Other UNICEF efforts directed towards improving child health focused on the promotion of safe motherhood, including the assessment of maternity hospitals and development of quality standards, training of health workers in prenatal and perinatal care, and the provision of iron folate supplements to pregnant women in at least 27 countries. A regional strategy for reducing maternal mortality was developed in West and Central Africa, the regions with the highest death rates. UNICEF continued support for "mother-friendly" movements and the training of community midwives in various countries, as well as for emergency obstetric care. Systems for reporting and auditing the causes of maternal deaths were developed in several countries in 1998, including Bangladesh, Georgia, Guyana, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and Tunisia. To ensure sanitary conditions during childbirth, UNICEF distributed clean birth kits during neonatal immunization campaigns in several countries during the year. Support for improved hygiene and sanitation continued to be a priority in countries with high rates of child mortality, with a focus on environmental conditions and education for behavioural change in poor communities and schools. UNICEF supported the construction of drinking water facilities in low-income countries, including Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Myanmar, Nigeria and the Sudan.

In order to address the threat to millions of women and children affected by HIV/AIDS, UNICEF initiated a major reorientation of priorities in programme cooperation in 1998, particularly in eastern and southern Africa. In 13 countries, UNICEF engaged Governments in a dialogue on urgent measures to reduce mother-to-child transmission of HIV/AIDS, including expanded access to voluntary testing, counselling and treatment. Growing emphasis was also placed on programmes to improve adolescent health and development. UNICEF contributed to the 1998 world AIDS campaign, which focused on young people as agents of change; to the UN programme strategy for young people; and to the 1998 world No Tobacco Day, which highlighted children and youth. A number of UNICEF offices, including in Bangladesh, Brazil, Costa Rica, Egypt, Sri Lanka and Thailand, collaborated on an initiative funded by the Rockefeller Foundation (United States) on adolescent health and development. Programmes assisted by UNICEF at the country level ranged from activities to promote life skills in schools in eastern and southern Africa and the Mekong subregion of Asia and innovative teaching and learning approaches in Egypt and Thailand, to the promotion of youth-friendly health services in Ukraine and Zambia and recreational opportunities in the West Bank and Gaza. The promotion of adolescent health and development was a priority for UNICEF cooperation in most countries of Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States. Activities included the establishment of networks of youth clubs and information centres, the training of journalists and peer education on sexually transmitted diseases.

Basic education

In 1998, UNICEF continued efforts to provide children with access to education, giving special attention to girls, working children and young people in remote or marginalized communities. Emphasis was also placed on improving the quality of education and on creating child-friendly schools, through better-trained teachers, relevant curricula, lively and participatory learning, the involvement of parents and communities and a safe environment.

UNICEF programme cooperation included support for curriculum reform, often involving the inclusion of life skills, health education and gender-awareness materials; the training of school management committees as mobilizers and monitors of learning achievement; and the provision of textbooks, classroom furniture, teaching guides and training manuals, particularly in very low income countries. In several cases, UNICEF provided inputs to the design of national sector development programmes for basic education, including components focused on access for girls. It also supported innovative, participatory approaches to schooling based on community action. Examples of those approaches included the training of more than 600 school committees in the United Republic of Tanzania and more than 40,000 committee members of primary schools in Pakistan; the extension of mapping techniques to identify children not attending schools in Bangladesh; the enrolment in alternative education classes of some 140,000 children in remote and disadvantaged urban areas of Viet Nam; and the training of over 370 school directors and teachers as part of a pilot project for peace education in Burundi. During the year, the UNICEF Girls' Education Programme continued to promote the development of gender-sensitive classrooms in 52 countries through activities such as teacher training and the creation of new textbooks and curricula. In 10 countries in west and central Africa, approximately 3,400 schools and 800 literacy centres were supported under the African Girls' Education Initiative.

In Honduras, more than 500 non-formal education centres opened in 1998, reaching some 12,000 pre-schoolers. In Nepal, child development centres, managed and partly financed by communities, opened their doors to 17,000 children in 1998, bringing the total served to 30,000. In Turkey, mother-and-child education programmes had reached 14,000 children and families by the end of the year.

The UNICEF Education for Development programme continued to bring together educators and students from industrialized and developing countries to promote child rights, especially by encouraging young people to speak up about what was important to them. UNICEF also invited children and young adults to share ideas through its web site for young people, Voices of Youth (<http://www.unicef.org/voy>).

Protection from armed conflict, exploitation and abuse

In 1998, UNICEF provided humanitarian assistance for children in need of protection from armed conflict and other crises in 55 countries, almost four times the 15 countries that were assisted just four years earlier. It was estimated that more than 50 million women and children were in need of such assistance worldwide, whether due to civil strife in war-torn countries, or to natural disasters, which affected large areas of Central and South America, Bangladesh, China and the Horn of Africa in 1998 (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

UNICEF support for children affected by armed conflict focused on health and nutrition, psychosocial well-being and education. For example, UNICEF participated in negotiations for the periodic cessation of hostilities to deliver humanitarian assistance and immunize children in conflict zones in Angola, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka and the Sudan. It played a lead role in mine-awareness and rehabilitation programmes in conflict and post-conflict situations in more than a dozen countries. UNICEF assisted district officials in Uganda to provide psychosocial support to children returning following their abduction (see PART TWO, Chapter II), and a national plan of action was formulated to address child trauma in Algeria. In acute situations, such as in Rwanda, emergency teacher-training packages developed by UNICEF and its partners were provided to ensure early restoration of education services, which was considered important to help heal past traumas and bring a sense of normalcy to children's lives. In addition, UNICEF collaborated with the Office of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict in advocating a new peace and security agenda for children and women, an issue addressed by the Security Council (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Increased efforts were undertaken during 1998 to combat child labour and child sexual exploitation. Together with the International Labour Organization (ILO), UNICEF initiated studies on the incidence and causes of child labour in Kenya, South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania, and convened a regional assessment meeting on child domestic workers in the west and central Africa region. Learning centres for child workers were set up in urban areas in Bangladesh; national committees for the eradication of child labour were established in several countries in the Americas; and projects were developed in several Asian countries to combat child labour.

National action plans against the commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children were developed by UNICEF and its partners in several countries, including Cambodia, Mongolia, the Philippines and Viet Nam. Studies of child trafficking were completed in 10 countries in west and central Africa and were initiated in Poland. In countries of Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States region, emphasis was placed on improving the conditions for children in public care facilities. A regional convention on the trafficking of children and women was drafted by the countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, with the collaboration of UNICEF and other UN agencies.

Poverty reduction

UNICEF continued in 1998 to work with partners worldwide to help break the cycle of poverty, particularly in the poorest countries, which experienced the highest rates of child deaths and the lowest rates of access to basic services such as primary education and safe drinking water. UNICEF efforts aimed at increasing aid to developing countries; ensuring universal access to basic social services; helping poor countries obtain debt relief; promoting decentralization and greater accountability of Governments; enhancing the ability of the poor to help themselves; and strengthening the information base for statistical evaluations. For example, UNICEF continued to serve as the lead agency in promoting the 20/20 Initiative, which encouraged the allocation of 20 per cent of developing countries' budgets and an equal percentage of aid from donor countries to basic social services, including health care, primary education and low-cost safe water and sanitation. At a global meeting to assess progress on the Initiative (Hanoi, Viet Nam, October), UNICEF joined with other partners to find ways to improve the quality and impact of basic social services and to use resources more efficiently.

In a move away from the project approach, UNICEF, the World Bank and other partners worked with Governments to develop and implement one overall programme in sectors such as health and education. That Sector-Wide Approach (SWAP) aimed to provide greater access to quality basic social services, among other benefits. The approach would improve efficiency and impact of programmes by coordinating efforts in establishing policies and priorities, implementing an agreed-upon programme of work, and monitoring and evaluating results. UNICEF participated in SWAPs in Ethiopia, Ghana, Mali, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zambia.

Organizational and administrative matters

UNICEF finances

In 1998, UNICEF income amounted to $968 million, which was $26 million (2.8 per cent) higher than the $942 million estimated in the 1998 financial medium-term plan and $66 million more than 1997 income. The main sources of income were contributions from Governments and intergovernmental organizations (62 per cent ($603 million) of total income); and non-governmental and private sector groups and individuals (33 per cent ($319 million)). Another 5 per cent ($44 million) came from UN agencies and other sources.

Budget appropriations

The Executive Board, in January [dec. 1998/2], approved a biennial support budget totalling $527.5 million for programme support and management and administration of UNICEF for 1998-1999, as recommended by the Executive Director [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.1 & Corr.1] and reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.2]. Income estimates of $48.5 million would be used to offset the gross appropriations, resulting in estimated net appropriations of $478.9 million. The Board requested the Executive Director to ensure that the current ratio of management and administration costs and programme support costs to programme resources would be maintained, and to report in 1999 on progress made to implement the 1998-1999 biennial support budget.

Also in January [dec. 1998/3], the Board approved a general resources programme budget of $17.6 million (other than the Emergency Programme Fund) for 1998-1999. In addition, it approved a supplementary-funded programme budget of $161.2 million for the 1998-1999 biennium, subject to availability of specific-purpose contributions [dec. 1998/41].

In September [dec. 1998/15], the Board approved the Executive Director's recommendations for funding programmes in 28 countries [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.4], amounting to the following respective amounts for general resources and supplementary funding for each region: Africa, $88.6 million and $189.3 million; Americas, $4.6 million and $16.5 million; Asia, $197.7 million and $265.5 million; Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, $4.2 million and $30.7 million; and the Middle East and North Africa, $14.6 million and $71.5 million.

On 11 September [dec. 1998/22], the Board approved the financial medium-term plan [E/ICEF/1998/13] as a framework of projections for 1998-2001, including the preparation of up to $254 million in programme expenditures from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1999. The amount was subject to the availability of resources and to the condition that estimates of income and expenditure made in the plan continued to be valid. The Executive Director was asked to report on the funding targets necessary to achieve the goals of the medium-term plan in the context of the resource mobilization strategy to be adopted by the Board in January 1999.

Audits

In May, the Office of Internal Audit (OIA) issued a report on UNICEF's internal audit activities in 1997 [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.7], the first such annual report prepared on the basis of a 1997 Executive Board recommendation. The report outlined the major findings and conclusions of internal audit activities, observing that improved funding of such activities had enabled OIA to increase the number of audits undertaken and strengthen further the targeting of efforts to priority risk areas. The Executive Board, on 10 September [dec. 1998/17], took note of the report.

In August [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.9], UNICEF issued a report to the United Nations Board of Auditors and ACABQ on the steps taken or to be taken in response to the Board's recommendations on the UNICEF accounts for the 1996-1997 biennium. It also presented the status of implementation of recommendations on the UNICEF accounts for the 1994-1995 biennium.

Harmonization of budgets

In a 30 January decision on the 1998-1999 biennial support budget [dec. 1998/2], the UNICEF Executive Board welcomed the new format for the presentation of the budget in line with its 1997 decisions on integrated budgeting and on harmonization of budget presentations with UNDP and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) [YUN 1997, p. 1220]. The Executive Director was asked to review with the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director the harmonized presentation [ibid., p. 881], with a view to improving it, particularly its clarity, for the next biennium, taking into account comments made by ACABQ [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.2].

Recovery policy

In response to a 1994 Executive Board request [YUN 1994, p. 1210], the Executive Director, in May [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.6], reviewed the application of the UNICEF interim recovery policy, a core part of the financial procedures related to supplementary-funded projects. Recovery charges were to cover the costs for programme support and management and administration, which UNICEF had to bear to implement supplementary-funded programmes. In June [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.12], ACABQ reviewed the report.

The Executive Board, on 10 September [dec. 1998/21], decided that, as implemented in the 1998-1999 biennial support budget [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.1], there would be one gross support budget to cover the costs of programme support and management and administration for general resources and supplementary funding. The Board also decided, as an interim measure to cover the support costs to be incurred in the 1999 support budget, that the recovery rate would be increased from 3 to 5 per cent. The interest earned on the supplementary funding cash balances would continue to be an item in the miscellaneous income in general resources and would be used to cover the shortfall in the recovery. The UNICEF secretariat was instructed to undertake a full analysis of recovery policy, including the method of calculating and applying charges, as recommended by ACABQ, and to reflect that in the preparation of the 2000-2001 support budget.

Resource mobilization strategy

During 1998, the UNICEF secretariat continued its work on a resource mobilization strategy, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1997/59 [YUN 1997, p. 846]. The elements of a draft resource mobilization strategy were addressed throughout the year in a series of reports prepared by UNICEF and discussed by the Executive Board at its regular, annual and inter-sessional meetings. In January [E/1998/35/Rev.I], the UNICEF Executive Director gave an oral report on the resource mobilization strategy, describing recent declining trends in official development assistance, as well as similar trends for UNICEF general resources and supplementary funds income; she expressed concern about the negative impact that would have on UNICEF's ability to carry out its mission and mandate. She reported that she had convened a special team to review UNICEF's resource mobilization efforts, define priorities for attention and make recommendations with respect to reversing those trends.

The Board, on 30 January [dec. 1998/6], welcomed steps taken by the Executive Director to formulate a resource mobilization strategy and decided to hold an inter-sessional meeting in the first quarter of 1998 to discuss such a strategy. The Executive Director was asked to produce a report on the work of the secretariat and the Board on the issue, as well as a draft resource mobilization strategy for discussion at the Board's second 1998 regular session, with a view to adopting the strategy at the first regular session in 1999.

In February, UNICEF issued a conference room paper on a resource mobilization strategy for discussion at the inter-sessional meeting of the Board. The paper consisted of three parts: a summary of comments by delegations in January; the text of the Executive Director's oral report at that session; and highlights of the initial findings of the Resource Mobilization Team appointed by the Executive Board. The Team stressed that the ongoing programmatic dialogue with donors was crucial and concerned not only Governments, but also National Committees. Various strategies were discussed, ranging from a renewed emphasis on greeting cards, to collaboration with the World Bank and regional development banks, to areas of thematic fundraising with Governments (child labour, girls' education, landmine awareness and malaria reduction, among other things).

In March, UNICEF submitted a report on the work of its Board and secretariat on a resource mobilization strategy [E/ICEF/1998/11], which was transmitted to the Economic and Social Council, together with a summary of the Board's discussion at the annual session in June [E/1998/70]. The report discussed action the secretariat needed to take to create conditions for effective fundraising, issues for the Board's consideration and new means to tap non-governmental wealth. The Executive Board, on 2 June [dec. 1998/8], took note of the report, as did the Council by decision 1998/286 of 31 July.

As requested by the Board, UNICEF presented in July a draft resource mobilization strategy [E/ICEF/1998/14], which aimed to assure increased core resources for UNICEF; obtain greater predictability of contributions to core resources; and find a means of increasing burden-sharing among donors to UNICEF core resources. In addition, the draft strategy addressed ways to mobilize and improve the management of contributions to regular and supplementary funds. On 9 September [dec. 1998/14], the Board took note of the draft strategy and asked that the comments made during Board discussions of the draft be taken into account by the secretariat in preparing the final resource mobilization strategy to be presented in January 1999.

Private Sector Division

Effective 1 February, UNICEF's Greeting Card and related Operations (GCO) became the Private Sector Division (PSD). UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board a financial report on the renamed division for the year ending 31 December 1998 [E/ICEF/1999/AB/L.13]. The total contribution of PSD activities to UNICEF general resources for the year was $180.1 million, compared to $93.5 million for the eight-month period that was covered in the 1997 financial report, due to a change in the PSD fiscal year. The contribution consisted of $56.5 million net operating income from the sale of UNICEF greeting cards and other products; $131.4 million net operating income from private sector fund-raising activities and an offset of $7.8 million for other charges and adjustments. Gross proceeds from the sale of UNICEF greeting cards and other products amounted to $137.9 million, compared to $147.1 million in 1997. Although the same number of cards were sold in 1998 as in 1997 (147 million), the shortfall was due primarily to the negative impact of the continued strength of the United States dollar.

The net operating income from private sector fund-raising activities related to general resources totalled $131.4 million in 1998, compared to $37.5 million in 1997, an increase of $94 million. That was partially due to the longer accounting period in 1998. In addition, $92.5 million was raised from private sector fund-raising activities, earmarked by partners for allocation to supplementary-funded projects, compared to $64.2 million in 1997.

The Executive Board, in January [dec. 1998/5], approved for the fiscal year 1 January to 31 December 1998 budgeted GCO expenditures of $93.6 million, as presented in 1997 in the proposed budget [YUN 1997, p. 1221]. It authorized the Executive Director to incur expenditures as outlined in the proposed budget and to increase expenditures up to a maximum proposed in the report, should there be an apparent net proceeds increase from product sales and/or private sector fund-raising, and, accordingly, to reduce expenditures should the net proceeds decrease. The Executive Director was also authorized to redeploy resources between the various budget lines up to 10 per cent of the amounts approved, and to spend additional funds between sessions of the Board, when necessary due to currency fluctuations, to implement the 1998 work plan. GCO was requested in future budget submissions to provide an analysis of the profitability of its two revenue-generating activities—product sales and private sector fund-raising—and a comparison of approved budget to actual expenditures for the second previous fiscal year. The Board noted that GCO net proceeds for 1998 were budgeted at $273.5 million for general resources. It approved the proposed changes in posts contained in the budget (a net decrease of 17 posts) and renewed the Market Development Programme with $2.8 million for 1998 and the Fund-raising Development Programme with $7.8 million for 1998. It also renewed the Central and Eastern European National Committees Development Programme, with a budget of $0.1 million for 1998. The Executive Director was authorized to incur expenditures in 1998 related to the cost of goods delivered for 1999 up to $46.2 million. In addition, the Board approved the GCO 1999-2002 medium-term plan contained in the budget report.

In September [dec. 1998/18], the Board took note of the GCO financial reports and statements for the year ended 30 April 1997 [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.10] and for the eight-month period ended 31 December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1221].

Joint committee

The first session of the WHO/UNICEF/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health (CCH) (Geneva, 3-4 July) [E/ICEF/1998/15] reviewed its terms of reference, as well as decisions and resolutions of the three organizations relevant to improving the health status of women and children. The role of CCH was to facilitate the coordination of health policies and programmes of the three organizations and to review the overall needs for strategic, operational and technical coordination regarding maternal, child, adolescent and women's health, as well as to promote consistency in implementation of activities and to review topical reports presented by the three organizations. The Committee also made recommendations on the main public health issues relevant to its mandate: safe motherhood, vitamin A deficiency, and adolescent health and development.

The UNICEF Executive Board, on 10 September [dec. 1998/20], took note of the recommendations contained in the Committee's report on its first meeting and endorsed the terms of reference for CCH as described therein.

Management excellence

The UNICEF secretariat, in response to a 1997 Executive Board request [YUN 1997, p. 1222], presented an assessment of the management excellence programme (MEP) from its inception in mid-1995 to early 1998 [E/ICEF/1998/AB/L.51]. It reviewed the programme's interventions in country, regional and headquarters offices, emphasizing their impact on UNICEF programmes. The report noted that MEP had led to significant improvements in the structure, systems, processes and culture of UNICEF. Those changes had enhanced UNICEF's capacity to manage its resources, to carry out its programme work and to be accountable for results.

The Executive Board, on 5 June [dec. 1998/11], encouraged the Executive Director to continue strengthening the implementation of management excellence throughout UNICEF and at all levels. It endorsed her recommendation that management excellence be considered "mainstreamed" and that subsequent reporting on performance be included under the relevant agenda items, with attention given to identifying aspects of accountability, particularly elements of relevance, effectiveness and efficiency, in the delivery of agreed programme objectives.

Communication and information

As requested by the Executive Board in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1223], the UNICEF secretariat, in March [E/ICEF/1998/10], prepared a more elaborate communication policy, including a definition of the role of the communication function at global, regional and country levels, the identification of priority areas and a strategy for implementation. The report examined the role of communication in the context of the UNICEF mandate and mission, proposed strategies and discussed the communication functions, activities and structures within UNICEF that supported the policy. Among the communication channels and processes available to UNICEF were electronic media, print, interpersonal communication and communication through participatory learning. UNICEF carried out audience research, monitoring and evaluation activities, but the development of valid and useful indicators remained a challenge as the scope of UNICEF programmes became wider at the country, regional and global levels. With regard to accountability, an approach that was both comprehensive and specifically targeted was required, with all efforts coordinated so that the UNICEF message was clear and compelling, with responsibility placed at the level closest to the target audiences. An annex to the report provided an overview of UNICEF publications.

The Executive Board, on 2 June [dec. 1998/9], endorsed the report on the communication strategy as a broad policy framework for UNICEF activities in that area, including continuing efforts to improve research and evaluation capacities and the communication functions for country, regional and headquarters levels. The Board supported the approach outlined in the policy, which defined UNICEF communication functions as including information, advocacy, behavioural development and change, and social and resource mobilization. The Executive Director was encouraged to intensify UNICEF efforts to strengthen collaboration and partnerships with relevant sectors of the communication field.

Annual reports

In January [dec. 1998/1], the Executive Board took note of the Executive Director's annual report to the Economic and Social Council [E/ICEF/1998/4 (Part I)] and asked the Executive Director to include and identify in future reports issues that would require particular consideration by the Board and the Council. The Board transmitted the report to the Council, together with comments made during discussions [E/1998/16],

The Council, by decision 1998/286 of 31 July, took note of the report.

Youth

Implementation of the World Programme of Action for Youth

United Nations efforts to promote policies and programmes involving youth continued to focus on implementation of the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 50/81 [YUN 1995, p. 1211]. The Programme of Action addressed problems faced by youth worldwide and outlined meaningful ways to enhance youth participation in national and international policy- and decision-making. In particular, it outlined action guidelines in 10 priority areas: education, employment, hunger and poverty, health, environment, drug abuse, juvenile delinquency, leisure-time activities, girls and young women, and the full and effective participation of youth in the life of society and decision-making. By June 1998, 144 countries had formulated a national youth policy; however, only 73 of those countries had implemented a national programme of action.

World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth

The first World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth was held in Lisbon, Portugal, from 8 to 12 August [WCMRY/1998/28] with the objective of strengthening national capacities for implementing the World Programme of Action. Convened by Portugal, in cooperation with the United Nations, the Conference drew representatives from over 145 countries, including more than 100 government youth ministers and official youth delegates. Discussions focused on three major areas of concern: national youth policies of a cross-sectoral nature; relevance of the themes of International Youth Year (1985) [YUN 1985, p. 978]: participation, development and peace; and social development and major priority issues for action, including education, employment, health, drug abuse and others.

At its conclusion, the Conference adopted the Lisbon Declaration on Youth Policies and Programmes, by which Governments committed themselves to implementing numerous measures related to national youth policy, participation, development, peace, education, employment, health and drug abuse. The Declaration built on the guidelines of the World Programme of Action and outlined policy commitments of national Governments. In the 88-paragraph document, Governments recognized that the formulation and implementation of strategies, policies, programmes and actions in favour of young people were the responsibility of each country, and committed themselves to placing those issues at the top of the political agenda and according that process an appropriate level of resources. States pledged to enhance youth participation in all areas of society, including government decision- and policy-making; to ensure the right to development of all young people; and to strengthen the role of youth and youth organizations in peace-building, conflict prevention and conflict resolution. The Declaration also outlined commitments aimed at guaranteeing access to education and equal employment opportunities, promoting health development and preventing drug abuse. In addition, Governments agreed to introduce time-bound goals and indicators to assess progress made by countries in implementing the Declaration and to foster the further implementation of the World Programme of Action, with the active participation of youth.

Among other resolutions, the Conference proposed the proclamation of 12 August as International Youth Day and addressed the role of youth in protecting the ocean environment, taking into account that the General Assembly, by resolution 49/131 [YUN 1994, p. 951], had designated 1998 as the International Year of the Ocean. The Conference recommended that initiatives to raise the level of education on and awareness of ocean issues should be encouraged and supported among young people so that they could participate effectively in preserving and enhancing the ocean as the heritage of humanity.

During the Conference, the participants considered, among other things, the reports of regional youth meetings convened during 1997 and 1998 as part of the two-year Conference preparatory process [WCMRY/1998/15, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25]. The Secretariat submitted a report on national youth policies to implement the World Programme of Action [WCMRY/1998/6] and a review and appraisal of implementation of the objectives of International Youth Year (1985) [WCMRY/1998/7]. Contributions on youth-related issues were also submitted by several UN agencies and organizations, including reports on youth and education, youth and employment, youth and health, and youth and drug abuse.

World Youth Forum

Prior to the World Conference, some 500 delegates representing youth organizations in 150 countries met with UN and other intergovernmental officials for the third session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System (Braga, Portugal, 2-7 August) [E/CN.S/1999/12]. As with previous sessions held in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 696] and 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1096], the Forum sought to enhance youth involvement in the decision-making processes of the UN system, including the development of joint policies, programmes and projects, and to improve communication and strengthen cooperation between the UN system and youth organizations around the world. The Forum also aimed to promote implementation and monitoring of the 1995 Programme of Action for Youth, as well as other policies and programmes related to youth. With the theme "Youth participation for human development", the Forum was convened by the United Nations, in partnership with the Portuguese National Youth Council.

At its conclusion, the Forum adopted the Braga Youth Action Plan, a joint commitment of participants to goals and actions aimed at fostering youth participation for human development. The Plan's 30 recommendations focused on the advancement of youth policy, participation and rights, at the global and national levels. It was presented to national ministers attending the World Conference in Lisbon.

In September [A/53/378], both the Lisbon Declaration and the Braga Action Plan were transmitted to the Secretary-General for submission to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council in 1999. The recommendations contained in the two documents were expected to form the basis for the discussion on youth policies and programmes at the February 1999 meeting of the Commission for Social Development.

Ageing persons

International Year of Older Persons (1999)

In a Proclamation on Ageing contained in its resolution 47/5 of 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 889], the General Assembly designated 1999 as the International Year of Older Persons. The overall objective of the Year was the promotion of the United Nations Principles for Older Persons, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 46/91 [YUN 1991, p. 698], which provided guidance in the areas of independence, participation, care, self-fulfilment and dignity. On 1 October 1998, the International Year was officially launched by the Secretary-General during a special ceremony at Headquarters.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/80 [YUN 1997, p. 1227], the Secretary-General, in August [A/53/294], summarized preparations for observance of the International Year, including events planned by States, UN bodies and NGOs at the national and international levels. The report reviewed the core concepts behind the Year and explored issues to help develop further the concept of the Year's theme, "A society for all ages".

Worldwide events planned for the Year were highlighted according to an operational framework encompassing four dimensions: raising awareness; looking beyond 1999; reaching out to non-traditional actors; and networking, research and information exchange. Observance of the Year was to be guided by concepts and strategies based on recommendations contained in the Vienna International Plan of Action on Ageing, adopted in 1982 at the World Assembly on Ageing [YUN 1982, p. 1182]. Four main facets for debate and action during the Year were the situation of older persons, lifelong individual development, multigenerational relationships and the interplay of population ageing and development.

At the time of the report, 78 Governments had established focal points and/or national committees to prepare activities, and focal points had been established in a number of UN agencies and bodies. Within the UN system, the gender dimensions of a society for all ages were being mainstreamed in all agencies.

Regarding the Year's theme, the Secretary-General concluded that moving to a society for all ages would require policies that simultaneously strengthened individual lifelong development into late life, focused on self-help and independence, and fostered enabling environments of families, neighbourhoods, communities of interest and broad societal institutions based on principles of reciprocity and interdependence. The basic idea behind a society for all ages was that all age groups were equally worthy and that no age group should be discriminated against or especially favoured by society.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/225 of 28 July, decided that the ad hoc informal open-ended support group to assist the Commission for Social Development in preparations for the International Year—in addition to its activities of promoting awareness and information exchange on preparations for the Year between States, the UN system and NGOs—would serve as an informal consultative forum for discussing national and international proposals and initiatives to help lay the groundwork for the discussion of the Year at the Commission's thirty-seventh (1999) session. The Council changed the support group's name to the Consultative Group for the International Year of Older Persons, keeping its informal and open-ended nature. The Council adopted the decision on the Commission's recommendation [E/1998/26].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/615], adopted resolution 53/109 without vote [agenda item 100].

International Year of Older Persons, 1999

The General Assembly,

Recalling its Proclamation on Ageing, in which, inter alia, it designated the year 1999 as the International Year of Older Persons,

Recalling also the conceptual and operational frameworks for the Year,

Convinced of the need to implement the International Plan of Action on Ageing and to promote adherence to the United Nations Principles for Older Persons,

Mindful of its resolution 40/30 of 29 November 1985, in which it expressed its conviction that older persons must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society,

Mindful also of the relevant provisions of the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Habitat Agenda adopted by the second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II),

Aware that, on the eve of the twenty-first century, the ageing of individuals and populations, unprecedented in the history of humankind, is having far-reaching effects on the way societies organize themselves, on relationships between the generations in families and communities, on the entire course of individual lives and on the terms, images and roles of older persons in their societies,

Wishing to promote investments to further lifelong human development and to preserve and support age-integrated social institutions,

Convinced that moving towards a society for all ages will require policies that strengthen individual lifelong development into late life, focusing on self-help and independence, and, relatedly and simultaneously, strengthen enabling environments of families, neighbourhoods, communities of interest and broad societal institutions based on principles of reciprocity and interdependence,

1. Notes with satisfaction the successful launching of the International Year of Older Persons, with the theme "A society for all ages", on 1 October 1998 around the world and at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the valuable report of the Secretary-General on preparations for the International Year of Older Persons, including its exploration of a society for all ages, presented for further debate by national committees and others;

3. Encourages all States, the United Nations system and all other actors, in reaching out for a future society for all ages, to take advantage of the Year so as to increase awareness of the challenge of the demographic ageing of societies, the individual and social needs of older persons, the contributions of older persons to society and the need for a change in attitudes towards older persons;

4. Welcomes the activities relating to older persons undertaken by States, United Nations organizations and bodies and non-governmental organizations devoted to raising awareness, networking, reaching out and looking ahead beyond 1999;

5. Encourages States that have not yet done so to establish a national focal point or broad-based committee for the Year, and re-emphasizes that activities for the Year should be initiated primarily at the national level;

6. Welcomes the redesignation of the intergovernmental support group as the Consultative Group for the International Year of Older Persons, and invites it to continue its contributions to the observance of the Year;

7. Recommends that the Commission for Social Development should mainstream the issue of older persons into the work of the Commission and the preparatory work for the special session of the General Assembly to review the World Summit for Social Development in the year 2000;

8. Calls upon States, United Nations agencies and bodies and institutions of civil society, including the research community, to avoid age and gender bias in their treatment of older women so as to ensure that all older women have equal access to the private sector and to social services and to ensure their full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

9. Encourages States to embody in appropriate legislation the rights of older persons to equal access to and the use of social services, including care-giving systems and support services, without any discrimination;

10. Urges that the issue of older persons be mainstreamed into the work of the United Nations and national socio-economic programmes and plans, as appropriate;

11. Invites national committees to consider the desirability of drawing up:

(a) A set of principles for a society for all ages;

(b) Practical strategies for a society for all ages aimed at mainstreaming ageing into programmes and policies, while ensuring that the immediate developmental, income-security and health-care needs of older persons are met;

12. Invites national and international development entities, foundations and enterprises to explore ways of improving the access of older persons to credit, training and appropriate technologies for income generation and their participation in family, community and small businesses;

13. Invites Member States, in the five-year review and appraisal of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, to examine the implications of individual and population ageing;

14. Invites the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to continue its information campaign, intensifying, as feasible, its activities in January 1999 in support of countries that were unable to launch observances of the Year on 1 October 1998;

15. Recommends that research agendas for the next decades address the socio-economic adjustments required to move towards a society for all ages, focusing essentially on the lifelong and society-wide immediate and long-term implications of individual and population ageing within varied national contexts, and requests the United Nations programme on ageing to give priority attention to the research needs of developing countries;

16. Invites the United Nations Volunteers and organizations of older persons to evaluate the contributions of senior volunteers in creating societies for all ages, in keeping with the traditions, resources and aspirations of each country;

17. Notes with appreciation the valuable role of the media in the preparations for the Year and in raising awareness of it, and encourages the media, consistent with freedom of expression, to present non-stereotyped images of older persons;

18. Invites those institutions of civil society that are playing a vital role at the local, national and international levels in promoting the Year to focus their observance in 1999 of the International Day of Older Persons, 1 October, on the theme "Late-life potentials and contributions in a new age";

19. Requests States to participate, at an appropriate global policy-making level, in the four plenary meetings which, in resolution 52/80 of 12 December 1997, it decided to devote at its fifty-fourth session to the Year and its follow-up;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to a 1997 Commission for Social Development request [YUN 1997, p. 1229], submitted a report on options for the future review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing [E/CN.5/1998/3], adopted in 1982 at the World Assembly on Ageing and endorsed the same year by the General Assembly in resolution 37/51 [YUN 1982, p. 1186]. In its 62 recommendations, the Plan suggested action in seven areas of concern to ageing individuals—health and nutrition, protection of elderly consumers, housing and environment, family, social welfare, income security and employment, and education. The Plan of Action recommended that international action should focus on data collection and analysis, training and education and research.

The Commission for Social Development, which was responsible for monitoring progress in the Plan's implementation every four years, had sent a questionnaire to States to obtain information for the review, but the participation rate was low. Nevertheless, it was determined that the Plan of Action had been incorporated into national plans by 52 of the 55 countries that reported having plans.

Among options for future monitoring suggested by the Secretary-General, the most radical was the revision of the Plan of Action to adjust it to recent socio-economic and political realities, which would imply embarking on extensive intergovernmental negotiations. A more manageable and immediate approach would be to maintain the Plan's primary focus on the situation of older persons but accompany it by strategies for individual development and multigenerational relationships, and for examining the relationship between development and the ageing of populations. The Secretary-General proposed that the review and appraisal process be carried out every five years beginning in 2005, to be complemented by a report on the world ageing situation in the following year. The process should focus on priority areas to be identified by the Commission. Initiatives to support the review process should include a database of policies and programmes on the Internet, household surveys in selected areas and an ageing-related development index. The report also proposed that the review process should be maintained but adjusted incrementally to make the process more relevant to emerging socio-economic realities.

Commission action. The Commission for Social Development, having considered the Secretary-General's report, in February [E/1998/26 (dec. 36/101)], stressed the need for a more focused and improved method to monitor the implementation of the Plan of Action, as well as the need to introduce a gender perspective into the review and appraisal process. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to explore ways of using the opportunities provided by the reorganization of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) to strengthen the Secretariat's capacity to review the implementation. He was also asked to report on further possible options for improving the reliability, validity and practicability of the current review and appraisal exercise, focusing on priorities identified in preparations for the International Year of Older Persons. DESA was requested to cooperate with UNDP in exploring the feasibility of an ageing-related development index to be included in the Human Development Report. In addition, DESA was invited to draw up proposals on developing an Internet database on public policies and programmes on ageing.

Chapter XII

Refugees and displaced persons

In 1998, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) assisted some 21.4 million persons compared to 22.4 million the previous year. Of the total, approximately 11.4 million were refugees, 5.4 million were internally displaced persons and 1.7 million were repatriated refugees. The rest comprised asylum-seekers, stateless people and various others of concern to UNHCR.

The Security Council issued a statement in September condemning attacks in conflict situations against refugees and other civilians. It also condemned the use of force against UN personnel and personnel of other organizations involved in delivering humanitarian assistance.

More than half of the refugees and persons of concern to UNHCR (6.5 million) were in Africa. African refugees accounted for more than a third of the total number of persons resettled under UNHCR auspices during the year and almost half of the active cases pending decisions by resettlement countries or slated for submission. In West Africa, the crises in Guinea-Bissau and Sierra Leone forced hundreds of thousands to flee their homes; there were some 350,000 refugees in Guinea alone and Liberia, a country emerging from years of war, hosted almost 90,000 Sierra Leonean refugees. In Central Africa, the resurgence of fighting in the Democratic Republic of the Congo provoked new movements of refugees and displaced persons, and made it extremely hazardous for UNHCR and other organizations to continue their operations. Some 260,000 Burundi refugees in the United Republic of Tanzania comprised the largest group of refugees in the region. At the end of the year, armed conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia led to a new spate of displacement and mass expulsions in the Horn of Africa. Some 230,000 refugees were repatriated in Rwanda during 1998, but 625,000 Rwandans remained internally displaced. On the other hand, the successful repatriation of Ethiopian refugees from the Sudan and of Somali refugees from Ethiopia indicated that some of the long-standing problems in certain parts of the region were being resolved.

refugees returned home from Pakistan in spite of the unstable situation, returns from Iran were very low and reintegration activities virtually stopped. In Cambodia, sporadic violence continued to affect the peace process; consequently, some 39,000 Cambodians remained in refugee camps in Thailand. Although not linked to a conflict, a solution to the problem of some 95,000 Bhutanese refugees in Nepal remained elusive.

Nowhere was the relationship between conflict and displacement more evident during the year than in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), where an estimated 200,000 people were displaced. There were also 45,000 displaced in Montenegro and 20,000 refugees in Albania. UNHCR substantially increased its operational capacity in the region during the year.

The UNHCR Executive Committee, in October, considered international solidarity and burden-sharing as its annual theme, including national, regional and international responsibilities for refugees. It recognized that those issues were of direct importance to the satisfactory implementation of refugee protection principles. However, it stressed that access to asylum should not be dependent on burden-sharing arrangements first being in place, since respect for fundamental human rights and humanitarian principles was an obligation of all members of the international community.

In December, the General Assembly urged all States, in conjunction with UNHCR, to cooperate and mobilize resources with a view to reducing the burden borne by States, particularly developing countries, that had received large numbers of asylum-seekers and refugees.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its forty-ninth session (Geneva, 5-9 October) [A/53/12/Add.I], the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme, noting the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter I), recognized that the refugee experience was closely linked to the degree of respect by States for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the related protection principles. It underlined the utmost significance to refugee protection of the institution of asylum and welcomed the fact that many States continued to grant asylum to refugees. However, it deplored the numerous and serious breaches of international law and established principles and standards. In a multi-part conclusion on international protection, the Committee addressed issues of family unity, composite flows and facilitation of return, detention of asylum-seekers and durable solutions for refugees.

As a framework for discussion of its annual theme—international solidarity and burden-sharing in all its aspects: national, regional and international responsibilities for refugees—the Committee had before it a thematic paper prepared by the High Commissioner [A/AC.96/904], which outlined the legal and normative basis for international solidarity and burden-sharing in providing protection, assistance and durable solutions for refugee and returnee populations, and in averting future refugee outflows. It described various economic, environmental, social, political and security issues involved, and reviewed previous arrangements for international solidarity and burden-sharing in specific refugee situations. The paper also examined ways to strengthen international solidarity and burden-sharing, focusing on national, regional and international responsibilities, and the need for cooperative partnerships.

In her opening statement to the Committee, the High Commissioner stated that the pattern of grave human displacement crises over the past year differed from the humanitarian catastrophes of the early 1990s; there were now scattered emergencies, smaller in size and limited in visibility, which had required UNHCR to reinforce its field presence many times, by deploying up to 100 staff on emergency missions. Not only was the increase in the number of conflicts causing more displacement but it was also causing displacement to become more complex, which had serious consequences for humanitarian work. At the same time, the High Commissioner was concerned about decreased and delayed contributions to UNHCR, which resulted in reduced programmes and had a considerable impact on human resource management. Regarding the change management process, known as Project Delphi, the High Commissioner singled out the further development of the Operations Management System, a tool that would soon enable UNHCR to plan, budget, implement, monitor and evaluate all projects more comprehensively and rationally.

By decision 1998/294 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the High Commissioner's report for 1997/98 [A/53/12].

Coordination of humanitarian assistance

In 1998, the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs became the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), with a renewed focus on its core functions of coordination, policy development and advocacy (see PART THREE, Chapter III). During the year, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC), the Executive Committee on Humanitarian Affairs and the Executive Committee on Peace and Security were all strengthened as mechanisms for coordination. In July, UNHCR participated in the first humanitarian segment of the Economic and Social Council, which proved a successful step in bringing together the intergovernmental and inter-agency processes.

UNHCR reported that the IASC mechanism became more effective through increased informal consultations on issues such as humanitarian coordination arrangements and plans of action concerning specific complex emergencies.

During the year, UNHCR concluded global cooperation agreements with the Andean Commission of Jurists and the Inter-American Institute of Human Rights. In addition, high-level meetings were held to review implementation of cooperation agreements with key operational partners, including the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), the International Organization for Migration (IOM), the World Food Programme (WFP) and the World Bank. Although UNHCR and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had not signed a global cooperation agreement, annual high-level meetings were held to review common concerns and exchange views. Memoranda of understanding were reached with the World Bank and the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) to strengthen ongoing collaboration and establish operational and practical modalities of cooperation.

Evaluation of UNHCR

UNHCR inspection and evaluation activities were outlined in a July report [A/AC.96/902] to the Executive Committee. The UNHCR Oversight Committee had met five times since its establishment in 1997 to ensure effective review and follow-up of oversight reports, including audit reports.

Since the inception of the inspection function in UNHCR in 1995, 25 inspection missions had been carried out in 60 countries. During the period under review, inspections were undertaken in the Great Lakes region of Africa (Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania) and Bosnia and Herzegovina; additional inspections were planned in 1998 for other countries of the former Yugoslavia.

The UNHCR Executive Committee, in a decision on a number of administrative and financial matters [A/53/127Add.1], took note of the report on inspection and evaluation activities.

Relations with NGOs

During 1998, UNHCR entered into project agreements with 506 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to implement operational activities with refugee and other populations of concern to UNHCR. UNHCR continued to promote the UNHCR/NGO Partnership in Action (PARinAC) process [YUN 1993, p. 1072], aimed at enhancing the cooperation and coordination of activities in favour of refugees, including meetings on specific issues and UNHCR/NGO consultations prior to Executive Committee sessions. Those consultations were extended to three days in 1998, and were attended by approximately 150 NGOs.

During the year, three regional PARinAC meetings took place in Ethiopia, Ghana and Japan, at which UNHCR/NGO regional recommendations for joint action were drawn up. The meetings also conducted training in either international protection or people-oriented planning. Towards the end of 1998, UNHCR launched a PARinAC in the year 2000 plan to review progress since the 1994 PARinAC Global Conference [YUN 1994, p. 1217], and to refocus and revitalize PARinAC in the light of the changed environment in which humanitarian action was conducted. In addition, the joint UNHCR/NGO Working Group drafting a framework agreement on operational partnership met in 1998 to finalize the draft agreement, which was to be launched in 1999.

Throughout 1998, the participation of NGOs as observers in meetings of the Standing Committee of the UNHCR Executive Committee followed the procedure outlined in the June 1997 Standing Committee decision on NGO observer participation [YUN 1997, p. 1233]. During the year, NGOs made nine joint interventions.

In an October decision [A/53/127Add.1] on observer participation, the Executive Committee requested the Standing Committee to review the arrangements for NGO participation at its first meeting in 1999. At an extraordinary meeting on 8 December, the Standing Committee decided to extend NGO observer participation through 1999 and 2000 [A/AC.96/912].

During the year, some 350 NGO staff members worldwide benefited from UNHCR-sponsored training in protection, emergency management, programme management, people-oriented planning, food aid and registration, nutrition, logistics, security awareness, environment and resettlement.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/620], adopted resolution 53/125 without vote [agenda item 105].

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of her Office and the report and conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its forty-ninth session,

Recalling its resolution 52/103 of 12 December 1997,

Commending the High Commissioner and her staff for the competent, courageous and dedicated manner in which they discharge their responsibilities, paying tribute to those staff members whose lives have been endangered in the course of their duties, and deploring the injuries and deaths of staff members as a consequence of generalized as well as targeted violence,

1. Endorses the report and conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the work of its forty-ninth session;

2. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental importance and the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the function of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of providing international protection to refugees and seeking permanent solutions to the problem of refugees;

3. Reaffirms the fundamental importance of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, in particular their implementation in a manner fully compatible with the object and purpose of those instruments, notes with satisfaction that one hundred and thirty-six States are now parties to one or both instruments, and welcomes in this regard the decision by the High Commissioner actively to promote accessions to the Convention and the Protocol;

4. Notes that the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is being commemorated in 1998, and calls upon all States to reaffirm their commitment to the Declaration as a fundamental step towards protection for everyone;

5. Reaffirms that, as set out in article 14 of the Declaration, everyone has the right to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution, and calls upon all States to refrain from taking measures that jeopardize the institution of asylum, in particular by returning or expelling refugees or asylum-seekers contrary to international standards;

6. Emphasizes that refugee protection is primarily the responsibility of States, whose full and effective cooperation, action and political resolve are required to enable the Office of the High Commissioner to fulfil its mandated functions;

7. Stresses the importance of international solidarity and burden-sharing in reinforcing the international protection of refugees, and urges all States and relevant non-governmental and other organizations, in conjunction with the Office of the High Commissioner, to cooperate and mobilize resources until durable solutions are found, with a view to reducing the burden borne by States, particularly developing countries, that have received large numbers of asylum-seekers and refugees;

8. Condemns all acts that pose a threat to the personal security and well-being of refugees and asylum-seekers, such as refoulement, unlawful expulsion and physical attacks, and calls upon all States of refuge, in cooperation with international organizations where appropriate, to take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection, including the humane treatment of asylum-seekers;

9. Urges States to uphold the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, inter alia, through effective measures to prevent the infiltration of armed elements, to identify and separate any such armed elements from refugee populations, to settle refugees in secure locations and to afford to the Office of the High Commissioner and other appropriate humanitarian organizations prompt, unhindered and safe access to asylum-seekers, refugees and other persons of concern;

10. Calls upon States and all concerned parties to continue to cooperate closely with the staff of the Office of the High Commissioner and other humanitarian personnel in performing the functions required under their mandates, to take all possible measures to safeguard their physical security and property, to investigate fully any crime committed against them, to bring to justice persons responsible for such crimes and to facilitate the discharge of the mandated functions of the Office of the High Commissioner as well as of other humanitarian organizations;

11. Urges all States and relevant organizations to support the High Commissioner's search for durable solutions to refugee problems, including voluntary repatriation, integration in the country of asylum and re-settlement in a third country, as appropriate, reaffirms that voluntary repatriation is the preferred solution to refugee problems, and calls upon countries of origin, countries of asylum, the Office of the High Commissioner and the international community as a whole to do everything possible to enable refugees to exercise their right to return home in safety and with dignity;

12. Calls upon all States to promote conditions conducive to the voluntary repatriation of refugees in safety and with dignity, including conditions furthering reconciliation and long-term development in countries of return, and to support the sustainable reintegration of returnees by providing countries of origin with necessary rehabilitation and development assistance in conjunction, as appropriate, with the Office of the High Commissioner and relevant development agencies, and also urges the Office of the High Commissioner to strengthen its cooperation and coordination with relevant entities, including international financial institutions and non-governmental organizations;

13. Reiterates the right of all persons to return to their country of origin, emphasizes in this regard the obligation of all States to accept the return of their nationals, calls upon all States to facilitate the return of their nationals who have sought asylum and have been determined not to be in need of international protection, and affirms the need for the return of persons to be undertaken in a humane manner and with full respect for their human rights and dignity, irrespective of the status of the persons concerned;

14. Acknowledges the desirability of comprehensive approaches by the international community, including comprehensive regional approaches, to the problems of refugees and displaced persons, and notes in this regard that capacity-building in countries of origin and countries of asylum can play an important role in addressing the root causes of refugee flows, in strengthening emergency preparedness and response and in providing effective protection and achieving durable solutions;

15. Urges States, in cooperation with the Office of the High Commissioner and other relevant organizations, to explore and support fully capacity-building initiatives as part of a comprehensive approach to addressing refugee issues, and to take necessary measures to promote sustainable development and to ensure the success of capacity-building activities, including those which strengthen legal and judicial institutions, strengthen civil society and promote the observance of human rights, the rule of law and accountability, which enhance the capacity of States to fulfil their responsibilities in respect of persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner;

16. Notes the relevance of the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, reaffirms its support for the role of the Office of the High Commissioner in providing humanitarian assistance and protection to internally displaced persons, on the basis of specific requests from the Secretary-General or the competent organs of the United Nations and with the consent of the State concerned, taking into account the complementarities of the mandates and expertise of other relevant organizations, and emphasizes that activities on behalf of internally displaced persons must not undermine the institution of asylum;

17. Calls upon States to adopt an approach that is sensitive to gender-related concerns and to ensure that women whose claims to refugee status are based upon a well-founded fear of persecution for reasons enumerated in the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol, including persecution through sexual violence or other gender-related persecution, are recognized as refugees, and encourages the Office of the High Commissioner to continue and to strengthen its efforts for the protection of refugee women;

18. Urges States and relevant parties to respect and observe principles of international human rights, humanitarian and refugee law that are of particular relevance to safeguarding the rights of child and adolescent refugees, notes the particular vulnerability of refugee children to being forcibly exposed to the risks of injury, exploitation and death, particularly in the context of armed conflict, and to abduction with a view to forcing participation in military activities, and urges all States and concerned parties to take all possible measures to protect child and adolescent refugees, including, in particular, from all forms of violence, exploitation and abuse, and to prevent their separation from their families;

19. Notes that 1999 has been declared the International Year of Older Persons, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to make renewed efforts to ensure that the rights, needs and dignity of elderly refugees are fully respected and addressed through appropriate programme activities;

20. Recalls paragraphs 14 to 16 of its resolution 50/152 of 21 December 1995, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue her activities on behalf of stateless persons;

21. Calls upon all Governments and other donors to demonstrate their international solidarity and burden-sharing with countries of asylum through efforts aimed at continuing to alleviate the burden borne by States, in particular developing countries, countries with economies in transition and countries with limited resources that, owing to their location, host large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, to contribute to the programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner and, taking into account the effects on countries of asylum of the increasing requirements of large refugee populations and the need to widen the donor base and to achieve greater burden-sharing among donors, to assist the High Commissioner in securing additional and timely income from traditional governmental sources, other Governments and the private sector in order to ensure that the needs of refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the Office of the High Commissioner are fully met.

Enlargement of the Executive Committee

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 14 October 1997 [E/1998/3], Mozambique transmitted to the Secretary-General its candidature for full membership of the UNHCR Executive Committee.

On 7 May 1998, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/211, took note of that request and recommended that the General Assembly take a decision at its fifty-third (1998) session on the question of increasing the membership of the Executive Committee from 53 to 54 States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/620], adopted resolution 53/121 without vote [agenda item 105].

Enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council decision 1998/211 of 7 May 1998 concerning the enlargement of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Taking note also of the request regarding the enlargement of the Executive Committee, contained in the note verbale dated 14 October 1997 from the Permanent Mission of Mozambique to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the accession of the Republic of Mozambique to the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees and its ratification of the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969,

1. Decides to increase the number of members of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees from fifty-three to fifty-four States;

2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to elect the additional member at its organizational session for 1999.

In December, the Economic and Social Council had before it a 13 August note verbale [E/1998/97] from Cote d'Ivoire to the Secretary-General, requesting admission to membership of the Executive Committee and a draft decision [E/1998/L.53] on enlargement of the Committee. By decision 1998/302 of 16 December, the Council postponed consideration of the two documents to its organizational session for 1999.

Financial and administrative questions

For 1998, UNHCR's initial budget (covering both General and Special Programmes) was $1.1 billion [A/54/12], representing a further downsizing of operations compared with 1996 ($1.4 billion) and 1997 ($1.2 billion). Donors contributed some $769 million, compared with totals of $969 million in 1996 and $806 million in 1997. The funding of General Programmes reached $327 million in 1998 compared with $346 million in 1996 and $320 million in 1997. Consequently, the Office was obliged to exercise restraint in its financial management, including self-imposed limitations on use of the Voluntary Repatriation Fund, the Emergency Fund and the Programme Reserve. In October, the Executive Committee adopted a reduced 1998 General Programmes budget of $429 million.

Several appeals were launched during 1998 for Special Programmes, most in conjunction with OCHA. To facilitate resource mobilization, those appeals were consolidated into a 1998 Global Appeal, published in April, which received $441 million in funding during the year. While a small number of Special Programmes were fully funded, most received considerably less than the appeal budget, especially repatriation/rehabilitation programmes in West Africa, Rwanda, the Great Lakes region of Africa and Afghanistan.

Consequently, operating budgets for Special Programmes were set at $551 million.

Regional apportionments of UNHCR expenditures in 1998 were as follows: Africa, $328.5 million; Asia and the Pacific, $51.3 million; Europe (including the countries of the former Yugoslavia), $239.6 million; the Americas, $30.4 million; Central and South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East, $76.8 million.

For 1999, UNHCR budgetary requirements were projected at $914 million, including an approved General Programmes target of $413 million.

In October [A/53/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee approved the revised 1998 General Programmes budget amounting to $428,973,500. It also approved a 1999 General Programmes budget of $413 million, which included country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets amounting to $334.6 million, a Programme Reserve of $33.4 million (representing 10 per cent of programme activities), $25 million for the Emergency Fund and $20 million for the Voluntary Repatriation Fund. The Committee authorized the High Commissioner to make adjustments in project, country/area programmes, other programmes and the headquarters budgets as might be required by changes affecting refugee/returnee programmes. The High Commissioner was asked to respond flexibly and efficiently to the needs indicated under the 1999 General and Special Programmes, which were estimated at $842.2 million.

Accounts (1997)

The audited financial statements on voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ending 31 December 1997 [A/53/5/Add.5] showed total expenditures of $974.3 million and total income of $820.1 million, with a reserve balance of $190.6 million. The report of the Board of Auditors included recommendations to be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. The Board's findings [A/AC.96/901] were also communicated to UNHCR, which provided explanations and answers to the Board's queries. Among its recommendations on financial management, the Board said that UNHCR should review the method of recognition of income so that its accounting policies and practices followed the United Nations System Accounting Standards; focus attention on timely review and cancellation of obligations no longer required; and ensure timely submission of sub-project monitoring reports and that funds were disbursed to implementing partners only when required. Regarding programme management, the Board recommended that UNHCR monitor more closely the timing of project delivery; ensure that adequate sex/age disaggregate statistics were collected and used in formulating programmes for women; and encourage field offices to respond to the High Commissioner's request so that UNHCR could make a full assessment of the work required and funds needed to implement the report of the expert study on refugee children by Graça Machel (Mozambique) [YUN 1996, p. 663].

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in September [A/AC.96/900/Add.3], having considered an overview of UNHCR's activities between 1997 and 1999 [A/AC.96/900 & Add.1], made a number of recommendations regarding oversight and audit issues; resources; programme delivery and administrative support; Project Delphi; information technology; training; and budget structure. Concerning the 1997 accounts of UNHCR-administered voluntary funds, ACABQ, in December [A/AC.96/901/Add.2], recommended that UNHCR operations should be audited biennially and that the High Commissioner should avoid classifying UNHCR programmes in the budget as special and general. Instead, there would be a system of annual and supplementary programmes.

In its general decision on programme, administrative and financial matters [A/53/12/Add.1], the Executive Committee requested that it be kept informed of measures taken to address the ACABQ and Board of Auditors recommendations. In addition, it asked UNHCR to consult with the Board of Auditors on the implications of submitting biennial audit reports and to convene further consultations with member States on the issues raised by ACABQ regarding a new budget structure, including the question of a single operational reserve. UNHCR was also urged to maintain its efforts to ensure that audit certificates were submitted by all implementing partners within the stipulated time frame.

Standing Committee

The Standing Committee held four meetings in 1998 (2-3 February [A/AC.96/896]; 28-29 April [A/AC.96/897]; 23-25 June [A/AC.96/905]; 8-9 September and 2 October [A/AC.96/909]). It reviewed UNHCR programmes and activities in different regions; new approaches to reintegration; international protection issues; UNHCR's position within the UN system-wide reform process; and management and financial matters. Decisions were adopted on programme and funding projections, the overhead costs of international NGO partners, and the annual theme for the 1998 session of the Executive Committee—international solidarity and burden-sharing in all its aspects:

In October [A/53/12/Add.I], the Executive Committee decided to include a number of issues in the 1999 programme of work of its Standing Committee and requested UNHCR to include in its documentation on each item the relevant recommendations of the Board of Auditors and ACABQ, as well as the steps taken to implement those recommendations and related Executive Committee decisions and conclusions. The issues included were: international protection; protection/programme policy; programme and funding; management, financial and human resources; oversight; coordination; and governance.

Safety of staff

In a decision on staff security adopted at its October session [A/53/12/Add.I], the Executive Committee expressed concern for the continued captivity of Vincent Cochetel, head of the UNHCR Office in the northern Caucasus, and called on all those who might be in a position to facilitate his release to make every effort to that end.

Refugee protection and assistance

Protection issues

In response to a 1997 statement issued by the Security Council President [YUN 1997, p. 1238], the Secretary-General issued a September 1998 report on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations [S/1998/883]. The report focused on four specific issues raised in the presidential statement: the compliance of State and non-State actors with the provisions of international law; access of refugees, displaced persons and vulnerable populations in conflict situations to international protection and assistance; the safety and security of personnel of United Nations and humanitarian organizations; and the role of the Security Council in humanitarian operations.

Among his recommendations, the Secretary-General called on Member States to comply with international laws in relation to humanitarian assistance and refugees and ensure prosecution of violators, whether State or non-State actors. He stated that solidarity and burden-sharing were important in encouraging States to respect humanitarian principles and obligations. He called on the Council to consider developing a range of options to create a secure environment for civilians endangered by conflict and for the delivery of humanitarian assistance in conflict situations. When the Council decided to deploy UN troops or other security forces in support of humanitarian operations, it was of critical importance that they be given clear, realistic and appropriate mandates, that they be deployed in a timely manner and that they be adequately resourced and supported, the Secretary-General stated.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 September [meetings 3932 & 3933], the Security Council, following consultations among its members, authorized its President to make the following statement [S/PRST/1998/30] on its behalf:

The Security Council recalls the statement by its President of 19 June 1997 concerning protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations.

The Council welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations and notes the recommendations contained therein.

The Council notes that several of the recommendations contained in the report coincide with recommendations made in the report entitled "The causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa".

The Council reaffirms the importance of pursuing a coordinated and comprehensive approach, in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and principles and provisions of international law, in improving protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations.

The Council condemns the attacks or use of force in conflict situations against refugees and other civilians, in violation of the relevant rules of international law, including those of international humanitarian law.

The Council likewise condemns all attacks or use of force against United Nations and other personnel associated with United Nations operations, as well as personnel of humanitarian organizations, in violation of international law, including international humanitarian law. In this context, the Council recalls the statement by its President of 12 March 1997, as well as other relevant statements and decisions. It also recalls the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1994.

The Council affirms its intention to review thoroughly and promptly the recommendations of the Secretary-General with a view to taking steps consistent with its responsibilities under the Charter and, in this context, notes the views expressed in the debate on the matter at its 3932nd meeting on 29 September 1998.

Executive Committee action. The High Commissioner submitted to the Executive Committee a July note [A/AC.96/898], which reviewed developments in refugee protection, linking them to the related human rights standards. She stated that the root causes of refugee displacement were inextricably linked to conflict, persecution and the denial of human rights. The right to seek and enjoy asylum from persecution had been repeatedly affirmed as being of critical importance to refugee protection. Asylum served the dual purpose of providing a framework for the international protection of persons whose safety was at risk, while ensuring that appropriate lasting solutions—voluntary repatriation, local integration or resettlement—could be implemented. Among the aspects of the right of asylum that remained of concern or had come into particular focus were: the risks in flight; the principle of non-refoulement; access to procedures for determining refugees' claims; standards of treatment; physical security; non-discrimination; freedom of movement; family unity; the treatment of women and children; and the problem of statelessness.

The High Commissioner stated that human rights standards helped to define the conditions for safe and dignified voluntary repatriation and reintegration of refugees into their country of origin. Corresponding to the refugee's right to return was the obligation of the State to accept back its citizens and the returnee's right to nationality. The challenge was to find ways to close, or at least narrow, the gap between the theory of basic human rights and the ability of many people, including refugees, to enjoy those rights. UNHCR had an integral role to play where violations of basic rights led to displacement or impeded sustainable return. The Office would continue its efforts to achieve better integration of UN human rights work into refugee protection.

The Executive Committee, in an October conclusion [A/53/12/Add.1], recognized that the refugee experience was closely linked to the degree of respect by States for human rights; encouraged UNHCR to strengthen further its collaboration with the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and other relevant bodies, with a view to strengthening refugee protection; reaffirmed the importance of the right to a nationality; and called on States to adopt measures to prevent or reduce the incidence of statelessness. The Committee underlined the utmost significance to refugee protection of the institution of asylum, recognized that international solidarity and burden-sharing were of direct importance to the satisfactory implementation of refugee protection principles and noted with concern reports of an increasing trend towards the misuse or abuse of national refugee status determination procedures. It also addressed issues related to maintaining family unity; composite flows and facilitation of return; detention of asylum-seekers; and the achievement of durable solutions for refugees.

In a related decision, the Committee affirmed that the informal consultations on measures to ensure international protection for all who needed it had proved to be a valuable forum for constructive discussion, in an open manner, of complex protection issues. UNHCR was asked, in consultation with States, to continue to organize such consultations on protection issues of current concern.

International instruments

In 1998, Turkmenistan acceded to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees [YUN 1951, p. 520] and its 1967 Protocol [YUN 1967, p. 477], bringing the number of States party to one or both instruments to 132. In October, UNHCR launched a two-year global campaign to promote States' accession to the 1951 Convention and its Protocol, as well as the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons [YUN 1954, p. 416] and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness [YUN 1961, p. 533].

Promotional activities

Through its promotional activities, UNHCR sought to raise public awareness and strengthen knowledge and understanding of refugee issues within the broader context of forced displacement in its different forms. In 1998, those activities were directed at fostering the effective implementation of international legal standards on behalf of refugees, returnees and other persons of concern to UNHCR. Activities were undertaken to identify and strengthen the linkages between refugee law, human rights law and international humanitarian law so that each could be better used for the protection of refugees. During the year, UNHCR increased regional promotional activities, including monitoring of and collaboration with the human rights components of regional bodies. It also continued to monitor the work of the six UN treaty bodies and the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

Assistance measures

There was relative stability in 1998 in terms of the global numbers of refugees and persons of concern to UNHCR. At the end of the year, the global figure stood at 21.4 million, just over half of whom (11.4 million) were refugees, while the remainder comprised internally displaced persons, returnees, asylum-seekers and stateless people. Although there were no massive refugee movements in 1998, UNHCR was nevertheless confronted with a cascade of emergencies that were relatively small in size and visibility, but no less traumatic for the refugees and displaced persons concerned. Voluntary repatriation—the preferred solution for the vast majority of refugee situations—was of limited scope in 1998. While successful results were achieved in a number of situations, in others continued violence or a failure of political negotiations disrupted plans for a return, leading, in extreme cases, to renewed outflows. In response, UNHCR intensified activities under its protection mandate and took steps to ensure a more integrated approach to all its programmes, associating protection more closely with assistance in terms of strategies, objectives and assessment of outputs. The Office encouraged regional initiatives, undertook wide-ranging consultations with other international players at all levels, and engaged in a more intensive dialogue with international development financial actors on the "reintegration gap", as well as the broader issue of post-conflict reconstruction. UNHCR also pursued a number of change management initiatives to strengthen its capacity to respond to the many challenges presented during the year.

UNHCR assistance activities were grouped under two broad categories: General Programmes (including the Programme Reserve, the Voluntary Repatriation Fund and the Emergency Fund) and Special Programmes, funded through appeals launched by the Secretary-General or through consolidated inter-agency appeals. In 1998, UNHCR received some $769 million in voluntary contributions. The types of assistance offered through UNHCR programmes included: emergency preparedness, response and assistance; care and maintenance; voluntary repatriation; local settlement; and resettlement.

The UNHCR Emergency Preparedness and Response Section, the focal point for both emergency preparedness and response, dispatched some 30 Emergency Response Teams to Albania, Cambodia, the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guinea, Liberia, Nicaragua, Thailand, the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and other parts of the former Yugoslavia. Emergency Management Training Programme (EMTP) workshops, an important element of emergency preparedness, were held in China and South Africa. A country-specific EMTP was organized in Malaysia, also covering Singapore. In 1998, total expenditure on emergency assistance amounted to $27.1 million, of which $6.6 million was under General Programmes and $20.5 million under Special Programmes.

Care and maintenance programmes provided essential basic services to refugee populations worldwide, pending implementation of more durable solutions. Those activities included: the provision of food; household goods and cooking/heating materials; shelter; construction and maintenance of drinking-water sources; waste management and pest control; construction and operation of health and education facilities; and, occasionally, support for economic activities through small-business grants or loans. The majority of those programmes in 1998 were implemented in Africa (Ethiopia, Great Lakes region, Guinea, Kenya), Central Asia (Central Asian republics, Pakistan) and the Balkans (former Yugoslavia, including the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia).

During 1998, some 59 per cent of General Programmes expenditure ($206.4 million) was devoted to care and maintenance activities, while the amount spent under Special Programmes was $99.5 million.

Although on a lesser scale than originally planned, a number of voluntary repatriation movements took place in 1998. The most significant, despite the precarious situation, were in West Africa, notably to Liberia. Repatriation and reintegration programmes were also implemented for refugees returning to Afghanistan and Bosnia and Herzegovina. Worldwide, close to 950,000 refugees repatriated in 1998, over 400,000 of whom were assisted by UNHCR. During the year, UNHCR spent over $253 million on repatriation and reintegration programmes.

Opportunities for local settlement continued to be very limited in 1998. The main obstacle to rural settlement continued to be the unwillingness of Governments to provide sufficient land because of the growing pressure on land and resources in many countries. However, a significant settlement programme in Uganda received renewed impetus when new strategies were announced for the integration of some 145,000 Sudanese refugees in local settlements in north-west Uganda. Other local settlement programmes in Africa were being implemented in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia and Zambia. A total of $167.6 million was spent on local settlement programmes during the year.

As an important element of refugee protection and the attainment of durable solutions, resettlement continued to help ensure individual physical safety, while reinforcing asylum in host countries. In 1998, 26,600 refugees were resettled under UNHCR auspices. Some 41 per cent of the resettlement cases were from Africa, with most of the rest from the Middle East and the former Yugoslavia. UNHCR expenditure on those activities totalled $4.5 million.

Refugees and the environment

Environmental Guidelines, promulgated by UNHCR in June 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1108], continued to be the principal policy framework for integrating sound environmental management practices into UNHCR activities. In 1998, UNHCR placed renewed emphasis on how the guidelines could be implemented in field operations. A number of large, integrated projects continued in several countries, including Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. Additional projects began in Afghanistan and Pakistan. The projects focused on such matters as environmental planning; use of the geographical information system, the global positioning system and satellite images in environmental monitoring; demarcation of protected areas; guided firewood harvesting; promotion of energy-efficient cooking; erosion control; tree planting; agroforestry; and environmental education and awareness raising. Model projects were implemented in Djibouti (gender and environment), Rwanda (paper poles for shelter construction) and Zimbabwe (soil and agroforestry conservation). An evaluation of domestic energy devices used in refugee operations also took place during the year.

Refugee women

In 1998, UNHCR continued to promote activities in relation to its four areas of concern under the Beijing Platform for Action, adopted at the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. Those four areas were: women and armed conflict; violence against women; human rights of women; and the girl child. The promotion of gender equality for refugee women was another UNHCR goal, and mainstreaming a gender perspective had become an integral part of the formulation of country programme objectives.

Action to combat violence against refugee women followed a two-pronged approach, comprising both prevention, through information, education and communication campaigns, and assistance to victims of violence through protection, social, medical and legal measures. UNHCR was a leading participant in inter-agency workshops on women in conflict prevention and peace-building in Africa, the Americas and the Caucasus. Efforts also continued to encourage asylum countries to recognize gender-based persecution as grounds for claiming asylum and to ensure that asylum procedures were sufficiently gender-sensitive.

Refugee children

At its thirteenth meeting (8-9 September and 2 October) [A/AC.96/909], the Standing Committee considered a UNHCR progress report on refugee children and adolescents, which described follow-up to the 1997 evaluation of UNHCR efforts on behalf of children and adolescents and the implementation of the 1996 study on the impact of armed conflict on children, the "Machel study" [YUN 1996, p. 663]. The Committee was addressed by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, Olara Otunnu (Cote d'Ivoire), who outlined three primary courses of action on behalf of refugee children: advocacy, concrete initiatives in the midst of conflict, and making protection of children in armed conflict a central concern at all levels. In his annual report to the General Assembly [A/53/482], the Special Representative agreed to work closely with UNHCR to promote the protection of refugee and internally displaced children. He expressed concern for the precarious situation of displaced populations, noting that children constituted well over half of the 24 million refugees or internally displaced people worldwide (see also PART TWO, Chapter II).

On 9 December, the situation of refugee and internally displaced children was addressed by the General Assembly in resolution 53/128 on the rights of the child (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/105 [YUN 1997, p. 1242], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/325] on action taken by the United Nations and other relevant bodies to assist unaccompanied refugee minors—persons under 18 years of age or the legal age of majority, separated from both parents and not being cared for by a guardian or other adult legally responsible for them. The report reviewed inter-agency cooperation in the area; some issues of concern, including regional issues, the girl child and unaccompanied children seeking asylum; and new initiatives developed in 1997 on behalf of unaccompanied refugee minors. The Secretary-General concluded that, despite great strides in improving inter-agency efforts on behalf of unaccompanied minors, children trapped in war zones such as Guinea-Bissau, Kosovo and Sierra Leone were being involuntarily separated from their families on a daily basis.

Regarding specific initiatives and issues of concern, he reported that the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNHCR, ICRC and other organizations were collaborating to trace unaccompanied children and reunite them with their families. That effort focused principally on finding the families of more than 26,000 children identified as unaccompanied after the mass return of Rwandans from the Congo in late 1996. By April 1998, more than 18,000 of the children had been reunited with their families, while some 6,000 remained in institutions in their country of origin, awaiting reunification. During the year, UN agencies and other concerned parties pressed for an end to the systematic abduction of children from northern Uganda by members of an armed group, the Lord's Resistance Army, and for the immediate return of the estimated 2,000 children still held captive by that group in its base camps in southern Sudan. UN agencies and NGOs also collaborated on finding solutions for unaccompanied minors among the residents of camps for internally displaced people in the Sudan.

Regarding inter-agency cooperation, the Secretary-General noted that a 1996 memorandum of understanding between UNHCR and UNICEF accorded primary responsibility for the welfare of refugee children to UNHCR, while UNICEF took the lead role for children in their country of origin. Over the past few years, UNHCR, UNICEF and other organizations had established a close working relationship with regard to unaccompanied minors, including establishment of technical guidelines at the global level, and field-level coordination to provide care and services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/620], adopted resolution 53/122 without vote [agenda item 105].

Assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/172 of 23 December 1994, 50/150 of 21 December 1995, 51/73 of 12 December 1996 and 52/105 of 12 December 1997,

Aware of the fact that the majority of refugees are children and women,

Bearing in mind that unaccompanied refugee minors are among the most vulnerable refugees and the most at risk of neglect, violence, forced military recruitment, sexual assault and other abuses and therefore require special assistance and care,

Mindful of the fact that the ultimate solution to the plight of unaccompanied minors is their return to and reunification with their families,

Noting the revised Guidelines on Refugee Children issued by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in May 1994 and the development of an emergency kit to facilitate coordination and to enhance the quality of responses to the needs of unaccompanied minors by the Office of the High Commissioner, the United Nations Children's Fund and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the Office of the High Commissioner and the United Nations Children's Fund in the identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors, and welcoming their efforts in reunifying family members of refugees,

Welcoming the efforts exerted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for the reunification of family members of refugees,

Noting the efforts of the High Commissioner to ensure the protection of and assistance to refugees, including children and unaccompanied minors, and noting that further efforts need to be exerted to this effect,

Recalling the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Also takes note of the report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict;
3. Expresses its deep concern at the continued plight of unaccompanied refugee minors, and emphasizes once again the urgent need for their early identification and for timely, detailed and accurate information on their number and whereabouts;
4. Expresses the hope once again that adequate resources will be provided for programmes of identification and tracing of unaccompanied refugee minors;
5. Calls upon the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, in cooperation with other relevant United Nations bodies, to incorporate into its programmes policies that aim at preventing refugee family separation, conscious of the importance of family unity;
6. Calls upon all Governments, the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to exert the maximum effort to assist and protect refugee minors and to expedite the return to and reunification with their families of unaccompanied refugee minors;
7. Urges the Office of the High Commissioner, all United Nations organizations, other international organizations and non-governmental organizations concerned to take appropriate steps to mobilize resources commensurate with the needs and interests of unaccompanied refugee minors and for their reunification with their families;
8. Calls upon all States and other parties to armed conflict to respect international humanitarian law, and, in this regard, calls upon States parties to respect fully the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and related instruments, while bearing in mind resolution 2 adopted at the twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, held at Geneva in December 1995, and to respect the provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which accord children affected by armed conflict special protection and treatment;
9. Condemns all acts of exploitation of unaccompanied refugee minors, including their use as soldiers or human shields in armed conflict and their forced recruitment into military forces, and any other acts that endanger their safety and personal security;

10. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children's Fund, other United Nations organizations and other international organizations to mobilize adequate assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors in the areas of relief, education, health and psychological rehabilitation;

11. Encourages the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict in his efforts to raise awareness worldwide and to mobilize official and public opinion for the protection of children affected by armed conflict, including refugee minors;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution and to give special attention to the girl-child refugee in his report.

Regional activities

Africa

In a September report on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa [A/537328], prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 52/101 [YUN 1997, p. 1244], the Secretary-General stated that, according to UNHCR estimates, at the beginning of 1998, Africa hosted some 3.5 million refugees, 1.7 million internally displaced persons and 2.1 million returnees in the early stages of reintegration.

In the Great Lakes region, the United Nations continued to be confronted by the challenges of reintegrating into Burundi and Rwanda the mass of refugees repatriated during 1996 and 1997 from the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the United Republic of Tanzania (see below). In West Africa, Sierra Leone was of major concern, with more than 200,000 refugees, mainly women and children, having sought asylum in Guinea and Liberia since March 1998. The Secretary-General stated that the atrocities suffered by civilian populations at the hands of the Revolutionary United Front (Sierra Leone)/Armed Forces Revolutionary Council rebels could not be overemphasized. However, there were also some positive developments in West Africa, particularly with respect to Liberia, Mali and the Niger. During the year, the repatriation of refugees, mainly of Tuareg origin, to Mali and the Niger was successfully completed, and conditions were created in Liberia for the promotion of repatriation and the return of the internally displaced to their homes.

Despite preoccupying situations in some countries of the Horn of Africa, progress was achieved in repatriation to regions enjoying sustainable peace. The repatriation of Somali refugees from camps in Ethiopia to the north-western part of their country was successful since its resumption at the end of 1997. Following an agreement reached by all parties concerned, the mass organized voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees from the Sudan was completed in May 1998. The Eritrean Government gave its consent to begin preparatory activities for the resumption of the repatriation of Eritrean refugees in the Sudan after the September 1998 rainy season.

Between 1995 and mid-1998, a total of 143,577 Angolan refugees had returned to their home country. However, in mid-1998, implementation of the Lusaka Peace Accord was impeded by the failure of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) to fulfil its obligations. Armed attacks, mainly by UNITA, in most of the provinces led to an overall deterioration of the security situation (see PART ONE, Chapter II). As a result, UNHCR was forced to declare a temporary suspension of repatriation and reintegration programmes with effect from the end of June 1998, and to completely review projections that most of the 160,000 Angolan refugees would have returned home by the end of the year.

Against that background, the United Nations and the international community worked towards phasing out assistance to protracted refugee caseloads by actively promoting voluntary repatriation where the initial reason for flight no longer existed. Post-conflict reintegration and reconstruction challenges in Liberia, Mali, the Niger and Sierra Leone offered the opportunity to ensure an effective interface among humanitarian, development and sustainable peace initiatives.

Together with other UN organizations carrying out refugee assistance and protection activities, UNHCR was involved in a number of joint initiatives. As of mid-1998, WFP, the principal channel for food aid in emergencies for refugees, displaced persons and returnees, had protracted relief operations in Angola, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Sierra Leone, the Sudan, Uganda and Zambia. Further assistance was being provided to refugees, returnees and displaced persons through emergency operations in Ethiopia, the Great Lakes region and Uganda.

UNHCR signed bilateral agreements with the World Bank to collaborate in rehabilitation, reconstruction and reintegration efforts in Africa. Progress was also made in initiating cooperation with IFAD, UNDP and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). UNHCR also continued to cooperate actively with subregional organizations, including the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Intergovernmental Authority on Development and the Southern African Development Community.

Security Council consideration. The Security Council met several times during 1998, including at the ministerial level on 24 September, to consider the situation in Africa (see PART ONE, Chapter II). In an April report to the General Assembly and the Council [A/527871-S/1998/318] on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, the Secretary-General stated that the potential threat to African States posed by the movement of large numbers of refugees when they were mingled with combatants had to be acknowledged. In the Great Lakes region, the movement of large numbers of Rwandan refugees into neighbouring countries had become a destabilizing factor for those countries, as well as for the new Government in Rwanda. The Secretary-General urged the establishment of an international mechanism to assist host Governments in maintaining the security and neutrality of refugee camps and settlements.

Mitigating the social and environmental impact of refugees on host countries was another major concern. In Guinea, which had the highest per capita refugee population in the world (as much as 10 per cent of the population were refugees), the massive refugee presence had devastated forests in some areas and often overstretched the facilities of local communities.

On 19 November, the Council adopted resolution 1208(1998), in which it called on African States further to develop institutions and procedures to implement the provisions of international law relating to the status and treatment of refugees. It also recognized UNHCR's primary responsibility to support African States in their actions towards the full respect and implementation of such law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/620], adopted resolution 53/126 without vote [agenda item 105].

Assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/101 of 12 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the need to improve the security of refugees and to maintain the civilian and humanitarian nature of refugee camps and settlements in accordance with international laws, in particular refugee instruments, as well as human rights instruments and humanitarian laws,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts being expended by countries of asylum in accommodating refugees,

Convinced of the necessity of strengthening the capacity within the United Nations system for the implementation of relief and assistance programmes for refugees, returnees and displaced persons,

Welcoming the ongoing process of voluntary repatriation of refugees in some parts of Africa,

Welcoming also decision CM/Dec.412(LXVIII) on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa, adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its sixty-eighth ordinary session, held at Ouagadougou from 4 to 7 June 1998,

Welcoming further the outcome of the ministerial meeting of the Security Council on the situation in Africa, held on 24 September 1998, and the attention that was given at that meeting to the issue of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa,

Taking note of the memoranda of understanding signed between the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Southern African Development Community in July 1996 on refugees, returnees, displaced persons and undocumented migration in southern Africa and between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Intergovernmental Authority on Development in June 1997 on issues concerning refugees and returnees,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2312(XXII) of 14 December 1967, by which it adopted the Declaration on Territorial Asylum,

Recalling also the Organization of African Unity Convention governing the specific aspects of refugee problems in Africa of 1969 and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Recognizing the need for States to create conditions conducive both to the prevention of flows of refugees and displaced persons, primarily by addressing the root causes, and to solutions, including voluntary repatriation,

Recognizing also the positive outcome of the conflict resolution efforts carried out in the subregion by the Economic Community of West African States, in creating a conducive environment for the voluntary repatriation of refugees and displaced persons,

Emphasizing the urgent need for Governments, especially those of the countries of origin, to address the root causes of the conflicts that precipitate outflows and displacements of refugees,

Bearing in mind that the majority of refugees and displaced persons are women and children,

Noting with great concern that, despite all the efforts deployed so far by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Africa, especially in the West African and Great Lakes regions and in the Horn of Africa, remains precarious,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Notes with concern that the declining socio-economic situation, compounded by political instability, internal strife, human rights violations and natural disasters, has led to increased numbers of refugees and displaced persons in some countries of Africa;

3. Calls upon all States and international organizations, within their mandates, to ensure that the civilian and humanitarian nature of refugee camps is not compromised by the presence or the activities of armed elements;

4. Expresses deep concern at the serious and far-reaching consequences of large numbers of refugees and displaced persons in the receiving countries and the implications for security, long-term socio-economic development and the environment;

5. Expresses concern at instances where the fundamental principle of asylum is jeopardized by unlawful expulsion or refoulement or by threats to the life, physical security, integrity, dignity and well-being of refugees;

6. Expresses its appreciation and strong support for those African Governments and local populations that, in spite of the general deterioration of socio-economic and environmental conditions and overstretched national resources, continue to accept the additional burden imposed upon them by increasing numbers of refugees and displaced persons, in compliance with the relevant principles of asylum;

7. Commends the Governments concerned for their sacrifices in providing assistance and protection to refugees, returnees and internally displaced persons and for their efforts to promote voluntary repatriation in safety and with dignity and other durable solutions;

8. Expresses its gratitude to the international community, and to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in particular, for the humanitarian assistance it has continued to render to refugees and displaced persons and to the countries of asylum;

9. Welcomes the strengthening of cooperation between the Office of the High Commissioner and the Organization of African Unity at all levels, and urges the two organizations, in conjunction with United Nations agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, the international community and the Governments concerned, to increase efforts aimed at facilitating voluntary repatriation in safety and with dignity and at addressing the root causes of the refugee problem and working out modalities for a lasting solution;

10. Reiterates that the Plan of Action adopted by the Regional Conference on Assistance to Refugees, Returnees and Displaced Persons in the Great Lakes Region, held at Bujumbura from 15 to 17 February 1995, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 50/149, continues to be a viable framework for the resolution of the refugee and humanitarian problems in that region;

11. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner and other concerned entities to intensify protection activities by, inter alia, supporting the efforts of African Governments through appropriate capacity-building activities, including training of relevant officers, disseminating information about refugee instruments and principles and providing financial, technical and advisory services to accelerate the enactment or amendment and implementation of legislation relating to refugees;

12. Appeals to Governments, the United Nations, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community to create conditions to facilitate the voluntary return in safety and with dignity and the early rehabilitation and reintegration of refugees;

13. Appeals to the international community to respond positively, in the spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing, to the third-country resettlement requests of African refugees;

14. Commends the Governments of the Great Lakes and West African regions and of the Horn of Africa and the Office of the High Commissioner for their initiatives to promote voluntary repatriation in safety and with dignity within the framework of tripartite agreements;

15. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner, the Organization of African Unity, subregional organizations and all African States to continue to work closely in identifying solutions to all outstanding refugee problems;

16. Encourages the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to cooperate with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, within their respective mandates, in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in emergency humanitarian situations in Africa;

17. Welcomes the ongoing efforts undertaken by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with host Governments, the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and the international community in concentrating on the environment and ecosystems of countries of asylum;

18. Notes with satisfaction the voluntary return of millions of refugees to their homelands following the successful repatriation and reintegration operations carried out by the Office of the High Commissioner, with the cooperation and collaboration of countries hosting refugees and countries of origin, and looks forward to other programmes to assist the voluntary repatriation of all refugees in Africa;

19. Expresses its concern about the long stay of refugees in certain African countries, and calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to keep its programmes under review, in conformity with its mandate in the host countries, taking into account the increasing requirements there;

20. Urges the international community to continue to fund the general refugee programmes of the Office of the High Commissioner, taking into account the substantially increased needs of programmes in Africa;

21. Calls upon Governments, United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations and the international community as a whole to strengthen the emergency response capacity of the United Nations system and, in the context of burden-sharing, to continue to provide needed resources and operational support to refugees and countries of asylum in Africa until a durable solution can be found;

22. Calls upon the international donor community to provide material and financial assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and infrastructure affected by refugees in countries of asylum;

23. Requests all Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to pay particular attention to meeting the special needs of refugee women and children and displaced persons, including those with special protection needs;

24. Calls upon the Office of the High Commissioner to make renewed efforts to ensure that the rights, needs and dignity of elderly refugees are fully respected and addressed through appropriate programme activities;

25. Calls upon the Secretary-General, the Office of the High Commissioner and intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations, in conjunction with States, to increase the capacity for coordination and delivery of humanitarian emergency assistance and disaster relief in respect of asylum, repatriation, rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, including refugees in urban areas;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, taking fully into account the efforts expended by countries of asylum, under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees: questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions", and to present an oral report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999.

Central African countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/169 B [YUN 1997, p. 1246], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/292] on special assistance by UN agencies and other organizations to Central African countries hosting refugees, in particular in the priority areas of women, children, food assistance and the environment. It also described the main activities undertaken in areas where large numbers of refugees had returned to their countries of origin.

During 1998, the UNHCR Great Lakes Operation continued to assist refugees in Burundi, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania; refugees from Burundi, Rwanda and the Congo in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; refugees from Burundi, Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the Congo; and refugees from Burundi, Rwanda, the Congo and the Democratic Republic of the Congo in all other countries in Central, East, West and southern Africa.

In Burundi, some 500,000 people required assistance in camps for the displaced. UNICEF extended health, education and other services for children and vulnerable groups. UNHCR attempted to find the families of unaccompanied minors or placed them with foster families. It also began a reforestation programme in areas formerly hosting Rwandan refugees. WFP provided emergency food assistance to some 175,000 Burundians displaced by the violent hostilities.

In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, WFP provided food to approximately 45,000 beneficiaries, including the internally displaced, vulnerable groups and other population groups severely affected by the insecurity. UNICEF provided emergency health, nutrition, water and sanitation assistance to local affected populations in eastern parts of the country. Assistance was provided to children among refugee populations in acute need, including care and reunification of thousands of unaccompanied minors. The principal focus of infrastructure projects was the reforestation of 2,500 hectares of refugee campsites and affected areas in eastern parts of the country.

UNHCR facilitated the repatriation of Rwandans in the Congo who agreed to return and considered alternative solutions for those not wishing to do so. In collaboration with UNHCR, WFP provided food assistance to 8,000 refugees in the Congo, where UNICEF maintained emergency activities during five months of the war to assist children, women and other vulnerable groups in the sectors of health, nutrition, water and sanitation and psychosocial care for traumatized children.

In Rwanda, the rapid and massive return of people increased dramatically the reintegration and rehabilitation needs of the country. UNICEF focused on quickly expanding essential services—health, nutrition, education and social services—for returning children. Special assistance was extended to unaccompanied, traumatized minors and other children in distress. In collaboration with UNHCR, WFP provided food assistance to 29,000 refugees in Rwanda. WFP food packages also significantly contributed to the overall success of the resettlement, reintegration and reconciliation process in Rwanda. WFP remained a key agency in post-emergency rehabilitation through the implementation of food-for-work schemes. UNHCR environmental activities in Rwanda included the establishment of nursery beds and wood lots for the planting of fast-growing trees to reduce further environmental degradation caused by the large number of returnees.

In the United Republic of Tanzania, WFP, in collaboration with UNHCR, provided food assistance to 410,000 refugees. UNHCR also collaborated with ICRC in tracing the families of some 1,400 unaccompanied minors in camps throughout the country. In response to a growing influx of refugees from Burundi and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, UNICEF established an operational base in Kigoma and worked closely with Tanzanian authorities, UNHCR and other agencies to provide children with emergency health, nutrition, water and sanitation assistance.

Inter-agency cooperation for the region included the launching, in March 1998, of the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Countries of the Great Lakes Region and Central Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 82], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 N [draft:A/53/L.64] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Special assistance to Central and East African countries receiving refugees, returnees and displaced persons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/24 of 2 December 1994 and 52/169 B of 16 December 1997,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned about the ongoing conflicts in the Great Lakes region, which pose a serious threat to regional peace and security, and by the flow of refugees, returnees and other displaced persons as a result of those conflicts,

Bearing in mind that the majority of refugees and displaced persons are women and children,

Deeply concerned about the plight of refugee children, in particular the problem of unaccompanied minors, and emphasizing the need for their protection, well-being and reunification with their families,

Bearing in mind the evident impact of the flow of refugees on the basic infrastructure, the environment and the life and property of local populations in the host countries,

Recognizing that the Central and East African countries receiving refugees, most of them least developed countries, continue to experience an extremely critical economic situation,

Deeply concerned about the grave consequences this has entailed for the capability of Central and East African countries to build their economies,

Noting with great concern that, despite all the efforts deployed so far by the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity and others, the situation of refugees and displaced persons in Central and East Africa remains precarious and unsolved,

Aware of the need to improve the security situation in the region, particularly in the border areas, for the safety of the refugees, the local community and personnel involved in humanitarian activities,

Recognizing the need for States to create conditions conducive to an early and sustainable solution to the flow of refugees, returnees and other displaced persons,

Expressing its appreciation to the Central and East African countries that have received refugees for the sacrifices they are making in granting refuge and hospitality to them,

Observing that the humanitarian aid dispatched should as far as possible take into consideration the scale of the needs of the local populations,

Stressing the need to continue to provide special assistance to the local populations of the countries receiving refugees,

1. Again congratulates the Secretary-General for the efforts he has made to draw the attention of the international community to the situation of refugees in Central and East African countries;

2. Again expresses its gratitude to all States, organizations and bodies of the United Nations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have done so for the financial, technical and material assistance they have been delivering to those countries that have been receiving refugees since the onset of the crisis and for the humanitarian assistance they have continued to render to refugees and the host countries, and calls upon them to continue to provide assistance for the implementation of programmes intended for the rehabilitation of the environment and social infrastructure in areas affected by the presence of refugees and to facilitate the restoration of the basic services destroyed in those host countries;

3. Appeals to the international community to assist in the search for durable solutions for African refugees, including voluntary repatriation, local integration and resettlement in third countries;

4. Calls upon Governments, relevant United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the international community as a whole to strengthen the emergency response capacity of the United Nations system and to continue to provide needed resources and operational support to refugees and countries of asylum in Central and East Africa;

5. Again urges the Governments of the region and all concerned parties to provide protection as well as safe and unhindered access for United Nations and other humanitarian personnel to the populations in need in all areas of the region, in accordance with international humanitarian law;

6. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize humanitarian assistance for the relief, voluntary repatriation, rehabilitation and resettlement of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, including those refugees in urban areas;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the follow-up to the present resolution, with a view to continuing discussions under the item entitled "Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees".

The Americas

UNHCR assisted some 4,000 Guatemalan refugees to repatriate in 1998, bringing the total of returnees repatriated through UNHCR since 1984 to some 42,000. Most people were repatriated from Mexico. The repatriation and reintegration operation was to be phased out at the end of June 1999 as scheduled. Further progress was made in implementing the Mexican Government's plan for the permanent settlement of Guatemalan refugees in Campeche and Qunitana Roo, with over 600 former refugees in possession of citizenship cards and some 2,000 more having begun the naturalization process. Most basic services (education, health, electricity) were taken over by the Mexican authorities. In another landmark development, Mexico announced in June 1998 that legal immigrant status would be granted to refugees in Chiapas. At the end of the year, some 24,000 Guatemalan refugees were in south-eastern Mexico, of whom close to 14,000 were in Chiapas.

Residual caseloads in other Latin American countries and the Caribbean were assisted individually with voluntary repatriation or local integration. In Belize, some 500 refugees became citizens with UNHCR help. In South America, UNHCR focused primarily on forced displacement due to the conflict in Colombia and its implications for neighbouring countries. Border regions adjacent to Ecuador, Panama and Venezuela were among those most affected by violence and displacement.

In Canada and the United States, UNHCR continued to monitor legislative, judicial and policy developments affecting access to refugee status determination procedures, the quality of asylum and the availability of resettlement as a durable solution. During 1998, the detention of asylum-seekers in the United States was a particular focus of UNHCR concern.

Asia and the Pacific and the Arab States

South Asia

The voluntary repatriation of Muslim refugees from camps in Bangladesh to Myanmar resumed in November 1998 after two years, but the number of returnees was small due to various procedural problems. Although some 230,000 refugees had returned to Myanmar since 1992, some 22,000 remained in Bangladesh. Steady progress continued to be made in improving local infrastructure and providing greater income-generating opportunities to help reintegrate returnees from Bangladesh into the northern Myanmar state of Rakhine.

Ongoing armed conflict prevented the resumption of voluntary repatriation of more than 70,000 Sri Lankan refugees in India and continued to result in population displacements within Sri Lanka. The focus of UNHCR's programme in Sri Lanka was therefore reoriented in 1998 to protecting internally displaced persons in conflict areas, stabilizing population displacements through infrastructure support to host communities and promoting the reintegration of internally displaced persons in areas of settlement.

UNHCR continued to provide care and maintenance support for some 96,000 Bhutanese refugees living in eastern Nepal. Bilateral discussions between the Governments of Bhutan and Nepal on solutions for those refugees resumed in November after a period of two years.

The fifth Regional Consultations on Refugee and Migratory Movements in South Asia, supported by UNHCR, were held in Kathmandu, Nepal, in November to review the draft model law drawn up in 1997 (Dhaka, Bangladesh), as well as measures to promote its adoption by States in the region.

East Asia and the Pacific

UNHCR continued to support repatriation, resettlement and self-reliance measures aimed at achieving durable solutions for some 1,800 Vietnamese refugees and non-refugees, who represented the residual caseload of the former Comprehensive Plan of Action for Indo-Chinese Refugees [YUN 1989, p. 707]. Camp-based assistance was phased out at the end of 1998, as the majority of that population, who resided in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, had achieved self-reliance. UNHCR planned to phase out its local settlement assistance to Vietnamese refugees in China in 1999, on completion of a revolving credit mechanism initiated in 1994, through which refugees had achieved self-reliance.

Following the completion in 1998 of an individual case status review of the Laotian refugees in the Ban Napho camp in Thailand, 1,145 individuals were considered no longer to meet internationally recognized refugee criteria. UNHCR was consulting with concerned Governments on the phasing out of camp-based assistance to the non-refugee caseload by mid-1999, while continuing to identify resettlement and other durable solutions. Returnee reintegration and monitoring assistance would continue in Viet Nam and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. In July, the Government of Thailand invited UNHCR to play a more active role in regard to some 105,000 ethnic Karen and Karenni refugees from Myanmar residing in 12 settlements along the Thai side of the border, where UNHCR subsequently opened field offices in October. During the year, UNHCR provided emergency relief to some 60,000 Cambodian refugees in four camps in Thailand and supported repatriation and reintegration assistance for 7,000 individuals who voluntarily returned under UNHCR auspices.

The third meeting of the Asia-Pacific Inter-governmental Consultations on Regional Approaches to Refugees and Displaced Persons (Bangkok, Thailand, 9-10 June), co-hosted by UNHCR and the Government of Thailand, discussed the impact of migratory flows and the relevance of prevention and preparedness in the context of the prevailing economic crisis in the region.

Central Asia, South-West Asia, North Africa and the Middle East

The lack of a political settlement, violations of human rights and the absence of adequate economic opportunities in Afghanistan prevented large numbers of Afghan refugees from returning home from Iran and Pakistan where 2.6 million refugees still resided. Nevertheless, some 107,000 Afghan refugees repatriated voluntarily in 1998. During the first half of the year, more than 10,000 Kurdish refugees were repatriated from Iran to the north of Iraq. However, the operation had to be suspended in mid-1998 because of changes in procedures by the Iraqi authorities. The return and reintegration of Tajik refugees were successful during 1998, with completion expected by the end of 1999.

There were further delays during 1998 in implementing the United Nations Settlement Plan for Western Sahara [YUN 1990, p. 919], preventing the beginning of UNHCR's voluntary repatriation programme in the region, which could only begin once key activities of the Plan were completed.

During 1998, UNHCR's work in the Middle East was strongly affected by continuing instability in Iraq. In May, Turkish refugees of Kurdish origin, who were living precariously in northern Iraq, were permitted by the Iraqi authorities to move to Makhmour within Iraqi Government-controlled territory. Following a security incident in July, UNHCR withdrew from the camp. It resumed its presence in Makhmour in December following negotiations with authorities on safe and regular access to the camp, security for UNHCR staff and for the refugees, and measures to ensure the civilian nature of the camp.

Europe

In 1998, the 15 member States of the European Union received 304,000 asylum applications, an increase of 21 per cent over 1997. The growth was almost entirely the result of arrivals from the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; two thirds of all asylum-seekers were received by Germany, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. UNHCR mounted a major emergency relief operation to respond to the needs of persons displaced by the violence that erupted in Kosovo at the end of February. The number of displaced persons and refugees from Kosovo peaked in October, with some 200,000 people internally displaced in the province, 20,000 in other parts of Serbia and 42,000 in Montenegro, as well as 20,500 refugees in Albania and smaller numbers in other countries, mainly in Western Europe.

Throughout the former Yugoslavia, UNHCR programmes continued to focus on promoting durable solutions for refugees and displaced persons, especially repatriation and return, as well as on ensuring a phased reduction of care and maintenance assistance. At the end of 1998, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia hosted the largest number of refugees in the region, some 200,000 from Bosnia and Herzegovina and almost 300,000 from Croatia.

During the year, some 110,000 refugees and 30,000 displaced persons returned home in Bosnia and Herzegovina, bringing the total returns to and within that country since the signing of the Dayton Agreement in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 551] to more than 550,000. In Croatia, 53,000 refugees and displaced persons returned home in 1998.

In Eastern Europe, a fragile situation continued to prevail in Azerbaijan, where the UNHCR humanitarian programme moved towards a long-term development phase in 1998, with a stronger emphasis on the integration of refugees and internally displaced persons. In Armenia, the emergency phase of UNHCR operations ended during the year and assistance was increasingly focused on promoting the naturalization of refugees and implementing long-term reintegration activities.

In the Russian Federation, UNHCR resumed its efforts to assist internally displaced persons in the northern Caucasus region. However, because of the turbulent situation, the UNHCR presence was reduced to minimal staffing levels and tight security measures were put in place. In Georgia, the declaration of a unilateral return of refugees and internally displaced persons by the Abkhaz side and its non-acceptance by the Georgian Government contributed to tension along the border. In Ukraine, some 20,000 stateless formerly deported Crimean Tatars obtained Ukrainian citizenship under a UNHCR-sponsored campaign to combat statelessness among formerly deported peoples.

Conference on refugees of CIS countries and neighbouring States

In a September report [A/53/413], the Secretary-General described follow-up to the 1996 Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States [YUN 1996, p. 1117]. The report was submitted in response to General Assembly resolution 52/102 [YUN 1997, p. 1250], by which the Assembly also requested UNHCR, in cooperation with IOM and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), to continue to steer implementation of the Conference's Programme of Action.

Under the Joint Operational Strategy for 1996-2000, UNHCR and IOM made an appeal for funds for countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) for 1998 to support their implementation of programmes in the region. During the year, most CIS Governments maintained their commitment to the Conference process, according to the Secretary-General, and several elaborated, revised and amended legislation and other institutional frameworks for managing migration and displacement. Significant progress was also achieved in developing the capacities of local NGOs. However, the Secretary-General noted that the implementation process also faced a number of constraints, including a decrease in international attention and support, lack of political solutions to conflicts, staff safety concerns and financial constraints affecting the ability to pursue some of the objectives of the Programme of Action, in particular a lack of involvement of international financial institutions.

The Steering Group, set up in 1996 to monitor progress in implementing the Programme of Action, met in June 1998. A report compiled by UNHCR, IOM and OSCE outlined progress made with CIS Governments regarding implementation and provided the basis for review of the Programme of Action.

In an October conclusion [A/53/12/Add.1], the UNHCR Executive Committee reaffirmed the importance and validity of the Programme of Action and stressed the need to reinvigorate its implementation. It called on all CIS countries to strengthen their commitment, both practical and political, to implementing the Programme of Action and to ensure the safety of humanitarian personnel working in the region. The High Commissioner was invited to organize consultations with CIS Conference participants to make the follow-up process more active and dynamic.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/620], adopted resolution 53/123 without vote [agenda item 105].

Follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/113 of 20 December 1993, 49/173 of 23 December 1994, 50/151 of 21 December 1995, 51/70 of 12 December 1996 and, in particular, 52/102 of 12 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and that of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the ongoing acuteness of the migration and displacement problems in the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and the necessity to follow up the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States and the subsequent conclusions of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Reaffirming the view of the Conference that the primary responsibility for tackling population displacement problems lies with the affected countries themselves and that these issues are to be regarded as national priorities, while at the same time recognizing the need for enhancing international support for the national efforts of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States aiming at the effective implementation of such responsibilities within the framework of the Programme of Action of the Conference,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe in developing strategies and practical tools for more effective capacity-building in countries of origin and enhancing programmes to address the needs of various categories of concern to the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States,

Welcoming the contributions of those countries that responded to the 1998 appeal launched by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration, and appreciating this tangible encouragement to the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and to further inter-agency cooperation,

Taking note of the positive results emanating from the implementation of the Programme of Action of the Conference,

Convinced of the necessity of further strengthening practical measures for the achievement of effective implementation of the Programme of Action,

Recalling that the protection and promotion of human rights and the strengthening of democratic institutions are essential to prevent mass population displacement,

Mindful that effective implementation of the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action should be facilitated and can be ensured only through cooperation and coordinated activities undertaken in this respect by all interested States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other actors,

Noting and reaffirming the importance of the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Calls upon Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Organization for Migration and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, to strengthen their efforts and mutual cooperation relating to the follow-up to the Regional Conference to Address the Problems of Refugees, Displaced Persons, Other Forms of Involuntary Displacement and Returnees in the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Relevant Neighbouring States, and welcomes the positive results achieved by them in the implementation of the Programme of Action of the Conference;

3. Invites all countries that have not yet done so to accede to and implement fully the 1951 Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, while welcoming the accession of Turkmenistan to the Convention;

4. Calls upon States and interested international organizations, in a spirit of solidarity and burden-sharing, to provide appropriate forms and levels of support for the practical implementation of the Programme of Action;

5. Invites international financial and other institutions to contribute to the financing of projects and programmes within the framework of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

6. Invites the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to intensify bilateral and subregional cooperation in maintaining the balance of commitments and interests in the process leading up to the implementation of the Programme of Action;

7. Calls upon the Governments of the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States to continue to strengthen their commitment to the principles underpinning the Programme of Action, in particular human rights and refugee protection principles, and to lend high-level political support to ensure progress in its implementation;

8. Invites the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration to enhance their mutual relationship with other key international actors, such as the Council of Europe, the European Commission and human rights, development and financial institutions, in order better to address the wide-ranging and complex issues in the Programme of Action;

9. Welcomes the progress made in building civil society, in particular through the development of the non-governmental sector and the development of cooperation between non-governmental organizations and the Governments of a number of countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and notes in this regard the relationship between the progress made in implementing the Programme of Action and the success in promoting civil society, especially in the field of human rights;

10. Encourages the involvement of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the follow-up to the Conference, and invites them to demonstrate stronger support for the process of the multinational constructive dialogue among a wide range of countries concerned and further action with a view to the full implementation of the recommendations of the Conference;

11. Emphasizes the necessity of fulfilling the recommendations of the Programme of Action relating to ensuring respect for human rights as an important factor in the management of migration flows, the consolidation of democracy, the rule of law and stability;

12. Recognizes the importance of undertaking measures, on the basis of strict adherence to all of the principles of international law, including humanitarian law and international human rights standards, to prevent situations that lead to new flows of refugees, displaced persons and other forms of involuntary displacement;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

14. Decides to continue examination of the question at its fifty-fourth session.

Chapter XIII

Health, food and nutrition

In 1998, the United Nations continued to take action to promote human health, coordinate food aid and food security, and support research in nutrition.

A report of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS) stated that a total of 33.4 million people were living with HIV/AIDS at the end of 1998, which was a dramatic 10 per cent increase over 1997. There were 5.8 million new infections, nearly 16,000 every day and 11 every minute. The disease caused 2.5 million deaths in 1998, the highest number in a given year. During the year, the respective roles of the UNAIDS secretariat and the other co-sponsors became clearer and therefore strengthened the capacity of the United Nations to assist Governments and civil society to respond to HIV/AIDS. Another health concern for the United Nations was the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera. The World Health Organization, in coordination with the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Bank, was seeking to reduce substantially the human suffering and economic losses due to malaria, not only through new tools for controlling the disease but also by strengthening the health services to affected populations.

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations—provided food aid in 80 countries. In its new approach of focusing on longer-term food needs by introducing development activities to support humanitarian efforts, WFP reiterated its dual mandate to make the link from relief to recovery in its assistance.

Health

AIDS prevention and control

The Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS), which became fully operational in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 112], continued to coordinate UN activities for the prevention and control of AIDS. The Programme, which served as the main advocate for global action on HIV/AIDS, was developed by six co-sponsors: the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the World Bank and the World Health Organization (WHO). Its aim was to: strengthen UN capacity to assist Governments and civil society to respond to HIV/AIDS; build worldwide political commitment to respond to the epidemic; and improve the content, access to and use of the body of knowledge needed to accelerate the global response.

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/52 [YUN 1997, p. 1253], the Secretary-General, by a 7 June note [E/1999/64], transmitted a report of the UNAIDS Executive Director describing the status of the epidemic, the progress made in response to HIV/AIDS and its impact on the countries affected.

According to the report, the total number of people living with HIV/AIDS worldwide at the end of 1998 was 33.4 million, a dramatic 10 per cent increase over 1997, representing an estimated 5.8 million new infections, or nearly 16,000 every day, 11 every minute. HIV/AIDS-associated illnesses caused an estimated 2.5 million deaths in 1998, the highest number ever in a single year. The overwhelming majority of people with HIV/AIDS, 90 per cent, lived in the developing world where AIDS had begun to erode achievements in child survival, shorten life expectancy and threaten the process of development. Women accounted for 43 per cent of infected adults living worldwide at the end of 1998 and nearly half of all AIDS deaths were women. Over 4 million infants and children under age 15 were infected with HIV since the beginning of the pandemic. Ninety per cent of those infants/children acquired the virus from their HIV-positive mothers during pregnancy. While antiretroviral regimens were widely used to prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV in most industrialized countries, the average cost was too expensive for widespread use in poor countries. However, trials showed that a short regimen of zidovudine pills given during the last weeks of pregnancy cut the rate of mother-to-child transmission by half, at less than a tenth of the cost of the longer course. The UNAIDS secretariat and co-sponsors were working together to refine strategies and intensify negotiations with industry and to accelerate programming in that area. A pilot initiative to reduce mother-to-child transmission in 11 low-income countries, with AZT supplied at no cost by Glaxo Wellcome for the start-up phase, had been launched.

The definition of the respective roles of the UNAIDS secretariat and the co-sponsors at the global, regional, intercountry and country levels became clearer in 1998. The former focused on tracking the epidemic, facilitating and brokering the technical and programme support efforts of other organizations, while the latter focused on their comparative advantages, within the defined substantive areas of their respective organizational mandates. Apart from the UNAIDS co-sponsors, other organizations of the UN system started to address HIV/AIDS issues in the context of their respective mandates, notably the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the UN Population Division and Department of Peacekeeping Operations. Cooperation with the UN regional commissions also commenced.

The Programme Coordinating Board of UNAIDS, at its fifth meeting (Nairobi, Kenya, 16-18 November 1997), discussed the access to drugs for HIV/AIDS, country-level responses, UN Theme Groups and national strategic planning. At its sixth meeting (Geneva, 25-27 May 1998), the Board took note of the interim financial information management for the 1998-1999 biennium as at 30 April 1998. At its seventh meeting (New Delhi, India, 9-11 December), the Board discussed optional field visits, a strategic framework to solve the problem of young people and HIV/AIDS, and migration and HIV/AIDS.

Overall coordination of UNAIDS was provided through the Committee of Co-sponsoring Organizations, which, at its April meeting, adopted actions to: design a global strategy; develop a joint budget and work plan, including plans at the country level; improve policy guidance; focus efforts on Africa; strengthen multisectoral action and co-sponsors at the country level; and implement joint monitoring and evaluation activities.

In line with Council resolution 1997/52, the UNAIDS report described efforts made to bring about concrete changes and advances, particularly in advocacy and widening partnerships; national strategic planning; best practices; network development and technical resources; surveillance, monitoring and evaluation; and resource mobilization. UNAIDS had been successful in developing partnerships with the global business community, pharmaceutical and health care companies, non-governmental organizations, advocacy groups, the entertainment industry, as well as the UN Departments of Public Information and Economic and Social Affairs. Its monitoring and evaluation plan was approved by the Programme Coordinating Board at its second ad hoc thematic meeting (New Delhi, 9-11 December). A Monitoring and Evaluation Reference Group was established in mid-1998 to advise UNAIDS on technical and managerial aspects of monitoring and evaluation. UNAIDS and WHO jointly developed and implemented a reporting system for tracking the HIV/AIDS epidemic in all countries and, in June, produced 180 country-specific epidemiological fact sheets. The UNAIDS secretariat continued to be involved in the various follow-up processes of recent UN global conferences and summits, particularly the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955], the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169] and the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113].

Malaria, diarrhoeal diseases and cholera

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/63 [YUN 1995, p. 1254], the Secretary-General, on 30 April, presented a report on preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera [E/1998/20].

According to the report, prepared by WHO in collaboration with other relevant organizations, agencies, organs and programmes of the UN system, malaria caused between 1.5 million and 2.7 million deaths every year. Worst affected were the poorest countries and those living under the most difficult circumstances. Ninety per cent of malaria cases and deaths occurred in sub-Saharan Africa, mainly in young children. Epidemics were common in Africa, and had occurred recently among refugees from the conflict in the Great Lakes region and in southern African countries. Although funds to accelerate malaria control in Africa were provided, they were not sufficient and could not be assured from 1999 onwards. The situation was made worse by severe problems of parasite resistance to drugs in the South-East Asian peninsula. Two thirds of the cases of malaria in the Americas occurred in the Amazon basin as a result of colonization and mining in forest areas. Another particular concern was the recent resurgence of malaria in temperate zone areas where the disease had been previously under control (Azerbaijan, Iraq, Tajikistan, Turkey). Those epidemics followed a rapid deterioration in malaria prevention and control due to military conflicts followed by economic crisis. However, appropriate implementation of malaria control did have an impact on malaria morbidity and mortality in countries such as Brazil, China, some Indian states, Oman, the Philippines, Solomon Islands, Thailand, Vanuatu and Viet Nam, and enabled others to maintain their malaria-free status.

The report also stated that cholera remained a global threat. Although it was responsible for only a small proportion of the some 2 million childhood deaths caused by diarrhoeal diseases, epidemic cholera differed from other diarrhoeal diseases because it often affected older children and adults and could kill within hours. While cholera no longer posed a threat to countries with a minimum of healthy conditions, it remained a challenge to countries where access to safe drinking water and adequate sanitation could not be assured. Because cholera was a social problem, disease prevention and control activities required a multisectoral approach. There was an urgent need to establish coordinated plans, in collaboration with external partners, in particular UNICEF and bilateral agencies, to meet the need of countries in the areas of case management, epidemiological surveillance, outbreak investigation and control, laboratory support, health education and long-term prevention through improvement of water supplies, sanitation and food safety.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/36 [draft: E/1998/L.37, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 7 (b)].

Malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming agreed conclusions 1993/2 of 14 July 1993, adopted at the coordination segment of its substantive session of 1993, on coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system in the fields of preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera,

Recalling its resolutions 1994/34 of 29 July 1994 and 1995/63 of 28 July 1995 and General Assembly resolutions 49/135 of 19 December 1994 and 50/128 of 20 December 1995, Agenda 21 and General Assembly resolution S/19-2 of 28 June 1997,

Noting with concern that malaria and diarrhoeal diseases remain prevalent in developing countries, especially in Africa, and noting their dire consequences for health and development in Africa,

Recognizing that these diseases especially afflict people living in poverty, that effective and affordable means of preventing and treating them are available and that combating them is an effective and essential element in eradicating poverty and fostering development,

Noting the leadership role in global malaria control given to the World Health Organization in General Assembly resolution 49/135 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/63 and the role of the World Health Organization in directing and coordinating international efforts to prevent and control these diseases,

Acknowledging the important contributions of the United Nations funds and programmes and the role of the United Nations Children's Fund and other bodies of the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and a wide variety of individuals and organizations in controlling these diseases,

Noting in particular the critical role of industry in supporting research and development of vaccines, drugs and diagnostic tests that will further improve the efficacy of preventive and control efforts and the catalytic role being played by the United Nations Development Programme/World Bank/World Health Organization Special Programme for Research and Training in Tropical Diseases in the development of new disease control products, in collaboration with industry,

Warmly acknowledging the statement supporting malaria prevention and control made during the summit meeting of the heads of State of the Group of Eight, held at Birmingham, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, from 15 to 17 May 1998, and the pledge of 60 million pounds made at that time in support of the Roll Back Malaria Initiative of the World Health Organization,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on preventive action and intensification of the struggle against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, in particular cholera;

2. Supports the actions taken in 1997 and 1998 with respect to malaria prevention and control in the context of African economic recovery and development by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity;

3. Appreciates the actions taken to strengthen research in endemic countries of Africa under the Multilateral Initiative on Malaria, an initiative widely supported by members of the international development community and by scientists within those endemic countries;

4. Welcomes the Roll Back Malaria Initiative of the World Health Organization supporting the existing African initiative on malaria;

5. Requests the United Nations, and appeals to international organizations, multilateral financial institutions, the specialized agencies, organs and programmes of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations, the private sector and other groups, to join as partners in this initiative by, inter alia, contributing technical and financial support;

6. Notes that vaccines provide some of the most effective means of preventing disease and that vaccine development, although now made more feasible by multiple developments in the field of biotechnology, remains a difficult and long-term task highly deserving of increased financial support;

7. Stresses the importance of adopting and implementing national plans of action in countries where malaria is endemic, in conformity with the Global Strategy for Malaria Control of the World Health Organization;

8. Urges international development partners, in collaboration with private industry, to intensify their efforts to develop and widely distribute vaccines and other remedies against malaria and diarrhoeal diseases, including cholera;

9. Calls upon the international community, in particular the donor countries, to expand, where possible, fund-raising channels, to provide adequate financial resources and medical and technical assistance to the affected developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, for the successful implementation of work plans and projects and the achievement of significant progress, in both the short and the medium terms, in controlling malaria and to intensify basic and applied research on anti-malarial vaccines as a priority;

10. Urges the Director-General of the World Health Organization to continue to provide, in collaboration with the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned United Nations agencies and programmes and other relevant international organizations, such as the International Centre for Diarrhoeal Diseases Research and the International Vaccine Institute, technical expertise and support to endemic countries;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2001 a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, to be prepared by the Director-General of the World Health Organization in collaboration with other relevant organizations, organs, bodies and programmes of the United Nations system.

Inter-agency coordination in health policy

The UNICEF/WHO/UNFPA Coordinating Committee on Health, the successor to the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy [YUN 1997, p. 1255], convened to make final recommendations on its terms of reference to the respective Executive Boards. The terms of reference were approved in September by UNICEF and UNDP/UNFPA. Approval from WHO was anticipated. They provided for the Committee to be composed of 16 members selected by the Executive Boards of the three organizations, one from each region of the organization concerned (five each from UNICEF and UNFPA, six from WHO). The first meeting of the Committee (Geneva, 3-4 July) discussed and adopted recommendations related to three main programme areas of collaboration: safe motherhood, vitamin A and adolescent health and development. It also identified additional areas of collaboration for possible inclusion in the agenda of its next meeting, scheduled to be convened before the end of 1999.

Protecting and promoting health

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/173 [YUN 1997, p. 900], which called for the United Nations to play a coordinating role in mine action (see PART ONE, Chapter VII), WHO took immediate steps to define the public health dimension of the issue. Its major contribution was the streamlining of assistance strategies for mine victims, which was included in resolution WHA51.8, adopted by the World Health Assembly in May. The WHO plan of action on a concerted public health response to anti-personnel mines was being implemented in 10 mine-affected African countries. In order to promote better field-level coordination, WHO established a strong partnership with the International Committee of the Red Cross and UNICEF. The importance of not discriminating against victims of any type of trauma and the need for a development-oriented humanitarian approach in post-conflict situations to strengthen their capacity to meet the needs of victims was stressed. WHO's strategy was based on the conviction that the public health response to landmine injuries should form part of an overall plan to improve the capacity of the health sector to respond to trauma and strengthen community involvement.

Food and agriculture

Food aid

World Food Programme

In July, the Economic and Social Council examined two reports pertaining to the work of the World Food Programme (WFP) in 1997: the annual report of the Executive Director [E/1998/62] and a report of the WFP Executive Board containing an overview of activities in 1997 and the decisions and recommendations of its four 1997 sessions [E/1998/37].

A new approach to food aid began in 1998, which emphasized the importance of moving as quickly as possible from relief to rehabilitation, reconstruction and sustainable recovery. Poverty was commonly recognized as a cause of hunger, but hunger contributed to the perpetuation of poverty. A major function of WFP was to help people to get out of the hunger trap and make lasting changes to their lives. The year 1998 was marked by an unprecedented combination of events that increased world hunger levels: economic emergencies, climatic catastrophes, a resumption of civil wars, and steady, long-term conflict, which slowly drained the ability of populations to survive. In response to the sudden upsurge in relief food needs, WFP fed more people than ever.

The annual report of the Executive Director, entitled "Recovery from crisis", included highlights of 1997 activities and progress made on the Strategic and Financial Plan, 1998-2001. It gave an overview of WFP's consolidated budget and expenditure. The report focused on WFP's increased accountability through enhanced reporting, improvement in financial management and information systems, and infrastructure development; its better management system, achieved through organizational change and human resources development; stronger advocacy campaigns; and attempts to mobilize resources in the face of a global decline in food aid.

By decision 1998/286 of 31 July, the Council took note of the report of the WFP Executive Board and the annual report of the Executive Director for 1997.

The WFP Executive Board decided on organizational and programme matters and approved a number of projects at its 1998 sessions, all held in Rome: first regular session (5-6 February), second regular session (12-15 May), annual session (18-21 May) and third regular session (19-22 October). In May, as a follow-up to General Assembly resolution 50/8 [YUN 1995, p. 1260], the Board was briefed on meetings of the Working Group on the Distribution of Seats. The Board recommended that the Group resume discussions and noted that the Working Group would forward its report to the Economic and Social Council and the FAO Council for information. By decision 1998/285 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council postponed action on the draft resolution on the review of the distribution of seats on the WFP Executive Board to its 1998 resumed substantive session. On 16 December, by decision 1998/300, the Council decided to further postpone action on the issue to its 1999 organizational session.

WFPactivities

During 1998 [E/1999/58], nearly 75 million people received food assistance from WFP, with women and girls accounting for more than half of that number. In addition, WFP provided relief assistance to 56 million people, almost double the 1997 figure, either through emergency operations or through protracted relief operations. Most beneficiaries of relief food (40 million) were victims of natural disasters—droughts, floods and crop failure—with the largest number of recipients in Asia.

Some 830 million people around the world continued to be chronically undernourished as a result of abject poverty. Those people were the focus of WFP's development assistance, although the continuing decline in resources for development had a substantial effect on the ability of WFP's development programme to assist the chronically hungry. In 1998, operational expenditure for development was the lowest in more than 20 years, $254 million. As a result, the number of beneficiaries of development assistance fell dramatically to 18.4 million. Although total contributions amounted to $1.7 billion, a one-third increase over 1997, that increase was due entirely to contributions to the many appeals for emergency assistance. WFP handled nearly 70 per cent of global relief food aid in 1998, up from 60 per cent in 1997. Two donors, Japan and the United States, accounted for most of the increase in global food aid, offsetting the general decline in food aid from most other donors. Global food aid deliveries were estimated to have reached 8 million tons, the first increase in five years. Programme food aid, usually provided on a government-to-government basis as balance-of-payments support, accounted for nearly all the increase; relief and project food aid remained at approximately 1997 levels. Targeted food aid, composed of relief and project categories, represented almost 70 per cent of total food aid deliveries.

In 1998, WFP provided food aid in 80 countries.

Sub-Saharan Africa. The region continued to receive the major share of WFP assistance, 53 per cent of its total operational expenditures in 1998. WFP provided wide-scale assistance to 1.4 million victims of conflict in the Great Lakes region for the fourth consecutive year. Recurring episodes of instability made humanitarian operations particularly difficult, especially in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), where humanitarian agencies were obliged to suspend activities beginning in August, and in Rwanda, where insecurity between August and November led to a fivefold increase in the number of displaced people, to more than 500,000.

The route for most relief food for Burundi, Rwanda and western United Republic of Tanzania was interrupted in January when devastating floods washed away the main railway line from Dares Salaam. Within 30 days, WFP created a new transport hub in Dodoma, with mobile storage facilities, an independent railway siding and a large parking area for the trucks that had replaced railway wagons. WFP managed to maintain the same flow of freight, 15,000 tons per month, without interruption and with no increase in overall transport costs.

Hostilities in the Congo disrupted railway movement and prompted WFP to establish a temporary food airlift to Brazzaville, with onward transportation to Kinshasa, DRC, by barge. Resumption of hostilities in Angola overshadowed WFP's rehabilitation and resettlement efforts. Of the 350,000 WFP beneficiaries, nearly half were orphans, landmine victims and malnourished children. Civil war erupted in Guinea-Bissau in June, displacing 350,000 people, for whom WFP provided emergency food rations. A peace agreement in November allowed limited resettlement and rehabilitation activities, including food for work, to revive basic infrastructure. Adverse weather conditions in southern Africa necessitated emergency food assistance in Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia.

Rehabilitation plans for 1.7 million refugees, returnees and displaced people in the Liberia region (Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Sierra Leone) were also curtailed by a resumption of conflict. Widespread violence in Sierra Leone halted all humanitarian work from mid-1997 to March 1998 and restricted relief assistance to a handful of areas. Agriculture production in the country dropped precipitously, making it dependent upon food aid through 1999.

On the development side, six country programmes in the region were approved. In Somalia, civil war and factional fighting compounded the effects of both drought and floods. Because of hostilities in May, 85 per cent of food aid, normally imported to Ethiopia through Eritrea, had to be shipped through Djibouti, resulting in severe congestion of port and transport facilities.

Asia and the Pacific. Asia had both the largest number of recipients of development assistance and the largest emergency operations. Responding to unprecedented floods, WFP provided emergency assistance to 19 million flood victims in Bangladesh and 5.8 million in China. In Afghanistan, two powerful earthquakes killed over 9,000 people; WFP and its relief agency partners used helicopters to rescue survivors and provided medicines, tents and blankets. Feeding of refugees and displaced people continued in Afghanistan, Cambodia, Myanmar, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka. Reconstruction activities continued in Tajikistan.

In Papua New Guinea, WFP embarked on its first specific technical assistance intervention to strengthen the Government's capacity to undertake an emergency food assistance programme for approximately 1 million people who had lost crops to drought and frost. WFP assisted the Government in conducting needs assessments, formulating distribution plans and drafting purchase and transport contracts, and helped its staff to organize the handling of a large bulk food aid shipment.

Mediterranean, Middle East and the Commonwealth of Independent States. In the Caucasus and Bosnia and Herzegovina, the emphasis was on strengthening recovery and rehabilitation to facilitate the phasing out of WFP assistance. As the Kosovo crisis worsened (see PART ONE, Chapter V), WFP established a regional emergency operation to provide food aid to 400,000 refugees and displaced people, many of whom were trapped by fighting.

As part of the WFP reorganization, the Regional Bureau for the Middle East and North Africa was relocated to Cairo, Egypt.

In Iraq (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), WFP played a major role in the oil-for-food programme authorized by the Security Council in resolution 986(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 475], by observing the efficiency, equity and adequacy of the Government's food distribution to 22 million people throughout the country.

Latin America and the Caribbean. The Regional Bureau for the Latin America and Caribbean Region was relocated to Managua, Nicaragua, and was well placed to respond quickly to the disasters caused by El Niño. When hurricane Mitch hit Central America, WFP was already implementing a regional emergency operation for families affected by the drought caused by El Niño. Commodities from that emergency operation and from development projects in the countries concerned enabled WFP to start immediate food distribution to the victims. It purchased food locally and 10,000 tons of bulk maize were shipped to Honduras. WFP development and relief activities in the region increased from 2 per cent of operational expenditure in 1996 to 18 per cent in 1998.

Administrative and financial matters

Resources and financing

The authorized level of WFP's consolidated budget for 1998-1999 was approximately $3 billion. During 1998, WFP's overall expenditure amounted to $1,348 million, which covered the costs of: commodities; transport; storage and handling; and direct and indirect support. By programme category, emergency operations accounted for $697 million, followed by development ($259 million), protracted relief and recovery operations ($219 million) and programme support ($96 million).

Total food purchased by WFP amounted to $247 million. Although a decrease from prior years, it still accounted for 42 per cent of all WFP deliveries. Sixty per cent of food purchases were made in developing countries, particularly Thailand, followed by South Africa, India, Uganda and Nepal. For the first time, large purchases were also made in Bulgaria. WFP spent approximately $18 million on such non-food items as fuel ($6.6 million), vehicles ($3.1 million), stores and warehouses ($900,000), computers and other data-processing equipment ($700,000), railway equipment ($700,000), agricultural tools ($600,000), kitchen equipment ($500,000) and equipment for boats and barges ($500,000).

While contributions rose in 1998, food aid requirements also exceeded those of 1997, principally due to the increase in relief food aid needs, particularly for the large number of people affected by natural calamities. While resources for emergency operations increased dramatically to almost $1 billion, or 80 per cent over 1997, WFP still faced a 23 per cent shortfall over requirements. WFP increased its emphasis on resource mobilization to strengthen and broaden its financial and resource base, as well as to improve the predictability and reliability of funding. Efforts were made to enhance coordination between headquarters and field offices in fund-raising and to support more innovative cooperation with donors.

Food security

Follow-up to 1996 World Food Summit

The State of Food and Agriculture 1998, an FAO publication, recalled that, even though two years had elapsed since the conclusion of the World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129], policy actions needed to remain highly focused and wide publicity given to measures agreed upon to reduce world hunger and malnutrition. The impact of the financial crisis on East and South-East Asia and Latin America caused deeply depressed economic and food insecurity situations in some countries, while the El Niño climate phenomenon resulted in massive losses in crop, livestock, forestry and fisheries production, causing severe food shortages. Yet, there were encouraging economic developments in Africa, and many countries in Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean experienced favourable overall economic situations. Nevertheless, from a long-term perspective, the poorest nations' populations had become increasingly poor and food-insecure. The report also reviewed the contribution of rural non-farm (RNF) income and employment to economic development in developing countries and underlined the fact that those two factors enhanced food security, which in turn induced RNF economies to grow and modernize.

Nutrition

ACC activities

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Nutrition held its twenty-fifth session (Oslo, Norway, 30 March-2 April) [ACC/1998/13]. It kept under review eight working groups on such questions as nutrition, ethics and human rights; iodine deficiency disorders; household food security; breastfeeding and complementary feeding; nutrition of school-age children; nutrition of refugees and displaced people; iron deficiency control; and vitamin A deficiency.

The decision of some UN agencies to sharply reduce or eliminate their contributions to the Subcommittee's core budget had led to the establishment of a revised budget of $820,000 for the 1996-1997 biennium. The financial situation for 1998-1999 showed improvement over that of the prior biennium; although FAO did not contribute to the core budget, WHO increased its contribution and the International Atomic Energy Agency contributed for the first time.

In order to have a greater understanding and recognition of nutrition in the UN system, the Chairman suggested that the name of the Subcommittee be revised to United Nations Nutrition Council. The continued use of the sub-heading ACC Subcommittee on Nutrition would build upon the tradition of the Subcommittee and ensure that its position as a UN body was identified.

The Subcommittee's work included a review of the report of the Advisory Group on Nutrition, the Third Report on the World Nutrition Situation, the draft outline of the fourth report and decisions taken in working groups.

A joint WHO/United Nations University (UNU) project to develop a new international growth reference for infants and young children was presented. It was a large multi-centre study, with a complex protocol and a budget of about $6 million. The study started in Brazil and would begin at other sites during 1998.

The 20/20 Initiative was introduced as a prioritization within national budgets and aid budgets (20 per cent of each) aimed at mobilizing adequate financial resources to support basic social services. It was an inter-agency collaboration, with practical guidelines focusing on the goals of major global conferences.

As a follow-up to the International Conference on Nutrition [YUN 1992, p. 830] and the World Food Summit, WHO reported that 162 countries were in the process of preparing or had finalized national food and nutrition plans or policies. A comparative analysis and synthesis of 51 country reports completed by WHO/Copenhagen and a similar synthesis for the South-East Asia region were also available.

UNU activities

The UNU food and nutrition programme, undertaken in collaboration with WHO, UNICEF and FAO, addressed major nutrition concerns in developing countries. During 1998, the programme maintained five major global projects and numerous smaller ones. It provided 15 fellowships for advanced training and published quarterly issues of two journals, Food and Nutrition Bulletin and The Journal of Food Composition and Analysis.

