of the Special Rapporteur on the study on treaties, agreements and other constructive arrangements between States and indigenous populations, Miguel Alfonso Martinez (Cuba), would not be available to the Subcommission in 1998.

Subcommission action. On 21 August [dec. 1998/107], the Subcommission requested the Special Rapporteur to submit, not later than 31 March 1999, a new version of his final report. It asked the Secretary-General to assist him.

Protection of indigenous heritage

Commission action. On 9 April [dec. 1998/103], the Commission on Human Rights, taking note of Subcommission resolution 1997/13 [YUN 1997, p. 697], endorsed the Subcommission's recommendation that the High Commissioner organize a seminar on the draft principles and guidelines for the protection of the heritage of indigenous people with the participation of Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece), the Special Rapporteur on the topic, representatives of Governments, UN bodies and organizations, specialized agencies, indigenous peoples' organizations and indigenous persons. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/277 of 30 July, approved that action.

Indigenous land rights

Report of Special Rapporteur. In July, the Special Rapporteur on indigenous people and their relationship to land, Mrs. Daes, submitted a progress report [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/15] regarding a working paper she had submitted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 698]. She noted that, pursuant to Subcommission resolution 1997/12 [ibid.], comments and suggestions on the working paper had been solicited from Governments, indigenous peoples and others in March 1998. The Special Rapporteur summarized responses from four States and 11 indigenous peoples' organizations or associated organizations. Because so few replies had been received and because the responses had been received so late, it had been impossible to prepare the final working paper.

Subcommission action. On 21 August [res. 1998/21], the Subcommission asked the Secretary-General to transmit the Special Rapporteur's progress report and the preliminary working paper to Governments, indigenous peoples' and intergovernmental organizations and NGOs for their comments, data and suggestions. The Special Rapporteur was asked to prepare her final working paper on the basis of comments and information received and to submit it to the Working Group on Indigenous Populations and to the Subcommission in 1999.

Migrant workers

The five-member working group of intergovernmental experts on the human rights of migrants, established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 698], at its second session (Geneva, 16-20 February) [E/CN.4/1998/76], analysed replies to its questionnaire on migrants and human rights received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The group noted that more than one third of the 40 States that responded recognized the existence of prejudice, xenophobia or racial discrimination against migrants. It concluded that it required more time to study problems resulting from lack of adherence to international standards concerning migrants. Annexed to the group's report was a programme of work consistent with the group's mandate to enable it to develop a set of recommendations to strengthen the promotion, protection and implementation of the human rights of migrants.

On 9 April [res. 1998/16], the Commission on Human Rights decided to reconvene the working group to meet for two periods of five working days prior to its 1999 session. It asked the group to report in 1999. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/244 of 30 July, endorsed the Commission's action.

On 20 August [res. 1998/10], the Subcommission appealed to Governments to establish legal and other forums and institutions to address the problems of migrants and to provide access to them for migrant workers. It considered that it would be useful for Governments to benefit from the experience of representatives of migrant workers' organizations.

The working group, at its third session (Geneva, 23-27 November) [E/CN.4/1999/80], considered a working paper prepared by one of its members containing an analysis of responses to a questionnaire [E/CN.4/AC.46/1998/5]. The main premise of the paper was that the basic human rights of migrants were violated because they were a vulnerable group. Despite the level of awareness and concern on the part of States, very few of them had ratified the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 45/158 [YUN 1990, p. 594] (for information on the status of the Convention, see preceding chapter). At its third session, the group was briefed by members of treaty bodies, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and the secretariat about their work in relation to migrant issues.

Family reunification

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/143 by recorded vote (103-2-66) [agenda item 110 (b)].

Respect for the right to universal freedom of travel and the vital importance of family reunification

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Stressing that, as stated in the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, family reunification of documented migrants is an important factor in international migration and that remittances by documented migrants to their countries of origin often constitute a very important source of foreign exchange and are instrumental in improving the well-being of relatives left behind,

Recalling its resolution 52/121 of 12 December 1997,

1. Once again calls upon all States to guarantee the universally recognized freedom of travel to all foreign nationals legally residing in their territory;

2. Reaffirms that all Governments, in particular those of receiving countries, must recognize the vital importance of family reunification and promote its incorporation into national legislation in order to ensure protection of the unity of families of documented migrants;

3. Calls upon all States to allow, in conformity with international legislation, the free flow of financial remittances by foreign nationals residing in their territory to their relatives in the country of origin;

4. Also calls upon all States to refrain from enacting, and to repeal if it already exists, legislation intended as a coercive measure that discriminates against legal migrants, whether individuals or groups, by adversely affecting family reunification and the right to send financial remittances to relatives in the country of origin;

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/143:

In favour Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Persons with disabilities

On 17 April [res. 1998/31], the Commission on Human Rights called on the Secretary-General to maintain the integrity of UN programmes relating to persons with disabilities. Welcoming the renewal of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on disability of the Commission for Social Development in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1114], the Commission on Human Rights invited him to address it in 2000. The Commission asked all special rapporteurs to take into account the situation and human rights of persons with disabilities and asked UN organizations and specialized agencies to address the problems that existed in creating equal opportunities for persons with disabilities at all levels. Governments were urged to implement the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, contained in General Assembly resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 978]. The Commission recommended that OHCHR take account of information on legislation affecting the human rights of persons with disabilities collected by the Special Rapporteur. The Secretary-General was asked to make available in 1999 the latest report of the Special Rapporteur on his monitoring of the Standard Rules. (See also PART THREE, Chapter IX.)

Chapter III

Human rights violations

Alleged violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in a number of countries were examined in 1998 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as well as by special rapporteurs, special representatives of the Secretary-General and independent experts appointed to examine the allegations.

General aspects

In accordance with a procedure established by Economic and Social Council resolution 1503(XLVIII) [YUN 1970, p. 530] to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Working Group on Situations of the Commission on Human Rights, established by Council resolution 1990/41 [YUN 1990, p. 648], in closed meetings, considered the human rights situations in Chad, the Gambia, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Paraguay, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone and Yemen. The Commission discontinued consideration of the situations in Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Paraguay, Peru, Saudi Arabia and Yemen.

On 20 August [E/CN.4/1999/4 (res. 1998/3)], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 21 to 3, firmly condemned the murders since 1989 of seven human rights activists and called on the Governments concerned not to leave crimes committed against human rights defenders unpunished, to allow and facilitate inquiry, and to ensure judgement by a civil tribunal and punishment of the perpetrators as well as compensation to victims' families. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to make inquiries about the security of persons listed in an annex to the Subcommission's resolution and to report thereon in 1999. She was also asked to transmit the resolution to all States.

The Subcommission invited the General Assembly to adopt the draft declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

Africa

Algeria

By a secret ballot of 10 votes to 10, with 4 abstentions, the Subcommission, on 19 August [E/CN.4/1999/4], rejected a draft resolution condemning violence against the residents of Algeria.

Burundi

Commission action. On 24 April [E/1998/23 (res. 1998/82)], the Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the conflict in Burundi to end the violence and killing and exhorted them to facilitate humanitarian assistance operations. It also called on them to search for a lasting peace. The Government was called on to continue efforts to ensure that established legal safeguards for human rights and international human rights standards were fully respected, and to put an end to impunity. Expressing concern at the large number of killings and injuries caused by anti-personnel landmines, the Commission called on the Government to prepare a programme of mine clearance and a public-awareness campaign. The Commission expressed support for the implementation by the High Commissioner for Human Rights of a programme of assistance designed for the armed forces and police in the area of human rights and legal assistance. It decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1998 and a report to the Commission in 1999. He was also asked to give his work a gender-specific dimension. By decision 1998/274 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Rapporteur.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In October [A/53/490], the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report prepared by Special Rapporteur Paulo Sergio Pinheiro (Brazil), based on his visit to the country (21 August-4 September).

The Special Rapporteur observed that the political situation was still very tense, particularly in Nyanza Lac, south of Bujumbura. In the province of Kayanza, there had occurred several security incidents said to have been committed by large groups of 1,000 to 2,000 well-armed rebels. Although it was alleged that the incidents led to the displacement of some 30,000 people in the province, economic life had recovered. The situation in Cibitoke had improved over the past six months, thus enabling relief organizations to assist refugees. Following an outbreak on 2 August of the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, refugees consisting of Congolese, Banyamulenge and Burundians living in Kivu sought sanctuary in Burundi. By mid-September, their number exceeded 6,000.

The Special Rapporteur considered that the most serious human rights violations continued to take place during attacks against civilians and during military operations or rebel attacks or following clashes between the army and rebels in the western provinces. He had received allegations of retaliation by elements of the armed forces regarding families whose relatives were involved with rebel groups.

After five years of war, Burundi had the largest internally displaced population of any country of the Great Lakes region. Over 500,000 people, some 11 per cent of the population, were squatting in camps and makeshift sites, mostly in the western provinces of Cibitoke, Bubanza, Rural Bujumbura, Bururi and Makamba. Women constituted the majority of those at the sites of displaced persons and regrouped populations, where the main problem was difficult access to food and water. Conditions of detention had worsened from overcrowding and lack of resources allocated to the prison administration. Disastrous hygiene and sanitation conditions, combined with overpopulation, caused a high mortality rate among detainees. Severe malnutrition and other pathologies also affected the majority of inmates. The Special Rapporteur received allegations of torture of people detained in cachots (communal detention centres) in Bujumbura or in the provinces, and during interviews he saw signs of torture. The prison conditions of at least 260 detainees under sentence of death in Bujumbura concerned the Special Rapporteur as they were housed in two cells under inhumane conditions. He expressed concern about the lack of progress in the trial of military personnel accused of involvement in the attempted coup d'etat in 1993 and the assassination of the President [YUN 1993, p. 262]. A ban on arms, an embargo on fuel imports—except for a limited contingent allocated to humanitarian activities—a ban on commercial flights to and from Burundi and a ban on exports had caused a deterioration in living conditions. At the same time, national activities in public health and education had been hampered by the lack of equipment and medical supplies.

The Special Rapporteur urged the implementation of urgent reforms in the judicial system, such as ending impunity and reorganizing the functions of the army and security forces under distinct structures. Unhindered access by the population to education, justice and the armed forces should be ensured. The Special Rapporteur appealed for suspension of the death sentences (more than 250) and the life sentences pronounced in the criminal chambers, at least until the peace negotiations had been completed and an independent and impartial judicial system established. He recommended ending arbitrary detention and limiting periods of preventive detention in cachots; limiting preventive detentions for long periods, ending unlawful detentions and increasing the number of judicial inspections; giving serious attention to vulnerable persons, such as infants, minors, women and ill prisoners; ameliorating conditions of detention; and eliminating cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment. The Special Rapporteur urged respect for the standards of international humanitarian law and human rights, which prohibited indiscriminate attacks against civilians during military operations, and appealed to rebel groups to refrain from perpetrating attacks against civilians. He was of the view that the establishment of an international tribunal might help address collective fears and memories of genocide by acknowledging past crimes and defining individual responsibility for them.

The international community should give priority to a genuine ceasefire; make financial commitments to the legal assistance programme and the judicial system; secure financial support for the activities of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); assist with medical and food aid for prisoners; and support the work of local non-governmental organizations (NGOs). UN agencies should continue to support local communities through income-generating activities, increased participation of women in economic and social life and increased food security. The report also contained a breakdown of affected persons by province and detention statistics as at 27 August.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 28 to 7, with 18 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 21 April [res. 1998/61], welcomed the commitment of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) to a process of democratization; establishment of the Constitutional Commission and the planned presentation of a new constitution; the commitment of the Government to reform the judicial system; efforts taken to subordinate the armed forces to the effective rule of law; the convening of an interministerial seminar on the place of human rights in the National Reconstruction Strategy; and the Government's willingness to include human rights education in primary and secondary school curricula. It expressed concern at the human rights situation, particularly in the east of the country; at the continuing violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms; at the refusal to allow the Special Rapporteur to visit the DRC; and at the large numbers of refugees and displaced persons in the DRC who disappeared between 1994 and 1997. The Commission called on the Government to implement its commitment to democratization, respect for human rights and the rule of law; continue with its timetable for holding free and fair elections; ensure respect for freedom of opinion and expression; work closely and strengthen further its cooperation with the office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in Kinshasa; and promote human rights awareness. It asked the international community to support the High Commissioner's office in Kinshasa. The Commission expressed serious concern at the circumstances that obliged the Secretary-General to withdraw the Investigative Team set up under his auspices (see PART ONE, Chapter II); noted that the Team would prepare a report based on its work to date in the DRC and on other available sources; requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly and the Commission in 1999; and demanded that the Government cooperate fully with the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner and the Commission.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1998, to report to the Commission in 1999 and to maintain a gender perspective in seeking and analysing information. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Rapporteur by decision 1998/260 of 30 July.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/53/365], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of Special Rapporteur Roberto Garreton (Chile), describing the human rights situation in the DRC up to 31 August. The Special Rapporteur had received no reply from the Government to his request to visit the country, nor had he received a response to 37 communications transmitting 236 complaints involving some 3,500 people. In Brussels, Geneva and Paris, he interviewed immediate victims, relatives of victims, exiles, NGO leaders, political party members, priests, ministers and religious leaders, journalists and lawyers.

Ethnic wars continued to rage in North Kivu, affecting the entire population, including Hutu refugees and Congolese ethnic groups. Further complicating the situation was the presence of Rwandan Tutsis and Ugandan rebels, Interahamwe and Burundians. Serious clashes and burning of property resulted in numerous deaths, injuries and displaced persons in the area.

On 2 August, some Banyamulenge and Rwandan soldiers rebelled and announced that the Congolese Armed Forces (FAC) would depose President Laurent-Désiré Kabila on the grounds of corruption, nepotism and dictatorial bearing. The uprising resulted in numerous deaths and injuries. The rebels established the Congolese Movement for Democracy, which later became the Rassemblement Congolais pour la démocratie (RCD), whose members were overwhelmingly Tutsi. Within RCD there were differences between Rwandan nationals, who favoured deposing the President and recovering their lost power, and democratic factions that favoured a reconciliation among the Congolese people and the establishment of a democratic regime. The Government's response was to incite hatred of the Tutsis, which prompted civilians to become involved in the conflict. At the President's request, the armed forces of Angola and Zimbabwe intervened in support of his regime; thus, with Rwanda and Uganda openly backing the rebels, there were at least five countries involved. Violations of international humanitarian law attributed to the Government included a policy of ethnic cleansing; violence to life and summary executions; arbitrary detention; sexual violence; and the recruitment of children for war activities. Violations attributed to rebel forces included violence to life and summary executions; arbitrary detention and deportation; torture of prisoners; sexual violence; the obstruction of humanitarian assistance; and the forced recruitment of civilians, including children.

Regarding human rights and democracy, the President continued to exercise full executive and legislative powers. All political parties were still banned, and, since May 1997, a legal state of war had been in effect. There was no visibility to the Ministry of Human Rights established in 1996. In March, a draft Constitution was made public, which established a centralized system; introduced English (unknown by the non-Tutsi ethnic groups) as the national language; left unresolved the problem of the nationality of the Banyamulenge and relocated peoples; and eliminated the post of Prime Minister. As to the armed forces, the Chief of Staff continued to be a despised Rwandan Commander. FAC was assigned by the various Governments to eliminate their respective rebels. However, internecine struggles developed within FAC, which took their toll in lives. Although the Government denied it, children were a strong presence in the ranks of FAC.

It was alleged that in July there were still some 100,000 refugees in hiding in North and South Kivu. There were cases of refoulement. The war paralysed UNHCR efforts to repatriate Congolese refugees from the United Republic of Tanzania.

Violations of the right to life included the death penalty, enforced disappearances, arbitrary deprivation of life through abuse of power shielded by impunity and death by torture. Violations of the right to physical and psychological integrity included the torture of detainees. The right to security of person had improved since the change of leadership in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 78], although there were signs of deterioration, especially in the Kivu region. Liberty of person had been very seriously compromised and there were irregularities in the right to due process. The right to freedom of information was seriously threatened, as newspaper sellers were frequently detained by soldiers and Congolese newspapers were not allowed out of the country. There was no pluralism on the State-run radio and television stations and private radio stations were frequently closed or suspended. In addition to banning political associations, human rights NGOs had been ransacked, threatened, suspended, banned and their leaders attacked and imprisoned. In the area of economic, social and cultural rights, there was no report of measures taken to ensure the right to health, civil servants had not been paid and parents had to pay for education. It was estimated that some 10,000 children were in the military and there was no improvement regarding the rights of women and the issue of cultural discrimination, particularly in education. The Special Rapporteur continued to receive complaints about women and girls being raped in prison and, since the insurgency began, in connection with the war.

The Special Rapporteur endorsed the recommendations of the Secretary-General's Investigative Team [S/1998/581] (see PART ONE, Chapter II), particularly regarding expanding the competence of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (see PART FOUR, Chapter II) or the establishment of another international criminal tribunal to include the actions alluded to in the Team's report committed by any person, regardless of nationality, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1997. He advocated witness protection measures. He suggested that the Government should end all persecution of political leaders, human rights advocates, journalists and opposition members, and should stop operating the military court and its practice of ordering summary executions. Above all, the Government had to establish democracy. The report listed Congolese NGOs that provided information to the Special Rapporteur and international instruments to which the DRC was a party. It also summarized specific incidents of human rights violations.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1999/31], the Special Rapporteur described information he had received up to 31 December, based on testimonies received from direct victims, relatives of victims, exiles, priests, ministers, religious leaders, journalists and lawyers. In addition to information contained in his September report, the Special Rapporteur stated that on 2 September President Kabila recognized that Rwandan and Ugandan troops had committed massacres against Bahutu refugees. The Foreign Minister added that the Government would accept UN investigations.

After the failure of the Constituent and Legislative Assembly, further changes were made to the draft Constitution without national debate. In practice, the President retained his broad-ranging powers, as confirmed in the latest draft. After some temporary relief from political repression, on 14 and 19 December 30 political leaders were arrested.

By 31 December, the rebellion that began in August had taken over about one third of the country. The Special Rapporteur described developments and stated that both parties to the armed conflict had disregarded the rules of international humanitarian law, particularly the rebels. Before and during the conflict, very serious violations were committed regarding the rights to life, physical and psychological integrity, liberty of person, freedom of association, due process and freedom of expression and opinion. No efforts were made to end cultural discrimination against women and there were no programmes to guarantee economic, social and cultural rights. The situation of human rights advocates was particularly serious. Hopeful signs included the establishment of the Ministry of Human Rights and its recognition of abuses by some elements in uniform longing for the Mobutu regime; the announcement of human rights education programmes; the Government's announcement on 10 December that it would start cooperating with the Special Rapporteur; the announcement that the DRC would ratify Additional Protocol II to the 1949 Geneva Conventions [YUN 1977, p. 706], as well as other instruments; the announced translation into official languages of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535]; and the announcement by the Minister of Justice of planned prison reform.

In addition to the recommendations made in his previous report, the Special Rapporteur proposed trying all acts of brutality by an international court; establishing human rights advisory services in the DRC; ending military assistance and the sale of weapons to both sides in the conflict; establishing a multinational military force to separate the DRC from its neighbours to the east in order to establish peace and protect civilians; and expanding the representation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). He called on the international community to find refuge for persecuted persons and victims of the conflict in countries outside the region.

Annexed to the report was a list of Congolese non-governmental and international organizations and Congolese political parties contacted by the Special Rapporteur, international instruments to which the DRC was a party and summaries of cases of human rights violations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/160 without vote [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Mindful that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/61 of 21 April 1998,

Having considered the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and taking note of the report of the Investigative Team of the Secretary-General charged with investigating serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

1. Expresses its deep concern at the impact of the current conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo on the situation of human rights in that country and its adverse effects on the civilian population;

2. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

3. Expresses its concern at the deterioration of the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, aggravated by the ongoing conflict in the country and the continuing violations of human rights and international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in particular cases of summary and arbitrary execution, disappearances, torture, beatings, arbitrary arrest and detention without trial, sexual violence against women and children and the use of child soldiers;

4. Urges all parties to the conflict to take the necessary measures to prevent all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by forces under their command and to abstain from inciting ethnic hatred and from persecuting civilians on the grounds of nationality or ethnicity;

5. Supports all regional efforts aiming at a peaceful settlement of the conflict;

6. Calls upon the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to comply with its obligations under international human rights instruments to which the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a party and to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms;

7. Stresses the need for the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to assist and protect the civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons within the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

8. Encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to continue to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross unhindered access to all persons detained within the territory of the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calls upon other parties to allow access also;

9. Stresses the need to lift restrictions on the work of non-governmental organizations and to ensure respect for the right to freedom of opinion and expression and for the right to freedom of association;

10. Recalls and welcomes the expressed commitment of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to a process of democratization, leading, through the establishment of democratic institutions and the holding of elections, to the creation of a State based on the rule of law and respect for human rights, including representative and accountable government, and calls upon the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to create conditions that would allow for a democratization process that is genuine and inclusive and fully reflects the aspirations of the people of the country;

11. Welcomes the establishment by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo of the Constitutional Commission, inaugurated on 5 November 1997, and its elaboration of a new draft Constitution, and encourages a broad and sustained public debate on the principles of the new Constitution before the holding of a referendum;

12. Welcomes also the expressed commitment of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to reforming and restoring the efficacy of the judicial system, and calls upon the Government to take all necessary measures in this regard;

13. Recalls the report of the Investigative Team of the Secretary-General charged with investigating serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and calls upon the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to investigate, without delay, the allegations contained in the report of the Investigative Team and to bring to justice any persons found to have been involved in massacres, atrocities or other violations of international humanitarian law;

14. Regrets the lack of cooperation of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo with the Special Rapporteur, and urges the Government to allow the Special Rapporteur to visit the country;

15. Welcomes the activities of the Human Rights Field Office in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to extend full cooperation to its operations;

16. Calls upon the international community to provide assistance in the field of human rights, in particular to the Human Rights Field Office with a view to reinforcing its capacity to continue to monitor and report on the situation of human rights throughout the Democratic Republic of the Congo, to support the efforts of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo towards strengthening the rule of law and the administration of justice, and to provide the necessary assistance with respect to building national capacity, especially to support and strengthen non-governmental human rights organizations;

17. Underlines the need to take human rights considerations fully into account in any settlement of the conflict;

18. Decides to continue to examine the situation of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and requests the Special Rapporteur to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

Equatorial Guinea

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In January [E/CN.4/1998/73], Special Rapporteur Alejandro Artucio (Uruguay) presented a report on the progress of democratization and the human rights situation in Equatorial Guinea following his visit there (30 November-7 December 1997).

The Special Rapporteur described the economic and social situation and noted that extreme poverty, which formed an obstacle to human development, was undermining human rights. Regarding political rights and activities, he observed that there was considerable delay in implementing the agreements contained in the "Document on the Evaluation of the National Pact and Legislative Agreements 1997", which gave rise to great expectations of a decisive step forward in the process of democratization and in the conditions of governability, and in the "Code of Conduct for the political parties legalized in the Republic of Equatorial Guinea", which contained articles intended to foster the development of democracy and political freedoms. There had been no substantial changes in the judicial structure that would enable the institutions to function more democratically. Laws, decrees and governmental acts were not published periodically and regularly. The practice of unjustified detention continued, as did violations of the rights to security, integrity and freedom. There were cases of torture and ill-treatment, although the number of incidents had declined. Virtually no prisoners or detainees were being held on political or ideological grounds. Efforts were made to eliminate discrimination against women.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that Equatorial Guinea publish laws, decrees and governmental acts; accede to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in resolutions 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813] and 2106 A (XX) [YUN 1965, p. 440], respectively; improve the functioning and training of the judiciary; instruct security forces not to make arbitrary arrests and to respect the right of the individual to security, integrity and freedom; end torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and impose penalties on those responsible; and promote conditions to enable all people to enjoy economic, social and cultural rights. He called on the Government and opposition to fulfil the provisions of the legislative agreements. The Special Rapporteur considered that the Government should be informed that the progress achieved, although commendable, was not sufficient to warrant the Commission on Human Rights reducing its monitoring of the situation. Thus, he recommended that international supervision, together with technical and advisory services, be maintained.

The Special Rapporteur again visited Equatorial Guinea (22-25 March) [E/CN.4/1998/737 Add.1] to obtain information about villages on the island of Bioko most affected by extremely violent incidents, which began on 21 January. The events involved a group of armed civilians who attacked military or police positions in Moka, Lubá and Banapá, leaving several persons dead or wounded. Large numbers of soldiers, members of the security forces and persons not in uniform occupied the villages where the attackers took refuge and others where there was known opposition to the Government from the Bubi ethnic group. Instances of looting, as well as the harassment of civilians, followed. The Government restored normality by warning that punishment for abuse of authority or misconduct would be draconian. During the days that followed, some 550 people were arrested and imprisoned, three of whom died in custody and 110 remained in prison as at 1 April. The Special Rapporteur concluded that the January incidents were confined to Bioko, where institutional and social life had since returned to normal, and that during the crackdown by the military and security forces, serious human rights violations were committed. He pointed to the underlying ethnic problems and the danger of their aggravation as the groups most prominent in the events belonged to the Bubi ethnic group, which felt it was discriminated against by the dominant ethnic group, the Fang. He recommended that the Government work to integrate all the ethnic groups.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 1998/71], the Commission encouraged Equatorial Guinea to continue to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms. It expressed concern over the continuing conditions that led to human rights violations and abuses, including cases of prolonged incommunicado detention. The Commission called on the Government to take measures to avoid ethnic discrimination, and to guarantee transparency and respect for the electoral process in the 1998 legislative elections. It called on all parties to continue to contribute to the progress of the democratic process. It asked the High Commissioner for Human Rights to provide technical assistance to support the Government's efforts to establish a Centre for the Promotion of Human Rights and Democracy, which aimed to strengthen national capacities in that regard, and called on the international community to contribute to the relevant fund. The High Commissioner and the Special Rapporteur were asked to continue the technical assistance programme in partnership with the Government and in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme and other UN agencies concerned with human rights.

The Commission renewed the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to report in 1999. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision and its requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General by decision 1998/268 of 30 July.

Further report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur visited Equatorial Guinea (1-12 December) [E/CN.4/1999/41], including the island of Bioko. He noted a disturbing lack of progress towards democratization and stated that, following the events of 21 January, there had been a setback with regard to human rights violations affecting not only individual guarantees but also the institutional and social life of the country. He reiterated the Commission's concern over deficiencies and conditions that led to human rights violations and abuses. The Special Rapporteur recommended that intensive technical assistance be granted by OHCHR. He stated that it did not appear that the independence of the judiciary had been strengthened or that functional deficiencies had been remedied. The proceedings for recognition of human rights NGOs, which had applied to the Ministry of the Interior for recognition several years ago, were still at a standstill.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government should publish laws, decrees and governmental acts; guarantee the independence of the judiciary; limit military courts to trying military offences by military personnel; ensure the transparency of the electoral process and improve the State's legislative and administrative structure; recognize human rights NGOs; accede to the Conventions on torture and on the elimination of racial discrimination; eliminate discrimination against women; and ensure economic, social and cultural rights. He also recommended that the authorities end acts of torture or ill-treatment and punish those responsible. He proposed that Equatorial Guinea be provided with the advisory services and technical cooperation it had requested, especially in the administration of justice and strengthening the capacity of NGOs and other civil society groups.

