;

(d) To take the necessary measures to ensure that United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation are properly informed and suitably trained so as to enhance their security and effectiveness in accomplishing their functions;

(e) To take the necessary measures to ensure that United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation are properly informed about the scope of that mandate and the standards, including those contained in relevant domestic and international law, they are required to meet;

(f) To make available to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session the independent study that was requested at its fifty-third session on the safety and security problems faced by United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation;

(g) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the situation of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation who are imprisoned, missing or held in a country against their will, on cases that have been successfully settled and on the implementation of the measures referred to in the present resolution.

On 16 December [meeting 73], the Assembly adopted resolution 52/167 [draft: A/52/L.45/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 20].

Safety and security of humanitarian personnel

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations,

Deeply concerned by the growing number of complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, in the last few years, which have dramatically increased the loss of human lives, suffering of victims, flows of refugees and internally displaced persons, as well as material destruction, which disrupt the development efforts of countries affected, particularly those of developing countries,

Conscious of the need for the international community to assist and protect the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons, in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations,

Conscious also of the great importance of humanitarian and other recovery and rehabilitation assistance in post-conflict situations, the voluntary return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons, the return to civilian life of former combatants and the re-establishment of respect for human rights, the need to ensure a smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and the promotion of economic and social development,

Taking note of the statement by the President of the Security Council of 19 June 1997, and the views expressed during the open debate at the 3778th meeting of the Security Council on 21 May 1997, on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations,

Noting the role that a permanent international criminal court could play in bringing to justice those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law, and commending in this respect resolution 51/207 of 17 December 1996 on the establishment of a permanent international criminal court,

Aware that humanitarian operations are generally implemented through close cooperation among Governments and the United Nations, its agencies, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations,

Commending the courage of those who take part in humanitarian operations, often at great personal risk,

Deploping the rising toll of casualties among humanitarian personnel in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, as well as the physical violence and harassment to which those participating in humanitarian operations are too frequently exposed,

1. Strongly stresses the urgent need to ensure respect for and promotion of principles and norms of international humanitarian law, including those related to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel, both international and local;

2. Strongly condemns any act or failure to act which obstructs or prevents humanitarian personnel from discharging their humanitarian functions, or which entails their being subjected to threats, the use of force or physical attack frequently resulting in injury or death;

3. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, in countries where humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

4. Calls upon all Governments and parties in countries where humanitarian personnel are operating to take all possible measures to ensure that the lives and well-being of humanitarian personnel are respected and protected;

5. Reaffirms the necessity for all humanitarian personnel to respect the national laws of the countries in which they are operating;

6. Urges all States to ensure that any threat or act of violence committed against humanitarian personnel on their territory is fully investigated and to take all appropriate measures, in accordance with international law and national legislation, to ensure that the perpetrators of such acts are prosecuted;

7. Welcomes the opportunity to discuss the respect for and security of humanitarian personnel at the First Periodical Meeting on International Humanitarian Law, to be held at Geneva in January 1998, and invites all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 to take an active part in that meeting;

8. Encourages all States to become parties to and to fully respect the provisions of the relevant international instruments, including the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994,

9. Requests the Secretary-General to present a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the safety and security situation of all humanitarian personnel and measures to be taken to improve it, taking into account the views of Governments, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, other relevant humanitarian actors, as well as the United Nations Security Coordinator.

Travel-related matters

At the resumed fifty-first session, the Fifth Committee had before it the 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 1075] and 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1237] reports of the Secretary-General on the review of the travel and related entitlements for members of organs, subsidiary organs and staff members of the United Nations; the 1992 report of the Secretary-General on the granting of travel assistance to least developed and other developing countries that were members of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law [YUN 1992, p. 1075]; the 1995 report of the Secretary-General on lump-sum options for travel by air in lieu of provision by the Organization of travel tickets and related entitlements on home leave, education grant and family visits [YUN 1995, p. 1421]; two 1996 reports of the Secretary-General on standards of accommodation for air travel [YUN 1996, p. 1339]; and the 1995 JIU report on efficiency and travel cost [YUN 1995, p. 1422], together with related comments of the Secretary-General and those of ACC and ACABQ [YUN 1996, p. 1339].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 April [meeting 95], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/750/Add.1], adopted decision 51/465 without vote [agenda item 116].

Travel and related expenses

At its 95th plenary meeting, on 3 April 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on standards of travel and other entitlements and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

(b) Took note also of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit, as well as the comments of the Secretary-General and the Administrative Committee on Coordination thereon;

(c) Requested the International Civil Service Commission to review, at the earliest opportunity, taking into account the relevant reports of the Advisory Committee and the Joint Inspection Unit, the question of travel entitlements of staff of the United Nations common system and to report thereon to the General Assembly during the next part of its resumed fifty-first session.

In response to the Assembly's request, ICSC reviewed the travel entitlements of staff of the UN common system. It considered the continuing need for certain travel allowances and policies, in particular the rule permitting business class travel if scheduled flying time exceeded a certain number of hours, stopovers and rest periods, and the supplemental daily assistance allowance. It also examined whether the lump-sum option for home leave was reasonable.

The Commission reported to the Assembly that, because of the diverse mandates and different travel programmes and requirements of the organizations, it was neither desirable nor feasible to impose a uniform approach. Travel policy should be left to the legislative/governing bodies and heads of individual organizations. However, broad guidance could be provided to ensure greater uniformity of travel standards. In that regard, ICSC considered that for flights of six or more hours it was reasonable to consider upgrading from economy to business class; the duration of flight should be defined as the scheduled flying time, including refueling stops or the time required to change planes; and the practice regarding stopovers for journeys of 10 (or 12) hours should be discontinued on the understanding that staff members would be allowed a rest stop of no less than 24 hours upon reaching their destination. The Commission decided to resume consideration of issues related to the daily subsistence allowance, travel and home leave and family visits at a later date.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/216 of 22 December (see above), noted the observations of ICSC and invited it to continue to consider the question.

UN Joint Staff Pension Fund

During 1997, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) decreased from 67,997 to 67,740, or by 0.037 per cent; the number of periodic benefits in award increased from 41,433 to 43,149, or by 4.1 per cent. On 31 December, the breakdown of the periodic benefits in award was as follows: 13,803 retirement benefits, 8,587 early retirement benefits, 6,338 deferred retirement benefits, 6,214 widows' and widowers' benefits, 7,391 children's benefits, 768 disability benefits and 48 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 5,962 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were made.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which did not meet in 1997 due to the biennialization of the work of the Fifth Committee. Instead, its Standing Committee met on behalf of the Pension Board (New York, 30 June-2 July) and issued a report [A/52/278] on a number of matters related to the administration and operation of the Fund, revised budget estimates for the 1996-1997 biennium, budget estimates for the 1998-1999 biennium and the authorization for contributions to the Emergency Fund.

ACABQ, on 23 October [A/52/519], submitted its comments on the Standing Committee's report. It recommended that the appropriations for the Fund's administrative expenses be approved in the amounts of $45,426,800 for 1996-1997 and $50,069,500 for 1998-1999. The Emergency Fund for the 1998-1999 biennium would amount to $200,000. The General Assembly acted on those recommendations in December (see below).

Pension Fund investments

The market value of UNJSPF assets as at 31 December was $18,526 million, an increase of $1,613 million over the previous year. The total investment return for the year was 10 per cent, which, after adjusting for inflation, represented a "real" rate of return of 8.1 per cent. Investment income from interest and dividends amounted to $618 million in 1997. New funds that became available for investment (contributions plus investment income, less benefit payments and administrative expenses) totalled $857 million. The Fund's investment income during the biennium amounted to $1,655,924,487, comprising $1,227,887,984 in interest and dividends and $428,036,503 in net profit on sales of investments. After deduction of investment management costs amounting to $29,883,419, net investment income was $1,626,041,068.

The Fund remained one of the most diversified pension funds in the world, with a portion of its assets exposed to currencies other than the United States dollar, which was the Fund's unit of account.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744], adopted resolution 52/222, section V, without vote [agenda item 116].

Administrative Expenses of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

[The General Assembly . . .]

Having considered the report of the Standing Committee of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Concurs with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the administrative expenses of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

2. Approves expenses, chargeable directly to the Fund, totalling 50,069,500 dollars net for the biennium 1998-1999 and an increase in expenses of 4,031,300 dollars net for the biennium 1996-1997, for the administration of the Fund;

3. Also approves an addition to the regular budget of the United Nations for the biennium 1998-1999 in the amount of 2,224,900 dollars for the United Nations share of mainframe computer services utilized by the Fund and an amount of 108,600 dollars to be added to the United Nations share of the costs of external audit of the Fund;

4. Authorizes the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to supplement the voluntary contributions to the Emergency Fund for the biennium 1998-1999 by an amount not exceeding 73,000 dollars, so that the resources available to the Emergency Fund for the biennium 1998-1999 would amount to 200,000 dollars after taking into account a voluntary contribution received by the Fund as a bequest from a retired participant;

Admission of the International Seabed Authority

The General Assembly, by decision 52/402 of 24 November, agreed to an 18 September request [A/52/233 & Add.1] of Jamaica, later joined by Guyana, to include the item on the admission of the International Seabed Authority to membership of UNJSPF in the agenda of the Assembly.

Jamaica, in an explanatory memorandum, recalled that the International Seabed Authority, with headquarters in Jamaica, was an autonomous international organization established under the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea [YUN 1982, p. 178]. In 1996, the Assembly of the Authority had decided that it would be in its own interest to join UNJSPF and had requested its Secretary-General to apply for membership. The Standing Committee of the UNJSPF Board had also agreed to recommend its admission with effect from 1 January 1998.

On 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/458, approved the admission of the International Seabed Authority to membership in UNJSPF, in accordance with Article 3 of the Regulations of the Fund, with effect from 1 January 1998.

Administration of justice

In its annual note [A/INF/52/5] to the General Assembly, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal reported that it had delivered 60 judgments during the year. They related to cases brought by staff against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other UN bodies to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related issues and regulations.

The Tribunal met in plenary in New York on 24 November and held two panel sessions (Geneva, 30 June-1 August; New York, 27 October-26 November).

Reform of the internal justice system

The Secretary-General, in a 9 September note [A/52/142], requested that the item "Amendment to article 13 of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal" be included in the provisional agenda of the fifty-second session of the General Assembly. In an explanatory memorandum of 17 September [A/52/142/Add.1], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that he had received a letter from the President of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), which stated that, in the Court's review of the existing appeals system, it had been noted that in Assembly resolution 50/54 [YUN 1995, p. 1422] the procedure for ICJ review of Administrative Tribunal judgments had been abolished.

When ICJ decided to modify the appeals system currently available to the staff of its Registry to permit them to appeal to the Administrative Tribunal, it had adopted an amendment to article 11 of the Staff Regulations for the Registry. As the statute of the Tribunal did not provide for the exercise of its competence in respect of the staff of the Registry, the amendment was subject to modification by the Assembly. Therefore, an amendment to article 11 of the Tribunal's statute was submitted to the Assembly for its approval.

On a second issue, the Secretary-General pointed out that the competence of the Administrative Tribunal in UNJSPF cases was not reflected in the statute of the Tribunal even though the competence was approved by the General Assembly in resolution 955(X) [YUN 1955, p. 369] and appeared as a provision in the Pension Fund Regulations. An amendment to article 13 of the Tribunal's statute would bring the statute into conformity with an earlier Assembly decision urging the Tribunal's jurisdiction in UNJSPF cases.

On a third matter, the United Nations had recently finalized relationship agreements with a number of international organizations and entities that had expressed interest in an arrangement allowing extension of the competence of the UN Administrative Tribunal to their staff. As the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labour Organization did have such competence, the Secretary-General felt that it would be useful to amend article 13 of the statute of the UN Administrative Tribunal to allow for similar jurisdiction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 and 18 September [meetings 1 & 2], the General Committee decided to include in the agenda the item "Amendment to article 13 of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal".

On 15 December, [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/52/654], adopted resolution 52/166 without vote [agenda item 155].

Amendment to article 13 of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal

The General Assembly,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General dated 17 September 1997 entitled "Amendment to article 13 of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal",

Noting the proposal of the International Court of Justice referred to in that note that the statute of the Tribunal should be modified to provide for the exercise of its competence in respect of the staff of the Registry of the International Court of Justice,

Recognizing that the competence of the Tribunal in United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund cases, as approved by the General Assembly in resolution 955(X) of 3 November 1955, is not reflected in the statute of the Tribunal,

Noting the proposal of the Secretary-General, set out in the note, to amend the statute of the Tribunal by providing that its competence may be extended to international organizations and entities participating in the common system of conditions of service,

Desiring to amend the statute of the Tribunal in accordance with the proposals referred to in the note by the Secretary-General,

Convinced of the desirability of reviewing more generally the provisions of the statute of the Tribunal at an early date,

1. Decides to amend article 13 of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, with effect from 1 January 1998, as follows:

(a) The following new paragraphs shall be added as paragraphs 1, 2 and 4:

"1. The competence of the Tribunal shall be extended to the staff of the Registry of the International Court of Justice upon the exchange of letters between the President of the Court and the Secretary-General of the United Nations establishing the relevant conditions.

"2. The Tribunal shall be competent to hear and pass judgement upon applications alleging non-observance of the regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund arising out of the decision of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board submitted to the Tribunal by:

"(a) Any staff member of a member organization of the Pension Fund which has accepted the jurisdiction of the Tribunal in Pension Fund cases who is eligible under article 21 of the regulations of the Fund as a participant in the Fund, even if his employment has ceased, and any person who has acceded to such staff member's rights upon his death;

"(b) Any other person who can show that he is entitled to rights under the regulations of the Pension Fund by virtue of the participation in the Fund of a staff member of such member organization.

"4. The competence of the Tribunal may also be extended, with the approval of the General Assembly, to any other international organization or entity established by a treaty and participating in the common system of conditions of service, upon the terms set out in a special agreement between the organization or entity concerned and the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Each such special agreement shall provide that the organization or entity concerned shall be bound by the judgements of the Tribunal and be responsible for the payment of any compensation awarded by the Tribunal in respect of a staff member of that organization or entity and shall include, inter alia, provisions concerning its participation in the administrative arrangements for the functioning of the Tribunal and concerning its sharing the expenses of the Tribunal.";

(b) The text of former article 13 shall become paragraph 3 of amended article 13;

2. Also decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Review of the statute of the Administrative Tribunal of the United Nations".

Chapter IV

Institutional and administrative matters

During 1997, the United Nations continued to review a number of institutional and administrative matters. The General Assembly held its fifty-second session and its resumed fifty-first session. It also convened its tenth emergency special and nineteenth special sessions. The Assembly granted observer status to the Andean Community.

During the year, the Security Council held 117 formal meetings to deal with regional conflicts, peacekeeping operations and a wide variety of other issues related to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Economic and Social Council held its 1997 organizational session in January, February and May, and its substantive session in June, July, October and December, adopting resolutions on a wide range of economic, social and related issues. It also granted consultative status to a number of non-governmental organizations.

Other UN bodies concerned with administrative and coordination matters included the Administrative Committee on Coordination, the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Joint Inspection Unit.

The Committee on Conferences examined requests for changes to the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1997. It recommended measures to improve the utilization of conference-servicing resources, including the introduction of new technologies, and to limit and control documentation, particularly in the light of the UN reform process. In the area of information systems and telecommunications, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution on the need to harmonize and improve UN informatics systems. Progress was reported in the implementation of the Integrated Management Information System.

Institutional machinery

General Assembly

The General Assembly met throughout 1997; it concluded its fifty-first session and held the major part of its fifty-second session. The fifty-first session was resumed in plenary meetings on 12, 13 and 27 March, 3, 18 and 25 April, 20-22 May, 13, 17 and 20 June, 16 and 31 July, 4 August and 15 September. The fifty-second session opened on 16 September and continued until its suspension on 22 December. The tenth special session was convened on 24 April and resumed in July and November to discuss the item "Illegal Israeli actions in occupied East Jerusalem and the rest of the occupied Palestinian territory" (see PART ONE, Chapter VI). The nineteenth special session, convened for an overall review and appraisal of Agenda 21, was held from 23 to 28 June (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

Organization of Assembly sessions

Reform measures

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/241 of 31 July on the strengthening of the UN system (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), decided on a number of issues relating to its work, including the timing of its plenary meetings; the general debate; time limits for statements outside the general debate; the agenda; organization of work; the General Committee; subordinate machinery; and the role of the General Assembly President.

In related action, the Assembly, in resolution 52/220 of 22 December, decided to undertake during its resumed fifty-second (1998) session a thorough review of the working methods of the Fifth (Administration and Budgetary) Committee, with a view to rationalizing them and initiating efficiency measures that might enable the Committee to accomplish its tasks on time without resorting to extra meetings at night and on weekends.

Rules of procedure

On 15 December [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/52/652], adopted resolution 52/163 without vote [agenda item 151].

Amendment to rule 103 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolution 2837(XXVI) of 17 December 1971, in particular paragraph 42 of annex II thereto, entitled "Conclusions of the Special Committee on the Rationalization of the Procedures and Organization of the General Assembly", which has been reproduced as annex V to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

Taking into account the increasing workload of the Main Committees of the General Assembly,

Considering that all regional groups should be represented in the Bureau of each of the Main Committees,

1. Decides to amend the first sentence of rule 103 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly to read: "Each Main Committee shall elect a Chairman, three Vice-Chairmen and a Rapporteur";

2. Also decides that this amendment shall take effect as from the fifty-third session of the General Assembly.

7997 sessions

On 19 September, by decision 52/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/52/250], adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the fifty-second session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of work; closing date of the session; schedule of meetings; the general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; records of meetings; concluding statements; resolutions; documentation; questions related to the programme budget; special conference; observances and commemorative meetings; and meetings of subsidiary organs. The Committee also made observations on the organization of future sessions of the Assembly and recommendations concerning the agenda. It was informed that, during its fiftieth session, the Assembly had held 28 meetings between February and September 1996, which was more than a quarter of the total of 100 plenary meetings held between September and December 1995. In 1997, there was a slight improvement, as the Assembly had held 17 plenary meetings between January and September, excluding plenary meetings of the tenth emergency special session (5 meetings) and the nineteenth special session (11 meetings). With the exception of the meetings of the nineteenth special session, those meetings were not envisaged in the calendar of meetings and therefore ad hoc arrangements were required to provide adequate secretariat services, at the expense of other requirements.

By decision 52/403 A of 16 September, the Assembly authorized the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and of the United Nations Population Fund to meet until 19 September. By decision 52/403 B of 19 September, it authorized the Committee for Programme and Coordination, the Committee on Conferences, the Committee on Relations with the Host Country, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to meet during the main part of its fifty-second session. On 7 October, the Assembly, by decision 52/403 C, authorized the Committee on Information to meet in New York during the main part of its fifty-second session. On 24 November, the Assembly, by decision 52/403 D, granted similar authorization to the High-level Open-ended Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations and the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council.

Credentials

The Credentials Committee, at its meetings on 17 and 19 September and 5 December [A/52/719], examined the credentials of Cambodia and Afghanistan. The Committee reported that it had received separate sets of credentials presenting two delegations to represent Cambodia at the fifty-second session: one signed by King Norodom Sihanouk, presenting a delegation headed by Unq Hout, who was identified as "First Prime Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation"; and the other addressed to the Secretary-General by Prince Norodom Ranariddh, presenting a delegation headed by the Prince, who was identified as "First Prime Minister of the Kingdom of Cambodia". On 19 September, the Committee decided to defer a decision on the credentials of Cambodia on the understanding that no one would occupy the seat of that country at the fifty-second session.

Concerning Afghanistan, two sets of credentials were received: a communication signed by Professor Burhan-u-ddin Rabbani, "President of the Islamic State of Afghanistan", presenting a delegation whose head was identified as "Permanent Representative"; and the other signed by Alhaj Mulia Mohammad Rabbani, "Head of the Government of the Islamic State of Afghanistan", presenting a delegation whose head was identified as "Designate Permanent Representative". The Committee deferred a decision on the credentials of the representatives of Afghanistan on the understanding that the current representatives accredited to the United Nations would continue to participate in the work of the Assembly.

On 5 December, the Committee had before it a memorandum by the Secretary-General indicating that, as at 5 December, 144 Member States had submitted formal credentials of their representatives. Information concerning representatives of 39 other Member States had been communicated by means of cable, facsimile, letter or note verbale.

The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received and recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution for adoption. On 18 December, the Assembly, by resolution 52/178, approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

Agenda

At its resumed fifty-first session, the General Assembly took a number of actions relating to its agenda, which were listed in decision 51/402 B. On 31 January, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, the Assembly included in its agenda an item on financing the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala. At the same meeting, the Assembly, also on a proposal of the Secretary-General, reopened consideration of the sub-item on the appointment of members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).

On 27 March, the Assembly, on a proposal of the Secretary-General, included in its agenda an additional item on the election of judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. It also reopened consideration of the sub-item on the appointment of members of the Committee on Contributions.

Similarly, on 18 April, the Assembly reopened consideration of the sub-items on the appointment of ACABQ members and of members of the International Civil Service Commission; and on the special session for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21.

On 21 May, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included in the agenda an additional item on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons. On a proposal of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee Chairman, it reopened for consideration the sub-item on implementation of the decisions and recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

The Assembly, on 17 June, on the recommendation of the General Committee, included in the agenda an additional item on United Nations reform: measures and proposals. On 15 September, on a proposal of the Secretary-General, it reopened for consideration, the item on election of judges of the International Tribunal on the former Yugoslavia.

On 19 September, by decision 52/402 A, the Assembly, on the recommendation the General Committee [A/52/250], adopted the agenda [A/52/251] and the allocation of agenda items for the fifty-second session to the plenary or appropriate Main Committee [A/52/252]. The Assembly also deferred consideration of the following items: question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India; and question of East Timor. On 29 October, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, it included in its agenda an additional item on financing the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola. On 24 November, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/52/250/Add.1], it included an item on the admission of the International Seabed Authority to membership in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund.

By decision 52/459 of 22 December, the Assembly decided to retain 62 items and sub-items for consideration during its fifty-second session.

The Assembly, on 18 December, deferred consideration of the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations" (decision 52/433) and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session.

First Committee

The item on the rationalization of work and reform of the agenda of the First Committee was included in the agenda of the fifty-second session in accordance with General Assembly decision 50/421 [YUN 1995, p. 1428]. Following an exchange of views on the item, the Committee Chairman submitted on 12 November a draft decision, later revised [A/C.1/52/L.51/Rev.1], by which the Committee would have, as from the fifty-third (1998) session, conducted and concluded its substantive work with the most efficient use of time not exceeding five weeks, while combining the existing phases in the programme of work. The Chairman of the Committee would have conducted consultations on the subject and reported to the Assembly at its fifty-third session.

On 17 November, the Chairman withdrew the draft decision.

The Assembly, by decision 52/416 A of 9 December, took note of the report of the First Committee [A/52/612].

Second, Third and Fifth Committees

The Secretariat submitted the draft biennial programme of work of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for 1998-1999 [A/C.2/52/L.45], which the Assembly approved by decision 52/452 of 18 December.

The Secretariat also presented measures on the organization of work and the draft biennial programme of work of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee for 1998-1999 [A/C.3/52/L.77]. Those measures related to guidelines on time-limits of statements, draft resolutions on reports of treaty bodies and reports of the Secretary-General on the status of treaties, and draft proposals from subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council. On 12 December, by decision 52/428, the Assembly approved the organization of work of the Third Committee and its 1998-1999 programme of work.

On 22 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/457, approved the biennial programme of work [A/C.5/52/L.16] of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee for 1998-1999.

Security Council

In 1997, the Security Council held 117 formal meetings, adopted 54 resolutions and issued 57 presidential statements. It considered 32 agenda items (see APPENDIX IV). In September [A/52/392 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and with the consent of the Council, notified the General Assembly of 30 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification [YUN 1996, p. 1344] and listed 97 matters that the Council had not discussed since then. On 22 October, the Assembly, by decision 52/404, took note of the Secretary General's report.

Documentation

Council report to Assembly

The Security Council President, in June [S/1997/451], stated that the Council had reviewed and agreed to change the format of its annual report to the General Assembly beginning with the 1997/98 report. It would continue to be submitted in a single volume covering the period from 16 June of one year to 15 June of the next, with the draft being submitted by 30 August following the period covered by the report. For each subject dealt with by the Council, the report would include a descriptive list of the Council's decisions, resolutions and presidential statements for the year preceding the period covered; for the period covered by the report, a description in chronological order of the Council's consideration of the matter in question and of actions taken by it on that item, including decisions, resolutions and presidential statements, and a list of communications received by the Council and reports of the Secretary-General; and factual data, including dates of formal meetings and informal consultations. The report would also include information regarding the work of the Council's subsidiary organs, including the sanctions committees; information on the documentation and working methods and procedures of the Council; matters brought to the Council's attention but not discussed; appendices, as in the current report, but also resolutions, decisions and presidential statements adopted or voted on during the year in question; and information about meetings with troop-contributing countries. Attached, as an addendum, would be brief assessments on the work of the Council by past Presidents of the Council, under their own responsibility and following consultations with Council members, for the month during which they presided and which should not be considered as representing the views of the Council. The Council would continue to consider and review ways to improve its documentation and procedure, including the provision of special reports.

The General Assembly, by decision 52/406 of 29 October, took note of the report of the Security Council for the period from 16 June 1996 to 15 June 1997 [A/52/2].

Membership

In 1997, the General Assembly continued to consider expanding the membership of the Security Council, and received the report [A/51/47 & Corr.1] of its Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council, established by Assembly resolution 48/26 [YUN 1993, p. 212] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

On 15 September, the Assembly, by decision 51/476, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that it should continue its work and report before the end of the Assembly's fifty-second session.

Economic and Social Council

In 1997, the Economic and Social Council held its organizational session on 23 January and 4-7 February and its resumed organizational session on 1 and 2 May both in New York. It held its substantive session from 30 June to 25 July in Geneva and its resumed substantive session on 8 October and 16 and 18 December in New York.

On 23 January, the Council elected five members to its Bureau—the President for 1997 and four Vice-Presidents (see APPENDIX III). On the same date, it adopted the agenda of its organizational session [E/1997/2 & Add.1]. By decision 1997/201 of 7 February, it approved the provisional agenda for the 1997 substantive session.

On 30 June, the Council, by decision 1997/214, adopted the agenda of its 1997 substantive session [E/1997/100] and approved the programme of work of the session [E/1997/L.15]. On 7 and 10 July, the Council, by the same decision, approved requests by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to be heard by the Council [E/1997/80 & Add.1,2].

(For agenda lists, see APPENDIX IV.)

Sessions and segments

During its 1997 sessions, the Economic and Social Council adopted 67 resolutions and 122 decisions. By decision 1997/204 of 7 February, the Council decided that the high-level segment of its substantive session should be held from 30 June to 2 July; that statements made during that segment should be limited to 7 minutes; and that the operational activities segment should be held from 3 to 8 July, the coordination segment from 9 to 11 July, and the general segment from 14 to 25 July. The high-level segment took place from 2 to 4 July.

The Secretariat submitted, in response to General Assembly resolution 51/211 A [YUN 1996, p. 1372], a January note [E/1997/8] on the venues of sessions of the Council's subsidiary organs. The note stated that no waiver of the rule that subsidiary bodies should meet at their headquarters had been requested for a session of a functional commission of the Council in many years. Regular sessions of the regional commissions were held away from their established headquarters on occasion, but such sessions were usually approved by the Council and the Assembly after being examined by the Committee on Conferences. The only exception to the headquarters rule was the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which held its annual session alternately in New York and Geneva, pursuant to Assembly resolution 40/243 [YUN 1985, p. 1256]. None of the other subsidiary bodies of the Council, including its standing committees and groups of experts, had requested to meet other than at their established headquarters in recent memory. By decision 1997/206 of 7 February, the Council took note of the Secretariat's note.

The 1997 work of the Economic and Social Council was summarized in its report to the Assembly [A/52/3/Rev.1 & Add.1]. By decisions 52/429 of 12 December, 52/451 of 18 December, and 52/454 and 52/455 of 22 December, the Assembly took note of various chapters of that report.

On 24 July, by decision 1997/301, the Economic and Social Council approved the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1998 and 1999 in the economic, social and related fields [E/1997/L.18 & Add.1].

By decision 1997/302 of the same date, the Council decided to convene a two- or three-day session, immediately following its 1998 organizational session, to consider further the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major UN conferences and summits. At its 1998 substantive session, the Council would pay special attention to the comprehensive review of the task forces of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (see below) and to enhancing the dialogue between the Council and its subsidiary bodies, the UN funds and programmes and the organizations of the UN system, in particular within the context of the forthcoming reviews of the UN conferences. On 18 December, by decision 1997/319, the Council decided that the 1998 high-level segment would be devoted to the theme "Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization"; that the coordination segment would be devoted to the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action [YUN 1993, p. 908]; and that the operational activities segment would consider the theme "Advancement of women: implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development".

Work programme

On 7 February, the Economic and Social Council considered its basic programme of work for 1997 and 1998 [E/1997/1]. By decision 1997/202, the Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in the programme of work for 1998.

Restructuring issues

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/311 of 25 July, decided to continue consideration of General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields at its 1997 and future substantive sessions. By decision 1997/310 of the same date, it took note of the summary of the review exercise of the subsidiary bodies of the Council submitted by its Vice-President. On 18 December, by decision 1997/322, the Council decided to convene informal consultations in 1998 to continue the review of its subsidiary bodies, as mandated by Assembly resolution 50/227 and subsequent resolutions (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Coordination, monitoring and cooperation

Institutional mechanisms

Activities of ACC

In 1997, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) continued to pursue issues related to the strengthening and reform of the UN system [E/1998/21] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). It reported that it had given special attention to the implications for the system of the establishment within the United Nations itself, at the Secretariat level, of Executive Committees in the four core areas of peace and security, economic and social affairs, development cooperation, and humanitarian affairs, with human rights being approached as a fifth core area, as well as a cross-cutting issue. ACC agreed that inter-agency coordination and cooperation should be based on a renewed effort to elaborate common policy objectives and on the effective pooling of capabilities and resources throughout the system. A new and more comprehensive approach to the concept of security, fully encompassing its economic and social components, and a clear sense of the contribution and capacities of each organization should be the basis for rationalizing the division of labour within the system and enhancing its overall impact. Other issues identified by ACC as requiring common attention were linkages with civil society and the sharing of experience at the inter-agency level on cooperation with the private sector, managerial improvements within the UN common system, in particular in relation to existing rigidities in personnel policies and practices, and the need to ensure that new programmes were matched by adequate resources.

ACC agreed that the integrated and coordinated follow-up to international conferences and summits should be actively pursued in the broader context of UN system reform and of the system's effort to advance the global agenda in a coherent and effective way. It called on UN agencies and bodies to utilize national-level mechanisms and frameworks to support the development of national strategies and action plans, based on national priorities, for implementing conference outcomes in an integrated manner. ACC adopted a statement outlining a strategic and systematic approach to information and communication technologies and information management among UN organizations (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII). It also reviewed preparations for and follow-up to the special session of the General Assembly to review the implementation of Agenda 21 (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

ACC reviewed and coordinated preparations for the 1998 commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the five-year Review of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action (see PART TWO, Chapter I). It agreed to consider establishing an inter-agency enterprise liaison service as a common clearing-house mechanism for cooperation with the business community. ACC recommended that all UN system organizations consider further issues related to accountability, representation and criteria for assessing competence, and ways to promote capacity-building of civil society groups at the national and local levels. The UN Staff College, ACC agreed, should develop specific programmes to help enhance staff capacity for working more closely with civil society.

As to peace-building in crisis situations, ACC agreed that peace-building required integrated and coordinated actions to ensure the prevention of conflict or its resolution on a lasting basis. It called for a stronger commitment by bilateral and other donors to peace-building requirements and stressed the need to harmonize resource mobilization to ensure adequate funding for immediate rehabilitation and for long-term recovery and development. It endorsed the recommendation of its Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions for the elaboration of a strategic framework for response to and recovery from crisis.