In January, as part of the transition from a UNU Centre programme to a permanent Research and Training Coordinating Centre, the directorship of the programme was transferred from Dr. Nevin Scrimshaw to Dr. Cutberto Garza, Vice Provost of Cornell University, Ithaca, United States.

damaging influences of chronic dietary energy deficiency; the introduction of anthropological methodologies for the evaluation and compilation of nutrition and health-related interventions; the generation and compilation of food composition data in all regions and countries of the world, bringing advanced information technologies to developing countries; and the collection of all dietary intake studies in each country over the past 30 years as a basis for epidemiological studies of diet and disease and other uses. Those activities and findings of research in progress were reported in the Food and Nutrition Bulletin, a widely read nutrition journal in developing countries.

In addition to ongoing projects, the programme started a new $4 million project with WHO on international growth reference for infants. Support for the project came from the Governments of Brazil, Canada, the Netherlands, Norway, Oman and the United States and from the Arab Gulf Fund and the Vatican. A number of institutions were selected as sites for the study and plans were under way to develop regional action plans for high-level capacity-building for research and training in food and nutrition.

Chapter XIV

International drug control

During 1998, the United Nations, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) of the Secretariat, renewed its commitment to strengthen international cooperation and increase efforts to counter the world drug problem.

In June, the General Assembly held its twentieth special session devoted to countering the world drug problem. It adopted a Political Declaration and a Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction that introduced a balanced approach with regard to illicit demand and supply reduction and reaffirmed the need for demand reduction programmes. It also adopted measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs—the main UN policy-making body on drug control issues—acted as the preparatory body for the special session and considered the question of demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs.

UNDCP played a major role in stimulating action at the national, regional and international levels, to promote subregional cooperation and to provide States with legal and technical assistance. It strengthened its presence in key countries, supported national efforts and initiatives, giving particular attention to activities to reduce illicit cultivation of narcotic crops through alternative development, and finalized the development of a series of business plans to reduce the illicit supply and demand for drugs.

INCB continued to oversee the implementation of the three major international drug control conventions, to analyse the drug situation worldwide and to draw attention to weaknesses in national control and treaty compliance.

Twentieth special session of the General Assembly

Pursuant to its resolution 51/64 [YUN 1996, p. 1139], the General Assembly convened its twentieth special session (New York, 8-10 June) to consider the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to propose new strategies and measures to strengthen international cooperation in addressing the problem of illicit drugs.

The Assembly adopted the Political Declaration, the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem (see below).

With regard to procedural matters, the Assembly, on 8 June, decided that the title of the special session should be amended to read: "Twentieth special session of the General Assembly devoted to countering the world drug problem together" (decision S-20/21), approved a number of organizational arrangements for the session (decision S-20/22) and adopted its agenda (decision S-20/23). In resolution S-20/1 of 10 June, the Assembly approved the report of the Credentials Committee [A/S-20/10].

Communications. On 29 May [A/S-20/5], Thailand transmitted the Joint Declaration of the signatory countries (Cambodia, China, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand, Viet Nam) of the 1993 Memorandum of Understanding on Drug Control, which was a framework for subregional cooperation on drug control among those countries together with UNDCP. On 1 June [A/S-20/6], Colombia conveyed the Declaration on the special session issued by the Ministerial Meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Cartagena de Indias, 19-20 May). On 10 June [A/S-20/13], Colombia transmitted the Joint Declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Andean Community, issued in New York on the occasion of the special session. By a 5 June letter [A/S-20/7], Sweden transmitted a Joint Declaration of the Governments of Mexico, Portugal and Sweden on the occasion of the International Symposium on the World Drug Problem (Stockholm, 13-14 May). On 9 June [A/S-20/12], Myanmar transmitted a summary of its 15-year narcotics elimination plan and its country report on narcotic drug control.

Ad Hoc Committee

The Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the Special Session met on 8 and 9 June [A/S-20/11] to consider a review of international drug control instruments; measures to promote implementation of international drug control treaties and to strengthen international cooperation in the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities, including corruption; proposals for new strategies, methods and practical activities in addressing the problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, with due regard to the gender perspective; and a review of the international drug control regime: strengthening UN machinery for drug control.

Following consideration of the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as preparatory body for the special session [A/S-20/4], the Ad Hoc Committee recommended to the Assembly seven draft resolutions for adoption.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 June [meeting 9], the General Assembly adopted resolution S-20/2 without vote [agenda items 9, 10 & 11].

Political Declaration

The General Assembly

Adopts the Political Declaration annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Political Declaration

Drugs destroy lives and communities, undermine sustainable human development and generate crime. Drugs affect all sectors of society in all countries; in particular, drug abuse affects the freedom and development of young people, the world's most valuable asset. Drugs are a grave threat to the health and well-being of all mankind, the independence of States, democracy, the stability of nations, the structure of all societies, and the dignity and hope of millions of people and their families; therefore:

We the States Members of the United Nations,

Concerned about the serious world drug problem, and having assembled at the twentieth special session of the General Assembly to consider enhanced action to tackle it in a spirit of trust and cooperation,

1. Reaffirm our unwavering determination and commitment to overcoming the world drug problem through domestic and international strategies to reduce both the illicit supply of and the demand for drugs;

2. Recognize that action against the world drug problem is a common and shared responsibility requiring an integrated and balanced approach in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, and particularly with full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, non-intervention in the internal affairs of States and all human rights and fundamental freedoms. Convinced that the world drug problem must be addressed in a multilateral setting, we call upon States which have not already done so to become party to and implement fully the three international drug control conventions. Also, we renew our commitment to adopting and reinforcing comprehensive national legislation and strategies to give effect to the provisions of those conventions, ensuring through periodic reviews that the strategies are effective;

3. Reaffirm our support for the United Nations and its drug control organs, especially the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as the global forum for international cooperation against the world drug problem, and resolve to strengthen the functioning and governance of these organs;

4. Undertake to ensure that women and men benefit equally, and without any discrimination, from strategies directed against the world drug problem, through their involvement in all stages of programmes and policy-making;

5. Recognize with satisfaction the progress achieved by States, both individually and working in concert, and express deep concern about the new social contexts in which the consumption of illicit drugs, particularly of amphetamine-type stimulants, is taking place;

6. Welcome the efforts of the wide range of people working in various fields against drug abuse and, encouraged by the behaviour of the vast majority of youth who do not consume illegal drugs, decide to give particular attention to demand reduction, notably by investing in and working with youth through formal and informal education, information activities and other preventive measures;

7. Affirm our determination to provide the necessary resources for treatment and rehabilitation and to enable social reintegration to restore dignity and hope to children, youth, women and men who have become drug abusers and to fight against all aspects of the world drug problem;

8. Call upon the United Nations system, and invite the international financial institutions, such as the World Bank and the regional development banks, to include action against the world drug problem in their programmes, taking into account the priorities of States;

9. Call for the establishment or strengthening of regional or subregional mechanisms, as needed, with the assistance of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the International Narcotics Control Board, and invite those mechanisms to share experiences and conclusions resulting from the implementation of national strategies and to report on their activities to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

10. Express deep concern about links between illicit drug production, trafficking and involvement of terrorist groups, criminals and transnational organized crime, and are resolved to strengthen our cooperation in response to those threats;

11. Are alarmed by the growing violence resulting from links between illicit production of and illicit trafficking in arms and drugs, and resolve to increase our cooperation in stemming illegal arms trafficking and to achieve concrete results in this field through appropriate measures;

12. Call upon our communities, especially families, and their political, religious, educational, cultural, sports, business and union leadership, non-governmental organizations and the media worldwide actively to promote a society free of drug abuse, especially by emphasizing and facilitating healthy, productive and fulfilling alternatives to the consumption of illicit drugs, which must not become accepted as a way of life;

13. Decide to devote particular attention to the emerging trends in the illicit manufacture, trafficking and consumption of synthetic drugs, and call for the establishment or strengthening by the year 2003 of national legislation and programmes giving effect to the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors, adopted at the present session;

14. Also decide to devote particular attention to the measures for the control of precursors, adopted at the present session, and further decide to establish the year 2008 as a target date for States, with a view to eliminating or reducing significantly the illicit manufacture, marketing and trafficking of psychotropic substances, including synthetic drugs, and the diversion of precursors;

15. Undertake to make special efforts against the laundering of money linked to drug trafficking and, in that context, emphasize the importance of strengthening international, regional and subregional cooperation, and recommend that States that have not yet done so adopt by the year 2003 national money-laundering legislation and programmes in accordance with relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, as well as the measures for countering money-laundering, adopted at the present session;

16. Also undertake to promote multilateral, regional, subregional and bilateral cooperation among judicial and law enforcement authorities to deal with criminal organizations involved in drug offences and related criminal activities, in accordance with the measures to promote judicial cooperation, adopted at the present session, and encourage States to review and, where appropriate, to strengthen by the year 2003 the implementation of those measures;

17. Recognize that demand reduction is an indispensable pillar in the global approach to countering the world drug problem, commit ourselves to introducing into our national programmes and strategies the provisions set out in the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, to working closely with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to develop action-oriented strategies to assist in the implementation of the Declaration, and to establishing the year 2003 as a target date for new or enhanced drug demand reduction strategies and programmes set up in close collaboration with public health, social welfare and law enforcement authorities, and also commit ourselves to achieving significant and measurable results in the field of demand reduction by the year 2008;

18. Reaffirm the need for a comprehensive approach to the elimination of illicit narcotic crops in line with the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, adopted at the present session, stress the special importance of cooperation in alternative development, including the better integration of the most vulnerable sectors involved in the illicit drug market into legal and viable economic activities, emphasize the need for eradication programmes and law enforcement measures to counter illicit cultivation, production, manufacture and trafficking, paying special attention to the protection of the environment, and, in this regard, strongly support the work of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in the field of alternative development;

19. Welcome the global approach by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to the elimination of illicit crops, and commit ourselves to working closely with the Programme to develop strategies with a view to eliminating or reducing significantly the illicit cultivation of the coca bush, the cannabis plant and the opium poppy by the year 2008. We affirm our determination to mobilize international support for our efforts to achieve these goals;

20. Call upon all States to take into account the outcome of the present session when formulating national strategies and programmes and to report biennially to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on their efforts to meet the above-mentioned goals and targets for the years 2003 and 2008, and request the Commission to analyse these reports in order to enhance the cooperative effort to combat the world drug problem.

These are new and serious promises which will be difficult to achieve, but we are resolved that such commitments will be met by practical action and the resources needed to ensure real and measurable results;

Together we can meet this challenge.

Also on 10 June [meeting 9], the Assembly adopted resolution S-20/3 without vote [agenda items 9, 10 & 11].

Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction

The General Assembly

Adopts the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction

I. The challenge

1. All countries are affected by the devastating consequences of drug abuse and illicit trafficking: adverse effects on health; the upsurge in crime, violence and corruption; the draining of human, natural and financial resources that might otherwise be used for social and economic development; the destruction of individuals, families and communities; and the undermining of political, cultural, social and economic structures.

2. Drug abuse affects all sectors of society and countries at all levels of development. Therefore, drug demand reduction policies and programmes should address all sectors of society.

3. A rapidly changing social and economic climate, coupled with increased availability and promotion of drugs and the demand for them, have contributed to the increasing magnitude of the global drug abuse problem. The complexity of the problem has been compounded by changing patterns of drug abuse, supply and distribution. There has been an increase in social and economic factors which make people, especially the young, more vulnerable and likely to engage in drug use and drug-related risk-taking behaviour.

4. Extensive efforts have been and continue to be made by Governments at all levels to suppress the illicit production, trafficking and distribution of drugs. The most effective approach to the drug problem consists of a comprehensive, balanced and coordinated approach, by which supply control and demand reduction reinforce each other, together with the appropriate application of the principle of shared responsibility. There is now a need to intensify our efforts at demand reduction and to provide adequate resources towards that end.

5. Programmes to reduce the demand for drugs should be part of a comprehensive strategy to reduce the demand for all substances of abuse. Such programmes should be integrated to promote cooperation among all concerned, should include a wide variety of appropriate interventions, should promote health and social well-being among individuals, families and communities and should reduce the adverse consequences of drug abuse for the individual and for society as a whole.

6. The present Declaration is an important initiative of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, covering the period from 1991 to 2000. It responds to the need for an international instrument on the adoption of effective measures at the national, regional and international levels against the demand for illicit drugs. It builds and expands upon a number of related international conventions and recommendations, which are referred to in the appendix to the present Declaration.

II. The commitment

7. We the States Members of the United Nations:

(a) Undertake that the present Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction shall direct our actions;

(b) Pledge a sustained political, social, health and educational commitment to investing in demand reduction programmes that will contribute towards reducing public health problems, improving individual health and well-being, promoting social and economic integration, reinforcing family systems and making communities safer;

(c) Agree to promote, in a balanced way, inter-regional and international cooperation in order to control supply and reduce demand;

(d) Adopt measures as provided for in article 14, paragraph 4, of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, which states, inter alia, that parties should adopt "appropriate measures aimed at eliminating or reducing illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances" and may enter into bilateral or multilateral agreements or arrangements aimed at eliminating or reducing that demand.

III. Guiding principles

8. The following principles shall guide the formulation of the demand reduction component of national and international drug control strategies, in accordance with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, in particular, respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the principle of shared responsibility:

(a) There shall be a balanced approach between demand reduction and supply reduction, each reinforcing the other, in an integrated approach to solving the drug problem;

(b) Demand reduction policies shall:

(i) Aim at preventing the use of drugs and at reducing the adverse consequences of drug abuse;

(ii) Provide for and encourage active and coordinated participation of individuals at the community level, both generally and in situations of particular risk, by virtue, for example, of their geographical location, economic conditions or relatively large addict populations;

(iii) Be sensitive to both culture and gender;

(iv) Contribute towards developing and sustaining supportive environments.

IV. Call for action

A. Assessing the problem

9. Demand reduction programmes should be based on a regular assessment of the nature and magnitude of drug use and abuse and drug-related problems in the population. This is imperative for the identification of any emerging trends. Assessments should be undertaken by States in a comprehensive, systematic and periodic manner, drawing on results of relevant studies, allowing for geographical considerations and using similar definitions, indicators and procedures to assess the drug situation. Demand reduction strategies should be built on knowledge acquired from research as well as lessons derived from past programmes. These strategies should take into account the scientific advances in the field, in accordance with the existing treaty obligations, subject to national legislation and the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control.

B. Tackling the problem

10. Demand reduction programmes should cover all areas of prevention, from discouraging initial use to reducing the negative health and social consequences of drug abuse. They should embrace information, education, public awareness, early intervention, counselling, treatment, rehabilitation, relapse prevention, aftercare and social reintegration. Early help and access to services should be offered to those in need.

C. Forging partnerships

11. A community-wide participatory and partnership approach is crucial to the accurate assessment of the problem, the identification of viable solutions and the formulation and implementation of appropriate policies and programmes. Collaboration among Governments, non-governmental organizations, parents, teachers, health professionals, youth and community organizations, employers' and workers' organizations and the private sector is therefore essential. Such collaboration improves public awareness and enhances the capacity of communities to deal with the negative consequences of drug abuse. Public responsibility and awareness and community mobilization are of paramount importance to ensuring the sustainability of demand reduction strategies.

12. Demand reduction efforts should be integrated into broader social welfare and health promotion policies and preventive education programmes. It is necessary to secure and sustain an environment in which healthy choices become attractive and accessible. Efforts to reduce the demand for drugs should be part of a broader social policy approach that encourages multi-sectoral collaboration. Such efforts should be comprehensive, multifaceted, coordinated and integrated with social and public policies that influence the overall health and social and economic well-being of people.

D. Focusing on special needs

13. Demand reduction programmes should be designed to address the needs of the population in general, as well as those of specific population groups, special attention being paid to youth. Programmes should be effective, relevant and accessible to those groups most at risk, taking into account differences in gender, culture and education.

14. In order to promote the social reintegration of drug-abusing offenders, where appropriate and consistent with the national laws and policies of Member States, Governments should consider providing, either as an alternative to conviction or punishment, or in addition to punishment, that abusers of drugs should undergo treatment, education, aftercare, rehabilitation and social reintegration. Member States should develop within the criminal justice system, where appropriate, capacities for assisting drug abusers with education, treatment and rehabilitation services. In this overall context, close cooperation between criminal justice, health and social systems is a necessity and should be encouraged.

E. Sending the right message

15. Information utilized in educational and prevention programmes should be clear, scientifically accurate and reliable, culturally valid, timely and, where possible, tested with a target population. Every attempt should be made to ensure credibility, avoid sensationalism, promote trust and enhance effectiveness. States should, in cooperation with the media, seek to raise public consciousness about the hazards of drug use and to promote prevention messages, countering the promotion of drug use in popular culture.

F. Building on experience

16. States should place appropriate emphasis on training policy makers, programme planners and practitioners in all aspects of the design, execution and evaluation of demand reduction strategies and programmes. Those strategies and programmes should be ongoing and should be aimed at meeting the needs of participants.

17. Demand reduction strategies and specific activities should be thoroughly evaluated to assess and improve their effectiveness. The evaluations should also be appropriate to the specific culture and programme involved. The results of these evaluations should be shared with all those interested.

APPENDIX

Supplementary reference material for Governments considering national drug control strategies

1. Under article 38 of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol and article 20 of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, parties to those conventions are required to take all practicable measures for the prevention of abuse of narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances and "for the early identification, treatment, education, aftercare, rehabilitation and social reintegration of the persons involved". Article 14, paragraph 4, of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 states that parties "shall adopt appropriate measures aimed at eliminating or reducing illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, with a view to reducing human suffering and eliminating financial incentives for illicit traffic."

2. Taking into account the fact that the rise in global concern about the extent, nature and effects of drug abuse has created an opportunity and the will to intensify action, States reaffirm the validity and importance of the international agreements and declarations in the area of demand reduction that have been elaborated. The importance of demand reduction was confirmed by the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, held at Vienna from 17 to 26 June 1987, which adopted the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control. The Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline sets out fourteen targets in the field of demand reduction, as well as the types of activities needed to achieve them at the national, regional and international levels. The General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs have all adopted resolutions endorsing the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline and emphasizing the need to pay increasing attention to demand reduction. Moreover, at its seventeenth special session, on international cooperation against illicit production, supply, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, the General Assembly, by its resolution S-17/2 of 23 February 1990, adopted the Political Declaration and Global Programme of Action. The Global Programme of Action, in paragraphs 9 to 37, addresses issues related to the prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to elimination of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to the treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug abusers. Further attention was directed to demand reduction by the World Ministerial Summit to Reduce the Demand for Drugs and to Combat the Cocaine Threat, held in London from 9 to 11 April 1990.

3. In addition, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, in article 33, emphasizes the need to protect children from the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. A similar point is made in the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which, in paragraphs 77 and 78, includes proposals for involving youth organizations and young people in demand reduction activities. Also of significance is the Code of Practice on the Management of Alcohol- and Drug-related Issues in the Workplace, adopted by a tripartite meeting of experts and subsequently endorsed by the Governing Body of the International Labour Organization at its two hundred and sixty-second session, in 1995. The principles of equality of opportunity and treatment contained in the Convention concerning Discrimination in Respect of Employment and Occupation (No. 111) adopted by the International Labour Organization in 1958 are also directly relevant to demand reduction.

On the same date [meeting 9], the Assembly adopted resolutions S-20/4 A-E without vote [agenda items 9, 10 & 11].

Measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem

A

Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors

Adopts the following Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors:

I. Raising awareness of the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants

Problem

1. The problem of amphetamine-type stimulants, though relatively new in many countries, is growing quickly and is unlikely to go away on its own. It is rapidly changing in scope and geographical spread. Yet global awareness of it is limited and responses to it are heterogeneous and inconsistent.

Action

2. The international community should give higher priority to combating the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants in all its aspects. The competent entities of the United Nations system should give appropriate consideration to that problem. The subject of amphetamine-type stimulants should be given higher priority and should become a regular item on the agenda of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

3. International and regional bodies should continue to advocate implementation of the extensive framework of international treaties, as well as resolutions or decisions addressing various aspects of the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants, adopted by the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board.

4. International bodies such as the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the International Narcotics Control Board and the World Health Organization should strengthen their work on the technical and scientific dimensions of the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants and disseminate the results in regular publications for States and the general public.

5. States should give the issue the priority and attention it deserves and implement the global framework mentioned in paragraph 3 above.

6. In addition to efforts by States, mobilization of the private sector and non-governmental organizations should be sought in achieving awareness of the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants.

7. States should disseminate information on actions taken in fulfilment of the present Action Plan and report on them to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, which, in turn, should review and appraise implementation of the Action Plan at the national, regional and international levels.

II. Reducing demand for illicit amphetamine-type stimulants

Problem

8. In many countries, abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants is increasingly concentrated among younger segments of the population, who widely and erroneously believe the substances to be safe and benign. Such abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants is threatening to become a part of mainstream consumer culture.

Action

9. International bodies such as the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the World Health Organization should, on a regular basis, (a) collate current information on the health effects of amphetamine-type stimulants and their by-products; (b) study the social, economic and cultural driving forces of demand for amphetamine-type stimulants;

(c) identify, document and disseminate good practices in the prevention and treatment of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants, as well as in the prescription of licit amphetamine-type stimulants; and (d) coordinate work with non-governmental organizations in these areas.

10. States should (a) continuously monitor changing patterns of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants; (b) investigate social, economic, health and cultural dimensions of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants; (c) give priority to research, where capacity is available, on the long-term health effects of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants; (d) use and disseminate the results of these activities, including the information collated by the international bodies, for targeted prevention and treatment efforts as well as, where appropriate, public awareness campaigns; and (e) include in their education campaigns, information on the harmful effects of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants.

III. Providing accurate information on amphetamine-type stimulants

Problem

11. Traditionally limited to the ambit of underground literature, information on illicit amphetamine-type stimulants has now become accessible to a large population through modern technology. Recipes for clandestine manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants, techniques of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants, images of amphetamine-type stimulants as harmless drugs, and methods of evading existing controls are all widely available. This malign influence should be countered by the positive use of information technology, such as the Internet, for educational and training purposes.

Action

12. Consultations should be initiated at the national, regional and international levels, as appropriate, with representatives of the traditional media and the telecommunication and software industries to promote and encourage self-restraint and to develop frameworks, based on existing law, for the removal of illegal drug-related information. Frameworks could be developed from industry-managed open-complaint mechanisms such as reporting hotlines, which allow Internet users to report instances of illegal drug-related material found on the Internet. Responsibility for enforcement action should remain with the appropriate enforcement authorities. States should also encourage the development and use of rating and filtering software, which enables users to protect themselves from material that, while not illegal, may contain offensive or undesirable information.

13. States should ensure that their legal frameworks regarding illegal drugs and drug-related information apply, as appropriate, to the Internet as they do off-line.

14. International bodies such as the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Criminal Police Organization and the Customs Cooperation Council (also called the World Customs Organization), as well as appropriate regional and national organizations, should participate in a worldwide clearing-house system (that is, the electronic linking, through the Internet, of national, regional and international documentation centres on substance abuse) to disseminate accurate and timely information on various aspects of the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants, as well as use the Internet for distance-learning purposes, with particular emphasis on assistance to developing countries.

15. States should (a) use modern information technology to disseminate information on adverse health, social and economic consequences of abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants; and (b) encourage methodological development, standardized terminology and coordinated data collection on amphetamine-type stimulants through, inter alia, participation in the international clearing-house system.

16. States should also take appropriate action to implement fully the provisions of article 10, paragraph 2, of the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 on prohibiting the advertisement of controlled substances to the general public and article 3, paragraph 1 (c) (iii), of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 on publicly inciting illicit activities related to drugs.

IV. Limiting the supply of amphetamine-type stimulants

Problem

17. For amphetamine-type stimulants, the principal supply control strategies are to target trafficking, stop illicit manufacture and prevent diversion of laboratory equipment and the chemical starting materials (that is, the precursors). The latter is particularly important because it is the precursors rather than the end products of amphetamine-type stimulants that are trafficked inter-regionally. The precursors, however, have a wide range of licit industrial uses and form a part of licit international trade. Effective monitoring can be successful only with the close cooperation of industry. Such cooperation also plays a crucial role in preventing the diversion of amphetamine-type stimulants from licit sources. Information furnished by Governments to the International Narcotics Control Board shows diversion of amphetamine-type stimulants from licit international trade into illicit channels and high legal consumption of amphetamine-type stimulants in some countries.

Action

18. On the basis of the existing framework for precursor control provided by article 12 of the 1988 Convention, related Economic and Social Council resolutions and recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board, the competent authorities at the international, regional and national levels should take the following actions specific to precursors for amphetamine-type stimulants: (a) the promotion of close cooperation with industry to establish measures and/or a code of conduct governing trade in precursors for amphetamine-type stimulants; (b) enhanced implementation of the control measures against the diversion of precursors for amphetamine-type stimulants listed in the 1988 Convention, including greater use of pre-export notifications and improved procedures for information exchange at the national and international levels; (c) improved monitoring of non-scheduled substances that have been identified as frequently used in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants, including voluntary cooperation between authorities and the relevant branches of industry in order to help to identify suspicious transactions; (d) the establishment of an international special surveillance list of the substances referred to in (c) above as part of a general early warning system; (e) consideration of punishing, as a criminal offence in the sense of article 3 of the 1988 Convention, the diversion of non-scheduled chemical substances with the knowledge that they are intended for use in the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants; and (f) exchanges of information between all the agencies concerned, including in investigations concerning such non-scheduled substances, to detect and prevent illicit trafficking.

19. In order to target the clandestine manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants, international, regional and national authorities should also (a) monitor clandestine manufacture methods; (b) develop drug signature analysis and profiling; (c) monitor, to the extent possible, sales of laboratory equipment, in compliance with article 13 of the 1988 Convention; (d) train all enforcement and control personnel involved in the technical complexities of amphetamine-type stimulants; and (e) investigate the possibility of developing procedures for differentiating between groups of substances with closely related chemical structures and for detecting individual substances within amphetamine-type stimulants, for use by enforcement authorities.

20. States should strengthen their enforcement efforts against the illicit manufacture of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants.

21. On the basis of the 1971 Convention and related Economic and Social Council resolutions, competent authorities, in cooperation with industry, should closely monitor developments in the licit manufacture of, trade in and distribution of amphetamine-type stimulants in order to detect and prevent (a) diversion into illicit channels from manufacture and international and retail trade (pharmacies); and (b) irresponsible marketing and prescribing of such substances. They should also cooperate closely with the International Narcotics Control Board by exchanging all relevant information in accordance with the 1971 Convention and related Economic and Social Council resolutions.

V. Strengthening the control system for amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors

Problem

22. When applied to clandestinely manufactured amphetamine-type stimulants, the international drug control system reveals several shortcomings, inter alia, the complicated procedure for scheduling psychotropic substances, the relative novelty of the precursor control regime and the different procedures for changing the scope of control in the international drug control conventions. Effectively counteracting or preventing emergency situations, which may differ from region to region, requires a control system that is fast, flexible, easy to adapt to new situations and both technically and conceptually commensurate with the ever-greater complexity of the evolving problem of amphetamine-type stimulants.

Action

23. Concerning the wide area of regulatory control, international and regional organizations as well as States should, as appropriate:

(a) Rapidly identify and assess new amphetamine-type stimulants found on illicit markets; States may then wish to use such assessments to determine whether they should bring such substances under control so that legal action can be taken against illicit manufacture and trafficking;

(b) Improve the technical basis of control, particularly with regard to increasing the flexibility of the process of scheduling. This would involve the application of one of the following models used in different countries: (i) emergency or simplified scheduling processes; (ii) scheduling based on structurally similar groups (analogues); and (iii) control for purposes of criminal prosecution, based on similarities in chemical structure and known or anticipated pharmacological effects;

(c) Implement the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and consider the recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board aimed at strengthening the control of psychotropic substances under the 1971 Convention, which should be similar to that applied to narcotic drugs;

(d) Introduce appropriate sanctions and penalties for illicit manufacture of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants in compliance with article 22 of the 1971 Convention and article 3 of the 1988 Convention, strengthen law enforcement efforts against offences related to amphetamine-type stimulants, and consider appropriate penalties and/or alternative measures against the abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants, consistent with national laws and policies;

(e) Improve data collection and exchange of information on issues such as size of clandestine laboratories detected, manufacturing methods, precursors used, purities, prices, sources of amphetamine-type stimulants and their precursors, and epidemiological information;

(f) Strengthen regional cooperation, inter alia, through the following: multilateral exchanges between States of information about the adoption of amendments of national laws relating to the control of amphetamine-type stimulants, regional arrangements for monitoring new developments in the clandestine manufacture of and trafficking in amphetamine-type stimulants, and establishment of rapid channels of communication;

(g) Provide, at the request of States with limited expertise in dealing with the complex technical problems posed by amphetamine-type stimulants, the information and assistance needed to implement effective measures against the manufacture of, trafficking in and abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants;

(h) Improve the exchange of information between States on transactions involving amphetamine-type stimulants in order to strengthen the control system for such substances and their precursors and to apply the "know-your-customer" principle.

B*Control of precursors

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the fact that, in recent years, the diversion of precursors has become one of the most serious phenomena in the field of illicit drug manufacture,

Noting that the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 provide the international basis for drug and precursor control,

Reaffirming the importance of preventing the diversion of chemicals from legitimate commerce to illicit drug manufacture as an essential component of a comprehensive strategy against drug abuse and trafficking,

Recognizing that combating this phenomenon calls for the adoption and effective application of strict and modern laws that make it possible to prevent and penalize such criminal conduct, as well as for the establishment of efficient and fully trained investigatory bodies and organs of justice that possess the human and material resources required to deal with the problem,

Noting the special problem posed by synthetic drugs, which can be manufactured illicitly in a variety of forms using chemicals, many of which can be easily substituted,

Noting also the progress made in developing practical guidelines for the implementation of the international drug control conventions, in particular the International Narcotics Control Board Guidelines for Use by National Authorities in Preventing the Diversion of Precursors and Essential Chemicals, and the annex entitled "Summary of the recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board relevant to implementation by Governments of article 12 of the 1988 Convention", which appears annually in the report of the Board on the implementation of article 12 of the 1988 Convention,

Conscious of the progress made in controlling shipments of precursors as a result of cooperation between the competent national authorities in a number of States, and of the important work conducted by the International Narcotics Control Board in facilitating that cooperation and in assisting Governments in verifying the legitimacy of individual transactions to prevent their diversion to illicit traffic,

Conscious also of the fact that many States lack sufficient resources to conduct in-depth investigations that would enable them to determine the legitimacy of transactions,

Considering that experience in precursor control demonstrates that multilateral exchange of information between competent national authorities of all States concerned, as well as the international organizations concerned, supplemented by bilateral and regional agreements for information-sharing where necessary, is essential in preventing the diversion of precursors,

Deeply concerned that drug traffickers continue to have access to the precursors required for the illicit manufacture of drugs, including substances listed in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention, as well as other substances that are used as substitutes,

Considering that measures against the diversion of precursors can be effective only through concerted worldwide action and international cooperation guided by common principles and objectives,

Decides to adopt the measures to prevent the illicit manufacture, import, export, trafficking, distribution and diversion from licit channels to the illicit traffic of precursors used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including substitute chemicals, as well as additional measures to enhance international cooperation in precursor control, which are presented below.

- I. Measures to prevent the illicit manufacture, import, export, trafficking, distribution and diversion of precursors used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

- A. Legislation and national control systems

Problem

1. The necessary actions to be taken by States to prevent diversion, and the success of those actions in identifying attempted diversions and stopping shipments, are possible only if States have established an adequate legislative basis or system of control that allows them to monitor effectively the movement of precursors. Furthermore, mechanisms and procedures must be established for effective implementation of the legislation in place.

2. In order to establish effective systems of control, States need to identify competent national authorities and their specific roles and to share that information with other States. They also need to share details of the actual control measures applied.

3. Many States have not yet taken those necessary steps.

Action

4. States, in cooperation with competent international and regional bodies and, if necessary and to the extent possible, with the private sector in each State, should:

- (a) Adopt and implement, where they have not already done so, the national laws and regulations required for strict compliance with the provisions and proposals of article 12 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, and related resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the Economic and Social Council, including, in particular, the establishment of a system of control and licensing of the enterprises and persons engaged in the manufacture and distribution of substances listed in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention and a system for monitoring the international trade in such substances for the purpose of facilitating the detection of suspicious shipments, and designate competent national authorities responsible for implementing such controls;

- (b) Review regularly, and take appropriate steps to strengthen existing precursor controls should any weaknesses be identified, giving full consideration to the related recommendations of the International Narcotics Control Board as contained in the annual reports of the Board on the implementation of article 12 of the 1988 Convention;

- (c) Adopt penal, civil or administrative measures for punishing, in accordance with their legislative provisions, as a criminal offence in the sense of article 3 of the 1988 Convention, the unlawful conduct of individuals or companies in connection with the diversion of precursors from legitimate commerce into the illicit manufacture of drugs;

- (d) Exchange experience on procedures for the adoption of legislation and on the application of measures for combating and punishing illicit traffic in and diversion of precursors, including the use, where appropriate, of controlled deliveries;

- (e) Submit timely reports to the International Narcotics Control Board on national regulations adopted to control the export, import and transit of precursors, including details of the requirements that have to be met for the authorization of imports and exports;

- (f) Adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the disposal of seized chemicals has no harmful effect on the environment.

- B. Information exchange

Problem

5. Rapid and timely information exchange between importing and exporting States is the key to effective precursor control, allowing States to verify the legitimacy of individual transactions and identify suspicious shipments in order to prevent the diversion of precursors. Many States have not yet established systematic mechanisms to ensure such rapid communication exchange, including timely feedback, with other competent national authorities, and with the International Narcotics Control Board, even on a confidential basis.

6. Similarly, traffickers quickly turn to sources in other States when they are denied the chemicals that they require. Experience has confirmed the importance of immediately sharing information on diversion attempts and suspicious transactions or stopped shipments with other States, and with the International Narcotics Control Board, in order to counter such attempts elsewhere.

Action

7. States, in cooperation with competent international and regional bodies and, if necessary and to the extent possible, with the private sector in each State, should:

- (a) Improve their mechanisms and procedures for monitoring trade in precursors, including the following actions:

- (i) Regular exchange of information between exporting, importing and transit States, and with the International Narcotics Control Board, on exports of precursors before they take place, including, in particular, the provision by exporting States of pre-export notification to the competent authorities in importing countries for all transactions involving the substances in Table I and, in addition to the requirements of article 12, paragraph 10, of the 1988 Convention, acetic anhydride and potassium permanganate upon request to the Secretary-General by the importing country. Recognizing the importance and usefulness of pre-export notifications for combating effectively the illicit production of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and, particularly, amphetamine-type stimulants, the same efforts should be made with regard to the remaining substances listed in Table II. These measures should complement tight domestic controls in all countries, which are also necessary to ensure the prevention of diversion of precursor chemicals;
- (ii) Promotion of the implementation, by competent national authorities, of mechanisms to verify the legitimacy of transactions before they take place, including the exchange of information on the legitimate domestic need for the chemical; timely feedback to exporting States by States that have received pre-export notifications; and provision by exporting States, when requested by the importing State, to allow for adequate time, to the extent possible up to fifteen days to verify the legitimate end-use;

- (iii) Exchange of information between exporting, importing and transit States, and with the International Narcotics Control Board, on suspicious transactions involving precursors and, where appropriate, on seizures effected and denials made;

(b) Keep confidential any industrial, business, commercial or professional secrets or trade processes contained in the reports provided by States on the export, import or transit and intended use of precursors, in accordance with the provisions of article 12, paragraph 11, of the 1988 Convention. Where necessary, an appropriate legal framework should be set up to ensure the suitable protection of personal data;

(c) Notify, as rapidly as possible, the International Narcotics Control Board, and the other States concerned as they consider necessary, of any decision to deny a permit for the shipment of a precursor if it has not been possible to verify the legitimacy of a transaction, whether an import, an export or a transshipment, providing all relevant information concerning the reasons for the denial, so that other States may consider taking a similar course of action. Whenever an importing, an exporting or a transit State is considering issuing a permit for shipment, it should make its decision with due assessment of all the elements of the case, and in particular of any such information provided to it by the State that has denied the issue of a permit for that shipment.

C. Data collection

Problem

5. Information on the normal patterns of legitimate trade and on the licit uses of and requirements for precursors is necessary to verify the legitimacy of individual transactions. Without such information, it is difficult to monitor the movement of precursors as required under article 12 of the 1988 Convention. Many States are not yet able to collect data on the licit movement of precursors. The inability to do so may indicate that the framework and systems for adequate control are not in place and that competencies in the field of precursor control have not been clearly defined.

Action

9. States, in cooperation with competent international and regional bodies and, if necessary and to the extent possible, with the private sector in each State, should:

(a) Design and establish flexible and effective mechanisms, where they do not already exist, subject to provisions for confidentiality and data protection, for obtaining data on the licit manufacture, import or export of precursors, and on any other activity related to the trade in precursors and for monitoring the movement of such substances, including the establishment of a register of public or private companies engaged in any activity relating thereto, which are to report suspicious orders for, or cases of theft of, precursors and to cooperate at all times with the competent national authorities;

(b) Establish or strengthen cooperation with associations of the chemical trade and industry, and with persons or companies engaged in any activity related to precursors, for example, through the establishment of guidelines or a code of conduct, to intensify efforts aimed at controlling such substances;

(c) Establish the principle of "know your customer" for those who manufacture or market chemicals in order to improve the exchange of information.

II. Towards more universal international cooperation in precursor control

Problem

10. Achievements in preventing the diversion of precursors have been due to the activities of a growing, but still relatively small, number of Governments of exporting, importing and transit States and territories worldwide.

11. Those States have taken specific steps to monitor the movement of precursors through their territories, even when they do not have comprehensive legislation for precursor control in place. However, many States have not yet developed adequate systems for precursor control, in spite of the fact that traffickers have exploited as points of diversion those countries and territories where controls are inadequate. Controls do not serve their purpose if all States facing similar situations with regard to the trafficking of precursors do not take similar practical steps to ensure that diversion attempts are identified or do not share their experiences in implementing controls. More uniform action is required by all States to limit the availability to traffickers of the precursors required for illicit drug manufacture.

Action

12. States, in cooperation with competent international and regional bodies and, if necessary and to the extent possible, with the private sector in each State, should:

(a) Institutionalize uniform procedures to facilitate the widespread, multilateral exchange of information on suspicious transactions and stopped shipments in the course of implementing national precursor control laws and regulations based on the international drug control conventions and related resolutions, guidelines and recommendations, in such a way as to complement bilateral or regional agreements;

(b) Promote multilateral arrangements that encourage the exchange of essential information for effective monitoring of the international trade in precursors, to complement similar bilateral or regional agreements, with special emphasis on devising practical systems for sharing information on individual transactions;

(c) Disseminate more systematic information on the ways and means used by criminal organizations for illicit trafficking in and diversion of precursors, with a view to adopting measures to prevent such illicit activities, in accordance with article 12, paragraph 12 (c), of the 1988 Convention;

(d) Promote technical assistance programmes for States upon request, according the highest priority to those with the least resources, for the purpose of strengthening control of precursors and avoiding their diversion for illicit purposes;

(e) Promote the exchange of experience relating to police, customs and other administrative investigation, interception, detection and control of diversion of precursors;

(f) Organize expert meetings, where necessary, on combating the illicit traffic in and diversion of precursors in order to promote professional skills and raise levels of expertise.

III. Substitute chemicals

Problem

13. Some of the substances required for illicit drug manufacture that are listed in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention have become especially difficult to obtain as a result of the implementation of the provisions of that Convention. Traffickers have successfully sought to obtain chemicals that may be used as substitutes for those that are more closely monitored. In addition, they have identified and used new methods for processing or manufacture, requiring substances currently not listed in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention. They have also manufactured so-called controlled-drug analogues, many of which again require as starting material substances currently not listed in Tables I and II.

Action

14. States, in cooperation with competent international and regional bodies and, if necessary and to the extent possible, with the private sector in each State, should:

(a) Cooperate with the International Narcotics Control Board in the preparation of a limited international special surveillance list of substances currently not in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention and for which substantial information exists of their use in illicit drug trafficking, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in section I, paragraph 2, of its resolution 1996/29 of 24 July 1996, contributing to the maintenance of that list by informing the Board on a regular basis, in accordance with article 12, paragraph 12, of the Convention, about non-scheduled substances that have been diverted from licit channels to illicit traffic and promoting studies of the potential use of non-scheduled substances with a view to the timely identification of any that could be used in the illicit manufacture of drugs;

(b) Apply monitoring measures, whether voluntary, administrative or legislative, in cooperation with the chemical industry, so as to prevent the diversion from licit channels to illicit traffic of substances included on the special surveillance list, including specific monitoring measures for those substances that are relevant at the national or regional levels. In addition, States shall consider punishing, as a criminal offence in the sense of article 3 of the 1988 Convention, the diversion of non-scheduled chemical substances with the knowledge that they are intended for use in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances, and introducing related penal, civil and administrative sanctions.

C

Measures to promote judicial cooperation

Adopts the following measures to promote judicial cooperation:

I. Extradition

1. It is recommended that States:

(a) If needed, and as far as possible, on a periodic basis, review their domestic legislation to simplify procedures for extradition, consistent with their constitutional principles and the basic concepts of their legal systems;

(b) Inform other States of the competent authority or authorities designated to receive, respond to and process extradition requests; in that regard, communicating the name, address and telephone number of the authority or authorities to the United Nations International Drug Control Programme would be useful;

(c) Prepare summaries of their domestic laws and extradition practices, to be made available to other States;

(d) Subject to constitutional provisions, international drug control treaties and national legislation, consider extraditing their nationals for serious drug offences on agreement that they will be surrendered for prosecution but that they could be returned to serve any sentences imposed in their State of nationality; and reconsider the other traditional exceptions to extradition, particularly in cases involving serious crimes;

(e) Utilize, where appropriate, the Model Treaty on Extradition as a resource when negotiating such treaties;

(f) Maximize the use of modern technologies for facilitating communications, as long as they are secure and consistent with domestic legal systems.

II. Mutual legal assistance

2. It is recommended that States:

(a) Ensure that their domestic legislation enables them to implement article 7 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

(b) Designate an authority or authorities with the power both to make and to execute, or to transmit for execution, requests for mutual legal assistance; and, pursuant to the provisions of article 7, paragraphs 8 and 9 of the 1988 Convention, notify the Secretary-General of the name, address, facsimile number, telephone number and e-mail address (if any) of the authority or authorities designated to receive such requests, as well as the acceptable language or languages;

(c) Provide other States with guides or manuals on how to make requests for mutual legal assistance;

(d) Develop model forms for requests for mutual legal assistance;

(e) Utilize, where appropriate, the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters as a resource when negotiating such treaties;

(f) Maximize the use of modern communication technologies, such as the Internet and facsimile machines, as long as they are secure and consistent with the domestic legal system and available resources, to expedite and render more efficient requests for mutual legal assistance and the execution of such requests;

(g) Consider the use of telephone and video-link technology for obtaining witness statements and testimony, as long as they are secure and consistent with domestic legal systems and available resources.

III. Transfer of proceedings

3. It is recommended that States:

(a) Make available information on their experiences in the transfer of proceedings, if they possess such experiences, to other interested States;

(b) Consider enacting the legislation necessary to transfer or receive proceedings in criminal matters;

(c) Consider whether it would be useful to enter into agreements with other States that have similar legal systems to transfer or receive proceedings in criminal matters, particularly with those States that do not extradite their own nationals; and, in that connection, refer to the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters as a basis for negotiations.

IV. Other forms of cooperation and training

4. It is recommended that States:

(a) Consider developing or expanding programmes for the exchange of law enforcement personnel, giving special consideration to exchanging experts who can assist in such areas as forensic evidence or financial investigations or who can exchange knowledge, experience and techniques concerning drug trafficking and related offences;

(b) Where appropriate, consider methods of enhancing cooperation between law enforcement agencies; improve the sharing of intelligence and the development of shared investigative strategies to combat drug-trafficking organizations operating in several States; ensure that investigative activities in one State complement those undertaken in other States; and be ready to work together on specific projects, without prejudice to the jurisdictions of the States concerned;

(c) Exchange information developed through forensic analysis, particularly on the basis of scientific profiles of seized narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors and the examination of packaging materials;

(d) Consider developing secure means of using modern communication capabilities to facilitate the fast exchange of information consistent with domestic legal systems;

(e) Consider establishing specialized units within or linked to law enforcement agencies, for investigating drug-trafficking cases, encouraging close coordination among all relevant agencies, such as customs, coast-guard and police departments, and ensuring that training is provided;

(f) Consider measures to reinforce cooperation between the criminal justice, health and social systems in order to reduce drug abuse and related health problems;

(g) Strengthen cooperation not only among enforcement agencies, but also among judicial authorities;

(h) Cooperate, as appropriate, with neighbouring States through agreements or arrangements to ensure that their inland waters are not used for illicit traffic.

V. Controlled delivery

5. It is recommended that States:

(a) If permitted by the basic principles of their respective domestic legal systems, ensure that their legislation, procedures and practices allow for the use of the technique of controlled delivery at both the domestic and the international levels, subject to agreements, arrangements and understandings mutually consented to between States;

(b) Consider entering into agreements and arrangements with other States, particularly neighbouring States, to facilitate the use of controlled deliveries; or consider that possibility on a case-by-case basis;

(c) Assist one another through the exchange of experience and equipment; and, if they have developed technical equipment for tracking consignments of illicit drugs or have developed innocuous substances that can be substituted for illicit drugs, consider supplying the equipment or substances to other States to ensure successful controlled deliveries.

VI. Illicit traffic by sea

6. It is recommended that States:

(a) Review national legislation to ensure that the legal requirements of the 1988 Convention are met, for example, the identification of competent national authorities, the maintenance of ship registries and the establishment of adequate law enforcement powers;

(b) Review communication channels and procedures between competent authorities to facilitate coordination and cooperation with the objective of ensuring rapid responses and decisions;

(c) Promote regional cooperation in maritime drug law enforcement by means of bilateral and regional meetings, including meetings of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies;

(d) Negotiate and implement bilateral and multilateral agreements to enhance cooperation in combating the illicit drug traffic by sea in accordance with article 17 of the 1988 Convention;

(e) Provide training to law enforcement personnel in maritime drug law enforcement, including the identification and surveillance of suspicious vessels, procedures for boarding, searching techniques and drug identification;

(f) Cooperate with other States through multilateral training seminars;

(g) Consistent with their legal systems, promote common maritime law enforcement procedures through the use of the forthcoming Maritime Drug Law Enforcement Training Guide of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme.

VII. Complementary measures

7. It is recommended that States consider designing complementary measures to enhance further the implementation of the 1988 Convention in the following areas, reconciling respect for individual human rights with the basic principles of justice and security:

(a) The protection of judges, prosecutors and other members of surveillance and law enforcement agencies, as well as witnesses, whenever the circumstances so warrant, in cases that involve illicit drug trafficking;

(b) New investigative techniques;

(c) The harmonization and simplification of procedures to increase international cooperation;

(d) The development or strengthening of legal institutions and their capacity for judicial cooperation, especially in respect of drug-related offences;

(e) The improvement of the professionalism of criminal justice personnel through enhanced technical cooperation, training and human resource development.

D

Countering money-laundering

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the problem of laundering of money derived from illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as well as from other serious crimes, has expanded internationally to become such a global threat to the integrity, reliability and stability of financial and trade systems and even government structures as to require countermeasures by the international community as a whole in order to deny safe havens to criminals and their illicit proceeds,

Recalling the provisions of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, according to which all parties to the Convention are required to establish money-laundering as a punishable offence and to adopt the measures necessary to enable the authorities to identify, trace and freeze or seize the proceeds of illicit drug trafficking,

Recalling also Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 5(XXXIX) of 24 April 1996, in which the Commission noted that the forty recommendations of the Financial Action Task Force established by the heads of State or Government of the seven major industrialized countries and the President of the European Commission remained the standard by which the measures against money-laundering adopted by concerned States should be judged, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/40 of 21 July 1997, in which the Council took note with satisfaction of the document entitled "Anti-drug strategy in the hemisphere", approved by the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States at its twentieth regular session, held at Buenos Aires in October 1996, and signed at Montevideo in December 1996, and urged the international community to take due account of the anti-drug strategy in the hemisphere as a significant contribution to the strengthening of the Global Programme of Action adopted by the General Assembly at its seventeenth special session,

Recognizing the political will expressed by the international community, especially as reflected in such initiatives as the Convention on Laundering, Search, Seizure and Confiscation of the Proceeds from Crime, adopted in 1990 by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe and the Ministerial Communique of the Summit of the Americas Ministerial Conference Concerning the Laundering of Proceeds and Instrumentalities of Crime, held at Buenos Aires in December 1995, and by such bodies as the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States, the Asia/Pacific Group on Money Laundering, the Caribbean Financial Action Task Force, the Offshore Group of Banking Supervisors and the Commonwealth, all of which are well-recognized multilateral initiatives aimed at combating money-laundering and constitute legal or policy frameworks within which concerned States are defining and adopting measures against money-laundering,

Aware that the proceeds of illicit drug trafficking and other illicit activities, which are laundered through banks and other financial institutions, constitute an obstacle to the implementation of policies designed to liberalize financial markets in order to attract legitimate investment, in that they distort those markets,

Emphasizing that there is a need to harmonize national legislation with a view to ensuring appropriate coordination of policies for combating money-laundering, without prejudice to the action each State is undertaking within its own jurisdiction to combat this form of criminality,

Recognizing the need to promote and develop effective mechanisms for the pursuit, freezing, seizure and confiscation of property obtained through or derived from illicit activities, so as to avoid its use by criminals,

Recognizing that only through international cooperation and the establishment of bilateral and multilateral information networks such as the Egmont Group, which will enable States to exchange information between competent authorities, will it be possible to combat effectively the problem of money-laundering,

Emphasizing the enormous efforts of a number of States to draw up and apply domestic legislation that identifies the activity of money-laundering as a criminal offence,

Realizing the importance of progress being made by all States in conforming to the relevant recommendations and the need for States to participate actively in international and regional initiatives designed to promote and strengthen the implementation of effective measures against money-laundering,

1. Strongly condemns the laundering of money derived from illicit drug trafficking and other serious crimes, as well as the use of the financial systems of States for that purpose;

2. Urges all States to implement the provisions against money-laundering that are contained in the United Nations Convention against Illicit Trafficking in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 and the other relevant international instruments on money-laundering, in accordance with fundamental constitutional principles, by applying the following principles:

(a) Establishment of a legislative framework to criminalize the laundering of money derived from serious crimes in order to provide for the prevention, detection, investigation and prosecution of the crime of money-laundering through, inter alia:

- (i) Identification, freezing, seizure and confiscation of the proceeds of crime;
- (ii) International cooperation; and mutual legal assistance in cases involving money-laundering;
- (iii) Inclusion of the crime of money-laundering in mutual legal assistance agreements for the purpose of ensuring judicial assistance in investigations, court cases or judicial proceedings relating to that crime;

(b) Establishment of an effective financial and regulatory regime to deny criminals and their illicit funds access to national and international financial systems, thus preserving the integrity of financial systems worldwide and ensuring compliance with laws and other regulations against money-laundering through:

- (i) Customer identification and verification requirements applying the principle of "know your customer", in order to have available for competent authorities the necessary information on the identity of clients and the financial movements that they carry out;
- (ii) Financial record-keeping;
- (iii) Mandatory reporting of suspicious activity;
- (iv) Removal of bank-secrecy impediments to efforts directed at preventing, investigating and punishing money-laundering;
- (v) Other relevant measures;

(c) Implementation of law enforcement measures to provide tools for, inter alia:

- (i) Effective detection, investigation, prosecution and conviction of criminals engaging in money-laundering activity;
  - (ii) Extradition procedures;
  - (iii) Information-sharing mechanisms;
3. Calls upon the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to continue to work, within the framework of its global programme against money-laundering, with relevant multilateral and regional institutions, organizations or bodies engaged in activities against money-laundering and drug trafficking and with international financial institutions to give effect to the above principles by providing training, advice and technical assistance to States upon request and where appropriate.

Action plan on international cooperation on the eradication of illicit drug crops and on alternative development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that the fight against illicit drugs must be pursued in accordance with the provisions of the international drug control treaties, on the basis of the principle of shared responsibility, and requires an integrated and balanced approach in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, and particularly with full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of States and all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing that effective crop control strategies can encompass a variety of approaches, including alternative development, law enforcement and eradication,

Defining alternative development as a process to prevent and eliminate the illicit cultivation of plants containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances through specifically designed rural development measures in the context of sustained national economic growth and sustainable development efforts in countries taking action against drugs, recognizing the particular sociocultural characteristics of the target communities and groups, within the framework of a comprehensive and permanent solution to the problem of illicit drugs,

Recognizing that the problem of the illicit production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances is often related to development problems and that those links require, within the context of shared responsibility, close cooperation among States, the competent organs of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, regional bodies and international financial institutions,

Aware that, in order to achieve maximum effectiveness in the fight against drug abuse, it is necessary to maintain a balanced approach by allocating appropriate resources to initiatives that include the reduction of both illicit demand and illicit supply,

Advocates the following objectives for strategies, programmes and international cooperation to ensure the effectiveness of the common endeavour to reduce the illicit production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to contribute to sustainable human development:

- I. The need for a balanced approach to confront high levels of illicit cultivation

Challenge

1. Despite the adoption of international conventions promoting the prohibition of illicit drug crops, the problem of the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, the coca bush and the cannabis plant continues at alarming levels. History has shown that there is no single response to reducing and eliminating the cultivation and production of illicit drugs. Balanced approaches are likely to result in more efficient strategies and successful outcomes.

Action

2. States should strongly condemn, and urge community leaders to condemn, the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, the coca bush and the cannabis plant, as well as other illicit drug crops.

3. States should ensure that the specific commitments in the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol and in the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988 regarding illicit drug crop cultivation are implemented and enforced. In particular, this includes paragraphs 2 and 3 of article 14 of the 1988 Convention, which require parties to take appropriate measures to prevent the illicit cultivation of plants containing narcotic and psychotropic substances and to cooperate to improve the effectiveness of eradication efforts, inter alia, giving support to alternative development.

4. States in which illicit cultivation of drug crops exists should develop national strategies for the reduction and elimination of illicit crops, including concrete measurable goals and objectives, taking into account existing drug control master plans. National drug crop reduction and elimination strategies should include comprehensive measures such as programmes in alternative development, law enforcement and eradication.

5. States should take appropriate measures to develop and implement national plans for alternative development, creating appropriate institutions, as well as a suitable legal, economic and social framework.

6. Alternative development programmes and projects should be consistent with national drug control policies and national sustainable development policies and strategies in the affected rural communities.

7. In cases of low-income production structures among peasants, alternative development is more sustainable and socially and economically more appropriate than forced eradication.

- II. Strengthening of international cooperation for alternative development

Challenge

8. Alternative development is an important component for generating and promoting lawful, viable and sustainable economic options to illicit drug crop cultivation and is one of the key components of the policy and programmes for reducing illicit drug production that have been adopted within the comprehensive framework of the global strategy of the United Nations. The development and implementation of alternative development is primarily the responsibility of the State in which illicit drug cultivation takes place. However, States with illicit drug crops will need continued funding, on the basis of shared responsibility, to support national efforts to eliminate drug crops. Currently, there is insufficient funding for alternative development at the national and international levels.

Action

9. The success of alternative development programmes depends on the long-term political and financial commitment of both the Governments of the affected countries and the international community to supporting integrated rural development involving local communities, effective enforcement of drug control measures and promotion of awareness among the local population of the negative consequences of drug abuse.

10. The international community and the relevant United Nations organizations, in particular the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, should assist States in countering illicit drug production by providing adequate financial and technical assistance for alternative development, with the objective of reducing and eliminating illicit drug crops. Such assistance should be provided within the context of the national control strategies of the recipient States. It should be linked to national commitment and the strong political will of States with illicit cultivation to implement the provisions contained in article 14 of the 1988 Convention.

11. Agencies of the United Nations system and relevant financial institutions should cooperate, within their spheres of competence, in supporting rural development for regions and populations affected by illicit crop cultivation.

12. International financial institutions and regional development banks should be encouraged to provide financial assistance for alternative development programmes.

13. The United Nations International Drug Control Programme should continue its catalytic role in regard to international financial institutions, non-governmental organizations, relevant United Nations organizations and the private sector, and assist interested Governments in approaching such institutions for the purpose of financing and supporting their alternative development programmes and projects.

14. States are exhorted to agree on bilateral mechanisms for cooperation in order to establish and implement eradication and alternative development projects in their frontier areas.

15. The international community should attempt to provide greater access to domestic and international markets for alternative development products, with a view to overcoming problems relating to prices and marketing resulting from the substitution of crops cultivated for illicit purposes by production for licit commercial purposes.

16. Alternative development programmes should be designed for areas that have a potential for adequate drug control and development.

III. Improved and innovative approaches to alternative development

Challenge

17. Alternative development is an important component of a balanced and comprehensive drug control strategy and is intended to create a supportive environment for the implementation of that strategy. It is intended to promote lawful and sustainable socio-economic options for those communities and population groups that have resorted to illicit cultivation as their only viable means of obtaining a livelihood, contributing in an integrated way to the eradication of poverty. However, cumulative efforts and methods of planning and implementation need further improvement to strengthen the existing processes and to implement new and innovative alternative development programmes.

Action

18. Alternative development programmes and international cooperation for that purpose should:

(a) Be adapted to the specific legal, social, economic, ecological and cultural conditions prevailing in a given project region;

(b) Contribute to the creation of sustainable social and economic opportunities through integrated rural development, including infrastructure development, that will help to improve the living conditions of the communities and population groups affected by the existence of illicit cultivation;

(c) Contribute to the promotion of democratic values to encourage community participation, and promote social responsibility to develop a civic culture that rejects the illicit cultivation of crops;

(d) Include appropriate demand reduction measures where there is drug abuse in the targeted communities;

(e) Incorporate the gender dimension by ensuring equal conditions for women and men to participate in the development process, including design and implementation;

(f) Observe environmental sustainability criteria, taking into account the objectives of Agenda 21. Programmes and projects of alternative development are efficient instruments used to avoid any expansion or displacement of illicit cultivation to ecologically fragile areas.

19. In order to ensure that alternative development is sustainable, participatory approaches that are based on dialogue and persuasion and that include the community as a whole, as well as relevant non-governmental organizations, should be applied in the identification, preparation, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of alternative development. Local communities and public authorities should develop commonly agreed goals and objectives and commit themselves by community-based agreements to reducing illicit crops until they are eliminated.

20. Institution-building at the regional and local levels should be regarded as a factor that will contribute to improving the level of participation in activities fostered by alternative development.

21. States should design alternative development programmes, taking into account the regional context. States should cooperate through bilateral, regional and multilateral means to avoid displacement of illicit cultivation from one area, region or country to another.

IV. Enhancing monitoring, evaluation and information-sharing

Challenge

22. States have often undertaken valiant efforts to eliminate the illicit cultivation of the opium poppy, the coca bush and the cannabis plant. Nevertheless, the potential of such efforts has not been fully exploited because of insufficient information and cooperation at policy and operational levels. Moreover, in recent years, the cultivation and production of illicit drug crops has appeared in other countries, reaching all geographical regions. That trend includes cultivation and production in enclosed premises using new methods and technologies.

Action

23. Governments in the producing areas should design efficient and accurate monitoring and verification mechanisms using the most efficient, cost-effective and accessible data collection methods available.

24. Governments should implement follow-up and evaluation systems that will enable them to monitor the qualitative and quantitative impact of alternative development programmes. The sustainability of illicit crop reduction is a most important assessment criterion of alternative development.

25. Governments should share information on illicit drug crop assessment with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and reciprocally with other Governments in order to increase cooperation to eliminate such cultivation. Assessments should also include information about the causes and effects of narcotics production, including linkages to other development problems.

26. States in which the cultivation and production of illicit drug crops has developed in recent years should prepare estimates of the extent of the problem and exchange this information similarly. Those States should consider these factors when formulating and implementing their national plans to tackle the problem of illicit drug crop cultivation and production.

V. The need for law enforcement in controlling illicit crops

Challenge

27. Even when alternative development projects are successful, some growers and processors are not likely to abandon production voluntarily simply because other opportunities already exist; they must see that there is a risk associated with staying in the illicit cultivation of drug crops.

Action

28. States with problems of illicit drug crop cultivation should ensure that alternative development programmes are complemented, when necessary, by law enforcement measures:

(a) Law enforcement measures are required as a complement to alternative development programmes in order to tackle other illicit activities such as the operation of illicit drug laboratories, the diversion of precursors, trafficking, money-laundering and related forms of organized crime, both in areas where alternative development programmes are implemented and elsewhere along the trafficking chain;

(b) Comprehensive law enforcement programmes can affect the profitability of illicitly cultivated drug crops and, in so doing, make alternative sources of legal income more competitive and attractive.

29. When there is organized criminal involvement in illicit drug crop cultivation and drug production, the measures, such as eradication, destruction of illicit drug crops and arrests, called for in the 1961 Convention as amended and the 1988 Convention are particularly appropriate.

30. In areas where viable alternative sources of income already exist, law enforcement measures are required against persistent illicit cultivation of narcotic crops.

31. In areas where alternative development programmes have not yet created viable alternative income opportunities, the application of forced eradication might endanger the success of alternative development programmes.

32. Eradication efforts should utilize available research and ensure that environmentally safe methods are employed.

VI. Follow-up

33. We request the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as appropriate, taking into account the overall outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, on the follow-up to the present Action Plan.

Preparations for the special session

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly held its second session (Vienna, 16-21 March) [A/S-20/4]. Its first session was held in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1265]. In 1998, the Commission held 10 meetings and a number of informal working group meetings, during which it recommended seven draft resolutions and three draft decisions for adoption by the Assembly. It also adopted a decision on arrangements for the accreditation of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to the Commission acting as preparatory body and to the Assembly at the special session [dec. 1998/PC/1].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 February, by decision 1998/207, the Economic and Social Council decided, notwithstanding the provisions of its resolution 1996/17 of 23 July 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1137] and without setting a precedent for future special sessions of the General Assembly for which the functional commissions of the Council might be requested to act as preparatory bodies, to transmit directly to the Assembly at its fifty-second session the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs acting as the preparatory body for the special session.

Conventions

In 1998, international efforts to control narcotic drugs were governed by three global conventions: the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs [YUN 1961, p. 382], which, with some exceptions of detail, replaced earlier narcotics treaties and was amended in 1972 by a Protocol [YUN 1972, p. 397] intended to strengthen the role of INCB; the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1971, p. 380]; and the 1988 United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances [YUN 1988, p. 690].

As at 31 December 1998, 152 States were parties to the 1961 Convention, as amended by the 1972 Protocol. During the year, El Salvador, Grenada, Mozambique, Namibia and Palau became parties.

The number of parties to the 1971 Convention stood at 158 as at 31 December 1998. El Salvador, Georgia, Mozambique, Namibia and Palau became parties during the year.

At year's end, 151 States and the European Union (EU) were parties to the 1988 Convention. Georgia, Iraq, Lithuania, Mozambique, New Zealand, the Republic of Korea and South Africa became parties in 1998.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/64 [YUN 1996, p. 1139], the Secretary-General, in an August report [A/53/383], reviewed activities taken to implement the 1988 Convention by States parties and UNDCP from 1 July 1996 to 30 June 1998. Within UNDCP activities, a Commentary on the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances, 1988 [Sales No. E.98.XL5] was published, pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/42 [YUN 1993, p. 1093]. In addition, UNDCP continued to provide States with legal assistance to encourage adherence to and implementation of the international drug control treaties. The report also summarized the activities of the UN Department of Public Information to disseminate information on the Convention. In addition, it described the action plans and measures adopted by the Assembly at its twentieth special session (see above).

Commission action. At its forty-first session in March [E/1998/28], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reviewed implementation of the international drug control treaties. It considered a January note [E/CN.7/1998/4] by the Secretariat that provided information on various publications, as well as a questionnaire, prepared by UNDCP, which reflected legislative and administrative measures taken by parties and non-parties pursuant to the three global conventions, in addition to some aspects of their implementation experience. The Commission also had before it the report of INCB for 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1264], which indicated a continued upward trend in adherence to the international drug control treaties. The Commission was informed of initiatives taken by Governments to enhance adherence to the treaties and their implementation, and noted that many Governments had made a renewed commitment to chemical control, having become increasingly active in taking the necessary steps to monitor substances listed in Tables I and II of the 1988 Convention and to develop and further strengthen controls. It called for full implementation of the provisions of article 3 of the 1988 Convention, which required Governments to establish public incitement or inducement to use drugs illicitly as a criminal offence, subject to their respective constitutional principles and the basic concepts of their legal systems.

INCB action. In its report covering 1998 [E/INCB/1998/1], INCB called on the States concerned not only to take prompt action to become parties to the 1961 Convention, but also to enact the necessary legislation and regulations required to implement its provisions. Noting that some States had become parties to the 1988 Convention but not to the 1961 Convention, the Board reminded them that the full implementation of the former was not possible without implementing the provisions of the latter, and it urged the Governments concerned to review the issue. It also requested those States that had not done so to implement the provisions of the 1971 Convention. The Board noted the high rate of accession to the 1988 Convention in the first 10 years following its adoption, and requested all States that had not acceded to it to take steps, as a matter of priority, to establish the necessary mechanisms to implement fully its provisions and to become parties to it as soon as possible.

International Narcotics Control Board

The 13-member International Narcotics Control Board held its sixty-fourth (18-29 May) and sixty-fifth (2-19 November) sessions, both in Vienna [E/INCB/1998/1].

In carrying out the responsibilities assigned to it under the international conventions, the Board maintained a continuous dialogue with Governments, pursued through periodic consultations and special missions arranged in agreement with the Governments concerned. The statistical data and other information received from them were used by it in analyses of the licit manufacture of and trade in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances worldwide, in order to identify whether Governments had strictly enforced treaty provisions requiring them to limit the licit manufacture of, trade in and distribution and use of those substances to medical and scientific purposes. The international drug control treaties required the Board to prepare an annual report on its work, examining the drug control situation worldwide, drawing the attention of Governments to gaps and weaknesses in national control and in treaty compliance, and making suggestions and recommendations for improvements at the national and international levels.

The Board assisted national administrations in meeting their obligations under the conventions, proposing and participating in regional training seminars and programmes for drug control administrators. During the year, it collaborated with UNDCP, of which its secretariat formed a part, and with other international bodies concerned with drug control, including the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and UN specialized agencies, particularly the World Health Organization (WHO). It also cooperated with bodies outside the UN system, such as the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol) and the World Customs Organization.

In 1998, the Board continued to be concerned that only about 40 per cent of all Governments had furnished their statistical information for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances by the required deadlines and called once more on all Governments to comply fully with their obligations under the 1961 and 1971 Conventions by furnishing timely and accurate reports. Moreover, while many non-parties to the 1988 Convention had already submitted the information required, it was of serious concern that nearly one half of the parties to that Convention had failed to submit the requisite data for 1997, and that several parties had not provided such data for at least the preceding two years.

Some Governments had issued import authorizations for quantities of psychotropic substances in excess of the assessments reported by them to, and published by, the Board. Investigations into the authenticity of such import authorizations by exporting countries and the Board required additional resources and risked delaying imports of consignments of substances urgently needed for medical purposes. The Board, therefore, requested Governments to establish mechanisms to ensure that their assessments were in line with their legitimate requirements and that no imports exceeding assessments were authorized.

With regard to preventing diversion of drugs and chemicals into illicit channels, the Board and the competent authorities of several exporting countries carried out joint investigations into the legitimacy of a considerable number of commercial transactions. As a result of that cooperation, large quantities of psychotropic substances were prevented from being diverted into illicit channels. The Board noted that some Governments had introduced additional control measures to increase the effectiveness of their national control systems for the distribution of certain psychotropic substances. In some countries, such measures had been adopted in response to the diversion of those substances for abuse in other countries. INCB welcomed the close cooperation of the pharmaceutical industry with law enforcement authorities in many countries to prevent the diversion of some psychotropic substances, and the activities of Interpol, aimed at strengthening the cooperation of law enforcement authorities confronted with the problem.

Recognizing that drug regulations were not a panacea and that drug control measures alone could not eliminate illicit drug trafficking and abuse, the Board welcomed the adoption by the General Assembly of resolutions S-20/3 and S-20/4 A and B (see above), a key element of which was the need for concerted and uniform application, by all Governments, of the provisions of the 1971 Convention and of article 12 of the 1988 Convention, as well as the need for strict compliance with the related resolutions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the Economic and Social Council and with the recommendations of the Board related to the control of psychotropic substances and precursors. The Board appreciated that the Governments represented at the special session had decided to deal with the problem of amphetamine-type stimulants in all its aspects and to give that problem higher priority. It noted that an ever-increasing number of Governments were utilizing some form of pre-export notice for precursors to prevent their diversion. The Board would continue to monitor the progress made by Governments in implementing the measures outlined in the Assembly resolutions and to assist Governments in matters falling within its treaty functions.

The Board monitored the involvement of intermediaries in the diversion of psychotropic substances and precursors, and recognized that diversion could be reduced if its recommendations for additional measures to control international trade in psychotropic substances and precursors were universally implemented. Therefore, it recommended that all Governments alert industry to the risks of diversion arising from the involvement of intermediaries and organize controlled deliveries.

In resolution 1998/25, on demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs (see below), the Economic and Social Council commended the Board for urging Governments to avoid unforeseen imbalances between licit supply of and demand for opiates caused by sales of products manufactured from seized and confiscated drugs. The Board called on countries exporting, or considering the export of, seized drugs and/or products manufactured from such drugs to refrain therefrom, and requested importing countries to take into account the Council's resolution.

Aware of the need to investigate the possible medical uses of cannabis and of the growing interest in that issue among the medical community, the general public and the media, the Board noted that sound scientific research into the possible therapeutic properties and medical uses of cannabis should be undertaken to obtain more reliable data on an issue handled so far on a rather anecdotal basis.

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/230, took note of the report of INCB for 1997 [Sales No. E.98.XI.1].

World drug situation

In its 1998 report [E/INCB/1998/1], INCB provided a regional analysis of world drug abuse trends and control efforts, so that Governments would be kept aware of existing and potential situations that might endanger the objectives of international drug control treaties.

Africa

Cannabis cultivation, trafficking and abuse remained the major drug control issues throughout the region. Measured in terms of area under cultivation, reported seizures and abuse, it was the most prevalent drug in Africa, which continued to be a major supplier of cannabis and cannabis resin for Europe. Large-scale cannabis cultivation continued in Morocco, where the area under cultivation was estimated to be at least 60,000 hectares, and the 1998 production of resin was estimated at 2,000 tonnes. Increasingly large quantities of cannabis were seized by the Moroccan law enforcement authorities, and their cooperation with their counterparts in other countries led to large-scale seizures worldwide of cannabis originating there. In western Africa, the main producers were still assumed to be Ghana and Nigeria, followed by Senegal and Cote d'Ivoire. Problems involving trafficking in and abuse of cannabis increased in central Africa, and illicit cultivation sites were discovered in most countries in the subregion. South Africa remained one of the largest producers on the continent, and southern and eastern Africa continued to be an important source of the cannabis trafficked throughout the region and elsewhere. Eastern Africa was also known for its extensive cultivation and abuse of khat (Catha edulis). That industry transformed one of the most lush and wealthy agricultural areas into a net food importer. Most of the khat was consumed in eastern Africa, since khat trafficking was somewhat limited by its short-term effectiveness following harvesting; however, there were indications that new methods made it possible for fresh khat leaves to be transported to Europe and elsewhere.

Seaports and airports throughout Africa were increasingly used for the trans-shipment of heroin from Asia and cocaine from South America. The subsequent abuse of such drugs grew, especially in large cities. Another major drug-related problem in several African countries was the abuse of volatile solvents (glue-sniffing) by street children. In South Africa, it was estimated that 9 out of 10 street children were regular abusers of such products.

The abuse of psychotropic substances diverted from licit channels continued unabated in the region. Countries in western and central Africa in particular seemed to be increasingly affected by their abuse. Large quantities of ephedrine were imported, and in eastern and southern Africa methaqualone was being increasingly manufactured. In addition, there were concerns about the emergence of the clandestine manufacture and abuse of "ecstasy" in the subregion. There was also growing concern about the lack of control over pharmaceutical products, including narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which were readily available without prescription. At the same time, the non-availability of narcotic drugs for justified medical needs remained an important shortcoming of the national health systems of several African countries.

INCB carried out missions to Cote d'Ivoire and Gabon in March. Drug control efforts had been made in Cote d'Ivoire, where, although cannabis was the most widely abused drug, there was some danger posed by the abuse of psychotropic substances in the form of medicinal products. The Board encouraged the Government to reinforce the monitoring of imports and the distribution of such products, and recommended enhancing the capacity of the national health services. In Gabon, the Board urged the Government to ratify the 1988 Convention, to assess the real medical needs of the country regarding narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and to enhance the capacity of its national health services to monitor more adequately their distribution and fulfil international reporting requirements.

With regard to regional cooperation, a ministerial meeting of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in April developed a common position paper rejecting the legalization of cannabis and requesting the assistance of UNDCP in drawing up a plan to eradicate cannabis in Africa. The Board noted that the 14 member States of the Southern African Development Community approved a new drug strategy for southern Africa, which pursued a multidisciplinary approach to drug control and the establishment of national drug control coordinating bodies.

The Board welcomed the efforts made by the Governments of Liberia and Sierra Leone to restore their national drug control systems, following the period of civil war. It noted with satisfaction prevention efforts in several States and that Madagascar and Togo had adopted new drug control legislation.

Americas

Central America and the Caribbean

The region of Central America and the Caribbean continued to be highly vulnerable to the illicit transit traffic in drugs and their precursors between producing and consuming areas in North and South America, and to criminal activities derived from it, such as money-laundering and corruption.

In all but a few countries in the region, cannabis was the most widely abused drug, as well as the most common illicit drug of initiation among teenagers. The amount of cannabis seized in every country except El Salvador and Jamaica steadily increased over the previous five years. However, while in Central America it was illicitly produced almost exclusively for domestic abuse, in the Caribbean it was produced in countries such as Jamaica and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines mainly to be smuggled into Canada and the United States.

Cocaine hydrochloride and "crack" were readily available throughout the region. In Central America, "crack" had become within a few years the second most frequently abused drug, particularly among the poorer and more marginal social segments in larger cities and along the Atlantic coast. In the Caribbean, its abuse was noticeable and often linked to the growing incidence of violence. Given the high addiction potential and lower prices of that form of cocaine, health and law enforcement authorities should monitor domestic trends in its abuse and illicit traffic and, with support from the international community, adopt the appropriate countermeasures, the Board noted. Seizures of cocaine rose steadily over the previous five years in all countries, particularly in the central Caribbean corridor. Some countries in the Caribbean appeared to be re-emerging as transit points for licit drug trafficking.

Of all the countries in Central America, only Panama reported heroin seizures, but small quantities continued to be seized throughout the Caribbean. No abuse of heroin was reported in the region as a whole.

Psychotropic substances, mainly benzodiazepines, were licitly manufactured in Cuba, Guatemala and Panama. Although no diversion of such drugs was noted in the licit intraregional trade, domestic controls over the distribution and sale of certain psychotropic substances were seriously deficient in several countries. The Board noted with concern that, in general, reliable data on drug abuse were not readily available for the region, although some improvement had been made in respect of Central America, particularly since the introduction by the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of its centralized information system on drug abuse. The Board urged Governments to review their legitimate requirements of controlled chemicals.

As to regional cooperation, the Caribbean countries and the international donor community reiterated their commitment to implementing the Plan of Action on Drug Control Coordination and Cooperation in the Caribbean (Barbados Plan of Action) and the Organization of American States anti-drug strategy in the hemisphere. The Board welcomed the work carried out by the Intergovernmental Task Force on Drugs, established by the Caribbean Community secretariat with a view to enhancing the coordination of policy on drug control issues in the Caribbean. The Board noted that within a cooperation mechanism established between countries in Central America, Mexico and UNDCP, a sub-regional programme for technical cooperation in drug control was formulated for the period 1998-2002, and a number of initiatives were already under way.

An INCB mission visited Belize in April. The Board urged the Government to become party to the 1961 and 1971 Conventions. It asked the Government to introduce control mechanisms for substances used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to establish mechanisms to collect data on the legitimate domestic requirements of controlled chemicals.

North America

Cannabis remained the most widely abused drug in North America, and surveys in the United States showed that the upsurge of its abuse among young people was directly linked to propagation of the false perception that it was harmless. There was a trend towards a higher tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) content in the cannabis cultivated in greenhouses in Canada and the western United States. Seizure data indicated the movement of it from the province of British Columbia to the United States, as well as from west to east in the United States. Indoor cultivation increased significantly in Canada.

The Government of Mexico continued to make efforts to eradicate illicit opium poppy cultivation. Heroin manufactured from poppy grown in Colombia, Guatemala and Mexico was destined primarily for the illicit market in the United States. Since opium produced in Mexico was thought to be used to manufacture heroin within its borders, the Board encouraged the Government to exercise increased vigilance over precursors involved in heroin manufacture and to strengthen its cooperation with the Board. The purity level of heroin manufactured in Latin America and transported northward increased. In Canada and the United States, the number of deaths from drug overdose rose, possibly as a result of increased purity levels of heroin, which also led to an increase in heroin smoking, especially among young people. In the United States, new and young users were attracted to heroin, mainly because of its easy availability, lower prices and higher purity. Over the past few years, increases in the prevalence of HIV infection among drug abusers were reported in many metropolitan areas in Canada, purportedly owing to the increased number of addicts who chose to inject cocaine in combination with other drugs, such as heroin. The market share of heroin from South-East Asia that was abused in the United States continued to be displaced by heroin originating in Latin America, while heroin manufactured in South-East Asia maintained a predominant share of the illicit market in Canada.

Seizure data indicated that illicit trafficking in cocaine from South America through Mexico was still significant. While overall drug abuse levels in Mexico remained low compared with those in the United States, the abuse of cocaine and "crack", especially by young people, appeared to have risen, whereas the abuse of "crack" in the United States appeared to be declining.

As to psychotropic substances, the trafficking in and abuse of methamphetamine in the United States increased. Criminal organizations based in Mexico and involved in cannabis and cocaine trafficking switched to methamphetamine trafficking to supply the illicit market there. The use of existing distribution networks appeared to be facilitating the rapid spread of methamphetamine abuse throughout the United States. With the increased use of amphetamine and dexamphetamine for the treatment of attention deficit disorder (ADD), the Board suggested that vigilance be exercised to prevent the possible misdiagnosing and the inappropriate prescribing of methylphenidate and other stimulants. LSD (lysergic acid diethylamide), which was manufactured illicitly and particularly popular on the west coast of the United States, was sold and distributed worldwide by postal order.

Multiple drug abuse was reported with greater frequency in the United States. For example, "speed-balling" (i.e., combining heroin and cocaine through injection or inhaling) became increasingly popular. Also, cannabis cigarettes combined with other substances, such as cocaine hydrochloride, "crack", phencyclidine or codeine, were readily available in many parts of the country, and sodium oxybate (gamma-hydroxybutyrate) and ketamine were emerging drugs.

Regional cooperation continued to be an important element of the drug control strategies of the Governments in North America. Information exchange was crucial with regard to money-laundering and precursor control. In February, the Governments of Mexico and the United States announced a bilateral drug control strategy that would increase cooperation between the two countries. The Board noted the cooperation between the law enforcement officials of Mexico and the United States aimed at stemming the flow of chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine in the south-western part of the United States, and the cooperation between Colombia and the United States aimed at thwarting the trafficking in potassium permanganate from countries in Asia to Colombia.

In October, INCB sent a mission to the United States. It invited the Government to share with other interested Governments experiences with and results of its unprecedented media campaign aimed at preventing young people from abusing drugs, and urged it to find new ways of effectively dealing with drug abuse among hardcore addicts, which accounted for the major share of illicit drug demand. The Board hoped that a consensus meeting on the diagnosis and treatment of ADD held in November would contribute to a common understanding of correct medical and scientific criteria and find ways to ensure that the practices followed in diagnosing ADD and prescribing stimulants were in line with established criteria. It trusted that the United States Government would vigorously enforce its federal law, which was in line with international drug control treaties, in several states that, pursuant to referendums, had authorized the use of cannabis for certain medical purposes, contrary to the federal law prohibiting both its medical and non-medical use. The Board also emphasized that medical and scientific decisions with regard to all drugs should fall under the competence of authorized national health authorities, and renewed its call for additional scientific research.

South America

Cannabis remained the most common drug of abuse in South America, especially among very young people, and was the most often reported drug of initiation. The amount seized continued to increase in most countries in the region. The extent of its illicit cultivation was unknown and it was usually cultivated for local consumption. In Brazil, Colombia, Guyana, Paraguay and Suriname, it was also cultivated to be smuggled into other countries.

Trends in illicit opium production and heroin manufacture remained unchanged in 1998. In Colombia, opium poppy cultivation had remained stable for the previous three years, despite an increase in the amount of heroin seized in the past year. Nonetheless, in contrast with the situation a decade earlier, several countries in the region reported at least some abuse of heroin, an indicator of its growing availability.

During the year, the efforts of Governments and international organizations led to a decrease in areas under coca bush cultivation and the production of coca leaf, the main illicit crop in South America. However, reductions in coca bush cultivation in some areas were quickly compensated for by new cultivation sites in others. Good eradication results needed an effective and sustained reduction of illicit crop cultivation areas throughout the region. Governments would have to pay more attention to the eradication of new cultivation sites. The Board expected that the Governments of Bolivia, Colombia and Peru would bear such considerations in mind in implementing eradication strategies, with a view to complying fully with the commitments assumed by them at the special session of the General Assembly (see above).

Reliable data on the illicit cultivation of coca bush, the production of coca leaf and the manufacture of cocaine hydrochloride continued to be scarce. The increase in the area under coca bush cultivation in Colombia was largely offset by reductions in Bolivia and Peru. The country with the largest area under cultivation was Colombia, followed by Peru and Bolivia. Peru, in view of the higher coca leaf yield, remained the world's leading producer. The Board welcomed the fact that Bolivia, Colombia and Peru were well on their way to reaching their coca bush eradication targets for 1998, and, noting that a new Peruvian eradication and integrated economic development plan had been endorsed by the international donor community, it hoped that the required funds would be made available to the Government. As for the illicit manufacture of cocaine, Colombia continued to be the world's leading cocaine producer, but illicit trafficking organizations in both Bolivia and Peru had increased their manufacturing and smuggling capabilities over the previous few years.

Knowledge of the regional patterns of the diversion of and trafficking in chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of cocaine improved, and countries in the region, particularly Colombia, seized large quantities of such chemicals, including increasingly large shipments of potassium permanganate, destined to cocaine-processing areas in South America. The quantity of potassium permanganate seized in 1997 (112 tonnes) was the largest reported since 1989, and the quantities of acids and solvents were the largest in five years. The Board emphasized the need for the Governments of importing countries in South America to review carefully their legitimate uses and requirements of controlled chemicals, particularly acetic anhydride, used in heroin manufacture, and potassium permanganate. Traffickers of cocaine destined for illicit markets in Europe and North America continued to use more diverse methods and routes, and no country in the region could avoid being used as a transit point for cocaine smuggling. In most countries, except Peru and Uruguay, the amount of cocaine seized continued to increase. Cocaine abuse was most prevalent among persons between 30 and 39 years of age, and the growing abuse of "crack" was common to the entire region.

Regarding psychotropic substances, one of the main concerns continued to be the abuse of stimulants in the form of anorectics. On the recommendation of the Board, the three countries most directly affected by such abuse—Argentina, Brazil and Chile—took legislative and/or administrative steps to deal with the problem. The Board was concerned over the growing abuse of tranquillizers and amphetamine-type substances, such as "ecstasy", particularly in Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay.

INCB carried out missions to Suriname (April) and Argentina (September). It welcomed the establishment in Suriname of a national coordinating body for drug control matters, but noted with concern that, although drug control legislation and some regulations against money-laundering were already in place, money-laundering was not yet a crime and legislation against it was still needed. Illicit production of and trafficking in cannabis, as well as illicit trafficking in cocaine destined for Europe, remained significant problems in Suriname. Its extensive sea coast and difficult-to-reach uplands, together with its proximity to major illicit cocaine manufacturing areas and its close commercial links with countries in Europe, particularly the Netherlands, made it an ideal trans-shipment point for consignments of illicit drugs and precursors.

Since a comprehensive law against money-laundering was still under consideration in Argentina, the Board urged the Government to enact the long-pending law against it as soon as possible. Aware that considerable resources were required for Argentina to control adequately the passage of persons and goods along its borders with Bolivia, Brazil and Paraguay, and that such a complex border control situation could be effectively dealt with only on a multilateral basis, the Board encouraged Argentina, together with its neighbouring countries, to step up efforts aimed at enhancing the coordination of border control policies and improving the exchange of information and the conducting of joint drug law enforcement operations.

With regard to regional cooperation and national legislation, policy and action, at the first conference of the Andean regional group on drug control (Arequipa, Peru, August), Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Panama, Peru and Venezuela agreed on the establishment of a regional drug law enforcement training centre and on the creation of an electronic information exchange system for drug law enforcement. The Board welcomed the adoption by Bolivia of the Anti-Drug Strategy 1998-2002, also known as the Dignity Plan, and hoped that the international donor community would support those efforts. In Brazil, money-laundering was criminalized and new legislation against it was enacted. Brazil also began a major effort to reshape its structures for drug control and for making drug policy. In September, INCB made a technical visit to Brazil to review the control of the licit manufacture of and trade in substances under international control, in particular the control of the domestic distribution of stimulants.

Asia

East and South-East Asia

The economic crisis in East and South-East Asia had an effect on all aspects of life in the region, and the annual budgets for drug control were significantly cut in some countries.

The major drug control problems continued to be the illicit cultivation of opium poppy and the smuggling of acetic anhydride, ephedrine and pseudoephedrine into countries, where they were used to manufacture heroin and amphetamine-type stimulants in clandestine laboratories. Drug trafficking routes extended to illicit markets in and outside the region, and the availability of illicit drugs contributed to drug abuse problems, including the rapid spread of HIV infection.

Myanmar remained the source of a sizeable proportion of the world's illicit supply of opiates, although strengthened law enforcement efforts by the Government appeared to have led to more opiates being seized and opium poppy cultivation being eradicated in more areas. The cultivation of opium poppy and the production of opium, as well as the manufacture of heroin, persisted not only in Myanmar, along its borders, but in neighbouring countries as well. A large-scale eradication of opium poppy cultivation was carried out by the Government of Viet Nam. In the Mekong area, downward trends in opiate ingestion, smoking and inhaling were offset by an upward trend in drug injection; in China and Myanmar, where drug injection was common, the sharing of contaminated needles contributed to the spread of HIV infection. Increased availability of opiates, a result of the increased presence of trafficking in the area, led to a rise in their injection among youth throughout Viet Nam. The more traditional form of opium smoking and the resulting dependence were prevalent mainly in the highlands among older persons.

Cannabis continued to be cultivated in many countries, both for domestic consumption and for export. Cambodia became a major source of cannabis for illicit markets throughout the world, and a strong increase in its trafficking was reported in Malaysia. As for cocaine, there were only isolated reports of its trafficking and abuse in the region.

The illicit manufacture of and trade in amphetamine-type stimulants spread, reaching record levels in some countries. Seizure data indicated that China and Myanmar were major sources of the illicitly manufactured methamphetamine found on illicit markets there and elsewhere, but laboratories were found in other countries as well. Although most of the "ecstasy" seized in East and South-East Asia was manufactured in Europe, police had uncovered for the first time in November 1997 a laboratory in China, and its manufacture was also reported in Indonesia. The abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants, particularly amphetamine and methamphetamine, expanded significantly. The Board noted with concern that the abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants spread quickly among younger persons in the Philippines and Thailand, where the abuse of "ecstasy" and the number of seizures rose; its abuse continued to be a problem in Indonesia as well. In Japan, there was an upward trend in the number of arrests for abuse of and trafficking in stimulants, but the proportion of the population abusing drugs remained low compared with most Western countries. Steps were taken to strengthen law enforcement efforts to intercept the movement of precursors from China to Myanmar; however, the smuggling of ephedrine from India to Myanmar was detected by authorities in India.

The increasing trend towards multiple drug abuse continued. A sizeable number of persons in China and Viet Nam abused both tranquillizers and opiates. The abuse of volatile solvents, particularly glue-sniffing, often associated with younger children in depressed urban areas, was reported to be on the increase in several countries, including Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Thailand.

INCB carried out a mission in March to Myanmar, one of the largest producers of opium and heroin in the world. A significant proportion of the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine in East and South-East Asia also took place in that country. The law enforcement activities of the Central Committee for Drug Abuse Control resulted in intensified efforts to eradicate illicit crops and in increased drug seizures. The Board noted that the international assistance provided to Myanmar since 1988 had been minimal and that the scope of its drug control programmes was limited. International assistance was needed to achieve long-term results, particularly to provide alternative sources of income for those who relied on the cultivation of opium poppy as a subsistence crop.

South Asia

Drug trafficking and abuse in South Asia continued to be largely transit-related, owing to its close proximity to the world's main opiate-producing areas. The illicit cultivation of narcotic crops remained relatively limited and the resulting illicit drug products were destined mainly for illicit markets within the region. Problems in drug control were attributed to a lack of adequate resources to implement national legislation or regulations and, in cases involving pharmaceutical products and precursors, to inadequate control of domestic distribution channels. One new concern was the growing abuse of psychotropic substances and polydrug abuse.

Cannabis eradication campaigns were conducted regularly in India, Nepal and Sri Lanka, but the illicit cultivation of the plant continued. Most of the harvested cannabis was destined for use within South Asia, though a relatively small amount was smuggled into countries outside the region. There were infrequent reports of the abuse and sale of hashish oil in Maldives.

Large quantities of heroin were smuggled into South Asia out of Afghanistan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Pakistan and Thailand, mainly to be shipped further to illicit markets in Europe and North America, but also to be abused locally. Heroin abuse by injection was well established in Bangladesh, India and Nepal, and there was a major concern in several areas, especially in urban centres, regarding the link between the spread of AIDS and drug abuse by injection. Sri Lanka remained the exception; there, inhaling the vapours of heated heroin was the predominant method used. In India, most of the opiates seized had originated in South-West Asia. Smaller quantities came from local sources. The biggest heroin seizures made in India originated in Kabul, Afghanistan, and were first brought to Pakistan; the total quantity of heroin seized in India in 1997 was about 1 tonne. In Sri Lanka, a significant amount of the heroin for abuse was brought from India by boat.

Codeine-based cough medicines continued to be widely abused in Bangladesh, India and Nepal. There were reports of seizures of such medicines with a higher codeine content than legally manufactured cough medicines. The abuse of synthetic narcotic drugs was also reported in several countries.

In India, because of the elaborate system for monitoring the movement and distribution of acetic anhydride, seizures of it had considerably diminished over the preceding few years. The diversion of acetic anhydride was prevented in Sri Lanka, which was targeted by traffickers as a transit country to be used to ship that substance to heroin-manufacturing countries nearby.

As to psychotropic substances, there was an increase in the consumption of the analgesic buprenorphine, which became one of the main drugs abused in some parts of the region, mostly by young men living in urban centres in Bangladesh, India and Nepal. In response to its growing spread, manufacturers were asked by authorities in India to introduce control measures. The Board called on the Government to increase its efforts to ensure that pharmacies followed prescription requirements for the substance. Other medicinal products, such as hypnotics and sedatives and anxiolytics, continued to be abused in most countries. Deficiencies in the control of domestic distribution channels and the resulting smuggling appeared to be the main source of the substances abused in the region. In India, law enforcement efforts launched against methaqualone trafficking and the introduction of regulatory measures to control precursors led to the

INCB missions visited India and Bangladesh in October 1998. India continued to cooperate closely with the Board to control international trade in narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors, and on many occasions it prevented the diversion of controlled substances into illicit channels. The Board appreciated the strong commitment and efforts by the Government to maintain a sustained and stable source of licit opium to meet global demand and the additional control measures taken to prevent diversion. However, it called on the Government to establish an effective coordinating body and adopt the master plan for drug control drafted in 1994.

In Bangladesh, the Board was concerned that the use of chemicals controlled under the 1988 Convention in, for example, the textile and garment manufacturing industries, tanning and dyeing, which required the import of substantial quantities of acetic anhydride, was not covered by existing regulations. Reports indicated that large quantities of sulphuric acid were manufactured in the country as well. The Board also noted with concern the weaknesses in the control system, particularly with respect to the system of distribution and inspection. New laws should provide the Government with adequate instruments for the control of narcotic drugs, psychotropic substances and precursors.

West Asia

Most countries in West Asia were used by traffickers to trans-ship large amounts of cannabis and cannabis resin to consumer countries in the region, as well as in Europe and Oceania. Cannabis was illicitly cultivated or grew wild on extensive areas in Afghanistan and Pakistan. No eradication efforts took place in either country, although they continued to be major sources of the resin seized in several parts of the world. The number of cannabis seizures made by the Government of Pakistan continued to be high. Cannabis grew wild in the member States of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in central Asia, particularly along the border between Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan, which provided a supply source for international traffickers. The Board noted the efforts of the drug enforcement authorities of Kyrgyzstan, which in 1997 had eradicated 15,000 hectares of the estimated 60,000 hectares of wild-growing cannabis. In the Caucasus, authorities reported the eradication of significant amounts, mostly cultivated for the domestic market. The Board called for national prevention programmes.

The level of abuse of cannabis, heroin and psychotropic substances in many countries in the region in general appeared to be low compared with the level in countries in some other regions. However, the quantities of opiates intercepted in West Asia increased, and up to 65 per cent of all Afghan opium, morphine and heroin was trafficked through central Asia. A substantial proportion of opiates produced in Afghanistan was abused in West and South Asia; the remainder was smuggled into Europe. The prevalence of opiate abuse was high and appeared to be rising in Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan; heroin abuse was also increasing, but to a lesser degree, in other West Asian countries. In Afghanistan, the large-scale illicit cultivation of opium poppy was on the increase. However, due to bad weather conditions, the amount of opium production was lower in 1998 than in 1997. Despite the fact that preliminary estimates of the poppy crop harvested in Pakistan suggested an increase in 1998 over the figure for 1997, the Board trusted that the Government would strengthen its efforts to achieve complete enforcement of the ban of illicit poppy cultivation by the year 2000.

The illicit manufacture of heroin that formerly occurred in Pakistan was moved to Afghanistan, where laboratories were assumed to exist mostly in the Nangarhar and Hellmand areas and close to its border with Tajikistan and Turkmenistan. Trafficking groups in the producing areas enjoyed greater security than before because of weak local law enforcement. The Board was concerned about reports of large stocks of opium and heroin in the north of Afghanistan and the fall, in many parts of the country, of the prices of heroin and chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of heroin (mainly acetic anhydride). As controls over chemicals used in illicit heroin manufacture were strengthened in other countries in South, South-East and South-West Asia, CIS States in central Asia were increasingly used as alternative sources for their supply. They were also used as transit countries for smuggling the substances into Afghanistan and other countries in South-West Asia out of industrial establishments in the Russian Federation and other European countries. A total of 41 tonnes of acetic anhydride destined for Afghanistan was seized by Turkmen authorities in different operations during the first seven months of 1998.

Campaigns to eradicate illicit opium crop cultivation were conducted annually in all CIS member States. The Board was concerned about increased heroin processing and the establishment of clandestine laboratories, and noted that most countries reported the seizure of sharply increasing quantities of opiates, in particular heroin. In the Caucasus, most of the poppy cultivation occurred on very small plots and was intended for the domestic market. However, the area emerged as a new corridor for transit trafficking because of the porous borders of the CIS member States and the increasing prevalence of organized crime. In Turkey, reports of declining seizures of acetic anhydride and heroin were a sign that heroin processing was partly transferred to other countries in the subregion.

In Iran, one of the main illicit markets for Afghan opium, the quantity of opiates seized was the largest worldwide and continued to increase. Opium abuse was widespread among the elderly in rural areas and among the wealthy in cities, while young people in cities turned to cheap heroin. In Afghanistan, the extent of opiate abuse was unknown, but it was widespread and on the increase. Heroin abuse continued to be widespread in Pakistan, where it was increasingly abused by injection. It was also reported to be increasing in many other countries, including some previously unaffected. In CIS member States, opiate abuse increased significantly, especially among young people, as did drug abuse along the known trafficking routes. The practice of injecting drugs was of particular concern, as drug abuse by injection became the main vector for the spread of HIV. The abuse of opiates by injection was also common in the Caucasus, where it was one of the prime vectors for the spread of HIV. Cocaine abuse continued to be negligible in the region.

With regard to psychotropic substances, the abuse of various stimulants, smuggled mainly through Jordan, the Syrian Arab Republic and Turkey, remained widespread in the Arab peninsula, and the coastal borders of the countries on the Persian Gulf were increasingly used for such smuggling. The Government of Kazakhstan was concerned about the presence of a vast natural growing area of the Ephedra plant, covering an estimated 350,000 hectares in the mountainous area in the southern part of the country. In 1997, 13 tonnes of Ephedra herbal material were seized, probably intended for the production of ephedrine and other stimulants. The illicit manufacture of ephedrine from Ephedra plants also continued in Kyrgyzstan. In the CIS member States, there had been increasing evidence of the abuse of amphetamine-type drugs, including "ecstasy" from western Europe, which also increased in other West Asian countries, such as Israel, where a rise in abuse of LSD was also experienced.

During 1998, an INCB mission visited Israel and the Palestinian Autonomous Areas (February), as well as Georgia (August). As close cooperation between the Government of Israel and the Palestinian Authority was in their best interest, the Board urged both to consider options to establish an effective mechanism to coordinate drug control. In the Palestinian Autonomous Areas, it noted the efforts undertaken by the Palestinian Authority to institutionalize drug control, in particular by preparing comprehensive drug control legislation and strengthening its interdiction efforts. In Georgia, there was no effective control by the customs authorities over the national borders as they were contested and therefore not well protected in a number of areas. Drug trafficking was greatly facilitated by the strategic geographical position of the country in the Caucasus.

The Board noted further strengthening of regional cooperation in West Asia. Efforts were under way to create a drug "security belt" around Afghanistan through the promotion of coordinated drug control measures by countries in its vicinity. The Board encouraged the authorities of several countries and areas to reinstate the border control cooperation started in previous years. It expressed concern about the fact that effective measures against money-laundering had not been adopted in many countries, particularly in those having high investment rates and a high potential to be exploited for that problem (Israel, Lebanon and many countries on the Persian Gulf). In that connection, it encouraged the Cooperation Council for the Arab States of the Gulf to participate actively in developing measures against money-laundering and to guide its member States.

Europe

While Europe had been a major destination for drugs, it also had emerged as a producer of cannabis and synthetic drugs. "Ecstasy", for example, was manufactured clandestinely and trafficked worldwide.

Trafficking in cannabis increased and spread across the continent, which gained importance as a source because of rising indoor cultivation, a development facilitated by the open trade in seeds of varieties with a high THC content. Indoor cultivation, which had originated in the Netherlands, spread throughout many countries, particularly the United Kingdom, and was increasingly being controlled by criminal organizations. Cannabis grew wild on more than 1 million hectares in the southern part of the Russian Federation and in areas east of the Ural mountains, and on up to 100,000 hectares in Ukraine. The main non-European sources of cannabis seized in Europe were Cambodia, Colombia, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan and Thailand. Spain and the Netherlands remained the two main distribution centres; the former was the main gateway for Moroccan cannabis, and the latter the main point of entry from Colombia and Nigeria. Cannabis was smuggled mostly in consignments weighing several tonnes each and hidden in containerized cargo.

Opium poppy was illicitly cultivated in the Russian Federation. A large number of sites used for illicit cultivation on a small scale were detected and destroyed in the southern part of the country. At least 3,000 hectares of poppy were under cultivation in Ukraine. Illicit cultivation of opium poppy appeared to be increasing in Lithuania, where large fields of poppy were destroyed annually. Home-made poppy straw extract, commonly abused by injection, mainly in Ukraine but also in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland and the Russian Federation, contributed to the rapid spread of HIV infection.

Heroin abuse rose in some western European countries, while in others it remained stable or decreased. The average age of heroin abusers increased, and there was a shift from injecting it to smoking it, made possible by the increased purity of the drug. Heroin prices decreased, resulting in its increased availability on illicit markets. The Board was concerned that heroin revival might also be a result of the misconception that smoking it was risk-free. Heroin seizures remained stable or declined in western Europe, except in the United Kingdom, where they reached a record level of over 2 tonnes in 1997. Having expanded to the north, the Balkan route remained the main heroin trafficking route; traffickers continued to use international road transport trucks. Several countries, particularly Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania and Slovakia, were increasingly used as heroin storage and distribution centres. As a spillover effect of its transit traffic, heroin abuse spread in the region.

The number of cocaine seizures continued to be high. However, unlike the abuse of synthetic drugs or heroin, its abuse did not appear to be viewed as a major health problem by the general public. The supply, price and purity of cocaine remained high, probably as a result of measures taken by law enforcement authorities to increase the quantity seized annually. Cocaine abuse remained relatively low in eastern Europe, restricted to limited segments of the population because of its high price. However, seizures in Bulgaria and Croatia of large consignments of cocaine shipped by sea showed that the drug was smuggled on a large scale out of South America through eastern Europe. Most synthetic drugs seized in western Europe were also manufactured there, mainly in the Netherlands, and in some eastern European countries. The synthetic drugs manufactured in the region were intended for illicit markets not only in Europe but also outside.

In 1997, amphetamine was the main psychotropic substance seized. The main source countries for amphetamines and their analogues such as "ecstasy" were Belgium, Germany, the Netherlands and Poland. Eastern Europe was increasingly used for the illicit manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants and for trafficking in precursors and chemicals used in their illicit manufacture. In the Russian Federation, the authorities were concerned about the rapidly increasing illicit home-based manufacture of synthetic drugs and preparations mainly from ephedrine in small-scale clandestine laboratories. Amphetamines were manufactured in Ukraine as well, and in 1997 authorities also discovered a laboratory used for manufacturing "ecstasy" for export to Germany. The proliferation of the abuse of synthetic drugs, particularly "ecstasy", became a significant public health concern. Unclear messages about their dangers partly contributed to their increased demand, and in some countries in eastern Europe opiates were superseded by a shift towards stimulants. The abuse of synthetic drugs also increased in the Baltic States. The precursors and chemicals required for the illicit manufacture of synthetic drugs were imported or illegally obtained from European manufacturers. The Board welcomed the initiatives in the EU to strengthen controls over synthetic drugs and their precursors, and noted that several Governments had emphasized efforts to reduce drug abuse and illicit trafficking, stressing the importance of prevention as a tool for achieving long-lasting results. In the EU, a mechanism for the rapid exchange of information on new synthetic drugs entered into force in January. The Board appreciated the EU cooperation programmes with countries in central and eastern Europe.

INCB carried out missions to the Netherlands (March) and Cyprus (September). In the Netherlands, a randomized clinical study was begun to compare the effectiveness of the use of medically co-prescribed heroin and oral methadone and the use of methadone alone in chronic, treatment-refractory heroin addicts. The Board expressed its concern over the possible proliferation of heroin experiments and their possible effect on global efforts to deal with the drug problem. Since several surveys indicated a sharp increase in the abuse of cannabis and "ecstasy" among young people, the Board encouraged the Government to continue its efforts to correct the misunderstanding that cannabis, "ecstasy" and new drugs, such as those contained in a variety of mushrooms, were not dangerous, and to develop clear messages to discourage all illicit drug use. It urged the Government to look into ways of combating the sale of cannabis seeds by postal order and their advertisement, and recognized that efforts to reduce the supply of amphetamine-type stimulants had yielded favourable results. It also noted that a wide range of facilities for the treatment and rehabilitation of opiate addicts had been built, the average age of such addicts was increasing and their number had remained stable in the 1990s. The Board noted that, although the control system for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in Cyprus was working effectively and action had been taken by the Government against money-laundering, the success of Cyprus as an international offshore banking centre had made it vulnerable to international money-laundering activities. More efforts were needed regarding the vetting of offshore banks and corporations seeking to be registered in the country.

With regard to national legislation and policy, the Board welcomed the legislation against money-laundering that entered into force in Latvia and Lithuania, as well as in Switzerland. Recognizing the difficulties experienced by the Swiss judicial authorities in preventing cannabis grown for horticultural purposes from being sold to abusers, the Board trusted that the Government would deal with that problem by amending existing legal provisions. It also reiterated concerns about the distribution programme for heroin, approved in 1997 and allowing for its medical prescription to severely dependent addicts. The Board noted the adoption of national drug control strategies in Belarus, Estonia, Norway, Ukraine and the United Kingdom, and welcomed the fact that their focus was on drug abuse prevention and that some of them were accompanied by increased funding for demand reduction activities. Since some States established "shooting galleries", where drug abusers could administer drugs under supervision, the Board urged them to consider carefully all the implications of the "galleries", including the legal implications, the congregation of addicts, the facilitation of illicit trafficking, the message implied and the impact on the general perception of drug abuse.

Oceania

Cannabis continued to be the most widely abused drug in Oceania. The Board was concerned about the prevalence of its abuse in Australia, New Zealand and Papua New Guinea. In Australia, the number of abusers increased and the average age of first-time abusers decreased. There was an increasing trend towards the indoor cultivation of cannabis with a higher THC content, mainly in Australia and New Zealand but also in other countries in the region. Cloning to ensure consistent crop quality was common in both indoor and outdoor cultivation. Cannabis production and supply in Papua New Guinea appeared to be on the rise. Its comparatively low price and reputedly high THC content drew great demand from Australia.

Amphetamine was the second most abused drug in Australia, where the abuse of crystallized methamphetamine (commonly called "ice") was increasing. The abuse of amphetamine derivatives was expected to increase further in Australia and New Zealand and possibly in other Pacific countries. The amphetamine abused was predominantly of domestic origin. Its manufacture had increased and there was a trend towards the use of portable laboratories. Two laboratories for the illicit manufacture of methamphetamine were uncovered in New Zealand in 1997. "Ecstasy" and its analogues were mostly smuggled into Australia out of countries in Asia and Europe, but "ecstasy" was also manufactured illicitly in Australia. More seizures of "ecstasy" imported from Europe were also reported in New Zealand, where the prevalence of its abuse was estimated to be 1 per cent of the population and where, prior to 1997, that substance was practically unknown. A strategic assessment of both LSD and "ecstasy" showed that trends and abuse patterns noted in Europe were appearing in New Zealand.

Pharmaceuticals containing narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances were diverted from licit wholesale and retail sources. Hallucinogens such as LSD were smuggled into countries in Oceania out of the United States and Europe, and their popularity was increasing; "herbal ecstasy" (containing ephedrine) was illegally imported from the United States for non-medical use. Since the medical consumption of methylphenidate increased substantially in both Australia and New Zealand, the Board requested the Governments to monitor closely its use and ensure that it was prescribed and used appropriately.

The abuse of cocaine remained limited in the region. However, the Pacific islands were increasingly used as transit points for cocaine en route to Australia and New Zealand. Seizures of cocaine rose in both countries, and two laboratories for the manufacture of "crack" were dismantled in Australia in 1997. In February, coca cultivation was detected in the Solomon Islands.

As for heroin, over the previous five years there had been an increase in the amount seized in Australia. Heroin remained widely available, its prices fell and its purity remained high.

The vulnerability of the South Pacific islands to financial crime, including money-laundering, was the subject of discussion at a number of regional ministerial meetings, such as those of the South Pacific Forum, which continued activities to suppress illicit drug trafficking by enhancing cooperation among law enforcement agencies. Taking note that regional efforts at cooperation were continuing, the Board appreciated the efforts of Australia and New Zealand to assist other countries in the region, and welcomed the initiatives of the Government of New Zealand aimed at countering money-laundering, such as the organization of seminars for political and economic decision makers in the Cook Islands, Fiji, Samoa, Tonga and Vanuatu.

The Board welcomed the announcement by the Government of Australia of its "Tough on Drugs" strategy to reduce illicit drug supply. The strategy emphasized the need to enhance investigative and interception capacities with a view to tracing money-laundering.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/1998/28], adopted resolution 1998/25 without vote [agenda item 14 (d)].

Demand for and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/8 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983, 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, 1985/16 of 28 May 1985, 1986/9 of 21 May 1986, 1987/31 of 26 May 1987, 1988/10 of 25 May 1988, 1989/15 of 22 May 1989, 1990/31 of 24 May 1990, 1991/43 of 21 June 1991, 1992/30 of 30 July 1992, 1993/37 of 27 July 1993, 1994/5 of 20 July 1994, 1995/19 of 24 July 1995, 1996/19 of 23 July 1996 and 1997/38 of 21 July 1997,

Emphasizing that the need to balance the global licit supply of opiates against the legitimate demand for opiates for medical and scientific purposes is central to the international strategy and policy of drug abuse control,

Noting the fundamental need for international cooperation and solidarity with the traditional supplier countries in drug abuse control in general and in the universal application of the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 in particular,

Having considered the Report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1997, in which the Board pointed out that in 1996 a balance between consumption and production of opiate raw materials had been achieved, and noting that efforts were made by the two traditional supplier countries, India and Turkey, to maintain, together with other producing countries, the balance between supply and demand,

Noting the importance of opiates in pain relief therapy as advocated by the World Health Organization,

1. Urges all Governments to continue to contribute to the maintenance of a balance between the licit supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific needs, the achievement of which would be facilitated by maintaining, insofar as their constitutional and legal systems permit, support to the traditional supplier countries, and to cooperate in preventing the proliferation of sources of production and manufacture for export;

2. Urges Governments of all producing countries to adhere strictly to the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and to take effective measures to prevent illicit production or diversion of opiate raw materials to illicit channels;

3. Urges consumer countries to assess their needs for opiates realistically and to communicate those needs to the International Narcotics Control Board in order to ensure easy supply;

4. Commends the Board for its efforts in monitoring the implementation of the relevant Economic and Social Council resolutions and in particular:

(a) In urging the Governments concerned to adjust global production of opiate raw materials to a level corresponding to actual licit needs and to avoid unforeseen imbalances between licit supply of and demand for opiates caused by the sales of products manufactured from seized and confiscated drugs;

(b) In arranging informal meetings during sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs with the main States importing and producing opiate raw materials;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments for consideration and implementation.

UN action to combat drug abuse

UN International Drug Control Programme

During 1998, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP), established in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 721] as a centre of competence and the international reference point for drug control, guided the substantive preparations for the twentieth special session of the General Assembly and played a catalytic role in stimulating action at the national, regional and international levels. Through a portfolio of technical cooperation programmes carried out by a network of field offices located in key regions and countries, it promoted subregional cooperation and fostered bilateral cooperation, as well as direct consultations between Governments. UNDCP served as an instrument in support of the international community in pursuing its drug control objectives within the framework of international drug control treaties, and formulated a global strategy based on a balanced approach with demand reduction and supply reduction as mutually reinforcing elements. It pursued its strategy in close cooperation with Governments, INCB and civil society, particularly NGOs working at the grass-roots level and local communities and institutions. As the substantive secretariat of INCB, it was intimately associated with that body, and its technical assistance activities were tailored to assist the Board in monitoring the international drug control system and the flow of precursors.

UNDCP strengthened its presence in key countries and regions in 1998. It supported national efforts and initiatives aimed at reducing or eliminating illicit cultivation of narcotic crops through alternative development, strengthening of national capacities in demand reduction and institution-building, particularly the adoption of national drug control master plans and the establishment of coordinating and planning entities. As a result of a 35 per cent rise in income over 1997, UNDCP strengthened its role as both a catalyst and advocate, motivating Governments to take action in the field of drug control through a balanced portfolio of technical cooperation activities. Treaty compliance remained central in the global strategy pursued by UNDCP, which accordingly gave priority to assisting Member States in applying the provisions of international drug control treaties. The capacity of Member States was strengthened through technical assistance, with the provision of training to law enforcement personnel, national administrators, judges, magistrates and prosecutors, as well as personnel involved in demand reduction.

During the year, the subregional approach was expanded and further strengthened with the launching of new projects in various sectors. Efforts to suppress illicit drug trafficking focused on strengthening the capacities of law enforcement agencies and laboratories through training, provision of equipment and exchange of information between countries. Governments benefited from assistance in developing drug control legislation that included provisions on precursor control and measures to combat money-laundering. Cross-border project activities resulted in increased communication and information exchange. Many country-specific programmes were successfully completed and new programmes designed. UNDCP forged partnerships with other agencies in developing a community-wide approach in prevention and in promoting best practices in demand reduction. The UNDCP/WHO Global Initiative on Primary Prevention of Substance Abuse was launched through a series of regional consultations in southern Africa, South-East Asia and central and eastern Europe. A 10-country study was published, examining the impact of economic, social and political changes in sub-Saharan Africa on illicit drug production, trafficking and abuse. The Programme also participated in a data-sharing project with the International Criminal Police Organization and the World Customs Organization (WCO), which led to the establishment of a jointly owned pool of data on global seizures of illicit drugs, and thus contributed to improved analysis and assessment of drug-trafficking trends.

As a follow-up to the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, with regard to the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem, UNDCP assisted in implementing the recommendations that called on States to exchange information on their laws, practices and procedures between their judicial and law enforcement authorities (resolutions S-20/4 A-E). As an outcome of the special session, the UNDCP directory of competent national authorities, published annually, would include authorities designated to respond to extradition requests. Other measures taken related to the exchange of national laws to implement the drug conventions (see above), extradition practices, furthering mutual legal assistance and the exchange of the results of forensic analysis and of information on experience gained in law enforcement. To assist Governments to reduce the demand for drugs by the year 2008, as set out in resolution S-20/2, and with a view to crafting an action plan to implement the provisions of resolution S-20/3, UNDCP initiated consultations following the special session and convened a high-level intergovernmental expert group meeting in December. In addition, UNDCP, in cooperation with Member States, initiated and finalized the development of a series of business plans as part of a broad set of strategies to reduce globally the illicit supply of and demand for drugs. The business plans focused on eliminating the illicit cultivation of the coca bush in Bolivia, Colombia and Peru, and programmes involving member States of the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) and the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) designed to counter the flow of opium and heroin mainly from Afghanistan and Myanmar. UNDCP continued to consult with donor countries and international financial institutions in support of alternative development. A breakthrough was made with the Inter-American Development Bank in support of the alternative development plans of Bolivia, Colombia and Peru.

As a follow-up to the twentieth special session, the UNDCP Executive Director, in a report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs [E/CN.7/1999/6], outlined UNDCP activities in 1998 on a regional basis, summaries of which follow.

In March [E/1998/28], the Commission on Narcotic Drugs approved the revised draft financial rules of the Fund of UNDCP, as contained in a note of the Executive Director [E/CN.7/1998/6]. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions interposed no objection [E/CN.7/1998/8].

Africa

In 1998, UNDCP was implementing 30 projects in sub-Saharan Africa. While most of the impediments to implementation experienced in recent years were being addressed in 1998, civil strife in central, west and east Africa continued to cause project disruptions. The strengthened capacity of UNDCP field offices in Kenya, Senegal and South Africa improved its ability to initiate new projects and ensure project delivery. Its field offices cooperated closely with regional organizations, particularly with OAU, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Southern African Development Community (SADC) and the initiative undertaken in the Great Lakes region. UNDCP supported OAU efforts to strengthen its capacity to coordinate and monitor the implementation of the OAU drug control action plan. With OAU, it organized an African expert meeting, which led to the adoption of an OAU position paper on drugs. UNDCP initiated a new Africa-wide drug law enforcement programme to assist Governments in strengthening their technical expertise, particularly in Botswana, Cape Verde, Egypt, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Senegal, South Africa and Zimbabwe, as well as providing assistance to regional organizations, particularly OAU, ECOWAS and SADC.

In west Africa, the UNDCP project aimed at developing drug control structures, human resources and related programmes in ECOWAS countries terminated in December. Training in various technical sectors was provided to 50 trainees, and advisory and technical missions were carried out in ECOWAS countries. The second regional meeting of ECOWAS drug coordinators (Gambia, September) adopted draft rules and statutes for an ECOWAS drug control trust fund. An evaluation of the project found that it had successfully established a drug control coordination capacity within the ECOWAS secretariat, and had been instrumental in strengthening national interministerial drug control coordination committees in all 16 ECOWAS countries.

In west and central Africa, drug control legislation was updated and magistrates and prosecutors were trained. Decentralized anti-drug squads were supported in Ghana. In Nigeria, two pilot projects to integrate drug abuse control into the community-based integrated development programmes in rural and urban areas, undertaken in partnership with other UN agencies, were completed. Assistance was provided to the Governments of Ghana, Nigeria and Senegal in finalizing national drug control master plans and strategies. Legal training was provided to magistrates in Chad, and in the Central African Republic an interministerial committee for drug control was established.

In east and southern Africa, the regional intelligence liaison office project undertaken jointly by UNDCP and WCO established the regional mechanism for the exchange of drug law enforcement information for more than 20 countries. Under the UNDCP seaport control project, the first seaport drugs intelligence unit in Mombasa, Kenya, provided training for customs, police and port officials, and led to the first-ever seizures of amphetamines in containers from Asia and heroin from Afghanistan. A drug law enforcement training project with South African police was launched in 1998. In east Africa, UNDCP continued its activities with the United Nations Children's Fund to assist the Government of Kenya in integrating preventive education for out-of-school children.

One of the components of an Africa-wide demand reduction programme began, which provided technical expertise and advice to Governments, NGOs and regional bodies in defining demand reduction policies, formulating new projects and undertaking new activities. Advice and training were provided to some 60 NGOs and their national and regional networks; meetings of NGOs with other drug control counterparts were supported; and about 20 NGOs from 11 west African countries took part in a regional training workshop on the management of drug demand reduction programmes.

UNDCP finalized a research study entitled "The drug nexus in Africa", which contained findings on the cultivation, production, trafficking and abuse of drugs in selected countries. The study produced a set of recommendations for future action, some of which were incorporated into UNDCP programmes in sub-Saharan Africa.

South Asia

The UNDCP regional programme for precursor control provided assistance to Governments to prevent the diversion of precursors to illicit traffic. Policies and legislation, as well as mechanisms and procedures for precursor control, were adopted. A regional workshop (New Delhi, India) raised awareness among Governments of the need to counter money-laundering in South and South-West Asia. In India, assistance provided in demand reduction, in collaboration with the International Labour Organization, led to the broadening of rehabilitation services in seven cities. In Bangladesh and Nepal, assistance in law enforcement, preventive education, treatment and rehabilitation continued, leading to a substantial strengthening of their drug control capacity.

South-East Asia and the Pacific

pie's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand and Viet Nam in applying projects outlined in the 1995 subregional plan of action for drug control cooperation in South-East Asia [YUN 1995, p. 1280]. The projects covered activities in law enforcement, information exchange and trafficking intelligence to foster cross-border cooperation, training for judicial and prosecutorial personnel and demand reduction.

Following the deployment of its representative in Myanmar, UNDCP implemented the first phase of a five-year $15.5 million alternative development programme targeting a major opium-producing area of the Wa region near the border with China. UNDCP initiated a strategy to contain the flow of illicit drugs from Myanmar by focusing on trafficking routes originating there. Following a high-level mission, UNDCP was developing a programme for technical cooperation among ASEAN member States through a regional initiative to counter the flow of illicit drugs and to address critical drug problems, particularly the illicit manufacture, trafficking and abuse of amphetamine-type stimulants.

South-West and central Asia

Despite the results of a UNDCP opium poppy survey that indicated opium poppy production fell by 700 tonnes in Afghanistan in 1998 because of adverse weather conditions, the country remained the largest source of illicit opiates in the world. During the year, the UNDCP pilot programme for Afghanistan, initiated in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1281], carried out activities aimed at testing the commitment and capacity of counterpart authorities and local communities to reduce illicit opium poppy cultivation. UNDCP participated in the Afghanistan Support Group meetings (London, May; Tokyo, December), where the drug issue was given a high visibility in the context of the UN common programme.

In Pakistan, UNDCP supported the preparation of a rapid situation assessment of drug abuse, conducted workshops involving the major actors in demand reduction and assisted in the launching and evaluation of a pilot drug-awareness campaign. Based on recommendations of its high-level mission to Iran, UNDCP initiated a comprehensive $13 million programme.

In central Asia, UNDCP developed a programme to assist countries bordering Afghanistan to contain the flow of drugs from the country, and cooperated with ECO in developing a regional framework for technical assistance. It also initiated assistance to strengthen border control in selected areas of Tajikistan bordering Afghanistan. The first meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the central Asian States to review the 1996 memorandum of understanding (MOU) on cooperation to control illicit production, traffic and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and their precursors [YUN 1996, p. 1151], signed by the central Asian States and UNDCP, was held (Almaty, Kazakhstan, January) [A/52/791]. At the meeting, the Russian Federation and the Aga Khan Development Network became parties to the MOU. The meeting prepared a large-scale programme for regional cooperation in central Asia, covering border control, capacity-building, intelligence-gathering, demand reduction and precursor control.

National control measures were strengthened in Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. Training seminars were held in Kyrgyzstan and grants were distributed to NGOs for agricultural activities in the main drug-trafficking zone. In Kazakhstan, a master plan for drug control and crime prevention was finalized and submitted for Government approval. Progress was made in establishing a national forensic laboratory in Turkmenistan.

Central and eastern Europe

The UNDCP coordination mechanism for eastern Europe, the Baltic States and the Commonwealth of Independent States was instrumental in providing a comprehensive understanding of drug abuse and trafficking trends, and in coordinating technical assistance provided to the region. UNDCP oversaw 29 projects in eastern Europe, including those executed by UN agencies and NGOs. It finalized the preparation of a joint programme with the Poland/Hungary Aid for the Reconstruction of the Economy aimed at strengthening drug enforcement capacities in Bulgaria, Romania and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia with a budget of $7.64 million.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, UNDCP made significant progress in implementing projects in close cooperation with the International Police Task Force and the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In Croatia, it provided advanced training to customs personnel and supported the implementation of an assessment study on the extent of drug abuse. It also worked closely with the Government of the Russian Federation in supporting a plan of action for enhancing the implementation of the federal drug control programme. Police officers from the Republika Srpska participated in law enforcement training courses in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. UNDCP organized training and provided basic equipment for anti-narcotics police in Albania.

Latin America and the Caribbean

UNDCP assistance in the Andean region focused on strengthening alternative development institutions. UNDCP signed a working agreement with the National Alternative Development Plan in Colombia delineating areas of common interest, and provided technical assistance to 2,800 family farms and seven marketing organizations engaged in alternative development programmes.

In Bolivia, income-generating agroforestry management remained the main focus for alternative development in the Chapare region. Technical assistance was provided to 400 family farms, 15 producers' organizations in the marketing of agroforestry products, women's organizations and municipalities to formulate and implement community-based forestry plans. With respect to institutional support, UNDCP assisted the development of the Bolivian national drug control plan for 1998-2001, aimed at eliminating illicit crops by the year 2002 through eradication and alternative development. It also supported the Government in fund-raising efforts, as well as local workshops to mobilize the private sector in support of alternative development programmes.

In Peru, UNDCP assisted the Government in drawing up alternative development programmes in the Apurimac valley, the Lower Huallaga valley and the Selva Central. After almost 12 years of operations, the Huallaga project, the first and most important UNDCP alternative development project in Peru, terminated its activities. On the basis of UNDCP surveys, there was a 95 per cent reduction of illicit cultivation of the coca bush among project beneficiaries. Agriculture diversified in the project area, creating sustainable income-generating activities in agro-industries. The local economy ceased to be dependent on coca and was marketing an estimated volume of 3,500 tonnes of alternative products on national and international markets. In the Apurimac valley, at the end of the first phase of an alternative development programme completed in 1998, some 75 per cent of an estimated 2,500 family farms had abandoned coca bush cultivation and had diversified the land-use pattern with more than three licit crops. UNDCP cooperated with the Government in setting up a monitoring system for coca cultivation.

Policy guidance and technical expertise were provided to national drug control commissions and government agencies to plan and implement national demand reduction programmes and projects. Such assistance covered a demand reduction programme for Mexico and Central America, a primary prevention project for children at risk in Peru, prevention in schools in Bolivia and the decentralization of demand reduction activities in Colombia.

UNDCP assisted countries in the Latin America and the Caribbean region in implementing preventive education strategies, which included primary prevention, notably in Colombia, Mexico, Peru and Central America. Support was provided to establish, at the national level, regionally compatible information systems to better monitor trends in drug abuse. Under the umbrella of an MOU signed by Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Peru, Uruguay and UNDCP, an epidemiological programme was undertaken to obtain comparable data and develop joint preventive measures.

Regarding drug trafficking, UNDCP supported the implementation of national legislation to comply with international drug control treaties through programmes to train judges, magistrates and prosecutors and through witness protection schemes, particularly in Mexico and Central America. It provided operational and investigative training, as well as selected equipment, to drug law enforcement agencies in Bolivia, Ecuador and the Caribbean countries. The UNDCP Caribbean programme in support of the Barbados Plan of Action was in full implementation. Under the Plan, the project "Training in prosecution and adjudication of drug offences and post-conviction asset forfeiture proceedings", executed by the University of the West Indies, became operational. UNDCP also provided support to Caribbean States in furthering maritime law enforcement cooperation.

North Africa and the Middle East

In North Africa and the Middle East, programmes were being implemented in Algeria, Egypt, Lebanon, Tunisia and the Palestinian Autonomous Areas. UNDCP assistance to the areas under jurisdiction of the Palestinian Authority aimed at increasing capacities in supply and demand reduction. Drug law enforcement capacities of the Palestinian Authority were strengthened through the training of personnel and the provision of drug detection and laboratory equipment.

Within the framework of subregional cooperation, the Egyptian Anti-narcotics General Administration in Cairo and Gaza conducted training of law enforcement personnel. Under the guidance of the regional office in Cairo, the UNDCP project in Lebanon was revised, a new multisectoral project was drafted for Lebanon and a law enforcement training programme was designed for the States of the Gulf Cooperation Council. UNDCP worked in close consultation with the Government of Morocco to address the large-scale cultivation of cannabis and related trafficking affecting the country.

Administrative matters

UNDCP evaluation

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General transmitted, in March, a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the in-depth evaluation of UNDCP [E/AC.51/1998/2]. The report reviewed the achievements and shortcomings of the Programme and focused on treaty implementation, policy implementation and research, and operational activities.

The Secretary-General took note of the findings in the report and concurred with its recommendations related to: UNDCP support to INCB and to assessments of the implementation of conventions; modifications in the scope of conventions' schedules; global monitoring of additional measures, such as money-laundering and demand reduction; simplifying government reporting requirements; an integrated information system; a more active role for the Programme Laboratory, including research on new drugs and new technology for drug control programmes; the dissemination of information; promoting collaborative efforts; the Legal Advisory Programme; support to Governments in planning drug control programmes; strategies aimed at reducing significant elements of the global drug problem; coordination within the UN system; legislative guidance and capacity to implement programmes; and submission of the OIOS report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its forty-first session in Vienna from 11 to 13 March, during which it recommended one draft resolution and three draft decisions to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

By decision 1998/229 of 28 July, the Council approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's forty-second (1999) session, on the understanding that following the twentieth special session of the General Assembly (see above), informal inter-sessional meetings would be convened in Vienna, at no additional cost, to finalize the items to be included in the provisional agenda and to review the issue of the duration of the regular session of the Commission. By decision 1998/240 of 30 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its forty-first session [E/1998/28].

The Commission considered a note by the Secretariat on mainstreaming the gender perspective in drug policies and programmes and eradicating poverty [E/CN.7/1998/9]. The report provided information on measures taken by UNDCP to implement the Council's agreed conclusions 1997/2 [YUN 1997, p. 1186]. Regarding poverty eradication, poverty and drug abuse were linked, as were poverty alleviation and drug control and illicit cultivation and rural poverty. The reduction of rural poverty, especially through sustainable natural resource management, was a result of successful alternative development interventions.

System-wide Action Plan

In May [A/53/129-E/1998/58], the Secretary-General presented a status report on the first six plans of action of the new United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control (SWAP), developed in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1154], as well as two additional plans. SWAP was originally established in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 870]. A monitoring exercise of implementation of the six plans was initiated, but the results were incomplete owing to a delay in the response from some agencies. However, a general overview showed that their objectives had remained constant. The two additional plans of action focused on drugs, imprisonment and alternative sentencing, and on drug abuse and trafficking in conflict and post-conflict situations.