Nigeria

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/1998/62], Special Rapporteur Soli Jehangir Sorabjee (India) submitted a report on the human rights situation in Nigeria, based on information provided by the Government, individuals, NGOs, intergovernmental organizations, individual communications, the Nigerian and international media and other special rapporteurs, in the absence of government approval to carry out a fact-finding mission. The report described Nigeria's historical background and its international obligations.

The Special Rapporteur observed widespread violation of basic human rights, including: absence of legal protection of human rights; lack of independence and authority of the judiciary; insufficient protection of the right to life; imposition of the death penalty, including on persons below 18 years of age; violation on a massive scale of the right to liberty and security; hostage-taking; unwillingness to release political prisoners, trade union leaders, human rights advocates and journalists; absence of due process and fair trial in criminal trials; long delays in the disposal of criminal cases; harsh prison conditions; suppression of freedom of expression and freedom of the press; violations of freedom of assembly, association and movement; government failure to protect the human rights of the Ogoni people; indifference towards the right to development and to a satisfactory environment; violation of women's rights; regular suppression, harassment and detention of government critics; and failure to cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights.

The Special Rapporteur welcomed the establishment of the National Child Rights Implementation Committee and the preparation of a National Plan of Action for children. Nonetheless, provisions of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561], were not complied with, especially regarding the administration of juvenile justice. Measures had been taken to implement the transitional programme for return to civilian rule but there had been delays in the timetable of the programme. In addition, there were serious misgivings about the programme's credibility because of the non-inclusive nature of the process and the introduction of a decree enabling the head of State to remove duly elected local council representatives from their positions. The National Human Rights Commission had made salutary suggestions about human rights education and the establishment of committees to inspect prisons.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations to the Government, most of which were repeated by the Commission (see below). In addition, he recommended determining criminal charges in regular courts of law; conducting court proceedings in public; abolishing the death penalty; removing obstacles to the speedy disposal of criminal trials; compensating persons whose human rights had been violated; ensuring women's rights; complying with the Convention on the Rights of the Child; alleviating the plight of the Ogoni people; establishing an independent agency to determine all aspects of environmental damage due to oil exploration; strengthening the National Human Rights Commission; ratifying the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; and permitting international observers to attend criminal trials for alleged crimes of treason and other crimes involving the death penalty or long-term imprisonment.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 1998/64], the Commission, by a roll-call vote of 28 to 9, with 16 abstentions, welcomed the commitment by the Government of Nigeria to civilian rule, multi-party democracy and freedom of assembly, press and political activity by 1 October. Expressing deep concern at continuing grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the Commission called on the Government to observe human rights and fundamental freedoms by, among other things, respecting the right to life; releasing all political prisoners, trade union leaders, human rights advocates and journalists; and guaranteeing freedom of the press, freedom of opinion and association and respect for the rights of individuals. Nigeria was urged to: repeal decrees that ousted the jurisdiction of the courts; hold prompt and fair trials in conformity with international human rights standards; treat prisoners and provide conditions in accordance with recognized international standards; abide by its obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, pp. 419 & 423], and other human rights instruments; restore democratic government without delay, ending rule by decree and permitting observers during transition; ensure the independence of the National Human Rights Commission; implement its interim undertakings to the Secretary-General and respond to the recommendations of his mission to Nigeria [YUN 1996, p. 684]; cooperate with the Commission on Human Rights; and implement all recommendations of the Special Rapporteur.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for a further year and asked him to submit an interim report to the Assembly in 1998 and to report to the Commission in 1999. It also asked him to keep a gender perspective in mind when seeking and analysing information and requested the Secretary-General to assist him. By decision 1998/262 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed those actions.

Further reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/53/366], the Secretary-General transmitted an interim report of the Special Rapporteur. Since his last report, he had addressed urgent action communications to the Government on behalf of 157 individuals, to which he had received no reply.

Following the sudden death on 8 June of the head of State, the Provisional Ruling Council appointed General Abdulsalami Abubakar to replace him. General Abubakar outlined a plan to restore civilian rule by the end of May 1999 and took steps to establish a representative Govern-merit. On 8 September, the Government decided to release 20 detainees who were suspected supporters of the Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People. Several prisoners were released who were serving sentences after trial by military tribunals and by processes that had fallen short of international fair trial guarantees; however, others remained in detention. Dismal prison conditions continued, as did reports of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Female genital mutilation was reportedly still practised on an estimated 50 per cent of the population, and marital rape was unrecognized by law. Several provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, particularly those relating to the administration of justice and the institutionalization of children, were violated.

The National Human Rights Commission organized a training seminar on police powers and responsibilities/the rights and duties of citizens (Abuja, 28-29 July). Its plan of action targeted the general public, as well as schoolteachers, community leaders, youth and the mass media, for human rights education. The Special Rapporteur made recommendations regarding the holding of free and fair elections; the release of political prisoners, trade union leaders, human rights advocates, journalists and those serving sentences after trial by military tribunals; abolition of the death penalty; prison conditions; women's and children's rights; and cooperation with him.

In a November addendum to his report [A/53/366/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur stated that in September the Government had invited him to visit Nigeria. During his visit (23 November-1 December), he held discussions with government officials, NGO representatives and individuals from civil society [E/CN.4/1999/36]. The political atmosphere and the administration had changed noticeably; there was transparency and willingness to open up to outside agencies and persons and general acceptance of criticism. The transition process was committed to return to civilian rule and to restore democracy. The Independent National Electoral Commission was engaged in ensuring that elections were free and fair. A constitution was being drawn up, taking into account the views of various persons and parties, before the planned handover to civilian rule on 29 May 1999. The human rights situation had improved, owing to the release of detainees, the repeal of decrees restricting freedom of assembly and association, improvement in women's participation in the political process and important initiatives by the National Human Rights Commission. The appointment of justices to Supreme Court vacancies and the granting of financial autonomy to the Court were encouraging. However, certain restrictive decrees had not been repealed. Not all the alleged coup-plotters had been released, numerous persons were awaiting trial and prison conditions were still harsh. The country faced severe infrastructure problems. Female genital mutilation continued, as did discrimination against women. Some 30 per cent of children suffered from malnutrition.

The Special Rapporteur made recommendations regarding the electoral process, fair trials, freedom of expression and freedom of the press, freedom of assembly and association, prison conditions, compensation to persons whose human rights had been violated, women's rights, compliance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child, economic and social rights, the right to adequate housing, health, the plight of the Ogoni people and the National Human Rights Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/161 without vote [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Nigeria

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Recalling that Nigeria is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Nigeria,

Welcoming the positive contribution Nigeria has been making through the Economic Community of West African States in support of democratic governance within the West African region,

Noting the encouraging positive steps taken by the Government of Nigeria, which deserve full support and have been welcomed by the people of Nigeria as well as the international community, including the Commonwealth and the European Union,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Nigeria;

2. Welcomes the announcement by General Abdulsalam Abubakar of a new programme of transition to civilian rule, and notes with satisfaction the commitment of the Government of Nigeria to fully restoring democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights;

3. Notes with satisfaction the concrete steps taken to date to implement the programme of transition, and looks forward to further measures in this regard;

4. Expresses its full support to the Government of Nigeria in the important process of building a peaceful and stable Nigeria rooted in the rule of law, democracy and respect for human rights;

5. Welcomes the fact that the Government of Nigeria is reviewing remaining decrees, and urges it to repeal urgently those which have an impact on the fundamental human rights of its citizens;

6. Encourages all sectors of Nigerian society to participate actively and constructively in the process of democratization and the re-establishment of civilian rule;

7. Notes with satisfaction the establishment of the Independent National Electoral Commission and the issuance of a detailed timetable for the election process, to be completed with the holding of presidential elections on 27 February 1999 and the handing over to a civilian government on 29 May 1999;

8. Welcomes the invitations extended by the Government of Nigeria to the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the Commonwealth and the European Union to provide electoral assistance and to observe the elections at all levels so as to ensure the credibility of the electoral process;

9. Welcomes also the declared commitment of the Government of Nigeria to protect freedom of expression, in particular freedom of the press, and notes with interest the first steps taken to reform laws governing the media;

10. Welcomes further the release of political prisoners, including the twenty detainees from Ogoni, and expresses the hope for swift clarification of cases still pending;

11. Stresses that the establishment and strengthening of national structures and institutions in the field of human rights are of the utmost importance for the promotion and protection of human rights in Nigeria;

12. Commends the National Human Rights Commission of Nigeria for its important work, and encourages the Government of Nigeria to provide the Commission with adequate resources and to respect fully its independence;

13. Calls upon all States and the organizations of the United Nations system to support generously the ongoing transitional process in Nigeria, in particular the electoral process and the strengthening of national capacity in the field of human rights, and to respond positively to requests for technical assistance and advisory services;

14. Welcomes the decision of the European Union, the Commonwealth and the Government of the United States of America to start lifting sanctions on Nigeria in the light of the progress made towards the restoration of democratic government and respect for human rights;

15. Calls upon the Government of Nigeria to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments in the implementation of the programme of transition and beyond;

16. Also calls upon the Government of Nigeria to follow up the recommendations contained in the interim report of the Special Rapporteur;

17. Welcomes the invitation to visit the country extended to the Special Rapporteur;

18. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Nigeria with a view to concluding it at its fifty-fourth session in the light of further developments and relevant decisions of the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fifth session.

Rwanda

Report of Special Representative. Special Representative Michel Moussalli (Switzerland) visited Rwanda (19-25 January), where he held discussions with representatives of UN agencies and programmes, the Deputy Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II), the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and NGO representatives [E/CN.4/1998/60]. Government Ministers informed him that the Government welcomed a full and open debate on establishing the National Human Rights Commission. It also welcomed the Special Representative's proposal to organize a workshop on the subject. The Special Rapporteur made recommendations based on his observations in January and in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 711].

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 1998/69], the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and other human rights violations in Rwanda. Welcoming the continuation of the trials of those suspected of such violations, the Commission expressed concern that the perpetrators continued to evade justice and at the slow progress in ICTR proceedings; it asked States to cooperate with ICTR and the Government. The Commission urged the Government to give utmost priority to prosecuting and punishing crimes of sexual violence against women, in line with the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women [YUN 1997, p. 681]. It expressed deep concern regarding the conflict in the north-western part of the country and recognized the need to improve monitoring of human rights abuses there. The Commission commended the work of the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR), and noted progress made by the Government in establishing a National Human Rights Commission [ibid., p. 711]. The international community was asked to provide support for the reconstruction of human rights infrastructure and the effective functioning of the Commission. Appealing to the international community to assist the Government to strengthen the administration of justice, the Commission also recommended that it continue to provide development assistance for the reconstruction and long-term stability of the country. The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to report on the work of HRFOR and on the implementation of Commission's resolution in 1998 to the Assembly and in 1999 to the Commission.

The Commission extended the Special Representative's mandate for a further year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1998 and to the Commission in 1999. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Special Representative and the Secretary-General by decision 1998/266 of 30 July.

Further report of Special Representative. In September [A/53/402], the Secretary-General transmitted a report of the Special Representative covering his two missions to Rwanda (8-15 June, 31 August-7 September).

The Special Representative stated that the HRFOR monitoring activities had resulted in a tense relationship with the Government and, on 7 May, the Government had requested the suspension of HRFOR activities. He proposed to the Government and the High Commissioner that the two parties should meet to reach a common understanding on the future of HRFOR. During July discussions, the Government could not accept a monitoring function for the new human rights operation, as proposed by the delegation of the High Commissioner, and HRFOR withdrew from Rwanda on 28 July. During the negotiations, the Government presented a five-point plan that called for training of national human rights monitors; human rights education programmes; assistance to the National Human Rights Commission; initiating a human rights public-awareness campaign; and establishing a national centre for human rights as an information clearing house and training centre.

The Government assured the Special Representative that efforts would be made to complete the process of establishing a list of 10 candidates for membership in the National Human Rights Commission, and supported his proposal to organize, in cooperation with the OHCHR, a public workshop on the Commission.

The Special Rapporteur noted that security conditions in some surrounding countries had deteriorated, with direct implications for Rwanda, particularly in the north-west and central parts of Rwanda where armed attacks had occurred. The climate of fear was characterized by killings motivated by ethnic hostility as well as intertwining past crimes, frustration over lack of security, land conflict, theft and personal vengeance. The rural population had moved closer to military positions for protection, creating internally displaced settlements without access to their lands for cultivation. Armed groups had attacked detention centres, apparently to release detainees. Reports of arbitrary arrests and possible disappearances increased in the greater Kigali area, where military and police identity card checks had become more frequent. The justice sector remained in crisis despite Government efforts to address the problems. A functioning judicial system had been installed but it continued to suffer from inadequate resources. As at September, an estimated 125,000 persons were being held in detention centres, a slight decrease from December 1997. There had been a noted increase in the number of those released on humanitarian grounds and on the basis of insufficient evidence to sustain a prosecution. Nonetheless, detention centres exceeded their intended capacity and lacked adequate food and water, ventilation, lighting and sanitary facilities.

The situation of Rwandan women remained precarious. Women headed more than 40 per cent of households in 1996, compared to 25 per cent in 1991. The female literacy rate was less than 50 per cent. A large number of women continued to suffer from the trauma of sexual violence committed during the genocide. The Special Representative noted the vulnerable status of children in a post-genocide society.

The Special Representative urged the Government and the international community to enhance their cooperation to maintain and develop the most suitable conditions to promote and protect human rights, to continue to improve conditions of detention and to reduce the number of persons held. The international community was urged to support the functioning of the National Human Rights Commission; establish programmes to address the problems of genocide survivors; support and cooperate with ICTR; condemn insurgent forces; and heed alarming developments, particularly those pertaining to the escalation of violence in the region. The High Commissioner was asked to provide support to organize a public workshop on the National Human Rights Commission.

Human Rights Field Operation

In September [A/53/367], the Secretary-General transmitted a report by the High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 52/146 [YUN 1997, p. 714].

Since the High Commissioner's previous report [ibid., p. 712], HRFOR had focused on monitoring activities on alleged violations perpetrated in the north-west, on extremely harsh conditions of detention and on national genocide trials. It had sought to redress shortcomings in human rights protection by implementing its programme of technical assistance and human rights promotional activities, focusing on capacity-building for members of the judiciary, the penitentiary system and the security forces, other civil servants and national human rights NGOs; increasing public awareness of human rights through education activities and information campaigns; and channelling assistance to vulnerable groups, especially genocide survivors. In collaboration with government members and civil society, it organized a workshop on a human rights agenda for Rwanda (Kigali, 2-9 March), with a view to establishing a national plan to promote and protect human rights. HRFOR provided training for judicial officials of the parquets (prosecution staff) and the courts on human rights topics, including investigation techniques, police ethics, minimum standard rules for the treatment of detainees, ways to improve the justice system and criminal procedure concerning trial rights. It emphasized strengthening and supporting NGOs to enhance their capacity to promote and protect human rights, and carried out activities in the area of promotion and human rights education.

While regretting the closure of HRFOR, the High Commissioner confirmed her Office's readiness to participate in a new cooperative arrangement with the Government. She welcomed the adoption of Security Council resolution 1161(1998) of 9 April (see PART ONE, Chapter II), by which the Council asked the Secretary-General to reactivate the International Commission of Inquiry on the flow of arms to former Rwandan government forces and militia in the Great Lakes region. The High Commissioner called on the international community to assist the Government in protecting civilians in areas of conflict and in ending the ongoing violence. The Government was encouraged to locate persons believed to be missing by improving the system of registers at detention centres and by implementing a system of information for families of detainees. The Government should continue to strengthen the judicial system and place a moratorium on the use of the death penalty.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/156 without vote [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Rwanda

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the International Bill of Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and other applicable human rights and humanitarian law standards,

Recalling its resolution 52/146 of 12 December 1997 and other relevant resolutions, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/69 of 21 April 1998,

Reaffirming that effective action to prevent further violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms must be a central and integral element of the overall Rwandan and United Nations responses to the situation in Rwanda and that a strengthened human rights component is indispensable to national reconciliation and reconstruction in Rwanda,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda and the report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, and refers also to the relevant reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences and the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the independence of judges and lawyers;

2. Reiterates its strong condemnation of the crime of genocide and crimes against humanity committed in Rwanda in 1994;

3. Expresses deep concern at the continuing serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in the country, in particular those associated with the conflict in the north-west, and in regard to conditions of detention and the trial process of those accused of genocide and crimes against humanity;

4. Urges all States to cooperate fully, without delay, with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, taking into account the obligations set forth in Security Council resolutions 955(1994) of 8 November 1994 and 978(1995) of 27 February 1995, and encourages the Secretary-General to facilitate the activities of the International Tribunal for Rwanda to the greatest extent possible;

5. Commends the International Tribunal for Rwanda for the progress made in its work, and urges the Tribunal to find further ways to speed up its proceedings;

6. Deeply regrets that no agreement could be reached on a new mandate for the Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda, which consequently led to the withdrawal of the Field Operation from Rwanda on 28 July 1998;

7. Welcomes the decision of the Government of Rwanda to create a National Human Rights Commission, and urges the Government to take appropriate action to enable the Commission to be fully established and to begin functioning independently in accordance with the international principles relating to the development of independent, pluralistic national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

8. Encourages further efforts by the Government of Rwanda to undertake a broad public debate aimed at further strengthening the functioning and independence of the National Human Rights Commission, urges the Government to work with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to facilitate the debate, and encourages the High Commissioner to continue to provide appropriate assistance;

9. Supports and encourages continued efforts by the Government of Rwanda to prosecute violations committed by some elements of its armed forces, and in this context notes with interest the reinforcement of the Military Prosecutor's Department, which will increase the capacity of the Rwandan Patriotic Army to conduct internal investigations and bring accused persons to trial;

10. Urges the Government of Rwanda to give the utmost priority to the prosecution and punishment of crimes of sexual violence committed against women, in line with the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

11. Encourages the Government of Rwanda to further ensure the independence of the judiciary and, with the support of the international community, to strengthen the capacity of the judicial system, particularly taking additional steps to ensure full respect of fair trial guarantees, as required by Rwandan law, article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and other international safeguards;

12. Welcomes the continuation of trials of those suspected of genocide and crimes against humanity in Rwanda and the improvements that have been made in the trial process, particularly the expedition of the initial stages of prosecution;

13. Reiterates its appeal to the international community to provide assistance to the Government of Rwanda to help to strengthen the protection of genocide survivors and witnesses, and the administration of justice, including with regard to adequate access to legal representation, to prosecute those responsible for genocide and other violations of human rights and to promote the rule of law in Rwanda, and notes with appreciation the assistance already provided by the donor community;

14. Welcomes and encourages the release of minors, elderly prisoners, prisoners suffering from terminal illnesses and suspects with incomplete files, who were detained for their alleged involvement in genocide and other abuses of human rights, and urges the Government of Rwanda to establish adequate measures to facilitate the reintegration of released persons into society;

15. Reiterates its concern at the conditions in most communal detention centres and prisons, emphasizes the need for greater attention and resources to be directed to that problem and encourages the Government of Rwanda to continue to look for pragmatic solutions to allow for an increase of the number of prisoners being released and reintegrated into society, and again urges the international community to assist the Government of Rwanda in that area;

16. Expresses its appreciation to Governments, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and non-governmental organizations, which have supported the Government of Rwanda in the area of human rights, and encourages further joint efforts of the Government of Rwanda and other Governments, the High Commissioner and non-governmental organizations in the area of human rights within mutually agreed frameworks of cooperation, taking into account, inter alia, the five-point plan of the Government of Rwanda, which includes the following priority areas, as outlined in the report of the Special Representative: (a) training national human rights monitors; (b) initiating human rights education programmes in formal and informal education; (c) providing the National Human Rights Commission with the necessary financial and technical assistance; (d) initiating a human rights public-awareness campaign using media resources; and (e) establishing a national centre for human rights as an information clearing house and training centre;

17. Encourages continued cooperation among the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights and the Government of Rwanda;

18. Decides to keep the situation of human rights in Rwanda under consideration at its fifty-fourth session, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Sudan

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 1998/67], by a roll-call vote of 31 to 6, with 16 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights expressed deep concern at continued serious human rights violations in the Sudan and emphasized the need to end them. It called on the Government to respect human rights and called on all parties to the conflict within the Sudan to ensure that respect and to permit the delivery of humanitarian assistance. The Government was also called on to comply with applicable international human rights instruments, bring its national legislation into accord with the instruments to which the Sudan was a party, and ensure that individuals subject to its jurisdiction fully enjoyed the rights recognized in those instruments. The Commission welcomed the assistance provided by the Government to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and UNHCR in the return of a group of abducted Ugandan children to their home country (see preceding chapter). It recommended that priority be given, within existing resources, to placing human rights field officers to monitor the situation in the Sudan. The Special Rapporteur on religious intolerance and the Special Rapporteur on freedom of opinion and expression were encouraged to consult with the Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in the Sudan and to accept invitations of the Government to visit the country.

The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for an additional year and asked him to report on the future need for human rights field officers, with the understanding that the Commission would in 1999 reassess that need. He was also asked to report to the General Assembly in 1998 and the Commission in 1999. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Secretary-General and the Special Rapporteur by decision 1998/264 of 30 July.

Note by Secretary-General. In October [A/53/504], the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that the interim report on the human rights situation in the Sudan would not be submitted in 1998 due to the resignation of Special Rapporteur Cáspar Bíró (Hungary). Owing to the late appointment of the new Special Rapporteur, Leonardo Franco (Argentina), no report would be submitted to the Assembly at its current session.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In a December report [E/CN.4/1999/38], the Special Rapporteur stated that he had held consultations (Geneva, 9-16 October) with the High Commissioner for Human Rights and her staff, specialized agencies, diplomatic missions and independent experts. He had expressed his wish to the Government to visit the country, which had been favourably received. The Special Rapporteur also visited the United Kingdom (17-22 October) where he consulted with NGOs, independent experts and academics.

Colombia

Communication. In a March letter [E/CN.4/1998/135] to the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Colombia addressed issues raised in her 1997 report on the human rights situation in the country [YUN 1997, p. 746]. It stated that the report did not attach sufficient weight to the armed conflict in Colombia as a major source of human rights violations and its negative impact on the enjoyment of many economic and social rights. The report's treatment of the drug trafficking problem tended to reduce it to a question of crime and corruption and failed to examine its effects in fuelling the armed conflict, particularly the impulse it gave to the support of private vigilante groups. Furthermore, it failed to mention the part played by the guerrillas in serious violations of political rights. The Government rejected the categorization of human rights violations as "systematic" and did not agree with the statement alleging its non-compliance with international recommendations. Other observations related mainly to the administration of justice and economic, social and cultural rights.

Commission action. On 9 April [E/1998/23], in a statement made on behalf of the Commission on Human Rights, the Chairman said that the Commission welcomed the cooperation of State and governmental institutions with the office of the High Commissioner in Bogota during its first year of work and the renewal of the agreement between the Government and the High Commissioner extending the mandate of the office until 30 April 1999.

Although progress had been made in implementing recommendations of international human rights bodies, it was not sufficient to improve the human rights situation. The Commission was deeply concerned at the gravity and scale of human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law as reported to the office in Bogota. Noting the intensification of the internal armed conflict, which entailed serious abuses and violations of human rights and international humanitarian law mainly by paramilitary groups, the Commission urged all parties to negotiate a peaceful conclusion to the conflict. It acknowledged government efforts to make progress in the peace process, measures to protect and defend human rights and efforts to address the problem of the internal displacement of large numbers of citizens.

The High Commissioner was asked to report in 1999 on the human rights situation in Colombia.

Report of High Commissioner. The High Commissioner submitted a report on the human rights situation in Colombia in 1998 [E/CN.4/1999/8]. She had travelled to the country (20-22 October) to visit the office in Bogota; hold talks with the authorities, NGOs, UN agencies, ICRC and the diplomatic corps; and open a seminar on the administration of justice in the Andean region and another on the protection of human rights advocates.

The agreement establishing the office was extended until April 2000. An additional agreement had increased the number of human rights officers to 12 and provided for the submission of confidential reports to member countries, international organizations and ICRC.

The High Commissioner described the activities of the office. In carrying out its monitoring functions, the office had continued to receive complaints from individuals, NGOs and government agencies. Following verification, many of the complaints were transmitted to the Government for action. From January to November, 882 complaints were received, 747 of which were accepted, while another 155 were considered inadmissible. Of 482 complaints relating to incidents that occurred in 1998, the majority related to violations of the right to life. The number of complaints received thus far, however, did not reflect the real seriousness of the violations of human rights and breaches of international humanitarian law. The office transmitted information to the Government on massacres, took action regarding displaced persons, carried out advisory functions related to the reform of the Military Penal Code and on enforced disappearances, and supported NGOs and civil society organizations. It continued to participate in the work of the Commission for Analysis and Advice on the Implementation of the Recommendations of International Human Rights Bodies and in forums, seminars, conferences, round tables, working meetings and workshops.

As to the human rights situation, massacres with clear signs of extrajudicial executions, torture, forced disappearances and forced displacements occurred systematically. The deterioration of the human rights situation was the result of the worsening of the armed conflict and the Government's failure to implement effective legislation, administrative and other measures, such as those intended to combat paramilitary activity and impunity or to protect human rights advocates. In 1998, 418 persons involved in paramilitary activities were arrested, according to a government report. Of those persons, 82 belonged to the security forces and had been charged for the offence. The Office of the Procurator-General arrested 125 persons, the Army arrested 81 and the police 212. The courts had sentenced 36 persons for paramilitarism. The office also received information on human rights violations, for which members of the military forces and the police were said to be responsible. Complaints related to violations of the right to life, the right to personal security, the right to freedom of movement and residence, and arbitrary arrests. Within the justice system existed impunity, violations of the right to due process and judicial guarantees, and unacceptable prison conditions.