ACC continued to consider African economic recovery and development as a priority concern (see PART THREE, Chapter III). It also continued to review UN system assistance to countries invoking Article 50 of the UN Charter, concerning economic problems suffered by a State as a result of the imposition of sanctions on another State.

ACC reviewed the Graça Machel study on the situation of children affected by armed conflict [YUN 1996, p. 663] and requested that the study's relevant recommendations be integrated into activities related to the coordinated follow-up to UN global conferences, and pursued as part of peace-building, conflict-resolution and national reconciliation activities of the UN Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). It agreed that UN system organizations should develop inter-agency guidelines for activities related to children affected by armed conflict. Regarding HIV/AIDS, ACC reviewed the work of the Joint and Co-Sponsored Programme on HIV/AIDS and called for the further strengthening of inter-agency collaboration in combating the epidemic (see PART THREE, Chapter XIII).

Other issues considered by ACC included security of UN system staff (see below), conditions of service and application of the Noblemaire principle (see PART FIVE, Chapter III) and its programme of work for 1998.

During the year, ACC held two regular sessions (Geneva, 10-11 April, and New York, 31 October). Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (Geneva, 20-22 and 24 March, and New York, 2-4 September and 6 October); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (Paris, 14-17 April, New York, 9-11 and 14 July); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions), eighty-sixth (Vienna, 10-14 February) and eighty-seventh (New York, 25-29 August) sessions; Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions, tenth (Geneva, 3-7 March) and eleventh (New York, 26-26 September) sessions.

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Information Systems Coordination Committee, fifth session (New York, 1-3 December); Joint United Nations Information Committee, twenty-third session (Turin, Italy, 1-3 July); Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas, fifth session (Washington, D.C., 7-10 January); Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security (Rome, 6-8 May); Subcommittee on Nutrition, twenty-fourth session (Kathmandu, Nepal, 17-21 March); Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, thirty-first session (Geneva, 16-18 September); Subcommittee on Drug Control, fifth session (Vienna, 29 September-1 October); Subcommittee on Water Resources, eighteenth session (Vienna, 1-3 October); Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development, ninth (New York, 20-21 February), and tenth (Geneva, 17-18 September) meetings; and the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality, second session (New York, 5-6 March).

The Subcommittee on Rural Development was dissolved and successor arrangements, jointly proposed by the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, were constituted to cover specific and related issues.

Report for 1996

ACC's annual overview report [E/1997/54] for 1996 was considered on 11 June by the Committee for Programme and Coordination [A/52/16], which agreed that ACC should continue to strengthen its role as a policy- and action-oriented instrument for launching and monitoring joint initiatives to accomplish common policy objectives. It should focus on the strategic objectives established in the Charter, by the General Assembly and in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the system. CPC underscored the need for resource mobilization to ensure the success of the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa and requested that the linkages between the Special Initiative and the UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s be clearly brought out (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Taking note of ACC's promotion of a coordinated system-wide approach to the follow-up to major international conferences through ad hoc inter-agency task forces, CPC requested that the results of the assessment of the work of the task forces to be carried out by ACC in 1997 (see below) should be included in ACC's next annual overview report.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/300 of 24 July, took note of the annual overview report of ACC for 1996.

Programme coordination

In 1997, the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) held an organizational meeting on 12 May and its thirty-seventh session [A/52/16] from 9 June to 3 July, all in New York.

CPC considered the impact of UN reform on the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (see PART THREE, Chapter V). It examined the proposed programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium, discussed in-depth evaluations of the programme on statistics and of the Department of Humanitarian Affairs and considered the triennial review of the in-depth evaluation of the UN programme on social development and the review of the United Nations Environment Programme and the administrative practices of its secretariat, including the United Nations Office at Nairobi (see PART THREE, Chapter VII). Coordination issues considered included ACC's annual report, reports of the Joint Inspection Unit, the revised System-wide Plan of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development and implementation of the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/300, took note of CPC's report on its thirty-seventh session.

Joint Inspection Unit

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in its twenty-ninth annual report [A/52/34] to the General Assembly, gave an overview of its activities from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1997. The report examined measures to enhance JIU's functioning, relations and cooperation with participating organizations and other oversight bodies and follow-up on JIU reports and recommendations. JIU, the Board of Auditors and the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) agreed to hold regular substantive meetings to compare their respective programmes of work to prevent potential duplication and overlapping in their oversight functions. A first meeting to discuss organizational and procedural issues was held in May. JIU and OIOS agreed that one way to facilitate the procedure for ascertaining compliance of programme managers with approved recommendations of external oversight bodies, was for OIOS to use pertinent JIU reports while conducting audits, inspections, evaluations and/or investigations in the various services of the Secretariat.

Concerning follow-up on its reports and recommendations, JIU concluded that, while most of its participating organizations had procedures for processing JIU reports up to the stage of submitting them to their respective legislative organs, those procedures fell short of the measures called for in the JIU statute, and organizations did not have a system of follow-up on JIU recommendations. In that regard, JIU submitted a proposal entitled "Towards a more effective system of follow-up on reports of the Joint Inspection Unit" for consideration and action by the respective legislative organs of its participating organizations. The proposals established conditions for effective follow-up by JIU, the executive heads of participating organizations and legislative organs, and procedures, including tracking and reporting on steps taken to assure active consideration of JIU reports, and measures taken to implement approved/accepted recommendations and determine their impact.

Other coordination matters

Follow-up to international conferences

ACC consideration. At its first regular session of 1997 (Geneva, 10-11 April) [ACC/1997/4], ACC reviewed progress in promoting system-wide coordinated follow-up to international conferences through its three thematic ad hoc task forces (Task Force on Basic Social Services for All, Task Force on the Enabling Environment for Economic and Social Development, and Task Force on Employment and Sustainable Livelihoods) and the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality. ACC endorsed the recommendation of its Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) to hold a workshop to review the outputs of the task forces and other bodies, as well as arrangements to ensure coherence and inter-linkages among them, with particular reference to the guidance provided to the resident coordinator system; and develop proposals for submission to the second regular 1997 session of ACC on requirements for continued coordination and sustainability of the follow-up to the international conferences. ACC endorsed proposed arrangements for inter-agency follow-up to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN 1996, p. 992] and the World Food Summit [ibid., p. 1129], which would focus especially on country-level action and coordinated headquarters' support for that action.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

The Secretary-General, in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/36 [YUN 1996, p. 1260] and General Assembly resolutions 51/171 [ibid., p. 1131] and 51/177 [ibid., p. 1002], submitted a June report [E/1997/73] on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major UN conferences and summits. The report examined action taken at the intergovernmental level and progress achieved at the inter-agency level, through ACC, and at the country level. It stated that the structure of the Assembly's agenda and the work of its Second and Third Committees had not made it possible to consider conference follow-up issues as interlinked and contributing to an integrated framework. Therefore, ways had to be found to maximize synergies between the follow-up to individual conferences at the level of the Assembly. The Economic and Social Council's 1996 work on poverty eradication as a cross-cutting theme had provided guidance to the UN system for improving coordination of poverty eradication activities at the field and headquarters levels. The Council's functional commissions had placed their work within the context of coordinated follow-up to major conferences, and interaction among them had taken place through the exchange of inputs and dialogue with the Council. However, significant overlap and duplication in some aspects of their work remained. To deal with the difficulties of grappling with follow-up and monitoring measures, intergovernmental work had to benefit from inputs from the country level, the UN system, Governments and civil society, as well as experts and practitioners in the areas concerned. The report contained a summary of the main outcomes of the Council's functional commissions in 1997 regarding follow-up to conferences.

All concerned inter-agency bodies under ACC had contributed to the coordinated follow-up to the recent UN conferences. The CCPOQ work programme included issues relevant to conference follow-up, such as coordination of poverty alleviation activities. The three ad hoc inter-agency task forces (see above) were given the task of providing UN resident coordinators and country-level teams with coherent system-wide guidance and support to assist countries to translate the outcome of conferences into coherent national policies and programmes. The report analysed the follow-up work of ACC's standing consultative committees and its task forces.

At the country level, progress had been made in all regions where resident coordinators had organized or were in the process of establishing thematic groups involving national and local authorities, NGOs and concerned UN organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/228 of 21 July, decided that every effort should be made to ensure that there was no overlap in the work of its functional commissions engaged in the follow-up to UN conferences.

On 25 July [meeting 42], the Council adopted resolution 1997/61 [draft: E/1997/L.57] without vote [agenda item 5].

Integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 45/264 of 13 May 1991 on restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, 46/235 of 13 April 1992, 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/227 of 24 May 1996 on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and 51/240 of 20 June 1997 on the Agenda for Development, as well as agreed conclusions 1995/1 of 28 July 1995 of the Council on coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system and implementation of the results of the major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, and its resolution 1996/36 of 26 July 1996 on follow-up to the major international United Nations conferences and summits, including the implementation of their respective programmes of action,

Recognizing the efforts made by the Secretary-General, through the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to establish coordinating inter-agency mechanisms in support of integrated and coordinated follow-up of the major international conferences and summits,

Recognizing also that coordinated follow-up implies that the major conferences should be viewed as inter-linked and as contributing to an integrated framework of and a global partnership for development and that, in this context, the major cross-cutting themes established in the world conferences need to be identified and built upon,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits and of the report of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on the outcome of the World Food Summit, held at Rome from 13 to 17 November 1996, including action to be taken to follow-up the outcome at all appropriate levels,

1. Stresses the need further to promote integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields;

2. Reaffirms that system-wide gender mainstreaming must form an integral part of the implementation of the decisions of recent United Nations conferences and summits;

3. Welcomes the decision taken by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to integrate the follow-up of the World Food Summit and the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), held at Istanbul, Turkey, from 3 to 14 June 1996, within the context of integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of United Nations conferences;

4. Requests all organizations of the United Nations system to integrate further the results of the major international conferences and summits into their programmes of work, to promote the effective implementation of the goals and commitments established by the United Nations conferences and to continue to contribute relevant information, analyses and assessments thereon in support of the Council's own thematic and action-oriented reviews; in this context, consideration may be given to the possibility of preparing, on the basis of national reporting, a country-wide compendium of best practices as regards the implementation of the goals and commitments at the field level;

5. Reaffirms the need to continue to ensure the harmonization and coordination of the agendas and programmes of work of the functional commissions by promoting a clearer division of labour among them and by providing clear policy guidance to them, decides that, to this end, the Council could periodically organize meetings on specific issues to allow for more dialogue with the chairpersons and the secretariats, as appropriate, of the functional commissions, other subsidiary and related bodies and the relevant executive boards and that the Bureau should also assist the Council in identifying economic, social and related issues for discussion at its sessions and should maintain contacts with the bureaux of the functional commissions and other subsidiary bodies, thus allowing for better interaction between the Council and those bodies and assisting the Council in fulfilling its role, and stresses that the Secretariat should assist the Council by ensuring that all functional commissions are made aware of the relevant recommendations of the Council and of the relevant work of other functional commissions so that they are well focused and supportive of each other's programmes of work;

6. Stresses the importance of ensuring that reports on conference follow-up submitted to the Council and its functional commissions draw on the experience gained at all levels, and, for this purpose, also stresses the need to enhance cooperation in the preparation of such reports between relevant departments of the Secretariat and the United Nations funds and programmes;

7. Decides to take appropriate measures to ensure that the regional commissions, within their respective mandates and priorities, can carry out their important role in assisting countries in each region in the integrated implementation of the recommendations of the major United Nations conferences and summits, as well as measures to ensure the active participation of the regional commissions relating to the implementation at the regional level of the results of major United Nations conferences; to this end, the Council shall continue to enhance coordination with and among the regional commissions, inter alia, by ensuring more effective participation by them in the substantive work of the Council in relation to conference follow-up;

8. Stresses the need for the Administrative Committee on Coordination to ensure that the highest priority continues to be given to the integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits;

9. Also stresses the need for the Committee to ensure that there is effective inter-agency support for the work of the intergovernmental bodies dealing with conference follow-up, including the Council and its functional commissions, that there is regular updating and feedback on the incorporation of the work of the task forces at the country level and that the Council is kept fully informed of the work and decisions of the Committee concerning integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits;

10. Encourages the Committee to include in its comprehensive review of the integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits information on the progress made in the area of statistics and indicators, taking into account the work done by the Statistical Commission as well as other ongoing work, in particular the work being done in developing countries;

11. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to continue to give priority attention to the provision of effective support to the resident coordinators, including the full utilization and implementation of the outputs of the task forces;

12. Stresses the need for a partnership with the organizations of civil society in the integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits;

13. Reiterates the importance of the provisions on the mobilization of resources contained in its agreed conclusions 1995/1 for the effective implementation of the results of the major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields;

14. Decides to include the item entitled "Integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits" in the agenda of its substantive session on an annual basis, and requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with organizations of the United Nations system, to submit to it a report on the progress achieved by the United Nations system at the intergovernmental, inter-agency and country levels, with specific recommendations on ways to enhance the integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits.

On the same date, the Council, by decision 1997/302, decided to convene a two- or three-day session in 1998 to consider further the theme of integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major UN conferences and summits.

Further ACC consideration. At its second regular session of 1997 (New York, 31 October) [ACC/1997/20], ACC reviewed the work of the ad hoc inter-agency task forces and agreed that conference follow-up needed to be placed in the broader context of UN system reform and efforts to enhance its capacity to pursue the global agenda in a coherent and effective way. It called on UN organizations to make optimal use of the strengths, advocacy role and resources of civil society in the follow-up to the conferences, to maintain the momentum created, and to continue to provide coordinated support to Governments in adopting integrated and mutually supportive policies for implementing the goals of recent global conferences, from the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 670] to the World Food Summit in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1129]. ACC emphasized the importance of mainstreaming human rights, environmental, gender, population and children-related matters, as well as the use of information and communication technologies, in further normative, policy, programme and project work. It called on UN system members to utilize national-level mechanisms and frameworks, including the country strategy notes and UN development assistance frameworks, and to support the development of national strategies and action plans. The outputs of the ad hoc task forces should be widely disseminated and put to full use, particularly at the country level, including dissemination and replication of best practices. UN bodies were called on to contribute to the preparatory process for the closing events of the decade and to give attention to the activities to be undertaken beyond the year 2000. It was proposed that ACC issue a statement at its next session.

It was decided that ACC's review of integrated and coordinated follow-up to the global conferences would be based on the conclusions and recommendations of CCPOQ and the Inter-agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD), the notes and overview prepared by the convenors of the task forces, and any additional information provided by their participants. ACC stressed the need to include human rights as an integral component of the coordinated follow-up to global conferences at the country, regional and global levels and called on UN organizations and bodies to continue to collaborate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in preparing for the five-year review of the implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights in 1998 (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

The UN and other organizations

Cooperation with organizations

Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation

The Secretary-General reported in August [A/52/299 & Add.1, 2] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation (ACTC), as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/3 [YUN 1995, p. 1443]. On 25 June 1997, a cooperation agreement between the two organizations aimed at strengthening relations through consultations, particularly in political, economic, social, scientific and cultural areas, was signed by their Secretaries-General. The agreement also provided for the implementation of projects of mutual interest, the setting up of commissions, committees or other technical or advisory bodies, cooperation between the secretariats and the exchange of information and documentation. UNDP and the United Nations Children Fund (UNICEF) had signed cooperation agreements with ACTC on enhancing collaboration, particularly in support of field-level activities, and a framework agreement between ACTC and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was signed on 8 September. The report outlined cooperation activities undertaken or planned by the organizations of the UN system.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 October [meeting 34], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/2 [draft: A/52/L.1] without vote [agenda item 22].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/18 of 10 November 1978, by which it granted observer status to the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation,

Recalling also its resolution 50/3 of 16 October 1995, by which it noted the complementarity of the activities of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation and the United Nations and invited the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, to promote cooperation between the two organizations,

Recalling further the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations through regional cooperation,

Noting the desire of the two organizations to consolidate, develop and tighten the ties that exist between them in the political, economic, social and cultural fields,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation,

Noting with satisfaction the encouraging progress achieved in cooperation between the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies and programmes and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation,

Convinced that strengthening cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation is consistent with the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Considering that the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation brings together a considerable number of States Members of the United Nations, among which it promotes multilateral cooperation in areas of interest to the United Nations,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation;

2. Commends the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation for its continuing efforts to encourage multilateral cooperation among countries that use French as a common language, particularly in the areas of conflict prevention, strengthening of the rule of law, economic, social and cultural development and promotion of new information technologies, and requests United Nations bodies to give it their support;

3. Welcomes the involvement of the countries that use French as a common language, through the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, in United Nations activities, including the preparation for, conduct of and follow-up to world conferences organized under United Nations auspices;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation is participating more frequently in the work of the United Nations, to which it makes a valuable contribution;

5. Welcomes in particular the five cooperation agreements concluded in 1995 and 1996 between the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the one hand and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation on the other;

6. Welcomes also the high-level meetings held periodically between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation and between senior secretariat officials of both organizations, and encourages their participation in major meetings of both organizations;

7. Notes with satisfaction the outcome of the meeting held in Paris on 29 September 1997 between those responsible for electoral assistance at the United Nations and at the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, and encourages cooperation between the two organizations in this area;

8. Recommends to the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation that they intensify their consultations with a view to ensuring greater coordination in the area of conflict prevention, support for the rule of law and democracy and promotion of human rights;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to include the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation in the periodic meetings he holds with the heads of regional organizations, taking into account the role played by the Agency in the area of conflict prevention and support for democracy and the rule of law;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, acting in cooperation with the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, to encourage the holding of periodic meetings between representatives of the United Nations Secretariat and representatives of the secretariat of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation in order to promote the exchange of information and the identification of new areas of cooperation;

11. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation for their sustained efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, thereby serving the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

12. Invites the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation, to continue to promote cooperation between the two organizations;

13. Invites the specialized agencies and other programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Development Programme, to collaborate to this end with the Secretary-General of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation by undertaking new joint initiatives in the areas of poverty elimination, micro-financing, energy, sustainable development, education, training and the development of new information technologies;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation".

Economic Cooperation Organization

In an August report [A/52/313], the Secretary-General described cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (see PART THREE, Chapter V). The General Assembly took action on the report by resolution 52/19.

Inter-Parliamentary Union

The Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/52/456] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU), in response to General Assembly resolution 51/7 [YUN 1996, p. 1354]. Cooperation between the two organizations had strengthened since the conclusion of the 1996 cooperation agreement between them [ibid.]. Areas of cooperation included the promotion of peace and security and representative democracy, and follow-up to major UN conferences. The United Nations had been receiving increasing support from IPU in providing technical assistance and advisory services to parliamentarians, sometimes in the context of peacekeeping operations. In 1997, IPU was implementing projects or supporting national parliaments in Cape Verde, the Gambia, Haiti, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Rwanda, South Africa, Viet Nam and Yemen. UNDP provided funding and support to IPU projects to assist parliamentarians as part of its promotion of good governance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October [meeting 37], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/7 [draft: A/52/L.9] without vote [agenda item 29].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/7 of 25 October 1996, in which it welcomed the conclusion of the cooperation agreement between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union as an important step for increased and strengthened cooperation between the two organizations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and debated the initial aspects of the cooperation resulting from the agreement,

1. Notes with appreciation the increased cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union;

2. Recommends that this cooperation be further strengthened, at a time when the United Nations is preparing to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a further report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on various aspects of cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union in implementation of the cooperation agreement;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union".

League of Arab States

As requested in General Assembly resolution 51/20 [YUN 1996, p. 1355], the Secretary-General, in September, reported on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States (LAS) [A/52/378]. The Secretaries-General of the two organizations continued to hold consultations, in particular on questions concerning Iraq, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Somalia, and the situation in the Middle East.

A general meeting on cooperation between the secretariats of the UN system and LAS and its specialized organizations was held (Geneva, 2-4 July). The meeting agreed that both organizations should further investigate ways to assist the development and enhancement of the League's capabilities in preventive diplomacy and peace-making, taking into consideration its efforts to evolve suitable mechanisms for the resolution of regional conflict. Recognizing the need for enhanced consultation between the two secretariats, in particular for strengthening their capacity in early warning, preventive action and peacemaking, the meeting agreed that permanent contacts and consultations between the UN Department of Political Affairs and the LAS Department of International Political Affairs could improve awareness of intentions and activities by both organizations. In addition, the two secretariats agreed to further consolidate and strengthen cooperation in a wide range of economic and social areas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 35], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/5 [draft: A/52/L.3 & Corr.1] without vote [agenda item 33].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling the decision of the Council of the League of Arab States that it considers the League a regional organization within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the desire of both organizations to consolidate, develop and enhance further the ties existing between them in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section VII, concerning cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations, and the "Supplement to An Agenda for Peace",

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Convinced also of the need for more efficient and co-ordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

Welcoming the results of the general meeting on cooperation between representatives of the secretariats of the organizations of the United Nations system and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, held in Geneva from 2 to 4 July 1997,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the continued efforts of the League of Arab States to promote multilateral cooperation among Arab States, and requests the United Nations system to continue to lend its support;

3. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations adopted at the general meeting on cooperation held in Geneva between representatives of the secretariats of the organizations of the United Nations system and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, which were contained in the final document transmitted by the Secretariat of the United Nations to all United Nations organizations that had participated in the meeting and to the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, including the latest meeting, held in Geneva in 1997;

5. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify further their cooperation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, economic development, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields;

7. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and among themselves, as well as with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding cooperation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and improve the mechanism of consultation with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects and programmes, in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To associate whenever possible with organizations and institutions of the League of Arab States in the execution and implementation of development projects in the Arab region;

(d) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 10 June 1998, of the progress of their cooperation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the previous meetings between the two organizations;

8. Also calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to intensify cooperation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in the following priority sectors, namely energy, rural development, desertification and green belts, training and vocational training, technology, environment and information and documentation;

9. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to encourage periodic consultation between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States to review and strengthen coordination mechanisms with a view to accelerating implementation of, and follow-up action on, multilateral projects, proposals and recommendations adopted at the meetings between the two organizations;

10. Recommends that a sectoral meeting on trade and development between the United Nations and the League of Arab States be held at the headquarters of the League of Arab States in Cairo during 1998;

11. Decides that, in order to enhance cooperation and for the purpose of review and appraisal of progress, a general meeting between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States should take place once every two years, and inter-agency sectoral meetings should be organized regularly on areas of priority and wide importance in the development of the Arab States, on the basis of agreement between the counterpart programmes of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

12. Recommends that the next general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the secretariats of organizations of the United Nations system and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations be held during 1999;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

Organization of African Unity

The Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/52/347] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The General Assembly took action on the Secretary-General's report in resolution 52/20.

Organization of Islamic Conference

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/18 [YUN 1996, p. 1357], the Secretary-General, in September [A/52/377], reported on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). During the period under review, regular consultations were held and information exchanged between the secretariats of the UN and OIC with regard to the ongoing peacemaking efforts of the two organizations, particularly in Afghanistan, Tajikistan and Somalia. At a 2 May meeting in New York, the Secretaries-General of both organizations expressed interest in expanding cooperation in all areas of mutual interest and agreed that concrete proposals would be presented.

The Secretary-General's report summarized action taken by UN organizations and agencies serving as focal points for cooperation with OIC to follow up the recommendations of earlier meetings and described cooperation between the two organizations in economic and social development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 35], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/4 [draft: A/52/L.2] without vote [agenda item 31].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985, 41/3 of 16 October 1986, 42/4 of 15 October 1987, 43/2 of 17 October 1988, 44/8 of 18 October 1989, 45/9 of 25 October 1990, 46/13 of 28 October 1991, 47/18 of 23 November 1992, 48/24 of 24 November 1993, 49/15 of 15 November 1994, 50/17 of 20 November 1995 and 51/18 of 14 November 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to continue to cooperate closely in the political, eco-conomic, social, humanitarian, cultural and technical fields and in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and economic and technical development,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations that encourage the activities through regional cooperation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations, its funds and programmes and specialized agencies and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, its subsidiary organs and its specialized and affiliated institutions,

Noting also the encouraging progress made in the nine priority areas of cooperation, as well as in the identification of other areas of cooperation,

Convinced that the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its organs and institutions contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section VII, concerning cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations, and the "Supplement to An Agenda for Peace",

Noting with appreciation the determination of both organizations to strengthen further the existing cooperation by developing specific proposals in the designated priority areas of cooperation, as well as in the political field,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue to cooperate in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights, social and economic development and technical cooperation;

4. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to strengthen cooperation between the two organizations in areas of common concern and to review the ways and means for enhancing the actual mechanisms of such cooperation;

5. Welcomes also the efforts of the secretariats of the two organizations to strengthen information exchange, coordination and cooperation between them in areas of mutual interest in the political field and their ongoing consultations with a view to developing the modalities of such cooperation;

6. Welcomes further the periodic high-level meetings between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, as well as between senior secretariat officials of the two organizations, and encourages their participation in important meetings of the two organizations;

7. Recommends that, in accordance with its resolution 50/17, in order to enhance cooperation and for the purpose of review and appraisal of progress, a general meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference should take place in 1998;

8. Also recommends that, in accordance with resolution 50/17, coordination meetings of focal points of the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its specialized institutions should be held concurrently with the general meeting in 1998;

9. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their cooperation with the subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating cooperation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meetings of the focal points for cooperation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

10. Urges the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, especially the lead agencies, to provide increased technical and other forms of assistance to the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions in order to enhance cooperation;

11. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms of coordination between the two organizations;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the state of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/230, invited the Secretary-General to conclude with the Director-General of the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons an agreement to regulate the relationship between the organizations and to present the negotiated draft to the Assembly for approval (see PART ONE, Chapter VII).

Latin American Economic System

The Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/52/376] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System (see PART THREE, Chapter V). The General Assembly took action thereon in resolution 52/3.

Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

The Secretary-General reported in October [A/52/450] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (see PART ONE, Chapter V). The General Assembly, in resolution 52/22, took action on that report.

Southern African Development Community

In September [A/52/400], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community (see PART THREE, Chapter V). The Assembly, in resolution 52/204, took action on that report.

Granting of observer status

By a 28 August letter to the Secretary-General [A/52/232], Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-second session of an item entitled "Observer status for the Andean Community in the General Assembly". They stated that the Andean Community, comprising Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, was a free trade area; it had a common external tariff, in which four of its five members participated, and had begun deregulating air transport services, as well as roadway, maritime and multimodal transport. It was negotiating with other integration movements in the region to create a free trade area and had a relationship of cooperation with the European Union.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 35], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/6 [draft: A/52/L.5 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 158].

Observer status for the Andean Community in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Considering the importance of the Andean Community in the promotion of the balanced and harmonious development of the member countries on the basis of equity, through economic and social integration and cooperation, with a view to the gradual formation of a Latin American common market,

Considering also the need, frequently noted by the United Nations, to promote and support the economic development of the member countries,

Recalling its resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996 on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Wishing to promote cooperation between the United Nations and the Andean Community,

1. Decides to invite the Andean Community to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement this resolution.

Participation of organizations in UN work

Intergovernmental organizations

On 7 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/215, having considered the application of the International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology, decided that the organization might participate on a continuing basis, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of the Council on questions within the scope of its activities.

Non-governmental organizations

In July, the Economic and Social Council considered a draft resolution [E/1997/L.51] on the participation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the work of the General Assembly, by which NGOs in consultative status with the Council would be invited to attend open plenary meetings of the Assembly, its main committees and special sessions, and to make available documents and statements prepared by them in connection with those meetings. The Council would have requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the Assembly's fifty-second session an interim report on existing arrangements and practices relating to NGO participation and to propose, in a final report to the Assembly's fifty-third (1998) session, procedures defining any further participation by NGOs.

On 25 July, the Council, by decision 1997/312, deferred consideration of the draft, pending the outcome of the Assembly's deliberations. It decided to consider the text not later than its 1998 organizational session and recommended that the Assembly give early consideration to the question.

On 19 December, the Assembly, by decision 52/453, requested the Secretary-General to prepare for consideration at its fifty-third session, a report on existing arrangements and practices for the interaction of NGOs in all UN system activities; the legal and financial implications of modifications in the current arrangements for NGO participation with a view to its enhancement; and the question of the participation of NGOs from all regions, in particular from developing countries.

On 18 April, the Assembly invited NGOs identified in Agenda 21, and with consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and on the Roster, to participate in plenary meetings of the nineteenth special session of the Assembly (decision 51/467).

Committee on NGOs

The Committee on NGOs, at its 1997 session (New York, 5-16 May and 12 June) [K/1997/90 & Corr.1], considered a number of applications for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council that had been deferred from its 1996 session, as well as new applications. It also considered questions related to the enlargement of the Committee, strengthening of the NGO Section of the Secretariat, meetings of the Committee, procedures for considering applications for consultative status, revision of the application questionnaire, and the request for a special report regarding an incident at the UN Office in Geneva involving the International Association of Educators for World Peace, an NGO on the Roster. The Committee also considered implementation of Council decision 1997/302 on NGOs on the Roster for the purposes of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It recommended two draft resolutions and three draft decisions for adoption by the Council and adopted one decision that it brought to the Council's attention. By decision 1997/315 of 25 July, the Council took note of the Committee's report.

On 7 February, the Council, by decision 1997/209, approved special consultative status for the National Society for Human Rights. On 23 July, it granted general consultative status to 9 NGOs and special consultative status to 115, and added 20 organizations to its Roster (decision 1997/295).

The Council, by decision 1997/296 of 23 July, authorized the Committee to hold a resumed session in January 1998 to complete the work of its 1997 session. By decision 1997/297 of the same date, it authorized the Committee to hold a maximum of three sessions within a total duration of three weeks in 1998 and in subsequent years, unless otherwise recommended by the Committee. It also authorized the Committee to hold informal meetings prior to each session to clarify matters arising from applications for consultative status, and to meet for five days prior to its 1998 session to consider enlargement of the Committee and issues related to its methods of work (see below).

Enlargement of the Committee on NGOs

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on NGOs [E/1997/90 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1997/57 without vote [agenda item 13].

Enlargement of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1995/304 of 26 July 1995, in which it decided, inter alia, to increase, on the basis of equitable geographical representation, the current membership of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and to implement that decision after the completion of its review of arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations,

Considering that, consistent with the practice of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies in these matters, it would be desirable to receive the views of the Committee on this question,

Recognizing that the Committee is at present undertaking a review of its methods of work, that this review could have implications for its enlargement, and that it is therefore not yet in a position to present its final views to the Council,

1. Requests the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to present its views on the enlargement of the Committee to the Council;
2. Decides to take a decision on this matter in 1998.

Committee documentation

In 1997, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of issuing the Committee's documentation in all six official languages, which it had deferred from 1996 by decision 1996/13 [YUN 1996, p. 1368].

In a January 1997 note [E/1997/9], the Secretary-General stated that translating the Committee's 1997 pre-session documentation would increase the workload of the Arabic, Chinese and Russian Translation Services by some 25 per cent over their maximum capacity. The issuance of the documentation in all official languages could not be undertaken without additional resources under the 1996-1997 programme budget and the same problem would arise in proposed programme budgets for future bienniums, entailing significant budgetary requirements. The Secretary-General therefore proposed a restructuring of the Committee's documentation to reduce it to a volume that could be issued in all official languages without recourse to additional resources.

The Council, by decision 1997/210 of 7 February, decided that the Committee's documentation should be issued in all six official languages; that for new applications for consultative status, new requests for reclassification of consultative status and the quadrennial reports of NGOs, only summaries would be issued in all official languages; that the Committee should provide guidance to the Secretariat for the preparation of the summaries; and that the complete submissions from NGOs would be distributed to Committee members and other Member States in the language of submission.

Requests for hearings

The Committee on NGOs met in New York on 12 June [E/1997/80] to hear requests from NGOs in general consultative status to address the Economic and Social Council in connection with items on its agenda. The Committee recommended that five NGOs be heard by the Council at its 1997 substantive session.