A UNDCP external evaluation of SWAP was presented to the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Drug Control, at its sixth session (Rome, Italy, 14-16 September) [ACC/1998/17]. A discussion ensued on how to move forward. In the light of the biennial reporting requirement, the Subcommittee agreed to recommend immediate action for Bolivia, Lebanon, Mauritius, Myanmar, Pakistan, Peru, South Africa, Uzbekistan and Viet Nam, while continuing to review the process in order to come up with proposals for the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in 2000. The Subcommittee stated that, in order to facilitate that process of coordination at the country level, it was necessary to strengthen or create thematic groups on drug control, and integrate drug control into other inter-agency coordination groups at the field level, building on and harmonizing with the resident coordinator system, country strategy notes, United Nations Development Assistance Frameworks and other existing country statements, such as master plans on drug control.

UN reform

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered a February note by the Secretariat on the impact of UN reform measures on drug control activities, which reviewed the status of SWAP and provided examples of collaboration by UN entities in drug control [E/CN.7/1998/5]. It noted that efforts were being made to operationalize SWAP to ensure its effectiveness as a planning tool, especially at the field level. Those efforts, among others, were expected to benefit the successful implementation of the UNDCP global plan for eliminating illicit coca and opium poppy production.

Global Programme of Action

In an August report [A/53/382], the Secretary-General described action taken by States to implement the Global Programme of Action, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution S-17/2 [YUN 1990, p. 859]. The report contained recommendations on ways to improve implementation, and an evaluation of progress made regarding: prevention and reduction of drug abuse with a view to the elimination of the illicit demand for narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug addicts; control of supply of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; suppression of illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances; measures to be taken against the effects of money derived from, used in or intended for use in illicit drug trafficking, illegal financial flows and illegal use of the banking system; strengthening of judicial and legal systems, including law enforcement; measures to be taken against the diversion of arms and explosives and illicit drug trafficking by vessels, aircraft and vehicles; the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse (1991-2000), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution S-17/2; and UN resources and structure.

The report stated that, in 1998, several Governments had reported the implementation of demand reduction programmes and the launching of related public awareness campaigns. Specially designed national programmes to prevent drug abuse among youth, which included the training of education and health-care personnel, were implemented in many States. A number of Governments, in developing national master plans, sought bilateral or international assistance to complement their efforts. It was recommended that Governments, in implementing their national policies and programmes against drug abuse, develop assessment methods. The programmes should also promote better multisectoral

Treatment for drug abusers was provided by the majority of Governments and, in some countries, specialized training was also provided for personnel employed in the treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug abusers. Some Governments stated that resources for rehabilitation and social reintegration were lacking and therefore treatment did not extend beyond detoxification. The report recommended efforts to coordinate effectively action between Governments, the private sector and NGOs to strengthen rehabilitation and social reintegration programmes.

In the past year, campaigns to eradicate cannabis plants, coca bush and poppy straw had been carried out by several Governments, as had illicit crop substitution programmes. However, alternative development programmes were strongly needed in various areas to prevent the spread of illicit crop cultivation and further escalation of crime and drug trafficking. Some Governments called for more joint programmes with UNDCP in the areas of alternative development and prevention policies.

Governments also intensified efforts to stop criminal activities associated with illicit drug trafficking. Several reported considerable seizures of drugs, as well as the strengthening of border, seaport and airport controls, and some States had adopted new provisions in their legislation to prevent international trafficking in arms and explosives. Strengthening cooperation at the regional and international levels in the form of joint operations and training, controlled deliveries, information exchange and mutual legal assistance was regarded as an effective means of countering illicit drug trafficking and other criminal activities. Some Governments had improved cooperation with international organizations, especially in the area of information exchange, but technical assistance in the form of communication equipment and information systems was needed in some countries. Although legislation against money-laundering was adopted or considered for adoption in many countries, some States had not adopted the necessary administrative, legislative and penal measures on money derived from illicit drug trafficking.

Only 54 Governments had replied to the questionnaire on activities undertaken by Member States in 1997 relating to the implementation of the Global Programme of Action. There was a need for more Governments to submit replies to enable the Secretary-General to contribute effectively to the evaluation of the progress made.

Strengthening UN mechanisms

A May note by the Secretary-General [A/S-20/3] transmitted the joint statement of the members of ACC to the General Assembly at its special session, bringing to its attention the shared commitment of UN agencies and organizations to reduce and prevent the illicit production, sale, demand, trafficking and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, to strengthen sustainable development and to achieve better allocation of resources.

Also in May [A/S-20/2], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the expert group to review UNDCP and to strengthen the UN machinery for international drug control, convened pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/37 [YUN 1997, p. 1285]. The expert group, at its first meeting (Vienna, 22-24 April), felt that the key issues to be examined in line with its mandate might include the contemporary drug situation, the international institutional framework, financing arrangements, an enabling legal framework and the path ahead.

With regard to the contemporary situation, the expert group concluded that both global production of illicit drugs and drug abusers had either increased over the previous decade or stabilized at high levels; drug abuse was undergoing noticeable changes and the emergence of new trends constituted new challenges, which needed to be addressed quickly; new technologies and the phenomenon of drug-trafficking organizations operating like multinational firms were having an adverse impact on efforts to control illicit drugs; and changing societal perceptions of the drug problem, a reaction to the perceived inadequacy of law enforcement efforts and a higher tolerance for drug abuse had undermined national and international efforts.

The group outlined the functions of the legislative and other bodies with which UNDCP interacted. It made observations on UNDCP financing arrangements.

By decision S-20/24 of 10 June, the General Assembly took note of the ACC statement and of the report of the expert group.

In December [E/CN.7/1999/5], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs the report of the expert group on its first, second (Vienna, 29 June-3 July) and third (New York, 26-30 October) meetings.

The group made recommendations on strengthening UNDCP financing, UNDCP governance, enhancing the functioning of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, enhancing the functioning of INCB and inter-agency cooperation and coordination. In view of its assessment that SWAP had failed to meet its objectives, the group recommended that the Plan be developed into a strategic planning tool for UN system-wide collaboration on drug control. It proposed the creation of a global drug facility to finance UNDCP programmes. The group found that drug control was rarely dealt with by UN agencies and programmes and recognized the need for a mechanism to stimulate relevant agencies to include drug control activities in their programmes of work. The group considered that UNDCP should evaluate the impact of its technical assistance activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/617], adopted resolution 53/115 without vote [agenda item 102].

International cooperation against the world drug problem

Recalling its resolution 52/92 of 12 December 1997,

Welcoming the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly devoted to countering the world drug problem together, held in New York from 8 to 10 June 1998, and the determination of Governments at the highest political level to overcome the world drug problem by a full and balanced application of national, regional and international strategies to reduce the illicit demand for, production of and trafficking in drugs, as reflected in the Political Declaration, the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, and the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem,

Gravely concerned that, despite continued increased efforts by States, relevant international organizations, civil society and non-governmental organizations, there is a global expansion of the drug problem, which constitutes a serious threat to the health, safety and well-being of all mankind, in particular young people, in all countries, undermines development, socioeconomic and political stability and democratic institutions, entails an increasing economic cost for Governments, also threatens the national security and sovereignty of States, as well as the dignity and hope of millions of people and their families, and causes irreparable loss of human lives,

Deeply alarmed by the growing and spreading violence and economic power of criminal organizations and terrorist groups engaged in drug-trafficking activities and other criminal activities, such as money-laundering and illicit traffic in arms, precursors and essential chemicals, and by the increasing transnational links between them, and recognizing the need for international cooperation and implementation of effective strategies on the basis of the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, which are essential to achieving results against all forms of transnational criminal activities,

Deeply convinced that the special session made a significant contribution to a new comprehensive framework for international cooperation, based on an integrated and balanced approach with strategies, measures, methods, practical activities, goals and specific targets to be met, that all States, the United Nations system and other international organizations must implement them with concrete actions and that the international financial institutions, such as the World Bank, and the regional development banks should be invited to include action against the world drug problem in their programmes, taking into account the priorities of States,

Convinced that civil society, including non-governmental organizations, can make an effective contribution to and should play an active role in addressing the world drug problem,

Emphasizing the importance of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction that introduces a global approach, recognizing a new balance between illicit supply and demand reduction, under the principle of shared responsibility, aims at preventing the use of drugs and at reducing the adverse consequences of drug abuse, special attention being paid to youth, and is one of the pillars of the new global strategy and an important initiative of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, 1991-2000, and reaffirming the need for demand reduction programmes,

Emphasizing equally the importance of supply reduction as an integral part of a balanced drug control strategy under the principles enshrined in the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development, and reaffirming the need for alternative development programmes,

Underlining the role of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as the principal United Nations policy-making body on drug control issues, the leadership role and commendable work of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme as the main focus for concerted multilateral action and the important role of the International Narcotics Control Board as an independent monitoring authority, as set out in the international drug control treaties,

Recognizing the efforts of countries that produce narcotic drugs for scientific and medical purposes to prevent the diversion of such substances to illicit markets and to maintain production at a level consistent with licit demand in line with the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961,

Acknowledging that there are links, under certain circumstances, between poverty and the increase in the illicit production of and trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and that the promotion of the economic development of countries affected by the illicit drug trade requires appropriate measures, including strengthened international cooperation in support of alternative and sustainable development activities in the affected areas of those countries, which have as their objectives the reduction and elimination of illicit drug production,

Stressing that respect for all human rights is and must be an essential component of measures taken to address the drug problem,

Ensuring that women and men benefit equally, and without any discrimination, from strategies directed against the world drug problem, through their involvement in all stages of programmes and policy-making,

Recognizing that the use of the Internet poses new opportunities and challenges to international cooperation in combating drug abuse and illicit production and trafficking,

I

Respect for the principles enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and international law in the fight against the world drug problem

1. Reaffirms that the fight against the world drug problem is a common and shared responsibility which must be addressed in a multilateral setting, requiring an integrated and balanced approach, and must be carried out in full conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, and particularly with full respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, the principle of non-intervention in internal affairs of States and all human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to take further actions to promote effective cooperation at the international and regional levels in the efforts to combat the world drug problem so as to contribute to a climate conducive to achieving that end, on the basis of the principles of equal rights and mutual respect;

3. Urges all States to ratify or accede to and implement all the provisions of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Protocol, the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971 and the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988;

II

International cooperation to counter the world drug problem

1. Urges competent authorities, at the international, regional and national levels, to implement the outcome of the twentieth special session, within the agreed time-frames, in particular the high-priority practical measures at the international, regional or national level, as indicated in the Political Declaration, the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction and the measures to enhance international cooperation to counter the world drug problem, including the Action Plan against Illicit Manufacture, Trafficking and Abuse of Amphetamine-type Stimulants and Their Precursors, the measures to prevent the illicit manufacture, import, export, trafficking, distribution and diversion of precursors used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, the measures to promote judicial cooperation, the measures to counter money-laundering and the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development;

2. Renews its commitment to further strengthening international cooperation and substantially increasing efforts to counter the world drug problem, in accordance with the obligations of States under the United Nations drug control conventions, on the basis of the general framework given by the Global Programme of Action, and the outcome of the special session, and taking into account experience gained;

3. Calls upon all States to adopt effective measures, including national laws and regulations, to implement the mandates and recommendations of the Global Programme of Action, to strengthen national judicial systems and to carry out effective drug control activities in cooperation with other States in accordance with those international instruments, in order to implement the outcome and the goals of the special session;

4. Calls upon the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, the international financial institutions and other concerned intergovernmental and international organizations, within their mandates, and all actors of civil society, notably non-governmental organizations, community-based organizations, sports associations, the media and the private sector, to cooperate more closely with Governments in their efforts to promote and implement the actions to fulfil the Global Programme of Action and the outcome of the special session;

5. Urges Governments, the relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international organizations to assist and support, upon request, transit States, in particular developing countries in need of such assistance and support, aiming at enhancing their capacity to fight illicit trafficking of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, and emphasizes the importance of national initiatives, as well as subregional, regional and international cooperation, in combating illicit drug trafficking;

6. Reaffirms that preventing the diversion of chemicals from legitimate commerce to illicit drug manufacture is an essential component of a comprehensive strategy against drug abuse and trafficking, takes note of the progress made in developing practical guidelines, including those of the International Narcotics Control Board and the recommendations on implementing article 12 of the 1988 Convention, and calls upon all States to adopt and implement measures to prevent the diversion of chemicals to illicit drug manufacture in accordance with the resolution on the control of precursors, adopted at the special session;

7. Requests the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to report to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its forty-second session, in March 1999, on the follow-up to the Action Plan on International Cooperation on the Eradication of Illicit Drug Crops and on Alternative Development;

8. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to examine, at its forty-second session, the proposal for an action plan for the implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction, which is being elaborated by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in consultation with Member States, taking into account the international agreements and declarations in the area of demand reduction that have been elaborated, in particular the Global Programme of Action, and addressing all policies and programmes to all sectors of society;

9. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to elaborate guidelines in order to facilitate reporting by Governments on the implementation of the Global Programme of Action and progress achieved in meeting the goals and targets for the years

2003 and 2008, as set out in the Political Declaration of the special session, and to have an efficient collection of reliable data, increase the number of Governments that report updated information on a regular basis, improve the quality of their responses and avoid duplication of activities;

10. Calls upon the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to mainstream a gender perspective into all its policies, programmes and activities, and requests the Secretariat to integrate a gender perspective into all documentation prepared for the Commission;

11. Recalls the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1995, notes with satisfaction the active participation of youth organizations and youth during the special session, and stresses the importance of their continuing to contribute their experiences and to participate in the decision-making processes, in particular in relation to the elaboration of the action plan for the implementation of the Declaration on the Guiding Principles of Drug Demand Reduction;

12. Calls upon States to adopt effective measures to stem the illicit trade in small arms, which, as a result of its close link to the illicit drug trade, is generating extremely high levels of crime and violence within the societies of some States, threatening the national security and economies of those States;

13. Notes the elaboration of an international convention against transnational organized crime by the year 2000, within the framework of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

14. Reaffirms the importance of achieving the objectives of the United Nations Decade against Drug Abuse, 1991-2000, under the theme "A global response to a global challenge", by Member States, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations system;

III

Action by the United Nations system

1. Reaffirms the role of the Executive Director of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme in coordinating and providing effective leadership for all United Nations drug control activities so as to increase cost-effectiveness and ensure coherence of action, as well as coordination, complementarity and non-duplication of such activities throughout the United Nations system;

2. Emphasizes the need to increase the efficiency of the United Nations System-wide Action Plan on Drug Abuse Control, as a tool to promote the coordination and enhancement of drug abuse control activities within the United Nations system;

3. Urges the specialized agencies, programmes and funds, including humanitarian organizations, and invites multilateral financial institutions, to include action against the world drug problem in their programming and planning processes, in order to ensure that the integral and balanced strategy which emerged from the special session devoted to countering the world drug problem together is being addressed;

IV

United Nations International Drug Control Programme

1. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to implement its mandate within the framework of the international drug control treaties, the Comprehensive Multidisciplinary Outline of Future Activities in Drug Abuse Control, the Global Programme of Action, the outcome of the special session of the General Assembly devoted to countering the world drug problem together and relevant consensus documents;

2. Requests the United Nations International Drug Control Programme:

(a) To strengthen cooperation with Member States, as well as with United Nations programmes, funds and relevant agencies and non-governmental organizations, and to provide, on request, assistance in implementing the outcome of the special session, which may include the adjustment of national laws and policies, the development of training programmes and the establishment of mechanisms for data collection and analysis;

(b) To strengthen the dialogue and cooperation with multilateral development banks and with the international financial institutions so that they may undertake lending and programming activities related to drug control in interested and affected countries to implement the outcome of the special session, and to keep the Commission on Narcotic Drugs informed on further progress made in this area;

(c) To continue, taking into account the outcome of the special session, to include in its report on illicit traffic in drugs an updated assessment of worldwide trends in illicit traffic and transit in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, including methods and routes used, and to recommend ways and means of improving the capacity of States along those routes to deal with all aspects of the drug problem;

(d) To continue the publication of the World Drug Report with comprehensive and balanced information about the world drug problem and to seek additional extrabudgetary resources for its publication in all official languages;

3. Invites Governments and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme to consider ways and means of improving the coordination of United Nations activities related to the world drug problem so as to avoid duplication of such activities, strengthen efficiency and accomplish the goals approved by Governments;

4. Urges all Governments to provide the fullest possible financial and political support to the Programme by widening its donor base and increasing voluntary contributions, in particular general-purpose contributions, to enable it to continue, expand and strengthen its operational and technical cooperation activities;

5. Urges the International Narcotics Control Board to increase efforts to implement all its mandates under international drug control conventions and to continue to cooperate with Governments, including by offering advice and technical support to Member States that request it;

6. Notes that the International Narcotics Control Board needs sufficient resources to carry out all its mandates, and therefore urges Member States to commit themselves in a common effort to assigning adequate and sufficient budgetary resources to the Board, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/20 of 23 July 1996, and emphasizes the need to maintain its capacity, including through the provision of appropriate means by the Secretary-General and adequate technical support by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

7. Stresses the importance of the meetings of Heads of National Drug Law Enforcement Agencies and the Subcommission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and encourages them to continue to contribute towards strengthening regional and international cooperation, taking into account the outcome of the special session;

8. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General, and, taking into account the promotion of integrated reporting, requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the outcome of the twentieth special session and the present resolution.

Chapter XV

Statistics

In 1998, the United Nations continued its statistical work programme. In February, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination reviewed, among other things, the work of five inter-agency task forces, established by the Statistical Commission, covering the subject areas of environment statistics, statistics of international trade in services, international trade statistics, finance statistics and industrial statistics; followed up on the implementation of the System of National Accounts, 1993; examined the Statistical Commission's structure and operation; and discussed proposals on various statistical issues.

In June, the Administrative Committee on Coordination Subcommittee on Statistical Activities considered technical and policy and coordination issues. The Statistical Commission did not meet in 1998.

UN statistical bodies

Statistical Commission

The statistical activities of the United Nations and its specialized agencies were guided by the Statistical Commission and its subsidiary body, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination. The 24-member Commission, a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council, did not meet in 1998. Its thirtieth session was scheduled for 1999; in 1997, by decision 1997/219 [YUN 1997, p. 1299], the Council had approved the provisional agenda and documentation for that session.

Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination

At its nineteenth session (New York, 10-12 February) [E/CN.3/1999/20], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination considered: statistical priorities and management in the face of diminishing resource levels; implementation of the System of National Accounts, 1993; the work of five of the inter-agency task forces established by the Statistical Commission covering the subject areas of environment statistics, statistics of international trade in services, international trade statistics, finance statistics and industrial statistics; some critical problems in economic statistics; the 2000 Population and Housing Census Programme; and implementation of the Minimum National Social Data Set. It also discussed the follow-up to the agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council as they pertained to mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system; fostering an enabling environment for development, including financial flows, such as capital flows, investment and trade; coordinating UN system activities for poverty eradication; international economic and social classifications; technical cooperation in statistics; coordination of statistical data-collection activities; integrated presentation of work plans of international organizations in statistical methodology; and the role and functioning of the Statistical Commission. It also finalized the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's thirtieth (1999) session, recommended that its own twentieth session be held in New York from 19 February to 3 March 2000, and approved the provisional agenda for that session.

The Working Group expressed a strong preference for the Statistical Commission to meet annually, rather than biennially, and requested the United Nations Statistics Division to submit to the Commission in 1999 a report on the feasibility of holding annual sessions, covering the legal, financial and other aspects of such a change.

Economic statistics

Critical problems in economic statistics

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination the reports of various city and other important groups on their activities [E/CN.3/AC.1/1998/L.3]. The Working Group endorsed the proposed activities of the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics, the Canberra Group on Household Income Statistics, the Expert Group on Capital Stock Statistics, the Siena Group for Social Statistics, the Expert Group on Intangibles, the London Group on Environmental Accounting, the Rio Group on Poverty Statistics and the Round Table on Business Frames. The Paris Group on Labour and Compensation, the Ottawa Group on Price Indexes and the Delhi Group on Informal Sector Statistics were asked to continue work on various projects. The Working Group re-emphasized that groups worked best when the problems to be solved had been clearly established, with suitable time frames for their solution. It also stressed the importance of participation by a broad spectrum of countries in the work of the various groups.

The Expert Group on Some Best Practices for Official Statistics met in Prague, Czech Republic, on 23 and 24 March [E/CN.3/1999/26] and discussed proposals for producing a code of good practices to assist heads of national statistical offices (NSOs) and other public-sector statistical offices in situations where there were insufficient guidelines or where apparent contradictions existed. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the Statistics Division were making arrangements to host a working session of the Expert Group in Singapore in January 1999, a report on which would be submitted to the Statistical Commission at its March 1999 session.

National accounts

In February, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, having considered the implementation of the System of National Accounts (1993 SNA), adopted by the Statistical Commission in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1112], authorized the Intersecretariat Working Group on National Accounts (ISWGNA) to make minor editorial amendments and uncontroversial clarifications to the 1993 SNA, while emphasizing that for more substantial changes wider consultations were needed. The Working Group accepted the proposed work programme of the ISWGNA member organizations in support of the implementation of the 1993 SNA, and took note of proposals by the regional commissions for further close cooperation with the Statistics Division in the milestone assessment exercise for implementation of the 1993 SNA.

The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, at its thirty-second session (New York, 16-18 June) [E/CN.3/1999/22], noted the progress of work in addressing conceptual issues, defining an updating process for the 1993 SNA and implementing the new data questionnaire for national accounts.

The report of the Task Force on National Accounts [E/CN.3/1999/2] stated that, with the publication of the Russian and Spanish versions of the 1993 SNA in 1998, the translation process had been completed and the document was available in all six official UN languages. The report noted that the Statistics Division had extended its cooperation with the regional commissions and had launched a series of regional or subregional workshops in Bangkok in October 1998, together with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP); in Addis Ababa in December 1998, together with the Economic Commission for Africa; and in Rio de Janeiro in November 1998, together with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the National Statistical Institute of Brazil. The topical orientation of those events (links with business accounts, practical experience with institutional sector accounts) reflected regional priorities. Mindful of the decision of the Statistical Commission on prioritizing support for countries with weak national accounts infrastructures, the Statistics Division and the regional commissions had targeted those countries in particular. In that context, the Division had started work on a training manual that would provide a practical basic introduction to the compilation of the 1993 SNA.

International trade statistics

In February, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination reviewed the activities of the Task Force on International Trade Statistics and its plans for further action on the requests made of it by the Statistical Commission in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1302]. The Working Group endorsed the idea that the international trade statistics database maintained by the Statistics Division since 1962 according to five commodity classifications (Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, 1996 and 1988 versions; and Revisions 1, 2 and 3 of the Standard International Trade Classification) could be rationalized to a smaller number of classifications. It also requested the Task Force to: study the burdens placed on international organizations by their having to maintain concordances and recompile international trade data according to those classifications; review the problem of maintaining comparable time series of trade; develop proposals with regard to action to be taken in the medium-term and long-term future, including consideration of the use of the Central Product Classification; and include the results in its report to the Statistical Commission's thirtieth (1999) session.

In June [E/CN.3/1999/22], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted the report on the Task Force's meeting (Brussels, Belgium, 25-26 February). The Task Force had carried out work in the following areas: methodological development, index numbers, coordination of data collection and data sharing among members of the Task Force, price and volume index numbers, and possible rationalization of the commodity trade statistics database maintained by the Statistics Division. It had also prepared a report, as previously requested by the Subcommittee, on inconsistency between the reported imports and reported exports of trading partners.

The Task Force had endorsed a work plan that would result in the completion of a compiler's manual in the year 2000. The manual would provide guidance on how to implement and interpret the International Merchandise Trade Statistics Concepts and Definitions, revision 2 (IMTS, Rev. 2); it would be developed as a synthesis of several available national and international manuals and amended to comply with the revised concepts and definitions. An outline had been prepared by the Statistics Division and was distributed to members of the Task Force and other countries in September 1998.

Finance statistics

During its February session, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination took note of activities and issues related to finance statistics, such as the completion of the balance-of-payments book on compilation methodologies for the financial and capital accounts of the balance of payments of countries in the European region. The Working Group stated that there was a need for further conceptual work in financial statistics in order to produce new and analytically useful concepts in such areas as international reserves, short-term private non-banking external debt and indicators of financial sector health. It noted that special attention should be paid to the development of internationally comparable accounting standards and the link between microeconomic variables and macroeconomic accounts. There was also a need to draw the attention of policy makers to the new call for financial statistics brought about by the financial crisis in Asia.

In June [E/CN.3/1999/22], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities welcomed the IMF initiative to bring the issues of measurement and dissemination of data on international reserves and external debt to the attention of the Task Force on Finance Statistics. In particular, the Task Force was invited to draw on experiences with debt management systems and related data collection.

International trade in services statistics

After consideration of the work of the Task Force on Statistics of International Trade in Services at its February session, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination welcomed the proposed production of a trade-in-services manual, and requested that it be reviewed in draft by the Statistical Commission. The Working Group proposed that the Task Force, together with the IMF Balance of Payments Committee and the UN Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications, should review and resolve the matter of classifications that arose from the proposed manual.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities took note of the planned schedule for completing the manual and requested the Statistics Division to prepare a paper on the issue of authorship and attribution when applied to statistical publications that were jointly prepared by a number of agencies.

Environment statistics

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, at its February meeting, endorsed the proposed first international compilation of environmental indicators and encouraged national statistical services and international organizations to participate fully in that exercise.

In June [E/CN.3/1999/22], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities concluded that basic environment statistics was a generic term that needed to be clarified and recommended that environment statistics concentrate on statistics on the natural environment. It also concluded that the Task Force on Environmental Statistics was no longer necessary and sufficient coordination could be undertaken in the Subcommittee itself. The Statistics Division was asked to coordinate the preparation of a paper on issues pertaining to environmental statistics for the Statistical Commission, in collaboration with the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), the Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat), the United Nations Environment Programme, the World Bank and the Division for Sustainable Development of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs. The Subcommittee noted that positive progress had been achieved in certain areas, such as the development of environmental accounting through the London Group on Environmental Accounting, which held its annual forum in Fontevraud, France, in May.

International economic and social classifications

The Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination welcomed the completion of the Central Product Classification (CPC) Version 1.0 and its submission for publication, as well as the close working relationship that had been established by the Statistics Division and the Voorburg Group with the World Trade Organization in the context of the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS). The Working Group recognized that preparing and implementing CPC as an international statistical standard and using it as a source in the context of GATS were independent and mutually supportive activities. The Group also welcomed the opportunity to review the International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC) and its derived and related classifications.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted that the statistics part of the ACC classification and the classification used in the integrated presentation of the statistical programmes of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), OECD and Eurostat served different purposes. The Subcommittee agreed that the two classifications should correspond with each other and, as far as possible, correspondence between them should be maintained over time. The Subcommittee requested the International Labour Organization and ESCAP to prepare a proposal for the minor changes needed to bring the classifications into correspondence, circulate the proposal to members of the Subcommittee for comment and provide the amended proposal to the Subcommittee's Chairman.

The fourth meeting of the Expert Group on International Economic and Social Classifications (New York, 2-4 November) [E/CN.3/1999/17] conducted a review of ISIC and its derived and related classifications. The Expert Group also underlined the necessity of coordinating the timing of updates and revisions of international standard classifications used for statistical purposes. In addition, the Expert Group approved a preamble to the international classification family, prepared by the Statistics Division, stating the roles and obligations of agencies responsible for international standard classifications and what it meant to be a member of the international classification family. It was recommended to be widely disseminated both on the web and in printed format.

At a meeting held in Rome in September 1998 [E/CN.3/1999/18], the Voorburg Group on Service Statistics, founded with the specific aim of assisting the United Nations Statistics Division in drafting CPC, undertook a review of its work programme for the period 1999-2001. It concluded that the statistical environment with respect to services statistics had evolved considerably. For example, surveys to collect and compile services statistics had been developed in many countries, opening the door for the collection and compilation of product data. However, important issues with respect to the measurement of the real output of service products remained to be tackled. The Voorburg Group had therefore decided to focus its future work programme on the following areas: classification of service products; service products prices; measurement of the demand for services by enterprise; and measurement of non-market services. Additional areas, including employment, information technology services and international trade in services, also might be treated by the Group.

Social and demographic statistics

Population and housing censuses

At its February session [E/CN.3/1999/20], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination emphasized the importance of undertaking the 2000 Round of Population and Housing Censuses and recognized the resource constraints that countries were facing in that regard. While acknowledging the efforts already made by Governments and international institutions, the Working Group concluded that the population and housing censuses were being accorded insufficient priority. Many countries had experienced very large internal and external migration flows, as well as substantial changes in fertility and mortality. In most of those countries, because of economic and social conditions, there was a critical risk that censuses would not be undertaken even though they were in the greatest need. The Working Group therefore called on Governments to give high priority to the next population and housing census.

In October [E/CN.3/1999/9], the Statistics Division prepared a draft revision of the Principles and Recommendations for a Vital Statistics System, which incorporated the latest developments in concepts, definitions, classifications, coding systems and newly available technology for storage, retrieval and data processing of vital records and statistics. The draft noted that civil registration systems were the preferred source of vital statistics, but other sources might be needed to supplement them.

The Expert Group on Draft Principles and Recommendations for a Vital Statistics System was convened (New York, 16-20 November) [E/CN.3/1999/10]. It expressed the view that attention should be paid to supply and demand constraints in the development and maintenance of civil registration systems, and that recommendations needed to take cognizance of gender, age and other sensitive issues in the collection and dissemination of data.

Poverty measurement

The Rio Group on Poverty Statistics held a meeting (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 13-15 May) [E/CN.3/1999/15] to discuss, among other things, the political status of poverty estimates; regional estimates of poverty; normative criteria; and the updating of poverty lines.

Statistical implications of UN conferences

At its February session, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination continued to monitor the implementation of the Minimum National Social Data Set (MNSDS), which served as a guide to monitor the major areas of concern addressed by recent UN conferences. In addition, the Working Group, in response to the suggestion of the President of the Economic and Social Council, had agreed to include in the agenda of the Statistical Commission a standing item entitled "Follow-up to the agreed conclusions of the Economic and Social Council's high-level and coordination segments, and to its resolutions".

The Working Group endorsed the progress made by the UN Secretariat on the implementation of MNSDS. Recognizing that the development of indicators was a dynamic process, the Working Group authorized the Secretariat to adjust the definition of indicators, if required. It also reiterated that such work was undertaken in the context of strengthening national statistical data-collection capabilities.

With regard to a more integrated and coordinated follow-up of major UN conferences and summits, the Statistics Division was invited by the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs to submit a report reviewing the situation with respect to the proliferation of indicators and the problem that it raised, particularly for countries. The report [E/CN.S/1999/14] was discussed at the tenth meeting of the Committee (New York, 16 May), which decided that the Statistics Division, in continued cooperation with statistical units of both the United Nations and non-United Nations entities, should start preparing an inventory of development indicators. Furthermore, an Internet web site containing the inventory and information related to the project was to be constructed with the assistance of the Division.

In June [E/CN.3/1999/22], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities considered the proposed work on indicators and decided to support the establishment of a development indicators web site. It also welcomed the Statistics Division's offer to provide substantive support to and work with the agencies in the preparation of their information for the proposed web site.

On 31 July, by decision 1998/290, the Economic and Social Council decided to hold an informal meeting of the Council with panels of experts to consider in a comprehensive manner the work carried out by the UN system, and other relevant international and national institutions, on basic indicators to measure progress towards the implementation of the integrated and coordinated follow-up of all aspects of major UN conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields at all levels, with a view to identifying duplication and gaps. The Statistics Division was responsible for preparing the main report that was to be considered by the informal meeting.

As a result of those decisions and recommendations, the Statistics Division had initiated an indicator project, which consisted of the following three main activities: taking an inventory of development indicators to determine the state of production and dissemination of indicators within and outside the United Nations system; assessing the impact on countries of the proliferation of indicator sets, with their inherent reporting requirements at the national level; and collaborating with agencies and international organizations on ongoing initiatives to develop indicators for monitoring conference goals and programmes.

Technical cooperation

In February [E/CN.3/1999/20], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination provided comments and endorsed the draft guiding principles contained in a September 1997 report of the Workshop on Improving Technical Cooperation in Statistics [YUN 1997, p. 1305]. It also agreed to the wide dissemination of the document to enable national statistical offices and regional and international organizations to provide feedback and comments. It called on the regional commissions and regional statistical committees to review and analyse the document, taking into account relevant regional experiences in the field of technical cooperation. The Working Group agreed that the process would refine the report on technical cooperation to be presented to the Statistical Commission in 1999.

Coordination and integration of international statistical programmes

During its February session, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination endorsed the 1997 report of the ad hoc group established to explore new approaches to the Statistical Commission's structure and operation, as well as the relationship between the regional commissions and the Commission and other international organizations [YUN 1997, p. 1306]. As an immediate step to improve operations of the statistical system and support the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities, the Working Group requested all city groups to supply the Commission at its thirtieth (1999) session with information on their activities and plans, using as a general guide the example of the proposed new style of integrated work programme module contained in the ad hoc group's report. It also expressed a strong preference for the Commission to meet annually instead of meeting in alternate years. In the event that holding annual sessions might not be acceptable to the Economic and Social Council or that such a change could not be enacted immediately, the Working Group requested the Statistics Division to submit a report to the Commission in 1999 on the extent to which the Commission could delegate authority to the Working Group.

In an August note [E/CN.3/1999/23], the Secretary-General submitted the revised report of the ad hoc group, which took into account the comments made by the Working Group and which aimed at improving the international statistical system. The report analysed the objectives and priorities of the international statistical system; the presentation of work programmes; the roles of the actors; strengthening the role of the Commission; the roles of other important forums—the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities, the regional commissions and conferences of statisticians, the statistical divisions of UN specialized agencies, including IMF and the World Bank, key players outside the UN system, city groups, subregional statistical groupings and the task forces; and the Internet as an instrument to promote the inclusion of countries in methodological work. Among the ad hoc group's recommendations was that the roles of the various actors (United Nations, non-UN organizations, city groups, intersecretariat groups and others) in the implementation of the integrated programme of statistical (methodological) development should be defined. It requested the Economic and Social Council to allow annual sessions of the Commission, and consequently to disband the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination. In the event that annual Commission sessions might not be acceptable to the Council, the ad hoc group recommended that the Working Group should be considered as a continuation of the Commission itself in the years that the Commission did not meet and change its mandate accordingly. The ad hoc group also suggested giving the Bureau of the Commission more of a steering role, by having it meet at the end of the sessions of the Commission and Working Group in order to "translate" the decisions into a list of concrete actions to be undertaken, which would include who was responsible for the actions and provide a specific time frame for their completion; promoting inclusiveness of countries in the Commission's work; improving the focus of documentation for the Commission's meetings by systematically using a standard format for all programme elements; and enhancing the involvement of international users, including those from the private sector, in designing statistical programmes and setting priorities for statistical (methodological) development at the international level.

Other statistical activities

Coordination of statistical data collection

At its February session [E/CN.3/1999/20], the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination considered an oral report on the coordination of statistical data collection made by the Director of the Statistics Division, in which he highlighted instances of duplication that had been reported by countries in response to an inquiry from the Chairman of the Working Group in 1996 and concluded that there was no indication of a major problem in that area. He also reported that the Conference of European Statisticians had initiated a review of the coordination of data collection in its region. The Working Group invited countries that observed instances of duplication to inform the international organizations involved in the review.

In June [E/CN.3/1999/22], the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted that its members were continuing to work to reduce reporting burdens on countries.

Inter-agency cooperation

In an oral report and an Internet demonstration to the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination in February, the Director of the Statistics Division reported on a pilot effort developed in response to a request by the Statistical Commission, which was intended to cover methodological outputs only. A search capability was its key feature. The Working Group welcomed the pilot effort as a first step in the direction of an integrated presentation of work plans. It made suggestions and posed questions concerning, among other things, the inclusion of previously produced methodological publications; the range of organizations to be included; possibilities of link-ages to home pages of city groups; inclusion of actual texts of classifications; specification of intended users and uses; relationships to similar or related sets of data available in some regions; arrangements for maintaining the database over time; and possible development of a catalogue of outputs with hyper-links to the home pages of other organizations where the details would be available. It also requested the Statistics Division to continue development of the system along the lines outlined by the Director.

In June, the ACC Subcommittee on Statistical Activities noted that consultations were continuing between the Statistics Division and ECE concerning ways of including information that OECD, Eurostat and ECE had already provided in the context of the integrated presentation of work plans for the Conference of European Statisticians.

PART FOUR

Legal questions

Chapter I

International Court of Justice

In 1998, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) delivered four Judgments and made 12 Orders. It had pending before it 13 contentious cases; however, by year's end one case was removed from the Court's list. During the year, one request for an advisory opinion was referred to the Court.

In a 27 October address to the General Assembly, the ICJ President observed that the Court was becoming increasingly integrated into the UN system of peaceful settlement of international disputes and was no longer seen only as the last resort in dispute resolution, since political and judicial approaches to settlement were mutually reinforcing. As the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, the Court was the most authoritative interpreter of the legal obligations of States in disputes between them; similarly, it continued to serve as the supreme interpreter of the United Nations Charter and associated instruments, including the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, which was the focus of an advisory proceeding in progress in the Court.

The President noted the significant increase in the ICJ caseload and emphasized the resulting strain on its current resources (see PART FOUR, Chapter V). He recalled the axiom that "justice delayed is justice denied" and expressed the hope that the Court would not need to delay its handling of cases for budgetary reasons.

Judicial work of the Court

During 1998, the Court delivered a Judgment on the Court's jurisdiction in the Fisheries Jurisdiction case (Spain v. Canada). It also delivered three Judgments on preliminary objections in the cases concerning Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom), Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America), and Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria).

The Court made an Order indicating provisional measures in the case concerning the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (Paraguay v. United States of America). It subsequently made an Order in the same case, recording the discontinuance of the proceedings and directing its removal from the Court's list. The Court or its President also made several Orders on the conduct of the proceedings in the cases concerning Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions between Qatar and Bahrain (Qatar v. Bahrain), Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) and (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America), Oil Platforms (Islamic Republic of Iran v. United States of America), Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia), Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria), Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana v. Namibia), and Sovereignty over Pulau Ligitan and Pulau Sipadan (Indonesia/Malaysia), as well as in the request for an advisory opinion concerning the Difference Relating to Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights.

The 1998 activities of ICJ were covered in two reports to the General Assembly, for the periods 1 August 1997 to 31 July 1998 [A/53/4] and 1 August 1998 to 31 July 1999 [A/54/4]. By decision 53/412 of 27 October 1998, the Assembly took note of the 1997/98 report.

Maritime delimitation and territorial questions (Qatar v. Bahrain)

Qatar instituted proceedings in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 820] against Bahrain in respect of disputes relating to sovereignty over the Hawar islands, sovereign rights over the shoals of Dibal and Qit'at Jaradah and the delimitation of the maritime areas of the two States.

In 1992, a Memorial by Qatar and a Counter-Memorial by Bahrain were filed [YUN 1992, p. 982], as were their respective Reply and Rejoinder.

Following hearings, the Court delivered on 1 July 1994 a Judgment [YUN 1994, p. 1279].

The Court received a letter from Qatar on 30 November 1994, transmitting an "Act to comply with paragraphs (3) and (4) of the operative paragraph 41 of the Judgment of the Court dated 1 July 1994". On the same day, Bahrain transmitted a "Report of the State of Bahrain to the International Court of Justice on the Attempt by the Parties to Implement the Court's Judgment of 1 July 1994".

At a public sitting held on 15 February 1995, the Court delivered a Judgment on jurisdiction and admissibility [YUN 1995, p. 1305], by which it found that it had jurisdiction and that the Application of Qatar as formulated on 30 November 1994 was admissible.

In 1996, each of the Parties filed a Memorial on the merits [YUN 1996, p. 1176]. Counter-Memorials of the Parties were duly filed and exchanged on 23 December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1312].

On 17 March 1998, the President held a meeting to ascertain the views of the Parties on a procedure concerning the authenticity of documents produced by Qatar [ibid.]. Qatar suggested the prescription by the Court of the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties at the end of March 1999, in which case Qatar would be able to annex to its Reply a comprehensive report on the authenticity of the documents; moreover, it proposed to submit to the Court, by the end of September, an interim report on that question, to which Bahrain then would be able to respond in its Reply. Bahrain did not object to the procedure envisaged by Qatar as either unreasonable or unjust.

By an Order of 30 March 1998, the Court fixed 30 September as the time limit for the filing of an interim report by Qatar and directed the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties within the time limit of 30 March 1999.

In its interim report, filed in September 1998, Qatar stated that it had decided to "disregard all the 82 challenged documents for the purposes of the present case so as to enable the Court to address the merits of the case without further procedural complications". It did so because "on the one hand . . . , on the question of the material authenticity of the documents, there were differing views not only between the respective experts of the Parties, but also between its own experts, and, on the other hand . . . , as far as the historical aspects were concerned, the experts that it had consulted considered that Bahrain's assertions showed exaggerations and distortions". The Agent of Bahrain, in a letter of 27 November, referred to "the effective abandonment by Qatar of all of the impeached documents . . . ", concluding that Qatar could not make any further reference to the documents concerned, that it would not adduce the content of those documents in connection with any of its arguments and that, in general, the merits of the case would be adjudicated by the Court without regard to the documents.

In December 1998, Qatar requested "a two-month extension of the time limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties, to 30 May 1999".

Questions of interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the aerial incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom) (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States)

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya instituted in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 982] separate proceedings against the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of a dispute over the interpretation and application of the 1971 Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation [YUN 1971, p. 739], which arose from its alleged involvement in the crash of Pan Am flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, on 21 December 1988. In the Applications, Libya referred to the charging and indictment of two of its nationals by the Lord Advocate of Scotland and by a Grand Jury of the United States for having caused a bomb to be placed aboard Pan Am flight 103, which exploded, caused the aircraft to crash and killed all 270 persons aboard.

The United Kingdom and the United States, on 16 and on 20 June 1995, respectively [YUN 1995, p. 1306], filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain Libya's Applications. Libya presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States within the prescribed time limits set by the Court. Public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections raised by the United Kingdom and the United States were held in October 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1313].

At public sittings held on 27 February 1998, the Court delivered the two Judgments on the preliminary objections, by which it rejected the objection to jurisdiction raised by the United Kingdom and the United States on the basis of the alleged absence of a dispute between the Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the 1971 Montreal Convention; found that it had jurisdiction, on the basis of article 14, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to hear the disputes between Libya and the United Kingdom and Libya and the United States as to the interpretation or application of the provisions of the Convention; rejected the objection to admissibility derived by the United Kingdom and the United States from Security Council resolutions 748 (1992) [YUN 1992, p. 55] and 883 (1993) [YUN 1993, p. 101]; found that the Applications filed by Libya on 3 March 1992 were admissible; and declared that the objection raised by both countries according to which the same Security Council resolutions had rendered the claims of Libya without object did not, in the circumstances of the case, have an excessively preliminary character.

Joint declarations were appended to the Judgment in the case against the United Kingdom by Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume and Ranjeva; by Judges Bedjaoui, Ranjeva and Koroma; and by Judges Guillaume and Fleischhauer. Judge Herczegh also appended a declaration to the Judgment of the Court. Judges Kooijmans and Rezek appended separate opinions to the Judgment. President Schwebel, Judge Oda and Judge ad hoc Sir Robert Jennings appended dissenting opinions.

In the case against the United States, joint declarations were appended to the Judgment by Judges Bedjaoui, Ranjeva and Koroma; and by Judges Guillaume and Fleischhauer. Judge Herczegh also appended a declaration to the Judgment of the Court. Judges Kooijmans and Rezek appended separate opinions to the Judgment. President Schwebel and Judge Oda appended dissenting opinions.

By Orders of 30 March 1998, the Court fixed 30 December 1998 as the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorials of the United Kingdom and the United States. Acting on a proposal of the United Kingdom and of the United States, which referred to recent diplomatic initiatives (see p. 163), and after the views of Libya had been ascertained, the Court extended by Orders of 17 December 1998 the time limit to 31 March 1999.

Oil platforms (Iran v. United States)

Iran instituted proceedings against the United States in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 983] regarding a dispute in which Iran alleged that the destruction by United States warships, on 19 October 1987 and 18 April 1988, of three offshore oil production complexes owned and operated by the National Iranian Oil Company constituted a breach of international law and the 1955 Iran/United States Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights. Iran requested the Court to rule on the matter.

Orders of the Court in 1992 [ibid.] and 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1183] fixed time limits for the filing of a Memorial by Iran and for a Counter-Memorial by the United States. Iran filed its Memorial, while the United States filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court. In 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1280], Iran presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the United States objections, in accordance with an Order of the Court.

The Court delivered its Judgment in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1178], by which it rejected the preliminary objection of the United States and found that it had jurisdiction to entertain the claims made by Iran.

By an Order of 16 December 1996 [ibid.], the President of the Court fixed 23 June 1997 as the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of the United States. Within the time limit thus fixed, the United States filed the Counter-Memorial and a Counter-Claim [YUN 1997, p. 1313].

In November and December 1997, respectively, Iran and the United States submitted written observations on the question of the admissibility of the United States Counter-Claim.

By an Order of 10 March 1998, the Court found that the Counter-Claim presented by the United States in its Counter-Memorial was admissible and formed part of the proceedings. It further directed Iran to submit a Reply and the United States to submit a Rejoinder, fixing the time limits for those pleadings at 10 September 1998 and 23 November 1999, respectively.

By an Order of 26 May 1998, the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, extended, at the request of Iran and taking into account the views expressed by the United States, the time limits for Iran's Reply and the United States Rejoinder to 10 December 1998 and 23 May 2000, respectively. By an Order of 8 December 1998, the Court further extended those time limits to 10 March 1999 for Iran's Reply and 23 November 2000 for the United States Rejoinder.

Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia)

Bosnia and Herzegovina instituted proceedings in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1138] against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) for alleged violations of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. The time limits were fixed for the filing of a Memorial by Bosnia and Herzegovina and a Counter-Memorial by Yugoslavia [YUN 1993, p. 1138]. The Memorial of Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time limit [YUN 1994, p. 1281].

The time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Yugoslavia was extended in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1307]. Within the time limit, Yugoslavia filed certain preliminary objections. The objections related, first, to the admissibility of the Application and, second, to the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with the case. By virtue of the Rules of Court, the proceedings on the merits were suspended. Pursuant to an Order of the Court [ibid.], Bosnia and Herzegovina presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Yugoslavia.

In accordance with an Order of 23 July 1996 [ibid.], Yugoslavia filed a Counter-Memorial, which included Counter-Claims against Bosnia and Herzegovina [YUN 1997, p. 1315].

Both Parties accepted in 1997 that their respective Governments would submit written observations on the question of the admissibility of the Yugoslav Counter-Claims and did so. The Court, by an Order of 17 December 1997 [ibid.], found that the Counter-Claims submitted by Yugoslavia in its Counter-Memorial were admissible and formed part of the proceedings. It directed Bosnia and Herzegovina to submit a Reply and Yugoslavia to submit a Rejoinder, fixing the time limits for those pleadings at 23 January and 23 July 1998, respectively.

By an Order of 22 January 1998, the President of the Court, at the request of Bosnia and Herzegovina and taking into account the views expressed by Yugoslavia, extended the time limits for Bosnia and Herzegovina's Reply and Yugoslavia's Rejoinder to 23 April 1998 and 22 January 1999, respectively. The Reply of Bosnia and Herzegovina was filed within the prescribed time limit.

Following a request from Yugoslavia and after the views of Bosnia and Herzegovina had been ascertained, the Court, by an Order of 11 December 1998, extended the time limit for the filing of Yugoslavia's Rejoinder to 22 February 1999.

Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia)

Hungary applied to the Court in a dispute with the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic in 1992 concerning the projected diversion of the Danube River, inviting the Republic to accept the Court's jurisdiction.

Following negotiations between Hungary and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, which dissolved into two States on 1 January 1993, Hungary and Slovakia—the sole successor State of the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic with respect to the Nagymaros Project dispute—requested the Court in July 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 1139] to decide whether Hungary had been entitled to suspend and subsequently abandon in 1989 the work on the Project and on the part of the Gabcikovo Project for which it was responsible under the 1977 Budapest Treaty on the Construction and Operation of the Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Barrage System; and whether the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic had been entitled to execute in 1991-1992 the "provisional solution"—a system damming up the Danube on Czechoslovak territory. The Court was also requested to determine the legal effects of the termination of the Treaty by Hungary in 1992 and the legal consequences of the Court's Judgment in that case.

Each Party filed a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial within the time limits fixed by an Order of the Court of 14 July 1993 [ibid.]. Pursuant to an Order of 20 December 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281], both Parties filed a Reply.

At the request of the Agent of Slovakia, the Court, in April 1997, visited the site of the Gabcikovo-Nagymaros hydroelectric dam project on the Danube River to obtain evidence in the case [YUN 1997, p. 1316]. In September 1997, the Court delivered its Judgment [ibid.].

On 3 September 1998, Slovakia filed a request for an additional Judgment. According to Slovakia, an additional Judgment was necessary due to the unwillingness of Hungary to implement the Court's prior Judgment. In its request, Slovakia stated that the Parties had conducted a series of negotiations on the modalities for execution of the Court's Judgment and had initialled a draft Framework Agreement, which was approved by the Government of Slovakia on 10 March 1998. Slovakia contended that on 5 March 1998, however, Hungary had postponed its approval and, upon the accession of its new Government following the May elections, had proceeded to disavow the draft Framework Agreement and was further delaying the implementation of the Judgment. Slovakia maintained that it wanted the Court to determine the modalities for executing the Judgment.

As the basis for its request, Slovakia invoked article 5(3) of the Special Agreement signed in Brussels, Belgium, on 7 April 1993 by Hungary and itself with a view to the joint submission of their dispute to the Court. Article 5(3) stated: "If [the Parties] are unable to reach agreement within six months, either Party may request the Court to render an additional Judgment to determine the modalities for executing its Judgment."

Slovakia asked the Court to adjudge and declare: that Hungary was responsible for the failure of the Parties so far to agree on the modalities for executing the Judgment of 25 September 1997 [ibid.]; that the obligation of the Parties to take all necessary measures to ensure that achievement of the objectives of the Treaty of 16 September 1977 (by which they agreed to build the Gabcikovo-Nagymaros Project) applied to the whole geographical area and the whole range of relationships covered by that Treaty; that, in order to ensure compliance with the Court's Judgment of 25 September 1997, and given that the 1977 Treaty remained in force and that the Parties should take all necessary measures to ensure the achievement of the objectives of that Treaty, the Parties should resume negotiations and conclude, not later than 1 January 1999, a binding Framework Agreement under which to proceed; and that should negotiations fail, either Party could request the Court to allocate responsibility for any breaches of the Treaty and reparation for such breaches.

At a meeting between the President of the Court and the representatives of the Parties on 7 October 1998, it was decided that Hungary would file by 7 December 1998 a written statement of its position on the request for an additional Judgment made by Slovakia. Hungary filed its written statement within the time limit fixed. The Parties subsequently informed the Court of the resumption of negotiations between them.

Land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria

Cameroon instituted proceedings against Nigeria in March 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1281] in a dispute concerning the question of sovereignty over the peninsula of Bakassi and requested the Court to determine the course of the maritime frontier between the two States in so far as that frontier had not already been established in 1975. The Application was amended by an Additional Application in June of that year. Cameroon's Memorial was filed in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1308]. On 13 December 1995, within the time limit for the filing of its Counter-Memorial, Nigeria filed certain preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and to the admissibility of the claims of Cameroon.

In 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1180], Cameroon presented a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections raised by Nigeria. Following hearings in March 1996, the Court made an Order [ibid.] indicating that neither Party should take any action of any kind and that both should lend every assistance to a fact-finding mission to be sent by the United Nations Secretary-General [ibid., p. 146].

Public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the preliminary objections raised by Nigeria were held from 2 to 11 March 1998. At a public sitting on 11 June 1998, the Court delivered its Judgment on the preliminary objections, by which it rejected seven of Nigeria's eight preliminary objections; declared that the eighth preliminary objection did not have, in the circumstances of the case, an exclusively preliminary character; and found that, on the basis of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, it had jurisdiction to adjudicate on the dispute and that the Application filed by Cameroon on 29 March 1994, as amended by the Additional Application of 6 June 1994, was admissible.

Judges Oda, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren and Kooijmans appended separate opinions to the Judgment; Vice-President Weeramantry, Judge Koroma and Judge ad hoc Ajibola appended dissenting opinions.

By an Order of 30 June 1998, the Court, having been informed of the views of the Parties, fixed 31 March 1999 as the time limit for the filing of the Counter-Memorial of Nigeria.

On 28 October 1998, Nigeria filed a request for an interpretation of the Court's Judgment on preliminary objections of 11 June 1998. Such a request for interpretation of a Judgment of the Court formed a separate case.

Interpretation of Judgment

In its request for an interpretation of the 11 June Judgment, Nigeria stated that "One aspect of the case before the Court is the alleged international responsibility borne by Nigeria for certain incidents said to have occurred at various places in Bakassi and Lake Chad and along the length of the frontier between those two regions". Nigeria contended that Cameroon had made "allegations involving a number of such incidents in its Application of 29 March 1994, its Additional Application of 6 June 1994, its Observations of 30 April 1996 on Nigeria's Preliminary Objections, and during the oral hearings held from 2-11 March 1998", and that Cameroon had also said that it "would be able to provide information as to other incidents on some unspecified future occasion". In the view of Nigeria, the Court's Judgment "[did] not specify which of these alleged incidents [were] to be considered as part of the merits of the case" and, accordingly, "the meaning and scope of the Judgment require[d] interpretation".

The Senior Judge, Acting President, fixed 3 December 1998 as the time limit for Cameroon to submit its written observations on Nigeria's request for interpretation. Those written observations were filed within the time limit fixed. In the light of the dossier thus submitted, the Court did not deem it necessary to invite the Parties to furnish further written or oral explanations.

Fisheries jurisdiction (Spain v. Canada)

Spain instituted proceedings against Canada in March 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1308] in a dispute relating to the Canadian Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, as amended on 12 May 1994, and to the implementing regulations of that Act, as well as to certain measures taken on the basis of that legislation, more particularly the boarding on the high seas, on 9 March 1995, of a fishing boat, the Estai, sailing under the Spanish flag.

Canada claimed that the Court manifestly lacked jurisdiction to deal with the Application filed by Spain. The President, by an Order of 2 May 1995 [ibid.], decided that the written proceedings should first be addressed to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute. Spain filed a Memorial in 1995 [ibid.], and Canada a Counter-Memorial in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1181].

Spain subsequently expressed its wish to be authorized to file a Reply, which was opposed by Canada. By an Order of 8 May 1996 [ibid.], the Court decided not to authorize the filing of a Reply by the Applicant and a Rejoinder by the Respondent on the question of jurisdiction.

Public sittings to hear the oral arguments of the Parties on the question of the jurisdiction of the Court were held between 9 and 17 June 1998. At a public sitting held on 4 December 1998, the Court delivered its Judgment on jurisdiction, in which it decided, by 12 votes to 5, that the Court had "no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute brought before it by the Application filed by the Kingdom of Spain on 28 March 1995".

President Schwebel and Judges Oda, Koroma and Kooijmans appended separate opinions to the Judgment; Vice-President Weeramantry, Judges Bedjaoui, Ranjeva and Vereshchetin, and Judge ad hoc Torres-Bernárdez appended dissenting opinions.

Kasikili/Sedudu Island (Botswana/Namibia)

Botswana and Namibia by Special Agreement jointly submitted to the Court on 29 May 1996 a dispute concerning the boundary around Kasikili/Sedudu Island and the island's legal status [YUN 1996, p. 1181]. Each of the Parties had filed a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1319].

In a joint letter dated 16 February 1998, the Parties requested further written pleadings pursuant to article II, paragraph 2 (c), of the Special Agreement signed by the two States in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1181], which provided, in addition to the Memorials and Counter-Memorials, for "such other pleadings as may be approved by the Court at the request of either of the Parties, or as may be directed by the Court".

By an Order of 27 February 1998, the Court, taking into account the agreement between the Parties, fixed 27 November 1998 as the time limit for the filing of a Reply by each of the Parties. Those Replies were filed within the prescribed time limit.

Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (Paraguay v. United States)

On 3 April 1998, Paraguay instituted proceedings against the United States in a dispute concerning alleged violations of the 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510]. Paraguay based the jurisdiction of the Court on article 36, paragraph 1, of the Court's Statute and on article I of the Optional Protocol concerning the Compulsory Settlement of Disputes, which accompanied the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations and which provided that "disputes arising out of the interpretation or application of the Convention shall lie within the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice".

In the Application it was stated that in 1992 the authorities of the Commonwealth of Virginia had arrested a Paraguayan national, Angel Francisco Breard; that he had been charged, tried, convicted of culpable homicide and sentenced to death by a Virginia court (the Circuit Court of Arlington County) in 1993, without having been informed, as required under article 36, subparagraph 1 (b), of the Vienna Convention, of his rights under that provision; it was specified that among those rights was the right to request that the relevant consular office of the State of which he was a national be advised of his arrest and detention, and the right to communicate with that office; it was further alleged that the authorities of the Commonwealth of Virginia also had not advised the Paraguayan consular officers of Mr. Breard's detention, and that those officers had only been able to render assistance to him from 1996, when the Paraguayan Government had learned by its own means that Mr. Breard had been imprisoned.

Paraguay requested the Court to adjudge and declare that the United States, in arresting, detaining, trying, convicting and sentencing Mr. Breard, had violated its international legal obligations to Paraguay, in its own right and in the exercise of its right of diplomatic protection of its national, as provided by articles 5 and 36 of the Vienna Convention; that Paraguay was therefore entitled to restitutio in integrum; that the United States was under an international legal obligation not to apply the doctrine of "procedural default", or any other doctrine of its internal law, so as to preclude the exercise of the rights accorded under article 36 of the Vienna Convention; and that the United States was under an international legal obligation to carry out in conformity with the foregoing international legal obligations any future detention of or criminal proceedings against Mr. Breard or any other Paraguayan national in its territory. Paraguay requested the Court to adjudge and declare that, pursuant to the foregoing international legal obligations: any criminal liability imposed on Mr. Breard in violation of international legal obligations was void, and should be recognized as void by the United States legal authorities; the United States should restore the status quo ante, by re-establishing the situation that existed before the detention of, proceedings against, and conviction and sentencing of Breard; and the United States should provide Paraguay a guarantee of the non-repetition of the illegal acts.

On the same day, Paraguay, "in view of the extreme gravity and immediacy of the threat that the authorities . . . will execute a Paraguayan citizen", submitted an urgent request for the indication of provisional measures, asking that, pending final judgment in the case, the Court indicate: "(a) that the Government of the United States take the measures necessary to ensure that Mr. Breard not be executed pending the disposition of this case; (b) that the Government of the United States report to the Court the actions it has taken in pursuance of subparagraph (a) immediately above and the results of those actions; and (c) that the Government of the United States ensure that no action is taken that might prejudice the rights of the Republic of Paraguay with respect to any decision this Court may render on the merits of the case."

By identical letters dated 3 April 1998, the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, addressed both Parties in the following terms: "Exercising the functions of the presidency in terms of Articles 13 and 32 of the Rules of Court, and acting in conformity with Article 74, paragraph 4, of the said Rules, I hereby draw the attention of both Parties to the need to act in such a way as to enable any Order the Court will make on the request for provisional measures to have its appropriate effects."

At a meeting held the same day with the representatives of both Parties, he advised them that the Court would hold public hearings on 7 April in order to afford the Parties the opportunity of presenting their observations on the request for provisional measures.

At a public sitting on 9 April, the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, read the Order [S/1998/315] on the request for provisional measures made by Paraguay, by which the Court unanimously indicated that the United States had to take all measures at its disposal to ensure that Mr. Breard would not be executed pending the final decision in the proceedings, and had to inform the Court of all the measures which it had taken in implementation of that Order; and decided that, until the Court had given its final decision, it should remain seized of the matters which formed the subject matter of that Order.

President Schwebel and Judges Oda and Koroma appended declarations to the Order of the Court.

By an Order of the same day, the Vice-President of the Court, Acting President, taking into account the Court's Order on provisional measures, in which it was stated that "it is appropriate that the Court, with the cooperation of the Parties, ensure that any decision on the merits be reached with all possible expedition" and a subsequent agreement between the Parties, fixed 9 June 1998 as the time limit for the Memorial of Paraguay and 9 September 1998 for the Counter-Memorial of the United States.

In response to a request from Paraguay made in the light of the execution of Mr. Breard, and taking into account an agreement on extension of time limits reached by the Parties, the Vice-President, Acting President, by an Order of 8 June 1998, extended the above-mentioned time limits to 9 October 1998 and 9 April 1999, respectively. Paraguay's Memorial was filed within the time limit thus extended.

By a letter of 2 November 1998, Paraguay informed the Court that it wished to discontinue the proceedings with prejudice and requested that the case be removed from the List. After the United States informed the Court that it concurred in Paraguay's request, the Court, in an Order of 10 November 1998, placed the discontinuance by Paraguay on record and ordered the removal of the case from the List.

Sovereignty over Pulau Ligitan and Pulau Sipadan (Indonesia/Malaysia)

On 2 November 1998, Indonesia and Malaysia jointly notified the Court of a Special Agreement between the two States, signed at Kuala Lumpur on 31 May 1997 and having entered into force on 14 May 1998, in which they requested the Court "to determine on the basis of the treaties, agreements and any other evidence furnished by the Parties, whether sovereignty over Pulau Ligitan and Pulau Sipadan belongs to the Republic of Indonesia or to Malaysia".

By an Order of 10 November 1998, the Court, taking into account the provisions of the Special Agreement on the written pleadings, fixed 2 November 1999 and 2 March 2000, respectively, as the time limits for the filing by each of the Parties of a Memorial and a Counter-Memorial.

Ahmadou Sadio Diallo
(Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo)

On 28 December 1998, Guinea instituted proceedings against the Democratic Republic of the Congo by an "Application with a view to diplomatic protection", in which it requested the Court to "condemn the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the grave breaches of international law perpetrated upon the person of a Guinean national", Ahmadou Sadio Diallo.

According to Guinea, Mr. Diallo, a businessman who had been a resident of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for 32 years, was "unlawfully imprisoned by the authorities of that State" during two and a half months, "divested from his important investments, companies, bank accounts, movable and immovable properties, then expelled". The expulsion occurred on 2 February 1996, as a result of his attempts to recover sums owed to him by the Democratic Republic of the Congo (especially by Gécamines, a State enterprise and mining monopoly) and by oil companies operating in that country (Zaire Shell, Zaire Mobil and Zaire Fina) by virtue of contracts concluded with businesses owned by him, namely, Africom-Zaire and Africontainers-Zaire.

Difference relating to immunity from legal process of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights

The Secretary-General, in a 28 July note [E/1998/794 & Add.I], reported to the Economic and Social Council on the privileges and immunities of a Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights. He summarized legal action taken by the Malaysian courts against Dato' Param Kumaraswamy, a Malaysian jurist, who since 1994 had served as Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers. Describing the basis of his legal argument in support of the immunity of the Special Rapporteur, the Secretary-General recalled that the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly by resolution 27 A (I) [YUN 1946-47, p. 100], provided that experts performing missions for the Organization would be accorded privileges and immunities as were necessary for the independent exercise of their functions.

In an interview in November 1995 with the publication International Commercial Litigation, Mr. Kumaraswamy had commented on certain litigations that had taken place in Malaysian courts. Subsequently, commercial companies in Malaysia filed suit against him for damages. Having reviewed the case, the UN Legal Counsel on 15 January and the Secretary-General on 7 March 1997 informed Malaysia of the Special Rapporteur's immunity from legal process with respect to that complaint. However, on 18 June 1997, the competent judge for the case concluded that she was unable to maintain that the defendant was protected by the immunity he claimed to have. The Malaysian Court ordered that Mr. Kumaraswamy's motion be dismissed with costs, that cost be paid forthwith by him and that he file and serve his defence within 14 days. The UN Legal Counsel called on the Malaysian Government to assume the costs of any further defence, in accordance with the Convention, pending resolution.

On 7 November 1997, the Secretary-General advised the Prime Minister of Malaysia that a difference might have arisen between the United Nations and the Government of Malaysia and about the possibility of resorting to ICJ.

On 19 February 1998, the Malaysian Court denied Mr. Kumaraswamy's application for leave to appeal. The Secretary-General then appointed a Special Envoy, Maître Yves Fortier of Canada, who attempted to reach an agreement with Malaysia on a joint submission to ICJ. Having concluded that Malaysia was not going to participate in either settling the matter or in preparing a joint submission to the 1998 session of the Economic and Social Council, the Special Envoy advised that the matter should be referred to the Council to request an advisory opinion from ICJ.

The Council, on 5 August, adopted decision 1998/297 (see below), requesting ICJ to give an advisory opinion on a difference that had arisen between the United Nations and Malaysia on the interpretation or application of the Convention.

On 7 August 1998, the Secretary-General officially communicated the Council's decision to the Court.

By an Order of 10 August, the time limit within which written statements on the question might be submitted to the Court by the United Nations and the States that were parties to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations was fixed at 7 October 1998 by the Senior Judge, Acting President, bearing in mind that the request was made "on a priority basis". The time limit for written comments on written statements was fixed at 6 November 1998.

Within the time limit fixed by the Order of 10 August 1998, written statements were filed by the Secretary-General and by Costa Rica, Germany, Italy, Malaysia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States; the filing of a written statement by Greece on 12 October 1998 was authorized. A related letter was also received from Luxembourg on 29 October 1998. Written comments on the statements were submitted, within the prescribed time limit, by the Secretary-

General and by Costa Rica, Malaysia and the United States.

Public sittings were held on 7, 8 and 10 December, during which the Court heard oral statements from the United Nations, Costa Rica, Italy and Malaysia.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In August, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1998/297 [draft: E/1998/L.49/Rev.I] without vote [agenda item 14 (g)].

Request for an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice

At its 49th plenary meeting, on 5 August 1998, the Economic and Social Council, having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the privileges and immunities of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers, considering that a difference had arisen between the United Nations and the Government of Malaysia, within the meaning of section 30 of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, with respect to the immunity from legal process of Dato' Param Kumaraswamy, the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers, and recalling General Assembly resolution 89(I) of 11 December 1946:

(a) Requested on a priority basis, pursuant to Article 96, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and in accordance with General Assembly resolution 89(I), an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal question of the applicability of article VI, section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations in the case of Dato' Param Kumaraswamy as Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers, taking into account the circumstances set out in paragraphs 1 to 15 of the note by the Secretary-General, and on the legal obligations of Malaysia in that case;

(b) Called upon the Government of Malaysia to ensure that all judgements and proceedings in that matter in the Malaysian courts were stayed pending receipt of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice, which should be accepted as decisive by the parties.

Chapter II

International tribunals

In 1998, each of the international tribunals, created by the United Nations to prosecute persons responsible for mass violation of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia and in Rwanda, established an additional Trial Chamber and installed three new judges in order to deal with the increased number of accused in custody. The International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (ICTY) witnessed a period of unprecedented growth and development, during which the institution demonstrated that international criminal justice was an achievable goal. The International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 (ICTR) handed down the first judgement ever by an international court on the crime of genocide.

International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia

In August, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the fifth annual report of ICTY [A/53/219-S/1998/737], which was established by Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440]. By decision 53/416 of 19 November, the Assembly took note of the report, which covered the period from 1 August 1997 to 27 July 1998.

The report recorded significant progress by the Tribunal in acquiring the resources, facilities and cooperative arrangements with States and international and multilateral bodies necessary to fulfil its mandate. During 1998, the Tribunal became a fully functioning international criminal court. The number of accused in custody more than tripled, trial activity increased and the Office of the Prosecutor initiated an investigation into events in Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) (see PART ONE, Chapter V, and PART THREE, Chapter III) and continued its energetic programme in other areas of the former Yugoslavia.

The Chambers

Three new judges were elected on 20 May and assumed office on 16 November. Consequently, a third Trial Chamber, established by Security Council resolution 1166(1998) (see below), became operational. All three Trial Chambers and the Appeals Chamber were seized of cases, enabling the Tribunal to provide more expeditious trials. In addition, the judges took steps to reduce the length of trials.

Trials and cases

New cases

Milan Simic, Miroslav Tadic, Simo Zaric and Stevan Todorovic were jointly charged, with an additional accused, Blagoje Simic, who was still at large, in the Bosanski Samac indictment. Subsequent to two amendments, the indictment included some 37 counts pertaining to alleged crimes during events that occurred between September 1991 and December 1993, mainly in the municipalities of Bosanski Samac and Odzak. No trial date was set.

Goran Jelusic, arrested by the multinational Stabilization Force (SFOR) on 22 January, was charged jointly with Ranko Cestic in the Brcko indictment with genocide, crimes against humanity, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims of 12 August 1949 (Geneva Conventions) and violations of the laws or customs of war for the killing and beating of Muslim prisoners. He pleaded not guilty to all charges. On 12 May, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecutor leave to amend the indictment. The accused changed his plea from not guilty to guilty in respect of all charges relating to crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war. The trial of the remaining single count of genocide, to which the accused pleaded not guilty, began in November 1998.

The Kvocka and Others case comprised charges against Miroslav Kvocka, Mladen Radic, Zoran Zigic and Miroslav Kos in the indictment against Meakic and Others in relation to events that occurred in the Omarska detention camp. Messrs. Kvočka and Radic were arrested on 8 April and pleaded not guilty. Mr. Kos also pleaded not guilty on 2 June. Mr. Zigic was charged under two separate indictments, the Omarska indictment and the Keraterm indictment (Sikirica and Other) related to events that allegedly took place at those detention camps. He pleaded not guilty to all charges on 20 April. On 15 June, the Prosecution amended the indictments and the four accused were charged and tried under a new single indictment in relation to events in the Keraterm, Omarska and Trnopolje detention camps. Thus, they were charged with crimes against humanity and violations of the laws and customs of war on the basis of, inter alia, alleged acts of murder, torture, sexual assault and rape, beatings, psychological abuse, humiliation and confinement in inhumane conditions. No trial date had been set by the end of the year.

Dragoljub Kunarac, charged in 1996 with torture and rape as crimes against humanity and torture as a violation of the laws or customs of war, surrendered voluntarily on 5 March 1998 and pleaded guilty to only the charge of rape. The Trial Chamber decided that he did not fully understand the implications of the charge and therefore entered a plea of not guilty on behalf of the accused. Following the amendment of the indictment, he was charged with crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war for acts of torture, rape, outrages upon personal dignity, enslavement and plunder of private property regarding events that allegedly took place in connection with the detention of women and children in the Foca and Kalinovik municipalities in Bosnia and Herzegovina. No trial date was set.

Milorad Krnojelac was arrested by SFOR on 15 June and pleaded not guilty to charges related to events that allegedly took place in a prison facility in Bosnia and Herzegovina while he was the commander and in a position of superior authority. He was charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws or customs of war and crimes against humanity, on the basis of wilful killing, murder, torture, cruel treatment, unlawful confinement of civilians, slavery and inhuman acts. No trial date was set.

The indictment against General Radislav Krstic, who was detained by SFOR on 2 December, charged him with genocide, violations of the laws or customs of war and crimes against humanity in relation to events that took place during and after the fall of the United Nations-declared safe area of Srebrenica in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 529]. At his initial appearance before the Trial Chamber, he pleaded not guilty to all charges.

Ongoing trials

The joint trial of Zejnil Delalic, Zdravko Mucic, Hazim Delic and Esad Landzo, who were indicted in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1186] for offences allegedly committed at the Celebici detention camp in central Bosnia, came to a close on 15 October [A/54/187-S/1999/846]. The Trial Chamber found Mr. Delalic not guilty of all charges. The others accused were found guilty of various charges of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of the laws or customs of war and sentences were imposed by the Trial Chamber. All parties appealed portions of the judgement. The Trial Chamber also pronounced upon the concept of command responsibility, the first decision by an international judicial body on that doctrine since the cases decided in the wake of the Second World War. The Trial Chamber concluded that the doctrine of command responsibility encompassed both military and civilian superiors on the basis of de jure as well as de facto positions of authority. In addition, the Trial Chamber made for the first time the important finding that, in certain circumstances, acts of rape might constitute torture under international humanitarian law.

Drazen Erdemovic was originally sentenced to 10 years imprisonment in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1186]. On 14 January, appearing before a new Trial Chamber, he pleaded guilty to violations of the laws or customs of war and his sentence was reduced to five years due to mitigating circumstances such as admission of guilt, remorse, cooperation with the Prosecutor, his personal circumstances and the existence of duress.

Dusko Tadic was found guilty of crimes against humanity and violations of the laws or customs of war and sentenced to a number of concurrent terms. After appeals from both Defence and Prosecution and following oral argument on 15 October 1998, the Appeals Chamber dismissed a defence motion seeking to have additional evidence admitted. The Appeals Chamber also initiated contempt proceedings against a former defence counsel, involving the hearing of a number of witnesses, which were ongoing.

The alleged ethnic cleansing of the Bosnian Muslim population of the Lasva river valley region in central Bosnia and Herzegovina from May 1992 to May 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 945] formed the background to four separate indictments: Kordic and Others; Blaskic; Kupreskic and Others; and Furundzija.

The trial of Zlatko Aleksovski, charged in 1995 under the Kordic and Others indictment with two counts of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and one count of violations of the laws or customs of war for the unlawful treatment of Bosnian Muslim detainees, began on 6 January 1998. He had pleaded not guilty in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1321] and the Trial Chamber granted the motion of the accused for the separation of his trial from that of the others. The Prosecution concluded its case in May 1998. As the trial was drawing to a close, the Prosecution filed an application for leave to appeal against two decisions of the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber, on 18 December, granted the Prosecution's application for leave to appeal, finding that the proposed appeal raised fundamental issues of equality of arms and the right to a fair trial for both the Prosecution and the Defence and that those issues were of general importance to the proceedings.

In a decision of 21 January regarding the case of General Tihofil Blasic, who had entered a plea of not guilty in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1186], the Trial Chamber rejected a Defence motion objecting to the admission of hearsay evidence without an inquiry as to its reliability. The Chamber concluded that any evidence was admissible so long as it was deemed by the Chamber to be relevant and of probative value, and that the only issue was the weight that the judges would give to hearsay testimony. On 30 January, the Trial Chamber deemed that any documentary evidence produced by a party and identified by a witness should be admitted but that the weight ascribed to it would depend on the evaluation of its authenticity.

The trial against Kupreskic and Others, based on the alleged ethnic cleansing of the village of Ahmici, and which was the basis of the 1995 indictment against six accused—Zoran, Mirjan and Vlatko Kupreskic; Vladimir Santic; Drago Josipovic and Dragan Papic—began on 17 August. The Trial Chamber had rendered a number of decisions on various motions presented by the parties. The Trial Chamber stated that the tu quoque principle in international humanitarian law did not lay down obligations based on reciprocity, but obligations that were designed to safeguard fundamental human values and therefore had to be complied with regardless of the conduct of the other party or parties. The trial was to continue into 1999.

Anto Furundzija, alleged to have been the commander of a special forces group within the Croatian Defence Council at the time of the attack on the Bosnian Muslim population of the Lasva valley area, was found guilty by the Trial Chamber as a co-perpetrator of torture and of aiding and abetting in outrages upon personal dignity, including rape. The Chamber imposed two concurrent sentences of 10 and 8 years' imprisonment. On 22 December, he filed a notice of appeal against the judgement.

The trial of Slavko Dokmanovic, who was indicted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1322], began on 19 January. Three days after the close of the case and nine days before the judgement was due, the Tribunal learned that Mr. Dokmanovic had died on 28 June, bringing a close to the proceedings.

Milan Kovacevic, charged in 1997 [ibid.] in relation to crimes committed against the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat populations of the Prijedor municipality during 1992, pleaded not guilty on 6 July 1998 to the counts contained in an amended indictment that expanded the charges against him. The trial began in July and further hearings were scheduled for September. The trial was discontinued due to the death of the accused on 1 August.

Judicial orders

On 5 and 8 May respectively, leave was granted to the Prosecutor to withdraw charges against 11 accused in the Omarska indictment and 5 accused in the Keraterm indictment. That action was taken to control the potential workload of the Tribunal and to minimize the possibility of having too many additional trials resulting from the same indictment. In withdrawing the charges, the Prosecutor indicated a willingness to assist national courts to prosecute the accused, who were relatively low-level perpetrators.

An indictment against Mladen Naletilic and Vinko Martinovic was confirmed on 21 December, charging them with crimes against humanity, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of the laws or customs of war in respect of their alleged involvement in murder, wilful killing, inhumane treatment, wilfully causing great suffering, persecutions, forcible transfer and destruction and plunder of private property.

The Appeals Chamber entertained one State request for review in 1998 in respect of the Judgement on the Request of the Republic of Croatia for Review of the Decision of Trial Chamber II of 18 July 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1322]. As a result of that decision, binding orders were issued to Croatia by the Trial Chamber on 30 January. Croatia filed a request for review of the binding order on 26 February. In its Decision of 26 February, the Appeals Chamber suspended the execution of the binding order and referred the matter back to the Trial Chamber in order to allow the parties to be heard.

State non-compliance

Croatia

The Prosecutor remained concerned at the Government of Croatia's refusal to deal with her Office's requests for assistance [A/54/187-S/1999/846]. Croatia had refused to cooperate with the Prosecutor's investigations arising out of allegations that crimes falling within the Tribunal's jurisdiction were committed by Croatian forces in 1995 when they recaptured the Krajina region from Serbian control [YUN 1995, p. 580]. In addition, Croatia had failed to transfer to the Tribunal Mladen Naletilic and Vinko Martinovic, indicted on 21 December.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Non-compliance by FRY continued to pose serious problems for the Tribunal [A/54/187-S/1999/846]. Pursuant to Security Council resolution 827(1993) [YUN 1993, p. 440], which created the Tribunal, all States were required to cooperate with the Tribunal, including the obligation to comply with requests for assistance.

Failure to issue visas

On 15 October, the Prosecutor advised FRY authorities of her intention to lead a mission to Kosovo to investigate alleged criminal activity, and sought assurances that visas would be issued. FRY refused to provide the travel documents.

The President of the Tribunal, on 6 November, informed the Security Council of FRY's non-compliance and appealed to the Council to take action to enable the Tribunal to discharge its mandate [S/1998/1040].

On 9 November [A/53/653-S/1998/1051], FRY stated that visas had been issued to the President of the Tribunal, the Prosecutor and Deputy Prosecutor and nine associates to participate in a symposium on the Tribunal. In a letter dated 25 November [S/1998/1124], the Prosecutor stated that, in addition to attending the conference, the main purpose of the visit was to conduct investigations into crimes allegedly committed in Kosovo that fell within the Tribunal's jurisdiction. The visas issued were only to the President of the Tribunal and her party who were attending the conference. The authorities indicated a willingness to issue conditional entry visas to the Prosecutor, the Deputy Prosecutor and other staff members of the Tribunal, but not to members of the investigative team. Furthermore, the authorities offered to issue visas imposing the condition that neither the Prosecutor nor any staff member would be allowed to enter Kosovo for investigatory purposes. Therefore, the visit was postponed.

Failure to arrest and transfer indictees

In a letter dated 8 September [S/1998/839], the President of the Tribunal, Judge Gabrielle Kirk McDonald, informed the Security Council of FRY's refusal to cooperate with the Tribunal by failing to arrest and transfer to the Tribunal's custody Mile Mrksic, Miroslav Radic and Veselin Sljivancanin. The three were indicted in 1995 for the murder of 260 unarmed men following the fall of Vukovar in 1991. Although the Tribunal had reported FRY's refusal to arrest the indictees in 1996 and despite the Council's reminder to the country of its obligations [YUN 1996, p. 1188], the three had remained at liberty, allegedly in Serbia. Violation by the Government of FRY of the UN Charter, Security Council resolutions and the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544] should no longer be tolerated, the President said.

On 17 September [S/1998/867], Bosnia and Herzegovina emphasized that if FRY were in violation of the Peace Agreement, as well as various Security Council resolutions, then it was imperative for the integrity of the Peace Agreement that the Council take measures and fulfil its obligation to the Peace Agreement, which it had endorsed in resolution 1031(1995) [YUN 1995, p. 548].

Qatar, on 9 October [S/1998/936], stated that the annual coordination meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Member States of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (New York, 1 October) endorsed the requests of the President of the Tribunal and Bosnia and Herzegovina that the Council take action to ensure compliance by FRY. The meeting called on the Council to take urgent action to compel compliance.

On 22 October [S/1998/990], the President of the Tribunal informed the Council that FRY had taken no action to arrest those indicted, and urged the Council to take action to indicate the status and primacy of the Tribunal and to ensure that compliance by FRY was forthcoming.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 3944], the Security Council adopted resolution 1207(1998) by vote (14-0-1). The draft [S/1998/1082] was sponsored by France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Portugal, Slovenia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Recalling all its previous relevant resolutions concerning the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, in particular resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993,

Recalling also the statement by its President of 8 May 1996,

Recalling further the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto, in particular article IX of the Agreement and article X of annex 1-A,

Having considered the letters dated 8 September, 22 October and 6 November 1998 from the President of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 addressed to the President of the Security Council, Deploing the continued failure of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal, as described in those letters,

Reaffirming the commitment of all Member States to the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Reiterates its decision that all States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with resolution 827(1993) and the statute of the Tribunal, including the obligation of States to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under Article 29 of the statute, to execute arrest warrants transmitted to them by the Tribunal, and to comply with its requests for information and investigations;

2. Calls again upon the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, and all other States which have not already done so, to take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of resolution 827(1993) and the statute of the International Tribunal, and affirms that a State may not invoke provisions of its domestic law as justification for its failure to perform binding obligations under international law;

3. Condemns the failure to date of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to execute the arrest warrants issued by the International Tribunal against the three individuals referred to in the letter of 8 September 1998, and demands the immediate and unconditional execution of those arrest warrants, including the transfer to the custody of the Tribunal of those individuals;

4. Reiterates its call upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, the leaders of the Kosovo Albanian community and all others concerned to cooperate fully with the Prosecutor in the investigation of all possible violations within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal;

5. Requests the President of the Tribunal to keep the Council informed about the implementation of the present resolution for the further consideration of the Council;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

Vote on resolution 1207(1998):

In favour Bahrain, Brazil, Costa Rica, France, Gabon, Gambia, Japan, Kenya, Portugal, Russian Federation, Slovenia, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: China.

In November [A/54/187-S/1999/846], the President of the Military Court in Belgrade advised the Tribunal that it was conducting an investigation into the three accused and requested the Tribunal to forward copies of the criminal case file and evidence against them. The Prosecutor filed a deferral request with the Trial Chamber in accordance with the Tribunal's statute, which provided that the Tribunal had primacy over national courts and permitted the Tribunal to formally request national courts to defer to the competence of the Tribunal. On 10 December, the Trial Chamber asked FRY to defer to the competence of the Tribunal. The Security Council was notified on four occasions (24 April 1996 and 8 September, 2 October and 8 December 1998) of FRY's continuing failure to transfer the three accused.

At its annual meeting in December (Madrid, Spain), the Peace Implementation Council issued the Peace Implementation Agenda [A/54/88-S/1999/492], which called on all States concerned to abide by Council resolution 1207(1998) and to cooperate with the Tribunal. It also condemned Governments that had failed to execute arrest warrants issued by the Tribunal and individuals who aided and abetted indictees.

Third trial chamber

In identical letters of 6 May to the Security Council and the General Assembly [A/52/891-S/1998/376], the Secretary-General circulated a letter dated 16 April from the President of the Tribunal stressing the urgent need to establish a third Trial Chamber staffed by three additional judges. In addition, a fourth judge should be added for assignment, as needed, either to a Trial Chamber or to the Appeals Chamber. The request was made in view of the dramatic increase in the number of persons in custody in The Hague who were accused of crimes under the Tribunal's statute. The Secretary-General stated that the creation of a third Trial Chamber and election of four judges would require the Council to amend the statute of the Tribunal. Following that, the Assembly would be asked to approve the related increase in the Tribunal's budget (see below, under "Financing ICTY"). Lastly, the Council and the Assembly would elect the additional judges.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 May [meeting 3878], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1166(1998). The draft [S/1998/386] was submitted by Costa Rica, France, Japan, Kenya, Portugal, Slovenia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993, Remaining convinced that the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia contributes to the restoration and maintenance of peace in the former Yugoslavia,

Having considered the letter dated 5 May 1998 from the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council,

Convinced of the need to increase the number of judges and Trial Chambers, in order to enable the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 ("the International Tribunal") to try without delay the large number of accused awaiting trial,

Noting the significant progress being made in improving the procedures of the International Tribunal, and convinced of the need for its organs to continue their efforts to further such progress,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to establish a third Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal, and to this end decides to amend articles 11, 12 and 13 of the statute of the Tribunal, replacing those articles with the text set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides that three additional judges shall be elected as soon as possible to serve in the additional Trial Chamber, and decides also, without prejudice to paragraph 4 of article 13 of the statute of the International Tribunal, that once elected they shall serve until the date of expiry of the terms of office of the existing judges, and for the purpose of that election the Security Council shall, notwithstanding paragraph 2(c) of article 13 of the statute, establish a list from the nominations received of no less than six and no more than nine candidates;

3. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with their obligations under resolution 827(1993) and the statute of the Tribunal, and welcomes the cooperation already extended to the Tribunal in the fulfilment of its mandate;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make practical arrangements for the elections mentioned in paragraph 2 above and for enhancing the effective functioning of the International Tribunal, including the timely provision of personnel and facilities, in particular for the third Trial Chamber and related offices of the Prosecutor, and further requests him to keep the Security Council closely informed of progress in this regard;

5. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ANNEX

Amendments to the statute of the International Tribunal

Replace articles 11, 12 and 13 by the following:

Article 11

Organization of the International Tribunal

The International Tribunal shall consist of the following organs:

- (a) The Chambers, comprising three Trial Chambers and an Appeals Chamber;
- (b) The Prosecutor; and
- (c) A Registry, servicing both the Chambers and the Prosecutor.

Article 12

Composition of the Chambers

The Chambers shall be composed of fourteen independent judges, no two of whom may be nationals of the same State, who shall serve as follows:

- (a) Three judges shall serve in each of the Trial Chambers;
- (b) Five judges shall serve in the Appeals Chamber.

Article 13

Qualifications and election of judges

1. The judges shall be persons of high moral character, impartiality and integrity who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices. In the overall composition of the Chambers due account shall be taken of the experience of the judges in criminal law, international law, including international humanitarian law and human rights law.

2. The judges of the International Tribunal shall be elected by the General Assembly from a list submitted by the Security Council, in the following manner:

(a) The Secretary-General shall invite nominations for judges of the International Tribunal from States Members of the United Nations and non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at United Nations Headquarters;

(b) Within sixty days of the date of the invitation of the Secretary-General, each State may nominate up to two candidates meeting the qualifications set out in paragraph 1 above, no two of whom shall be of the same nationality;

(c) The Secretary-General shall forward the nominations received to the Security Council. From the nominations received the Security Council shall establish a list of no less than twenty-eight and no more than forty-two candidates, taking due account of the adequate representation of the principal legal systems of the world;

(d) The President of the Security Council shall transmit the list of candidates to the President of the General Assembly. From that list the General Assembly shall elect the fourteen judges of the International Tribunal. The candidates who receive an absolute majority of the votes of the States Members of the United Nations and of the non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at United Nations Headquarters shall be declared elected. Should two candidates of the same nationality obtain the required majority vote, the one who received the higher number of votes shall be considered elected.

3. In the event of a vacancy in the Chambers, after consultation with the Presidents of the Security Council and of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General shall appoint a person meeting the qualifications of paragraph 1 above, for the remainder of the term of office concerned.

4. The judges shall be elected for a term of four years. The terms and conditions of service shall be those of the judges of the International Court of Justice. They shall be eligible for re-election.

Election of judges

On 28 May [A/52/237], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the Council's decision to establish a third Trial Chamber and to elect three additional judges as soon as possible to serve until the date of expiry of the terms of office of the existing judges (16 November 2001). He asked that the Assembly include in the agenda of the fifty-second session an item on the election of the judges.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 27 August [meeting 3919], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1191(1998). The draft [S/1998/806] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 808(1993) of 22 February 1993, 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 and 1166(1998) of 13 May 1998,

Having decided to consider the nominations for judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 received by the Secretary-General by 4 August 1998,

Forwards the following nominations to the General Assembly in accordance with paragraph 2 (d) of article 13 of the statute of the International Tribunal:

Mr. Mohamed Bennouna (Morocco)
 Mr. David Anthony Hunt (Australia)
 Mr. Per-Johan Lindholm (Finland)
 Mr. Hugo Anibal Llanos Mansilla (Chile)
 Mr. Patrick Robinson (Jamaica)
 Mr. Jan Skupinski (Poland)
 Mr. S. W. B. Vadugodapitiya (Sri Lanka)
 Mr. Luis Valencia-Rodriguez (Ecuador)
 Mr. Peter H. Wilkitzki (Germany)

On the same date [A/52/1023], the Council transmitted the text of its resolution to the General Assembly.

The Assembly, by decision 52/501 of 8 September, decided, as it had not been possible to consider the nine nominations for judges for the International Tribunal, to defer consideration of the item and to include it in the draft agenda of its fifty-third session.

Memorandum of Secretary-General. On 16 September [A/53/351], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the list of candidates for judges and the procedure for electing them. The curricula vitae of candidates were transmitted to the Assembly in September [A/53/352].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October [meeting 39], the General Assembly adopted decision 53/307 without vote [agenda item 166].

By that decision, the Assembly, in accordance with article 13 of the ICTY statute, elected the following three judges to serve in the third Trial Chamber of the Tribunal until the date of expiry of the terms of office of the judges currently serving in the Tribunal, that is, until 16 November 2001:

Mr. Mohamed Bennouna (Morocco)
 Mr. David Anthony Hunt (Australia)
 Mr. Patrick Lipton Robinson (Jamaica).

The General Assembly was informed that the terms of office of the three judges would commence on a date to be determined by the President of the Tribunal. The newly elected judges assumed office on 16 November.

Regulatory activity

A number of amendments to the ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence were adopted. They were necessitated by developments in the Tribunal's jurisprudence. Additional procedures were put in place for the efficient processing of proposals and for consideration of amendments to the Rules. Various recommendations of the Rules Committee were approved by the judges regarding pre-trial judge, pre-trial conference, pre-defence conference and motion for judgment of acquittal.

Office of the Prosecutor

The work of the Office of the Prosecutor was dominated by events in Kosovo (see PART ONE, Chapter V), although investigative activities in other areas continued.

In the light of Security Council resolution 1160(1998), which requested the Prosecutor to gather information related to violence in Kosovo that might fall under the Tribunal's jurisdiction, she proceeded to ask States and organizations about violent incidents that had occurred there. In May, the General Assembly approved a budget request enabling the Prosecutor to recruit a team to make preliminary investigations. However, in spite of the support of the international community, the Prosecutor was unable to conduct investigations in Kosovo due to the non-cooperation and non-compliance of FR Yugoslavia (see above).

Exhumations in 1998 focused on sites related to the fall of Srebrenica [YUN 1995, p. 529] and resulted in the removal of the remains of 650 to 800 persons, the collection of over 20,000 photographic images and the positive identification of many victims.

Since the implementation of the Prosecutor's use of sealed indictments, the number of detentions by SFOR in Bosnia and Herzegovina had increased dramatically.

In 1998, investigators obtained search warrants from the judges of the Tribunal, which were executed during a number of seizure operations in Republika Srpska. In September, investigators executed three search warrants resulting in the seizure of 49 boxes of material. Documentary evidence of crimes committed, such as signed orders by military commanders, was a very compelling category of evidence since, in its absence, the Prosecutor had to rely on witness testimony to establish the cases against the accused.

Meetings with Republika Srpska authorities in Banja Luka had led to the establishment of a small liaison office in that town. Earlier, the Prosecutor had established other offices in Belgrade, Sarajevo and Zagreb. Liaison offices provided support to the Tribunal's investigators, screened witnesses, assisted with the transportation of witnesses to The Hague and served as Tribunal contact points for local and national governments, international and non-governmental organizations, UN organizations and agencies and SFOR.

The Registry

The Registry continued to exercise court management functions and provide administration and service to the Chambers and the Office of the Prosecutor. In addition, it provided information to the media and the public, administered the legal aid system of assigning defence counsel to indigent accused, supervised the Detention Unit and maintained diplomatic contacts with States and their representatives. The Registry was also responsible for budgetary matters.

Financing ICTY

1997 budget performance/ revised 1998 estimates/1999 requirements

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/217 [YUN 1997, p. 1326], the Secretary-General, in April [A/C.5/52/47], presented the third annual budget performance report of the Tribunal for the year ended 31 December 1997, including actual performance indicators. Of the total net appropriation of $48,587,000, actual expenditures recorded for 1997 amounted to $36,392,800, reflecting an unencumbered balance of $12,194,200, or some 25 per cent of the appropriation, of which $2,112,600 was attributable to the favourable exchange rate of the United States dollar. The balance was also due to other factors, including a higher vacancy rate than assumed in the budget and a decrease in travel resulting from several indicted persons offering themselves up for prosecution. At the end of the financial period, an additional surplus of $2,194,200 was recorded.

On 7 October [A/C.5/53/13], the Secretary-General submitted the proposed 1999 resource requirements of the Tribunal. They amounted to $106,385,200 gross ($96,650,900 net) and reflected an increase of $34,319,300 net. An additional 267 posts over the 1998 appropriation and authorized staffing level was also requested.

In a report of 12 October [A/C.5/53/12], the Secretary-General stated that, due to the creation of a third Trial Chamber and the outbreak of violence in Kosovo, he had asked the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) in May to enter into commitments in an amount not exceeding $2,627,300 gross ($2,443,700 net) to cover activities not foreseen at the time of the preparation of the 1998 budget. On 21 May, ACABQ concurred with the request.

ACABQ action. In November [A/53/651], ACABQ recommended an appropriation of $103,066,300 gross ($93,801,300 net) for the operation of the Tribunal in 1999. The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee [A/53/755] revised that amount to $103,437,600 gross ($94,103,800 net), which included provisions for the revised salary scale and other conditions of service, including pension entitlements, for members of the Tribunal (see PART FIVE, Chapter III). The revised amount was approved by the General Assembly (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/755], adopted resolution 53/212 without vote [agenda item 135].

Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Recalling its resolution 47/235 of 14 September 1993 on the financing of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/217 of 22 December 1997,

Recalling also that, by paragraph 5 of its resolution 52/217, it agreed to defer the consideration of the pension entitlement for members of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia proposed in the report of the Secretary-General on conditions of service for the judges of the International Tribunals until the review of the report of the Secretary-General on the emoluments and pension scheme of members of the International Court of Justice, submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session,

1. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Expresses its concern about the late submission of the budget proposals for the year 1999, and reiterates the request it made in resolution 50/212 C of 7 June 1996 that future budget proposals be submitted before 1 November of each year;

3. Also expresses its concern about the format of the presentation of the 1999 budget proposals which was not succinct, was repetitious in some instances, lacked justification in certain cases and was inconsistent at times;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to improve the presentation of future budget proposals, which should also take into account the provisions of the present resolution;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, with a view to evaluating the effective operation and functioning of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, with the objective of ensuring the efficient use of the resources of the Tribunals, to conduct a review in full co-operation with the Presidents of the Tribunals, as recommended by the Advisory Committee in its reports, and in the statement made by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee before the Fifth Committee at its 37th meeting, without prejudice to the provisions of the statutes of the Tribunals and their independent character, and to report thereon to the relevant organs of the United Nations;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit the report called for in paragraph 5 above, along with the budget proposals for the year 2000, no later than 1 November 1999;

7. Expresses concern about the high vacancy rate in the Professional and General Service categories of staff of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures, including those relating to the recruitment process, to address this situation, and to report thereon to the General Assembly in the budget proposals for the year 2000;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on the monthly post incumbency in future budget proposals;

9. Reaffirms that the use of gratis personnel shall be phased out by 31 December 1998, in accordance with paragraph 2 of its resolution 52/217 of 22 December 1997;

10. Also reaffirms that gratis personnel should be treated in accordance with the provisions of its resolutions 51/243 of 15 September 1997 and 52/234 of 26 June 1998;

11. Emphasizes that the delegation of authority for human resources management should be strictly in accordance with the existing Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

12. Also emphasizes that the recruitment of staff in the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia should be in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

13. Notes with concern that a number of workload indicators are inaccurate, inflated and unjustifiable;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the workload indicators are monitored and checked for accuracy and consistency;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to include a section in future budget proposals on the implementation of the recommendations of oversight bodies;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to maintain an accounting inventory record of the furniture and equipment acquired for the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia since its establishment (purchase and depreciation), in accordance with the relevant regulations and rules and relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and to provide a succinct summary of that information in the next report on the financing of the Tribunal;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to include in future budget proposals information on those items in the current inventory for which proposals for replacement and/or additions are made, in the format used in peacekeeping budget proposals;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary actions to ensure that the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia is administered with maximum efficiency and economy;

19. Stresses the need to provide the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia with adequate resources to fulfil its mandated activities and to respond effectively to new challenges, and emphasizes the need for the efficient and effective use of its resources;

20. Approves the budgetary recommendations of the Advisory Committee as contained in paragraph 27 of its report;

21. Notes that, by its resolution 53/214 of 18 December 1998, the General Assembly has approved revised emoluments and other conditions of service, including the pension entitlement, for members of the International Tribunals, resulting in additional requirements of 219,700 United States dollars net in 1999, as recommended by the Advisory Committee, for the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia;

22. Decides that the five Professional and two General Service posts in The Hague, currently funded against the budget of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, should be transferred from the staffing table and the related financial provisions of the International Tribunal for Rwanda to the staffing table and the budget of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, effective 1 January 1999, resulting in additional requirements of 666,900 dollars gross (551,800 dollars net) in 1999 for the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia;

23. Also decides to revise the level of appropriation for the year 1998 to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 to a total amount of 68,314,500 dollars gross (61,941,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998;

24. Further decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia a total amount of 103,437,600 dollars gross (94,103,800 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999, which includes provisions for revised emoluments and other conditions of service, including the pension entitlement, for members of the International Tribunals;

25. Decides that the financing of the appropriation for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999 under the Special Account for the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia shall take into account the amount of 3,537,800 dollars, being the unencumbered balance for 1997, the reduction of 515,300 dollars gross (390,200 dollars net) from the initial appropriation for 1998 and the estimated income of 5,200 dollars for 1999, which shall be set off against the aggregate amount of the appropriation, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

26. Also decides to apportion the amount of 49,689,650 dollars gross (45,087,900 dollars net) among Member States, in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to the regular budget of the United Nations for the year 1999;

27. Further decides to apportion the amount of 49,689,650 dollars gross (45,087,900 dollars net) among Member States, in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to peacekeeping operations for the year 1999;

28. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraphs 26 and 27 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 9,203,500 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999;

29. Welcomes contributions already made to the Voluntary Fund to support the activities of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and invites Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the Tribunal both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General.

On the same date, the General Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on financing of ICTY at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

International Tribunal for Rwanda

In September [A/53/429-S/1998/857], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and the Security Council the third annual report of ICTR, covering the period from 1 July 1997 to September 1998. By decision 53/413 of 28 October, the Assembly took note of the report.

The Chambers

Trials and cases

On 2 September, the ICTR Trial Chamber I found Jean-Paul Akayesu guilty of 9 of the 15 counts against him, including genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide and crimes against humanity (extermination, murder, torture, rape and other inhumane acts). The judgement included the first interpretation and application by an international court of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 260 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 959]. The Trial Chamber held that rape and sexual assault constituted acts of genocide in so far as they were committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a targeted group. The accused was sentenced to life imprisonment for each of the nine counts, the sentences to run concurrently. Both the Prosecutor and the accused appealed against the judgement.

In his initial appearance before the Trial Chamber on 1 May, Jean Kambanda, former Prime Minister of the Interim Government of the Republic of Rwanda, pleaded guilty to all six counts in the indictment against him pertaining to the crimes of genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, complicity in genocide, and crimes against humanity. After it verified his guilty plea, i.e., that it was an informed plea made freely and voluntarily, without pressure or threats or promises, and that he fully understood the nature of the charges against him, as well as the consequences of his plea and that his guilty plea was unequivocal, the Trial Chamber declared him guilty of all of the counts and sentenced him to life imprisonment. The accused appealed against his sentence.

The Trial Chamber began the third phase of the trial of Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana on 9 February and ended it on 13 March. The judgement and sentencing were expected in 1999.

On 14 December, Omar Serushago, former head of the Interahamwe militia in Gisenyi Prefecture, pleaded guilty to four of the five counts with which he was charged. He pleaded not guilty to crimes against humanity (rape). The Chamber granted leave to the Prosecutor to withdraw the rape count. After verifying the validity of his plea, the Trial Chamber found him guilty of the crime of genocide and of crimes against humanity (murder, extermination and torture).

Bernard Ntuyahaga surrendered to the Tribunal on 8 June and was transferred to the Detention Facility in Arusha on 10 July. He was charged with a single count, crimes against humanity (murder), for the murder of Agathe Uwilingiyimana, former Prime Minister of Rwanda, and 10 Belgian peacekeepers of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (UNAMIR). The remaining three counts, relating to genocide and violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims (Geneva Conventions) and of Additional Protocol II thereto [YUN 1977, p. 706], were not confirmed by the reviewing judge. The accused pleaded not guilty to the one count at his initial appearance on 13 November.

The initial appearances of Laurent Semanza and Jean Bosco Barayagwiza, whose indictments were confirmed in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1328], took place in February when they both pleaded not guilty to all charges.

Elizaphan Ntakirutimana, an accused individual who was arrested in the United States in 1997 [ibid.] and subsequently released, was arrested again in February. United States courts were conducting additional proceedings with respect to the Tribunal's transfer request.

On 6 March, the Prosecutor submitted a joint indictment, for confirmation by a judge, in respect of Théoneste Bagosora and 28 other individuals. Eleven of the accused, in respect of whom confirmed indictments had previously been issued, were being held in Arusha and had already appeared before a Trial Chamber. Their trials were approaching the stage of the submission of evidence (first group). In the case of two of those individuals, hearings on the merits were scheduled for March and April. The indictments in respect of five others who were still at large had been confirmed (second group). Only the indictments in respect of 13 other individuals had not yet been confirmed (third group). In a decision of 31 March, the judge dismissed the joint indictment, which he considered inadmissible as drafted, on the grounds that he was not competent to confirm the indictment, particularly in respect of the 11 individuals in the first group, since they had already appeared before a Trial Chamber. He expressed the view that he had no competence with respect to the second group, since they fell within the competence of the previous confirming judge; he also maintained that such an indictment could have been issued in respect of the third group, had it not been for the Prosecutor's insistence on maintaining the indictment as it stood, hence the judge's refusal to consider the substantive aspects of the charges against that group. The Prosecutor requested authorization to appeal that decision. The Appeals Chamber, which rejected his request for a stay of proceedings with respect to the accused individuals dealt with in the indictment, rejected that request as well.

During the year, the following persons were arrested and transferred to the Detention Facility where they awaited trial on charges including genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereto: Edouard Karemera, Andre Rwamakuba, Mathieu Ndirumpatse, Joseph Nzirorera, Juvenal Kajelijeli and Emmanuel Bagambiki.

Third Trial Chamber

At the request of the Tribunal, the Security Council established a third Trial Chamber, increasing the number of judges from six to nine, to enable ICTR to expedite the proceedings of the large number of accused awaiting trial, as noted by the ICTR President in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1328].

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 April [meeting 3877], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1165(1998). The draft [S/1998/353] was submitted by Costa Rica, France, the Gambia, Kenya, Portugal, Slovenia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Security Council,

Reaffirming its resolution 955(1994) of 8 November 1994,

Recalling its decision in that resolution to consider increasing the number of judges and Trial Chambers of the International Tribunal for Rwanda if it becomes necessary,

Remaining convinced that in the particular circumstances of Rwanda, the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law will contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace in Rwanda and in the region,

Stressing the need for international cooperation to strengthen the courts and judicial system of Rwanda, having regard in particular to the necessity for those courts to deal with a large number of accused awaiting trial,

Having considered the letter from the President of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, transmitted by identical letters dated 15 October 1997 from the Secretary-General to the Presidents of the Security Council and the General Assembly,

Convinced of the need to increase the number of judges and Trial Chambers, in order to enable the International Tribunal for Rwanda to try without delay the large number of accused awaiting trial,

Noting the progress being made in improving the efficient functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and convinced of the need for its organs to continue their efforts to further such progress,

Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Decides to establish a third Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and to this end decides to amend articles 10, 11 and 12 of the statute of the Tribunal, replacing those articles with the text set out in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Decides that the elections for the judges of the three Trial Chambers shall be held together, for a term of office to expire on 24 May 2003;

3. Also decides that, as an exceptional measure to enable the third Trial Chamber to begin to function at the earliest possible date and without prejudice to article 12, paragraph 5, of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, three newly elected judges, designated by the Secretary-General in consultation with the President of the Tribunal, shall commence their term of office as soon as possible following the elections;

4. Urges all States to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for Rwanda and its organs in accordance with resolution 955(1994), and welcomes the cooperation already extended to the Tribunal in the fulfilment of its mandate;

5. Urges the organs of the International Tribunal for Rwanda actively to continue their efforts to increase further the efficiency of the work of the Tribunal in their respective areas, and in this connection further calls upon them to consider how their procedures and methods of work can be enhanced, taking into account relevant recommendations in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to make practical arrangements for the elections mentioned in paragraph 2 above and for enhancing the effective functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, including the timely provision of personnel and facilities, in particular for the third Trial Chamber and related offices of the Prosecutor, and further requests him to keep the Security Council closely informed of progress in this regard;

7. Decides to remain actively seized of the matter.

ANNEX

Amendments to the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda

Replace articles 10, 11 and 12 by the following:

Article 10

Organization of the International Tribunal for Rwanda

The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall consist of the following organs:

- (a) The Chambers, comprising three Trial Chambers and an Appeals Chamber;
- (b) The Prosecutor;
- (c) A Registry.

Article 11

Composition of the Chambers

The Chambers shall be composed of fourteen independent judges, no two of whom may be nationals of the same State, who shall serve as follows:

- (a) Three judges shall serve in each of the Trial Chambers;
- (b) Five judges shall serve in the Appeals Chamber.

Article 12

Qualification and election of judges

1. The judges shall be persons of high moral character, impartiality and integrity who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices. In the overall composition of the Chambers due account shall be taken of the experience of the judges in criminal law, international law, including international humanitarian law and human rights law.

2. The members of the Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 (hereinafter referred to as "the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia") shall also serve as the members of the Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for Rwanda.

3. The judges of the Trial Chambers of the International Tribunal for Rwanda shall be elected by the General Assembly from a list submitted by the Security Council, in the following manner:

(a) The Secretary-General shall invite nominations for judges of the Trial Chambers from States Members of the United Nations and non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at United Nations Headquarters;

(b) Within thirty days of the date of the invitation of the Secretary-General, each State may nominate up to two candidates meeting the qualifications set out in paragraph 1 above, no two of whom shall be of the same nationality and neither of whom shall be of the same nationality as any judge on the Appeals Chamber;

(c) The Secretary-General shall forward the nominations received to the Security Council. From the nominations received, the Security Council shall establish a list of not less than eighteen and not more than twenty-seven candidates, taking due account of adequate representation on the International Tribunal for Rwanda of the principal legal systems of the world;

(d) The President of the Security Council shall transmit the list of candidates to the President of the General Assembly. From that list, the General Assembly shall elect the nine judges of the Trial Chambers. The candidates who receive an absolute majority of the votes of the States Members of the United Nations and of the non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at United Nations Headquarters shall be declared elected. Should two candidates of the same nationality obtain the required majority vote, the one who received the higher number of votes shall be considered elected.

4. In the event of a vacancy in the Trial Chambers, after consultation with the Presidents of the Security Council and the General Assembly, the Secretary-General shall appoint a person meeting the qualifications of paragraph 1 above, for the remainder of the term of office concerned.

5. The judges of the Trial Chambers shall be elected for a term of four years. The terms and conditions of service shall be those of the judges of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. They shall be eligible for re-election.

Election of judges

On 28 May [A/52/236], the Secretary-General requested that the election of judges to the Tribunal be considered by the General Assembly.

In view of the Security Council's decision in resolution 1165(1998) (above) that the elections for the judges of the three Trial Chambers be held together, the Secretary-General, on 8 July [S/1998/640], forwarded to the President of the Security Council the names of five candidates. As the list of candidates was short of the minimum of 18 required by the Tribunal's statute, the Secretary-General suggested that the Council extend the deadline for nominations until 4 August, which would coincide with the deadline for the nominations of judges of ICTY. On 15 July [S/1998/646], the Council President conveyed to the Secretary-General the Council's agreement to extend the deadline.

On 7 August [S/1998/760], the Secretary-General forwarded to the Council 14 nominations for judges and their curricula vitae. He noted that the number of candidates was still short of the minimum of 18. The Council noted the information submitted by the Secretary-

General and decided to extend the deadline for the nomination of judges until 14 September [S/1998/761].

By decision 52/500 of 8 September, the Assembly decided to include the election of judges in the agenda of its fifty-third (1998) session and to conclude consideration of the item.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 September [meeting 3934], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1200 (1998). The draft [S/1998/903] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Recalling its resolutions 955(1994) of 8 November 1994, 989(1995) of 24 April 1995 and 1165(1998) of 30 April 1998,

Having considered the nominations for Judges of the International Tribunal for Rwanda received by the Secretary-General,

Forwards the following nominations to the General Assembly in accordance with paragraph 3 (d) of article 12 of the statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda:

Ms. Eugenie Liliane Arivony (Madagascar)
Mr. Pavel Dolenc (Slovenia)
Mr. Salifou Fomba (Mali)
Mr. Willy C. Gaa (Philippines)
Mr. Asoka de Z. Gunawardena (Sri Lanka)
Mr. Mehmet Giiney (Turkey)
Mr. Aka Edoukou Jean-Baptiste Kablan (Cote d'Ivoire)
Mr. Laïty Kama (Senegal)
Mr. Dionysios Kondylis (Greece)
Mr. Boubou Mahamane (Niger)
Mr. Erik Möse (Norway)
Mr. Yakov Ostrovsky (Russian Federation)
Mr. Cheick Dimkinsedo Ouedraogo (Burkina Faso)
Ms. Navanethem Pillay (South Africa)
Ms. Indira Rana (Nepal)
Mr. William Sekule (United Republic of Tanzania)
Mr. Tilahun Teshome (Ethiopia)
Mr. Lloyd George Williams (Jamaica and St. Kitts and Nevis)

On the same date [A/53/442], the President of the Council conveyed the Council's resolution to the President of the General Assembly.

Memorandum of Secretary-General. In a 1 October memorandum [A/53/443], the Secretary-General presented the list of candidates and described the procedure for electing the judges. Also in October [A/53/444 & Corr.1 & Add.1], he submitted to the Assembly the curricula vitae of the candidates selected by the Council from nominations from States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 3 November [meeting 52], the General Assembly adopted decision 53/309 A without vote [agenda item 47].

Election of judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 3 November 1998, the General Assembly, in accordance with article 12 of the statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, elected the following nine judges to serve in the Trial Chambers of the Tribunal for a term of office of four years, that is, until 24 May 2003:

Mr. Pavel DOLENC (Slovenia)
 Mr. Mehmet GÜNEY (Turkey)
 Mr. Laïty KAMA (Senegal)
 Mr. Dionysios KONDYLLIS (Greece)
 Mr. Erik MØSE (Norway)
 Mr. Yakov OSTROVSKY (Russian Federation)
 Ms. Navanethem PILLAY (South Africa)
 Mr. William SEKULE (United Republic of Tanzania)
 Mr. Lloyd George WILLIAMS (Jamaica and Saint Kitts and Nevis).

The General Assembly was informed that the terms of office of six out of the nine judges would commence on 25 May 1999, following the expiration of the terms of office of the judges currently serving in the two existing Trial Chambers of the Tribunal.

The Assembly was also informed that three out of the nine judges would be designated to serve in the third Trial Chamber of the Tribunal by the Secretary-General in consultation with the President of the Tribunal, and that their terms of office would commence as soon as possible following the elections so that the third Trial Chamber could begin to function at the earliest possible date.

Regulatory activities

In June, the Tribunal adopted substantial amendments to the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, with a view to expediting proceedings before it. It also amended the Directive on the Assignment of defence counsel.

Office of the Prosecutor

In 1998, the Office of the Prosecutor followed a twofold strategy: first, the targeting of investigations exclusively on persons who occupied positions of authority at the time of the genocide, specifically those who conspired to commit genocide; and second, the joinder of crimes under one indictment to reflect the various areas where such joinder applied at the national and prefecture levels. The "conspiracy theory" was given concrete expression and consolidated by joinder of the accused, the arrest of key persons who were in power before and during the genocide and, finally, by the guilty pleas of Jean Kambanda and Omar Serushago (see above, under "Trials and cases").

From 28 November to 22 December, the Office participated in a seminar on the legal system for Rwandan judicial personnel, organized by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Ministry of Justice and the Supreme Court of Rwanda.

Investigations by the Office in December indicated that large-scale sexual crimes had been committed against Tutsi women. Based on information gathered from 360 women, the Prosecutor believed that sexual crimes were planned, systematic and generalized and that they were committed with the active participation of the soldiers, the Interahamwe and government and administrative authorities at both local and national levels.

The Registry

The Registry administered and serviced the Chambers and the Prosecutor in the performance of their respective functions. In addition to its court management functions, the Judicial and Legal Services Division of the Registry managed a legal aid system of assigning defence counsel to indigent accused and supervised the management of the Detention Facility. The Division of Administration was responsible for personnel, finance, language services, security and general services.

Under the Registry, the Group on Gender Issues represented the Tribunal at various meetings, including one on women, land ownership and property rights (Kigali, February) and one on women, war and justice (Geneva, April). The Group aimed to provide input to improve gender sensitivity in protecting and supporting the witnesses in trials at the Tribunal.

Financing ICTR

On 26 June, the General Assembly deferred consideration until the third part of its resumed fifty-second (1998) session of the item on ICTR financing (decision 52/487).

1997 budget performance/ revised 1998 and 1999 estimates/ 1999 requirements

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested in General Assembly resolution 52/218 [YUN 1997, p. 133], the Secretary-General, in an April report [A/C.5/52/48], included in the third annual budget performance report of the Tribunal for 1997, the actual performance indicator statistics for 1997 and information on the arrangements through which the Tribunal received guidance and assistance from Headquarters to implement and enforce the financial and personnel rules and all other administrative issuances. Actual expenditure amounted to $35,717,600, resulting in an unencumbered balance of $257,200.

In a report of 12 October on 1999 resource requirements for ICTR [A/C.5/53715], the Secretary-General stated that the resources requested for the year amounted to $80,612,600 gross ($73,081,300 net), which reflected an increase of $22,202,200 net over the 1998 appropriation and an additional 256 posts compared to the authorized staffing level.

On 19 October [A/C.5/53/14], the Secretary-General presented to the Assembly the revised estimates of resource requirements for 1998. He stated that as a result of Security Council resolution 1165(1998) establishing the third Trial Chamber (see above), a commitment authority of $1,350,500 was approved to cover the expense. The Assembly was requested to approve a revised staffing table providing for 34 additional posts and a revised appropriation of $52,297,900 gross ($48,043,400 net), which represented a reduction in requirements of $4,340,700 gross ($2,835,700 net).

ACABQaction. In a November report [A/53/659], ACABQ recommended approval of the Secretary-General's revised estimates for 1998. It also requested that the Assembly approve the amount of $76,161,000 gross ($69,282,800 net) for 1999. That represented a reduction of $4,451,600 gross ($3,798,500 net), corresponding to 59 posts and other non-post resources and support requirements not recommended for approval by the Committee for 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/756], adopted resolution 53/213 without vote [agenda item 137].

Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994,

Recalling its resolution 49/251 of 20 July 1995 on the financing of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and its subsequent resolutions thereon, the latest of which was resolution 52/218 of 22 December 1997,

Recalling also that by paragraph 6 of its resolution 52/218, it had agreed to defer the consideration of the pension entitlement for members of the International Tribunal for Rwanda proposed in the report of the Secretary-General on the conditions of service for the judges of the International Tribunals until the review of the report of the Secretary-General on the emoluments and pension scheme of members of the International Court of Justice, submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

1. Takes note of the observations and recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Expresses its concern about the late submission of the budget proposals for the year 1999, and reiterates its request contained in its resolution 50/213 C of 7 June 1996 that future budget proposals be submitted before 1 November of each year;

3. Notes that, according to the information provided by the Secretariat, the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 have one Prosecutor whose duty station is The Hague, and that the International Tribunal for Rwanda does not have a resident Prosecutor, but a Deputy Prosecutor;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, with a view to evaluating the effective operation and functioning of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda with the objective of ensuring the efficient use of the resources of the Tribunals, to conduct a review in full cooperation with their Presidents, as recommended by the Advisory Committee in its reports, and in the statement made by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee before the Fifth Committee at its 37th meeting, without prejudice to the provisions of the statutes of the Tribunals and their independent character, and to report thereon to the relevant organs of the United Nations;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the report called for in paragraph 4 above, along with the budget proposals for the year 2000, no later than 1 November 1999;

6. Expresses concern about the high vacancy rate in the Professional and General Service categories of staff at the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures, ineluding those related to the recruitment process, to address the situation, and to report thereon to the General Assembly in the budget proposals for the year 2000;

7. Notes with concern that gratis personnel were accepted in 1998 in disregard of the provisions of General Assembly resolution 51/243 of 15 September 1997 in order to compensate for the vacancy rates and delays in processing the recruitment of staff, as indicated in paragraph 5 of the report of the Secretary-General;

8. Reaffirms that the use of gratis personnel shall be phased out by 31 December 1998 in accordance with paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 52/218 of 22 December 1997;

9. Also reaffirms that gratis personnel should be treated in accordance with its resolution 51/243 and its resolution 52/234 of 26 June 1998;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to include information on the monthly post incumbency in future budget proposals;

11. Emphasizes that the delegation of authority for human resources management should be strictly in accordance with the existing Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

12. Also emphasizes that the recruitment of staff in the International Tribunal for Rwanda should be in accordance with Article 101, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations;

13. Takes note of the information provided by the Secretariat that the Registry is working closely with the Office of Human Resources Management in reviewing the current remuneration package applicable to staff of the International Tribunal for Rwanda with a view to improving the conditions of service at Arusha and Kigali within the context of the United Nations common system, and requests the International Civil Service Commission to submit its proposals in this regard in the context of its annual report for 1999, no later than 1 November 1999;

14. Also takes note of the new arrangement in paragraph 28 of the report of the Secretary-General, and in paragraphs 1 and 78 to 82 in annex IV to the report of the Secretary-General;

15. Emphasizes that the new arrangement should not deprive the judges of their supervisory role vis-a-vis the legal support staff;

16. Notes with concern that a number of workload indicators are inaccurate, inflated and unjustifiable;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the workload indicators are monitored and checked for accuracy and consistency;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that expenditure data from the field are entered into the main expenditure record on a timely basis;

19. Notes with appreciation the efforts made to address the problems and to improve the overall functioning of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to include a section in future budget proposals on the implementation of the recommendations of oversight bodies;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to maintain an accounting inventory record of the furniture and equipment acquired for the International Tribunal for Rwanda since its establishment (purchase and depreciation) in accordance with the relevant regulations and rules and relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, and to provide a succinct summary of that information in his next report on the financing of the Tribunal;

22. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in future budget proposals information on those items in the current inventory for which proposals for replacement and/or additions are made, in the format used in peacekeeping budget proposals;

23. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary actions to ensure that the International Tribunal for Rwanda is administered with maximum efficiency and economy;

24. Approves the budgetary recommendations of the Advisory Committee as contained in paragraph 24 of its report;

25. Notes that by its resolution 53/214 of 18 December 1998, the General Assembly has approved revised emoluments and other conditions of service, including the pension entitlement, for members of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda, as recommended by the Advisory Committee, resulting in additional requirements of 147,300 United States dollars net for the International Tribunal for Rwanda in 1999;

26. Decides that the five Professional and two General Service posts in The Hague currently funded against the budget of the International Tribunal for Rwanda should be transferred from the staffing table and the related financial provisions of the International Tribunal for Rwanda to the staffing table and the budget of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, effective 1 January 1999, resulting in a reduction of 666,900 dollars gross (551,800 dollars net) in the overall requirements for the International Tribunal for Rwanda in 1999;

27. Also decides to revise the level of appropriation to the Special Account for the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994 to 52,297,900 dollars gross (48,043,400 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998;

28. Further decides to appropriate to the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda a total amount of 75,260,600 dollars gross (68,531,900 dollars net) for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999, which also includes provisions for the revised emoluments and other conditions of service, including the pension entitlement, for members of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

29. Decides that the financing of the appropriation for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999 under the Special Account for the International Tribunal for Rwanda shall take into account the reduction of 4,340,700 dollars gross (2,835,700 dollars net) in the initial appropriation for 1998 and the unencumbered balance of 6,716,000 dollars gross (4,365,400 dollars net) as of 31 December 1997, both of which shall be set off against the aggregate amount of the appropriation, as detailed in the annex to the present resolution;

30. Also decides to apportion the amount of 32,101,950 dollars gross (30,665,400 dollars net) among Member States, in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to the regular budget of the United Nations for the year 1999;

31. Further decides to apportion the amount of 32,101,950 dollars gross (30,665,400 dollars net) among Member States in accordance with the scale of assessments applicable to peacekeeping operations for the year 1999;

32. Decides that, in accordance with the provisions of its resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, there shall be set off against the apportionment among Member States, as provided for in paragraphs 30 and 31 above, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund of the estimated staff assessment income of 2,873,100 dollars approved for the International Tribunal for Rwanda for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999;

33. Welcomes contributions already made to the Voluntary Fund to support the activities of the International Tribunal for Rwanda, and invites Member States and other interested parties to make voluntary contributions to the Tribunal both in cash and in the form of services and supplies acceptable to the Secretary-General.

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 53/458, decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the item on financing of ICTR at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

OIOS review

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/213 C [YUN 1996, p. 1197], the Secretary-General transmitted in February [A/52/784] a report conveyed to him by the Under-Secretary-General of the Office for Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) as a follow-up to a 1997 report on the investigation and audit of ICTR [YUN 1997, p. 1332].

The report concluded that the Tribunal was functioning more effectively than in 1997. However, there were areas in the Registry that still needed improvement relating to procurement, recruitment, personnel, witness protection and asset management. Corrective action was also required regarding Trust Fund operations, defence counsel management and press and public affairs. The report made a series of recommendations regarding personnel, expenditure of funds, management of ICTR assets and obtaining funding for a suitable facility. The Secretary-General concurred in general with the recommendations, subject to further review of those pertaining to personnel matters.

Chapter III

Legal aspects of international political relations

In 1998, following six years of preparatory work by the International Law Commission (ILC) and General Assembly committees, a plenipotentiary conference adopted the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. When ratified, the Statute would establish the Court as a permanent institution with power to investigate and bring to justice individuals accused of the most serious crimes of international concern, including genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression. The Conference also set up a Preparatory Commission to prepare proposals for practical arrangements for the Court, including draft rules of procedure and evidence.

At its fiftieth session, ILC completed the first reading of draft articles on prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities and transmitted them to Governments for comment. Consideration also continued of draft articles on unilateral acts of States and on State responsibility. ILC adopted draft guidelines on reservations to treaties and established a working group to advance its work on diplomatic protection.

The Ad Hoc Committee established by the Assembly in 1996 to elaborate an international convention on the suppression of nuclear terrorism continued its work on a draft convention, focusing on the definition of material and offences to be covered under the proposed convention. It conducted a first reading of substantive provisions and the Assembly directed it to continue.

In August, the Security Council condemned terrorist attacks on the United States embassies in Nairobi (Kenya) and Dar es Salaam (United Republic of Tanzania) and called on States to cooperate in preventing such acts. The Secretary-General and the Assembly continued to work on the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives.

Establishment of the International Criminal Court

The United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court was held in Rome, Italy, from 15 June to 17 July, with the participation of 160 Member States. Represented as observers were 31 organizations and other entities and 136 non-governmental organizations. The Conference was held in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/160 [YUN 1997, p. 1345].

On 17 July, the Conference adopted the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court [A/CONF.183/9], establishing the Court as a permanent institution with the power to exercise its jurisdiction over persons for the most serious crimes of international concern as defined in the Statute—genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression. The Statute, which consisted of 13 parts containing a total of 128 articles, would enter into force after its ratification, acceptance, approval or accession by 60 States. By 31 December, 71 States had signed the Statute and one had ratified it.

The Conference also signed a Final Act [A/CONF.183/10], to which it annexed six resolutions. In one resolution, the Conference recognized that terrorist acts and international trafficking of illicit drugs were serious crimes of concern to the international community; regretted that no generally acceptable definition of the crimes was agreed on; affirmed that the Rome Statute provided for a review mechanism, which allowed for an expansion in future of its jurisdiction; and recommended that a review conference consider the crimes of terrorism and drug crimes with a view to arriving at an acceptable definition and their inclusion in the list of crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court. By another resolution, the Conference established the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court, which would prepare proposals for practical arrangements for the Court's establishment, including the draft texts of: rules of procedure and evidence; elements of crimes; a relationship agreement between the Court and the United Nations; basic principles for a headquarters agreement with the host country; financial regulations and rules; an agreement on privileges and immunities of the Court; a budget for the first financial year; and rules of procedure of the Assembly of States Parties. The Commission would prepare proposals for a provision on aggression, including the definition and elements of crimes of aggression and the conditions under which the Court would exercise its jurisdiction. In other resolutions, gratitude was expressed for the preparatory work for the Conference.

Preparatory Committee. The Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, established by the General Assembly in resolution 50/46 [YUN 1995, p. 1328] and reaffirmed by the Assembly in resolution 51/207 [YUN 1996, p. 1205], met in New York (16 March-3 April) [A/CONF.183/2] to finalize and adopt a draft statute and the text of a convention as the next step towards consideration by a conference of plenipotentiaries. The Committee conducted its work through working groups on the following subjects: procedural matters; composition and administration of the Court; establishment of the Court and its relationship with the United Nations; applicable law; ne bis in idem; jurisdictional issues; and enforcement. The Committee adopted the text of a draft statute for the Court and a draft final act for transmittal to the Conference [A/CONF.183/2/Add.1].

Note of Secretary General. The Secretary-General, by a 19 September note [A/53/387], reported to the General Assembly on the action taken at the Rome Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/53/634], adopted resolution 53/105 without Vote [agenda item 153].

Establishment of an international criminal court

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/33 of 25 November 1992, 48/31 of 9 December 1993, 49/53 of 9 December 1994, 50/46 of 11 December 1995 and 51/207 of 17 December 1996,

Recalling also its resolution 52/160 of 15 December 1997, in which it decided to hold the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court at Rome from 15 June to 17 July 1998, Expressing satisfaction at the completion of the mandate of that resolution by the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court at the headquarters of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on 17 July 1998, noting that the Statute was open for signature in Rome from 17 July until 17 October 1998 and that thereafter it will be open for signature in New York at United Nations Headquarters until 31 December 2000, and taking note of the Final Act of the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court done at Rome on 17 July 1998.