Economic, social and cultural rights were affected by poverty and unemployment, which increased during the year. There was also an increase in violence, as well as a continuing serious problem of widespread drug trafficking. The office was concerned about inadequate steps to eliminate child labour and noted that some trade union rights were still not recognized and that domestic legislation had not been brought into line with International Labour Organization (ILO) Conventions to which Colombia was a party. Basic needs were not covered regarding the rights to education and culture, health, food, housing and a healthy environment. The situation of women was characterized by a lower labour market penetration and lesser job quality than men, and inadequate health protection. Women suffered from the consequences of the high level of violence and the armed conflict. Some 30,000 minors lived in the streets in large towns, most of whom were alcohol and drug addicted; many were victims of "social cleansing". Some 25,000 children were sexually exploited. Juvenile delinquents were subjected to deprivation of liberty in police stations and isolation as a method of punishment. Ethnic minorities were unable to exercise their rights effectively and had been subjected to disappearance and forced displacement. The Office of the People's Advocate and NGOs estimated there were more than 1.3 million displaced persons, the result of grave and massive human rights violations and large-scale violations of international humanitarian law. Human rights advocates had been murdered, and human rights NGOs and trade union members and leaders had been harassed.

Breaches of international humanitarian law included murders of persons not directly involved in hostilities or no longer involved; threats by the paramilitary against whole populations; large-scale abductions for ransom by the guerrillas; attacks on civilians; forced displacement; torture and ill-treatment; violations of the general protection of medical facilities, medical units and transports by guerrillas and the paramilitary, and on occasion by security forces; recruitment of children; use of anti-personnel mines; and attacks on civilian property.

The High Commissioner reviewed follow-up action taken by Colombia in response to international recommendations. She concluded that human rights violations and breaches of international humanitarian law had increased in 1998. Most government initiatives to improve the human rights situation led nowhere, as either they were not carried through or they were insufficient to bring about significant changes. She urged the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure the full and effective enjoyment of fundamental rights; to ensure the exercise of economic, social and cultural rights and accord priority to the gradual reduction of the conditions of inequality; and to use all available resources in carrying out programmes for assistance to and protection of women. The Government was reminded of the need to improve and expand care and social rehabilitation activities and programmes for children in vulnerable situations. The High Commissioner reiterated to the Government the importance of reforming the Military Penal Code; of restoring the conditions for impartial and public proceedings, guarantees of due process, the right to defence and the presumption of innocence; and of adopting a law criminalizing enforced disappearance. She reaffirmed the obligation of the authorities to prevent internal displacement and attend to the needs of those displaced; they were urged to carry out an effective policy for permanently disbanding paramilitary groups and were reminded of the importance of the work of human rights advocates. All parties to the conflict were urged to abide by the norms of international humanitarian law. The Government and parties to the conflict were called on to protect and respect the right to life.

Mexico

By a secret ballot of 12 votes to 6, with 6 abstentions, the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, on 20 August [E/CN.4/1999/4 (res. 1998/4)], asked the authorities in Mexico to ensure full respect for the international instruments to which Mexico was party and to combat the impunity of perpetrators of serious human rights violations, especially those suffered by indigenous populations. It also asked them to promote the action of human rights defenders and guarantee their safety. The Subcommission asked the Commission on Human Rights to consider developments in the human rights situation in Mexico and decided, if the Commission were unable to do so, to consider the item in 1999.

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Commission action. On 21 April [E/1998/23 (res. 1998/70)], the Commission on Human Rights, noting the further deterioration of the human rights situation in Afghanistan, condemned the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law. It urged all Afghan parties to cease hostilities and to end without delay all human rights violations against women and girls (see preceding chapter). The Commission asked the parties to continue to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur.

The High Commissioner for Human Rights was asked to ensure a human rights presence in Afghanistan to provide advice and human rights training to all the parties, as well as to intergovernmental organizations and NGOs. The Commission extended the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year, and asked him to report to the General Assembly in 1998 and to the Commission in 1999. The Secretary-General was asked to assist him. By decision 1998/267 of 30 July, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the extension and approved the Commission's requests to the Special Rapporteur and the High Commissioner.

Report of Special Rapporteur. In October [A/53/539], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of Special Rapporteur Choong-Hyun Paik (Republic of Korea) on the human rights situation in Afghanistan. Owing to the security situation, the Special Rapporteur was unable to travel to Afghanistan and Pakistan as intended. In view of events that transpired in northern Afghanistan in August (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), particularly in the city of Mazar-e-Sharif, the Special Rapporteur tried to obtain the most credible information possible from reliable sources on what had occurred. The October report contained the texts of a memorandum he had submitted to Taliban representatives citing allegations of human rights violations and of the Taliban's response.

After the 8 August takeover of Mazar-e-Sharif on 8 August by the Taliban and their allies, widespread killings and atrocities took place in the city, the Special Rapporteur stated. On the first day of the takeover, Taliban forces carried out indiscriminate killings, including 10 Iranian diplomats and an Iranian correspondent, and it was estimated that some 10,000 to 12,000 people fled the city. On the second day, the Hazara ethnic minority was targeted; Hazaras were killed despite assurances by street representatives that they were civilians and had no political affiliations. In Saidabad and Dasht-e-Shor, the Taliban forces shot all Hazaras, including women, children and old men. Empty Hazara houses—whose occupants had fled, were arrested or had been killed—were marked as belonging to the Taliban. An estimated 3,000 Hazaras were executed summarily during the first six days. Those arrested were mostly men and boys, if they looked old enough to fight. Some 700 persons who had been arrested were supposedly killed at Dasht-e-Hairatan. It was estimated that as many as 3,000 opposition fighters, who had just arrived in Mazar-e-Sharif, were trapped in Zeinabad district and were more or less wiped out. Some 4,000 to 5,000 persons were killed in the city of Mazar-e-Sharif and a similar number of military casualties was estimated. A group of between 200 and 250 Hazara men who had been arrested were taken to the grave of the Hezb-e-Wahadat leader Mazari and killed there; the grave was subsequently destroyed by the Taliban. In addition, some 300 persons were estimated to have been killed in the Sultan Razia High School. The Mazar-i camp for internally displaced persons from Kabul was blown up twice by Taliban forces after 250 persons were killed there. Numerous prisoners belonging to the Hazara minority were placed in metal containers that were left in the sun during the day and taken to Sheberghan at dusk. Most suffocated inside the containers. Shi'ites and Hazaras were told that they should pray the same way as Sunni Moslems if they wanted to stay in Mazar-e-Sharif and survive. The Taliban-appointed Governor of Mazar-e-Sharif announced that Hazaras should stop following the religion of Iran and become true Moslems. It had been indicated that the Taliban leader had issued a fatwa stating that the killing of Shia Moslems was not a crime because they were non-believers. Land belonging to Hazaras was distributed to Pashtun nomads. Those arrested were segregated in prison according to their ethnic group. Hazaras were separated from the rest. Pashtuns were released, as were Tajiks and Uzbeks. The number of prisoners reached some 3,000.

In the Sheikh Ali and Ali Khan districts in the Ghorband Valley, more than 1,000 villagers were massacred. Other killings took place in the Inkal and Lolem Shah districts. There were other accounts of a massacre of 800 persons, mostly civilians, in the Hazarajat region in September. It was estimated that there were some 5,000 internally displaced families from Mazar-e-Sharif, Bamyān province and the south Hazarajat region. Some 2,000 among them were believed to lack food.

By a note verbale of 21 October, included in the report, the Embassy of Afghanistan in Islamabad, Pakistan, transmitted a reply to the Special Rapporteur's memorandum, entitled "A brief look at the imaginary report on the situation of human rights at Mazar-e-Sharif prepared by Choong-Hyun Paik". The reply stated that the author had not verified a single point of what he had claimed but had relied on anecdotes and baseless press reports or on false stories of opponents. Accuracy was evident in reports of the killing and detention of military personnel, the collection of arms and the temporary evacuation of some places, but the rest was propaganda. The accusations of killing animals, women and children and raping women were baseless and were only directed to disrespect Islam.

The Special Rapporteur called on all sides to end the armed conflict and to show restraint and respect for human rights. He recommended the release of detained non-combatants, unhindered access by ICRC to all prisoners and detainees and the release of non-criminal prisoners; lifting restrictions placed on women and girls by the Taliban; and bringing to justice those responsible for human rights violations in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 719] and 1998. The United Nations was urged to monitor more closely and systematically report on the human rights situation in Afghanistan through an enhanced human rights presence in the field; create greater awareness of international human rights by establishing a human rights advisory capacity in the field; and investigate the human rights violations in the country, including reports of mass killings. The Special Rapporteur recommended that aerial photographs be taken of reported sites of mass graves. He called on all parties to cooperate with a neutral and objective investigation into human rights violations.

The Special Rapporteur deplored the killing of UN staff in Afghanistan in July and August (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

Following the resignation of Mr. Paik, the Commission on Human Rights appointed Kamal Hossain (Bangladesh) in December as Special Rapporteur.

In his first report [E/CN.4/1999/40], the Special Rapporteur observed that the overall situation at year's end was characterized by continuing armed conflict, the political crisis resulting from lack of agreement on durable peace, the continuing violations and denial of human rights and the deteriorating humanitarian situation, affected by the absence of UN agency personnel as well as others engaged in humanitarian work, and the reduction of resource flows. All UN personnel had been withdrawn from Afghanistan following the killing of a United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan (UNSMIA) official (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). On 8 December, the Security Council, by resolution 1214 (1998), expressed support for the Secretary-General's proposal [S/1998/1139] to establish within UNSMA a civil affairs unit to monitor the situation in Afghanistan, promote respect for minimum humanitarian standards and deter massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/165 without vote [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have freely undertaken under the various international instruments,

Recalling that Afghanistan is a party to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and that it has signed the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Recalling also all its relevant resolutions, as well as the resolutions and presidential statements of the Security Council, the decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the resolutions and decisions of the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and of the conclusions and recommendations contained therein;

2. Strongly condemns the mass killings and systematic human rights violations against civilians and prisoners of war, and notes with alarm the escalating cycle of mass killings;

3. Expresses its gravest concern at numerous reports of mass killings in the areas of Mazar-e-Sharif and Bamian by the Taliban;

4. Condemns the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law, including the rights to life, liberty and security of person, freedom from torture and from other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, freedom of opinion, expression, religious persuasion, association and movement and, in particular, the grave human rights violations against women and girls;

5. Condemns also the killing of Iranian diplomats and the correspondent of the Islamic Republic News Agency by Taliban combatants, as well as the attacks on and the killing of United Nations personnel in Taliban-held territories of Afghanistan, and calls upon the Taliban to fulfil their stated commitment to cooperate in urgent investigations of these heinous crimes, with a view to bringing those responsible to justice;

6. Notes with deep concern:

(a) The worsening pattern of human rights violations in Afghanistan;

(b) The continuing and substantiated reports of human rights violations against women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, notably in areas under the control of the Taliban;

(c) The intensification of armed hostilities in Afghanistan and the increasingly ethnic and religious nature of the conflict, which have resulted in extensive human suffering and forced displacement, and which hinder the return of the internally displaced to their homes;

(d) The continued displacement of millions of Afghan refugees to the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan;

(e) The lack of major reconstruction in Afghanistan;

7. Notes with deep concern the sharp deterioration of the humanitarian situation in several areas of Afghanistan, particularly in Hazarajat, and the worsening security conditions for United Nations and other humanitarian personnel, while taking note of the agreement reached between the Taliban and the United Nations on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan and calling for its full implementation;

8. Calls upon the Afghan parties to respect fully all human rights and fundamental freedoms, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments;

9. Urges all States to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and national unity of Afghanistan and to refrain from interfering in its internal affairs;

10. Urges all the Afghan parties:

(a) To cease hostilities immediately and to work and cooperate fully with the Special Envoy and the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan with a view to achieving a ceasefire, thus laying the foundation for a comprehensive political solution leading to the voluntary return of displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity and to the establishment of a broad-based, fully representative Government through the full exercise of the right to self-determination of the Afghan people;

(b) To respect fully international humanitarian law, to protect civilians, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to stop the laying of landmines, especially anti-personnel mines, to stop forced conscription and the drafting and recruitment of children as soldiers and to ensure their reintegration into society;

(c) To provide efficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations and abuses of human rights and of humanitarian law and to bring their perpetrators to trial in accordance with internationally accepted standards;

(d) To treat all suspects and convicted or detained persons in accordance with relevant international instruments and to refrain from arbitrary detention, including detention of civilian foreign nationals, and urges their captors to release them as well as non-criminal civilian prisoners;

11. Demands that all the Afghan parties fulfil their obligations regarding the safety of all personnel of diplomatic missions, the United Nations and other international organizations, as well as their premises in Afghanistan, and to cooperate fully and without discrimination on grounds of gender, nationality or religious persuasion with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations;

12. Urges all the Afghan parties, in particular the Taliban, to bring to an end without delay all human rights violations against women and girls and to take urgent measures to ensure:

(a) The repeal of all legislative and other measures that discriminate against women;

(b) The effective participation of women in civil, cultural, economic, political and social life;

(c) Respect for the right of women to work and their reintegration in employment;

(d) The right of women and girls to education without discrimination, the reopening of schools and the admission of women and girls to all levels of education;

(e) Respect for the right of women to security of person and that those responsible for physical attacks on women are brought to justice;

(f) Respect for freedom of movement for women;

(g) Reinstatement of full access to health care for women and girls;

13. Invites the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to proceed without delay to investigate fully reports of mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians, rape and other cruel treatment in Afghanistan, and calls upon the United Front and the Taliban to fulfil their stated commitment to cooperate with such investigations;

14. Also invites the Secretary-General and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to give consideration to the proposal to deploy human rights observers in Afghanistan and to make detailed recommendations to that effect to the General Assembly;

15. Appeals to all States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and other international organizations to resume the provision of humanitarian assistance to all in need as soon as the situation on the ground permits;

16. Expresses its deep concern at reports of attacks on and looting of cultural artifacts in Afghanistan, emphasizes that all parties share the responsibility to protect their common heritage, and requests all Member States to take appropriate measures to prevent the looting of cultural artifacts and to ensure their return to Afghanistan;

17. Urges all the Afghan parties to extend their cooperation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan and to all those Special Rapporteurs who are seeking invitations;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

19. Decides to keep the situation of human rights in Afghanistan under consideration at its fifty-fourth session, in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

Bhutan

On 19 August [E/CN.4/1999/4], the Subcommission Chairman made a statement regarding Bhutanese refugees. The Subcommission had been aware of the plight of some 90,000 individuals of Nepali ethnicity, the majority of whom asserted that they had lived in Bhutan but who had been residing within UNHCR-administered camps in eastern Nepal for as long as seven years while others had been living outside the camps in Nepal and India. The Subcommission was concerned about the ongoing programme of resettlement in southern Bhutan on land that might have belonged to refugees. It urged the two Governments concerned to negotiate a peaceful solution consistent with international human rights standards. The Subcommission suggested that the Governments involved avail themselves of technical assistance from the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR).

Cambodia

For information on the human rights situation in Cambodia, see PART TWO, Chapter I.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

By a secret ballot of 19 votes to 4, with 1 abstention, the Subcommission, on 19 August [res. 1998/2], expressing concern at the difficulty in obtaining accurate information on the human rights situation in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and at the frequent reports of extrajudicial executions and disappearances there, called on the Government to ensure full respect for article 13 of the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 12 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolutions 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535] and 2200 A (XXI) [YUN 1966, p. 423], respectively. It asked the Government to cooperate fully with UN procedures and services to ensure the promotion and protection of human rights and to allow inquiries by independent human rights monitoring organizations. The Subcommission recommended that the Commission on Human Rights consider the situation of human rights in the DPRK in 1999; if the Commission was unable to do so, the Subcommission would continue to consider the matter in 1999.

East Timor

Reports of Secretary-General. In February [E/CN.4/1998/58], the Secretary-General provided an update on his good-offices activities aimed at achieving a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement of the question of East Timor. Since the February 1997 appointment of his Personal Representative for East Timor, Jamsheed Marker, efforts to revitalize the search for a solution had intensified (see PART ONE, Chapter VIII). Three rounds of talks were held in New York and the Personal Representative had visited Indonesia and East Timor at the end of 1997 and Portugal from 18 to 21 January 1998. The report described action taken by thematic special rapporteurs and working groups of the Commission concerning East Timor. Annexed to the report was information provided by Indonesia regarding the human rights situation in East Timor, including measures to improve it, and information from Portugal and NGOs.

In September [A/53/349], the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that negotiations with Indonesia and Portugal, chaired by the Personal Representative, had moved in a positive direction. Another round of senior officials' meetings was held in New York (6-8 May). On 3 April, the Secretary-General met in London with Indonesia's Vice-President and, on 8 June, with the President of Portugal in New York. The change of leadership in Indonesia in May and the new era of reform had opened possibilities for the resolution of the long-running dispute. On 18 June, the Secretary-General met in New York with Indonesia's Foreign Minister, who presented a proposal for a solution. His Personal Representative had travelled to Portugal in June and to Indonesia and East Timor in July. Based on those talks, the Secretary-General invited the Foreign Ministers of the two countries for high-level talks on 4 and 5 August, at which they agreed to hold in-depth discussions on Indonesia's proposals for a special autonomous status for East Timor.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1999/28], the Secretary-General stated that he had continued to facilitate the All-inclusive Intra-East Timorese Dialogue (AIETD). An AIETD meeting (Krumbach, Austria, 31 October-3 November) achieved a large degree of consensus on a number of important matters.

Commission action. On 24 April [E/1998/23], the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights made a statement on the human rights situation in East Timor. The Commission noted Indonesia's decision to launch a National Plan of Action on human rights in 1998 and its intention to ratify the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/46 [YUN 1984, p. 813]. Welcoming the dialogue under the Secretary-General's auspices, the Commission stressed the need to promote a favourable atmosphere for further progress. It asked the Secretary-General to keep it informed on the situation.

Iran

Commission action. On 22 April [res. 1998/80], the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 23 to 14, with 16 abstentions, expressed concern that, in spite of progress, human rights continued to be violated in Iran. It called on the Government, among other things, to continue its positive efforts and to build on its commitment to consolidate respect for the rule of law and allow greater freedom of expression; abide by its obligations under international human rights instruments; end torture; resume cooperation with the Commission; eliminate discrimination and human rights violations against women; refrain from violence against members of the Iranian opposition living abroad; and ensure that capital punishment would not be imposed for non-violent crimes or apostasy.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Representative's mandate for a further year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1998 and to report to the Commission in 1999, keeping in mind a gender perspective. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Representative. The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/273 of 30 July, endorsed those actions.

Reports of Special Representative. In September [A/53/423 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report of Special Representative Maurice Copithorne (Canada) on the human rights situation in Iran, covering the period from January to 31 August. The Special Representative had met with senior officials of the Government, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and a wide range of information sources. He expressed disappointment that no invitation was forthcoming from the Government to visit Iran.

Although the Government had made progress during the reporting period in the area of freedom of opinion and expression, the media continued to have a difficult time. On the one hand, there was, in practice, widespread freedom of expression; on the other, the lawful constraints on that freedom had yet to be defined clearly and to be regulated by an independent tribunal committed to the application and enforcement of the law. The status of women did not appear to have improved significantly.

The legal system had major flaws and needed reform. In discussions with the Iranian Prosecutor-General, the Special Representative was informed that amendments to the existing law on the public and revolutionary courts were to go to the Majlis (Islamic Consultative Assembly) shortly; training of judges was to be improved; and a judicial inspectorate had been established to reform judicial matters such as procedure, treatment of offenders and prioritization of court cases. The reform process had begun with significant success, but executions, as reported in the press, had probably continued at a fairly high level. The authorities insisted that, excluding drug traffickers, the figure was much lower than reported, perhaps by half. According to a senior Iranian official, some 150,000 prisoners were in the prison system, about 63 per cent of whom were incarcerated for narcotics-related offences. The percentage became higher nearer to the Afghanistan/Pakistan border.

Although there appeared to be credible evidence in support of allegations of torture, there were some positive developments. Allegations that torture was used to elicit information or a confession were openly reported in the press; the Islamic Human Rights Commission seemed to be taking allegations of torture seriously; and suits had been filed against security forces for torture and physical and psychological violence. The Special Representative continued to receive reports of human rights violations against the Baha'is and urged the Government to improve its treatment of the community. The Islamic Human Rights Commission had reportedly received 2,450 complaints in the past year, half of them from women and 50 per cent of them against the police. The Commission had probed complaints from religious minorities, notably the Baha'is. It had started to educate police and security officers as well as prison guards and judges about international and Islamic concepts of human rights. The Special Representative welcomed the apparent new openness of the Commission and suggested that a national action plan for human rights be developed. With regard to certain religious minorities, he had received reports that the Sunni community and the Baluch might have been subjected to discrimination and he called on the Government to address the situation. There were no new incidents reported regarding government involvement in murders of Iranian dissidents abroad, but violence continued against Iranian armed groups on the Iraqi side of the Iran/Iraq border.

In a report covering the period 1 September to 15 December [E/CN.4/1999/32], the Special Representative observed that, despite considerable effort to enhance freedom of expression, there remained major uncertainties in the application of the Press Law that needed to be eliminated. Little progress had been made on core issues regarding the status of women. Minorities suffered benign neglect and they needed to be placed in the Government's development plans. In particular, the status of the Baha'is had to be addressed. Court reform had to be pushed forward and the practice of torture had to be placed on the Government's agenda. The Government was 18 months into its five-year mandate and its plans for change continued to be significant. Progress had been uneven and objected to by many. The Government needed to establish the people's confidence in its plans.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/158 by recorded vote (64-41-56) [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Mindful that the Islamic Republic of Iran is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Recalling its previous resolutions on this subject, including the most recent, resolution 52/142 of 12 December 1997, and taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/80 of 22 April 1998,

1. Welcomes the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and takes note of the conclusion of the Special Representative that a political will exists to move Iranian society to a more tolerant and more peaceful condition but that, while some sectors are already benefiting from this progress, significant violations of human rights continue to occur;

2. Welcomes also the commitment made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to promote respect for the rule of law, including the elimination of arbitrary arrest and detention, and to reform the legal and penitentiary system, including the closure of detention centres outside the national prison system, and to bring it into line with international human rights standards in this field, and calls upon the Government to take all necessary steps in this regard;

3. Welcomes further the more open debate in the Islamic Republic of Iran on issues of governance and human rights, as well as governmental efforts to make progress in the area of freedom of expression, while remaining concerned at instances of arbitrary closure of publications, widely reported cases of harassment and persecution of persons, including writers and members of the press;

4. Welcomes a more positive approach by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran with regard to freedom of assembly, as well as the support given to the development of non-governmental organizations, and expresses the hope that freedom for political activities will become more effective;

5. Notes with interest the increasing focus of the Islamic Human Rights Commission on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the examination of individual complaints and training activities, and expresses the hope that the Commission will become a truly independent agency for the promotion and protection of human rights in line with the 1993 principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights;

6. Welcomes the assurances given by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran that it has no intention of taking any action whatsoever to threaten the life of Salman Rushdie and those associated with his work or of encouraging or assisting anyone to do so, and that it disassociates itself from any reward offered in this regard and does not support it, but expresses its concern at continuing threats to the life of Salman Rushdie, including the announced increase in the bounty;

7. Expresses its concern at the continuing violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as reported by the Special Representative, in particular executions in the apparent absence of respect for internationally recognized safeguards, the use of national security laws as a basis for derogating from the rights of the individual, cases of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including sentences of stoning and amputation, as well as the failure to meet international standards in the administration of justice and the absence of due process of law;

8. Also expresses its concern at the discrimination against religious minorities and in particular remains gravely concerned at the unabated pattern of persecution against the Baha'is, in particular the execution and sentencing to death and arrests of members of the Baha'i community, and calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to implement the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on religious intolerance relating to the Baha'is and to other religious minorities, until they are completely emancipated;

9. Takes note of statements made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran about the need to review laws and attitudes which discriminate against women, and, remaining concerned at the lack of full and equal enjoyment by women of their human rights, as reported by the Special Representative, calls upon the Government to take substantive and effective measures to eliminate discrimination in law and in practice against women;

10. Calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to continue its efforts and to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under the International Covenants on Human Rights and under other international instruments on human rights, and to ensure that all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction, including persons belonging to religious minorities, enjoy all the rights enshrined in those instruments;

11. Also calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to ensure that capital punishment will not be imposed for other than the most serious crimes, for apostasy, or otherwise in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and United Nations safeguards, and to provide the Special Representative with relevant statistics on this matter;

12. Further calls upon the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to make full use of technical cooperation programmes in the field of human rights, and welcomes in this context the willingness of the Government to introduce international human rights standards into the curricula of universities;

13. Deplores the fact that no invitation has yet been extended by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the Special Representative to visit the country, and calls upon the Government to extend an invitation to him and to resume its full cooperation with the Special Representative in the discharge of his mandate;

14. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, at its fifty-fourth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/158:

In favour: Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lesotho, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, Samoa, San Marino, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom, United States, Zambia.

Iraq

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 21 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 21 April [res. 1998/65], strongly condemned the systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq. It called on the Government to: abide by its obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law; conform its military and security forces to standards of international law; cooperate with UN human rights mechanisms; restore independence of the judiciary and abrogate laws granting impunity; ensure that torture and cruel punishment and treatment no longer occurred; abrogate laws and procedures that penalized free expression; cooperate to resolve the fate of missing persons; cease repressive practices aimed at ethnic and religious groups; end enforced displacement on discriminatory grounds; cooperate with aid agencies and NGOs to provide humanitarian assistance; release detained Kuwaitis and other nationals; facilitate the work of UN humanitarian personnel; ensure equitable distribution of humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds of Iraqi oil; and co-operate in identifying minefields.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1998 and to report to the Commission in 1999. It requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur and to approve the allocation of resources to send human rights monitors to locations that would facilitate improved information on the human rights situation in Iraq.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1998/23], adopted decision 1998/263 by recorded vote (27-0-18) [agenda item 14 (g)].

Situation of human rights in Iraq

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 30 July 1998, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/65 of 21 April 1998:

(a) Endorsed the decision of the Commission to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iraq, as contained in Commission resolution 1991/74 of 6 March 1991 and subsequent resolutions, for a further year, and to request the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report on the situation of human rights in Iraq to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session and report to the Commission at its fifty-fifth session;

(b) Approved the request of the Commission to the Secretary-General to continue to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur to enable him to discharge his mandate fully, and to approve the allocation of sufficient human and material resources for the sending of human rights monitors to such locations as would facilitate improved information flow and assessment and help in the independent verification of reports on the situation of human rights in Iraq.

RECORDED VOTE ON DECISION 1998/263:

In favour Argentina, Belarus, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Czech Republic, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Mexico, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Poland, Republic of Korea, Romania, Russian Federation, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Algeria, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Cuba, Djibouti, Guyana,* India, Jordan, Lebanon, Mozambique, Pakistan, Saint Lucia, Sri Lanka, Togo, Tunisia, Viet Nam.

* Subsequently advised the Secretariat it had intended to vote in favour.