Participation of NGOs not in consultative status

By decision 1997/298 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council, as an interim measure, invited those NGOs accredited to the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1168] or the World Summit for Social Development [ibid., p. 1113] to attend the forty-second (1998) session of the Commission on the Status of Women or the thirty-sixth (1998) session of the Commission for Social Development, provided they had started the process of applying for consultative status with the Council in accordance with resolution 1996/315 [YUN 1996, p. 1368]. It also invited NGOs accredited to the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955] to attend the thirty-first (1998) session of the Commission on Population and Development, provided that they had applied for consultative status. The Council requested the Secretary-General to draw the attention of NGOs accredited to those conferences to the Council's decision and to the process established under Council resolution 1996/31 [YUN 1996, p. 1360] on the consultative relationship between the United Nations and NGOs.

Strengthening the Secretariat NGO section

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Committee on NGOs [E/1997/90 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1997/58 without vote [agenda item 13].

Strengthening of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the United Nations Secretariat

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that growing interest in the work of the United Nations on the part of non-governmental organizations has led to a very large increase in the number of applications for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council,

Noting also that the increase in the number of non-governmental organizations entails a consequent increase in the number of quadrennial reports to be considered by the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations,

Recognizing the need for further improvements in the working methods of the Committee,

Recalling that in its resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, the Council placed additional responsibilities on the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the Secretariat,

Recognizing the efforts of the staff of the Section to respond to the vastly increased demands placed upon it in recent years,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session setting out specific proposals to ensure that the current and foreseeable workload of the Non-Governmental Organizations Section of the Secretariat can be met effectively and efficiently;

2. Recommends that the General Assembly, taking into account the report of the Secretary-General and measures taken by the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to improve its methods of work and to deal with this workload, provide the necessary human, financial and technical resources to the Section to enable it to carry out its responsibilities, as set out in Council resolution 1996/31, efficiently, effectively and expeditiously.

UN resources for NGO activities

The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU), in its review of resources allocated by the UN system to activities by NGOs [A/51/655-E/1996/105], examined the allocation of funds by the UN system to NGOs for programme and project implementation, the status of allocation of resources by UN organizations, accountability for funds provided to NGOs by the UN system and reporting of agencies to their legislative bodies on resources allocated, and capacity-building through financial and management support for national NGOs.

JIU concluded that there was need for a better accounting and reporting procedure by the UN system for resources devoted to NGOs. The system's working relationship with NGOs could be improved by introducing more precise criteria for selection, efficiency and accountability of NGOs through the elaboration of appropriate guidelines. Financial management should be strengthened by computerizing resources devoted to NGOs, and a systematic reporting procedure on the disbursement of funds should be established. In addition, more national NGOs should be involved as implementing partners within the framework of capacity-building.

The Secretary-General, in an April note [A/52/114-E/1997/46], transmitted the comments of ACC on the JIU report.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1997/299, took note of the ACC comments. The General Assembly, by decision 52/446 of 18 December, took note of the JIU report and the ACC comments.

Relations with civil society

ACC, at its second regular session (New York, 31 October) [ACC/1997/20], discussed relationships between the United Nations and civil society, including the private sector. ACC noted that the association of UN institutions with non-State actors was in many cases long-standing. However, changing times required a more systematic and mutually beneficial approach.

ACC reaffirmed the importance that the UN system attached to cooperation with non-State actors and indicated that it looked forward to intensifying and refining that relationship. It encouraged the secretariats of the UN system to enhance information exchange on the policies, directives and practices of cooperation with civil society partners to identify and build on best practices. The Committee agreed that the UN system had an important role to play as catalyst at the national level and proposed that further consideration be given to accountability, representation and criteria to assess competence and ways of supporting capacity-building of civil society groups in national development, humanitarian assistance and peace-building. Policies and modalities of non-State participation in the work of the UN system should be the subject of inter-agency exchanges of information, ACC stated. The participation of civil society, including NGOs, should take place within the framework of ACC guidelines, and more systematic consultation with non-State actors in preparing substantive and coordination reports, particularly concerning follow-up to recent global conferences, should be encouraged. ACC concurred that the UN Staff College should develop programmes to enhance staff capacity to work with civil society and that implications for secretariat resources should be reviewed and innovations explored. ACC encouraged more systematic exchange of information and sharing of experience at the inter-agency level on the way policies and practices governing dialogue and cooperation with the business community were evolving in UN organizations. Periodic assessments could be made by ACC of the evolution of those partnerships and their implications for the system as a whole, including the feasibility of inter-agency collaborative projects. The proposal to establish an inter-agency enterprise liaison service as a common clearing house for cooperation with the business community needed further study. ACC requested further information on the "issue management system" advocated by the Secretary-General in his reform programme (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Conferences and meetings

In 1997, the Committee on Conferences held an organizational session on 1 April, its substantive session on 25, 26, and 28 August and its resumed substantive session on 21 October [A/52/32/Rev.1]. It examined requests for additions and changes to the approved calendar of conferences and meetings for 1997 [A/AC.172/1997/2] and adopted a draft biennial calendar for 1998-1999. It considered improved use of conference-servicing resources and reviewed the proposed programme budget for 1998-1999.

The Committee approved requests from the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to convene a one-day session of the High-Level Committee of Ministers and Officials in New York on 28 June, and from the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to convene a Meeting of Governmental Experts from Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries, Representatives of Donor Countries and Financial and Development Institutions in New York from 18 to 20 June, rather than in Geneva.

The Committee recommended that the General Assembly adopt the biennial calendar of conferences and meetings for 1998-1999 and authorize the Committee to make adjustments to the calendar for 1998 as a result of action by the Assembly. It noted that the Secretariat had taken into account the arrangements referred to in Assembly resolution 51/211 A [YUN 1996, p. 1372] regarding the inclusion in the list of official holidays of the two Muslim Holy Days—Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha—and that no sessions were scheduled to open or close on 29 January or 7 April 1998 and no meetings would be held on those days. The Committee noted that the convening in 1998 in Rome of the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court would be held in accordance with Assembly resolution 40/243 [YUN 1985, p. 1256], by which the host Government would defray additional costs involved. The Committee decided to add the meetings of the treaty bodies negotiated under UN auspices to the calendar of conferences, and that the list of meetings of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency should be presented together with the UN calendar. The Committee recommended that, when planning the calendar, simultaneous peak periods at the various duty stations should be avoided. Having considered the draft biennial calendar of conferences and meetings of the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council for 1998-1999 [E/1997/L.18 & Add.1], the Committee recommended its adoption, as amended, and that the Council continue its consideration of the biennialization of those meetings. The Committee urged the Council to continue to review its calendar in the context of its final review of the mandates, composition, functions and working methods of its functional commissions and expert groups and bodies.

With regard to General Assembly resolution 40/243 [YUN 1985, p. 1256], which stated that no subsidiary organ of the Assembly should meet at Headquarters during a regular session of the Assembly unless so authorized, the Committee recommended that the Assembly authorize the following bodies to meet in New York during the fifty-second session: Committee on Relations with the Host Country; Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People; Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East; Executive Board of UNDP/United Nations Population Fund; Committee on Conferences; and the Committee on Programme and Coordination. The Committee also recommended that the Assembly grant waivers to the rule regarding subsidiary bodies authorized to meet away from their established headquarters solely on the basis of the UN calendar of conferences and meetings as recommended by the Committee on Conferences. The Assembly should invite all its subsidiary bodies so authorized to keep under review the exception to the Headquarters rule and to report any changes to the Assembly through the Committee.

Intergovernmental meetings

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences in 1997, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General for circulation to the General Assembly, the Security Council or both, as follows:

Sixty-fifth (Tripoli, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, 24-28 February) and sixty-sixth (Harare, Zimbabwe, 28-31 May) ordinary sessions of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) Council of Ministers [S/1996/176-A/52/465]; thirty-third ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Harare, 2-4 June) [A/52/465]; Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (Edinburgh, United Kingdom, 24-27 October) [A/52/556-S/1997/834]; eighteenth meeting of the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community (Montego Bay, Jamaica, 29 June-4 July) [A/52/284]; Annual Coordination Meeting of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 2 October) [A/52/529-S/1997/820]; sixty-third session of the Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 31 May) [A/52/168-S/1997/429]; eighteenth session of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council (Kuwait, 20-22 December) [S/1998/9]; Eleventh Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Rio Group (Asuncion, Paraguay, 23-24 August) [A/52/347]; Meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Heads of Delegation of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (New York, 25 September) [A/52/447-S/1997/775]; First Meeting of Ministers of Culture of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Medellin, Colombia, 4-5 September) [A/52/432]; twenty-first annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 26 September) [A/52/460]; twenty-eighth South Pacific Forum (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, 17-19 September) [A/52/413]; and Ninth Summit of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (Male, Maldives, 12-14 May) [A/52/222].

Use of conference services

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/211 A [YUN 1996, p. 1372], the Secretary-General submitted a 10 July report [A/52/215 & Add.1] on the results of the review of entitlements carried out by subsidiary bodies that had not fully utilized their meeting entitlements, including the duration of sessions, and on the problems and factors involved in bodies whose utilization factor was below the benchmark figure for at least three sessions. The report contained replies from and the results of consultations with those bodies.

The Committee on Conferences requested its Chairman to continue to consult with the chairmen of those bodies with a view to making recommendations to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources.

The Secretary-General submitted a 29 July report [A/AC.172/1997/3] to the Committee on Conferences on improved utilization of conference-servicing resources, including meeting statistics of UN organs. The report contained data on planned and actual utilization of conference resources allocated to a core sample of bodies that met in 1996, and an analysis of those statistics. In an addendum [A/AC.172/1997/3/Add.1], the Secretary-General submitted a synoptic report on meetings held during the bienniums 1994-1995 and 1996-1997, with a breakdown of meeting services and documentation costs.

The Committee on Conferences [A/52/32/Rev.1] recommended that the computation of utilization factors in future reports should be computerized and that output statistics of conference services at the various duty stations should be further standardized in terms of definition and the methodology used to compile them.

The Committee expressed concern that 32 per cent of requests for interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States had been denied. It urged intergovernmental bodies to take into account, in the planning stage, meetings of their regional and other major groupings of Member States, and to dovetail such meetings with those of sessional bodies. They should also notify Conference Services well in advance of any cancellations so that resources could be reassigned to meetings of other regional and major groupings.

The Committee requested the Secretariat to continue to engage in dialogue with Member States at Headquarters, as well as at UN Offices in Geneva, Nairobi and Vienna, to enhance the coordination of conference services. It welcomed the Secretariat's initiative to arrange a video-meeting on matters relating to conference services with those Offices and requested the Secretary-General to include their input in preparing reports for substantive sessions of the Committee on Conferences.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/734], adopted resolution 52/214 A without vote [agenda item 119].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 40/243 of 18 December 1985, 43/222 B of 21 December 1988, 47/202 A of 22 December 1992, 48/222 A of 23 December 1993, 49/221 A of 23 December 1994, 50/206 A of 23 December 1995 and 51/211 A of 18 December 1996,

Taking note with concern of the difficulties experienced by some Member States owing to the lack of conference services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States,

1. Notes with appreciation the work of the Committee on Conferences, and takes note of its report;

2. Approves the draft biennial calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1998-1999 as submitted by the Committee on Conferences, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make adjustments in the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1998 that may become necessary as a result of actions and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its fifty-second session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the conference services required as a result of decisions taken by the General Assembly at its fifty-second session, taking into account, as necessary, the procedures established in Assembly resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/211 of 21 December 1987;

5. Decides that henceforth the two holidays of Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha shall be observed as official holidays of the United Nations at Headquarters, and at other duty stations where applicable, and that United Nations buildings at those locations shall be closed to the public on those days;

6. Decides also that no United Nations meetings shall be held on Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha, which occur in 1998 on 29 January and 7 April, respectively, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure strict implementation of this decision and of paragraph 5 above when preparing all future draft calendars of conferences and meetings of the United Nations;

7. Expresses concern that 32 per cent of requests were denied for interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, in view of the importance of those meetings for the smooth functioning of sessional bodies, while recognizing that meetings of Charter and mandated bodies must be serviced as a priority;

8. Urges intergovernmental bodies to spare no effort at the planning stage to take into account meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, to make provision for such meetings in their programmes of work and to notify the conference services well in advance of any cancellations so that unutilized conference-servicing resources may, to the extent possible, be reassigned to meetings of regional and other major groupings of States;

9. Decides to include all necessary resources in the budget for the biennium 1998-1999 to provide interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States upon request by those groupings, on an ad hoc basis, in accordance with established practice, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, through the Committee on Conferences, a report on the implementation of this decision;

10. Emphasizes the importance of providing adequate conference-servicing resources to all United Nations conference centres;

11. Welcomes the improvement, relative to 1995, in the overall utilization factor for 1996, which exceeded the benchmark of 80 per cent, in particular at Geneva and Vienna;

12. Notes with concern the underutilization of conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi;

13. Calls for better utilization of conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi;

14. Encourages all the subsidiary bodies of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme, the Commission on Human Settlements and other United Nations bodies to hold their meetings at the United Nations Office at Nairobi to the extent possible;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to assist the aforementioned bodies in improving this situation and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, through the Committee on Conferences, on the actions taken to this end;

16. Reiterates its request to the Committee on Conferences, in consultation with the organs concerned, to examine the cases where the utilization factor has been lower than 80 per cent for at least three sessions, with a view to making appropriate recommendations in order to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources;

17. Reaffirms its decision that the headquarters rule shall be adhered to by all bodies;

18. Decides that waivers to the headquarters rule shall be granted solely on the basis of the calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations which the Committee on Conferences recommended for adoption by the General Assembly;

19. Invites all its subsidiary bodies that are authorized to meet away from their established headquarters to keep under review the exception to the headquarters rule in the light of the current situation of their work and to report any changes to the General Assembly through the Committee on Conferences;

By decision 52/456 of 22 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the pattern of conferences at the resumed fifty-second (1998) session.

Cost-accounting system

The Secretariat informed the Committee on Conferences, at its 1997 session, of the difficulties encountered in establishing a cost-accounting system for conference services. It was pointed out that the financial module of the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS), the source of the data used, was available at Headquarters only. As to cost estimates, while provision had not been made in the budget for the development of the system, efforts would be made to finance it through resources allocated for technological innovations.

The Committee supported in principle further development of the cost-accounting system for conference services and recommended that it encompass other areas of the Secretariat and reflect the experience of other duty stations. The Secretary-General was asked to report on the notional costs of conference services at the UN Offices at Geneva, Nairobi and Vienna.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/734], adopted resolution 52/214 D without vote [agenda item 119].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/206 D of 23 December 1995 and 51/211 C of 18 December 1996,

Stressing the need to provide Member States and United Nations bodies with more comprehensive and accurate information on the costs of meetings and documentation,

Noting the possible benefits of the cost-accounting system for the financial efficiency of the United Nations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, as a matter of priority, to expedite the development of the cost-accounting system for conference services in 1998 and to extend it to other areas of the Secretariat, ensuring that the system reflects the experience of other duty stations;

2. Encourages the Secretary-General, to the extent possible, to utilize in-house resources to implement the cost-accounting system;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly by 31 July 1998, through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on measures taken to develop further the cost-accounting system;

Smoke-free conference rooms

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/734], adopted resolution 52/214 E without vote [agenda item 119].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 38/401 of 23 September 1983 concerning the prohibition of smoking in small conference rooms and the discouragement of smoking in large conference rooms,

1. Calls on representatives of Member States to abide by decision 38/401;

2. Encourages all users of United Nations conference facilities, in order to avoid involuntary exposure to passive smoking, to refrain from smoking, in particular in conference rooms.

Documents control

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/211 B [YUN 1996 p. 1374], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/52/291] on control and limitation of documentation.

He reported that as part of his reform measures (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), he had announced that all documents produced by the Secretariat should be no longer than 16 pages, a reduction from the former standard of 24 pages. Proposals would be made to intergovernmental bodies and subsidiary bodies of the Assembly to reduce the length of their reports from the standard 32 pages to 20 pages. At the Secretariat level, action had been taken to reduce the volume of reproduction and redistribution of printed material, the number of copies of documents kept in stock had been cut in half, and the circulation of documents in the Secretariat and their distribution in meeting rooms had been substantially curtailed. Permanent Missions at Headquarters had been asked to review their requirements for printed documents and print runs were being adjusted in accordance with feedback. Those measures had been possible due to wider access to the optical disk system. New document formats had been developed and were gradually being introduced in all languages to enhance readability, preserve a consistent look and produce savings in reproduction, distribution and storage costs. However, data confirmed the need for additional measures at the intergovernmental level to achieve significant progress in documentation control.

The Committee on Conferences [A/52/32/Rev.1] recommended that the Assembly invite intergovernmental bodies to reduce the length of their reports from 32 to 20 pages over a period of time rather than with a fixed deadline, and make suggestions to those bodies on how to accomplish that reduction. The Committee's Chairman was asked to write to the chairmen of those Assembly subsidiary organs entitled to written meeting records who had yet to respond to his previous letter, reminding them to consider requesting the Secretariat to issue unedited transcripts of one meeting for comparison purposes with a view to the possible substitution of such transcripts for their usual records.

Optical disk system

The Secretary-General, responding to resolution 51/211 C [YUN 1996, p. 1375], submitted an August report on access to the UN optical disk system (ODS) [A/C.5/51/56]. He stated that, since the introduction of the system in 1993, there had been exponential growth in the number of users among permanent and observer missions and government capitals. At the end of 1996, there were more than 2,300 users worldwide, with user availability to all Member States and, since 30 June 1997, permanent missions could access the system through the Internet. It was planned to place a second Web server on-line in New York. The Distribution Section of Conference Services had conducted a survey among permanent and observer missions in New York to establish new hard-copy document requirements, taking into account electronic availability on ODS. The results indicated a reduction of 14 per cent in the number of copies missions wished to have distributed to them on issuance. On the other hand, the availability of documents on ODS and access to them via the Internet had not had a discernible effect on the number of copies requested by delegations in conference rooms and at document counters at Headquarters.

CD-ROM technology was considered to be a very economical supplemental manner by which the optical disk database could be distributed to interested users around the world. A facility to produce CD-ROMs directly from ODS had been introduced and the first prototypes of CD-ROMs were expected to be ready in 1997. The CD-ROMs would have the same search and retrieval interface as the optical disk on the Internet. Users might then choose between one or the other to access UN documents without having to learn new functions or procedures.

Development of a policy for the further expansion of ODS was in progress. The establishment and development of ODS and the use of the Internet to offer electronic access to documents and to the UN World Wide Web site were the foundation of a plan to offer information of higher quality, at a lower unit cost, to a vastly broader audience in every Member State.

The Committee on Conferences took note of the Secretary-General's report and recommended that the further development of the system should be encouraged.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 September [meeting 107], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/742/Add.1], adopted resolution 51/211 F without vote [agenda item 118].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/211 C of 18 December 1996 on the pattern of conferences,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on access to the optical disk system,

Taking into account that only publicly available official documents and publications and other public texts of the United Nations are stored in the optical disk system,

Noting with appreciation the ongoing efforts to improve access to the optical disk system,

1. Encourages the Secretary-General to develop a policy for the further expansion of the optical disk system of the United Nations, including provisions for making it available on a fee-for-service basis to any interested party, on the understanding that access will continue to be provided free of charge to permanent and observer missions and other government offices of Member States, with a maximum of ten access passwords for each Member State, as well as provisions for making it available to all staff of the Secretariat;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in developing such a policy, to take into account the special needs of developing countries and other special groups of potential users;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that access to, and the flow of information from, the optical disk system for end-users, especially in capital cities, are both continuous and uninterrupted;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue work on providing access to the optical disk system in the six official languages of the United Nations on an equal basis;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the policy to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-second session.

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/734], adopted resolution 52/214 C without vote [agenda item 119].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/206 D of 23 December 1995, 51/211 C of 18 December 1996 and 51/211 F of 15 September 1997,

Stressing the importance of equal access to, and benefit from, the optical disk system and other new technologies in all six official languages for all Member States and the need to overcome the difficulties faced by some Member States, in particular developing countries, in acquiring the technology to access the optical disk system, as well as other available technologies,

Appreciating the actions taken by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council to achieve universal connectivity between the United Nations databases and those of Member States, including through their permanent missions, and the training programmes initiated to that end,

Also appreciating the efforts of the Secretary-General to incorporate new information technologies in the work of the Organization,

1. Recognizes the efforts to provide wider access to the optical disk system, while continuing to ensure the availability of hard copies of documents for Member States, in particular for developing countries;

2. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the texts of all new public documents, in all six official languages, and information materials of the United Nations are made available through the United Nations Web site daily and are accessible to Member States without delay;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to issue public information material in all official languages on the United Nations Web site as soon as possible, and to report on the implementation of this decision to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session through the Committee on Information;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to complete the task of uploading all important older United Nations documents on the United Nations Web site in all six official languages on a priority basis, so that these archives are also available to Member States through that medium;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue work on providing access to the optical disk system in the six official languages on an equal basis;

Recurrent publications

The Secretary-General transmitted in August the report of JIU entitled "United Nations publications: enhancing cost-effectiveness in implementing legislative mandates" [A/51/946]. The report was prepared in response to General Assembly resolutions 50/206 C [YUN 1995, p. 1453] and 51/211 B [YUN 1996, p. 1375]. JIU reviewed aspects of UN publishing activities—the relevance, usefulness and potential for duplication of UN publications; publications' policies and practices; administrative, managerial and organizational set-up and oversight; and planning, production and sales/distribution stages of the publishing process.

The inspectors recommended that all UN legislative bodies should review and assess existing publications programmes; identify duplication within and outside of the UN system and marginal and obsolete publications; and make proposals for consolidation and/or elimination. The Secretary-General should submit to the Assembly the most updated report on publications policies (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII); review the administrative, managerial and organizational structure of publishing activities and introduce reforms at Headquarters, including consolidation of a number of existing functions and units; and strengthen the Publications Board to ensure overall control, oversight and coordination, and policy guidance. Other recommendations included: specific mandates should be the primary criterion for planning new publications, while keeping those based on general mandates to a minimum; proposed publications programmes should be screened, prior to the preparation of each biennial programme budget, for their relevance, usefulness and potential for duplication; the Secretary-General should institute a system whereby each department/office would receive a separate but consolidated budgetary line covering publishing activities; decisions by substantive legislative bodies for new publications should be taken only after careful review of information on potential duplication and financial implications; the United Nations should develop a cost-accounting system by the end of 1998 to enable it to know the full cost of publications, in addition to identifying savings potential; pending the establishment of such a system, the annual printing workload should be planned to make more rational use of internal printing capacities and outsourcing practices should be reviewed; advanced technology should be enhanced, shifting towards electronic publishing; cooperative arrangements, in particular joint publications between the United Nations and other entities, should be promoted; sales income reports should be produced and reviewed regularly and the current treatment of such income should be reviewed; and sales promotion should be strengthened to maximize financial returns.

In August, the Committee on Conferences [A/52/32/Rev.1], pending the comments of the Secretary-General on the JIU report, endorsed only those recommendations addressed directly to substantive legislative bodies. It stated that input from users of modern technology might be useful in evaluating future publications programmes.

In a 17 November note [A/52/685] containing his comments on the JIU report, the Secretary-General said that budgetary reductions in 1996 and 1997 had resulted in the termination, curtailment and deferral of a number of publications proposed in the programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium, an indication that departments were prioritizing the publications in their programmes. That trend would continue as all UN entities worked to maximize their resources. Progress was already being made in rationalizing publications, eliminating duplication and ensuring the most cost-effective production. The Secretary-General was of the view that the current responsibilities of legislative bodies and Secretariat units in establishing free distribution lists needed to be reviewed, as did the importance of copyright enforcement.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/214 B (see below), deferred consideration of the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments thereon to its resumed (1998) session.

Translation services

The Committee on Conferences considered on oral report by the Secretariat on efforts to improve the quality of translation of documents in all six official languages. The Committee expressed satisfaction with the release in April of funds appropriated in the 1996-1997 programme budget for translator posts and workstations. However, concern was expressed at the decreased level of funding in the proposed 1998-1999 programme budget for the recruitment of permanent translation staff, the higher proportion of the translation workload that was to be outsourced, and the continuing delays in the delivery of translations to delegations. The Secretariat explained that while contractual translation had been recommended as the least costly method of producing translations, careful monitoring was needed; in that regard, quality control of outsourced translations had been expanded. Remote translations arrangements with the UN Office in Vienna were already being used to expand translation capacity at Headquarters. Late delivery of translations was frequently attributable to the late submission of documents by the substantive departments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 December [meeting 79], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/734], adopted resolution 52/214 B without vote [agenda item 119].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/202 B of 22 December 1992, 48/222 B of 23 December 1993, 49/221 B of 23 December 1994, 50/206 B and C of 23 December 1995 and 51/211 B of 18 December 1996,

Regretting the delayed issuance of the report of the Secretary-General on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on United Nations publications,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the control and limitation of documentation;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on United Nations publications, the positive opinion of the Committee on Conferences thereon and the report of the Secretary-General thereon, and decides to consider both reports at its resumed fifty-second session;

3. Expresses deep concern about the decline in the quality of some reports and documents originating in the Secretariat;

4. Notes the decision of the Secretary-General that documents originating in the Secretariat should be no longer than sixteen pages;

5. Emphasizes that this reduction should not adversely affect either the quality of presentation or the content of the documents;

6. Stresses once again the need for strict compliance with the existing page limit for reports of subsidiary bodies;

7. Invites all intergovernmental bodies to consider, where appropriate, the possibility of reducing the length of their reports from the desired limit of thirty-two pages to twenty pages over a period of time without adversely affecting either the quality of presentation or the content of the reports;

8. Decides to keep under review the length and quality of all documents;

9. Reiterates its request to United Nations bodies and to the Secretary-General to ensure respect for equal treatment of the six official languages of the United Nations;

10. Expresses deep concern about difficulties experienced by some Member States owing to the suspension of some publications in all official languages and the delay in the translation of official documents;

11. Decides, in this regard, to request the Secretary-General to provide all necessary resources to reverse this situation;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to improve the quality and accuracy of meeting records in all six official languages through full reliance, in the preparation and translation of those records, on sound recordings and written texts of statements as they were delivered in the original languages, and to issue those records within a reasonable time-frame;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the summary records of the Fifth Committee, given the technical complexity of their subject matter, are prepared by experienced language staff who are thoroughly familiar with current administrative and financial developments in the Organization, and are issued within a reasonable time-frame;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve and accelerate the accurate translation of documents into the official languages, giving special significance to the quality of translation;

15. Stresses the need to strengthen the monitoring of contractual translations to ensure that they meet the quality requirements for United Nations documents;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that summary records are translated in all six official languages concurrently;

17. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, where appropriate, to introduce new technologies such as machine-assisted translation and common terminology databases;

18. Expresses deep concern that the limits to self-revision have not been kept at a level that would ensure a high quality of translation;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to reinstate the post of reviser in the six official languages;

20. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that documentation is available in accordance with the six-week rule for the distribution of documents simultaneously in the six official languages of the General Assembly;

21. Regrets that there continue to be delays in the submission of documents to the conference services;

22. Reaffirms its decision that, if a report is issued late, the reasons for the delay should be indicated when the report is introduced;

23. Requests the Committee on Conferences to review the late issuance of documents and to suggest remedial action for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to direct all departments to include, where appropriate, the following elements in reports originating in the Secretariat:

(a) A summary of the report;

(b) Consolidated conclusions, recommendations and other proposed actions;

(c) Relevant background information;

25. Decides that all documents submitted to legislative bodies for consideration and action should have conclusions and recommendations in bold print;

26. Expresses deep concern about the technical and audio quality of some conference rooms, and, in this regard, requests the Secretary-General to present proposals at the first part of the resumed fifty-second session of the General Assembly in order to ensure all necessary resources for the upgrading of those conference rooms, including the interpretation booths; obtain such data and to promote use of the Internet as the basis for future development of information services to Member States.

The UN Secretariat and UNDP continued to operate dedicated help desk facilities for permanent and observer missions; by June 1997, all missions were provided with the means to access the Internet. As to facilitating information access and dissemination in country locations, the UNDP-financed Sustainable Development Networking Programme promoted access to and the sharing of information and expertise among all sectors of civil society. Information available on the UN Web server had been substantially revised, with a new multilingual Home Page, which included nearly all areas of interest relating to the United Nations, with links to other Web sites system-wide. Videoconferencing facilities were available at Headquarters, and UN Offices in Geneva and Vienna had acquired videoconferencing equipment. The 1998-1999 programme budget continued a proposal for providing major duty stations with a videoconferencing network.

On 18 July, the Chairman of the Working Group informed the Council that 185 missions in New York and 113 in Geneva had been connected to the UN information network and the Working Group had offered courses at both duty stations to meet the needs of the missions and the Secretariat. The UN Web Page was consulted weekly, on average, by more than a million users from 107 countries. ODS, which was linked to the Web Page, had considerably facilitated the consultation of UN documents stored in the system. The Working Group had also helped mission personnel to create their own Web pages and had observed that videoconferencing was making a considerable contribution to reducing UN expenses. To forge collaboration between the United Nations and those responsible for technological innovation, the Working Group had organized symposiums with permanent missions, the Secretariat and the private sector.

The ACC Information Systems Coordination Committee (ISCC) held its fifth session in New York from 1 to 3 December [ACC/1997/19]. It forwarded to ACC for endorsement of its system-wide applicability, the "Executive Statement on Migration to Contemporary Document Management", which while, recognizing that UN agencies were at different points in implementing electronic document management, noted that there was a need for adherence to an agreed framework for development and implementation. ISCC directed the Task Force to examine the issue and develop the strategic statement of direction for ACC. The statement outlined the opportunities presented by electronic document

UN information systems

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/35 [YUN 1996, p. 1379], the Secretary-General submitted a June report [E/1997/88] on international cooperation in the field of informatics. The report examined the work of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics on the need to harmonize and improve UN information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States, actions by the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to concerns raised by the Working Group and videoconferencing plans for the UN system.

The Working Group continued to address the need to make UN information more easily accessible electronically to all missions and to ensure that they could easily connect to the Internet to management and the consequences of inaction. It also examined the costs involved and savings to be realized, and the high-level requirements for an electronic document management system, including the core set of metadata (information describing other data).

The General Assembly, by decision 51/468 A of 13 June, noted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the management of electronic mail in the Secretariat and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon [YUN 1996, p. 1378].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 18 July [meeting 33], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1997/1 [draft: E/1997/L.28] without vote [agenda item 6 (c)].

The need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the deep interest of Member States in harnessing the benefits of new information technologies for furthering the objectives of the United Nations, including the objectives of economic and social development,

Recalling its resolutions 1991/70 of 26 July 1991, 1992/60 of 31 July 1992, 1993/56 of 29 July 1993, 1994/46 of 29 July 1994, 1995/61 of 28 July 1995 and 1996/35 of 25 July 1996 on the need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States, with due regard to all official languages,

Recalling also that in its resolution 1996/35 it commended the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics for the concrete actions it had taken in pursuance of its mandate and requested the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene the Working Group for one more year, from within existing resources, for the due fulfilment of the provisions of the Council resolutions on this item,

Welcoming the oral report presented by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics on the progress achieved so far by the Working Group in fulfilling its mandate,

Highly appreciative of the accomplishments of the Working Group, which include:

(a) The attainment of nearly universal connectivity between United Nations databases and those of the permanent missions of the Member States,

(b) The training of a large number of personnel of the permanent missions and the Secretariat in the use of a variety of electronic facilities and techniques,

(c) The identification and progressive elimination of several impediments to access to United Nations databases,

(d) The establishment of video conferencing facilities for use by the permanent missions and the Secretariat,

(e) The establishment of the United Nations Web page on the Internet and a connection between this facility and the United Nations optical disk system,

(f) The uploading of all resolutions and decisions of the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council from 1946 onwards on the United Nations optical disk system and the enlargement of the database of documents on the United Nations Web page,

(g) Efforts to enable the United Nations and its Member States to reduce waste and duplication as well as expenditure on unnecessary documentation,

(h) The provision of assistance to permanent missions for creating their own Web pages on the Internet,

Deeply appreciative of the fact that the work of the Working Group has not involved any additional expenditures and that its needs have been met from within existing resources,

Highly appreciative of the fact that the work done by the Working Group has already resulted in savings for the United Nations and its Member States and has created opportunities for further savings,

Taking note with deep interest of the proposed initiatives of the Working Group, including the promotion of computer-based decision-making techniques to facilitate the drafting of resolutions and documents in ways that would accelerate the reaching of agreements in the drafting process and the employment of modern information technology for the development activities of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the work done by the Working Group will support and facilitate the successful implementation of the initiatives being taken by the Secretary-General with a view to expanding the use of information technology and the availability and transparency of information in order further to facilitate access to United Nations information in all countries,

Agreeing with the assessment in the report of the Working Group that further work needs to be done by the Working Group to fulfil its mandate,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on action taken by the United Nations to implement Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/35,

1. Reiterates once again the high priority it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for States Members of the United Nations and for observers, through, inter alia, their permanent missions, to the growing number of computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations;

2. Calls for the urgent and continued implementation of measures required to achieve these objectives;

3. Reaffirms the continuing need for representatives of States to be consulted closely and associated actively with the respective executive and governing bodies of United Nations institutions dealing with informatics within the United Nations system so that the specific needs of States as internal end-users can be given due priority;

4. Decides that the action programme to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States should continue to be implemented from within existing resources and in full consultation with the representatives of States;

5. Highly commends the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics for the concrete actions it has taken and for the impressive results it has produced in pursuance of its mandate;

6. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene the Working Group for one more year, from within existing resources, for the due fulfilment of the provisions of the Council resolutions on this item and for facilitating the successful implementation of the initiatives being taken by the Secretary-General with regard to the use of information technology;

7. Requests the Working Group to design an overall information management strategy for the United Nations system;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to extend full cooperation to the Working Group and to give priority to implementing its recommendations;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report on the follow-up action taken on the present resolution, including the findings of the Working Group, to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1998.