Noting that a significant number of States have signed the Rome Statute, Emphasizing the need to make the necessary arrangements for the commencement of the functions of the International Criminal Court in order to ensure its effective operation,

Noting in particular that the Conference decided to establish a Preparatory Commission for the Court, consisting of representatives of States that have signed the Final Act of the Conference and other States that were invited to participate in the Conference,

Noting that the Conference requested the Secretary-General to convene the Preparatory Commission at Headquarters as early as possible, at a date to be decided by the General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the mandate of the Preparatory Commission with regard to the preparation of proposals for practical arrangements for the establishment and coming into operation of the Court, including the finalization before 30 June 2000 of the draft texts of the rules of procedure and evidence and of the elements of crimes,

Recognizing the need for making available adequate resources and secretariat services to the Preparatory Commission in order to enable it to discharge its functions efficiently and expeditiously,

1. Acknowledges the historic significance of the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court;

2. Expresses its deep appreciation and gratitude to the Government of Italy for hosting the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court in Rome;

3. Calls upon all States to consider signing and ratifying the Rome Statute, and encourages efforts aimed at promoting awareness of the results of the Conference and of the provisions of the Rome Statute;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the Preparatory Commission, in accordance with resolution F adopted by the Conference, from 16 to 26 February, 26 July to 13 August and 29 November to 17 December 1999, to carry out the mandate of that resolution and, in that connection, to discuss ways to enhance the effectiveness and acceptance of the Court;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Preparatory Commission secretariat services, not including the preparation of working documents, to enable it to perform its functions;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to invite, as observers to the Preparatory Commission, representatives of organizations and other entities that have received a standing invitation from the General Assembly, pursuant to its relevant resolutions, to participate in the capacity of observers in its sessions and work, and also to invite as observers to the Preparatory Commission representatives of interested regional intergovernmental organizations and other interested international bodies, including the international tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda;

7. Notes that non-governmental organizations may participate in the work of the Preparatory Commission by attending its plenary and its other open meetings, in accordance with the rules of procedure to be adopted by the Commission, receiving copies of the official documents and making available their materials to delegates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to expand the mandate of the trust fund established pursuant to Assembly resolution 51/207 for voluntary contributions towards meeting the cost of participation in the work of the Preparatory Commission of the least developed countries, and encourages States to contribute voluntarily to this trust fund;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to take steps to expand the mandate of the trust fund established pursuant to Assembly resolution 52/160 for voluntary contributions towards meeting the cost of participation in the work of the Preparatory Commission of those developing countries not covered by the trust fund referred to in paragraph 8, above, and invites States to contribute voluntarily to this trust fund;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Establishment of the International Criminal Court".

International Law Commission

The International Law Commission (ILC), at its fiftieth session (Geneva, 20 April-1 June, and New York, 27 July-14 August) [A/53/10 & Corr.1], held 45 public meetings.

Under the topic of international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law, the Commission adopted on first reading a set of 17 draft articles with commentaries on prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities and transmitted them to Governments for comments and observations. It considered the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur on the topic of diplomatic protection (see below) and established a working group to consider possible conclusions that might be drawn on the basis of the discussion. The Working Group suggested that the Special Rapporteur, in his second report, should concentrate on the issues raised in Chapter One, "Basis for diplomatic protection", of the outline proposed by the previous year's Working Group [YUN 1997, p. 1353].

Regarding the topic of unilateral acts of States (see below), ILC examined the first report of the Special Rapporteur and concentrated mainly on the definition and elements of unilateral acts, the approach to the topic and the final form of the Commission's work. It was agreed to limit the topic to unilateral acts of States issued for the purpose of producing international legal effects and to elaborate possible draft articles with commentaries on the matter, which accordingly ILC requested the Special Rapporteur to submit. On the topic of State responsibility, ILC considered the first report of the Special Rapporteur, which dealt with general issues relating to the draft, the distinction between "crimes" and "delictual responsibility", and articles 1 to 15 of Part One of the draft. The Commission established a working group to assist the Special Rapporteur in the consideration of various issues during the second reading of the draft articles. ILC decided to refer articles 1 to 15 to the Drafting Committee.

ILC considered the fourth report of the Special Rapporteur on nationality in relation to the succession of States and established a working group to consider the possible orientation for the second part of the topic, nationality of legal persons. The Working Group drew up preliminary conclusions on the subject. The Commission considered the third report of the Special Rapporteur on reservations to treaties, specifically the definition of reservations (and interpretative declarations), and adopted seven draft guidelines on definition of reservations, object of reservations, instances in which reservations might be formulated, reservations having territorial scope, reservations formulated when notifying territorial application, reservations formulated jointly and on the relationship between definitions and admissibility of reservations.

ILC commemorated its fiftieth session by holding a seminar on critical evaluation of the Commission's work and lessons learned for the future and creating the ILC web site. A useful dialogue on subjects of common interest was conducted with the International Court of Justice, the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Inter-American Juridical Committee and the Ad Hoc Committee of Legal Advisers on Public International Law of the Council of Europe.

The thirty-fourth session of the International Law Seminar for postgraduate students, young professors or government officials dealing with international law was held (Geneva, 11-29 May), with 23 participants, mostly from developing countries. The participants attended meetings of the Commission, as well as lectures organized for them. Denmark, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Ireland, Switzerland and Venezuela made voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Law Seminar, thus making it possible to award 15 full and 4 partial fellowships. Since the first seminar in 1965, fellowships had been awarded to 426 of the 760 participants, representing 144 nationalities.

At its 1998 session, ILC considered its work programme for the remainder of the quinquennium and affirmed that the programme set out in its prior session should be complied with to the extent possible and that the Working Group on the long-term programme of work should continue to meet at the next session. ILC also agreed that its 1999 session would be held in Geneva (3 May-23 July) and that, barring unforeseen circumstances, sessions after 1999 should be scheduled to take place in two roughly equal parts, for a total of 12 weeks in Geneva. Accordingly, the Secretariat was requested to undertake the necessary administrative and budgetary requests. The 2000 session would be held in Geneva (24 April-2 June and 3 July-11 August).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/631], adopted resolution 53/102 without vote [agenda item 150].

Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fiftieth session

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fiftieth session,

Emphasizing the importance of furthering the progressive development of international law and its codification as a means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and in the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations,

Emphasizing also the role of the International Law Commission in the fulfilment of the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Recognizing the desirability of referring legal and drafting questions to the Sixth Committee, including topics that might be submitted to the International Law Commission for closer examination, and of enabling the Sixth Committee and the Commission further to enhance their contribution to the progressive development of international law and its codification,

Recalling the need to keep under review those topics of international law which, given their new or renewed interest for the international community, may be suitable for the progressive development and codification of international law and therefore may be included in the future programme of work of the International Law Commission,

Stressing the usefulness of structuring the debate on the report of the International Law Commission in the Sixth Committee in such a manner that conditions are provided for concentrated attention to each of the main topics dealt with in the report,

Wishing to enhance further the interaction between the Sixth Committee as a body of governmental representatives and the International Law Commission as a body of independent legal experts, with a view to improving the dialogue between the two organs,

Noting the holding of a split session of the International Law Commission in 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fiftieth session, and expresses its appreciation to the Commission for the work accomplished at that session, in particular the completion of the first reading of the draft articles on the prevention part of the topic "International liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law";

2. Draws the attention of Governments to the importance for the International Law Commission of having their views on all the specific issues identified in chapter III of its report, and invites them to submit comments and observations in writing by 1 January 2000 on the draft articles on international liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law (prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities);

3. Recommends that, taking into account the comments and observations of Governments, whether in writing or expressed orally in debates in the General Assembly, the International Law Commission should continue its work on the topics in its current programme;

4. Welcomes the valuable work done by the International Law Commission on the topic "International liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law", and requests the Commission, while continuing its work on prevention, to examine other issues arising out of the topic, taking into account comments made by Governments, either in writing or in the Sixth Committee, and to submit its recommendations on the future work to be done on these issues to the Sixth Committee;

5. Invites Governments to submit the most relevant national legislation, decisions of domestic courts and State practice relevant to diplomatic protection in order to assist the International Law Commission in its future work on the topic "Diplomatic protection";

6. Takes note of the consideration by the International Law Commission of its long-term programme of work, and encourages the Commission to proceed with the selection of new topics for its next quinquennium;

7. Welcomes with appreciation the steps taken by the International Law Commission in relation to its internal matters, as contained in paragraphs 543 and 544 of its report, and encourages it to continue enhancing its efficiency and productivity, taking into consideration the discussion held by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

8. Endorses the decision by the International Law Commission on the duration of its session in 1999, as presented in paragraph 562 of its report;

9. Takes note of paragraphs 562 and 563 of the report of the International Law Commission regarding the holding of split sessions as of 2000, requests the Commission to examine the advantages and disadvantages of such split sessions, and decides to return to this matter at its fifty-fourth session;

10. Stresses the desirability of enhancing dialogue between the International Law Commission and the Sixth Committee, and in this context requests the Commission to submit any recommendations to that effect;

11. Requests the International Law Commission to continue to pay special attention to indicating in its annual report, for each topic, any specific issues on which expressions of views by Governments, either in the Sixth Committee or in written form, would be of particular interest in providing effective guidance for the Commission in its further work;

12. Also requests the International Law Commission to continue the implementation of article 16, paragraph (e), and article 26, paragraphs 1 and 2, of its statute in order to further strengthen cooperation between the Commission and other bodies concerned with international law, having in mind the usefulness of such cooperation, and invites the Commission to provide the Sixth Committee with updated information in this regard at the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

13. Notes that consulting with national organizations and individual experts concerned with international law may assist Governments in considering whether to make comments and observations on drafts submitted by the International Law Commission and in formulating their comments and observations;

14. Reaffirms its previous decisions concerning the role of the Codification Division of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and those concerning the summary records and other documentation of the International Law Commission;

15. Takes note of the inclusion of information about the work of the International Law Commission in its web site;

16. Once again expresses the wish that seminars will continue to be held in conjunction with the sessions of the International Law Commission and that an increasing number of participants from developing countries will be given the opportunity to attend those seminars, appeals to States that can do so to make the voluntary contributions that are urgently needed for the holding of the seminars, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the seminars with adequate services, including interpretation, as required;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission, for its attention, the records of the debate on the report of the Commission at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, together with such written statements as delegations may circulate in conjunction with their oral statements, and to prepare and distribute a topical summary of the debate, following established practice;

18. Notes with satisfaction the fiftieth anniversary of the International Law Commission, which was fittingly commemorated by a seminar held at Geneva on 21 and 22 April 1998 and by other events;

19. Recommends that the debate on the report of the International Law Commission at the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly commence on 25 October 1999.

State succession

ILC had before it the fourth report [A/CN.4/489] of the Special Rapporteur, Vaclav Mikulka (Czech Republic), on nationality in relation to the succession of States, which dealt with the second part of the topic, the nationality of legal persons in relation to the succession of States. Although the General Assembly had invited Governments to submit materials, including national legislation, decisions of national tribunals and diplomatic and official correspondence relevant to the topic, the documentation received mainly covered the problem of nationality of individuals in situations of State succession. In 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1335], ILC adopted a draft preamble and a set of 27 draft articles on the issue and the Assembly, in resolution 52/156 [ibid., p. 1334], again invited Governments to submit comments, but none were received.

The Special Rapporteur raised a number of questions on the orientation of the study and suggested that they be discussed in the framework of a working group, which ILC subsequently established. In its preliminary conclusions, the Working Group felt that the issues involved were too specific and the practical need for their solution was not evident. While the Working Group considered suggesting to the Commission that it not undertake work on the topic, it also considered it useful to examine alternative approaches. The Group agreed that there were two options for enlarging the scope of the issue: expansion beyond the context of the succession of States to the question of the nationality of legal persons in international law in general; or staying within the context of succession of States, expansion of the topic to include other questions, such as the status of legal persons (including rights and obligations inherent in the legal capacity of legal persons, specifically those determining the type of legal person) and, possibly, the conditions of operation of legal persons flowing from the succession of States. Under either option, ILC would have to decide which categories of legal persons should be covered, limitation of the study's review of legal relations, and the possible outcome of ILC's work on the issue.

In its report to the Assembly [A/53/10 & Corr.1], ILC stressed the desirability of obtaining States' comments, particularly from those that had undergone a succession, on how the nationality of legal persons was determined, and what kind of treatment was granted to those who became "foreign" legal persons as a result of succession.

State responsibility

During its 1998 session, ILC considered comments and observations received from Governments [A/CN.4/488 & Add.1-3] on the draft articles on State responsibility, which had been provisionally adopted on first reading in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1207]. As at 20 July, replies had been received from 15 Governments. ILC also had before it the first report of the Special Rapporteur, James Crawford (Australia) [A/CN.4/490 & Add.1-7 & Add.2/Corr.1 & Add.4/Corr.1], which dealt with general issues relating to the draft, the distinction between "crimes" and "delictual responsibility", and articles 1 to 15 of Part One of the draft. ILC, having referred the draft articles to the Drafting Committee, took note of the Committee's report.

Following consideration of the first part of his report, the Special Rapporteur observed that there was no general definitions clause in the draft articles, though implicit definitions, including that of State responsibility itself, were concealed in many places. Terminological questions were addressed in his report. Although the word "responsibility" was too deeply entrenched in the draft and in the doctrine to be changed, it needed an explanation, perhaps in the commentary.

International liability

During its fiftieth session, ILC considered the first report on prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities [A/CN.4/487 & Add.I], submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Pemmaraju Sreenivasa Rao (India). In 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1336], the Commission had decided to proceed with its work on the topic of "International liability for injurious consequences arising out of acts not prohibited by international law" by dealing first with the issue of prevention under the subtitle "Prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities". The report reviewed the Commission's work on the topic since 1978 and the scope of the draft articles to be elaborated, and analysed the procedural and substantive obligations that the general duty of prevention entailed.

In May, ILC decided to refer to the Drafting Committee draft articles 1 (a) (Activities to which the present articles apply) and 2 (Use of terms) recommended by the Commission's Working Group in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1206]. On the basis of the Working Group's discussions, the Special Rapporteur proposed a revised text for 15 draft articles, which was referred to the Drafting Committee. In August, ILC adopted on first reading a set of 17 draft articles on prevention of transboundary damage from hazardous activities, which were transmitted to Governments for comments and observations. Articles 3 to 17 dealt with: prevention; cooperation; implementation; relationship to other rules of international law; authorization; impact assessment; information to the public; notification and information; consultations on preventive measures; factors involved in an equitable balance of interests; procedures in the absence of notification; exchange of information; national security and industrial secrets; non-discrimination; and settlement of disputes.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/102 of 8 December, invited Governments to submit comments on the draft articles and requested ILC, while continuing its work on prevention, to examine other issues arising from the topic.

Unilateral acts of States

At its 1998 session, ILC considered the first report on unilateral acts of States [A/CN.4/486] of Special Rapporteur Victor Rodríguez-Cedeno (Venezuela). The report was preliminary in nature, reflecting much of the doctrine, jurisprudence and State practice, as well as the comments that Governments had made in the Sixth Committee in 1997.

The discussion concentrated on the scope, definition and elements of unilateral acts; the approach to the topic; and the final form of ILC's work thereon. The Commission requested the Special Rapporteur to submit draft articles on the definition of unilateral acts and the scope of the draft articles and to proceed further with the examination of the topic, focusing on aspects concerning the elaboration and conditions of validity of those acts in the second report.

ILC also requested Governments' views on whether the scope of the topic should be limited to declarations or expanded to encompass other unilateral expressions of the will of the State, and whether the scope should be limited to unilateral acts of States issued to other States or extended to those issued to other subjects of international law.

International State relations and international law

Principles for international negotiations

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/155 [YUN 1997, p. 1344], the Secretary-General, in a report and later addendum [A/53/332 & Add.I], transmitted comments and proposals received from Kyrgyzstan, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mexico and Qatar on the draft guiding principles for international negotiations proposed by Mongolia for inclusion as a sub-item under the agenda item "United Nations Decade of International Law" [YUN 1997, p. 1343].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/630], adopted resolution 53/101 without vote [agenda item 149].

Principles and guidelines for international negotiations

The General Assembly,
Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,
Reaffirming the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and of the Manila Declaration on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes,

Taking into account the objectives of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Considering that international negotiations constitute a flexible and effective means for, among other things, the peaceful settlement of disputes among States and for the creation of new international norms of conduct,

Bearing in mind that in their negotiations States should be guided by the relevant principles and rules of international law,

Conscious of the existence of different means of peaceful settlement of disputes, as enshrined in the Charter and recognized by international law, and reaffirming, in this context, the right of free choice of those means,

Bearing in mind the important role that constructive and effective negotiations can play in attaining the purposes of the Charter by contributing to the management of international relations, the peaceful settlement of disputes and the creation of new international norms of conduct of States,

Noting that the identification of principles and guidelines of relevance to international negotiations could contribute to enhancing the predictability of negotiating parties, reducing uncertainty and promoting an atmosphere of trust at negotiations,

Recognizing that the following could offer a general, non-exhaustive frame of reference for negotiations,

1. Reaffirms the following principles of international law which are of relevance to international negotiations:

(a) Sovereign equality of all States, notwithstanding differences of an economic, social, political or other nature;

(b) States have the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

(c) States have the duty to fulfil in good faith their obligations under international law;

(d) States have the duty to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations;

(e) Any agreement is void if its conclusion has been procured by the threat or use of force in violation of the principles of international law embodied in the Charter;

(f) States have the duty to cooperate with one another, irrespective of the differences in their political, economic and social systems, in the various spheres of international relations, in order to maintain international peace and security and to promote international economic stability and progress, the general welfare of nations and international cooperation free from discrimination based on such differences;

(g) States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered;

2. Affirms the importance of conducting negotiations in accordance with international law in a manner compatible with and conducive to the achievement of the stated objective of negotiations and in line with the following guidelines:

(a) Negotiations should be conducted in good faith;

(b) States should take due account of the importance of engaging, in an appropriate manner, in international negotiations the States whose vital interests are directly affected by the matters in question;

(c) The purpose and object of all negotiations must be fully compatible with the principles and norms of international law, including the provisions of the Charter;

(d) States should adhere to the mutually agreed framework for conducting negotiations;

(e) States should endeavour to maintain a constructive atmosphere during negotiations and to refrain from any conduct which might undermine the negotiations and their progress;

(f) States should facilitate the pursuit or conclusion of negotiations by remaining focused throughout on the main objectives of the negotiations;

(g) States should use their best endeavours to continue to work towards a mutually acceptable and just solution in the event of an impasse in negotiations.

Jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/151 [YUN 1997, p. 1344], States were invited to submit comments on a convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property for which ILC had drafted articles in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 829]. The replies were presented by the Secretary-General in an August report and later addendum [A/53/274 & Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/629], adopted resolution 53/98 without vote [agenda item 148].

Convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the set of draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property adopted by the International Law Commission at its forty-third session, as well as the recommendation of the Commission that an international conference of plenipotentiaries be convened to examine the draft articles and to conclude a convention on the subject,

Recalling that, in its resolution 49/61 of 9 December 1994, it accepted the recommendation of the International Law Commission,

Recalling also that, in its resolution 52/151 of 15 December 1997, it decided to consider the subject again at its fifty-third session with a view to the establishment of a working group at its fifty-fourth session,

Reaffirming that the codification and progressive development of international law contributes to the implementation of the purposes and principles set forth in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Decides to establish at its fifty-fourth session an open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee, open also to participation by States members of the specialized agencies, to consider outstanding substantive issues related to the draft articles on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property adopted by the International Law Commission, taking into account the recent developments of State practice and legislation and any other factors related to this issue since the adoption of the draft articles, as well as the comments submitted by States in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 49/61 and paragraph 2 of resolution 52/151, and to consider whether there are any issues identified by the working group upon which it would be useful to seek further comments and recommendations of the Commission;

2. Invites the International Law Commission to present any preliminary comments it may have regarding outstanding substantive issues related to the draft articles by 31 August 1999, in the light of the results of the informal consultations held pursuant to General Assembly decision 48/413 of 9 December 1993 and taking into account the recent developments of State practice and other factors related to this issue since the adoption of the draft articles, in order to facilitate the task of the working group;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Convention on jurisdictional immunities of States and their property".

Measures to eliminate terrorism

The Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 [YUN 1996, p. 1208] to elaborate an international convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings and, subsequently, an international convention for the suppression of acts of terrorism, as well as to address means of further developing a comprehensive legal framework of conventions dealing with international terrorism, held its second session in New York from 17 to 27 February 1998 [A/53/37]. The Assembly had adopted the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings by resolution 52/164 [YUN 1997, p. 1347].

In February, the Committee had before it the text of a draft convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism submitted by the Russian Federation. Introducing the draft, the Russian Federation highlighted the potential threats posed by nuclear terrorism and the need to take effective countermeasures against them. It was explained that existing international legal instruments were not sufficiently broad, either in their scope or in terms of the measures they provided, to counteract possible threats of nuclear terrorism and that the draft convention was intended to fill the gaps left by those instruments.

The Committee considered the definition of the material and offences to be covered under the proposed convention with a view to clarifying its necessity, as well as its objectives and substantive scope. Without prejudice to the issue of whether a new convention should be developed, the Committee conducted a first reading of the substantive provisions containing elements specific to the draft convention or not identical to those found in relevant treaties. It also reviewed the preambular paragraphs and final provisions, as well as the remaining draft articles. Written and oral amendments and proposals were submitted.

The Foreign Ministers of Iran and the Russian Federation, following a meeting of 28 September, issued a joint statement supporting the conclusion of a convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism [A/C.6/53/6]. The two countries also supported the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings and five principles on deterring terrorism outlined in their joint statement.

In response to Assembly resolution 50/53 [YUN 1995, p. 1330], the Secretary-General issued an August report and later addendum on measures to eliminate international terrorism [A/53/314 & Corr.1,2 & Add.1]. The report provided responses from States and international organizations on steps taken to prevent and suppress international terrorism and information on incidents caused by international terrorism, as well as the status of relevant international legal instruments and recent developments in that area.

The Assembly, in resolution 52/165 [YUN 1997, p. 1346], had further recommended that the work of the Ad Hoc Committee continue during the Assembly's fifty-third session from 28 September to 9 October 1998, within the framework of a working group of the Sixth Committee, which subsequently decided to open the Working Group to Member States or members of specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The Working Group held 13 meetings. A discussion paper was tabled before the Working Group for its consideration. On the basis of discussions on the draft text proposed by the Russian Federation and on written proposals and amendments, a new discussion paper was prepared for consideration by the Working Group. On 22 October, the Working Group issued its report [A/C.6/53/L.4].

Addressing the Assembly on 23 September, the French Foreign Minister proposed that the Assembly session should open discussions on an international convention for the suppression of terrorist financing. To that end, France, on 3 November [A/C.6/53/9], submitted a draft convention to the Sixth Committee that might serve as a basis for the Ad Hoc Committee's work, and suggested that discussions start in 1999 within the Ad Hoc Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/636], adopted resolution 53/108 without vote [agenda item 155].

Measures to eliminate international terrorism

The General Assembly,

Guided by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling all its relevant resolutions, including resolution 49/60 of 9 December 1994, by which it adopted the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, and resolutions 50/53 of 11 December 1995, 51/210 of 17 December 1996 and 52/165 of 15 December 1997,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the persistence of terrorist acts, which have been carried out worldwide,

Stressing the need to strengthen further international cooperation between States and between international organizations and agencies, regional organizations and arrangements and the United Nations in order to prevent, combat and eliminate terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, wherever and by whomsoever committed,

Mindful of the need to enhance the role of the United Nations and the relevant specialized agencies in combating international terrorism, and of the proposals of the Secretary-General to enhance the role of the Organization in this respect,

Recalling that in the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism, contained in the annex to resolution 49/60, the General Assembly encouraged States to review urgently the scope of the existing international legal provisions on the prevention, repression and elimination of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, with the aim of ensuring that there was a comprehensive legal framework covering all aspects of the matter,

Bearing in mind the possibility of considering in the near future the elaboration of a comprehensive convention on international terrorism,

Bearing in mind also that the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Durban, South Africa, from 29 August to 3 September 1998, reaffirmed its collective position on terrorism and as a recent initiative called for an international summit conference under the auspices of the United Nations to formulate a joint organized response of the international community to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Recognizing the urgent need to enhance international cooperation to prevent terrorist financing and to develop an appropriate legal instrument,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Strongly condemns all acts, methods and practices of terrorism as criminal and unjustifiable, wherever and by whomsoever committed;

2. Reiterates that criminal acts intended or calculated to provoke a state of terror in the general public, a group of persons or particular persons for political purposes are in any circumstances unjustifiable, whatever the considerations of a political, philosophical, ideological, racial, ethnic, religious or other nature that may be invoked to justify them;

3. Reiterates its call upon all States to adopt further measures in accordance with the relevant provisions of international law, including international standards of human rights, to prevent terrorism and to strengthen international cooperation in combating terrorism and, to that end, to consider in particular the implementation of the measures set out in paragraphs 3 (a) to (f) of its resolution 51/210;

4. Also reiterates its call upon all States, with the aim of enhancing the efficient implementation of relevant legal instruments, to intensify, as and where appropriate, the exchange of information on facts related to terrorism and, in so doing, to avoid the dissemination of inaccurate or unverified information;

5. Reiterates its call upon States to refrain from financing, encouraging, providing training for or otherwise supporting terrorist activities;

6. Reaffirms that international cooperation as well as actions by States to combat terrorism should be conducted in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, international law and relevant international conventions;

7. Urges all States that have not yet done so to consider, as a matter of priority, becoming parties to relevant conventions and protocols as referred to in paragraph 6 of resolution 51/210, as well as the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings, and calls upon all States to enact, as appropriate, domestic legislation necessary to implement the provisions of those conventions and protocols, to ensure that the jurisdiction of their courts enables them to bring to trial the perpetrators of terrorist acts, and to cooperate with and provide support and assistance to other States and relevant international and regional organizations to that end;

8. Reaffirms the Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 49/60 and the Declaration to Supplement the 1994 Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism contained in the annex to resolution 51/210, and calls upon all States to implement them;

9. Takes note of the measures aimed at strengthening the capacity of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to enhance international cooperation and improve the response of Governments to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

10. Decides to address at its fifty-fourth session the question of convening a high-level conference in 2000 under the auspices of the United Nations to formulate a joint organized response of the international community to terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

11. Decides also that the Ad Hoc Committee established by General Assembly resolution 51/210 of 17 December 1996 shall continue to elaborate a draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism with a view to completing the instrument, shall elaborate a draft international convention for the suppression of terrorist financing to supplement related existing international instruments, and subsequently shall address means of further developing a comprehensive legal framework of conventions dealing with international terrorism, including considering, on a priority basis, the elaboration of a comprehensive convention on international terrorism;

12. Decides further that the Ad Hoc Committee shall meet from 15 to 26 March 1999, devoting appropriate time to the consideration of the outstanding issues relating to the elaboration of a draft international convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, and that it shall initiate the elaboration of a draft international convention for the suppression of terrorist financing, and recommends that the work continue during the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly from 27 September to 8 October 1999, within the framework of a working group of the Sixth Committee, and that the Ad Hoc Committee be convened in 2000 to continue its work as referred to in paragraph 11 above;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Ad Hoc Committee with the necessary facilities for the performance of its work;

14. Requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session in the event of the completion of the draft convention for the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism;

15. Also requests the Ad Hoc Committee to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on progress made in the implementation of its mandate;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Measures to eliminate international terrorism".

Condemnation of terrorist attacks in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam

On 13 August, the Security Council included in its agenda the item entitled "Threats to peace and security caused by international terrorist acts". The Council President, speaking on its behalf, expressed sympathy to the Governments and peoples of Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States in connection with the tragedy each had suffered as a result of the bombings of the United States embassies in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam on 7 August, in which several UN staff members were also injured. The members of the Council condemned the terrorist acts against innocent civilians.

Kenya, speaking before the Council, expressed its outrage and condemnation of the terrorist bombings, which occurred almost simultaneously in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam. The bomb blast in Nairobi had so far claimed over 250 lives, and many other people were either in critical condition or unaccounted for. Nearly 5,000 had been treated for injuries suffered from the blast. The bombs had caused damage estimated at over $500 million to property, including the complete destruction of a seven-storey building and damage to 67 other buildings. Those acts, in otherwise peaceful countries, exemplified the expanding reach and growing menace of the perpetrators of terrorist acts.

The United Republic of Tanzania appealed to the international community to assist it in the investigation and prosecution of those responsible. It condemned terrorist activities in all their forms, whether perpetrated by individual groups or by States, irrespective of the motivation.

The United States said the bombings underscored that terrorists knew no boundaries and that the suppression of international terrorism and the arrest, conviction and punishment of its perpetrators were essential to the maintenance of international peace and security. The United States would use all means at its disposal to track down and punish the perpetrators.

SECURITY COUNCIL ACTION

On 13 August [meeting 3915], the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1189(1998). The draft [S/1998/748] was prepared in consultations among Council members.

The Security Council,

Deeply disturbed by the indiscriminate and outrageous acts of international terrorism that took place on 7 August 1998 in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam,

Condemning such acts which have a damaging effect on international relations and jeopardize the security of States,

Convinced that the suppression of acts of international terrorism is essential for the maintenance of international peace and security, and reaffirming the determination of the international community to eliminate international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations,

Reaffirming the obligations of Member States under the Charter of the United Nations,

Stressing that every Member State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in terrorist acts in another State or acquiescing in organized activities within its territory directed towards the commission of such acts,

Mindful of General Assembly resolution 52/164 of 15 December 1997 on the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings,

Recalling that, in the statement issued on 31 January 1992 on the occasion of the meeting of the Security Council at the level of heads of State and Government, the Council expressed its deep concern over acts of international terrorism, and emphasized the need for the international community to deal effectively with all such criminal acts,

Also stressing the need to strengthen international co-operation between States in order to adopt practical and effective measures to prevent, combat and eliminate all forms of terrorism affecting the international community as a whole,

Commending the responses of the Governments of Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States of America to the terrorist bomb attacks in Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania,

Determined to eliminate international terrorism,

1. Strongly condemns the terrorist bomb attacks in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam on 7 August 1998, which claimed hundreds of innocent lives, injured thousands of people and caused massive destruction to property;

2. Expresses to the families of the innocent victims of the terrorist bomb attacks during this difficult time its deep sorrow, sympathy and condolences;

3. Calls upon all States and international institutions to cooperate with and provide support and assistance to the ongoing investigations in Kenya, the United Republic of Tanzania and the United States of America to apprehend the perpetrators of these cowardly criminal acts and to bring them swiftly to justice;

4. Expresses its sincere gratitude to all States, international institutions and voluntary organizations for their encouragement and timely response to the requests for assistance from the Governments of Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania, and urges them to assist the affected countries, especially in the reconstruction of infrastructure and disaster preparedness;

5. Calls upon all States to adopt, in accordance with international law and as a matter of priority, effective and practical measures for security cooperation, for the prevention of such acts of terrorism, and for the prosecution and punishment of their perpetrators;

6. Decides to remain seized of the matter.

The United States, in a 20 August letter to the Security Council President [S/1998/780], reported that it had exercised its right of self-defence, in accordance with Article 51 of the UN Charter, in responding to armed attacks against United States embassies and United States nationals. Having obtained convincing information that the organization of Osama bin Laden, based in Afghanistan and with support facilities in the Sudan, was responsible for the bombings of 7 August, United States armed forces, on 20 August, struck a facility being used to produce chemical weapons in the Sudan and terrorist training and base camps in Afghanistan. Those attacks were carried out only after repeated efforts to convince both Governments to terminate those activities.

In a 21 August letter [S/1998/786], the Sudan requested an urgent meeting of the Council to condemn the United States aggression (see p. 185). It stated that the aerial attack was on a factory producing medicines, and denied claims that it was used for making weapons. The Sudan said it regarded the attack as terrorist aggression and requested the Council to condemn the aggression, to hold the United States responsible for the human casualties and material damage and to send a technical mission of inquiry to establish the facts of the United States allegations. Further details of the attack on the pharmaceutical factory, in which many people were killed or injured and damage amounted to $40 million, were provided by the Sudan in a letter of 22 August [S/1998/792].

By letters of 21 August to the Council President, Qatar [S/1998/790], on behalf of the Group of Islamic States, and Kuwait [S/1998/791], on behalf of the League of Arab States, endorsed the Sudan's requests for an urgent meeting of the Council and for sending a fact-finding mission to the Sudan. The Islamic Group and the League of Arab States also endorsed the requests on 12 October [S/1998/942] and 24 November [S/1998/1120], respectively. Namibia, in a 25 August letter [S/1998/802], made the same requests on behalf of the Group of African States, as did Colombia on 25 August [S/1998/804], on behalf of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries. In a 13 November letter to the Council President [S/1998/1069], the representative of the Sudan rejected United States arguments that a commission of inquiry would serve no purpose.

In the weeks that followed the attacks, a number of States or groups of States deplored the action by the United States against the pharmaceutical factory in the Sudan or complained of the action as a violation of its territorial integrity. Such views were expressed in letters to the Council President by: the summit of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries (Durban, South Africa, 3 September) in a final declaration, the relevant paragraphs of which were transmitted by the Sudan [S/1998/879, A/C.6/53/2]; and the Council of the League of Arab States in resolutions forwarded by Lebanon [S/1998/800, S/1998/894] and a revised version forwarded by Yemen [S/1998/1120]. The Council of the League of Arab States [S/1998/800], while condemning terrorism in all its forms, drew a distinction between terrorism and the legitimate right of peoples to struggle against occupation.

The Sudan, in a series of letters to the Council [S/1998/793, 801, 880, 885, 888, 911, 937, 938, 1083, 1133] and the General Assembly [A/C.6/53/3-5], forwarded articles, many of them from the Western press, that indicated that the factory was not involved in manufacturing chemical weapons, that the United States Administration had based its decision on insufficient information or inference and/or that it had fabricated its claims without any supporting evidence. By a 15 December letter [S/1998/1168], the Sudan forwarded a study prepared by Michael Barletta, a senior research associate at the Monterey Institute of International Studies, California, United States, on United States allegations concerning the pharmaceutical factory destroyed by the air attack on 20 August. The study concluded that senior United States officials were shown to be ignorant of key facts at the time of their decision to bomb the plant.

In a 24 August letter to the Council President [S/1998/794], Pakistan said that the unilateral action by the United States against alleged terrorist sites in Afghanistan and the Sudan had entailed a violation of Pakistan's airspace. On 21 August, it had protested to the United States that missiles had overflowed the territory of Pakistan.

In a 24 August letter [A/53/285] to the Secretary-General, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, referring to the United States air strikes against Afghanistan and the Sudan, said that unilateral approaches to international terrorism were contrary to the principles of international relations.

Additional Protocols I and II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/155 [YUN 1996, p. 1211], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/287] on information received from Uruguay on the status of the two 1977 Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflict [YUN 1977, p. 706]. Annexed to the report was a list of 153 States that had ratified or acceded to one or both of the Protocols as at 31 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/627], adopted resolution 53/96 without vote [agenda item 146].

Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/44 of 8 December 1977, 34/51 of 23 November 1979, 37/116 of 16 December 1982, 39/77 of 13 December 1984, 41/72 of 3 December 1986, 43/161 of 9 December 1988, 45/38 of 28 November 1990, 47/30 of 25 November 1992, 49/48 of 9 December 1994 and 51/155 of 16 December 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of established humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts and the need to respect and ensure respect for these rules in all circumstances within the scope of the relevant international instruments, pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Stressing the possibility of making use of the International Fact-Finding Commission in relation to an armed conflict, pursuant to article 90 of Protocol I, and recalling that the International Fact-Finding Commission may, where necessary, facilitate, through its good offices, the restoration of an attitude of respect for the Conventions and the Protocol,

Stressing also the need for consolidating the existing body of international humanitarian law through its universal acceptance and the need for wide dissemination and full implementation of such law at the national level,

Mindful of the role of the International Committee of the Red Cross in offering protection to the victims of armed conflicts,

Noting with appreciation the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to promote and disseminate knowledge of international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the two additional Protocols,

Noting that the Twenty-sixth International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent endorsed the recommendations of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on the Protection of War Victims, including the recommendation that the depositary of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 should organize periodic meetings of States parties to the Conventions to consider general problems regarding the application of international humanitarian law,

Acknowledging the fact that the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted on 17 July 1998, includes the most serious crimes of international concern under international humanitarian law, and that the Statute, while recalling that it is the duty of every State to exercise its criminal jurisdiction over those responsible for such crimes, shows the determination of the international community to put an end to impunity for the perpetrators of such crimes and thus to contribute to their prevention,

Taking note of the analytical report of the Secretary-General on minimum humanitarian standards submitted to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session,

Noting that international humanitarian law has been an important topic during the United Nations Decade of International Law, which will come to a close in 1999, fifty years after the adoption of the Geneva Conventions, and that the importance of this body of law will be highlighted in the context of the celebration in 1999 at The Hague and at St. Petersburg of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference,

1. Appreciates the virtually universal acceptance of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, and notes the trend towards a similarly wide acceptance of the two additional Protocols of 1977;

2. Appeals to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the additional Protocols at the earliest possible date;

3. Calls upon all States that are already parties to Protocol I, or those States not parties, on becoming parties to Protocol I, to make the declaration provided for under article 90 of that Protocol;

4. Calls upon all States parties to the additional Protocols to ensure their wide dissemination and full implementation;

5. Affirms the necessity of making the implementation of international humanitarian law more effective;

6. Welcomes the advisory service activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross in supporting efforts undertaken by Member States to take legislative and administrative action to implement international humanitarian law and in promoting the exchange of information on those efforts between Governments;

7. Welcomes also the holding in January 1998 of the first periodic meeting on the application of international humanitarian law;

8. Notes the holding in October 1998 of the meeting of experts on general problems of the implementation of the fourth Geneva Convention;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the status of the additional Protocols, as well as measures taken to strengthen the existing body of international humanitarian law, inter alia, with respect to its dissemination and full implementation at the national level, based on information received from Member States and the International Committee of the Red Cross;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts".

Diplomatic relations

Protection of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

As at 31 December 1998, the number of parties to the various international instruments relating to the protection of diplomats and diplomatic and consular relations was as follows: 178 States were parties to the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations [YUN 1961, p. 512], 48 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [ibid., p. 516], and 61 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [ibid.].

The 1963 Vienna Convention on Consular Relations [YUN 1963, p. 510] had 161 parties, with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and Qatar acceding in 1998; 36 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning acquisition of nationality [ibid., p. 512]; and 44 States were parties to the Optional Protocol concerning the compulsory settlement of disputes [ibid.].

The 1973 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents [YUN 1973, p. 775], had 100 States parties, with Cuba, Mauritania and Uzbekistan acceding and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia succeeding in 1998.

Report of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/156 [YUN 1996, p. 1212], the Secretary-General invited Member States to communicate their views on measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives as provided for in Assembly resolution 42/154 [YUN 1987, p. 1068]. In an August report [A/53/276 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General presented the texts and analytical summary of the information received.

One violation was reported by a State in 1998. In connection with four reported cases in respect of which no information had been received within a reasonable period of time, the Secretary-General addressed reminders to the States concerned.

ILC action. The Special Rapporteur on diplomatic protection, Mohamed Bennouna (Morocco), issued a preliminary report on the subject in February 1998 [A/CN.4/484], which was considered by ILC at its fiftieth session [A/53/10 & Corr.1]. The report raised a number of basic issues underlying the topic and on which the Special Rapporteur sought the views of ILC. The issues were divided into two broad categories: the legal nature of diplomatic protection and the nature of the rules governing diplomatic protection.

On 22 May, following a lengthy debate, ILC established an open-ended working group, chaired by the Special Rapporteur, to consider possible conclusions that might be drawn on the basis of the discussion as to the approach to the topic and also to provide direction in respect of issues that should be covered in the second report of the Special Rapporteur for the next ILC session. The Working Group held two meetings, on 25 and 26 May, at which it agreed, in respect of the approach to the topic, that the customary law approach to diplomatic protection should form the basis for ILC work on the topic. The topic would deal with secondary rules of international law relating to diplomatic protection, while primary rules would be considered only when their clarification was essential to providing guidance. Primary rules were defined as obligations of States in particular areas of their relations, and secondary rules were obligations of States that arose from the breach of primary rules, such as the right to reparation. The Working Group also agreed that the exercise of diplomatic protection was the right of the State; in the exercise of that right, the State should take into account the rights and interests of its nationals for whom it was exercising diplomatic protection. The work on diplomatic protection should take into account the development of international law in increasing recognition and protection of the rights of individuals and in providing them with more access to international forums to enforce their rights. The Working Group, noting that some domestic laws had recognized the right of their nationals to diplomatic protection by their Governments, expressed the view that the discretionary right of the State to exercise diplomatic protection did not prevent it from committing itself to its nationals to exercise such a right. The Working Group said it would be useful to request Governments to provide ILC with the most sig-nifleant national legislation, decisions by domestic courts and State practice relevant to diplomatic protection.

The Working Group recalled the 1997 decision of ILC [YUN 1997, p. 1353] to complete the first reading of the topic by the end of the current quinquennium. With regard to the second report of the Special Rapporteur, the Working Group suggested that it should concentrate on the issues raised in Chapter One, "Basis for diplomatic protection", of the outline adopted by the previous year's Working Group.

On 9 June, ILC considered and endorsed the recommendations of the Working Group.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/102 of 8 December, invited Governments to submit relevant national legislation, decisions of domestic courts and State practice relevant to diplomatic protection in order to assist ILC in its work on the topic (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/628], adopted resolution 53/97 without Vote [agenda item 147].

Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives

The General Assembly,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General,

Conscious of the need to develop and strengthen friendly relations and cooperation among States,

Convinced that respect for the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations is a basic prerequisite for the normal conduct of relations among States and for the fulfilment of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Alarmed by the recent acts of violence against diplomatic and consular representatives, as well as against representatives of international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, which have endangered or taken innocent lives and seriously impeded the normal work of such representatives and officials,

Expressing sympathy for the victims of such illegal acts,

Welcoming the Security Council resolutions and statements by the President of the Security Council in relation to flagrant violations of the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as missions and representatives of international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations,

Concerned at the failure to respect the inviolability of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

Recalling that, without prejudice to their privileges and immunities, it is the duty of all persons enjoying such privileges and immunities to respect the laws and regulations of the receiving State,

Recalling also that diplomatic and consular premises must not be used in any manner incompatible with the diplomatic or consular functions,

Emphasizing the duty of States to take all appropriate measures as required by international law, including measures of a preventive nature, and to bring offenders to justice,

Welcoming measures already taken by States to that end in conformity with their international obligations,

Convinced that the role of the United Nations, which includes the reporting procedures established under General Assembly resolution 35/168 of 15 December 1980 and further elaborated in subsequent Assembly resolutions, is important in promoting efforts to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General;

2. Strongly condemns acts of violence against diplomatic and consular missions and representatives, as well as against missions and representatives of international intergovernmental organizations and officials of such organizations, and emphasizes that such acts can never be justified;

3. Also strongly condemns the recent acts of violence against such missions, representatives and officials, referred to in relevant reports under this item;

4. Urges States to strictly observe, implement and enforce the principles and rules of international law governing diplomatic and consular relations and, in particular, to ensure, in conformity with their international obligations, the protection, security and safety of the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above officially present in territories under their jurisdiction, including practical measures to prohibit in their territories illegal activities of persons, groups and organizations that encourage, instigate, organize or engage in the perpetration of acts against the security and safety of such missions, representatives and officials;

5. Also urges States to take all necessary measures at the national and international levels to prevent any acts of violence against the missions, representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above and to ensure, with the participation of the United Nations, where appropriate, that such acts are fully investigated with a view to bringing offenders to justice;

6. Recommends that States cooperate closely through, inter alia, contacts between the diplomatic and consular missions and the receiving State with regard to practical measures designed to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives and with regard to the exchange of information on the circumstances of all serious violations thereof;

7. Urges States to take all appropriate measures in accordance with international law, at the national and international levels, to prevent any abuse of diplomatic or consular privileges and immunities, in particular serious abuses, including those involving acts of violence;

8. Recommends that States cooperate closely with the State in whose territory abuses of diplomatic and consular privileges and immunities may have occurred, including by exchanging information and providing assistance to its juridical authorities in order to bring offenders to justice;

9. Calls upon States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the instruments relevant to the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives;

10. Also calls upon States, in cases where a dispute arises in connection with a violation of their international obligations concerning the protection of the missions or the security of the representatives and officials mentioned in paragraph 2 above, to make use of the means for the peaceful settlement of disputes, including the good offices of the Secretary-General, and requests the Secretary-General, when he deems it appropriate, to offer his good offices to the States directly concerned;

11. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 9 of resolution 42/154 of 7 December 1987;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to issue a report on the item, in accordance with paragraph 12 of resolution 42/154, containing also an analytical summary of the reports received under paragraph 11 above, on an annual basis, as well as to proceed with his other tasks pursuant to the same resolution;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives".

Treaties and agreements

Reservations to treaties

In 1998, ILC considered the third report of Special Rapporteur Alain Pellet (France) on the law and practice relating to reservations to treaties. It dealt mainly with the definition of reservations (and interpretative declarations) to treaties [A/CN.4/491 & Add.1-6 & Add.2/Corr.1 & Add.4/Corr.1 & Add.6/Corr.1]. ILC, having referred a number of draft guidelines to the Drafting Committee, adopted its report on several draft guidelines, including those on definition and object of reservations, instances in which reservations might be formulated, relation between the definition and the permissibility of reservations, reservations formulated when notifying territorial application, joint formulation, and reservations with territorial scope. Texts of those draft guidelines with commentaries were provisionally adopted.

Treaties involving international organizations

The 1986 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations [YUN 1986, p. 1006], which had not yet entered into force, had 25 States parties as at 31 December 1998.

Registration and publication of treaties by the United Nations

During 1998, 1,589 international agreements and 1,116 subsequent actions were received by the Secretariat for registration or filing and recording. In addition, there were 1,343 registrations or formalities concerning agreements for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions.

The texts of international agreements registered or filed and recorded were published in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, with translations into English and French where necessary. In 1998, the following volumes of the Treaty Series covering treaties registered or filed and recorded in 1979, 1980, 1982, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995 were issued:

Volumes 22 and 23 of the Cumulative Index to the UN Treaty Series were published in English and French in 1998.

Multilateral treaties

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/153 [YUN 1997, p. 1371], the Secretary-General issued an October note [A/53/525] listing the titles of treaties appearing in the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General.

The UN Treaty Series (approximately 1500 printed volumes) and the regularly updated status of multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General were available on the Internet at the UN Treaty Collection web site (www.un.org/depts/treaty). In 1998, the text of recent multilateral treaties deposited with the Secretary-General and the list of titles of all the multilateral treaties deposited were added to the site in the six official languages.

New multilateral treaties concluded under UN auspices

The following treaties, concluded under UN auspices, were deposited with the Secretary-General during 1998:

Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted at Rome on 17 July 1998

Protocol on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Seabed Authority, adopted by the Assembly of the International Seabed Authority in Kingston, Jamaica, on 27 March 1998

Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunication Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, adopted at Tampere, Finland, on 18 June 1998

Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-Making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters, adopted at Aarhus, Denmark, on 25 June 1998

Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, adopted at Rotterdam, Netherlands, on 10 September 1998

Multilateral treaties

deposited with the Secretary-General

The number of multilateral treaties for which the Secretary-General performed depositary functions stood at 502 at the end of 1998. During the year, 308 signatures were affixed to treaties for which he performed depositary functions and 794 instruments of ratification, accession, acceptance and approval or notification were transmitted to him. In addition, he received 878 communications from States expressing observations or declarations and reservations made at the time of signature, ratification or accession.

The following multilateral treaties in respect of which the Secretary-General acted as depositary came into force in 1998:

Additional Protocol to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, "Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons (Protocol IV)", adopted by the Conference of the States Parties to the Convention at its eighth plenary meeting on 13 October 1995

Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices as amended on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II as amended on 3 May 1996) annexed to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, adopted by the Conference of the States Parties to the Convention at Geneva on 3 May 1996

Protocol to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution on Further Reduction of Sulphur Emissions, concluded at Oslo on 14 June 1994

Convention on Customs Treatment of Pool Containers Used in International Transport, concluded at Geneva on 21 January 1994

Chapter IV

Law of the sea

During 1998, the United Nations continued to promote the universal acceptance of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea and the two related Agreements. An important role belonged to the three institutions created by the Convention—the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf.

In September, the General Assembly approved the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea. The Tribunal was established in 1996 to settle disputes concerning the interpretation of the Convention.

UN Convention on the Law of the Sea

Signatures and ratifications

In 1998, the number of parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea rose to 130. Belgium, Gabon, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Nepal, Poland, and Suriname ratified it and the European Community deposited its instrument of formal confirmation.

The Convention, which was adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea in 1982 [YUN 1982, p. 178], entered into force on 16 November 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1301]. It was closed for signature in 1984, having received 159 signatures [YUN 1984, p. 108].

Meeting of States parties. The eighth Meeting of States parties to the Convention (New York, 18-22 May) [SPLOS/31] dealt primarily with budgetary matters of the International Tribunal, its rules of procedure and other issues related to implementation of the Convention. It also considered several items submitted to it by the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf.

Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the Convention

During the year, the number of States parties to the 1994 Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the Convention, which was adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/263 [YUN 1994, p. 1301], reached 94. The Agreement was to be interpreted and applied together with the Convention as a single instrument, and in the event of any inconsistency between the Agreement and Part XI of the Convention, the provisions of the Agreement would prevail. Any ratification or accession to the Convention made after 28 July 1994 represented consent to be bound by the Agreement as well. States that were parties to the Convention prior to the adoption of the Agreement had to be bound by it by depositing an instrument of ratification or accession. The provisional application of the Agreement terminated on the date of its entry into force, 28 July 1996. However, States and entities that applied it provisionally, and for which it was not yet in force, were able to continue to be members of the International Seabed Authority on a provisional basis pending its entry into force. The Council of the Authority was empowered to approve extension of the provisional membership for periods not exceeding a total of two years. As at 30 September 1998, 11 States were members on a provisional basis; eight of those, having failed to become parties to the Convention and the Agreement before 16 November, ceased to be members of the Authority on a provisional basis as of that date.

Agreement on conservation and management of straddling fish stocks and highly migratory stocks

As at 31 December, the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks [YUN 1995, p. 1334] had been ratified or acceded to by 19 States and would enter into force 30 days after the date of deposit of the thirtieth instrument of ratification or accession. Unlike the 1994 Agreement on Part XI, the 1995 Agreement on fish stocks would be interpreted and applied in a manner consistent with the Convention and there was no direct link between it and the Convention with respect to establishing the consent to be bound.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General reported in October [A/53/456] that no

State or entity had notified the depository of its wish to apply for provisional standing.

Other developments related to the Convention

Report of Secretary-General. In October, the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/26 [YUN 1997, p. 1362], submitted his annual report [A/53/456] on developments relating to ocean affairs, the law of the sea, and implementation of the Convention and related Agreements.

The Secretary-General described the activities of the three institutions created by the Convention—the International Seabed Authority, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. He reviewed, on a regional basis, main developments relating to legislation, delimitation treaties and State practice, which showed a wide degree of acceptance of the provisions of the Convention by many States, whether they were parties or non-parties. The Secretary-General presented information concerning deposit and due publicity of charts and lists of geographical coordinates relating to straight baselines, archipelagic baselines and various maritime areas, and highlighted developments in the dispute settlement mechanism, including the choice of procedures, and additions to the lists of conciliators, arbitrators and experts for the special arbitration.

Other areas of the report discussed issues concerning States with special geographical characteristics, such as small island States and land-locked States; issues related to combatting crimes at sea, including illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, and piracy and armed robbery; and legal issues of navigation, such as safety and seaworthiness of ships, seafarers' condition, safety of navigation, maritime transport and carriage of dangerous goods, as well as pollution from ships. The Secretary-General also described activities which had taken place in the development and management of marine resources and protection and preservation of the marine environment. He provided a comprehensive review of marine fisheries in all regions of the world ocean; information on ecosystems, habitats and species; a detailed overview of the protection and preservation of the marine environment, including pollution from land-based sources, from vessels, from the atmosphere and by dumping; and also a review of regional seas programmes and action plans. In addition, the report addressed subjects dealing with marine science and technology and cooperative mechanisms with the UN system, including capacity-building and the information system.

Institutions created by the Convention

International Seabed Authority

Through the International Seabed Authority, established by the Convention on the Law of the Sea and the 1994 Implementing Agreement, States organized and conducted exploration and exploitation of the resources of the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil beyond the limits of national jurisdiction. As at 31 December, there were 130 members of the Authority.

The Authority held its fourth session in three parts (Kingston, Jamaica, 16-27 March and 17-28 August; New York, 12-13 October). All four of its organs—the Assembly, the Council, the Legal and Technical Commission and the Finance Commission—met during the sessions.

In March, the Assembly adopted the Protocol on the privileges and immunities of the Authority [ISBA/4/A/8], which was opened for signature on 17 August. The Assembly also considered the annual report of the Secretary-General of the Authority [ISBA/4/A/H], which covered the period from July 1997 to July 1998, and adopted the 1999 budget of the Authority amounting to $5,011,700 [ISBA/4/bA/17]. In October [ISBA/4/A/21], the Assembly decided that the scale of assessment for contributions of members of the Authority would be based on that used for the UN regular budget.

In March, the Legal and Technical Commission prepared and presented to the Council the initial draft seabed mining code, which dealt with prospecting and exploration for polymetallic nodules [ISBA/4/C/4/Rev.i]. The draft represented the first part of a broader mining code that was to encompass rules, regulations and procedures for conduct of activities in the areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction.

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held its fifth (16 February-20 March) and sixth (21 September-9 October) sessions in Hamburg, Germany [SPLOS/35].

In May, the eighth Meeting of States parties to the Convention considered the first report of the Tribunal, as well as its budgetary matters and draft financial regulations. The Meeting adopted the budget of the Tribunal for 1999 and a supplementary budget for 1998. The approved budget for 1999 amounted to a total of $6,983,817. After the consideration of the draft financial regulations of the Tribunal, the Meeting agreed that the draft would be taken up in 1999 and requested the Tribunal to submit a revised version of the document taking into account comments, proposals and amendments made by delegations during the discussion.

As at 31 December, the 1997 Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Tribunal for the Law of the Sea [YUN 1997, p. 1361], which would remain open for signature until 1 July 1999, had been signed by Argentina, Greece, Jordan, the Netherlands, Norway, Oman, Senegal, the United Kingdom and the United Republic of Tanzania. The Agreement, which required ratification by 10 States, had been ratified by Norway.

The primary task of the Tribunal was to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention. The Tribunal received its first application under article 292 of the Convention in November 1997, which was filed by Saint Vincent and the Grenadines against Guinea and concerned the detention of an oil tanker, the M/V Saiga, and arrest of its crew by customs officials of Guinea. It was the subject of the first Judgement of the Tribunal on 4 December 1997. By an Order of 20 January 1998, the Tribunal accepted the case on the terms requested by the parties and it was entered in the List of Cases as the M/V Saiga (No.2) case. By an Order of 23 February, the Tribunal fixed the time limits for the filing of the written pleadings. In compliance with the Judgement of the Tribunal, Guinea released the vessel on 4 March. On 11 March, the Tribunal delivered its Order on the Request for the prescription of provisional measures which included, inter alia, that Guinea refrain from carrying out its national court's decision or any other administrative measure against the M/V Saiga, its master and crew as well as its owners or operators. On 6 October, the Tribunal issued an Order setting the time limits for the filing of the second round of pleadings.

In June [A/52/968], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly for its approval the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal [YUN 1997, p. 1362], which the Assembly approved in resolution 52/251.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 September [meeting 92], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/251 [draft: A/52/L.80 & Add.I] without vote [agenda item 39 (a)].

Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/34 of 9 December 1996 in which, inter alia, it invited the Secretary-General to take steps to conclude a relationship agreement with the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea,

Noting the decision of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea taken at its fifth session on 12 March 1998 to approve the Agreement on Cooperation and

Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, signed on 18 December 1997 by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea,

Noting also that the eighth Meeting of States Parties to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, held in New York from 18 to 22 May 1998, took note with appreciation of the report of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, including paragraphs 67 and 68, relating to the conclusion of the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea,

Having considered the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, Approves the Agreement, which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea

The United Nations and the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, the United Nations is the principal organization dealing with matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security and that one of the main purposes of the Organization is to bring about by peaceful means the settlement of international disputes or situations that might lead to a breach of the peace,

Acknowledging the key role played by the United Nations under the Charter in the peaceful settlement of international disputes,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly of the United Nations in its resolution 3067(XXVIII) of 16 November 1973 decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea for the adoption of a convention dealing with all matters relating to the law of the sea and that the Conference adopted the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (hereinafter referred to as "the Convention"),

Bearing in mind also that the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea (hereinafter referred to as "the International Tribunal") has been established in accordance with article 287, paragraph 1 (a), and annex VI to the Convention as an autonomous international judicial body,

Noting the role of the International Tribunal in the peaceful settlement of disputes in relation to the uses of the seas and the oceans and their resources,

Noting also that the functions of the International Tribunal are consistent with Article 2, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that international disputes shall be settled by peaceful means,

Noting further the responsibilities entrusted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations under article 319 and other provisions of the Convention,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/204 of 17 December 1996 inviting the International Tribunal to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 51/34 of 9 December 1996 and the decision of the first session of the International Tribunal calling for the conclusion of a relationship agreement between the United Nations and the International Tribunal,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1 General

1. The United Nations recognizes the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea as an autonomous international judicial body with jurisdiction as provided for in the relevant provisions of the Convention and the statute of the International Tribunal annexed thereto.

2. The International Tribunal recognizes the responsibilities of the United Nations under the Charter, in particular in the fields of international peace and security, economic, social, cultural and humanitarian development and the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

3. The United Nations and the International Tribunal each undertake to respect the status and mandate of the other and to establish cooperative working relations pursuant to the provisions of the present Agreement.

Article 2 Cooperation and coordination

The United Nations and the International Tribunal, with a view to facilitating the effective attainment of their objectives and the coordination of their activities, shall:

- (a) Consult and cooperate, whenever appropriate, on matters of mutual concern; and
- (b) Pursue, whenever appropriate, initiatives to coordinate their activities.

Article 3 Reciprocal representation

1. Without prejudice to the decision of the General Assembly in its resolution 51/204 granting observer status to the International Tribunal, and subject to such decisions as may be taken concerning the attendance of meetings by observers, the United Nations shall, subject to the rules and practices of the bodies concerned, invite the International Tribunal to attend meetings and conferences convened under the auspices of the United Nations, where observers are allowed, and whenever matters of interest to the International Tribunal are under discussion.

2. Subject to the applicable provisions of the rules of the International Tribunal, the Secretary-General of the United Nations or representatives of the Secretary-General may attend public meetings of the International Tribunal or its Seabed Disputes Chamber, including oral hearings.

3. Subject to the rules of the International Tribunal, written statements submitted by the United Nations to the International Tribunal for distribution shall be distributed by the Registry to the members of the International Tribunal. Written statements presented by the International Tribunal to the United Nations for distribution shall be distributed by the Secretariat of the United Nations to all members of the appropriate organs of the United Nations in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure. Such written statements shall be circulated in the quantities and languages in which they were made available to the Registry or the Secretariat.

Article 4

Exchange of information and documents

1. The United Nations and the International Tribunal shall, to the fullest extent possible and practicable, and subject to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the present article, arrange for the regular exchange of information and documents of mutual interest. In particular:

(a) The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall:

- (i) Periodically transmit to the International Tribunal information on developments relating to the Convention that are relevant to the work of the International Tribunal, including copies of communications received by the Secretary-General in the capacity of depositary of the Convention or depositary of any other agreement which confers jurisdiction on the International Tribunal;

- (ii) Transmit to the International Tribunal copies of any documents notified to the Secretary-General or otherwise communicated to the United Nations by the International Court of Justice pursuant to its Statute and Rules of Court;

- (iii) Subject to the applicable rules and regulations and the obligations of the United Nations under the relevant agreements, furnish to the International Tribunal information requested by it as relevant to a case before it.

(b) The Registrar of the International Tribunal shall:

- (i) Periodically transmit to the United Nations information concerning developments under the Convention that are related to the activities of the International Tribunal;

- (ii) Transmit to the United Nations information and documentation relating to the work of the International Tribunal, including documentation relating to pleadings, oral proceedings, orders, judgements and other communications and documentation, including those relating to applications submitted to the International Tribunal in accordance with articles 290 and 292 of the Convention;

- (iii) Furnish to the United Nations, with the concurrence of the International Tribunal and subject to its statute and rules, any information relating to the work of the International Tribunal requested by the International Court of Justice.

2. Nothing in the present Agreement shall be construed to require either the United Nations or the International Tribunal to furnish any information, the provision of which would, in its judgement, constitute a violation of the confidentiality of such information or of rights in proprietary materials.

3. The United Nations and the International Tribunal shall make every effort to achieve maximum cooperation with a view to avoiding undesirable duplication in the collection, analysis, publication and dissemination of information related to matters of mutual interest. They shall strive to combine their efforts, where appropriate, to secure the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of such information and to minimize the burdens placed upon national Governments and other organizations from which such information may be collected.

Article 5

Reports to the United Nations

The International Tribunal shall keep the United Nations informed of its activities that may require the attention of the United Nations. For this purpose, the International Tribunal may, when it deems it appropriate:

(a) Submit reports to the United Nations through the Secretary-General of the United Nations; and

(b) Notify the Secretary-General of the United Nations whenever, in its opinion, a question within the competence of the Security Council, in particular relating to the application of article 298, paragraph 1 (c), of the Convention, arises in connection with the work of the International Tribunal.

Article 6

Personnel arrangements

1. The United Nations and the International Tribunal agree to apply, as far as practicable, common personnel standards, methods and arrangements designed to avoid serious discrepancies in terms and conditions of employment, to avoid competition in recruitment of personnel and to facilitate any mutually desirable interchange of personnel in order to obtain the maximum benefit from their services.

2. The United Nations and the International Tribunal agree to cooperate to the fullest extent possible in achieving these ends and in particular they agree to:

(a) Consult periodically on matters of mutual interest relating to the employment of their officers and staff, including conditions of service, duration of appointments, classification, salary scale and allowances, retirement and pension rights and staff regulations and rules, with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as shall be found feasible;

(b) Cooperate in the interchange of personnel, when desirable, on a temporary or permanent basis, making due provision for the retention of seniority and pension rights;

(c) Strive for maximum cooperation in order to achieve the most efficient use of specialized personnel, systems and services;

(d) Cooperate in seeking an arrangement that will allow the extension of the competence of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal to the staff of the Registry of the International Tribunal.

Article 7

Conference services

1. Upon the request of the International Tribunal, the United Nations may, subject to availability, provide to the International Tribunal, on a reimbursable basis, such facilities and services as may be required for the sessions of the International Tribunal, including translation and interpretation services, documentation and conference services.

2. The terms and conditions under which any facilities or services of the United Nations in connection with the matters referred to in the present article may be extended to the International Tribunal shall, where necessary, be the subject of supplementary arrangements concluded for this purpose.

Article 8

Administrative cooperation

The United Nations and the International Tribunal recognize the desirability of cooperation in administrative matters of mutual interest. They shall consult from time to time concerning the most efficient use of facilities, staff and services with a view to avoiding the establishment and operation of overlapping facilities and services. They shall also consult to explore the possibility of continuing or establishing common facilities or services in specific areas.

Laissez-passer

Members of the International Tribunal, the Registrar and other officials of the Registry shall be entitled, in accordance with such special arrangements as may be concluded between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the International Tribunal, to use the laissez-passer of the United Nations as a valid travel document where such use is recognized by States parties to the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea or other agreements defining the privileges and immunities of the International Tribunal, its members and officials. The above is without prejudice to the right of the International Tribunal to issue its own travel documents.

Article 10

Budgetary and financial matters

1. The International Tribunal recognizes the desirability of establishing close budgetary and financial relationships with the United Nations so that the maximum measure of coordination and uniformity with respect to administrative operations may be secured.

2. The United Nations and the International Tribunal agree to cooperate to the fullest extent possible in achieving these ends.

3. The International Tribunal agrees to conform, as far as may be practicable and appropriate, to standard practices and forms recommended by the United Nations.

4. The Registrar of the International Tribunal may consult with the Secretary-General of the United Nations with a view to achieving consistency in the presentation of the budget of the International Tribunal with that of the United Nations.

5. The United Nations may, upon request of the International Tribunal, provide advice on financial and fiscal questions of interest to the International Tribunal with a view to achieving coordination and securing uniformity in such matters.

Financing of services

The costs and expenses resulting from the cooperation or the provision of services pursuant to the present Agreement shall be subject to separate arrangements between the United Nations and the International Tribunal. To that end, the United Nations and the International Tribunal shall consult each other with a view to determining the most equitable manner in which such costs and expenses shall be borne.

Article 12

Implementation of the Agreement

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Registrar of the International Tribunal may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of the present Agreement as may be found desirable in the light of the operating experience of the United Nations and the International Tribunal.

Amendments

The present Agreement may be amended by agreement between the United Nations and the International Tribunal. Any such amendment agreed upon shall enter into force upon its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and by the International Tribunal.

Article 14

Entry into force

1. The present Agreement shall come into force upon its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and by the International Tribunal.

2. Pending such approval the present Agreement shall be applied provisionally from the date of its signature by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the International Tribunal.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned have signed the present Agreement.

SIGNED this 18th day of December 1997 at United Nations Headquarters in New York in two originals in the English language.

Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf

In 1998, the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf, established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1362], held its third (4-15 May) and fourth (31 August-4 September) sessions in New York [A/53/456]. The 21-member Commission made recommendations to coastal States on matters related to the establishment of the outer limits of their continental shelf beyond 200 nautical miles.

On 4 September, the Commission formally adopted its rules of procedure. It established an editorial working group on its scientific and technical guidelines, which were to assist coastal States to prepare submissions on the outer limits of their continental shelf. The guidelines were adopted provisionally at the fourth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/32 [draft: A/53/L.35 & Add.1] by recorded vote (134-1-6) [agenda item 38(a)].

Oceans and the law of the sea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/28 of 6 December 1994, 50/23 of 5 December 1995, 51/34 of 9 December 1996 and 52/26 of 26 November 1997 adopted subsequent to the entry into force of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea ("the Convention") on 16 November 1994,

Recalling also its resolution 2749(XXV) of 17 December 1970, and considering that the Convention, together with the Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 ("the Agreement"), provides the régime to be applied to the Area and its resources as defined in the Convention,

Emphasizing the universal character of the Convention and its fundamental importance for the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and security, as well as for the sustainable use and development of the seas and oceans and their resources,

Conscious that the problems of ocean space are closely interrelated and need to be considered as a whole,

Noting with satisfaction that "Oceans and seas" will be the sectoral theme discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its seventh session in 1999,

Reaffirming the strategic importance of the Convention as a framework for national, regional and global action in the marine sector, as recognized also by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in chapter 17 of Agenda 21, as well as in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, in particular paragraph 36 thereof dealing with oceans and seas,

Recalling that, by its resolution 49/131 of 19 December 1994, it proclaimed 1998 the International Year of the Ocean,

Noting with satisfaction the increase in the number of States parties to the Convention and the Agreement,

Recognizing the impact on States of the entry into force of the Convention and the Agreement and the increasing need, particularly of developing States, for advice and assistance in their implementation in order to benefit thereunder,

Taking note with concern of the financial situation of the International Seabed Authority and of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea,

Conscious of the need to promote and facilitate international cooperation, especially at the subregional and regional levels, in order to ensure the orderly and sustainable development of the uses and resources of the seas and oceans,

Conscious also of the importance of education and training in the field of ocean affairs and the law of the sea,

Taking account of the importance of reliable hydrographic and nautical information to enhance the safety of navigation,

Expressing its concern at the increasing threat to shipping from piracy and armed robbery at sea and its appreciation and support for the ongoing work of the International Maritime Organization in this area,

Expressing its appreciation once again to the Secretary-General for his efforts in support of the Convention and in its effective implementation, including providing assistance in the functioning of the institutions created by the Convention,

Noting the responsibilities of the Secretary-General under the Convention and related resolutions of the General Assembly, in particular resolutions 49/28 and 52/26, and emphasizing the importance of the performance of such responsibilities for the effective and consistent implementation of the Convention.

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, and reaffirming the importance of the annual consideration and review by the General Assembly of the overall developments pertaining to the implementation of the Convention, as well as of other developments relating to the law of the sea and ocean affairs,

1. Calls upon all States that have not done so, in order to achieve the goal of universal participation, to become parties to the Convention and the Agreement;

2. Reaffirms the unified character of the Convention;

3. Calls upon States to harmonize as a matter of priority their national legislation with the provisions of the Convention, to ensure the consistent application of those provisions and to ensure also that any declarations or statements that they have made or make when signing, ratifying or acceding are in conformity with the Convention and to withdraw any of their declarations or statements that are not in conformity;

4. Encourages States parties to the Convention to deposit with the Secretary-General charts and lists of geographical coordinates, as provided for in the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the Meeting of States Parties to the Convention in New York from 19 to 28 May 1999, during which, on 24 May, the election of seven judges of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea ("the Tribunal") will take place;

6. Notes with satisfaction that the Tribunal, established in accordance with annex VI to the Convention as a new means for the settlement of disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention and the Agreement, delivered its first judgement on 4 December 1997;

7. Encourages States parties to the Convention to consider making a written declaration choosing from the means set out in article 287 for the settlement of disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention and the Agreement, and invites States to note the provisions of annexes V, VI, VII and VIII to the Convention concerning, respectively, conciliation, the Tribunal, arbitration and special arbitration;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate lists of conciliators and arbitrators drawn up and maintained in accordance with annexes V and VII to the Convention and to update these lists accordingly;

9. Notes with satisfaction the progress in the work of the International Seabed Authority ("the Authority"), and emphasizes the importance of continued progress towards the adoption of the regulations on prospecting and exploration for polymetallic nodules;

10. Notes with appreciation the adoption of the Agreement concerning the Relationship between the United Nations and the Authority and the Agreement on Cooperation and Relationship between the United Nations and the Tribunal;

11. Appeals to all members of the Authority and all States parties to the Convention to pay their assessed contributions to the Authority and to the Tribunal, respectively, in full and on time in order to ensure that they are able to carry out their functions as provided for in the Convention;

12. Notes with satisfaction the progress in the work of the Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf ("the Commission") during its third and fourth sessions, held in New York from 4 to 15 May and from 31 August to 4 September 1998, respectively, in adopting its rules of procedure and in adopting provisionally its scientific and technical guidelines aimed at assisting States to prepare their submissions regarding the outer limits of their continental shelf;

13. Approves the convening by the Secretary-General of the fifth and sixth sessions of the Commission in New York from 3 to 14 May and from 30 August to 3 September 1999, respectively;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the annual comprehensive report on oceans and the law of the sea and for the activities of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the mandate set forth in resolutions 49/28 and 52/26;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the institutional capacity of the Organization adequately responds to the needs of States, the newly established institutions under the Convention and other competent international organizations by providing advice and assistance, taking into account the special needs of developing countries;

16. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to carry out the responsibilities entrusted to him in the Convention and related resolutions of the General Assembly, including those mentioned in paragraph 11 of resolution 52/26, and to ensure that the performance of such activities is not adversely affected by savings as may be realized under the approved budget for the Organization;

17. Notes with appreciation the continued efforts of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea to provide timely information on the oceans, marine affairs and the law of the sea through its Web site on the Internet;

18. Reaffirms the importance of ensuring the uniform and consistent application of the Convention and a coordinated approach to its overall implementation, and of strengthening technical cooperation and financial assistance for this purpose, stresses once again the continuing importance of the efforts of the Secretary-General to these ends, and reiterates its invitation to the competent international organizations and other international bodies to support these objectives;

19. Invites Member States and others in a position to do so to contribute to the further development of the Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship Programme on the Law of the Sea established by the General Assembly in resolution 35/116 of 10 December 1980, and to support the training activities under the TRAIN-SEA-COAST programme of the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea;

20. Notes with interest the ongoing work of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization towards a convention for the implementation of the provisions of the Convention, relating to the protection of the underwater cultural heritage, and stresses the importance of ensuring that the instrument to be elaborated is in full conformity with the relevant provisions of the Convention;

21. Invites States to cooperate in carrying out hydrographic surveys and nautical services for the purpose of ensuring safe navigation as well as to ensure the greatest uniformity in charts and nautical publications and to coordinate their activities so that hydrographic and nautical information is made available on a world-wide scale;

22. Urges all States, in particular coastal States in affected regions, to take all necessary and appropriate measures to prevent and combat incidents of piracy and armed robbery at sea and to investigate or cooperate in the investigation of such incidents wherever they occur and bring the alleged perpetrators to justice, in accordance with international law;

23. Calls upon States to cooperate fully with the International Maritime Organization to combat piracy and armed robbery against ships, including by submitting reports on incidents to that organization;

24. Takes note of the work of the Independent World Commission on the Oceans, and of its report entitled "The Ocean ... Our Future", and welcomes its issuance in the context of the International Year of the Ocean;

25. Reaffirms its decision to undertake an annual review and evaluation of the implementation of the Convention and other developments relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea;

26. Reaffirms also its decision, in resolution S-19/2 of 28 June 1997, to consider the results of the review by the Commission on Sustainable Development of the sectoral theme of "Oceans and seas" in 1999, under the agenda item "Oceans and the law of the sea";

27. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, including other developments and issues relating to ocean affairs and the law of the sea, in connection with his annual comprehensive report on oceans and the law of the sea, and to circulate the report sufficiently in advance of consideration by the General Assembly of the item concerning oceans and the law of the sea;

28. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Oceans and the law of the sea".

Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea

In 1998, the Division for Ocean Affairs and the Law of the Sea of the Office of Legal Affairs continued to fulfil its role as the substantive unit of the Secretariat responsible for the review and monitoring of developments related to the law of the sea and ocean affairs, as well as for the implementation of the Convention. The Division developed and maintained facilities for the deposit by States of charts and geographical coordinates concerning maritime zones, including lines of delimitation, and gave publicity thereto through its "Maritime Zone Notifications" and the Law of the Sea Information Circular. During the year, the Division expanded its Geographical Information System database for the cartographic component of the limits of maritime zone and the information base of national maritime legislation and bilateral delimitation agreements. It also maintained and expanded its Website (www.un.org/Depts/los).

Training activities were carried out under the Train-Sea-Coast (TSC) programme designed to build in-country capacity skills in integrated ocean and coastal management among policy makers and practitioners in developed and developing countries. The Division actively participated in organizing the TSC Course Developers Workshop and Planning Meeting (New York, 17-28 August).

The twelfth and thirteenth Hamilton Shirley Amerasinghe Memorial Fellowship on the Law of the Sea, established in 1981 [YUN 1981, p. 139], was presented to Fagaloa Tufuga of Samoa and Arit Mkpandiok of Nigeria, respectively.

Chapter V

Other legal questions

In 1998, the United Nations continued to work on various aspects of international law, including international economic law.

The Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization met in January/February and discussed proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security and the peaceful settlement of disputes between States. It invited the General Assembly to address further the implementation of Charter provisions relating to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII.

In anticipation of the end of the Decade of International Law (1990-1999), the Assembly took note of the provisional list of events for 1999, prepared by the Netherlands and the Russian Federation, marking both the end of the Decade and the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, held in 1899.

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law organized a commemorative New York Convention Day to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards and held a Uniform Commercial Law Information Colloquium.

The Committee on Relations with the Host Country reviewed its membership and composition, and discussed travel restrictions imposed by the host country, diplomatic indebtedness and other related matters. In December, the Assembly endorsed the Committee's recommendation that its membership increase by four.

International organizations and international law

Strengthening the role of the United Nations

Special Committee on UN Charter

At its 1998 session (New York, 26 January-6 February) [A/53/33], the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

continued to consider proposals for the maintenance of international peace and security, the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in those contexts, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 52/161 [YUN 1997, p. 1367]. It also continued to discuss implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII. In addition, the Committee considered proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council, the question of identifying new subjects for its consideration and the possible modification of its working methods. With respect to the identification of new subjects, the prevailing view was that it was preferable to advance on the proposals already submitted for its consideration before embarking on new areas of work. The Special Committee recommended to the General Assembly that in future the Committee's sessions should be scheduled later in the first half of the year.

In connection with the maintenance of international peace and security, the Special Committee had before it the following documents submitted by the Russian Federation: two working papers on the conditions and criteria for imposing and implementing sanctions and other enforcement measures [A/AC.182/L.94 & L.100]; two working papers on a draft declaration on the basic principles and criteria for UN peacekeeping missions [A/AC.182/L.89 & Add.1]; and a working paper on the legal basis for UN peacekeeping operations in the context of Chapter VI of the Charter [A/AC.182/L.89/Add.2]. In addition, the Committee considered revised versions of working papers submitted by Cuba [A/AC.182/L.93 & Add.1] and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya [A/AC.182/L.99] on strengthening the role of the United Nations.

With regard to the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, the Special Committee considered a revised proposal from Sierra Leone [A/AC.182/L.96] on establishing a dispute prevention and early settlement service and two working papers by Guatemala [A/AC.182/L.95/Rev.1, A/AC.182/L.101] and one by Costa Rica [A/AC.182/L.97] regarding the extension of the competence of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in contentious cases to disputes between States and international organizations.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/161 [YUN 1997, p. 1367], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/53/326 & Corr.1] containing ICJ's observations on the effect of the Court's increased volume of cases on its operation. ICJ pointed out that the expanded workload, coupled with the loss of posts and significant budgetary cuts, had placed in serious jeopardy the maintenance of its work. ICJ had tackled those problems in three ways: it had examined the working methods in the Registry of the Court in order to make proposals for their improvement; within budgetary constraints, it was taking full advantage of electronic techniques; and it had charged its Rules Committee with developing proposals to maximize efficiency. ICJ called on the Assembly, among other things, to provide the necessary increase in resources to match the Court's internal efforts. The Secretary-General also submitted a response from Mexico [A/53/326/Add.1] to his request for comments from Member States on the ICJ workload. Mexico noted the increased volume of cases and indicated that it shared the belief that the Court should be given the necessary resources to fulfil its mandate effectively. (For details of the activities of ICJ, see PART FOUR, Chapter I.)

In response to Assembly resolution 52/16 [YUN 1997, p. 1367], the Secretary-General submitted an October progress report [A/53/386] on his efforts to expedite the preparation and publication of supplements to the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council. He assessed the work required and proposed measures that might facilitate the process of preparation and publication.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth (Legal) Committee [A/53/635], adopted resolution 53/106 without Vote [agenda item 154].

Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3499(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it established the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, and its relevant resolutions adopted at subsequent sessions,

Recalling also its resolution 47/233 of 17 August 1993 on the revitalization of the work of the General Assembly,

Recalling further its resolution 47/62 of 11 December 1992 on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council,

Taking note of the report of the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the ad hoc expert group meeting convened in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/162 of 15 December 1997,

Recalling the elements relevant to the work of the Special Committee contained in its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993,

Recalling also its resolution 51/241 of 31 July 1997 on the strengthening of the United Nations system and its resolution 51/242 of 15 September 1997, entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", by which it adopted the texts on coordination and the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations, which are annexed to that resolution,

Recalling further that the International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations, and reaffirming its authority and independence,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General containing the comments and observations of the International Court of Justice and States on the consequences that the increase in the volume of cases before the Court has on its operation,

Considering the desirability of finding practical ways and means of strengthening the Court,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council,

Recalling its resolution 52/162 of 15 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the work of its session held in 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization;

2. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the results of the ad hoc expert group meeting convened in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/162;

3. Decides that the Special Committee will hold its next session from 12 to 23 April 1999;

4. Requests the Special Committee, at its session in 1999, in accordance with paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 50/52 of 11 December 1995:

(a) To continue its consideration of all proposals concerning the question of the maintenance of international peace and security in all its aspects in order to strengthen the role of the United Nations and, in this context, to consider other proposals relating to the maintenance of international peace and security already submitted or which may be submitted to the Special Committee at its session in 1999, including the revised proposal on the strengthening of the role of the United Nations in the maintenance of international peace and security, the revised working paper on the strengthening of the role of the Organization and enhancing its effectiveness, the revised working paper entitled "Basic conditions and criteria for the introduction of sanctions and other coercive measures and their implementation" and the working paper on the draft declaration on the basic principles and criteria for the work of the United Nations peacekeeping missions and mechanisms for the prevention and settlement of crises and conflicts;

(b) To continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration the reports of the Secretary-General, the proposals submitted on this question, the debate on the question in the Sixth Committee at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly and the text on the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations contained in annex II to General Assembly resolution 51/242, and also the implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 50/51 of 11 December 1995, 51/208 of 17 December 1996, 52/162 of 15 December 1997 and 53/107 of 8 December 1998;

(c) To continue its work on the question of the peaceful settlement of disputes between States and, in this context, to continue its consideration of proposals relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including the proposal on the establishment of a dispute settlement service offering or responding with its services early in disputes and those proposals relating to the enhancement of the role of the International Court of Justice;

(d) To continue to consider proposals concerning the Trusteeship Council in the light of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in accordance with resolution 50/55 of 11 December 1995, the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform" and the views expressed by States on this subject at the previous sessions of the General Assembly;

(e) To continue to consider, taking into account the comments presented by the International Court of Justice and States pursuant to resolution 52/161 of 15 December 1997, practical ways and means of strengthening the Court, while respecting its authority and independence, on the understanding that whatever action may be taken as a result of the consideration will have no implications for any changes in the Charter of the United Nations or in the Statute of the International Court of Justice;

5. Takes note of subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), (d) and (f) of paragraph 32 of the report of the Secretary-General, and requests him to continue to undertake efforts to identify resources to prepare supplements to the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and the Repertoire of the Practice of the Security Council and, in particular, to complete the work required to issue the two remaining volumes of Supplement No. 5 to the Repertory of Practice of United Nations Organs and to submit a progress report on the matter to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

6. Invites the Special Committee at its session in 1999 to continue to identify new subjects for consideration in its future work with a view to contributing to the revitalization of the work of the United Nations, to discuss how to offer its assistance to the working groups of the General Assembly in this field and, in this regard, to consider ways and means of improving coordination between the Special Committee and other working groups dealing with the reform of the Organization, including the role of the Chairperson of the Special Committee for this purpose, and to continue considering ways and means of improving its working methods;

7. Requests the Special Committee to submit a report on its work to the General Assembly at the fifty-fourth session;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization".

Assistance to third States affected by Chapter VII sanctions

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/162 [YUN 1997, p. 1369], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on the implementation of provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions [A/53/312]. He described the Secretariat's arrangements to provide better information and early assessment to the Security Council and its organs on the actual or potential effects of sanctions on third States, noting that the arrangements first put in place in 1996 continued to apply.

In his summary of main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting, organized by the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs (New York, 24-26 June), on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures and on exploring innovative and practical measures of international assistance to the affected third States, the Secretary-General stated that the participants had recommended drawing up a tentative list of potential effects of sanctions, both direct and indirect, on third States, which could be grouped into three broad categories: economic, trade and financial effects; social and humanitarian effects, with particular reference to the most vulnerable social groups; and secondary effects associated with the problem of sanctions enforcement. The group suggested that when considering the imposition of a sanctions regime, the Security Council might wish to request the Secretary-General to submit an advance assessment of the potential impact of sanctions on the target country and, in particular, on third States. Following the imposition of sanctions, the Secretariat should be given the task of monitoring their effects with a view to providing the Security Council with timely information and early assessments on the effects of the sanctions regime on third States. With regard to States invoking Article 50 of the Charter, the Secretariat should be prepared to provide technical assistance to such States in preparing the explanatory materials to be attached to their request for consultation with the Council, in order to find a solution to their special economic problems arising from the implementation of enforcement measures. It was also strongly recommended that in the most severe cases, the Secretary-General should appoint a special representative to undertake, in collaboration with the Governments concerned, a full assessment of the consequences actually incurred by the specially affected countries as a result of carrying out the UN-imposed sanctions. For most severely affected third countries, the task of impact assessment could be best served by dispatching special fact-finding or evaluation missions. The special representative would have the ultimate responsibility for the whole process of impact assessment.

The Secretary-General stated that he had sought the assistance of relevant institutions both within and outside the Organization in collecting and coordinating information about international economic assistance available to affected third States. He also summarized recent developments related to the role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in the area of assistance to those States.

In a 6 March note [S/1998/203], the Secretary-General drew the Security Council's attention to paragraph I of Assembly resolution 52/162 [YUN 1997, p. 1369], which underlined the importance of consultations under Article 50 with third States that were or might be confronted with special economic problems resulting from sanctions and other measures imposed by the Council.

The Special Committee [A/53/33], in addition to inviting the Assembly to consider the Secretary-General's report on the results of the ad hoc expert group meeting, suggested that the Assembly address further the question of the implementation of the Charter provisions relating to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII, taking into account all reports of the Secretary-General on the subject, the text of annex II of Assembly resolution 51/242 on the "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace" [YUN 1997, p. 32], which dealt with the imposition of sanctions, and views expressed in the Special Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/635], adopted resolution 53/107 without vote [agenda item 154].

Implementation of the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the special economic problems confronting certain States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council against other States, and taking into account the obligation of Members of the United Nations under Article 49 of the Charter of the United Nations to join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council,

Recalling the right of third States confronted with special economic problems of that nature to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems, in accordance with Article 50 of the Charter,

Recognizing the desirability of the consideration of further appropriate procedures for consultations to deal in a more effective manner with the problems referred to in Article 50 of the Charter,

Recalling:

(a) The report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular paragraph 41 thereof,

(b) Its resolution 47/120 A of 18 December 1992, entitled "An Agenda for Peace: preventive diplomacy and related matters", its resolution 47/120 B of 20 September 1993, entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section IV thereof, entitled "Special economic problems arising from the implementation of preventive or enforcement measures", and its resolution 51/242 of 15 September 1997, entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace", in particular annex II thereof, entitled "Question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations",

(c) The position paper of the Secretary-General entitled "Supplement to an Agenda for Peace",

(d) The statement by the President of the Security Council of 22 February 1995,

(e) The report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to the statement by the President of the Security Council regarding the question of special economic problems of States as a result of sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter,

(f) The reports of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to States affected by the implementation of the Security Council resolutions imposing sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and General Assembly resolutions 48/210 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 A of 2 December 1994, 50/58 E of 12 December 1995, 51/30 A of 5 December 1996 and 52/169 H of 16 December 1997,

(g) The reports of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization on the work of its sessions held in the years 1994 to 1998,

(h) The reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter,

Taking note of the most recent report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/162 of 15 December 1997,

Recalling that the question of assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions has been addressed recently in several forums, including the General Assembly and its subsidiary organs and the Security Council,

Recalling also the measures taken by the Security Council in accordance with the statement by the President of the Security Council of 16 December 1994 that, as part of the effort of the Council to improve the flow of information and the exchange of ideas between members of the Council and other States Members of the United Nations, there should be increased recourse to open meetings, in particular at an early stage in its consideration of a subject,

Stressing that, in the formulation of sanctions regimes, due account should be taken of the potential effects of sanctions on third States,

Stressing also, in this context, the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter and the primary responsibility of the Council under Article 24 of the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security in order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations,

Recalling that, under Article 31 of the Charter, any Member of the United Nations that is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected,

Recognizing that the imposition of sanctions under Chapter VII has been causing special economic problems in third States and that it is necessary to intensify efforts to address those problems,

Taking into consideration the views of third States which could be affected by the imposition of sanctions,

Recognizing that assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions would further contribute to an effective and comprehensive approach by the international community to sanctions imposed by the Security Council,

Recognizing also that the international community at large and, in particular, international institutions involved in providing economic and financial assistance should continue to take into account and address in a more effective manner the special economic problems of affected third States arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures taken by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, in view of their magnitude and of the adverse impact on the economy of those States,

Recalling the provisions of resolutions 50/51 of 11 December 1995, 51/208 of 17 December 1996 and 52/162 of 15 December 1997,

1. Renews its invitation to the Security Council to consider the establishment of further mechanisms or procedures, as appropriate, for consultations as early as possible under Article 50 of the Charter of the United Nations with third States, which are or may be confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, with regard to a solution of those problems, including appropriate ways and means for increasing the effectiveness of its methods and procedures applied in the consideration of requests by the affected States for assistance;

2. Welcomes once again the further measures taken by the Security Council since the adoption of General Assembly resolution 50/51 and aimed at increasing the effectiveness and transparency of the sanctions committees, invites the Council to implement those measures, and strongly recommends that the Council continue its efforts to enhance further the functioning of the sanctions committees, to streamline their working procedures and to facilitate access to them by representatives of States that find themselves confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of sanctions;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue implementation of resolutions 50/51, 51/208 and 52/162 and to ensure that the competent units within the Secretariat develop the adequate capacity and appropriate modalities, technical procedures and guidelines to continue, on a regular basis, to collate and coordinate information about international assistance available to third States affected by the implementation of sanctions, to continue developing a possible methodology for assessing the adverse consequences actually incurred by third States and to initiate action in order to explore innovative and practical measures of assistance to the affected third States;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of States, the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions and other international organizations regarding the report of the ad hoc expert group meeting on developing a methodology for assessing the consequences incurred by third States as a result of preventive or enforcement measures and on exploring innovative and practical measures of international assistance to the affected third States;

5. Reaffirms the important role of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Committee for Programme and Coordination in mobilizing and monitoring, as appropriate, the economic assistance efforts by the international community and the United Nations system to States confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of preventive or enforcement measures imposed by the Security Council and, as appropriate, in identifying solutions to the special economic problems of those States, and decides to transmit the report of the ad hoc expert group meeting to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999;

6. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system, international financial institutions, other international organizations, regional organizations and Member States to address more specifically and directly, where appropriate, special economic problems of third States affected by sanctions imposed under Chapter VII of the Charter and, for this purpose, to consider improving procedures for consultations to maintain a constructive dialogue with such States, including through regular and frequent meetings as well as, where appropriate, special meetings between the affected third States and the donor community, with the participation of United Nations agencies and other international organizations;

7. Requests the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization, at its session in 1999, to continue to consider on a priority basis the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter, taking into consideration all the related reports of the Secretary-General, in particular the most recent report containing a summary of the deliberations and main findings of the ad hoc expert group meeting convened pursuant to paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 52/162, the proposals submitted on this question, the debate on the question in the Sixth Committee during the fifty-third session of the General Assembly and the text on the question of sanctions imposed by the United Nations contained in annex II to General Assembly resolution 51/242, as well as the implementation of the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 50/51, 51/208, 52/162 and the present resolution;

8. Decides to continue to consider within the Sixth Committee, or if necessary within a working group of the Committee, at the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly, further progress in the elaboration of effective measures aimed at the implementation of provisions of the Charter related to assistance to third States affected by the application of sanctions under Chapter VII of the Charter;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

UN Decade of International Law

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/153 [YUN 1997, p. 1371], the Secretary-General submitted an October note [A/53/492] on the United Nations Decade of International Law (1990-1999), which the Assembly had declared in resolution 44/23 [YUN 1989, p. 848]. The Decade's objectives were to promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law and encourage its progressive development and codification; to promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for ICJ; and to encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law. In 1996, the Assembly adopted the programme of activities for the final term of the Decade (1997-1999) in resolution 51/157 [YUN 1996, p. 1226].

The Secretary-General said that during 1998, the UN Office of Legal Affairs continued to disseminate information regarding international law through the publication of studies and the electronic medium. The project for the establishment of a new electronic database/workflow system for the Treaty Section was completed in August. The new database, among other things, provided information on the UN Treaty Collection on the Internet. In addition, the Treaty Section's publications, including the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, would be produced in a more timely and user-friendly manner. Production of the Treaty Series through the database was a challenging aspect, since desktop publishing needed further refinement, but it was anticipated that once the programme was completed, the Organization would be able to achieve substantial financial savings.

By a 20 October note [A/53/525], the Secretary-General submitted a list of the titles of the treaties appearing in the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, which was requested in Assembly resolution 52/153 [YUN 1997, p. 1371].

Sixth Committee consideration. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/153, the Sixth Committee's Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law continued its work in 1998, holding eight meetings between 14 October and 16 November. The Chairperson of the Working Group presented an oral report to the Sixth Committee on the work accomplished and introduced a draft resolution on the Decade [A/C.6/53/SR.32].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/630], adopted resolution 53/100 without vote [agenda item 149].

United Nations Decade of International Law

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 44/23 of 17 November 1989, by which it declared the period 1990-1999 the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Noting the conclusion of the United Nations Decade of International Law in 1999,

Recalling that the main purposes of the Decade, according to resolution 44/23, should be, inter alia:

(a) To promote acceptance of and respect for the principles of international law,

(b) To promote means and methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes between States, including resort to and full respect for the International Court of Justice,

(c) To encourage the progressive development of international law and its codification,

(d) To encourage the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law,

Recalling also its resolution 51/157 of 16 December 1996, to which was annexed the programme for the activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the Decade, its resolution 51/158 of 16 December 1996, entitled "Electronic treaty database", and its resolution 52/153 of 15 December 1997,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General, and expressing its appreciation therefor,

Welcoming the significant steps taken by the Secretary-General to rationalize and expedite the registration and publication of treaties pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the completion of the initial phase of the new electronic database for the United Nations Treaty Collection,

Recalling that the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations of 21 March 1986 is one of the conventions adopted under the aegis of the United Nations which have codified the law of treaties, and recalling also the impact of the Convention on the practice of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between international organizations,

Noting that, in accordance with General Assembly decision 41/420 of 3 December 1986, the Secretary-

General signed, on behalf of the United Nations, the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations,

Recalling that, at the forty-fifth session of the General Assembly, the Sixth Committee established the Working Group on the United Nations Decade of International Law with a view to preparing generally acceptable recommendations on the programme of activities for the Decade,

Noting that, at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, the Sixth Committee reconvened the Working Group to continue its work in accordance with Assembly resolutions 52/153 and 52/155 of 15 December 1997 and all previous resolutions on the subject,

Having considered the oral report of the Chairman of the Working Group to the Sixth Committee,

1. Expresses its appreciation for the work done on the United Nations Decade of International Law at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, and requests the Working Group of the Sixth Committee to continue its work at the fifty-fourth session in accordance with its mandate and methods of work;

2. Expresses its appreciation to States and international organizations and institutions that have undertaken activities, including sponsoring conferences on various subjects of international law, in implementation of the programme for the activities for the final term (1997-1999) of the Decade;

3. Invites all States and international organizations and institutions referred to in the programme to provide, update or supplement information on activities they have undertaken in implementation of the programme, as appropriate, to the Secretary-General for inclusion in the report requested in paragraph 8 of resolution 51/157, which should also contain a list of major international conventions adopted under the auspices of the United Nations during the Decade in the field of international law;

4. Welcomes the work done by the Permanent Court of Arbitration in the field of the peaceful settlement of disputes, including the adoption of its optional rules of procedure for fact-finding commissions of inquiry, which entered into effect on 15 December 1997;

5. Encourages States to disseminate at the national level, as appropriate, information contained in the note by the Secretary-General;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General to deposit, on behalf of the United Nations, an act of formal confirmation of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, as provided for in article 83 of the Convention;

7. Encourages States to consider ratifying or acceding to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations, international organizations that have signed the Convention to deposit an act of formal confirmation of the Convention, and other international organizations entitled to do so to accede to it at an early date;

8. Encourages States parties and international organizations or agencies, including depositaries, in order to facilitate further implementation of the obligation laid down in Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations, to provide, where available, a copy of the text of any treaty in disk or other electronic format and to consider providing, where available, translations in English or French or both, as may be needed, for the purpose of assisting with the timely publication of the United Nations Treaty Series;

9. Expresses its appreciation to the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat for its efforts to facilitate access to information concerning United Nations activities in the field of international law, and to bring up to date the publication of the United Nations Juridical Yearbook, and encourages it to continue its efforts in this regard;

10. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the progress achieved in establishing a new electronic database for the United Nations Treaty Collection, and encourages him to continue the development of this database with a view to expeditiously providing Member States with a greater range of easily accessible treaty-related information;

11. Encourages the Secretary-General to continue developing a policy of providing Internet access to the United Nations Treaty Series and the Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the needs of States, in particular developing countries, in recovering the costs thereof, and requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue at its fifty-fourth session;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance, including translation services, to implement the plan to eliminate the historical backlog in the publication of the United Nations Treaty Series within the next biennium;

13. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his note containing a list of the titles of the treaties appearing in the publication Multilateral Treaties Deposited with the Secretary-General;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that hard copies of the publications mentioned in paragraph H above continue to be distributed to permanent missions free of charge in accordance with their needs;

15. Appeals to States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations working in the field of international law, and to the private sector, to make financial contributions or contributions in kind for the purpose of facilitating the implementation of the programme;

16. Once again requests the Secretary-General to bring the programme, as well as the note referred to in paragraph 13 above, to the attention of States and international organizations and institutions working in the field of international law;

17. Notes with appreciation the activities undertaken by the International Committee of the Red Cross in the field of international humanitarian law, including with regard to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict;

18. Takes note with interest of the events that will take place during the year 1999 to commemorate the centennial of the first International Peace Conference and the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law;

19. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law" and to convene a one-day plenary meeting on 17 November 1999 to mark the end of the Decade.

First International Peace Conference centennial and end of Decade

In November, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/154 [YUN 1997, p. 1372], the Netherlands and the Russian Federation submitted to the Secretary-General a progress report [A/C.6/53/10] on activities pertaining to the 1999 celebration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, held in The Hague (Netherlands) on the initiative of Russia in 1899. That centennial year would also mark the closing of the UN Decade of International Law and the celebration would cover both events. Preliminary reports on disarmament questions, international humanitarian law and the peaceful settlement of disputes had been prepared by a number of rapporteurs in their fields of expertise. Meetings of the "Friends of 1999" were held in April in Moscow, and in October in New York. Representatives of some 20 States from all regions of the world, ICJ, the Permanent Court of Arbitration, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the coalition of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), known as the Hague Appeal for Peace, attended those meetings for consultations on the rapporteurs' reports. During the discussions, progress was achieved on the further elaboration of the programme of action for the celebration of the centennial and on coordination between the various parties to that process.

In a 12 November note [A/C.6/53/11], the Secretariat presented to the Assembly the provisional list of events for 1999 relating to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference and the closure of the United Nations Decade of International Law, prepared by the Netherlands and the Russian Federation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/630], adopted resolution 53/99 without vote [agenda item 149].

Action dedicated to the 1999 centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once again the commitment of the United Nations and its Member States, as well as the States parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, to the goals of the United Nations Decade of International Law, as expressed by the General Assembly in resolutions under that item of its agenda,

Mindful of the long and well-established tradition of progressive development and codification of international law, marked by the first and the second International Peace Conferences, held at The Hague in 1899 and 1907 respectively,

Recalling that a third international peace conference, scheduled to be held at The Hague in 1915, was not held because of the outbreak of the First World War the previous year,

Recalling also the proposal by the Russian Federation for a third international peace conference with a view to considering international law and order in the post-cold-war world at the threshold of the twenty-first century, referred to in General Assembly resolution 51/159 of 16 December 1996, and the initiatives undertaken by the Federation and the Kingdom of the Netherlands with regard to the commemoration of the first International Peace Conference,

Noting with satisfaction that the realization of the programme of action dedicated to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference, presented by the Netherlands and the Russian Federation, is consistent with the goals of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Noting, in this respect, that meetings of the Friends of 1999, held at The Hague in 1997 and in Moscow and New York in 1998, further contributed to the substantive content of the programme of action,

Noting also the preliminary reports on the themes of the commemoration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference,

Expressing its gratitude to the rapporteurs and all organizations, groups and individuals who contributed to the discussion of the centennial themes,

Bearing in mind the progress report and the agenda of the commemorative meetings to be held at The Hague and at St. Petersburg,

Noting that the outcome of action pertaining to the centennial of the first International Peace Conference will be submitted to the General Assembly for its consideration at the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law,

Noting also that the programme of action does not entail budgetary implications for the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the progress made in the realization of the programme of action, presented by the Governments of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation, which aims at contributing to the further development of the themes of the first and the second International Peace Conferences and could be regarded as a third international peace conference;

2. Encourages:

(a) The Governments of the Russian Federation and the Netherlands to continue with the implementation of the programme of action;

(b) All States to participate in the activities set out in the programme of action, as well as to initiate such activities and to coordinate their efforts in this respect at the global level, as well as at the regional and national levels;

(c) All States to take appropriate measures to ensure universal participation in the activities pursuant to the programme of action, with special consideration for the participation of representatives of the least developed countries;

3. Encourages the competent organs, subsidiary organs, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations, including the International Court of Justice, the International Law Commission and the Secretariat, within their respective competencies, as well as other international organizations, non-governmental organizations, groups and individuals, as appropriate:

(a) To continue to contribute to the discussions on the themes of the commemoration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference on the basis of the preliminary reports;

(b) To consider participating in the activities envisaged in the programme of action and contributing to work towards meaningful conclusions of the debates on the themes of the commemoration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference;

4. Requests the Governments of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation to prepare reports on the outcome of the centennial celebrations at The Hague and at St. Petersburg for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, with a view to their consideration at the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure consistency between the activities of the Organization relating to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law and those relating to the programme of action and to coordinate with the Governments of the Netherlands and the Russian Federation his efforts with regard to the closing of the Decade;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to consider any activities to promote the outcome of the United Nations Decade of International Law, including the possibility of the issuance by the United Nations of a set of jubilee postage stamps and postcards in commemoration of the centennial of the first International Peace Conference;

7. Decides to consider in the plenary meeting at its fifty-fourth session dedicated to the closing of the United Nations Decade of International Law the outcome of the action dedicated to the 1999 centennial of the first International Peace Conference and to the closing of the Decade;

8. Decides also to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "United Nations Decade of International Law", a sub-item entitled "Outcome of the action dedicated to the 1999 centennial of the first International Peace Conference".

Cooperation with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/11 [YUN 1996, p. 1231], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC) [A/53/306]. The report covered such areas as the cooperative framework agreed upon by the two organizations; AALCC representation at UN meetings and conferences; AALCC's contribution towards strengthening the role of the United Nations and the UN Decade of International Law; its efforts to promote wider use of ICJ; measures to further the work of the Assembly's Sixth Committee; ratification and promotion of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; international economic cooperation for development; and the question of refugees. AALCC also dealt with environmental matters, the legal protection of migrant workers, and the issue of extraterritorial application of national legislation in relation to sanctions imposed against third parties.

On 29 October, the Secretary-General of AALCC made a statement to the Assembly on steps taken by the Committee to ensure continuing and effective cooperation with the United Nations [A/53/PV.48].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 48], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/14 without vote [agenda item 22]. The draft [A/53/L.9 & Add.I] was sponsored by Australia, Bangladesh, China, Cyprus, Egypt, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Kenya, Malaysia, Myanmar, New Zealand, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and the Sudan.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/38 of 18 November 1981, 37/8 of 29 October 1982, 38/37 of 5 December 1983, 39/47 of 10 December 1984, 40/60 of 9 December 1985, 41/5 of 17 October 1986, 43/1 of 17 October 1988, 45/4 of 16 October 1990, 47/6 of 21 October 1992, 49/8 of 25 October 1994 and 51/11 of 4 November 1996,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee,

Having heard the statement made by the Secretary-General of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee on the steps taken by the Consultative Committee to ensure continuing, close and effective cooperation between the two organizations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continuing efforts of the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee towards strengthening the role of the United Nations and its various organs, including the International Court of Justice, through programmes and initiatives undertaken by the Consultative Committee;

3. Also notes with satisfaction the commendable progress achieved towards enhancing cooperation between the United Nations and the Consultative Committee in wider areas;

4. Notes with appreciation the decision of the Consultative Committee to participate actively in the programmes of the United Nations Decade of International Law and programmes on environment and sustainable development, as well as in the United Nations Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Consultative Committee;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee".

Host country relations

In 1998, the Committee on Relations with the Host Country continued to consider aspects of relations between the UN diplomatic community and the United States—the host country. At five meetings between 17 November 1997 and 30 October 1998 [A/53/26], the Committee considered its membership and composition; host country travel regulations; financial indebtedness of permanent missions and their responsibilities to the United Nations and their personnel; and health insurance for the diplomatic community. Since there were no new developments with regard to the use of diplomatic motor vehicles, parking and related matters, the Working Group established in 1997 to consider those issues [YUN 1997, p. 1376] held no meetings during the reporting period.

Committee membership and composition

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/159 [YUN 1997, p. 1377], the Committee reviewed its membership and composition, which consisted of the host country and 14 Member States chosen by the President of the Assembly, in consultation with regional groups, taking equitable geographical distribution into consideration. Since the inception of the Committee in 1971, its membership had changed twice, in 1973 and 1976. Interested delegations could participate as observers. In 1998, the Committee's membership was as follows: Bulgaria, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cyprus, France, Honduras, Iraq, Mali, the Russian Federation, Senegal, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States. Having undertaken a review of the Committee's history and composition, its Bureau reported that the Committee had worked well as an open, transparent and flexible body. No member had the right of veto and any interested delegation could participate in it as an observer. The Bureau believed that the Committee was of a unique nature, since it was the only body in the UN system that was mandated to consider matters in relation to the host country and then to report thereon to the Assembly. The Bureau discussed various ideas, including the possible rotation and enlargement of the membership of the Committee, and asked the Chairman to conduct informal consultations with members on those issues. During the consultations, the United States said that it did not support expansion of the Committee's membership for it would adversely affect its efficiency. However, Cuba and Malaysia favoured expanding the membership as the Organization's membership had grown since the early 1970s. The Russian Federation was not convinced that an expanded Committee would work more effectively. It was agreed that the Bureau would remain seized of the matter.

On 30 October, the Chairman announced that members of the Committee, as well as representatives of observer delegations that had participated in the debates throughout the year, had agreed to increase the Committee's membership by four, comprising one each from the African, Asian, Latin American and Caribbean and Eastern Europe regional groups.

Travel regulations

In May, Cuba drew the Committee's attention to the imposition of restrictions by the host country on the movement of the personnel of its Mission in New York. The Russian Federation reaffirmed its position that existing travel restrictions imposed on certain missions were not consonant with international law and that they should be removed as soon as possible.

Financial indebtedness

In February, the representative of the United States stated that the Committee's aggressive dealing with diplomatic indebtedness combined with the direct involvement of the Secretariat had resulted in a decrease of the amounts owed from approximately $13 million in 1996 to some $2.5 million in 1997. During 1997, debts in the amount of $1,263,758 were cleared. Unfortunately, since November 1997, there was an increase of $1 million. As at February 1998, 19 permanent missions and UN staff members had debts in the amount of $3,633,400, of which $3,170,312 was owed by nine missions. While acknowledging that some Governments involved were experiencing political and economic disruptions, it was becoming increasingly difficult for the United States Government to persuade creditors not to seek relief through judicial means and to accept the good offices of the United States Mission to collect the amounts owed by the diplomatic community. The United States continued to intervene as necessary on behalf of those missions and individuals with diplomatic privileges and immunities to prevent eviction, attachment of bank accounts or court appearances. However, the United States also had a clear obligation to protect the interests of its citizens and creditors and, therefore, continued to work with the concerned parties to attempt to resolve the matter. Unfortunately, there had been a few cases in which court-ordered family support obligations had not been met by certain staff members of the Secretariat and the host Government expressed the hope that those few cases would be reviewed and resolved.

The observer for Switzerland informed the Committee that the diplomatic community in Geneva owed debts exceeding 7 million Swiss francs, half of which was owed by two missions. In some cases, the indebtedness was the result of internal problems in the countries concerned, but in other cases it was less understandable.

Other matters

In a series of letters, Cuba brought to the attention of the Committee an incident that took place at Brussels (Belgium) airport in February 1998, when its Permanent Representative to the United Nations was subjected to pre-boarding security inspections and screening by authorities of Delta Airlines, which differed from the procedures applied to other diplomatic travellers. The United States replied that its policies with respect to travel emanating from United States airports or on United States airlines were designed to protect the security of all air travellers, and that its Government had no regulations in effect that discriminated against diplomats accredited to the United Nations. The Russian Federation also submitted a letter to the Committee concerning difficulties experienced by its delegation in gaining access to UN Headquarters during the fifty-third (1998) session of the General Assembly, to which the United States had replied. Belarus and Iraq submitted letters to the Committee regarding the refusal by United States authorities to grant entry visas to some of their representatives in order to attend the Assembly's fifty-third session. The United States addressed those concerns in a letter to the Committee and one to the Assistant Secretary-General for Legal Affairs of the Secretariat.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/633], adopted resolution 53/104 without vote [agenda item 152].

Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country,

Recalling Article 105 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, and the responsibilities of the host country,

Recognizing that effective measures should continue to be taken by the competent authorities of the host country, in particular to prevent any acts violating the security of missions and the safety of their personnel,

Noting the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding that has guided the deliberations of the Committee on issues affecting the United Nations community and the host country,

Taking into account the increase in profound interest and concern of many Member States in the work of the Committee,

Noting that the Committee reviewed its membership and composition with the full participation of observers, in accordance with the request contained in General Assembly resolution 52/159 of 15 December 1997,

1. Endorses the recommendations and conclusions of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country contained in paragraph 50 of its report;

2. Endorses the recommendation of the Committee that its membership be increased by four members, including one each from African, Asian, Latin American and Caribbean and Eastern European States, to be chosen by the President of the General Assembly in accordance with resolution 2819(XXVI) of 15 December 1971, in consultation with the regional groups;

3. Considers that the maintenance of appropriate conditions for the normal work of the delegations and the missions accredited to the United Nations is in the interest of the United Nations and all Member States, and requests the host country to continue to take all measures necessary to prevent any interference with the functioning of missions;

4. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts made by the host country, and hopes that the issues raised at the meetings of the Committee will continue to be resolved in a spirit of cooperation and in accordance with international law;

5. Notes that during the reporting period the travel controls previously imposed by the host country on staff of certain missions and staff members of the Secretariat of certain nationalities remained in effect, and requests the host country to consider removing such travel controls, and in this regard notes the positions of affected States, of the Secretary-General and of the host country;

6. Requests the host country to continue to take steps to resolve the problem relating to the parking of diplomatic vehicles in a fair, balanced and non-discriminatory way, with a view to responding to the growing needs of the diplomatic community, and to continue to consult with the Committee on this important issue;

7. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee aimed at identifying affordable health-care programmes for the diplomatic community;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to remain actively engaged in all aspects of the relations of the United Nations with the host country;

9. Requests the Committee to continue its work in conformity with General Assembly resolution 2819(XXVI);

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country".

International economic law

In 1998, legal aspects of international economic law continued to be considered by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly.

International trade law

At its thirty-first session (New York, 1-12 June) [A/53/17], UNCITRAL considered privately financed infrastructure projects; electronic commerce; assignment in receivables financing; implementation of the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards (New York Convention) [YUN 1958, p. 390]; case law on UNCITRAL texts; training and technical assistance; the status and promotion of UNCITRAL texts; and relevant General Assembly resolutions.

On 10 June [A/CN.9/1998/INF.1 & Add.1], the Commission held a special commemorative meeting (Convention Day) to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the adoption of the Convention. On 11 June [A/CN.9/1998/INF.2], the Uniform Commercial Law Information Colloquium was held, during which leading experts presented their assessment of legal issues relating to electronic commerce, privately financed infrastructure projects, receivable financing and cross-border insolvency.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 83], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee [A/53/632], adopted resolution 53/103 without vote [agenda item 151].

Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirty-first session

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2205(XXI) of 17 December 1966, by which it created the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law with a mandate to further the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade and in that respect to bear in mind the interests of all peoples, in particular those of developing countries, in the extensive development of international trade,

Reaffirming its conviction that the progressive harmonization and unification of international trade law, in reducing or removing legal obstacles to the flow of international trade, especially those affecting the developing countries, would significantly contribute to universal economic cooperation among all States on a basis of equality, equity and common interest and to the elimination of discrimination in international trade and, thereby, to the well-being of all peoples,

Stressing the value of participation by States at all levels of economic development and from different legal systems in the process of harmonizing and unifying international trade law,

Having considered the report of the Commission on the work of its thirty-first session,

Mindful of the valuable contribution to be rendered by the Commission within the framework of the United Nations Decade of International Law, in particular as regards the dissemination of international trade law,

Concerned that activities undertaken by other bodies of the United Nations system in the field of international trade law without coordination with the Commission might lead to undesirable duplication of efforts and would not be in keeping with the aim of promoting efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law, as stated in its resolution 37/106 of 16 December 1982,

Stressing the importance of the further development of the Case Law on United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Texts in promoting the uniform application of the legal texts of the Commission and its value for government officials, practitioners and academics,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its thirty-first session;

2. Commends the Commission for the progress made in its work on receivables financing, electronic commerce, privately financed infrastructure projects and the legislative implementation of the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, done at New York on 10 June 1958;

3. Also commends the Commission for holding a special commemorative "New York Convention Day" in order to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards and a Uniform Commercial Law Information Colloquium, designed to provide information on current topics and generate discussion among experts that might be useful in the consideration of those topics by the Commission;

4. Appeals to Governments that have not yet done so to reply to the questionnaire circulated by the Secretariat in relation to the legal regime governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards;

5. Invites States to nominate persons to work with the private foundation established to encourage assistance to the Commission from the private sector;

6. Reaffirms the mandate of the Commission, as the core legal body within the United Nations system in the field of international trade law, to coordinate legal activities in this field and, in this connection:

(a) Calls upon all bodies of the United Nations system and invites other international organizations to bear in mind the mandate of the Commission and the need to avoid duplication of effort and to promote efficiency, consistency and coherence in the unification and harmonization of international trade law;

(b) Recommends that the Commission, through its secretariat, continue to maintain close cooperation with the other international organs and organizations, including regional organizations, active in the field of international trade law;

7. Also reaffirms the importance, in particular for developing countries, of the work of the Commission concerned with training and technical assistance in the field of international trade law, such as assistance in the preparation of national legislation based on legal texts of the Commission;

8. Expresses the desirability for increased efforts by the Commission, in sponsoring seminars and symposia, to provide such training and technical assistance, and in this connection:

(a) Expresses its appreciation to the Commission for organizing seminars and briefing missions in Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Greece, Malta, Peru, South Africa and the United Arab Emirates;

(b) Expresses its appreciation to the Governments whose contributions enabled the seminars and briefing missions to take place, and appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law Trust Fund for Symposia and, where appropriate, to the financing of special projects, and otherwise to assist the secretariat of the Commission in financing and organizing seminars and symposia, in particular in developing countries, and in the award of fellowships to candidates from developing countries to enable them to participate in such seminars and symposia;

9. Appeals to the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies responsible for development assistance, such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, as well as to Governments in their bilateral aid programmes, to support the training and technical assistance programme of the Commission and to cooperate and coordinate their activities with those of the Commission;

10. Appeals to Governments, the relevant United Nations organs, organizations, institutions and individuals, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to make voluntary contributions to the trust fund for travel assistance to developing countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

11. Decides, in order to ensure full participation by all Member States in the sessions of the Commission and its working groups, to continue, in the competent Main Committee during the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, its consideration of granting travel assistance to the least developed countries that are members of the Commission, at their request and in consultation with the Secretary-General;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the effective implementation of the programme of the Commission;

13. Stresses the importance of bringing into effect the conventions emanating from the work of the Commission for the global unification and harmonization of international trade law, and to this end urges States that have not yet done so to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to those conventions.

International commercial arbitration

Privately financed infrastructure projects

The Commission had before it drafts of the introductory chapters and chapters I-IV of the UNCITRAL draft legislative guide on privately financed infrastructure projects [A/CN.9/444 & Add.1-5]. The Commission noted and generally approved the proposed structure of the draft guide and the selection of issues suggested for discussion. Having discussed the issues addressed in the draft chapters, the Commission requested the Secretariat to revise the chapters discussed and agreed that the Secretariat should continue to prepare remaining chapters V-IX for submission in 1999.

Electronic commerce

The Commission considered the report of the Working Group on Electronic Commerce on the work of its thirty-second session (Vienna, 19-30 January) [A/CN.9/446]. It expressed its appreciation to the Working Group for preparing draft uniform rules on electronic signatures. Despite the difficulties experienced by the Working Group, the Commission reaffirmed the feasibility of preparing such uniform rules. A consensus was still to be found on how to address legal issues arising from increased use of digital and other electronic signatures, but the progress achieved indicated that the draft uniform rules were being shaped into a workable structure. The Commission noted that preparation of an international convention based on the provisions of the Model Law on Electronic Commerce, which was annexed to General Assembly resolution 51/162 [YUN 1996, p. 1236], would be premature since, among other things, law reform projects based on the provisions of the Model Law were under way in a number of countries.

On the basis of various texts proposed by the Secretariat as additions to the Model Law, the Working Group had prepared a draft text on the issue of incorporation by reference, which it submitted to the Commission [A/CN.9/450]. The Commission noted that the text embodied a minimalist approach to the issue and did not attempt to achieve any substantial unification of existing rules in domestic law. It therefore formulated a more descriptive text to be inserted as a new article in the Model Law.

Assignment in receivables financing

The Commission discussed the report of the Working Group on International Contract Practices on the work of its twenty-seventh (Vienna, 20-31 October 1997) [A/CN.9/445] and twenty-eighth (New York, 2-13 March 1998) [A/CN.9/447] sessions. The Commission noted that its work on receivables financing had attracted the interest of the international trade and financing community, since it had the potential of increasing access to lower-cost credit. The Commission was informed that the Hague Conference on Private International Law had organized, in cooperation with the Secretariat, a meeting of experts to consider the private international law provisions contained in the draft convention on assignment and receivables financing that was being prepared by the Working Group. The Commission requested the Working Group to submit the draft convention for adoption by the Commission in the year 2000.

Implementation of the 1958 New York Convention

The Commission noted that the Secretariat had received 54 replies to the questionnaire it had sent relating to the legal regime governing the recognition and enforcement of foreign awards in States parties to the 1958 Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards [YUN 1958, p. 390]. The Commission called on the remaining States parties to submit their replies and requested the Secretariat to prepare an analysis of the information received.

Case law on UNCITRAL texts (CLOUT)

The Commission noted that five additional sets of abstracts with court decisions and arbitral awards relating to the 1980 United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods [YUN 1980, p. 1131] and the 1985 UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration [YUN 1985, p. 1192] had been published since its 1997 session. The Commission also noted that a search engine had been placed on the UNCITRAL Internet site to allow users to carry out searches into CLOUT cases and other documents.

Training and technical assistance

UNCITRAL had before it a Secretariat note on training and technical assistance activities that had taken place since its 1997 session, including seminars, briefing missions, conferences, workshops, technical assistance and internships [A/CN.9/448]. Nine seminars and briefing missions took place on various aspects of international trade law, while others were being planned for Africa, Asia, Latin America and Eastern Europe.

The Commission appealed to all States, international organizations and other interested entities to consider making contributions to the UNCITRAL Trust Fund for Symposia.

PART FIVE

Institutional, administrative and budgetary questions

Chapter I

United Nations reform

The United Nations continued in 1998 to implement the Secretary-General's programme of reform of the Organization. Activities focused on strengthening the Secretariat's leadership capacity and reshaping its substantive work programmes, as well as increasing its administrative effectiveness and efficiency in order to create a development dividend by reducing non-programme costs and turning the savings into a development account. The General Assembly continued to consider proposals on those issues and on results-based budgeting and the dividend for development.

The Organization's process of procurement reform was reviewed. It showed that procurement reform was well under way, but areas of concern remained, notably procurement planning and the quality of vendors.

In its continued efforts to restructure and revitalize the Organization's approach to economic and social matters, the Economic and Social Council approved action to revitalize its subsidiary bodies, adopted measures to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of its functional commissions and welcomed the reform measures carried out by the regional commissions.

The Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Question of the Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Related Matters continued to discuss, among other things, the Council's working methods, the transparency of its work, and its decision-making process, including the veto. The Assembly determined that no decision would be made on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the Council's membership and related matters without the affirmative vote of at least two thirds of the Assembly membership.

The Assembly also reviewed the Organization's oversight mechanisms, including efforts towards enhanced oversight in the UN system.

Programme of reform

General aspects

The Secretary-General, in his report on the work of the Organization [A/53/1], said that as a result of the institutional reforms he had introduced in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1389], the UN family was acting with greater unity of purpose and coherence of effort. The new teamwork was most pronounced within the Secretariat and in its relations with the programmes and funds. The work programme was organized in the four core areas of peace and security, development cooperation, international economic and social affairs and humanitarian affairs. A fifth, human rights, was designated a cross-cutting issue. In each cluster, an Executive Committee managed common, cross-cutting and overlapping policy concerns. The Secretariat had been streamlined, through the merging and elimination of units, posts had been cut and the budget had been reduced to below that of the previous biennium. The recommendations of a task force on human resources management were to be acted upon expeditiously. Productive working relations with the UN system as a whole, including the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), were expanded and deepened. The Secretary-General said that, to reinvigorate the United Nations, he had made a particular effort to establish a mutually beneficial dialogue with the international business community.

However, the consideration of several other areas, such as time limits for all new mandates (see below), the proposal to adopt a results-based budget and the proposed development account, continued to be dealt with by the General Assembly (see next chapter).

In a November report [A/53/676] describing the status of implementation of actions set out in his 1997 report, submitted pursuant to Assembly resolution 52/12 A [YUN 1997, p. 1391], the Secretary-General stated that the Senior Management Group and the Strategic Planning Unit had been established, the phasing out of gratis personnel was well under way and accelerated procedures were put in place to ensure speedy recruitment of replacement staff. Standard directives for special representatives of the Secretary-General heading multidimensional peacekeeping operations were approved. The Department of Political Affairs was reviewing measures to strengthen the ability of the UN system to improve implementation of post-conflict peace-building initiatives, as well as its own internal structure to improve its ability to implement its role as the focal point for post-conflict peace-building. The Centre for Disarmament Affairs became the Department for Disarmament Affairs in January 1998.

Other action included completion of a review by the new Department of Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, providing for a more effective division of labour and closer interaction between the two entities in the macroeconomic area; establishment of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention and the United Nations Development Group; and new measures to strengthen the resident coordinator system, including introduction of a new annual report review mechanism. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework pilot phase was implemented in 18 countries and an assessment initiated in May. The Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund (UNDP/UNFPA) decided to develop a multi-year funding framework to finance technical cooperation; and in the UN Secretariat, a development financing capacity was being developed under the supervision of the Deputy Secretary-General. The Secretary-General also inaugurated United Nations Houses in five countries, where organizations of the system shared common premises and services, and approved 32 others for that designation. A Task Force on the Environment and Human Settlements and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs were established. In that regard, the financing of natural disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness was transferred to UNDP, which established a disaster management programme, based in Geneva. The reorganization of the human rights secretariat was completed, with its consolidation into the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights.

Concerning the United Nations and civil society, the Secretary-General had a number of encounters with representatives of key sectors of civil society. Each department of the Secretariat had designated liaison officers who participated in the interdepartmental working group on non-governmental organizations and discussions took place with relevant officials on the design of specific training programmes.

The Secretary-General also reported on the dividend for development and a number of staff-related and administrative matters.

ACC consideration. At its first regular session of 1998 (Geneva, 27-28 March) [ACC/1998/4], the Administrative Committee on Coordination

(ACC) considered that, in the review and assessment of the overall direction and impact of the reform process, particular attention should be paid to developing broad policy understandings and a common vision as a basis for programme and operational coordination; the respective roles of Member States and secretariats in promoting policy coherence and programme coordination; the need to avoid duplication while allowing different perspectives to be brought to bear on issues; and the importance of selecting the right programme managers at the field and headquarters levels.

At its second session (New York, 30-31 October) [ACC/1998/20], ACC agreed that there should be a systematic exchange of strategic planning proposals, including giving renewed attention to procedures for the exchange of programme budget and medium-term plans to identify new opportunities for cooperation. The broad objectives identified in 1996 on reform and strengthening the UN system [YUN 1996, p. 1348] should be reviewed in the light of developments that had occurred since. The capacity of the system to make the results of its work better known and to engage civil society and use the various channels and mechanisms available for that purpose should be strengthened, as a priority objective.

The General Assembly, by decision 53/465 of 18 December, decided that the item on measures and proposals for United Nations reform should remain for consideration at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

Follow-up to specific measures

Implementation of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures

In March [A/52/852], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/220 on the impact of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures [YUN 1997, p. 1421], informed the Assembly that, in line with his reform proposal for greater delegation of maximum authority, responsibility and full accountability to line managers for human and financial resources, he had initiated pilot projects on delegation of authority, which would provide a practical context for greater delegation of authority and flexibility within existing rules and regulations. A report on the implementation of the pilot project at the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) would be submitted to the Commission for final approval at its twenty-seventh (1998) session (see PART THREE, Chapter V).

The Secretary-General said that, while he had the responsibility for implementing regulations for managing financial and human resources established by the Assembly, the authority for the administration of financial resources was delegated to the Controller and for the management of staff to the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Resources. Under the pilot project, further authority was given to programme and line managers in several areas of human resources management.

Authority delegated in the context of implementing pilot projects would not impact either the procedures or existing Financial Regulations and Rules. It was the Secretary-General's intention to pursue such delegation of authority as an instrument for management improvement and to seek the approval of the Assembly in the event of delegation beyond his authority.

The General Assembly, in decision 52/477 A of 6 May, requested the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee to consider the note of the Secretary-General as soon as possible and to make recommendations to the Assembly on it.

During consideration of the issue in the Fifth Committee, the Director of the Management Policy Office reported that the Secretary-General had decided to introduce only one pilot project, in ECLAC, which would concentrate mainly on the simplification of recruitment procedures. The Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) said that ACABQ had concluded that the information provided by the Secretary-General was not sufficiently developed to enable it to evaluate the results of the project and to report to the Assembly. It recommended that the Assembly defer consideration of the matter pending receipt of additional information from the Secretariat and the Advisory Committee.

By decision 53/456 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue consideration of the item at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session and requested the Secretary-General to submit additional information as recommended by ACABQ.

Core resources for development

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], the Secretary-General, in a March note [A/52/847], further developed his proposals, contained in his 1997 report on UN reform [ibid., p. 1390], for the establishment of a new system of core resources for development financing.

The Secretary-General said that, as the demands placed on UN development programmes increased, it had become important for core resources to be placed on a predictable, continuous and assured basis. Funding modalities varied in their degree of predictability, and current funding arrangements, including the annual pledging conference for UN operational activities for development, were deficient in that respect. While total funding from core and non-core resources had increased modestly in recent years, the share of core resources declined and currently constituted less than half the total. Pledges and contributions were falling far short of agreed targets. Voluntary funding inhibited long-term planning, was too volatile and was among the first targets in any budgetary reduction. Following the Assembly's decision in resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] that executive boards of funds and programmes should review their resource requirements and decide on the applicable funding arrangements, those boards were engaged in that critically important phase. The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took decisions in 1998 to review the situation (see PART THREE, Chapters II and VIII), and the Executive Board of the World Food Programme (WFP) would review its experience with long-term financing policies in support of emergency assistance and development programmes.

The Secretary-General suggested that, in fulfilling their responsibilities, the boards might wish to explore the acceptability of previous ideas for strengthening the voluntary funding system, including renewed consideration by Member States of making multi-year pledges of their voluntary contributions, and Governments could agree on simple steps to negate the influence of the downward fluctuation in currencies. He further proposed that multi-year pledges could be based on the best 3-year average in the last 10 years as a starting point, with Member States being free to increase or decrease pledges; introduction of a system of maintaining commitments and payments at the United States dollar level to mitigate the effects of currency fluctuations; use of special drawing rights; and better organized timing of payments, including a firm timetable for payment contributions or issue of letters of credit or similar financial instruments for the multi-year planning cycle, including promissory notes. Efforts to increase core funding should not only be directed at the 15 countries currently providing 90 per cent of core resources, but relationships should be forged with new potentially important donors. Countries with large and growing economies should be in a position to carry a larger share.

Therefore, without departing from the principle of voluntary funding, Member States could arrive at a firm compact on resource targets and a collective commitment to meet them. The agreed targets, resource framework and funding strategies would be endorsed by the respective boards, which should also adopt a negotiating process with respect to shared core funding timed to the country programming cycle of each fund. The decision of each board on funding requirements would form the basis of those negotiations, which could produce multi-year pledges.

The Assembly, by decision 52/477 B of 6 May, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's note, with a view to the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee and other relevant bodies examining it and making recommendations to the Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Millennium Assembly

In a March note [A/52/850], the Secretary-General, as follow-up to resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], elaborated on his proposal for designation of the fifty-fifth (2000) session of the General Assembly as "The Millennium Assembly". A high-level segment would be designated "The Millennium Summit" and would be devoted to consideration of the theme "The United Nations in the twenty-first century". A non-governmental "Millennium Forum" would also be held in conjunction with the Assembly. Member States were to consider convening a ministerial-level special commission to examine relations among the various components of the UN system, in order to articulate and affirm an animating vision for the United Nations in the new era.