Communication. By an 11 August letter to the Secretary-General [A/53/225-S/1998/747], Iraq refuted certain statements regarding the oil-for-food programme (see PART ONE, Chapter IV) made by the Special Rapporteur [YUN 1997, p. 727].

Subcommission action. On 26 August [dec. 1998/114], the Subcommission appealed to the international community for the embargo provisions affecting the humanitarian situation of the population in Iraq to be lifted. It urged the international community and all Governments to alleviate the suffering of the Iraqi population, particularly by facilitating the delivery of food, medical supplies and the wherewithal to meet their basic needs.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/53/433], the Secretary-General transmitted the report of Special Rapporteur Max van der Stoep (Netherlands) on the human rights situation in Iraq, based on information he had received up to 31 August from governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental sources, individuals connected with the situation in Iraq, well-documented reports and direct contact with Iraqis who had fled the country.

The Special Rapporteur stated that there had been no change in the politico-legal order in Iraq, which was the cause of systematic human rights violations. He continued to receive reports referring to an execution campaign in Abu Ghraib prison near Baghdad, involving detainees charged with participating in mob incidents. It had been reported that over 170 detainees were executed between December 1997 and July 1998. The Special Rapporteur condemned the assassinations of two religious scholars and expressed concern that the deaths might be part of an organized attack by Iraqi officials against the leadership of the Shi'ite religious community. He had received widespread reports of arbitrary arrest and detention. Persons arrested and detained were routinely subjected to cruel and unusual punishment. A report indicated that penal amputations were reimposed in August.

Notwithstanding improvements in the efficiency of the oil-for-food programme, the humanitarian situation remained precarious. A nutritional status survey of children under the age of five conducted by the Ministry of Health, UNICEF and the World Food Programme reported that 27 per cent of children suffered from chronic malnutrition while 9 per cent suffered from acute malnutrition. Health centres in remote areas were neglected and suffered discrimination with regard to supplies of certain drugs. Overall, the Special Rapporteur was unable to report any significant improvement in the situation of human rights in Iraq; all his previous recommendations remained valid.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1999/37], the Special Rapporteur stated that he continued to receive numerous allegations of human rights violations affecting the population in the southern governorates, the Shi'ite religious community and the Kurds, as well as accounts of a continuous campaign of executions in Iraqi prisons. He had received the names of 200 detainees executed between October and December, bringing the total number of prisoners allegedly executed to 2,500 since autumn 1997. Ill-treatment of prisoners and poor conditions of detention, which caused prisoners to die, continued to be reported. The Government reportedly perpetrated military attacks against civilian settlements in the southern governorates of Al-Nassiriya, Al-Amara and Basra, which began in late August and peaked in November. Other human rights violations followed the military operations, including the arrest of hundreds of citizens, the burning of houses and fields, the confiscation of entire villages and community lands and the cutting off of the water supply. It was feared that summary executions took place in November in Al-Amara and Basra. Other violations affecting ethnic and religious communities included the alleged sentencing to death of eight Shi'ite clerics and discrimination against the Kurds in the oil-rich region of Kirkuk.

In the health sector, an increasing influx of supplies had expanded the range of treatments available, but the poor condition of facilities posed a health hazard. The non-availability of clean water remained a serious problem in some areas. Information provided to the Special Rapporteur indicated that the food stock levels were much improved. He expressed concern that the Government had not taken full advantage of the food and health-care resources available through the oil-for-food programme. Available resources were not being channelled to people in the southern governorates.

A human rights monitor from OHCHR visited Kuwait in December to meet with persons related to the continuing problem of Kuwaiti and third-country nationals who disappeared during or subsequent to their arrest and detention by Iraqi forces illegally occupying Kuwait between 2 August 1990 and 26 February 1991. The findings confirmed previous evidence that most cases involved assaults on private homes, arrests by Iraqi patrols at Saudi-Kuwaiti border crossings or arrests at Iraqi checkpoints inside occupied Kuwait. Persons arrested were suspected of opposing the Iraqi occupation. They did not have access to lawyers and were not allowed to contact their families. Of the 625 individual files, only three cases had been clarified. The Government had failed to cooperate with the Tripartite Commission on missing persons, established pursuant to Security Council resolutions 686(1991) and 687(1991) [YUN 1991, pp. 171 & 172], or its Technical Subcommittee. In view of the Government's failure to provide adequate information, the Special Rapporteur said it should allow independent and impartial third parties, such as ICRC, to search within the country for persons still missing.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government release those being held and reveal the names of those who had died in custody; review outstanding case files of missing persons; and grant ICRC unhindered access to prisons and other detention centres. He reiterated the need to implement his proposal that a human rights monitoring mechanism made up of UN staff be implemented throughout Iraq.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/157 by recorded vote (103-3-56) [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Iraq

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and as elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Mindful that Iraq is a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, to other international human rights instruments and to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war,

Recalling its previous resolutions and those of the Commission on Human Rights on the subject, and taking note of the most recent, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/65 of 21 April 1998,

Taking note of the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child following the consideration by the Committee of the initial report of Iraq under the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Recalling Security Council resolution 686(1991) of 2 March 1991, in which the Council called upon Iraq to release all Kuwaiti and nationals of other States who might still be held in detention, Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991 and 688(1991) of 5 April 1991, in which the Council demanded an end to the repression of the Iraqi civilian population and insisted that Iraq cooperate with international humanitarian organizations and that the human rights of all Iraqi citizens be respected, and Council resolutions 986(1995) of 14 April 1995, 1111(1997) of 4 June 1997, 1129(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1143(1997) of 4 December 1997, 1153(1998) of 20 February 1998 and 1175(1998) of 19 June 1998, by which the Council authorized States to permit imports of Iraqi oil in order to allow Iraq to purchase humanitarian supplies,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General concerning the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997) and 1143(1997) and, in particular, his report of 1 September 1998 concerning the implementation of Council resolution 1153(1998),

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Iraq and the observations, conclusions and recommendations contained therein, and notes with dismay that there has been no improvement in the situation of human rights in the country;

2. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to abide by its freely undertaken obligations under international human rights treaties and international humanitarian law and to respect and ensure the rights of all individuals, irrespective of their origin, ethnicity, gender or religion, within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction;

3. Also calls upon the Government of Iraq to cooperate with United Nations human rights mechanisms, in particular by receiving a return visit by the Special Rapporteur to Iraq and allowing the stationing of human rights monitors throughout Iraq pursuant to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights;

4. Strongly condemns the systematic, widespread and extremely grave violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law by the Government of Iraq, resulting in all-pervasive repression and oppression;

5. Condemns the suppression of freedom of thought, expression, information, association, assembly and movement through fear of arrest, imprisonment and other sanctions, in particular the death penalty;

6. Also condemns the widespread use of the death penalty in disregard of the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the United Nations safeguards, including for petty crimes such as property theft and customs violations;

7. Strongly condemns summary and arbitrary executions, including political killings, enforced or involuntary disappearances, routinely practised arbitrary arrests and detention and consistent and routine failure to respect due process and the rule of law, and calls upon the Government of Iraq to provide an accounting for the clean-out of prisons where there is credible evidence of mass summary executions;

8. Expresses its deep concern at widespread, systematic torture in its most cruel forms, and the enactment and implementation of decrees prescribing cruel and inhuman punishment as a penalty for offences;

9. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to abrogate all decrees that prescribe cruel and inhuman punishment or treatment, including mutilations, and to ensure that torture and cruel punishment and treatment no longer occur, and also to abrogate all laws and procedures, including Revolution Command Council Decree No. 840 of 4 November 1986, that penalize free expression and to ensure that the genuine will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of the State;

10. Also calls upon the Government of Iraq to restore the independence of the judiciary and to abrogate all laws granting impunity to specified forces or persons who kill or injure individuals for any purpose beyond the administration of justice under the rule of law as prescribed by international standards;

11. Demands that the Government of Iraq bring the actions of its military and security forces into conformity with the standards of international law, in particular those of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;

12. Urges the Government of Iraq to put an end without delay to the continuing enforced displacement of persons on discriminatory grounds;

13. Also urges the Government of Iraq to respect the rights of all ethnic and religious groups and to cease immediately its repressive practices aimed at the Iraqi Kurds, Assyrians, Turkomen and the population of the southern marsh areas, and to ensure the personal integrity and freedoms of the Shi'a and their religious establishment;

14. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to cooperate with the Tripartite Commission to establish the whereabouts and resolve the fate of the remaining several hundred missing persons, including prisoners of war, Kuwaiti nationals and third-country nationals victims of the illegal Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the Commission on Human Rights for that purpose and to pay compensation to the families of those who died or disappeared in the custody of the Iraqi authorities through the mechanism established by the Security Council in its resolution 692(1991) of 20 May 1991, and to release immediately all Kuwaitis and nationals of other States who may still be held in detention;

15. Also calls upon the Government of Iraq to increase its cooperation with international aid agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide humanitarian assistance and monitoring in the northern and southern areas of the country, in particular to ensure the right to an adequate standard of living, including to food and health care;

16. Takes note of the appreciation of the Secretary-General, as expressed in his report of 1 September 1998, of the continued cooperation of Iraq in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1129(1997), 1143(1997) and 1153(1998) and the memorandum of understanding on this issue, concluded between the Secretariat and the Government of Iraq on 20 May 1996;

17. Calls upon the Government of Iraq to continue to cooperate in the implementation of Security Council resolutions 986(1995), 1111(1997), 1143(1997) and 1153(1998) and to ensure fully the equitable distribution of the humanitarian supplies purchased with the proceeds of Iraqi oil to the Iraqi population, without discrimination, including to remote areas, and to continue to facilitate the work of United Nations humanitarian personnel in Iraq by ensuring the free and unobstructed movement of observers throughout the country;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance in carrying out his mandate;

19. Decides to continue the examination of the situation of human rights in Iraq at its fifty-fourth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions", in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/157:

In favour Albania, Andorra, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Maldives, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Russian Federation, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, The former

Myanmar

Reports of Secretary-General. In an April report on the situation of human rights in Myanmar [E/CN.4/1998/163], the Secretary-General provided updated information on his good-offices activities to bridge the differences that separated Myanmar from the international community and to address the concerns raised in the General Assembly. His Special Envoy, Alvaro de Soto, held discussions in Myanmar from 20 to 23 January with the Government, encouraging it to open a dialogue with the National League for Democracy (NLD), the party that had won the majority of votes and the overwhelming number of seats in the 1990 elections [YUN 1991, p. 606]. The Special Envoy and government officials discussed steps to be taken towards democracy, political freedoms, the opening of a substantive political dialogue with political parties, particularly NLD and its General Secretary, Aung San Suu Kyi, and representatives of the national races, a visit by the Special Rapporteur and access to prisoners and prisons. In February, the Secretary-General asked the Government to consider the renewal of a dialogue with NLD, amend laws restricting political rights and freedoms, release persons in detention or imprisoned for politically related offences and set a date for a visit by the Special Rapporteur. He reported that no substantive progress had been made on those concerns.

In November [A/53/657], the Secretary-General reported that his Envoy had met with Myanmar's Foreign Minister in New York on 25 September and had visited Yangon from 27 to 30 October. He stressed the importance of opening a genuine dialogue with NLD and suggested that the dialogue that the Government said it was holding with the national races should be intensified and made more transparent. Among other issues discussed were the detention of parliament members and other NLD members, freedom of political parties, the curtailment of Aung San Suu Kyi's freedom of movement and the Special Rapporteur's visit. The Secretary-General stated that no progress was made on the part of the Government in addressing the appeals to it in repeated Assembly resolutions.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1999/29], the Secretary-General stated that efforts were being made for a visit to Myanmar by his Special Envoy in May 1999.

Commission action. On 21 April [res. 1998/63], the Commission on Human Rights expressed deep concern at the continuing human rights violations in Myanmar. It called on the Government to end violations of the right to life; establish democracy; allow its citizens to participate in the political process; improve conditions of detention; cooperate with the Commission and the Secretary-General; ensure the well-being of all political leaders; fulfil its obligations under the Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p. 561]; end enforced displacement and other causes of refugee flows; and end impunity.

The Commission decided to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate for another year and asked him to report to the Assembly in 1998 and to the Commission in 1999, keeping in mind a gender perspective when analysing information. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, to pursue efforts to ensure that he was authorized to visit Myanmar, and to continue his discussions with the Government and with others in Myanmar to assist in implementing Assembly resolution 52/137 [YUN 1997, p. 731], as well as its current resolution. The Economic and Social Council endorsed the Commission's decision and approved its requests to the Special Rapporteur and the Secretary-General by decision 1998/261 of 30 July.

Subcommission action. On 20 August [res. 1998/3], the Subcommission, by a secret ballot of 21 to 3, asked the Government of Myanmar to ensure the security of Aung San Suu Kyi and of the NLD members and urged the Government to invite the Special Rapporteur to visit Myanmar.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/53/364], the Secretary-General transmitted the interim report of Special Rapporteur Rajssoomer Lallah (Mauritius) on the human rights situation in Myanmar as at 30 August, based on information received from governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental sources, displaced persons who had fled Myanmar and well-documented reports.

The Special Rapporteur observed that the electoral process initiated by the general elections of 1990 had not reached its conclusion and the Government had not implemented its commitments to establish a democratic order. Many political leaders, particularly NLD representatives, remained deprived of their liberty. Human rights violations remained extremely serious, including the practice of torture, summary and arbitrary executions, forced labour, abuse of women, politically motivated arrests and detention, forced displacement, serious restrictions on the freedoms of expression and association, and the imposition of oppressive measures directed particularly at ethnic and religious minority groups. Forced relocation and other violations of the rights of minorities occurred, resulting in a flow of refugees to neighbouring countries. Continuing military attacks on ethnic groups resulted in death, destruction and displacement.

The Special Rapporteur remained concerned about the continued harassment of political leaders and the detention of many political prisoners, as well as human rights violations by the armed forces in ethnic minority areas. He repeated the recommendations made in his report covering information received up to December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 730]. He also recommended an independent inquiry into the circumstances of the deaths of James Leander Nichols, who had been arrested in April 1996 for illegal possession of communications supplies and allegedly died as a result of torture and poor treatment, and U Thein Tin, a member of the NLD Yangon Township Organizing Committee, following physical and mental torture in Insein Prison in February 1998. Urgent steps should be taken to stop forced labour and portering for the military and the Government should implement the recommendations of the ILO Commission of Inquiry.

In a later report [E/CN.4/1999/35], the Special Rapporteur described the human rights situation based on information he had received through 31 December. He had visited Thailand to assess the situation of the displaced persons on the Myanmar/Thailand border and the human rights violations committed against ethnic minorities and others subjected to repression by the Government. It was estimated that over half a million displaced persons, living in Mon, Karen, Shan and Karenni States, needed humanitarian assistance. The main causes of displacement were counter-insurgency operations by the army as a means of uprooting the population in ethnic regions; forced labour and portering; restrictions on farmers on the kinds of crops they could grow; and land confiscation. The Special Rapporteur recommended that assistance to the displaced and other conflict-affected persons should become a government priority. The Government should seek assistance from the international community in assessing the nature and extent of assistance needs. It should find a political solution in the ethnic areas to prevent a decline in the humanitarian situation.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the Government continued to violate basic freedoms and the army had been implicated in human rights abuses resulting in displacement. He renewed the recommendations made in his previous report [YUN 1997, p. 730].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/162 without vote [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Myanmar

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms as stated in the Charter of the United Nations and elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other applicable human rights instruments,

Aware that, in accordance with the Charter, the United Nations promotes and encourages respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government,

Recalling its resolution 52/137 of 12 December 1997,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1992/58 of 3 March 1992, in which the Commission, inter alia, decided to nominate a special rapporteur with a given mandate, and taking note of Commission resolution 1998/63 of 21 April 1998, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the mandate of its Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar,

Gravely concerned that the Government of Myanmar still has not implemented its commitment to take all necessary steps towards democracy in the light of the results of the elections held in 1990,

Noting the contact between the Government of Myanmar and the National League for Democracy, but regretting the failure of the Government of Myanmar to engage in a substantive political dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, including representatives of ethnic groups,

Noting with concern that the Government of Myanmar has not permitted a visit by the special emissary of the Secretary-General,

Noting with deep regret the continuing failure of the Government of Myanmar to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur, Gravely concerned at the continuing and consistent violations of human rights in Myanmar, as reported by the Special Rapporteur, Noting with grave concern the content of the report of the Commission of Inquiry of the International Labour Organization, appointed in March 1997 in accordance with article 26 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, regarding the observance by Myanmar of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), which indicates a widespread and systematic use of forced labour imposed by the military on the civilian population,

Recalling the observation made by the Special Rapporteur that the absence of respect for the rights pertaining to democratic governance is at the root of all the major violations of human rights in Myanmar,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Myanmar for his interim report;

2. Urges the Government of Myanmar to cooperate fully with all United Nations authorities and bodies, in particular and without further delay with the Special Rapporteur, and to ensure his access to Myanmar, without preconditions, in order to establish direct contact with the Government and all other sectors of society to allow him to discharge his mandate fully;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report, and notes with concern the observations contained therein;

4. Deplores the continuing violations of human rights in Myanmar, including extrajudicial and arbitrary executions, rape, torture, inhuman treatment, mass arrests, forced labour, forced relocation and denial of freedom of expression, assembly, association and movement, as reported by the Special Rapporteur;

5. Notes with deep concern the increased restrictions on the freedom of movement and the large numbers of arbitrary detentions and harassment of political activists, including elected representatives to the Parliament, and urges the Government of Myanmar to permit unrestricted communication with and physical access to Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, and to protect their physical well-being;

6. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to release immediately and unconditionally detained political leaders and all political prisoners, to ensure their physical integrity and to permit them to participate in the process of national reconciliation;

7. Urges the Government of Myanmar urgently to expand and intensify its contacts with the National League for Democracy with a view to engaging in a substantive political dialogue with the General Secretary of the League, Aung San Suu Kyi, and other political leaders, including representatives of ethnic and other groups, as the best means of promoting national reconciliation and the full and early restoration of democracy;

8. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar, taking into account its assurances given at various times, to take all necessary steps towards the restoration of democracy in accordance with the will of the people as expressed in the democratic elections held in 1990 and to ensure that political parties and non-governmental organizations can function freely, and in this context notes that the National League for Democracy recently established a committee to represent the Parliament temporarily;

9. Also strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to take all appropriate measures to allow all citizens to participate freely in the political process, in accordance with the principles of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to accelerate the process of transition to democracy, in particular through the transfer of power to democratically elected representatives;

10. Further strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to ensure full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, association, movement and assembly, the right to a fair trial and the protection of the rights of persons belonging to ethnic and religious minorities, to put an end to violations of the right to life and integrity of the human being, to the practices of torture, abuse of women, forced labour and forced relocations and to enforced disappearances and summary executions, and to fulfil its obligations to end the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations, including members of the military, and to investigate and prosecute alleged violations committed by government agents in all circumstances;

11. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar to implement fully the recommendations made by the Special Rapporteur;

12. Welcomes the accession by the Government of Myanmar to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, and appeals to the Government of Myanmar to consider becoming a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

13. Strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to fulfil its obligations with regard to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as set out in the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child;

14. Also strongly urges the Government of Myanmar to fulfil its obligations as a State party to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), of the International Labour Organization, and to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry of the International Labour Organization regarding the implementation of the Forced Labour Convention, and encourages further communication between the Government and the International Labour Organization;

15. Stresses the importance for the Government of Myanmar to give particular attention to improving the conditions in the country's jails and to allow the competent international humanitarian organization to communicate freely and confidentially with prisoners;

16. Calls upon the Government of Myanmar and other parties to the hostilities in Myanmar to respect fully the obligations under international humanitarian law, including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population, to protect all civilians, including children, women and persons belonging to ethnic or religious minorities, from violations of humanitarian law and to avail themselves of such services as may be offered by impartial humanitarian bodies;

17. Expresses concern that the situation of human rights in Myanmar, and the lack of stability, have resulted in flows of refugees to neighbouring countries, and may have further negative effects on those countries, and therefore calls upon the Government of Myanmar to create the necessary conditions to ensure an end to the movements of refugees to neighbouring countries and to create conditions conducive to their voluntary return and their full reintegration, in conditions of safety and dignity;

18. Welcomes the recent visits to Myanmar by the Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for the purpose of discussions with the Government and with Aung San Suu Kyi and other political leaders, and encourages the Government of Myanmar to engage in a broader and more regular dialogue with the Secretary-General and to facilitate access by his representative to all sectors of society in Myanmar;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his discussions on the situation of human rights and the restoration of democracy with the Government of Myanmar, and to submit additional reports to the General Assembly during its fifty-third session on the progress of those discussions, and to report to the Assembly at its fifty-fourth session and to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fifth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

20. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fourth session.

Europe and the Mediterranean

Belarus

On 19 August [E/CNA/1999/46 (res. 1998/1)], by a secret ballot of 17 votes to 4, with 3 abstentions, the Subcommission expressed deep concern at reports that the authorities in Belarus unlawfully imprisoned, detained or harassed political leaders, journalists and human rights defenders when attempting to exercise their right to free expression by seeking to expose, criticize or comment on abuses of power by government officials. It also expressed concern at the concentration of legislative power in the Government's executive branch and a weak judiciary whose independence had been continuously undermined. The Subcommission called on the Government to lift restrictions on freedom of expression; protect the integrity and rights of journalists and human rights workers; and ensure the independence of the judiciary. It recommended that the Commission on Human Rights consider the human rights situation in Belarus in 1999; if it was unable to do so, the Subcommission would continue to consider the matter.

Cyprus

In response to a 1997 Commission on Human Rights decision [YUN 1997, p. 733], the Secretary-General, in a March report on the question of human rights in Cyprus [E/CN.4/1998/55], described action taken under his good-offices mission and by the Security Council, as well as the activities of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (see PART ONE, Chapter V).

On 21 April [E/1998/23 (dec. 1998/109)], the Commission decided to retain the item on its agenda, on the understanding that action required by previous resolutions would continue to remain operative, including its request to the Secretary-General to report on their implementation.

The former Yugoslavia

Commission action. On 22 April [res. 1998/79], by a roll-call vote of 41 to none, with 12 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights stressed the crucial role that human rights questions had to play in the success of the 1995 General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the annexes thereto (the Peace Agreement) [YUN 1995, p. 544]. The Commission called on the authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to complete the reform and restructuring of local police forces; reverse the effects of ethnic cleansing; enact property and housing legislation; repeal laws relating to abandoned property and end illegal evictions; cooperate with the Office of the High Representative and institutions established by the Peace Agreement; ensure conditions for free and fair elections; cooperate with the International Supervisor for Brcko (see PART ONE, Chapter V); and reform criminal law.

The Government of Croatia was called on to take greater efforts to adhere to democratic principles and comply with international human rights standards; accelerate the implementation of its Programme on the Establishment of Confidence, Acceleration of Return and Normalization of Life in the War-affected Areas; respect the human rights of all; end harassment of displaced Serbs and looting and physical attacks against Croatian Serbs; guarantee freedom of association and of the press; cooperate with international organizations; respect the right of NGOs to operate without restrictions; apply the law equally to all citizens; continue fulfilling the rights and guarantees pledged in 1997 concerning the peaceful reintegration of the region under the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium [YUN 1997, p. 314]; implement the Amnesty Law; and continue to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur and to comply with his recommendations.

The Commission called on the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) to cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) (see PART FOUR, Chapter II); strengthen and implement democracy; cease restriction of the press and broadcast journalism; end torture and ill-treatment of detainees; repeal the 1989 Law on Special Conditions for Real Property Transactions; and respect the rights of minorities. It insisted that the Government end repression and prevent violence against ethnic Albanians, as well as other communities in Kosovo; withdraw its special police from Kosovo; release all political detainees, allow the safe return of ethnic Albanian refugees to Kosovo and respect all human rights and fundamental freedoms; allow the establishment of democratic institutions in Kosovo; agree to the establishment of an office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Pristina; broaden cooperation with other regional and international actors; and implement the September 1996 Sant'Egidio memorandum of understanding on education in Kosovo.

The Commission called on all States to cooperate with ICTY and urged them and the Secretary-General to support it.

All parties were called on to release individuals held as a result of the conflict; resume the joint exhumation process in Bosnia and Herzegovina under the auspices of the High Representative and refrain from compromising mass grave sites or destroying forensic evidence; and comply with their obligations to investigate enforced disappearances. The Croatian Government was called on to turn over material on missing persons. Bosnian Serb authorities were called on to support the reconciliation process by reaching out to family associations from all ethnic groups. The international community was asked to provide resources to the International Commission on Missing Persons and to ensure that excavations and exhumations of mortal remains conformed with internationally accepted practice.

The Commission renewed the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year and made requests to him and the Secretary-General, which were approved by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting46], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights [E/1998/23], adopted decision 1998/272 without vote [agenda item 14 (g)].

Situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

At its 46th plenary meeting, on 30 July 1998, the Economic and Social Council, taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/79 of 22 April 1998:

(a) Endorsed the decision of the Commission to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for one year, and welcomed the appointment of a new Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia;

(b) Approved the request of the Commission to the new Special Rapporteur, in addition to the activities mandated in Commission resolutions 1994/72 of 9 March 1994, 1996/71 of 23 April 1996 and 1997/57 of 15 April 1997:

- (i) To work with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on behalf of the United Nations in dealing with the question of missing persons, including by participation in the International Commission on Missing Persons advisory group and other groups involved in missing persons issues, such as those chaired by the Office of the High Representative and the International Committee of the Red Cross, and to include in his report to the Commission on Human Rights information about activities concerning missing persons in the former Yugoslavia;
  - (ii) To pay particular attention to the situation of persons belonging to ethnic minorities, displaced persons, refugees and returnees who fall within his mandate;
  - (iii) To address human rights issues that transcend the borders between the States covered by his mandate and that could be addressed only through concerted action in more than one country;
- (c) Also approved the requests of the Commission that the Special Rapporteur carry out missions to:
- (i) Bosnia and Herzegovina;
  - (ii) The Republic of Croatia, including Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium;
  - (iii) The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, including to Kosovo, as well as to Sandjak and Vojvodina;
- (d) Endorsed the decisions of the Commission:
- (i) To request the Special Rapporteur to report to the Commission, at its fifty-fifth session, on the work carried out in fulfilment of his mandate, and to submit interim reports to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session;
  - (ii) To request the Secretary-General to continue to make the reports of the Special Rapporteur available to the Security Council and to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;
  - (iii) To urge the Secretary-General, within existing resources, to make all necessary resources available for the Special Rapporteur to carry out his mandate successfully, in particular to provide him with adequate staff based in the countries of the mandate to ensure effective continuous monitoring of the human rights situation in those countries and coordination with other international organizations involved.