The General Assembly, in resolution 51/241 of 15 September on strengthening the UN system, addressed the question of technology (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Telecommunications

The General Assembly, by decision 51/470 of 13 June, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the UN telecommunications system [YUN 1994, p. 1410] and the JIU report entitled "A review of telecommunications and related information technologies in the United Nations system" [YUN 1995, p. 1455], and endorsed the Secretary-General's report on telecommunications in the UN system [YUN 1996, p. 1378].

Integrated Management Information System (IMIS)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in April, having considered the Secretary-General's eighth (1996) progress report on the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions thereon [YUN 1996, p. 1380], adopted decision 51/464 without vote, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/51/750/Add.1] [agenda item 116].

Eighth progress report on the Integrated Management Information System project

At its 95th plenary meeting, on 3 April 1997, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, having considered the eighth progress report of the Secretary-General on the Integrated Management Information System project and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General;

(b) Endorsed the recommendations and observations of the Advisory Committee, with the exception of paragraph 12;

(c) Urged the harmonization of management systems within all organizations, agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations, insofar as such harmonization was cost-effective;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, to submit the resource and staffing requirements of the Integrated Management Information System project, in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

(e) Also requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the information requested by the Advisory Committee was included in the ninth progress report on the Integrated Management Information System project to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session. [agenda item 116]

Report of Secretary-General (December). The Secretary-General, in December, submitted his ninth report on IMIS [A/52/711]. He updated the status of the IMIS project and described the operation of the system and work still to be done. During the year, major progress was achieved in a number of areas but data problems and implementation difficulties were also experienced. Solving those issues had entailed considerable unplanned effort, creating additional resource requirements. Areas of successful implementation included: implementing improved operations of Release 3, financial and support services applications, at Headquarters; re-engineering Release 2, staff entitlements, to take into account its integration with payroll; analysis and start of construction of Release 4, payroll; implementation of Release 1 at four additional offices (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; Geneva; Nairobi, and Santiago, Chile); implementation at Headquarters of the travel functionalities; upgrading of the system to the latest versions of all its technical components, resolution of performance problems and installation of the new version at other offices; and increased cooperation between the user organizations for common maintenance of the system.

Difficulties related to Release 3 had led to slippage in the implementation schedule of Release 4 at Headquarters and of the system as a whole at offices away from Headquarters. The substantial additional work required for Release 2 and implementation of Release 3 at Headquarters had also led to unforeseen increased costs. Net additional requirements were estimated at $10.4 million. The Secretariat, after reviewing its options and considering the observations of the Board of Auditors (see below), concluded that the best solution was to absorb the additional cost in the current biennium (1996-1997) by offsetting it against available under-expenditures. The overall development and implementation costs of the project from its inception in 1989 through completion were estimated at $72.9 million, against an approved budget of $62.6 million.

Board of Auditors report. In December, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Board of Auditors [A/52/755] on all aspects of its updated special audit of the IMIS project. The Board found that the project, initially estimated to cost $28 million (1988 estimates), was reprogrammed and re-budgeted in 1994 at $76 million (1994 estimates). A contractor was engaged in 1991 to develop IMIS at a total price of $17 million; by 1996, that price had increased to $34.5 million. The Administration attributed the increase to the evolution of requirements, implementation support, training and maintenance costs not originally foreseen. The project, initially expected to be completed by January 1994, was now expected to be completed after July 1998. The Administration had paid $2.59 million to the IMIS contractor for delays attributed to the United Nations. Of the three Releases launched, only Release 1 and 3 were operating, while Release 2, covering staff entitlements, had to be turned off in October 1996, 18 months after it had been launched. Release 4 (payroll, personnel insurance management and time and attendance records) was still under development and Release 5 (budget formulation) had been abandoned earlier. Although new tasks had been added to the IMIS contract, the list of deliverables had not been updated since September 1994, and the work plan was not updated after March 1995. As a result, the Administration was unable to use the list and the work plan to monitor IMIS implementation. It had also contracted out tasks that it should have performed itself, such as data cleaning and the operation of the Help Desk, which increased unduly the Organization's dependence on the contractor.

The Auditors recommended that the Administration: draw up a comprehensive plan, indicating time schedules and resources needed to resolve outstanding problems; analyse the reasons Release 2 did not work and formulate a timetable for activating the system; amend the IMIS contract to update the list of deliverables and the work plan and use them to monitor payments and deliverables; secure adequate in-house expertise on the logic, hard codes and other technical features and deploy sufficient manpower to reduce dependence on the contractor; and develop a comprehensive reporting system to meet the processing requirements of different users, thereby minimizing the need for ad hoc queries on the database. The Organization also needed to rectify system errors in the releases and to improve the reporting system in general and in Release 3 in particular, and to facilitate the preparation of financial statements. It should also give priority to developing and implementing a plan for the long-term maintenance of the system.

Other matters

Common services

In February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly his comments [A/52/686/Add.1] on the 1996 JIU report entitled "Common services at United Nations Headquarters" [YUN 1996, p. 1380]. The Secretary-General welcomed the thrust of the report and its recommendations. However, he noted that it did not provide practical solutions for consolidating and enhancing the efficiency of common services. JIU did not quantify the costs and benefits of its proposals nor evaluate the ongoing efforts of the United Nations and its affiliated bodies to modify their common service agreements. Neither did it answer the question of whether economies of scale could be universally realized through re-centralization and consolidation of common services at Headquarters or whether consolidation could have a negative impact on the efficiency of services. The example of information technology demonstrated that the consolidation of common services did not necessarily improve their efficiency and that flexibility was essential.

In further observations [A/51/686/Add.2] transmitted to the Assembly in March, JIU stated that the Secretary-General's reservations focused exclusively on the operational constraints that the reorganization of common services recommended by the Inspectors could entail for the providers and users of those services. No convincing example was given of such possible constraints, nor was evidence provided that such constraints would outweigh the benefits of a changeover to a more coherent and cost-effective system of common services at Headquarters. In that connection, the Inspectors found that, for the operational programmes and funds particularly, improved administrative synergies and economies of scale at their common New York Headquarters would facilitate their achievement of integrated and coherent field operations and facilities worldwide.

On 13 June, the General Assembly, by decision 51/469 A, noted the JIU report and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon. The Assembly also noted the JIU report entitled "United Nations system common premises and services in thefield"andthecommentsofACCthereon[YUN 1996, p. 763].

UN insurance programmes

JIU, in comments [A/51/530 & Corr.1] on the 1996 report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the management audit of UN global cargo and motor vehicle insurance programmes, noted that the audit was confined to two major objects of insurance and recommended, taking into account the level of resources involved in insurance policies throughout the Organization, that a broader, similar management audit be conducted to cover all UN insured assets. It also recommended that ACC explore the possibilities of having common system-wide practices and procedures, including common insurance programmes; that information be provided to the Assembly regarding the extent to which the Department of Administration and Management and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) possessed the level of resources and expertise to properly negotiate, control and oversee the insurance programmes; and that information be provided on whether contracts signed were the result of international bidding. JIU further recommended that the Field Administration and Logistics Division of DPKO immediately advise the United Nations Angola Verification Mission to end the duplicate insurance coverage of its vehicles by terminating its local insurance coverage. JIU was of the opinion that the decision to purchase or not local insurance instead of increasing global insurance coverage should be solely guided by cost effectiveness and conform with local regulations.

The General Assembly, by decision 51/468 B of 13 June, took note with concern of the OIOS report. It requested the Secretary-General to entrust OIOS with a further audit covering all UN insurance programmes, including insurance contracts based on international bidding. He should explore the possibility of having common system-wide practices and procedures, including common insurance programmes, and address JIU's opinion regarding the purchase of local insurance coverage and report to the Assembly at its next session.

UN catering services

The Secretary-General transmitted in February an OIOS report [A/51/802] on the audit of Headquarters catering operations, which, since 1986, had been operated by a contractor under a profit and loss arrangement. The audit included a review of the contractual arrangement and of UN monitoring of contractor performance, as well as an analysis of the operating statements submitted by the contractor to the United Nations. The report also discussed findings regarding catering operations at the United Nations Office at Geneva and the International Trade Centre.

OIOS found that while the current contractual arrangement had helped the United Nations to avoid further financial losses from catering operations, constituting a major improvement over the prior situation, the General Assembly's desire to make catering operations financially self-supporting was not achieved and the contract did not assure the most effective use of the Organization's resources. The contract provided for the contractor to retain, as a management fee, the excess of gross receipts over operating expenses and to absorb any losses. However, operating expenses excluded direct and indirect costs incurred by the Organization in providing and maintaining the facilities (space, utilities, major equipment). Thus, the contractor, with limited capital investment, retained a significant profit of more than $12 million over the 1986-1996 period, while the United Nations continued to subsidize the catering operation.

OIOS recommended that the objectives of UN catering operations be clearly defined and completely outsourced, with adequate UN monitoring. All costs incurred by the United Nations should be identified and reimbursed by the contractor, a profit-sharing arrangement between the United Nations and the contractor should be implemented, and vendor selection criteria clearly established. Annual audited financial statements should be submitted by the contractor, and consumer price indicators and quality assurance indicators included in the contract. Catering committees should be reactivated and monitoring of catering operations strengthened. Regular health inspections of the facilities and health examinations of the employees as well as proper maintenance of the facilities and its major equipment should be ensured.

The Office noted that its audit recommendations had been reflected in the new request for proposal from vendors and would be taken into consideration in developing the new contract for the UN catering operation.

The Secretary-General, in his October report on procurement reform [A/52/534 & Corr.1] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), welcomed the OIOS recommendations on Headquarters catering operations and assured the General Assembly that they were fully taken into account in the preparation of the request for proposal from vendors. Under the new catering contract, signed on 29 August, the catering operations at Headquarters were in full compliance with those recommendations.

In resolution 51/231 of 13 June, the General Assembly endorsed the OIOS recommendations and asked the Secretary-General to achieve consistency in policy and practice with regard to catering operations at Headquarters and in Geneva.

Outsourcing practices

OIOS report. In a February report [A/51/804], OIOS reviewed outsourcing practices at the United Nations. Its major findings were: there was a need to develop an Organization-wide policy on outsourcing, as the lack of policy guidelines contributed to the inconsistent outsourcing approaches by programme managers; although outsourcing should accomplish one or more goals, ranging from acquiring technical expertise, cost savings, efficiency and expediting a process to providing temporary assistance, few programme managers were able to identify the extent of goals achieved; there were a number of cases of non-compliance with procurement procedures, despite the fact that successful outsourcing depended on proficient management of the procurement process; there was a great need to ensure monitoring of vendor performance; and an outsourcing focal point should be established within the Department of Administration and Management. The review concluded that serious consideration should be given to expanding the use of outsourcing where justified by a cost-benefit analysis. However, it was crucial to ensure vigilant monitoring/evaluation.

On 13 June, the General Assembly, by decision 51/468 E, decided to revert, at its fifty-second session, to the OIOS report on outsourcing in the light of a forthcoming JIU report on the subject.

JIU report. The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a September JIU report [A/52/338] entitled "The challenge of outsourcing for the United Nations system". JIU concluded that the value of outsourcing was the alternative means it provided for achieving cost savings and/or important improvements. However, it had been used throughout the UN system in an ad hoc manner without the benefit of a defined policy.

JIU recommended that the Executive Heads of each participating organization prepare a policy statement committing their organizations to outsourcing as a means for achieving improved cost-effectiveness, including therein criteria for determining non-core activities to be considered for outsourcing, while assuring the international character and mandate of the organization. They should also prepare administrative rules and/or procedures to guide implementation of the criteria, assure control and management over outsourced activities, and improve cost-accounting methodologies to provide a better basis for deciding on the merits of outsourcing in each instance. The structure and/or operating procedures of secretariats should be changed to facilitate the best use of outsourcing, including the designation of an official to serve as "Facilitator". Executive Heads should ensure that information on the use of outsourcing was comprehensive and transparent in programme budget submissions and performance reports and make efforts to avoid negative impact on staff affected by outsourcing. The General Assembly should request ACC to develop a system-wide definition of outsourcing, encourage increased sharing among UN system organizations of experiences in its use, and explore possibilities of joint actions to gain the advantages of economies of scale and increased bargaining power. Legislative organs should review and evaluate the implementation of the approved outsourcing policy three years after its initiation.

UN access control system

On 13 June, the General Assembly, by decision 51/468 C, expressed concern about the findings contained in the 1996 OIOS report on the non-implementation of the UN access control system [YUN 1996, p. 1382], which had led to a financial loss of $1.5 million. It endorsed the OIOS recommendations and requested the Secretary-General to continue efforts to recover the financial loss.

Inter-agency security

The ACC Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security (Rome, 6-8 May) [ACC/1997/10] discussed security information for staff, cooperation with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, coordination with peacekeeping and other field missions, security training, stress and hostage crisis management, transportation of cash, residential security measures, security management in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, financial implications of field security measures, and reporting requirements and follow-up regarding cases of arrested and detained staff.

The Meeting approved a document prepared by the UN Security Coordinator describing the inter-agency security structure, security arrangements at each duty station, a summary of each staff member's individual responsibility regarding security, and detailed personal security guidelines, including information on how to survive as a hostage and what to do in the event of an airline hijacking. The Meeting recommended that the UN Security Coordinator ensure that measures applicable to locally recruited staff were consistently implemented at all duty stations. The Security Coordinator should also ensure that designated officials considered the logistics requirements of locally recruited staff, who should be briefed by their agency representative or the field security officer at the time of their employment and on a regular basis about the extent and limits of security provided by the UN security system in the event of an emergency. A plan proposed by the UN Security Coordinator regarding coordination between UN agencies, programmes and funds and peacekeeping missions was generally acceptable. The UN Security Coordinator should prepare a security training standard to ensure that all organizations gave appropriate training to staff members before they went into the field and repeated periodically at high-risk duty stations. The training of security management teams should be a top priority.

The Meeting recommended that ACC express concern about the increased number of UN personnel killed, kidnapped, taken hostage or detained without due process of law.

ACC consideration. At its second regular session of 1997 (New York, 31 October) [ACC/1997/20], ACC adopted a statement on staff security, in which it said that there was an urgent need for the UN system and the international community to consider at what point an area or a situation had become so dangerous that UN system staff had to be withdrawn. ACC highlighted a number of issues that were of immediate concern to the safety and security of staff in crisis situations and that needed to be jointly addressed by the UN system under the auspices of the Office of the UN Security Coordinator. Recognizing that the implementation of security measures would entail additional resources, ACC stated that it would continue to give priority attention to the financing of all measures to enhance staff security.

UN premises and property

Addis Ababa conference facilities

In a May report [A/C.5/51/37/Add.1], the Secretary-General reported to the Fifth Committee on the outcome of discussions between the United Nations and the contractor of the additional conference facilities at the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, on the settlement of time delays and financial claims, as well as additional costs arising out of the telephone system contract. It was estimated that the total project would amount to some $115.2 million, an increase of $7.6 million over the approved appropriation of $107.6 million. The Secretary-General proposed to apply the interest ($8 million as at 31 December 1996) accrued from the construction-in-progress accounts of ECA and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) to offset the increased costs of the Addis Ababa project.

In July [A/51/7/Add.9], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended that the General Assembly authorize an additional appropriation of $7,651,594 for the construction of conference facilities at Addis Ababa and that it be funded from the construction-in-progress accounts of ECA and ESCAP.

On 15 September, the Assembly, by decision 51/488, authorized the Secretary-General to settle all outstanding claims on the construction of additional conference facilities at Addis Ababa, taking into account the interests of the Organization, and to make final payments on the project from the construction-in-progress account. It requested him to issue a full report on the construction at Addis Ababa to the Assembly's fifty-second session, including information on any internal or external audits conducted on the project.

In a November report [A/52/579], the Secretary-General stated that the new conference facilities were substantially completed and handed over in April 1996. The estimated total project cost remained at $115.2 million, pending final payment of all outstanding and anticipated claims and currency fluctuations. Construction progress had been closely monitored on a continuing basis and extensive audits had been conducted by both the Board of Auditors and OIOS. As at the end of October, the certificate of completion and making good defects in the construction had not been issued, pending rectification of defects. Progress reports would continue to be submitted until all aspects of the project, including the new telephone system, were completed.

Office accommodation at the Palais Wilson

In a November report [A/C.5/52/19], the Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee of the offer of the Swiss Federal Council to place at the disposal of the United Nations office accommodation at the Palais Wilson, Geneva, rent-free, initially from 1998 to 2000, with the intention of maintaining that arrangement indefinitely. The United Nations Office at Geneva would pay a fixed rate of SwF 78 ($54) per square metre per year until the year 2000 for the management of the building. It was proposed that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights would move to the Palais Wilson and the space thus released would enable the rationalization and consolidation of existing operations within the Palais des Nations or the Geneva Executive Centre and the closure of the Petit Saconnex annex.

The cost of the move to the Palais Wilson for 1998-1999 would total $6,050,000, of which $3,920,000 would be covered by the Swiss authorities and the balance of $2,130,000 by the United Nations. No additional budgetary resources were requested for the 1998-1999 biennium; however, recurrent costs for maintenance and building operation would be reflected in the proposed programme budget for Administration, Geneva.

ACABQ, in an 8 December report [A/52/7/Add.4], recommended that the General Assembly encourage the Secretary-General to continue his negotiations with the Swiss authorities with regard to the offer of Palais Wilson and to report to the Assembly for a final decision.

UN Postal Administration

The Secretary-General in May transmitted the report [A/51/897] of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audit of the United Nations Postal Administration (UNPA). The audit, which covered UNPA's operations for the 1992-1993 and 1994-1995 bienniums, focused on the operation in New York and the Global Office.

OIOS found that since its inception in 1950, UNPA had been the Organization's major contributor of commercial revenue. However, that revenue had declined in recent years and UNPA was unable to meet its projected revenue targets. In the 1994-1995 biennium, it suffered a loss for the first time of $2.2 million, which depleted 94 per cent of its reserve fund. Although the financial situation had improved significantly in 1996, the factors that led to the 1994-1995 financial situation, including a declining philatelic market, high personnel cost and ineffective marketing strategies, continued to exist, representing a threat to UNPA's long-term business success. There were internal control weaknesses in UNPA's operation in procurement, financial reporting, stamp shows, customer accounts and inventory control.

OIOS recommended that: UNPA should undertake an independent evaluation of current and alternative modes of fulfilling its mandate to determine which was the most economical and efficient, including outsourcing of operations, particularly the distribution function; pending the results of that evaluation, UNPA should reflect in its financial statements the "full cost" of its operations, including the cost of services and facilities provided by the United Nations free of charge; UNPA should ensure proper planning of significant projects, including a feasibility study and a cost-benefit analysis, the establishment of a formal statement of user requirements and involvement of users in all critical stages of project development; UNPA should ensure that users were adequately trained on relevant functions of the new computer system, documentation of the system should be further improved and, in future projects, UNPA should ensure adequate testing prior to implementation; UNPA should ensure timely submission of its monthly financial statements to the UN Accounts Division and assess the costs of staff attending stamp shows and balance them against its strategic marketing objectives; UNPA should use its new computer system to ensure that outstanding accounts receivable were regularly analysed and followed up and appropriate provision for doubtful accounts or write-offs should be submitted to the Controller; UNPA should periodically produce sales reports, showing by customer type and market location the monthly and year-to-date actual and forecasted sales, as well as a comparison with the preceding year to verify whether actual sales met business expectations; and UNPA should ensure that access to the Operational Stockroom was limited to custodial staff and identify the value of all stamps included in the inventory accounts that were no longer available for sale and reduce the inventory account accordingly.

The General Assembly, by decision 51/468 H of 13 June, took note of the OIOS report and requested the Secretary-General to ensure prompt implementation of its recommendations.

International years

At a meeting of the Economic and Social Council on 21 July, the Russian Federation introduced a draft resolution [E/1997/L.32/Rev.2] entitled "Proclamation of international years". By that draft, the Council would have reaffirmed the importance of the guidelines for international years and anniversaries contained in Council resolution 1980/67 [YUN 1980, p. 1029] and recommended that the General Assembly, at its next resumed session, decide that henceforth the issue should be considered directly by the Assembly and that it delete paragraph 12 of the guidelines accordingly.

On 18 December, the Council, by decision 1997/320, postponed consideration of the draft resolution to its 1998 organizational session.

PART SIX

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), established in 1957 to promote the peaceful uses of atomic energy, continued its efforts in 1997 to improve the impact and efficiency of its activities, which encompassed nuclear power and its fuel cycle, waste management, nuclear and radiation safety, international safeguards, and the use of nuclear techniques to improve human health, food supply and environmental protection.

The forty-first session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 29 September-3 October) adopted resolutions on measures to strengthen international cooperation in nuclear safety, radiological protection and waste management; the IAEA safeguards system; and strengthening the Agency's technical cooperation activities. It also took action on a plan for producing potable water economically and on the use of isotope hydrology for water resources management. In addition, the Conference addressed the issues of implementation of nuclear inspections in Iraq, safeguards in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and in the Middle East, and illicit trafficking in nuclear materials.

In 1997, IAEA membership increased to 127 with the admission of Latvia, Malta and the Republic of Moldova.

Nuclear safety

IAEA continued in 1997 to support intergovernmental efforts to strengthen nuclear safety around the world, focusing on preparing for the implementation of the 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety [YUN 1994, p. 1417], fostering the exchange of information on safety issues, developing common safety standards, providing a variety of expert services and supporting coordinated research in member States. By the end of the year, 41 countries had ratified the Convention, which had entered into force in 1996, and 74 countries had signed it.

The Operational Safety Review Team undertook eight missions in 1997 to assess nuclear power plants in Argentina, China (2), Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Mexico, the Republic of Korea and the Russian Federation. Assessment of Safety Significant Events Teams carried out 10 missions to nuclear power plants in Bulgaria (2), Kazakhstan, Romania, the Russian Federation (3), Sweden and Ukraine (2). The International Nuclear Event Scale (INES), which communicated information on nuclear and other radiation events to the public, received information from 59 countries on 30 events in 1997.

Nuclear power

The Agency's nuclear power programme continued to assist member States in nuclear power planning and implementation and advanced reactor technology development, and provided them with computer models to facilitate nuclear power planning and bid evaluation. The International Desalination Advisory Group (INDAG) was established following an international symposium on desalination of sea water with nuclear energy, which was held in the Republic of Korea in May to review the research, design and development aspects of that technology.

Assistance was provided to Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Colombia, Croatia, Lithuania, Peru and Poland to assess the role of nuclear power in the future expansion of electricity supply systems. In addition, Viet Nam received assistance in preparing a pre-feasibility study for the introduction of nuclear power.

Nuclear fuel cycle

The Agency's 1997 programme on the nuclear fuel cycle covered five key areas: uranium supply and demand; light water reactor fuel performance at extended burn-up; the reliability of spent fuel under long-term storage; the management of spent fuel from research and test reactors; and the safe handling and storage of plutonium.

The Agency's report Uranium 1997—Resources, Production and Demand, known as the "Red Book", incorporated reports on uranium resources, production and demand from 59 member States and, for the first time, included reports from all uranium-producing countries. A companion report on environmental activities related to uranium production was also prepared for publication in cooperation with the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

The Nuclear Fuel Cycle Information System (NFCIS) database—an international directory of existing and planned civilian nuclear fuel cycle facilities containing information on 511 facilities in 51 countries—was redesigned.

Radioactive waste management

The Agency's programme on waste safety focused on the establishment of a comprehensive set of internationally agreed safety standards, which were being prepared with the active involvement of member States and under the supervision of an international advisory committee. An important step towards reaching the goal of an international safety regime was the adoption of the Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel Management and on the Safety of Radioactive Waste Management, for which IAEA served as the secretariat. The Joint Convention addressed, among other things, safety requirements for the control of spent radiation sources, for discharges of radioactive materials into the environment and for the transboundary movement of spent fuel and radioactive waste.

An area of increasing interest to member States was guidance on the role of practices of quality management and quality assurance in waste management. For the first time in Latin America, a demonstration of pre-disposal waste management methods and procedures was held at a waste processing and storage facility in Santiago, Chile. Participants from Bolivia, Guatemala, Paraguay, Uruguay and the host country attended the demonstration and obtained practical experience in managing radioactive wastes.

Environment

Reflecting environmental concerns, work began on a database of worldwide discharges of radioactive materials in liquid and gaseous forms, which would supplement the existing database of solid waste disposals in the marine environment. Several reports on assessments of the radiological conditions resulting from past nuclear activities, which comprised part of the new Radiological Assessment Reports Series, were completed. They covered reviews at Bikini atoll (a former nuclear weapon testing site) in the Marshall Islands, at the Semipalatinsk test site in Kazakhstan and in the Kara Sea, where high-level radioactive waste was dumped in shallow waters.

Agency activities to protect the marine environment focused on monitoring and assessing marine radioactivity and on using nuclear and isotopic techniques to enhance understanding of the oceans and marine pollution. The analysis of sea water, sediment and biota samples collected during a 1996 expedition to the Mururoa and Fangataufa atolls in French Polynesia was completed.

The impact of urbanization on water resources and pollution of surface waters were two new areas of study.

Food and agriculture

Among the major achievements in the food and agriculture programme were the eradication of the tsetse fly from the island of Zanzibar, United Republic of Tanzania, and progress made towards eradicating the Mediterranean fruit fly (medfly) in several member States.

About 120 new accessions were registered in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/IAEA database for officially released mutant varieties. By year's end, the total had reached 1,849 varieties of 164 plant species released in more than 50 countries.

An FAO/IAEA symposium on animal disease control in the twenty-first century identified a number of innovative nuclear-based technologies that would be vital in controlling and eradicating major diseases affecting livestock in the developing world.

The year 1997 was an important one for the Global Rinderpest Eradication Programme (GREP). With the 10-year period of mass cattle vaccination in countries at risk from rinderpest having ended in 1996, the process of intense disease surveillance to identify and remove the remaining pockets of disease began with the goal of completion by the year 2005. In addition to supporting diagnosis through immunoassay and molecular methods, the Agency developed a set of performance indicators that could be used by national authorities to ensure that rinderpest detection systems were in place and functioning well.

Physical and chemical sciences

IAEA activities in the physical and chemical sciences included on-line nuclear and atomic data services to member States, development of nuclear instrumentation, theoretical physics, studies on the utilization of research reactors and particle accelerators, analyses of radiochemical applications, and plasma physics applications and controlled fusion research.

Nuclear and atomic data services on the Internet registered a 27 per cent increase in data retrievals over 1996, and four new nuclear databases and an improved data library for fusion applications were added. To better serve data users who had limited access to the Internet, especially those in developing countries, the Agency began to develop CD-ROM versions of major nuclear databases, together with user-friendly retrieval software.

Human health

The programme on human health concentrated on the development and application of new nuclear and radiation techniques, especially those suitable for the diagnosis and treatment of diseases prevalent in developing member States. Increasing emphasis was also placed on preventive medicine, such as early detection of neonatal hypothyroidism, hepatitis and other communicable diseases. In radiation therapy, there were renewed efforts to improve the quality control of cancer treatment. The thermoluminescent dosimetry (TLD) measurement system of the IAEA/World Health Organization (WHO) worldwide network for beam quality checks in radiation therapy was automated at the Agency's laboratories at Seibersdorf, Austria. In nutrition, agreement was reached with WHO on a coordinated research programme on infant monitoring to define a new growth reference for breastfed babies.

To establish a link to the international radiation measurement system, the Agency's Dosimetry Laboratory calibrated reference ionization chambers and dosimeters from 38 member States, including laboratories and hospitals. A total of 46 reference ionization chambers were calibrated at 175 calibration points for various radiation qualities.

Technical cooperation

The new strategy of the Agency's technical cooperation programme had the overall aim of improving efficiency and effectiveness. The programme went beyond technology transfer and capacity-building to directly involving the end-users of nuclear technology in solving problems of sustainable human development. Significantly more projects had strong links to national development objectives.

About 38 interregional projects were operational in 1997, with 12 completed before the end of the year. Seventeen interregional courses provided training to participants in the areas of nuclear power, nuclear safety, radiation protection and applications in agriculture, medicine and industry. Some 254 projects were operational in Africa, 250 in the East Asia and Pacific region, 105 in Western Asia, 236 in Europe and 279 in Latin America.

Delivery of technical cooperation based on disbursements amounted to $60.5 million in 1997, up from $59.5 million in 1996.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

A major milestone in efforts to strengthen the safeguards system was reached in May when the Board of Governors approved the Model Protocol Additional to Safeguards Agreements. The Protocol provided the legal basis necessary to enhance IAEA's ability to detect undeclared nuclear material and activities. Seven States had concluded an additional protocol; Australia was the first State to bring its additional protocol into force.

During the year, 2,499 safeguards inspections were performed, compared with 2,476 in 1996. The Agency had taken steps towards a strengthened, more efficient safeguards system especially in the light of the discoveries of undeclared nuclear material and facilities in Iraq and problems in verifying the correctness and completeness of the declaration of nuclear material by the DPRK (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

As at 31 December 1997, 221 safeguards agreements were in force with 137 States (and with Taiwan Province of China). Safeguards agreements that satisfied the requirements of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) [YUN 1968, p. 17] were in force with 123 States. NPT safeguards agreements entered into force with Algeria, Belize, the Czech Republic, Estonia and Slovenia. The Board of Governors approved a draft NPT safeguards agreement with Georgia, which had not entered into force at the end of 1997.

The 1995 Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Treaty of Bangkok) [YUN 1995, p. 207] entered into force on 27 March 1997 and nine States were party to it. NPT safeguards agreements were in force with seven of those States. NPT safeguards agreements were also in force with all 11 signatories of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Rarotonga Treaty) [YUN 1985, p. 58]. Thirty-one of the 32 States party to the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) [YUN 1967, p. 13] had safeguards agreements in force which satisfied the requirements of the Treaty. Safeguards agreements pursuant to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco were in force with two of the four States outside Latin America that had jurisdiction over territories in the Treaty's zone of application. A safeguards agreement pursuant to NPT and the Treaty of Tlatelolco entered into force with Guyana and the Bahamas.

Initial inventory verifications were completed in Algeria and Uzbekistan and were nearing completion in Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine by year's end. Major facilities in Argentina and Brazil were visited as part of the assessment of the completeness and correctness of their initial reports. Preliminary agreement between China, the Russian Federation and IAEA was reached on the safeguards approach to be implemented in an enrichment plant in China that used Russian centrifuge technology; initial inventory verifications were carried out and a physical inventory verification was planned for January 1998.