By decision 52/477 D of 6 May, the Assembly welcomed the Secretary-General's proposals and decided to consider them at its fifty-third session. On 17 December, it adopted resolution 53/202. (See p. 597 for more details.)

New concept of trusteeship

In his programme for reform [YUN 1997, p. 1390], the Secretary-General proposed that the Trusteeship Council be reconstituted as the forum through which Member States exercised their collective trusteeship for the global environment and common areas such as the oceans, atmosphere and outer space. It would serve as the link between the United Nations and civil society in addressing those areas, which required the active contribution of public, private and voluntary sectors.

The Secretary-General, in a March note on a new concept of trusteeship [A/52/849], said that over the years it had become increasingly evident that issues related to the integrity of the global environment had a direct bearing on the future of all mankind. While a number of intergovernmental bodies and legal instruments addressed sustainable development and various aspects of the global environment and common areas, there was no high-level deliberative forum that could take a comprehensive, strategic and long-term view of global trends and provide policy guidance. A new high-level council that did not overlap or conflict with existing intergovernmental bodies could serve that purpose. The Secretary-General had established a Task Force to prepare proposals on the environment and human settlements, areas for which strategic and long-term policies needed to be addressed, and on the proposal for a new concept of trusteeship.

By decision 52/477 C of 6 May, the Assembly deferred consideration of the note to its fifty-third session.

In October [A/53/463], the Secretary-General submitted the report of the Task Force, which recommended, among other things, that the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, in preparing for the next regular session of its Governing Council, undertake wide-ranging consultations concerning institutional arrangements for dealing with the environmental challenges of the next century; that a two-day forum be held prior to and in conjunction with the Governing Council's next session, and which would suggest to the Council and the Millennium Assembly and Millennium Forum (see above) forward-looking proposals for the protection of the environment, including the possible future role of the Trusteeship Council (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII, and PART THREE, Chapter VII).

Time limits on new initiatives

In a March note [A/52/851 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General, responding to the General Assembly's request in resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], further elaborated the proposal contained in his 1997 reform plan that each initiative involving new organizational structures and/or major commitments of funds would be subject to specific time limits.

He stated that the idea of specific time limits, or "sunset" provisions was intended to provide a specific time horizon for mandates, whereupon their continuation would require explicit renewal by the Assembly. While current procedures existed for determining the continuing validity of legislative decisions, most mandated programmes and activities had not, in practice, been subjected to specific time limits. Some programmes did expire after the fulfilment of their mandates, but there was insufficient focus on the continuing relevance and effectiveness of mandated programmes and activities. Although the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) had responsibility for assessing results achieved from activities and the continuing validity of legislative decisions of more than five years' standing, those evaluation studies were primarily management-oriented rather than an evaluation of the programmes themselves, which was difficult given the diversity of views, concerns and priorities of Member States. The sunset provisions would obtain agreement from Member States at the outset for a specific time frame for implementation of a mandate that involved new organizational structures and/or major commitments of funds. Member States and the Secretariat would be required to focus on the results to be achieved within a particular time frame, after which the new initiative would terminate. The continuing relevance of the programmes would be determined within the context of the approval of the medium-term plan and programme budgets.

By decision 52/477 E of 6 May, the Assembly decided to continue discussion of the item during its fifty-second session.

In a July addendum [A/52/851/Add.1], the Secretary-General further proposed that, when the limits of mandates were reached, an explicit reaffirmation of the General Assembly would be required for the mandates to remain in effect, thus strengthening the Assembly's oversight and review functions. The implementation of time limits was entirely consistent with all existing regulations and rules, which would not require amendment, and new ones would not be needed. Time limits would apply to programmatic activities and related organizational structures, respectively, would vary in duration depending on the characteristics of the task at hand, and would not affect staff contracts, although it might require periodical redeployment of individual staff members. Review of a programme would be undertaken during the same year as the Assembly considered the proposed programme budget outline for the next biennium. That would enable the Assembly to determine whether it should make provisions for the continuation of the programme beyond the original time limit.

The Assembly, by decision 52/477 F of 30 July, agreed to continue its consideration of the item at its fifty-third session.

UN Code of Conduct

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session, continued consideration of the proposed Code of Conduct for UN staff members [YUN 1997, p. 1472] as part of the Secretary-General's reform proposals.

By decision 52/461 of 31 March, the Assembly invited the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) to examine the proposed Code of Conduct at its April/May session. It also requested the Fifth Committee, in the light of the observations and comments of ICSC, to revert to the question during the second part of the resumed fifty-second session.

By decision 52/484 of 26 June, the Assembly deferred the issue to the third part of its fifty-second session. By resolution 52/252 of 8 September, the Assembly adopted revisions to article 1 of the Staff Regulations and chapter 1 of the 100 series of the Staff Rules of the United Nations (see PART FIVE, Chapter III).

Managerial reform and oversight

Procurement reform

In March, pursuant to resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on its review of the implementation of procurement reform [A/52/813].

The report summarized the status of implementation of the 1994 recommendations of the High-level Group of Experts on Procurement [YUN 1994, p. 1369]. The Secretary-General had previously provided progress reports in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1381] and 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1397]. He stated that he concurred with the OIOS recommendations.

The OIOS review showed that the reform was well under way. The Procurement Division had been reorganized, procurement guidelines were being finalized, delegated procurement thresholds had been adjusted, management information systems had produced all necessary reports and the Division had reliable qualified staff to perform their assigned tasks. However, areas of concern remained, notably in the training and experience of field mission procurement officers, issuance of the revised procurement manual, procurement planning and the quality of the vendor roster.

OIOS recommended that management make use of the procurement and contract administration services of the UN Office of Project Services for development projects; financial rules be interpreted to permit the initiation of procurement actions pending the allocation and commitment of funds prior to budget approval; the procurement of professional services and medicines and medical supplies no longer be exempted under the UN Financial Rules from the requirement of bidding; the draft procurement manual be reviewed, finalized and issued in a timely manner; training needs be identified and a formal procurement-specific training programme developed in cooperation with the Office of Human Resources Management; procurement officers be rotated between Headquarters and field missions; procurement authority be delegated at the start of a field mission and its financial limits reflect the mission's procurement needs and ability to manage that responsibility; better use be made of existing management information capabilities; vendor registration procedures be enhanced to ensure that the roster was reliable; the Procurement Division report on progress made in system contracts; and requisitioning departments submit annual procurement plans.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/746/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/226 A without vote [agenda item 114].

Procurement reform and outsourcing

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 49/216 C of 23 December 1994, 51/231 of 13 June 1997, 51/243 of 15 September 1997 and 52/220 of 22 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on procurement reform and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having also considered the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the review of the implementation of procurement reform,

1. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure strict adherence to the regulations and rules governing the procurement process;

2. Notes with concern that its resolution 51/231 and a number of the recommendations contained in the report of the High-level Group of Experts on Procurement remain largely unimplemented, and therefore calls on the Secretary-General to ensure their full implementation without any further delay;

3. Notes that the revised procurement manual has not been issued, and requests the Secretary-General to publish the manual no later than 31 March 1998, as stated in his report;

4. Also notes the delay in submission of proposals for revision of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, which may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of the procurement reform process, and requests the Secretary-General to submit such proposals to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, for consideration by the Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-second session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of his next report on procurement reform, to evolve and provide the standards for measuring the efficiency of procurement, taking into account the optimal duration of the procurement decision-making process, the total workload in the Procurement Division of the Secretariat and the cost-efficiency of procurement, against which the performance should be measured;

6. Notes the decline in ex post facto cases, and underscores the need to reduce further the number of such cases through better procurement planning;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all departments and offices at Headquarters and in the field develop, in cooperation with the Procurement Division, annual procurement plans, which should be made publicly available;

8. Emphasizes the need for a sharper definition of exigency needs, and urges the Secretary-General to submit his proposal to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, no later than 31 March 1998, as stated in his report;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to consider measures to improve the working methods of the Headquarters Committee on Contracts in order to enhance and expedite the procurement decision-making process;

10. Regrets that the report of the Secretary-General does not contain information on the action taken regarding guidelines on methods of invitation to bid, which was recommended by the Board of Auditors in its report on procurement for the biennium ended 31 December 1995, and requests the Secretary-General to submit the guidelines, through the Advisory Committee, for consideration by the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-second session;

11. Also regrets that the information requested in paragraphs 18 and 37 of its resolution 51/231 was not provided in the report of the Secretary-General, and emphasizes that immediate action should be taken for the full implementation of the resolution;

12. Further regrets that, despite the initial efforts of the Secretary-General, the supplier roster is still not representative of the membership of the Organization, and requests him to intensify further and focus his efforts to broaden the geographical base of the supplier roster;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to take all possible measures to increase procurement from developing countries and countries with economies in transition, including the following measures:

(a) All invitations to bid should be posted on the Procurement Division web site home page as soon as they are prepared, in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations;

(b) All invitations to bid should be sent to the permanent missions, as well as to all United Nations information centres and other United Nations offices;

(c) Procurement Division officials may undertake visits to developing countries and countries with economies in transition to attend seminars and exhibitions, with a view to identifying potential vendors from those countries;

(d) All commercial opportunities should be published in Development Business, which is issued by the Office of Communications and Public Information of the Secretariat;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to examine ways to increase opportunities for developing countries in the award of procurement contracts, in particular least developed countries, African countries and countries with economies in transition, taking into account the experience of preferential treatment in this regard in the funds and programmes of United Nations organizations and other intergovernmental institutions, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of awarding procurement contracts to equally qualified vendors from countries that are current in the payment of their assessed contributions, taking into account the experience of other intergovernmental institutions with such practices, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to develop a standard procedure for the preparation of performance evaluation reports on suppliers, as requested by the General Assembly in paragraph 15 of its resolution 51/231;

17. Reiterates its concern about the use of suppliers recommended by requisitioners and, noting that this practice undermines the principle of segregation of responsibilities between requesting and procurement entities, requests the Secretary-General to discontinue the practice;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to revise paragraphs (f) and (g) of financial rule 110.19 to include professional services, medicines, medical supplies, hospital or surgical supplies and prosthetic appliances in the open bidding process;

19. Emphasizes that the procurement of goods and services in the field missions could be sourced competitively at the local or regional level;

20. Notes the progress made in the area of staff training, and requests the Secretary-General to develop further a formal training programme for all procurement staff;

21. Reiterates its decision that all procurement-related functions should be performed only by United Nations staff, and requests the Secretary-General to phase out gratis personnel from the Procurement Division expeditiously, and no later than 31 July 1998;

22. Requests the Secretary-General to review the organizational structure of the Procurement Division in order to ensure effective and efficient management, taking into account the implementation of procurement reform, including the recommendations contained in the reports of the Advisory Committee, the Board of Auditors and the Office of Internal Oversight Services, and to report thereon, through the Advisory Committee, to the General Assembly;

23. Underlines the need to maintain inventory records in accordance with the relevant regulations and rules;

24. Requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services with conducting a comprehensive review and analysis of the procurement-related arbitration cases and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on measures to be taken;

25. Also requests the Secretary-General to define and publish the procedures governing the role of the ombudsman and to examine the feasibility of assigning that position to a division other than one under the direct authority of the Assistant Secretary-General for Central Support Services;

26. Regrets the continued delay in the publication of the procurement manual, and notes with concern the apparent absence of effective communication between the various key Secretariat departments involved in its preparation;

27. Requests the Secretary-General to examine alternative methods of collecting statistical data in order to provide a more transparent view of the true national provenance of companies benefiting from procurement contracts;

28. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals on possible amendments to the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the Staff Regulations and Rules of the United Nations in order to address issues of potential conflict of interest, such as the employment of former United Nations procurement officers by United Nations suppliers and vice versa;

29. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-third session on the implementation of all of the provisions of the present resolution.

Report of Secretary-General (April). In response to resolution 52/226 A, the Secretary-General in April submitted to the Fifth Committee a further report on procurement [A/C.5/52/46], in which he discussed the Assembly's request for a sharper definition of "exigency", guidelines on methods of inviting bids and revision of United Nations Financial Regulations and Rules pertaining to procurement.

The Secretary-General explained that the concept of exigency was relative, describing an operational or support requirement that was of such immediate need that it could not await consummation of the full procurement cycle under UN financial regulations, rules, procedures and practices. The only definition of exigency in the current procurement procedures was made in the context of financial rule 110.19, which allowed for the waiver of the competitive bidding requirement. While that provided relief by reducing procurement lead time, the dynamics of field procurement could not withstand the multi-layered process of reviews and recommendations necessary for award approval. Delays in the review and approval processes were major contributors to ex post facto cases.

The Secretary-General proposed, as a working definition, that immediate operational requirements were urgent support or operational requirements that were unforeseeable or for which there was inadequate planning time, and which, if unfulfilled, would in a short time jeopardize life or UN property, result in significant operational difficulty or adverse financial implications or otherwise impede the ability of the mission to fulfil its mandate. A requirement might be classified as exigent if it was deemed to require a waiver of the multi-layered process of review and approval. The Secretary-General said that the expanded definition would assist in bringing about meaningful procurement reform and that special emergency rules and procedures should be developed to meet the requirements of the Departments of Humanitarian Affairs and Peace-keeping Operations.

Concerning the guidelines on the method of inviting bids, the Secretary-General explained that a sub-working group on common services procurement was reviewing the matter. The review would entail establishing appropriate bidding cycles and methods of tendering so that programme managers would be guided by them when submitting their requirements to the Procurement Division. The sub-working group would also review the Financial Rules and report thereon.

Report of Secretary-General (August). The Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/271 & Corr.1], in which he responded to the issues raised by the General Assembly in resolution 52/226 A. He said that the recommendations, decisions, suggestions and concerns expressed by the Assembly, ACABQ and oversight bodies, as well as the High-level Group of Experts on Procurement, had been addressed and implemented, except to a very limited extent. Among the issues acted upon, the Procurement Manual, dated 31 March 1998, was issued and would also be available on the UN Intranet. The Under-Secretary-General for Management was completing a comprehensive review of all UN financial regulations and rules. With respect to procurement within the framework of common services, the United Nations, together with its funds and programmes, including UNDP and UNFPA, was harmonizing appropriate regulations and rules. The Secretary-General had also instructed, commencing with the next biennium, that all offices at and away from Headquarters abstract from their approved budgets all major procurement items for the information of the Procurement Division. Concerning his proposal on the definition of exigency, the Secretary-General said that exceptions to bidding on the basis of exigency would be approved by the Assistant Secretary-General for Central Support Services where the proposed procurement was both unavoidable and would either seriously interfere with or impede the operation of a programme or mission mandate or would endanger lives or property were it to remain unsatisfied for even a short period. In such cases, full justification had to be presented by the requisitioning department. While a bona fide exigency could occur at any time, it most commonly occurred during mission inception and mission expansion, when the supply of goods and services ceased abruptly or upon the occurrence of an event constituting force majeure. That superseded his definition proposed in April and would be issued as a new administrative instruction and reflected in the Procurement Manual. The United Nations was working with other UN system organizations to establish a common supplier database, whereby participating organizations would share information on suppliers, including supplier performance evaluations. All procurement in excess of $200,000 was being advertised by the Procurement Division on its web site home page whenever adequate lead time was provided by the requisitioning department, transmitted electronically to all permanent missions in New York and published bimonthly in Development Business. As at 1 October, all requisitioning departments would be required to complete a supplier performance report.

Report of ACABQ (October). In an October report [A/53/513] responding to reports of the Board of Auditors (see next chapter), ACABQ reiterated its prior opinion that procurement reform should be given top priority in the United Nations and its funds and programmes, where the Board had found numerous irregularities regarding procurement of goods and services. ACABQ requested that the Board of Auditors evaluate the effectiveness of the reform process by conducting a horizontal audit of procurement during its next audit cycle. It said that the Secretary-General's attempt to provide a sharper definition of exigency, rather than limiting its use had actually expanded the definition. Recalling the position of the Board of Auditors that requisitioning departments should not be permitted to specify the source of manufacturers, the Advisory Committee said it too considered the practice unacceptable and immediate action should be taken against those that did not comply.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In November [A/53/271/Add.1], the Secretary-General provided an update of developments in procurement reform with respect to increasing procurement opportunities from developing countries and common services. It also included a summary of actions completed and outstanding.

A survey of UN organizations found that special measures were applied to suppliers from developing countries in the form of inclusion of such suppliers on shortlists for tenders, but no organization applied preferential treatment in the form of a percentage-based margin of preference. Other measures included outreach to developing countries through local business seminars, sharing of supplier information among UN organizations, and increased advertisements of procurement opportunities in UN publications and on the Internet. The widespread use by UN organizations of shortlisting as the preferred method of issuing tenders, along with the devolution of increased procurement authority and higher thresholds to field activities, further promoted procurement from local markets.

The UNDP annual report on procurement for 1997 (see PART THREE, Chapter II) showed that the total volume of procurement by the UN system was $2,895 million, with $ 1,197 million, or 41 per cent, from developing countries. The total volume of procurement by the UN Procurement Division was $309 million, of which 9 per cent was from developing countries.

Concerning the Secretary-General's proposal for streamlining procurement services of the UN system through use of a common services mechanism, the Task Force on Common Services and its Working Group on Procurement had realized a number of achievements relevant to UN reform efforts, including development of simplified, generic, harmonized financial regulations for procurement, adopted by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1998 (see PART THREE, Chapter II). The Secretariat was interested in adopting those regulations. UN funds and programmes were already contracting jointly for office supplies and travel agency services. A clear manifestation of a common approach was the recent implementation of the United Nations Common Supplier Database.

Report of ACABQ (November). In a November report [A/53/692], ACABQ noted the view of the Legal Counsel that, should the Assembly decide to adopt a policy of preference in awarding procurement contracts, it should be done through an amendment of the Financial Regulations. The Advisory Committee pointed out that the matter had been pending for several years, while the Secretariat expressed its frustration about the perceived rigidities inherent in the regulations governing procurement. ACABQ stressed that it was incumbent upon the Secretariat to submit, without further delay, proposals to it for review and subsequent approval by the Assembly.

On the issue of procurement in developing countries, ACABQ observed that the Secretary-General had reported that various efforts were made to include attendance of Procurement Division officials at trade fairs in various countries. Yet, of the 11 countries mentioned only 4 were developing countries. The Advisory Committee believed that there was a need to distinguish between purchase orders made in developing countries to acquire goods/services from elsewhere and procurement of goods/services from developing countries. The Committee requested that the Secretary-General indicate on what basis the country of procurement was determined and how that methodology compared with recognized international practice.

Oversight

In July [A/53/171], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) entitled "More coherence for enhanced oversight in the United Nations system". JIU concluded that, despite efforts in recent years to strengthen oversight in the UN system, those efforts had not addressed the lack of coherence in the oversight infrastructure and had even added to it. The perception of oversight was marked by over-reliance on oversight mechanisms as a remedy for shortcomings in performance; Member States' discomfort with the results of oversight and a feeling of "oversight indigestion"; and concern about the blurring of roles of internal and external oversight. JIU noted that structures within organizations for providing internal oversight too often did not assure effective functional coordination of the different elements of internal oversight, namely audit, investigation, inspection, evaluation and monitoring.

JIU recommended the need for agreed plans for conducting internal oversight to give Member States more awareness/assurance that the different elements of oversight were being adequately covered, without imposing a specific structural arrangement on any organization; and reporting on internal oversight activities to help Member States make comparisons among organizations of the system and take advantage of lessons learned in other organizations by highlighting good practices. JIU also recommended the analysis by it of consolidated annual summary reports to put them into a system-wide perspective for identifying problems, as well as good practices; to foster a stronger professional oversight community to further strengthen the professionalism of oversight officials, encourage more complementarity of efforts, achieve efficiencies and avoid overlap and duplication; and more dialogue among oversight partners to increase awareness of oversight processes and the need for active participation of all three partners.

In November [A/53/670], ACABQ emphasized that it was for each legislative body to determine the reporting procedure for both internal and external oversight bodies. It pointed out that although not all good practices could be replicated throughout the system, it believed that implementation of that recommendation might be especially beneficial in the areas of procurement, communications, software applications and staff training. ACABQ cautioned that the compilation of annual summary reports into yet another voluminous document might contribute to unnecessary duplication and might exacerbate the "oversight indigestion" already experienced by Member States.

ACC, in its comments [A/53/171/Add.I] on the JIU report, said it shared the thrust of the report and noted that many suggestions and recommendations had either been implemented or already featured in its members' plans. It noted that very little had been said in the report about the possibility for improved coordination of the external oversight mechanism. As to the specific recommendations, ACC, acknowledging that there was a need for transparency and that each organization had its own distinct character, felt that responsibility for oversight was the prerogative of the executive heads of organizations and expressed concern about excessive micromanagement by Member States. While generally agreeing on the need to report to legislative bodies on oversight matters, ACC cautioned against increased costs and/or complexity in reporting arrangements.

Internal oversight

Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS)

The Secretary-General stated, in transmitting the report on the 1997/98 activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services to the General Assembly (see below), that the ongoing efforts of OIOS, established by Assembly resolution 48/218B [YUN1994,p.1362] to enhance oversight functions within the UN system, continued to contribute to providing comprehensive oversight services for the Organization. He said that he would continue to support full and timely implementation by programme managers of recommendations made by the Office, since they would be a key element in the ongoing reform process. He concurred with the observation of the Under-Secretary-General for Internal Oversight Services that the working methods of the Office were well established and an important ingredient of the new management culture of the United Nations, and its reports continued to be an extremely valuable source of reference and guidance in the continuing process of institutional reform.

On 31 March, by decision 52/474 A, the Assembly decided to defer until the second part of its resumed fifty-second session consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of OIOS.

On 26 June, by decision 52/483, the Assembly deferred until the third part of its resumed fifty-second session consideration of the reports of OIOS and documents containing the comments of JIU on the review of the programme and administrative practices of the secretariat of the International Trade Centre (see PART THREE, Chapter IV); on the investigation into an alleged conflict of interest within the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII); on the audits of the regional commissions (see PART THREE, Chapter V); on the review of programme management in the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division (see PART THREE, Chapter IX); and on the audit of the Second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

The Assembly, also on 26 June (decision 52/474 B), deferred consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of OIOS until the third part of its resumed fifty-second session.

Report of Secretary-General. In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the fourth annual report of OIOS covering its activities from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/428].

The report stated that the number of reports issued by OIOS had steadily increased to an expected 20 in 1998. Its emphasis on full implementation of its recommendations continued to cause changes and was expected to reduce further the occurrence of abuse and enhance efficiency and effectiveness in management. The average implementation rate was 63 per cent at the end of June for the 1,415 recommendations issued between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1998. During the reporting period, the Investigations Section issued 45 recommendations, of which 30 were implemented. From its inception, the Investigations Section had an implementation rate of 89 per cent. OIOS and the Department of Management in November 1997 jointly issued guidelines as a framework for programme monitoring and evaluation in departments and offices. They specified broad managerial responsibilities, which constituted minimum monitoring and evaluation standards. Those responsibilities were not being adequately carried out, particularly in departments and offices concerned with support services. OIOS was offering assistance in implementing the guidelines.

The report gave an overview of OIOS priority areas for oversight: peacekeeping, humanitarian and related activities, procurement, problems with establishing new bodies and human resources management. During the reporting period, OIOS undertook audits of 17 peacekeeping missions. It focused its audits of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on overall programme administration at Headquarters and in the field and reviewed a number of country programmes. OIOS recognized that UNHCR's drive to decentralize management of its operations to the field caused some short-term organizational problems. Over the long term, however, overall programme management and control would be improved. Other offices audited were the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, the Office of the Humanitarian Coordinator for Iraq, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

As to procurement, OIOS reported that substantial progress was made in the implementation of the recommendations of the High-level Group of Experts on Procurement. However, additional efforts were needed to further strengthen the overall procurement process. OIOS audited the UN commercial insurance arrangements and expenditures and the rental and management of space at Headquarters, and investigated the procurement of aviation services in peacekeeping operations.

The oversight role of OIOS to address the development of important new bodies and the implementation of new mandates expanded. OIOS felt that the lessons learned from its review of the International Criminal Tribunals for Rwanda and for the Former Yugoslavia would serve to better prepare and develop the new International Criminal Court. OIOS also found that the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda was functioning far more effectively than it had the previous year, yet there remained continuing problems in procurement, recruitment, personnel, witness protection and asset management, which were in the process of being improved.

OIOS also conducted a management audit of the Office of Human Resources Management. It observed that the inefficiency of a great deal of administrative activity in the United Nations was the main impediment to efficiency in its substantive work and operations. It conducted audits of the recruitment process, and although it had made recommendations to deal with the cumbersome and time-consuming procedures, they had not been implemented. OIOS examined also the use of extrabudgetary posts in the Secretariat, which it found had become an institutionalized part of the Organization's core resources base. Audits were also conducted on the use of consultants and associated contractual procedures and the rental subsidy schemes at UN Headquarters and in Israel.

As part of its oversight function, the Audit and Management Consulting Division audited assets of $147 million, income of $36 million and expenditures totalling $1.2 billion, identifying some $20.7 million in potential savings. The 118 audit assignments opened during the reporting period resulted in 64 audit reports addressed to senior management, with 604 recommendations on compliance with rules, regulations and policies; economic and efficient use of resources; protection of assets; reliability and integrity of information; and achievement of objectives.

The Investigations Section devoted substantial resources to investigating cases of importance to the Organization, such as those involving misconduct by staff members, including managers, and by contractors. Investigators were assisting national law enforcement authorities in criminal prosecutions and participating in disciplinary cases. The Section received 173 reports and suggestions, compared to 172 in the previous reporting period. However, the geographical distribution changed. Of the caseload of 173, 78 were in the Americas, 38 in Europe, 26 in Africa, 20 in Asia and 11 in the Middle East. The Section worked with other offices and departments in the Secretariat on cases requiring administrative or disciplinary action. It was clear that the mechanisms for resolving issues through administrative or disciplinary channels were time consuming, awkward to the point of imposing an inordinate burden on the Organization and staff members involved and were in need of improvement. In addition, delegation of authority, definitions of terms and procedural requirements lacked clarity. OIOS would be working with other offices and departments on revamping administrative and disciplinary processes.

In keeping with its mandate for oversight, OIOS conducted a new inspection review of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division [A/52/777] (see PART THREE, Chapter IX), and follow-up inspection reviews were undertaken of the regional commissions [A/52/776] (see PART THREE, Chapter V), the Second United Nations Conference on Human Settlements [A/52/821] and an alleged conflict of interest within Habitat [A/52/339] (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

In two November notes, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the JIU comments on the alleged conflict of interest in Habitat [A/52/339/Add.1] and on the 1997 review of the programme and administrative practices of the secretariat of the International Trade Centre [A/52/575], both of which agreed with the OIOS recommendations.

OIOS also conducted triennial reviews of the in-depth evaluation of peacekeeping: start-up phase [E/AC.51/1998/4] (see PART ONE, Chapter I) and of the implementation of the recommendadone made by CPC on the evaluation of the programme on environment [E/AC.51/1998/5] (see PART THREE, Chapter VII).

By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue, at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session, consideration of the agenda items on the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of OIOS and on review of the implementation of Assembly resolution 48/218 B on the establishment of OIOS.

External oversight mechanisms

In July [A/53/180], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the JIU decision to revert from the July-June to the January-December cycle for its programme of work and to adjust its annual report to the same cycle as a way to synchronize better the issuance of its reports. The Unit believed it more appropriate for the cycle of its work programme and annual report to accord with the January-December budget cycle. It planned to complement its budget estimates with an indicative list of reports it would consider for preparation during the next biennium, to give a better understanding of activities and results to be achieved. Consequently, the Unit decided to extend its 1997-1998 programme of work through 31 December 1998 and to issue its thirtieth report in 1999.

JIU activities

The Joint Inspection Unit, in its thirtieth report to the General Assembly [A/54/34], gave an overview of its activities between 1 July 1997 and 31 December 1998. During that period, it issued nine reports on the following topics: execution of humanitarian assistance programmes through implementing partners [A/52/270]; the challenge of outsourcing for the UN system [A/52/338]; co-ordination at Headquarters and field level between the UN agencies involved in peace-building: an assessment of possibilities [A/52/430]; training institutions in the UN system: programmes and activities [A/52/559]; fellowships in the UN system [A/53/154]; more coherence for enhanced oversight in the UN system [A/53/171]; enhancing the relevance and effectiveness of the United Nations University [A/53/392]; UN common services in Geneva [A/53/787]; and the United Nations Office for Project Services: broader engagement with UN system organizations [A/53/788].

As follow-up to Assembly resolution 50/233 [YUN 1996, p. 1267], JIU continued to pursue efforts to enhance further the functioning and impact of its work, in terms of leadership, staff resource requirements, administrative and budgetary operational independence and reporting procedures. JIU stated that serious consideration should be given to more appropriate resource requirements to allow the Unit to better discharge its mandate. It said that the Assembly might wish to clarify the provision of article 20.1 of the JIU statute, which described the procedure to be followed for the consideration of the budget of the Unit. It also noted that no action had been taken so far on the 1997 proposal for a more effective system of follow-up on JIU reports [YUN 1997, p. 1401].

In March, the Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session, resumed consideration of the item on JIU (agenda item 118) and related reports submitted in 1997 [ibid., p. 1400].

On 31 March, the Assembly, by decision 52/467 A, deferred consideration of the item until the second part of that session. On 26 June, the Assembly further deferred consideration of the item until the third part of the resumed session (decision 52/467 B), as well as that of the question of the strengthening of external oversight mechanisms (decision 52/482).

By decision 52/467 C of 8 September, the Assembly deferred consideration of the item on JIU until its fifty-third session. On 18 December (decision 53/458), the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

Intergovernmental machinery

Strengthening of the UN system

In April [A/52/855], the Secretary-General submitted a report on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/241 [YUN 1997, p. 1402], by which it adopted the recommendations of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System. The Secretary-General stated that implementation of the resolution was proceeding as mandated. The annex to the resolution, however, contained several provisions which, while they might not necessarily require the amendment of the rules of procedure, nonetheless affected the understanding or application of those rules. In addition, a number of recommendations needed further review and possible action by Member States.

Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly

The Secretary-General, in his report [A/52/855] on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/241 on strengthening the UN system, discussed issues raised in connection with the recommendations relating to the functioning of the Assembly. Concerning the fixing of a closing date for the regular session of the Assembly, the Secretary-General noted that if the current practice was retained the closing date would consistently fall on an official holiday of the Organization, for which financial and other implications might need to be considered. He proposed that the Assembly consider opening its session on the Wednesday following the first Monday in September and closing the session on the preceding day.

The Secretary-General also noted that a provision of $250,000 per year was approved for the office of the President of the Assembly in the 1998-1999 programme budget. He explained that that amount was in addition to those resources already included in the budget for the President during his tenure. Existing resources included a spokesperson, security officers, drivers, two secretaries and hospitality funds.

The Secretary-General, as requested in Assembly resolution 48/264 [YUN 1994, p. 246], submitted an April report on the revitalization of the work of the Assembly [A/52/856], providing the views and experience of the Presidents of the forty-ninth, fiftieth and fifty-first sessions on the implementation of that resolution. The report also dealt with the efforts of the Main Committees to rationalize their respective agendas and included an analysis of the workload of the Assembly with regard to the number of items on the agenda, the number of resolutions adopted and the number of reports requested of the Secretary-General, as a way of assessing whether those efforts had a quantitative impact on the work of the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 June [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/232 [draft: A/52/L.77] without vote [agenda item 60].

Strengthening of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Having considered the aspects concerning the organization of the work of its regular sessions contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/241,

Recalling its resolution 51/241 of 31 July 1997, by which it adopted the recommendations of the Open-ended High-level Working Group on the Strengthening of the United Nations System as contained in the annex to the resolution,

Noting its resolution 36/67 of 30 November 1981, by which it declared that the third Tuesday of September, the opening day of the regular sessions of the General Assembly, shall be officially proclaimed and observed as the International Day of Peace and shall be devoted to commemorating and strengthening the ideals of peace both within and among all nations and peoples,

1. Decides that the fifty-second session of the General Assembly shall close on Tuesday, 8 September 1998, and that the fifty-third session of the General Assembly shall open on Wednesday, 9 September 1998;

2. Also decides that the International Day of Peace shall continue to be observed on the opening day of the regular session;

3. Further decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Strengthening of the United Nations system".

Also on 4 June, the Assembly, by decision 52/479, welcomed the views of its past Presidents on the implementation of resolution 48/264. It commended the efforts of the Main Committees to streamline their agendas and methods of work, and decided to continue consideration of the process of revitalization of the Assembly at its fifty-third session.

Review of Security Council membership and related matters

Open-ended Working Group. The Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters related to the Security Council submitted a report on its work during the General Assembly's fifty-second session [A/52/47]. Between 26 November 1997 and 24 August 1998, the Group held 56 meetings, at six substantive sessions.

At the first substantive session in February, the Working Group adopted its programme of work and had before it four conference room papers: one prepared by the Bureau on the working methods of the Council and transparency of its work; another on the August 1997 response of the Office of Legal Affairs to the request by Egypt for a study of the legal basis of the veto; the January follow-up by Egypt addressed to the President of the General Assembly; and a paper by Bahrain, in its capacity as Chairman of the Group of Arab States, outlining the Group's position on the expansion and composition of the Council.

The second substantive session in February/March continued to discuss those issues on the basis of a revised conference room paper prepared by the Bureau and two additional conference room papers, submitted by Italy and the Republic of Korea, on the relationship between the Council, the Assembly and the general membership of the United Nations.

At the third substantive session in April/May, the Working Group began consideration of the item on decision-making in the Council, including the veto. Following that discussion, the Bureau prepared a revised version of its earlier paper. In addition, two conference room papers were submitted by Germany on voting rights of the existing permanent members and on voting rights of new permanent members. Another conference room paper was submitted by the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia on the veto as a voting instrument. The Working Group also considered expansion of the Council based on a conference room paper prepared by the Bureau.

At the fourth substantive session held in May, the Working Group continued its discussion of the expansion of the Council and began consideration of the item on periodic review of the enlarged Council, on which the Bureau had prepared a paper. It also began consideration of another Bureau paper on the majority required for taking decisions on Council reform. Hungary, on behalf of the Group of Eastern European States, submitted a conference room paper dealing with the allocation of one additional non-permanent seat for that Group in the enlarged membership of the Council.

At the fifth substantive session in June, Senegal, on behalf of the Group of African States, informed the Working Group of the decision taken by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity on the procedure for rotation of the two permanent seats claimed by Africa. The Bureau issued a revised paper on the working methods of the Council and transparency of its work. The Group also discussed the majority required for taking decisions on Council reform. It reverted to the item on decision-making and in that connection two additional conference room papers were received, one from Chile and the other from Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Ireland, Portugal and Slovenia. The Republic of Korea submitted a paper on the periodic review of the enlarged Council.

At the sixth substantive session, held in July/August, the Working Group re-examined the expansion of the Council, the periodic review of the enlarged Council and the majority required for taking decisions on Council reform, and considered revised papers from the Bureau, as well as a paper by the Republic of Korea on the working methods of the Council, transparency of its work and its decision-making process. Solomon Islands submitted a paper on access to the archives and records of the Council and to the high-level members of the Secretariat serving the Council. Peru submitted a paper on the majority required for the adoption of decisions on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Council and other matters related to the Council and on convening a special session of the General Assembly to decide that issue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, by decision 52/490 of 24 August, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that the Group should continue its work, taking into account the progress achieved at previous Assembly sessions, as well as views expressed during the fifty-third session. It would submit a report to that session, including any agreed recommendations.

On 23 November [meeting 66], the Assembly adopted resolution 53/30 [draft: A/53/L.46] without vote [agenda item 59].

Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and related matters

The General Assembly,

Mindful of Chapter XVIII of the Charter of the United Nations and of the importance of reaching general agreement as referred to in resolution 48/26 of 3 December 1993, determines not to adopt any resolution or decision on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Council and related matters, without the affirmative vote of at least two thirds of the Members of the General Assembly.

On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 53/465, decided that the item on the question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Council and related matters should remain for consideration during the fifty-third session.

Revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

In 1998, the Economic and Social Council continued consideration of the process of restructuring and revitalization in the economic, social and related fields of the United Nations, which began in 1991 [YUN 1991, p. 749], in particular the review of the functioning of its subsidiary bodies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/46 [draft: E/1998/L.18] without vote [agenda item 8].

Further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling General Assembly resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997,

1. Adopts the texts contained in annexes I, II and III to the present resolution;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the functional commissions for the interest they have taken in reviewing their working methods, and encourages them to continue to do so, taking into account the suggestions and recommendations appearing in annex II to the present resolution, and to adopt practices best suited to their mandates, priorities and responsibilities;

3. Welcomes the reform measures undertaken by the regional commissions, and encourages them to continue to undertake, under the aegis of their respective intergovernmental bodies, further measures to enhance their efficiency and effectiveness as presented in annex III to the present resolution;

4. Decides to continue its deliberations on pending issues pursuant to the mandates given to it, as contained in General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B;

5. Also decides to hold, at its resumed substantive session of 1998, elections for the composition of the bodies as laid down in annex I to the present resolution, so that these bodies are fully constituted from 1 January 1999, and requests its Bureau to work out appropriate mechanisms for the holding of the elections for this purpose;

6. Further decides to bring the present resolution to the attention of the General Assembly in pursuance of paragraph 70 of annex I to Assembly resolution 50/227 and paragraphs 9 and 10 of Assembly resolution 52/12 B.

ANNEX I

Subsidiary bodies identified for restructuring and revitalization

A. Commission on Science and Technology for Development

1. The Commission on Science and Technology for Development shall remain a functional commission of the Economic and Social Council and shall continue to meet biennially for two weeks.

2. The Commission is encouraged to sharpen the focus of its work, devoting particular attention to the issues of transfer of technology and capacity-building, in particular of the developing countries. In regard to transfer of technology, examination of concrete applications/activities is encouraged.

3. Effective coordination shall be established with all other functional commissions and with the Economic and Social Council. The Commission should concentrate, in particular, on working closely with the Commission on Sustainable Development and with the Trade and Development Board of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. Methods to be employed to enhance these linkages should include the following:

(a) Closer communication should be established between the bureaux of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and the Commission on Sustainable Development as well as with other bureaux of the functional commissions, as appropriate;

(b) Regular communication should take place between the secretariats/offices servicing the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Commission on Sustainable Development and the Trade and Development Board;

(c) The outcome of the meetings of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development should continue to be made available to the States Members of the United Nations, including through briefings to delegations in Geneva and New York by the Bureau and secretariat of the Commission;

(d) The outcome of the meetings of the Commission should be shared for information purposes with all relevant functional commissions and other relevant United Nations bodies.

4. The coordination between the Commission and other relevant United Nations bodies, including the regional commissions, should be improved and made more effective.

5. The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development shall continue to serve as the secretariat of the Commission. The Commission should make maximum use of the expertise that the secretariat of the Conference can offer, while also drawing, as appropriate, on expertise from elsewhere in the United Nations system, including the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and relevant specialized agencies.

6. The membership of the Commission is to be reduced from fifty-three to thirty-three with the following geographical distribution: eight members from African States; seven members from Asian States; six members from Latin American and Caribbean States; four members from Eastern European States; and eight members from Western European and other States. The term of office is to be four years.

B. Committee for Development Planning

7. The Committee for Development Planning shall be renamed the Committee for Development Policy and shall continue to be a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council.

8. The Committee shall comprise twenty-four independent experts with a good mix of expertise, who are to be drawn from the fields of economic development, social development and environmental protection, in order to avoid the need to engage the assistance of consultants and so as to reflect an adequate geographical and gender balance. Membership should include those who are able to contribute on emerging issues and to the multilateral process. The experts should be nominated by the Secretary-General, after consultation with interested Governments, and approved by the Economic and Social Council. The term of office is to be three years.

9. The Committee shall continue the triennial review of the status of the least developed countries and shall meet on this issue once every three years.

10. The Economic and Social Council should decide on an appropriate programme of work for the Committee. In January/February of each year, the Council, at the time of deciding the themes for its substantive session, should advise the Committee about the theme(s) to be considered at the annual session of the Committee, which is not to exceed five working days and is to be held in April/May. The Committee shall submit its report to the Council at its substantive session in July. The report shall also include the proposals of the Committee to the Council concerning its programme of work for the following year, for consideration and approval at the next organizational session of the Council in January/February.

11. The General Assembly, the Secretary-General and the subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council may also propose, through the Council, issues for consideration by the Committee.

12. The dissemination of information on the work of the Committee should be improved, including, through the establishment of an Internet web site and through a presentation by its Bureau on the outcome of its deliberations.

13. In undertaking its responsibilities, the Committee should, in addition to holding its formal meetings, explore the scope for effective preparations for its deliberations via informal networking arrangements. The Secretariat should provide assistance in this regard.

C. Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development

D. Committee on Natural Resources

14. The two committees shall be merged into a single expert body, to be named the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development, which shall serve as a subsidiary body of the Economic and Social Council.

15. The Committee should comprise, with due attention to geographical representation and gender balance, two sub-groups of twelve experts nominated by Governments and approved by the Economic and Social Council. One sub-group should deal with issues relating to energy, the other with issues relating to water resources. The geographical distribution is to be as follows: six members from African States, five members from Asian States, four members from Latin American and Caribbean States, three members from Eastern European States and six members from Western European and other States. The term of office is to be four years.

16. The Committee shall meet biennially for two weeks on the understanding that the days available should be divided evenly in a flexible manner between the two sub-groups.

17. Upon the recommendation of both or either of the expert groups of the Committee, the Economic and Social Council may decide modalities for the establishment of ad hoc expert groups, when necessary, to consider issues relating to minerals.

18. In addition, the General Assembly may invite the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the regional commissions to consider effective ways to address, within their respective areas of competence, relevant aspects of this issue.

19. In formulating its programme of work, to be presented to the Economic and Social Council for consideration and decision, the Committee should take into full account the multi-year programme of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development so as to ensure that its own programme of work will be structured in a manner that could enable it to contribute to the work of the Commission. The Council, in considering and deciding on the programme of work of the Committee, should ensure the special relationship between the Committee and the Commission and a coherence between their respective programmes of work.

For its part, the Commission is requested to consider which aspects of its multi-year programme of work the Committee can usefully address.

20. The Committee should maintain close links with the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, as appropriate.

ANNEX II

Functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council with specific responsibilities for the follow-up to the major United Nations conferences

1. The General Assembly, in its resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, mandated a review by the Economic and Social Council of the functional commissions of the Council. In recent years, the functional commissions have taken an interest in reviewing their own working methods and should continue to do so, benefiting from the experience gained. Each commission should be encouraged to adopt practices best suited to its mandate and responsibilities. In this respect, the following general suggestions and recommendations are provided by the Council to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the functional commissions.

A. Working methods

2. Bearing in mind the interlinkages of issues and their cross-cutting nature, there is a need for the functional commissions to strengthen their coordination, while paying careful attention to the mandates and terms of reference of each commission. The Economic and Social Council has to play a key role in this process. In this context, adoption of a multi-year thematic programme for the functional commissions responsible for follow-up to the major United Nations conferences can be helpful.

3. For those functional commissions that have more than one theme for discussion, sufficient time should be allocated for each of the priority themes so as to enable Member States to have focused and in-depth discussions, bearing in mind the interlinkages between the priority themes.

4. Inter-sessional meetings can help to focus the work of a commission by identifying key elements to be discussed and important problems to be addressed within a specific item pertaining to that work. These meetings should contribute to the preparations for the meeting of a functional commission, but should not be a substitute for intergovernmental debates in the context of the meeting of the commission itself.

5. Meetings hosted and funded by Governments can also provide useful inputs to the work of functional commissions, in relation to their respective programmes of work.

6. The work of the commissions should be organized in such a way as to enable agenda items that may lead to negotiated outcomes to be introduced early, so that there is sufficient time for informal consultation on the outcomes.

7. To avoid duplication or overlapping, the functional commissions may be encouraged to request, through the Economic and Social Council, as appropriate, that another functional commission be charged to look into an issue under consideration by the commission making the request, without overloading the programme of work of the other commission. The functional commissions may also be encouraged to request, through the Council, as appropriate, additional inputs from other functional commissions on issues of interest to the commission making the request.

8. The functional commissions should make better use of panels of experts, which should have balanced representation so as to facilitate consideration of substantive issues. As far as possible, synopses of statements that panellists propose to make should be circulated to Member States sufficiently in advance to facilitate a well-prepared dialogue. Care should be taken to ensure that panel members focus their presentations on the agenda item(s) under discussion and not on a related subject, so that adequate time is available for dialogue. Bureaux should ensure that the time allocated to the intergovernmental debate is adequate.

9. The functional commissions should also explore ways to exchange national experiences and best practices in the implementation of effective conference follow-up, including through voluntary national presentations of country experiences and interactive dialogues. The dialogues should focus, in particular, on lessons learned from national-level conference follow-up. It is also necessary that the Secretariat provide Member States with the highlights of such best practices and lessons learned.

10. Bearing in mind the importance of the general debate in providing useful input for the themes under discussion, the functional commissions should ensure that the debate is focused, adds value and contributes to action-oriented outcomes of the session.

11. The functional commissions must ensure that they add value to the process of implementing the programmes of action adopted by the major global conferences. The commissions should therefore focus on:

(a) Deliberating on the progress achieved and constraints faced as well as action-oriented recommendations on the conference outcomes at the national and international levels;

(b) Fostering the exchange of local, national and regional experiences on implementing conference outcomes;

(c) Reviewing the progress achieved at the national and international levels on specific issues under their multi-year programmes of work through appropriate reporting systems, so as to draw attention to common experiences, successful approaches and areas of particular difficulty and to identify new and emerging issues that require priority attention;

(d) Producing clear, concise and action-oriented outcomes of their deliberations.

12. The voluntary submission of national information, including, for example, information in the form of periodic communications or national reports by Governments, represents a valuable contribution to the follow-up to and review of the implementation of the recommendations of relevant conferences. The Economic and Social Council should reiterate its request to the Secretary-General to prepare a standardized and simplified format, which could be used by Governments in preparing information on a single subject or on clusters of subjects.

13. The functional commissions should mainstream a gender perspective in their work by fully implementing agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 of the Economic and Social Council, in particular the sixteenth paragraph thereof.

B. Role of the Bureau

14. The Bureau plays a crucial role in facilitating the preparation for and in ensuring the successful outcome of meetings. The incoming Bureau should preferably be elected immediately after the conclusion of the previous session of the commission, as appropriate. Therefore, early designation by regional groups of their candidatures, especially for the position of Chairman, is important.

15. Inter-sessional meetings of the Bureau are very useful and important in preparing for the upcoming session. Regular and informal open-ended briefings by the Bureau, in conjunction with the Secretariat and the Member States, on the preparation for the session, need to be encouraged further. In order to enable the Bureau to carry out its functions effectively, consideration should be given to providing appropriate financial support, through extrabudgetary contributions, to members of the Bureau, in particular those from the developing countries, so as to enable them to participate in the meetings of the Bureau, in inter-sessional meetings of the commission and in the sessions of the commission itself.

16. The bureaux of the functional commissions, along with the Bureau of the Economic and Social Council, are encouraged to enhance coordination, in particular through regular meetings whenever necessary. In addition to meetings, bureaux should explore the scope for coordination via informal networking arrangements. The Secretariat should provide assistance in this regard.

17. The bureaux of the functional commissions should conduct transparent and open-ended consultations with Member States, with a view to seeking guidance from and ensuring greater involvement of Member States in the preparatory work of the sessions of the commissions.

C. Participation

18. The participation of officials from capitals responsible for the specific follow-up to United Nations conferences, as well as experts, should be encouraged. High-level participation is desirable and will be facilitated by enhancing the quality of deliberations in the functional commissions.

19. The participation of other relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions and other specialized agencies, should be encouraged, where appropriate.

20. The functional commissions entrusted with conference follow-up have benefited from the breadth of expertise of non-governmental organizations and the capacity of those organizations to support the work of the United Nations. Bearing in mind Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, the functional commissions should take into account in their deliberations the full diversity of the views of non-governmental organizations at the national, regional and international levels. Efforts should be made to facilitate the balanced participation of non-governmental organizations from developed and developing countries.

D. Documentation

21. Reports should be concise, coherent and analytical in order to facilitate a focused discussion and a productive outcome.

22. Reports should contain clear and action-oriented recommendations, which would enhance effective implementation of the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences.

23. The availability of reports in electronic format, though desirable, should not substitute for hard-copy reports, which must be made available in a timely manner in all official United Nations languages, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/214 B of 22 December 1997.

24. In the preparatory process, the convening of workshops, seminars, round tables and panel of experts focusing on the priority themes may provide many useful ideas in the preparation of documentation and therefore should be given appropriate consideration. In this context, it is important that efforts be made to facilitate the participation of experts from developing countries in such forums. Consultations with other relevant actors, including non-State actors, when possible and as appropriate, can be useful in the preparation of reports.

25. In the preparation of reports by the Secretariat for the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the subsidiary bodies of the Council, the Secretary-General should continue to make use, when appropriate, of the practice of designating task managers, so that a particular United Nations agency would be responsible for coordinating the response of the entire United Nations system on a given subject, including the formulation of recommendations for future action. All relevant bodies in the United Nations system should be involved in the preparatory process, as appropriate. Where necessary, task forces, reporting to an assigned manager, should be established to facilitate coordination of inputs.

26. An early exchange of views by/with the Secretariat and Member States on the preparation of reports can be helpful in strengthening their content. The Bureau should monitor timely preparation.

27. To allow more time for the Member States to interact with each other, the introduction of the reports by the Secretariat should be kept to the minimum length necessary and, whenever possible, a group of related documents should be introduced together.

28. Recommendations in the reports should focus on steps taken and measures required to enhance the full implementation of conference outcomes at the national and international levels and should clearly identify those actions that are required for a coordinated United Nations system-wide response. In preparing such reports, the Secretariat should draw on the experiences gained by Member States in their national implementation of follow-up to conferences, bearing in mind that the reporting on national implementation of conference outcomes is the responsibility of Governments. In this regard, support provided by the international community should also be included. The Secretariat should also draw on the experience gained by the United Nations system in assisting implementation at the field level, including through the resident coordinator system. Input from the resident coordinator system should be prepared in full consultation with the national Government.

29. The Secretariat is requested to present issues and approaches in a gender-sensitive manner when preparing reports so as to provide the intergovernmental machinery with an analytical basis for gender-responsive policy formulation and to ensure that the intergovernmental machinery is made aware of the decisions and recommendations of the relevant bodies in relation to gender mainstreaming.

30. The functional commissions, at the conclusion of each session, should consider and decide, upon recommendation of their bureaux, whether their outputs might be relevant to the work of other functional commissions and, if so, request the Bureau of the Economic and Social Council to arrange for this material to be brought to the attention of the other commissions in a timely manner. The functional commissions could also consider whether the reports of other functional commissions are relevant to their work and, if so, request the Bureau of the Council to arrange for this material to be made available to them.

E. Outcome/reporting

31. The format of the outcomes of the meetings will vary from one functional commission to another, but the outcome should be focused and concise, should contain concrete recommendations and actions, based on intergovernmental deliberations and negotiations, and should not be intended as a redefinition of the already agreed documents of the major conferences.

32. The Secretariat should produce a consolidated report for the consideration of the Economic and Social Council that looks at linkages between the functional commissions. This report should highlight the key points on which the Council needs to consider taking action.

33. The Economic and Social Council should, for its part, ensure that it reviews the above-mentioned recommendations, concentrating especially on horizontal or cross-cutting issues, with a view, in particular, to ensuring consistency between recommendations presented by different functional commissions. Within the agreed outputs, the functional commissions should clearly identify any recommendations that have coordination, programmatic or budgetary implications for the United Nations.

34. The Member States should be given ample time to negotiate the outcome of the meetings.

35. While recognizing the right of any Member State to introduce draft resolutions or decisions that it deems necessary, the functional commissions should be encouraged to utilize agreed outputs that serve to integrate the particular sectoral concerns that may arise within the overall framework of the follow-up to a global conference, as appropriate.

F. Relations with the Economic and Social Council

36. The Economic and Social Council should focus on improving the effectiveness of the functional commissions, including their role as instruments for conference follow-up, through better working methods and harmonization of their multi-year work programmes. The Council should monitor on a yearly basis the steps taken by the functional commissions in response to Council recommendations on the harmonization of programmes of work. The Council should also monitor annually the way in which its functional commissions mainstream a gender perspective on the basis of the report on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women.

37. The Economic and Social Council should ensure that general discussion in the functional commissions on cross-cutting issues common to major United Nations conferences should be within their respective areas of competence and within their multi-year programmes of work in order to foster the discussion of such issues by the Council and the General Assembly.

38. The Economic and Social Council needs to be fully informed of the coordinating work of the Administrative Committee on Coordination so that it can ensure that the functional commissions are aware in a timely manner of the work of the Committee related to the follow-up to the major global conferences.

G. Interrelationship between functional commissions

39. As agreed in Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/61 of 25 July 1997, cooperation among functional commissions should be supported and enhanced by the Bureau of the Council with the assistance of the respective secretariats of the functional commissions.

H. Relations with the regional commissions and other relevant regional bodies

40. The regional commissions have been given specific mandates for the follow-up to the major global conferences and they have an important role to play in this regard.

41. Bearing in mind the important role of the regional commissions and other regional bodies in implementing the outcome of the major global conferences, their contribution should be reflected in the work of the functional commissions.

ANNEX III Regional commissions

1. The General Assembly, in its resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, mandated a review by the Economic and Social Council of the regional commissions. The commissions, in response to Assembly resolution 50/227 and Council resolution 1996/41 of 26 July 1996, as well as on their own initiative, have carried out reforms with differences in content and scope, in accordance with specificities of each region, aimed at achieving greater relevance, efficiency and effectiveness.

2. The Economic and Social Council welcomes the reform measures undertaken by the regional commissions and encourages them to continue to undertake, as appropriate, under the aegis of their respective inter-governmental bodies, further measures in this regard.

3. The Economic and Social Council recognizes that each regional commission operates in a different economic and institutional environment and that regional commissions should therefore continue to respond to regional needs as reflected in the priorities set by members of the respective commissions.

4. Bearing this in mind, as well as the role of the regional commissions within the United Nations system in their respective regions as mandated in section IV of the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, the following guidance is provided by the Economic and Social Council with respect to improving the contributions and the relevance of the commissions in the reform process of the United Nations, in accordance with the mandates and priorities of each of the commissions.

A. The regional commissions as regional outposts of the United Nations

5. According to regional needs and circumstances, the regional commissions fulfil norm-setting, dissemination and analytical functions as well as undertake operational activities that are complementary and mutually reinforcing. The regional commissions provide an important forum for articulating regional perspectives on global issues and for building consensus within their respective regions. This capacity should be utilized more fully by United Nations bodies, funds and programmes, as appropriate.

6. The linking of the activities of the regional commissions more effectively with the overall activities of the United Nations in the economic and social sectors should be pursued vigorously. The active involvement and participation of the executive secretaries of the commissions, or their representatives, in the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Development Group should be effectively ensured.

7. The undertaking of joint exercises in accordance with their respective mandates and priorities should be encouraged between each of the secretariats of the commissions, the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat and the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the basis of memoranda/letters of understanding and should be reflected in their respective programmes of work.

8. An important role has been given to the regional commissions in the preparations for and follow-up to major United Nations conferences in accordance with their respective mandates and priorities. The Economic and Social Council should provide overall guidance for the work of the regional commissions in this area, bearing in mind the need for a multisectoral approach.

9. The Economic and Social Council welcomes the ongoing exercises in some of the regional commissions on priority-setting and encourages the other regional commissions to carry out similar activities. The involvement of Governments in this process should help the commissions to achieve greater effectiveness and efficiency.

10. Improving coordination of the activities of the regional commissions and various United Nations entities operating at the regional level, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, within their respective mandates and priorities, is particularly important. This should be further addressed through the following concrete measures:

(a) Reactivation of the United Nations Development Programme/regional commissions task force for the purpose of addressing, more effectively, issues of common concern;

(b) Closer consultation of the regional commissions by the United Nations Development Programme during the programming stages of its regional activities, with the Programme considering the commissions to be partners in the undertaking of those activities. The secretariats of the regional commissions should make available to the relevant offices of the Programme, in particular the regional bureaux, their respective programmes of work.

11. The potential for active involvement of the regional commissions in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework should be reviewed in the ongoing pilot phase of the Framework.

B. The regional commissions as part of their respective regional institutional landscapes

12. The role of the regional commissions as part of the institutional landscape of their respective regions calls for close cooperation between the commissions and other relevant regional bodies in order to reinforce synergies and complementarities between their respective programmes of work. The regional commissions are encouraged to intensify their cooperation and regular exchange of information, as determined by their respective intergovernmental bodies, with relevant regional bodies, institutions and networks. When holding meetings with their respective regional bodies and institutions, the regional commissions should ensure that such meetings concentrate on specific issues for which a regional coordinated approach is desirable and reflect the mandates and priorities of the regional commissions.

13. The team leadership role of the regional commissions calls for their holding regular inter-agency meetings in each region with a view to improving coordination among the programmes of work of the organizations of the United Nations system in that region. In this respect, the Economic and Social Council welcomes the efforts by the Secretary-General to improve coordination within the United Nations system, including his proposal of yearly meetings, to be chaired by the Deputy Secretary-General, in each geographical area, among the relevant entities of the United Nations system engaged in regional and intercountry activities. These meetings should be cost-effective and built up on already existing coordination mechanisms and should focus on specific issues requiring coordination at the regional level. The outcome of these meetings should be reported to the Council through the respective intergovernmental bodies of the regional commissions, as appropriate. In this regard, the Council encourages the Secretary-General to take into account these measures in his report under the agenda item on regional cooperation in 1999.

C. Role of the Economic and Social Council

14. The Economic and Social Council should encourage the regular exchange of information, as appropriate, between the bureaux of the regional commissions and its own Bureau. Whenever possible, the participation of the chairpersons of the regional commissions in the relevant deliberations of the Council should be welcomed. The Council should also encourage the participation of the executive secretaries, when feasible, in its high-level debates and should further encourage inputs from the regional commissions in its substantive consideration of global issues with a regional dimension, including through the utilization of the Regional Commissions New York Office. Regular briefings of the Council by the executive secretaries should be organized during the meetings of the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs and the United Nations Development Group. The Council should also encourage better two-way flow of information on activities of the regional commissions, including through simultaneous launching of the economic and social surveys in New York and at the seats of the regional commissions.

15. The Economic and Social Council should also encourage regular interaction between the regional commissions in order for them to share each other's best practices, experiences and concrete achievements. The Council should also encourage interregional co-operation involving two or more regional commissions, as well as the United Nations Development Programme, when appropriate.

16. The Economic and Social Council should promote greater cooperation between the regional commissions and its functional commissions through the regular exchange of information supported by their respective secretariats, as appropriate.

17. The Economic and Social Council should maintain its oversight and coordination role to ensure that decisions taken by the intergovernmental bodies of the regional commissions and the United Nations funds and programmes are complementary and mutually supportive.

18. The Economic and Social Council should encourage the exchange of information and cooperation between the regional commissions and the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization on issues of common interest.

Also on 31 July [meeting 47], the Council adopted resolution 1998/47 [draft: E/1998/L.46] without vote [agenda item 8].

Further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields: modalities for elections

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account its resolution 1998/46 of 31 July 1998 and annexes I to III thereto,

Bearing in mind that the Council, at its resumed substantive session of 1998, will hold elections for the composition of the bodies referred to in annex I to resolution 1998/46, so that these bodies are fully constituted from 1 January 1999,

1. Decides to terminate, as of 31 December 1998, the current membership of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee for Development Planning, the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development;

2. Also decides to hold new elections for the thirty-three members of the Commission on Science and Technology for Development, in accordance with the pattern for regional distribution agreed upon and set forth in paragraph 6 of annex I to Council resolution 1998/46; and following the election of the new members, there shall be a drawing of lots for all seats, whether vacant or not, to stagger the terms of office: sixteen members of the Commission shall serve for a term of two years (four members from African States, three members from Asian States, three members from Latin American and Caribbean States, two members from Eastern European States and four members from Western European and other States) and seventeen members shall serve for a term of four years (four members from African States, four members from Asian States, three members from Latin American and Caribbean States, two members from Eastern European States and four members from Western European and other States;

3. Further decides that, in accordance with previous practice, the terms of office of all the members of the Committee for Development Policy shall be concurrent;

4. Decides that the election of members of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development shall be held every four years and the terms of office of all the members of the Committee shall be concurrent.

The President of the Economic and Social Council, in a 21 August letter [A/52/1022 & Corr.1] to the President of the General Assembly, transmitted the text of resolution 1998/46. The Assembly, by decision 52/491 of 8 September, took note of the letter.

By decision 1998/202 D of 16 December, the Economic and Social Council elected 20 experts to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development and 24 Member States to the Commission on Science and Technology for Development. It also appointed 24 experts to the Committee for Development Policy.

Implementation of resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B

The Secretary-General, responding to Economic and Social Council decision 1997/322 [YUN 1997, p. 1410], submitted a June report on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields [A/53/137-E/1998/66]. The report contained recommendations to promote further implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], as well as information on the status of implementation of those resolutions related to the Council. It also contained information on the status of implementation of those recommendations addressed to the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA, the United Nations Children's Fund and WFP. The Secretary-General also submitted to the Council a report [E/1998/61] containing the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 16 December [meeting 50], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/49 [draft: E/1998/L.54] without vote [agenda item 8].

Implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1996/43 of 26 July 1996 and 1998/46 and 1998/47 of 31 July 1998 and General Assembly resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and on the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions,

1. Notes with appreciation the progress made in implementing the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 and 52/12 B as they relate to the Economic and Social Council;

2. Acknowledges that progress is being made in building a growing partnership between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions;

3. Decides to consider before the end of its organizational session for 1999 the reports of the Secretary-General on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and on the joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the report of the Secretary-General to be submitted in response to paragraph 68 of annex I to General Assembly resolution 50/227.

Chapter II

United Nations financing and programming

The United Nations financial situation remained precarious in 1998 with unpaid assessments to the regular budget at the end of the year amounting to $2,031 million, slightly lower than at the end of 1997. However, a record high 117 Member States paid their regular budget assessments in full. As a result, the chronic string of large deficits in regular budget cash was broken, reducing the need to cross-borrow from peacekeeping accounts. The Secretary-General said that the recent improvements were positive but small, and numerous unstable conditions held hostage the financial future of the Organization.

The General Assembly, in December, adopted revised budget appropriations of $2.5 billion, or a net decrease of $ 5.6 million over initial appropriations, for the 1998-1999 biennium. The Assembly also continued consideration of a revolving credit fund as a means to deal with the chronic financial crisis, net budgeting and the redirection of savings due to administrative and management efficiencies into a Development Account. It established the United Nations International Partnership Trust Fund to provide coordination and programming mechanisms for the 1997 gift valued at $1 billion to the United Nations by Ted Turner, Co-Chairman of Time Warner Inc.

The Committee on Contributions continued its comprehensive review of the methodology for preparing the scale of assessments of Member States' contributions to the UN budget, including factors that determined States' capacity to pay, repeatedly reaffirmed as the fundamental criterion for apportioning the Organization's expenses. The Assembly requested the Committee to meet in special session early in 1999 to consider representations from Member States with respect to the application of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and to report to the resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

The Assembly accepted the financial reports and audited financial statements and audit opinions of the United Nations Board of Auditors for the 1996-1997 biennium. In March, it adopted proposals for improving implementation of the Board's decisions and approved an amendment to additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations.

In December, the Assembly reviewed the programme performance for 1996-1997 and adopted the proposed revisions in the medium-term plan for 1998-2001.

Financial situation

Report of Secretary-General. In a March report [A/52/444/Add.1], the Secretary-General stated that the Organization's cash position was weak, and getting weaker, with unpaid assessments decreasing slowly, while debt to Member States was resistant to change. As a result, the need for cross-borrowing from peacekeeping funds to cover regular budget deficits persisted as the level of funds declined. Of the 1998 regular budget assessments totalling $1.1 billion issued to Member States in December 1997, only 24 Member States had paid in full by the end of January 1998. By the end of February, that number had risen to 39, the same as in 1997. Assessment payments aggregated only $279 million in January, compared to $405 million in 1997, and fell sharply in February to $38 million as against $151 million the previous year. Total receipts for those two months were down from $556 million to $317 million—a 43 per cent drop. The United Nations was informed that the United States expected to make payments of $ 152 million in several instalments, which related to assessments due on 31 January 1997. The protracted payment period was a major contributor to the tight cash situation of the Organization.

By decision 52/496 of 8 September, the Assembly decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Improving the financial situation of the United Nations".

Further reports of Secretary-General. In October [A/53/514], the Secretary-General reported that as at 30 September the financial situation continued to be precarious, with total unpaid assessments above $2.5 billion, including $683 million for the regular budget, $1,802 million for peacekeeping operations and $22 million for the international tribunals. The amount of $683 million outstanding for regular budget assessments was unusually high and resulted in part from the major contributor not paying by 30 September some of the amounts that were legislated for payment in its fiscal year beginning 1 October 1997. As at 30 September, 100 Member States had paid their regular budget contributions in full for 1998 and prior years. By that date, regular budget payments amounted to $877 million for both current and prior years' assessments. The amount collected in 1998 for 1998 assessments was only $727 million, or 67 per cent of total 1998 assessments. Total outstanding peacekeeping assessments at the end of September amounted to $1,701 million, of which the largest contributor owed 61 per cent. Nine of the 14 other largest contributors owed 17 per cent, and 158 of the remaining 170 Member States together owed 22 per cent.

The Secretary-General, in a November update of the financial situation [A/53/514/Add.1], informed the Assembly that a payment of $ 197 million was made by the United States to the regular budget, bringing the total 1998 payments for the regular budget, international tribunals and peacekeeping budgets to $586 million. The amount still outstanding from the United States remained at $1,280 million. As a result of the United States payment, the need to cross-borrow from peacekeeping cash to fund the regular budget in 1998 was reduced. A record high 107 Member States had paid their regular budget assessments in full.

In a later report [A/53/514/Add.2], the Secretary-General presented an end-of-year review of the financial situation, noting that total combined cash available for the regular budget, peacekeeping and the international tribunals was higher at the end of 1998, at $736 million, compared to $669 million a year earlier. Also, unpaid assessments were lower at $2,031 million compared to $2,062 million at the end of 1997. Amounts due to Member States for troops and contingent-owned equipment were slightly lower, at $872 million. Factors responsible for the change in the end-of-year regular budget cash position were the significantly larger payment by the major contributor in the final quarter of 1998 and a record high 117 Member States having paid their regular budget assessment in full, compared to 100 in 1997. As a result, the chronic string of large deficits in regular budget cash was broken in 1998, reducing the need to cross-borrow from peacekeeping accounts. Unpaid peacekeeping assessments at 31 December aggregated $1,594 million, an increase of $20 million compared with the year before, while the level of debt to Member States for troops and contingent-owned equipment totalled approximately $872 million, virtually the same as in previous years.

The European Union (EU), in a 16 November letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/673], reiterated its concern regarding the financial situation of the United Nations and expressed its firm commitment to finding solutions. It said that it was unacceptable that some Member States consistently failed to meet their international obligations. The EU missions in New York would further pursue proposals to tighten procedures for the application of Article 19 of the Charter (see below, under "Contributions") and to put measures in place to serve as a disincentive to countries that might deem it unnecessary to live up to their international obligations, including preferential treatment in procurement throughout the UN system for those countries that were fully up-to-date with their assessed contributions.

On 18 December, by decision 53/458, the Assembly decided that the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee should continue its consideration of the item on improving the financial situation of the United Nations at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

The Assembly, by decision 53/410 of 26 October, took note of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) on its activities during the fifty-second session of the Assembly [A/53/7] and requested the Secretary-General to bring it to the attention of the executive heads of the specialized agencies and of the funds and programmes concerned.

On 18 December, by decision 53/459, the Assembly took note of the statistical report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination on the budgetary and financial situation of organizations of the UN system [A/53/647 & Corr.1] and the relevant paragraphs of ACABQ's report.

Establishment of revolving credit fund

The Secretary-General, in March [A/52/822], further elaborated the proposal, contained in his 1997 programme of reform [YUN 1997, p. 1414], for the establishment of a revolving credit fund as a means to deal with the financial crisis of the Organization. He said that establishment of the fund would constitute a major addition to the financial arrangements set out in the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, which the General Assembly would have to approve. He outlined suggested changes to the Financial Regulations, which related to advances from the fund, treatment of income and retained surpluses.

The Secretary-General invited the Assembly to establish the fund, approve the related revisions to the Financial Regulations and Rules, authorize the Secretary-General to consolidate authorized retained surpluses and decide that the shares of Member States in future retained surpluses would be allocated in accordance with the scale of assessment in force for the budget year in question.

On 6 May, the General Assembly, by decision 52/477 A, requested the Fifth Committee to consider the report of the Secretary-General as soon as possible and make recommendations to the Assembly on the proposal for the establishment of a revolving credit fund.

ACABQ, in November [A/53/645 & Corr.1,2], pointed out that a number of issues pertaining to the functioning of the fund remained unclear, including the rationale for its initial capitalization at $1 billion, given that the total unpaid assessments at 30 September were over $2.5 billion (see above); the time period in which the fund realistically could provide a sufficient source of cash reserve; and the options the Secretary-General would have if Member States failed to respond to his notification or did not indicate the future date of payment of unpaid assessments. The Committee further questioned the link between retained surpluses and the fund. ACABQ was also concerned about the additional burden that would be put on Member States that had already fully met their financial obligations, and the lack of inducement for Member States in arrears to pay them on time and to make voluntary contributions to the fund. ACABQ found that the UN financial crisis resulted from the lack of political will of some Member States to pay their assessed contributions, and thus was a political rather than a financial problem and could not be solved by technical means. The fund's creation might dilute the attention of Member States towards finding that political solution to the financial crisis. The Advisory Committee said that it would comment on the operations and procedures of the fund only when the Assembly pronounced on the principles involved.

By decision 53/454 of 18 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General and the observations of ACABQ, and decided to resume consideration of the question at its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

UN budget

Results-based budgeting

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on results-based budgeting [A/53/500]. The goals of such budgeting would be to facilitate: the legislative process to focus on policy implications of funds to be expended; the identification by Member States of effective and less effective programmes; determination by Member States of what further action should be taken in terms of optimal deployment of resources among the various activities/outputs, subprogrammes and programmes of the programme budget; and enhancement of the management capacity of the Assembly and the Secretariat with regard to effective programme implementation. It would involve a process of improved planning, programming, budgeting, monitoring and evaluation. In that process, the Secretariat would be held accountable for achieving results since the proposed programme budget would be formulated around a set of predefined objectives and expected results, which would justify resource requirements derived from and linked to the outputs required to achieve such results. The actual performance would be measured by objective performance indicators. Individual programme managers would be required to administer their human and financial resources directly using carefully structured delegation of authority. Results-based budgeting would require some changes in the budget format. Programme managers would need to distinguish between objectives for the biennium, expected results, outputs and resource requirements (or inputs), each of which would have to meet strict criteria in terms of formulation and in their relation to each other. Resource requirements in each budget section would be presented at the aggregate level, which would be justified by the outputs required to satisfy the results sought. Detailed information by object of expenditure on the pattern currently available would be provided as supporting material to the budget.

The Secretary-General concluded that a shift to results-based budgeting would facilitate analysis of programme implementation for use in decision-making by Member States and programme managers. It represented continuing efforts to respond to the concerns of Member States by improving the effectiveness of the Organization, using performance indicators to measure expected results. It could not be perfected the first time around, namely, for the preparation of the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001.

Also in October [A/53/500/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented a prototype of two subprogrammes of section 6 (Legal affairs) of the programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Report of ACABQ. In November [A/53/655], ACABQ said that it would undertake a thorough analysis of the Secretary-General's proposals for results-based budgeting when it considered the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 in 1999, and would submit its recommendations to the Assembly's fifty-fourth (1999) session. ACABQ recommended that the Secretary-General present the full proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 in the current format, but that he expand his submission of prototype fascicles, using a results-based budgeting format, to more complex areas, such as political affairs, international cooperation for development, a regional commission and common support services.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/521/Add.I], adopted resolution 53/205 without vote [agenda item 112].

Results-based budgeting

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform",

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on results-based budgeting and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986;
2. Reaffirms also the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, and the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, in particular financial regulation 4.5;
3. Reaffirms further rule 153 of its rules of procedure;
4. Reaffirms paragraph 21 of its resolution 51/221 B of 18 December 1996, in which it decided that no changes to the budget methodology, to established budgetary procedures and practices or to the financial regulations could be implemented without prior review and approval by the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in accordance with agreed budgetary procedures;
5. Stresses that any proposal to be considered by the General Assembly on results-based budgeting should:
  - (a) Address the needs and reflect the characteristics of the United Nations;
  - (b) Not be a budget-reduction exercise;
  - (c) Not be a staff-reduction exercise;
6. Decides that the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 should be prepared and submitted for its consideration in accordance with existing budgetary procedures and processes;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, through the Advisory Committee, the prototype fascicles, as recommended by the Advisory Committee in paragraph 4 of its report;
8. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to it, for consideration at its fifty-fourth session, through the Advisory Committee, a comprehensive and analytical report on his proposal on results-based budgeting, which should include, inter alia, the following elements:

- (a) A comparative study of present budgetary procedures and the proposed results-based budgeting, which should, inter alia, show very clearly the differences and similarities between the two systems;
  - (b) Justification for the proposed change from the present budgetary arrangements to results-based budgeting;
  - (c) Identification of weaknesses in present budgetary procedures and in the Administration that hinder implementation of those procedures;
  - (d) Identification of measures needed to improve current budgetary procedures;
  - (e) An indication of the regulations, procedures and information systems that should be in place if the proposal on results-based budgeting is approved by the General Assembly;
  - (f) Demonstration of the applicability of the concepts of results-based budgeting, including "expected results" and "performance indicators", to all sections of the programme budget of the United Nations;
  - (g) A sharper and clearer definition of the terms "objective", "output", "results", "performance indicator" and "performance measurement";
9. Emphasizes that Member States should continue to be fully involved, as at present, in the budgetary process, in accordance with existing United Nations regulations, rules and budgetary procedures;
  10. Decides that, until the General Assembly decides otherwise, detailed information on post and non-post requirements should continue to be provided to the Assembly and the Advisory Committee to enable them to take appropriate and informed decisions on the budget proposals;
  11. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit to undertake an analytical and comparative study of the experience of the bodies of the United Nations system that are implementing an approach similar to results-based budgeting and to submit its report no later than 31 August 1999;
  12. Requests the Advisory Committee, when preparing its report on the proposed results-based budgeting, to take into account the report referred to in paragraph 11 above;
  13. Recognizes the international, multilateral character of the Organization, and emphasizes that the quantitative results expected should not be the sole basis for the justification of resource requirements;
  14. Stresses the role of Member States in carrying out a thorough analysis of resource allocation to all sections of the programme budget;
  15. Requests the Secretary-General, in the context of the above-mentioned comprehensive and analytical report, to take into account the provisions of the present resolution.

Implementation of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures

In a March note [A/52/852], the Secretary-General, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], reported on the impact of pilot projects on budgetary practices and procedures. He informed the Assembly that one pilot project on delegation of authority was initiated in the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and concentrated mainly on the simplification of recruitment procedures (see PART THREE, Chapter V).

The Assembly, by decision 52/477 A of 6 May, requested the Fifth Committee to consider the Secretary-General's note as soon as possible and to make recommendations to the Assembly.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided to resume consideration of the item at its resumed fifty-third session in 1999 and requested the Secretary-General to submit additional information recommended by ACABQ (decision 53/456).

Budget for 1996-1997

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/7437/Add.1], adopted decision 52/462 without vote [agenda item 115].

Programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997

At its 82nd plenary meeting, on 31 March 1998, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

- (a) Took note of the unspent balance of 9,326,600 United States dollars from the regular budget for the biennium 1996-1997;
- (b) Decided to allocate:
  - (i) An amount of 2.5 million dollars to the Integrated Management Information System for 1998;
  - (ii) An amount of 1.3 million dollars for improving and refurbishing conference facilities;
  - (c) Also decided, in the light of subparagraph (b) above, to retain the balance with a view to financing the activities of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, as requested by the General Assembly in resolution 52/220 of 22 December 1997, taking into account the recommendations of the Secretary-General in this regard.

Budget for 1998-1999

Appropriations

In his first performance report on the 1998-1999 budget [A/53/693], formally presented on 4 December, the Secretary-General identified adjustments to the budget owing to variations in rates of inflation and exchange and in the standards assumed in the calculation of the initial appropriations. Those adjustments yielded a reduction in expenditure of $48,200,900, and a reduction under income of $4.4 million. The revised estimates for the 1998-1999 biennium amounted to $2,484,130,300, compared with the original appropriation of $2,532,331,200 approved in General Assembly resolution 52/221 A [YUN 1997, p. 1434].

The performance report also took into account additional mandates approved by the Assembly and the Security Council, unforeseen and extraordinary items ($2,764,300) and decisions of policy-making organs ($5,326,300).

In December, ACABQ issued its report on the first performance report [A/53/7/Add.8]. It recommended approval of the revised requirements of $2,484,130,300 under the expenditure sections and $359,287,800 under the income sections, resulting in net revised requirements of $2,124,842,500.

In December [A/C.5/53/49], the Secretary-General provided recosting of $195,500 less for formerly outstanding items and recommended that it be reflected in the related adjustments to the revised appropriations for the 1998-1999 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/214, section IV, without vote [agenda item 113].

First performance report

[The General Assembly . . .]

Having considered the first performance report of the Secretary-General on the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms the budgetary process as approved in its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and as reaffirmed in subsequent resolutions;
2. Reaffirms also its resolution 52/220 of 22 December 1997;
3. Takes note of the first performance report of the Secretary-General on the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;
4. Reaffirms the requirement of all Member States to fulfil their financial obligations as set out in the Charter of the United Nations promptly and in full and without imposing conditions;
5. Recognizes the detrimental effect of the withholding of assessed contributions on the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations;
6. Approves a net decrease of 48,200,900 dollars in the appropriations approved for the biennium 1998-1999 and a net decrease of 4,552,500 dollars in the estimates of income for the biennium 1998-1999, to be apportioned among expenditure and income sections as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General;
7. Expresses concern about the fact that a number of sections of the programme budget continue to reflect high levels of vacancy, which could have an impact on the full implementation of the programmes and activities mandated by the General Assembly;
8. Reiterates that the vacancy rate is a tool for budgetary calculations and should not be used to achieve budgetary savings;

9. Also reiterates that a high vacancy rate hampers the delivery of mandated programmes and activities, and stresses that deliberate management decisions to keep a certain number of posts vacant makes the budget process less transparent and the management of staff resources more difficult;

10. Reaffirms that only the General Assembly has the authority to establish and abolish posts in the regular budget;

11. Requests the Secretary-General immediately to intensify recruitment efforts in order to reduce the number of vacancies, particularly in those areas where there are high vacancy rates;

12. Decides that the vacancy rate for posts in the Professional and higher categories should not be more than 5 per cent at the end of the biennium 1998-1999, and in this context requests the Secretary-General to take all the necessary steps to achieve this objective;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance the Office of the President of the General Assembly by taking all the necessary steps to ensure the full implementation of paragraph 1B.10 of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "United Nations reform: measures and proposals", as adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/220, so as to provide transparency and accountability and thereby strengthen the ability of the President of the General Assembly effectively and efficiently to discharge the responsibilities of the Office as deemed appropriate;

14. Decides that the President of the General Assembly, consistent with the approved programme budget, should have full authority to use the funds provided in the budget for the Office, including hospitality and travel and any other requirements for the accomplishment of the official responsibilities;

15. Notes that paragraphs 74 to 80 of its resolution 52/220 defined the procedures to be followed in the proposed programme budget in dealing with activities related to country-specific special rapporteurs whose mandates had expired in 1997 and, as a consequence, there were no individual mandates for inclusion in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999;

16. Reaffirms that, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 79 of its resolution 52/220, no funds directly related to these non-mandated activities could be committed to them pending the consideration of the report on the relationship between the treatment of perennial activities and the use of the contingency fund, as requested in paragraph 78 of its resolution 52/220;

17. Regrets that the provisions of the decision contained in paragraph 79 of resolution 52/220 were not implemented, since the required report was not considered before 1998 activities related to country-specific special rapporteurs were implemented;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to improve the presentation of the budget performance reports by separately reflecting the impact of average vacancy rates on changes related to salaries and common staff costs for each budget section;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to provide an explanation when average vacancy rates are higher than the level approved by the General Assembly;

20. Reiterates the need for the Secretary-General to ensure that resources are utilized strictly for the purposes approved by the General Assembly;

21. Regrets the tendency towards excessive use of consultants, in particular in areas where in-house expertise is available, and requests the Secretary-General to resort in future to the use of consultants only when in-house expertise is not available and in accordance with the existing rules and regulations and relevant resolutions;

22. Reaffirms that changes in mandated programmes and activities are the prerogative of the General Assembly;

Also on 18 December, by resolution 53/214, section XI, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the recosting of outstanding statements of programme budget implications and decided that the recosting and the related adjustments should be reflected in the revised appropriation for the biennium 1998-1999.

On the same date [meeting 93], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.1], adopted resolutions 53/215 A-C without vote [agenda item 113].

A Revised budget appropriations for the biennium 1998-1999

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the biennium 1998-1999 the amount of 2,532,331,200 United States dollars appropriated by it in its resolution 52/221 A of 22 December 1997 shall be adjusted by 5,627,700 dollars as follows:

Financing of appropriations for the year 1999

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the year 1999:

1. Budget appropriations totalling 1,260,537,900 United States dollars and consisting of 1,266,165,600 dollars, being half of the appropriations initially approved for the biennium 1998-1999 in resolution 52/221 A of 22 December 1997, less 5,627,700 dollars, being the reduction approved by the Assembly in resolution A above, shall be financed in accordance with regulations 5.1 and 5.2 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations as follows:

(a) 42,955,681 dollars, consisting of:

(i) 19,176,800 dollars, being half of the estimated income other than income from staff assessment approved for the biennium 1998-1999 by the Assembly in its resolution 52/221 B of 22 December 1997;

(ii) Less 460,600 dollars, being the reduction approved by the Assembly in resolution B above;

(iii) 24,239,481 dollars, being the balance in the surplus account as at 31 December 1997;

(b) 1,217,582,219 dollars, being the assessment on Member States in accordance with its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997 on the scale of assessments for the years 1998 and 1999;

2. There shall be set off against the assessment on Member States, in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 973(X) of 15 December 1955, their respective share in the Tax Equalization Fund in the total amount of 178,491,720 dollars, consisting of:

(a) 162,743,350 dollars, being half of the estimated staff assessment income approved by the Assembly in its resolution 52/221 B;

(b) Less 690,100 dollars, being the estimated decrease in income from staff assessment approved by the Assembly in resolution B above;

(c) Plus 16,438,470 dollars, being the increase in income from staff assessment for the biennium 1996-1997 compared with the revised estimates approved by the Assembly in its resolution 52/213 B of 22 December 1997.

Also on 18 December, by decision 53/458, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the 1998-1999 programme budget at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

Other questions relating to the 1998-1999 programme budget

Net budgeting

The Secretary-General, responding to the General Assembly's request in resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], submitted a September report on net budgeting [A/53/410], the new procedure for presenting the cost of activities shared between the United Nations and other entities, including its impact on the functioning of the entities concerned. The Assembly, by that resolution, had approved appropriations on a net basis for the International Civil Service Commission, the Joint Inspection Unit and conference and security services in Vienna. Subsequently, separate accounts were established to record their gross 1998-1999 approved budgets in order to ensure that no disruptions occurred in their operations. Posts and expenditures were authorized under those accounts corresponding to the number and level of posts approved by the Assembly. The provision of funds to the newly budgeted entities was handled on an equal footing with those of the regular budget, thus allowing the change from gross to net budgeting to be effected smoothly, with no change in their ability to operate.

The Chairman of ACABQ, speaking before the Fifth Committee [A/C.5/53/SR.39], indicated that ACABQ would examine the Organization's experience with net budgeting in the context of its review of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

On 18 December, the Assembly, in resolution 53/214, section III, took note of the Secretary-General's report and endorsed the observations of ACABQ.

New narratives

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], the Secretary-General submitted new narratives for section 26, Public information [E/AC.51/1998/6 (sect. 26)], and section 7A, Economic and social affairs [E/AC.51/1998/6 (sect. 7A) & Corr.1], of the programme budget for 1998-1999.

In June [A/53/16], the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) recommended approval of the new narratives, subject to certain modifications. The Assembly approved them in resolution 53/207 (see below, under "Programme planning and management").

Contingency fund

In a 14 December report [A/C.5/53/48], the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly's Fifth Committee the consolidated statement of programme budget implications and revised estimates falling under the guidelines for the fund adopted by the Assembly in resolution 42/211 [YUN 1987, p. 1098]. The fund had been created by Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024] to accommodate additional expenditures derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget for a biennium.

The Secretary-General stated that the consolidated amount of $3,447,000 was within the available balance of the contingency fund, which, as at December 1997, totalled $18,754,800.

On 18 December, the Assembly, by resolution 53/214, section X, took note of the Secretary-General's report and noted that a balance of $15,307,800 remained in the fund.

Perennial activities and use of the contingency fund

The Secretary-General issued a March report on the relationship between the treatment of perennial activities in the programme budget and the use of the contingency fund [A/C.5/52/42]. The report was submitted in response to General Assembly resolutions 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421] and 44/201 B, section XI [YUN 1989, p. 515]. The Secretary-General recalled that the Assembly, in resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024], had decided that the programme budget should include expenditures related to political activities of a "perennial" nature whose mandates were renewed annually, as well as a contingency fund to accommodate additional expenditures relating to the biennium derived from legislative mandates not provided for in the proposed programme budget. Also, it had defined clearly the relationship between "perennial" activities and the use of the contingency fund. The use of the fund would be for new mandates that would arise subsequent to the preparation of the proposed budget, a practice that had been followed since the 1988-1989 biennium. In the case of human rights activities mandated by the Economic and Social Council, since the 1988-1989 programme budget, they were considered as falling within the concept of "perennial" activities and were approved by the Assembly. They related to special rapporteurs and other fact-finding and investigative bodies established periodically. Country rapporteurs were appointed and/or extended on an annual basis and thematic rapporteurs and working groups for three years. An annex to the report listed the activities financed under Economic and Social Council mandates from 1986 (25) to 1997 (67). The Secretary-General said that from that information it could be seen that the number of such mandates recurred with regularity year after year.

ACABQ, in a December report [A/53/7/Add.9] on the issue, pointed out that the resources appropriated by the Assembly for perennial activities were subject to the approval of their respective mandates and might not be expended unless and until such mandates were approved or renewed. The Committee was informed that for the current biennium, in addition to the Commission on Human Rights, the activities of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and its subsidiary bodies, which were approved annually by the Assembly, were included as perennial activities. ACABQ believed that problems in the interpretation of what a perennial mandate was should be settled by the Assembly and recommended that the Assembly take note of the Secretary-General's report.

By decision 53/463 of 18 December, the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the Secretary-General's report and the related report of ACABQ.

Development Account

During 1998, the General Assembly and ACABQ considered the Secretary-General's proposal, made in the context of his programme of reform [YUN 1997, p. 1389], to reduce non-programme costs and subsequently redirect the savings into a development account. By resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], the Assembly had decided to establish, in the programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium, a development account and requested the Secretary-General to submit a report identifying the sustainability of that initiative, as well as modalities of implementation, the specific purposes and the associated performance criteria for the use of such resources.

Reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs

In a February report [A/52/7/Add.10], ACABQ, commenting on the December 1997 report of the Secretary-General on reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs [YUN 1997, p. 1437], said that his definition and determination of those costs as a percentage of the budget were flawed. In the first place, the concept of "non-programme" was not applicable to the UN regular budget since all activities for which resources were requested under the programme budget had to be programmed, the majority of which were service oriented, making it difficult to justify the activities mentioned in the Secretary-General's report.

The costs put forward and the methodology for calculating the 38 per cent of the budget they were supposed to represent also appeared to be technically unsound and arbitrary. Therefore, a case had not been made that administrative expenses constituted 38 per cent of the programme budget, nor that a one-third reduction in those expenses would yield cumulative savings of $ 195 million. Moreover, that target could not be achieved since the approved 1998-1999 budget was less than that indicated in the Secretary-General's report, and, since staff costs accounted for 70 to 80 per cent of the regular budget, savings of the amount suggested by the Secretary-General would inevitably affect hundreds of posts.

While welcoming greater efficiency, ACABQ felt that the measures proposed in the Secretary-General's report lacked sufficient detail, and those envisaged for the future should have been clearly delineated against those already included in the 1998-1999 programme budget.

ACABQ proposed setting aside the concept and theory of what constituted programme and non-programme costs and to concentrate on specific measures to increase efficiency and confirm the results of new measures, as well as previous ones. It recommended a timetable for a phased implementation of plans for greater efficiency and re-deployment of related savings to the Development Account. The Secretariat would make specific proposals for the information of Member States, and actual results of efficiency initiatives should be to the Assembly's satisfaction before approving the related savings for re-deployment. Savings from currency fluctuation and inflation were not to be distributed to the Development Account. The issue of savings that might accrue during the 1998-1999 biennium would have to be treated separately from those proposals. Annexed to the report was a phase-in plan for the deployment of efficiency savings to the Development Account.

On 31 March, the General Assembly, by decision 52/464, deferred consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs, together with the related ACABQ report, until the second part of its resumed fifty-second session, pending the submission of the detailed report of the Secretary-General on the sustainability of the Development Account, the modalities of its implementation, the specific purposes and associated performance criteria for the use of resources as requested by the Assembly in resolution 52/12 B.

Utilization of the Development Account

Note of Secretary-General (April). In an April note [A/52/848], issued pursuant to resolution 52/12 B, on the utilization of the Development Account, the Secretary-General recalled that the objective of the Account would be to assist: the promotion of development of developing countries in the context of globalization and increasing interdependence; the understanding by the international community of emerging challenges and persistent problems; and developing countries in the implementation of global programmes and platforms of action.

The Account would be part of the regular budget, with the Secretary-General presenting proposals for its use for each biennium along with budget proposals for that biennium. Proposals for the utilization of the amount of $12.7 million already appropriated for the Account under the 1998-1999 programme budget would be submitted to the Assembly. Funds appropriated for the Account would be treated as a multi-year project and any unexpected balance at the end of the biennium would be carried forward to succeeding bienniums. The Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs would serve as the Programme Manager and, in consultation with the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs, would formulate proposals for utilization of the funds in the Account. Regular review, evaluation and monitoring of programme delivery would be undertaken and an annual report submitted to the General Assembly.

The Assembly, by decision 52/477 A of 6 May, requested the Fifth Committee to consider at its resumed session in May the Secretary-General's note on the utilization of the Development Account and make recommendations to the Assembly.

Report of ACABQ (May). In a May report [A/52/894], ACABQ pointed out that the Secretary-General's note was not the detailed report on the subject requested by the Assembly in resolution 52/12 B and was only an outline reflecting previous information. The Advisory Committee also pointed out that real productivity gains should not be the result of a cost avoidance or postponement exercise. It felt that the target of $200 million that the Secretary-General intended to achieve in the 2002-2003 biennium was overambitious as it had not been demonstrated that administrative expenditures constituted 38 per cent of the programme budget, nor had it been shown that a one-third reduction in those expenditures would yield the projected savings. Moreover, the current financial situation presented a serious problem for the Secretariat, which was called on to absorb costs of new mandates within existing resources. ACABQ recommended that any balance from appropriations be transferred to a special account at the end of the biennium, so that funds would be available in succeeding bienniums.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/235 without vote [agenda item 116].

Development Account

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 24 of its resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997,

Recalling also its decision 52/477 of 6 May 1998,

Recalling further its resolutions 52/220 and 52/221 A to C of 22 December 1997,

Having before it the report of the Secretary-General on the reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs, and having considered the note by the Secretary-General on the utilization of the Development Account and the reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions thereon,

1. Regrets that the quality of the report of the Secretary-General on the reduction and refocusing of non-programme costs and the note by the Secretary-General on the utilization of the Development Account did not fully meet the requirements of resolution 52/12 B and did not provide substantive information or a clear direction to enable it to take a final decision at this time, and also regrets the failure to issue the document on the exact use of the 13 million United States dollars already allocated to the Development Account;

2. Emphasizes that the efficiency measures should not adversely affect the full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities;

3. Also emphasizes that the efficiency measures should not lead to a process of budgetary reduction and should not result in the involuntary separation of staff;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly no later than 31 July 1998, at the third part of its resumed fifty-second session, through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the detailed report on the sustainability of the Development Account, the modalities of its implementation, the specific purposes and the associated performance criteria for the use of resources, requested in its resolution 52/12 B and decision 52/477, and to include in the report the following elements:

(a) Identification of the types and areas of efficiency measures to be implemented throughout the Secretariat and estimates of the amounts and percentages of the possible savings to be achieved;

(b) An analysis of the impact of such efficiency measures on the staffing levels of the Organization and on the delivery of mandated programmes and activities;

(c) The sustainability of the Development Account and its activities beyond the year 2003;

(d) Specific proposals on the programmatic objectives and direction of the Development Account in accordance with the priorities set out in the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, taking into consideration the complementarity of the activities of the Development Account with other relevant sections of the programme budget;

5. Notes that the amount of 200 million dollars suggested by the Secretary-General is an indicative target to fund the Development Account and that no time-frame should be specified for reaching that target;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals on the use of the funds available in section 34, Development Account, of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 to the relevant intergovernmental bodies, as soon as possible and not later than 31 July 1998;

7. Decides to return to the issues related to the Development Account for further consideration and appropriate action, based on the detailed report referred to in paragraph 4 above, at the third part of its resumed fifty-second session.

Reports of Secretary-General (August and September). In August, in response to resolution 52/235, the Secretary-General submitted a report [A/52/1009] in which the issues raised by ACABQ were addressed. It discussed the concept of the Development Account, the question of sustainability, modalities for identifying gains and transferring funds and for expenditures from the Account, as well as purposes and performance criteria for the use of resources, including the impact that improved productivity could have on staffing levels and requirements and on delivery of mandated programmes and activities. The report contained proposals for the procedures to approve projects for the current and future bienniums. Annexed to the report was information on the major types of efficiency measures and areas for possible utilization of the Development Account.

The Secretary-General said that there was an opportunity to simplify administrative processes of the Organization and to adopt technological improvements that would release resources for enhanced programme delivery. His premise was that gains achieved in streamlining and simplification of processes and procedures would become a permanent part of the Development Account. He recommended that, in their determination of the use of redeployed resources, Member States consider funding development projects and activities in the economic and social sectors, which could include research and analysis, technical cooperation, advisory services and intergovernmental and regional cooperation.

The Secretary-General stated that the Development Account would be sustained in accordance with current budgetary practices, whereby the level of appropriation that remained in certain budget sections after the first performance report would provide the base for that section in the subsequent proposed programme budget. The cumulative amounts transferred to the Account for each biennium would form the maintenance base for an appropriation under the Account in subsequent bienniums. In the budget for 2000-2001, the goal was to redeploy resources to development activities and to start those activities upon approval of the budget. The Secretary-General intended to submit proposals for productivity gains, which, once achieved, would be verified to ensure they did not impact on programme delivery. The Secretary-General would then include them in the performance report, which would be sent for approval and resource redeployment. The total level of the programme budget would not change as a result of the exercise. It was estimated that approximately $40 million could be targeted for redeployment for the 2000-2001 biennium.

On the issue of staffing, the Secretary-General indicated that he had no intention of involuntarily separating staff. Yet, it was anticipated that a different mix of qualifications would be required, so an investment in retraining would be made. He pointed out that reductions in staffing requirements where savings were to be achieved could be met through a combination of redeployment and natural attrition. As to modalities of expenditure, he reiterated his earlier recommendations on the formulation of proposals within the framework of the Executive Committee on Economic and Social Affairs for submission to the relevant intergovernmental bodies. On completion, projects would be reviewed with performance indicators, and an annual report would be submitted to the General Assembly.

Report of ACABQ (September). In its comments on the above report, ACABQ, in September [A/53/7/Add.I], agreed with the Secretary-General's proposal that, once an efficiency gain was achieved, the relevant transfer would be made and approved by the Assembly, becoming a permanent part of the maintenance base of the budget section related to the Development Account. However, it was of the opinion that that maintenance base should not be re-costed. While the intention was to transfer amounts to the Account in each biennium until the cumulative base reached the ultimate level determined by Member States, ACABQ stated that the degree to which efficiency measures could continue to lead to quantifiable resources would be affected by a prolongation of current budgetary constraints. In addition, gains from currency fluctuation and inflation would not be available for transfer to the Account, nor would savings due to underexpen-diture resulting from postponed activities or the inability to carry out mandates. ACABQ also agreed with the modalities for identifying gains and transferring funds, the Secretary-General's proposal on a multi-year project concept, and that any balance of appropriation left over at the end of a biennium could be carried forward to the succeeding biennium. However, once transferred into the Account, those amounts would not be subject to currency and inflation adjustment. Information on unspent balances should be supplied in the context of performance reports.

On the issue of staffing levels and programme delivery, ACABQ recommended that comprehensive information should be provided in the context of normal reporting procedures, namely, in the proposed programme budget and performance reports. It realized that, as the programme was just beginning, reporting was on an ad hoc basis, and it was of the opinion that for the 1998-1999 biennium consideration of the utilization of savings achieved should be on an ad hoc basis.

The Committee suggested that for clarity a more appropriate title for section 34 of the programme budget would be "Supplementary development activities" instead of "Development Account".

Project proposals for utilization of the Account

In July [E/1998/81], the Secretary-General, in response to Assembly resolution 52/235, submitted proposals to the Economic and Social Council for utilization of the Account, drawn up within the Assembly's appropriation of $13,065,000 to maximize impact, and in the context of the 1998-2001 medium-term plan.

Those proposals related to the promotion of electronic commerce (United Nations Conference on Trade and Development); capacity-building in economic and social policy analysis in Africa through the networking of expertise (Economic Commission for Africa); extension of access of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to the Mercure satellite telecommunication system for interconnectivity in environmental information and data (United Nations Environment Programme); computer and telecommunications system for international and national drug control (United Nations International Drug Control Programme); capacity-building and networking for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994] in least developed countries (United Nations Centre for Human Settlements); research network for global policy analysis (Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA)); on-line development centre (DESA); and activities to implement Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672], the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1114] and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [ibid., p. 1170] (DESA). For each proposed project anticipated duration and activities were indicated.

The recommendations for the utilization of the development dividend for the 1998-1999 biennium were built around the concept of networking for development.

The Council, in decision 1998/296 of 31 July, stated that it looked forward to the outcome of the consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the utilization of the development dividend under section 34 of the 1998-1999 programme budget by relevant intergovernmental bodies.

In September [A/53/374], the Secretary-General provided further details on proposals made to the Council on projects for financing from the Account in the context of the 1998-1999 programme budget. In addition to previously provided information on objectives and proposed activities, the report included background information, relationship of proposals to the medium-term plan, expected results, indicators, duration and resource requirements for each project.

ACABQ, in October [A/53/7/Add.4], stated that it expected that future submissions by the Secretary-General would contain sufficient and specific information to confirm that projects were regional and/or interregional and were complementary. The term "complement" needed to be clearly defined as to whether it applied to activities funded from the regular budget only or whether it also covered extrabudgetary activities. ACABQ pointed out that use of the Account to fund extrabudgetary activities would involve the transfer of resources from the regular budget. The Committee recalled that the Assembly had appropriated $13,065,000 in the 1998-1999 programme budget for the Account, and noted that the total resource requirements for the projects amounted to $12,305,000, leaving a balance of $760,000. It was the view of ACABQ that it was unlikely that the total amount would be programmed and fully utilized during the 1998-1999 biennium. In that case, the procedure for carry-over would be applied and the proposed programme budget for 2000-2001 should include proposals for the full use of resources under the Account, including the balance carried over. ACABQ felt that there was a need for further refinement and precision in delineating the indicators to measure the results of each project, including a description of the situation before implementation of the project, in order to better measure results. ACABQ was informed that the resource requirements did not involve staff costs and the question of ongoing maintenance of projects was not addressed; therefore, it expected that future reporting would contain fully costed project proposals.

The Chairman of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, in October [A/C.5/53/30], informed the Chairman of the Fifth Committee that the Secretary-General's report [A/53/374] was considered by the Second Committee on 19 and 21 October. He annexed to his letter relevant sections of the Committee's summary records.

On 11 November [A/53/664], Indonesia, on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, indicated that they had considered the Secretary-General's report and had decided that the highest amount of resources appropriated under section 34 should be used to fund new projects clearly related to development priorities set in the medium-term plan and for South-South cooperation activities. The Group identified criteria to guide the formulation of those projects. It requested the Secretary-General to review and reformulate, as appropriate, his project proposals to ensure that they conformed with those criteria and to prepare a second report, not later than March 1999, on the utilization of the Development Account for the 1998-1999 biennium, taking into account the views of the Group of 77 and China.

On 18 December, the General Assembly, by decision 53/464, deferred consideration of the proposals of the Secretary-General and related actions recommended by ACABQ until the first part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

On 15 December, the Assembly, by decision 53/442, took note of the September report of the Secretary-General.

Revised estimates resulting from Economic and Social Council decisions

The Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee in September [A/C.5/53/2] revised estimates resulting from resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council at its 1998 substantive session. He indicated that those resolutions and decisions would result in a reduction of the requirements against the 1998-1999 appropriation in the amount of $152,900 and would be reflected in the first performance report for the 1998-1999 biennium (see above).

Subvention to UNIDIR

In November [A/C.5/53/29], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly for approval the recommendation of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) for a subvention of $213,000 from the regular UN budget to the Institute's 1999 work programme.

The Assembly approved the subvention on 18 December in resolution 53/214, section I, on the understanding that no additional appropriation would be required under section 2B (Disarmament) of the 1998-1999 programme budget.

Financial arrangements for ICJ dining room

Responding to General Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], the Secretary-General reported on the financial arrangements for the dining room at the International Court of Justice (ICJ) [A/C.5/53/19]. Under the Supplementary Agreement between the United Nations and the Carnegie Foundation concerning the use of the Peace Palace in The Hague, the Netherlands made available to ICJ as from 1 January 1997 enlarged premises, including the dining room. As a result, the annual contribution by the Netherlands to the Foundation was revised to 1,843,582 Netherlands guilders, including operating costs of 40,000 guilders for the dining room. However, the Carnegie Foundation entered into an agreement with a caterer, which called for payment by the Foundation of a management fee plus reimbursement of salaries for catering staff and product costs. The Foundation was also responsible for other operating costs. Although it was estimated that with adequate usage the revenues would be sufficient to absorb the operating costs, the dining room suffered a deficit. The Foundation stated that, if the situation did not improve, it might be obliged to re-evaluate the arrangements and propose alternatives.

By decision 53/462 of 18 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report, with the understanding afforded by the Secretariat that the United Nations provided no subsidy in any form for the operation of the dining room.

Unforeseen and extraordinary expenses

Under certain conditions, the Secretary-General was authorized by the General Assembly, in biennial resolutions, to enter into commitments for activities of an urgent nature, without reverting to the Assembly for approval of the required resources.

In his first performance report on the 1998-1999 programme budget [A/53/693], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that, under the terms of resolution 52/223 [YUN 1997, p. 1438] on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses, he had entered into commitments totaling $2,764,300, of which $2,520,800 was for activities he had certified as relating to the maintenance of peace and security, $223,600 for commitments certified by the ICJ President and $19,900 for the UN share in interorganizational security measures.

Programme budget outline for 2000-2001

In an August report [A/53/220], the Secretary-General presented a proposed programme budget outline for 2000-2001, which contained preliminary estimates of resources; an indication of priorities; an outline of real growth, positive or negative, compared with previous budgets; and the size of the contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources. Preliminary estimates for the 2000-2001 biennium, expressed at 1998-1999 rates, amounted to $2,468.5 million.

The Secretary-General noted that in the proposed programme budget for 1998-1999, in contrast to prior practice, new posts were fully funded; therefore no adjustment was required to make full biennial provision for 2000-2001. Furthermore, a provision of $1.9 million relating to one-time costs in 1998-1999 for the interim secretariat for the United Nations convention to combat desertification and the Assembly's special session on the world drug problem would not be required. In accordance with prior practice, political missions were omitted from the proposed outline. Current appropriations for 1998-1999 special political missions amounting to $61.9 million were therefore excluded. The extension of such missions or the establishment of new ones were traditionally secured through additional appropriations voted by the Assembly after the preparation of programme budget proposals; the Secretary-General did not feel that the practice was satisfactory. The need to incorporate relatively large unspecified and unpredictable resource provisions within the budget after the adoption of the budget outline and midway through the biennium undercut the basic purpose of the outline exercise. The Secretary-General believed that a better solution, which adequately financed mandated political missions as needs arose, was required. He said that a number of mandates existed for the convening of major conferences and special sessions during 2000-2001, which resulted in projected requirements of $20 million in new resources.

The programme budget for 2000-2001 would be subjected to the most intense scrutiny within the Secretariat to identify an anticipated economy of $20 million. The Secretary-General was confident that the objectives of the programmes included in the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 (see below) could be pursued in 2000-2001 within the overall level of resources included in the proposed outline.

The preliminary estimates for 2000-2001 represented a reduction of $63.8 million, or 2.5 per cent, as compared with the initial appropriations for 1998-1999.

As to the size of the contingency fund, the Secretary-General noted that it was set at 0.75 per cent of the overall level of resources. Therefore, he recommended that the level be set at $18.5 million for the 2000-2001 biennium.

Report of CPC. Having discussed the proposed programme budget outline in August [A/53/16], CPC recommended that the Assembly further consider all aspects of the Secretary-General's proposed programme budget outline, taking into account the views expressed by Member States and the following observations: preliminary estimates should be adequate for full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities; the size of the contingency fund should be 0.75 per cent of the budget outline; priorities should be those proposed by the Secretary-General, as approved by the Assembly in resolution 51/219 [YUN 1996, p. 1306]; the preliminary indicative allocation of resources, provisions for anticipated savings and provisions for the Development Account (see above) should be further examined on a priority basis; and arrangements for financing special political missions and treatment of currency fluctuations and inflation should be examined by the Assembly as a matter of priority in the light of the report of the Secretary-General and recommendations of ACABQ [YUN 1997, p. 1416].

Report of ACABQ. ACABQ, in a December report [A/53/718 & Corr.1], pointed out that $20 million related to compensating economies was excluded from the outline. The Secretary-General's report did not specify the nature of such economies, nor did it indicate the programmes of activities or objects of expenditures that would be subjected to the most intense scrutiny by the Secretariat. ACABQ concluded that the figure was arrived at arbitrarily. It was also of the opinion that the place to reflect the results of such efforts should be in the proposed programme budget and/or the performance reports, where they could be explained and justified in detail, together with an indication of any impact on mandated activities.

ACABQ concurred with the Secretary-General's proposal on the level of the contingency fund and its utilization.

ACABQ was informed that should the revised rates for 1998-1999 be used, the preliminary estimates for the 2000-2001 biennium would amount to $2,439 million. It pointed out that had the Secretary-General included in the preliminary estimates for 2000-2001 a provision of $110 million for special political missions and maintained a provision of $19.8 million, instead of deducting that amount for compensating economies, the preliminary estimates for 2000-2001 would have amounted to $2,568.8 million at revised 1998-1999 rates. ACABQ therefore recommended that the Assembly adopt a preliminary estimate of $2,568.8 million at revised 1998-1999 rates for the 2000-2001 biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/521/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/206 without vote [agenda item 112].

Proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 2000-2001

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to submit in off-budget years an outline of the proposed programme budget for the following biennium,

Reaffirming also section VI of its resolution 45/248 B of 21 December 1990,

Reaffirming further rule 153 of its rules of procedure,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 2000-2001, the related recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Having considered also the report of the Secretary-General on issues related to additional expenditures, including those relating to the maintenance of peace and security, inflation and currency fluctuation, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

2. Reaffirms that the proposed programme budget outline shall contain an indication of the following:

(a) Preliminary estimate of resources to accommodate the proposed programme of activities during the biennium;

(b) Priorities reflecting general trends of a broad sectoral nature;

(c) Real growth, positive or negative, compared with the previous budget;

(d) The size of the contingency fund expressed as a percentage of the overall level of resources;

3. Also reaffirms that the outline should provide a greater level of predictability of resources required for the following biennium, promote greater involvement of Member States in the budgetary process and thereby facilitate the broadest possible agreement on the programme budget;

4. Notes that the budget outline is a preliminary estimate of resources;

5. Reaffirms that the budget proposals of the Secretary-General should reflect resource levels commensurate with mandates for their full, efficient and effective implementation;

6. Emphasizes the need for Member States to provide adequate resources for the full implementation of all mandated programmes and activities;

7. Decides that the anticipated reduction of 19.8 million United States dollars related to compensating economies should not be included in the proposed programme budget outline for the biennium 2000-2001;

8. Recognizes, furthermore, that efforts to achieve efficient utilization of resources constitute an ongoing process and should not adversely affect the implementation of mandated programmes and activities;

9. Endorses the proposal of the Secretary-General in his report on additional expenditures, and the related recommendations of the Advisory Committee in its report, that provision should be made in the budget outline for expenditures for special political missions related to peace and security expected to be extended or approved in the course of the biennium;

10. Decides that the preliminary estimate of resources for the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 should therefore include a provision for special political missions, in the amount of 86.2 million dollars at revised 1998-1999 rates, which should be reflected in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, and that additional requirements shall continue to be treated in accordance with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 41/213;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to prepare his proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 on the basis of a total preliminary estimate of 2,545 million dollars at revised 1998-1999 rates;

12. Decides that the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 shall contain provisions for recosting on the basis of the existing methodology;

13. Reiterates that the priorities for the biennium 2000-2001 as determined by the General Assembly in its resolution 51/219 of 18 December 1996 are the following:

(a) Maintenance of international peace and security;

(b) Promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences;

(c) Development of Africa;

(d) Promotion of human rights;

(e) Effective coordination of humanitarian assistance efforts;

(f) Promotion of justice and international law;

(g) Disarmament;

(h) Drug control, crime prevention and combating international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations;

14. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to submit, in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, the total amount of resources that he should have at his disposal, from all sources of financing, in order to implement fully all mandated programmes and activities;

15. Decides that the contingency fund shall be set at the level of 0.75 per cent of the preliminary estimate, namely at 19.1 million dollars, and that this amount is in addition to the overall level of the preliminary estimate and is to be used in accordance with the procedures for the use and operation of the contingency fund.

Contributions

Unpaid assessed contributions from Member States to the UN budget totalled $2,031 million at the end of 1998, a marginal decrease from $2,062 million the previous year. Unpaid regular budget assessments were reduced to $417 million at the end of December, a reduction of $147 million compared to 1997.

The number of Member States paying their regular budget assessments in full continued to climb. At the end of 1998, a record number of 117 Member States had done so.

Aggregate peacekeeping assessments outstanding at the end of 1998 totalled $1,594 million, an increase of $20 million over the year before. Aggregated tribunal assessments outstanding amounted to $20 million, an increase of $6 million from the previous year.

Assessments

Committee on Contributions. The Committee on Contributions held its fifty-eighth session in New York from 8 to 26 June [A/58/11]. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 52/215 B [YUN 1997, p. 1444], the Committee reviewed procedural aspects for consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter, whereby a Member State would lose its vote in the Assembly if the amount of its arrears should equal or exceed the amount of its contributions due for the preceding two full years. The Committee noted that any change in the periodicity or timing of the calculation and application of Article 19 could have implications for the procedural aspects of the consideration of requests for exemption and agreed that such implications should be taken into account in the review of any change. The Committee doubted that guidelines for granting requests for exemption could be applied uniformly, since the particular circumstance of each Member State had to be evaluated. It agreed that exemptions should be of limited duration and that requests for extension should be fully reviewed on their own merits. It noted that requests were often received late and with only partial information available. The Committee urged Member States concerned to provide the fullest possible information.

The Committee recognized that, although action on Article 19 alone could not solve the financial problems of the United Nations, there was scope for changing the current procedures for its application, which might have a positive impact. Among measures considered were the semi-annual calculation and application of Article 19, which would require a change in financial regulation 5.4 with regard to the definition of "arrears". That would reduce the maximum amount accruable by Member States before imposition of Article 19 to an amount closer to the two years' contributions provided for in the Charter. If adopted, the suitable definition of "preceding two full years" would be the preceding 24 months.

The Committee also discussed the proposal to examine an annual calculation and application of Article 19 with a full year beginning on 1 July; and comparison of arrears with the amount actually assessed and payable for the preceding two full years for the purpose of comparing "net" arrears with "net" assessments. The Committee agreed to consider at its next session the proposal for calculating and applying Article 19 at the beginning of each calendar year and at the beginning of the peacekeeping financial period on 1 July. It also discussed the possibility of indexation of arrears, to take into account the loss of purchasing power of the amounts in question, and restricting access for Member States in arrears to recruitment and procurement opportunities offered by the Organization.

The Committee took up the cases of the Comoros and Tajikistan. The Committee agreed that the failure of the Comoros to pay the necessary amounts was due to conditions beyond its control and recommended to the Assembly that it be permitted to vote through the fifty-third session of the Assembly. The Committee noted Tajikistan's efforts to pay some of its outstanding contributions and its commitment to paying its outstanding obligations in full. The economic situation continued to be very serious and the Government's limited revenue was also substantially committed to implementation of recently concluded peace agreements. Its failure to pay was due to conditions beyond its control; therefore the Committee recommended that Tajikistan be permitted to vote through the fifty-third session.

The Committee noted that, at the conclusion of its 1998 session, 23 Member States were in arrears in the payment of their assessed contributions under Article 19 and had no vote in the Assembly: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Georgia, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Iraq, Kyrgyzstan, Niger, Republic of Moldova, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Somalia, Togo, Vanuatu, Yugoslavia. The Committee also noted that the Comoros, Liberia and Tajikistan were in arrears but were allowed to vote pursuant to decision 51/454 B [YUN 1997, p. 1442]. The Committee also noted that eight Member States had availed themselves of the opportunity of paying the equivalent of $2.8 million in currencies other than the United States dollar.

By decision 53/406 A of 7 October, the Assembly endorsed the conclusions of the Committee on Contributions that the failure of the Comoros and Tajikistan to pay the minimum amount necessary to avoid the application of Article 19 was attributable to conditions beyond their control and, as a result, they should be permitted to vote throughout the fifty-third session. On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 53/406 B, having considered the requests of Georgia [A/C.5/53/22] and Guinea-Bissau [A/C.5/53/21], decided, without prejudice to Article 19 and rule 160 of its rules of procedure, to grant a temporary waiver of three months, beginning on 7 October, to the two Governments and to request the Committee to review their cases at its next session.

During the year, the Secretary-General reported to the President of the Assembly on payments made by certain Member States to reduce their arrears below the amount specified in Article 19, so that they could vote in the Assembly. As at 4 February [A/52/785 & Corr.1], 39 Member States were in arrears. As at 9 September [A/53/345], 19 Member States remained below the gross amount owed for the preceding two full years (1996-1997). Of those, 7 later made the necessary payment between 15 September and 2 October [A/53/345/Add.1-6]. Exceptions to the application of Article 19 were requested by Bosnia and Herzegovina on 8 October [A/C.5/53/23], the Congo on 12 October [A/C.5/53/24] and Iraq on 19 October [A/C.5/53/28].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 30 November [meeting 72], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/464/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/36 A without vote [agenda item 118].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Noting the requests of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of the Congo and Iraq for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its decision 53/406 B of 7 October 1998, by which it decided to grant to Georgia and to Guinea-

Bissau a temporary waiver under Article 19 of the Charter for a period of three months,

Recalling also its resolution 52/215 B of 22 December 1997,

1. Reaffirms its role in accordance with the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and the advisory role of the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

2. Requests the Committee to hold a special session of one week's duration as early as possible in 1999 to consider representations from Member States with respect to the application of Article 19 of the Charter and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its resumed fifty-third session pursuant to rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

3. Invites Member States to submit detailed information to the Committee in explanation of their requests as soon as possible so as to facilitate the work of the Committee;

4. Decides to consider the report of the Committee on this matter as soon as possible after the issuance of that report.

On 18 December [meeting 93], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/464/Add.3], adopted resolutions 53/36 B-E without vote [agenda item 118].

Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations

B

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/215 A of 22 December 1997,

Reaffirming the obligation of all Member States to bear the expenses of the United Nations, as apportioned by the General Assembly, in conformity with Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming also the fundamental principle that the expenses of the Organization should be apportioned among Member States broadly according to their capacity to pay, as specified in rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions on its fifty-eighth session,

1. Urges all Member States to pay their assessed contributions in full, on time and without imposing conditions, to avoid the financial difficulties being experienced by the United Nations;

2. Takes note of the decision of the Committee on Contributions to continue its consideration of the elements of the methodology for the scale of assessments for the regular budget of the Organization at its fifty-ninth session and to make a consolidated set of recommendations to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth

C

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions on its fifty-eighth session,

Recalling its resolution 52/215 B of 22 December 1997,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

2. Takes note of the decision of the Committee on Contributions to continue its consideration of the application of Article 19 of the Charter;

3. Requests the Committee, at its fifty-ninth session, to consider and make recommendations to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the possibilities for tightening the application of Article 19 of the Charter;

4. Also requests the Committee to review the procedural aspects of the consideration of requests for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter, in particular modalities for dealing with such requests received when the Committee is not in session and to make recommendations to the General Assembly in this respect before the end of its fifty-third session;

5. Further requests the Committee to consider further and to make recommendations, as appropriate, on the issues raised in paragraph 28 of its report, including measures to encourage the timely, full and unconditional payment of assessed contributions, pursuant to its general mandate under paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 14 A (I) of 13 February 1946.

D

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 53/36 A of 30 November 1998 and its decisions 53/406 A and B of 7 October 1998,

1. Reaffirms its role in accordance with the provisions of Article 19 of the Charter of the United Nations and the advisory role of the Committee on Contributions in accordance with rule 160 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

2. Emphasizes the need to apply equal and non-discriminatory treatment when considering requests from Member States for exemption under Article 19 of the Charter.

E

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Contributions on its fifty-eighth session,

1. Endorses the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions on the assessment of non-member States, contained in paragraph 102 of its report;

2. Requests the Committee to consider further the view set out in paragraph 99 of its report, taking into account the actual participation of as well as the benefits enjoyed by non-member States in United Nations activities.

Also on 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item on the scale of assessments at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Accounts and auditing

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session in March, considered the Secretary-General's report on an amendment to the additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations contained in the annex to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations; and a note by the Secretary-General transmitting the proposals of the Board of Auditors for improving implementation of its recommendations [YUN 1997, p. 1449].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 82], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/732/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/212 B without vote [agenda item 113].

Financial reports and audited financial statements and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on an amendment to the additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations contained in the annex to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations and the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the proposals of the Board of Auditors for improving the implementation of its recommendations, including changes in reporting on the progress of such implementation,

1. Approves the revised text of paragraph 5 of the additional terms of reference governing the audit of the United Nations contained in paragraph 3 of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Accepts the recommendations of the Board of Auditors contained in the annex to the note by the Secretary-General, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;
3. Emphasizes that primary managerial responsibility and accountability for the implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors should remain with department heads and programme managers;
4. Endorses the proposals of the Board of Auditors enumerated in paragraphs 6 and 7 of its report concerning accountability for the implementation of its recommendations, with the provision that officers whose titles or positions are disclosed in accordance with paragraph 6 of the report should be at the level of programme manager or department head, as appropriate;
5. Accepts the proposals of the Board of Auditors concerning changes in reporting arrangements, and invites the Secretary-General and the Board to cooperate in establishing a practical and efficient procedure for implementing the proposed changes;
6. Requests the Board of Auditors to include information on the implementation of its proposals, as appropriate, in the framework of its reports to the General Assembly.

At its resumed fifty-second session, the Assembly also considered a March note by the Secretary-General, transmitting the report of the Board of Auditors [A/52/811] on the management review of the secretariat of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) (see next chapter), the report of the Board on UN peacekeeping operations for the 18-month period ended 30 June 1997 [A/53/5, vol. II] and the report of the Secretary-General on implementation of the recommendations of the Board thereon [A/52/879].

Report of Board of Auditors. The Chairman of the United Nations Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the 13 financial reports and audited financial statements for the biennium ended 31 December 1997 on the United Nations [A/53/5, vol. I, & Corr.1] and on the following UN entities: the International Trade Centre (ITC) [A/53/5, vol. III], the United Nations University (UNU) [A/53/5, vol. IV], the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [A/53/5/Add.1], the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) [A/53/5/Add.2], the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) [A/53/5/Add.3], the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) [A/53/5/Add.4], the voluntary funds administered by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) [A/53/5/Add.5], the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) [A/53/5/Add.6], the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) [A/53/5/Add.7], the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation [A/53/5/Add.8], the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (UNDCP) [A/53/5/Add.9] and the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) [A/53/5/Add.10].

Introducing the reports to the Fifth Committee, the Chairman of the Board said that the Board had conducted horizontal audits of cash management, capital assets funds and management of premises. It had identified recommendations in its 1992-1993 report on UN peacekeeping operations and remained concerned that current practice did not allow for effective tracking of letters of assist. It felt that an effective system should be put in place to monitor contracts awarded on the basis of delivery schedules and that the transfer of unserviceable property at additional cost to the Organization should be avoided. The Board also recommended that the value of pending arbitration claims against peacekeeping operations should be disclosed in the notes to the financial statements; the Administration should set deadlines for internal review processes to avoid delays in the award of contracts, and review its computerized system on letters of assist to provide accurate and reliable information; the liquidation of missions should be completed as quickly as possible to minimize costs; and missions in liquidation should make a physical inventory of non-expendable property prior to its disposal.

With the exception of ITC, UNDP and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF), the Board noted that audited organizations had not implemented all its recommendations. It had qualified its audit opinion of the financial statements of UNDP, UNFPA and UNDCP since it could not obtain sufficient evidence from Governments and non-governmental organizations that funds advanced were expended for intended purposes.

The main issues for attention with respect to UN system accounting standards were the disclosure of full valuation of property and contributions in kind, exchange losses netted off against income, non-provision for uncollectable pledges, and non-disclosure of reserve fund balances and of liability for end-of-service benefits. The Board's recommendation that UNICEF should regard cash assistance to Governments as programme expenditures at the time of advance was not implemented, and financial statements for UNHCR did not reflect expenditure for the year. In the UN General Fund, the trial balances for both accounts receivable and accounts payable were substantially higher than the corresponding figures in the financial statements. The Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) was unable to match some of those amounts and the identity of debtors and creditors was not available in many cases. The Board questioned the Administration's ability to collect overdue accounts receivable and maintain proper control of accounts payable. It recommended that IMIS Release 3 be modified to correct those deficiencies. There were also delays in reconciling inter-office vouchers at Headquarters, the United Nations Office at Geneva, the Economic and Social Council for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) and UNEP.

Turning to management issues, the Chairman stated that the Board's review of major contracts entered into by the United Nations revealed a number of deficiencies. The Board recommended that all major maintenance work be planned sufficiently in advance to avoid exigency contracts, allowing adequate time for the approval process and for competitive bidding. UNDP, particularly, should prepare a maintenance and operation plan. A number of procurement deficiencies were found in ESCAP, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, the United Nations Office at Nairobi, UNJSPF and UNOPS. The Board recommended that provisions of the Procurement Manual should be complied with and economies of scale obtained whenever possible. The new Procurement Manual should include guidelines on open tendering and specify the frequency with which the Supplier Review Committee should evaluate potential suppliers. The Board was of the view that programme management could be improved in ITC, UNEP, UNHCR and UNRWA. It noted the decline in implementation of general resources programmes in UNICEF; time overruns in projects of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat); and time lags between operational and financial closure of projects in UNDP, UNFPA, UNEP and Habitat. It recommended that measures be taken to correct those deficiencies and that a time frame be established for the financial closure of projects.

With respect to human resources management, the Board noted that a fully integrated career development system was not in place by June 1998. In the Economic Commission for Africa, only 20 per cent of staff in regular budget posts were engaged in programme activities, while the rest were engaged in administration and management and support services, and inadequacies in the hiring of consultants persisted. The Board recommended full compliance with instructions on engagement of consultants and with the established procedures for evaluation of their performance.

On the questions of capital asset funds and management of premises, UNICEF funds earmarked for capital assets were reprogrammed without the approval of its Executive Board and cost overruns ranged from 29 to 287 per cent. The Board noted that the ACABQ recommendation that UNU should match income from its headquarters building with expenditure on its maintenance and operation had not been achieved in the 1996-1997 biennium.

The Board was provided with information about 111 cases of fraud or presumptive fraud involving eight organizations, with approximately $549,098 recovered of $2,765,756 involved; disciplinary measures were taken against some staff and other cases were under investigation.

By a July note [A/53/217], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly a concise summary of the Board's principal findings, conclusions and recommendations, classified by audit area. In September [A/53/335 & Add.I], he reported on measures taken to implement the Board's recommendations. The Assembly also had before it the comments of ACABQ on the Board's reports [A/53/513].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/738], adopted resolution 53/204 without vote [agenda item 111].

Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors

The General Assembly,

Having considered, for the period ended 31 December 1997, the financial reports and audited financial statements of the United Nations, United Nations peacekeeping operations (for the period ended 30 June 1997), the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/WTO, the United Nations University, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, the Fund of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the United Nations Office for Project Services, the reports and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors, the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the measures taken or to be taken to implement the current recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and of the responses of the executive heads of the United Nations organizations and programmes to the recommendations of the Board,

Commending the Board of Auditors for carrying out its reviews in a comprehensive and efficient manner, in line with regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations,

Expressing concern about the persistence of problems and defects in the financial administration and management of the United Nations observed by the Board of Auditors,

Emphasizing the need to improve implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, as approved by the General Assembly,

1. Accepts the financial reports and audited financial statements and the reports and audit opinions of the Board of Auditors regarding the above-mentioned organizations, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

2. Also accepts the concise summary of principal findings, conclusions and recommendations of the Board of Auditors, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

3. Notes with serious concern that the Board of Auditors has qualified its audit opinion on the financial statements of the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes

mentioned in paragraph 3 above to take steps to rectify the situation in order to avoid another qualification during the next audit;

5. Approves all the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, and endorses the comments thereon contained in the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

6. Requests the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes to ensure timely implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors, in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 3 to 5 of its resolution 52/212 B of 31 March 1998;

7. Decides to consider specific issues, as appropriate, under the agenda item entitled "Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors" at its resumed fifty-third session.

On the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Common accounting standards

The Secretary-General, in an April report [A/52/867], provided the General Assembly with the Guidelines for Internal Control Standards, approved by the International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions, a professional organization of the supreme audit institutions of virtually all UN Members. The Guidelines were aimed at strengthening management control and enhancing accountability in the public sector. They specified the nature of the internal control structure and the objectives of an effective management tool to promote cost-effective operations and services to achieve the Organization's mission.

Although the United Nations had its own internal control system, audits and inspections indicated that internal controls showed gaps and deficiencies. Formal acceptance of the Guidelines would give impetus to and sharpen the focus of streamlining and strengthening internal controls in the course of reform. The Secretary-General decided to adopt the Guidelines and, accordingly, proposed an amendment to article X of the Financial Regulations of the United Nations.

On 26 June, the Assembly, by decision 52/481, deferred consideration of the question pending a report by ACABQ.

ACABQ, in its observations and recommendations [A/53/508], was of the opinion that the Guidelines were too general to be operational, and it would be difficult for the Board of Auditors to ascertain whether the United Nations had complied with them. ACABQ believed that the Guidelines should be for those concerned in the formulation or improvement of the existing specific United Nations internal control instruments. It recommended that the Secretary-General publicize the Guidelines in whatever form he felt was appropriate rather than attempt to incorporate them into or otherwise amend the Financial Regulations.

By decision 53/455 of 18 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General and endorsed the ACABQ observations and recommendations. It requested the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth (1999) session, through the Board of Auditors and ACABQ, taking the Guidelines into account.