Report of Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights on 24 March [E/1998/23], Special Rapporteur Jiri Dienstbier (Czech Republic), appointed by the Chairman on 13 March, visited

FRY (5-8 April) [E/CN.4/1998/164]. His report focused on human rights concerns related to operations carried out by the Serbian Ministry of Internal Affairs in the region of Drenica, which included the municipalities of Srbica, Klina and Glogovac in central Kosovo, and in the western municipality of Decani during late February and March 1998, and was based on information gathered during his visit and on fieldwork by staff of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR).

The Kosovo Liberation Army (UCK), a previously unknown organization, had claimed responsibility for attacks against Serbian police targets and against Kosovo Albanian civilians, whom UCK had depicted as collaborators with Serbian authorities. In March, the Yugoslav Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued an aide-memoire describing some 200 attacks against police and civilians in 1996, 1997 and the first two months of 1998 in Kosovo and Metohija [E/CN.4/1998/132]. In response to the attacks by UCK, the Special Rapporteur reported, the Serbian police launched a series of raids in Kosovo, in which houses and sometimes entire villages had been searched for weapons and large numbers of people arrested and questioned. There had been reports of severe ill-treatment and torture in connection with the police actions. Clashes among civilians were not recorded until mid-March.

Testimonies suggested that extrajudicial executions of detainees and indiscriminate shooting of unarmed civilians might have been committed by police as they carried out the operations in Likosani, Cirez and Prekaz. Although the Serbian Ministry of Internal Affairs announced that the bodies would be subject to autopsies by forensic experts, none were carried out. Of the 53 bodies buried in Prekaz, 10 were buried without having been identified. OHCHR had received reports indicating that in Prekaz family members were missing. It received confirmation of several cases outside the Drenica area in which persons suspected of crimes against the State, including terrorist activities, were arrested and detained by police and State security services. There were allegations of torture in detention.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the human rights situation in Kosovo was grave. He recommended: forensic investigation into deaths resulting from the 28 February operations in Likosani and Cirez and the 5 March operations in Prekaz; an internal investigation by the Serbian Ministry of Internal Affairs into those events; respect for the human rights of detainees; treatment by the police of allowable detention periods after arrest as maximum limits, not standard detention periods; a public commitment by the Kosovo Albanian leadership to pursue their goals by peaceful means, with respect for human rights; free access for international and humanitarian organizations to persons and areas in Kosovo affected by violence; government authorization to open an OHCHR office in Kosovo; and government authorization of a temporary, expanded OHCHR human rights monitoring mission.

On 20 May [E/CN.4/1999/107], FRY raised objections to the Special Rapporteur's report, stating that the allegations of arrests, severe ill-treatment and torture of ethnic Albanians were tendentious and false.

Subcommission action. On 21 August [E/CN.4/1999/4], the Chairman of the Subcommission expressed serious concern about the human rights situation in Kosovo. The Subcommission condemned all acts of violence, including the killings and beatings of civilians, as well as human rights violations perpetrated by persons who were or were not affiliated with the State. It supported negotiations leading to a peaceful solution for the protection of human rights.

In letters of 19 and 24 August [E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/41 & E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/42] to the Subcommission Chairman, FRY objected to what it said was a one-sided assessment of the human rights situation in Kosovo and Metohija. It stated that the problem stemmed from terrorist activities by certain extremist members of the ethnic Albanian minority.

Reports of Special Rapporteur. In September [A/53/322], the Secretary-General transmitted the Special Rapporteur's report covering human rights developments until mid-August, based on the Special Rapporteur's visits to all of the countries under his mandate—Bosnia and Herzegovina (4-9 July), Croatia (9-15 July) and FRY (5-8 April).

Citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska) continued to be subjected to serious human rights violations. Victims usually belonged to ethnic groups who were or had become a minority in a given area. Internally displaced persons totalled some 800,000. Obstacles to the return process remained, including poor security, inadequate housing, few employment opportunities and education problems for children. In Republika Srpska, patterns of discrimination were reported in the acquisition of identification documents, and minorities encountered difficulties in exercising freedom of religion. The establishment of a multi-ethnic police force continued to be resisted in both entities. Law enforcement institutions had not reached an acceptable level of professionalism. Greater respect for the mandate of human rights institutions and their role in establishing the rule of law was needed from the authorities. Education operated along ethnic lines and curricula that satisfied all national groups were needed. ICRC had received requests from families concerning 19,786 missing persons. As an overwhelming majority of the missing had died, exhumations were carried out, with a total number of bodies exhumed reaching 663, most of which had been identified. Although there had been some improvement in creating conditions for free and democratic elections, problems remained. Full freedom of movement had not been secured and the main media were controlled by nationalist parties. There was an urgent need for the authorities of Republika Srpska to establish an ombudsman institution.

Membership in the Council of Europe and the goal of joining the European Union (EU) had had a positive influence on the Government in Croatia, but real understanding of the nature of democratic society still appeared to be minimal. The first returns under the Government's Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons [S/1998/589], under the auspices of UNHCR and the Croatian Office for Displaced Persons and Refugees (ODPR), took place in July, when 26 Croatian Serbs returned to Croatia from FRY. ODPR stated that 42,615 Croatian Serbs had previously returned from FRY, Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Danube region in Croatia, of whom 21,125 were originally from the Danube region. Some 9,800 Croatian Serbs still living in FRY had applied to return to Croatia as of August, of whom 776 had been cleared for return by OPDR; 242 of them had returned spontaneously. Problems experienced by returnees included uncleared mines, the lack of infrastructure and unemployment and, in the case of Croatian Serbs, government allocation of their houses to Bosnian Croat refugees. An additional problem had been the Government's former practice of encouraging domiciled Croats to move into houses from which Serbs had fled during the conflict. Ethnically motivated killings were rare, but the continued possession and use of explosive devices, hand grenades or other military weaponry was not uncommon. Although the general security situation was stable, according to the United Nations Police Support Group (UNPSG), the severity of violent ethnic incidents had increased. Nearly 11 per cent of the country was strewn with an estimated 1 million landmines. By August, over 20 people had been killed during 1998 by mines.

A wholly independent judiciary was still a distant goal in Croatia. Courts were influenced by politicians and government officials at State and local levels. There was much uncertainty about the application of the 1996 Law on General Amnesty, which had been applied to 10,712 people who had been sentenced for offences, such as armed rebellion, committed during the war. The amnesty was not applicable to those who committed war crimes. It was believed that the information contained in the amnesty decrees was not sufficient to fulfil their purpose of making the application of the amnesty law more transparent. War crimes trials continued and were subject to unreasonable delays. Freedom of expression continued to be hindered, with the Government holding a virtual monopoly on broadcast outlets and distribution networks for printed media. Acts of vandalism against religious buildings and objects continued to occur. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the international community focus on strengthening the legal system, training police and supporting the development of free media. International assistance was needed to strengthen the economy. The Special Rapporteur urged the Government to simplify the procedures for Croatian Serbs residing in FRY and Bosnia and Herzegovina who wished to return to Croatia; conduct exhumations without regard to the nationality of victims; and reduce its backlog of court cases.

On 2 July, the Government of FRY and the United Nations signed a record of discussions, memorializing progress on an agreement on the status of OHCHR in FRY, which would enable promotion and protection of human rights country-wide. The Special Rapporteur observed, however, that violence in Kosovo had accelerated into a crisis (see PART ONE, Chapter V). People were killed, wounded, abducted, arrested or alleged missing on a daily basis, although the numbers could not be confirmed. Since his visit in April, the geographical scope and intensity of armed hostilities between government forces and armed groups of the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) had increased and gross violations attributed to both sides were reported daily. Testimonies gathered by OHCHR field staff suggested that, in some operations, government forces had used excessive force. International and local human rights groups had reported and investigated alleged arbitrary killings by the police in Ljubenc and Poglek on 25 and 31 May and in Orahovac from 17 to 29 July. The Special Rapporteur was alarmed at reports of abductions of Serb and Albanian civilians, as well as Serbian police officers, by KLA members. He expressed concern at the Government's lack of response to his inquiries about reports of torture during pre-trial detention in Kosovo. He was alarmed at cases of arbitrary detention by police; the holding of persons in pre-trial detention longer than the period mandated by law; difficulties for lawyers in gaining access to clients; the lack of privacy between clients and lawyers; ill-treatment in pre-trial detention; and access by detainees only to official physicians provided by the police or court. The Special Rapporteur had learned of instances in which refugees in FRY had received mobilization notices and he urged the Government to reiterate that refugees were exempt from mobilization.

In an addendum to his report [A/53/322/Add.1], the Special Rapporteur updated the information to 25 October. He had conducted a field mission to FRY (10-21 September) and, following the signing of the "Milosevic-Holbrooke" agreement on 13 October and the agreement with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) creating the Kosovo Verification Mission (see PART ONE, Chapter V), returned to the country (21-29 October).

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, some 81,500 refugees and displaced persons had returned to their homes. Larger-scale returns were blocked by political opposition, and minority return figures were particularly low. The arrival of nearly 9,000 refugees from Kosovo placed an additional burden on the State. Serious return-related incidents continued and explosions and fires targeting the property of returnees had occurred. Implementation of new property laws had revealed the inadequacies of the municipalities in processing claims. The level of minority police representation was still unsatisfactory, with Bosnian Serb police officers constituting 1.17 per cent of Federation forces and Bosniaks and Bosnian Croats constituting 2.77 per cent of Republika Srpska forces. A survey of the judicial personnel structure in Republika Srpska found that 4.6 per cent of positions at the primary court level and 2.1 per cent at the district court level were occupied by non-Bosnian Serbs. Fair trial standards were not adhered to. The results of elections in September for the Joint Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republika Srpska National Assembly, the Bosnia and Herzegovina House of Representatives and 21 regional bodies marked a positive trend towards moderation and political pluralism, according to the High Representative. UNHCR had registered 9,000 refugees from Kosovo, almost exclusively in the Federation, who, under instructions from the Council of Ministers of Bosnia and Herzegovina, were to receive protection as long as the crisis continued in FRY.

In Croatia, there were some positive developments in the right of return. The Government provided assurances that it would work with the international community to amend current laws to ensure equal treatment for returnees. However, municipal housing commissions were still not implementing the return programme satisfactorily. Government control of the electronic media and indirect pressure on press freedom remained major concerns. Croatia had developed a praiseworthy national policy on the promotion of equality but doubts still arose in relation to gender issues. Women faced unequal representation in public, political and economic life. On 15 October, UNPSG ended its mission and the police monitoring role was taken over by OSCE. Both missions reported an improvement in the overall security situation, although sporadic episodes of ethnically motivated violence still occurred.

From August to October, human rights concerns in FRY focused on the crisis in Kosovo and its effects in other parts of the country. The Special Rapporteur, in his visits to FRY, focused on developments in Kosovo and on the situation of the media in Serbia resulting from government restrictions. A high proportion of civilian casualties had marked the conflict in Kosovo, a region where 47 per cent of the population was under 18 years of age. In the process of return, police divided the men from the women and children as they attempted to return to their villages. The men were detained for periods ranging from several hours to several days. Returnees and detainees described beatings and ill-treatment during screening. There had been more discoveries of concentrations of corpses and evidence of massacres, which needed independent investigation. The Special Rapporteur remained concerned about the fate of the Serb, Kosovo Albanian and Roma civilians and Serbian police officers abducted by armed Kosovo Albanians, believed to be KLA, and had appealed directly for their release. He cited continued disregard of domestic and international standards pertaining to police conduct and treatment of detainees, illustrated by a growing number of cases of arbitrary detention and systematic ill-treatment, abuse and torture, including five deaths in custody. The Serbian Ministry of Justice had confirmed that more than 1,500 persons, including 500 in absentia, were being investigated under suspicion of involvement in anti-State activities and in KLA activities. Trials on criminal charges related to terrorism and anti-State activity began in the district court of Prizren, resulting in the conviction of all those charged. OHCHR monitored those proceedings throughout Kosovo.

The situation in Sandzak had been overshadowed by events in Kosovo. Local communities had received large numbers of displaced persons from Kosovo, ethnic tensions were rising and there were concerns about a revival of anti-Islamic sentiments. A growing number of Sandzak Muslims had left the region for Bosnia and Herzegovina and western Europe. In Montenegro, where refugees and internally displaced persons made up 12 per cent of the population, the Government decided on 11 September that it was no longer able to admit internally displaced persons from Kosovo. According to the Government, resources were exhausted and a continued influx could pose a threat to internal security. The Special Rapporteur urged the authorities to meet the educational needs of internally displaced school-age children.

On 5 October, the Serbian Government, under threat of an attack by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, issued a decree stating that media that transmitted foreign news programmes or disseminated defeatism might be closed down. A new law adopted on 20 October limited rebroadcasts of foreign programmes and prohibited publishing material that endangered the constitutional order of the country.

Communication. FRY commented on the Special Rapporteur's reports, stating that they contained unsubstantiated assessments of human rights violations in the country [E/CN.4/1999/137]. According to FRY, he had made no distinction between the legitimate anti-terrorist actions of the authorities and terrorism of the Albanian separatist groups. FRY refuted, among other things, allegations relating to government use of excessive force, abductions of civilians and policemen, arrest and detention procedures and treatment of refugees and displaced persons.

Further report of Special Rapporteur. The Special Rapporteur reported on events that occurred during November and early December and discussed general trends since his appointment in March [E/CN.4/1999/42]. He concluded that the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina had improved somewhat but the authorities and political leaders continued to undermine efforts to integrate the country, which remained divided along ethnic lines. The return process continued to be obstructed. Efforts to improve security had to be stepped up and property rights respected, and the manipulation of returnees and displaced persons had to be stopped. The Special Rapporteur believed that the commitment of the international community would be needed for a long time to build a democratic society on rule of law and respect for human rights. However, local actors, including NGOs, should be more involved in human rights work. The prosecution and punishment of war criminals by ICTY had to be speeded up and indictees still at large should either surrender or be arrested. Efforts should be made to improve the population's knowledge of the work of ICTY. The Special Rapporteur was of the view that the reconciliation process would benefit from the establishment of a truth commission. He believed that accession to the Council of Europe should not be granted before Bosnia and Herzegovina met the minimum conditions which had been set for the opening of the procedure.

The Special Rapporteur continued to express concern at the uneven and slow progress of returns in Croatia, and at reports of the inefficacy of the housing commissions, the essential element in the return programme. He recommended that the Government address the question of tenancy rights in order to foster the return of Serbs to their former homes in urban areas, and provide all housing commissions with alternative accommodations for equitable distribution. He recommended that the Government provide sufficient resources to the judiciary, as well as to fill all empty posts, to alleviate the burden of unresolved cases. He welcomed educational programmes for new Croatian judges, noted that enforcement of court rulings should be of primary concern, and recommended that steps be taken to guarantee the execution of court orders. All court proceedings should be made public, in accordance with Croatian law. There had been serious shortcomings in the trials of persons convicted for war crimes, such as lack of credible evidence. Some trials had been ongoing for several years, and the appeals with the Supreme Court had been subjected to unreasonable delays. Expressing concern at the ruling party's domination of the media, the Special Rapporteur urged the Government to ensure that public broadcasting could fulfil a public interest mandate and was independent of political or financial interests. Labour-related cases required prompt resolution. The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government's labour inspection force be adequately funded in order to investigate widespread instances of non-payment or late payment of wages.

In November, FRY and OHCHR concluded a status agreement that provided for nationwide human rights protection and promotion. Although violence in Kosovo had decreased since the Special Rapporteur's visit in October, no political agreement had been reached to implement the "Milosevic-Holbrooke" agreement of 13 October. Violations threatening security of the person in detention continued unchecked. There were new allegations and reports of summary execution. Violations were attributed to Serbian security forces, KLA and armed persons representing paramilitary groups and village defence units. Testimonies gathered by the Special Rapporteur in the field suggested that, throughout the conflict, government forces had used excessive force, including deliberate destruction of property, leading to extensive civilian casualties. In recent months more concentrations of corpses and evidence of massacres had been discovered, including the massacre of civilians. Serbian authorities announced that, on 27 August, in the village of Klecka, they discovered a makeshift crematorium containing what they believed to be the remains of civilians abducted and then killed by KLA. The Special Rapporteur noted numerous sites where human remains had been found. As a result of efforts by the EU and other international organizations, progress had been made in initiating independent investigations into alleged arbitrary killings. Preliminary examinations and contemporary media reports suggested that some sites had been tampered with.

The Special Rapporteur remained concerned about the fate of the Serb, Kosovo Albanian and Roma civilians and Serbian police officers abducted by Kosovo Albanians, believed to be KLA. He had appealed for their release. According to information received from FRY authorities, as at 7 December, 282 civilians and police had been abducted. Of those, the fate and whereabouts of 136 persons were still unknown; others were released, escaped or had been identified as killed. The Serbian Ministry of Justice had confirmed that more than 1,500 persons, including 500 in absentia, were being investigated under suspicion of involvement in anti-State activities and in KLA activities. The Special Rapporteur and OHCHR continued to raise with FRY authorities individual cases of alleged human rights violations of detainees and submitted requests for clarification of alleged violations regarding persons in custody. The Special Rapporteur was alarmed at consistent disregard by Serbian State security forces of domestic and international standards pertaining to police conduct and treatment of detainees, reflected in a growing number of cases of arbitrary detention and systematic ill-treatment, abuse and torture, including five deaths in custody. He was concerned at widespread abuse of the investigative procedure of "informative talks", which had amounted to harassment of targeted or vulnerable populations and individuals.

In October, the Serbian Parliament adopted a Law on Public Information, which restricted freedom of expression. Restrictions on academic freedoms continued. Ethnic tensions were rising in Sandzak and there were concerns about a revival of anti-Islamic sentiments locally and in the national Serbian and Yugoslav media. In Montenegro, following the Government's decision not to admit internally displaced persons from Kosovo, some 3,000 persons were turned back at the border at Plav and directed across the Albanian border. The Special Rapporteur noted that the court proceedings in Danilovgrad on behalf of the Roma, whose homes were destroyed in riots in April 1995, had not resumed. An estimated 700,000 refugees and internally displaced persons in FRY from Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Kosovo represented a regional catastrophe in the making, according to the Special Rapporteur (see also PART THREE, Chapter XII).

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the human rights situation in FRY was grave, with threats to life and security of the person the most serious offences. He recommended forensic investigations by an independent team of experts; where warranted, police officers should be subjected to internal disciplinary measures and criminal charges should be brought by the State prosecutor; full and unhindered access by ICTY to carry out its mandate; respect for human rights and rights under domestic law for detainees; treatment by the police of maximum periods after arrest specified by domestic law as maximum limits; immediate release of abductees by Kosovo paramilitary units; repeal by the Serbian parliament of the Law on Public Information; implementation by the Governments of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY of a harmonized regional citizenship regime; and establishment of uniform regulations on protection of property and property transactions.

Communication. In an aide-memoire [E/CN.4/1999/163], Croatia stated that the Special Rapporteur's report ignored differences in the human rights achievements among the countries covered and lacked balance.

Report of Secretary-General. In October [A/53/563], the Secretary-General described developments in the human rights situation in Kosovo between April and October, during which time the situation had deteriorated. The international community had sought to increase its monitoring capacity in the region; up to 2,000 OSCE monitors would comprise the Kosovo Verification Mission. The need for an expanded international human rights presence, linked to the establishment of an office of the High Commissioner in Kosovo and undertaken in consultation with OSCE, remained urgent.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/625/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/163 by recorded vote (141-0-21) [agenda item 110 (c)].

Situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind all relevant resolutions on this subject, in particular Commission on Human Rights resolution 1998/79 of 22 April 1998, as well as all relevant Security Council resolutions and statements,

Bearing in mind also General Assembly resolution 53/164 of 9 December 1998 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo,

Reaffirming the obligations of all Member States under the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the obligations of States parties under the International Covenants on Human Rights and all other human rights instruments and the obligation of all to respect international humanitarian law, including the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as the principles and commitments undertaken by participating States of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Reaffirming also the territorial integrity of all States in the region, within their internationally recognized borders,

Expressing its full support for the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement"), which, inter alia, committed the parties of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect human rights fully, and the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (the "Basic Agreement"),

Expressing its disappointment at the continuing evidence of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms taking place to varying degrees in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and, in particular, the failure of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to follow the recommendations of the personal representative of the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe,

Welcoming all contributions of the Office of the High Representative, the United Nations, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Council of Europe, the European Community Monitoring Mission, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in the area in 1998,

1. Calls for the full and consistent implementation of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina and the annexes thereto (collectively the "Peace Agreement") and the Basic Agreement on the Region of Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (the "Basic Agreement") by all parties to those agreements;

2. Stresses the crucial role of human rights in the successful implementation of the Peace Agreement, and underlines the obligations of the parties under the Peace Agreement to secure for all persons within their jurisdiction the highest level of international norms and standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

3. Stresses also the need to focus international human rights efforts in the region on the core issues of the lack of full respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals without distinction, the rule of law and effective administration of justice at all levels of government, the freedom and independence of the media, freedom of expression, freedom of association, including with respect to political parties, freedom of religion and freedom of movement;

4. Stresses further the need for enhanced international human rights efforts to foster and effect the prompt and voluntary return of displaced persons and refugees in safety and dignity;

5. Calls for an immediate end to illegal and/or hidden detention by all parties, in particular the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to investigate any and all allegations of hidden detentions;

6. Calls upon all parties and States in the region to ensure that the promotion and protection of human rights and effective, functioning democratic institutions will be central elements in the new civilian structures, as reaffirmed at the meetings of the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council and the Peace Implementation Conference;

7. Urgently calls upon all States and all parties to the Peace Agreement that have not done so to meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, as required by Security Council resolution 827(1993) of 25 May 1993 and all subsequent related resolutions, including with respect to surrendering persons indicted by the International Tribunal, urges all States to cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs, including with respect to their obligation to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber, by helping to ensure that persons indicted by the Tribunal stand trial before it, and urges the Secretary-General to support the Tribunal to the fullest extent possible;

8. Strongly condemns the continuing refusal of the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as well as those responsible in the Republika Srpska, to comply with their obligation to arrest and transfer to the custody of the International Tribunal those indicted persons known to be present in their territories or territories under their control, inter alia, Radovan Karadzic, Ratko Mladic, Milan Martić, Mile Mrksic, Miroslav Radic and Veselin Sljivancanin, and urges all parties to the Peace Agreement to comply fully with their obligations and to intensify their efforts in this regard;

9. Welcomes the fact that thirty-four persons indicted by the International Tribunal have been brought to justice;

10. Calls upon all parties to the Peace Agreement to take immediate steps to determine the identity, whereabouts and fate of missing persons, inter alia, near Bugojno, Srebrenica, Zepa, Prijedor, Sanski Most and Vukovar, including through close cooperation with the United Nations as well as with humanitarian organizations and independent experts, and stresses the importance of coordination in this area;

I. Bosnia and Herzegovina

11. Welcomes the free and fair elections held on 12 and 13 September 1998 and the increase in political pluralism and freedom of expression through the participation by all groups and individuals, which represents another step towards democracy in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

12. Welcomes also the progress made in some areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the implementation of the Peace Agreement and in improving respect for human rights, as demonstrated by the important work of the Office of the Federation Ombudsmen, the detention and voluntary surrender of persons indicted by the International Tribunal, improvement in the freedom of movement in some areas, the establishment of fourteen "open cities", police restructuring and human rights training in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including in some parts of the Republika Srpska, increased co-operation with the International Police Task Force and efforts towards and progress in support of free and independent media;

13. Expresses its serious concern about continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina and delays in the full implementation of the human rights provisions of the Peace Agreement, notably the delay in bringing legislation into compliance with the human rights provisions of the country's national Constitution, and in implementing that legislation;

14. Urges the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in particular those in the Republika Srpska, to ensure full and free access to their territories to all institutions and organizations concerned with the implementation of the present resolution, including non-governmental organizations, and to provide for the protection of those organizations, especially those providing humanitarian assistance;

15. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights for Bosnia and Herzegovina (the "Commission") to intensify its activities concerning alleged or apparent discrimination or violations of human rights of any kind;

16. Calls upon all authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina to cooperate fully with the Commission, and specifically calls upon the Republika Srpska to increase its cooperation with the Commission;

17. Condemns in the strongest terms the complicity by local governments in the perpetration of violence against minority refugees and internally displaced persons returning to their homes and in the destruction of their homes, including acts of intimidation and all those acts designed to discourage the voluntary return of refugees and internally displaced persons, and calls for the immediate arrest and bringing to justice of those responsible for such acts;

18. Urges all parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina immediately to create conditions conducive to the voluntary return, in safety and with dignity, of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes, with equal emphasis on minorities, to pass quickly in Bosnia and Herzegovina the necessary legislation on property rights, to pursue the full and speedy implementation of new property and housing legislation enacted in the Republika Srpska in April 1998, to cooperate with and support the work of the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons to resolve outstanding property claims, and to end practices of discrimination based on ethnic or political grounds;

19. Calls upon the authorities of both entities to co-operate closely with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in matters relating to the return of refugees and to ensure that local authorities and groups comply with the obligations of the Peace Agreement;

20. Calls for the establishment without delay in the Republika Srpska of institutions for the protection of human rights, in particular a human rights ombudsman;

21. Reiterates its call to bring to justice the perpetrators of rape, notably where it was used as a weapon of war, and for adequate assistance and protection for victims of rape and the witnesses thereto;

II. Republic of Croatia

22. Welcomes the successful conclusion of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium and the United Nations Civilian Police Support Group, both of which played an important role in the restoration of peace and stability in Eastern Slavonia, applauds the smooth and seamless transfer of monitoring responsibilities from the United Nations to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on 16 October 1998, welcomes the cooperation of the Republic of Croatia in bringing those missions to a conclusion, and looks to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Government of the Republic of Croatia to build on the admirable work carried out by the United Nations in Eastern Slavonia;

23. Welcomes also the Programme for the Return and Accommodation of Displaced Persons, Refugees and Exiled Persons, established on 26 June 1998 in the Republic of Croatia, as well as subsequent steps taken, and calls for their full, non-discriminatory and early implementation;

24. Urges the Republic of Croatia to implement fully its programme on the re-establishment of confidence, acceleration of return and normalization of living conditions in the war-affected areas of the Republic of Croatia and its refugee return programme in cooperation with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and demands that the Republic of Croatia take immediate steps to facilitate the early voluntary return, in safety and with dignity, of all refugees and displaced persons, including minorities, to their homes in all regions, to use all available means to assure their safety and human rights, to resolve property rights issues within the framework of the rule of law and in conformity with international standards, to make a sustained effort to provide equal access to assistance in social and housing reconstruction, regardless of ethnicity, to continue to allow access to this population by humanitarian organizations and to maintain its cooperation with the civilian police monitors in Croatia mandated by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

25. Calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to undertake additional efforts to adhere to democratic principles and to continue its efforts to attain the highest level of compliance with international norms and standards of human rights and fundamental freedoms, especially in regard to strengthening the independence of its judiciary, to freedom of association and assembly, and to the promotion and protection of free and independent media, in particular by providing for full freedom of expression in and access to all forms of media, including by the complete range of political parties;

26. Takes note of the request of the Government of the Republic of Croatia for technical cooperation and assistance programmes and of the positive response thereto by the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, and looks forward to the effects of those programmes on the situation of human rights and the rule of law;

27. Strongly urges the impartial application of the law by the Republic of Croatia and the swift and complete implementation of judicial decisions for all citizens, irrespective of ethnicity, religion or political affiliation;

28. Reminds the Government of the Republic of Croatia of its primary responsibility to restore the multi-ethnic character of Croatia, including the pledge to guarantee the representation of national minorities, including Serbs, at various levels of local, regional and national government;

29. Notes that police performance has improved markedly since the beginning of the mandate of the Civilian Police Support Group and that the Government has taken steps to ensure that this continues;

30. Calls upon the Croatian authorities to prevent harassment, looting and physical attacks against displaced Serbs and other minorities and others, and speedily to arrest those committing or instigating such acts aimed at preventing the return of Croatian Serbs or others to their homes and, in particular, to address immediately any allegations of individual involvement by Croatian police or members of the military, whether on or off duty, through appropriate disciplinary proceedings, and calls upon the Government of the Republic of Croatia to ensure the non-discriminatory application of the amnesty law and to strengthen measures to end all forms of discrimination by Croatian authorities in the areas of property rights, employment, education, pensions and health care, among others;

III. Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)

31. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to end any torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of persons in detention, as described in the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and to bring those responsible to justice;

32. Strongly urges the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to institutionalize democratic norms, especially in regard to respect for the principle of free and fair elections, the rule of law, the administration of justice, the promotion and protection of free and independent media, and full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and calls upon the authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) specifically to repeal repressive laws on universities and the media;

33. Demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately cease all harassment and hindrance of journalists, whatever their ethnicity or national origin and wherever within the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) they may be practising their profession, repeal repressive laws on universities and the media, which suppress any and all internal dissent or expression of independent views, and concomitantly respect the right of free speech;

34. Urges all parties, groups and individuals in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to act with full respect for human rights, to refrain from all acts of violence and to act with respect for the rights and dignity of all persons belonging to minority groups;

35. Strongly urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) immediately to bring to justice any persons, in particular those among its personnel, who have engaged in or authorized human rights abuses against the civilian population, including summary executions, indiscriminate attacks on civilians, indiscriminate destruction of property, mass forced displacement of civilians, the taking of civilian hostages, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and in this context reminds the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) of its obligations to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights;

36. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to revoke all discriminatory legislation and to apply all other legislation without discrimination against any ethnic, national, religious or linguistic group, to ensure the speedy and consistent investigation of acts of discrimination and violence against refugees and internally displaced persons, and to ensure the arrest and punishment of those responsible for acts of discrimination and violence;

37. Also calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect the rights of all persons belonging to minority groups especially in the Sandjak and Vojvodina, and of persons belonging to the Bulgarian minority, and supports the unconditional return of the long-term missions of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, as called for by the Security Council in its resolutions 855(1993) of 9 August 1993 and 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998;

38. Further calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect the democratic process and to act immediately to make possible the establishment of genuine democratic self-governance in Kosovo, through a negotiated political settlement with representatives of the ethnic Albanian community, to cease all restrictions on freedom of expression or assembly, to ensure that all the residents of the region are guaranteed equal treatment and protection regardless of ethnic affiliation, and calls upon all individuals or groups in Kosovo to resolve the crisis there through peaceful means;

39. Demands that the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) take immediate steps to allow for and to create conditions for the return of internally displaced persons and refugees in safety and dignity;

40. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to cooperate fully with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other humanitarian organizations to alleviate the suffering of refugees and internally displaced persons and to assist in their unimpeded return to their homes;

41. Takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur, in which concern is expressed about the continuing grave situation of human rights in Kosovo, as well as the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, while noting that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) is allowing international verifiers into Kosovo;

42. Welcomes the establishment of a sub-office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Pristina in the context of the United Nations Field Operation in the Former Yugoslavia;

43. Calls upon States to consider additional voluntary contributions to meet the pressing human rights and humanitarian needs in the area, and underlines the need for continuing coordination among States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations of initiatives and programmes with the aim of avoiding duplication, overlap and working at cross-purposes;

44. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its fifty-fourth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Situation of human rights in Kosovo

The General Assembly,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other human rights instruments,

Taking note of Security Council resolutions 1160(1998) of 31 March 1998, 1199(1998) of 23 September 1998 and 1203(1998) of 24 October 1998, as well as the statement made on 24 March 1998 by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session and Commission resolution 1998/79 of 22 April 1998,

Taking fully into account the regional dimensions of the crisis in Kosovo, particularly with regard to the human rights and the humanitarian situation, and deeply concerned at the potential adverse consequences thereof,

Taking note with concern of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Kosovo and the report of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), which describe the persistent and grave violations and abuse of human rights and humanitarian law in Kosovo,

Gravely concerned about the systematic terrorization of ethnic Albanians, as demonstrated in the many reports, inter alia, of torture of ethnic Albanians, through indiscriminate and widespread shelling, mass forced displacement of civilians, summary executions and illegal detention of ethnic Albanian citizens of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) by the police and military,

Concerned about reports of violence committed by armed ethnic Albanian groups against non-combatants and the illegal detention of individuals, primarily ethnic Serbs, by those groups,

Stressing, in this context, the importance of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991,

Distressed by the lack of due process in the trials of those ethnic Albanians who have been detained, charged or brought to trial in relation to the crisis in Kosovo,

Concerned by the grave infringements upon the freedom of expression in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), in particular the adoption of the new law on public information by the Serbian Parliament and the recent closure of several independent newspapers and radio stations in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),

1. Welcomes the commitment made by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to address the conflict and the ongoing human rights violations in Kosovo, as manifested by agreements signed by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and the international supervision of elections and verification of the implementation of human rights commitments;

2. Welcomes also the withdrawal and return to garri-son of a number of military and police units, as demanded by the Security Council in its resolution 1199(1998), but cautions that such withdrawals must be genuine, complete and lasting;

3. Welcomes further the establishment by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe of the Kosovo Verification Mission, and calls upon all parties in Kosovo to cooperate fully with the Mission and ensure the protection, freedom of movement and unrestricted access within Kosovo of its personnel;

4. Welcomes the conclusion of a memorandum of understanding with the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in accordance with the statement by the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights, regarding the status of the office in Belgrade, leading the way to the establishment of office premises for the Office of the High Commissioner and the deployment of additional human rights officers in Kosovo;

5. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to respect all human rights and fundamental freedoms fully and to abide by democratic norms, especially in regard to respect for the principle of free and fair elections, the rule of law, the administration of justice, free and fair trials and the promotion and protection of free and independent media;

6. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the ethnic Albanian leadership in Kosovo to condemn acts of terrorism, denounce and refrain from all acts of violence, encourage the pursuit of goals through peaceful means, and respect international humanitarian law and international human rights standards;

7. Urges the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Kosovo Albanian leadership to enter immediately into a meaningful dialogue, without preconditions and with international involvement, and to commit themselves both to a clear timetable, leading to an end of the crisis, and to a negotiated political settlement of the issue of Kosovo, and welcomes the current efforts aimed at facilitating such a dialogue;

8. Strongly condemns the overwhelming number of human rights violations committed by the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the police and military authorities in Kosovo, including summary executions, indiscriminate and widespread attacks on civilians, indiscriminate and widespread destruction of property, mass forced displacement of civilians, the taking of civilian hostages, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, in breach of international humanitarian law including article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocol II to the Conventions, relating to the protection of victims of non-international armed conflicts, and calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take all measures necessary to eliminate these unacceptable practices;

9. Condemns the acts of violence, including kidnappings, by armed ethnic Albanian groups, in particular against non-combatants;

10. Strongly condemns the denial of appropriate access to Kosovo of non-governmental organizations, the manipulation and denial of relief and basic foodstuffs, and the denial of medical care to wounded civilians, calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to take all measures necessary to eliminate these unacceptable practices forthwith, and recalls the commitment to allow unhindered access to humanitarian organizations and the need to facilitate the immediate return of internally displaced persons to their homes;

11. Deeply deplores the killing of humanitarian aid workers, as reported by the Secretary-General;

12. Calls upon all parties, in particular those of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to clear the area forthwith of all landmines and booby-traps and to work with the relevant international bodies to this end;

13. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to comply with and build on the commitments made by the President of the Republic of Serbia in his statement of 13 October 1998, which were subsequently endorsed by the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro);

14. Also calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro):

(a) To establish a local police force in Kosovo under local or communal direction, which will be representative of the local population;

(b) To abide by the principle that no person will be prosecuted in state courts for crimes related to the conflict in Kosovo, except for crimes against humanity, war crimes and other crimes covered by international law;

(c) To allow the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and its forensic experts complete, unimpeded access to Kosovo to examine the recently alleged atrocities against civilians;

(d) To mitigate the punishments of and where appropriate to amnesty the ethnic Albanians in Kosovo sentenced for criminal offences motivated by political aims;

(e) To respect fully all the rights of individuals in Kosovo, whatever their ethnic, cultural or religious backgrounds, so as to guarantee equitable treatment of their values and historic patrimony and so as to preserve and permit expression of their national, cultural, religious and linguistic identities in accordance with international standards and the Final Act of Helsinki of 1 August 1975;

15. Further calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to open to public observation all trials or criminal prosecutions against all those charged in relation to the conflict in Kosovo;

16. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to make possible the establishment of genuine democratic self-governance in Kosovo, through a negotiated political settlement with representatives of the ethnic Albanian community, as called for by the Security Council in its resolutions 1160(1998), 1199(1998) and 1203(1998), to include executive, legislative and judicial bodies and police, and in so doing to respect the rights of Kosovar Albanians and all who live in Kosovo, and expresses its support for an enhanced status for Kosovo, which would include a substantially greater degree of autonomy;

17. Also calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to grant access to and free and unaccompanied movement within Kosovo for all humanitarian aid workers and international monitors;

18. Further calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro):

(a) To promote and respect fully freedom of expression and freedom of the press, without discrimination;

(b) To repeal those legal measures used to discriminate against ethnic Albanians, including repressive laws on universities;

19. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and armed Albanian groups to refrain from any harassment and intimidation of journalists;

20. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to work closely with and support the mission to Kosovo of the personal representative of the Chairman-in-Office of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and with the Kosovo Verification Mission;

21. Also calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to investigate and prosecute in all cases where so warranted, notably those cases concerning its personnel, anyone suspected of torture and ill-treatment of persons held in detention;

22. Further calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to release all political prisoners, to allow unimpeded access by non-governmental organizations and international observers to those prisoners who remain in detention, and to cease the persecution of political leaders and members of local human rights organizations;

23. Calls upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and ethnic Albanian leaders to allow for and facilitate the free and unhindered return to their homes, in safety and with dignity, of all internally displaced persons and refugees, and expresses its concern about reports of continuing harassment or other impediments in this regard;

24. Calls upon the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and all others concerned to guarantee the unrestricted access of humanitarian organizations and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to Kosovo, and to allow the unhindered delivery of relief items and ensure the safety and security of humanitarian, diplomatic and other affected personnel accredited to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), including members of the Verification Mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;

25. Encourages the useful cooperation of the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe on the ground, in the light of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in Kosovo;

26. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his humanitarian efforts in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), working through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, other appropriate humanitarian organizations and the Office of the United Nations

High Commissioner for Human Rights, with a view to taking urgent practical steps to meet the critical needs of the people in Kosovo, and to assist in the voluntary return of the displaced persons to their homes in conditions of safety and dignity;

27. Encourages the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal to continue investigations at all levels on serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in Kosovo, and reaffirms that such crimes fall within its jurisdiction;

28. Demands that the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Kosovo Albanian leadership and all others concerned cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and honour all their obligations towards it by, inter alia, providing full and free access to Kosovo for the investigators of the Tribunal;

29. Reiterates its call upon the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to live up to their commitment to provide financial and material assistance to those residents of Kosovo whose homes have been damaged;

30. Emphasizes that legislation on citizenship of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should be applied in accordance with the principles set out in relevant international instruments, in particular with regard to the standards and principles of the reduction and avoidance of statelessness;

31. Also emphasizes that improvement in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) will assist in establishing a full range of relations with the international community;

32. Requests the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territories of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to continue to monitor closely the situation of human rights in Kosovo, to pay special attention to Kosovo in his reporting and to report his findings to the Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fifth session and to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

33. Decides to continue its consideration of the situation of human rights in Kosovo at its fifty-fourth session under the item entitled "Human rights questions".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/164:

In favour Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Andorra, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Canada, Cape Verde, Chad, Chile, Comoros, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Monaco, Mongolia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, San Marino, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Tajikistan, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu.

Against: Belarus, India, Russian Federation.

Abstaining: Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Belize, Bhutan, Botswana, Cameroon, Central African Republic, China, Colombia, Cote d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Jamaica, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Peru, Philippines, Singapore, Sri Lanka, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Trinidad and Tobago, Ukraine, United Republic of Tanzania, Venezuela, Zimbabwe.

On 27 November [A/53/717], FRY presented its position on the two draft resolutions—the omnibus draft on the human rights situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY and the draft on the human rights situation in Kosovo. It stated that the allegations of human rights violations were inaccurate and tendentious. Only passing reference was made to positive developments and no reference was made to the efforts of FRY and the Serbian Government to improve the humanitarian situation in Kosovo and Metohija.

Middle East

Lebanon

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 52 to 1, the Commission on Human Rights on 21 April [E/1998/23 des. 1998/62] deplored continued Israeli practices that violated human rights in southern Lebanon and western Bekaa and called on Israel to end those practices, which included arbitrary detention of civilians, the destruction of their dwellings, confiscation of their property, expulsion from their land and the bombardment of villages and civilian areas. Israel also was called on to comply with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, particularly the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (fourth Geneva Convention), and to release all Lebanese who had been detained, as well as other detainees. The Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring its resolution to Israel's attention and to invite Israel to provide information on its implementation. He was also asked to report to the General Assembly in 1998 and to the Commission in 1999.

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission in resolution 1997/55 on the situation of human rights in southern Lebanon [YUN 1997, p. 749], the Secretary-General reported that he had asked Israel for information on the extent of its implementation of that resolution, but had received no reply [E/CN.4/1998/56].

In October [A/53/537], the Secretary-General stated that he had asked Israel for information on the implementation of the Commission's 1998 resolution and had received no reply.

Territories occupied by Israel

During the year, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. Political and other aspects were considered by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories (Committee on Israeli Practices) and other bodies (see PART ONE, Chapter VI).

Reports of Secretary-General. In accordance with Commission resolution 1997/2 [YUN 1997, p. 751], the Secretary-General reported that he had brought that resolution concerning the occupied Syrian Golan to the attention of all Governments, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People (Committee on Palestinian Rights), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations [E/CN.4/1998/20]. The UN Department of Public Information provided press coverage for all meetings of the Committee on Israeli Practices and distributed information through documents, press releases, television news packages, briefings and UN information centres.

In response to Commission resolution 1997/1 [YUN 1997, p. 751], the Secretary-General stated that he had brought the resolution on the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories to the attention of Israel and all other Governments, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations, international humanitarian organizations, the Committee on Israeli Practices, the Committee on Palestinian Rights and UNRWA [E/CN.4/1998/18]. He had received no reply from Israel.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Commission in February a list of all General Assembly and other reports issued since 18 April 1997 on the situation of the population living in the occupied Arab territories [E/CN.4/1998/19].

Report of Special Rapporteur. In February [E/CN.4/1998/17], Special Rapporteur Hannu Halinen (Finland) discussed the human rights situation in the occupied Palestinian territories. He had visited the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel, Jordan and Egypt (12-22 January).

According to the Special Rapporteur, there was a deepening sense of frustration among people in the Middle East regarding the peace process. Despite steps taken by Israel and the Palestinian Authority to improve their record, serious human rights violations persisted. Indicators of the Palestinian economy were declining, a clear sign that development was reversing, constituting a growing threat to security. A most serious and persistent source of tension in the occupied territories was the some 3,500 Palestinian prisoners detained in Israeli prisons and detention centres in conditions not in keeping with international standards. The number of administrative detainees had risen to 500, with children included among them. It was reported that up to 1,200 persons were held in administrative detention by the Palestinian Authority, and treatment of those held for alleged security offences during interrogation was cause for serious concern. Torture and ill-treatment of Palestinian detainees in Israeli prisons and detention centres were reportedly systematic. Torture and ill-treatment in the detention centres controlled by the Palestinian Authority reportedly continued.

The occupation continued to have detrimental effects on the development of children. The Special Rapporteur was told that there were between 70 and 90 Palestinian children in Israeli prisons. He was also informed about the vulnerable position of women in Palestinian society. An increase in malnutrition had been registered among pregnant women and pre-school-age children suffering from iron and iodine deficiencies. In addition to the high unemployment, closures continued to have a negative impact on the overall economic situation in the occupied territories, especially in the Gaza Strip. The Special Rapporteur stated that the increased construction and expansion of Israeli settlements and bypass roads had exacerbated the human rights situation in the occupied territories. The confiscation by the Israeli authorities of the identity cards of Palestinian Jerusalemites continued.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that the human rights situation in the occupied territories remained disturbing, despite some positive developments. Further efforts were needed regarding transparency and accountability, functioning of the judiciary, as well as freedom of the press and opinion. The Special Rapporteur indicated that the completion of the peace process was the best way to ensure respect for human rights and the rule of law.

Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 20 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights, on 27 March [res. 1998/1], condemned the continued human rights violations in the occupied Palestinian territories. It also condemned the opening of a tunnel under the Al Aqsa mosque, the continued building of Israeli settlements, the expropriation of Palestinian homes in Jerusalem and the revocation of identity cards and called on Israel to close the tunnel and end those practices. The Commission called on Israel to abolish the use of torture against Palestinians during interrogation; cease enforcing collective punishments; desist from all forms of human rights violations in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories; respect international law; and withdraw from the Palestinian territories. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the current resolution to the attention of Israel and all other Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to disseminate it as widely as possible and to report in 1999 on its implementation by Israel. He was also asked to provide the Commission with all UN reports issued between its sessions that dealt with conditions in which the Palestinians were living under Israeli occupation.

On the same date [res. 1998/2], by a roll-call vote of 33 to 1, with 19 abstentions, the Commission called on Israel to comply with UN resolutions on the Syrian Golan and demanded that it rescind its decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that occupied territory. It also called on Israel to desist from imposing Israeli identity cards on Syrian citizens of the Syrian Golan and from its repressive measures against them. The Secretary-General was asked to bring the resolution to the attention of all Governments, UN organs, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and international humanitarian organizations, to give the resolution wide publicity and to report in 1999.

Also on 27 March [res. 1998/3], by a roll-call vote of 51 to 1, the Commission expressed grave concern at Israeli settlement activities, which were illegal and constituted a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention. It condemned all acts of terrorism and called on all parties not to allow those acts to affect negatively the ongoing peace process. The Commission called on Israel to comply with its previous resolutions; to cease its policy of expanding the settlements and related activities in the occupied territories; and to forgo and prevent any new installation of settlers.

PART THREE

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic cooperation

During 1998, the East Asian financial crisis, recession in Japan and the Russian crisis—along with contagion through the world financial markets—combined to halve the rate of growth of the world economy and to raise concern about global recession. The number of countries that saw an increase in output per capita in 1998 was 23 fewer than in the previous year. However, the world economic situation was not uniformly bleak. Output per capita was on the rise in more than 100 countries in 1998, with economic growth relatively strong in North America, much of Europe, including some transition economies, China and India.

The countries that were especially vulnerable to the wave of financial and economic crises during the year were those that had taken relatively greater steps to liberalize their economies and integrate them into the global system. Against that backdrop, international attention was focused on the risks that accompanied the benefits of globalization and interdependence in the world economy. In April, the challenges of globalization were central to the discussions at a high-level meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)). The General Assembly held a special two-day ministerial dialogue in September to address the social and economic impact of globalization as it related to strengthening international economic cooperation for development. In December, the Assembly decided to hold the high-level dialogue biennially to provide impetus for the promotion of international economic cooperation for development.

Substantive issues discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its 1998 session included technology transfer, capacity-building, education and science for sustainable development. A high-level interactive segment discussed issues related to industry and sustainable development.

The eradication of poverty continued to be a focus of United Nations efforts related to economic development. In June, the Administrative Committee on Coordination issued a statement of commitment for action to eradicate poverty, by which the executive heads of UN organizations committed themselves to renewed collaboration in that area. The Assembly, in December resolutions, addressed implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and proclaimed the year 2005 as the International Year of Microcredit in recognition of the role of microcredit programmes in the eradication of poverty and their contribution to social development.

The unique development needs and vulnerabilities of countries in special situations—economies in transition, the least developed countries, small island developing States and landlocked developing countries—were also of continuing concern to UN organizations in 1998.

International economic relations

Development and international economic cooperation

A number of UN bodies discussed development and international economic cooperation issues during 1998, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

By decision 53/429 of 8 December, the Assembly deferred consideration of the launching of global negotiations on international economic cooperation for development and included the item in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth (1999) session.

By decision 53/440 of 15 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/608] on its discussion of sustainable development and international economic cooperation.

Economic and Social Council consideration. On 18 April, the Economic and Social Council held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and IMF) [A/53/3 & Corr.1 & Add.1]. It had before it a note by the Secretary-General identifying issues relating to global financial integration and development [E/1998/9]. Discussions were driven to a large extent by the repercussions of the

As decided on 6 February (decision 1998/206), the Council held its high-level segment from 6 to 8 July. It discussed the theme of "Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization" (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Among the documents considered by the segment were the World Economic and Social Survey 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.C.1] (see below) and a report on the issues to be addressed by the high-level segment [E/1998/55], prepared by the secretariats of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the World Trade Organization (WTO).

By decision 53/449 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of the relevant chapters of the report of the Economic and Social Council [A/53/3].

Development through partnership

In accordance with resolution 52/186 [YUN 1997, p. 787], the Chairman of the Second Committee, at the request of the General Assembly President [A/C.2/52/10, A/52/836], undertook consultations with Member States on the modalities of the first two-day high-level dialogue on the theme of the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications. He reported to the President on those consultations in letters of 13 March [A/52/832] and 27 May [A/52/919], indicating that consensus had been reached that the high-level dialogue should be in the form of plenary meetings and ministerial round tables, that it should convene immediately before the general debate of the fifty-third General Assembly session in September, and should include contributions from non-State actors involved in and affected by globalization.

By decision 52/480 of 4 June, the Assembly took note of the Chairman's letters.

High-level dialogue

The General Assembly held a two-day high-level meeting (17-18 September) related to renewal of the dialogue for strengthening international economic cooperation for development. The theme of the dialogue was the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications [A/53/PV.3-6]. The format of the meeting was a unique innovation in the General Assembly's work, comprising a plenary debate in which delegations stated their national positions; two ministerial round tables on national and international responses to globalization; and two informal panels, one on the economic and the other on the social aspects of globalization, which brought together experts from the private sector, the academic world, trade unions and civil society at large.

The Assembly President summarized the thrust of the high-level dialogue [A/53/529] as follows: globalization was an irreversible process, which, although a positive force, needed to be carefully harnessed; national efforts to meet the challenges of globalization, particularly institution-building, were necessary but not sufficient, and global action involving multilateral institutions and the world's economies was imperative; there was a need to move beyond the status quo, in particular by reviewing the current international financial system with a view to enhancing its transparency, accountability and participatory character; globalization was a multifaceted process involving many actors and, in order to address inclusiveness and participation issues, it was necessary to promote a global civil ethic to shape the rules that would ensure that globalization benefited all, including those currently marginalized; and the United Nations provided a unique platform for defining the principles and norms necessary to harness globalization's potential and promote a comprehensive dialogue on globalization around the concept of "global housekeeping".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/606/Add.4], adopted resolution 53/181 without vote [agenda item 93 (d)].

Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993, 49/95 of 19 December 1994, 50/122 of 20 December 1995, 51/174 of 16 December 1996 and 52/186 of 18 December 1997,

Recalling also the adoption of the Agenda for Development and the relevant provisions on its follow-up and implementation, and the need to give impetus to international economic cooperation for development so as to follow up on the Agenda effectively,

Expressing satisfaction with the holding on 17 and 18 September 1998 of the first high-level dialogue of the General Assembly on the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications, including the use of panels which were not part of the formal proceedings and round-table discussions which promoted interactive dialogue,

1. Reaffirms the continuing need to strengthen constructive dialogue and genuine partnership in order to promote further international economic cooperation for development;

2. Stresses that such a dialogue should be conducted in response to the imperatives of mutual interests and benefits, genuine interdependence, shared responsibility and the partnership for achieving development, as well as for improving the international economic environment so that it is conducive to such development, and that the United Nations system should reinforce its activities in order to facilitate such a dialogue, in accordance with relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

3. Decides to hold biennially a renewal of the high-level dialogue of the General Assembly on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership, to provide impetus for the promotion of international economic cooperation for development;

4. Also decides that, building on the experience of the high-level dialogue held on 17 and 18 September 1998, the theme and the modalities of the second high-level dialogue will be decided through the intergovernmental process at the fifty-fourth session of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with Governments, all relevant parts of the United Nations system and relevant intergovernmental organizations, to propose themes for the promotion of international economic cooperation for development for the second high-level dialogue for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the appropriate item, the sub-item entitled "Renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership".

Also on 15 December, by decision 53/442, the Assembly took note of the President's summary of the Assembly's high-level dialogue.

Globalization and interdependence

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/606/Add.5], adopted resolution 53/169 without vote [agenda item 91].