Nuclear information

The range of information available on the Agency's World Wide Web site, WorldAtom, continued to expand during the year. Among additions to the site were: an image database; short previews of Agency films; and on-line versions of most major Agency publications.

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS), with 101 States and 17 international organizations participating, had a bibliographic database of about 2 million records. New retrieval software was selected to make the INIS database available on the World Wide Web. In addition, over 170 books, reports, journal issues or booklets were published.

Secretariat

At the end of 1997, the IAEA secretariat had 2,216 staff members, including 912 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,304 in the General Service category. Ninety-four nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The regular budget for 1997 amounted to $232.1 million, of which $221.8 million was to be financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1997 scale of assessments, $5.6 million from income from reimbursable work for others and $4.7 million from other miscellaneous income. Actual expenditures from the regular budget in 1997 amounted to $231 million, of which $224 million was related to the Agency's programmes. The unused budget from the Agency's programmes amounted to $2 million. A total of $42.4 million in extrabudgetary funds was provided by member States, the United Nations, international organizations and other sources.

The target for voluntary contributions to the Technical Cooperation Fund for 1997 was established at $68 million, of which $47.8 million was pledged by member States.

Chapter II

International Labour Organization (ILO)

In 1997, the International Labour Organization (ILO) continued to promote social justice and economic stability and improve labour conditions. Established in 1919 as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations, ILO had three primary objectives: supporting democracy and fundamental workers' rights, including the wider observance of international labour standards; promoting employment and reducing poverty; and protecting workers.

In 1997, ILO membership remained at 174.

Meetings

The eighty-fifth session of the International Labour Conference (Geneva, 3-19 June) considered the annual report of the ILO Governing Body and the report of the Director-General. The Conference adopted the ILO 1998-1999 programme budget, including priority areas focused on the revitalization of ILO standard-setting activities, the fight against child labour and the follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1169]. The Conference also adopted the Private Employment Agencies Convention (No. 181) and Recommendation (No. 188), which were designed to increase the efficiency of those agencies in the functioning of labour markets and protect job seekers using their services. The Conference amended the ILO Constitution to facilitate the updating of international labour standards.

Several sectoral and other meetings were convened during 1997 in Geneva: the Symposium on Multimedia Convergence (27-29 January), the Tripartite Meeting of Experts of Future ILO Activities in the Field of Migration (21 -25 April), the Tripartite Meeting on the Effects of New Technologies on Employment and Working Conditions in the Hotel, Catering and Tourism Sector (12-16 May), the Meeting of Experts on Workers' Health Surveillance (2-9 September), the Meeting of Experts on Safety and Health in Forest Work (23-30 September), the Meeting of Experts on Labour Statistics (14-23 October), the Tripartite Meeting on the Iron and Steel Workforce of the Twenty-first Century: What it will be like and how it will work (27-31 October), the ILO/WHO Consultation on Guidelines for Conducting Pre-sea and Periodic Medical Fitness Examinations for Seafarers (25-27 November) and the Tripartite Meeting on Breaking Through the Glass Ceiling: Women in Management (15-19 December).

The Twelfth Regional Asian Meeting was convened in Bangkok, Thailand (9-11 December), and the Joint ILO/UNESCO Committee of Experts on the Application of the Recommendation Concerning the Status of Teachers was convened in Paris (15-19 September).

International standards

ILO activities concerning Conventions and Recommendations during 1997 included standard-setting and the supervision and promotion of the application of standards. Supervisory bodies were engaged in a review of existing procedures and standard-setting policy, coinciding with the implementation of simplified reporting on ratified Conventions.

Standard-setting

In June, the International Labour Conference adopted the Private Employment Agencies Convention (No. 181) and Recommendation (No. 188).

ILO standards covered a broad spectrum of work-related issues, ranging from social security and occupational health and safety to basic workers' rights, such as the abolition of forced labour and child labour, and equality and freedom of association. During the 1996-1997 biennium, 222 new ratifications of ILO Conventions were registered, bringing the total number of ratifications to 6,477 as at 31 December 1997.

Supervision of standards

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, at its sixty-eighth session (Geneva, 27 November-12 December), considered 211 observations received from employers' and workers' organizations, of which 202 related to the application of ratified Conventions.

The Committee noted 32 instances in which Governments changed their law and practice to conform with ratified Conventions, following the Committee's earlier comments.

The Committee carried out a general survey on the application by member States of selected international labour standards. The survey covered reports submitted by States that had not ratified the 1983 Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention (No. 159) and Recommendation (No. 168) [YUN 1983, p. 122].

The Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association met three times in 1997 to examine the complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations.

Employment and development

ILO activities in 1997 continued to help constituents combat unemployment and poverty through the creation of employment opportunities and the improvement of existing jobs. ILO also provided advice and guidance to constituents on employment and labour market policies, as well as on their labour market information and statistical systems. ILO activities to promote employment included the support to constituents to develop entrepreneurship through the creation of cooperatives and small and micro-enterprises, particularly by vulnerable groups.

Regarding human resources development, ILO emphasized the adaptation of training policy and delivery to the rapidly changing skill requirements and the special needs of vulnerable groups, such as the poor and workers in rural areas. It also responded to the needs of countries affected by conflict.

Working environment

During the year, ILO continued its activities to ensure that women, migrant workers, indigenous and tribal peoples, and persons with disabilities were given equality of opportunity and treatment, which was a fundamental right of all workers.

As follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169], ILO launched the International Programme on More and Better Jobs for Women with the goal of demonstrating in practical ways that it was feasible to achieve more and better jobs for women by providing an opportunity for the replication of successful ILO activities on a broader scale.

Regarding child labour, a series of international conferences further raised awareness of the problem. ILO provided technical support to the Amsterdam Child Labour Conference in February, the preparatory regional consultations in Brasilia (Brazil), Lahore (Pakistan) and Pretoria (South Africa), and the International Conference on Child Labour (Oslo, Norway, October).

A new Code of Practice on Safety and Health in Forest Work was adopted in September, to provide guidance to Governments, employers, workers, forest owners, labour inspectors and machine manufacturers on making safety and health compatible with environmental protection and productivity in forestry. A critical component in the new Code was a training system that would ensure access by the entire workforce, and lead to demonstrated and certified levels of skill.

Field activities

In 1997, expenditure on operational activities, under all sources of funding, totalled $108.4 million, compared with $98.2 million in 1996. The three leading programmes in terms of annual expenditure were in employment and training ($24.6 million), enterprise and cooperative development ($23.4 million) and development policies ($21.2 million). Another significant programme dealt with working conditions and environment ($13.1 million). Interregional and global activities accounted for $18.6 million. In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for 39 per cent of total expenditure ($42.1 million), Asia and the Pacific for 22 per cent ($23.5 million), and Latin America and the Caribbean for 12 per cent ($13.3 million). Expenditure in Europe increased from $6 million in 1996 to nearly $7 million in 1997, and the Arab States programme increased from $2.6 million in 1996 to $4.1 million in 1997.

Educational activities

The Turin Centre and the International Institute for Labour Studies, both autonomous institutions, reported to the ILO Governing Body. The Centre continued to carry out training and related activities in a wide range of technical areas as an integral part of ILO technical cooperation activities. The Institute continued to carry out research and encouraged networking related to emerging labour policy issues, and acted as a catalyst for future ILO programme development. With a view to promoting the interface between ILO and the academic community, six public lectures and staff seminars were given by eminent scholars and public figures. Institute activities on labour policy issues concentrated on an analysis of the relationships between social exclusion, labour institutions and poverty, and an exploration of the changing global organization of production and its social implications at the local level.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, ILO employed a total of 2,258 staff members representing 110 nationalities at the Geneva headquarters and in 40 field offices around the world. Of those, 941 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,317 were in the General Service category. Some 600 experts undertook missions in all regions of the world under the programme of technical cooperation.

Budget

In June 1997, the International Labour Conference adopted a budget of $481 million for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

In 1997, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), established in 1945 as the lead agency in the UN system for agriculture, forestry, fisheries and rural development, continued to work towards the achievement of global food security in a sustainable manner by raising levels of nutrition and standards of living, improving agricultural productivity and advancing the condition of rural populations. In order to improve food security, FAO executed projects that helped rural women gain access to land, credit and training. It also provided early warning of potential food shortages, whether caused by man-made or natural disasters, and brought food insecurity and nutrition problems to world attention through conferences, meetings and information campaigns.

During the year, Kazakhstan joined FAO, bringing the membership to 175 countries and the European Community.

The FAO Conference, the organization's governing body, held its twenty-ninth biennial session in Rome, Italy, from 7 to 18 November. The Conference reviewed the follow-up activities to the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129], examined the global state of food and agriculture and discussed various issues related to sustainable agricultural development.

FAO launched its TeleFood campaign in 1997 as a response to the World Food Summit's commitment to halve world hunger by 2015. TeleFood's goal was to involve the general public, media, celebrities and the private sector in defeating hunger by raising awareness of the plight of the world's 800 million chronically hungry and malnourished population. The first TeleFood was broadcast on 19 October via satellite in conjunction with World Food Day 1997 and donations were collected through banks around the world. The campaign held events, concerts and other activities in more than 60 countries, reached a global television audience estimated at over 500 million people, and mobilized donations of more than $2 million. Funds from TeleFood were used for 300 micro-projects in more than 90 countries.

World food situation

In 1997, end-of-season cereal stocks remained low at 15.7 per cent of expected annual need. That was below the 17 to 18 per cent range that FAO considered the minimum necessary to safeguard global food security. Food shortages continued to grip a number of low-income food-deficit countries, especially in sub-Saharan Africa but also in some Asian countries, mostly because of civil unrest and unfavourable weather conditions due to El Niño. The economic downturn in South-East Asia had a significant adverse impact on the food security situation of vulnerable groups. Furthermore, food aid fell in 1997, one year after the World Food Summit, and for the fourth consecutive year aggregate cereal shipments fell in 1996/97 under programme, project and emergency food aid.

FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System (GIEWS)—an international source of data and analysis of food supply/demand—continued to provide early warnings of imminent food crises in order to ensure timely interventions in countries affected by natural and/or man-made disasters. In 1997, GIEWS conducted 24 missions to assess crops and food supply and intensified its efforts to monitor the effects of El Niño on crop production. In cooperation with the World Food Programme, GIEWS continued to assess the critical food supply situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Great Lakes region of Africa and the former Soviet republics. Nineteen emergency operations amounting to some $1 billion were approved for food relief in affected countries.

In March, FAO convened a Technical Consultation for Food Insecurity and Vulnerability Information and Mapping Systems to review methodologies and indicators for assessing food insecurity and vulnerability and make recommendations for their improvement.

Activities

Emergency assistance

In 1997, the FAO Special Relief Operations Service (TCOR) operated 58 projects in 34 countries amounting to $61,670,081, of which $9,533,500 was financed from FAO's Technical Cooperation Programme, $51,246,021 from trust funds and $890,560 from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

TCOR appealed to the international donor community for emergency assistance in agriculture and livestock for 24 countries.

Field programmes

FAO continued in 1997 to provide technical advice and support through its field programmes in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development. Expenditure for the year totalled $260.2 million, compared with $244 million in 1996. Funding was provided by UNDP ($46.6 million), trust funds from donor countries and international financing institutions ($165.9 million), the Technical Cooperation Programme under FAO's regular budget ($42.4 million) and FAO's Special Programme for Food Security (SPFS) ($5.5 million). In addition, FAO's Investment Centre helped developing countries to formulate 43 agricultural and rural development projects within the scope of SPFS, which attracted $2,827 million in investment, including contributions from international financing institutions and recipient Governments. Introduced in 1995 to tackle hunger at the grass-roots level, the main objective of SPFS was to increase rapidly the production and yield of grains such as maize and rice, improve access to water control techniques and encourage rural economic diversification through small stock improvement (chickens and goats), cash crops and vegetables.

Crops and livestock

In an effort to ensure that agricultural production kept up with expanding human needs, FAO participated in a range of activities related to the conservation and use of plant biological diversity; crop management and diversification; seed production and improvement; crop protection; agricultural engineering and prevention of food losses; and food and agricultural industries.

The International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides (1985) was amended in 1989 to include the Prior Informed Consent (PIC) clause, which maintained that pesticides restricted or banned for health or environmental reasons should not be exported without the explicit consent of the importing country. By September 1997, 22 pesticides and five industrial chemicals were subject to the PIC clause, and more than 150 countries participated in the programme.

Conducted in close collaboration with non-governmental organizations (NGOs), FAO's Integrated Pest Management programmes emphasized biological control methods and training to help farmers diagnose and treat pest damage. NGOs were strong supporters of FAO's efforts to introduce responsible limits to pesticide use.

Fisheries

FAO's assistance activities for developing countries had intensified considerably over the preceding five to seven years, mainly because of the increasing importance of international trade in fishery products and as a result of strict new sanitary rules imposed by major importing countries. Trade in fish and fishery products increased during the 1996-1997 biennium, although at a slower pace than in the previous two years. The value of world exports reached $52.5 billion in 1996, with developing countries achieving a net trade surplus of $16.6 billion.

Food standards and nutrition

In its efforts to promote better nutrition, FAO continued in 1997 to provide member countries with advice, information and technical assistance in three broad areas: formulation and implementation of national food policies and nutrition programmes; provision of technical and legislative advice on measures to ensure the quality and safety of food; and assessment and monitoring of nutrition situations, including monitoring the effects of food and agricultural policies and development activities on nutrition. The organization also promoted community-level action programmes to analyse and deal with the causes of malnutrition.

Commodities and trade

In 1997, FAO continued to implement the Plan of Action of the 1996 World Food Summit, in which the organization committed itself to assist developing countries on trade issues, particularly in preparing for multilateral trade negotiations in agriculture, fisheries and forestry, through studies, analyses and training.

Over the preceding four years, FAO had implemented a wide range of activities to enhance the capacity of developing countries to analyse the implications of the Uruguay Round multilateral trade agreements in agriculture, forestry and fisheries and take advantage of new trading opportunities. Several regional and national workshops were held in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Near East.

Natural resources

tion of the earth's natural resources to meet current and future food and agricultural needs in a sustainable manner, concentrating on six main areas: natural resources assessment and planning; farming systems development; plant nutrition development and management; water development, management and conservation; soil management, conservation and reclamation; and sustaining natural resource potential. The organization also promoted integrated plant nutrition systems, which used all available plant nutrients, recycled organic materials, biological nitrogen and mineral fertilizers, to achieve sustainable crop production and protect the environment.

Plant and animal genetic resources

During the year, FAO provided technical assistance in plant breeding and the safe movement of germoplasm, as well as associated legislation, regulations and systems. In the area of legal advice and legislative drafting, FAO collaborated with national authorities to review and analyse current statutory instruments governing intellectual property protection and seed production; the elaboration of draft acts and regulations; and amendments to existing legislation, including laws governing food control and trade in agricultural, forest and fishery products.

FAO facilitated negotiations for the revision of the International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources, in harmony with the 1992 Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683]. The aim of the negotiations was to regulate access to and benefit-sharing of plant genetic resources in food and agriculture.

FAO's governing bodies had made the Global Strategy for the Management of Farm Animal Genetic Resources a priority. The Strategy emphasized the central importance of realizing sustainable intensification of food production by basing genetic development on adapted genetic resources. In November, the Strategy was strongly supported by the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity.

FAO assisted its member countries in complying with the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS), specifically the intellectual property rights of plant varieties, animal breeds, related technology and germoplasm. TRIPS required all World Trade Organization members to provide plant varietal protection by patents or a sui generis system or a mixture of both.

Information

FAO continued to function as an information centre, collecting, analysing, interpreting and disseminating information through various media, including print, radio, television, video, film and photo displays and exhibitions. Materials produced included information booklets, technical documents, reference papers and reports of meetings, training manuals and audio-visuals.

Major regular periodicals included the annual The State of Food and Agriculture, the FAO Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics, the annual Food and Agriculture Legislation, the forestry quarterly Unasylva, the quarterlies World Animal Review and Plant Protection Bulletin, and the annual Rural Development. FAO yearbooks were issued on rural development, trade, fertilizers, forest products, field projects, fishery statistics and animal health.

The organization compiled and coordinated an extensive range of international databases on agriculture, fisheries, forestry, food and statistics. The two most important were AGRIS (the International Information System for the Agricultural Sciences and Technology) and CARIS (the Current Agricultural Research Information System).

To meet the increasing supply and demand for agricultural data, FAO operated the World Agricultural Information Centre, which was designed to improve access to its databases, particularly to external users, via the Internet, floppy disks and CD-ROMs.

Statistical information produced by FAO's technical divisions included the Fisheries Statistical Database, the Globefish Databank and Electronic Library, the Forest Resources Information System and the Geographic Information System.

AGROSTAT PC, a user-friendly electronic version of FAO's statistical yearbooks, provided updated figures on all agriculture-related topics in six files: population, land use, production, trade, food balance sheets and forest products.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 2,355, of whom 885 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,470 were in the General Service category. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 1,549, with 541 in the Professional category and 1,008 in the General Service category.

Budget

The regular programme budget for the 1996-1997 biennium was $650 million, compared with $673 million for the previous biennium.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), which was established in 1946, continued in 1997 to promote cooperation among nations in education, science, culture and communication.

The General Conference, which met biennially to decide on policy, programmes and budgetary matters, convened its twenty-ninth session (21 October-12 November) at the organization's headquarters in Paris. It adopted the programme and budget for 1998-1999 as the second phase of the implementation of the medium-term strategy for 1996-2001, which focused on programme concentration and evaluation and transdisciplinarity, as well as on the needs of four priority groups: women, youth, the least developed countries (LDCs) and Africa. The Executive Board, consisting of 58 members elected by the General Conference, held two sessions during 1997.

The membership of UNESCO increased to 186 in 1997 after the United Kingdom rejoined on 1 July.

Education

UNESCO's education activities aimed at promoting education for all (EFA) throughout a person's lifetime. It emphasized the development of flexible and diversified forms of education and training at all levels to reach those who had no access to, or were underserved by, educational opportunities to learn or upgrade skills. To achieve the goal of EFA, UNESCO assisted member States in the construction and equipment of affordable educational buildings, libraries and Centres for Education for All/Community Learning Centres, which offered formal and non-formal education including basic skills training.

Learning Without Frontiers, a global effort to rethink some of the basic assumptions and approaches underlying traditional education systems, undertook activities aimed at creatively constructing new learning systems that were more responsive to the diversity of learning needs, styles and cultures around the world.

Project 2000+ (Science and Technology Education) and the International Project on Technical and Vocational Education (UNEVOC) continued to expand in 1997. Through the network of national UNEVOC centres surveys, training workshops and seminars were organized, facilitating the access of girls and women to scientific, technical and vocational education.

During the year, UNESCO organized the fifth International Conference on Adult Education (Hamburg, Germany, 14-18 July). The Conference adopted the Hamburg Declaration and the Agenda for the Future, which presented a new vision on adult education.

In the area of preventive education against drug abuse and AIDS, activities focused on mobilizing education decision makers to formulate national action plans for integrating prevention in school curricula and teacher training. UNESCO was a key participant in the activities of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) and contributed to the tenth International Conference on AIDS in Africa (Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, 7-11 December). In cooperation with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the French non-governmental organization Environnement Sans Frontières, UNESCO launched an international campaign entitled "Youth mobilizing youth for a twenty-first century free of drugs".

In 1997, the Associated Schools Project network increased to 4,613 schools in 147 countries. Emphasis was placed on promoting thinking and behaviour based on common humanistic and cultural values through a comprehensive system of training and education for peace, human rights, democracy, international understanding and tolerance.

UNESCO provided support to 40 countries in elaborating educational policies and action plans, with particular attention to the needs of LDCs. The emerging States of Eastern Europe and Central Asia received technical support and access to information on rebuilding their educational systems. Assistance in the education of refugees was expanded worldwide.

The General Conference, at its twenty-ninth session, approved the establishment in Moscow of a UNESCO Institute for Information Technologies in Education to promote research into and foster mastery of the new technologies by both teachers and learners.

Sciences

Activities in the natural, social and human sciences were grouped under the major programme "The sciences in the service of development". They were designed to promote the advancement, transfer and sharing of knowledge and facilitate its application to the search for new solutions to improve the social and natural environment. Activities under the programme sought to foster synergies between the exact and natural sciences and the social and human sciences.

Natural sciences

Activities in the natural sciences focused on the advancement, sharing and transfer of scientific knowledge. UNESCO continued to enhance human resources development and capacity-building through fellowships, grants, workshops, seminars and production of training tools. Activities focused on modernizing university curricula and training teachers nationally and regionally for the basic and engineering sciences.

In 1997, UNESCO, through the International Centre for Theoretical Physics, which it operated together with the International Atomic Energy Agency, with support from the Government of Italy, provided research opportunities and advanced training in physics and applied mathematics to some 1,500 scientists from developing countries. UNESCO supported the international conference "Frontier of Quantum Physics" (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 9-12 July) and organized the fourth South-North Human Genome Conference (Guadalajara, Mexico, 16-19 March). It also launched the preparatory process and set up an International Scientific Organizing Committee for the World Science Conference (Budapest, Hungary, 26 June-1 July 1999). UNESCO, the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, the International Organization for Chemical Sciences in Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization continued to carry out the international programme "Chemistry for life".

UNESCO provided support for the training of young researchers in the fields of microbial, plant, marine, industrial and environmental biotechnologies. The UNESCO Molecular and Cell Biology Network expanded further.

Programmes in environmental sciences were aligned with the recommendations and results of the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992 p. 672]. In addition, UNESCO worked intensively for the promotion of solar and other renewable energies and organized, under the World Solar Summit Process, consultations on the World Solar Programme (1996-2005). In January, UNESCO hosted the eighth session of the Scientific and Technical Committee on the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-1999), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1989 [YUN 1989, p. 355]. Activities were pursued regarding earth sciences, terrestrial ecosystems, desertification, sustainable forest management, biological diversity, oceans, coastal areas and small islands, and marine, terrestrial and freshwater resources.

The International Geological Correlation Programme continued to foster international collaboration in the earth sciences through 57 projects worldwide. UNESCO supported the organization of 24 workshops and courses at the postgraduate level in geology, geophysics, geochemistry and geodynamics. The Man and the Biosphere Programme continued to emphasize the reinforcement of the World Network of Biosphere Reserves, totalling 352 sites in 87 countries, as a means for reconciling conservation of biological diversity with regional development. The International Hydrological Programme worked closely with some 158 national committees and focal points in implementing 31 projects under its fifth phase (1996-2001).

UNESCO's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) paid particular attention to the preparation of the 1998 International Year of the Ocean, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 951]; development of the Global Ocean Observing System; support of the Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network; implementation of the Harmful Algal Blooms programme; analysis of the ocean's role in greenhouse balances and climate change; and the application of marine research results. In addition, IOC contributed to the third Conference of the Parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] (Kyoto, Japan, 1-11 December) (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), and continued cooperation with the International Hydrographic Organization in preparing global and regional bathymetric and geological/geophysical maps of the ocean floor.

The transdisciplinary project on environment and development in coastal regions and small islands, which aimed at achieving environmentally sound, socially equitable and culturally appropriate development in those areas, sponsored an interregional seminar (Essaouira, Morocco, 24-26 November). It launched a network of historic coastal towns that were cooperating to find integrated solutions to shared problems such as shortage of freshwater, degradation of cultural heritage and rapid socio-economic transformation in the coastal region.

Social and human sciences

Activities in the social and human sciences concentrated on strengthening research and training capacities, mainly through the establishment of UNESCO Chairs, networks and mechanisms for inter-university cooperation. The social science research programme Management of Social Transformations continued in its efforts to build bridges between social scientists and decision makers. The programme focused on: the management of multicultural and multi-ethnic societies; cities as arenas of accelerated social transformations; and provision of technical expertise for social assessments, poverty appraisals and policy evaluation.

The UNESCO General Conference in 1997 adopted the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights, the first international text to address the ethical implications of genetic research. It aimed to protect the genetic heritage of humanity and individual dignity from potential abuses while reaffirming the principle of freedom of scientific research. The General Conference also adopted the Declaration on the Responsibility of the Present Generations towards Future Generations, which affirmed the responsibility of all to preserve the environment and its biodiversity from irreversible damage and maintain and perpetuate humankind, its cultural diversity and heritage.

During the year, UNESCO carried out public information campaigns aimed at more tolerant societies, in line with the follow-up programme of the United Nations Year for Tolerance (1995), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1002]. It reinforced its actions to combat intolerance and violence and continued its work against all forms of discrimination, xenophobia and racism, with special emphasis on the protection of minorities and indigenous people.

As the lead agency for the Inter-Agency Working Group on Basic Education, UNESCO continued to contribute to the UN system follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and initiated activities under the First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), proclaimed by the Assembly in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 844].

Culture

Cultural activities in 1997 focused on integrating the cultural dimension into development policies and projects, protecting cultural heritage and promoting cultural identities and intercultural dialogue. The World Decade for Cultural Development (1988-1997), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1986 [YUN 1986, p. 624], brought to fruition 150 projects through seminars, research and interdisciplinary inter-agency cooperation in the fields of culture and health, culture and environment, culture and tourism, and investing in culture. UNESCO organized the International Conference on the Preservation and Development of Cultural Life in Central and Eastern European Countries (Budapest, Hungary, 23-25 January).

During the year, UNESCO's list of protected cultural and natural sites included 552 outstanding sites in 112 countries that were to be preserved as the heritage of all humankind. The sites were selected by the World Heritage Committee among sites proposed by the 152 States that were parties to the 1972 Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage [YUN 1972, p. 759]. Activities aimed at safeguarding and revitalizing sites, monuments and traditional forms of cultural expression were continued.

In the area of artistic creation, 600 participants at the World Congress on the Implementation of the Recommendation concerning the Status of the Artist (Paris, 16-20 June) analysed copyright and neighbouring rights in order to protect artistic creativity.

Communication

With the holding of the European Seminar on Promoting Independent and Pluralistic Media (Sofia, Bulgaria, 10-13 September), UNESCO completed the series of regional seminars that had been a major thrust of its programme since 1991. In addition, UNESCO and the Finnish National Commission organized a seminar on public service broadcasting: strengthening democratic voices (Tampere, Finland, 16-18 June).

A UNESCO International Clearing House on Children and Violence on the Screen was established in February at the University of Göteborg (Sweden). A study of the effects of violence on the screen on young people, completed in cooperation with the World Movement of Scout Organizations and the University of Utrecht (Netherlands), provided important data on the subject.

UNESCO continued to support the international network for the promotion of women media practitioners, as well as the establishment of women's community radio stations under the special project "Women speaking to women". The first station—Radio Muye—was officially launched in Suriname.

UNESCO, in cooperation with the Government of Monaco, National Commissions for UNESCO in Denmark, France and Germany and the Agence pour la Francophonie, organized the first International Congress on Ethical, Legal and Societal Aspects of Digital Information (INFO-ethics) (Monte Carlo, Monaco, 10-12 March). The 238 participants from 54 countries agreed on the importance of an ethical approach to cyberspace. The first World Information Report (May) and the second World Communication Report (December) provided a comprehensive overview of the development of libraries, archives, information services and the media throughout the world in the new technological environment.

The main operational tool of UNESCO's communication strategy, the International Programme for the Development of Communication, funded 44 new projects for a total of $2.3 million. Some 160 UNESCO projects in communication, information and informatics were under way, representing a total budget of over $30 million. The projects covered a wide range of areas such as community media, news agencies, audio-visual production, training, communication for peace and good governance, computer networks and telematics applications for education, research and environment.

The General Information Programme provided support for the regional information networks and the restoration/revival of selected libraries, such as the Bosnia and Herzegovina National and University Library in Sarajevo. The UNESCO Network of Associated Libraries expanded to include 325 libraries in 80 countries. The creation of a virtual library for the Mediterranean region was initiated.

Regarding the project "Towards a culture of peace", several forums and conferences were organized which led to the development of national culture of peace programmes in Central America and Africa. A networking and information system linked the various organizations and individuals working on peace-building activities. Several UNESCO Chairs in areas related to the culture of peace were established, and projects on non-violence in schools and on communication for peace building in Africa were launched.

UNESCO published 151 titles and produced 10 CD-ROMs. A new greetings card operation was launched and efforts were made to rejuvenate the UNESCO Courier. The 1997 edition of the UNESCO Statistical Yearbook was finalized. The first book of a new UNESCO collection, The Ethics of Life, was issued.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,341, of whom 1,021 were in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 152 nationalities, and 1,320 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The General Conference of UNESCO, at its 1997 session, approved a budget of $544,367,250 for the 1998-1999 biennium, which represented a decrease in real growth of 3.8 per cent compared to the approved budget for 1996-1997. The total assessment on member States, after deducting miscellaneous income, was $542,267,250 and the Working Capital Fund remained at $25,000,000.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The World Health Organization (WHO), in 1997, continued its global strategy of "Health for all", the targets of which included: life expectancy at birth above 60 years; infant mortality rate below 50 per 1,000 live births; and under-five mortality rate below 70 per 1,000 live births. WHO's activities concentrated on disease prevention and control; primary health care and nutrition; the health of specific population groups; health aspects of the environment, development and lifestyle; and support for health-care organization and management worldwide.

The World Health Assembly (WHA), WHO's governing body, held its fiftieth session (Geneva, 5-14 May), at which it adopted the proposed budget for 1998-1999 and resolutions on: WHO collaborating centres, which stressed that WHO had to create the broadest possible network of "partners for health"; cloning, which affirmed that the replication of human individuals was ethically unacceptable; and the health conditions of, and assistance to, the Arab population in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine, whereby WHO was urged to support the Ministry of Health of the Palestine Authority. Other WHA actions addressed cross-border advertising, promotion and sale of medical products through the Internet; prevention of violence; quality of biological products moving in international commerce; and strengthening health systems in developing countries.

The main recommendation of The World Health Report 1997—Conquering suffering, enriching humanity was the integration of disease-specific interventions into a comprehensive chronic disease control package incorporating prevention, diagnosis, treatment, rehabilitation and improved training of health professionals.

During the year, WHO membership increased to 191, with the admission of Andorra; there were also two associate members.

Health policy

During the year, in response to the 1995 call by WHA for a global consultative process that would involve the widest range of partners in order to develop a new global health policy for the twenty-first century, several global and regional meetings identified how countries could work better together to achieve health for all. International experts and a diversity of inputs were brought together, including a consultation with the Council of International Organizations of Medical Sciences (a joint United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization/WHO body established to coordinate medical science congresses) on ethics, equity and human rights; a formal consultation with 130 international non-governmental organizations (NGOs); and a critical assessment of impediments and challenges to developing sustainable health systems. The consultations on the new global health policy had extended beyond Governments and health ministries to include the views of NGOs, UN partners (including the World Bank and the World Trade Organization (WTO)), the private sector, and academic and research institutions. Their views had been systematically analysed and were reflected in the new health policy, Health for all in the 21st century, to be submitted to the fifty-first WHA in 1998.

The WHO Centre for Health Development (Kobe, Japan), established in 1996 to carry out multisectoral research in support of health policy decisions, selected progressing urbanization and the ageing of societies as its initial priority areas of research.

Health of specific populations

In 1997, children under five constituted 10 per cent of the global population. A major target for WHO was that by the year 2025 there should be over 5 million fewer deaths among children under five than in 1995. By 1997, over 160 countries had received technical and/or financial support from WHO for developing and implementing national food and nutrition policies and plans. The WHO global database on malnutrition and child growth covered over 80 per cent of the world's under-five children and the data bank on breastfeeding covered 65 countries. The baby-friendly hospital initiative was being implemented in over 170 countries and over 10,700 hospitals were designated baby-friendly. Over 140 countries had national breastfeeding committees or the equivalent. Strategies to prevent malnutrition in children included supporting countries in eliminating iodine deficiency and its associated brain damage, vitamin A deficiency and its associated blindness and death, and iron deficiency anaemia.

mia with its associated mortality and morbidity; improving infant and young child feeding through promoting breastfeeding and proper timely complementary feeding; and more effectively addressing the nutritional needs of the ever-growing emergency-affected populations.