Programme planning and management

Medium-term plan

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 51/219 [YUN 1996, p. 1306], submitted a June report [A/53/133] on proposed revisions to the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation. The Regulations were originally adopted by the Assembly in resolution 37/234 [YUN 1982, p. 1430] and amended to reflect the new budget process by resolution 42/215 [YUN 1987, p. 1118]. The proposed revisions related mainly to those governing the medium-term plan and derived from the need to adapt the Regulations to reflect the new format of that plan. In addition, the revisions were being proposed to bring the Regulations into conformity with Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], by which the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) was established. Experience gained in the implementation of the Regulations had proved in some cases that they did not serve the purpose for which they were intended. Amendments to the Rules would be promulgated by the Secretary-General following a decision on the Regulations by the Assembly.

CPC, in August [A/53/16], recommended that the Assembly approve the revisions proposed by the Secretary-General subject to certain modifications, which the Assembly did in resolution 53/207.

Medium-term plan 1998-2001

Revisions

During 1998 [A/53/6/Rev.1], the Secretary-General proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for 1998-2001, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 51/219 [YUN 1996, p. 1306].

In June [A/53/16], CPC reviewed proposed revisions to the plan, commenting and making separate recommendations on each revision. Programmes 5, 7, and 8 were replaced by the new programme 28, and a new programme 27 was added. CPC recommended approval by the Assembly of the revised plan.

The Assembly adopted the revisions in resolution 53/207 (see below).

Priority-setting

In June [A/53/134], the Secretary-General submitted a report, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/219, on priority-setting, including at the subprogramme level, within the medium-term plan for 1998-2001. He reviewed the background to the issue and established that the question to be addressed was the distinction between setting priorities in the medium-term plan and setting priorities in the budget outline. Priorities as determined by the Assembly guided the allocation of budgetary resources. The provision of such guidance at two different stages might appear to be redundant or give rise to ambiguous guidance to the Secretary-General. Priorities in the medium-term plan reflected emphasis, whereas those in the outline guided the Secretary-General in resource allocation when formulating his budget proposals. The Secretary-General stated that, in terms of setting overall priority in only one instance, it would appear that the outline was the better vehicle of the two, since it covered a shorter time frame and was prepared within months of the preparation of a proposed programme budget. The plan, on the other hand, covered a four-year period and needed a relatively long lead time for its preparation. Thus, it was not always possible to take into account in the plan the legislative developments that had a bearing on priorities.

CPC considered the Secretary-General's report and recommended that priorities continue to be established in the medium-term plan, which should guide the allocation of resources in subsequent programme budgets through the mechanisms provided for in Assembly resolution 41/213 [YUN 1986, p. 1024]. The priorities contained in the budget outline should be in conformity with those in the medium-term plan.

Programme performance 1996-1997

In May [A/53/122.1, the Secretary-General reported on programme performance of the United Nations for the 1996-1997 biennium. The report covered a wide range of the Organization's activities identified in the programme budget for those years and reflected the degree of their implementation. It also indicated the extent to which programmed activities were modified during implementation, the respective roles of legislative bodies and an indication of attendant resources by source of funding. The information presented distinguished between four groups of activities: outputs and services specifically indicated and quantified in the programme budget; activities described in the budget in general terms, with little or no indication of the quantities; operational activities, which were subject to a distinct format of reporting; and conference and administrative services, which were reported through relevant workload indicators.

The report contained an overview of programme performance, a summary of resource utilization, findings and conclusions and a set of annexed tables, which summarized implementation and the reasons for changes made during the biennium. The report also included the impact of savings called for in General Assembly resolution 50/214 [YUN 1995, p. 1386] on programme delivery. An addendum to the report [A/53/122/Add.1] highlighted factors that affected programme performance by section of the programme budget, including a brief report on the activities of UNHCR and UNRWA that did not fit under the standardized presentation of the other budget sections.

Of the 7,966 outputs specifically identified in the 1996-1997 programme budget, 6,377, or 80 per cent, were actually implemented during the biennium. The outputs specifically identified mainly related to parliamentary services, published material and information material and services, which accounted for a large part of the Organization's work, notably in the economic and social sectors, and utilized 53 per cent of the professional work-months.

"Non-output services"—intergovernmental negotiations, good offices, the promotion of legal instruments, and coordination and consultation with governmental and non-governmental organizations—were not precisely quantified in the programme budget and were less measurable. Nonetheless, they were essential to the functioning of the Organization and involved the use of resources. In the 1996-1997 budget, they appeared under two major categories, namely, international cooperation, and coordination, harmonization and liaison.

The overall level of implementation for the 1996-1997 biennium (80 per cent) was higher than in the two previous bienniums, due mainly to the lower percentage of terminations and postponements. Of the 1,589 programmed outputs that were not implemented during the biennium, 532, or 6.7 per cent, were postponed, and 1,057, or 13.3 per cent, were terminated. The postponed outputs were essentially published material (427, or 80 per cent). Of the total outputs postponed and terminated during the biennium, 189, or 14 per cent, were attributed to reductions called for by Assembly resolution 50/214. That figure was offset by the significant number of outputs that were added to the programme budget during the biennium and implemented (1,109), representing almost 15 per cent of the total outputs for the biennium.

A total of 48,500 professional work-months, including consultant services, were reported available to programme managers for implementation of the 1996-1997 work programme, or 7 per cent less than the previous biennium. Of those, an estimated 15,672, or 32 per cent, were funded from extrabudgetary resources, 6 per cent more than 1994-1995. Fifty-eight per cent, or 27,978 work-months, were committed to the implementation of activities that generated final outputs under the major categories of parliamentary services, published material and information services. The proportion of resources committed to activities that did not generate "final outputs" in the fields of international cooperation and coordination, harmonization and liaison was 14 per cent, or 6,734 work-months; of those, almost two thirds were utilized to implement activities of the Centre for Human Rights, the Department of Political Affairs, the Office of Legal Affairs, the Department of Humanitarian Affairs, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations and UNEP.

Operational activities accounted for 13,788 work-months, or 28 per cent, an increase over the previous biennium.

Summarizing his findings, the Secretary-General stated that reporting on programme performance in the 1996-1997 biennium had to be seen in the context of constraints resulting from financial uncertainties, the reduction in resources called for by the Assembly, the need to address new mandates and the challenging requirements of delivery while simultaneously reforming structures and methods of work. The vacancy rate of 13 per cent, which was much higher than in the prior two bienniums, resulted from the need to meet a predetermined level of budget, involving a significant reduction and the extremely cumbersome and lengthy procedure for filling vacancies. Nevertheless, the balance sheet of what was delivered in the 1996-1997 biennium was largely positive. Programme managers minimized the adverse effect of those constraints and achieved high rates of implementation by re-deploying resources from other programmed outputs, resorting to extrabudgetary sources of funding and/or using vacant posts to fund short-term consultants. Viewed in the context of the medium-term plan, the performance was characterized by flexibility in response to emerging needs arising from major conferences, along with improved ability to plan and programme work. While stringent efforts during the period to reform the Organization and restructure the Secretariat might have disrupted programme delivery, there was no evidence that the process affected overall implementation. In fact, there was a slight improvement in output per work-month, particularly in parliamentary services.

The Secretary-General stated that from the point of view of central control of programme implementation, several issues blurred the transparency of reporting: the impossibility of determining the total amount of resources put at the disposal of programme managers; reporting on work-months utilized; and the number of outputs terminated under subprogrammes designated high priority, which remained too high. In the absence of a comprehensive picture of resources available, it would always be difficult to ascertain the efficiency or pattern of utilization. Moreover, effective central control of extrabudgetary resources was required. While not suggesting a central administration, the Secretary-General was of the view that pertinent information on those technical cooperation funds and trust funds and their related posts should be available centrally for monitoring. The period 1992 to 1997 reflected an increasing reliance on extrabudgetary resources to produce mandated activities of a non-operational nature, which contributed, in no small measure, to addressing emerging needs and changing priorities. There was merit in revisiting the financial rules to ensure that programme managers had flexibility to discharge their responsibilities.

The Secretary-General noted that 57 outputs carried over from the 1994-1995 biennium, and consisting mainly of published material, were being further postponed to 1998-1999. In the absence of further justification warranting their continuation, he recommended that they be terminated.

The Secretary-General said that, in a situation of tight financial resources, the development of a more coherent and mutually supportive programme was essential to optimize use of available resources. To succeed, overall coordination of the Organization's work should be undertaken at the stage of programme formulation. The recent establishment of the Strategic Planning Unit in the Office of the Secretary-General could be a step towards that goal.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General stated that ongoing efforts to introduce the concept of results-based budgeting were a step in the right direction, as the relationship between outputs and outcomes would provide a more meaningful indication of performance. However, it would not in itself bring about improvements. The commitment of programme managers to monitor, evaluate performance and ensure quality control was crucial to the anticipated outcome of results-based budgeting. That would only come with a culture of management accountability.

CPC conclusions and recommendations. CPC considered the report of the Secretary-General on 16 and 17 June [A/53/16]. It concluded that future performance reports should put more emphasis on qualitative analysis to reflect achievements in implementing programme activities. It recommended that the General Assembly request the Secretary-General to submit proposals for consideration by CPC at its 1999 session on ways in which full implementation and quality of mandated programmes and activities could be ensured and better assessed by and reported to Member States. It expressed concern over the high vacancy rate. CPC emphasized the importance of effective central information on extrabudgetary resources and expressed concern that extrabudgetary funds were used to implement regular budget programmes, thus adversely affecting extrabudgetary programme delivery in certain areas.

The Committee recommended that the Assembly consider the issue of the postponement of the 57 outputs carried over from the 1994-1995 biennium in the context of its consideration of programme performance at its fifty-third session. The Committee concurred with the findings regarding the need for more effective coordination at the departmental and organizational levels to reduce overlap and duplication and recommended that overall coordination be undertaken when programmes were formulated.

Evaluation and programme planning

Reports of Secretary-General (March). In March [A/53/90], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly an OIOS report on strengthening the role of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives.

OIOS reviewed in-depth and self-evaluation activities during the period 1996-1997, highlighting several developments in UN evaluation practices. It found that the institutional arrangements for conducting evaluations ranged from well-established evaluation services to focal points within monitoring and programme coordination divisions or ad hoc arrangements. In general, the situation had not changed significantly over the past two years. In large-scale operations (peacekeeping, humanitarian activities, refugees), the evaluation (or lessons learned) function was either well-established or in the process of becoming so. Other substantive activities in the political, economic and social and public information fields had a mixed record, with some solid evaluation work being conducted and some procedures in place for reporting on the results to specialized intergovernmental bodies. Support services were not routinely subject to evaluation, although ad hoc assessment studies were conducted during the 1996-1997 biennium. The old system of self-evaluation at the subprogramme level was largely superseded by a broader and more useful approach that included thematic and project evaluation, as well as other types of assessments. The report called for greater intergovernmental participation in the evaluation process.

OIOS, together with the Department of Management, had issued new guidelines to serve as a framework for programme monitoring and evaluation in departments and offices. The Guidelines, part of the Secretary-General's reform initiative, specified three types of broad managerial responsibilities: establishing a system for monitoring the progress of all assigned work against schedules and norms; making a concerted effort to identify the main users of completed work and to keep track of the use they made of it and their reactions to it; and conducting critical reviews at least once every four years.

In a series of notes, the Secretary-General transmitted the OIOS reports on: the in-depth evaluation of UNDCP [E/AC.51/1998/2] (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV); the in-depth evaluation of the UN Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme [E/AC.51/1998/3] (see PART THREE, Chapter IX); the triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by CPC at its thirty-fifth session on evaluation of peacekeeping operations: start-up phase [E/AC.51/1998/4 & Corr.1] (see also PART ONE, Chapter I); and the triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by CPC at its thirty-fifth session on evaluation of the programme on environment [E/AC.51/1998/5 & Corr.1] (see PART THREE, Chapter VII).

CPC conclusions and recommendations. In June [A/53/16], CPC considered the reports of OIOS. The Committee stressed the importance and necessity of further improvement and integration of evaluation into the cycle of programme planning, budgeting and monitoring in order to improve and strengthen programme formulation and implementation. It recommended that the Assembly approve the addition of the policy coordination and sustainable development and population programmes to the schedule of in-depth evaluations, reports on which were to be submitted to the Committee at its forty-first session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/743], adopted resolution 53/207 without vote [agenda item 114].

Programme planning

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/234 of 21 December 1982, 38/227 A of 20 December 1983, 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 51/219 of 18 December 1996,

Having examined the proposed revisions submitted by the Secretary-General concerning the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its thirty-eighth session,

Having considered also the reports of the Secretary-General on the proposed revisions to the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, priority-setting within the medium-term plan and the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1996-1997, as well as the note by the Secretary-General transmitting the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on strengthening the role of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives,

1. Welcomes the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the work of its thirty-eighth session;

2. Notes the appreciable efforts made at the thirty-eighth session of the Committee to improve the working methods and procedures of the Committee within the framework of its mandate;

3. Reaffirms the role of the Committee as the main subsidiary organ of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council for planning, programming and coordination;

4. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations contained in part one, chapter V, of the report of the Committee on the work of its thirty-eighth session, and looks forward to their implementation;

I

Medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001

1. Reaffirms regulation 4.2 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure full compliance with this regulation;
2. Adopts the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 submitted by the Secretary-General, as amended by the Committee for Programme and Coordination;
3. Emphasizes the importance of the consultative process with Member States;
4. Also emphasizes the importance of the contribution of the sectoral, regional and central intergovernmental bodies, in particular the Main Committees of the General Assembly, in reviewing and improving the quality of the medium-term plan and its revisions;
5. Regrets that revisions to some programmes of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 were not reviewed by the relevant intergovernmental bodies;
6. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to take all appropriate measures, including ad hoc measures, and to submit proposals, through the Committee for Programme and Coordination, to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, so as to enable the Main Committees of the General Assembly, as well as the sectoral, functional and regional bodies, effectively to review the relevant portions of the medium-term plan or its revisions, with a view to facilitating their consideration by the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the Fifth Committee;
7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a preliminary report, in accordance with the existing mandates of the General Assembly, on possible arrangements for post-conflict rehabilitation and reconstruction, as well as on the transition from relief to development, maintaining the distinct nature of both activities, for consideration by the relevant Main Committees of the Assembly and intergovernmental bodies;

II

Priorities

1. Stresses the importance of priority-setting as an integral part of the planning, programming and budgeting process;
2. Decides that priorities shall continue to be established in the medium-term plan, which is the principal policy directive of the United Nations, and shall guide the allocation of resources in subsequent programme budgets through the mechanisms provided for in General Assembly resolution 41/213;
3. Decides also that priorities contained in the budget outline shall be in conformity with the priorities in the medium-term plan;
4. Emphasizes that priorities, once established by the General Assembly, cannot be changed or altered unless it so decides;

III

Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation

1. Approves the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination on the revisions to the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to prepare revisions to the relevant rules and to bring them to the attention of the General Assembly through the Committee before promulgation;

IV

New narratives of the programme budget

Approves the new programme narratives for section 7A, Economic and social affairs and section 26, Public information, subject to the modifications recommended by the Committee for Programme and Coordination and also to the provisions of the present resolution;

V

Programme performance

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the programme performance of the United Nations for the biennium 1996-1997 and the recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination thereon, subject to the provisions below;
2. Notes with concern the late submission of the programme performance report, and urges the Secretary-General to submit the report in future to all Member States by the end of the first quarter following completion of the biennial budget period, in accordance with regulation 6.3 of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation;
3. Recalls section II, paragraph 13, of its resolution 50/214 of 23 December 1995, in which it decided to keep the vacancy rate at 6.4 per cent during the biennium 1996-1997, and in this context expresses its deep concern at the high vacancy rate and its adverse impact in some areas of programme delivery;
4. Reaffirms that the vacancy rate is a tool for budgetary calculations and should not be used to achieve budgetary savings;
5. Deeply regrets the use of vacant posts for consultancies and short-term appointments during the biennium 1996-1997;
6. Notes with appreciation that the United Nations, in particular the regional commissions, provided development-related advisory and technical support to Member States during the biennium 1996-1997, and requests the Secretary-General to continue to extend such services during the current biennium, in accordance with existing mandates;
7. Reaffirms the right of Member States to seek the support and assistance of the United Nations, individually and collectively, in the regional and subregional context, in their efforts to promote developmental activities;

8. Emphasizes the need for greater interaction between the regional commissions and the respective regional organizations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the regional commissions provide technical assistance to Member States, including through their respective regional organizations;

10. Notes the efforts made to improve the quality of the programme performance report and to review performance within the context of the medium-term plan for the period 1992-1997, and stresses that in future reports more emphasis should be placed upon qualitative analysis to reflect achievements in implementing programme activities;

11. Reaffirms regulation 4.1 of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, and reiterates that resources should be utilized strictly for the purposes approved by the General Assembly;

12. Notes with concern that some of the findings contained in the programme performance report for the biennium 1996-1997 are ambiguous and contradictory and that therefore some of the conclusions remain vague and general in nature;

13. Also notes with concern that the programme performance report for the biennium 1996-1997, in some instances, commented on actions which did not conform with the resolutions of the General Assembly;

14. Further notes with concern that some resources were redeployed to fund activities that had not been approved in the programme budget for the biennium 1996-1997, while a number of mandated programmes and activities, particularly in priority areas, were postponed, curtailed or cancelled;

15. Requests the Secretary-General, in the light of paragraph 57 of the programme performance report for the biennium 1996-1997, to report with clear evidence on the impact of the reform of the Organization and restructuring of the Secretariat on programme delivery during the biennium 1998-1999 in the context of the report on the programme performance of the United Nations for that biennium;

16. Notes the finding in the programme performance report for the biennium 1996-1997 that programme managers, in accordance with the decisions of the General Assembly and the relevant regulations and rules, have managed to minimize the adverse effect of financial constraints and achieved high rates of implementation in some areas;

17. Recognizes the need for effective systems at the intergovernmental and departmental levels to ensure that activities correspond to the mandates reflected in the medium-term plan and programme budgets, as well as the need to monitor and evaluate the quality of performance;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals for consideration by the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-ninth session on ways in which the full implementation and the quality of mandated programmes and activities could be ensured and could be better assessed by and reported to Member States;

19. Also requests the Secretary-General to convey the reasons for the further postponement of the delivery of outputs to the biennium 1998-1999 and the opinion of relevant intergovernmental bodies on the proposal by the Secretary-General to delete fifty-seven outputs carried over from the biennium 1994-1995, for consideration at its current session;

20. Notes that the proposals requested in paragraph 50 of the annex to General Assembly resolution 51/241 of 31 July 1997 have not been submitted, and, in this context, reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to enhance the role and participation of all relevant departments, in particular the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts, in the preparation of future programme performance reports;

VI Evaluation

1. Stresses the importance and necessity of further improving evaluation and integrating it into the cycle of programme planning, budgeting and monitoring with a view to improving and strengthening programme formulation and implementation;

2. Also stresses that the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation provide a sound basis for effective monitoring and evaluation if implemented in all parts of the Organization;

3. Approves the addition of the programmes on policy coordination and sustainable development and on population to the schedule of in-depth evaluations to be submitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its forty-first session;

4. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on the in-depth evaluations of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and on the triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by the Committee at its thirty-fifth session on the start-up phase of the evaluation of peacekeeping operations;

5. Decides to forward to the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme the triennial review of the implementation of the recommendations made by the Committee at its thirty-fifth session on the evaluation of the programme on environment;

6. Emphasizes that guidelines on programme monitoring and evaluation should be in conformity with the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation;

VII

Other conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination

Endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination regarding the annual overview report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination for 1997, the progress reports on implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, and on the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.

On the same date, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of the item at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

UN International Partnership Trust Fund

In his 1998 report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that, in September 1997, Ted Turner, Co-Chairman of Time Warner Inc., announced his intention to make a gift to the United Nations of 18 million shares of Time Warner stock with a value of $1 billion, in increments of 10 annual gifts valued at approximately $100 million to support UN programmes. The funds would supplement the regular, assessed or voluntarily funded UN programmes, in particular projects of a humanitarian, developmental and environmental nature. Funding would be made through the United Nations Foundation, Inc., a public charity established by Mr. Turner, and other donations would be sought. The United Nations International Partnership Trust Fund (UNFIP) had been established within the Secretariat to manage the process of grant allocation and ensure its consistency with the Organization's priorities. By August 1998, the first set of grants, totalling some $22 million, had been allocated. The majority of projects funded were in the areas of children's health, reproductive health and environmental and climate change.

ACABQ consideration. In February [A/52/7/Add.9], ACABQ drew the General Assembly's attention to an exchange of correspondence with the Secretary-General on the subject of UNFIP. On 30 January, the Secretary-General had stated that an advisory board composed of UN officials and eminent personalities would be established for the review of prospective proposals. The Secretary-General would decide on the projects to be recommended to the Foundation for consideration. The Trust Fund would be responsible for the central administration costs (estimated at approximately 1 per cent of the contributions) relating to the coordination and programming functions, while individual projects would contain project support costs. The Executive Director of the Fund would interface on a regular basis with the President of the United Nations Foundation, Inc., executive heads of UN funds and programmes, specialized agencies and heads of department of the Secretariat, and would have full responsibility for the overall programmatic review and thematic analysis of project proposals; the submission of those proposals to the Foundation for funding; and follow-up in implementation, monitoring and performance reporting. The Executive Director would report directly to the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General sought the concurrence of ACABQ on the establishment of the Trust Fund.

The ACABQ Chairman, in February, informed the Secretary-General of the Committee's concern that the central administrative costs of the Trust Fund might be underestimated and suggested that each project document should clearly indicate the backstopping costs associated with implementation of the activity concerned. Noting that maintaining a standard 15 per cent operating reserve was not envisaged, the Advisory Committee trusted that every effort would be made to ensure that a steady and dependable cash flow would be maintained. ACABQ advised that it should be clearly spelled out in the relationship agreement between the Trust Fund and the Foundation that the United Nations would bear no responsibility for funds raised by the Foundation and awarded directly to other entities instead of the Trust Fund.

Regarding the staffing levels, ACABQ was informed that with the exception of the Executive Director, the other staffing requirements were preliminary estimates and could be finalized only after the workload had been identified. The Advisory Committee requested information on staffing requirements, including job descriptions, as early as possible, together with the complete administrative budget for the Trust Fund. Given the unique nature of the gift and the mechanism being established to administer it, ACABQ also requested that all subsequent administrative budgets be submitted to it for its prior concurrence on an annual basis; the budget should be accompanied by information on the Fund's substantive activities. ACABQ concurred with the proposal that the Executive Director's post be at the Assistant Secretary-General level, with the proviso that the level be reviewed for the period after 31 December 1999, in the context of the Committee's examination of the administrative budget of the Trust Fund for 2000.

On 31 March, by decision 52/466, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, took note of the ACABQ report and requested the Secretary-General to take into account comments made in the Fifth Committee and to report to the Assembly on a regular basis on the activities of the Trust Fund and related matters.

Report of Secretary-General. In a November report [A/53/700], the Secretary-General described the establishment of the Fund, the agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Foundation, Inc., and the establishment of the Fund's Advisory Board, as well as projects approved for funding by the Foundation as at mid-September. UNFIP was established by the Secretary-General on 1 March as an autonomous trust fund to interface with the United Nations Foundation, Inc. The Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Foundation, Inc. was signed on 12 June. The Secretary-General also established an advisory board to assist him in his review of proposals received by UNFIP for funding by the Foundation.

The Secretary-General indicated that, since the establishment of UNFIP, two funding rounds were completed with a third expected to conclude in January 1999. Of the 520 proposals received and analysed by the UNFIP secretariat, 55 full project proposals were recommended for funding, and 39 projects, in the amount of $55 million, were approved by the Foundation.

Chapter III

United Nations staff

In 1998, the General Assembly considered issues related to the conditions of service of United Nations staff members, some arising from proposals made by the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and others resulting from the Secretary-General's programme for UN reform. The Assembly amended the Staff Regulations and Rules to accommodate provisions of the new Code of Conduct for UN staff. Of major concern during the year was the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and the protection of UN personnel. In December, the Assembly condemned acts that prevented humanitarian and UN personnel from discharging their humanitarian functions, or which entailed their being subjected to threats, the use of force or physical attacks.

ICSC made recommendations to the Assembly on matters related to the conditions of service of United Nations staff, including the base/floor salary scale, scale of staff assessment, education grant and dependency allowance and established a working group to examine human resources management.

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund reported that its market value had increased to $21.8 billion.

Conditions of service

International Civil Service Commission

In 1998, the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC), a 15-member body established in 1974 by General Assembly resolution 3357 (XXIX) [YUN 1974, p. 875], continued to regulate and coordinate the conditions of service of the UN common system of salaries and allowances. Thirteen organizations had accepted the ICSC statute: the United Nations; the International Labour Organization (ILO); the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO); the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); the World Health Organization (WHO); the International Civil Aviation Organization; the Universal Postal Union (UPU); the International Telecommunication Union (ITU); the World Meteorological Organization (WMO); the International Maritime Organization; the World Intellectual Property Organization; the United Nations Industrial Development Organization; and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). One other organization, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, had not formally accepted the ICSC statute, but participated fully in its work.

In 1998, the Commission held its forty-seventh (Rome, 20 April-14 May) and forty-eighth (New York, 27 July-7 August) sessions. It examined issues that derived from General Assembly resolutions and decisions, as well as from its own statute. A summary of the Commission's deliberations, recommendations and decisions was provided in its twenty-fourth annual report [A/53/30 & Corr.1], on which the Assembly acted in December (see resolution 53/209, below).

In October [A/C.5/53/4], the Secretary-General summarized the financial implications for the regular budget for the 1998-1999 biennium resulting from the decisions and recommendations of ICSC, which were estimated at $2.5 million net of staff assessment.

Functioning of ICSC

The Working Group on the Consultative Process and Working Arrangements of ICSC, established in 1997 to review the functioning of the Commission [YUN 1997, p. 1451], made recommendations in 1998 regarding agenda management, data gathering, consideration of items and decision-making by the Commission, appointment of Commission members and the roles of the Executive Secretary and the secretariat.

The Commission agreed to the proposed amendments to its rules of procedure made by the Group in order to broaden the consultative process, improve consultations, enhance trust among the parties and ensure that documents in all languages were ready on time. However, it would seek a legal opinion on the issues, to safeguard itself against unforeseen legal implications and to ensure that the amendments were not in conflict with the statute. They would go into effect when the staff representatives resumed their active participation in the work of ICSC. With respect to the appointment of ICSC members, the Commission observed that the statute did not provide it with jurisdiction over the appointment of its members, which was within the competence of the Secretary-General and the General Assembly. Moreover, it noted that the terms of reference of the Group did not cover any proposals to change the statute. Regarding the roles of the Executive Secretary and secretariat, the Commission concurred with the Working Group's emphasis on an independent secretariat that had high technical competence.

Review of ICSC

In March [A/52/811], the Secretary-General transmitted a review of the UN Board of Auditors on the management of the work performed by the ICSC secretariat. The review, conducted in response to General Assembly resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], covered the application of the Noblemaire principle, post adjustment issues, matters relating to General Service staff, the determination of allowances, personnel policy issues, the effectiveness of monitoring and reporting, the deployment of ICSC secretariat resources and information technology applications.

The Board recommended that the ICSC secretariat propose ways to establish a total compensation methodology for assessing the competitiveness of the UN common system salaries for Professional staff; address the problem of inter-grade differentials for Professional staff; establish a clear and durable policy for out-of-area weights; review the use of the regression technique for determining the seventy-fifth percentile and study the effect of the technique on General Service salary methodologies; compare and quantify the difference in pension and other social benefits of the UN common system and the comparator; examine the use of the "cost to employer" approach and factor it into salaries; reactivate its work on career development; submit a progress report on the status of women in the Secretariat; establish a personnel database on staff development and salary allowances in respective grades; and introduce a computerized integrated management information system to improve data collection, transmission and processing.

The Commission observed that the report was not a management audit, as called for by the Assembly. It regretted that the report entered into areas beyond the audit team's mandate, calling into question decisions of both ICSC and the Assembly. Its task had been to review the work of the ICSC secretariat, including whether resources were being used appropriately and were adequate. Notwithstanding those reservations, the Commission had responded positively to the majority of the recommendations. Several had either already been implemented by the Commission or were being implemented by the secretariat.

The General Assembly took note of the report and of the ICSC responses in section VII of resolution 53/209 (see below).

ACC action. The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its second regular session of 1998 (New York, 30-31 October) [ACC/1998/20], in response to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], considered procedures for a review of ICSC. The approach emerging from inter-agency consultations focused on the creation of a review group to examine the mandate, membership and functions of ICSC in the light of the challenges facing the UN system. The report on the review would be submitted no later than November 1999.

ACC welcomed the initiative and endorsed the terms of reference of the review group, which was to be appointed by the Assembly. It was suggested that the report of the review group should be submitted to the Assembly, together with the views of the concerned organizations of the UN system. The Secretary-General, in November [A/53/688], transmitted the views of ACC and the proposed terms of reference of the review group, and stated his intention to submit his recommendation concerning membership of the group to the Assembly's resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

In other action, ACC recalled that it had mandated the meeting of legal advisers to pursue the issue of possible options to review the legality of ICSC decisions. The Committee was informed that the legal advisers had proposed an amendment to the ICSC statute that would allow it and participating organizations to request advisory opinions from an ad hoc panel composed of the Chairmen of the United Nations and ILO Administrative Tribunals and a third person chosen by them.

ACC agreed that, given the consensus among the legal advisers, the views of the Presidents of the United Nations and ILO Administrative Tribunals should be obtained on an urgent basis and conveyed to all members of ACC. The final endorsement of the recommendations, in the light of the views of the Presidents of the Tribunals, should be obtained from all ACC members through correspondence.

Remuneration issues

Noblemaire principle

Following the terms of General Assembly resolution 52/216 [YUN 1997, p. 1454] and the standing mandate in Assembly resolution 47/216 [YUN 1992, p. 1055], ICSC continued to review the relationship between the net remuneration of UN staff in the Professional and higher categories and that of the current comparator, the United States federal civil service employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C. In the application of the Noblemaire principle, the salaries of Professional and higher category staff were set by reference to the highest-paying national civil service. ICSC decided to report to the Assembly that the margin between the United Nations and the United States staffs' net remuneration for 1998 was forecast at 114.8, and that the comparator had not fully implemented pay reforms. However, because of an improvement in economic and fiscal conditions, there were indications that future adjustments might be enhanced. It requested the secretariat to explore solutions to the problem of very low margins at the higher common system grades and to report in 1999.

The Commission reported that the update of the study to identify the highest-paid national civil service had shown again that the current comparator, under the application of the Noblemaire principle, was no longer the best. However, the Commission reported that it was not opportune to change the current comparator. Annual reporting of the German/United States total compensation margin would be suspended, and the Commission would carry out in 2001 a comparison of total compensation between the United States and other potential comparators, according to the criteria laid down by the Commission, and conduct a United Nations/United States total compensation comparison.

Emoluments of top-echelon officials

Secretary-General and UNDP Administrator

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee considered a report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), which reviewed the salary and retirement benefits of the Secretary-General and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) [YUN 1997, p. 1451], and recommended a resolution to the General Assembly for adoption.

On 4 February [meeting 80], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744/Add.I], adopted resolution 52/225 without vote [agenda item 116].

Salary and retirement allowance of the Secretary-General and salary and pensionable remuneration of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Concurs with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions concerning the salary and retirement allowance of the Secretary-General contained in paragraph 8 of its report;
2. Also concurs with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee concerning the salary and pensionable remuneration of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme contained in paragraph 8 of its report;
3. Approves the amendment to annex I to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations with effect from 1 January 1998, as set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Amendment to annex I to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations

At the end of paragraph 1 of annex I to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, add the following sentence: "With effect from 1 January 1998, the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme shall receive a gross salary of 175,344 United States dollars per annum".

Judges of ICJ and International Criminal Tribunals

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 50/216 [YUN 1995, p. 1409], the Secretary-General, in an October report [A/C.5/53/11], made a series of recommendations regarding the conditions of service of members of the International Court of Justice (ICJ), including salary increase, increase in emoluments of ad hoc judges, education grant increase and pensions, with financial implications for 1998-1999 amounting to $726,400. The next comprehensive review of conditions of service for ICJ members would take place in 2001. The Secretary-General also presented the financial implications for the proposed resource requirements for 1999 for the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) relating to salary increase, relocation allowance and pensions amounting to $322,600 and $193,300, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.I], adopted resolution 53/214, section VIII, without vote [agenda item 113].

Conditions of service and compensation for officials other than Secretariat officials: members of the International Court of Justice, judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994

[The General Assembly . . .]

Recalling its resolutions 37/240 of 21 December 1982, and the annex thereto containing the Travel and Subsistence Regulations of the International Court of Justice, 45/250 A to C of 21 December 1990 and 48/252 A to C of 26 May 1994 and section IV of its resolution 50/216 of 23 December 1995 on the emoluments, pensions and other conditions of service of the members of the International Court of Justice, as well as paragraphs 1 and 5 of its resolution 52/217 of 22 December 1997 on the financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, paragraphs 1 and 6 of its resolution 52/218 of 22 December 1997 on the financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, and its resolution 52/220 on questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999,

Having considered the relevant reports of the Secretary-General and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Approves the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the emoluments, pensions and other conditions of service of members of the International Court of Justice;

2. Concurs with the observation made by the Advisory Committee in paragraph 21 of its report regarding a revision to article 7, paragraph 2, of the Pension Scheme Regulations for Members of the International Court of Justice;

3. Decides, in this regard, to amend article 7, paragraph 2, of the Pension Scheme Regulations for Members of the International Court of Justice to read as follows:

"Pensions in payment shall be automatically revised by the same percentage and at the same date as salary adjustments.";

4. Approves the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on the emoluments, pensions and other conditions of service of the judges of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the judges of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994;

5. Also approves the travel and subsistence regulations for the judges of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the judges of the International Tribunal for Rwanda contained in annex III to the report of the Secretary-General;

6. Further approves the pension scheme regulations for the judges of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the pension scheme regulations for the judges of the International Tribunal for Rwanda contained in annexes IV and V, respectively, to the report of the Secretary-General, with consequential modifications resulting from the decisions taken by the General Assembly in the present resolution;

7. Decides that the emoluments, pensions, and other conditions of service for the members of the International Court of Justice, the judges of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the judges of the International Tribunal for Rwanda shall be reviewed at its fifty-sixth session;

Other remuneration issues

Structure of salary scale and common staff assessment scale

ICSC reviewed the base/floor salary scale introduced by the General Assembly in resolution 44/198 [YUN 1989, p. 886] and in effect from 1 July 1990. It provided a minimum level of remuneration for the UN system staff and served as a reference point for calculating certain separation payments, as well as mobility and hardship allowance. The Commission was informed that, in view of the movement of salaries of the comparator as of 1 January 1998, an adjustment of the common system base scale by 2.48 per cent was proposed for 1999. It recommended to the Assembly that the revised base/floor salary scale for the Professional and higher categories be approved, on a no-loss/no-gain basis, with effect from 1 March 1999.

Post adjustment

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], ICSC reviewed the post adjustment system, including its operation at the base within the margin range, post adjustment increases at the base and at other duty stations, the relationship between the New York multiplier and the margin, and monitoring the system.

ICSC concluded that the current system of net base salary plus post adjustment at the base was still the most appropriate way to ensure that the margin remained within the range of 110 to 120 and around the mid-point of 115 over a period of time; and that the existing technical measures for operating the post adjustment system within the approved margin range were producing the desired results.

Regarding the post adjustment in Geneva, ICSC informed the Assembly that, despite efforts to establish a single post adjustment index for Geneva, complex technical, legal and administrative difficulties remained. It would continue to monitor the evolution of post adjustment in Geneva in the light of future developments, including the introduction of the euro in selected countries of the European Union.

Treatment of expatriation

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/216 [YUN 1996, p. 1318], ICSC examined the expatriate elements of remuneration in the UN common system, the comparator civil service, a number of national civil services and international organizations, as well as in the private sector. The analysis showed that provisions for expatriation in the UN common system did not compare favourably with those provided by a number of national civil services and private-sector employers, in particular with regard to housing.

Salary surveys

Following ICSC's decision in 1992 to discontinue inclusion of the language factor at duty stations where the local language was not one of the working languages of the organizations concerned (Rome and Vienna), four General Service staff of FAO challenged various aspects of a 1994 survey of General Service salaries in Rome in the ILO Administrative Tribunal, including the phasing out of the language factor. The ILO Tribunal, in January 1998, set aside the FAO Director-General's decision to phase out the language factor.

ICSC decided to await the judgement in an ongoing case that challenged the phasing out of the language factor in Vienna, and to defer any decision on the review of the methodology regarding the language factor to a later date.

Dependency allowances

As part of its 1998 review of the level of dependency allowances, ICSC recommended to the General Assembly an increase of 14.6 per cent, effective 1 January 1999, in the children's allowance to reflect the increase in the value of tax abatements and social legislation payments at the seven headquarters duty stations between January 1996 and January 1998. The secondary dependant's allowance for the Professional and higher categories of staff was similarly increased by 14.6 per cent. Thus, the revised amounts would be $1,730 for the children's allowance, $3,460 for the allowance for children with disabilities, and $619 for secondary dependants, all effective 1 January 1999. The financial implications of the Commission's recommendations in respect of the level of children's and secondary dependant's allowances were estimated at $3.4 million. ICSC also recommended that dependency allowances payable to eligible common system staff be reduced by the amount of any direct payments received from a Government in respect of dependants.

Education grant

ICSC, in accordance with the method for reviewing the education grant levels approved by the General Assembly in resolution 52/216 [YUN 1997, p. 1454], recommended revised rates in the maximum reimbursement levels in seven currencies (Austrian schillings, Swiss francs, deutsche mark, pounds sterling, Italian lire, Japanese yen, United States dollars). It also revised the flat rates for boarding costs in instances where boarding was not provided, as well as the amounts of additional reimbursement for boarding costs above the maximum education grant payable at designated duty stations. The special education grant for children with disabilities would be equal to 100 per cent of the revised maximum regular education grant. ICSC invited organizations to submit further information regarding the situation in Indonesia, where international educational institutions were billing their fees in hard currencies at levels comparable to similar institutions in the United States, and requested the Chairman to decide whether special measures were needed.

Mission subsistence allowance

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/218 E [YUN 1997, p. 62], ICSC provided an overview of the establishment and application of a mission subsistence allowance (MSA).

The Commission noted that the creation of a special post allowance for special missions could duplicate the post adjustment system. It emphasized that MSA should be confined to short-term peacekeeping, peacemaking and humanitarian missions. It decided to note that MSA generally responded to the operational needs of special missions, and at many locations it was lower than the daily subsistence allowance, even though both were intended to compensate for the same elements during temporary assignments. The Commission decided that the establishment of a post allowance or separate maintenance allowance was not warranted. It requested organizations to improve the coordination of MSA practices and its secretariat to examine those practices periodically. In addition, it noted the disparity of the remuneration arrangements in certain locations, and requested its secretariat, in consultation with the organizations concerned, to determine a common approach to resolve that situation.

Hazard pay

The Commission reviewed the mechanism for granting hazard pay—payment for employment under conditions where war or active hostilities prevailed and the evacuation of families and non-essential staff had taken place. It set the amount of hazard pay for internationally recruited staff at the rate of $ 1,000 per month, with effect from 1 June 1998, and decided to change the review cycle from two to three years. Accordingly, the next review would take place in 2002. As for locally recruited staff, their level of hazard pay would be reviewed in 2002. The Commission further noted that in the event of the evacuation of internationally recruited staff, the particular situation of local staff should be taken into consideration.

Payment of honoraria

The General Assembly, by decision 52/463 of 31 March, took note of the Secretary-General's report on an interim study of honoraria payable to members of UN organs and subsidiary organs [YUN 1997, p. 1454] and endorsed the observations of ACABQ thereon [ibid.]. It decided to consider the Secretary-General's comprehensive report at its fifty-third session.

In November, the Secretary-General submitted a comprehensive study on honoraria [A/53/643], pursuant to Assembly resolution 3536(XXX) [YUN 1975, p. 990]. He presented information on prevailing practice in respect of payment of honoraria by FAO, IAEA, ILO, ITU, UNESCO, UPU, WHO and WMO, and a review of the committees and commissions for which the Assembly had exceptionally authorized the payment of honoraria: International Law Commission; International Narcotics Control Board; United Nations Administrative Tribunal; Human Rights Committee; Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women; Committee on the Rights of the Child.

On the basis of the review, the Secretary-General concluded that the criteria and authority for the payment of honoraria to members of organs and subsidiary bodies rested solely with the Assembly. He proposed that the Assembly consider whether payment of honorarium should be extended to members of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee against Torture. The Secretary-General suggested an increase of 25 per cent over the current rates with effect from 1 January 1999. The financial implications of the proposed increase, including the three newly recommended Committees, amounted to $271,250.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/754], adopted resolution 53/209 without vote [agenda item 120].

United Nations common system: report of the International Civil Service Commission

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Civil Service Commission for the year 1998 and other related reports,

Reaffirming its commitment to a single, unified United Nations common system as the cornerstone for the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

Convinced that the common system constitutes the best instrument to secure staff of the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity for the international civil service, as stipulated under the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the central role of the Commission in the regulation and coordination of the conditions of service of the United Nations common system,

I

Conditions of service of staff in the Professional and higher categories

A. Noblemaire principle and its application

Recalling its resolution 44/198 of 21 December 1989 and other relevant resolutions,

1. Reconfirms the continued application of the Noblemaire principle;

2. Reaffirms the need to continue to ensure the competitiveness of the conditions of service of the common system;

3. Notes the decision of the Commission to suspend total compensation comparisons until 2001, and requests the Commission to undertake the next study in 2001 to identify the highest paid national civil service, using the methodology endorsed by the General Assembly in a manner consistent with the United States/United Nations total compensation comparison;

B. Evolution of the margin

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 52/216 of 22 December 1997 and the standing mandate from the General Assembly, in which the Commission is requested to continue its review of the relationship between the net remuneration of the United Nations staff in the Professional and higher categories in New York and that of the comparator civil service (the United States federal civil service) employees in comparable positions in Washington, D.C. (referred to as "the margin"),

Recalling also section IX, paragraph 3, of its resolution 46/191 A of 20 December 1991, in which it requested the Commission to include in its work a review of the differences between the United Nations and the United States net remuneration at individual grade levels,

Recalling further section II.B, paragraph 3, of its resolution 48/224 of 23 December 1993, wherein it considered that the Commission should address the imbalance in the United Nations/United States remuneration ratios in the context of overall margin considerations,

1. Notes the intention of the Commission, in the light of its previous recommendations with respect to the above request, to explore possible solutions to the problems of imbalances in the United Nations/United States net remuneration ratios at individual grade levels;

2. Also notes that the margin between net remuneration of United Nations staff in grades P-1 to D-2 in New York and that of officials in comparable positions in the United States federal civil service for 1998 is 114.8;

C. Base/floor salary scale

Recalling section I.H of its resolution 44/198, by which it established a floor net salary level for staff in the Professional and higher categories by reference to the corresponding base net salary levels of officials in comparable positions serving at the base city of the comparator civil service (the United States federal civil service),

Approves, with effect from 1 March 1999, the revised base scale of gross and net salaries for staff in the Professional and higher categories, contained in annex I to the present resolution, and the consequential amendment to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations, as reflected in annex II to the present resolution;

D. Treatment of expatriation

Recalling section I.B, paragraph 3, of its resolution 50/208 of 23 December 1995 and section I.E, paragraph 4, of its resolution 51/216 of 18 December 1996,

1. Takes note of the analysis and decisions of the Commission thereon, as contained in paragraphs 104 to 117 of its report;

2. Requests the Commission to continue to develop its study in this area and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

E. Common scale of staff assessment

Recalling section III, paragraph 1, of its resolution 51/216, by which it approved, with effect from 1 January 1997, a revised staff assessment scale recommended by the Commission for determining the pensionable remuneration of all categories of staff, and recalling that, in paragraph 2 of the same section, it requested the Commission to report on the impact of the differences in national and local tax rates at the seven headquarters duty stations on the gross pension benefits of locally recruited staff in the General Service and related categories at those duty stations in comparison with the compensation for such taxes provided by the common staff assessment rates,

1. Takes note of the conclusion of the Commission, as set out in paragraph 215 of its report, that the current common staff assessment scale should continue to apply and should again be reviewed in 2000;

2. Takes note also of the conclusions of the Commission based on the comparison of the impact of the common staff assessment rates and local taxes on the levels of pensionable remuneration and consequent pensions of the General Service and related categories of staff, as reported in paragraph 224 of its report;

3. Endorses the view of the Commission, as set out in paragraph 225 of its report, that the local practice approach to determining pensionable remuneration of the General Service and other locally recruited categories of staff should not be pursued further;

F. Dependency allowances

Recalling section II.F of its resolution 47/216 of 23 December 1992, in which it noted that the Commission would review the level of dependency allowances every two years,

Taking note that the review of dependency allowances by the Commission reflected relevant changes in tax abatement and social legislation at the seven headquarters duty stations since 1996, as contained in paragraph 119 of its report,

1. Approves, with effect from 1 January 1999, an increase of 14.6 per cent in the children's allowance (including the allowance for disabled children) and in the secondary dependant's allowance;

2. Takes note of the updated list of hard-currency duty stations for which the allowances are specified in local currency, as contained in annex III to the present resolution;

3. Notes that dependency allowances payable to eligible common system staff should be reduced by the amount of any direct payments received from a Government in respect of dependants;

4. Requests the Commission to undertake in 2000 an examination of the methodology, rationale and scope of the allowances;

G. Post adjustment matters

Operation of the post adjustment system

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 50/208 and section I.E of its resolution 51/216,

1. Takes note of the conclusions of the Commission regarding the operation of the post adjustment system at the base of the system, as contained in paragraph 140 of its report;

2. Requests the Commission to continue to explore the feasibility of using outside data sources for the next round of place-to-place surveys;

Post adjustment at Geneva

Recalling section I.B of its resolution 50/208, section I.E of its resolution 51/216 and section I.D of its resolution

tion 52/216 related to the establishment of a single post adjustment index in respect of staff members whose duty station is Geneva,

Requests the Commission, in the context of its preparation of the next round of place-to-place surveys, as referred to in paragraph 141 of its report, to conduct a comprehensive review of the post adjustment system as a whole with a view to its reform, with the assistance of independent experts, if necessary, keeping in mind the need for cohesion within the common system, and to ensure that the post adjustment at each duty station, with particular emphasis on headquarters duty stations, is fully representative of the cost of living of all staff members in the Professional and higher categories working at each duty station, and to report thereon to the General Assembly no later than at its fifty-fifth session;

II

Conditions of service applicable to both categories of staff

A. Education grant

Recalling section IV, paragraph 1, of its resolution 47/216 and section IV of its resolution 51/216, by which it endorsed the revised methodology for the determination of the education grant,

Recalling also section III.A, paragraph 1, of its resolution 52/216, by which it endorsed the modifications to the methodology and noted that the revised methodology would be taken into account beginning with the 1998 biennial review of the education grant,

1. Approves increases in the maximum reimbursement levels in the seven currency areas, as well as other adjustments to the reimbursement of expenses under the education grant, as contained in paragraph 190 of the report of the Commission;

2. Takes note of the decision of the Commission to review the methodology in 2001;

B. Recognition of language knowledge

Recalling section II.E of its resolution 48/224 of 23 December 1993, in which it requested the Commission to review the language incentive scheme of the United Nations and the schemes of the organizations of the common system,

Having considered the proposals of the Commission contained in paragraphs 207 to 209 of its report, which would be implemented only after the General Assembly has agreed thereto,

1. Notes that a number of essential elements still remain to be resolved, including the rationale for recommending a change to the existing scheme, the degree to which such a change will continue to serve as an incentive for multilingualism in the organizations, the basis for determining the incentive amounts for both categories, and transitional measures;

2. Requests the Commission to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a comprehensive report covering all the elements raised, taking into account the acquired rights of the staff;

C. Hazard pay

Reiterating the expression of its appreciation for the dedication of increasing numbers of staff of the United Nations common system who are required to work under dangerous conditions,

Takes note of the decisions of the Commission contained in paragraph 236 of its report;

D. Standards of travel and per diem

Recalling section III.D of its resolution 52/216,

Takes note of the decisions of the Commission regarding standards of travel and per diem, as outlined in paragraph 247 of its report;

E. Mission subsistence allowance

Recalling section III.E of its resolution 52/216,

Takes note of the decisions of the Commission regarding various aspects of the system of mission subsistence allowance, as outlined in paragraph 260 of its report;

III

The consultative process and working arrangements in the Commission

Recalling its resolutions 50/208, 51/216 and 52/216 concerning, inter alia, the consultative process and working arrangements of the Commission,

Recalling also that by its resolution 50/208 the General Assembly reaffirmed the statute of the Commission, in particular article 6 thereof, whereby its members shall perform their functions in full independence and with impartiality,

1. Emphasizes that the responsibility for the decisions taken by the Commission rests solely with the members of the Commission;

2. Welcomes the progress made by the Commission in promoting a spirit of constructive cooperation and flexibility towards improving working relations with the staff bodies;

3. Takes note of the changes approved by the Commission to its rules of procedure and other procedural changes;

4. Notes that the changes approved by the Commission to its rules of procedure could enable all parties to ensure that their views are reflected during all phases of the consideration of all issues;

5. Requests the Commission to monitor the progress of the implementation of the revised rules of procedure and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-seventh session;

IV

Appointment of members of the Commission and other matters

1. Reaffirms the statute of the Commission;

2. Emphasizes the need to adhere to the provisions of articles 3 and 4 of the statute of the Commission;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to draw the attention of Member States to the provisions of article 3, paragraph 1, of the statute of the Commission when presenting candidates for appointment to the Commission;

4. Decides to revert to issues related to the Commission, including its working methods, the respective roles of the Commission and its secretariat, the selection and appointment of members and the role of the Commission in the review process, in the context of the consideration of the recommendations by the Secretary-General for a review of the Commission at the resumed fifty-third session of the General Assembly;

V

Framework for human resources management

Recalling its resolutions 51/216 and 52/216,

Convinced that the Commission must play a lead role in the development of innovative approaches in the field of human resources management as part of the overall reform currently taking place in the organizations of the common system,

1. Welcomes the initiative of the Commission to examine a framework for human resources management;
2. Invites the Commission, as part of the planned review, to examine, inter alia, the reform initiatives by all organizations of the common system, as well as reform efforts outside the common system, the facilitation of inter-agency mobility and the introduction of specialist pay;
3. Urges the Commission to address speedily the request of the General Assembly regarding studies in the area of human resources management and to submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

VI

Report on gender balance in the United Nations system

Recalling section VI of its resolution 47/216 and section III.H of its resolution 52/216, in which it urged the organizations of the common system to introduce a coherent plan for improving the status of women in each organization,

1. Notes the continuing work of the Commission to assist the organizations in achieving gender balance, and in particular welcomes its initiative in the areas identified under paragraph 290 of its report;
2. Endorses the requests of the Commission to the organizations, as outlined in paragraphs 283 and 291 of its report, and urges all organizations to take steps to implement them as soon as possible;
3. Notes that the Commission will revert to this matter in 2001;

VII

Report of the Board of Auditors

Recalling its request to the Board of Auditors to conduct a management review of all aspects of the work done by the secretariat of the Commission in time for the submission of a report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Board of Auditors on the management review of the secretariat of the Commission and the response of the Commission contained in paragraph 37 of its report;
2. Requests the Board of Auditors to conduct audits of the secretariat of the Commission on a periodic basis, in accordance with financial regulation 12.5 of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and the statute of the Commission.

ANNEX I (see next page)

ANNEX II Amendments to the Staff Regulations of the United Nations

* This scale will be implemented in conjunction with a consolidation of 2.48 percent of post adjustment. There will be consequential adjustments in the post adjustment indices and multipliers at all duty stations, effective 1 March 1999. Thereafter, changes in post adjustment classifications will be effected on the basis of the movements of the consolidated post adjustment indices.

in response to General Assembly resolution 52/216 [YUN 1997, p. 1454]. The framework covered job classification, recruitment, career development, mobility, employment and contractual arrangements, geographical balance, training and staff development, ethics and performance management. ICSC established a working group to examine the framework.

ICSC considered a document describing steps taken by the secretariat to focus and develop a project on managing diversity, which included strengthening intercultural synergies and creating a better appreciation of cultural and gender diversity to improve resources management in a multicultural environment. It requested its secretariat, in collaboration with the United Nations Staff College, to continue to refine training/learning modules on managing diversity and to keep the Commission apprised of the use made of the modules.

Reports of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/226 [ibid., p. 1459], the Secretary-General, in September [A/53/342], presented information on the strategy for the management of human resources; delegation of authority; simplification and streamlining of personnel rules and procedures; staff-management consultative mechanisms; practices of Member States relative to national staff representation; proposals on the introduction of a probationary period for successful candidates in the competitive examination for promotion to the Professional category of staff from other categories and geographical imbalance resulting therefrom; feasibility of holding national competitive examinations in the six UN official languages; career development; linguistic qualifications of staff; efforts to achieve 70 per cent of permanent appointments in posts subject to geographical distribution; detailed proposals for the implementation of a dual-track system of career and non-career appointments; hiring of retirees and use of consultants; performance management; and gratis personnel provided by Governments.

In response to Assembly resolution 52/12 A [YUN 1997, p. 1391], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/53/414] on human resources management reform, within the context of his programme for UN reform (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). The report built on the strategy for the management of human resources, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 49/222 [YUN 1994, p. 1379], and the recommendations of the Task Force on Human Resources Management, which was constituted in January. The Task Force, which met between February and June, was supported by working groups in the areas of recruitment and placement; staff administration; staff development; performance management and career support; and conditions of service. The Secretary-General stated that he was committed to creating an organizational culture that was responsive and results-oriented, that rewarded creativity and innovation and promoted continuous learning, high performance and managerial excellence. The key elements of his strategy were the provision of progressive and competitive conditions of service; clearly defined core organizational values and competencies; streamlined human resources policies, processes and rules in staff administration; the development of policies and guidelines and measures to monitor compliance and ensure accountability of policies; refocusing the role of the UN Office of Human Resources Management (OHRM); a simplified, flexible, timely and cost-effective system of recruitment and placement; continuous learning; mobility at all levels; fostering an atmosphere of mutual trust between staff and managers; and an integrated system of human resources planning. The programme of change was to be attained over the next three to five years.

Concluding, the Secretary-General stated that a process of continuous communication would be necessary to ensure the broadest participation. Town hall meetings, consultation with staff and management, and briefings with Member States had taken place and would need to continue to ensure a common purpose and commitment to change in the best interests of the Organization and the international community. Many of the changes outlined in the report were far-reaching and would require time and adequate resources to implement. The Secretary-General was committed to the reform process, which was fundamentally intended to empower managers, while simplifying rules and processes.

ACABQ action. ACABQ, in November [A/53/691], noted that the Secretary-General's October report provided a vision of organizational change, but no specific measures were indicated as to how he intended to implement it. The Committee recommended that the Assembly ask the Secretary-General to submit an implementation plan for which the Secretariat would be held accountable. The budgetary implications of the reform measures should be indicated in the proposed programme budget.

The Assembly, by decision 53/460 of 18 December, deferred until the first part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session consideration of the item "Human resources management".

Internal vacancies

In September [A/53/327], the Secretary-General described legislative action, including an amendment to staff regulation 4.4 in the light of a judgement of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal regarding internal vacancies. A summary of the judgement was annexed to the report. The Tribunal based its decision on staff regulation 4.4, applicable to all staff who were already in the service of the United Nations, and interpreted the term "staff" to mean those who were employed in the exclusive service of the Organization and had taken an oath to it and whose letters of appointment obliged them to abide by the Staff Rules and Regulations. The judgement made it difficult to comply with General Assembly resolutions relating to the competitive examination, the eligibility of a limited category of staff to apply for internal vacancies after one year of qualifying service and the system of desirable ranges. Its implementation would require a new layer in the placement and promotion process, as well as a radical change in the role of appointment and promotion bodies, and would have a serious impact on career development. In view of those concerns, the application of the judgement was limited to the applicant concerned, pending consideration by the Assembly.

The Secretary-General presented options for action by the Assembly, by which it would either accept the Tribunal's interpretation of staff regulation 4.4 or amend it to maintain the practice of distinction between internal and external recruitment.

ACABQ, in November [A/53/691], recommended that the Assembly amend staff regulation 4.4.

The General Assembly, by decision 53/460 of 18 December, requested the Secretary-General to maintain current procedures relating to the consideration of candidates for internal vacancies in the Secretariat temporarily until the adoption of a resolution on human resources management, including the issue of internal vacancies, during the first part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

Employment of retirees

OIOS report. In November [A/53/642], the Secretary-General submitted a report of the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on an audit of the compliance of the recruitment of retirees with the provisions of General Assembly decision 51/408 [YUN 1996, p. 1329]. The audit was based on the employment of retirees from 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1997, and a detailed review of 165 recruitment cases. OIOS said that it had identified cases of non-compliance and other issues of concern involving 64 of the cases. Of the 5,336 staff recruited during the period, it found that 14 per cent (at least 759) were 60 years of age or over. OIOS believed that figure was relatively high. There was also a gender imbalance in the recruitment of retirees, and a number of those employed on a short-term basis were not medically cleared by the UN Medical Services Division prior to recruitment.

OIOS recommended that OHRM provide a standard definition of the term "retirees"; revise the existing administrative instruction on the employment of retirees; monitor the employment of retirees and promote alternative means of acquiring the required services by developing in-house expertise; regularly monitor retiree appointments to ensure compliance with the provision of limiting the period during which retirees could be employed in any calendar year; and ensure medical clearance.

OHRM indicated that, while agreeing with all of the OIOS recommendations, it differed on the interpretation of the term "retirees" and the applicability of the six-month limitation provision. It did not concur with some of the data and observations presented in the OIOS report. The Secretary-General indicated that he concurred with the OIOS recommendations.

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report with later addendum [A/53/526 & Add.1], the Secretary-General presented statistical data for 1995, 1996 and 1997 on the use of retired personnel, pursuant to General Assembly decision 51/408 [YUN 1996, p. 1329].

For the purposes of the report, the Secretary-General had defined a "retiree" as a former staff member 55 years of age or older who, consequent upon service exceeding five years, was in receipt of a pension from the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF). Concerning the ceiling on annual earnings, set at $22,000 and $40,000 for language services, the Secretary-General said that there was no evidence that those ceilings posed operational difficulties for the Secretariat and, therefore, remained appropriate. He would continue to monitor the impact of the ceilings on the delivery of services, particularly with respect to language services and, if necessary, would make recommendations to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth (2000) session.

ACABQ recommendations. In November [A/53/691], ACABQ welcomed the Secretary-General's report as the first step towards a procedure whereby the General Assembly could monitor the employment of retirees. It agreed with the Secretary-General's definition of "retiree". However, for monitoring purposes, ACABQ recommended that, in future, statistics be provided on persons who had retired after age 60 or 62 and who were re-employed for six months or more, including those who elected to receive a withdrawal settlement. Until the Assembly decided otherwise, those personnel should not be subject to the limitations provided under the current definition of retirees. It noted that the weaknesses in the databases would be remedied with the interface between the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) and Pension Fund databases, and agreed with the Secretary-General that the ceilings on earnings remained appropriate. ACABQ requested that the trend towards local recruitment of language staff continue to be monitored.

Consultants and individual contractors

In March, the Secretary-General submitted an OIOS report on the audit on the use of consultants [A/52/814], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362] and decision 51/22 B [YUN 1996, p. 1324]. The audit disclosed various internal control weaknesses and other shortcomings in connection with the engagement of some 2,675 consultants during 1996. Most of those weaknesses represented a recurrence of the practices noted in previous audits by the Board of Auditors and OIOS. The examination of randomly selected cases did not indicate that consultants were engaged to carry out work previously performed by staff on posts, but no positive assurance could be given to the contrary because of shortcomings in data collection and record keeping. Also, there was a lack of awareness or understanding of the difference between consultants and individual contractors due to unclear definitions of those personnel groups in existing directives.

The audit found that no proper rosters of candidates were maintained or used for selecting individual consultants. Many consultants were engaged based on a single-person candidate list submitted by the user department, preventing the consideration of other, possibly better qualified, candidates. The selection process, in part because of lack of time, did not include a prior verification of the candidates' professional background and qualifications. There were no clear guidelines to determine the level of remuneration payable to consultants, resulting in the payment of widely divergent rates for similar services. Departments maintained inaccurate or otherwise deficient logs on consultancies; the distinction between consultants and individual contractors was not being observed, resulting in unreliable recording and reporting. The possibility of using funds allotted for temporary assistance or contractual services to obtain consultancy services by classifying consultants as individual contractors could not be excluded.

OIOS recommended that the following elements be included in comprehensive policy guidelines governing the engagement and use of consultants: clear definitions of the various types of personnel hired on a temporary and intermittent basis by the Secretariat to easily differentiate those engaged for consultancy functions from those, including individual contractors, hired to perform regular staff or otherwise non-consultancy functions; discontinued use of the term "Special Service Agreement" for both consultants and individual contractors; procedures to ensure that the selection of candidates for consultancies was done objectively and on a cost-effective and competitive basis, with due regard to geographical balance; a proper and consistent approach for determining the level of remuneration, including the establishment and regular updating of ranges of standard rates; the maintenance and regular updating of computerized rosters of candidates for consultancies; and the Secretariat-wide use of IMIS to ensure the uniform recording of required consultancy data and to facilitate the reporting, central monitoring and analysis of such data.

The Assembly, by decision 52/475 of 31 March, decided to consider the OIOS report at its fifty-third session in the context of its consideration of the Secretary-General's comprehensive report on the engagement and use of consultants.

In response to Assembly resolution 51/226 [YUN 1997, p. 1459] and decision 52/475, the Secretary-General submitted, in September, guidelines for the engagement and use of consultants [A/53/385], which proposed definitions of the terms "consultant" and "individual contractor", and outlined their respective responsibilities. In October [A/53/548], the Secretary-General provided statistical data for the 1996-1997 biennium, indicating that 7,505 special service agreements were concluded with consultants and individual contractors from 165 countries, 28 per cent of whom were women, and which had resulted in an expenditure of $53 million. Data was also presented on the engagement of consultants and individual contractors by department or office, the average number of days per contractee and average fee, and the resultant average fee per day.

ACABQ, in November [A/53/691], recommended that the new definitions for consultants and individual contractors and the proposed guidelines of the Secretary-General be endorsed by the Assembly and conform with relevant Assembly decisions on the employment of consultants.

ACABQ noted a number of deficiencies in the format of the Secretary-General's report, including the exclusion of areas of assignment and other weaknesses previously identified by OIOS and the Board of Auditors. The Committee was informed that while there was no comprehensive centrally available information on the assignment of consultants and individual contractors, the problem would be addressed with the installation of IMIS in offices away from Headquarters. ACABQ said that it was not in a position to evaluate the statistics provided in the Secretary-General's report. The Committee noted that by the time the next report was due, IMIS would have been installed in offices away from Headquarters. It recommended that the next report be prepared in the format it had recommended earlier.

Gratis personnel

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 51/243 [YUN 1997, p. 1469], the Secretary-General, in March [A/52/823], reported on the method used for the application, and the level, of administrative support costs for gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities. In accordance with the Assembly's resolution, budgets prepared by the Secretary-General on a full-cost basis might include a limited number of posts that required expertise for very specialized functions for which gratis personnel might be needed. When accepted, they would be placed against approved funded positions and be part of the staffing establishment. Thus, the question of support charges would not arise. However, support costs would also not be charged when temporary and urgent assistance was needed for new or expanded mandates, since the Assembly's approval of posts and their financing would follow shortly thereafter. The Secretary-General also submitted quarterly reports in March [A/C.S/52/43], May [A/C.S/52/51] and July [A/C.S/52/54/Rev.I] on the number of gratis personnel working with the United Nations and who had completed their assignments. In July, he indicated that accelerated procedures were initiated to ensure speedy recruitment of staff to replace gratis personnel in the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO), which would enable the phasing out of all gratis personnel currently serving in the Secretariat by 28 February 1999.

In May [A/52/890], ACABQ presented its comments on issues raised in reports submitted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1467]. It was of the opinion that practically all the functions assigned to gratis personnel referred to in the reports should be performed by staff members. The Committee believed it was the lack of adequate staff resources that gave rise to the acceptance of type II gratis personnel, who were mainly involved in mandated operations, rather than the need for very specialized functions not already available in the Secretariat or through recruitment. In future, there should be a clearer demonstration and justification that the requisite criteria for accepting such personnel were met. It recommended approval of the redrafted guidelines for type II gratis personnel [A/52/698]. Programme managers should be held accountable for proper implementation of the guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/746/Add.3], adopted resolution 52/234 without vote [agenda item 114].

Gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 51/243 of 15 September 1997 and 52/220 of 22 December 1997,

Also reaffirming Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolution 52/12 A of 12 November 1997,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Reaffirming regulation 7.2 and rule 107.7 of the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that there is strict compliance with the provisions of its resolution 51/243, in particular paragraphs 4 and 9;

2. Reaffirms that the programme of work and mandates approved by Member States must be financed in the manner determined by the General Assembly, based upon proposals of the Secretary-General;

3. Recognizes that the use of gratis personnel should not be the result of poor personnel planning, and emphasizes that gratis personnel are not a substitute for staff to be recruited against authorized posts for the implementation of mandated programmes and activities;

4. Decides that gratis personnel should not be sought for positions kept vacant solely for financial reasons;

5. Reiterates that it is necessary that fully substantiated and comprehensive proposals on the total requirements from all sources of funding be presented so as to enable the General Assembly to decide on the level of resources required to implement fully all mandated programmes and activities, and requests that the Secretary-General present all future budgets and budget outlines in that manner, in accordance with Assembly resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986;

6. Decides that gratis personnel shall not be considered staff members of the United Nations;

7. Endorses the observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that lack of adequate staff resources should not give rise to the acceptance of type II gratis personnel and that in the future clearer demonstration and justification should be given that acceptance of gratis personnel meets the requisite criteria contained in paragraph 4 of resolution 51/243;

8. Also endorses the observation of the Advisory Committee that type II gratis personnel should not be accepted on the grounds of failure by the Secretariat to recruit staff in an expeditious manner;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to complete, as a matter of priority, the process of recruitment of staff to replace type II gratis personnel in accordance with resolution 51/243 by the end of February 1999, including through the redeployment of staff, recruitment of civilians, civilian police and serving military officers of Member States, as well as through changes in work distribution and methods, and to ensure adequate hand-over arrangements to provide the continuity of expertise and the proper and efficient functioning of all departments concerned, in accordance with Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations;

10. Notes the commitment of the Secretary-General to phase out gratis personnel and to replace them with United Nations-funded personnel by the end of February 1999, as presented to the Fifth Committee at its resumed 68th meeting, on 26 June 1998;

11. Emphasizes that expeditious implementation of action 3, contained in the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform", is relevant to his task of managing the Secretariat in accordance with Articles 97, 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, and is essential for sustaining the momentum of reform;

12. Looks forward to the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on, inter alia, the implementation of action 3, to be submitted to the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-third session;

13. Notes with concern that functions that should be performed by the staff of the United Nations are being performed by gratis personnel, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that functions such as verification of claims, processing reimbursement of contingent-owned equipment and development of personnel databases, which are considered to be core functions, are performed by United Nations personnel;

14. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of 9 March 1998;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that future quarterly reports on the acceptance of type II gratis personnel are issued in a timely fashion and that they contain more accurate, comprehensive, complete and integrated information about gratis personnel, similar to the information provided in the first report on type II gratis personnel, so as to enable Member States to take informed decisions;

16. Approves the revised guidelines on gratis personnel as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General of 21 November 1997 and the recommendations made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 11 of its report and annex I thereto, as well as the explanation contained in that annex, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;

17. Decides to amend paragraph 9 of the report of the Secretary-General as follows:

"9. Gratis personnel may not supervise staff members in the exercise of their official duties or be involved in decisions affecting the status, rights and entitlements of staff members. The only exception to this rule would be in those cases where the gratis personnel might have managerial responsibility for staff members who provide direct support to them.";

18. Also decides to add at the end of the first sentence of paragraph 12 of the report the following words: "unless there are exceptional circumstances beyond the control of the Secretary-General, in which case the approval of the General Assembly should be sought to maintain the gratis personnel beyond this period";

19. Regrets the contradictory and inconsistent information provided to the Fifth Committee by representatives of the Secretary-General on this issue, which affected adversely the deliberations of the Committee and impeded informed and timely decisions;

20. Decides to resume consideration of the issue of gratis personnel at the third part of its resumed fifty-second session.

In his July quarterly report [A/C.5/52/56], the Secretary-General reported that, as at 30 June, the number of type II gratis personnel employed by the Secretariat had been reduced to 175. He indicated also that at ICTY (see PART IV, Chapter II) six gratis type II personnel had commenced functions as investigators to allow the Tribunal to ensure effective and efficient processing of cases pending the completion of recruitment procedures against posts approved by the Assembly.

ACABQ, in September [A/53/417], noted the action by ICTY and stated that it contravened the procedures and provisions of resolution 51/243. It was of the opinion that information provided in the quarterly reports failed to demonstrate the extent to which all gratis personnel accepted in DPKO provided specialized expertise not available in the Organization. It recommended that future quarterly reports demonstrate the acceptance of gratis personnel in strict accordance with the terms of Assembly resolutions; indicate the number of staff in those areas where gratis personnel had been accepted; and provide information on compliance with the deadlines of engagement of such personnel.

On 26 October [meeting 43], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/533], adopted resolution 53/11 without vote [agenda items 112 & 119].

Gratis personnel provided by Governments and other entities

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 51/243 of 15 September 1997, 52/217, 52/218 and 52/220 of 22 December 1997 and 52/234 and 52/248 of 26 June 1998,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Reaffirms that the circumstances in which the Secretary-General can accept gratis personnel should be in strict compliance with paragraphs 4 (a) and (b) of General Assembly resolution 51/243;

2. Notes that the decrease in type II gratis personnel is continuing, as requested by the General Assembly in paragraph 9 of resolution 51/243;

3. Notes with concern that the information provided by the Secretary-General fails to demonstrate the extent to which all gratis personnel accepted in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat provide very specialized expertise not available within the Organization, as is required under paragraph 4 (a) of resolution 51/243;

4. Also notes with concern the observation by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the cases of the acceptance of gratis personnel by the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, referred to in the reports of the Secretary-General, contravene the provisions of resolution 51/243 which do not allow acceptance of gratis personnel on the grounds of failure by the Secretariat to recruit staff in an expeditious manner;

5. Further notes with concern that the extension of the deadline for the submission of applications for the replacement of type II gratis personnel has resulted in cases of differential treatment among Member States;

6. Takes note of the commitment and assurances of the Secretary-General that the recruitment process for the replacement of type II gratis personnel, including those in the two international tribunals, will be completed by 28 February 1999, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 52/234 and 52/248;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to improve further the planning and implementation mechanism in human resources management in a transparent manner and secure the independent and efficient work of the Secretariat pursuant to Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant resolutions adopted by the General Assembly;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that recruitment for any new posts arising from the phase-out of gratis personnel is carried out on as wide a geographical basis as possible with due regard to gender;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the implementation of the phase-out of type II gratis personnel at its resumed fifty-third session.

In November [A/53/7151], the Secretary-General updated previous quarterly reports and presented the annual report on gratis personnel covering the period 1 October 1997 to 30 September 1998. He indicated that, as at 30 September, the number of type II gratis personnel had further decreased to 134. The report also included data from the UN Office at Nairobi (UNON) submitted ex postfacto and related to type II gratis personnel whose engagements were not previously reported. The expiry dates of engagements for several gratis personnel exceeded the 28 February 1999 deadline set by the Assembly (resolution 53/11). Consequently, the UNON Director-General was instructed to phase out all proposed UN Centre for Human Settlements type II gratis personnel by the end of February 1999. The Secretary-General also reported on the number of exceptions granted to ICTR and ICTY. Annexed to the report was information on type I gratis personnel (interns, associate experts, technical cooperation experts obtained on a non-reimbursable loan as gratis personnel serving with the United Nations Special Commission) (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). Between September 1997 and September 1998, that number had increased with respect to interns and associate experts, but overall the number of type I gratis personnel had decreased from 408 to 378.

Performance appraisal system

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/219 [YUN 1997, p. 1467], the Secretary-General, in August [A/53/266], provided information on the development and implementation of the performance appraisal system (PAS) since the submission of his previous report [YUN 1997, p. 1465]. The report also examined the possibility of introducing a system of performance awards and bonuses.

The Secretary-General stated that the PAS processes, forms and materials were reviewed and, in consultation with the staff, PAS was revised, providing a flexible format to accommodate all occupations. Among the major changes incorporated were simplification of the language, significant reduction of the number of steps in the implementation process, the use of only one form for both planning and appraisal, and the replacement of numerical ratings with narratives. The implementation guidelines were shortened and a user-friendly electronic version was developed. The revised forms were issued in December 1997 in time for the 1998 cycle. Currently, 14 departments reported implementing PAS during two cycles, 6 had completed one cycle and the remaining 7 were beginning in 1998. The Management Review Committees were also established and operational in a majority of departments and offices. OHRM monitored implementation across the Secretariat to assist managers and help to ensure fair and consistent application of the system. Other monitoring mechanisms were also in place, including the departmental Joint Monitoring Committees, intended to report on the timeliness of the process, compliance with procedures and overall results, and the Global Joint Monitoring Committee, which examined policy issues relating to implementation and was required to prepare an annual report on the system. The latter held its first meeting on 20 May and recommended that the Organization refrain from further modifying the system until the current newly revised system was fully implemented for a reasonable period of time. To support implementation of the principles of performance management and build the requisite skills, the Organization introduced a people management training programme, to be implemented globally, a supervisory skills programme for senior General Service and junior Professional staff with supervisory responsibilities, a collaborative negotiation skills programme for Professional and General Service staff, and a new General Service development programme.

The Secretary-General concluded that the process of establishing a PAS management system was a long-term endeavour, requiring significant organizational culture change and continuous learning, as well as attitudinal change on the part of staff and management. The Organization would continue to draw from the best practices of the public and private sectors and other organizations to ensure that it benefited from the common system experience. The implementation of the system would be kept under review, further developed and refined in the light of continuing experience.

Regarding the possibility of introducing a system of awards or bonuses, in the context of PAS, to a limited number of staff, the Secretary-General presented principles for doing so that were developed with ICSC and in consultation with the staff and management. He said that there was widespread recognition that PAS was not sufficiently established to develop a Secretariat-wide performance recognition system or a system of monetary awards. Further attention should be given to developing a culture of recognition and putting in place mechanisms to ensure accountability of managers and to build confidence among the staff. He proposed a step-by-step approach to introduce a range of non-monetary awards; developing a pilot performance awards programme and selection of some form of joint-management review group to develop objective and transparent criteria for granting awards; and a mechanism for selecting recipients. At a later stage, consideration might be given to other forms of awards, possibly travel, sabbaticals or study leave, as well as cash awards or bonuses.

Staff composition

On 11 September, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his annual report on staff composition of the UN Secretariat, by nationality, gender, grade and type of appointment [A/53/375 & Corr.1,3].

As at 30 June 1998, the staff totalled 13,543, of whom 7,803 were paid from the regular budget and 5,740 from extrabudgetary sources. There were 4,164 in the Professional category and above, 8,645 in the General Service and related categories and 734 project personnel.

Staff in posts subject to geographical distribution numbered 2,400. As at 30 June, 24 Member States were unrepresented, compared to 25 as at 30 June 1997, and 9 were under-represented, compared to 20 the year before. Changes in representation derived not only from staff appointments and separations from service, but also from such factors as adjustments in desirable ranges resulting from an increase or decrease in the number of posts subject to geographical distribution, changes in the number of Member States, variations in assessed contributions or population of individual Member States, and changes in the status of some staff members. The report also provided information on groupings of Member States, representation of developing and other countries among staff at the senior levels, representation of women and recruitment activities.

Between 1 July 1997 and 30 June 1998, 104 appointments were made to posts subject to geographical distribution. Of those, 2 (1.9 per cent) were nationals of unrepresented Member States; 72 (69.2 per cent) of within-range Member States; and 2 (1.9 per cent) of over-represented Member States.

Status of women in the Secretariat

In a January report [E/CN.6/1998/3] to the Commission on the Status of Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X) on the mid-term review of the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, the Secretary-General said that renewed efforts to achieve gender balance in staffing were made but were often thwarted by reforms and cuts in resources. High-level UNDP appointments of women in senior positions in 1997 had included the posts of Directors of the Office of Human Resources, Finance, Operations and the Regional Bureau for Africa. In the Secretariat, the percentage of women in the Professional category subject to geographical distribution increased from 34 per cent in 1995 to 36.6 per cent in 1997. Three departments and offices achieved or surpassed the goal of 50 per cent women overall in posts subject to geographical distribution. At the World Food Programme, the number of female staff had increased through proactive recruitment and promotion and a better retention rate.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1998/11 of 28 July, reaffirmed the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 in all categories of posts, especially at the D-1 level and above (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

ICSC consideration. In March, ICSC noted that the status of women had improved over the past 12 years. System-wide, women currently accounted for 30 per cent of staff, of whom some 60 per cent worked in non-substantive activities, mainly in administrative, language and library and related fields. At the higher decision-making level, P-5 and above, progress was less encouraging. Out of 2,990 posts system-wide, there was a total of only 497 women, or 16 per cent. Over the past four years, the recruitment of women system-wide was 30.8 per cent in geographical posts and 38.9 per cent in non-geographical posts.

ICSC requested its secretariat to: issue and widely distribute a booklet containing recent statistical information; maintain the gender balance database; establish a database of recruitment sources targeting nationals of developing countries, especially nationals from under-represented countries and from countries with economies in transition; and develop guidelines for persons in decision-making positions to facilitate accountability for ensuring gender balance.

The Commission requested organizations to bring the Platform for Action, adopted by the Fourth (1995) World Conference on Women in Beijing [YUN 1995, p. 1170], as well as the definition of mainstreaming and its principles, to the attention of managers. It further requested them to engage in human resources planning if they were not doing so. The Commission decided to revert to the issue in 2001.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/96 [YUN 1997, p. 1471], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat [A/53/376]. As at 30 June 1998, the percentage of women in posts subject to geographical distribution stood at 36.9 per cent, compared to 23.1 per cent in 1985, an increase of 13.8 per cent. The number of women at the D-1 level and above had increased since the last report [YUN 1997, p. 1470] from 62 to 79. However, despite significant progress in improving the representation of women at the D-1 level and above, the incremental pace at the other levels was discouraging. Women remained concentrated in the lower levels of the Professional category, with the majority at the P-3 level. The Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women analysed the representation of women overall and, on that basis, the Secretary-General would request programme managers to develop action plans with specific targets to achieve the goal of gender balance in their departments. A sample gender action plan had been developed to illustrate different strategies to improve the representation of women.

In addition to the development and implementation of gender action plans, existing strategies would be pursued. The Secretary-General remained committed to achieving the goal of gender balance and would hold managers accountable for the achievement of the gender equality goals set forth in the ACC statement on gender equality and mainstreaming gender in the UN system (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/618], adopted resolution 53/119 without vote [agenda item 103].

Improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 1 and 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, as well as Article 8, which provides that the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs,

Recalling also the goal, contained in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, of the achievement of overall gender equality, particularly at the Professional level and above, by the year 2000,

Recalling further its resolution 52/96 of 12 December 1997 on the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat,

Welcoming the progress made in improving the representation of women at the D-1 level and above, in particular the achievement of the interim goal set in its resolution 45/239 C of 21 December 1990 of a 25 per cent participation rate of women in posts at the D-1 level and above, but concerned that the representation of women at those levels remains significantly low,

Concerned at the incremental pace at which the overall representation of women in the Secretariat has increased and at the decline in the percentages of women promoted to and appointed at the P-5 level,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein, takes note of the statement of the Administrative Committee on Coordination on gender equality and mainstreaming in the work of the United Nations system: a commitment for action, adopted by the Committee in March 1998, and requests the Secretary-General to report in the year 2000 to the Commission on the Status of Women, in its capacity as the preparatory committee for the high-level plenary review to appraise and assess the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be convened by the General Assembly in the year 2000, on progress made to achieve the goals outlined in the statement;

2. Reaffirms the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 in all categories of posts within the United Nations system, especially at the D-1 level and above, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, and also taking into account the continuing lack of representation or under-representation of women from certain countries, in particular from developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition;

3. Welcomes the ongoing personal commitment of the Secretary-General to meeting the goal of gender equality and his assurance that gender balance will be given the highest priority in his continuing efforts to bring about a new management culture in the Organization, which will include full implementation of the special measures outlined in his report;

4. Calls upon the Secretary-General to implement fully and to monitor the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) in order to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000, especially at the D-1 level and above;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that individual managers are held accountable for implementing the strategic plan within their areas of responsibility;

6. Encourages the Secretary-General to appoint more women as special representatives and envoys and to pursue good offices on his behalf, especially in matters related to peacekeeping, peace-building, preventive diplomacy and economic and social development, and in operational activities, including resident coordinators, as well as to appoint more women to other high-level positions;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that heads of departments and offices develop gender action plans that establish concrete strategies for the achievement of gender balance in individual departments and offices, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution and in conformity with Article 101 of the Charter, so as to ensure, as far as possible, that the appointment and promotion of women will be not less than 50 per cent until the goal of 50/50 gender distribution is met;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue his work to create a gender-sensitive work environment supportive of the needs of his staff, both women and men, including through the development of policies for flexible working time, flexible workplace arrangements, child-care and elder-care needs, as well as through the expansion of gender-sensitivity training in all departments and offices;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to develop further the policy against harassment, including sexual harassment, and to issue detailed guidelines, based on the results of the comprehensive inter-agency survey;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to enable the Focal Point for Women in the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women to monitor effectively and facilitate progress in the implementation of the strategic plan, including by ensuring access to the information required to carry out that work;

11. Strongly encourages Member States to support the efforts of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution, especially at the D-1 level and above, by identifying and regularly submitting more women candidates for appointment to intergovernmental, judicial and expert bodies and encouraging more women to apply for positions within the Secretariat, the specialized agencies, funds and programmes and the regional commissions, including in areas in which women are under-represented, such as peacekeeping, peace-building and other non-traditional areas;

12. Also strongly encourages Member States to identify women candidates for assignment to peacekeeping missions and to improve the representation of women in military and civilian police contingents;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution, including by providing statistics on the number and percentage of women in all organizational units and at all levels throughout the United Nations system and on the implementation of gender action plans, to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-third session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

Language incentive

In 1998 [A/53/30], ICSC reviewed the language incentive scheme for the Professional and higher categories, as well as the language allowance for the General Service and related categories, to determine if the two recognition programmes should be aligned and whether a non-pensionable bonus should replace the current incentive.

ICSC recommended to the General Assembly that the language incentive scheme for the Professional and higher categories of staff be discontinued and replaced by a non-pensionable bonus. It further recommended to the Assembly and legislative bodies of organizations of the common system that had determined the need to reward staff that spoke more than one language to: pay the language allowance for the General Service and related categories in the form of a non-pensionable bonus on the understanding that the mechanisms for both categories of staff would be aligned; and to ensure that, in both categories of staff, the bonus be paid only if the language was used in the organization and that, at the time of the periodic PAS, organizations would retest or certify actual use by the staff of the language(s).

Staff rules and regulations

The Secretary-General, in an October report with later addendum [A/53/502 & Add.I], submitted to the General Assembly amendments to the Staff Rules relating to, among other things, hours of work and official holidays; the special education grant; mobility and hardship; sick leave; excess baggage; and removal costs.

The Assembly, by decision 53/460 of 18 December, requested the Secretary-General to postpone the promulgation of the amendments to the Staff Rules proposed in his report, pending their consideration during the first part of its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

UN official holidays

By decision 52/468 of 31 March, the General Assembly decided that the number of official holidays should be set at 10 days, in order to observe the two holidays of Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha at Headquarters and other UN duty stations.

UN Code of Conduct

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session, considered the Secretary-General's report on the proposed United Nations Code of Conduct [YUN 1997, p. 1472].

On 31 March [meeting 82], the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/746/Add.1], adopted decision 52/461 without vote [agenda item 114].

Proposed United Nations Code of Conduct

At its 82nd plenary meeting, on 31 March 1998, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the proposed United Nations Code of Conduct and taking into account the views expressed by Member States:

(a) Invited the International Civil Service Commission to examine the proposed Code of Conduct, as a matter of priority, at its forty-seventh session, to be held in Rome from 20 April to 14 May 1998;

(b) Requested the Fifth Committee, in the light of the comments and observations of the International Civil Service Commission, to revert to the question of the proposed United Nations Code of Conduct during the second part of its resumed fifty-second session, with a view to taking a decision on it.

ICSC consideration. ICSC provided the views of UN organizations and agencies, as well as its own, on the proposed Code in May [A/52/30/Add.1]. In its view, there was a distinction between a core of common standards, which should govern the entire civil service, and specific regulations and rules, which might vary, depending on the different needs of individual organizations. It therefore recommended that the term "Code of Conduct", which might be misunderstood, be replaced by a more appropriate term; and that the United Nations amend the Staff Regulations and Rules it had proposed, on the understanding that the revised text was applicable to the United Nations only and not to other organizations. It also decided to place on its work programme the updating of the 1954 International Civil Service Advisory Board Standards of Conduct, which would be carried out in collaboration with the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) of ACC, and to follow up with organizations concerned to ascertain the initiatives being undertaken or planned with respect to developing ethical standards.

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in July [A/52/488/Add.1], stated that, in addition to the ICSC review, the proposed Code of Conduct was also considered by the Staff-Management Coordination Committee, which recommended that the Secretary-General present to the General Assembly an amendment to the original text, removing all references to staff representatives. The rights, duties and obligations of staff representatives would be reviewed in the context of article VIII of the Staff Regulations and chapter 8 of the Staff Rules and later submitted to the Assembly. The report contained proposed revisions to the Code.

By decision 52/484 of 26 June, the Assembly deferred consideration of the question until the third part of its resumed fifty-second (1998) session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 September [meeting 92], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/955/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/252 without vote [agenda items 114, 153 & 157].

Revisions to article I of the Staff Regulations and chapter I of the 100 series of the Staff Rules of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling Articles 97, 98, 100, 101 and 105 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997,

Noting with concern the limited time it had at its disposal to consider this matter,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General of 17 October 1997 and 28 July 1998 entitled "Proposed United Nations Code of Conduct",

Taking note with appreciation of the comments provided by the International Civil Service Commission on the revised text of article I of the Staff Regulations and chapter I of the 100 series of the Staff Rules applicable to United Nations staff members,

Taking note of the views expressed by Member States in the Fifth Committee on this question,

Having heard the views expressed by staff representatives in the Fifth Committee in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/213 of 17 December 1980,

1. Adopts the revised text of article I of the Staff Regulations, and takes note of the revised text of chapter I of the 100 series of the Staff Rules applicable to United Nations staff members, as set out in annex I to the report of the Secretary-General of 17 October 1997, and not to other organizations, subject to the following modifications:

(a) The provisions contained in new staff regulations 1.1 (c) and 1.2 (g), and in new staff rule 101.2 (h) of the original proposal as set out in the report of the Secretary-General of 17 October 1997, which deal with staff representatives, are deleted, as indicated in the report of the Secretary-General of 28 July 1998;

(b) The phrase "and in the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly" is inserted after "Staff Regulations and Rules" in new staff regulation 1.1 (c);

(c) The phrase "in the employment of staff and" is deleted from new staff regulation 1.1 (d);

(d) Article 99 is deleted from annex I, section A;

(e) At the end of new staff regulation 1.1 (f), the words "in accordance with the relevant instruments" are added;

(f) New staff regulation 1.2 (o) is replaced with the following:

"All staff members at the assistant secretary-general level and above shall be required to file financial disclosure statements upon appointment and at intervals as prescribed by the Secretary-General, in respect of themselves and their dependent children, including any substantial transfers of assets and property to spouses and dependent children from the staff member or from any other source that might constitute a conflict of interest, after knowledge of the appointment or during its tenure, to provide certification stating that there is no conflict of interest with regard to the economic activities of spouses and dependent children, and to assist the Secretary-General in verifying the above-mentioned certification on his special request. The financial disclosure statements will remain confidential and will only be used, as prescribed by the Secretary-General, in making determinations pursuant to staff regulation 1.2 (n);"

2. Decides to insert between the second and third sentences of the text of the "Scope and purpose" provision of the Staff Regulations, the following sentence:

"For the purposes of these Regulations, the expressions 'United Nations Secretariat', 'staff members' or 'staff shall refer to all the staff members of the Secretariat, within the meaning of Article 97 of the Charter of the United Nations, whose employment and contractual relationship are defined by a letter of appointment subject to regulations promulgated by the General Assembly pursuant to Article 101, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations.'";

3. Decides also that the amendments to the Staff Regulations adopted in the present resolution and the related amendments to the Staff Rules shall become effective on 1 January 1999;

4. Emphasizes that the implementation of new staff regulation 1.2 (b) should take into account also the definition of integrity provided in the 1954 report of the International Civil Service Advisory Board entitled Standards of Conduct in the International Civil Service, in accordance with paragraph 28 of the comments of the International Civil Service Commission;

5. Also emphasizes that the implementation of new staff rule 101.2 (d) should be in accordance with the definition provided in administrative instruction ST/AI/379 of 29 October 1992;

6. Further emphasizes that managers, as staff members, are bound by the duties and obligations set out in new article I of the Staff Regulations and chapter I of the 100 series of the Staff Rules, and that their higher-level functions and responsibilities entail increased accountability for the proper performance of all their duties in managing the human and financial resources entrusted to them;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to emphasize in the commentary on new article I of the Staff Regulations and chapter I of the 100 series of the Staff Rules that the higher level of responsibilities associated with managerial functions entails a commensurate increase in the accountability of managers;

8. Stresses the importance of the provisions governing the status and the basic rights and duties of staff members, requests the Secretary-General to issue to every staff member in separate form the text of Articles 97, 98, 100, 101 and 105 of the Charter of the United Nations and relevant extracts from the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 22 A (I) of 13 February 1946, as well as the text of new article I of the Staff Regulations and chapter I of the 100 series of the Staff Rules, together with the explanatory commentary, the text of the present resolution and the 1954 report of the International Civil Service Advisory Board entitled Standards of Conduct in the International Civil Service;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite the submission to the General Assembly, by its fifty-fourth session, of appropriate regulations and rules governing the status, basic rights and duties of the Secretary-General, officials other than Secretariat officials and experts on mission;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare, as a matter of priority, additional rules for particular groups of staff such as finance officers, procurement officers and staff of separately funded organs, in accordance with paragraph 10 of his report;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a text of the Staff Regulations drafted in gender-neutral terms;

12. Notes that the Secretary-General will prepare amendments to the 200 and 300 series of the Staff Rules to reflect the amendments to article I of the Staff Regulations, and notes also that such amendments to the Staff Rules are subject to the requirements of staff regulations 12.2, 12.3 and 12.4;

13. Notes further that the International Civil Service Commission has decided to include in its work programme the updating of the 1954 Standards of Conduct in the International Civil Service of the International Civil Service Advisory Board in consultation with the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions, and looks forward to the results of this review.

By decision 53/458 of 18 December, the General Assembly agreed that the Fifth Committee should continue its consideration of agenda item 119, "Human resources management", at its resumed fifty-third (1999) session.

Privileges and immunities

The issue of privileges and immunities of UN personnel, including attacks on them in peacekeeping and humanitarian operations, continued to be of concern to the United Nations.

The General Assembly again had before it the report submitted by the Secretary-General on behalf of and with the approval of ACC on respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies [YUN 1997, p. 1474]. By decision 52/476 of 31 March, the Assembly deferred consideration of the report until its fifty-third session.

Reports of Secretary-General. In October [A/53/501], the Secretary-General presented to the Assembly, on behalf of and with the approval of ACC, a report on the security of officials and measures taken or to be taken to improve the security of staff and respect for the privileges and immunities of officials covering the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. He stated that 15 staff members of organizations of the UN system had lost their lives during that period, as had eight more between 1 July and 10 September 1998. Countless others had been victims of attack, robbery, harassment, injury or rape; 33 UN personnel were abducted and held hostage in eight separate incidents; and 31 individuals, including 10 staff members, were killed in four separate helicopter and aircraft accidents. In Afghanistan, UN property was repeatedly violated and office and warehouse premises systematically looted, amounting to millions of dollars of losses. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, offices were violated by government and military forces, and vehicles and communications equipment seized. In many instances, workers were evacuated and, in others, UN activities were suspended. At the request of ACC, the Secretary-General established the Trust Fund for Security of UN system staff in the field, which was administered by the UN Security Coordinator. An ACC decision on staff security was annexed to the report.

Also of great concern was the arrest and detention of UN personnel. Annexed to the report was a consolidated list of some 60 staff members under arrest and detention or missing and with respect to whom the UN and the specialized agencies and related organizations had been unable to exercise fully their right to protection. Of particular concern, following the recent hostilities between Ethiopia and Eritrea (see PART ONE, Chapter II), was the action of the Ethiopian Government to declare personae non gratae 30 Ethiopian staff members of the UN common system working in Ethiopia who were of Eritrean origin and who were forced to leave the country despite protests from the United Nations.

The Secretary-General said that ACC had considered the legal aspects of security and had endorsed the conclusions of a meeting of legal advisers of the UN common system in January. The advisers recommended that ACC remind Member States of their obligation under international law towards officials of the UN family. The advisers also recommended that, to enhance security and safety of staff, individual organizations might consider pursuing expansion of immunities of their own staff either by exploring bilateral solutions or by amending existing international instruments.

The Secretary-General called on Member States to recognize that humanitarian/human rights/development activities did not substitute for political action and noted that of the 162 incidents since 1992, only one case had been brought to justice. He welcomed the adoption of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (see PART FOUR, Chapter III), which gave the Court jurisdiction over such acts as intentionally directed attacks against personnel, installations, materials, units or vehicles involved in a humanitarian or peacekeeping mission, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as long as they were entitled to the protection given to civilians or civilian objects under the international law of armed conflict. He called on Member States that had not ratified or acceded to the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations [YUN 1946-47, p. 100] and the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies [ibid., p. 190] to do so, as well as to become parties to the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel [YUN 1994, p. 1289]. Furthermore, he felt that the biennial examination of the reports on privileges and immunities was inadequate and detrimental to the fate of staff members and recommended that they be considered annually. In addition to legal protection, Member States should recognize that the cost of providing security had to be augmented, the Secretary-General said. He appealed to Member States to contribute to the Security Trust Fund.

In September [S/1998/883], the Secretary-General submitted a report on how to improve protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations (see PART THREE, Chapter XII, for details).

During 1998, the Security Council took action in response to situations in which UN personnel were attacked intentionally. In a May statement by its President, the Council condemned an armed attack against UN personnel in Angola (see p. 107) and, in resolution 1219(1998) of 31 December, it expressed concern regarding the fate of a UN flight in Angola. In August, by resolution 1193(1998), the Council condemned attacks on UN personnel in Afghanistan. In a September presidential statement, the Council condemned all attacks against UN and other personnel associated with UN operations (see p. 1113).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/87 [draft: A/53/L.62 & Add.I] without vote [agenda item 20].

Safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991 on the strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 52/167 of 16 December 1997 on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and 52/126 of 12 December 1997 on the protection of United Nations personnel, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/37 of 17 April 1998,

Welcoming agreed conclusions 1998/1 adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 1998,

Concerned by the increasingly difficult context in which humanitarian assistance takes place in some areas, in particular the continuous erosion, in many cases, of respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law,

Welcoming the upcoming fiftieth anniversary of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 as an opportunity to raise awareness for humanitarian issues, in particular the need to promote, respect and ensure respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law,

Deeply concerned by the growing number of complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, in the last few years, which have dramatically increased the loss of human lives, suffering of victims, flows of refugees and internally displaced persons, as well as material destruction, which disrupt the development efforts of countries affected, in particular those of developing countries,

Taking note of the statements by the President of the Security Council of 19 June 1997 and 29 September 1998, the report of the Secretary-General on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, and the views expressed during the open debate in the Security Council on 29 September 1998 on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations,

Welcoming the inclusion of attacks intentionally directed against personnel involved in a humanitarian assistance or peacekeeping mission in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations as a war crime in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted on 17 July 1998 by the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, held at Rome from 15 June to 17 July 1998, and noting the role that the Court could play in bringing to justice those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law,

Commending the courage and commitment of those who take part in humanitarian operations, often at great personal risk,

Strongly deploring the rising toll of casualties among humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, and strongly condemning the acts of physical violence and harassment to which those participating in humanitarian operations are too frequently exposed,

Aware that humanitarian operations are generally implemented through close cooperation among Governments and the United Nations, its agencies and other international organizations, and Governments and non-governmental organizations,

Guided by the relevant provisions on protection contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Respect for the privileges and immunities of officials of the United Nations and the specialized agencies and related organizations: safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel";

2. Urges all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and effective implementation of the relevant principles and rules of international humanitarian law, including those related to the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel;

3. Also urges all States to take the necessary measures to ensure the safety and security of humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel, to respect and ensure respect for the inviolability of United Nations premises, which are essential to the continuation and successful implementation of United Nations operations, and to ensure the speedy release of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation who have been arrested or detained in violation of their immunity, in accordance with the relevant conventions referred to in the present resolution and applicable international humanitarian law;

4. Encourages all States to become parties to and to respect fully the provisions of the relevant international instruments, including the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

5. Calls upon all States to provide adequate and prompt information concerning the arrest or detention of humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel, to allow independent medical teams to investigate the health of those detained and to afford them the necessary medical assistance;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure full respect for the human rights, privileges and immunities of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation, to consider ways and means to strengthen the protection of United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Na-

lions operation, notably by seeking the inclusion, in negotiations of headquarters and other mission agreements concerning United Nations and associated personnel, of the applicable conditions contained in the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies and the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures, falling within his responsibilities, to ensure that security matters are an integrated part of the planning for an operation and that such precautions extend to all United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to ensure that United Nations and other personnel carrying out activities in fulfilment of the mandate of a United Nations operation are properly informed and suitably trained so as to enhance their security and effectiveness in accomplishing their functions;

9. Calls upon all States to consider signing and ratifying the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court;

10. Strongly condemns any act or failure to act which obstructs or prevents humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel from discharging their humanitarian functions, or which entails their being subjected to threats, the use of force or physical attack frequently resulting in injury or death;

11. Calls upon all Governments and parties in complex humanitarian emergencies, in particular armed conflicts and post-conflict situations, in countries where humanitarian personnel are operating, in conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and national laws, to cooperate fully with the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies and organizations and to ensure the safe and unhindered access of humanitarian personnel in order to allow them to perform efficiently their task of assisting the affected civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons;

12. Reaffirms the necessity for humanitarian personnel and United Nations personnel to be properly informed, inter alia, by their sponsoring organizations of the scope of their activities and the standards that they are required to meet, including those contained in relevant domestic and international law, and suitably trained so as to enhance their security and effectiveness in accomplishing their functions;

13. Also reaffirms the necessity for all humanitarian personnel to respect the national laws of the countries in which they are operating;

14. Urges all States to ensure that any threat or act of violence committed against humanitarian personnel on their territory is fully investigated and to take all appropriate measures, in accordance with international law and national legislation, to ensure that the perpetrators of such acts are prosecuted;

15. Welcomes the establishment by the Secretary-General of the Trust Fund for Security of personnel of the United Nations system in the field and encourages all States to contribute to the Trust Fund;

16. Notes the discussions on the respect for and security of humanitarian personnel at the first periodical meeting on international humanitarian law, held at Geneva in January 1998, and of the report of the President of that meeting;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to present a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the safety and security situation of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel and measures to be taken to improve it, taking into account the views of Governments, the Inter-Agency Standing Committee, other relevant humanitarian actors and the United Nations Security Coordinator.

UN Joint Staff Pension Fund

During 1998, the number of participants in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund (UNJSPF) increased from 67,740 to 67,971, or by 0.034 per cent; the number of periodic benefits in award increased from 43,149 to 44,633, or by 3.4 per cent. On 31 December, the breakdown of the periodic benefits in award was as follows: 14,223 retirement benefits, 9,069 early retirement benefits, 6,461 deferred retirement benefits, 6,524 widows' and widowers' benefits, 7,522 children's benefits, 788 disability benefits and 44 secondary dependants' benefits. In the course of the year, 5,650 lump-sum withdrawal and other settlements were paid.

The Fund was administered by the 33-member United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which held its forty-eighth session (Vienna, 7-16 July) [A/53/9 & Add.1] to consider actuarial matters, including the twenty-fourth actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1997; management of the Fund's investments and membership of the Investments Committee; long-term administrative arrangements between the Fund and the United Nations and with other member organizations; proposed revised administrative expenses for the 1998-1999 biennium; status of the proposed agreement between the Fund and the Government of the Russian Federation concerning the pension-related claims of former Fund participants from the former USSR; entitlement to survivor's benefits for spouses and former spouses; reviews of various aspects of the pension adjustment system; the biennial budget for the administrative expenses of the Fund; and the authorization for contributions to the Emergency Fund. In addition, the Board examined and approved the financial statements and schedules for the year ended 31 December 1997, and considered the report of the Board of Auditors on the accounts and operations of the Fund. It reviewed arrangements for internal audits of the Fund, monitoring and control procedures for benefit payments, and the development of accounting standards for actuarial valuations of the Fund. The Board also considered a review by ICSC of the common scale of staff assessment for pensionable remuneration purposes; the withdrawal of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization/General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade from membership in the Fund; provisions governing the suspension of benefits in cases of re-employment of retirees in member organizations of the Fund; and the size and composition of its Standing Committee.

In October [A/C.5/53/3], the Secretary-General submitted the administrative and financial implications arising from the report of the UN Joint Staff Pension Board.

ACABQ, in October and November, presented its comments [A/53/511 & A/53/696] on the Board's reports. The General Assembly acted on the Board's recommendations in December (see below).

Pension Fund investments

The market value of UNJSPF assets as at 31 December was $21.8 billion, an increase of $3.3 billion over the prior year. For the year ending 31 December 1998, UNJSPF had a one-year annualized real return of 18.7 per cent compared to 21.6 per cent for the benchmark. After adjustment for a 1.6 per cent rise in the consumer price index, the Fund had a real rate of return of 16.8 per cent. Over periods of three and five years, the Fund had a total return of 13.5 and 11.9 per cent, while the benchmark had returns of 13.6 and 13 per cent, respectively.

At the end of 1998, the Fund had 64 per cent of its assets in equities, 31 per cent in bonds, 4 per cent in real estate and 1 per cent in short-term assets and reserves. The book value of development-related investments was $ 1,228 million as at 31 December 1998.

In September [A/C.5/53/18], the Secretary-General described the economic conditions prevailing in the reporting period ended 31 March 1998 and presented information on the investment returns, diversification of the investments and the development-related investments of the Fund. The figures were based on the audited financial statements for 1996 and 1997 and the unaudited appraisals up to 31 March 1998. Some data had been updated to 3 June.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/736], adopted resolution 53/210 without vote [agenda item 121].

United Nations pension system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/224 of 23 December 1994 and 51/217 of 18 December 1996, and section V of its resolution 52/222 of 22 December 1997,

Having considered the reports of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for 1998 to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the Fund, the report of the Secretary-General on the administrative and financial implications for the United Nations programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 arising from the report of the Board and the related reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Expressing concern that the Board departed on several occasions from its long-established practice of reaching decisions by consensus,

I

Actuarial matters

Recalling section I of its resolution 51/217,

Having considered the results of the valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as at 31 December 1997 and the observations thereon of the Consulting Actuary of the Fund, the Committee of Actuaries and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the improvement in the actuarial situation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, from an actuarial deficit of 1.46 per cent of pensionable remuneration as at 31 December 1995 to an actuarial surplus of 0.36 per cent of pensionable remuneration as at 31 December 1997, and, in particular, of the opinion provided by the Consulting Actuary and the Committee of Actuaries, as reproduced in annexes IV and V, respectively, to the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, that there was no requirement, as at 31 December 1997, for deficiency payments under article 26 of the Regulations of the Fund and that the current contribution rate of 23.7 per cent of pensionable remuneration could be maintained for funding purposes, pending a review at the time of the next valuation, as at 31 December 1999, and in the light of future developments;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the assessment and views of the Consulting Actuary and the Committee of Actuaries on the results of the actuarial valuation as at 31 December 1997;

3. Takes note of the review by the Board of the interest rate used to determine lump-sum commutations, and of the decision taken by the Board, under article 11 of the Regulations of the Fund, to change the current 6.5 per cent interest rate to 6 per cent, with respect to contributory service performed as from 1 January 2001, subject to a favourable actuarial valuation as at 31 December 1999, to be confirmed by the Board at its next session in 2000;

4. Notes that the Board intends to review, with the assistance of the Consulting Actuary and the Committee of Actuaries, the changes that have been made in the United Nations pension system since 1983 as part of the measures approved by the General Assembly to redress the past actuarial deficit of the Fund, in the first instance in the Standing Committee of the Board in 1999, and then in the Board in 2000 in the light of the results of the actuarial valuation of the Fund as at 31 December 1999;

5. Concurs with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Board should continue to monitor closely the evolution of the actuarial valuation of the Fund and that no attempt should be made to reduce the present rate of contributions to the Fund or change any other features unless and until a pattern of surpluses emerges in future valuations;

6. Requests the Board, should there be a positive trend towards actuarial surpluses in future valuations, to consider favourably a reduction in the present contribution rate;

II

Pension adjustment system

Recalling section III of its resolution 51/217,

Having considered the reviews carried out by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, as set out in paragraphs 318 to 341 of its report, of various aspects of the pension adjustment system,

1. Notes the results of the monitoring of the costs/savings of recent modifications of the two-track feature of the pension adjustment system and the intention of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to continue to monitor those costs/savings every two years, on the occasion of the actuarial valuations of the Fund;

2. Takes note of the decision of the Board to recommend to the General Assembly that the threshold for implementing cost-of-living adjustments of pensions in award be reduced from 3 per cent to 2 per cent, with effect from the adjustment due on 1 April 2001, subject to a favourable actuarial valuation as at 31 December 1999, to be confirmed by the Board at its session in 2000;

III

Status of the proposed agreement between the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and the Government of the Russian Federation

Noting that the General Assembly had requested the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board to provide information at its fifty-third session on developments in respect of the further steps envisaged under paragraph 5 of section IV of its resolution 51/217,

Noting also that the Board has requested its Chairman and Secretary to intensify their efforts to gain the formal approval by the Government concerned of the proposed agreement and protocol thereto, as set out in paragraph 278 of the report of the Board,

1. Takes note of the information provided by the Russian Federation concerning the problems that have arisen with regard to the implementation of the proposed agreement between the Government of the Russian Federation and the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, and notes the intention of the Government of the Russian Federation to pursue all of the outstanding issues;

2. Encourages all parties concerned to continue their efforts to resolve the problems addressed in section IV of its resolution 51/217, in particular those within the framework of the proposed agreement and protocol thereto;

IV

Financial statements of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and report of the Board of Auditors

Having considered the financial statements of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund for the biennium ended 31 December 1997, the audit opinion and report of the Board of Auditors thereon and the observations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board,

1. Notes with satisfaction that the report of the Board of Auditors on the accounts of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund for the biennium ended 31 December 1997 indicated that the financial statements presented fairly, in all respects, the financial position of the Fund and that the transactions tested as part of the audit were, in all significant respects, in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and legislative authority;

2. Takes note of the information provided in the reports of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and the Board of Auditors on the measures taken and under consideration to improve the administration of the Fund, including, in particular, measures to improve the procedures for verifying continuing eligibility for benefits from the Fund;

3. Notes the arrangements made for the Office of Internal Oversight Services of the Secretariat to continue to carry out the internal audits of the Fund;

V

Administrative arrangements between the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and the United Nations and with the other member organizations

Recalling section VII of its resolution 51/217 and section V of its resolution 52/222 concerning the administrative expenses of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund,

Having considered section VI of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, on the administrative arrangements between the Fund and the United Nations and with the other member organizations, and the comments thereon of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Noting the current cost-sharing arrangements between the Fund and the United Nations and with the other member organizations, as set out in paragraphs 120 to 124 of the report of the Board,

Taking note of the discussions in the Board and its conclusions on the administrative arrangements and on the proposed revised estimates for the administrative expenses of the Fund for the biennium 1998-1999, as set out in paragraphs 194 to 202 and paragraphs 228 to 244, respectively, of the report of the Board,

1. Takes note of the information, set out in paragraphs 132 to 144 of the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, on the services and facilities provided by the United Nations to the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund and the local pension services provided by the secretariat of the Fund in respect of participants employed by the United Nations and its affiliated programmes, as well as the information on the services and facilities provided by the other member organizations in respect of participants employed by them;

2. Approves the revised cost-sharing arrangements between the United Nations and the Fund, as set out in paragraphs 154 to 166 of the report of the Board;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to complete his consultations with the funds and programmes on the methodology for apportioning charges to the affiliated programmes for services rendered to the Fund on their behalf;

4. Notes the intention of the Board to continue to consider other possible arrangements for the allocation of the costs of the operations of the Fund, as between those to be charged against the assets of the Fund and those to be shared by the member organizations of the Fund, taking into account the views expressed in the Board and in the Fifth Committee;

5. Also notes the issues to be addressed by the Standing Committee of the Board in 1999, in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001, in respect of the computer services of the Fund, the enhancement of the role of its Geneva office, the overall staffing structure of the secretariat of the Fund and the need for additional office space;

6. Welcomes the measures taken by the secretariat of the Fund to ensure its preparedness in respect of the year 2000 issue in all its aspects, and encourages it to continue its efforts in this regard and to ensure that the new accounting system is fully operational in 1999;

7. Takes note of the analysis and conclusions on the respective responsibilities of the Secretary of the Board, as the chief executive officer of the Fund, for the administration of the Fund and those of the Secretary-General for the investments of the Fund, as set out in paragraphs 191 to 193 of the report of the Board;

8. Also takes note of the observations and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in paragraphs 25 to 28 of its report, on the reclassification of the post of the Chief of the Investment Management Service of the Fund from the D-1 to the D-2 level, and on the level and title of the post of the Secretary of the Board;

9. Approves:

(a) The reclassification of the post of the Chief of the Investment Management Service to the D-2 level;

(b) The change in the title of the post of the Secretary of the Board to Chief Executive Officer of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund;

(c) The proposal that the level of remuneration and other conditions of service for the post of Chief Executive Officer of the Fund be set equivalent to those applicable to the Assistant Secretary-General level;

10. Also approves the additional resources recommended by the Board, involving additional expenses amounting to 4,161,700 United States dollars net for the biennium 1998-1999, chargeable directly to the Fund for its administration;

11. Amends article 7 of the Regulations of the Fund, regarding the post and title of the Secretary of the Board, as recommended by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 28 of its report and set out in the annex to the present resolution;

VI

Entitlement to survivors' benefits for spouses and former spouses

Recalling paragraph 4 of section VIII of its resolution 51/217,

Taking note of the further review undertaken by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board of issues related to the pension entitlements of spouses and former spouses, as set out in paragraphs 279 to 317 of its report,

Welcoming the significant actions taken by the Board,

1. Takes note of the amendment to rule B.4 of the Administrative Rules of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund made by the Standing Committee of the Board at its 180th meeting, in July 1997, as set out in annex XIV to the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, which entered into effect as from 1 August 1997;

2. Approves, with effect from the date of its adoption by the General Assembly, the amendment to article 45 of the Regulations of the Fund to provide for a payment facility in respect of former spouses, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

3. Requests the Board to monitor the experience in implementing the payment facility and to report to the General Assembly, as necessary;

4. Approves, with effect from 1 April 1999, the inclusion of a new article in the Regulations of the Fund to provide for a divorced surviving spouse's benefit, subject to conditions regarding eligibility for the benefit and the determination of its amount, as set out in the text of the new article contained in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Notes that the Standing Committee of the Board has been requested to review, at its meeting in 1999, the situation of divorced spouses who would not be covered by the proposed new article for reasons related to its prospective application;

6. Approves, with effect from 1 April 1999, the arrangement recommended for the optional purchase of surviving spouses' benefits in respect of marriages after separation from service, in accordance with the provisions of the new article set out in the annex to the present resolution;

7. Also approves, with effect from 1 April 1999, the amendments to article 34 to eliminate the current provision which requires discontinuation of a surviving spouse's benefit upon remarriage, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

8. Notes that the Standing Committee of the Board will consider, at its meeting in 1999, whether the change in paragraph 7 above might be extended to surviving spouses who had remarried prior to the effective date of the amendment;

9. Encourages the Board to continue its efforts in addressing these issues;

VII

Application of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization for withdrawal from membership in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Having considered the report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board on its forty-ninth (special) session, submitted to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the United Nations Joint

Staff Pension Fund, and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on the decision of 16 October 1998 of the General Council of the World Trade Organization and the Executive Committee of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization to authorize the Director-General of the World Trade Organization to inform the Fund that the Interim Commission wishes to apply for termination of its membership in the Fund on 31 December 1998, subject to the conclusion of satisfactory transfer arrangements with the Fund.

Regretting the wish of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization to apply for termination of its membership in the Fund effective 31 December 1998,

1. Notes the wish of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization to apply for termination of its membership in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund effective 31 December 1998, in the light of the strong commitment of the General Assembly to preserving the United Nations common system of salaries and allowances;

2. Also notes that, in accordance with article 16 of the Regulations of the Fund, the data required for the determination of the proportionate share of the total assets of the Fund payable to the World Trade Organization as at the date of termination, including the relevant actuarial valuations, will not be available at the proposed date of termination;

3. Further notes that the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, on the basis of the application of the methodology approved by the Board and agreed upon by the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization, has made a recommendation for the termination of the membership of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization in the Fund effective 31 December 1998;

4. Draws the attention of the members of the World Trade Organization that a staff member of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization ceasing participation in the Fund will have the possibility of electing to receive a benefit from the Fund and, at the same time, accepting an offer of employment in the secretariat of the World Trade Organization;

5. Decides to terminate the membership of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization in the Fund as at 31 December 1998, upon receipt by the Secretary of the Board of an unconditional written notification from the Director-General of the World Trade Organization to that effect, no later than 15 January 1999;

6. Decides also that the termination of the membership of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization is subject to receipt by the Secretary of the Board by 31 December 1998 of a written undertaking from the World Trade Organization that it will hold the Fund harmless from any and all claims against the Fund by Interim Commission participants, retirees or beneficiaries, arising from or relating to the termination of the membership of the Interim Commission in the Fund, as set out in paragraph 31 of the report of the Board on its special session;

7. Decides further that the proportionate share of the assets of the Fund payable to the World Trade Organization upon the termination of the membership of the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization shall be determined and remitted in accordance with the procedures set out in paragraphs 25 to 27 of the report of the Board and that this shall represent a complete and final settlement of the amount payable as a result of the termination of the membership of the Interim Commission in the Fund;

VIII

Other matters

1. Takes note of the observations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board, as set out in paragraphs 348 and 352 of its report, on the review and conclusions reached by the International Civil Service Commission on the changes in average tax rates in the seven headquarters countries which formed the basis for the development of the current common scale of staff assessment for pensionable remuneration, and on the impact of the possible use of national tax rates to determine pensionable remuneration for staff in the General Service and related categories;

2. Notes that, as requested in section VIII of its resolution 51/217, the Board has continued its consideration of a possible amendment of article 40 (a) of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in respect of the re-employment of retirees in receipt of benefits from the Fund under appointments of more than two but less than six months per calendar year;

3. Concurs that it would not be desirable to pursue a revision of article 40 (a) of the Regulations of the Fund at the present time, for the reasons set out by the Board in paragraphs 358 to 360 of its report, leaving it to the member organizations of the Fund to determine their respective personnel policies in this regard, as has been done for the United Nations Secretariat by General Assembly decision 51/408 of 4 November 1996;

4. Approves, with effect from the date of adoption by the General Assembly, the amendments to articles 21 (b) and 32 (a) of the Regulations of the Fund, which relate to the time limit for linking periods of contributory service, if no benefit has been paid, as set out in the annex to the present resolution;

5. Takes note of the other matters dealt with in section X of the report of the Board;

IX

Investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the investments of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, as well as the observations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board thereon in its report;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and to the members of the Investments Committee for the investment performance of the Fund, which contributed significantly to the actuarial surplus of the Fund as at 31 December 1997;

3. Welcomes the development of a strategic benchmark for the investment performance of the Fund, as described in paragraph 33 of the report of the Secretary-General and paragraphs 62 and 63 of the report of the Board;

4. Supports the efforts of the Secretary-General to continue consideration of suitable benchmarks and other indicators for assessing the investment performance of the Fund;

5. Takes note of the observations of the Board of Auditors on the outstanding tax refunds due to the Fund from some Member States in respect of direct taxes imposed on the investment income of the Fund, as set out in paragraphs 13 to 15 of its report, which is reproduced in annex III to the report of the Board;

6. Urges those Member States that have outstanding balances on foreign tax accounts receivable to provide the reimbursement due as quickly as possible;

7. Reiterates its request to those Member States that do not grant tax exemptions to make all possible efforts to do so as soon as possible.

ANNEX Amendments to the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

Article 7

Secretariat of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board

1. Replace paragraph (a) with the following:

"(a) The Chief Executive Officer of the Fund and a Deputy shall be appointed by the Secretary-General on the recommendation of the Board."

2. Replace paragraph (c) with the following:

"(c) The Chief Executive Officer shall perform that function under the authority of the Board and shall certify for payment all benefits properly payable under these Regulations. The Chief Executive Officer shall also serve as Secretary of the Board. In the absence of the Chief Executive Officer of the Fund, the Deputy Chief Executive Officer shall perform these functions."

Article 21

Participation

Replace paragraph (b) with the following:

"(b) Participation shall cease when the organization by which the participant is employed ceases to be a member organization, or when he or she dies or separates from such member organization, except that participation shall not be deemed to have ceased where a participant resumes contributory service with a member organization within 36 months after separation without a benefit having been paid."

Article 32

Deferment of payment or choice of benefit

Replace paragraph (a) with the following:

"(a) The payment to a participant of a withdrawal settlement, or the exercise by a participant of a choice among available benefits, or between a form of benefit involving payment in a lump sum and another form, may be deferred at the participant's request for a period of 36 months."

Article 34

Widow's benefit

1. Replace paragraph (f) with the following:

"(f) The benefit shall be payable at periodic intervals for life, provided that a benefit payable at an annual rate of less than 200 dollars may be commuted by the widow into a lump sum which is the actuarial equivalent of the benefit at the standard annual rate under (c) above, or the annual rate under (e) above, as the case may be."

2. Replace paragraph (g) with the following:

"(g) The benefit shall, where there is more than one surviving spouse, be divided equally between the spouses, and upon the death of each such spouse shall be equally divided among the remainder."

3. Delete paragraph (h) in its entirety.

Article 35

1. Add the following new article:

"Article 35 bis

"Divorced surviving spouse's benefit

"(a) Any divorced spouse of a participant or former participant, separated on or after 1 April 1999, who was entitled to a retirement, early retirement, deferred retirement or disability benefit, or of a participant who died in service on or after that date, may, subject to the provisions of article 34 (b) (applicable also to widowers), request a former spouse's benefit, if the conditions specified in paragraph (b) below are fulfilled;

"(b) Subject to paragraph (d) below, the divorced spouse is entitled to the benefit set out in paragraph (c) below, payable prospectively following receipt of the request for a divorced surviving spouse's benefit if, in the opinion of the Secretary, all of the following conditions are fulfilled:

"(i) The participant had been married to the former spouse for a continuous period of at least ten years, during which contributions were paid to the Fund on account of the participant or the participant was awarded a disability benefit under article 33 of the Regulations;

"(ii) The former spouse had not remarried;

"(iii) The participant's death occurred within 15 years of the date when the divorce became final, unless the former spouse proves that at the time of death the participant was under a legal obligation to pay maintenance to the former spouse;

"(iv) The former spouse has reached the age of 40. Otherwise the benefit entitlement shall commence on the day immediately following the day that age is reached; and

"(v) Evidence is provided by the former spouse that the participant's pension entitlement from the Fund was not taken into account in a divorce settlement;

"(c) A former spouse who, in the opinion of the Secretary, has met the conditions set out in paragraph (b) above shall be entitled to the widow's or widower's benefit under article 34 or 35 as the case may be; however, if the participant is survived by both one or more such former spouses and/or by a spouse entitled to a benefit under article 34 or 35, the benefit payable under article 34 or 35 shall be divided between the spouse and former spouse(s) in proportion to the duration of their marriages to the participant;

"(d) Article 34 (f) and (g) shall apply mutatis mutandis."

2. Add the following new article:

"Article 35 ter

"Spouses married after separation

"(a) A former participant receiving a periodic benefit may elect to provide a periodic benefit for life in a specified amount (subject to paragraph (b) below) to a spouse who was not married to him or her at the date of separation. Such election shall be made within 180 days of the date of marriage or of the entry into force of this provision, if later, and shall become effective one year after the date of marriage, or one year after the date of entry into force of this provision, as appropriate. The benefit shall be payable as of the first day of the month following the death of the former participant. When the election becomes effective, the benefit payable to the former participant shall be reduced in accordance with actuarial factors to be determined by the Fund's Consulting Actuary. An election under this subsection may not be revoked after it becomes effective, except by the death of the spouse, in which case it will be considered terminated as from that date;

"(b) Any election made under paragraph (a) shall be subject to the following:

"(i) The amount of the periodic benefit payable to the former participant, after reduction owing to elections made pursuant to paragraph (a) above, shall be at least one half of the benefit that would have been payable without any such elections; and

"(ii) The amount of the benefit payable to the spouse shall not be larger than the amount of the benefit payable to the retired participant after reduction for the elections."

Article 45

Non-assignability of rights

Replace the text of article 45 with the following:

"A participant or beneficiary may not assign his rights under these Regulations. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Fund may, upon receipt of a request from a participant or former participant made pursuant to a legal obligation arising from a marital or parental relationship and evidenced by an order of a court or by a settlement agreement incorporated into a divorce or other court order, direct that a portion of a benefit payable by the Fund to such participant for life be paid to one or more former spouses and/or a current spouse from whom the participant or former participant is living apart. Such direction or payment related thereto shall not convey to any person a benefit entitlement from the Fund or (except as provided herein) provide any rights under the Regulations of the Fund to such person or increase the total benefits otherwise payable by the Fund. To be acted upon, a request must be consistent with the Regulations of the Fund. The direction in any such request shall normally be irrevocable; however, a participant or former participant may request, upon satisfactory evidence based on a court order or a provision of a settlement agreement incorporated into a court decree, a new direction that would alter or discontinue the payment or payments. Furthermore, any direction shall cease to have effect following the death of the participant or former participant. If a designee under a direction predeceases the participant or former participant, the payments shall not commence, or if they have commenced, shall cease upon the designee's death. In the event that the payment or payments under a direction have been diminished, discontinued or have failed to commence or have ceased, the amount of benefit payable to the participant or former participant shall be duly adjusted."

Travel-related matters

Standards of travel and per diem

ICSC continued to consider its preliminary review of travel entitlements of staff. During 1998, it reviewed supplements to the daily subsistence allowance (DSA), an expense-based DSA system, DSA rates for extended stays (after 30 to 60 days) and travel on home leave and family visits.

The Commission decided to retain the supplemental DSA for higher-graded officials and to maintain the current DSA system and durations (30 to 60 days). It also decided that the specific level of the lump-sum incentive rate for home leave travel should be determined by the organizations in accordance with their constitutional procedures. With respect to travel on home leave, it decided that stopovers for journeys of more than 12 hours should only be maintained if staff members, travelling with children under the age of 12, chose to have their tickets provided by an organization.

The General Assembly took note of the ICSC decisions in resolution 53/209 (see above).

An October report of the Secretary-General listed exceptions to standards of accommodation for air travel from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998 [A/53/498].

Administration of justice

In its annual note [A/INF/53/5] to the General Assembly, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal reported in December that it had delivered 45 judgements during the year. They related to cases brought by staff against the Secretary-General or the executive heads of other UN bodies to resolve disputes involving terms of appointment and related issues and regulations.

The Tribunal met in plenary in New York on 20 November and held two panel sessions (Geneva, 29 June-7 August; New York, 26 October-20 November).

In April [A/52/864], the Secretary-General reported on action taken against staff responsible for malpractice, as identified by the Board of Auditors. Of the 61 cases of possible misconduct submitted in 1997, 7 were referred as a result of an audit/OIOS investigation. Four of those resulted in a decision of summary dismissal, one was being handled by the International Trade Centre, one was being prepared for submission to the Joint Disciplinary Committee, and one was at the stage of consideration as to whether to pursue it as a disciplinary matter.

Review of the statute

By decision 53/430 of 8 December, the General Assembly, recalling its resolution 52/166 [YUN 1997, p. 1479], decided to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session the item "Review of the statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal".

Chapter IV

Institutional and administrative matters

A number of institutional and administrative matters were reviewed by the United Nations in 1998. The General Assembly held its fifty-third session, its resumed fifty-second session and a special session to address the issue of illegal drugs. The Assembly granted observer status to the Association of Caribbean States and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development; and transferred observer status from the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation to the International Organization of la Francophonie.

During the year, the Security Council held 116 formal meetings to deal with regional conflicts, peacekeeping operations and a wide variety of other issues related to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Economic and Social Council held its 1998 organizational session in January, February and May and its substantive session in July, August and December. In addition to taking action on a range of issues, the Council granted consultative status in various categories to a number of non-governmental organizations.

The Committee on Conferences recommended measures to improve utilization of conference-servicing resources; reviewed cost-accounting methods for suitability in determining conference-related charges; examined new technology with a view to cost curtailment and improved efficiency; considered the establishment of subscription fees to assist in maintaining and upgrading the optical disk system; and made proposals on limiting and controlling documentation. The Economic and Social Council reviewed the need for global cooperation to ensure an effective response to the year 2000 computer challenge. Progress was reported in implementing the Integrated Management Information System.

Institutional machinery

General Assembly

The General Assembly met throughout 1998; it resumed and concluded its fifty-second session and held the major part of its fifty-third session.

The fifty-second session was resumed in plenary meetings on 4 February, 23 and 31 March, 27 April, 6 and 15 May, 2, 4 and 26 June, 7 and 30 July, 24 August and 8 September. The fifty-third session opened on 9 September and continued until its suspension on 18 December.

The Assembly held its twentieth special session from 8 to 10 June to consider the fight against the illicit production, sale, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and to propose new strategies in addressing the problem (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV).

Organization of Assembly sessions

1998 sessions

On 15 September, by decision 53/401, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/53/250 & Add.1-3], adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the fifty-third session.

The Committee's recommendations concerned rationalization of the Assembly's work; closing date of the session; schedule of meetings; general debate; explanations of vote, right of reply, points of order and length of statements; records of meetings; resolutions; documentation; questions related to the programme budget; observances and commemorative meetings; special conferences; and meetings of subsidiary organs.

The Committee made observations and proposals on the organization of future Assembly sessions and recommendations concerning the agenda. It drew attention to the annex of resolution 51/241 [YUN 1997, p. 1402], which stated that the Assembly should be formally opened every year on the first Tuesday following 1 September. As requested, the Secretary-General submitted an April report [A/52/855] on the implementation of that resolution, which called attention to the fact that, should the Assembly retain that practice, the closing day of the previous session of the Assembly would always fall on an official holiday of the Organization with associated financial implications. On 4 June, the Assembly, in resolution 52/232 (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), decided that the fifty-third session would open on Wednesday, 9 September and the fifty-second session would close on Tuesday, 8 September. The General Committee recommended that the Assembly review the issue of its opening and closing dates and the mandatory deadline for submissions to the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee of all draft resolutions with programme budget implications.

The Assembly authorized a number of bodies to meet during its fifty-third session: the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund and the Committee on Relations with the Host Country (decision 53/403 A of 9 September); the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People and the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (decision 53/403 B of 15 September); the Committee on Information (decision 53/403 C of 12 October); the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (decision 53/403 D of 29 October); and the Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council (decision 53/403 E of 24 November).

Credentials

The Credentials Committee, on 20 October [A/53/556], had before it a memorandum from the Secretary-General indicating that, as at 19 October, 127 Member States had submitted formal credentials of their representatives.

The Committee also examined the credentials of Afghanistan from which it had received two separate sets of credentials: a communication signed by Burhanuddin Rabbani, "President of the Islamic State of Afghanistan", presenting a delegation whose head was identified as "Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs"; and the other signed by Alhaj Mulia Mohammad Rabbani, "Head of the Government of the Islamic State of Afghanistan", presenting a delegation whose head was identified as "Designate Permanent Representative". The Committee deferred a decision on those credentials on the understanding that the current representatives accredited to the United Nations would continue to participate in the Assembly's work.