Role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, particularly with regard to the role of the United Nations in promoting international economic and social cooperation, including seeking solutions to international economic, social and related problems,

Recognizing the challenges and opportunities of globalization and interdependence,

Expressing concern over the serious risks of marginalization of a large number of developing countries from the globalization process, including in the finance and trade sectors, and the increasing vulnerability of those developing countries that are integrating into the world economy, resulting particularly from the volatility of short-term capital flows and the accentuation of income disparities within and among countries,

Mindful, in the process of trade liberalization, of the diminution of trade preferential margins for developing countries, particularly the least developed countries and small island developing States, and of the need for countries to take measures, as appropriate, in accordance with the rules of the World Trade Organization, to address that diminution with a view to offsetting it,

Recognizing that globalization and interdependence have opened new opportunities, through increased trade and capital flows and advancement in technology, for the growth of the world economy, for development and for the improvement of living standards around the world,

Underlining the need to work on a wide range of reforms to create a strengthened international financial system,

Stressing the importance of promoting the integration of developing countries into the world economy to allow them to take the fullest possible advantage of the trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization,

Emphasizing that technical assistance is also vital in enabling developing countries to benefit from the international trading environment,

Underlining the urgent need to mitigate the negative consequences of globalization and interdependence so as to realize the mutually reinforcing objectives of poverty eradication and development,

Reiterating that the United Nations is in a unique position, as a universal forum, to achieve international cooperation in addressing the challenges of promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Emphasizing that the United Nations system has a key role in fostering greater coherence, complementarity and coordination in economic and development issues at the global level,

Recognizing the importance of appropriate policy responses at the national level by all countries to the challenges of globalization, in particular by pursuing sound macroeconomic and social policies, noting the need for support from the international community for the efforts, in particular of the least developed countries, to improve their institutional and management capacities, and also recognizing that all countries should pursue policies conducive to economic growth and to promoting a favourable global economic environment,

Recalling the outcome of the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Midrand, South Africa, which provides an important framework for promoting partnership for growth and development in the context of globalization and interdependence,

Noting the special high-level meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, held on 18 April 1998, and the ministerial communique on market access adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its 1998 substantive session,

Recalling the widely shared desire expressed during the high-level dialogue of the General Assembly, held on 17 and 18 September 1998, which constituted a renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership, to continue discussions with a view to developing a coherent and effective response to the opportunities and challenges being offered by globalization and interdependence,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, wherein he identified, inter alia, the obstacles to the full participation of the African economies in the globalization process,

1. Reaffirms that the United Nations has a central role to play in promoting international cooperation for development and in providing guidance on global development issues, including in the context of globalization and interdependence;

2. Re-emphasizes the importance of recognizing the needs of developing countries, particularly the special needs of the least developed countries and small island developing States, in the context of globalization, and urges the international community, including the World Trade Organization, to continue to grant more preferential treatment to developing countries, including the least developed countries and small island developing States;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the International Trade Centre to help developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and small island developing States, to address their specific concerns within the globalizing economy, in particular through technology-related assistance in the fields of trade, policy, improvement of trade efficiency and policies and trade in services, in particular in electronic commerce;

4. Emphasizes the importance of recognizing and addressing the specific concerns of countries with economies in transition so as to help them to benefit from globalization with a view to their full integration into the world economy;

5. Underlines the need to continue to work to ensure the full participation of all the developing countries in the benefits of globalization and also the need to reduce their vulnerability to the negative impacts of globalization and interdependence;

6. Emphasizes that concerted efforts should be made, through enhanced cooperation and coordination among all the relevant forums and institutions, to minimize the negative impacts and maximize the benefits of globalization and interdependence for the developing countries;

7. Stresses the importance, at the national level, of maintaining sound macroeconomic policies and developing effective institutional and regulatory frameworks and human resources;

8. Strongly underlines the importance of an enabling environment for investment, in particular foreign direct investment, market access, good governance, increase in the volume and effectiveness of official development assistance, tackling of unsustainable debt burdens, including through debt conversion measures, flexibility in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative and support for regional cooperation and integration as priority areas that need to be addressed in order to achieve sustainable development in all African countries and to encourage the participation of all African countries in the global economy, as recommended in the report of the Secretary-General;

9. Stresses the need for continued and constructive dialogue in the appropriate forums among developed and developing countries on issues related to strengthening and reforming the international financial architecture;

10. Recognizes the urgency of working together in developing a global approach to mitigate the negative consequences of globalization and interdependence, taking into account the specific vulnerabilities, concerns and needs of developing countries;

11. Invites the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, in their special high-level meeting in 1999, also to address ways and means of optimizing the benefits and minimizing the negative consequences of globalization and interdependence, in particular for the developing countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in collaboration with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and in consultation with relevant organizations, in particular the World Trade Organization, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the regional commissions, an analytical report, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, that examines the interrelated issues in order to facilitate better understanding of globalization and makes recommendations on, inter alia:

(a) The role of the United Nations in promoting development in the context of globalization and interdependence;

(b) Promoting coherence, complementarity and coordination on economic and development issues at the global level in order to optimize the benefits and limit the negative consequences of globalization and interdependence;

13. Decides to include in the agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item entitled "Globalization and interdependence".

Implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation and the International Development Strategy

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/173 [YUN 1996, p. 730], the Secretary-General submitted a September progress report on implementation of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries [A/53/301], adopted by the Assembly in resolution S-18/3 [YUN 1990, p. 337] and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade (the 1990s), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/199 [ibid., p. 343].

The report noted that three developments in the world economy had loomed particularly prominent since the implementation of the agreements concerned was last discussed in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 729]: the trend towards growing globalization; the improvement of economic growth in a number of least developed countries (LDCs) in 1995-1997; and the fallout from the 1997 Asian financial crisis. Also discussed were developments related to social dimensions such as poverty reduction, education and health; financial issues, including capital flows, aid and debt; and trade concerns.

In reviewing the dual challenges of globalization and growth, the report found that there were both benefits and risks to globalization, with the greatest risk being that it would leave behind the smaller and weaker members of the world trading system. It was also increasingly evident that the pressures of globalization appeared to accentuate the benefits of good domestic policies, as well as the costs of poor policies.

Among those at risk of being marginalized by an increasingly globalized world economy were LDCs, comprising a total population of some 600 million. LDCs continued to face numerous structural rigidities, infrastructural bottlenecks, mounting debt and weak institutions, according to the report. Moreover, the increased reliance of LDCs on development assistance contrasted sharply with the dwindling aid efforts of donor countries.

As to the role of the United Nations system, inter-agency cooperation and coordination of development activities continued to be strengthened. However, many of the goals and objectives set out in the Declaration and the International Development Strategy remained unattained. The report concluded that further progress required action on both the domestic and international fronts. External strategies towards opening up the world economy had to be complemented by the appropriate policy mix and institutional reform on a country-by-country basis.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/608/Add.I], adopted resolution 53/178 without vote [agenda item 93 (a)].

Implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance and continued validity of the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, contained in the annex to its resolution S-18/3 of 1 May 1990, and the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 45/199 of 21 December 1990,

Recalling its resolutions 46/144 of 17 December 1991, 47/152 of 18 December 1992, 48/185 of 21 December 1993, 49/92 of 19 December 1994 and 51/173 of 16 December 1996 on the implementation of the Declaration and the Strategy, and the Agenda for Development,

Recalling also the results, as agreed, of all major United Nations conferences and summit meetings held since the beginning of the 1990s,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade;

2. Recognizes the need to strengthen the implementation of the Declaration and the Strategy in the remaining years of the 1990s, in close collaboration with, inter alia, efforts undertaken in the context of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and its implementing arm, the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with all concerned organs and organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as other relevant international organizations, to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fourth session an analytical report containing a thorough evaluation of the implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration and of the implementation of the Strategy, including the progress made and the constraints encountered therein;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item entitled "Sustainable development and international cooperation: implementation of the commitments and policies agreed upon in the Declaration on International Economic Cooperation, in particular the Revitalization of Economic Growth and Development of the Developing Countries, and implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Fourth United Nations Development Decade".

Economies in transition

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/175 [YUN 1996, p. 731], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/53/336 & Add.I], described the activities of UN organizations in relation to the integration of economies in transition into the world economy. The report surveyed information supplied to the Secretary-General as at 20 August on analytical activities undertaken throughout the UN system, as well as policy advice and technical cooperation provided to the economies in transition on the social and political framework for market reforms, particularly in relation to the development of the necessary conditions for attracting foreign investment.

It was noted that the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), as the main technical cooperation funding agencies for the UN system, had programmes in individual economies in transition, as well as regional activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/608/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/179 without vote [agenda item 93 (b)].

Integration of the economies in transition into the world economy

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 47/187 of 22 December 1992, 48/181 of 21 December 1993, 49/106 of 19 December 1994 and 51/175 of 16 December 1996,

Reaffirming also the need for the full integration of the countries with economies in transition into the world economy,

Noting the progress made in these countries in achieving macroeconomic stabilization in the course of structural reforms, which require more active investment policies,

Noting also the aspiration of the countries with economies in transition towards the further development of regional and interregional cooperation,

Noting with satisfaction that some countries with economies in transition that are more advanced in reforming their economies have been more capable of maintaining their internal and external financial stability while facing present global financial turmoils,

Recognizing the need to ensure favourable conditions for market access of exports from these countries, in accordance with multilateral trade agreements,

Expressing concern that the economies in transition have become more vulnerable to and have been adversely affected by volatile fluctuations of short-term capital flows,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the measures undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system to implement General Assembly resolutions on the integration of the economies in transition into the world economy;
3. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions, in collaboration with relevant non-United Nations multilateral and regional institutions, to continue to conduct analytical activities and provide policy advice and technical assistance to the Governments of the countries with economies in transition in strengthening the social and political framework for economic and market reforms, thereby creating, in particular, an enabling environment for foreign investment, and in the early identification of nascent crises in order to ensure their economic and financial stability;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Industrial development

Commission on Sustainable Development. In a January report [E/CN.17/1998/4 & Add.1-3] to the Commission on Sustainable Development (20 April-1 May) (see below), the Secretary-General discussed the relationship between industry and sustainable development, including the role of industry in promoting economic growth and the structural transformation of economies, as well as the impact of industry on social development and the environment. Policy challenges facing Governments, industry and civil society were also reviewed.

The report addressed many issues previously discussed under the headings of a variety of chapters of Agenda 21, which was adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672], with greater emphasis on industry, including such sub-sectors as iron and steel, pulp and paper, cement and chemicals. It also revisited some complementarities and conflicts between economic, social and environmental goals of sustainable development. In addition, the main national and international policy challenges with respect to industry as a result of recent major international conferences and the completion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations were addressed, and the effectiveness of a number of recent national and international policy changes in promoting sustainable development was assessed, as was industry's support of sustainable development goals through voluntary measures. The involvement of industry in policy formulation and standard setting, at both the national and international levels, was also discussed.

The report was considered by the Inter-session Ad Hoc Working Group on Industry and Sustainable Development (New York, 2-6 March) [E/CN.17/1998/14], which also considered the issue of guidelines for sustainable consumption (see PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Among the Working Group's recommendations were suggested elements and policy options for Governments, industry and the international community and a call for further action at all levels to encourage companies to integrate sustainable development into their business strategies, planning and operations. The Working Group called on Governments to develop policies that would encourage business and industry to move faster towards sustainable development, especially through continuous innovation and the adoption of environmentally sound technologies designed to change production and consumption patterns. Relevant international organizations were asked to study voluntary schemes formulated with regard to industry, the effects of the technologies used to cope with problems, and the prospects for introducing them elsewhere.

In April [E/1998/29], the Commission on Sustainable Development held a separate "industry segment" to provide an interactive dialogue on industry and sustainable development between the representatives of Governments, industry, trade unions, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), other major groups and international organizations. The segment focused on four themes: responsible entrepreneurship; corporate management tools; technology cooperation and assessment; and industry and fresh water.

In a decision on industry and sustainable development [ibid. (dec. 6/2)], the Commission reaffirmed that, in order to achieve sustainable development, Governments, in cooperation with non-State actors, needed to undertake greater efforts to integrate economic, social and environmental goals into industrial policy and decision-making. To that end, Governments should expand and intensify cooperation with industry, trade unions and other groups of civil society. The Commission also made several recommendations based on the reports of the Secretary-General and the Inter-sessional Ad Hoc Working Group on Industry and Sustainable Development, particularly in relation to industry and economic and social development, and environmental protection.

UNIDO report. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 51/170 [YUN 1996, p. 733], the Secretary-General in August transmitted to the Assembly a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) [A/53/254], in which he reviewed industrial strategy and policy issues in developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The report analysed the implications of economic globalization for policies aimed at promoting sustainable industrial development, drawing conclusions from a range of country-specific experiences, and presented an agenda for future multilateral cooperation in that field.

The Director-General stated that UNIDO was finalizing a new portfolio of integrated services to address the needs of developing and transition economies. Multidisciplinary fields of expertise would be mobilized to deliver services to be assessed in terms of their measurable impact on the three dimensions of sustainable industrial development: a competitive economy; a sound environment; and productive employment. That new approach would translate into action the business plan on the future role and functions of UNIDO, approved at the seventh session of the UNIDO General Conference in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1564]. The business plan focused on strengthening of industrial capacities; and cleaner and sustainable industrial development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/607], adopted resolution 53/177 without vote [agenda item 92 (b)].

Industrial development cooperation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/151 of 18 December 1991, 49/108 of 19 December 1994 and 51/170 of 16 December 1996 on industrial development cooperation,

Taking note of the declaration adopted by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 and China at their twenty-second annual meeting, held in New York on 25 September 1998, on the relevance of industrialization for development and the importance of international cooperation to support the developing countries in this field,

Recognizing the increasing role of the business community, including the private sector, in enhancing the dynamic process of the development of the industrial sector,

Taking note of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

1. Reaffirms that industrialization is a key element in the promotion of the sustainable development of developing countries, as well as in the creation of productive employment, the eradication of poverty and facilitating social integration, including the integration of women into the development process;

2. Stresses the importance of domestic industrial transformation in developing countries to increase the value added of their export earnings, so that they may benefit fully from the process of globalization and trade liberalization;

3. Emphasizes the importance of industrial development cooperation and a positive investment and business climate at the international, regional, subregional and national levels in promoting the expansion, diversification and modernization of productive capacities in developing countries and countries with economies in transition;

4. Also emphasizes the importance of a favourable international and national environment for the industrialization of developing countries, and urges all Governments to adopt and implement development policies and strategies that promote, within a framework of transparent and accountable industrialization policies, inter alia, enterprise development, foreign direct investment, technological adaptation and innovation, expanded access to markets and the effective use of official development assistance to enable developing countries to enhance an environment attractive to investment so as to augment and supplement domestic resources for the expansion, diversification and modernization of their industrial productive capacity in the context of an open, equitable, non-discriminatory, transparent, multilateral and rule-based international trading system;

5. Reiterates the importance of technology transfer to the developing countries as an effective means of international cooperation in the field of industrial development;

6. Recognizes the continuing use of official development assistance also for industrial development in the developing countries, and calls upon donor countries and recipient countries to continue to cooperate in their efforts to achieve greater efficiency and effectiveness of official development assistance resources devoted to industrial development cooperation;

7. Emphasizes the importance, for developing countries, of financing for industrial development, including market-based mechanisms and instruments as well as innovative funding modalities, such as co-financing schemes and trust funds, debt-equity swaps and, as appropriate, other debt relief measures and official development assistance specifically designed to strengthen the industrial capacities of developing countries through, inter alia, the facilitation of private capital flows, and, in this regard, requests relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the context of their strategic partnership, to support developing countries and countries with economies in transition in their efforts to mobilize resources for industrial development, especially by means of investment promotion activities, the development of small and medium-sized enterprises, the encouragement of practices to promote employment in industries and various forms of business partnerships, such as industrial joint venture schemes, enterprise-to-enterprise cooperation and venture capital funds for industrial development;

8. Reiterates the importance of cooperation and coordination within the United Nations system in providing effective support for the sustainable industrial development of developing countries, calls upon the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue carrying out its central coordinating role within the United Nations system in that respect, and welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to strengthen its cooperation with the rest of the United Nations system at both the headquarters and the field levels by, inter alia, actively participating in the resident coordinator system, so as to enhance the effectiveness, relevance and development impact of such support;

9. Calls upon the international community and the relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, to support the efforts of the developing countries to intensify and expand industrial cooperation among themselves with respect to, among other things, trade in manufactured products, industrial investments and business partnerships, and industrial technology and scientific exchanges;

10. Requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in cooperation with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, to continue undertaking in-depth assessment, analysis and dissemination of best practices in the area of industrial policies and strategies and of lessons learned in industrial development, taking into account the financial crisis and the impact of globalization on the industrial structure of the developing countries, so as to support and boost South-South cooperation by providing practical insights and ideas for international industrial development cooperation and for economic and technical cooperation among developing countries;

11. Welcomes the promising structural transformation and revitalization of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization as well as its new approach in providing comprehensive packages of integrated services to its member States and the strengthening of its field representation, and requests the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue to accord priority to the needs of the least developed countries and countries in the African region;

12. Also welcomes the focus of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization both on the strengthening of industrial capacities and on cleaner and sustainable industrial development in the context of its new programme reorientation, as well as its cooperation with the relevant bodies and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Environment Programme;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Coercive economic measures

In 1998, the General Assembly had before it a report of the Secretary-General [A/52/343 & Add.1] containing replies received from five Governments in response to his request for information on the elimination of coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion, consideration of which had been deferred from 1997 by decision 52/413 [YUN 1997, p. 790].

In May 1998, the Secretary-General updated his 1997 report with an addendum [A/52/343/Add.2] containing an additional reply from Cuba.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 26 October [meeting 43], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/10 [draft: A/53/L.7/Rev.1] by recorded vote (80-2-67) [agenda item 51].

Elimination of coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, particularly those that call for the development of friendly relations among nations and the achievement of cooperation in solving problems of an economic and social character,

Recalling its numerous resolutions in which it has called upon the international community to take urgent and effective steps to end coercive economic measures,

Recalling also the final document of the Twelfth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, which reaffirmed that coercive economic measures and the enactment of extraterritorial laws are incompatible with international law and the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling further the decision adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-fourth ordinary session, in which that Assembly expressed concern at the continued imposition of extraterritorial coercive economic measures and demanded the elimination of such measures,

Taking into account the final document of the eighth session of the Islamic Summit Conference, held in Tehran, which noted with grave concern that the extraterritorial application of domestic laws was having a negative impact on foreign investment in other States and rejected all coercive measures aimed at member States seeking to broaden the scope of their economic cooperation and trade,

Deeply concerned that Member States are continuing to apply extraterritorial coercive economic laws in violation of the norms of international law and the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Believing that the prompt elimination of such measures would be consistent with the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations and the relevant rules of the World Trade Organization,

Recalling its resolution 51/22 of 27 November 1996,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 51/22;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of every State to economic and social development and to choose the political, economic and social system that it deems to be most appropriate for the welfare of its people, in accordance with its national plans and policies;

3. Expresses its deep concern at the negative impact of unilaterally imposed extraterritorial coercive economic measures on trade and financial and economic cooperation, including at the regional level, as well as the serious obstacles posed to the freedom of trade and the free flow of capital at the regional and international levels;

4. Reiterates its call for the repeal of unilateral extraterritorial laws that impose sanctions on corporations and nationals of other States;

5. Again calls upon all States not to recognize or apply extraterritorial coercive economic measures or legislative enactments unilaterally imposed by any State;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session the item entitled "Elimination of coercive economic measures as a means of political and economic compulsion".

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/10:

In favour. Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Benin, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Iran, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozam-

Sustainable development

Commission on Sustainable Development

The Commission on Sustainable Development held its sixth session in New York from 20 April to 1 May [E/1998/29]; it had held an organizational meeting for the session on 22 December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 819]. In addition to the special two-day segment on industry (21-22 April) (see above), the Commission convened a high-level segment with ministerial participation on 1 May.

Among issues discussed at the session were: strategic approaches to freshwater management (see PART THREE, Chapter VI); industry and sustainable development (see above); guidelines for consumer protection (see PART THREE, Chapter IV); and transfer of technology, capacity-building, education and science (see below). The Commission also considered several issues related to the sustainable development of small island developing States (see below).

In a 27 March report [E/CN.17/1998/10], the Secretary-General summarized the main challenges and emerging issues for the Commission's sixth session. He stated that the new programme of work of the Commission (1998-2002) was better focused on strategic sustainable development issues and provided for a more integrated consideration of the economic, social and environmental components of sustainable development in critical areas as a result of the review and appraisal of Agenda 21, carried out by the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 790].

By decision 1998/217 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its sixth session [E/1998/29] and approved the provisional agenda for the seventh (1999) session. On the same date, by decision 1998/223, the Council authorized the Commission to convene an organizational meeting in 1998 in order to hold elections to fill two vacant posts of Vice-Chairmen of the Bureau of its seventh (1999) session. In accordance with that decision, the Commission met in New York on 1 May and 27 July 1998 [E/1999/29] and elected the officers for the seventh session (see APPENDIX III).

On 29 July, the Council, by decision 1998/234, approved the request of 11 NGOs that were on the Roster for the purposes of the work of the Commission to expand their participation in other areas of the Council's work.

On 31 July, by decision 1998/295, the Council decided that inter-sessional ad hoc open-ended working groups of the Commission would meet at United Nations Headquarters in New York from 22 to 26 February and from 1 to 5 March 1999.

National reporting

In a March report [E/CN.17/1998/8], the Secretary-General reviewed the history of national reporting to the Commission, including such related issues as common access, streamlining of reporting requirements, indicators and regional exchange of national information. The report emphasized that maximum use should be made of national information through succinct summary reference data, including tables, graphs and directories. It also recommended the establishment of a database of official country information, to be updated on a continuous basis and made available to all interested users at all times via the Internet.

In another March report [E/CN.17/1998/9], the Secretary-General presented the results of a consultative meeting of regional organizations (New York, 4-6 February), which reviewed existing modalities for the exchange of national experiences, including conferences, workshops and seminars; voluntary national reporting; mandatory national reporting; surveillance consultations; and country policy reviews. The meeting was held in accordance with a recommendation contained in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the General Assembly in 1997 by resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]. The meeting suggested that a first step towards promotion of greater regional collaboration for sustainable development would be to devise a means to make better use of voluntary national reporting to the Commission and provide a regional focus for the exchange of that information, using it to analyse trends within a region. Attention was also drawn to the need for continued support to countries to develop capacity in the areas of data collection, coordination and analysis and in building electronic networks for exchanging information at the national, regional and international levels. The Commission also reviewed the results of the Fourth International Workshop on Indicators of Sustainable Development (Prague, Czech Republic, 19-21 January) [E/CN.17/1998/15], which brought together those countries involved in the national testing of indicators of sustainable development in order to promote the exchange of experience among testing countries and produce recommendations for improving the testing process and the further development of indicators.

In a decision on information provided by Governments and exchange of national experiences [E/1998/29 (dec. 6/5)], the Commission encouraged Governments to continue to provide voluntary national reports on the implementation of Agenda 21 at the national level and to make voluntary national presentations within the framework of Commission sessions. Task managers of sectoral areas were requested to provide information on the global progress made in implementing Agenda 21 as part of the preparations for the comprehensive review to be carried out by the Assembly in 2002. The Commission took note of the ongoing work aimed at streamlining requests for national information and reporting, as well as the results of the pilot phase relating to indicators of sustainable development. It also noted a proposal under consideration within the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) to undertake an exchange of national experiences of the countries within the region and invited ECE to share the results of any such exercise with the Commission.

Inter-Agency Committee

The Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (IACSD) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) held two sessions in 1998. At its eleventh meeting (New York, 19-20 February) [ACC/1998/1], IACSD discussed follow-up to the meetings of ACC and intergovernmental bodies, including international conferences, as well as the Committee's work in relation to implementation of Agenda 21. With regard to guidelines for national action, IACSD agreed that they should be established for the five themes already identified: national sustainable development strategies; integrated approach to land and water management; integration of sustainability concerns in national fiscal instruments; sustainable tourism; and local sustainable development initiatives. The Committee also discussed the organization of sustainable development workshops; cooperation in the area of energy and preparations for consideration of energy issues by the Commission on Sustainable Development in 2001; and preparations for the Commission's sixth (1998) session, including matters relating to the sustainable development of small island developing States.

At its twelfth meeting (Geneva, 28-29 September) [ACC/1998/12], IACSD considered a report of the Earthwatch Working Party; guidelines for national action in relation to sustainable development; cooperation in the area of energy; and preparations for the General Assembly's special session in 1999 to review implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, adopted in 1994 by the Global Conference on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 783].

Follow-up to UNCED and to nineteenth special session

The General Assembly's Second Committee held a substantive debate [A/C.2/53/SR.19, 20 & 22-25] on implementation of and follow-up to the outcome of UNCED [YUN 1992, p. 670] and the nineteenth special session of the Assembly in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 790], which carried out a review and appraisal of Agenda 21—a comprehensive plan of action for the sustainable development of the Earth into the twenty-first century—adopted by UNCED [YUN 1992, p. 672].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/609/Add.I], adopted resolution 53/188 without vote [agenda item 94 (a)].

Implementation of and follow-up to the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly

The General Assembly,

Recalling the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, held at Rio de Janeiro from 3 to 14 June 1992, and the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21, held in New York from 23 to 28 June 1997,

Reaffirming that Agenda 21 is the fundamental programme of action for achieving sustainable development and that the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly, will enhance the full implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development,

Recognizing that the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 includes a statement of commitment to Agenda 21 and the goals of sustainable development, an assessment of progress made since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in all main areas of Agenda 21 and other outcomes of the Conference, and recommendations on the future methods of work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the programme of work of the Commission for the period 1998-2002,

Recognizing also that mutually supportive efforts at the national and international levels are needed in the pursuit of sustainable development and that the gap between developed and developing countries points to the continuing need for a dynamic and enabling international economic environment supportive of international cooperation, particularly in the fields of finance, technology transfer, debt and trade, if the momentum for global progress towards sustainable development is to be maintained and increased,

Noting with concern that, during the assessment and review of progress made at its nineteenth special session, the General Assembly concluded that although some progress had been made, especially at the local level, the overall trends with respect to the global environment had not improved, and emphasizing that the implementation of Agenda 21 in a comprehensive manner remains vitally important and is now more urgent than ever,

Noting the convening of the first meeting of the Assembly of the Global Environment Facility at New Delhi from 1 to 3 April 1998 and the conclusion of the negotiations on the second replenishment of the Facility,

Noting also that the next review of the implementation of Agenda 21 is scheduled to be carried out by the General Assembly in 2002,

1. Stresses the need to accelerate the full implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21;

2. Recognizes that the Commission on Sustainable Development, within its mandate as specified in General Assembly resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992 and in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, will continue to provide the central forum for reviewing progress and for urging further implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and other commitments made at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development or as a result of it, for conducting a high-level policy debate aimed at consensus-building on sustainable development and for catalyzing action and long-term commitment on sustainable development at all levels;

3. Calls upon the Commission on Sustainable Development to continue to undertake these tasks in complementing and providing interlinkages to the work of other United Nations organs, organizations and bodies active in the field of sustainable development, to play its role in assessing the challenges of globalization as they relate to sustainable development and to perform its functions in coordination with other subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council and with related organizations and institutions, including making recommendations, within its mandate, to the Council, bearing in mind the interrelated outcomes of recent United Nations conferences;

4. Emphasizes that the achievement of more substantive results by the next review of the implementation of Agenda 21 in 2002 will require concerted efforts at all levels, including by Governments, calls upon all countries to fulfil their commitments to Agenda 21, and in this context also calls upon developed countries to fulfil the commitments they have undertaken with respect to financial resources and the transfer of environmentally sound technology;

5. Underscores the importance of the continued active and collaborative involvement of all relevant bodies of the United Nations system in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and requests the Secretary-General, in close collaboration with all relevant bodies of the United Nations system and taking into account the outcome of the deliberations in the Commission on Sustainable Development, to submit to the General Assembly for its consideration at future sessions, through the Economic and Social Council in view of its coordination function, an analytical report on the measures taken within the United Nations system to accelerate the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, including identification of constraints and recommendations on how to address those constraints;

6. Stresses the importance of high-quality preparations for the forthcoming ten-year review of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its fifty-fifth session a report on possible ways and means of ensuring effective preparations for the review;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", a sub-item entitled "Implementation of Agenda 21 and the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21".