Children and young people between the ages of 5 and 19 represented almost 30 per cent of the total world population in 1997. However, few data were available in most regions of the world on the health status of that age group, on specific mortality and on the leading causes of death. Health problems of the group seemed to vary in prevalence from one country to another. They included maternity; sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV; other infectious diseases such as tuberculosis, Schistosomiasis and helminth infection; mental health; substance abuse; injuries; and suicide attempts. A first draft of the global report on alcohol and public health was prepared and work began on an international framework convention on tobacco control, which was expected to be finalized in 2000.

The Global Commission on Women's Health focused on: education for the health of girls and women; violence against women; and maternal morbidity and mortality. In 1997, WHO activities in reproductive health included the expansion of the research initiative on the role of men in reproductive health; publication of data from the WHO collaborative study of cardiovascular disease and steroid hormone contraception; the completion of data collection for a study of Norplant contraceptive implants; and the launching of several regional initiatives on female genital mutilation, acceptability of emergency contraception, increasing rates of Caesarean section and quality of antenatal care.

WHO continued to promote health care for the older population (over 65), which was increasing by 750,000 a month. Although ageing was not a disease in itself, a number of major chronic conditions accompanied it: circulatory diseases; cancer; chronic pulmonary disease; musculoskeletal conditions; dementia; and blindness and visual impairment. WHO's programme on old age and ageing emphasized health promotion, with a focus on healthy ageing. Some activities were directed towards specific aspects of the health of older people, such as preventing blindness and deafness.

Disease prevention and control

WHO estimated that of more than 50 million deaths worldwide in 1997, about one third were due to infectious and parasitic disease such as acute lower respiratory diseases, tuberculosis, diarrhoea, HIV/AIDS and malaria; 29 per cent were due to circulatory diseases such as coronary heart disease and cerebrovascular diseases; and about 12 per cent were due to cancers.

In May, WHA acknowledged the danger of epidemics of sleeping sickness in a number of African countries, particularly in central Africa. It was hoped that by the year 2000, at least 70 per cent of all people at risk could be reached through medical surveillance, and prevalence of the disease reduced to a degree at which it was no longer a public health problem. WHO was also working to control other endemic diseases such as cholera, yellow fever, Schistosomiasis, onchocerciasis and Chagas disease.

The influenza outbreak in Hong Kong in mid-1997 was the first one in which WHO pandemic planning was used, with the step-by-step collection of information necessary to decide whether or not a new vaccine was required. The WHO Task Force of Experts on Influenza was developing a plan for the global management and control of a pandemic that included the promotion of high-growth seed virus for vaccine and the facilitation of vaccine production and distribution.

In 1997, WHO accelerated malaria control activities in 24 endemic countries in Africa. By the end of the year, the objective of 90 per cent of the affected countries having a national control plan in place was achieved.

Environment, health and development

In 1997, WHO published Health and environment in sustainable development: five years after the Earth Summit, which brought together quantitative data on health-and-environment issues with examples from regions and countries. Other activities had contributed to further strengthening the international and national systems for radiation emergency medical preparedness and response, the medical and epidemiological monitoring of populations affected by the Chernobyl accident, and the understanding of biological and health effects of low-dose radiation. A sanitation promotion kit was developed as the foundation of a new WHO strategy on sanitation. Country workshops and hygiene education seminars were held in all regions to promote sanitation as a major instrument to reduce diarrhoeal mortality in infants. A comprehensive guidebook was issued on the management of health-care wastes.

Twelve environmental health criteria monographs—comprehensive documents that provided internationally peer-reviewed assessment of risk to human health and environment from exposure to chemicals—were published. The International Programme on Chemical Safety chemical incidents project provided guidance to the health sector on preparedness for and response to direct or indirect exposure of populations. A harmonized format for international exchange of data on chemical incidents was being field-tested with the assistance of a WHO collaborating centre (University of Wales Institute, Cardiff).

With regard to food and nutrition, WHO prepared a document on Food safety and globalization of trade in food in cooperation with WTO, which drew the attention of public health authorities to the implications of the WTO Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures for national food legislation. A data bank was established to collect epidemiological data on food-borne disease outbreaks and a consultation was held on prevention and control of enterohaemorrhagic E.coli infections.

Public information and education

Communicating information around the globe from its comprehensive data banks on health and disease through print, telegraph, photographs, magnetic sound recording, television and electronic means was an essential WHO function. By connecting to the WHO Web site, users could access the WHO library database, which contained information on the work of WHO programmes relating to health and disease. Translations of WHO technical books and documents were available in over 60 languages; approximately 100 translated WHO books were issued annually by publishers and scientific institutions, national ministries and professional associations, at no additional cost to WHO.

Secretariat

At the end of 1997, WHO had a staff of 3,719, including 1,296 posts in the Professional and higher categories and 2,423 in the General Service category.

Budget

The fiftieth WHA (1997) adopted a budget of $922,654,000 for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Chapter VI

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank)

In 1997, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) continued to promote economic and social progress in developing nations; its one overarching goal was to help its borrowers reduce poverty.

Together with one of its affiliates, the International Development Association (see PART SIX, Chapter VIII), the Bank provided loans to developing countries in fiscal 1997 (1 July 1996–30 June 1997) and addressed the specific needs of its clients as they faced the challenges of adjusting to a rapidly changing global economy. In Africa, following a request for support by its clients, the Bank initiated efforts to mainstream capacity-building activities into all of its operations and development of a partnership framework began. Successful economic development had taken a heavy toll on the environment in East Asia. The Bank increased its support for that sector with loans and related advice for water supply and sanitation, which increased for example, more than two-and-one-half times over the 1996 fiscal year level. As the reforms of the 1990s took root in South Asia, the Bank supported countries as they shifted to a second generation of reform by helping to identify policy options to promote fiscal sustainability. In Central Asia and Eastern Europe, the Bank supported innovations to generate income and create assets for the poor through social investment funds, including a project in Ukraine to protect people adversely affected by coal sector restructuring. A number of programmes to restore confidence in financial systems in the Latin American countries of Argentina, Mexico and Venezuela received Bank support. In the Middle East and North Africa region, loans to Jordan and Tunisia helped promote private sector participation in the wider world economy and facilitate initiatives such as the proposed association of Middle East and North African countries with the European Union.

One of the Bank's most significant achievements in fiscal 1997 was the initiative, in collaboration with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and other members of the international community, to address the debt of the heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC). The Bank established the HIPC Trust Fund and allocated $500 million as an initial contribution, while IMF established the ESAF-HIPC Trust for financing special enhanced structural adjustment facility operations under the HIPC Debt Initiative. The principal multilateral creditors and a number of bilateral donors made contributions to the debt-relief initiative, under which Uganda was the first country to be approved for assistance. Bank and Fund staff prepared debt-sustainability analyses for Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire and several other countries that on the basis of their record performance would also be eligible for assistance. The total cost of the HIPC Debt Initiative, while tentative, was in the range of $5.5 billion to $8.4 billion in net present-value terms.

Another important achievement in 1997 was the Executive Board's unanimous approval in March of the Strategic Compact—a plan for fundamental reform to make the Bank more effective in delivering its regional programme and in achieving its basic mission of reducing poverty. In terms of lending effectiveness, for example, it was expected that the proportion of projects rated satisfactory would increase from 66 to 75 per cent, meaning that an extra $2 billion a year of Bank lending would have greater impact.

The International Finance Corporation (see next chapter), another Bank affiliate, approved $6.7 billion in financing in fiscal 1997. The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency, the youngest member of the World Bank Group, continued to encourage foreign direct investment in developing countries by providing viable alternatives in investment insurance against non-commercial risks, thereby creating investment opportunities in those countries. The International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID), established in 1966, with close links to the World Bank, continued to facilitate the settlement of investment disputes between Governments and foreign investors in an effort to promote increased flows of international investment.

At the end of fiscal 1997, World Bank membership rose to 181, with the admission of Palau.

Lending operations

Gross disbursements by the Bank totalled almost $14 billion in fiscal 1997, an increase of nearly 5 per cent over fiscal 1996. Bank commitments totalled $14.5 billion in 141 loans to 42 countries. The largest increase in commitments was in the Europe and Central Asia region, where 67 projects were approved for a total of $5 billion, compared with 61 projects for $4.3 billion in the previous year. The sharpest drop occurred in the Africa region, which was largely explained by greater selectivity in lending, the accelerated move by the Bank out of failed investment models, and the slow uptake of new strategies focused on decentralized implementation.

The three largest borrowers of Bank funds were China ($2.5 billion), the Russian Federation ($1.7 billion) and Argentina ($1.5 billion). Seven projects in the West Bank and Gaza, totalling $83.5 million and funded from the Trust Fund for Gaza and the West Bank, were approved. Lending for transportation projects ($3.7 billion) led all sectors by volume, followed by agriculture ($3.5 billion) and multisector purposes ($2.2 billion).

Investing in human development (HD) played a crucial role in the Bank's overall strategy to reduce poverty. By the end of fiscal 1997, cumulative Bank lending for HD totalled $41.9 billion, making the Bank the single largest external financier of HD programmes in low- to middle-income countries, with active projects in 107 countries and 516 completed projects. Disbursements to the sector increased to $3.89 billion, a 45 per cent increase over fiscal 1996. Loans totalling $41 billion were extended for health, nutrition and population ($12 billion), education ($23.7 billion) and social protection ($5.3 billion) programmes. Assistance to the poorest countries—those with a per capita gross national product of $785 or less—totalled $7.4 billion. Some 29 per cent of total Bank investment lending during the year directly targeted the poor, compared to 32 per cent the year before. Those projects supported activities to increase the productivity and economic opportunities of the poor, develop their human resources and provide social safety nets. In 1992, when the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670] put environmentally sustainable development (ESD) at the forefront of global concerns, the Bank's work in ESD was only a small part of its lending portfolio ($4.39 billion). In 1997, the Bank's ESD portfolio ($11.6 billion) included investment programmes to reduce pollution, protect ecosystems and build capacity for environmental management.

In fiscal 1997, the Bank approved loans and credits for 43 projects totalling $3.7 billion in sectors with the most potential for private sector involvement—power, oil and gas, industry and mining, and the financial sector. In addition, many of the 54 projects, totalling $5.2 billion, for transport, urban development, and water supply and sanitation approved in 1997 had significant private sector development impact and were expected to leverage substantial private flows.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), established in 1988, continued to help promote investment for economic development in member countries, through guarantees to foreign investors against losses caused by non-commercial risks and through advisory and consultative services. MIGA had its own operating and legal staff, but drew on the Bank for administrative and other services. As at December 1997, MIGA had a total of 142 members.

In fiscal 1997, MIGA issued a record 70 guarantee contracts for $614 million in issued coverage, facilitating an estimated $4.7 billion in foreign investment in 25 developing countries.

Economic Development Institute

The Economic Development Institute (EDI) continued to design and deliver training programmes for Bank clients, providing policy lessons, skills building and outreach to civil society. EDI's programme of grass-roots management training provided very poor, often illiterate women in sub-Saharan Africa, South Asia and North Africa with management skills relevant to their needs. It continued to support the use of new technologies in Africa; the World Links for Development programme aimed to connect 1,000 schools in the developed world with 1,000 schools in the developing world through the Internet, with heavy concentration in Africa. In South Asia, EDI conducted workshops to strengthen financial markets, providing training in diversification of financial instruments, containment of market risk, management treasury assets and internationalization for stock exchange officials and treasury and fund managers. In the Middle East and North Africa region, EDI organized the Mediterranean Development Forum (Marrakech, Morocco, May), where policy makers, parliamentarians, NGOs, academics and journalists from around the world came together to participate in more than a dozen learning programmes on regional development issues ranging from unleashing the economic potential of the rural poor to managing reform. EDI was a partner in organizing the second Annual Bank Conference for Development Economics for Latin America and the Caribbean, which brought together policy makers, private sector participants and leading academics to focus on international economic integration and commerce.

Scholarships

In fiscal 1997, the Joint Japan/World Bank Graduate Scholarship Programme provided funding to support graduate studies for 360 mid-career officials of member countries.

Co-financing

During the year, the Bank continued to facilitate the flow of financial resources to developing countries by carrying out activities related to co-financing, project finance and guarantees, private sector development and technical assistance financing. The absolute level of co-financing anticipated in support of Bank operations in fiscal 1997 dropped to $7.2 billion from $8.2 billion in fiscal 1996. Most co-financing continued to be provided by official sources (78 per cent), of which the largest amounts were provided by the Inter-American Development Bank ($1.9 billion), the institutions of the European Union ($1 billion) and Japan ($582 million). The major use of co-financing continued to be for specific investment projects, particularly in the infrastructure section.

Financing activities

During fiscal 1997, the Bank raised $15.1 billion in medium- and long-term debt in 18 different currencies. It completed $5.1 billion in currency swaps and entered into $1.6 billion in interest-rate swaps. After swaps, most of the year's funding was denominated in United States dollars, deutsche mark and Japanese yen.

As at 30 June 1997, short-term borrowings outstanding stood at $7.7 billion, comprising $2.2 billion from official sources through the Bank's central facility, $3 billion from market funding in United States dollar discount notes, and $2.5 billion from short-term notes issued under the Bank's global multicurrency note programme. The cost of those borrowings was 5.3 per cent, compared with 5.4 per cent at the end of fiscal 1996.

Capitalization

As at 30 June 1997, the total subscribed capital of the Bank was $182.4 billion, or 97 per cent of authorized capital of $188 billion. The permissible increase of net disbursements was $92.8 billion, or 47 per cent of IBRD's lending limit.

Income, expenditures and reserves

The Bank's gross revenues totalled $8.1 billion in fiscal year 1997, a decrease of $595 million from 1996. Net income was nearly $1.3 billion, up from nearly $1.2 billion in fiscal 1996. Expenses decreased to $6.7 billion from $7.4 billion a year earlier. Administrative costs fell to $651 million from $733 million in 1996, an 11 per cent decrease. As at 30 June 1997, the Bank's reserves amounted to $16.3 billion, and the reserves-to-loan ratio stood at 14 per cent.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1997, World Bank regular and fixed-term staff numbered 5,443.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), continued in 1997 to encourage private sector activity in developing countries. IFC's activities included financing private sector projects, assisting companies in the developing world to mobilize financing in the international financial markets, and providing advice and technical assistance to businesses and Governments.

During the 1997 fiscal year (1 July 1996-30 June 1997), IFC membership increased to 172 with the admission of Cambodia and Turkmenistan.

Financial and advisory services

In fiscal 1997, IFC's Board of Directors approved a total of $6.7 billion in financing, of which $3.4 billion was mobilized through loan syndications, underwriting and private placements for 276 projects in 84 countries, compared with $4.9 billion for 264 projects in 76 countries in fiscal year 1996. The total project cost of fiscal 1997 approvals was $17.9 billion; the ratio of IFC funding to total costs was 1 to 2.7. IFC expanded its operations to more countries, more areas and more sectors than previously. It concentrated on countries that had not benefited from private foreign investment, and had carried out first projects in Azerbaijan, Cambodia, Eritrea, Georgia, Moldova, Mongolia, Tajikistan and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

The "Extending IFC's Reach" initiative, a three-year pilot programme to promote private investment in selected countries where difficult conditions had constrained IFC activity, was launched in fiscal year 1997. Under the initiative, IFC established the $40 million Small Enterprise Fund, which allowed IFC to make smaller investments through simplified procedures, from which $ 17.6 million in loans and equity financing and a broad range of technical assistance work had been approved for 16 projects. The Technical Assistance Trust Fund supported 34 technical assistance assignments, totalling some $3.3 million, in 13 "Reach" countries.

Strong demand for technical assistance and advisory services continued throughout fiscal 1997, when IFC provided a broad range of services, which included capital markets technical assistance; advisory work in the infrastructure area; privatization and corporate restructuring; project development facilities; and investment and project-specific advisory services.

Regional projects

IFC approved 276 projects in 84 countries and regions in fiscal 1997. In Africa, IFC continued to focus on expanding support through technical assistance services, capital markets work and direct support to small industry. In Central Asia, the Middle East and North Africa, IFC's operational activities focused on supporting efforts to liberalize economies and to foster a dynamic private sector. In Asia, IFC operational emphasis increasingly shifted to new sectors and markets and to countries with less access to private capital. In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC continued to focus on encouraging development through domestic private investment in financial institutions and second-tier and small and medium enterprises.

In sub-Saharan Africa, IFC approved 72 projects in 24 countries, up from 71 projects in 20 countries in fiscal 1996. One of every four IFC approvals was for Africa, the highest rate for any region. As at 30 June 1997, IFC's committed portfolio included loans and investments for 255 companies in 32 countries, compared with 224 companies in 30 countries a year earlier.

In Asia, the slowdown in economic growth occurred almost exclusively in its more advanced economies. Their less affluent neighbours reported absolute and relative income gains. IFC approved 50 projects in 12 countries and four regional projects, compared with fiscal 1996 when it approved 50 projects in 12 countries and three regional projects. IFC's committed portfolio included loans to 237 companies in 18 countries compared with 213 companies in 19 countries the previous year.

In Central Asia, the Middle East and North Africa, IFC's investment strategy focused on continued investment in the infrastructure needed to support private sector development, supporting job creation and value-added manufacturing industry and developing the financial markets needed to attract and channel foreign and domestic investment. During fiscal 1997, IFC approved 41 projects in nine countries and the West Bank and Gaza as well as two regional projects, compared with 36 projects in nine countries and two regional projects in fiscal 1996. IFC's total committed portfolio included loans and investments for 123 companies in 13 countries in the region, compared with 114 in 12 countries a year earlier.

In Europe, IFC continued to work towards its central objective of advancing the private sector through environmentally sustainable investments and technical assistance programmes. IFC approved 45 projects in 15 countries and one project with a regional focus, compared with 36 projects in 13 countries and two regional projects the previous year.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC continued to support environmentally responsible private sector projects. It used regional and country strategies, in coordination with the World Bank and emphasizing the evolution of private capital flows, to deploy its resources in a more focused manner. During the fiscal year, IFC approved 54 projects in 21 countries and three regional projects, compared with 61 projects in 14 countries and two regional projects in fiscal 1996. The Corporation's committed regional portfolio included loans and investments for 276 companies in 21 countries, compared with 282 companies in 21 countries a year earlier.

Foreign Investment Advisory Service

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS), a joint venture of IFC and the World Bank, continued to advise Governments on the policies, laws, regulations, programmes and procedures needed to create an attractive investment climate and increase inflows of productive foreign direct investment (FDI). In fiscal 1997, FIAS completed 31 new advisory projects in 27 countries. It continued to work on more complex advisory projects in the area of FDI in infrastructure, backward linkages, administrative barriers to investment and promotional strategies. FIAS conducted and participated in multi-country conferences on foreign investment policy, which included a round-table discussion on outbound FDI promotion and its implication for the Asia and Pacific region and the Asian countries, and a meeting to explore the feasibility and desirability of a unified promotion strategy for members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations. It also published papers on round-table discussions on policy for promoting FDI in infrastructure in Africa and Eastern Europe.

Financial performance

In fiscal 1997, IFC's net income totalled $432 million, a 25 per cent increase over 1996. The loan portfolio generated $40 million, while net income from the equity/quasi-equity portfolio was $249 million. Net income from invested net worth and treasury activities totalled $203 million.

IFC's total committed portfolio at the end of the fiscal year was $10.5 billion, a 7 per cent increase over 1996. The portfolio consisted of loans and equity investments in 1,047 companies in 102 countries.

Capital and retained earnings

As at 30 June 1997, IFC's net worth reached $4.7 billion, compared with $4.1 billion at the end of fiscal 1996.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1997, there were 880 regular staff at IFC, drawn from 110 countries.

Chapter VIII

International Development Association (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), provided concessionary assistance to low-income developing countries to reduce poverty and improve the quality of life. In 1997, IDA assistance continued mainly to those with an annual per capita gross national product of $785 or less (in 1996 United States dollars), for which 70 countries were eligible. IDA loans to those countries totalled $4.4 billion.

IDA carried out a broad range of activities to reduce poverty, including projects targeted at human resource development such as education, health, safety nets, as well as improvement of water supply and sanitation, the provision of infrastructure, and agriculture and rural development. It advised governments on the best policies for attaining broad-based economic growth and reducing the vulnerability of the poor to economic shocks.

At the end of fiscal year 1997 (1 July 1996-30 June 1997), IDA membership remained at 159.

Financing

The funds used by IDA—called credits to distinguish them from World Bank loans—were derived mostly from contributions of richer member countries, as well as transfers from World Bank earnings. Such funds were replenished by an agreement among donors every three years. Credits were made only to Governments, had a 35- to 40-year maturity with a 10-year grace period on repayment of principal and were interest-free.

Fiscal 1997 was the first year of the eleventh replenishment of IDA (IDA-11). The total expected commitment authority for IDA-11 was 14.4 billion special drawing rights (SDR), including the Interim Trust Fund (ITF) administered by IDA.

IDA-11 was to provide IDA with the resources to fund credit committed during the period 1 July 1996-30 June 1999. The commitment authority for IDA-11 comprised SDR 4.7 billion from IDA-11 donor contributions, SDR 2.2 billion from donor contributions to ITF, SDR 1.3 billion from the unreleased portion of contributions carried over from the IDA-10 period, and SDR 6.2 billion from other resources. At the end of fiscal 1997, contributions from ITF totalled SDR 1.7 billion from 30 donors. IDA-11 donor contributions were to be made available in two annual tranches during fiscal 1998 and fiscal 1999. Commitment to IDA-11 was augmented by SDR 783 million in the release of donor contributions carried over from the IDA-10 period. That amount was made available when the United States paid $700 million towards its IDA-10 contribution, which triggered the release of the corresponding amount in Germany's contribution. At the end of fiscal 1997, available resources for IDA-11 totalled SDR 5 billion. Against those resources, IDA had made commitments of SDR 3.2 billion during fiscal 1997, of which SDR 1.2 billion was funded by ITF and SDR 2 billion was funded by IDA-11 resources. Of that amount, 36 per cent went to Africa, 30 per cent to South Asia, 17 per cent to East Asia and the Pacific, 11 per cent to Europe and Central Asia, and 3 per cent to both Latin America and the Caribbean and the Middle East and North Africa. The three largest borrowers of IDA credits were India ($903 million), Viet Nam ($349.2 million) and China ($325 million).

Secretariat

Though legally and financially distinct from the World Bank, the staffing and headquarters of IDA were the same as those of the Bank.

Chapter IX

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

During 1997, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued its efforts to promote exchange stability; assist in the establishment of a multilateral system of payments; make its general resources temporarily available to members experiencing balance-of-payments difficulties under adequate safeguards; and shorten the duration and lessen the degree of disequilibrium in the international balances of payments of members. Against a background of increasing globalization, the Fund reviewed its surveillance operations, adapted its financial instruments and procedures and addressed problems of heavily indebted and low-income countries. The Fund's fiscal year covered the period from 1 May 1996 to 30 April 1997.

During 1997, IMF membership increased to 182 with the admission of Palau.

IMF facilities and policies

IMF provided financial assistance to its members through several facilities and policies to help them achieve sustainable economic growth and balance-of-payments viability and to establish normal relations with their creditors. Credit for longer periods was made available under the extended funding facility (EFF).

The Fund provided concessional financial support to low-income countries under the structural adjustment facility (SAF) and the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF). In 1997, the IMF Executive Board undertook an extensive review of ESAF and continued its efforts to ensure the uninterrupted availability of financial resources for it. Together with the World Bank and other creditors, IMF made important headway in implementing the initiative to reduce the external debt burden of a number of heavily indebted poor countries.

The Fund's special facilities consisted of the compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF) and the buffer stock financing facility, which had not been utilized since 1983. Two countries, Algeria and Bulgaria, made use of CCFF during fiscal 1997, with drawings totalling 0.3 billion special drawing rights (SDR).

Financial assistance

During fiscal 1997, the Fund approved 28 new standby, extended and ESAF arrangements, totalling SDR 5.3 billion in new commitments (SDR 3.2 billion in standby arrangements for 11 countries; SDR 1.2 billion for five EFF arrangements; and nearly SDR 1 billion for 12 ESAF arrangements), compared with commitments of SDR 19.7 billion in fiscal 1996. Many Fund-supported arrangements approved in previous years remained in effect in fiscal 1997, including the three-year extended arrangement with the Russian Federation totalling SDR 6.9 billion, the largest such extended arrangement in the Fund's history.

As at 30 April 1997, 60 arrangements were in effect, for a total commitment of SDR 18 billion, compared with SDR 27.9 billion the previous year. They comprised 14 standby arrangements (Argentina, Bulgaria, Djibouti, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lesotho, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Romania, Venezuela, Yemen); 11 EFF arrangements (Algeria, Azerbaijan, Croatia, Gabon, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Moldova, Peru, Philippines, Russia); and 35 ESAF arrangements (Albania, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Chad, Congo, Gambia, Georgia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Zambia).

Liquidity

The Fund's liquidity position improved significantly in fiscal 1997, reflecting a lower demand for resources, compared to the previous two consecutive years of record high demand, and an increase in the pool of currencies used by the Fund to finance purchases by members. At the end of fiscal 1997, the Fund's liquid resources amounted to SDR 62.7 billion, compared with SDR 56.4 billion a year earlier. Uncommitted and adjusted usable resources totalled SDR 43.5 billion at the end of the fiscal year, compared with SDR 33.5 billion a year earlier.

As at 30 April 1997, the Fund's liquid liabilities amounted to SDR 36.1 billion, consisting entirely of reserve tranche positions; liquid liabilities a year earlier had amounted to SDR 37.3 billion. The ratio of the Fund's uncommitted and adjusted usable resources to its liquid liabilities—the liquidity ratio—increased from 89.8 per cent at the end of fiscal 1996 to 120.5 per cent at the end of fiscal 1997.

SDR activity

In fiscal 1997, total transfers of SDRs decreased to SDR 19.8 billion, after having reached a record level of SDR 27.4 billion in fiscal 1996. The drop was due, in part, to delays in a number of large purchases by members during 1996/97, which constrained the transfer of SDRs from the General Resources Account (GRA) to participants and contributed to the inadequate availability of SDRs for members to acquire and subsequently use to fulfil their financial obligations to IMF. Another reason for the decline was the need for GRA to expand its receipts of currencies in order to facilitate harmonization of the Fund positions of creditor members, which resulted in a decrease in repurchases in SDRs. Transfers of SDRs from participants to GRA fell from SDR 7.7 billion in 1995/96 to SDR 6 billion in 1996/97, reflecting mainly a decrease in the use of SDRs for repurchases from SDR 5.6 billion in 1995/96 to SDR 4.4 billion in 1996/97. Transfers among participants and prescribed holders decreased from SDR 11.9 billion in 1995/96 to SDR 8.4 billion in 1996/97, largely due to declines in prescribed operations and transactions by agreement. Transactions by agreement were conducted for the most part with the assistance of the 12 members that had established standing arrangements with the Fund to buy or sell SDRs for one or more freely usable currencies at any time, provided that their SDR holdings remained within certain limits. Transactions by agreement decreased to SDR 7.4 billion in 1996/97 from SDR 8.9 billion in 1995/96.

Transfers of SDRs during fiscal 1997 resulted in some further redistribution of SDR holdings among the various groups of holders, with IMF playing the major role in circulating and redistributing SDRs. Because a number of large anticipated purchases by members in fiscal 1997 were delayed, the holdings of GRA at the end of fiscal 1997 amounted to SDR 1.5 billion, at the ceiling of the target range and nearly double the level of a year earlier. The SDR holdings of non-industrial countries decreased from 67.9 per cent to 60.3 per cent during fiscal 1997; those of industrial countries declined from 102.4 per cent to 99.3 per cent of net cumulative allocations in fiscal 1997, mainly because they sold more SDRs in transactions by agreement than they acquired. The SDR holdings of prescribed holders increased from SDR 1.1 billion at the end of fiscal 1996 to SDR 1.3 billion at the end of fiscal 1997.

Policy on arrears

The level of outstanding overdue financial obligations to IMF increased slightly during fiscal 1997, from SDR 2.18 billion to SDR 2.21 billion. There was one new case of protracted arrears to the Fund in fiscal 1997.

As at 30 April 1997, four countries (Liberia, Somalia, Sudan, Zaire) were ineligible to use the general resources of the Fund. Those countries accounted for 95 per cent of total overdue obligations on that date. Declarations of non-cooperation, a further step under the strengthened cooperative arrears strategy, were in effect with respect to three countries (Liberia, Sudan, Zaire).

Technical assistance and training

In fiscal 1997, demand by members for IMF technical assistance and training services remained strong as economic and financial globalization and the transition to market-oriented policies progressed. Monetary and fiscal aspects of macroeconomic management were the focus, but related areas of statistics, financial law, Fund financial organization and operations, and information technology were also covered. The Fund provided assistance in the field through missions by Fund staff and the assignment of short- and long-term advisers. Courses were also given at headquarters and in member countries. During fiscal 1997, technical assistance and training accounted for about 14 per cent of the Fund's total administrative expenditure.

The IMF Institute provided training to 604 people through 15 courses and 3 seminars at headquarters, and to 578 people through 4 courses and 16 seminars at the Joint Vienna Institute. In addition, some 23 courses, 9 seminars and 6 instances of lecturing assistance were organized for about 1,100 participants at overseas training courses for senior officials from participating countries.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, IMF employed 2,181 full-time staff from 122 countries.

Budget

The Fund's administrative budget for fiscal 1997 was $490.5 million. For the capital budget, $30.4 million was approved for projects beginning in fiscal 1997. Actual administrative expenses during the fiscal year totalled $471.6 million and capital project disbursements totalled $151.5 million, including $137.8 million for major building projects.

Chapter X

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued during 1997 to promote the safety and efficiency of civil air transport by prescribing standards and recommending procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in Chicago, Illinois, United States, in 1944, known as the Chicago Convention. The Convention, the international agreement that regulated the safe and orderly development of air transport, established the fundamental principles of safety, efficiency and regularity of civil aviation and created ICAO to promote and administer those principles. On 4 April, ICAO marked the fiftieth anniversary of the coming into force of the Convention.

In 1997, world airline traffic and load factors were the highest ever. Domestic and international scheduled traffic of the world's airlines increased to some 344 billion tonne-kilometres. The airlines carried a total of about 1.46 billion passengers and some 26 million tonnes of freight. Both the passenger and the overall weight load factors on total scheduled services in 1997 increased by one percentage point over 1996, to 69 and 61 per cent respectively. Air freight rose by 15 per cent to 102.9 billion tonne-kilometres, and airmail traffic increased by about 3 per cent to 6 billion tonne-kilometres. Overall passenger/freight/mail tonne-kilometres increased by some 9 per cent and international tonne-kilometres by 10 per cent.

The Council of ICAO held three regular sessions in 1997. The ICAO Safety Oversight Programme and related issues were the subject of the Council's review throughout the year. In June, the Council adopted a resolution for the entry into force of article 3 bis (non-use of weapons against civil aircraft) into the Chicago Convention. In addition, it adopted amendments to eight technical annexes to the Convention and two Procedures for Air Navigation Services documents.

In May, ICAO launched and adopted its first strategic action plan, "Guiding Civil Aviation into the Twenty-First Century", to deal more effectively with the constantly evolving challenges facing civil aviation, particularly in the area of flight safety.

ICAO concluded an air traffic services route agreement with the signing of a Memorandum of Agreement by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea, after 16 years of negotiations, providing for the use by any State of air routes between North Korean-controlled airspace and South Korean-controlled airspace, as well as a direct speech circuit between Pyongyang and Taegu Ari Control Centres, enabling communications for the first time in 52 years.

In 1997, ICAO membership remained at 185 countries.

Activities in 1997

Air navigation

ICAO continued to update and implement international specifications and regional plans with particular emphasis on communications, navigation, surveillance and air traffic management (CNS/ATM) systems. The specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices contained in 18 technical annexes to the 1944 Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services. Regional plans covered air navigation facilities and services required for the implementation of CNS/ATM systems and other international air navigation elements in ICAO regions.