The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received and recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution for adoption. On 10 November, the Assembly, by resolution 53/23 A, approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

The Committee held a special meeting on 4 December [A/53/726] to examine the credentials of the representatives of Cambodia. The Committee heard from the representative of the Legal Counsel that the Secretary-General had received a letter, signed by King Norodom Sihanouk, presenting the credentials of the representatives of Cambodia to the fifty-third session. The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials of Cambodia and recommended a draft resolution for adoption by the Assembly.

On 7 December, the Assembly, by resolution 53/23 B, approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

At its second meeting, on 14 December [A/53/556/Add.I], the Committee had before it a memorandum from the Secretary-General, which was updated by the Legal Counsel, indicating that as at 14 December formal credentials had been received from 27 additional Member States. Information concerning representatives of 28 other Member States had been communicated.

The Committee adopted a resolution accepting the credentials received and recommended to the Assembly a draft resolution for adoption. On 17 December, the Assembly, by resolution 53/23 C, approved the report of the Credentials Committee.

Agenda

During its resumed fifty-second session, the General Assembly took a number of actions relating to its agenda, which were listed in decision 52/402 B: it reopened consideration of the sub-item on the appointment of members of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal (23 March); reopened consideration of the sub-item on the renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership (31 March); included in its agenda an additional item on the financing of the United Nations Mission in the Central African Republic (27 April); reopened consideration of the sub-item on the appointment of members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) (15 May); and reopened consideration of the sub-item on science and technology for development, decided to consider the agenda item on implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women in plenary meeting and included in the agenda an item on election of judges of the International Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda (2 June).

By decision 52/494 of 8 September, the Assembly decided to conclude its consideration of the agenda item on the situation in Burundi. It decided to include in the draft agenda of the fifty-third session the following items: the question of Cyprus (decision 52/495); improving the financial situation of the United Nations (decision 52/496); financing of the United Nations Operation in Somalia II (decision 52/497); financing of the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda (decision 52/498); and financing of the Military Observer Group of the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (decision 52/499).

On 15 September, by resolution 53/402 A, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/53/250], adopted the agenda [A/53/251] and the allocation of agenda items for the fifty-third session to the plenary or appropriate Main Committee [A/53/252]. It deferred consideration of the items on the question of the Malagasy islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa and Bassas da India and the question of East Timor, and included them in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session.

On 28 October, by the same decision, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee [A/53/250/Add.1], included two additional items on its agenda: armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo; and dialogue among civilizations.

On 7 December, also by the same decision, the Assembly, as recommended by the General Committee [A/53/250/Add.2], decided to consider the item on armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo in plenary and included in the agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item on observer status for the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources in the Assembly. On the proposal of the Secretary-General, the Assembly included an additional sub-item in the agenda of the fifty-third session on the appointment of a member of the United Nations Staff Pension Committee.

The Assembly, on 8 December, by decision 53/428, deferred consideration of the item entitled "Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations" and included it in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided to retain 62 items and sub-items for consideration during the resumed fifty-third session in 1999 (decision 53/465).

Revitalization of General Assembly

The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 48/264 [YUN 1994, p. 246], submitted a report on revitalization of the work of the Assembly [A/52/856]. The report contained the views of the Presidents of the Assembly's forty-ninth, fiftieth and fifty-first sessions on the efforts of the Main Committees to rationalize and streamline their agendas. It also included an analysis of the Assembly's workload with regard to the number of items on the agenda, the number of resolutions adopted, and the number of reports requested of the Secretary-General, as a way of assessing whether those efforts had had a quantitative impact on the Assembly's work.

The Secretary-General said that the views of the Assembly Presidents would be brought to the attention of future Presidents. The Assembly had also approved an additional $250,000 per year for the office of the President in the 1998-1999 programme budget (see PART FIVE, Chapter II). The Secretary-General said that implementation of some of the provisions of resolution 51/241 [YUN 1997, p. 1402] concerning the organization of the Assembly's work required that several of its rules of procedure be amended and that the Assembly take decisions to that effect.

First Committee

Discussion continued on the rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First (Disarmament and International Security) Committee during the resumed fifty-second session. On 29 June, the Committee adopted a draft decision, submitted by its Chairman, and recommended it to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In September, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee [A/52/612/Add.1], adopted decision 52/416 B without vote [agenda item 83].

Rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First Committee

At its 92nd plenary meeting, on 8 September 1998, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the First Committee, recalling its resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 and bearing in mind the need to enhance the efficient functioning of the First Committee:

- (a) Decided that, as from the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, the First Committee would:
  - (i) Make every effort to conduct and conclude its substantive work with the most efficient use of time in no less than thirty meetings and in a time-frame not exceeding five weeks;
  - (ii) Conduct its work by combining the existing phases of the programme of work: "Structured discussion of specific subjects on the adopted thematic approach on disarmament and international security agenda items" and "Consideration of all draft resolutions submitted under all agenda items", provided that sufficient time was allowed for informal consultations and discussions on all draft resolutions;
  - (b) Decided that the Chairman of the First Committee would continue consultations with regard to the revitalization, rationalization and streamlining of the work and reform of the agenda of the Committee in all its aspects and report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;

(c) Decided to include in the draft agenda of its fifty-third session the item entitled "Rationalization of the work and reform of the agenda of the First Committee".

In accordance with that decision, the First Committee discussed the item at two meetings; no documents or proposals were submitted and no action was taken.

Second, Third and Fifth Committees

The Secretariat submitted the draft biennial programme of work of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for 1999-2000 [A/C.2/53/L.50, as orally amended], which the Assembly approved by decision 53/450 of 15 December.

The Secretariat also presented measures on the organization of work and the draft biennial programme of work of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee for 1999-2000 [A/C.3/53/L.64]. Those measures related to guidelines on time limits of statements, draft resolutions on reports of treaty bodies and reports of the Secretary-General on the status of treaties, and draft proposals from subsidiary organs of the Economic and Social Council. On 9 December, by decision 53/434, the Assembly approved the organization of work of the Third Committee and its 1999-2000 programme of work.

The Assembly, on 8 September, decided to resume consideration of the question of improving the working methods of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee in 1999 (decision 52/493). On 18 December, the Assembly, by decision 53/457, approved the biennial programme of work [A/C.5/53/L.29] of the Fifth Committee for 1999-2000.

On 18 November [A/53/682], the Chairman of the Fifth Committee drew the attention of the Assembly President to the tendency of the Assembly's Main Committees to consider budgetary matters that did not fall within their purview. He also drew the attention of the Chairmen of those Committees to the provisions of relevant Assembly resolutions and decisions and the rules of procedure of the Assembly regarding the competence of the Fifth Committee in administrative and budgetary matters.

Security Council

The Security Council held 116 formal meetings in 1998, adopted 73 resolutions and issued 38 presidential statements. It considered 32 agenda items (see APPENDIX IV). In a September note [A/53/357], the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations and with the consent of the Council, notified the General Assembly of 28 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification [YUN 1997, p. 1484] and listed 73 matters that the Council had not discussed since then. On 22 October, the Assembly, by decision 53/407, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

By decision 53/409 of 22 October, the Assembly took note of the report of the Security Council for the period from 16 June 1997 to 15 June 1998 [A/53/2].

Documentation

In a 30 April note [S/1998/354], the President of the Security Council announced that, further to a 1993 note on documentation and related matters [YUN 1993, p. 1237], Council members agreed to place in the Journal each month a reminder regarding the monthly tentative forecast of the programme of work. The calendar setting out the provisional programme of work would be distributed with a footnote indicating that it was provisional; the actual schedule would be determined by developments and the description of the items might differ from the official formulation. Consideration of other matters concerning the Council's documentation and related matters would continue.

Transparency

In a 30 October note [S/1998/1016], the Council President referred to a 1994 statement on enhancing transparency of the Council's methods of work [YUN 1994, p. 242], and indicated that the Council members had agreed that the Secretary-General should be encouraged to make statements to the Council at its public meetings, when he deemed it appropriate.

Regarding the President's practice of reporting to informal sessions of the Council on views expressed by participants in meetings of troop-contributing countries, Council members encouraged those countries to make copies of their statements available to the President. Written copies of the Secretariat's briefings at those meetings should be made available, upon request, to troop-contributing countries. In addition, the Secretariat should provide its weekly briefings on field operations to troop-contributing countries, upon request. When specific contributions were to be made on issues under discussion, relevant UN bodies and agencies might be invited to participate in the meetings of troop contributors. Those Member States that contributed to peacekeeping operations in areas other than troops and civilian police should also be invited to attend the troop-contributor meetings. The Council President would inform troop contributors about forthcoming Council deliberations and expected decisions. In that regard, the Secretariat should establish a mechanism to alert non-members of the Council about unscheduled or emergency meetings during nights, weekends or holidays.

The Council's annual report to the General Assembly should also include the annual reports of the sanctions committees as an appendix. With effect from 1999, the bureau of each sanctions committee would be appointed by that committee, following consultations between the Council members either at the first meeting in January or in writing at the instance of the Presidency of the Council under a no-objection procedure.

Membership

The General Assembly continued to examine the issue of expanding the membership of the Security Council, and received the report of its Open-ended Working Group on the Question of Equitable Representation on and Increase in the Membership of the Security Council and Other Matters Related to the Security Council [A/52/47], established by Assembly resolution 48/26 [YUN 1993, p. 212].

On 24 August, the Assembly, by decision 52/490, took note of the Working Group's report and decided that it should continue its work and report before the end of the Assembly's fifty-third session. The Assembly also adopted resolution 53/30 on the subject (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Economic and Social Council

In 1998, the Economic and Social Council held its organizational session on 22 January and 3 and 6 February, a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank Group) on 18 April, a resumed organizational session on 7 May, a session on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major UN conferences and summits from 13 to 15 May, its substantive session from 6 to 31 July and on 5 August, and its resumed substantive session on 16 December, all in New York.

On 22 January, the Council elected five members to its Bureau—the President for 1998 and four Vice-Presidents (see APPENDIX III). On the same date, it adopted the agenda of its organizational session [E/1998/2 & Corr.1]. On 6 February, by decision 1998/208, it approved the provisional agenda for the 1998 substantive session.

On 6 July, the Council, by decision 1998/212, adopted the agenda of its 1998 substantive session [E/1998/100 & Add.1] and approved the session's programme of work [E/1998/L.9]. On 9, 15 and 17 July, the Council, by the same decision, approved requests by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to be heard by the Council [E/1998/82 & Add.1,2].

Sessions and segments

During its 1998 sessions, the Economic and Social Council adopted 49 resolutions and 107 decisions. By decision 1998/206 of 6 February, the Council decided that the high-level segment of its substantive session should be held from 6 to 8 July; the operational activities segment should be held on 9, 10, 13 and 14 July; the humanitarian segment should be held on 15 and 16 July; the co-ordination segment should be held on 17, 20 and 21 July; the general segment should be held from 22 to 30 July; and 31 July should be devoted to the adoption of the proposals and the conclusions of the session.

The 1998 work of the Council was summarized in its report to the Assembly [A/53/3 & Corr.1]. By decisions 53/417 of 30 November and 53/451 of 17 December, the Assembly took note of various chapters of that report.

1999 session

By decision 1998/298 of 5 August, the Council decided on the following themes for its substantive session in 1999: the high-level segment would be devoted to "The role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women"; and the coordination segment would be devoted to "Development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development".

On 16 December, the Council decided that the high-level meeting of the operational activities segment of its 1999 substantive session would be devoted to consideration of the theme "Poverty eradication and capacity-building" (decision 1998/299).

Work programme

On 6 February, the Economic and Social Council considered its basic programme of work for 1998 and 1999 [E/1998/1]. By decision 1998/209, the Council took note of the list of questions for inclusion in the programme of work for 1999.

Restructuring issues

The Economic and Social Council continued consideration of General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields. By resolution 1998/46 of 31 July, the Council identified subsidiary bodies for restructuring and revitalization; provided suggestions and recommendations to its functional commissions to improve their efficiency and effectiveness; and provided guidance with respect to improving the commissions' contributions and relevance in the UN reform process, bearing in mind the mandates and priorities of each commission (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Coordination and monitoring

Institutional mechanisms

Activities of ACC

During 1998, the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) undertook an assessment of the reforms under way in organizations of the UN system and their implications for system-wide coherence and concluded that the system was increasingly acting in concert on key common concerns. In its annual overview report for 1998 [E/1999/48], ACC noted that there was a renewed emphasis on closer dialogue and stronger partnership between ACC and intergovernmental bodies, particularly the Economic and Social Council. ACC agreed that continuous consultations should be set in motion to elaborate its agenda and discussions, and that outcomes of those discussions should take the form of communiqués in order to have a policy impact on Governments and civil society. It also agreed that the capacity of the UN system should be strengthened to make the results of its work better known, to engage civil society and to use various communication channels.

ACC deliberations on the issues it addressed resulted in policy recommendations. Three topics—the challenges of globalization, poverty eradication and promotion of peace and development in Africa—received particular attention.

In the light of the financial turmoil in Asia, ACC addressed the challenges of globalization and committed itself to monitoring the impact of the crisis on societies and individuals, helping individual countries to carry out necessary structural and institutional reforms and strengthening basic social services.

Poverty eradication continued to be a major theme of ACC's work; in June, it issued a policy statement on commitment for action to eradicate poverty (see p. 782).

ACC examined a report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of peace and sustainable development in Africa (see PART ONE, Chapters I and II) and the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see PART THREE, Chapter III). It agreed that issues relating to peace and development in Africa should receive its priority attention and future discussions should focus on policy issues to facilitate agreement on common actions to be taken, with particular attention given to actions relating to capacity-building and infrastructure development.

In related action, ACC agreed to launch a strategic framework process through which the system would promote a more integrated, coherent and unified approach to planning a system-wide response to emergencies and to facilitate recovery. In that regard, it considered a draft strategic framework for Afghanistan. ACC also considered the General Assembly's proclamation in resolution 52/15 [YUN 1997, p. 622] of the year 2000 as the International Year for the Culture of Peace. It agreed to ensure the preparation of a system-wide media and public information strategy for the Year, to be launched at all UN offices on 14 September 1999, the International Day of Peace.

The Committee reviewed the UN reform processes and their implications for its own work. Within ACC itself, discussion focused on ways to strengthen the preparatory process for substantive discussions, better project the outcome of its work to Member States and the public, and strengthen the impact of inter-agency work at the intergovernmental level. It also reviewed developments and follow-up actions on the outcome of conferences. In addition, a number of administrative questions were discussed, including staff security and safety (see below), the functioning of the International Civil Service Commission (ICSC) and human resources management (see preceding chapter).

Other issues considered by ACC included the establishment of a review group to examine the mandate, membership and function of ICSC (see preceding chapter) and the ACC programme of work for 1999.

During the year, ACC held two regular sessions (Geneva, 27-28 March, and New York, 30-31 October). Its principal subsidiary bodies met as follows:

Organizational Committee (Geneva, 6-7, 9-10, 30-31 March; New York, 6-9 October and 2-3 November); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Personnel and General Administrative Questions) (Rome, 14-17 April; New York, 20-24 July); Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (New York, 31 August-4 September); Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (Geneva, 2-6 March; New York, 21-25 September).

Bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Information Systems Coordination Committee (Geneva, 27-30 October); Joint United Nations Information Committee (Rome, 8-10 July); Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas (Lisbon, Portugal, 20-23 January); Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality (New York, 25-27 February); Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security (Montreal, Canada, 17-19 March); Subcommittee on Nutrition (Oslo, Norway, 30 March-2 April); Subcommittee on Statistical Activities (New York, 16-18 June); Subcommittee on Demographic Estimates and Projections (New York, 23-25 June); Subcommittee on Drug Control (Rome, 14-16 September); Subcommittee on Water Resources (Beirut, Lebanon, 29 September-1 October); and Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (New York, 19-20 February; Geneva, 28-29 September).

Report for 1997

ACC's annual overview report for 1997 [E/1998/21] was considered on 4 June by the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [A/53/16]. CPC recommended that ACC work towards the preparation of strategic policy papers in each programme area of broad inter-agency concern, indicating issues to be addressed, coordination problems encountered, the role of each organization and where intergovernmental guidance was required. CPC also proposed that ACC analyse and bring to its attention the results of the work of the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions on issues dealt with by ACC. The need for better interaction between ACC and Member States to facilitate a flow of information and ideas was also stressed by CPC. CPC welcomed ACC's role in improving management effectiveness and policy coherence in the UN system, including at the country level, and looked forward to the publication on the common themes guiding the reform processes.

By decision 1998/289 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the ACC report.

Programme coordination

CPC held an organizational meeting on 8 May, the first part of its thirty-eighth session from 1 to 26 June and the second part of its thirty-eighth session from 17 to 28 August, all in New York [A/53/16].

CPC considered the programme performance of the United Nations for the 1996-1997 biennium; proposed revisions in the 1998-2001 medium-term plan; the proposed revisions of the Regulations and Rules Governing Programme Planning, the Programme Aspects of the Budget, the Monitoring of Implementation and the Methods of Evaluation (see PART FIVE, Chapter II); and the new narratives for budget sections 7A, Economic and social affairs, and 26, Public information. It discussed in-depth evaluations of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme (see p. 1168) and the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme (see p. 1035); triennial reviews of the implementation of recommendations made by CPC on the evaluation of peacekeeping operations: start-up phase (see PART ONE, Chapter I) and of the programme on environment (see p. 983); and strengthening the role of evaluation findings in programme design, delivery and policy directives. Coordination issues considered included ACC's annual report, a progress report on the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, the UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see p. 865), and the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on UN publications. In addition, the Committee reviewed the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and the outline of the proposed programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/289 of 31 July, took note of CPC's report on the first part of its thirty-eighth session.

Joint Inspection Unit (JIU)

JIU did not issue a report to the General Assembly in 1998, following its decision to revert to the previous January-December cycle for its annual report and programme of work. In a 15 July note [A/53/180] to the General Assembly, JIU said that the rationale for the shift was to better synchronize the issuance of its reports with the calendars of a number of legislative organs of its participating organizations, which met in the second half of the year. Consequently, as a transitional measure, it had extended its 1997-1998 programme of work through 31 December 1998 and added to it a number of items.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider agenda item 165 on JIU at the resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Other coordination matters

Follow-up to international conferences

Economic and Social Council consideration.

The Economic and Social Council, pursuant to its decision 1997/302 [YUN 1997, p. 1485], convened a session from 13 to 15 May to further consider the theme of integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up to major UN conferences and summits. It had before it an April report [E/1998/19] of the Secretary-General on the subject, which examined coordinated follow-up at the intergovernmental level, particularly the role of the Council, ACC review of coordinated follow-up at the country and regional levels, and follow-up to the work of the ACC task forces by existing inter-agency bodies. The report contained a number of recommendations for adoption by the Council.

In his summary of the special session [E/1998/90], the Council President said that the session was of historic significance as it was the first time so many key actors had come together to exchange views on subject matter that directed so much of the Organization's work in the economic, social and related fields. It had provided further evidence that the Council was becoming increasingly effective in ensuring that follow-up to global conferences was well integrated, coordinated and effective. The breadth and depth of the meeting were captured in six broad themes: cross-cutting issues; the Council's coordination and management role, particularly in relation to its functional commissions and the executive boards of the funds and programmes; inter-agency coordination; country-level follow-up; regional-level follow-up; and monitoring. Under each of those areas, detailed proposals and recommendations for action were made. The President concluded that a number of challenges had to be confronted to ensure effective follow-up to global conferences and, in particular, their implementation at the country level. Five were identified: ensuring horizontal integration; financing for conference action plans, as well as for horizontal cross-cutting follow-up efforts; insufficiency of relevant statistical data; involvement of civil society; and mainstreaming of gender and incorporation of human rights as cross-cutting themes in the follow-up process.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/44 [draft: E/1998/L.42] without vote [agenda item 6].

Integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major United Nations conferences and summits

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its productive dialogue with a broad range of representatives of the United Nations system and with non-governmental organizations at its session on the integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major United Nations conferences and summits, held from 13 to 15 May 1998, and taking note with appreciation of the summary of that session by the President of the Economic and Social Council and of the report of the Secretary-General as well as the guidance provided by Member States,

Reiterating the need for integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major United Nations conferences and summits, while recognizing the specific identity and integrity of each conference,

Recalling its agreed conclusions 1995/1 of 28 July 1995, on coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system and implementation of the results of the major international conferences organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields,

Noting that the work concerning the follow-up to General Assembly resolutions 50/227 of 24 May 1996 entitled "Further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields" and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform", as well as on the triennial policy review of operational activities, on mainstreaming the gender perspective and in many other areas, addresses key issues related to integrated conference follow-up and is complementary to the present resolution,

Reaffirming the importance of the progress made towards meeting the commitments, objectives and goals emanating from conferences,

Recognizing that, while each country has the primary responsibility for the implementation of the integrated and coordinated follow-up to major United Nations conferences, the United Nations system is an important instrument in helping countries to meet this challenge,

I

Cross-cutting issues

1. Reiterates that poverty eradication and the improvement of the living conditions of people everywhere are key development objectives of the efforts of the Council to ensure integrated and coordinated follow-up to conferences;

2. Reaffirms the urgent need for the timely and full implementation of all commitments, agreements and targets agreed upon at the major United Nations conferences and summits, including by the United Nations system and international financial institutions, and, in this context, notes the efforts to achieve those targets as well as the target of reducing by one half, by 2015, the proportion of people living in extreme poverty;

3. Reiterates the importance of mobilizing new and additional resources from all sources for implementing conference outcomes, and, in this regard, reaffirms the commitments undertaken to fulfil as soon as possible the agreed United Nations targets for official development assistance, and stresses the need for further progress in implementing the 20/20 initiative for interested countries;

4. Stresses the important role of civil society in support of the implementation of conference goals, calls upon Governments and organizations of the United Nations system to support the participation of non-governmental organizations, in particular those from developing countries, in the conference follow-up processes of the United Nations, stresses that efforts should be made to facilitate the balanced participation of non-governmental organizations from developed and developing countries, and invites the Non-Governmental Liaison Service to play an active role in involving non-governmental organizations, in particular those from developing countries, in United Nations conference follow-up activities, as appropriate, and in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996;

Coordination and management role of the Economic and Social Council

Functional commissions

5. Notes the results obtained from the review of the functional commissions, and, in that context, agrees that the Council, on the basis of an integrated report by the Secretary-General, shall consider annually the relevant outcomes of the functional commissions on conference follow-up, for transmission, as appropriate, to the funds, programmes and specialized agencies;

Regional commissions

6. Notes the results obtained from the review of the regional commissions, and, in that context, invites the regional commissions to pursue conference follow-up on a systematic basis, within their respective mandates and priorities by, inter alia, enhancing their interaction with other parts of the United Nations system, in particular the functional commissions;

Executive boards of the funds and programmes

7. Invites its Bureau and secretariat to convey the outcome of its deliberations to the executive boards of the funds and programmes, and requests the executive boards to take into account the guidance of the Council on the coordinated implementation of conferences, in accordance with their respective mandates and priorities;

III

Inter-agency coordination

8. Welcomes the role played by the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the contribution of its ad hoc task forces and its standing machinery in promoting United Nations system-wide coordination and coordinated and integrated inter-agency follow-up to conferences at all levels, also welcomes the efforts of the Committee to ensure a clear sharing of tasks and interaction within its standing machinery on the follow-up to conferences, encourages regular interaction between the inter-agency committees of the Committee and enhanced interaction between the relevant executive committees and the standing bodies of the Committee, welcomes and encourages the interaction between the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, on the follow-up to conferences, and requests that collaboration among organizations of the system on conference follow-up also include the use of networks of United Nations system organizations that make use of task managers and information technology and liaise with the Committee;

9. Also welcomes the briefings on the work of the Administrative Committee on Coordination given in 1998, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure more intensive and improved interaction between the Committee and the Council and its functional and regional commissions, inter alia, by providing briefings after each meeting of the Committee on a regular and timely basis;

10. Urges the Administrative Committee on Coordination to disseminate widely throughout the United Nations system, including through greater use of the Internet, the results of its deliberations, including the work of the ad hoc task forces, and to make the outputs of the task forces available to intergovernmental bodies of the United Nations system for their consideration when integrating conference goals into their programmes of work, and invites the organizations of the United Nations system, bearing in mind the guidance of member States, to use and implement fully the outputs of these task forces;

11. Stresses the role of the specialized agencies in the implementation and follow-up of conference outcomes, calls for further interaction between the Council and the specialized agencies, and encourages more active and high-level participation, in particular at the level of executive heads, by the specialized agencies in its sessions, especially in the consideration of conference follow-up;

IV

Country-level follow-up

12. Reaffirms that national Governments have the primary responsibility for the implementation and evaluation of conference follow-up, calls on all countries to continue to assess the progress made in implementing conference outcomes in those countries, and encourages the dissemination of best practices;

13. Welcomes the progress achieved in the coordination of conference follow-up at the country level and urges further intensified efforts to this end, reaffirms that the resident coordinators, within their mandates, have an important role to play in assisting Governments and enhancing United Nations system-wide coordination, and, in this regard, calls on the resident coordinators to facilitate through their annual reports an evaluation of the coordination of the United Nations system activities relating to conference implementation and to disseminate best practices, and invites the United Nations Development Group to exercise fully its important role in ensuring coordinated United Nations follow-up to conferences;

14. Encourages the resident coordinator system, within existing mechanisms and in close collaboration with Governments, to continue to foster a broad dialogue with and to support the involvement of all relevant actors in the follow-up to conferences, also encourages the establishment of thematic groups on cross-cutting conference themes as well as the full utilization of collaborative programming frameworks, including the country strategy note, where they exist, and the ongoing pilot phase of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as appropriate, to support, at the request of Governments, the development of national strategies and action plans for integrated conference follow-up, and further encourages greater interaction between the country representatives of United Nations agencies, funds and programmes, including the Bretton Woods institutions;

15. Recognizes the importance of integrated and coordinated implementation of conference outcomes, including commitments made under those conferences, in countries not covered by the resident coordinator system, calls on those countries to continue to assess the progress they have made in implementing conference outcomes, and encourages the dissemination of best practices in this regard, including through their existing national voluntary reporting mechanisms;

V

Evaluation of the integrated implementation of conference follow-up

16. Reaffirms the importance of the monitoring and evaluation, by the relevant intergovernmental bodies, of the performance of relevant parts of the United Nations system, in accordance with the priorities set by Member States, with respect to assisting countries in meeting the commitments, objectives and goals emanating from conferences, and calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to carry out evaluations of the impact of their activities in support of the coordinated implementation of conferences, taking into account their existing practices;

17. Agrees to consider conducting in the year 2000, as a possible contribution to the Millennium Assembly, without prejudice to the discussion of this issue by the General Assembly, a review by the Council of progress made within the United Nations system in the promotion of integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields, and requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Council at its substantive session of 1999 on possible modalities of such a review;

18. Invites the Secretary-General to prepare a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration by the Council in 1999.

At the same meeting, the Council adopted decision 1998/290 [draft: E/1998/L.41] without vote [agenda item 6].

Basic indicators for the integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields

At its 47th plenary meeting, on 31 July 1998, the Economic and Social Council:

(a) Reaffirmed that General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996, the Agenda for Development and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, as well as agreed conclusions 1995/1 of the Council, provided a basis for intergovernmental integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits organized by the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields;

(b) Took into account the recommendation contained in the report of the Secretary-General that the United Nations system be encouraged to enhance national capacity efforts for data collection and analysis, as well as the dialogue that took place during the session of the Council on integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the major United Nations conferences and summits, held from 13 to 15 May 1998;

(c) Recognized that Governments had the primary responsibility for the implementation and monitoring of conference outcomes, while the United Nations system had an important role to play in support of such national efforts, in particular those of developing countries;

(d) Recognized the need to start, on a step-by-step basis, an intergovernmental process on how to address better the need for relevant indicators to monitor the implementation of all aspects of conference outcomes at all levels;

(e) Decided to hold an informal meeting of the Council with panels of experts immediately after the resumed organizational session of the Council for 1999, of one to two days' duration, to consider in a comprehensive manner the work being carried out by the United Nations system and other relevant international and national institutions on basic indicators to measure progress towards the implementation of the integrated and coordinated follow-up to all aspects of major United Nations conferences and summits, including means of implementation, in the economic, social and related fields at all levels, with a view, as a first step, to taking stock and identifying overlapping, duplication and gaps;

(f) Also decided that the informal meeting should have an interactive format so as to encourage dialogue among the participants and delegations, which dialogues should be summarized by the Secretariat;

(g) Requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on this matter, pursuant to subparagraph (a) of the present decision, which should be distributed well in advance of the meeting;

(h) Requested the Bureau of the Council, in consultation with the Secretariat, to establish arrangements for the meeting, securing a balance with respect to the participation of panellists from both developed and developing countries.

The UN and other organizations

Cooperation with organizations

League of Arab States

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/5 [YUN 1997, p. 1493], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States (LAS) [A/53/434]. The report highlighted activities undertaken by the two organizations in areas of cooperation and stated that the Secretaries-General continued their practice of meetings and consultations. The secretariats of the two organizations also continued to maintain close contact on matters of mutual concern. The report summarized action taken by UN bodies and organizations in follow-up to previous joint meetings of the two organizations, as requested in the 1997 resolution. In all, 15 organizations of the UN system reported on their collaboration with LAS. The Secretary-General also reported on the outcome of sectoral meetings on trade and development between the two organizations that took place in Cairo, Egypt, from 8 to 11 June.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 22 October [meeting 42], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/8 [draft: A/53/L.11 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 27].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Recalling the decision of the Council of the League of Arab States that it considers the League a regional organization within the meaning of Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting the desire of both organizations to consolidate, develop and enhance further the ties existing between them in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural, technical and administrative fields,

Taking into account the report of the Secretary-General entitled "An Agenda for Peace", in particular section VII, concerning cooperation with regional arrangements and organizations, and the "Supplement to An Agenda for Peace",

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Convinced also of the need for more efficient and co-ordinated utilization of available economic and financial resources to promote common objectives of the two organizations,

Acknowledging the need for closer cooperation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives of the two organizations,

Welcoming the third meeting on cooperation between the United Nations and regional organizations, held on 28 and 29 July 1998,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Commends the continued efforts of the League of Arab States to promote multilateral cooperation among Arab States, and requests the United Nations system to continue to lend its support;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him to implement the proposals adopted at the meetings between the representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, including the latest general meeting, held in Geneva in 1997, and the sectoral meeting, held in Cairo from 8 to 11 June 1998;

4. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, to intensify further their cooperation with a view to the realization of the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, economic and social development, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests and objectives of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and administrative fields;

6. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to cooperate with the Secretary-General and among themselves, as well as with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding cooperation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and improve the mechanism of consultation with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects and programmes, in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To associate whenever possible with organizations and institutions of the League of Arab States in the execution and implementation of development projects in the Arab region;

(d) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 July 1999, of the progress of their cooperation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the previous meetings between the two organizations;

7. Also calls upon the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to intensify cooperation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in the priority sectors of rural development, desertification and green belts, training and vocational training, technology, environment and information and documentation;

8. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in cooperation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to encourage periodic consultation between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States to review and strengthen coordination mechanisms with a view to accelerating implementation of, and follow-up action on, multilateral projects, proposals and recommendations adopted at the meetings between the two organizations;

9. Recommends that the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system should utilize, insofar as possible, Arab institutions and technical expertise in projects undertaken in the Arab region;

10. Welcomes the results of the sectoral meeting on trade and development between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, held at the headquarters of the League of Arab States in Cairo in June 1998, and calls for further such meetings between the specialized agencies of the United Nations and the League of Arab States;

11. Decides that, in order to enhance cooperation and for the purpose of review and appraisal of progress, a general meeting between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States should take place once every two years, and inter-agency sectoral meetings should be organized regularly on areas of priority and wide importance in the development of the Arab States, on the basis of agreement between the counterpart programmes of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

12. Reaffirms the importance of holding the next general meeting on cooperation between the representatives of the secretariats of organizations of the United Nations system and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations during 1999, and a sectoral meeting on areas of priority during the year 2000;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

Organization of American States

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States [A/53/272 & Add.I] (see PART ONE, Chapter III). The Assembly, in resolution 53/9, took action on that report.

Inter-Parliamentary Union

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/7 [YUN 1997, p. 1492], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) [A/53/458]. The report highlighted activities undertaken by the two organizations, which led to the opening of the IPU Liaison Office with the United Nations in March. IPU was planning a conference of presiding officers of national parliaments at UN Headquarters, to be held in conjunction with the Millennium Assembly (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII).

Other areas of cooperation included the promotion of peace and security, representative democracy and sustainable development, as well as follow-up to major UN conferences. The United Nations received increasing support from IPU in providing technical assistance and advisory services to parliamentarians, sometimes in the context of peacekeeping operations. In 1998, IPU implemented projects or supported national parliaments in Burundi, China, Ethiopia, Fiji, the Gambia, Haiti, Kyrgyzstan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malawi, Mauritania, Rwanda, Viet Nam and Yemen. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) provided further funding and support to IPU projects to assist parliamentarians as part of its promotion of good governance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 28 October [meeting 47], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/13 [draft: A/53/L.12] without vote [agenda item 28].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/7 of 28 October 1997, in which it recommended that the cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union be further strengthened, at a time when the United Nations is preparing to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the recent developments with regard to the cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union, following the conclusion of a co-operation agreement between the two organizations in 1996,

Taking note with appreciation of the resolutions adopted and activities carried out by the Inter-Parliamentary Union during the past year in support of United Nations actions in the fields of peace and security, economic and social development, international law and human rights, democracy, gender issues and governance,

1. Looks forward to continued close cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union;

2. Welcomes the initiative of the Inter-Parliamentary Union of holding a conference of presiding officers of national parliaments at United Nations Headquarters, in conjunction with the Millennium Assembly in 2000 proposed by the Secretary-General;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on various aspects of cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union, including information made available by the Inter-Parliamentary Union on preparations for the proposed conference of presiding officers of national parliaments in 2000;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Inter-Parliamentary Union".

Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/11 [YUN 1996, p. 1231], the Secretary-General submitted an August report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee [A/53/306] (see PART FOUR, Chapter V).

The Assembly, in resolution 53/14, took action on that report.

Economic Cooperation Organization

In a September report [A/53/435], the Secretary-General described cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (see PART THREE, Chapter V). The General Assembly, in resolution 53/15, took action on that report.

Organization of African Unity

The Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a September report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity [A/53/419] (see PART ONE, Chapter II). The Assembly, in resolution 53/91, took action on that report.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/4 [YUN 1997, p. 1494], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) [A/53/430]. During the period under review, regular consultations were held and information exchanged between the secretariats of the United Nations and OIC with regard to the ongoing peacemaking efforts of the two organizations, particularly in Afghanistan, Somalia and Tajikistan.

The Secretary-General's report summarized action taken by UN organizations and agencies serving as focal points for cooperation with OIC to follow up the recommendations of earlier meetings and described cooperation between the two organizations in economic and social development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 48], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/16 [draft: A/53/L.13] without vote [agenda item 26].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983, 39/7 of 8 November 1984, 40/4 of 25 October 1985, 41/3 of 16 October 1986, 42/4 of 15 October 1987, 43/2 of 17 October 1988, 44/8 of 18 October 1989, 45/9 of 25 October 1990, 46/13 of 28 October 1991, 47/18 of 23 November 1992, 48/24 of 24 November 1993, 49/15 of 15 November 1994, 50/17 of 20 November 1995, 51/18 of 14 November 1996 and 52/4 of 22 October 1997,

Recalling also its resolution 3369(XXX) of 10 October 1975, by which it decided to invite the Organization of the Islamic Conference to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly and of its subsidiary organs in the capacity of observer,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to continue to cooperate closely in the political, economic, social, humanitarian, cultural and technical fields and in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and economic and technical development,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations that encourage the activities through regional cooperation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations, its funds and programmes and specialized agencies and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, its subsidiary organs and its specialized and affiliated institutions,

Noting also the encouraging progress made in the ten priority areas of cooperation, as well as in the identification of other areas of cooperation,

Convinced that the strengthening of cooperation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its organs and institutions contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting with appreciation the determination of both organizations to strengthen further the existing cooperation by developing specific proposals in the designated priority areas of cooperation, as well as in the political field,

Welcoming the results of the general meeting of the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions, held at Geneva from 13 to 15 July 1998,

Welcoming also the third high-level meeting, convened by the Secretary-General on 28 and 29 July 1998, of regional organizations, including the Organization of the Islamic Conference, with which the United Nations has cooperated in preventive diplomacy, peace-making and peacekeeping,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Takes note of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the general meeting of the organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue to cooperate in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights, social and economic development and technical cooperation;

5. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to strengthen cooperation between the two organizations in areas of common concern and to review the ways and means for enhancing the actual mechanisms of such cooperation;

6. Welcomes with appreciation the increased cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the field of peacemaking and preventive diplomacy and takes note of the close cooperation between the two organizations in the search for a peaceful and lasting solution to the conflict in Afghanistan;

7. Welcomes the efforts of the secretariats of the two organizations to strengthen information exchange, co-ordination and cooperation between them in areas of mutual interest in the political field and their ongoing consultations with a view to further developing the modalities of such cooperation;

8. Welcomes also the periodic high-level meetings between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Secretary-General of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, as well as between senior secretariat officials of the two organizations, and encourages their participation in important meetings of the two organizations;

9. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their cooperation with the subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating cooperation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meetings of the focal points for cooperation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

10. Urges the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, especially the lead agencies, to provide increased technical and other forms of assistance to the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions in order to enhance cooperation;

11. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to strengthen cooperation and coordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference and its subsidiary organs and specialized and affiliated institutions to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social, cultural and humanitarian fields;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the state of cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

Caribbean Community

As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 51/16 [YUN 1996, p. 202], the Secretary-General submitted a September report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community [A/53/275 & Add.1] (see PART ONE, Chapter III).

The Assembly, by resolution 53/17 of 29 October, took action on that report.

Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe

The Secretary-General, as requested in resolution 52/22 [YUN 1997, p. 379], submitted a November report on cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe [A/53/672] (see PART ONE, Chapter V). The General Assembly, by resolution 53/85, took action on that report.

Observer status

Palestine

On 7 July, the General Assembly, by resolution 52/250, decided to confer upon Palestine, in its capacity as observer, additional rights and privileges of participation in the sessions and work of the General Assembly and in international conferences convened under the auspices of the Assembly or other organs of the United Nations, as well as in UN conferences (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Association of Caribbean States

By a 23 June letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/143], 25 Member States requested the inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifty-third session of an item entitled "Observer status for the Association of Caribbean States in the General Assembly". They stated that the basic purpose of the Association, which had headquarters in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, was to facilitate consultation, cooperation and concerted actions to achieve cultural, social, scientific and technological advancement; develop the potential of the Caribbean Sea; promote an enhanced economic space for trade and investment; and establish, consolidate and augment arrangements responsive to the various cultural identities, developmental needs and normative systems within the region.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 October [meeting 38], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/5 [draft: A/53/L.3 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 159].

Observer status for the Association of Caribbean States in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the purposes of the Association of Caribbean States, as enunciated in the convention by which it was established, and which has been registered with the Secretariat, are consistent with those of the United Nations,

Considering that, accordingly, it is mutually advantageous to provide for cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Caribbean States,

Taking note of the desire of the Association of Caribbean States for the establishment of such cooperation,

1. Decides to invite the Association of Caribbean States to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development

On 30 June [A/53/144], 28 Member States requested inclusion of the item "Observer status for the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) in the General Assembly" in the agenda of the fifty-third session. They stated that OECD, an intergovernmental organization based in Paris, would focus its future work programme on such major issues as sustainable development, development assistance, ageing populations and electronic commerce, on which an increased exchange with the Assembly would be mutually beneficial. Numerous UN agencies and bodies participated in OECD activities and OECD enjoyed observer status with the Economic and Social Council, as well as with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and had working arrangements with other economic bodies and organizations in the UN family.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 October [meeting 38], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/6 [draft: A/53/L.4 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 162].

Observer status for the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development in the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Wishing to promote cooperation between the United Nations and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development,

1. Decides to invite the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development to participate in the sessions and the work of the General Assembly in the capacity of observer;
2. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary action to implement the present resolution.

International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources

The Dominican Republic, in a 26 October letter [A/53/234] to the Secretary-General, requested inclusion of an item entitled "Granting of observer status to the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) in the General Assembly" in the agenda of the fifty-third session. In an explanatory memorandum, IUCN said that the organization, which was founded in 1948 and had headquarters in Gland, Switzerland, had 74 States members and worked in 138 countries. Its programme and projects aimed at conserving the integrity and diversity of nature and ensuring that any use of natural resources was equitable and ecologically sustainable.

Transfer of observer status

By a December note [A/53/701], the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of the decision of the heads of State and Government of the countries using French as a common language, at the seventh summit of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation (Hanoi, Viet Nam, November 1997), to revise the Agency's Charter to better promote francophone ideals. The new Charter was adopted as the Charter of an International Organization of la Francophonie and the Agency became the Agency of the International Organization of la Francophonie. The Secretary-General therefore proposed to the Assembly a transfer of observer status from the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation to the International Organization of la Francophonie.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the International Organization of la Francophonie would participate in the work and sessions of the Assembly and its subsidiary organs, in the capacity of observer, instead of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Cooperation (decision 53/453), which had been granted observer status in resolution 33/18 [YUN 1978, p. 403].

Participation of organizations in UN work

Non-governmental organizations

Responding to General Assembly decision 52/453 [YUN 1997, p. 1496], the Secretary-General submitted a July report on existing arrangements and practices for the interaction of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in all UN system activities [A/53/170]. The report examined the institutional arrangements governing NGO participation in UN activities, practical cooperation in operational matters, and the role NGOs played in building bridges between the United Nations and civil society.

The Secretary-General said that if NGOs were to continue to make a meaningful contribution to the United Nations, it was crucial that their access to information and documentation be secured in a timely and appropriate manner. He would entrust the Secretariat's Non-Governmental Liaison Service with carrying out a survey of all NGO databases in the UN system and encourage all departments, funds and programmes to ensure that their NGO sections were appropriately staffed and allocated the necessary logistical and financial resources. Member States might wish to consider the establishment of a trust fund to facilitate the participation of NGOs from developing and least developed countries and countries in transition in UN activities. The Secretary-General stated that the United Nations was committed to seeking the participation and contribution of NGOs in its work. New approaches, attitudes, methods and responses were required throughout the UN system if it was to meet that challenge effectively.

By decision 53/452 of 17 December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States, members of specialized agencies, observers and intergovernmental organizations, as well as NGOs from all regions, on his report, and to submit a further report to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

Committee on NGOs

The Committee on NGOs, at its resumed 1997 session (New York, 12-22 January 1998) [E/1998/8], examined ways to process the increasing number of new applications of NGOs requesting consultative status. It stressed that there was no need to give the Secretariat a new role but rather to give it new guidelines for a more efficient and effective working relationship with the Committee. The Committee adopted "Guidelines to improve the methods of the work of the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and the Secretariat with respect to new applications and reclassifications", and drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to them.

The Committee proposed that its quadrennial reports be translated into all UN official languages and distributed to Committee members by 15 December of the year preceding their review by the Committee, and requested the Secretariat to submit a compilation of decisions taken by the Committee during the past six years regarding quadrennial reports that were either submitted late or not at all, and a list of those organizations that had not submitted their reports. The Committee's intention was to hold NGOs accountable for the activities listed in their reports and have deadlines met.

The Committee also considered the participation of four organizations of indigenous people not in consultative status in the open-ended inter-sessional Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people (see PART TWO, Chapter II); postponement until 2000 of the question of enlarging the Committee on NGOs; and applications of some organizations to Roster status pursuant to Council decision 1996/302 [YUN 1996, p. 1368]. It drew the Council's attention to one resolution and two decisions dealing with a special report of an NGO, quadrennial reports and working methods of the Committee and the Secretariat (see below), and recommended four draft decisions to the Council for adoption.

On 6 February, by decision 1998/204, the Council approved the 1998 provisional agenda of the Committee on NGOs.

At the first part of its 1998 session (New York, 18-29 May) [E/1998/72], the Committee considered a number of applications for consultative status with the Council deferred from 1997 and new applications. It brought to the Council's attention the guidelines it had adopted to improve its methods of work and those of its secretariat with respect to quadrennial reports. The Committee considered applications of NGOs that were on the Roster for the purposes of the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development to expand their participation into other fields of the Council. Also before the Committee was a request from the International Lesbian and Gay Association for reinstatement of its consultative status, which was suspended in 1994. The Committee recommended three draft decisions concerning the status of various NGOs for adoption by the Council.

At the second part of its 1998 session (New York, 22-26 June) [E/1998/72/Add.I], the Committee recommended that the Council approve applications for consultative status of 83 NGOs and requests for reclassification from three NGOs from Roster to special consultative status. It also recommended that the Council authorize it to hold a resumed session to complete the work at its 1998 session. Those recommendations were put forward in two draft decisions for the Council's adoption.

By decision 1998/238 of 29 July, the Council took note of the Committee's reports on its resumed 1997 session and the first and second parts of its 1998 session.

Also on 29 July, the Council decided not to pursue consideration of the enlargement of the Committee on NGOs until 2000, pending its reorganization (decision 1998/231). The Council granted general consultative status to three NGOs and reclassified six organizations from special to general consultative status, two organizations from Roster to general consultative status and three from Roster to special consultative status (decision 1998/232); it granted consultative status or special consultative status to 147 additional NGOs, Roster status to seven NGOs, and reclassified four organizations from Roster to special consultative status (decision 1998/235); and added eight NGOs to its Roster (decision 1998/236).

In accordance with Council decision 1998/237 of 29 July, the Committee held its resumed 1998 session in New York from 14 to 18 December [E/1999/10 & Corr.1]. In addition to considering new applications for consultative status and requests for reclassification, the Committee reviewed its working methods. It expressed the need to discuss the issue of organizations that were not in strict conformity with the definition of an NGO as set out in Council resolution 1996/31 [YUN 1996, p. 1360]. The Committee recommended two draft decisions on NGO participation for adoption by the Council.

Requests for hearings

The Committee on NGOs met in New York on 26 June [E/1998/82] to hear requests from NGOs in general consultative status to address the Economic and Social Council in connection with items on its agenda. The Committee recommended that four NGOs be heard by the Council at its 1998 substantive session. Eight additional requests for hearings by NGOs were received by the Bureau of the Council [E/1998/82/Add.1,2] after the Committee's meeting. The Bureau requested the Council to decide on the requests.

By decision 1998/212, the Council approved the requests for hearings.

Participation of organizations not in consultative status

By decision 1998/233 of 29 July, the Council approved the participation of eight organizations of indigenous people not in consultative status with the Council in the open-ended Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous people, established under resolution 1995/32 [YUN 1995, p. 777] (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

Work of Secretariat NGO Section

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/58 [YUN 1997, p. 1498], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/1998/43 & Corr.1], which set out specific proposals to ensure that the workload of the Secretariat's NGO Section would be carried out. The Secretary-General reported that the number of NGOs in consultative status with the Council had grown substantially over the years and stood at 1,356 at the end of 1997. NGOs were participating in the follow-up to the major UN conferences held in the 1990s, and the Council had facilitated their participation in that process. The workload of the Secretariat had grown due to the number of international conferences held in the 1990s. The new procedures for processing applications and reclassifications would result in additional responsibilities for the Section. Diversification of the Section's work was also envisaged. A web site was being developed to accommodate the flow of printed documents issued by the Section. The database that had been established to improve coordination of the Section's contacts with NGOs and facilitate participation in the events of interest to them would also help the Section to monitor the quadrennial reports and activities in support of the UN by NGOs on the Roster that were not required to file quadrennial reports. The application process for consultative status was complex, and it was proposed that guidelines for completion of the questionnaires be reinstated and consideration be given for experts in the field to develop a clear and effective questionnaire and provide training at meetings held away from Headquarters to improve the process. The report reviewed the details of the Section's increased workload and indicated that there was a need for supplementary human and technical resources.

In July, the Committee on NGOs took note of the report.

Conferences and meetings

The Committee on Conferences held organizational meetings on 14 April and 3 August and its substantive session from 1 to 9 September [A/53/32 & Corr.1]. It examined requests for additions and changes to the approved calendar of conferences and meetings for 1998 [A/AC.172/1998/2] and adopted a draft biennial plan for 1999-2000. It considered improved use of conference-servicing resources.

The Committee approved requests from the Group of Governmental Experts on Small Arms to convene its second session in Geneva from 22 to 26 February 1999, rather than in New York, and from the Advisory Board on Disarmament Matters to meet in Geneva from 16 to 18 March 1998, rather than in New York. It recommended that the Assembly authorize a number of bodies to meet in New York during the fifty-third session (see p. 1331).

The Committee recommended that the Assembly adopt the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings for 1999, and authorize the Committee to make adjustments to that calendar as a result of action by the Assembly. It noted that the Secretariat had taken into account the arrangements referred to in Assembly resolution 52/214 A [YUN 1997, p. 1501], regarding the inclusion of Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha in the list of official holidays at UN Headquarters and other duty stations, and stated that no UN meetings would be held on those days.

The Committee requested the Secretariat, when drafting future calendars of conferences and meetings, to merge into one section the draft list of meetings of the Preparatory Committee of the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization (see PART ONE, Chapter VII) and the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of the principal organs of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The Committee recommended that, when planning the calendar of conferences and meetings, efforts should be made to avoid simultaneous peak periods at the various duty stations, that UN bodies should avoid holding meetings on 9 April 1999 and that those arrangements should be taken into account when drafting future calendars of conferences and meetings.

Intergovernmental meetings

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences in 1998, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General for circulation to the General Assembly, the Security Council or both, as follows:

Sixty-seventh regular session of OAU Council of Ministers (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 26-28 February) [S/1998/190], special session (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 5 June) [S/1998/480 & 485], and sixty-eighth regular session (Ouagadougou, 4-7 June) [A/53/179]; thirty-fourth session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Ouagadougou, 8-10 June) [A/53/179]; annual Coordination Meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of OIC (New York, 1 October) [A/53/856-S/1998/248]; twenty-fifth session of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of OIC (Doha, Qatar, 15-17 March) [A/53/95-S/1998/311]; Ministerial Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council, nineteenth special session (Kuwait, 11 February) [S/1998/119], sixty-sixth session (Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, 7-8 March) [S/1998/217], sixty-seventh session (Riyadh, 28 June)

[A/53/164-S/1998/600], sixty-eighth session (Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 27-28 August) [S/1998/842]; Supreme Council of the Gulf Cooperation Council, nineteenth session (Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates, 7-9 December) [A/53/772-S/1998/1222]; twelfth Summit of the Heads of State and Government of the Rio Group (Panama City, 4-5 September) [A/53/489]; twenty-second annual meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (New York, 25 September) [A/53/466]; twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries (Durban, South Africa, 29 August-3 September) [A/53/667-S/1998/1071]; twenty-ninth South Pacific Forum (Palikir, Pohnpei, Federated States of Micronesia, 24-25 August) [A/53/416].

Use of conference services

The Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Conferences a July report on improved utilization of conference-servicing resources, including meeting statistics of UN organs for 1997 [A/AC.172/1998/3].

The Committee noted that the overall utilization factor for 1997 was 80 per cent and that the overall utilization factors for 1997 in Geneva and Vienna, respectively, were 87 and 88 per cent. It also took note with concern of the low rate of compliance with the six-week rule for the issuance of documentation and requested the Secretariat to carry out a study on the possible correlation between the late issuance of documentation and the low utilization of conference services by some bodies in the core sample.

The Committee took note of the oral report on consultations with bodies concerning utilization of conference services, and requested its Chairman to continue to consult with chairmen of bodies that had consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure (80 per cent) of their allocated resources for the past three sessions, with a view to making recommendations to achieve optimum use of conference-servicing resources. It further requested its Chairman to inform the chairmen of all bodies that had used less than the applicable benchmark figure in 1997 of the problem, particularly the heavy loss of meeting time, owing to late starting and early adjournment of meetings, with a view to encouraging them to improve the situation.

The Committee studied the provision of interpretation services to regional and other major groupings of Member States and welcomed the fact that 81 per cent of the requests for those services had been met during the July 1997 to June 1998 period, representing an increase of 13 per cent over the prior year's figures. It regretted, however, that 19 per cent of those requests had not been met. It again urged intergovernmental bodies to make provision for meetings of regional and other major groupings in their programmes of work and to notify conference services well in advance of any cancellations, so that unutilized resources might be reassigned.

The Committee noted the improved utilization of conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi, Kenya, in particular the pilot project for remote interpretation from the United Nations Office at Vienna; expressed satisfaction with the improvement in utilization rates of the conference facilities in Nairobi between 1996 and 1997; and encouraged Member States, intergovernmental bodies, regional and other major bodies to consider increasing their use of the facilities.

Noting efforts to implement new technologies in remote interpretation and translation, the Committee encouraged the Secretary-General to pursue such efforts. He was asked to present a study on the possibility of introducing a system of managed assignments, based on non-monetary incentives, that would alleviate the excessive vacancy rates in language services at some duty stations and ensure the required quality of services. In addition, the Committee supported the new organizational structure of conference services, which allowed more coordination among the four conference-servicing centres of New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi, and requested the Secretary-General to review the administrative instruction on guidelines for the preparation of host Government agreements to reflect that structure.

The Secretary-General submitted an October report on consolidation of technical secretariat servicing of intergovernmental bodies [A/53/452]. He recalled that the newly established Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services (DGAACS) provided technical services to the plenary meetings of the General Assembly and its various committees, the Economic and Social Council and a number of other intergovernmental meetings and consultations. It did not provide technical services to the Assembly's Fifth and Sixth (Legal) Committees or to the Security Council, which received those services from the Department of Management, the Office of Legal Affairs and the Department of Political Affairs, respectively. The conference services resources for those bodies, however, remained with DGAACS. As a result, there had been greater coordination and more efficient collaboration among the secretaries of most of the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council bodies in the one Department.

The Assembly, on 18 December, by resolution 53/214, section V, took note of the report and indicated that, when appropriate, it would revert to the issue in the context of the UN reform process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/744], adopted resolution 53/208 A without vote [agenda item 117].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its relevant resolutions, including resolutions 40/243 of 18 December 1985, 43/222 B of 21 December 1988, 47/202 A of 22 December 1992, 48/222 A of 23 December 1993, 49/221 A of 23 December 1994, 50/206 A of 23 December 1995 and 51/211 A of 18 December 1996 and section A of resolution 52/214 of 22 December 1997, and its decision 52/468 of 31 March 1998,

Reaffirming the mandate of the Committee on Conferences,

Having considered the report of the Committee on Conferences,

1. Takes note with concern of the observations of the Committee on Conferences in paragraph 135 of its report, and encourages members to participate in the work of the Committee;
2. Invites the Committee on Conferences to consider the question of the participation of observers in the work of the Committee in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure of the General Assembly;
3. Notes with appreciation the work of the Committee on Conferences, and takes note of its report;
4. Approves the draft revised calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations for 1999 as submitted by the Committee on Conferences, subject to the provisions of the present resolution;
5. Authorizes the Committee on Conferences to make adjustments to the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1999 that may become necessary as a result of actions and decisions taken by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all the conference services required as a result of decisions taken by the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, taking into account, as necessary, the procedures established by the Assembly in its resolutions 41/213 of 19 December 1986 and 42/211 of 21 December 1987;
7. Reaffirms its decision that the headquarters rule shall be adhered to by all bodies;
8. Decides that waivers to the headquarters rule shall be granted solely on the basis of the calendar of conferences and meetings of the United Nations recommended by the Committee on Conferences for adoption by the General Assembly;
9. Invites all its subsidiary bodies that are authorized to meet away from their established headquarters to keep under review the exception to the headquarters rule in the light of their current work situation and to report any changes to the General Assembly through the Committee on Conferences;
10. Notes with appreciation that the Secretariat took into account the arrangements referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of section A of General Assembly resolution 52/214 and that the two holidays of Id al-Fitr and Id al-Adha, which occur in 1999 on 18 January and 29 March, respectively, shall be observed as official holidays of the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure strict implementation of those arrangements when preparing all future draft calendars of conferences and meetings of the Organization;

11. Decides that United Nations bodies should be invited to avoid holding meetings on 9 April 1999 and that this arrangement should be taken into account when drafting future calendars of conferences and meetings;

12. Requests the Committee on Conferences to consider, at its next session, the proposal that United Nations bodies should avoid holding meetings on lunar New Year's Day;

13. Emphasizes that, when planning the calendar of conferences and meetings, every effort should be made to avoid simultaneous peak periods at the various duty stations, and requests the Secretariat, when drafting future calendars of conferences and meetings, to merge into one section the draft list of meetings of treaty bodies established under the auspices of the United Nations and the draft calendar of conferences and meetings of the principal organs of the specialized agencies;

14. Also emphasizes the importance of providing adequate conference-servicing resources to all United Nations conference centres;

15. Notes with appreciation that the overall utilization factor for 1997 exceeded the benchmark of 80 per cent, in particular at Geneva and Vienna;

16. Notes the efforts by the Secretary-General to improve utilization rates of the conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi for 1996 and 1997;

17. Expresses concern that the conference facilities at the United Nations Office at Nairobi are still underutilized, as recorded during the period 1996-1997;

18. Reiterates its call for better utilization of the conference facilities at Nairobi;

19. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the fact that the United Nations Office at Nairobi has been upgraded to a full-fledged United Nations centre, to explore the possibility of establishing a permanent interpretation service at the centre and to submit a comprehensive report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

20. Also requests the Secretary-General, without prejudice to the practices currently used to meet interpretation requirements, to examine the provision of interpretation services to other locations from permanent interpretation structures based in New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, taking into account the request contained in paragraph 19 above for the establishment of a permanent interpretation service at Nairobi;

21. Invites all subsidiary bodies of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Commission on Human Settlements and encourages Member States, intergovernmental bodies and regional and other major groupings to consider increasing their use of the conference facilities at Nairobi;

22. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to assist the aforementioned bodies in improving this situation, and requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Committee on Conferences, on the actions taken to this end;

23. Reiterates its request to the Committee on Conferences to continue to consult with those bodies that consistently utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure of their allocated resources for the past three sessions, with a view to making appropriate recommendations in order to achieve the optimum utilization of conference-servicing resources;

24. Requests that the Chairperson of the Committee on Conferences transmit a letter to the chairpersons of all bodies that utilized less than the applicable benchmark figure (80 per cent) of their allocated conference resources in the previous year, informing them of the problem and drawing their attention to the significant loss of meeting time, with a view to encouraging appropriate action on their part so as to improve the utilization of conference resources;

25. Notes the importance of meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States for the smooth functioning of sessional bodies, in view of the increased requests for meetings of regional and other major groups, and welcomes the fact that 81 per cent of the requests for such meetings were met;

26. Notes with concern the difficulties experienced by some Member States owing to the lack of conference services for some meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States;

27. Regrets that 19 per cent of the requests for interpretation services made by regional and other major groupings of Member States were not met, while recognizing that meetings of Charter and mandated bodies must be serviced as a priority;

28. Decides to include all necessary resources in the budget for the next biennium to provide interpretation services for meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States upon request by those groupings, on an ad hoc basis, in accordance with established practice, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Committee on Conferences, a report on the implementation of this decision;

29. Urges intergovernmental bodies to spare no effort at the planning stage to take into account meetings of regional and other major groupings of Member States, to make provision for such meetings in their programmes of work and to notify the conference services, well in advance, of any cancellations so that unutilized conference-servicing resources may, to the extent possible, be reassigned to meetings of regional and other major groupings of States;

30. Deeply regrets that the reports requested in paragraphs 9 and 15 of section A of its resolution 52/214 were not submitted to the General Assembly, and notes, in this context, that those reports were presented only in an oral form to the Committee on Conferences;

31. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the reports requested in paragraphs 9 and 15 of section A of its resolution 52/214 before 31 March 1999, and decides, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 8 (a) of its resolution 50/206 C of 23 December 1995, that an oral report cannot substitute for a report requested by the General Assembly;

32. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the use of remote interpretation and translation will not affect the quality of interpretation and translation and will not in itself lead to a reduction of language posts;

33. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Committee on Conferences and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, a report on possible measures to alleviate the excessive vacancy rates in language services at some duty stations and ensure the required quality of conference services Secretariat-wide;

34. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts aimed at filling vacancies in language services at all duty stations;

35. Also requests the Secretary-General, when filling the posts of translators and interpreters, irrespective of the proposed contractual status of candidates, to take duly into account their professional qualifications, including pre-job training and experience, in order to maintain at all times the highest possible quality in the interpretation and translation services, and to ensure the equal treatment of language units of the Secretariat;

36. Stresses that the quality of interpretation in the six official languages should be improved in accordance with its resolution 52/214, and decides that the standards that govern the staffing of the interpretation booths shall continue to be observed;

37. Welcomes the new organizational structure of conference services, which will allow for more effective coordination among the four United Nations conference-servicing centres in New York, Geneva, Vienna and Nairobi, and requests the Secretary-General to review the administrative instruction of 8 May 1987 on guidelines for the preparation of host Government agreements falling under General Assembly resolution 40/243 of 18 December 1985 so as to reflect the new organizational structure.

On 18 December, the Assembly decided that the Fifth Committee should continue to consider the pattern of conferences at the resumed fifty-third (1999) session (decision 53/458).

Cost-accounting system

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/214 D [YUN 1997, p. 1502], the Secretary-General submitted two reports on cost accounting for conference services. In a July report [A/52/1000], he indicated that there was a need to define the various purposes that different cost-accounting methods suitable for use in the United Nations could achieve, and whether some of those purposes could be met by incremental changes to existing information systems—the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) and the Document Records, Information and Tracking System (DRITS). However, the Secretariat had concluded that there was a lack of in-house experience to conduct the necessary study and decided to seek external consultants. The selected firm reviewed the informal information systems in place, as well as the various conference-service functions that required costing. The aim was to develop a system with the capability to break down a particular service to determine specific outputs (documents and meetings); develop a basis to estimate actual cost of services provided on a reimbursable basis; and determine the cost or savings resulting from the addition or deletion of a certain volume of services after the conference-services budget was adopted.

In an August follow-up report [A/53/257], the Secretary-General proposed a prototype approach for the development of the cost-accounting system, whereby a simplified working model would be established. The advantages of such a system were that users' requirements would be more clearly defined, reducing the need to modify systems in the future. Although a less costly approach, it would demand a significant amount of users' time. When the right cost inputs to management functions were provided, the system would be turned into an operational system. To establish a prototype, off-the-shelf software was sufficient. The cost of the software and hardware was estimated at $65,000, and system analysts' fees and training were estimated at $240,000, for a total cost of $305,000. A time frame of six months was foreseen. Turning the prototype into a stable, permanent system would require additional resources.

The Committee on Conferences took note of both reports, stressed the need to consider the experience of all duty stations, and requested a preliminary estimate of expenditures to establish a permanent system and a time frame for each phase of the project.

ACABQ, in an October report on interpretation and translation services [A/53/507], said that while it supported the principle of cost accounting as a management tool, it found that the Secretary-General's report did not provide sufficient information to allow it to recommend development of a full-fledged cost-accounting system. The purpose and scope of the system needed to be more clearly defined. It recommended that the Secretary-General refine his proposals and resubmit them, taking into account any policy guidelines the Assembly might wish to provide.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/744], adopted resolution 53/208 D without vote [agenda item 117].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the cost-accounting system for conference services,

Stressing the need to provide Member States and United Nations bodies with more comprehensive and accurate information on the costs of meetings and documentation,

1. Emphasizes the need for the Secretariat to take into consideration the experience of all duty stations when improvements were made in existing information systems;

2. Endorses the view expressed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 10 of its report that the report of the Secretary-General does not provide sufficient information at this stage to allow the General Assembly to endorse the full-fledged development of a cost-accounting system;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at the earliest opportunity, taking into account the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions contained in paragraph 10 of its report.

Smoke-free conference rooms

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/744], adopted resolution 53/208 E without vote [agenda item 117].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 38/401 of 23 September 1983 and section E of its resolution 52/214 of 22 December 1997 concerning the prohibition of smoking in small conference rooms and the discouragement of smoking in large conference rooms,

1. Calls upon representatives of Member States to abide by its decision 38/401 and section E of its resolution 52/214;

2. Encourages all users of United Nations conference facilities, in order to avoid involuntary exposure to passive smoking, to refrain from smoking, in particular in conference rooms.

Upgrading of conference rooms

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/214 B [YUN 1997, p. 1505], the Secretary-General submitted a March report on measures to ensure the necessary resources for the upgrading of conference rooms and interpretation booths [A/52/829]. He said that resources for improvements to conference rooms were progressively included in successive programme budgets. For the 1998-1999 biennium, $600,000 was included for that purpose and an additional $1,300,000 was proposed for 2000-2001. New interpreting and voting equipment was installed in one conference room and others were upgraded during the 1996-1997 biennium, and further upgrading would be completed in the 1998-1999 biennium. Improvements to the interpretation booths were part of the overall conference room upgrade. It was anticipated that refurbishing activities would be completed as further resources became available in future bienniums.

By decision 52/469 of 31 March, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

Documents control

In response to a request contained in General Assembly resolution 52/214 B [YUN 1997, p. 1505], the Secretariat submitted to the Committee on Conferences a conference room note that reviewed the late issuance of documents and made suggestions for remedial action. Having reviewed that note, the Committee requested the Secretariat to submit to its substantive session in 1999 a report with data on the reasons for delays and an analysis of financial implications of the late submission of documents. It recommended including a footnote in late documents explaining the reason for the delay. The Committee commended the appointment of focal points in substantive departments to monitor documentation in order to reduce delays and proposed that the system be extended to DGAACS. The Committee noted that the use of unedited transcripts in place of verbatim records by the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (COPUOS) had significantly improved the timeliness of the issuance of written meeting records and had achieved savings. It requested the Secretariat to consult with intergovernmental bodies on the experience of COPUOS, so as to enable the Committee on Conferences to make final recommendations on the matter. However, the Committee emphasized that the choice of unedited verbatim transcripts should be consistent with the needs of the bodies concerned.

In a follow-up to the Secretary-General's decision to limit reports to 16 pages, the Committee recommended that the Assembly stress the need for compliance with the page limit. It called on the Secretariat to establish more rigorous procedures for obtaining waivers to the 16-page rule while maintaining some flexibility to ensure high standards of quality, and requested the Secretariat to submit every two years updated information on the number and length of documents. It invited all intergovernmental bodies to reduce further the length of their reports from 32 to 20 pages.

By decision 52/471 of 31 March, the General Assembly noted that reports were not being submitted as required under paragraphs 24 and 25 of resolution 52/214 B and emphasized that the provisions on including a summary, background, conclusions and recommendations should be fully implemented.

UN publications

In July [A/53/16], CPC considered the 1997 JIU report entitled "United Nations publications: enhancing cost-effectiveness in implementing legislative mandates" and the Secretary-General's comments on it [YUN 1997, p. 1504]. CPC stressed that publications played an important role in raising public awareness and promoting UN activities. It endorsed recommendations dealing with: provision of the most updated publications policy to the General Assembly; more coordinated and integrated efforts in the publishing process; and monthly reviews of reports on income from the sale of publications. CPC agreed that electronic publishing should be pursued where it was cost-effective, without eliminating the need for printed publications. It endorsed recommendations on strengthening the Publications Board and allowing it to screen publications prior to the preparation of each biennial programme budget, on the understanding that the Board would facilitate rather than control publications. The Committee proposed that other recommendations be reviewed by the relevant administrative and budgetary bodies. The Committee did not reach consensus on four recommendations.

In November [A/53/669], ACABQ made recommendations on the 18 JIU proposals. Among other things, it supported the proposal for a review of the current administrative, managerial and organizational structure of publishing activities in order to introduce necessary reforms at Headquarters, and requested the Secretary-General to report on steps taken to strengthen the Publications Board. ACABQ welcomed the formulation of new and revised policy directives on publications, which would be issued in 1999. It recommended that publications proposed under general mandates be first reviewed by the related intergovernmental bodies in the context of their work programmes. It also recommended that the Secretary-General review the cost-effectiveness of internal and external printing modes, taking into account local conditions.

Translation services

In response to Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421], the Secretary-General issued an August report on the translation-related matters of abolition of posts and self-revision [A/53/221]. He indicated that, in the 1998-1999 programme budget, careful selection was made of the posts for abolition so as to preserve the core functions of conference services: interpretation and translation. The majority of posts were in documents processing and support functions and reflected investments in technological innovations. A total of 17 interpreter and 13 translator posts were abolished in New York, Geneva and Vienna. Those posts that remained vacant during 1996-1997 to implement mandated vacancy rates were currently being filled, including six new translator posts in New York. Regarding the practice of self-revision (as opposed to revision by a second translator), from April 1997 to March 1998, the average rate was 47.8 per cent at Headquarters and 61.8 per cent and 64.4 per cent at Geneva and Vienna, respectively. Measures were taken to reconcile quality requirements and a sustained high rate of self-revision, particularly in training and quality control. Special attention was given to training experienced translators in self-revision.

The Committee on Conferences took note of that report and a conference room paper on the subject submitted by the Secretariat. It encouraged the Secretariat to continue to improve quality and proficiency in all six translation services. The Committee noted that the backlog of publications awaiting translation had been eliminated once the moratorium on contractual translation had been lifted, and that access to the optical disk system had improved. It recommended that the computer-assisted translation software systems be compatible with existing computer platforms used in the United Nations and be upgradeable to future technological developments, such as speech recognition and remote access, and that the experience of all duty stations be taken into account in their development. The Committee requested that budget proposals for conference services for the next biennium be prepared based on actual anticipated requirements, including anticipated productivity gains and the need for improvement in delivery of service as identified by Assembly resolution 52/214 B [YUN 1997, p. 1505], and recommended that due account be taken of the return in possible savings and efficiency gains in planning new technology.

In October [A/53/507], ACABQ noted the abolition of 30 posts in the 1998-1999 budget, which, for the most part, were in the document processing and support functions and reflected investment in technology. It also noted that remote translation was standard for all meetings held away from Headquarters, computer-assisted translation was being tested, and 50 per cent of translated texts were typed directly instead of dictated. ACABQ said that the Secretary-General should prepare a special report related to career development in language services, taking into account the numbers and grade levels of staff and different requirements of languages and duty stations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/744], adopted resolution 53/208 B without vote [agenda item 117].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/202 B of 22 December 1992, 48/222 B of 23 December 1993, 49/221 B of 23 December 1994, 50/206 B and C of 23 December 1995, 51/211 B of 18 December 1996 and 51/211 F of 15 September 1997 and section B of its resolution 52/214 of 22 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on translation issues,

1. Expresses deep concern about deficiencies in the quality of some reports and documents originating in the Secretariat, and requests the Secretariat to take all necessary measures to address the situation and to develop measurements to evaluate improvements made in the quality of reports and documents;

2. Notes with deep concern the low rate of compliance with the six-week rule for the issuance of documentation;

3. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that documentation is available in accordance with the six-week rule for the distribution of documents simultaneously in the six official languages of the General Assembly;

4. Requests the Secretariat to carry out a study on the possible relationship between the late issuance of documentation and the low utilization of conference services by some bodies;

5. Regrets that there continue to be delays in the submission of documents to the conference services, expresses concern that most of the delay in the issuance of a document is due to the late submission of documents from the substantive departments, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that substantive departments prepare their programme of work to meet the deadline for the issuance of documents;

6. Reaffirms its decision that, if a report is issued late, the reasons for the delay should be indicated when the report is introduced;

7. Regrets that its decision taken in paragraph 5 of its resolution 50/206 C has not been implemented;

8. Decides that if a report is submitted late to the conference services, the reasons for this should be included in a footnote to the document;

9. Endorses the request of the Committee on Conferences to the Secretariat that a report containing detailed data on the reasons for delays in the issuance of documentation and an analysis of the additional costs incurred by document-processing services and of other financial implications of the late submission and issuance of documents be presented to the Committee at its 1999 substantive session;

10. Notes with concern that the provisions of paragraphs 24 and 25 of section B of its resolution 52/214 are not always being implemented, despite reiteration of these provisions in its decision 52/471 of 31 March 1998;

11. Reiterates its request that the Secretary-General direct all departments to include, where appropriate, the following elements in reports originating in the Secretariat:

(a) A summary of the report;

(b) Consolidated conclusions, recommendations and other proposed actions;

(c) Relevant background information;

12. Reiterates that all documents submitted to legislative organs by the Secretariat and expert bodies for consideration and action should have conclusions and recommendations in bold print;

13. Stresses once again that press releases should reflect accurately the statements of Member States as delivered in their original languages;

14. Notes with concern that the provisions of paragraphs 1.21 and 1.22 of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 are not being implemented, and requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Department of General Assembly Affairs and Conference Services of the Secretariat conducts consultations and coordinates the assignment of responsibilities for the implementation of all General Assembly resolutions and decisions and follows up to ensure timely action by relevant departments and bodies;

15. Stresses once again the need for compliance with existing page limits, and invites all intergovernmental bodies to consider, where appropriate, the possibility of further reducing the length of their reports from thirty-two to twenty pages without adversely affecting either the quality of presentation or the content of the reports;

16. Calls upon the Secretariat to make its procedures for obtaining waivers to the sixteen-page rule more rigorous, while maintaining, however, the necessary degree of flexibility, with a view to encouraging author departments to reduce the length of their submissions while maintaining high standards of quality;

17. Requests the Secretariat to submit to the Committee on Conferences, every two years, updated information on the number and length of documents;

18. Also requests the Secretariat to continue consultations with the secretariats of intergovernmental bodies with a view to informing them on the speedy issuance of unedited verbatim transcripts and the cost savings derived therefrom, and encouraging them to follow the example of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space in carrying out the experiment with unedited verbatim transcripts, so as to enable the Committee on Conferences to make final recommendations on the matter;

19. Emphasizes that the choice of unedited verbatim transcripts should be consistent with the needs of the bodies concerned;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to improve the quality of the translation of documents into the six official languages in a timely manner;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that summary and verbatim records are issued in all six official languages concurrently;

22. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, where appropriate, to introduce new technologies such as machine-assisted translation and common terminology databases while ensuring that there are no adverse effects on the quality of documentation and translation;

23. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by the Secretariat to address the concerns expressed by delegations on translation-related matters, and encourages the Secretariat to continue its efforts to improve quality and proficiency in all six translation services;

24. Takes note with appreciation of the decision by the Secretariat to reduce the utilization of self-revision to the recommended level so as to ensure the desired quality of parliamentary texts, and emphasizes that the measures taken in relation to the revision of job descriptions, the training of staff, peer review and spot checks and other related initiatives should be continued;

25. Expresses concern over continued high rates of self-revision during peak workload periods and occasional inadequate translations, which have sometimes hampered the work of delegations, and emphasizes the importance of continuous training for all translators at all duty stations and of developing measures to provide translators with increased support from submitting offices and secretariats;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the post of reviser is provided in the six official languages in accordance with paragraph 19 of section B of its resolution 52/214 and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

27. Stresses that the United Nations should maintain a permanent interpretation and translation system capable of responding to its average workloads;

28. Encourages the Secretariat to continue its efforts to ensure effective linguistic quality control through to the final stage of document production and distribution and to report to the Committee on Conferences on the steps taken in that regard;

29. Regrets the difficulties being faced by language service staff in relation to their career development;

30. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session analysing such problems as may exist related to career development in language services and taking into account the fact that the numbers and grade levels of staff should be commensurate with the needs of the Organization as well as the fact that requirements differ between languages as well as between duty stations;

31. Recommends that due account should be taken of returns in terms of, inter alia, possible savings and efficiency gains in planning new technology;

32. Also recommends that computer-assisted translation systems should be compatible with the existing computer platforms used in the United Nations, that they should be upgradeable to future technological developments such as speech recognition and remote access, and that the experience of all duty stations should be taken into account in their development;

33. Takes note of paragraph 62 of the report of the Committee on Conferences;

34. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the impact of economy measures on the delivery of mandated conference services;

35. Also requests the Secretary-General, when preparing budget proposals for conference services, to ensure that all necessary resources are proposed for such services, giving priority to redressing the inadequacies in the provision of conference services in the most efficient manner for continuous improvements in the quality and delivery of those services;

36. Decides to defer until its resumed fifty-third session consideration of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit, the note by the Secretary-General transmitting his comments thereon, the report of the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on United Nations publications.

Optical disk system

In response to Assembly resolution 51/211 F [YUN 1997, p. 1503], the Secretary-General submitted a February report (A/52/803) that described the history and functions of the optical disk system (ODS) and discussed the possibility of expanding its availability on a fee-for-service basis to any interested party, on the understanding that it would remain free to permanent missions and other government offices of Member States. The report also addressed issues raised by ACABQ, including the possibility of generating income from the sale of access to UN databases.

ODS, which contained UN parliamentary documents issued since 1993 in all six official languages, was designed as a storage and retrieval system, whereby users could access the full text of documents and print them from their computers. Access was free-of-charge to Member States via the Internet. Interest in access to the system from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals had increased. A sustained increase in users would require additional investment in the project. Given the interest and the potential for contributing to the financing of an expansion of the system, it was proposed that access on an annual subscription basis be initiated. A schedule of discounts would be offered to certain categories of users. The Sales and Marketing Section of the Department of Public Information would be responsible for the sale of subscriptions and for setting the price under guidelines established by the Publications Board.

ACABQ noted in October [A/53/507] that the Secretariat had received numerous requests for free access from ODS users in intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Their access would require additional investment to expand the functional and operational capacity of the system, without which congestion and possible slowdown would occur. Fees would allow for expansion of capacity, while maintaining quality of service. ACABQ had no objection to the proposed schedule of fees, but recommended that a way be found to apply income generated through ODS subscriptions directly to help defray the cost of its maintenance and/or expansion. It was of the view that a system should be put in place to monitor satisfaction with ODS.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/744], adopted resolution 53/208 C without vote [agenda item 117].

Pattern of conferences

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/206 D of 23 December 1995, 51/211 C of 18 December 1996 and 51/211 F of 15 September 1997 and section C of its resolution 52/214 of 22 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on access to the optical disk system,

Stressing the importance of equal access to, and benefit from, the optical disk system and other new technologies in all six official languages for all Member States and the need to overcome the difficulties faced by some Member States, in particular by developing countries, in acquiring the technology to access the optical disk system, as well as other available technologies,

Appreciating the actions taken by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council to achieve universal connectivity between United Nations databases and those of Member States, including through their permanent missions, and the training programmes initiated to that end,

Appreciating also the efforts of the Secretary-General to incorporate new information technologies in the work of the Organization,

1. Welcomes the efforts of the Secretariat to improve access to the optical disk system, particularly the establishment of additional centres for the optical disk system;

2. Recognizes the efforts to provide wider access to the optical disk system, while continuing to ensure the availability of hard copies of documents for Member States, in particular for developing countries;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all resolutions and decisions, and any annexes thereto, adopted by the principal organs of the United Nations are posted to the optical disk system expeditiously;

4. Notes with appreciation that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat launched a United Nations web site in Russian, Arabic and Chinese this year;

5. Stresses the need for the continuous development, maintenance and enrichment of United Nations web sites, with a view to achieving equal treatment of the six official languages on those web sites;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit proposals in this connection to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session through the Committee on Conferences and the Committee on Information;

7. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the texts of all new public documents, in all six official languages, and information materials of the United Nations are made available through the United Nations web site daily and are accessible to Member States without delay;

8. Notes that, in addition to the free-of-charge connection, via the Internet, of all permanent and observer missions, requests have been received by the Organization for access to the optical disk system from a number of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

9. Reaffirms that, as provided for in its resolution 51/211 F, access to the optical disk system will continue to be provided free of charge to permanent and observer missions and other government offices of Member States, with a maximum of ten access passwords for each Member State, and that the optical disk system will continue to be made available to all staff of the Secretariat;

10. Endorses the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in paragraph 13 of its report that a way be found, while maintaining the quality of service and priority given by the General Assembly to the users mentioned in paragraph 1 of its resolution 51/211 F, to apply income generated through optical disk system subscriptions directly to help to meet the cost of maintaining and/or expanding the optical disk system, and to establish a mechanism to monitor satisfaction with the optical disk system.

UN information systems

In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/1 [YUN 1997, p. 1507], the Secretary-General submitted a May report [E/1998/44] on international cooperation in the field of informatics, in which he summarized action taken so far to design an overall information management strategy for the UN system. The Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics, which was entrusted with that task, continued to concentrate on issues relating to the provision of better electronic access for Member States, including: the need for Member States to have electronic connectivity at major UN locations; access to a wider range of UN information on economic and social development, political issues and other programme areas; sufficient electronic mail links with the UN system; specialized training for the staff at missions to take advantage of those links; information on new electronic technologies; the need to address the year 2000 (Y2K) compliance issue (see below); and the need to develop an overall information management strategy. The Working Group established a sub-working group to identify key points that should be addressed by such a strategy and propose an inter-agency approach for developing and implementing it.

The report also addressed action by the Secretariat and UNDP in response to concerns raised in the Working Group, including facilitating information access and dissemination in New York and in country locations, electronic dissemination of information via the UN Intranet, ODS and provision of electronic mail to permanent and observer missions.

The Secretary-General concluded that the Secretariat expected expansion of information services to Member States to continue in the 1998-1999 biennium. Additional information would be made available under guidelines established by the Interdepartmental Coordinating Group on Internet Matters. The focus of the development of services would shift to the expansion of the information base to include significantly more information.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/29 [draft: E/1998/L.16] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

The need to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States

The Economic and Social Council,

Conscious of the deep interest of Member States in harnessing the benefits of new information technologies for furthering the objectives of the United Nations, including the objectives of economic and social development,

Recalling its resolutions 1991/70 of 26 July 1991, 1992/60 of 31 July 1992, 1993/56 of 29 July 1993, 1994/46 of 29 July 1994, 1995/61 of 28 July 1995, 1996/35 of 25 July 1996 and 1997/1 of 18 July 1997 on the need to harmonize and improve United Nations information systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States, with due regard to all official languages,

Recalling also that in its resolution 1997/1 it commended the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics for the concrete actions it had taken in pursuance of its mandate, and requested the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene the Working Group for one more year, from within existing resources, for the due fulfilment of the provisions of the Council resolutions on this item,

Welcoming the oral report presented by the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics on the progress achieved so far by the Working Group in fulfilling its mandate,

Highly appreciative of the accomplishments of the Working Group, which include:

(a) The distribution of a large number of computers under a technical assistance programme to enable the missions of the developing countries to overcome the difficulty of hardware availability;

(b) Informatics symposia, which are working to build a strong collaboration between the United Nations, Member States and the private sector for the pursuit of common objectives;

(c) The programme of outreach from the United Nations to academic institutions through videoconferencing,

Welcoming General Assembly resolution 52/233 of 26 June 1998, in which the Assembly emphasized that co-ordinated efforts by Governments and private, public and international organizations would be required to address the year 2000 problem,

Deeply appreciative of the fact that the work of the Working Group has not involved any additional expenditures and that its needs have been met from within existing resources,

Highly appreciative of the fact that the work done by the Working Group has already resulted in savings for the United Nations and its Member States and has created opportunities for further savings,

Taking note with deep interest of the proposed initiatives of the Working Group, including the promotion of computer-based decision-making techniques to facilitate the drafting of resolutions and documents in ways that would accelerate the reaching of agreements in the drafting process and the employment of modern information technology for the development activities of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the work done by the Working Group will support and facilitate the successful implementation of the initiatives being taken by the Secretary-General with a view to expanding the use of information technology and the availability and transparency of information in order further to facilitate access to United Nations information in all countries,

Agreeing with the assessment in the report of the Working Group that further work needs to be done by the Working Group to fulfil its mandate,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on action taken by the United Nations to implement Council resolution 1997/1,

1. Reiterates once again the high priority that it attaches to easy, economical, uncomplicated and unhindered access for States Members of the United Nations and for observers, through, inter alia, their permanent missions, to the growing number of computerized databases and information systems and services of the United Nations;

2. Calls for the urgent and continued implementation of measures required to achieve these objectives;

3. Reaffirms the continuing need for representatives of States to be consulted closely and associated actively with the respective executive and governing bodies of United Nations institutions dealing with informatics within the United Nations system so that the specific needs of States as internal end-users can be given due priority;

4. Decides that the action programme to harmonize and improve United Nations informatics systems for optimal utilization and accessibility by all States should continue to be implemented from within existing resources and in full consultation with the representatives of States;

5. Highly commends the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics for the concrete actions it has taken and for the impressive results it has produced in pursuance of its mandate;

6. Requests the President of the Economic and Social Council to convene the Working Group for one more year, from within existing resources, for the due fulfilment of the provisions of the Council resolutions on this item and for facilitating the successful implementation of the initiatives being taken by the Secretary-General with regard to use of information technology;

7. Emphasizes the need for global cooperation to ensure timely and effective response to the year 2000 challenge;

8. Requests the Working Group to continue its work on an information management strategy;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to extend full cooperation to the Working Group and to give priority to implementing its recommendations;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999 on the follow-up action taken on the present resolution, including the findings of the Working Group.

Year 2000 computer problem

By a 15 May letter to the General Assembly President [A/52/910], Pakistan requested that the agenda item of the fifty-second session on science and technology for development be reopened to consider the implications of the Y2K conversion problem for computers. Attached to the letter was an explanatory memorandum, which noted that the problem arose from the fact that older computer systems used chips and software that recognized only the last two digits of the year. As a result, the year 2000 and beyond would be read as 1900. Therefore, older software would not work properly from 1 January 2000 unless remedial action was taken before 31 December 1999. The text of a draft resolution on the subject was also attached to the letter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 June [meeting 88], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/233 [draft: A/52/L.75/Rev.I] without vote [agenda item 95 (c)].

Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the effective operation of Governments, companies and other organizations is threatened by the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers, or "millennium bug",

Underlining the need for effective action to address the problem to be taken well in advance of the inflexible date of 31 December 1999, beyond which important systems might cease to function,

Recognizing the potentially serious impact that the year 2000 problem could have in all countries whose economies are increasingly interdependent,

Emphasizing that the year 2000 problem could affect both computer systems and much electronic control equipment containing embedded chips and internal clocks, with wide-ranging effects on such important areas as power supplies, telecommunications, financial systems, transport, public health, building and factory systems, food supplies, emergency services, the organization of social welfare and utilities,

Emphasizing also that coordinated efforts by Governments and private, public and international organizations are required to address the year 2000 problem,

Appreciating the establishment of a trust fund by the World Bank to assist in the efforts to resolve the year 2000 problem and the voluntary contributions made to it by the member States,

Appreciating also the efforts of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council in raising the level of awareness of the year 2000 problem,

1. Requests all Member States to attach a high priority to raising the level of awareness, both by ensuring that the private sector is fully engaged in addressing the year 2000 problem and by tackling the problem in those systems within their own control, and to consider, inter alia, the appointment of a nationwide coordinator for this purpose;

2. Appeals to all Member States to forge global cooperation to ensure a timely and effective response to the year 2000 challenge;

3. Calls upon Governments, public and private sector organizations and civil society to share locally, regionally and globally their experiences in addressing the year 2000 problem;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that all parts of the United Nations system take measures to ensure that their computers and equipment with embedded microprocessors are year 2000 compliant well before the target date by drawing up a plan of action for the United Nations system;

5. Calls upon the Economic and Social Council to prepare at its substantive session of 1998 guidelines on which Member States will be able to draw in addressing the diverse aspects of the year 2000 problem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations system closely monitors actual and potential sources of funding to support the efforts of the developing countries and countries with economies in transition to address the year 2000 problem, and to facilitate the dissemination of relevant information on those funding possibilities to the Member States;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session on the steps taken within the United Nations system and with Member States to resolve this problem;

8. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-third session an item entitled "Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers" and to complete its action under that agenda item before the deadline of 31 December 1999.

Report of Secretary General (May). The Secretary-General, in a May report on cooperation in the field of informatics [E/1998/44], described steps taken by the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics to build awareness among Member States and permanent observer missions of the seriousness of the Y2K problem. Action taken within the Secretariat included: the establishment of a special section on the UN web site containing relevant information on the problem; the provision by UNDP of a section on its web site on the problem and its possible impact on developing countries; the contracting of a consulting firm to study the situation in the Secretariat and prepare an impact paper with specific recommendations; a review within all application development areas in the Secretariat of software handling date-sensitive functions to avoid potential difficulties; the replacement of infrastructure components by equipment certified to be Y2K compliant; and the reconfiguration of the mainframe computer in the International Computing Centre in Geneva.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/45 [draft: E/1998/L.40] without vote [agenda item 7 (d)].

Suggested guidelines for addressing the year 2000 problem of computers

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/233 of 26 June 1998 on the global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers, in which the Assembly, inter alia, called upon the Economic and Social Council to prepare guidelines on which Member States would be able to draw in addressing the diverse aspects of this problem,

Recognizing the serious risks posed by the year 2000 problem and the urgent need for Member States and all parts of the United Nations system to achieve compliance well in advance of the inflexible date of 31 December 1999,

1. Adopts the suggested guidelines for addressing the year 2000 problem contained in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure broad dissemination of the suggested guidelines for maximum utilization by Member States and those areas of the United Nations system that are not yet year 2000 compliant, as a matter of urgency.

ANNEX

Suggested guidelines for addressing the year 2000 problem of computers

The objective of the present guidelines is to raise the awareness of Governments on the year 2000 problem and compile a general list of issues that should be considered in this context. The problem stems from the fact that many hardware and software systems use only the last two digits of the four-digit designation of a given year to identify that year. Hence, if not converted by the target date, 31 December 1999, those systems will recognize "00" not as the year 2000 but instead as the year 1900. Electronic systems that are not year 2000 compliant and involve processes based on dates will either shut down, produce meaningless and misleading results or revert to some other date, as a result of which whole sectors of the economy and critical government operations could experience significant disruptions.

Although there is an abundance of material available on the Internet from expert groups and government and private institutions warning about the impact of the date issue, it is felt that there is still a need to stress the complexity of the problem, which could affect not only businesses and Governments but also international cooperation. If one partner in a private or intergovernmental network is not year 2000 compliant, this could create a domino effect, causing the whole network of cooperation to break down and affecting even compliant segments. There is also a misconception that the problem is limited to computer systems. In fact, all equipment configurations with embedded systems that use code or chips and involve handling of dates could be affected. Misunderstanding of the year 2000 problem as being a problem of individual computer systems has led to the belief that the finding of solutions can be left to technical experts. However, recognition of the fact that the millennium bug affects a wide range of different systems and that a domino effect is possible has led to the understanding of the year 2000 problem as being also a management problem.

This brief note attempts to summarize the issues involved and provide general guidelines for attacking the problem; for more detailed information, readers are referred to the Internet and the other sources of information mentioned above. Although the four-step procedure outlined below is geared to government institutions, most of it applies equally to the private sector.

1. Problem awareness

- Governments and international organizations, at the highest level, should announce their commitment to meeting the year 2000 challenge. Progress should be publicly reported at regular intervals;
- A year 2000 awareness campaign should be initiated and directed at target groups, such as small businesses and local government agencies, that may still not be aware of the issue and its complexities;
- A comprehensive year 2000 strategy should be developed that would allow Governments to address the problem in a coordinated manner. The strategic recommendations should be translated into tactical objectives by local governments or executing agents;
- Cooperation between Governments and the private sector should be initiated at all levels of government, including the national and international levels.

2. Problem assessment

- A management structure should be put in place that assigns clear responsibility and authority for addressing the various aspects of the problem;
- Year 2000 compliance should be clearly defined in operational terms and standards should be established for determining what constitutes compliance. For critical systems, a formal certification procedure should be considered;
- Some consensus regarding the order of criticality of processes should be reached. Criteria to be considered are: preventing loss of life, allowing effective government, maintaining civil order, avoiding large-scale hardship, allowing continuation of commercial activities, preventing environmental damage, and so forth;
- Sectors of the infrastructure and systems of national importance for which compliance must be assured should be identified. The list should include but should not be limited to transport and communication, utilities, finance, national security, public health, nuclear facilities and international relations;
- Each organization responsible for providing critical services should be encouraged or required to develop a plan to solve its year 2000 problems. The plan should outline steps to be taken in systems assessment, repair, testing, implementation and coordination with other entities;

- For areas that are not of primary national importance, a risk analysis should be carried out to establish an order of priority for ensuring compliance. It is now recognized that 100 per cent compliance will be difficult to achieve. For low-risk areas where non-compliance will have little impact, action could be delayed;
  - To avoid a domino effect, interdependencies between systems of low priority and areas of national importance must be identified;
  - The interface between national systems and the systems of other Governments should be defined. Particular attention should also be given to private-sector service providers, for example, in the areas of communication, air traffic control and power supply, who operate on a regional or global level but are an integral part of the national infrastructure;
  - Mechanisms for disseminating candid information about the status of remediation should be established;
  - Questions regarding public and private sector liability for damages resulting from non-compliance and warranty issues should be investigated.
3. Problem solution
- Validation strategies and testing procedures for all converted or replaced systems and their components should be established;
  - A manpower analysis should be carried out to determine the human resources required for the conversion. Many countries, especially developing countries, are already experiencing a shortage of skilled information technology workers. This problem will be aggravated by the year 2000 issue. Developing countries will be particularly vulnerable;
  - Budgetary provisions must be made to secure funds for new hardware, conversion software, human resources and related costs. Further, the financial responsibility for the cost of conversion must be determined. Some countries may consider funding by international organizations, especially the World Bank, which has grant loan funds available;
  - Suppliers and designers of systems should be identified and integrated into the validation and testing process, whenever possible;
  - As regards the application of the validation and testing process established earlier, systems will be certified or steps to convert systems will be taken according to their priority. Since problems and their solutions may be similar across applications and processes, a mechanism for the exchange of information and the consolidation of activities should be established at the national and international levels.
4. Contingency planning
- Governments should establish general contingency plans for all systems and activities of national importance and the systems that support them for continuity of operations. Back-up arrangements should be made at the national and international levels;
  - A hotline should be established so that the public can report possible millennium-related problems and obtain assistance in case of emergencies;
  - The disaster recovery plans of all systems should be reviewed and updated to avoid loss of data and ensure the resumption of operation as soon as possible;
  - In case year 2000 compliance cannot be achieved before 31 December 1999, some critical systems may have to be temporarily decommissioned and replaced by back-up processes. Planning for the establishment of back-up processes for critical infrastructure systems should start immediately. It is important to determine how far in advance such plans will need to be implemented so as to be effective in the event that the deadline cannot be met.

Report of Secretary-General (November). In a November report [A/53/574 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reviewed the nature of the Y2K problem and detailed the steps taken within the UN system to resolve it.

He noted that, as early as 1996, the Secretariat began to work on its solution to the problem. The Secretary-General had requested the Board of Auditors to assess preparedness at Headquarters, funds and programmes for managing the issue. An external contractor would carry out an overall risk assessment and recommend solutions for all affected applications, databases, telecommunication systems and computer hardware and software by the beginning of 1999. Similar steps had been taken for offices away from Headquarters. In other UN organizations, preparedness varied from the early stage of assessment and planning to full compliance. An extensive sharing of information via web sites and more formal mechanisms for the exchange of information and experience were in place.

The report drew attention to the work of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics, which was increasing awareness in Member States, and to the draft guidelines prepared by the Ad Hoc Group and adopted by the Economic and Social Council (see above).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, on 7 December [meeting 81], adopted resolution 53/86 [draft: A/53/L.43/Rev.1] without vote [agenda item 160].

Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/233 of 26 June 1998 entitled "Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers",

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Steps taken within the United Nations system to resolve the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers",

Recognizing that the effective operation of Governments, companies and other organizations is threatened by the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers, or "millennium bug",

Underlining the need for effective action to address the problem to be taken well in advance of the inflexible date of 31 December 1999, beyond which important systems might cease to function,

Recognizing the potentially serious impact that the year 2000 problem could have in all countries whose economies are increasingly interdependent,

Emphasizing that the year 2000 problem could affect both computer systems and much electronic control equipment containing embedded chips and internal clocks, with wide-ranging effects on such important areas as power supplies, telecommunications, financial systems, transport, public health, building and factory systems, food supplies, emergency services, the organization of social welfare and utilities,

Emphasizing also that coordinated efforts by Governments and private, public and international organizations are required to address the year 2000 problem,

Appreciating the establishment of a trust fund by the World Bank to assist in the efforts to resolve the year 2000 problem and the voluntary contributions made to it by the member States,

Appreciating also the efforts of the Ad Hoc Open-ended Working Group on Informatics of the Economic and Social Council in raising the level of awareness of the year 2000 problem,

1. Requests all Member States urgently to increase their efforts to solve the year 2000 problem, including by working to ensure that the private sector is fully engaged in addressing the problem, tackling it in those systems within their own control and appointing their respective national coordinators for this purpose;

2. Appeals to all Member States to forge global cooperation to ensure a timely and effective response to the year 2000 challenge and to work together to address the threats the problem poses globally;

3. Calls upon Governments, public and private sector organizations and civil society to share locally, regionally and globally information about their experiences in addressing the year 2000 problem;

4. Urges all Member States to emphasize the importance of contingency planning and to develop such plans to address the potential for possible large-scale failures in the public and private sectors;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take steps to ensure that all parts of the United Nations system take measures to ensure that their computers and equipment with embedded microprocessors are year 2000 compliant well before the target date by drawing up a plan of action for the United Nations system;

6. Takes note with appreciation of the suggested guidelines for addressing the year 2000 problem of computers prepared by the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1998, as contained in the annex to Council resolution 1998/45 of 31 July 1998, and urges Member States to draw upon them in addressing the diverse aspects of the year 2000 problem;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the United Nations system closely monitors actual and potential sources of funding to support the efforts of the developing countries and countries with economies in transition to address the year 2000 problem, and to facilitate the dissemination of relevant information on those funding possibilities to the Member States;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the steps taken within the United Nations system and with Member States to resolve the year 2000 problem;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Global implications of the year 2000 date conversion problem of computers" and to complete its action under that agenda item before the deadline of 31 December 1999.

Integrated Management Information System

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session, considered the ninth progress report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Board of Auditors [YUN 1997, p. 1508] on the Integrated Management Information System (IMIS) project.

In its March report on IMIS [A/52/828], ACABQ concurred with the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and annexed an update of corrective actions by the Administration during its implementation of the Board's recommendations. The Administration had advised that the implementation of Release 3 (financial and support services) and Release 4 (payroll at offices away from Headquarters) would be completed by the end of 1999. Release 5, which initially comprised budget formulation and worldwide data transmission, including a consolidated database for global reporting, was reduced in scope to mainly data distribution and consolidation, which in the opinion of ACABQ was insufficient. It therefore requested the Secretary-General to explore the feasibility of reinstating budget formulation and implementation in the IMIS project.

The revised estimates of the project contained in the ninth progress report were $72.9 million, excluding maintenance fees of $10.4 million. ACABQ noted that the original contract in 1991 was for $ 17 million, but the original performance bond of $1.7 million was never adjusted accordingly to bring it to 10 per cent of the contract.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744/Add.2], adopted resolution 52/227 without vote [agenda item 116].

Integrated Management Information System

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 43/217 of 21 December 1988,

Having considered the ninth progress report of the Secretary-General on the Integrated Management Information System project and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, as well as the report of the Board of Auditors on the updated special audit of the Integrated Management Information System project,

1. Notes the difficulties inherent in the implementation of the Integrated Management Information System project;

2. Expresses concern that the magnitude and complexity of the Integrated Management Information System project were underestimated from its inception;

3. Also expresses concern that the recommendations of the Board of Auditors contained in its report of 21 November 1994 on the special audit of the Integrated Management Information System project have not been fully implemented;

4. Expresses its deep concern at the findings of the Board of Auditors contained in its report on the updated special audit;

5. Endorses the observations and recommendations of the Board of Auditors contained in its report on the updated special audit;

6. Takes note of the corrective actions taken by the Administration concerning the recommendations made by the Board of Auditors;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to take immediate action for the full implementation of the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and to report thereon to the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-third session;

8. Expresses its deep concern about the time and cost overruns for the completion of the Integrated Management Information System project;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure strict adherence to the Financial Rules and Regulations of the United Nations in matters concerning control over expenditure on the Integrated Management Information System project, with particular reference to contractual costs, and to ensure that adequate administrative support is provided for the project in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Auditors in paragraphs 25 and 27 of the annex to its report;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to determine contractor responsibilities in the changes in the Integrated Management Information System in order to limit unnecessary payments by the Administration;

11. Further requests the Secretary-General to entrust the Office of Internal Oversight Services with conducting a comprehensive analysis of the reasons for the increase in costs of the contract and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly no later than the end of the main part of its fifty-third session;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to have independent experts conduct a forward-looking study of the Integrated Management Information System, to be financed from available resources of the Department of Management of the Secretariat, with no effect on the implementation of its mandate, and to submit a report thereon to the General Assembly, together with his comments, through the Advisory Committee, no later than the end of the main part of the fifty-third session, the purpose of the independent study being:

(a) To assess the System from a technical point of view, in terms of both design and operations, taking into account the specific requirements of the United Nations;

(b) To advise on the long-term maintenance and operational requirements of the System in terms of the number and qualifications of staff, infrastructure and communications;

(c) To advise on possible strategies for improving the System and optimizing maintenance costs;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his tenth progress report a detailed plan of action and the final level of resources needed to resolve all outstanding problems so as to make the Integrated Management Information System fully operational, taking into account the main observations of the two reports referred to in paragraphs 11 and 12 above;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to reduce the dependency on the current contractor by limiting additional work to the minimum required to facilitate the implementation of the Integrated Management Information System project at offices away from Headquarters and to take the necessary measures to have additional work performed by United Nations staff or by a contractor selected after competitive bidding;

15. Calls upon the Secretary-General to ensure that a comprehensive programme for Integrated Management Information System training is included as part of the ongoing training programme offered to staff at all duty stations concerned;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that adequate and qualified staff are assigned to the implementation and operation of the Integrated Management Information System at all duty stations.

Report of Secretary-General. On 3 November, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly his tenth progress report on the IMIS project [A/53/573]. He stated that, since the last report, the development of IMIS had proceeded at a sustained pace and deployment at offices away from Headquarters continued. He noted with satisfaction the report of the independent experts (see below), which favourably evaluated the system from both technical and cost perspectives. Their recommendations had been acted upon, as had, for the most part, the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and requests from the Assembly. Over the course of the past year, Release 2 (staff entitlements) was implemented worldwide; major enhancements had been developed in Release 3 (finance and support services); progress had been achieved in Releases 4 (payroll and related functionalities) and 5 (operational applications); additional reports were made available to end-users; and remote access to the system progressed. The complexity of the remaining tasks was enormous. Implementation of the new payroll at eight duty stations and of the financial application at seven duty stations, in less than one year, would require an unprecedented effort to prepare data, train personnel, reorganize work flows and adjust to a completely new way of conducting business. New automated processes, including funds availability verification, education grant, travel, and time and attendance, which to date were manually processed, would be introduced for the first time at most locations.

The overall costs for completion of the project were also reviewed. To date, the Assembly had approved a total budget of $68.1 million and had requested the Secretary-General to submit revised estimates, taking into account the recommendations of the Board of Auditors and the independent experts. An additional amount of $9.5 million was required, of which $3 million was to be expended during the 2000-2001 biennium and $6.5 million was directly related to the implementation of the system at offices away from Headquarters.

Independent experts' report. In response to the request contained in General Assembly resolution 52/227, the Secretary-General transmitted on 11 November the forward-looking study of the IMIS system, conducted by two independent experts [A/53/662 & Corr.1]. The study focused on three areas: assessment of the system from a technical viewpoint in terms of both design and operations; long-term maintenance and operational requirements of the system, including number and qualifications of staff, infrastructure and communications; and possible strategies for improving the system and optimizing maintenance costs. The experts concluded that there was no doubt that IMIS was a well-designed and robust computer application, providing functional support to the United Nations in New York, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). It was used satisfactorily by a large number of users, over 400 of whom accessed the system in New York each day. The goals of a truly integrated system had been realized and system integration in the United Nations achieved. A major accomplishment was that the system had not failed like similar initiatives elsewhere. Difficulties encountered included the severe project slippage, the increase in the project budget, the changing user environment, the lack of human resources, the underestimation of the workload, and the lack of an adequate data communications infrastructure to meet the needs of IMIS. The development and implementation budget for IMIS was in the order of $68 million, of which $42 million was for contractor services and $19 million for staff assigned to the construction. The expert study put forward 11 recommendations for the further improvement of the functioning of the system.

ACABQ report. ACABQ, in a 20 November report on IMIS [A/53/7/Add.7], noted the conclusions of the independent experts and studied the response by the Secretariat to their 11 recommendations, most of which dealt with the implementation of the system at offices away from Headquarters, which the experts felt was the most critical and challenging issue facing the United Nations. In that regard, ACABQ noted that $6.5 million of the additional $9.5 million requested for the project related to those offices. The Advisory Committee stressed the importance of implementing all of the experts' recommendations, including those on long-term maintenance, infrastructure and inter-agency governance framework. It pointed out that after the installation at offices away from Headquarters, priority should be given to developing remote access and to the needs of peacekeeping operations and the tribunals. It requested the Secretary-General to provide in his next report information on requirements for making IMIS a field as well as a Headquarters system.

ACABQ noted the comments of the experts regarding the often invoked notion by agency representatives that commercially available software packages were viable and less costly than adapting IMIS to the needs of the various agencies. ACABQ, however, was of the opinion that Member States would save millions of dollars if the United Nations and its agencies were to use common types of information management systems. It recommended that the Assembly endorse the experts' study and that the Secretary-General provide detailed information on the implementation of the experts' recommendations, including a proposed long-term maintenance plan to ensure that IMIS would be updated with the latest advances in technology.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/214, section VII, without vote [agenda item 113].

Integrated Management Information System

The General Assembly . . .

Reaffirming its resolutions 43/217 of 21 December 1988 and 52/227 of 31 March 1998,

Having considered the tenth progress report of the Secretary-General, as well as the report of the independent experts on the Integrated Management Information System project and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Expresses serious concern that the tenth progress report of the Secretary-General has not been submitted in full compliance with paragraph 13 of its resolution 52/227;

2. Notes with concern that the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services requested in paragraph 11 of its resolution 52/227, which should have been taken into account in preparing the tenth progress report, has not been submitted;

3. Requests the Board of Auditors to review the status of implementation of the recommendations contained in its updated special audit of the Integrated Management Information System, taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolution 52/227;

4. Also requests the Board of Auditors to continue monitoring the activities related to the Integrated Management Information System project as part of its ongoing regular audits of the financial statements;

5. Reiterates the request contained in paragraph 16 of its resolution 52/227 that the Secretary-General ensure that adequate and qualified staff are assigned to the implementation and operation of the Integrated Management Information System at all duty stations;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take all the necessary actions to ensure that the activities are performed with a maximum of efficiency and economy;

7. Decides to approve an additional appropriation of 3.3 million dollars;

8. Decides also to defer further consideration of the tenth progress report of the Secretary-General, the report of the independent experts on the Integrated Management Information System project and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions until the resumed fifty-third session, and requests the Secretary-General to submit, through the Advisory Committee, an addendum to his report, taking into consideration the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services;

Communication for UN development programmes

In an August note, the Secretary-General transmitted a report from the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) [A/53/296] on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 51/172 [YUN 1996, p. 1352] on communication for development programmes in the UN system. The report included the recommendations of the sixth Inter-Agency Round Table on Communication for Development held in Harare, Zimbabwe, in 1996. The report recalled that UNICEF was nominated to organize the seventh Round Table in Bahia, Brazil (November 1998). In the report, UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), UNICEF and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) provided information on project implementation in communication needs and policies to support long-term sustainability of development.

By decision 53/442 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Director-General of UNESCO.

UN insurance programmes

The Secretary-General, pursuant to Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362] and decision 51/468 B [YUN 1997, p. 1510], transmitted in August the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audit of commercial insurance programmes [A/52/1020], which dealt with all UN commercial insurance arrangements, excluding the global cargo and motor vehicle policies. In 1997, expenditures for those arrangements totalled more than $1.5 million. OIOS found that insurance coverage had evolved historically, not as a result of a strategic approach to managing risk exposure. In its view, the Organization relied too heavily on its insurance brokers and the Insurance Section was inappropriately structured and under-resourced. No risk assessment for foreign property and demining liability policies had been performed. There were limitations in the competitive bidding process for establishing and renewing foreign property coverage. No asset valuation methodology for insurance purposes existed. The Insurance Section's handling of foreign coverage was limited to UN premises in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, Beirut, Lebanon, and Santiago, Chile. Little guidance was provided to offices away from Headquarters, nor did standardized coverage criteria exist. Funds to cover liability claims at Headquarters were sufficient to merit examination of alternatives to the annual allocation.

OIOS recommended: the development and implementation of an Organization-wide policy on risk management, including specifications and guidelines for all UN property policies worldwide; relocation of responsibility for commercial insurance to the Office of Central Support Services and the allocation of additional resources; performance of comprehensive risk assessments of foreign property and demining liability programmes; launching a broker competition exercise, specifying service requirements, combining Headquarters and foreign property policies and adding locations such as the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy; formulating a definition of a valuation methodology for insurance purposes; and assessment of the self-insurance fund, with a view to eliminating or reducing the annual allocation of $200,000.

In October [A/53/467], OIOS reported on the audit of the UN health insurance programme, which involved the provision of medical, hospital and dental services through different insurance plans, the cost of which was shared by the Organization and the participants, both active and retired, numbering 22,000 and 7,000 respectively, in 1997. For the 1996-1997 biennium, the cost of the programme, comprising the premiums paid under eight plans, amounted to $251.7 million, of which $148.1 million (59 per cent) represented the Organization's share and $103.6 million the participants' contribution.

The OIOS audit gave rise to a number of findings, most significantly that the current plans were excessive in number and that differences among them in terms of the subsidy and the extent of the benefits offered by the Organization made the programme difficult to administer and control. The programme should be restructured to rectify those shortcomings and outside expertise should be sought in that regard. Another finding was that, despite the fact that the companies contracted to administer the New York plans were remunerated by the United Nations on the basis of the reimbursement claims received from participants, no regular checks were carried out by the Secretariat to verify the number and dollar value of those claims. Resources should be allocated for regular reviews of the claims in question and subsequent corrective action taken to ensure that they were handled efficiently by the plan administrators and that their claim settlement figures and administrative charges were accurate and reasonable. A third finding revealed that, although competitive bidding was initiated in 1997 for the Headquarters dental plan, the other health insurance contracts were not subject to review and competitive bidding. OIOS recommended that action should be taken without delay and any related renewal or modification in future should be duly submitted beforehand for review by the Headquarters Committee on Contracts.

OIOS found that there was a need to modify the manner in which the programme's income, expenditures and reserves were reported in the Organization's financial statements, and suggested that action be taken to implement the prior ACABQ recommendation calling for the use of extrabudgetary funds to finance part of the cost of the after-service health insurance programme [YUN 1990, p. 1053].

Outsourcing practices

In June, the Secretary-General transmitted the comments of ACC [A/52/338/Add.1] on the 1997 JIU report on the challenge of outsourcing for the UN system [YUN 1997, p. 1511]. ACC said that since the differences between individual organizations with respect to mandates, operational environment and business practices dictated different approaches to outsourcing, each organization had to be free to develop a policy appropriate to its own circumstances. The JIU report raised some valid issues and particular attention should be paid to the need to ensure in-house "core" competencies and the ability to manage and control outsourced activities. Due attention should be given to the issues of any negative impacts on staff and to the need to respect the international character of UN system organizations.

Organizations did not believe that it was appropriate for legislative organs to become involved in reviewing and approving policies regarding outsourcing. Any mandated review specifically focusing on outsourcing would involve additional cost to organizations and inappropriate micro-management by governing bodies. Organizations' budget proposals already reflected the use of outsourcing; it should be up to each executive head to decide on appropriate management control and reporting systems to ensure that legislative organs received adequate information in all areas, including outsourcing.

In the light of the budgetary constraints facing organizations and competition for scarce resources, it was not considered appropriate to appoint specific outsourcing "facilitators". While each organization should decide on the optimum use of available managerial resources, including the extent to which special attention might be given to increasing outsourcing, appropriate attention would be given to exploring possibilities for joint and coordinated actions among the various UN organizations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 31 March [meeting 82], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/746/Add.1], adopted resolution 52/226 B without vote [agenda item 114].

Procurement reform and outsourcing

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Joint Inspection Unit entitled "The challenge of outsourcing for the United Nations system" and the report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services on the review of the implementation of procurement reform,

1. Welcomes the continued coordination of efforts between the Office of Internal Oversight Services and the Joint Inspection Unit to improve and streamline the outsourcing activities of the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit, for consideration by the General Assembly at the main part of its fifty-third session, a comprehensive report on outsourcing practices, duly taking into account the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit and the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

Staff security

ACC, at its first regular session in 1998 [ACC/1998/4], endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the high-level meeting of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) (Geneva, 9 February), which focused on four issues of staff security: adequate financial provision, including the establishment of separate budget lines for security; security arrangements for local staff, including possible relocation in crisis situations; implementation of security training, including strengthening the role of the Office of the United Nations Security Coordinator; and a unified chain of command.

ACC was also briefed on and endorsed the conclusions of the Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Security (Montreal, Canada, 17-19 March), which addressed other issues, including establishment of thresholds for determining the timing and/or termination of operations at the field level; implementation of programmes for stress management; improved information management to facilitate staff security operations; coordination of security policies with peacekeeping missions; improved coordination of staff security policies with NGOs; and operational aspects of staff security policies on common security logistics. ACC also endorsed the conclusions of the meeting of legal advisers of the organizations of the UN system (Washington, D.C., 21-22 January), which focused on legal aspects of staff safety, including the strengthening of privileges and immunities, with a view to identifying possible options for enhancing the legal protection available to staff on mission.

At its second regular session (New York, 30-31 October) [ACC/1998/20], ACC requested CCAQ to give renewed attention to the financial and budgetary aspects of UN system staff security and safety decisions. It agreed to issue a joint statement on security, which would include a strong appeal to Member States to sign the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 49/59 [YUN 1994, p. 1289]. ACC requested the meeting of the legal advisers of the organizations to continue to address the link between physical safety of staff and the legal protections afforded by privileges and immunities. It agreed to enhance the exchange of information between organizations on such issues as instances in which legal protections had not been respected by member countries, developments in the negotiations of bilateral agreements and the implementation and application of organizational policies for dealing with cases of arrest and detention of staff.

UN premises and property

Addis Ababa conference facilities

In September [A/53/347], the Secretary-General reported that the inauguration ceremony of the completed conference facilities in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, was held on 30 April. Work related to the completion of the telecommunications system was the final outstanding activity. Forty-nine conferences were held there in the last two months of 1997 and 72 in the first six months of 1998.

Numerous delays were experienced when the host Government telecommunications authorities declined to give permission to clear shipped items from customs. As a result, the contractor could not correct all identified deficiencies. It was anticipated that the system would be finalized in the 1998-1999 biennium, but closure of the accounts would be contingent upon the outcome of the potential claim from the contractor for the telecommunications system. No additional resources were requested beyond the $ 115,228,494 already approved by the General Assembly.

In its sixth report on the construction project [A/53/7/Add.5], ACABQ in November expressed serious concern regarding the effect that any non-compliance with the provisions of the agreement between the host Government and the United Nations might have on the total cost of the telecommunications system. The Committee recommended that the Secretary-General take urgent measures to find a solution to the dispute and report on the results of the negotiations to the Assembly before the end of 1998.

On 18 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 53/214, section VI, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the construction of conference facilities in Addis Ababa and of a 1997 report on the construction of conference facilities in Addis Ababa and in Bangkok, Thailand [YUN 1997, p. 1512], and endorsed the recommendations of ACABQ.

Office accommodation at Palais Wilson

The General Assembly, at its resumed fifty-second session, considered the 1997 reports of the Secretary-General and ACABQ on Switzerland's offer to provide office accommodation at the Palais Wilson in Geneva [YUN 1997, p. 1512]. In a March report to the Fifth Committee [A/C.5/52/19/Add.1 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General provided further information and clarification.

The offer involved rent-free accommodation for the initial period 1998-2000, with an indication that the Government of Switzerland would recommend to its Parliament the continuation of the arrangement after 2000. The contribution of the Swiss authorities would also include a one-time contribution of $54 million for renovation and maintenance of the premises. The balance of the costs, amounting to $1,959,000 not covered by the Swiss contribution, would be covered by the existing or projected resources of the Organization; therefore, no additional resources would be required for the 1998-1999 biennium. Furthermore, two additional conference rooms were needed, the larger of which would require structural changes and construction. The Secretary-General was of the view that the Organization would not be able to locate comparable space within proximity of the Palais des Nations at the cost estimated for the move to the Palais Wilson. He suggested that the Assembly approve the offer of the Swiss authorities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In March, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/52/744/Add.2], adopted decision 52/465 without vote [agenda item 116].

Office accommodation at the Palais Wilson

At its 82nd plenary meeting, on 31 March 1998, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee:

(a) Took note of the report of the Secretary-General on office accommodation at the Palais Wilson, the comments and observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the oral statement made by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on 16 March 1998;

(b) Approved the proposal of the Secretary-General to accept the offer of the Swiss authorities to place the office accommodation at the Palais Wilson in Geneva at the disposal of the United Nations;

(c) Noted that the cost estimate of the move to the Palais Wilson would amount to 5,805,000 United States dollars, of which the contribution from the Government of Switzerland would amount to 3,846,000 dollars and the balance of 1,959,000 dollars would be covered from existing resources available under section 27F (Administration, Geneva) of the programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999 for the provision of accommodation at Geneva;

(d) Expressed appreciation to the Government of Switzerland for its offer to grant rent-free accommodation at the Palais Wilson to the year 2000;

(e) Requested the Swiss authorities to ensure the extension of the rent-free agreement beyond the year 2000, and invited the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to secure the assurance of the Swiss authorities in that regard;

(f) Decided that a cost-benefit analysis on the use of the existing conference facilities at the Palais des Nations in Geneva should be carried out and that a report containing its findings should be submitted to the General Assembly at the second part of its resumed fifty-second session;

(g) Also decided to consider the proposal to build two additional conference rooms at the Palais Wilson in the light of the above-mentioned report;

(h) Further decided to consider the issue of office accommodation at its fifty-fourth session in the light of the decision to be taken in respect of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction.

The Secretary-General, in an August report [A/53/302], provided information and clarification on the cost-benefit of the use of existing conference facilities available in the Palais des Nations, as requested in decision 52/465. On the basis of the calendar of conferences for 1997 and 1998 and the number and type of meetings scheduled for 1999, the Secretary-General explained the need for the three conference rooms at the Palais Wilson. If those meetings were held at the Palais des Nations, the work of the staff would be greatly impeded and would therefore be inefficient and a waste of resources, as well as detrimental to the servicing of the meetings.

As for the impact on occupancy of conference rooms at the Palais des Nations, the total number of meetings had increased 35 per cent from 1988 to 1997. With the use of additional conference rooms at the Palais Wilson, much-needed conference room space would be released, allowing flexibility in the consideration for meeting rooms, which previously could not be met. There also would be savings on travel costs of delegates, since meetings at the Palais des Nations would not have to be resumed at a later time when conference rooms became available. The Secretary-General said that he would proceed with the construction of the third conference room, utilizing funds provided by the Government of Switzerland.

The General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report in resolution 53/214, section II.

International years

At its organizational session for 1998, the Economic and Social Council considered a proposal to have all proclamations of international years submitted directly to the General Assembly, unless it decided to bring them to the attention of the Council for evaluation. The Council had postponed consideration of the matter by decision 1997/320 [YUN 1997, p. 1513].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 6 February [meeting 3], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/1 [draft: E/1998/L.5] without vote [agenda item 4].

Proclamation of international years

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Council resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996, in which, inter alia, the Assembly stressed, in annex I, paragraphs 66 and 67, that the primary function of the general segment should be an action-oriented review of the activities, reports and recommendations of the Council's subsidiary bodies and that the Council should regularly review the agenda of its general segment with a view to discontinuing consideration of items not relevant to the work of its subsidiary machinery or duplicative of items on the agenda of the General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance of the guidelines for international years and anniversaries, contained in the annex to its resolution 1980/67 and adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 35/424, for the consideration of proposals for the proclamation of international years,

Recognizing the need to provide for effective arrangements for the proclamation of international years,

Recommends that the General Assembly decide that, starting from the year 1999, proposals for the proclamation of international years should be submitted directly to the Assembly for consideration and action, unless the Assembly decides to bring them to the attention of the Council for evaluation in accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned guidelines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/605], adopted resolution 53/199 without vote [agenda item 12].

Proclamation of international years

The General Assembly,

Recalling its decision 35/424 of 5 December 1980 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 and 1998/1 of 6 February 1998,

Recalling also its resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996,

Reaffirming the importance of the guidelines for international years and anniversaries, adopted by the General Assembly in its decision 35/424, for the consideration of proposals for the proclamation of international years,

Recognizing the need to provide for effective arrangements for the proclamation of international years,

Decides that, starting from 1999, proposals for the proclamation of international years should be submitted directly to the Assembly for consideration and action, unless the Assembly decides to bring them to the attention of the Economic and Social Council for evaluation, in accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned guidelines.

PART SIX

Intergovernmental organizations related to the United Nations

Chapter I

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

In 1998, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) began to re-examine and redirect its functioning against a background of the recognition of the international dimension of nuclear safety, the need for sustainable development, the requirement for electricity generation without environmental pollutants and the importance of a strengthened non-proliferation regime.

The forty-second session of the IAEA General Conference (Vienna, 21-25 September) adopted resolutions on measures to strengthen IAEA's safeguards and technical cooperation systems; nuclear radiation protection and waste management; safeguards inspections in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Iraq; and production of potable water. Other resolutions dealt with measures against illicit nuclear trafficking, nuclear testing and the application of IAEA safeguards in the Middle East. The Conference also approved the 1999 regular budget appropriations.

During the year, IAEA membership increased to 128 with the admission of Burkina Faso.

Nuclear safety

IAEA continued to foster a global nuclear safety culture by supporting intergovernmental collaborative efforts. In addition to focusing on the implementation of the 1994 Convention on Nuclear Safety [YUN 1994, p. 1417], IAEA provided a forum for the exchange of information on safety issues, developed common safety standards, provided a variety of expert services and supported coordinated research in member States. By the end of the year, 49 countries had ratified the Convention, which had entered into force in 1996.

A landmark was reached in 1998 with the organization of the hundredth mission under the Agency's Operational Safety Review Team programme, which undertook 12 missions during the year to assess nuclear power plants in China, France (4), Kazakhstan, Mexico, Pakistan, Slovakia, Spain and Switzerland (2). Assessment of Safety Significant Events Teams carried out 10 missions to nuclear installations in Egypt, Finland, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Lithuania, Romania, Ukraine (3) and the United Kingdom. The International Nuclear Event Scale, which communicated information on nuclear and other radiation incidents to the public, received information from 59 countries on 19 events.

Nuclear power

The IAEA nuclear power programme continued to assist member States to plan and implement nuclear power projects and to develop advanced reactor technology. The second meeting of the International Nuclear Desalination Advisory Group (June) stressed the need for international cooperation in planning and implementing nuclear desalination demonstration programmes and recommended that the Agency provide an international forum for the coordination and sharing of resources.

Assistance was provided to Belarus, Bulgaria, Croatia, Lithuania, the Republic of Moldova and Viet Nam to assess the role of nuclear power in the future expansion of electricity supply systems. In addition, Bangladesh, Egypt and Morocco received technical assistance in planning and implementing their nuclear power programmes.

Nuclear fuel cycle

The Agency's 1998 programme on the nuclear fuel cycle covered four key areas: raw materials for reactor fuels, focusing on uranium supply and demand, and mining and milling; reactor fuel technology and performance, addressing issues on reactor materials and fuel technology; spent fuel management, dealing with spent fuel storage, treatment and transport; and nuclear fuel cycle issues and databases.

World uranium demand increased moderately in 1998 to some 61,000 tonnes and was met by supplies of about 38,000 tonnes from mining and milling, which was 60 per cent of the total requirement. The remaining material needed to fuel reactors came primarily from stockpiles, from the use of mixed oxide (MOX) fuel, and from reprocessed uranium and the dilution of high enriched uranium.

The Nuclear Fuel Cycle Information System (NFCIS) database—an international directory of existing and planned civilian nuclear fuel cycle facilities containing information on 511 facilities in 51 countries—was upgraded to a modern database management system.

Radioactive waste management

The Agency's programme on waste safety continued to focus on the establishment of internationally agreed safety standards with the active involvement of member States and under the supervision of an international advisory committee. An international conference on topical issues in nuclear, radiation and radioactive waste safety (Vienna, 31 August-4 September) provided guidance for the future direction of work on radioactive waste disposal safety and residual waste safety.

In the Radioactive Waste Safety Standards programme, the Advisory Commission for Safety Standards endorsed several documents on the near surface disposal of radioactive wastes; assessment of near surface disposal facilities; and decommissioning of different types of facilities.

For the first time in the East Asia and Pacific region, a demonstration of pre-disposal waste management methods and procedures was held in Manila, Philippines, for trainees from Bangladesh, Malaysia, Myanmar and Sri Lanka. A second such demonstration was organized in Santiago, Chile, for participants from Ecuador, Nicaragua and Peru, and a third was held in Istanbul, Turkey, for trainees from Ghana, Saudi Arabia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Tunisia.

Environment

Activities in the marine environment field, including industrial applications, measurement and assessment of radionuclides in the marine environment, development and management of water resources, transfer of radionuclides in the marine environment, and monitoring and study of marine pollution, marked the United Nations International Year of the Ocean. In addition, an international symposium on marine pollution was organized and the new premises of the Marine Environment Laboratory were opened in Monaco. Collaboration with the European Union in Mediterranean studies provided valuable new information on the processes of material transport.

During the year, efforts were made to integrate the Agency's work in water resources management with the work of other United Nations agencies. For example, IAEA and the World Meteorological Organization signed a Memorandum of Understanding to strengthen the Global Network for Isotopes in Precipitation, which would permit wider use of isotope data in hydrology and climatology. In collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, the Agency provided assistance to Black Sea member States to establish a regional pollution-monitoring network and to obtain high-quality analytical data for trace contaminants.

The Marine Radioactivity Studies in the World Oceans project sampled sea water, biota and sediment from three oceans to better understand the distribution of radionuclides and their sources, such as global fallout, former nuclear-weapon tests and former radioactive waste dumping sites. The data obtained were to be included in the Global Marine Radioactivity Database.

Food and agriculture

The food and agriculture programme made significant progress in introducing technologies to intensify crop and livestock production; protect natural resources; and improve the quality and safety of food. Examples included: increased crop yields with less water and fertilizer; better crop varieties and improved strategies for cost-effective conversion of feeds into meat and milk by livestock; better methods for diagnosing important livestock diseases; and major progress in the management of insect pests through the sterile insect technique.

The increasing acceptance of food irradiation and greater support given to the issue of food quality and safety through the newly established Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)/IAEA Training and Reference Centre (Seibersdorf, Austria) contributed to enhanced trade and better food control systems.

The FAO/IAEA database for officially released mutant varieties registered 21 new accessions in 1998, bringing the total to 1,868 mutant varieties of more than 163 species released in 59 countries.

A regional technical cooperation project for Western Asia on water balance and fertigation (fertilizer nitrogen applied in combination with irrigation water) for crop improvement was completed. The application of nuclear-based techniques demonstrated that fertigation was a highly effective method for conserving water and increasing the efficiency of nitrogen fertilizer use.

A five-year study on the development and validation of a diagnostic assay to separate animals vaccinated with brucellosis from those naturally infected was completed in five Latin American countries. Brucellosis was considered one of the most important diseases affecting animals and, through the consumption of milk and dairy products, people.

Physical and chemical sciences

IAEA's physical and chemical sciences programme focused on promoting application-oriented research, development and implementation of techniques and technologies based on nuclear physical and chemical sciences for solving practical problems in the areas of medicine, environment, energy and mineral resources prospecting; assisting in the better utilization of research reactors and accelerators; and providing technical help to national analytical laboratories to improve the quality of their analytical measurements.

Version 2 of the Fusion Evaluated Nuclear Data Library was completed and made available to users in member States on the Internet and on CD-ROM. The development of a full World Wide Web user interface to the Agency's comprehensive nuclear and atomic databases was completed, resulting in a sharp increase in user retrievals.

Human health

The IAEA programme on human health accorded greater priority to cancer treatment using radiotherapy. During 1998, 18 national and regional training courses were held for radiation oncologists, technologists operating machines and nurses caring for brachytherapy patients. Regional projects, particularly in Africa, resulted in significant upgrading of equipment used in cancer control and an enhancement of the skills of medical personnel. Centres offering teletherapy and brachytherapy cancer services were established in Ethiopia, Ghana and Namibia.

In nuclear medicine, IAEA expanded its activities dealing with infectious diseases and its efforts to encourage the use of radioisotopes in molecular biology. In the field of dosimetry and medical radiation physics, it implemented a new project to disseminate traceable radiation measurement standards at the levels of dose delivered in diagnostic radiology procedures, including mammography.

Activities in nutrition and the environment focused on: applied human nutrition research and assessment of nutritional status; environmental pollution monitoring and research; radionuclide measurements in the terrestrial environment, water and air; and biomonitoring of the environment using nuclear analytical techniques to measure the accumulation of elements in lichens and mosses.

Technical cooperation

The year 1998 was the first in which the Agency planned and delivered its technical cooperation (TC) programme in the light of a newly approved Strategy for Technical Cooperation. Major changes were the reduction in the number of subprogrammes from three to two and the re-deployment of staff into a structure that reflected the key principles of the strategy. A new-style TC programme for the 1999-2000 biennium was finalized and approved. More than $133 million of core programming plus $51 million of TC strategy projects were designed, discussed with the counterparts and approved, including 59 new model projects.

Disbursements, which represented the actual delivery to member States, rose a significant 6.4 per cent to a record $64.5 million.

Agency safeguards responsibilities

IAEA continued to develop and implement measures to strengthen its nuclear safeguards system. It introduced environmental sampling as a routine safeguards measure and was setting up remote monitoring as a safeguards tool. During the year, the number of signatories to the Protocol Additional to Safeguards Agreements, approved in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1519], increased from 6 to 35. During 1998, five Protocols entered into force with Australia, the Holy See, Jordan, New Zealand and Uzbekistan.

As at 31 December, 222 safeguards agreements were in force with 138 States (and with Taiwan Province of China). At the end of 1998, safeguards agreements that satisfied the requirements of the 1968 Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT), adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2373(XXII) [YUN 1968, p. 17], were in force in 126 States. NPT safeguards agreements entered into force with Namibia, San Marino and Ukraine during the year and the IAEA Board of Governors approved draft NPT safeguards agreements with Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Slovakia.

NPT safeguards agreements were in force with seven of the nine States party to the 1995 Treaty on the South-East Asia Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone (Treaty of Bangkok) [YUN 1995, p. 207] and with all 11 signatories of the 1985 South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty (Rarotonga Treaty) [YUN 1985, p. 58]. Thirty-one of the 32 States party to the 1967 Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco) [YUN 1967, p. 13] had safeguards agreements in force that satisfied that Treaty's requirements. Safeguards agreements pursuant to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty of Tlatelolco were in force with two of the four States outside Latin America that had jurisdiction over territories in the Treaty's zone of application. The Board of Governors approved a safeguards agreement with France pursuant to Additional Protocol I of the Treaty.

During the year, 2,507 safeguards inspections were performed in 68 States in nuclear power reactors, nuclear research reactors and critical assemblies, conversion plants, fuel fabrication plants, nuclear reprocessing plants, uranium enrichment plants and separate storage and other facilities.

The Agency faced particular challenges with regard to its mandates in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Iraq in 1998 (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Nuclear information

Senegal, the United Arab Emirates, the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization and the World Council of Nuclear Workers joined the International Nuclear Information System (INIS) in 1998, bringing the number of participating members to 103 countries and 19 international organizations. The INIS database contained over 2 million records of conventional and non-conventional literature at the end of 1998. Beginning in October, the database was made accessible for the first time from a new Internet-based on-line retrieval system, which had nearly 600 users by the end of the year.

The journal Nuclear Fusion was made available in both printed and Internet versions. A study on electronic publishing throughout the Agency was initiated. During the year, IAEA published 155 books, reports, journal issues and booklets in English. Several publications were produced in other languages.

Secretariat

At the end of 1998, the IAEA secretariat had 2,133 staff members, including 847 in the Professional and higher categories and 1,286 in the General Service category. Ninety-five nationalities were represented in posts subject to geographical distribution.

Budget

The regular budget for 1998 amounted to $226 million, of which $216 million was to be financed from contributions by member States on the basis of the 1998 scale of assessment, $5 million from income from reimbursable work for others and $4.7 million from other miscellaneous income. Actual expenditures from the regular budget in 1998 amounted to $225.4 million, of which $219.8 million was related to the Agency's programmes. The unused budget from the Agency's programmes amounted to $1.2 million. A total of $28.2 million in extrabudgetary funds was provided by member States, the United Nations, international organizations and other sources.

The target for voluntary contributions to the Technical Cooperation Fund for 1998 was established at $71.5 million, of which $53.4 million was pledged by member States.

Chapter II

International Labour Organization (ILO)

In 1998, the International Labour Organization (ILO) continued to promote social justice and economic stability and to improve labour conditions. Its three primary objectives were: supporting democracy and fundamental workers' rights, including the wider observance of international labour standards; promoting employment and combating poverty; and protecting workers.

In 1998, ILO membership remained at 174.

Meetings

The eighty-sixth session of the International Labour Conference (ILC) (Geneva, 2-18 June) adopted the Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, which committed ILO members to respect the principles inherent in the seven core labour standards, whether or not they had ratified the relevant Conventions, and promote their universal application. The Conference also adopted a Recommendation (No. 189) on the general conditions necessary to stimulate job creation in small and medium-sized enterprises and proposed that ILO adopt new standards on the worst forms of child labour, with those standards taking the form of a Convention supplemented by a Recommendation. Resolutions were adopted on youth employment and on the possible adoption of international instruments to protect workers in situations of contract labour.

Sectoral and other meetings convened in Geneva during 1998 included: the Tripartite Meeting on Employment and Industrial Relations Issues in Oil Refining (23-27 February); the Tripartite Meeting on the Human Resources Dimension of Structural and Regulatory Changes and Globalization in Postal and Telecommunications Services (20-24 April); the Tripartite Meeting on Technology and Employment in the Food and Drink Industries (18-22 May); the Joint Meeting on Terms of Employment and Working Conditions in Health Sector Reforms (21-25 September); the Tripartite Meeting on the Impact of Flexible Labour Market Arrangements in the Machinery, Electrical and Electronic Industries (26-30 October); and the Joint Meeting on Human Resource Development in the Public Service in the Context of Structural Adjustment and Transition (14-18 December). The High-Level Tripartite Meeting on Social Responses to the Financial Crisis in East and South-East Asian Countries was held in Bangkok, Thailand, from 22 to 24 April.

International standards

During 1998, ILO activities with regard to Conventions and Recommendations included standard-setting and the supervision and promotion of the application of standards. Supervisory bodies reviewed existing procedures and standard-setting policy.

Standard-setting

In June, ILC adopted the Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work and Recommendation 189 (see above).

During 1998, 29 ratifications of the seven fundamental ILO Conventions were registered: 5 for the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29); 1 for the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87); 3 for the Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98); 2 for the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100); 5 for the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105); 3 for the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. III); and 10 for the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Supervision of standards

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, at its sixty-ninth session (Geneva, 26 November-11 December), considered 246 observations received from employers' and workers' organizations, of which 217 related to the application of ratified Conventions. The Committee noted 39 instances in which Governments changed their law or practice to conform with ratified Conventions, following the Committee's earlier comments.

The Committee conducted a general survey of reports on the application by member States of selected international labour standards submitted by States that had not ratified the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), the Migration for Employment Recommendation (Revised), 1949 (No. 86) and the Migrant Workers Recommendation, 1975 (No. 151).

The Governing Body Committee on Freedom of Association met to examine complaints of violations of freedom of association received from employers' and workers' organizations.

Employment and development

In 1998, ILO published the World Employment Report 1998-99, which reviewed the global employment situation and examined how countries at different stages of development could devise the best training systems and strategies to increase national competitiveness, improve the efficiency of enterprises and promote employment growth. It examined ways to improve women's employment opportunities and enhance the skills of informal and other vulnerable groups of workers, such as at-risk youth, long-term unemployed, older displaced workers and workers with disabilities.

The Jobs for Africa programme, which, with United Nations Development Programme financing, covered 10 countries, became operational in July. It aimed to stimulate employment-intensive growth in agriculture, small and medium-sized enterprises and the informal sector. The programme included a component on employment for peace, designed to help countries emerging from conflict to reintegrate affected groups and rebuild communities.

Field activities

In 1998, expenditure on operational activities from all sources of funding totalled $93.7 million compared with $108.4 million in 1997. The four leading programmes in terms of annual expenditure were: enterprise and cooperative development ($21 million); development policies ($18.7 million); employment and training ($14.5 million); and working conditions and environment ($13.2 million). In terms of regional distribution, Africa accounted for 38 per cent of total expenditure ($35 million), Asia and the Pacific for 21 per cent ($19 million) and Latin America and the Caribbean for 14 per cent ($13 million). Expenditure in Europe decreased from nearly $7 million in 1997 to $5 million in 1998, and the Arab States programme decreased from $4 million to $2.3 million. Interregional and global activities accounted for $18.7 million.

Educational activities

In 1998, the Turin Centre began to implement a new development strategy and a series of measures approved by its Board, aimed at strengthening technical capacity, diversifying and upgrading training delivery and improving training quality. New courses were organized in the area of the extension of social protection to the informal sector, as well as in mutual benefit schemes.

The United Nations Staff College Project trained middle- and senior-level UN staff, especially resident coordinators and country-team members. In keeping with the UN Secretary-General's emphasis on preventive measures, a training project was established in September to develop the UN capacity in early warning and preventive measures in crisis-affected countries.

The International Institute for Labour Studies addressed the relationship between labour institutions, economic growth and social equity. It launched two major research programmes to examine the problems faced by business and trade unions in a changing environment.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, full-time staff at ILO headquarters and elsewhere totalled 2,258. Of those, 941 were in the Professional and higher categories and 1,317 were in the General Service category.

Budget

In June 1997, the International Labour Conference adopted a budget of $481 million for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Chapter III

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the lead agency in the UN system for agriculture, forestry, fisheries and rural development, continued efforts to achieve global food security in a sustainable manner by raising levels of nutrition and standards of living, improving agricultural productivity and advancing the condition of rural populations. As part of its work to improve food security, FAO executed projects that helped rural women gain access to land, credit and training. It also provided early warning of potential food shortages, and brought food insecurity and nutrition issues to world attention.

During the year, FAO's membership remained at 175 countries plus the European Community.

The FAO Conference, the agency's governing body, held its most recent biennial session in 1997. The 49-member Council of FAO, elected by the Conference, acted as interim governing body.

At its one hundred and fifteenth session (Rome, Italy, 23-28 November), the Council reviewed the state of food and agriculture in 1998; took action on follow-up activities to the 1996 World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129]; considered the negotiations to revise the International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources in harmony with the Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683]; reinforced FAO's response to natural disasters; discussed the FAO Strategic Framework for 2000-2015; and called on the international community to support it regarding the International Year of Mountains (2002).

In response to the World Food Summit Plan of Action, FAO held its second TeleFood campaign in 1998. TeleFood's goal was to involve the general public, media, celebrities and the private sector in defeating hunger by raising awareness of the plight of the world's chronically hungry and malnourished populations. The 1998 theme, "Women Feed the World", focused on increasing public awareness of the role of women in the fight against hunger and encouraged contributions to support women's projects. Donations financed 225 grassroots microprojects worth nearly $ 1.8 million in 81 countries. The projects provided seeds, tools and other essential supplies directly to small farmers, especially women.

World food situation

In 1998, world cereal stocks improved by more than 1 per cent, to 16.9 per cent, and were closer to the 17 to 18 per cent that FAO considered the minimum necessary to safeguard global food security. Despite the registered growth in cereal supplies, 38 countries faced shortfalls in food supplies that required exceptional or emergency assistance. Farmers in many countries suffered national disasters, falling commodity prices and crises in the world's financial markets. Food shortages affected a number of low-income, food-deficit countries at year's end in Asia and Latin America due to dramatic weather conditions. In addition, the economic crisis in South-East Asia harmed the food security of vulnerable groups in the region and in other developing countries.

FAO's Global Information and Early Warning System (GIEWS)—a source of data and analysis of food supply/demand—provided early warnings of imminent food crises in order to ensure timely interventions in countries affected by natural and/or man-made disasters. In 1998, GIEWS, in cooperation with the World Food Programme, assessed the critical food supply situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the Great Lakes region of Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, and former Soviet republics. It noted that the outlook for cereal supplies in 1998/99 deteriorated slightly, due to lower than expected output in the Commonwealth of Independent States and Asia.

In fisheries, the El Niño weather phenomenon caused a severe decline in fish stocks and production of the anchoveta and other coastal resources off the western coast of South America. That led to heavy losses in the fisheries sectors, as well as a worldwide shortage of fishmeal and fish oil.

Activities

Emergency assistance

In 1998, the FAO Special Relief Operations Service operated 77 projects in 41 countries amounting to $96,162,440, of which $81,316,394 came from trust funds, $11,849,500 from FAO's Technical Cooperation Programme and $2,996,546 from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Of the total, 70 per cent went to the Near East, 17 per cent to Africa, 8 per cent to Asia, 3.4 per cent to Latin America and the Caribbean and 1.6 per cent to Europe.

Field programmes

FAO continued to provide technical advice and support through its field programmes in all areas of food and agriculture, fisheries, forestry and rural development. Expenditure for the year totalled $277.5 million, compared with $260.2 million in 1997. Funding was provided by UNDP ($32.7 million), trust funds from donor countries and international financing institutions ($208 million), the Technical Cooperation Programme under FAO's regular budget ($33.9 million) and FAO's Special Programme for Food Security (SPFS) ($2.7 million). In addition, FAO's Investment Centre helped developing countries formulate 45 agricultural and rural development projects within the scope of SPFS, which attracted $3 billion in investment, including contributions from international financing institutions and recipient Governments. The main objective of SPFS was to increase rapidly the production and yield of grains such as maize and rice, improve access to water control techniques and encourage rural economic diversification through small stock improvement (chickens and goats), cash crops and vegetables in order to tackle hunger at the grass-roots level.

Crops and livestock

As part of its efforts to ensure that agricultural production kept up with expanding human needs, FAO participated in activities related to the conservation and use of plant biological diversity; crop management and diversification; seed production and improvement; crop protection; agricultural engineering and prevention of food losses; and food and agricultural industries.

FAO, in collaboration with non-governmental organizations, promoted Integrated Pest Management, which emphasized biological control methods and training of farmers to diagnose pest damage.

FAO's Emergency Prevention System for Transboundary Animal and Plant Pests and Diseases (EMPRES) continued to work on policies to protect crops and livestock, concentrating on desert locust and rinderpest. Locust outbreaks were successfully controlled in Eritrea, Saudi Arabia and the Sudan, aided by the improved exchange of information among locust-affected countries. EMPRES focused on eradicating rinderpest by managing the transition from vaccination of cattle against the disease towards monitoring what were hoped to be the last cases.

Fisheries

In 1998, representatives from 81 FAO members approved the drafts of three non-binding documents: the International Guidelines/Plan of Action for the Management of Fishing Capacity, the International Plan of Action for the Conservation and Management of Sharks and the International Plan of Action for Reducing Incidental Catch of Seabirds in Longline Fisheries.

FAO assistance to developing countries intensified because of the increasing importance of international trade in fishery products and the strict new sanitary rules imposed by major importing countries. FAO trained government and industry personnel in inspection and quality assurance of fish and fishery products.

Nutrition

In its efforts to promote better nutrition, FAO provided members with advice, information and technical assistance to formulate and implement national food policies and nutrition programmes; provision of technical and legislative advice on measures to ensure the quality and safety of food; and assessment and monitoring of nutrition situations, including monitoring the effects of food and agricultural policies and development activities on nutrition. FAO promoted community-level action programmes to analyse and deal with the causes of malnutrition.

Trade

FAO continued to implement the Plan of Action of the 1996 World Food Summit, in which the organization committed itself to assist developing countries on trade issues, particularly in preparing for multilateral trade negotiations in agriculture, fisheries and forestry, through studies, analyses and training.

Natural resources

FAO continued activities aimed at achieving more productive and efficient utilization of the earth's natural resources to meet current and future food and agricultural needs in a sustainable manner, emphasizing natural resources assessment and planning; farming systems development; plant nutrition development and management; water development, management and conservation; soil management, conservation and reclamation; and sustaining natural resource potential. The organization also promoted Integrated Plant Nutrition Systems, which used all available plant nutrients—recycled organic materials, biological nitrogen fixation and mineral fertilizers—to achieve sustainable crop production and protect the environment.

Plant and animal genetic resources

FAO provided technical assistance relating to plant breeding, including forestries, seed and propagating material production, the safe movement of germoplasm, and associated legislation, regulations and systems. In the area of legal advice and legislative drafting, FAO collaborated with national authorities to review and analyse current statutory instruments governing intellectual property protection and seed production, the development of draft acts and regulations and amendments to existing legislation, including laws governing food control and trade in agricultural, forest and fishery products.

In 1998, FAO created a committee and a sub-committee on bioethics to analyse the implications of human interference in the genetic make-up of the plant and animal world and its impact on people.

Information

FAO continued to function as an information centre, collecting, analysing, interpreting and disseminating information through various media. Materials produced included information booklets, technical documents, reference papers, training manuals and audio-visuals.

Major regular periodicals included the annual The State of Food and Agriculture, the FAO Quarterly Bulletin of Statistics, the annual Food and Agriculture Legislation, the forestry quarterly Unasylva, the quarterlies World Animal Review and Plant Protection Bulletin, and the annual Rural Development. FAO yearbooks were issued on rural development, trade, fertilizers, forest products, field projects, fishery statistics and animal health.

FAO compiled and coordinated an extensive range of international databases on agriculture, fisheries, forestry, food and statistics. The two most important were AGRIS (the International Information System for the Agricultural Sciences and Technology) and CARIS (the Current Agricultural Research Information System).

To meet the increasing demand for agricultural data, FAO operated the World Agricultural Information Centre, which was designed to improve access to the databases, particularly to external users, via the Internet, floppy disks and CD-ROMs.

Statistical information produced by FAO's technical divisions included the Fisheries Statistical Database (FISHDAB), the Globefish Databank and Electronic Library, the Forest Resources Information System (FORIS) and the Geographic Information System (GIS).

AGROSTAT PC, a user-friendly electronic version of FAO's statistical yearbooks, provided updated figures on all agriculture-related topics in six files: population, land use, production, trade, food balance sheets and forest products.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, the number of staff employed at FAO headquarters was 2,297, of whom 944 were in the Professional or higher categories and 1,353 were in the General Service category. Field project personnel and those in regional and country offices numbered 1,992.

Budget

The regular programme budget for the 1998-1999 biennium was $650 million, the same as for 1996-1997.

Chapter IV

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued in 1998 to contribute to lasting peace by promoting cooperation among nations through education, science, culture and communication.

The General Conference, which met biennially to decide on policy, programmes and budgetary matters, was scheduled to hold its thirtieth session in 1999. The 58-member Executive Board held its one hundred and fifty-fourth (27 April-7 May) and one hundred and fifty-fifth (19 October-6 November) sessions, both at UNESCO headquarters in Paris.

The membership of UNESCO remained at 186.

Education

UNESCO's education activities, which aimed at promoting education for all by supporting member States, endeavoured to rethink the nature and purposes of education and undertook reforms of educational aims, content, structures and methods. Emphasis was placed on developing flexible and diversified forms of education to reach those who had no access to, or were under-served by, educational opportunities. UNESCO organized national, regional and international projects and meetings to improve primary education. It facilitated dialogue on policy issues through the Conference on Education for the Twenty-first Century (Melbourne, Australia, 30 March-3 April), the Summit of the Americas (Santiago, Chile, 17-18 April), and the seventh Conference of Ministers of Education of African Member States (Durban, South Africa, 20-24 April).

Through its Learning Without Frontiers initiative, UNESCO continued efforts to broaden the scope of learning by including not only the school, but also the family, the workplace, the community and the marketplace and involved infrastructures such as libraries, broadcast media, the Internet and community-based learning resource centres.

In the area of preventive education against AIDS and drug abuse, activities focused on mobilizing education decision makers to formulate national action plans for integrating prevention in school curricula, teacher training and curriculum renewal through the preparation of information materials in support of national initiatives. UNESCO continued to be a key participant in the activities of the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS). It coordinated the International Youth Campaign on Drug Abuse Prevention for a Twenty-first Century Free of Drugs and helped in preparing the Youth Charter, presented to the twentieth special session of the General Assembly on drug control and prevention (New York, 8-10 June) (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV) and circulated among schools worldwide.

UNESCO convened the first World Conference on Higher Education (Paris, 5-9 October), which adopted the World Declaration on Higher Education for the Twenty-first Century and the Framework for Priority Action for Change and Development to set the agenda for higher education policy-making in member States and for development strategies.

As a contribution to the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter I), UNESCO published and widely disseminated AU Human Beings, a manual for human rights education for primary and secondary schools, as well as a kit on civics education.

In 1998, the Associated Schools Project network, which promoted thinking and behaviour based on common humanistic and cultural values, increased to 5,600 schools in 161 countries.

UNESCO provided support to rehabilitate education systems, communications and cultural heritage in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Haiti, the Horn of Africa region, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, where there had been conflict, as well as natural disasters. In partnership with the World Bank, the European Union, the United Nations Development Programme and other donors, the Bethlehem 2000 project and activities aimed at reinforcing the Palestinian educational system were carried out.

Sciences

Under the sciences in the service of development programme, UNESCO continued to promote the advancement, sharing and transfer of knowledge. It emphasized the fostering of synergies between the exact and natural sciences and the social and human sciences.

Natural sciences

Activities in natural sciences focused on the advancement, sharing and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge in higher education, as well as on advanced training and research. UNESCO continued to enhance human resources development and capacity-building through fellowships, grants, workshops, seminars and the production of training tools, and developed a programme on university science education.

UNESCO, through the International Centre for Theoretical Physics, which it operated together with the International Atomic Energy Agency and with the support of the Government of Italy, provided research opportunities and advanced training in physics and applied mathematics to some 1,500 scientists from developing countries.

The international programme Chemistry for Life was carried out in partnership with the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, the International Organization for Chemical Sciences in Development, the International Centre for Chemical Studies and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

The global network of Microbial Resources Centres and the Biotechnology Educational and Training Centres and the UNESCO Molecular and Cell Biology Network continued to expand through high-level conferences, UNESCO Chairs in life sciences, fellowships, training centres and courses and projects. In the area of bioinformatics, an electronic network in protein engineering and gene sequencing was established between China, India, Israel, Poland and Turkey.

The International Council for Science and UNESCO focused on preparations for the World Conference on Science, to be held in 1999.

Programmes on environmental sciences continued to contribute to the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], related global and regional plans of action, the environment conventions and the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (1990-1999) (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Through cooperation with other UN organizations, UNESCO pursued its work as task manager for the follow-up of Agenda 21 on science for sustainable development and education and public awareness. Other activities related to earth sciences, terrestrial ecosystems, sustainable forest management, biological diversity, oceans, coastal areas and small islands.

The International Geological Correlation Programme continued to foster international collaboration in the earth sciences through 42 research projects worldwide. UNESCO organized 35 workshops and courses at postgraduate level in geology, geophysics, geochemistry and geodynamics. The Man and the Biosphere Programme continued to emphasize the reinforcement of the World Network of Biosphere Reserves, totalling 357 sites in 90 countries, as a means for reconciling conservation of biological diversity with regional development. Under the International Hydrological Programme, UNESCO, together with inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, sponsored the Conference on World Water Resources at the Beginning of the Twenty-first Century; Water: a Looming Crisis? (Paris, 3-6 June).

UNESCO's Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) promoted its activities throughout the 1998 International Year of the Ocean. IOC conducted research in the areas of ocean dynamics, climate, ocean science in relation to living and non-living resources and marine pollution research and monitoring.

Social and human sciences

Activities in the social and human sciences sought to improve the formulation of social development policies through the use of social science research findings, particularly of research conducted under the international programme, Management of Social Transformations, which focused on the management of multicultural and multi-ethnic societies; urban issues; and the provision of technical expertise for social assessments, poverty appraisals and policy evaluation.

In commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter I), UNESCO encouraged human rights teaching and education. It assisted member States in implementing national plans of action, awareness-raising campaigns and educational activities.

As the lead agency for the Inter-Agency Working Group on Basic Education, UNESCO continued to contribute to the UN system follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] and implemented activities under the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) (see PART THREE, Chapter I). It disseminated information on best practices in sustainable microfinance and forged partnerships with microfinance institutions.

Culture

Cultural activities focused on integrating the cultural dimension into development policies and projects, protecting cultural heritage, promoting cultural identities and intercultural dialogue and supporting contemporary creativity. Some 2,500 participants at the Conference on Cultural Policies for Development (Stockholm, Sweden, 30 March-2 April) adopted an Action Plan on Cultural Policies for Development. The first world report on culture, creativity and markets was disseminated.

The World Heritage Committee (Kyoto, Japan, 30 November-5 December) added 30 sites and one extension to the World Heritage List, bringing the number of protected cultural and natural sites to 582 in 114 countries. By year's end, 156 States had become parties to the Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage [YUN 1972, p. 759].

UNESCO contributed to the implementation of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People (1994-2004) (see PART TWO, Chapter II), by promoting cultural rights, developing intercultural education programmes and supporting regional workshops through cooperation with the Fund for the Development of Indigenous Peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean.

Regarding artistic creation, a project to promote artistic education and a web site on good practices in plastic arts education were initiated. Attention was given to the role arts could play in the socialization of marginalized youngsters in Africa.

Communications

During the year, UNESCO continued activities in favour of freedom of expression as a cornerstone of democracy and supported developing countries in building their communication and information capacities.

UNESCO provided expertise to help revise the media legislation in Indonesia and mobilized funds to assist local radio stations to promote the participation of rural populations in the democratization process. The UNESCO International Clearing House on Children and Violence on the Screen at the University of Göteborg (Sweden) produced its second yearbook on children and the media. The international network for the promotion of women media practitioners was strengthened through its project Women on the Net, aimed at helping women master the Internet. UNESCO supported an international seminar on gender and globalization (Berkeley University, California, United States, 12-16 March) and six regional seminars or workshops on themes related to women, media and citizenship (sub-Saharan Africa, Latin America and the Mediterranean region).

UNESCO's International Programme for the Development of Communication funded 52 new projects for a total of approximately $2.5 million. Some 200 UNESCO projects in communication, information and informatics were under way for a budget of $33 million. They covered such areas as community media, news agencies, audio-visual production, training, communication for peace and good governance, computer network and telematics application for education research and environment.

UNESCO published 171 titles and produced 8 CD-ROMs. The UNESCO Courier appeared in a new format and the 1998 edition of the UNESCO Statistical Yearbook was published.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, UNESCO had a full-time staff of 2,394, of whom 1,072 were in the Professional or higher categories, drawn from 154 nationalities, and 1,322 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The UNESCO General Conference, at its 1997 session, approved a budget of $544,367,250 for the 1998-1999 biennium.

Chapter V

World Health Organization (WHO)

The World Health Organization (WHO), which commemorated its fiftieth anniversary in 1998, launched a new global health policy: health for all in the twenty-first century, at the fifty-first session (Geneva, 11-16 May) of the World Health Assembly (WHA), WHO's governing body. WHO member States adopted the World Health Declaration, which stated that changes in the world health situation required giving effect to the new health policy through relevant regional and national policies and strategies. The Assembly also adopted resolutions on a range of subjects, including noncommunicable disease prevention and control; emerging and other communicable diseases; antimicrobial resistance; ethical, scientific and social implications of cloning in human health; global elimination of blinding trachoma; health promotion; tuberculosis; elimination of transmission of Chagas disease; elimination of leprosy as a public health problem; concerted public health action on antipersonnel mines; indigenous people's health; sanitation for high-risk communities; and the protection of human health from threats related to climate change and stratospheric ozone depletion. The Assembly elected a new Director-General, Dr. Gro Harlem Brundtland (Norway), whose five-year term started in July.

The one hundred and second session of the WHO Executive Board (Geneva, 18-19 May) discussed the revised drug strategy, health systems development and the criteria for classifying countries on the basis of need.

The World Health Report 1998-Life in the 21st century: A vision for all focused on health trends over the past five decades, assessed the current global situation and predicted how health conditions, diseases and the tools for managing them would evolve up to the year 2025.

During 1998, WHO membership remained at 191; there were also two associate members.

Health policy

The policy of health for all (HFA) in the twenty-first century aimed to help realize the process of health for all launched in 1978 [YUN 1978, p. 1107]. It set out, for the first two decades of the twenty-first century, global priorities and targets that would create the conditions to reach and maintain the highest attainable level of health.

The realization of the HFA goals depended on bolstering commitment to its key values by providing the highest attainable standard of health as a fundamental right; strengthening the application of ethics to health policy, research and service provision; implementing equity-oriented policies and strategies that emphasized solidarity; and incorporating a gender perspective into health policies and strategies. The 10 global targets in support of HFA reflected earlier HFA targets and were in line with those agreed at recent world conferences. They included: health equity; survival; reversal of the global trends of five major pandemics; eradication and elimination of certain diseases; improved access to water, sanitation, food and shelter; measures to promote health; development, implementation and monitoring of national HFA policies; improved access to comprehensive essential quality health care; implementation of global and national health information and surveillance systems; and support research for health. Regional and national targets would be developed within the framework of the global policy to reflect the diversity of needs and priorities.

Health of specific populations

Globally, a significant component of the burden of illness remained attributable to infectious diseases, undernutrition and complications of childbirth. Those conditions were primarily concentrated in the poorest countries, and within those countries they disproportionately afflicted populations living in poverty.

In 1998, the five major childhood conditions in developing countries that were responsible for 21 per cent of all deaths in low- and middle-income countries were diarrhoea, acute respiratory infections, malaria, measles and perinatal conditions. Less than 1 per cent of those diseases were registered in high-income countries. Immunization programmes had yielded the most significant changes in child health in the last few decades, but at least 2 million children still died annually from diseases for which vaccines were available at low cost.

In adults, maternal conditions, HIV/AIDS and tuberculosis were the three major causes of disease burden in developing regions. Together, they accounted for 7 per cent of all Disability-

Adjusted Life Years (DALYs) in 1998. Among maternal conditions, obstructed labour, sepsis and unsafe abortion were among the ten leading causes of death and disability among women between the ages of 15 to 44 in developing countries in 1998. Malaria remained a major public health problem, particularly in Africa.

Violence and self-inflicted injuries, including suicide, were major public health concerns because of their increasing significance within the global disease burden. Injuries primarily affected the younger age group and often resulted in disabling conditions from internal injuries, with males between the ages of 15 to 34 years bearing a particularly large proportion of the burden.

Disease trends and control efforts

In developing regions, noncommunicable diseases such as depression and heart disease were fast replacing the traditional enemies, in particular infectious diseases and malnutrition, as the leading causes of disability and premature death. Injuries were also growing in importance. Several measures of the health status of populations had been developed in different countries, many of them were variants of the Quality-Adjusted Life Year (QALY), principally used to measure gains from interventions. In contrast, the DALY measured the burden of disease, expressing years of life lost to premature death and years lived with a disability, adjusted for the severity of the disability. Disease burden was the gap between a population's actual health status and some reference status.

In 1998, an estimated 43 per cent of all DALYs globally were attributable to noncommunicable diseases. In low- and middle-income countries, the figure was 39 per cent; in high-income countries it was 81 per cent. Neuropsychiatric conditions accounted for 10 per cent of the burden of disease measured in DALYs in low- and middle-income countries and 23 per cent in high-income countries. Cardiovascular diseases were responsible for 10 per cent of DALYs in low- and middle-income countries and 18 per cent in high-income countries. Malignant neoplasms (cancers) caused 5 per cent of DALYs in low- and middle-income countries and 15 per cent in high-income countries. Noncommunicable diseases were expected to account for an increasing share of the disease burden, rising from 43 per cent in 1998 to 73 per cent by 2020, assuming a continuation of recent downward trends in overall mortality. The expected increase was likely to be particularly rapid in developing countries.

Injuries accounted for 16 per cent of the global burden of disease in 1998. Road traffic accidents were the ninth leading cause of disease burden globally in 1998, the fifth in high-income countries and the tenth in low- and middle-income countries. War, violence and self-inflicted injuries were all among the leading 20 causes of death in less developed countries. Domestic violence, especially against women, was not always reflected in physical injury but might be apparent in psychological sequelae. Globally, injuries were responsible for one in six years lived with disability.

Malaria, HIV/AIDS and tuberculosis were among a group of diseases for which control efforts were being jeopardized by microbial evolution. The continuous use of antimicrobial agents encouraged the multiplication and spread of resistant strains. The challenge posed by those persistent and evolving conditions was that tools to control them had either not been developed or were not used effectively or were becoming increasingly ineffective.

WHO collaborated in providing interventions against several infectious diseases. The Integrated Management of Childhood Illness was a group of preventive and curative interventions; the strategy focused on pneumonia, diarrhoea, measles, malaria and malnutrition as they accounted for 70 per cent of all childhood deaths globally, but it also addressed other serious infections such as meningitis and dengue. Preventive immunization, support for breastfeeding and nutrition counselling were also emphasized.

Two major initiatives introduced by WHO as solutions to the burden of disease, focused on malaria and tobacco. WHO's Roll Back Malaria campaign would combine leadership with knowledge, experience and resources of industry, government, science and ordinary people to achieve major reductions in malaria morbidity and mortality in the early years of the twenty-first century. The campaign would focus on Africa first. At a joint October meeting in Geneva, it was agreed that the project would be supported by united efforts of the four international agencies most concerned with malaria and its effects on health and the economy: the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and WHO.

According to WHO estimates, 3.5 million deaths a year were caused by tobacco, a figure expected to rise to about 10 million by 2030. Launched in July, WHO's Tobacco Free Initiative aimed to promote effective policies and interventions to reduce tobacco consumption and thus the burden of disease. It promoted the development of an effective international framework convention on tobacco control.

Health and development

Health gains since the historic Alma-Ata conference in 1978 [YUN 1978, p. 1107] had transformed the quality of life and created conditions favouring sustained fertility reductions and consequent demographic change. Recent Asian Development Bank studies on East Asia's changing demography pointed strongly to the effect of better health on capital formation where expectations of a longer life appeared to stimulate savings. The Pan American Health Organization/Inter-American Development Bank/UN Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean initiated a joint study to explain relations between investments in health, economic growth and household productivity. The work implied that the relationship between health improvement variables and economic growth was significant in the long term to justify sustained national commitment to investing in health.

Environmental matters

In 1998, WHA endorsed WHO's participation in the climate agenda established by the World Meteorological Organization, the United Nations Environment Programme, the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Council of Scientific Unions to deal more effectively with climate-related issues. WHO urged its members to consider threats to human health of climate change and other factors in global environmental change and to take them into account in national planning for sustainable development. It also urged them to consider new approaches for the greater use of weather and climate forecasts in disease prevention and control and to adopt other strategies to face up to the human health consequences of environmental change.

With regard to the strategy on sanitation for high-risk communities, WHO would provide leadership in sanitation as a major determinant of health. Its mandate included support to programmes that changed attitudes and established priorities for sanitation.

Secretariat

At the end of 1998, WHO had a staff of 3,647, including 1,279 posts in the Professional and higher categories and 2,368 in the General Service category.

Budget

The fiftieth (1997) WHA adopted a budget of $922,654,000 for the 1998-1999 biennium.

NOTE: For further details of WHO activities, see The World Health Report 1998 and 1999, published by the organization.

Chapter VI

World Bank (IBRD and IDA)

The World Bank consisted of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) and the International Development Association (IDA). Collectively, the following five institutions were known as the World Bank Group: IBRD, IDA, the International Finance Corporation, the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency and the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes.

In fiscal 1998 (1 July 1997-30 June 1998), IBRD, together with IDA (see below), continued to promote economic and social progress in developing nations by providing loans to countries in crisis, and improved its capacity to respond to the needs of all its borrowers as a result of major internal reform. Its one overarching goal was to help its borrowers reduce poverty. The Bank's renewed capacity to deliver high-quality service was tested in 1998 with its ability to respond to the East Asian financial crisis. The starting point of the Bank's internal renewal programme was in Africa and 1998 saw a strong turnaround in the performance of the Africa region.

Following the dramatic downturn in financial markets in East Asia, the Bank acted quickly to adjust both lending programmes and advisory services, since the crisis risked undermining economic achievements and one of the most effective antipoverty performances in history. It supported the international effort to restore confidence and sustainable growth by focusing on both the financial and human dimensions of the crisis—including unemployment, food shortages and the effects on the poorest and most vulnerable groups. The Bank pledged an unprecedented amount of some $16 billion to support reform programmes in the countries facing critical situations. Working in close coordination with the International Monetary Fund, the Bank promptly organized a series of technical assistance missions to assist the Governments of Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand to identify and address problems in the financial and corporate sectors.

While addressing new challenges to meet the Asian financial crisis, the Bank and its African clients began to reap the rewards of stronger partnerships and closer client focus. Continued growth, improved economic policies and increased political openness in many parts of the region created greater opportunities for development. Lending commitments to Africa increased by almost two thirds to $2.9 billion after fiscal 1997's downturn. Disbursements also remained high at $2.5 billion.

The Bank and its partners, the Inter-American Development Bank, the United States Agency for International Development and the United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, also supported Asian, African and Latin American countries that needed assistance as a result of severe devastation from El Niño oscillation.

The Strategic Compact, a plan of fundamental reform approved by the Executive Board in fiscal 1997, ensured the Bank's capacity to deliver high-quality services to respond to client needs.

The Development Grant Facility brought together all the Bank's grant-making activities under one umbrella. At the end of fiscal 1998, the Facility supported some 40 partnership initiatives in key sectors of the Bank's work, including the environment, education, capacity-building and health.

At the end of fiscal 1998, IBRD membership remained at 181.

Lending operations

Gross disbursements by IBRD totalled $19.2 billion, an increase of 37 per cent over fiscal 1997. Its new loan commitments totalled $21.1 billion, the largest in its history, and an increase of 30 per cent over the previous year. Some 40.1 per cent of total Bank investment lending during the year was directly targeted to the poor compared to 29 per cent the year before. There were 115 new operations in 43 countries. Those projects supported activities to increase the productivity and economic opportunities of the poor, develop their human resources and provide social safety nets.

The three largest borrowers from IBRD as at 30 June 1998 were the Republic of Korea ($5 billion), China ($2.3 billion) and Mexico ($1.8 billion). Two projects in the West Bank and Gaza, totalling $20.7 million and funded from the Trust Fund for Gaza and the West Bank, were approved. Lending for finance projects ($6.1 billion) led all sectors by volume, followed by transportation ($2.1 billion) and education ($1.9 billion).

New products developed in fiscal 1998 to improve the Bank's responsiveness to clients' needs included the Learning and Innovation Loan (LIL) and the Adaptable Programme Loan (APL). LILs were modest-sized loans, not exceeding $5 million, designed to support small, time-sensitive programmes for capacity-building and/or pilot promising initiatives, or to experiment and develop locally based models prior to larger-scale interventions. APLs funded long-term development programmes that had clear agreement on long-term objectives, but where the path to achieving them required a significant degree of learning from results. Eleven APLs and 15 LILs were approved in fiscal 1998. Two new types of guarantees were approved, one by IBRD, the enclave guarantee for IDA-only countries, and the second by IDA, guarantees for IDA-only countries. The two new types of partial-risk guarantees were both designed to draw private lenders into the poorest countries. The IBRD version provided for guarantees only for export-oriented, commercial projects expected to generate foreign exchange and where adequate arrangements existed for the borrower to meet its obligations to IBRD. With the other, IDA would offer partial-risk guarantees to private lenders against country risks that were beyond the control of investors and where the official agencies and the private market currently offered insufficient insurance coverage.

International Development Association

The International Development Association was established in 1960 to provide concessionary assistance to low-income developing countries to reduce poverty and improve the quality of life. In 1998, IDA assistance continued mainly to those with an annual per capita gross national product of $925 or less (in 1997 United States dollars) for which 70 countries were eligible. IDA credits to those countries totalled $6.5 billion.

In fiscal 1998, IDA membership increased to 160 with the admission of Palau.

The funds used by IDA, called credits to distinguish them from IBRD loans, were derived mostly from donor contributions, reflows, investment income, IBRD net transfers and other resources (RITO). Such funds were replenished by an agreement among donors every three years. Credits were made only to Governments, had a 35- to 40-year maturity with a 10-year grace period on repayment of principal and were interest-free.

Fiscal 1998 was the second year of the eleventh replenishment of IDA (IDA-11), which was designed to provide IDA with resources to fund credits committed during the period 1 July 1996-30 June 1999. The total expected commitment authority for IDA-11 was 14.1 billion special drawing rights (SDR), including the Interim Trust Fund (ITF) administered by IDA. The Fund was established by all IDA donors, except the United States, to fund operations while the United States became current on IDA-10. The commitment authority for IDA-11 comprised SDR 4.6 billion from IDA-11 donor contributions, SDR 2.1 billion from ITF donor contributions, SDR 1.3 billion from the unreleased portion of contributions carried over from the IDA-10 period and SDR 6.1 billion from RITO resources. In February, IDA-11 became effective, triggered by receipt of the United States Instrument of Commitment for IDA-11. At 30 June, IDA had received notification of participation from 35 donors. At the end of fiscal 1998, total available resources for IDA-11 were SDR 9.8 billion, including ITF.

In fiscal 1998, total IDA commitments reached $7.5 billion, nearly $3 billion higher than in fiscal 1997 and 33 per cent above the fiscal 1995-1997 average. Most of that increase took place in Africa and South Asia, mainly reflecting significant policy improvements in some African countries and greater implementation capacity in large South Asian countries with overall good policy performance. IDA assisted 67 new operations in 19 countries. Total IDA disbursements, excluding $74 million in development grants, amounted to $5.6 billion; 54 per cent of IDA investment credits were directly targeted to the poor. The three largest commitments to countries were India ($1.1 billion), Ethiopia ($669 million) and Bangladesh ($646 million).

Although IDA was legally and financially distinct from IBRD, it shared the same staff, and the projects it supported met the same criteria as projects supported by IBRD.

International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes

The International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID), established in 1966 to help promote international investment, was an autonomous international organization with close links to the World Bank. In 1998, it continued to provide facilities for the settlement, by conciliation and arbitration, of disputes between foreign investors and their host countries. Provisions referring to arbitration under the auspices of ICSID were commonly found in investment contracts, investment laws, and bilateral and multilateral investment treaties. In addition to its dispute-settlement activities, it undertook research, advisory services and publishing in the fields of arbitration and investment law.

In 1998, ICSID's membership totalled 129.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), established in 1988, continued to help promote investment for economic development in member countries, through guarantees to foreign investors against losses caused by non-commercial risks and through advisory and consultative services. MIGA had its own operating and legal staff, but drew on the Bank for administrative and other services. As at December 1998, MIGA had 146 members.

MIGA issued nearly $831 million in total coverage in fiscal 1998, its highest level yet, facilitating about $6.1 billion in foreign investment in 26 member countries.

Economic Development Institute

In fiscal 1998, the role of the Economic Development Institute (EDI) extended to reach 23,250 direct participants, including national leaders, government officials, parliamentarians, journalists, private entrepreneurs, members of non-governmental organizations and educators through 402 EDI learning activities. Partnering with the Bank, EDI launched and piloted core courses on development priorities, from banking, finance and regulation to environment and sustainable development and from governance to human and social development.

In Africa, EDI's integrity programmes supported efforts to establish national anticorruption programmes in countries where corruption had threatened to undermine development objectives. A series of regional seminars co-sponsored by EDI attracted policy makers and financiers from about 15 African countries. The Asian financial crisis prompted EDI to organize a conference bringing together the region's policy makers to discuss the economic turbulence, identify structural problems and evaluate development priorities for the aftermath of the crisis. EDI conducted commercial banking training programmes and an economic management programme to help the region's transitional economies build appropriate institutions. In Asia, EDI's global and regional conferences on pension reform helped Governments across the region to strengthen social protection for the elderly. In 1998, EDI assistance supported reform and modernization of public institutions and the effective implementation of laws and regulations to fight corruption in Latin America. In the Middle East and North Africa, EDI supported programmes designed to disseminate international best practices in fields of special concern to the region, such as water and irrigation policy, microcredit financing and grassroots management and decentralization. In fiscal 1998, EDI's support of efforts to achieve widespread and equitable coverage of health included a pilot training course, "Health Sector Reform and Sustainable Financing", which was to be offered each year in Washington, D.C., as well as at regionally based partner institutes throughout the world. EDI conducted subregional and national learning programmes on economic globalization and environmental sustainability in Central America, South Asia and southern Africa.

The Global Distance Education network, established in fiscal 1998, used interactive television, videoconferencing and the Internet to deliver training and policy services to more development partners than was possible through face-to-face learning.

Scholarships

In May 1998, the Joint Japan/World Bank Graduate Scholarship Programme awarded 150 new scholarships to individuals applying for advanced studies in fields related to socio-economic development. The overall average number of scholars supported through all programmes was about 400 annually.

The Robert S. McNamara Fellowships Programme awarded 20 postgraduate fellowships annually to support innovative, non-degree research on issues critical to improving the lives of the vulnerable in society.

Co-financing

In fiscal 1998, a significant turnaround in co-financing activity reversed a four-year decline. The level of co-financing mobilized through operations in the environment and the social sectors, particularly in education, continued to increase, accounting for 23 per cent of the total, up from 13 per cent in fiscal 1997. The number of co-financed operations increased to 123, mobilizing nearly $10 billion in additional resources for the Bank's client countries, compared to 122 operations for $7.7 billion in fiscal 1997. Official sources of co-financing continued to account for the largest share (78 per cent), of which Japan provided $2 billion, the European Union institutions $914 million and the Inter-American Development Bank $537 million.

Financing activities

During fiscal year 1998, IBRD raised some $28 billion in medium- and long-term debt. That amount excluded proceeds from continuous short-term issuance programmes and transactions with a maturity of less than one year. The increase in medium- and long-term borrowing primarily reflected increased loan disbursements in response to the financial crisis in East Asia and adjustment lending in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. The after-swap currency composition of new funding was mostly in United States dollars, Japanese yen and deutsche mark. Borrowing was carried out in 21 currencies, resulting in 195 transactions during the fiscal year.

As at 30 June 1998, outstanding borrowings stood at $105.6 billion, after swaps with an average maturity of five years. The average cost of all borrowings, after swaps, was 6.1 per cent. The borrowers selected single-currency loan terms for $20 billion (95 per cent) of new loans.

Capitalization

As at 30 June 1998, the total subscribed capital of IBRD was $186.4 billion, or 97.7 per cent of authorized capital of $190.8 billion.

The outstanding loans and callable guarantees totalled nearly $107 billion, or 52.9 per cent of IBRD's statutory lending limit.

Income, expenditures and reserves

IBRD's gross revenues totalled $8.5 billion in fiscal year 1998, an increase of $325 million over 1997. Net income was $1.24 billion, down from $1.28 billion in fiscal 1997. Expenses increased to $7.3 billion from $6.8 billion a year earlier. Administrative costs rose to $763 million from $714 million in 1997, a 6 per cent increase. At the end of fiscal 1998, IBRD's liquidity totalled $24.6 billion, and the reserves-to-loan ratio fell to 14.06 per cent from 14.49 per cent in 1997 due to unprecedented growth in its loan disbursements and commitments, prompted primarily by the financial crisis in East Asia and adjustment lending in Eastern Europe and Central Asia.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1998, the World Bank's regular, fixed-term, long-term consultant and long-term temporary staff in Washington, D.C., and local offices numbered 9,262.

Chapter VII

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

The International Finance Corporation (IFC), part of the World Bank Group, continued in 1998 to encourage private sector activity in developing countries. Its activities included financing of private sector enterprises, assisting companies in the developing world to mobilize financing in international financial markets, and providing related advisory and technical assistance services to businesses and Governments. In fiscal 1998 (1 July 1997-30 June 1998), IFC felt the effects on its bottom line of the Asian financial crisis but nonetheless redoubled its commitment to Asian countries and made more investments in frontier economies around the world. In collaboration with the World Bank, IFC revitalized financial and physical infrastructure through structured transactions and mobilized funds to strengthen the private sector.

During fiscal 1998, IFC membership increased to 174 with the admission of Chad and Palau.

Financial and advisory services

In fiscal 1998, IFC's Board of Directors approved $5.9 billion in financing, of which $2.5 billion was mobilized through loan syndications and underwriting, for 308 projects in 83 countries and regions, compared with $6.7 billion for 276 projects in 84 countries in fiscal 1997. Total project costs of fiscal 1998 approvals amounted to $15.7 billion; the ratio of IFC funding to total costs was 1 to 2.7. IFC approved investments in two new countries, Belarus and the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

The Corporation expanded its on-site presence in developing countries by increasing its field locations to 69, many of them co-located with the World Bank. It began field-based hubs, staffed with investment professionals, engineers and lawyers, in New Delhi and Moscow. There were plans to establish a new hub in Africa.

IFC continued to invest across a wide range of sectors. The financial services sector accounted for the largest share of new investment approvals (31 per cent), followed by infrastructure (20 per cent) and mining (12 per cent). There was also an increase in private participation in sectors previously the exclusive domain of Governments, including private health care and education.

The "Extending IFC's Reach" initiative, begun in 1997 as a pilot programme to promote investment in selected countries where difficult conditions had constrained IFC activity, continued to provide access to IFC services. Since its inception, it had generated nearly $1 billion in investment approvals. The Board approved $80 million for the Small Enterprise Fund and gave IFC management the authority to approve small investments from it. IFC approved 88 projects in the outreach countries totalling $620.2 million; IFC management approved 35 of them, totalling $38.5 million.

Strong demand for technical assistance and advisory services continued throughout fiscal 1998. During the prior six years, IFC had expanded its scope to include financial sector and capital market technical assistance; advisory work in infrastructure; privatization and corporate restructuring work; project development facilities; and investment and project-specific advisory services.

Regional projects

IFC approved 308 projects in 83 countries and regions in fiscal 1998.

In sub-Saharan Africa, IFC aided the development of the financial sector by participating in leasing companies, merchant banks, commercial banks, venture funds, insurance companies and stock exchanges. IFC's role in natural resources exploration and development was to mobilize investment, assist in privatization, help ensure environmentally and socially responsible undertakings, and further the dialogue with Governments. Other assistance was provided for infrastructure development and small business support. IFC approved 81 projects in 23 countries, compared to 72 projects in 24 countries in fiscal 1997. As at 30 June 1998, IFC's committed portfolio, including loans and investments, totalled $1.18 billion, up from $1.01 billion in fiscal 1997.

In Asia and the Pacific, IFC engaged in corporate restructuring, strengthening financial institutions and support for export-oriented industry, particularly in building confidence and supporting structural adjustment. In response to the financial and currency crisis, IFC dedicated substantial resources to bolstering Asia's financial and corporate sectors. It also continued to focus on institution building, infrastructure investment and financial reform. It approved 51 projects in 14 countries, compared to 54 projects in 12 countries in fiscal 1997. IFC's committed portfolio, including loans and investments, totalled $6.18 billion compared to $6.15 billion in fiscal 1997.

In Central Asia, the Middle East and North Africa, IFC focused on private sector development through investment in the financial sector, infrastructure and key sectors that drew on comparative advantages and generated employment, including tourism, agribusiness and natural resources extraction. IFC approved 33 projects in 11 countries compared with 43 projects in 10 countries in fiscal 1997. IFC's committed portfolio of loans and investments totalled $1.96 billion compared with $1.85 billion in fiscal 1997.

In Europe, IFC customized its approach to each member country according to its size, business climate and transition stage. It encouraged private sector development and entrepreneurial enterprise in its new member countries; strengthened banking sectors, financial sector infrastructure and capital markets' efficiency; supported locally owned companies and small and medium enterprises; provided technical assistance and financing for privatization and capital markets development; and financed joint ventures. IFC approved 75 projects in 18 countries in fiscal 1998, up from 46 projects in 15 countries the previous year. Its committed portfolio of loans and investments totalled $2.78 billion compared with $1.85 billion in fiscal 1997.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, IFC shifted its focus from multinational companies to areas with less access to financing, such as mid-size and small companies, and the development of domestic banking and capital markets. It approved 67 projects in 17 countries compared with 57 projects in 21 countries in fiscal 1997. Its committed portfolio of loans and investments totalled $8.32 billion, up from $7.91 billion in fiscal 1997.

Foreign Investment Advisory Service

The Foreign Investment Advisory Service (FIAS), jointly operated by IFC and the World Bank, continued to advise Governments on the policies, laws, regulations and procedures needed to create an attractive investment climate and increase inflows of productive foreign direct investment (FDI). In fiscal 1998, FIAS completed 46 advisory projects in 38 countries. About 90 per cent of FIAS work in fiscal 1998 was in low- and lower-middle-income countries, many of them part of the "Extending IFC's Reach" initiative (see above). Projects in Asia and the Pacific emphasized the implementation of previous advice provided to Pacific island economies. In Africa, it focused on countries with multi-year reform efforts under way. FIAS was active in Central Asia, the Middle East and North Africa, particularly in countries changing to market economies. In Central America and the Caribbean, it provided services to countries where the end of quotas and preferences was approaching and new ways were needed to attract FDI.

Financial performance

In fiscal 1998, IFC's net income totalled $246 million, down from a record $432 million in fiscal 1997. That decline was primarily attributed to anticipated losses from IFC's East Asian portfolio stemming from the financial crisis in the region. As a result, IFC set aside $481 million in reserves for fiscal 1998, compared with $266 million in fiscal 1997. The loan portfolio showed a net loss of $78 million in fiscal 1998, while net income from the equity/quasi-equity portfolio remained healthy, at $94 million. Net income from IFC's invested net worth and treasury activities continued to provide a strong, dependable source of earnings at $260 million.

IFC's total committed portfolio at the end of the fiscal year was $11.5 billion, up from $10.5 billion in fiscal 1997. The portfolio consisted of loans and equity investments in 1,138 companies in 108 countries.

Capital and retained earnings

As at 30 June 1998, IFC's net worth totalled $5.1 billion, compared to $4.7 billion at the end of fiscal 1997.

Secretariat

As at 30 June 1998, IFC employed 1,528 staff, including consultants and temporary staff, drawn from 113 countries.

NOTE: For further details of IFC activities, see International Finance Corporation 1998 Annual Report, published by the Corporation.

Chapter VIII

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

During 1998, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) continued its efforts to promote exchange stability; assist in the establishment of a multi-lateral system of payments; make its general resources temporarily available to members experiencing balance-of-payments difficulties under adequate safeguards; and shorten the duration and lessen the degree of disequilibrium in the international balances of payments of members. The financial crisis in Asia (see PART THREE, Chapter V) and its subsequent global reverberations dominated IMF's work during the fiscal year (1 May 1997 to 30 April 1998). The crisis, which had a major impact on the scale of IMF financial assistance, led to the creation of a new lending facility, the supplemental reserve facility (SRF).

During the fiscal year, IMF membership remained at 182.

IMF facilities and policies

IMF provided financial assistance to its members through several facilities and policies to help them achieve sustainable economic growth and balance-of-payments viability and to establish normal relations with their creditors. Credit for longer periods was made available under the extended funding facility (EFF).

The Fund provided concessional financial support to low-income countries under the enhanced structural adjustment facility (ESAF). The ESAF-Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Trust made grants, loans, or both, to eligible members that qualified for assistance under the HIPC Initiative and subsidized the interest rate on interim ESAF operations to ESAF-eligible members.

In December 1997, as a result of the financial crisis in Asia, SRF was established to provide additional financial assistance to members facing exceptional balance-of-payments difficulties attributable to a large short-term financing need.

IMF's special facilities consisted of the compensatory and contingency financing facility (CCFF) and the buffer stock financing facility, which had not been used since 1983. Since no member had used CCFF during the fiscal year, the IMF Directors, in November 1997, suggested that its merits be reviewed. Albania, Rwanda and Tajikistan made purchases totalling 30 million special drawing rights (SDR) under the Fund's policy on emergency post-conflict assistance.

Financial assistance

During fiscal 1998, the Fund approved 21 new standby, extended and ESAF arrangements, totalling SDR 32.1 billion in new commitments (SDR 27.3 billion in standby arrangements for nine countries; SDR 3 billion for four EFF arrangements; and nearly SDR 1.7 billion for eight ESAF arrangements), compared with commitments of SDR 5.3 billion in fiscal 1997. Overall, new commitments of resources under standby and extended arrangements amounted to SDR 30.4 billion in 1997/98, of which nearly 90 per cent was approved for Asian countries directly affected by the regional financial crisis.

As at 30 April 1998, 60 arrangements were in effect, for a total commitment of SDR 45 billion, compared with SDR 18 billion in the previous fiscal year. They comprised 14 standby arrangements (Bulgaria, Cape Verde, Djibouti, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Indonesia, Latvia, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Romania, Thailand, Ukraine, Uruguay); 13 extended arrangements (Algeria, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Croatia, Gabon, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Moldova, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Russian Federation, Yemen); and 30 ESAF arrangements (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chad, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Ethiopia, Georgia, Ghana, Guinea, Haiti, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Zambia).

In April 1998, Uganda reached its completion point under the HIPC Initiative and SDR 51.5 million was disbursed in the form of a grant, which was held in an administrative account used to service a part of Uganda's debt to IMF under a schedule agreed with the Ugandan authorities. Five additional countries (Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Guyana, Mozambique) also became eligible for assistance that would reduce their nominal debt service by some $5 billion.

Liquidity

The Fund's liquidity position weakened considerably in fiscal 1998 as a result of large new demands for IMF resources arising from the crisis affecting several countries in Asia, along with sustained demand from other member countries, including, in particular, the Russian Federation, as well as Algeria, Argentina, Bulgaria and the Philippines. Total purchases (gross drawings, including reserve tranche and under SRF) rose sharply to an unprecedented SDR 20 billion, owing largely to heavy frontloading of purchases by Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand under their standby arrangements. Net of repurchases (i.e., repayments) by members, IMF credit outstanding in the general resources account (GRA) increased by SDR 15.2 billion to reach a historic high of SDR 49.7 billion at the end of 1997/1998. At the end of fiscal 1998, the Fund's liquid resources amounted to SDR 47.3 billion, compared with SDR 62.7 billion a year earlier. Uncommitted and adjusted usable resources totalled SDR 22.6 billion at the end of fiscal 1998, compared with SDR 43.5 billion in fiscal 1997.

At the end of April 1998, the Fund's liquid liabilities totalled SDR 50.3 billion, consisting entirely of reserve tranche positions (as IMF had no outstanding borrowing), a substantial rise from the level of SDR 36.1 billion of the previous fiscal year. The ratio of the Fund's net uncommitted usable resources to its liquid liabilities—the traditional liquidity ratio—declined to 44.8 per cent at the end of April 1998 from 120.5 per cent a year earlier.

SDR activity

In fiscal 1998, total transfers of SDRs increased slightly to SDR 20.3 billion, from SDR 19.8 billion in fiscal 1997. An increase in transfers among participants and prescribed holders (SDR 1.5 billion) more than offset a decline in transfers involving GRA (SDR 1 billion). Contributing to the increase in transfers was a significant reduction in the SDR holdings of prescribed holders.

Transfers of SDRs from participants to GRA fell to SDR 4.8 billion in 1997/98 from SDR 6 billion in 1996/97, reflecting mainly a fall in repurchase obligations discharged in SDRs to SDR 2.9 billion in 1997/98 from SDR 4.4 billion in 1996/97. Because the expansion of credit outstanding took place in the second half of the financial year, charges paid in SDRs increased only slightly, to SDR 1.9 billion in 1997/98 from SDR 1.6 billion in 1996/97.

Transfers of SDRs from GRA to participants and prescribed holders were constrained by the lower receipts of SDRs from participants, but rose slightly to SDR 5.6 billion in 1997/98 from SDR 5.4 billion in 1996/97. Members' purchases made in SDRs of SDR 4.2 billion represented the largest category of transfer, followed by remuneration payments of SDR 1.2 billion to members with creditor positions.

Transfers among participants and prescribed holders rose to SDR 9.8 billion in 1997/98, from SDR 8.4 billion in 1996/97, largely reflecting increases in transactions by agreement and in IMF-related operations. Transactions by agreement totalled SDR 8.6 billion in 1997/98, compared with SDR 7.4 billion in 1996/97. Participants continued to acquire substantial amounts of SDRs in transactions by agreement, in order to discharge their financial obligations to IMF; they also sold in transactions by agreement most of the SDRs they received in purchases and ESAF loan disbursements. For the most part, transactions by agreement continued to be conducted with the assistance of 12 members with standing arrangements with the Fund to buy or sell SDRs for one or more freely usable currencies at any time, provided that their SDR holdings remained within certain limits. The SDR holdings of non-industrial countries increased from 60.5 per cent to 69.4 per cent during fiscal 1998; those of industrial countries increased from 99.8 per cent to 107 per cent. The latter was mainly because the industrial countries absorbed the reduction in the holdings of prescribed holders, which decreased in fiscal 1998 from SDR 1.3 billion to SDR 0.4 billion, as a consequence of changes in IMF's investments of SAF and ESAF resources in official SDRs maintained with the Bank for International Settlements.

Policy on arrears

The level of outstanding overdue financial obligations to IMF increased slightly during fiscal 1998 to SDR 2.3 billion from SDR 2.2 billion in fiscal 1997. There were no new cases of protracted arrears to the Fund in fiscal 1998.

As at 30 April 1998, four countries (Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Liberia, Somalia, Sudan) were ineligible to use the general resources of the Fund. Those countries accounted for 95 per cent of total overdue obligations on that date. Declarations of non-cooperation, a further step under the strengthened cooperative arrears strategy, were in effect with respect to three countries (DRC, Liberia, Sudan).

Technical assistance and training

In fiscal 1998, demand by members for IMF technical assistance and training services remained strong. Technical assistance continued to focus on the monetary and fiscal aspects of macro-economic management, but also addressed statistics, financial law, IMF financial organization and operations, and information technology. During fiscal 1998, technical assistance and training accounted for about 17 per cent of the Fund's total administrative expenses.

The IMF Institute, in collaboration with other UN specialized agencies and regional institutions, provided training through seminars, joint courses and lectures on macroeconomics, banking, finance and statistics. In Europe, IMF, in cooperation with the World Bank and other international institutions, established the Joint Vienna Institute to provide training to officials of former centrally planned economies that were in transition to market-based systems. In Africa, the Institute continued to emphasize capacity-building by training trainers, both in financial macroeconomics and in managerial fields linked to teaching. In Asia, the IMF-Singapore Regional Training Institute began offering training on policy-related economics to selected government officials, mainly from the region's developing countries. Cooperation between the IMF Institute and the Arab Monetary Fund included joint courses and seminars. The Institute provided lecturing assistance for courses organized by the Center for Latin American Monetary Studies.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, IMF employed 1,525 Professional staff, 671 assistant staff and 428 experts and consultants.

Budget

The Fund's administrative budget for fiscal 1998 was $503.7 million. For the capital budget, $27.2 million was approved for projects beginning in fiscal 1998. Actual administrative expenses during the fiscal year totalled $495.3 million and capital project disbursements totalled $56.3 million, including $40.5 million for major building projects.

NOTE: For details of IMF activities during the 1998 fiscal year, see Annual Report of the Executive Board for the Financial Year Ended April 30, 1998.

Chapter IX

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

The International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) continued to promote the safety and efficiency of civil air transport by prescribing standards and recommending procedures for facilitating civil aviation operations. Its objectives were set forth in annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in Chicago, Illinois, United States, in 1944, known as the Chicago Convention.

In 1998, domestic and international scheduled traffic of the world's airlines increased to some 349 billion tonne-kilometres. Passenger and freight carriage remained the same at 1.46 billion passengers and some 26 million tonnes, respectively. The passenger load factor on total scheduled services in 1998 remained at 69 per cent, while the overall weight load factor decreased by one percentage point from 1997 to 60 per cent. Air freight showed a slight decrease (less than 1 per cent) to 102.3 billion tonne-kilometres, and airmail traffic decreased by about 4 per cent to 5.7 billion tonne-kilometres. Overall passenger/freight/mail tonne-kilometres increased by just over 1 per cent and international tonne-kilometres by almost 2 per cent.

The Council of ICAO held three regular sessions in 1998. In June, the Council endorsed a settlement mediated by its President that resolved a dispute between Cuba and the United States over the right of Cuban-registered aircraft to overfly United States territory on flights to and from Canada. The Council decided to convene, in 1999, a diplomatic conference to adopt the draft Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules for International Carriage by Air. The Council reviewed the ICAO Action Plan to address the impact of the year 2000 (Y2K) date-change problem whereby an informal coordination action group would provide leadership and global coordination to Y2K efforts in air traffic services and airports. It also considered proposals for the formation, composition and mandate of the International Explosives Technical Commission established under article V of the Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection (Montreal, Canada, 1 March 1991). The Convention entered into force on 21 June 1998.

The thirty-second ICAO Assembly (Montreal, 22 September-2 October) elected a new Council and adopted 31 resolutions dealing with aviation safety, global air navigation, the environment and other key issues of international civil aviation.

In 1998, ICAO membership remained at 185 countries.

Activities

Air navigation

ICAO continued to update and implement international specifications and regional plans, which emphasized the communications, navigation and surveillance/air traffic management (CNS/ATM) systems. The specifications consisted of International Standards and Recommended Practices (SARPs) contained in 18 technical annexes to the 1944 Chicago Convention and Procedures for Air Navigation Services. Regional plans covered air navigation facilities and services required for implementation of CNS/ATM systems and other international air navigation elements in ICAO regions.

ICAO convened the first Worldwide CNS/ATM Systems Implementation Conference (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 11-15 May), which brought together all partners in the worldwide implementation of CNS/ATM systems to discuss the financing mechanisms and the institutional frameworks required to move the projects forward.

Four air navigation meetings, convened in Montreal in 1998, made recommendations to amend ICAO specifications. The Aeronautical Information Services/Aeronautical Charts Divisional Meeting (23 March-3 April) developed a neutral, standard conceptual information model for use in aeronautical databases and for the exchange of electronic data independent of the system in use, as well as amendments to ICAO specifications, including chart symbology, depiction of airspace classes on charts, the provision of electronic terrain and obstacle information, and new charting specifications required for GNSS-based (global navigation satellite systems) operations. It also developed operational requirements for the provision of aeronautical information in the data link environment. The fourth meeting of the Committee on Aviation Environmental Protection (6-8 April) reached a consensus on the recommendation for an increase in stringency of the nitrogen oxide emissions limits. It recommended lower noise limits for propeller-driven aeroplanes and developed guidelines on flight procedures and local action to alleviate noise nuisance from that category of aircraft. The other two meetings were air navigation panel meetings, one of which developed SARPs and guidance material for high frequency data link; completed studies on the assessment of various data links and on the use of next-generation satellite systems in aviation; and reviewed progress on the development of SARPs for the very high frequency digital link (VDL) Mode 3 for the integrated voice/data link system, on draft SARPs for VDL Mode 4 and on the evolutionary development of current SARPs for the aeronautical mobile satellite service. The other panel meeting completed work on requirements for inspection and recalibration of flight recorders, and on SARPs relating to: recording of digital communications; flight recorders in newly manufactured aircraft; the discontinuation of the use of photographic film flight data recorders; and the use of flight recorders for flight data analysis programmes.

Other projects in 1998 were related to: accident investigation; accident and incident data reporting; accident prevention; aerodromes; aerodrome rescue and fire fighting; aeronautical information services; airborne collision avoidance systems; audio-visual aids; aviation environmental matters; aviation medicine; bird strikes to aircraft; CNS/ATM systems; controlled flight into terrain; flight safety and human factors; future larger aeroplanes; meteorology; personnel licensing and training; safety oversight; telecommunications; the TRAINAIR programme; and units of measurement.

Air transport

ICAO's air transport programmes were directed towards economic analysis, economic policy, forecasting and economic planning, collection and publication of air transport statistics, airport and route facility management, economic and organizational aspects of CNS/ATM systems, economic and coordination aspects of environmental protection and the promotion of greater facilitation in international air transport.

The Technical Advisory Group on Machine Readable Travel Documents (Montreal, 18-20 February) finalized work on machine readable passports, visas and official travel documents. The Caribbean/South American (Santiago, Chile, 3-7 August), Middle East (Cairo, Egypt, 7-9 September) and Africa-Indian Ocean (Nairobi, Kenya, 2-6 November) Traffic Forecasting Group meetings supported planning of air navigation services in each of their regions.

ICAO continued to provide secretariat services to three independent regional civil aviation bodies—the African Civil Aviation Commission, the European Civil Aviation Conference and the Latin American Civil Aviation Commission.

The organization maintained its responsibilities for the administration of the Danish and Icelandic Joint Financing Agreements, to which 23 Governments were contracting parties in 1998. The two agreements, which were signed in 1956 and amended in 1982, concerned the provision in Greenland and Iceland of air traffic control, communications and meteorology facilities and services to North Atlantic flights.

Legal matters

The Panel of Legal and Technical Experts on the Establishment of a Legal Framework with regard to GNSS held its third meeting (9-13 February). It adopted recommendations on liability, administration, financing and cost recovery, and future operating structures. The Special Group on the Modernization and Consolidation of the "Warsaw System" met (14-18 April) to refine the text of the draft Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules for International Carriage by Air, approved by the Legal Committee in 1997. The International Conference on the Authentic Chinese Text of the Convention on International Civil Aviation (Montreal, 28 September-1 October) adopted the Protocol on the Authentic Six-Language Text of the Convention, which was signed in Montreal on 1 October, as was its related Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention (Final Clause).

The following ratifications, adherences or successions to conventions and protocols on international air law concluded under ICAO auspices were registered in 1998:

Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (1947) (article 93 bis, Expulsion or suspension)

South Africa

Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation (1980) (article 83 bis, Lease, charter and interchange)

Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Detection (Montreal, 1991)

Cameroon, Denmark, Germany, Ghana, Monaco, Netherlands, Qatar, Romania, Samoa, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Technical cooperation

In 1998, ICAO undertook 124 technical cooperation projects in 75 countries. The technical cooperation programmes, financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), trust funds, management service agreements and the Civil Aviation Purchasing Service, had total expenditures of $52 million. Some 95 per cent of that amount was provided by Governments to fund their own projects on the basis of cost sharing with UNDP.

ICAO had resident missions in 34 countries, and 75 others received assistance through fellowships and visits from experts assigned to intercountry and subcontractual arrangements. A total of 567 fellowships were awarded in 1998, of which 554 were implemented. ICAO employed 284 experts from 40 countries, of which 109 were on assignment under UNDP and 175 worked on trust fund projects. There were 84 Governments and organizations registered with ICAO in 1998 under its Civil Aviation Purchasing Service. Equipment purchases in 1998 totalled $15.68 million.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, ICAO employed a total of 756 staff members, including 302 in the Professional and higher categories and 454 in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

Appropriations for the ICAO budget in 1998 were $54,596,000.

NOTE: For further details on the activities of ICAO in 1998, see Annual Report of the Council 1998.

Chapter X

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

During 1998, the Universal Postal Union (UPU) continued to promote a fast and reliable universal postal service at affordable prices through international collaboration among its member countries. In the light of the rapidly changing and highly competitive business environment, UPU carried out activities to promote postal development and assist postal administrations to improve the quality of their services to meet growing customer demands. The postal services of its 189 member countries remained the largest physical distribution network in the world, with 6.2 million postal employees working in more than 700,000 post offices worldwide, processing and delivering a total of 430 billion mail items in the domestic service and almost 10 billion in the international service.

Activities of UPU organs

Universal Postal Congress

The Universal Postal Congress, UPU's supreme legislative authority, met every five years. It last met in 1994 for the twenty-first Congress, held in Seoul, Republic of Korea. In 1998, preparatory work continued for the twenty-second Congress, to be held in Beijing, China, from 23 August to 15 September 1999.

Council of Administration

The Council of Administration, which ensured the continuity of UPU work between Congresses and studied regulatory, administrative, legislative and legal issues of concern to the Union, held its annual session from 12 to 21 October at UPU headquarters in Berne, Switzerland.

During 1998, the Council continued preparations for the twenty-second Congress. It noted the establishment of a new organization within UPU, the express mail service (EMS) Cooperative, and decided to continue partial funding of programmes by the Union budget at the same levels as in the current five-year period during a transitional period. The Council authorized the reduction of the contribution class of several UPU members.

Postal Operations Council

The Postal Operations Council (POC), which dealt with the operational, economic and commercial aspects of international postal services, assisted postal services to modernize and upgrade their postal products, including letter post, express mail service, postal parcels and postal financial services. It held its annual session in Berne from 20 April to 6 May.

In 1998, POC decided to submit to the 1999 Beijing Congress the introduction of a new international reply coupons accounting system. The new edition of the Postal Parcels Compendium, which featured symbols and letters to obviate the need for translation of updates and facilitate the updating process, was distributed to UPU member countries. The Council considered aspects of the introduction of the euro in the European currency market. The state of EMS development showed that the service had to be better positioned; a strategic study recommended adopting a new approach for managing EMS, which the EMS Project Team supported. In 1998, POC approved the creation of the new organization, EMS Cooperative, to safeguard and develop EMS. An EMS web page was set up in December. Information on developments in telematics and electronic mail was provided at a postal electronic communication symposium in Washington, D.C. An International Postal Symposium and an International Postal Systems Seminar were held in Tokyo. Following Customer's Day in April, POC approved the proposal to adopt a UPU Customer Services Charter, invited postal administrations to organize regional and national customer's days and recommended strengthening relations with customers and strategic partners in the various market sectors.

At the second post and environment symposium, held in Berne in May, representatives of eight postal administrations described their respective experiences and initiatives taken in their countries. The symposium noted the draft Beijing declaration on environmental protection for submission in 1999 to the Universal Postal Congress.

The eighth revenue protection seminar, held in San Francisco, United States, in September, discussed prevention in fraudulent bulk mailings, permit mailings, stamp washing, meter fraud and the use of laser printers and computers to produce false information.

International Bureau

The International Bureau, under the general supervision of the Council of Administration, was the area of the UPU secretariat that served the postal administrations of member countries as an organ of execution, support, liaison, information and consultation. The Bureau also promoted technical cooperation among Union members. It continued to act as a clearing house for settlement of various inter-administration charges related to the exchange of postal items and international reply coupons. The Bureau was responsible for ensuring the representation of the Union in its external relations, notably with international organizations. In recent years, the Bureau took on a stronger leadership role, including the application of Electronic Data Interchange technology and the monitoring of quality postal service on a global scale. To carry out its activities, the Bureau implemented management techniques, which included total quality management, a strategic planning process and a performance evaluation system based on the setting of individual objectives.

As at 31 December 1998, the number of permanent staff members employed by the Bureau was 151, of whom 64 were in the Professional or higher categories and 87 were in the General Service category.

Technical cooperation

Main funding for UPU technical cooperation activities came from contributions made by members to the UPU budget or to a special voluntary fund.

One of the principal goals of the UPU Postal Development Action Group was to increase the level of outside financial resources for postal reform and the modernization of postal services. A crucial element in selecting beneficiary countries was their motivation to participate actively in technical cooperation projects. Once commitment had been secured, development contracts covering multi-year integrated projects were concluded between those countries and the Union.

UPU also conducted short projects, which included study cycles, training fellowships and the services of development consultants who carried out on-the-spot studies in training, management or postal operations.

The UPU Regional Advisers were responsible for the programming, preparation, implementation and follow-up of postal development projects in developing countries in their regions.

Budget

Under the Union's self-financing system, contributions were payable in advance by member States based on the following year's budget. At its 1997 session, the Council of Administration approved the 1998 budget at Swiss francs (SwF) 35.7 million. In 1998, the Council approved the 1999 budget at SwF 35.7 million.

NOTE: For details of UPU activities, see the following: Comprehensive report on the work of the Council of Administration 1994-1999; Comprehensive report on the work of the Postal Operations Council 1994-1999; Director General's Report 1994-1999; and Director General's Report on the finances of the Union 1994-1999. The Universal Postal Union Annual Report was not published in 1998.

Chapter XI

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

In 1998, the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) continued to promote development and efficient operation of telecommunication facilities and provided technical assistance.

At its annual session, ITU's Council (Geneva, 20-29 May) considered the draft strategic plan for the Union for 1999-2003; implementation of the Geneva Diplomatic Community Network; the broadcasting-satellite service; cooperation between ITU and the World Trade Organization (WTO) and with other international organizations; Year 2000 compliance; the agenda for the World Radiocommunication Conference 2000; and administrative and budgetary matters.

ITU membership remained at 188.

During the year, ITU staged AFRICATELECOM 98, the fourth regional telecommunication exhibition and forum for the Africa region (Johannesburg, South Africa, 4-9 May). The event attracted 16,780 telecommunication professionals, some 443 exhibitors, government officials and chief executive officers in the industry. The ITU publication, African Telecommunications Indicators 1998, which provided analysis and statistics on all countries in Africa, was launched at the forum.

Conferences

ITU's second World Telecommunication Policy Forum (WTPF-98) (Geneva, 16-18 March) focused on the implications of the WTO agreement on trade in basic telecommunication services and approved three opinions aimed at streamlining the move to a more liberal global trading environment for telecommunication services.

The second World Telecommunication Development Conference (WTDC-98) (Valletta, Malta, 23 March-1 April) reviewed global telecommunications since WTDC-94 [YUN 1994, p. 1453], as well as current major policy issues, and examined technologies for the future. The Conference adopted the Valletta Declaration and Action Plan.

The Plenipotentiary Conference (Minneapolis, United States, 12 October-6 November) adopted amendments to the provisions of ITU's Constitution and Convention [YUN 1992, p. 1152], as amended by the Plenipotentiary Conference in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1453]. The Conference adopted a decision on ITU involvement in Internet Protocol-based networks and on the management of Internet names and addresses. It elected Yoshio Utsumi (Japan), Secretary-General of ITU, whose duties were to begin on 1 February 1999.

Radiocommunication Sector

The Radiocommunication Bureau provided services to administrations and users in the application of the Radio Regulations. It allocated international identification series, provided maritime mobile information services and conducted seminars and training sessions for national frequency management requirements. It processed notifications for space and terrestrial radiocommunication services; supported the work of the ITU-Radiocommunication Sector (ITU-R) study groups; and prepared for radiocommunication conferences. The Bureau received requests for assistance from administrations, operators and private parties in both the terrestrial and space radiocommunication domains. It assisted bilateral space system coordination meetings; carried out training missions/meetings on space systems matters; and organized seminars and meetings on a distance-learning course on spectrum management.

By the end of 1998, the Master International Frequency Register contained particulars of 1,263,677 assignments to terrestrial stations, representing 5,831,545 line entries, which were published in the International Frequency List at periodic intervals. For space services, the Master Register contained 324,083 assignments to 1,406 satellite networks and 4,262 earth stations.

Telecommunication Standardization Sector

In 1998, the Telecommunication Standardization Bureau supported all activities of the Sector and its study groups. The Bureau reserved or assigned a total of 17,000 universal international freephone numbers (UIFNs) since the inception of the system in January 1997. A total of 87 service providers in 46 countries had applied for UIFNs.

The Telecommunication Standardization Advisory Group held two meetings in 1998.

Telecommunication Development Sector

The Telecommunication Development Bureau supported the Telecommunication Development Sector study groups adopted at the second WTDC-98 on telecommunication development and development, harmonization, management and maintenance of telecommunication networks and services.

In 1998, the Bureau implemented 106 projects valued at some $99 million. It granted 1,428 fellowships.

In Africa, in line with the development of regional telecommunication networks, missions were sent to Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Madagascar and Mauritius. Assistance was provided to Dakar (Senegal), to introduce engineering training. Seminars were held on tariffs, new technologies, traffic management and network planning in a multimedia context. Progress was made in assisting southern African countries. The Bureau supported West African countries to set up a maintenance centre in Lomé (Togo); updated the feasibility study for the maintenance centre in Yaoundé (Cameroon); and supported the AFRICA-ONE submarine cable project. Some 670 fellowships were awarded.

In the Americas, activities to develop regional telecommunication networks included finance and trade colloquiums in Latin American and Caribbean countries on resource mobilization strategies in the context of new technologies, the changing regulatory environment for trade and investment in telecommunications, and accounting rates issues. Projects were set up in Ecuador, Honduras, Peru and Uruguay. ITU promoted the use of information technologies in combination with existing telecommunication facilities, in order to make extensive use of distance-learning techniques for training and human resources development. Projects to strengthen national technical and administrative telecommunication services were carried out in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Honduras, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay. The regional Bureau supervised 33 projects, conducted 21 ad hoc assistance missions and 12 regional seminars/meetings and granted 156 fellowships.

In the Arab States, activities included regional seminars on tariffs and costs, new services and the global information infrastructure, the computerized subscriber management system, new trends in digital sound and television production and on the transformation of telecommunication organizations. Two workshops were held on the Year 2000 computer problem (Cairo, Egypt, and Rabat, Morocco). Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, Yemen and the Palestinian Authority received assistance to strengthen national technical and administrative telecommunication services. The regional Bureau carried out 27 missions and supervised 6 projects and 16 regional seminars/meetings. A total of 213 fellowships were awarded.

In Asia and the Pacific, activities dealt with the promotion of interaction between users and suppliers of switching equipment, interfacing with the ITU-D study group and a seminar on the reform of account settlements in the South Pacific subregion. Issues on the international settlements situation, the Internet and participation of Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Viet Nam in WTO were discussed at a subregional meeting. Other activities included discussions to restructure the telecommunication sector, activities benefiting individual countries, planning of large networks in India, and advice and assistance with marketing of Internet top-level domain names. Workshops, meetings and roundtables were organized on strengthening national technical and administrative telecommunication services. Thirteen national and regional projects were under implementation and 198 fellowships were awarded.

In the Europe and Commonwealth of Independent States region, a seminar was held in Hungary on telecentre pilot project development for Central Eastern Europe and the Baltic States. In Kyrgyzstan, a seminar was held on new technologies and new types of telecommunication services. Workshops in the Russian Federation discussed transformation strategies; regional legal and regulatory broadcasting; and technology-based training and distance learning. Assistance to strengthen technical and administrative telecommunication services was granted to a number of countries. During the year, a total of 195 fellowships were granted.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, ITU employed 737 permanent and fixed-term staff, of whom 287 were in the Professional and higher categories and 450 in the General Service category.

Budget

The budget for ITU in 1998-1999 amounted to Swiss francs (SwF) 332,654,000. Actual income in 1998 totalled SwF 189,263,132, while actual expenditure amounted to SwF 157,298,841.

Chapter XII

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) continued in 1998 to facilitate worldwide cooperation related to meteorological and hydrological information and the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other activities. WMO also promoted operational hydrology, encouraged research and training in meteorology and continued to be concerned with environmental issues.

The WMO Executive Council, at its fiftieth session (Geneva, 16-26 June), reviewed WMO programmes and activities and issues, including co-ordination in the UN system of geosciences and their applications for the benefit of humankind; availability of commodities such as meteorological and hydrological data and products on the Internet; climate matters, including the Climate Agenda [YUN 1995, p. 1077]; water resources assessment; and the role and operation of National Meteorological and Hydrological Services (NMHSs).

WMO membership remained at 179 States and six Territories. Members were grouped in six regional associations (RAs)—Africa (RA I), Asia (RA II), South America (RA III), North and Central America (RA IV), South-West Pacific (RA V) and Europe (RA VI).

World Weather Watch Programme

The World Weather Watch Programme (WWW), the backbone of WMO scientific and technical programmes, through its Commission for Basic Systems (CBS), collected, analysed and disseminated meteorological data and products needed by member States to run their meteorological services efficiently. WWW offered up-to-the-minute worldwide weather information through its Global Observing System (GOS), Global Telecommunication System (GTS), Global Data-processing System (GDPS), and data management and system support activities, collectively known as the basic systems. It also included the Tropical Cyclone Programme, the Instruments and Methods of Observation Programme and WMO satellite and environmental emergency response activities.

World Weather Watch implementation

Taking into account the recommendations of the CBS Technical Conference on Integrated Upper-air Observing (28-29 September) and GOS and satellite-related expert meetings, CBS launched the future composite GOS, incorporating viable components of the current GOS. Progress was made in the phased implementation of the WMO Intranet, which would gradually introduce Internet-like functions on GTS.

Standard verification procedures for Numerical Weather Prediction products were adopted. The major GDPS centres addressed their new capability to generate useful long-range prediction products and agreed to increased collaboration among themselves with respect to verification, product representation formats and dissemination issues.

Instruments and methods of observation

The Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observation (CIMO), at its twelfth session (Casablanca, Morocco, 4-12 May), developed recommendations on instrument and observation standards and practices, which were adopted by the Executive Council; gave priority to the increased requirements of data users, standardization of data, the role of CIMO to support other WMO programmes, evaluation of new techniques and cost-effectiveness of observing systems; and agreed that more attention should be given to instrument comparison, validation and error assessment, and remote-sensing surface and space-based techniques. The session contributed to overcoming problems such as the cessation of the OMEGA radionavigation system, the protection of radio frequencies for meteorological purposes, development of definitions for aeronautical observations, measurement of variables under extreme conditions and automation of observations.

The satellites comprising the space-based subsystem of GOS, both polar-orbiting and geostationary, provided imagery, soundings, data-collection and data-distribution services. In May, the first satellite to carry advanced television infra-red observation satellite operational vertical sounders provided improved vertical profiles of temperature and humidity.

Tropical Cyclone Programme

In 1998, the operational plans of the five regional tropical cyclone centres in Miami, Florida (United States), Nadi (Fiji), New Delhi (India), Reunion and Tokyo (Japan) were revised and updated. Progress was made in implementing coorminated technical plans, formulated and monitored by the regional bodies to develop comprehensive services for tropical cyclone disaster mitigation.

WMO and the World Tourism Organization jointly published a handbook for distribution to the tourist industry to ensure awareness of the dangers posed by tropical cyclones and other natural hazards and provide step-by-step procedures for disaster prevention and preparedness.

World Climate Programme

The overall coordination of the World Climate Programme was carried out by the Inter-Agency Coordinating Committee for the Climate Agenda (IACCA). In April, IACCA recommended activities requiring high-level cooperation between agencies and programmes to support a review of climate observing systems; to carry out a review of the 1997-1998 El Niño event; and to improve cooperation to develop appropriate responses to climate change and variability.

The climate change detection project focused on the research and development of selected key indices and related climate data requirements for use in the third assessment report in the climate system monitoring project. The Climate System Monitoring Monthly Bulletin appeared in electronic form on the Internet. Within the climate computing project, meetings were held to develop requirements for a future climate database management system and to begin a procedure to evaluate prototype systems.

The World Climate Applications and Services Programme played a leading role in activities related to El Niño. WMO, in collaboration with the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme, developed the scientific and technical part of the first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts to Review the 1997-1998 El Niño Event (Guayaquil, Ecuador, November 1998), called for by the General Assembly in resolution 52/200 [YUN 1997, p. 927].

An important component of the Climate Information and Prediction Services was training, since the capacity to downscale global climate information and prediction products was insufficient at many NMHSs due to a lack of skilled personnel; therefore, close collaboration was established among universities, advanced global/regional centres and NMHSs. In 1998, WMO, in collaboration with several partners, organized regional climate outlook forums, which provided opportunities for researchers from advanced climate prediction centres to work with scientists and representatives of operational climate centres and NMHSs to develop consensus or consolidated climate outlook products, together with guidance on their interpretation.

World Climate Research Programme

The World Climate Research Programme, undertaken jointly by WMO, the International Council of Scientific Unions and IOC, continued studies to provide the scientific basis for predictions of global and regional climate variations on all time scales and refined the projections of the magnitude and rate of human-induced climate change.

To celebrate the completion of the observational phase of the World Ocean Circulation Experiment, a landmark conference (Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada, May) was held to examine the current state of ocean circulation and its relation to climate. New discoveries resulting from the observations of deep ocean structure and from major technological advances, such as satellite sensors for precise ocean topography, automatic profilers and drifters, were described.

Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme

The Atmospheric Research and Environment Programme continued to coordinate and encourage research in atmospheric and related sciences. The development of those activities was the responsibility of the Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (CAS). CAS, at its twelfth session (Skopje, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, 23 February-3 March), recommended the establishment of an urban environment meteorological research programme, later approved by the Executive Council as a component of the Global Atmosphere Watch. The main focus of the programme was to assist NMHSs to deal with urban environmental issues, including the relationship and linkage between the urban environment and sustainable development and those between local, regional and global environmental problems, such as transboundary pollution and forest fires. CAS also endorsed the World Weather Research Programme to develop improved and cost-effective forecasting techniques.

Under the Tropical Meteorology Research Programme, a new project structure was defined to cover research activities on tropical cyclones, monsoons, tropical and subtropical droughts and application of limited-area modelling to tropical countries. The transfer of expertise to developing countries remained central to those activities.

Applications of meteorology

Agricultural meteorology

During 1998, activities focused on the development of training manuals for a new series of roving seminars. Roving seminars on agrometeorology related to extreme events (drought, storms, floods, cyclones, heatwaves, gales and bush fires) were held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (9-21 April), and San José, Costa Rica (24 August-4 September). Roving seminars on crop-yield weather modelling were held in Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania (14-25 September), and Seoul, Republic of Korea (12-23 October), and a roving seminar on data management for applications to agriculture was held in Ljubljana, Slovenia (12-23 September). Another roving seminar, in collaboration with the International Air Transport Association, on instrumentation and operation of automatic weather stations for applications in agrometeorology was held in Bahrain (24 October-4 November).

Aeronautical meteorology

Under the Aeronautical Meteorology Programme, activities in 1998 related to the implementation of the World Area Forecast System designed to provide high quality, timely and high resolution upper wind and temperature forecasts and operational meteorological information to ensure safe, regular and efficient air navigation. By year's end, 165 satellite broadcast and data display receivers were installed in 119 countries.

Marine meteorology

A joint WMO/IOC workshop (Sydney, Australia, March) supported the proposal for WMO and IOC to establish a joint ocean observations and services commission to achieve the required long-term coordination, regulatory and management functions to implement ocean observations for the Global Ocean Observing System/Global Climate Observing System.

Public weather services

Several training seminars and workshops were organized in different regions to offer guidance on improving national public weather services. WMO members expressed the need to improve cross-border coordination and exchange of information on hazardous weather, and for improved relations between NMHSs and the international media.

Hydrology and water resources

The activities of the Hydrology and Water Resources Programme in 1998 concentrated on the measurement of basic hydrological elements from networks of hydrological and meteorological stations; the collection, processing, storage, retrieval and publication of hydrological data, including data on the quantity of both surface water and groundwater; the provision of such data and related information for use in planning and operating water resources projects and water resources management; and the installation and operation of hydrological forecasting systems.

Technical cooperation

In 1998, some 103 countries received technical assistance valued at $ 14.8 million, financed by the WMO Voluntary Cooperation Programme (50.6 per cent), trust funds (31.2 per cent), the United Nations Development Programme (10.8 per cent) and the WMO regular budget (7.4 per cent).

Regional offices continued to implement WMO programmes. In May and June, the subregional offices for the south-west Pacific and for eastern and southern Africa were set up in Apia, Samoa, and Nairobi, Kenya, respectively.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, the number of full-time staff employed by WMO (excluding seven Professionals on technical assistance projects) totalled 250. Of those, 119 were in the Professional and higher categories and 131 were in the General Service and related categories.

Budget

In 1997, the WMO Executive Council approved a regular budget of SwF 125,100,000 for the 1998-1999 biennium. Unspent balances remaining from the budget of the first biennium (1996-1997), amounting to SwF 9,110,758, were reappropriated to the 1998-1999 biennium.

Chapter XIII

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

The International Maritime Organization (IMO), which commemorated its fiftieth anniversary in 1998, continued to improve the safety of international shipping and to prevent marine pollution from ships.

During the year, IMO membership increased to 157, with the admission of Grenada and the Marshall Islands.

Activities in 1998

The IMO Council awarded the International Maritime Prize for 1997 to Gamal El-Din Ahmed Mokhtar (Egypt), President of the Arab Academy for Science, Technology and Maritime Transport. The Prize was awarded annually to the person, organization or other entity judged to have done the most to advance IMO objectives.

The theme of World Maritime Day, observed on 24 September, was "IMO's fiftieth anniversary: shipping and the oceans". To mark the occasion, the IMO Secretary-General announced the establishment of a special trust fund to honour the world's seafarers. The fund would be used to erect an international seafarers' memorial at IMO headquarters, establish a chair of maritime safety and marine pollution prevention at the World Maritime University and provide fellowships to students at selected maritime training institutes worldwide.

Prevention of pollution

On 1 July, an amendment to annex V of the International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships, 1973, as modified by the Protocol of 1978 relating thereto (MARPOL 73/78), made it mandatory for all ships of 400 gross tonnage and above, and every ship certified to carry 15 persons or more, to carry a Garbage Management Plan. The regulation also required ship operators to track their garbage and note what happened to it.

The Marine Environment Protection Committee (MEPC), at its forty-first session (30 March-3 April), agreed to draft mandatory regulations to phase out by 2008, and eventually prohibit, the use of toxic antifouling paints containing organotins, such as tributyl tin. Antifouling paints were used to coat the bottoms of ships to prevent attachment of sealife to the hull, yet persisted in the water, killing sealife, harming the environment and possibly entering the food chain. The discharge into the sea of oily mixtures from any oil tanker or ship over 400 gross tons was prohibited in special areas. The Governments of the countries concerned confirmed that, as required under MARPOL 73/78, adequate facilities for the reception of dirty ballast and washing water from tankers were available throughout the special areas. At its forty-second session (2-6 November), MEPC adopted the draft Protocol on Preparedness, Response and Cooperation to Pollution Incidents by Hazardous and Noxious Substances, 2000 (HNS Protocol). The draft Protocol aimed to provide a global framework for international cooperation in combating major incidents or threats of marine pollution. The Committee agreed to begin a new programme to monitor air pollution from ships and to study greenhouse gas emissions from ships to assess controls that might be needed.

Ship security and safety at sea

On 1 July, the International Safety Management Code became mandatory for all tankers, bulk carriers, gas carriers, passenger ships and cargo high-speed craft of 500 gross tons and above. The Code was made mandatory by means of amendments to the 1974 International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea (SOLAS), which were adopted by IMO in 1994.

At its sixty-ninth session (11-20 May), the Maritime Safety Committee (MSC) adopted a revised annex to the 1979 International Convention on Maritime Search and Rescue (SAR Convention), which was expected to enter into force on 1 January 2000. The revision clarified responsibilities of Governments and placed greater emphasis on the regional approach and coordination between maritime and aeronautical SAR operations. It was hoped that the revised text would be more acceptable to States that had not yet ratified the Convention. As at 1 May, only 57 countries with combined merchant fleets representing less than 50 per cent of world tonnage had ratified it. MSC adopted amendments to SOLAS, dealing with construction, machinery and electrical installations, radiocommunications, and carriage of cargoes, which were expected to enter into force on 1 July 2002.

At its seventieth session (7-11 December), MSC adopted amendments to the Seafarers' Training, Certification and Watchkeeping Code to improve minimum standards of competence of crews, particularly in cargo securing, loading and unloading on bulk carriers. The Code was contained in the 1995 amendments to the 1978 International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers.

MSC approved an advisory circular outlining interim measures for combating unsafe practices associated with the trafficking or transport of migrants by sea. That was intended to supplement work by the United Nations Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which was developing an instrument against transnational crime, including provisions against illegal trafficking of migrants by sea (see PART THREE, Chapter IX).

At a meeting in Accra, Ghana (17-20 February), 19 West and Central African nations agreed on a preliminary draft text of a memorandum of understanding (MOU) and a draft training programme, which would establish a Port State Control (PSC) regime for the region.

On 5 June, an MOU on PSC in the Indian Ocean region was signed by 15 States in Pretoria, South Africa. It aimed at ensuring effective action by the port States concerned in order to prevent the operation of substandard ships, while harmonizing inspections and strengthening cooperation and the exchange of information.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, IMO had 274 staff members; 117 were in the Professional and higher categories and 157 were in the General Service category.

Budget

The IMO Assembly, at its twentieth biennial session in 1997, approved budgetary appropriations of 36,612,200 pounds sterling for the 1998-1999 biennium of which 17,946,100 pounds sterling was for 1998.

Chapter XIV

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) continued to promote the progressive development of intellectual property law; provide global protection systems and services; and implement its Cooperation for Development Programme.

The governing bodies of WIPO and the Unions administered by the organization held their thirty-second series of meetings from 25 to 27 March, and thirty-third series from 7 to 15 September, in Geneva.

During 1998, WIPO membership increased to 171 States, with the accession of Botswana, Dominica, Ethiopia, Grenada, Kuwait and Sao Tome and Principe to the 1967 Convention establishing WIPO, amended in 1979. The number of States adhering to treaties administered by WIPO also increased: as at 31 December 1998, there were 151 States parties to the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property; 133 to the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; and 100 to the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT).

Activities in 1998

Development cooperation

Much of the work of WIPO's regional cooperation bureaux in 1998 was shaped by the 1 January 2000 deadline for developing countries that were members of the World Trade Organization (WTO) to make their national legislation and administrative structures compatible with provisions of the WTO Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS). Legal and technical assistance to those countries intensified with regard to drafting intellectual property laws and regulations and, upon request, WIPO provided comments on the compatibility of existing or draft legislation with the TRIPS Agreement. A record 39 draft laws from 21 developing countries were prepared by WIPO, while some 48 developing countries were provided technical advice on existing or draft laws. In addition to training courses and specialized meetings, high-level, regional policy meetings were convened to build the necessary human resources. Those were complemented by national sessions in developing countries.

In most countries in transition in Central Asia, Central and Eastern Europe and the Baltic region, WIPO assistance focused on both general "awareness building" training and more specific seminars on implementation of TRIPS-related requirements. Some 800 participants from 28 countries attended meetings throughout the region, which promoted a better understanding of the TRIPS Agreement.

One of the main achievements of the WIPO Cooperation for Development Programme in 1998 was a broader dissemination of information on the intellectual property system and the promotion of its potential benefits to a larger, more varied target audience. Some 179 national and regional events were held, which reached over 10,000 participants.

The WIPO Worldwide Academy, created in 1998, was dedicated to optimizing the use of national intellectual property systems by enhancing human resource development programmes at national and regional levels for those working in intellectual property offices, academia and research institutions. In addition to distance learning, the Academy collaborated with academic institutions by negotiating several partnership agreements with universities and intellectual property organizations worldwide. In 1998, some 484 participants attended 60 interregional courses and seminars, and 84 officials attended five Academy sessions in Geneva. An additional 161 individuals participated in study visits.

In July, WIPO held the first international Round Table on Intellectual Property and Indigenous Peoples, which explored the needs of indigenous peoples as holders of traditional knowledge, innovations and culture.

Intellectual property law

By year's end, 51 countries had signed the WIPO Copyright Treaty (with ratification by six States) and 50 had signed the WIPO Performances and Phonogram Treaty (with ratification by four States). For each treaty to enter into force, at least 30 States were required to adhere to it. The treaties aimed at preventing unauthorized access to and use of creations such as books, articles, music, songs, films and images on the Internet or other digital networks.

Regarding the harmonization of patent laws, discussions in the Standing Committee on the Law of Patents were dedicated to the draft Patent Law Treaty, which covered administrative or formal requirements for the filing of patent applications in patent offices worldwide. The Committee decided that the draft Treaty could be negotiated and established by a diplomatic conference scheduled for 2000. It requested that the WIPO secretariat carry out a study on the interface between the draft Treaty and PCT.

In July, the Standing Committee on the Law of Trademarks, Industrial Designs and Geographical Indications dealt with organizational and procedural matters; reviewed issues pertaining to the protection of well-known marks; and gave priority to completing the legal provisions for protecting well-known marks and to the use of trademarks on the Internet.

The Standing Committee on Copyright and Related Rights, meeting in November, discussed the protection of audio-visual performances, databases and the rights of broadcasting organizations. With regard to audio-visual performances, the Committee agreed that, after the WIPO secretariat had collated proposals from members in preparation for regional consultative meetings to be held before May 1999, it would decide whether to recommend to the Assemblies of the WIPO member States to convene a diplomatic conference on a new international instrument. As to the protection of databases, the Committee agreed to pursue discussions and carry out a study on the economic impact of such protection on developing countries.

WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre

The WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre provided a less expensive and speedier alternative to the normal judicial process for the settlement of intellectual property disputes between private entities. In 1998, it continued to provide information to interested circles, making referrals for arbitrators and mediators, drafting rules and organizing training. The staff provided legal information and assistance concerning WIPO contract clauses for intellectual property dispute resolution, which were found, in particular, in licensing agreements. An important patent mediation under the WIPO Rules took place in 1998, and nine other informal referrals were made. The WIPO Mediation Rules were adopted by the European textile design industry as a standard feature of its new Stop Copy Designs scheme.

International registration activities

PCT. In 1998, some 67,000 international applications were filed, representing an increase of 23 per cent over 1997. The WIPO secretariat, acting as a receiving office of international applications, received about 2,200 applications from 49 countries, an increase of nearly 33 per cent over 1997.

Madrid Agreement. In the trademark system under the Madrid Agreement concerning the Registration of Marks and its 1989 Protocol, the landmark number of 20,000 international registrations was overtaken for the first time in 1998, an increase of 5 per cent over 1997.

Hague Agreement. Under the Hague Agreement concerning the International Deposit of Industrial Designs, the number of international deposits of industrial designs in 1998 (3,970) was the same as in 1997; however, renewals in 1998 rose by 11 per cent compared to 1997.

Secretariat

As at 31 December, WIPO employed some 690 staff members representing 71 countries; 240 were in the Professional or higher categories and 450 in the General Service category.

Budget

WIPO's principal sources of income in 1997-1998 were fees paid by private sector users of the international registration services (84 per cent), contributions paid by member States (10 per cent) and the sale of WIPO publications and interest earnings (6 per cent). In March, member States approved a results-based programme and budget for the 1998-1999 biennium. The approved expenditure of about 383 million Swiss francs (SwF) was an increase of 25 per cent over that of the 1996-1997 biennium. The budget surplus was estimated at SwF 17 million. In 1998, WIPO's budgeted income was SwF 208,013,000 and budgeted expenditure was SwF 157,153,000.

Chapter XV

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

In 1998, the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) continued to promote the economic advancement of the rural poor, mainly by improving the productivity of on- and off-farm activities. Established as a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1977 [YUN 1977, p. 1161], IFAD made efforts to design and implement innovative, cost-effective and replicable programmes that had a sustainable impact.

The IFAD Executive Board held three regular sessions (April, September, December), during which it approved loans for 30 projects, of which 10 were for direct supervision by IFAD and 18 were technical assistance grants, one of which was for the establishment of a community empowerment facility as an initiative of the Popular Coalition to Eradicate Hunger and Poverty. The Board approved the Fund's contributions to Bolivia, Côte d'Ivoire, Guyana and Mozambique towards the reduction of the net present value of those countries' debt to IFAD under IFAD's participation in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative. The Board also approved a programme of work for 1999 of $473 million for loans and grants under the Regular Programme and endorsed a budget of nearly $55 million, plus a contingency of $400,000, and a separate amount of $343,000 to fund 1999 consultation meetings.

IFAD membership increased to 161 in 1998 with the accession of Kazakhstan in List C, Sub-List C2, group of member States. As at 31 December 1998, of its member countries, 22 were in List A (developed countries), 12 in List B (oil-exporting developing countries) and 127 in List C (other developing countries), of which 49 were in Sub-List C1 (Africa), 47 in Sub-List C2 (Europe, Asia and the Pacific) and 31 in Sub-List C3 (Latin America and the Caribbean).

Resources

The fourth replenishment of IFAD's resources, completed in 1997, covered the three-year period from 1997 to 2000. Thus, during the course of 1999, member States would need to reach an agreement on funding arrangements that would provide IFAD with adequate resources over the next three years. In that context, the Executive Board in December recommended the establishment of a consultation to review the adequacy of the resources available to IFAD.

Activities

Loans approved in 1998 under IFAD's Regular Programme totalled $413.2 million for 30 projects and $30.2 million, which financed 110 technical assistance grants.

The largest share of Regular Programme lending—25.3 per cent—went to Asia and the Pacific, which received $104.6 million for 7 projects in 21 countries. Western and central Africa received new loans of $80.2 million (19.4 per cent) for 7 projects in 24 countries, while eastern and southern Africa was granted $63.7 million (15.4 per cent) for 5 projects in 20 countries. Loans approved for Latin America and the Caribbean totalled $74 million, representing 17.9 per cent of the annual total, for 5 projects in 28 countries. The Near East and North Africa region (which included Djibouti, Somalia and the Sudan) received $90.7 million, or 22 per cent of 1998 loans, for 6 projects in 20 countries.

In terms of priority-country groups, the countries of sub-Saharan Africa received 34.8 per cent of IFAD's lending in 1998 ($143.9 million). Least developed countries, as defined by the United Nations, received $144.2 million, representing 34.9 per cent of the year's total. Low-income, food-deficit countries, as defined by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, received $327.7 million, or 79.3 per cent of 1998 loans, which was slightly below their average share of about 80 per cent in the past.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, the IFAD secretariat comprised 272 staff, including 111 staff from 46 member States in the Professional and higher categories, and 161 in the General Service category.

Income and expenditure

Total revenue under the Regular Programme in 1998 was $234.4 million, consisting of $187.9 million of investment income and $46.5 million from interest and service charges on loans. Total operating and administrative expenses for the year amounted to $52.2 million, compared with a budget before contingency of $54.9 million. The excess of revenue over expenses for the year, including the effects of foreign exchange rate movements of $181 million, was $363 million.

Chapter XVI

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) continued its activities to promote global prosperity for the sustainable industrial development of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. In 1998, UNIDO's organizational and functional transformation, mandated by the Business Plan for the Future Role and Functions of UNIDO, grouped UNIDO's activities into two main areas: strengthening of industrial capacities and cleaner and sustainable industrial development. Efforts would focus on the least developed countries, especially those in Africa, agro-based industries and cooperation with the private sector, particularly small and medium-scale enterprises (SMEs).

The Industrial Development Board, at its nineteenth session (Vienna, 18-19 May), adopted decisions relating to the implementation of the Business Plan; the Second Industrial Development Decade for Africa (1993-2002); and various administrative matters. The Board's twentieth session (19-20 November) considered implementation of the Business Plan in Africa; the Special Programme for the Industrial Development of Asia and the Pacific; and administrative and budgetary matters.

During the year, UNIDO membership dropped to 168, following the withdrawal of Australia.

Strengthening industrial capacities

The objective of the UNIDO Investment Promotion and Institutional Capacity-building Division was to support developing countries and economies in transition to strengthen their capacities for long-term sustained industrial growth and development, thus contributing to alleviating poverty and creating employment. The Division was responsible for the delivery of nine service modules, including industrial policy formulation and implementation; investment and technology promotion; statistics and information; private sector development; metrology, standardization, certification and accreditation; continuous improvement and quality management; SME policy framework; policies for women's entrepreneurship development; and entrepreneurship development.

Investment and technology promotion

The new strategic orientation in the investment and technology promotion programme mainly focused on the capacity-building needs of targeted countries and institutions. The programme was redirected to stimulate innovation and improve competition at the enterprise and national levels on a sustainable basis. In addition, it broadened the scope of industrial partnerships to include not only joint ventures, licensing agreements and subcontracting exchanges, but new and evolving concepts of strategic alliances and public-private partnerships for infrastructure projects. An important initiative was the consolidation of the Investment Promotion Services and field offices, international technology centres and sub-networks, government institutions related to investment and technology, subcontracting exchanges, investment and technology focal points, industrial associations and private financing of infrastructure offices into an International Industrial Partnership Network. The network functioned as a mechanism to boost the outreach of the programme, inter-relations between investment and technology, and private sector linkages.

In the Sudan, for example, the Industrial Information and Investment Unit was established with UNIDO assistance in the Ministry of Industry as a Government window to reach out to international partners and assist the domestic private sector to implement business and investment activities. The project initiated the fellowship programme on the UNIDO Method for Industrial Development. Four Sudanese trainees were awarded the first UNIDO fellowship programme certificates.

Industrial policies and research

Industrial policy advice was the main focus of operational activities in 1998. UNIDO's new initiative to facilitate cooperation among stakeholders involved in industrial policy-making, the private sector, knowledge-oriented institutions and academia was strengthened by a focus on interactive policy formulation.

The successful formulation of a mid-term industrial strategy for Viet Nam was a major initiative. In addition, a proposal for a new industrial policy was prepared for Ecuador, policy advice was provided to Central and Eastern Europe to accelerate economic transition and Côte d'Ivoire was advised on a draft regime for establishing export processing zones. The success of Thailand's cassava-processing was analysed with a view to replicating best-practice policies in African countries.

Statistics and information networks

A new Statistics and Information Networks Branch was established to focus on issues of information, knowledge products, and the conduits through which both information and knowledge were rendered accessible. In 1998, UNIDO assumed full responsibility for the collection and verification of industrial statistics for all countries not members of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). It collected and harmonized data from 172 developing countries. Information products were developed to client needs. Industrial statistics databases were sold to public and private disseminators and final users, as well as to international brokers, such as the World Bank, the World Trade Organization and OECD.

The UNIDO web site was re-engineered by integrating the data of its public web site with the service modules and global forum activities, which provided an efficient tool for retrieving information on UNIDO and its activities. New integrated programmes, such as the National Industrial Statistics Programme, were developed with the object of building national capacities to generate national industrial statistics. In Peru, an Integrated Industrial and Technological Information Service was established, which emphasized meeting SME needs. A regional seminar (Lusaka, Zambia) focused on information network and data collection using UNIDO's new Internet-based Information Resource Management System.

Private sector development

The Private Sector Development Branch was created to develop and implement technical cooperation programmes to strengthen private sector development, mainly relating to SMEs. It was also responsible for the UNIDO service modules relating to SME policy framework, policy for women's entrepreneurship development and entrepreneurship development. In the light of Business Plan priorities, private sector development was streamlined. At the country level, activities focused on developing a strong SME base as the main pillar of dynamic and resilient economies.

A high share of Branch services centred on Africa, the region most in need of building up the entrepreneurial capacities required to survive and prosper in an increasingly competitive global environment. In addition, across all developing regions, a conscious gender perspective was nurtured to address the needs and constraints of women, in overall policy terms and through specific skill upgrading programmes for women entrepreneurs. The Branch was assigned the lead role for implementing the first case of the UNIDO partnership programme, which brought together private business, industry representative organizations and leading research institutions to support the automotive sector in India.

Quality, standardization and metrology

The Quality Standardization and Metrology Branch provided input for the design of the integrated service modules, two of which—continuous improvement and quality management; and metrology, standardization, certification and accreditation—were under the direct responsibility of the Branch. Its input was designed to strengthen the enabling conditions for competitiveness through building capacities in institutions that supported the private sector, such as quality, standardization and accreditation bodies, restructuring agencies, technical and training centres and laboratories. Those institutions, in turn, offered services to assist enterprises in improving their competitiveness through the continual improvement of their product quality, cost performance and customer satisfaction, as well as in radical restructuring of plants through a major overhaul of strategy, equipment and plant layout. The Branch supported projects in Albania, Bahrain, Romania and Sri Lanka.

Cleaner and sustainable industrial development

The Sectoral Support and Environmental Sustainability Division provided the framework for UNIDO activities aimed at promoting environmentally sustainable industrial development. The Division was responsible for the delivery of eight service modules: environmental policy; the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1992, p. 681] and the 1997 Kyoto Protocol thereto [YUN 1997, p. 1048]; energy efficiency; rural energy development; cleaner production; pollution control and waste management; the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686]; and upgrading agro-industries and related technical skills. The Division collaborated closely with the United Nations Environment Programme.

Consistent with its role as task manager for Chapter 16 of Agenda 21, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670], UNIDO provided a forum for the discussion of biotechnology in its broader socio-economic context. The forum brought together policy-makers, donor agencies, representatives of public interest groups and industry to review periodically new innovations and controversies arising from the application of biotechnology and the commercialization of products derived from it.

In 1998, UNIDO had a pipeline portfolio of more than 100 investment, demonstration and non-investment projects amounting to more than $41 million in 40 countries. The Multilateral Fund for the implementation of the 1987 Montreal Protocol approved for implementation by UNIDO 38 investment projects in 16 countries at a value of $16 million (without overheads) to eliminate 2,563 ozone depletion potential tonnes from aerosols, foams, refrigeration and solvents. At years' end, UNIDO had implemented under the Montreal Protocol 425 projects in 62 countries valued at $159 million to phase out more than 21,000 ozone depletion potential tonnes.

Examples of support to agro-based industries included components covering the food, leather and textile sectors in the integrated programmes for Burkina Faso, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania. The introduction and improvement of agricultural machinery systems to support agricultural processing, especially for basic food processing at the village level, underwent further testing and development.

Secretariat

As at 31 December 1998, UNIDO employed a total of 615 staff members at its headquarters and some 500 personnel in the field.

Budget

The seventh session of the UNIDO General Conference (1997) approved the organization's 1998-1999 regular budget in the amount of $129.5 million, a 20 per cent reduction from the previous biennium. In 1998, new project approvals amounted to $55.3 million, compared with $92.9 million in 1997. Including net changes to ongoing projects, UNIDO mobilized $57.1 million, compared with $106.1 million in 1997.

Chapter XVII

World Trade Organization (WTO)

The World Trade Organization (WTO), established in 1995 as a successor to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), following the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, was the legal and institutional foundation of the multilateral trading system. In 1998, WTO continued to oversee the rules of international trade, settle trade disputes between Governments and organize trade negotiations.

The second WTO Ministerial Conference, which was WTO's highest authority and comprised all of its members, was held in Geneva from 18 to 20 May. The Conference, which met biennially, launched a work programme to develop recommendations regarding implementation of existing WTO Agreements; declared that members would continue the practice of not imposing customs duties on electronic transmissions; and established a comprehensive work programme on global electronic commerce. It also adopted a Ministerial Declaration which, among other things, paid tribute to the fiftieth anniversary of the multilateral trading system and its contribution to growth, employment and stability by promoting the liberalization and expansion of trade and providing a framework for the conduct of international trade relations. It was agreed that the third Ministerial Conference would be held in Seattle, Washington, United States, in November 1999.

WTO's General Council, the body entrusted with carrying out the functions of the organization in the intervals between Conferences, continued to monitor the implementation and operation of the multilateral trading system embodied in the WTO Agreement. In addition to making preparations for the 1998 Ministerial Conference and the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the multilateral trading system, it made arrangements for effective cooperation with other international intergovernmental organizations, paid increased attention to improving the transparency of WTO work, and granted a number of waivers from obligations under the WTO Agreement.

During the year, WTO membership increased to 133 with the accession of Kyrgyzstan.

General activities

The three working groups set up by the 1996 Ministerial Conference [YUN 1996, p. 1441] met during 1998. The Working Group on the Relationships between Trade and Investment, at meetings in March, June, October and November, continued to discuss implications of the relationship between trade and investment for development and economic growth; the economic relationship between trade and foreign direct investment; stocktaking and analysis of existing international instruments and activities regarding trade and investment; and the desirability of possible future initiatives. The Working Group on Transparency in Government Procurement, which met in February, June and October, continued to discuss transparency-related provisions in existing international instruments on government procurement and national procedures and practices. In December, the Working Group on the Interaction between Trade and Competition Policy completed a substantive report on the relationship between the objectives, principles, concepts, scope and instruments of trade and competition policy, and their relationship to development and economic growth; stocktaking and analysis of existing instruments, standards and activities regarding trade and competition policy; and the interaction between trade and competition policy. On 25 July, to facilitate WTO's work on competition policy matters, the WTO secretariat, in cooperation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the World Bank, organized a symposium on Competition Policy and the Multilateral Trading System: Issues for Consideration in the International Community.

WTO's Dispute Settlement Body received notifications regarding consultations and established dispute settlement panels. A review of the Dispute Settlement Understanding, called for within four years of the entry into force of WTO, began. Members were required to decide whether to continue, modify or terminate existing dispute settlements rules and procedures.

During the year, the Trade Policy Review Body carried out sixteen reviews: Australia; Burkina Faso; Canada; Hong Kong, China; Hungary; India; Indonesia; Jamaica; Japan; Mali; Nigeria; Solomon Islands; Trinidad and Tobago; Turkey; Uruguay; and the members of the Southern African Customs Union (Botswana, Lesotho, Namibia, South Africa, Swaziland). A CD-ROM of all trade policy reviews was made available.

The WTO Agreement on Telecommunications Services entered into force on 5 February as the Fourth Protocol to the General Agreement of Trade in Services relating to Basic Telecommunications.

WTO continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries and economies in transition through seminars, workshops, technical missions, briefing sessions and training through trade policy courses.

Trade in goods

The Council for Trade in Goods continued to monitor the implementation of agreements and examined and approved requests for waivers and waiver extensions from members in connection with the transposition of their Schedules into the Harmonized System. It considered import and export procedures and requirements, including customs and border crossing problems; physical movement of consignments (transport and transit); payment, insurance and other financial requirements that affected cross-border movements of goods; the role of automation in facilitating international trade; technical cooperation and development issues relating to simplification of trade procedures; and the relevance of WTO Agreements relating to, or including provisions on, trade facilitation.

The second stage of the four-stage process of the Agreement on Textiles and Clothing to integrate textile and clothing products fully into GATT rules began on 1 January. It represented 17 per cent of the members' imports of textiles and clothing, which brought the total level of integrated products to 33 per cent.

The Committee on Agriculture reviewed progress on the implementation of commitments to the WTO Agreement on Agriculture. The review was based on notifications submitted by members in the areas of market access, domestic support and export subsidies, as well as prohibitions and restrictions. The Committee had reviewed some 730 notifications since 1995. Most of those notifications were on market access, followed by those for export subsidy and others for domestic support.

The Committee on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures reviewed the implementation of the Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures (the "SPS Agreement"), which set out the rights and obligations of members to ensure food safety, protect human health from plant- or animal-spread diseases, or protect plants and animals from pests and diseases. Dispute settlement panels considered complaints on hormone-treated meats and a complaint by Canada against restrictions on salmon by Australia.

The WTO Agreement on Safeguards broke new ground in establishing a prohibition against "grey area" measures, which stipulated that members should not seek, take or maintain any voluntary export restraints, orderly marketing arrangements or any other similar measures that afforded protection. All such pre-existing measures were required to be phased out by year's end. The Agreement also established the substantive and procedural requirements for applying new safeguards measures.

The following groups continued to review relevant legislation and regulations of members in 1998: the Committee on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures, the Committee on Anti-Dumping Practices, the Committee on Technical Barriers to Trade, the Committee on Import Licensing, the Committee on Rules of Origin, the Committee on Customs Valuation, the Working Party on Preshipment Inspection, the Working Party on State Trading Enterprises and the Committee on Trade-Related Investment Measures.

Trade in services

The Council for Trade in Services continued to develop an information exchange programme to facilitate access of all members, in particular developing countries, to information regarding laws, regulations and administrative guidelines and policies affecting trade in services. The assessment of trade in services called for in the General Agreement of Trade in Services (GATS) as a precursor to further negotiations was also considered. The Working Party on GATS Rules continued to negotiate the question of emergency safeguard measures, government procurement and subsidies, as mandated by various provisions of GATS.

Intellectual property

The WTO Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) provided for minimum international standards of protection in the areas of copyright, trademarks, geographical indications, industrial designs, patents, layout-designs of integrated circuits and undisclosed information. It also contained provisions for multilateral dispute settlement. In 1998, the Council for TRIPS, besides overseeing the implementation and operation of the Agreement, held discussions on various aspects of the built-in agenda, including in relation to geographical indications. The TRIPS Council also undertook work on electronic commerce and trade facilitation.

Regional trade agreements

The Committee on Regional Trade Agreements continued to examine individual regional trade agreements (RTAs) and to analyse the systemic implications of RTAs for the multilateral trading system. Progress was made in the form of continued discussion, identification of additional areas and new submissions by members for consideration by the Committee.

Trade and development

In 1998, the activities of the Committee on Trade and Development emphasized the development dimension of trade and trade liberalization. The discussions included review of the application of special provisions in the multilateral trade agreements and related ministerial decisions in favour of developing country members; market access; concerns and problems of small economies; development dimensions of the WTO work programmes on electronic commerce and trade facilitation; technical assistance and training; and possible inputs by the Committee to the third (1999) WTO Ministerial Conference.

Trade and environment

The WTO Committee on Trade and Environment was mandated to identify the relationship between trade measures and environmental measures in order to promote sustainable development and to make appropriate recommendations on whether any modifications of the provisions of the multilateral trading system, compatible with the open, equitable and non-discriminatory nature of the system, were required. The mandate covered goods, services and intellectual property rights and built on progress already achieved in the GATT Group on Environmental Measures and International Trade. The Committee discussed issues relating to trade in services and the environment; relations with non-governmental organizations; and links between multilateral environmental agreements and market access.

Plurilateral agreements

The Agreement on Government Procurement called on parties, no later than three years from its entry into force on 1 January 1996, to undertake further negotiations to improve the Agreement in order to achieve the greatest possible extension of its coverage among parties and eliminate any remaining discriminatory measures and practices. In June, the Committee on Government Procurement agreed that parties would seek to complete negotiations at least on the simplification and improvement of the Agreement by the third Ministerial Meeting in 1999, and would continue to work to eliminate discriminatory measures and practices.

The Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft eliminated all customs duties and other charges on imports of civil aircraft products and repairs, bound them at zero level and required the adoption or adaptation of end-use customs administration. In November, signatories agreed to update information regarding the civil/military identification of products for customs purposes.

International Trade Centre

The International Trade Centre, operated jointly by WTO and UNCTAD (see PART THREE, Chapter IV), continued to undertake technical cooperation activities as a follow-up to the Uruguay Round agreements.

Budget

Beginning in 1996, WTO members' contributions were determined according to their share in total trade in goods, services and intellectual property rights. The WTO budget for 1998 as approved by the General Council, acting on behalf of WTO members, amounted to 116 million Swiss francs.

Secretariat

At the end of 1998, WTO staff numbered some 500.

<sup>2</sup> Egypt and Syria, both of which became Members of the United Nations on 24 October 1945, joined together following a plebiscite held in those countries on 21 February 1958 to form the United Arab Republic. On 13 October 1961, Syria, having resumed its status as an independent State, also resumed its separate membership in the United Nations; it changed its name to the Syrian Arab Republic on 14 September 1971. The United Arab Republic continued as a Member of the United Nations and reverted to the name of Egypt on 2 September 1971.

<sup>3</sup> Through accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany on 3 October 1990, the two German States (both of which became United Nations Members on 18 September 1973) united to form one sovereign State. As from that date, the Federal Republic of Germany has acted in the United Nations under the designation Germany.

<sup>4</sup> On 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided to withdraw from the United Nations. By a telegram of 19 September 1966, it notified the Secretary-General of its decision to resume participation in the activities of the United Nations. On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of that decision and the President invited the representatives of Indonesia to take their seats in the Assembly.

<sup>5</sup> On 16 September 1963, Sabah (North Borneo), Sarawak and Singapore joined with the Federation of Malaya (which became a United Nations Member on 17 September 1957) to form Malaysia. On 9 August 1965, Singapore became an independent State and on 21 September 1965 it became a Member of the United Nations.

<sup>7</sup> Tanganyika was admitted to the United Nations on 14 December 1961, and Zanzibar on 16 December 1963. Following ratification, on 26 April 1964, of the Articles of Union between Tanganyika and Zanzibar, the two States became represented as a single Member the United Republic of Tanganyika and Zanzibar; it changed its name to the United Republic of Tanzania on 1 November 1964.

<sup>8</sup> Yemen was admitted to the United Nations on 30 September 1947 and Democratic Yemen on 14 December 1967. On 22 May 1990, the two countries merged and have since been represented as one Member.

Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice

Charter of the United Nations

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. A further amendment to Article 61 was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1971 and came into force on 24 September 1973. An amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven), including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61, which entered into force on 31 August 1965, enlarged the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27. The subsequent amendment to that Article, which entered into force on 24 September 1973, further increased the membership of the Council from 27 to 54.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council", the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED

to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

Chapter I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 7

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and
4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles:

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.
2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

Chapter II MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Chapter III ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs.

Chapter IV THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Composition

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations.

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Functions and Powers

Article W

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Article 13

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

- a. promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;
- b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1 (b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article U

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.

2. The expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1 (c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.

3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article W

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Chapter V

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Article 23<sup>1</sup>

1. The Security Council shall consist of fifteen Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect ten other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members after the increase of the membership of the Security Council from eleven to fifteen, two of the four additional members shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 25

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

Voting

Article 27<sup>2</sup>

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedure

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

Chapter VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.
2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.
2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.
3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.
2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.
3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.
2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

Chapter VII

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees.

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Chapter VIII

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

Chapter IX

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CO-OPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

- a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;
- b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and
- c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialized agencies, established by inter-governmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies.

Article 58

The Organization shall make recommendations for the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies.

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

Chapter X

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Composition

Article 61<sup>3</sup>

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of fifty-four Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from twenty-seven to fifty-four members, in addition to the members elected in place of the nine members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, twenty-seven additional members shall be elected. Of these twenty-seven additional members, the term of office of nine members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of nine other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

Article 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

2. It may co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations.

Article 64

1. The Economic and Social Council may take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies. It may make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Article 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Anide66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as fall within its competence in connexion with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies.

3. It shall perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present Charter or as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

Voting

Article 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

Article 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 77

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Chapter XI

DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories and, to this end:

- a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;
- b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;
- c. to further international peace and security;
- d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and, when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and
- e. to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighbourliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

Chapter XII

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

- a. to further international peace and security;
- b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;
- c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:

- a. territories now held under mandate;
- b. territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
- c. territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.

2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79 and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas.

Article 84

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

Chapter XIII

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Composition

Article 86

1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:

- a. those Members administering trust territories;
- b. such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
- c. as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.

2. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Functions and Powers

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may:

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- b. accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- c. provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and
- d. take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements.

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Voting

Article 89

- 1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote.
- 2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 90

- 1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Article 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

Chapter XIV

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A State which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

Chapter XV

THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 100

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

Chapter XVI

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfilment of its purposes.

Article 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connexion with the Organization.

3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

Chapter XVII

TRANSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, 30 October 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

Chapter XVIII

AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109<sup>4</sup>

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

Chapter XIX

RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

3. The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English, and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

[1] Amended text of Article 23, which came into force on 31 August 1965.

(The text of Article 23 before it was amended read as follows:

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid in the first instance to the contributions of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.)

[2] Amended text of Article 27, which came into force on 31 August 1965.

(The text of Article 27 before it was amended reads as follows:

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.

3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.)

[3] Amended text of Article 61, which came into force on 24 September 1973.

(The text of Article 61 as previously amended on 31 August 1965 read as follows:

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of twenty-seven Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, nine members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election after the increase in the membership of the Economic and Social Council from eighteen to twenty-seven members, in addition to the members elected in place of the six members whose term of office expires at the end of that year, nine additional members shall be elected. Of these nine additional members, the term of office of three members so elected shall expire at the end of one year, and of three other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.)

- [4] Amended text of Article 109, which came into force on 12 June 1968.

(The text of Article 109 before it was amended reads as follows:

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.)

Statute of the International Court of Justice

Article 1

The International Court of Justice established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

Chapter I

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article W

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lotto to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article U

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy dispatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.

2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.

3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.

4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.

5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

Chapter II

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.

2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

- a. the interpretation of a treaty;
- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
- d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
- d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

Chapter III
PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents.

2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.

3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.

2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.

5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.

2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.
3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.
2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.
3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.
4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.
5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.
2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.
2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

Chapter IV

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.
2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.
2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.
3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.
4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

Chapter V

AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.

Appendix IV

Agendas of United Nations principal organs in 1998

This appendix lists the items on the agendas of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council during 1998. For the Assembly, the column headed "Allocation" indicates the assignment of each item to plenary meetings or committees.

Agenda item titles have been shortened by omitting mention of reports, if any, following the subject of the item. Where the subject matter of an item is not apparent from its title, the subject is identified in square brackets; this is not part of the title.