Five air navigation panel meetings convened in Montreal in 1997 made recommendations to amend ICAO specifications. Draft amendments to align the Technical Instructions for the Safe Transport of Dangerous Goods by Air with the Tenth Edition of the United Nations Recommendations for the Transport of Dangerous Goods were developed. In addition, advance notification of revised provisions for radioactive material transport, applicable from 1 January 2001, was prepared. The panel on visual aids updated the Aerodrome Design Manual and dealt with issues concerning specifications on visual aids for surface movement guidance and control systems. The panel on weather operations completed the development of ICAO material on the required navigation performance for approach, landing and departure operations and finalized a feasibility assessment of global navigation satellite systems (GNSS) application to those operations. Other panels dealt with issues concerning collision avoidance systems, instrument approach procedures and obstacle clearance areas.

The Seventh Africa-Indian Ocean Regional Air Navigation Meeting was convened by ICAO (Abuja, Nigeria, May) to facilitate the implementation of ICAO Safety Standards and Recommended Practices throughout the region, including solutions to alleviate the deficiencies which affected the safety, regularity and efficiency of flights in the African airspace.

During the year some project areas that were given special attention were accident investigation; accident and incident data reporting; aerodromes; aerodrome rescue and fire fighting; aeronautical information services; airborne collision avoidance systems; audio-visual aids; aviation medicine; flight safety and human factors; personnel licensing and training; and safety oversight.

Air transport

In 1997, efforts in the area of air transport were directed towards ICAO's continuing programmes of economic analysis, economic policy, forecasting and economic planning, collection and publication of air transport statistics, airport and route facility management, economic and organizational aspects of CNS/ATM systems, economic and coordination aspects of environmental protection and the promotion of greater facilitation in international air transport.

ICAO issued guidance to its contracting States for regulatory change in international air transport to adjust to an increasingly competitive airline environment while fostering fair competition. The recommendations, which stemmed from ICAO's 1994 World-wide Air Transport Conference [YUN 1994, p. 1449], were developed by the Air Transport Regulation Panel and were the conclusion of several years of work on the broad issue of the economic regulation of international air transport. A meeting of the Statistics Division (Montreal, September) proposed changes that reflected the increased need for aviation statistics to meet requirements such as evaluation of the impact of civil aviation on the environment, consumer protection, safety oversight, airspace congestion and planning for air navigation systems. The Facilitation Panel (Montreal, November), during its first meeting, recommended changes regarding the custody and care of passengers, particularly those persons who were found "inadmissible" by States. The Technical Advisory Group on Machine-Readable Travel Documents (Montreal, January) began work on specifications for "smart cards" for automated border inspection and initiated a draft revision of the specifications for machine-readable passports. The first meeting of the Middle East Area Traffic Forecasting Group (TFG) (Cairo, Egypt, November) was held to support air navigation systems planning in the region in accordance with the strategy for regional traffic forecasting activities adopted by the ICAO Council in 1996. The Asia/Pacific Area TFG published traffic and aircraft movement forecasts.

Six workshops in the areas of air transport regulatory policy, forecasting and economic planning, statistics and airport and route facility management, two seminars on statistics and a seminar on the economics of CNS/ATM systems and a facilitation area meeting were held during the year.

ICAO continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

ICAO maintained its responsibilities for the administration of the Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements, to which 23 Governments were contracting parties in 1997. The two agreements, which were signed in 1956 and amended in 1982, concerned the provision in Greenland and Iceland of air traffic control, communications and meteorology facilities and services to North Atlantic flights.

The ICAO Council continued its efforts to enhance the level of implementation of its security programme through the mechanism for financial, technical and material assistance to States with regard to aviation security.

Legal matters

The thirtieth session of the Legal Committee (Montreal, 28 April-9 May) approved the text of the draft Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules for International Carriage by Air. The ICAO Secretariat Study Group on the Modernization of the "Warsaw System" held its third meeting (Montreal, 4-5 December). The Panel of Legal and Technical Experts on the Establishment of a Legal Framework with regard to GNSS, at its second meeting (Montreal, 6-10 October), agreed on the text of the draft Charter on the Rights and Obligations of States relating to GNSS Services and adopted a number of recommendations on the subjects of certification and liability.

The following ratifications, adherences or successions were registered in 1997 to the 1944 Convention on International Civil Aviation, ICAO's constituent instrument, and to conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices:

Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (1947) (article 93 bis Expulsion or suspension)

Ghana, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia
Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (1980) (article 83 bis Lease, charter and interchange)

Belize, Bosnia and Herzegovina, China, Ghana, Maldives, Nepal, Republic of Moldova

Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (1984) (article 3 bis Non-use of weapons against civil aircraft)

Belize, Bosnia and Herzegovina, China, Ghana, Israel, Maldives, Republic of Moldova

International Air Services Transit Agreement (Chicago, 1944)

Latvia

Convention on the International Recognition of Rights in Aircraft (Geneva, 1948)

Bahrain, Ghana, Kenya, Slovenia, Uzbekistan, Viet Nam

Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface (Rome, 1952)

Bahrain

Protocol to Amend the Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface Signed at Rome on 7 October 1952 (Montreal, 1978)

Guatemala

Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air (Warsaw, 1929)

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Czech Republic, Guatemala, Honduras, Latvia, Malawi, Panama, Republic of Moldova, Slovakia, Tajikistan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan

Protocol to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929 (The Hague, 1955)

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Czech Republic, Lithuania, Panama, Republic of Moldova, Slovakia, Sri Lanka, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Convention Supplementary to the Warsaw Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air Performed by a Person other than the Contracting Carrier (Guadalajara, 1961)

Ghana, Lithuania, Republic of Moldova, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uzbekistan

Additional Protocol No. 1 to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air Signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929 (Montreal, 1975)

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Guatemala, Honduras, Kuwait, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uzbekistan

Additional Protocol No. 2 to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air Signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929 as Amended by the Protocol Done at The Hague on 28 September 1955 (Montreal, 1975)

Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Honduras, Kuwait, Oman, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uzbekistan

Additional Protocol No. 3 to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International

Carriage by Air Signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929 as Amended by the Protocols Done at The Hague on 28 September 1955 and at Guatemala City on 8 March 1971 (Montreal, 1975)

Kuwait, Mexico

Additional Protocol No. 4 to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air Signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929 as Amended by the Protocol Done at The Hague on 28 September 1955 (Montreal, 1975)

Australia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Guatemala, Kuwait, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation (Montreal, 1971)

Republic of Moldova

Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports Serving International Civil Aviation, Supplementary to the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, done at Montreal on 23 September 1971 (Montreal, 1988)

Brazil, Ghana, Sri Lanka, Republic of Moldova

Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection (Montreal, 1991)

France, Guatemala, Japan, Lebanon, Republic of Moldova, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United States

Technical cooperation

In 1997, ICAO undertook 116 technical cooperation projects in 74 countries. The organization's technical cooperation programmes, financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), trust funds, management service agreements and the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, had total expenditures in 1997 of $65.3 million. Some 92 per cent of that amount was provided by Governments to fund their own projects on the basis of cost sharing with UNDP.

ICAO had resident missions in 46 countries, and 74 others received assistance through fellowships and visits from experts assigned to inter-country and subcontractual arrangements. A total of 627 fellowships were awarded in 1997, of which 597 were implemented. ICAO employed 316 experts from 41 countries during all or part of 1997, of which 154 were on assignment under UNDP and 162 worked on trust fund projects (including 2 under the Associate Experts Programme). In addition, there were 84 Governments and organizations registered with ICAO in 1997 under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. Equipment purchases during the year totalled $35.92 million.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, 748 staff were employed in the ICAO secretariat, including 298 in the Professional and higher categories and 450 in the General Service and related categories. Of the total, 199 were employed in regional offices.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget in 1997 totalled $52,191,000. Appropriations for 1998 were $54,596,000.

NOTE: For further details on the activities of ICAO in 1997, see Annual Report of the Council—1997.

Chapter XI

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU), established in 1874 in Berne, Switzerland, under the Treaty of Berne to regulate international postal services, became a United Nations specialized agency in 1948. During 1997, UPU continued to promote a fast and reliable universal postal service at affordable prices through international collaboration among its member countries. In the light of the rapidly changing and highly competitive business environment, UPU carried out activities to promote postal development and assist postal administrations to improve the quality of their services to meet growing customer demands. The postal services of its 189 member countries remained the largest physical distribution network in the world, with some 6 million postal employees working in more than 700,000 post offices worldwide, processing and delivering an annual average of more than 400 billion mail items.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, UPU's supreme legislative authority, met every five years. It last met in 1994 for the twenty-first Congress, held in Seoul, Republic of Korea. In 1997, preparatory work continued for the twenty-second Congress, to be held in Beijing, China, from 23 August to 15 September 1999.

Council of Administration

The Council of Administration, which ensured the continuity of UPU work between Congresses and studied regulatory, administrative, legislative and legal issues of concern to the Union, held its annual session from 9 to 24 October at UPU headquarters. During 1997, the Council simplified the Universal Postal Convention and its Detailed Regulations in order to provide international postal customers with harmonized procedures. A high-level strategic meeting on the theme "Postal vision 2005" (Geneva, 13-14 October), attended by some 500 ministers, chief executives and representatives of postal administrations from 123 member countries, discussed a global postal strategy for the next millennium and prepared the groundwork for the 1999 Congress.

Postal Operations Council

The Postal Operations Council, which dealt with the operational, economic and commercial aspects of international postal services, aimed at assisting postal services to modernize and upgrade their postal products, including letter post, express mail service, postal parcels and postal financial services.

In 1997, UPU signed an agreement with the International Olympic Committee to include a philatelic theme on the Olympic Games. It also signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Interpol to fight crimes committed through the mail such as illicit drug trafficking, mail bombs, child pornography, paedophile networks and mail fraud.

POST*Net, UPU's global telecommunications network, increased in its number of users and volume of data exchanged to track mail, electronic money orders, and electronic and hybrid mail. The development of computerized systems for the management of international mail continued in 1997 as traffic of electronic data interchange increased. A project to improve the postal international money order (IMO) was initiated, which allowed postal administrations to make IMO transactions electronically, to ensure their secure transmission and to track payments.

The Council held its annual session from 21 April to 2 May at UPU headquarters.

International Bureau

The International Bureau, which was under the general supervision of the Council of Administration, was the UPU secretariat, serving the postal administrations of member countries as an organ of execution, support, liaison, information and consultation. During 1997, the Bureau went through a process of reassessment and re-evaluation. Significant progress was made in applying modern management practices through a series of human resource training and development workshops. The Bureau continued to act as a clearing house for the settlement of various inter-administration charges related to the exchange of postal items and international reply coupons. UPU improved its financial clearing system by introducing POST*Clear in 1997, a new system that enabled the Bureau more effectively to receive and settle accounts on behalf of its members.

As at 31 December 1997, the number of permanent staff members employed by the Bureau was 151, of whom 63 were in the Professional or higher categories and 88 were in the General Service category.

Technical cooperation

Main funding for UPU technical cooperation activities came from contributions made by members to the UPU budget or to a special voluntary fund.

One of the principal goals of the UPU Postal Development Action Group was to increase the level of outside financial resources devoted to postal reform and the modernization of postal services. A crucial element in selecting beneficiary countries was their own motivation to participate actively in technical cooperation projects.

The UPU eight Regional Advisers were responsible for the programming, preparation, implementation and follow-up of postal development projects in the developing countries in their regions.

Budget

Under the Union's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. At its 1996 session, the Council of Administration approved the 1997 budget at Swiss francs (SwF) 34.5 million. In 1997, the Council approved the 1998 budget of SwF 35.7 million.

Chapter XII

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1997, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), which was founded in 1865 as the International Telegraph Union and became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1947, continued to promote the development and efficient operation of telecommunication facilities, provide technical assistance in telecommunications and encourage adoption of a broader approach to telecommunications in the global information economy and society.

At its annual session, the Council (Geneva, 18-27 June), ITU's governing body between Pleni-potentiary Conferences, took action on a broad range of topics, including: the draft Strategic Plan for 1999-2003; the adoption of 27 recommendations put forward by the ITU 2000 Working Group, which examined ways to strengthen the ITU financial base and to enhance the rights, obligations and role of the telecommunication industry in the Union's work; the adoption of "Trade in Telecommunications" as the theme for the Second World Telecommunication Policy Forum to be held in 1998; the adoption of the principle of cost recovery for the processing costs of ITU products and services; the endorsement of ITU's role as depository for the Memoranda of Understanding for both the Global Mobile Personal Communications by Satellite (GMPCS) and Internet generic Top Level Domains; the approval of development projects to be funded using Swiss francs (SwF) 17.5 million of surplus funds generated by TELECOM 95 and Americas TELECOM 96; the restructuring of ITU field offices; and the adoption of the 1998-1999 budget.

ITU membership increased to 188 in 1997 with the admission of Saint Lucia.

Major events in 1997 were Asia TELECOM 97 and TELECOM Interactive 97. Asia TELECOM 97, the fourth regional telecommunication exhibition and forum for the Asia region (Singapore, 9-14 June), attracted 40,608 telecommunication professionals from 104 countries and a total of 476 exhibitors from telecommunication, information technology and audio-visual entertainment fields. The forum, which ran parallel with the exhibition, comprised a Strategies Summit and a Technology Summit and focused on new technological developments and challenges of communications in developing countries. TELE-

COM Interactive 97 (Geneva, 8-14 September), the world's first interactive multimedia forum and exhibition, drew 20,819 telecommunication professionals and 215 exhibitors from the telecommunication, computing, broadcasting and entertainment sectors. The exhibition featured corporate and national pavilions, as well as thematic pavilions. It also included a cybercafé and a cyberforum.

Conferences

The World Radiocommunication Conference (WRC-97) (Geneva, 27 October-21 November) consolidated the simplified radio regulations and appendices and reviewed the provisions for GMPCS. The most important achievements of WRC-97 included the adoption of a new plan of the Broadcast Satellite Service in the Americas and in Eastern Europe and Northern Asia, which delivered broadcasting services such as direct-to-home television services; and an agreement between new mobile satellite service operators, which would see the development of new broadband global satellite systems that had the potential to deliver Internet and multimedia applications to homes and businesses anywhere in the world. The Conference approved operational provisions for the mobile maritime satellite service and corresponding aeronautical navigation services.

The third Radiocommunication Assembly (RA-97) (Geneva, 20-24 October) discussed the direction of ITU activities in the area of radiocommunications, including the establishment of a two-year work plan for the study groups of the ITU Radiocommunication Sector. Among the highlights of RA-97 were the approval of recommendations relating to International Mobile Telecommunications 2000 standards development; a proposal for greater cooperation and harmonization between the activities of the Radiocommunication Bureau and the Telecommunication Standardization Sector; and a resolution on the need for collaboration with the International Organization for Standardization and the International Electrotechnical Commission. The Assembly was held every two years.

Radiocommunication Sector

The ITU Radiocommunication Bureau continued to provide services to administrations and users in application of the Radio Regulations, including the coordination and registration of radio-frequency assignments and satellite orbits. It allocated international identification series, provided maritime mobile information services and conducted seminars and training sessions for national frequency management requirements. In 1997, its main activities included processing notifications for space and terrestrial radiocommunication services; supporting the work of the ITU Radiocommunication Sector study groups on spectrum management, radiowave propagation, fixed-satellite service, science service, mobile radiodetermination, amateur and related satellite service, fixed service, sound broadcasting service and television broadcasting service; and preparing for radiocommunication conferences.

The Bureau received requests for assistance from administrations in both the terrestrial and space radiocommunication domains, and responded to 35 and 40 requests, respectively. It provided assistance to bilateral space system coordination meetings; carried out training missions/meetings on space system matters; and organized regional seminars and information meetings on maritime radiocommunications and a distance learning course on spectrum management for Latin American countries. The Bureau also provided support to the Radio Regulations Board, which held three meetings in 1997, and to the Radiocommunication Advisory Group, which held its fifth meeting from 11 to 14 March.

By the end of 1997, the Master International Frequency Register contained particulars of 1,228,123 assignments to terrestrial stations, representing 5,659,107 line entries, which were published in the International Frequency List at periodic intervals. For space services, the Register contained 324,083 assignments to 1,406 satellite networks and 4,262 earth stations.

Telecommunication Standardization Sector

In 1997, the Telecommunication Standardization Bureau supported all sector activities and the 16 study groups on: network and service operation; tariff and accounting principles, including related telecommunication economic and policy issues; the Telecommunication Management Network and network maintenance; protection against electromagnetic environment effects; outside plant; data networks and open system communications; characteristics of telematic services; television and sound transmission; languages and general software aspects for telecommunication systems; signalling requirements and protocols; end-to-end transmission performance of networks and terminals; general network aspects; transport networks, systems and equipment; and multimedia services and systems. The Bureau reserved or assigned a total of 21,076 universal international freephone numbers (UIFNs) and received some 5,076 applications during 1997. There were 70 service providers in 37 countries that had applied for UIFNs.

The Telecommunication Standardization Advisory Group held one meeting in 1997.

Telecommunication Development Sector

The Telecommunication Development Bureau, in 1997, implemented the Buenos Aires Action Plan (BAAP), adopted at the 1994 World Telecommunication Development Conference (WTDC) [YUN 1994, p. 1453], and carried out preparatory meetings for the 1998 WTDC Conference. It actively pursued the 12 programmes of BAAP on: finance and regulatory issues; human resources management and development; guidelines for the elaboration of a business-oriented development plan; development of maritime radiocommunication services; computer-aided network planning; frequency management; improvement of maintenance; mobile cellular radio telephone systems; integrated rural development; broadcasting infrastructure; information services; and development of telematics and computer networks. The Bureau offered services in policy, regulatory, financing, tariffs and technical areas as well as frequency management and human resources development. It conducted a total of 438 technical assistance missions and 87 seminars, workshops and meetings, and granted 1,132 fellowships with special attention to least developed countries.

In Africa, assistance involved telecommunication restructuring, the introduction of Internet services and implementation of management information services. In the development of the regional telecommunication networks, two regional projects were launched: AFRITEL, a revitalization of the PANAFTTEL project, and Telecommunication Equipment Manufacturing. The Lome maintenance centre was set up and the feasibility of the maintenance centre for the Central African sub-region updated. AFRICA-ONE entered an active phase since financing of the project for $1.6 billion was secured by African operators and private investors. The project financed by the United States Agency for International Development for support to telecommunications sector development and establishment of a database for telecommunications in southern Africa was ongoing. A total of 470 fellowships were awarded and 62 expert missions were conducted in the region during the year. Field staff carried out 72 missions to follow up various activities.

The development of regional telecommunication networks continued in the Americas. Projects to strengthen national technical and administrative telecommunication services were carried out in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname and Uruguay. A special effort was made to support and intensify the delivery of distance learning programmes. A total of 77 fellowships, 50 field missions, 19 ad hoc assistance missions and six regional seminars/meetings were organized during the year.

In the Arab States, activities included assistance in the areas of policies and strategies, telecommunication financing, human resources and GMPCS. In an effort to strengthen national technical and administrative telecommunication services, 25 individual activities were organized in the region, including 13 for Palestine. Six national projects were under implementation, comprising international experts, training and equipment components. In 1997, 153 fellowships were awarded, and 33 expert missions and 17 workshops were organized.

In Asia and the Pacific, activities dealt with promoting interaction of equipment users and suppliers, and interfacing with the Telecommunication Development Sector's study group. Telecommunication sector governance was the subject of a regional study in the Pacific islands subregion. Other activities emphasized regulatory reform, social use space applications, restructuring the telecom sector and transforming a telecom organization to be competitive. A sub-regional meeting for Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam provided a forum where critical issues were discussed, such as the international settlements situation, the Internet, World Trade Organization participation and Association of South-East Asian Nations membership. Two capital projects were implemented in the Pacific islands. A total of 330 fellowships were awarded, 60 expert missions were fielded and 13 workshops/meetings were organized.

In Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States, assistance was provided in broadcasting marketing and promoting new technologies in sound and television broadcasting. Activities in national technical and administrative telecommunication services were organized in the region. During the year, a total of 142 fellowships were awarded and 12 staff missions were organized to follow up various activities.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, ITU employed 717 permanent and fixed-term staff, including 274 in the Professional or higher categories and 443 in the General Service category.

Budget

The adjusted budget for ITU in 1996-1997 amounted to SwF 303,122,000. Actual income in 1997 totalled SwF 314,997,394, while actual expenditure totalled SwF 299,056,940.

In 1997, the ITU Council approved the 1998-1999 budget for SwF 327,644,000, with a contributory share valued at SwF 328,000 for member States.

Chapter XIII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO), established in 1950, continued to facilitate worldwide cooperation related to meteorological and hydrological information and the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other activities. WMO promoted operational hydrology and encouraged research and training in meteorology.

The WMO Executive Council, at its forty-ninth session (Geneva, 10-20 June), considered the organization's actions in high-priority areas including the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672], as well as progress in climate-related activities. It examined issues of coordination, especially in the geosciences within the UN system, and matters affecting the proper functioning of the World Weather Watch Programme. The Council examined action being taken concerning the international exchange of data and products, activities relating to the preparation of the Fifth WMO Long-term Plan and the role of national meteorological and hydrological services (NMHSs) and resource mobilization.

WMO membership remained at 179 States and six Territories during 1997. Members were grouped into six regional associations (RAs)—Africa (RA I); Asia (RA II); South America (RA III); North and Central America (RA IV); South-West Pacific (RA V); Europe (RA VI).

World Weather Watch Programme

The World Weather Watch (WWW) Programme, the backbone of the overall programme of WMO, collected, analysed and disseminated meteorological and related geophysical information which was needed to provide efficient meteorological and hydrological services within member countries. The body within WMO responsible for the planning, development and coordination of those matters was the Commission for Basic Systems (CBS). WWW consisted of the Global Observing System (GOS), the Global Telecommunication System (GTS), the Global Data-processing System (GDPS) and Data Management, collectively known as the basic systems. The WWW Programme also included the Tropical Cyclone Programme, the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme (IMOP) and WMO satellite and environmental emergency response activities.

World Weather Watch implementation

During the year, WWW's main activities focused on a review of the working structure of CBS; a review of the impact of observing systems, particularly radiosondes, on numerical weather predictions; a survey on the use of the Internet in national meteorological services; the international exchange of meteorological data and products; and the further implementation of advanced telecommunication technology for the collection and distribution of data. Those activities and other issues were reviewed at a meeting of the CBS Advisory Working Group (Montreal, Canada, October).

In 1997, emphasis was placed on identifying the most critical areas requiring assistance following the cessation of the Omega radio-navigation system, used to measure upper winds and monitor the conversion of the 250 upper-air stations concerned.

The requirements for observational data for climate monitoring and research purposes continued to grow and, in 1997, major progress was made towards finalizing a global network of some 1,000 stations, selected from the 10,000 surface stations of GOS, to serve as the Global Climate Observing System (GCOS) Surface Network (GSN). Procedures for monitoring the availability and quality of GSN data had also been developed.

Instruments and methods of observation

IMOP focused on increased quality of observational data and support for activities in capacity-building related to meteorological instrumentation. Three Regional Instrument Centres were established in Barbados, Costa Rica and the United States. The Third Regional Pyrheliometer Comparison of RA III was organized (Santiago, Chile) to ensure that national standard pyrheliometers achieved the high level of accuracy of regional standard instruments. The Working Groups of the Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observation on Upper-air Measurements and on Surface Measurements met in March (United Kingdom) and in April (United States).

Experts from NMHSs and representatives of manufacturers, at a Meeting of Experts on Automation of Visual and Subjective Observations, reviewed the current situation on the basis of results of the intercomparison, considered the needs in that new field and initiated the development of guidelines and recommendations.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

During the year, all five regional tropical cyclone centres (Miami, Florida (United States), Nadi (Fiji), New Delhi (India), Reunion and Tokyo (Japan)) accelerated the implementation of their respective regional cooperation programmes, including the regionally coordinated plan for future development of services by NMHSs and the agencies involved in disaster prevention and preparedness.

Emphasis was placed on training forecasters to promote capacity building through the development of human resources.

World Climate Programme

In 1997, overall coordination of the World Climate Programme was carried out by the Inter-Agency Coordinating Committee for the Climate Agenda (IACCA). At its first session, IACCA stressed the importance of identifying national focal points or groups for the Climate Agenda [YUN 1995, p. 1077].

A joint WMO/GCOS Climate Variability and Predictability Study initiative was launched when some 100 scientists and specialists from the insurance and reinsurance industry from 23 countries participated in a workshop on indices and indicators for climate extremes at the National Climatic Data Center (United States, June).

Demonstrations/pilot projects were initiated with the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development, and led to further projects in Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana and Nigeria. Projects were also initiated with the Brazilian Meteorological Service and the Hydrometeorological Service of Viet Nam, while agreements on pilot projects were reached with Indonesia and the Philippines.

Activities of the Climate Information and Prediction Services were accelerated by the onset of a very significant El Niño, and included training, demonstration/pilot projects, liaison with research programmes and networking. WMO co-sponsored workshops and conferences on the impacts of the 1997-1998 El Niño and predictive information in South America.

World Climate Research Programme

Under the World Climate Research Programme, the highlight of the year was the Conference on the World Climate Research Programme: Achievements, Benefits and Challenges (Geneva, August), which examined the research priorities to meet climate-policy requirements in future as well as capacity-building needs. The observational phase of the World Ocean Circulation Experiment (WOCE) was completed in 1997. A guide was published, available electronically (<http://www.soc.soton.ac.uk/OTHERS/woceipo/dguide97>), summarizing the wide-ranging data that had been collected. Attention was focused on synthesis of WOCE data sets into a dynamically consistent view of the global ocean circulation.

Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme

Within the Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme, the activities of the WMO Global Atmosphere Watch emphasized quality assurance, refinement of the network observational programmes and a strategic plan to set priorities for, and guide the evolution of, the Programme into the next millennium. An emergency expert mission to the smoke- and haze-stricken area of South-East Asia assisted members in their efforts to model the dispersion, transport, chemical transformation and deposition of atmospheric pollution caused by the burning of biomass.

The activities of the proposed World Weather Research Programme, a new initiative of the Commission for Atmospheric Science, were reviewed. The WMO International Workshop on Dynamic Extended-range Forecasting (France, November) provided an opportunity to compare forecast skills with different models, which was the first step towards creating a standardized system for medium- and long-range forecast verification.

The International Symposium on Cyclones and Hazardous Weather in the Mediterranean (Spain, April) and the League of Arab States/WMO International Symposium on Sand and Dust Storms (Syrian Arab Republic, November) contributed to the enhancement of early-warning systems to mitigate the effects of high-impact weather on socio-economic development.

The first WMO International Workshop on Monsoon Studies (Indonesia, February) provided a forum for discussion between researchers and forecasters on the current status of knowledge of monsoons and on priorities and opportunities for monsoon studies.

Applications of meteorology

Agricultural meteorology

The Advisory Working Group of the Commission for Agricultural Meteorology (Geneva, November) discussed strategic issues, including Agenda 21 adopted by UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672], and agrometeorology for a sustainable world; capacity building; relations with other agencies; and future challenges. Activities related to drought and desertification formed an integral part of the programme and also served the purposes of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification [YUN 1994, p. 944].

Aeronautical meteorology

In 1997, installation of World Area Forecast System (WAFS) satellite-based communication receivers and data display systems was almost completed in the Caribbean and Central and South America and was operational in most countries. Site surveys and agreements for installation in countries of the Pacific within the United States satellite footprint were finalized.

The Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology (CAeM) Working Group on the Provision of Meteorological Information Required Before and During Flight (Geneva, June) discussed the current state of implementation of WAFS and the progress achieved towards its final phase, the definition of precipitation intensity and other weather phenomena, guidelines for completing the Compendium on Tropical Meteorology, and training, which was endorsed as the highest priority activity for the CAeM intersessional period.

Marine meteorology

Following a recommendation from the Commission for Marine Meteorology (CMM), a first joint WMO/Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) planning meeting for a possible marine services enhancement project in the western Indian Ocean took place (Mauritius, May). The project was seen as eventually being a regional contribution to the Global Ocean Observing System.

Public weather services

With the designation of rapporteurs for the six WMORAs, the core composition of the CBS Working Group on Public Weather Services was completed in 1997. At an expert planning meeting (Nassau, Bahamas, May), special emphasis was given to training activities. Two regional training seminars on the use of GDPS and WAFS products and presentation of forecasts to the public were organized in Africa (Niamey, Niger, March; Pretoria, South Africa, October).

Hydrology and water resources

The World Hydrological Cycle Observing System (WHYCOS), established to improve water resource assessment and management throughout the world, was further strengthened in 1997. The WHYCOS concept was gaining considerable momentum globally and implementation of its regional components was progressing satisfactorily.

During the year, a Comprehensive Assessment of the Freshwater Resources of the World, prepared by WMO and other UN agencies in collaboration with the Stockholm Environment Institute, was submitted to the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter VI).

Education and training

The Education and Training Programme focused on: evaluating members' training needs; revising the WMO Classification of Meteorological and Hydrological Personnel; organizing training events; implementing the fellowship programme; monitoring the activities of Regional Meteorological Training Centres (RMTCs); preparing training publications; and providing technical support to sessions of constituent bodies. Attention was given to the application of new technologies to the training process and effective exchange of modern educational media between members and RMTCs. The worldwide network comprised 22 RMTCs.

In 1997, 263 fellowships were awarded as follows: 45 long-term, 119 short-term and 99 to participate at training events of short duration. Partial assistance was provided to 42 additional fellows.

A total of 685 persons participated in 25 events organized by WMO in 21 countries. WMO also co-sponsored or jointly supported 29 training events organized by national institutions in member countries.

The WMO Training Library continued to strengthen its capabilities and databases and to expand its holdings of audio-visual and computer-aided training material to meet members' requirements.

Technical cooperation

In 1997, WMO technical assistance was valued at $14.82 million, financed by trust funds (27.6 per cent), the WMO Voluntary Cooperation Programme (58.5 per cent), the United Nations Development Programme (7.4 per cent) and the WMO regular budget (6.5 per cent).

The regional offices served as mechanisms to implement WMO programmes at the national, subregional and regional levels. Within the framework of the harmonization of the Regional and Technical Cooperation Programmes, two subregional offices began operations in 1997—one in Lagos (Nigeria) to serve countries in West Africa, and the other in San Jose (Costa Rica) for countries in North and Central America and the Caribbean. Formal negotiations were held with the Government of Samoa on the establishment of a subregional office in Apia which was expected to be operational in 1998.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, the total number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding seven professionals on technical assistance projects) totalled 258. Of those, 124 were in the Professional or higher categories and 134 were in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

The maximum expenditure approved by the Twelfth Congress in 1995 for the twelfth financial period (1996-1999) was 255 million Swiss francs (SwF). It was SwF 2.8 million below the zero real growth amount. The budget adopted by the WMO Executive Council in 1995 for the first biennium 1996-1997 was SwF 124.4 million.

NOTE: For further details regarding WMO activities, see World Meteorological Organization Annual Report 1997, published by the organization.

Chapter XIV

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

In 1997, the International Maritime Organization (IMO), which started its work in 1959, continued efforts to improve the safety of international shipping and to prevent marine pollution from ships.

The twentieth IMO Assembly (London, 17-27 November), the organization's governing body, approved the 1998-1999 budget and resolutions submitted by the Maritime Safety Committee, IMO's senior technical body, the Marine Environment Protection Committee and other subsidiary bodies. The resolutions dealt with, among other things, the implementation of the International Safety Management Code; guidelines to assist flag States in implementing IMO instruments; bulk carriers; performance standards for shipborne Voyage Data Recorders; standards for on-board helicopter facilities; recommendations for entering enclosed spaces aboard ships; maritime policy for a future global navigation satellite system; guidelines for vessel traffic services; control and management of ships' ballast water; guidelines on stowaways; guidelines on preventing narcotic drug smuggling; and combating unsafe practices associated with the trafficking or transport of migrants at sea.

During the year, IMO membership remained at 155.

Activities in 1997

On 24 September, the IMO Council awarded the International Maritime Prize for 1996 to Torkild Reedtz Funder, former Director-General of the Danish Maritime Authority. The Prize was awarded annually to the person, organization or other entity judged to have done the most to advance the objectives of IMO.

World Maritime Day, observed on 25 September at IMO headquarters, focused on the theme "Optimum maritime safety demands a focus on people".

Prevention of pollution

The Conference of Parties to the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto (MARPOL 73/78), meeting in September, adopted new measures which would reduce air pollution from ships. The rules would set limits on sulphur oxide and nitrogen oxide emissions from ship exhausts and prohibit deliberate emissions of ozone-depleting substances. The air pollution rules were adopted in the form of a Protocol creating a new Annex VI (Regulations for the Prevention of Air Pollution from Ships) to the Convention. MARPOL consisted of five technical annexes containing measures to prevent pollution by oil, chemicals, harmful substances in packaged form, garbage and sewage. The new Annex VI would enter into force 12 months after the date on which it had been accepted by not less than 15 States, the combined tonnage of which should be not less than 50 per cent of the gross tonnage of the world's merchant shipping fleet.

The Marine Environment Protection Committee (MEPC), at its fortieth session (18-25 September), adopted a new regulation to Annex I of MARPOL, which specified intact stability criteria for double-hull tankers. The Committee also adopted amendments to MARPOL to make the north-west European waters, including the North and Irish Seas, a special area under Annex I. The amendment was expected to enter into force on 1 February 1999. The discharge into the sea of oil or oily mixture from any oil tanker and ship over 400 gross tons was prohibited in the special areas. Other special areas were the Gulf of Aden, the Antarctic, the Baltic Sea, the Mediterranean Sea and the Red Sea.

Ship security and safety at sea

The Maritime Safety Committee (MSC), at its sixty-eighth session (28 May-6 June), agreed that the Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-level Radioactive Waste in Flasks on board ships (INF Code) should be made mandatory. The review of the INF Code was being carried out by MSC and MEPC in cooperation with the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Environment Programme to deal with all issues related to the transport by sea of materials resulting from the generation of nuclear energy.

MSC adopted amendments to the 1978 International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers containing mandatory minimum requirements for the training and certifications of masters, officers and ratings and other personnel on passenger ships other than roll on-roll off (ro-ro) ships and set requirements for personnel on those ships to be trained in specific areas, including assisting passengers during emergency situations and crisis management. The Committee adopted a new regulation on Vessel Traffic Services (VTS). VTS were used to manage shipping in congested areas such as straits. The new Regulation 8-2 of the 1974 International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS) Chapter V (Safety of Navigation) set out when VTS could be implemented. The new regulation was expected to enter into force on 1 July 1999. The Committee also adopted amendments to SOLAS relating to the stability of passenger ships. They were also expected to enter into force on 1 July 1999 and would apply to new ships constructed after 1 July 2002.

A memorandum of understanding on port-State control in the Mediterranean region was signed by the maritime authorities of Algeria, Cyprus, Egypt, Israel, Malta, Morocco, Tunisia and Turkey (Valletta, Malta, July). The memorandum ensured effective action by the port States concerned to prevent the operation of sub-standard ships while harmonizing inspections and strengthening cooperation and the exchange of information.

World Maritime University

In 1997, a total of 109 students were enrolled at the World Maritime University (WMU), the highest number ever. The enrolment was drawn from 53 countries, including, for the first time, Paraguay and Ukraine. WMU launched a special project designed to enrol more women, which resulted in a higher number of applications from women. Located in Malmö, Sweden, the University was established by IMO in 1983 to provide advanced postgraduate training in maritime administration, environmental protection, port and shipping management, maritime education and training, and maritime safety administration.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, IMO had 282 staff members, of whom 108 were in the Professional and higher categories and 174 in the General Service category.

Budget

The IMO Assembly, at its twentieth session in 1997, approved budgetary appropriations of 36,612,200 pounds sterling for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Chapter XV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

In 1997, the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued development cooperation, norm-setting and registration activities to promote respect for the protection and use of intellectual property. The organization's main areas of work continued to focus on strengthening the intellectual property systems of developing countries; promoting new or revised norms for the protection of intellectual property at the national, regional and multilateral levels; and facilitating the acquisition of intellectual property protection through international registration systems.

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by the organization held their thirtieth series of meetings from 20 to 21 March, and thirty-first series from 22 September to 1 October, in Geneva.

During 1997, WIPO membership increased to 165 States, with the accession of Cape Verde, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Nepal, Oman, Papua New Guinea and Samoa to the 1967 Convention establishing WIPO, amended in 1979. The number of States adhering to treaties administered by WIPO also increased: as at 10 December 1997, there were 143 States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; 127 to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; and 94 to the Patent Cooperation Treaty.

Activities in 1997

Development cooperation

In addition to assisting developing countries to prepare for compliance with the requirements of the 1994 World Trade Organization Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS), WIPO's activities focused on developing human resources; modernizing and computerizing intellectual property administration; and assisting in drafting and revising legislation relating to intellectual property rights. WIPO provided assistance to a total of 124 developing countries, 2 territories and 16 intergovernmental organizations.

During the year, more than 150 courses, seminars or other meetings were held at the global, regional or national levels, providing training or information to more than 10,000 people. WIPO organized study visits for 168 persons. Some 47 developing and industrialized countries contributed to the WIPO Cooperation for Development Program by providing trust funds or help-in-kind in the form of training facilities, meeting premises or local speakers. WIPO engaged some 630 consultants on advisory missions or as speakers in courses and seminars, more than half coming from developing countries. In 1997, there were four sessions of the WIPO Academy in Geneva: three sessions were organized for senior officials from African, Arab and Caribbean countries, and one session was targeted, for the first time, towards countries from the Commonwealth of Independent States. In all, government officials from some 37 developing countries attended the two-week Academy sessions at WIPO.

WIPO-financed country projects, nationally focused plans of action for a particular country, drawn up jointly by WIPO and authorities of the country, benefited 22 developing countries in 1997.

Assistance to countries in transition

During 1997, WIPO's assistance to countries in transition in Central and Eastern Europe, the Baltic countries and Central Asia focused on institution building, advisory missions, training, assistance with the drafting of legislative texts and seminars. WIPO's agreement with the Eurasian Patent Organization to facilitate closer cooperation between the two organizations and among the countries concerned entered into force in October 1997.

Intellectual property law

By December, the WIPO Copyright Treaty (WCT) and the WIPO Performances and Phonograms Treaty (WPPT), adopted in December 1996, had been signed by 50 and 49 countries, respectively, and by the European Communities. WCT dealt with the rights of authors of literary and artistic works, such as computer programmes, books, films, videos and music, in a digital transmission environment such as the Internet. WPPT addressed the rights of performers and producers of sound recordings in the digital environment. Throughout the year, considerable efforts were made to promote the treaties.

Regarding the harmonization of patent laws, the Committee of Experts on the Patent Law Treaty (PLT) considered the latest draft of the Treaty and approved the provisions for closer alignment between the future PLT and the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT) that took into account the latest amendments to the PCT Regulations.

As to trademarks, the Committee of Experts on Trademark Licenses considered draft articles aimed at simplifying and harmonizing procedures relating to the recordal of licenses for the use of marks and a model international request form for the recordal of licenses. The draft articles were written in the same treaty language as the Trademark Law Treaty (TIT), and it was proposed that they form the substantial part of a protocol to TIT.

The Committee on Experts in the area of industrial designs (November) considered the provisions of a draft new Act of the Hague Agreement Concerning the International Registration of Industrial Designs. The draft new Act provided for a link between the international deposit system and regional systems, such as the future European Community design system. The Committee proposed that international negotiations should proceed to a diplomatic conference. The preparatory meeting to address the procedural aspects of the diplomatic conference was scheduled for October 1998.

WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre

The WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre continued to assist individuals or companies to resolve disputes involving intellectual property and to serve as a resource centre for extrajudicial dispute resolution. Its activities included organizing a conference in March to review arbitration of intellectual property disputes under the WIPO Arbitration and Expedited Arbitration Rules; arranging presentations at other conferences worldwide; and managing two training workshops to promote and provide information on the use of arbitration and mediation. In addition, in May the Centre was declared available for administering on-line disputes-resolution procedures regarding Internet domain name disputes. In response to its new mandate, the Centre provided a facility that allowed the parties involved to communicate via the Internet without the need to send pleadings and other documents through postal channels or by facsimile. During the year, the Centre worked towards building expertise and providing a global forum for domain name dispute discussions. Two sessions of the Consultative Meeting on Trademarks and Internet Domain Names (May, September) considered possible harmonization of national and regional laws concerning trademarks and Internet domain names, together with comments on the proposed WIPO Rules for Administrative Challenge Panel Procedure Concerning Internet Domain Names.

International registration activities

PCT. In 1997, there were 54,442 international applications filed, an increase of 15 per cent over 1996 and the equivalent of nearly 3.5 million national applications.

Madrid Agreement. In the trademark system under the Madrid Agreement concerning the Registration of Marks and its 1989 Protocol, there were 19,070 international registrations in 1997. With an average of 11.6 countries designated per registration, the applications had the effect of some 220,000 national registrations.

In October, the Madrid Assembly adopted amendments to the Common Regulations under the Madrid Agreement and Protocol, which were to enter into effect on 1 January 1998.

Hague Agreement. Under the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, 6,223 industrial design deposits, renewals and prolongations were registered in 1997, representing an increase of 6.7 per cent over 1996.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, WIPO employed 641 staff members representing 68 countries. Of those, 209 were in the Professional or higher categories and 432 were in the General Service category.

Budget

WIPO's principal sources of income in 1996-1997 were fees paid by private sector users of the international registration services (82 per cent), contributions paid by member States (11 per cent), and the sale of WIPO publications and interest earnings (7 per cent). During the 1998-1999 biennium, WIPO's income was forecast to grow by some 30 per cent, slightly more than the 28 per cent increase realized during the 1996-1997 biennium, notwithstanding a 15 per cent reduction in PCT fees (the major income-generating registration system) in January 1998, as well as a 10 per cent reduction in member States' contributions that would take place in 1999. In 1997, the organization's budgeted income was 201,235,000 Swiss francs (SwF) and budgeted expenditure was SwF 142,257,000.

Chapter XVI

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

In 1997, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued to assist the rural poor—including small farmers working in marginal areas, newly privatized farmers, nomadic groups, the landless, artisanal fishing communities, indigenous peoples, women and young people—by funding projects to increase food production and incomes as well as improve nutrition, health, education and general well-being on a sustainable basis. IFAD was established in 1977 to combat hunger and rural poverty by designing and funding rural development projects in the low-income, food-deficit regions of the world.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions in 1997 (April, September and December), approving loans for 29 projects, 20 technical assistance grants and an additional grant for the Rwanda Returnees Rehabilitation Programme. During 1997, the Board approved the Fund's first two contributions to Uganda and Burkina Faso towards the reduction of the net present value of those countries' debt to IFAD within the framework of its participation in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative. The Board also approved a programme of work for 1998 of $459 million for loans and grants under the Regular Programme and endorsed a budget for 1998 of $53 million, including a contingency of $400,000.

IFAD membership increased to 160 in 1997 with the accession of Croatia and South Africa. As of 20 February 1997, member States were reclassified. Category I (developed countries), Category II (oil-exporting developing countries) and Category III (other developing countries) became List A, List B and List C, respectively, with List C comprising three sub-listings: C1 for countries in the Africa group; C2 for countries in Europe, Asia and the Pacific; and C3 for countries in Latin America and the Caribbean. Of IFAD member countries, 22 were in List A, 12 in List B and 126 in List C.

Resources

In August 1997, the fourth replenishment of IFAD resources was declared effective. Some $420 million was pledged by 115 member States towards the Fund's core resources. Additional complementary contributions by Belgium ($25 million) and the Netherlands ($15 million) brought the total to about $460 million.

Activities in 1997

Loans and grants approved in 1997 under IFAD's Regular Programme totalled $397.7 million for 29 projects and another $2.8 million as a grant for one additional project. The distribution of lending by region diverged from the pattern of past years, mainly due to the problems faced in developing projects for Africa.

The largest share of Regular Programme lending—44.5 per cent—went to Asia and the Pacific, which received $177.2 million for 10 projects in nine countries. Over the period 1978-1997, Asia and the Pacific received a cumulative share of 36.6 per cent, with loans amounting to nearly $2 billion.

Africa received new loans of $53.8 million (13.5 per cent) for five projects in five countries and $2.1 million for the Rwanda Returnees Rehabilitation Programme. Africa's overall share of 1978-1997 funding was 29.5 per cent of the Regular Programme, amounting to $1.6 billion. Additional loans provided under the Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, or Special Programme for Africa (SPA), brought the total to $1.9 billion.

Loans approved for Latin America and the Caribbean amounted to $84.6 million, 21.3 per cent of the annual total, for six projects in six countries. The region's share, which had been gradually increasing over the years, amounted to $878 million, or 16.7 per cent of Regular Programme loans from 1978 to 1997.

The Near East and North Africa region (which also included Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan) received $82.1 million, or 20.7 per cent of 1997 loans, for eight projects in seven countries. Over the period 1978-1997, the region received a total of $906 million, or 17.2 per cent of Regular Programme loans. Taking into account lending under SPA, the region's total reached $942 million.

The problems that had hindered delivery of new projects and loans to Africa were also reflected in a lower share of new lending to the other two high-priority country groups that IFAD traditionally targeted. Least developed countries (as defined by the United Nations) received $106 million in 1997, representing 26.5 per cent of the year's total, whereas their past shares ranged from 30 to 40 per cent on average. Low-income, food-deficit countries (as defined by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations) received $271 million, or 68.2 per cent of 1997 loans, which was well below their average share of about 80 per cent in the past.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1997, the IFAD secretariat comprised 265 staff, including 109 staff in the Professional or higher categories and 156 in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme in 1997 was $206 million, consisting of $164 million of investment income and $42 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total operational and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $51 million, compared with a budget, before contingency, of $53 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year, including the effects of foreign exchange rate movements of $312 million, was $157 million.

Chapter XVII

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), established in 1966 by the General Assembly and formalized as a specialized agency in 1986, continued its activities to improve the living conditions of people and promote global prosperity for the sustainable industrial development of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. In 1997, as UNIDO completed its reform process, there was an increase in new projects, which had registered an impressive growth for the first time in several years. The seventh session of the General Conference (Vienna, 1-5 December) appointed a new Director-General, endorsed the business plan on the future role and functions of UNIDO and adopted the 1998-1999 budget. The business plan enabled UNIDO to adapt its functions and priorities and orient its activities to the new realities of the changing global economic environment and ensure its viability and efficiency.

The Industrial Development Board held its seventeenth (23-27 June) and eighteenth (12 September and 17-19 November) sessions at which it adopted the business plan and considered the development of human resources for industry, the integration of women in industrial development, environmentally sustainable industrial development, industrial investment promotion, private sector development and UNIDO's contribution to the UN system-wide action plan on drug abuse control (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV).

As at 31 December 1997, there were 169 members of UNIDO with the admission of Kazakhstan in June.

Thematic priorities

During 1997, UNIDO continued working within seven thematic priorities: strategies, policies and institution-building for global economic integration; environment and energy; policies, networking and basic technical support for small and medium-sized industries; innovation, productivity and quality for international competitiveness; industrial information, investment and technology promotion; rural industrial development; and linking industry with agriculture in Africa and the least developed countries (LDCs).

Industrial subsectors marked for priority attention included food processing, leather, textiles and wood processing in agro-based industries; metalworking and machine tools in engineering industries; and biotechnology, water management, medicinal plants, building materials and organic chemicals in chemical industries.

Strategies, policies and institution-building

In 1997, UNIDO developed a new orientation for its industrial policies, which concentrated on intensifying contacts and interaction between the public and private sector at the national and regional levels. The increased contact between the national economies and the world market was reflected in projects such as the Alliance for Africa's Industrialization, regional industrial development and specific programmes for Azerbaijan, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Ecuador, Panama and Viet Nam. The main goal of the Alliance was the elimination of obstacles for the importation of African products into the global market.

Environment and energy

UNIDO emphasized preventive as well as corrective actions regarding sustainable industrial development in relation to protection of the environment and the conservation of energy.

Services focused on capacity-building in support of national strategies for environmentally sound industrial development, implementation of international agreements and establishment of national cleaner production centres. UNIDO was one of four UN agencies that helped implement the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 700]. During the year, UNIDO supported 50 countries with 322 environment projects for a value of $135.9 million. National cleaner production centres became fully operational in Brazil, China, the Czech Republic, India, Mexico, Slovakia, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. UNIDO initiated the establishment of new environment centres in Croatia, Hungary, Uzbekistan and Central America. In cooperation with Governments, the United Nations Development Programme and industry, UNIDO introduced pollution prevention and control activities in pulp and paper, chemical, food processing, leather, textiles and metallurgy industries, and supported cleaner technology in order to reduce the use of chemicals, water, energy and raw materials.

Small and medium-sized enterprises

During the year, UNIDO provided policy advice and institutional support for promoting small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) through overall private sector development and increased market orientation. UNIDO's assistance aimed at improving the access of SMEs to information, technology, managerial experience and financial resources, particularly in rural areas where support for development of even the most basic levels of skills could contribute to the socio-economic development of an entire community. In Africa, UNIDO implemented a project for developing strategies to promote partnership between the public and private sectors. In Latin America, it assisted a programme of cooperation to increase the competition of agro-industrial SMEs in the Southern Cone Common Market (MERCOSUR).

Innovation, productivity and competitiveness

UNIDO provided developing countries at institutional and enterprise levels with adapted systems of support for industrial competitiveness. The systems consisted of the transfer of technology; skills and development; human development; information and data systems; financing by risk capital; metrology; standardization; testing; and management and engineering consulting. A new project evaluated physical, institutional and human capacities for questions of quality, standardization, testing and metrology in Bangladesh, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Ethiopia, the Gambia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Myanmar, Nepal, the Niger and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Industrial information, investment and technology promotion

UNIDO continued to offer investment, technology and information services at the policy, institution and enterprise levels. Those services combined investment, technology and information to establish international partnerships for industrial growth and competitiveness. The objective was to create a network of information and promotion services guided by UNIDO to facilitate investment and technology flows to developing countries. New programmes, such as regional business centres or investment promotion, were implemented in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Colombia, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia.

Rural industrial development

In the area of rural industrial development, UNIDO supported economic integration between rural and urban centres. Most projects focused on creating institutions to stimulate interaction and the setting up of local networks between enterprises. UNIDO facilitated access to market information and to technical knowledge and skills by small-scale enterprises. It participated in the Administrative Committee on Coordination network concerning rural development and alimentary security. UNIDO's contribution also referred to processing raw material into food, the garment and leather industry and textile products. Other activities consisted of creating physical infrastructure facilities in the form of buildings and other civil engineering projects.

Africa and LDCs

In 1997, Africa was the leading recipient region of UNIDO services, benefiting from 37 per cent of the organization's technical cooperation approvals, with emphasis on links between industry and agriculture. UNIDO's subregional project on the leather industry was in its second phase. Leather and leather products associations became key actors in developing and implementing strategies for the sector. Support was provided to selected tanneries and footwear and leather goods factories in Kenya and South Africa to enhance their capacity to manufacture products for international markets. The environment protection component was included in the form of pollution control linked to tannery effluents. In West Africa and Mali, UNIDO initiated steps for developing and promoting traditional textiles. In Cote d'Ivoire, Ethiopia and Kenya, UNIDO's services emphasized the design and manufacture of farm implements and agricultural machinery. In Ethiopia, Kenya, Malawi, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, UNIDO initiated a project on applying quality principles to the food processing sector.

Secretariat

In 1997, UNIDO employed a total of 621 staff members at its headquarters. Some 500 experts such as engineers, economists, lawyers, technology and environment specialists and support staff worked in the field.

Budget

In December 1997, the General Conference adopted UNIDO's 1998-1999 regular budget in the amount of $129.5 million, which represented a 20 per cent reduction over the budget of the previous biennium.

Chapter XVIII

World Trade Organization (WTO)

The World Trade Organization (WTO), established in 1995 as the successor to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) following the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, was the legal and institutional foundation of the multilateral trading system. It provided the principal contractual obligations determining how Governments framed and implemented domestic trade regulations and legislation. WTO also served as the platform on which trade relations among countries evolved through collective debate, negotiation and adjudication. In 1997, WTO continued to oversee the rules of international trade, settle trade disputes between Governments and organize trade negotiations.

The Ministerial Conference, composed of all WTO members, was its highest authority and met at least every two years to decide on all matters under any of the multilateral trade agreements. The next WTO Ministerial Conference was scheduled to take place in May 1998 in Geneva. The General Council carried out the functions of WTO between meetings of the Ministerial Conference.

During the year, WTO membership increased to 132.

General activities

A number of working groups set up by the 1996 Ministerial Conference [YUN 1996, p. 1441] met during 1997. The Working Group on the Relationship between Trade and Investment, at meetings held in June, October and December, discussed the implications of the relationship between trade and investment for development and economic growth; the economic relationship between trade and investment; and stocktaking and analysis of existing international instruments and activities regarding trade and investment. The Working Group on Transparency in Government Procurement, established to conduct a study on transparency in government procurement practices taking into account national policies and, based on the study, to develop elements for inclusion in an appropriate agreement, met on 3 and 4 November. The Working Group on the Interaction between Trade and Competition Policy, mandated to study issues raised by members regarding the interaction between trade and competition policy, including anti-competitive practices, in order to identify any areas that might merit further consideration in the WTO framework, developed in July a checklist of issues suggested for study. In September, the Working Group discussed the first two areas identified in the checklist: the relationship of the objectives, principles, concepts, scope and instruments of trade to competition policy, and their relationship to development and economic growth; and stocktaking and analysis of existing instruments, standards and activities regarding trade and competition policy, including experience with their application. The Working Group met again in November.

In April, WTO and the World Bank signed an agreement for future cooperation and collaboration given their responsibilities in areas of trade, development and global economic activity.

The General Council convened as the Dispute Settlement Body to deal with disputes arising from any agreement contained in the Final Act of the Uruguay Round. The Body established dispute settlement panels, adopted panel and appellate reports, maintained surveillance of implementation of rulings and recommendations and authorized suspension of concessions in the event of non-implementation of recommendations.

During the year, the Trade Policy Review Body reviewed eight members: Benin, Cyprus, Fiji, Paraguay (first reviews), Chile, Malaysia, Mexico (second reviews) and the European Union (fourth review). In November, reviews were made available on line under the Financial Times Information Service network.

In February, 69 WTO members agreed to wide-ranging liberalization measures in basic telecommunications services. In March, 43 WTO members agreed to eliminate tariffs on information technology products, which represented 93 per cent of trade in those products.

During the year, WTO continued to provide technical assistance and training to individual countries, groups of countries or regions. Activities included seminars, workshops, technical missions, briefing sessions and training through trade policy courses.

Trade in goods

The Council for Trade in Goods, in October, reviewed the first stage of the integration process pursuant to the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing. Discussions focused on the process of the integration of products into the GATT 1994 rules and disciplines [YUN 1994, p. 1474], the application of the safeguard mechanism and trade policy measures such as anti-dumping actions and administrative formalities and their effect on market access. Other matters addressed by the Council included trade facilitation, waiver requests and status of notifications.

The Committee on Agriculture reviewed progress in the implementation of commitments to the WTO Agreement on Agriculture. The review was based on notifications submitted by members in the areas of market access, domestic support and export subsidies, prohibitions and restrictions. In 1997, the Committee reviewed 242 notifications in those areas, compared with 193 in 1996. At meetings on the process of analysis and information exchange on built-in agenda issues, issues of interest to developing countries continued to be discussed, including administration of tariff quotas; circumvention of export subsidies; non-trade-distorting measures; direct payments under production-limiting programmes; State trading enterprises; domestic support policy reform; the special agricultural safeguard; non-trade concerns in agriculture; and sectoral trade liberalization.

The Committee on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures reviewed the implementation of the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures, which set out the rights and obligations of members to ensure food safety, protect human health from plant- or animal-spread diseases, or protect plant and animal health from pests and diseases. In October, the Committee adopted a provisional procedure to monitor the use of international standards, guidelines and recommendations. It continued to develop guidelines to help members achieve consistency in their decisions regarding acceptable levels of health protection.

The Committees on Safeguards, on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures, on Anti-Dumping Practices, on Technical Barriers to Trade, on Import Licensing, on Rules of Origin and on Customs Valuation continued to review relevant legislation and regulations of members.

Trade in services

The Agreement on Trade in Financial Services, concluded in December, underlined the value Governments placed on maintaining trade liberalization in difficult times. It resulted in the submission of 56 schedules of trade liberalization commitments representing 70 WTO members.

On 12 December 1997, the Council for Trade in Services took note of the results of the negotiations on financial services, which were annexed to the Fifth Protocol to the General Agreement on Trade in Services. Those results consisted of 57 schedules of improved commitments representing 70 WTO members as well as 16 lists of most-favoured-nation exemptions.

The Council received a request from the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to conclude a cooperation agreement with WTO to cover matters relating to technical cooperation and exchange of information between the two organizations. The WTO secretariat was to report to the Council on its consultations with the ITU secretariat.

Intellectual property

The WTO Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) provided for minimum international standards of protection in the areas of copyright, trade marks, geographical indications, industrial designs, patents, layout-designs of integrated circuits and undisclosed information. It also contained provisions for multilateral dispute settlement. The TRIPS Agreement went into effect on 1 January 1996 for developed countries. For developing countries, the TRIPS Agreement would go into effect on 1 January 2000; for the least developed countries, 1 January 2006. In 1997, the Council for TRIPS reviewed the implementation of the legislation in the areas of patents, layout-designs of integrated circuits, undisclosed information, the control of anti-competitive practices in contractual licences and enforcement.

Regional trade agreements

The Committee on Regional Trade Agreements continued to examine individual regional trade agreements (RTAs) and to analyse the systemic implications of RTAs for the multilateral trading system. In order to expand its understanding of systemic issues, the Committee agreed to follow a three-pronged approach, entailing legal analyses of relevant WTO provisions, horizontal comparisons of RTAs and a debate on the context and economic aspects of RTAs. The secretariat had been requested to conduct further analysis of some non-tariff provisions, including rules of origin, contingency instruments and standards.

Trade and development

The activities of the Committee on Trade and Development in 1997 covered improvements to WTO technical assistance and training activities in favour of developing countries, ways of enhancing the participation of developing countries in the multilateral trading system, a review of the application of special provisions for differential and more favourable treatment of developing countries under the WTO Agreements, follow-up to the High-level Meeting on Integrated Initiatives for Least Developed Countries' Trade Development (Geneva, 27-28 October) and the development dimension of electronic commerce.

Trade and environment

The WTO Committee on Trade and Environment was mandated to identify the relationship between trade measures and environmental measures in order to promote sustainable development, and to make appropriate recommendations on whether any modifications of the provisions of the multilateral trading system were required, compatible with the open, equitable and non-discriminatory nature of the system. The mandate covered goods, services and intellectual property rights and built on progress already achieved in the GATT Group on Environmental Measures and International Trade. The Committee continued to broaden and deepen the analysis of all items of the work programme set out in the 1994 Marrakesh Ministerial Decision on Trade and Environment [YUN 1994, p. 1474].

Plurilateral agreements

The Agreement on Government Procurement called on parties, no later than the end of the third year from the date of its entry into force (1 January 1996), to undertake further negotiations, with a view to improving the Agreement, achieving the greatest possible extension of its coverage and eliminating any remaining discriminatory measures and practices. In February, the Committee on Government Procurement initiated a review of the Agreement.

The Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft eliminated all customs duties and other charges on imports of civil aircraft products and repairs, bound them at zero level and required the adoption of end-use customs administration.

The International Dairy Council decided, on 30 September 1997, to terminate the International Dairy Agreement as of 1 January 1998. In September, the 17 WTO signatories of the plurilateral International Bovine Meat Agreement decided to terminate the Agreement at the end of the year.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre (ITC), operated jointly by WTO and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see PART THREE, Chapter IV), continued to undertake technical cooperation activities as a follow-up to the Uruguay Round agreements, in cooperation with WTO and UNCTAD.

Budget

Beginning in 1996, WTO members' contributions were determined according to their share in total trade in goods, services and intellectual property rights. The total budget for 1997 was Swiss francs 115,692,850.

Secretariat

At the end of 1997, WTO had a staff of some 500.

from 24 October 1945, split up on 1 January 1993 and was succeeded by the Czech Republic and Slovakia.

² Formerly Zaire; named changed on 17 May 1997.

Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together—following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958—to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. As from that date, the Federal Republic of Germany has acted in the United Nations under the designation Germany.

On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

⁶ Formerly Kazakstan; spelling changed on 20 June 1997.

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was an original Member of the United Nations from 24 October 1945. On 24 December 1991, the President of the Russian Federation informed the Secretary-General that the membership of the USSR in all United Nations organs was being continued by the Russian Federation.

1961, and Zanzibar, on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member: the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

and Democratic Yemen on 14 December 1967. On 22 May 1990, the two countries merged and have since been represented as one Member.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971 and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles:

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Chapter III ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs.

Chapter IV THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Composition

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations.

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Functions and Powers

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Article 13

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

- promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;
- promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1 (b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.
2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.
2. The expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.
3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1 (c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.
3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article 19

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Chapter V

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Composition

Article 23¹

1. The Security Council shall consist of fifteen Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.
2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.
3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.
2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII and XII.
3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 25

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

Voting

Article 27²

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedure

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

Chapter VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.
2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.
2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.
3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.
2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.
3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.
2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

Chapter VII

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees.

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Chapter VIII

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Chapter IX

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CO-OPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

- a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;
- b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and
- c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialized agencies, established by inter-governmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies.

Article 58

The Organization shall make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies.

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

Chapter X

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Composition

Article 61³

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of fifty-four Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from twenty-seven to fifty-four members, in addition to the members elected in place of the nine members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, twenty-seven additional members shall be elected. Of these twenty-seven additional members, the term of office of nine members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of nine other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

Article 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

2. It may co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations.

Article 64

1. The Economic and Social Council may take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies. It may make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Article 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Article 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as fall within its competence in connexion with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies.

3. It shall perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present Charter or as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

Voting

Article 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

Article 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Chapter XI

DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories and, to this end:

- a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;
- b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;
- c. to further international peace and security;
- d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and, when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and
- e. to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighbourliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

Chapter XII

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

- a. to further international peace and security;
- b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;
- c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:

- a. territories now held under mandate;
 - b. territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
 - c. territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.
2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79 and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas.

Article 84

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

Chapter XIII

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Composition

Article 86

1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:

- a. those Members administering trust territories;
- b. such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
- c. as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.

2. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Functions and Powers

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may:

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- b. accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- c. provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and
- d. take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements.

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Voting

Article 89

1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Article 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

Chapter XIV

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.
2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.
2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.
2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

Chapter XV

THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article WO

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.
2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.
2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.
3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

Chapter XVI

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.
2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfilment of its purposes.

Article 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.
2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Organization.
3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

Chapter XVII

TRANSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, 30 October 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

Chapter XVIII

AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109¹

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

Chapter XIX

RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

3. The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English, and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

[1] Amended text of Article 23, which came into force on 31 August 1965.

(The text of Article 23 before it was amended read as follows:

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid in the first instance to the contributions of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.)

[2] Amended text of Article 27, which came into force on 31 August 1965.

(The text of Article 27 before it was amended reads as follows:

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.

3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.)

[3] Amended text of Article 61, which came into force on 24 September 1973.

(The text of Article 61 as previously amended on 31 August 1965 read as follows:

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of twenty-seven Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, nine members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from eighteen to twenty-seven members, in addition to the members elected in place of the six members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, nine additional members shall be elected. Of these nine additional members, the term of office of three members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of three other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.)

[4] Amended text of Article 109, which came into force on 12 June 1968.

(The text of Article 109 before it was amended reads as follows:

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.)

Statute of the International Court of Justice

Article 1

The International Court of Justice established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter I

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lotto be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5 and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.

2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.

3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.

4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.

5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

Chapter II

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.

2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

- a. the interpretation of a treaty;
- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
- d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contracting states;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
- d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

Chapter III PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents.

2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.

3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.

2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.

5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.

2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.
3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.
2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.
3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.
4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.
5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.
2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.
2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

Chapter IV

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.
2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.
2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.
3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.
4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

Chapter V

AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.