Eradication of poverty

ACC action. In June, ACC issued a statement of commitment for action to eradicate poverty [E/1998/73], in which executive heads of the organizations of the UN system committed themselves to undertaking a renewed effort to coordinate policy approaches and give new impetus to collaborative actions in that crucial area. ACC had decided to prepare the statement at its first regular session of 1998 (Geneva, 27-28 March) [ACC/1998/4]. On the one hand, the executive heads stated, never before had so much progress been achieved in such a short span of time in lifting hundreds of millions out of poverty. On the other hand, more than 1 billion people still lived on less than a dollar a day and almost 3 billion survived on less than two dollars a day. That situation was unacceptable, they said, since the world had the resources and the capacity to eradicate absolute poverty. They reaffirmed that the UN system had the obligation to mobilize the will of the international community to achieve that goal.

ACC stressed that a sustainable reduction in poverty in the developing world could only be achieved through accelerated and sustained economic growth, which should be equitable-employment-intensive and pro-poor. A major objective was to find ways to involve the poor fully in the design of anti-poverty strategies and reach them with services that met their requirements. ACC stressed that empowerment, participation and social capital were important means for action against poverty and that it was essential to provide a level playing field in international economic relations, with an emphasis on providing economic access for the poor. Executive heads agreed to cooperate to identify areas for common action and build partnerships among concerned organizations for pursuing shared objectives related to the fight against poverty.

At its thirteenth session (New York, 21-25 September) [ACC/1998/15], the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions endorsed the revised matrix on "Freedom from poverty: actions and partnerships" for inclusion in the Operational Activities Reference Manual. The matrix identified the core elements and areas of collaboration within the UN system for each of the following policy measures for a system-wide approach against poverty: creating an enabling environment to combat poverty and promote pro-poor economic growth; investing in and maintaining infrastructure; promoting access to basic social services for all; securing sustainable livelihoods for the poor; advancing gender equality and equity; ensuring sustainable food security; regenerating the natural resources on which the poor depended; good governance and political empowerment of the poor; and providing social protection for vulnerable people.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1998/288 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the ACC statement of commitment for action to eradicate poverty.

In resolution 1998/44 on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major UN conferences and summits (see PART FIVE, Chapter IV), the Council reiterated that poverty eradication and improving the living conditions of people everywhere were key development objectives of the Council's efforts with regard to conference follow-up.

On 16 December, the Council decided that the high-level meeting of the operational activities segment of its 1999 substantive session would be devoted to the theme "Poverty eradication and capacity-building" (decision 1998/299).

UNDP activities. In his annual report covering 1998 [DP/1999/15], the UNDP Administrator said that, in response to the 1997 financial crisis in Asia, UNDP had directed its support towards strengthening national capacity to mitigate the resultant rise in poverty through poverty advice to Governments on recovery options. UNDP also cooperated to bring together policy makers, economists and researchers from around the world in December 1998 to discuss the effects of the financial crises in the Russian Federation and in transition economies in that region.

UNDP published the first issue of Overcoming Human Poverty [Sales No. E.99.III.B.2], an annual global report on the progress of programme countries and UNDP in implementing the commitments to poverty eradication made at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113].

At the regional and country levels, UNDP provided a range of services in poverty eradication, including the UNDP Poverty Strategy Initiative, which by the end of 1998 was supporting projects in 100 countries. UNDP also intensified its advocacy for eradicating poverty, including sponsorship of the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty (17 October).

UN Decade for Eradication of Poverty

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/193 [YUN 1997, p. 822], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/53/329] on progress made in the implementation of measures, themes, recommendations and activities related to the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006), proclaimed by the Assembly in resolution 50/107 [YUN 1995, p. 844]. The report included recommendations for possible actions and initiatives for the rest of the Decade, as well as proposals for better coordination of actions taken by the UN system.

The report highlighted the progress and setbacks experienced in poverty eradication and underscored the link between poverty, human rights and development. It stressed the importance of global targets, particularly related to equity of access and poverty reduction, as well as international cooperation and partnerships for integrated anti-poverty efforts. The report also reviewed the activities of the UN system in support of national efforts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/613], adopted resolution 53/198 without vote [agenda item 98].

Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/107 of 20 December 1995 and 52/193 and 52/194 of 18 December 1997 relating to the observance of the International Year for the Eradication of Poverty and the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and all of its other resolutions relating to international cooperation for the eradication of poverty in the developing countries,

Recalling also the declarations and programmes of action of the United Nations major conferences and summit conferences in the 1990s as they relate to the eradication of poverty,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and the report of the United Nations Development Programme, Overcoming Human Poverty,

Expressing its concern that the total number of people living in poverty is still increasing, especially in developing countries, and that a large majority of them are women and children,

Recognizing that, while the rates of poverty in some countries have been reduced, some developing countries and disadvantaged groups are being marginalized while others are at risk of being marginalized and effectively excluded from the benefits of globalization, thereby constraining efforts to eradicate poverty,

Expressing its concern that the financial crisis has aggravated the existing poverty in the countries affected and placed a large number of people once again in conditions of poverty in the developing countries affected either directly or indirectly by the crisis,

Recognizing that, while it is the primary responsibility of States to attain social development, the international community should support the efforts of the developing countries in eradicating poverty and ensuring basic social protection,

Noting the decisions, measures and actions taken to eradicate poverty by countries and by organizations, agencies, funds, programmes and bodies of the United Nations system, including the World Bank, as well as by civil society, including non-governmental organizations, within the framework of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty,

1. Reiterates that the main objective of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty is to achieve the goal of eradicating absolute poverty and reducing overall poverty substantially in the world through decisive national action and international cooperation;

2. Calls for strengthened efforts at all levels to implement fully and effectively the relevant resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and all agreements and commitments agreed upon at United Nations major conferences and summit conferences organized since 1990 as they relate to the eradication of poverty, with a view to achieving the objectives of the Decade as early as possible;

3. Reaffirms that, within the context of overall action for the eradication of poverty, special attention should be given to the multidimensional nature of poverty and the national and international framework conditions and policies that are conducive to its eradication by fostering, inter alia, the social and economic integration of people living in poverty, thus empowering them to participate in decision-making on policies that affect them, the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, including the right to development, and an efficient, transparent and accountable public service and administration;

4. Reaffirms also that the causes of poverty should be addressed in the context of sectoral strategies, such as those on environment, food security, population, migration, health, shelter and human resources development, including education, fresh water, rural development and productive employment, and of the specific needs of disadvantaged and vulnerable groups, in such a way as to increase opportunities and choices for people living in poverty and enable them to build their strength and assets so as to achieve social and economic integration;

5. Stresses the importance of tackling the root causes of poverty and the necessity of meeting the basic needs of all, and in this context emphasizes the fundamental role in the eradication of poverty of economic growth that favours the poor and creates employment and promotes equitable income distribution;

6. Recognizes that the process of globalization brings with it opportunities but also poses new challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in their efforts to eradicate poverty;

7. Recognizes also the importance of appropriate policy responses to the challenges of globalization at the national level, in particular by pursuing sound and stable domestic policies, including, inter alia, sound macroeconomic and social policies, so as to realize the objective of the eradication of poverty;

8. Calls for continued action by the international community to create an enabling economic environment and to assist developing countries further in their efforts to combat the negative impact of globalization, to fight marginalization and to pursue their development;

9. Reaffirms that all Governments and the United Nations system, in particular the relevant funds, programmes and agencies, should promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective and use gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into the planning and implementation of policies, strategies and programmes on the eradication of poverty;

10. Emphasizes that, in developing countries, rural development remains central to efforts to eradicate poverty and that this often includes agrarian reform, investment in infrastructure, extension of rural financial intermediation, measures to ensure food security, the provision of better education, greater utilization of appropriate technology, fair prices to provide incentives for agricultural investment and increased productivity, including productivity in the informal sector;

11. Emphasizes also that, in all countries, urban poverty should be addressed, inter alia, by promoting sustainable livelihoods for people living in urban poverty through the provision or expansion of access to training, education and other employment assistance services, in particular for women, youth, the unemployed and the underemployed;

12. Welcomes the fact that a considerable number of countries have formulated plans and programmes to fight poverty, and in this context notes the efforts made to achieve the target of reducing by one half, by 2015, the proportion of people living in extreme poverty, and invites all Governments that have not yet done so to formulate or strengthen integrated poverty eradication policies and implement national poverty eradication plans or programmes, in a participatory manner, in order to address the structural cause of poverty, encompassing action at the local, national, subregional, regional and international levels, and stresses that those plans or programmes should establish, taking into account specific national circumstances, strategies, including affordable time-bound goals and targets, for the substantial reduction of overall poverty and the eradication of absolute poverty;

13. Calls upon the developed countries to strengthen their efforts to achieve, as soon as possible, the agreed target of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance and, where agreed, within that target, to earmark 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of gross national product for the least developed countries;

14. Calls upon the international community, including multilateral financial institutions, to implement fully and effectively all initiatives taken regarding debt relief for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and thus support their efforts to eradicate poverty;

15. Emphasizes the importance of increasing the control of the poor over resources, including land, skills, knowledge, capital and social connections;

16. Emphasizes also the role of microcredit as an important anti-poverty tool that promotes the generation of productive self-employment and empowers people living in poverty, especially women, and therefore encourages Governments to adopt policies that support the development of microcredit institutions and their capacities, and calls upon the international community, in particular the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and international and regional financial institutions involved in the eradication of poverty, to support and to explore the incorporation of the microcredit approach in their programmes and the further development, as appropriate, of other microfinance instruments;

17. Welcomes the initiative taken by the Economic and Social Council to strengthen coordination for an integrated implementation of the outcome of the major United Nations conferences and summit conferences in the 1990s, where the eradication of poverty had been a cross-cutting theme;

18. Notes with appreciation the efforts made within the United Nations system to enhance inter-agency coordination among relevant organizations, funds and programmes and the Bretton Woods institutions for the integrated follow-up to the United Nations major conferences and summit conferences, including the adoption by the Administrative Committee on Coordination of the statement of commitment for action to eradicate poverty, and encourages those agencies to take more effective action in support of Member States in their efforts to achieve the objectives of the Decade;

19. Reiterates its call to all donors to give high priority to the eradication of poverty in their development assistance programmes, on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis, and invites the relevant funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to support developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, in their efforts to achieve the overall goal of eradicating absolute poverty, to reduce substantially overall poverty and to ensure basic social services, by supporting national efforts to formulate, coordinate, implement, monitor and assess integrated poverty strategies, including capacity-building, and by supporting efforts to empower people living in poverty;

20. Notes with appreciation all initiatives aimed at or contributing to the eradication of poverty that have been undertaken by countries and international organizations, and encourages continuous action and further cooperation among the various initiatives;

21. Reaffirms the importance of agreeing on a mutual commitment between interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes, and welcomes the efforts made to implement the 20/20 initiative, which emphasizes that promoting access for all to basic social services is essential for sustainable and equitable development and is an integral part of the strategy for the eradication of poverty;

22. Decides that the themes for the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty in 1999 and 2000 shall be, respectively, "Women and the eradication of poverty" and "Globalization and the eradication of poverty";

23. Requests the Secretary-General to report to it at its fifty-fourth session on progress made in the implementation of measures, recommendations and activities related to the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty, including recommendations for possible action and initiatives towards the new millennium and proposals for better coordination of action taken by the United Nations system;

24. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)".

Role of microcredit

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/194 [YUN 1997, p. 824], the Secretary-General reported in August on the role of microcredit in the eradication of poverty [A/53/223 & Add.I]. It was the first time the Secretary-General was asked to prepare a report on the subject, reflecting the recent success of small-scale lending programmes such as the Grameen Bank of Bangladesh. Such programmes relied on lending (usually a few hundred dollars) to small enterprises in agriculture, distribution, crafts, trading and similar activities. Hopes had been raised about reducing poverty through that approach by the participatory nature of the projects, together with the emphasis on women entrepreneurs and employment creation.

The report surveyed recent experience and developments related to microlending, which over the past decade had succeeded in reaching the poorest of the poor by devising innovative strategies. The strengths and weaknesses of the microcredit approach were reviewed, including administrative difficulties and limited linkages with other services for the poor. The report also contained suggestions for strengthening operations, making a particular plea for ensuring that microcredit projects were established in a broader context of support to the small enterprise sector. The responsibilities of donor countries in that regard were emphasized.

Finally, the report highlighted the activities of the UN system and NGOs in support of microcredit. Special attention was given to the World Bank-led Consultative Group to Assist the Poorest (CGAP), a multi-donor effort to address the problems facing microfinancing. Composed of 25 Western donor countries and international agencies, the Group included structures to ensure that NGOs and borrowers in general were consulted. During its first two-and-a-half years, CGAP provided about $ 18 million in grants to microfinance institutions and committed $400 million to microfinance activities.

By decision 53/448 of 15 December, the Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

International Year of Microcredit, 2005

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1998/28, recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution entitled "International Year of Microcredit, 2005" (see below for full text).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/613], adopted resolution 53/197 without vote [agenda item 98].

International Year of Microcredit, 2005

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/194 of 18 December 1997 on the role of microcredit in the eradication of poverty,

Recognizing that microcredit programmes have successfully contributed to lifting people out of poverty in many countries around the world,

Bearing in mind that microcredit programmes have especially benefited women and have resulted in the achievement of their empowerment,

Recognizing that microcredit programmes, in addition to their role in the eradication of poverty, have also been a factor contributing to the social and human development process,

Bearing in mind the importance of microfinance instruments such as credit, savings and related business services in providing access to capital for people living in poverty,

Noting the support to microcredit in the outcomes of different summit and high-level meetings, including the Twelfth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi on 7 and 8 April 1997, the Ninth Summit of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, held at Male from 12 to 14 May 1997, the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its thirty-third ordinary session, held at Harare from 2 to 4 June 1997, the statement on economic and financial issues of the Group of Seven, issued at Denver, United States of America, on 21 June 1997, the substantive session of 1997 of the Economic and Social Council, held at Geneva from 30 June to 25 July 1997, the meeting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government, held at Edinburgh from 24 to 27 October 1997 and the Thirteenth Ministerial Conference of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, on 19 and 20 May 1998.

Noting also that 2005 is the final year of the campaign of the Microcredit Summit, which was held in Washington, D.C., from 2 to 4 February 1997 and which, through its Declaration and Plan of Action, endorsed a global campaign to reach 100 million of the world's poorest families, especially the women of those families, with credit for self-employment and other financial and business services, by that year,

Noting further that the international community is observing the period 1997-2006 as the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty,

1. Proclaims the year 2005 as the International Year of Microcredit;

2. Requests that the observance of the Year be a special occasion for giving impetus to microcredit programmes throughout the world;

3. Invites Governments, the United Nations system, all concerned non-governmental organizations, other actors of civil society, the private sector and the media to highlight and give enhanced recognition to the role of microcredit in the eradication of poverty, its contribution to social development and its positive impact on the lives of people living in poverty;

4. Invites all involved in the eradication of poverty to consider taking additional steps, including the strengthening of existing and emerging microcredit institutions and their capacities, so that credit and related services for self-employment and income-generating activities may be made available to an increasing number of people living in poverty, and to develop further, where appropriate, other microfinance instruments;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to it at its fifty-eighth session a report containing a draft programme of action for the effective observance of the Year, in consultation with all relevant actors including United Nations bodies, under an item entitled "First United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006)" to be included in the provisional agenda of that session.

Science and technology for development

Commission on Science and Technology for Development. The Commission on Science and Technology for Development did not meet in 1998. On 31 July, the Economic and Social Council decided that the Commission would hold its fourth session at Geneva from 17 to 21 May 1999 (decision 1998/295).

Inter-sessional activities carried out during 1998 included meetings of the Working Group on Science and Technology Partnerships and Networking for National Capacity-Building (Sliema, Malta, 28-30 September) [E/CN.16/1999/2] and the expert group on a common vision for the future contribution of science and technology for development (Geneva, 8-10 December) [E/CN.16/1999/Misc.I].

The Commission's Bureau met at Sliema on 30 September to discuss various institutional issues.

Commission on Sustainable Development. In a March report to the Commission on Sustainable Development [E/CN.17/1998/6 & Add.1-3], the Secretary-General discussed questions concerning capacity-building, education and public awareness, science for sustainable development and transfer of environmentally sound technology, all issues addressed in Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672]. Each section of the report provided a brief status update and a series of proposals for further action related to the four issues. Related background documents and additional information were provided in addenda to the report.

By a 23 February letter [E/CN.17/1998/12], the Republic of Korea transmitted the report of the International Expert Meeting on the Role of Publicly Funded Research and Publicly Owned Technologies in the Transfer and Diffusion of Environmentally Sound Technologies (Kyongju, 4-6 February).

In a 1 May decision [E/1998/29 (dec. 6/3)], the Commission encouraged Governments to elaborate policies and plans related to the transfer of environmentally sound technology, capacity-building, education and public awareness and science for sustainable development and ensure that they were fully integrated into national sustainable development strategies.

Regarding the transfer of environmentally sound technology, the Commission encouraged Governments and industry to work together to build capacity in developing countries for using and maintaining environmentally sound technologies, taking into account that financing programmes for small and medium-sized enterprises were very important, and that education and training had to be key priorities in national efforts. The Commission decided in the future to consider policies to promote sustainable production patterns and the transfer of environmentally sound technologies for those purposes.

Governments, the private sector and research and development institutions of developed countries were urged to identify barriers to the transfer of those technologies and provide opportunities for technology cooperation. Developing countries and economies in transition were encouraged to develop national strategies for technology innovation, commercialization and diffusion, with a focus on sectors of particular importance to economic growth, natural resources consumption, energy efficiency and pollution control.

With regard to capacity-building, the Commission recommended that efforts be intensified with the aim, as called for by General Assembly resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792], of having national sustainable development strategies in place by 2002. Capacity-building efforts should take into account the environmental, social and economic needs of developing countries. Governments were encouraged to assess their capacity-building requirements and support innovative capacity-building programmes that featured greater public access to information and broad participation at national and local levels. The Commission urged that more resources be devoted to training and information-sharing activities and that funding agencies give support to national capacity-building activities, particularly in developing countries.

The Commission recognized education, public awareness and training as underpinning all the cross-sectoral themes of Agenda 21. It called for a variety of measures aimed at communicating the key messages of education for sustainable development; reviewing national education policies and systems; incorporating education into national strategies and action plans for sustainable development; and promoting sustainable consumption and production, as well as investments in education.

Regarding science for sustainable development, the Commission urged the scientific community to work with government authorities, the education community, major groups and international organizations to strengthen science education at all levels and to work to overcome communication gaps. It called on Governments and other groups to increase funding for scientific activities related to sustainable development, contribute to the consideration of sectoral themes of the Commission and provide information on best practices where science had been effectively employed to support the development and implementation of policy in those sectors.

Economic and social trends and policy

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic and Social Survey 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.C.1], prepared in mid-1998 by the UN

Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), stated that general optimism about the state of the world economy a year earlier had been replaced by a substantial downgrading of prospects for global growth, with several countries in South-East Asia particularly affected. The Asian financial crisis, which began with the devaluation of the Thai baht in July 1997, had underlined the risks associated with globalization, transforming the virtue of international openness into a potential vulnerability. The crisis had plunged several of the fastest-growing economies into a severe recession and slowed the growth of world output and trade. Since the crisis, it had become apparent that there had been some fundamental changes in the workings of the global economy, which made the outlook for the final years of the twentieth century unusually uncertain; it was no longer clear that conventional growth policy measures and prescriptions remained valid.

While earlier editions of the Survey had suggested that the world economy in the 1990s had attained a "cruising speed" of about 3 per cent per year growth in output, the outlook for 1998 was different. Not only was the growth of world output predicted to decrease a full percentage point over 1997 to about 2.5 per cent, but also the world economic situation had deteriorated further since completion on 30 April of work on the forecast for 1998. In particular, 1998 would be a more difficult year in much of the developing world, as well as in Japan, which was in outright recession by the end of 1997.

Despite the slowdown in 1998, the world economy still embodied significant and widely spread momentum. In 1997, per capita output rose in 123 of the 143 regularly monitored countries; it was expected to increase in even more countries in 1998. The trend of reduced inflation worldwide was expected to continue, with the annual inflation rate of Argentina and Brazil, which had runaway inflation in the early 1990s, expected to be in the low single digits. In the developing countries, where the average inflation rate was 254 per cent in 1993, the average was 11 per cent in 1997 and about the same rate was forecast for 1998, despite the currency crisis in several countries.

The economic prospects in North America and Europe, including the transition economies of Europe, as well as those of Asia, were largely encouraging. Those countries were expected to continue to experience low inflation, smaller budget deficits and sustained growth. In particular, the once large budget deficit of the United States had completely disappeared and countries of the European Union (EU) had met targets to reduce the 1997 budget deficit to no more than 3 per cent of gross domestic product (GDP).

In the United States, seven consecutive years of economic expansion had reduced the unemployment rate to 4.6 per cent by the end of 1997, the lowest rate since 1972, and the economy accelerated to almost 4 per cent from almost 3 per cent in 1996. At the same time, inflation dropped to 2.4 per cent and long-term interest rates also eased. Overall in 1997, stronger domestic demand made up for much of the weakness in the external sector, where the Asian currency crisis lowered demand for United States exports, especially towards the end of the year. Economic growth was also strong in Canada, supported by low domestic long-term interest rates and strong import demand from the United States. In Western Europe, the economic growth momentum was also predicted to continue, with domestic consumption expected to help offset declining exports to Asia in most countries. However, the employment situation in Western Europe did not significantly improve. While countries such as Ireland and the United Kingdom saw a decline in unemployment to single digits in 1997, the rates increased in France, Germany and Italy. Thus, the region was expected to see double-digit unemployment for the sixth consecutive year in 1998.

After seven years of sharp decline, growth in the transition economies as a group increased in 1997 and was expected to accelerate to about 3 per cent in 1998. However, those aggregate numbers masked a wide disparity in performance of individual countries, ranging from a decline in output of about 20 per cent to an advance of over 11 per cent. In 1997, 78 per cent of the people living in transition economies were in countries with rising GDP per capita, compared with 40 per cent in 1996 and zero per cent in 1992. Per capita GDP was forecast to rise in all the transition economies in 1998, although there was considerable uncertainty about prospects in several of them. In particular, forecasts of continued growth might have been overstated for the Russian Federation, which was vulnerable to contagion from the Asian currency crisis.

Inflation had been falling consistently in most transition economies countries, with Belarus, Bulgaria, Romania, Tajikistan and Turkmenistan being noteworthy exceptions. Since the start of the transition, unemployment had become one of the most important economic, social and political issues. Although officially reported unemployment rates ranged from 1-2 per cent to close to 20 per cent, the problem was much more serious than official numbers suggested because of very significant hidden unemployment.

The developing economies maintained their growth momentum in 1997 for one more year, registering an average rate of growth of 5.8 per cent. There was substantial acceleration of growth in Latin America and strong expansion in Western Asia. Overall growth in Africa was impeded by weather-related factors in a number of countries, but economic expansion remained widespread. Economic growth in East and South Asia and China slowed in the second half of the year, owing to the regional financial crisis and less growth in domestic demand, respectively.

The number of people living in developing countries with rising GDP per capita grew from 82 to 96 per cent of the population between 1991 and 1996. However, with the advent of significant economic slowdown or outright recession in several large developing economies in 1997 (including Saudi Arabia, South Africa and Thailand) and in 1998 (including Brazil, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Republic of Korea and Venezuela), the 1998 figure was expected to drop to 87 per cent. While all but a few countries in Africa and Latin America were expected to register some growth of GDP per capita in 1998, only 24 developing countries were expected to attain a growth rate of 3 per cent, which was considered the absolute minimum needed to attain even moderate levels of income per capita within a reasonable number of years.

In 1998, economic growth of the developing countries was expected to fall to 3.75 per cent, due primarily to direct and indirect consequences of the Asian financial crisis. Contractionary adjustment policies, poor business confidence, shortage of domestic liquidity and scarcity of external finance underlay the economic contraction in the crisis countries in Asia. Restrictive macro-economic policies adopted in a number of East Asian economies and some Latin American countries and the higher cost of external financing were also expected to dampen growth. Reduced foreign direct investment flows from the affected Asian economies and weaker international commodity prices, aggravated by significantly reduced demand from Asia, were also expected to weaken economic growth in commodity-exporting developing countries.

In East Asia, the economic fallout of the regional financial crisis was expected to depress total and per capita output growth to the lowest level in at least two decades. Only 4 of 13 East Asian economies and China were expected to see GDP per capita grow by 3 per cent or more in 1998. For East Asian developing countries, the heart of the crisis was financial, with exchange rates falling by 30 to 65 per cent and stock market indices declining by up to 50 per cent between June 1997 and January 1998. That downward spiral undermined the viability of heavily indebted financial institutions and corporations, drying up liquidity and freezing investment and even production. Together with significantly higher interest rates throughout the region to shore up exchange rates, there began a flood of corporate bankruptcies, which further weakened local financial institutions. Unemployment also rose sharply in a number of countries and was expected to worsen in 1998 from waves of lay-offs owing to corporate financial retrenchment, impacting both skilled and unskilled workers.

Differences between individual economies in the nature and intensity of the adjustment and reform processes became increasingly marked. Problems were most severe in Indonesia, the Republic of Korea and Thailand. Because of contagion in financial markets and strong intra-regional trade and financial linkages, even the economies with much smaller imbalances, sustainable debt levels and relatively sound financial and corporate structures—including Hong Kong, China; the Philippines; Singapore; and Taiwan Province of China—were adversely affected, though less severely.

Economic growth in China slowed in 1997, but was still almost 9 per cent. Prospects for 1998 were for further moderation in economic growth, though there was some uncertainty over the extent of the deceleration. The Chinese Government had relaxed monetary policy and cut interest rates in late 1997 to strengthen economic growth, but the fallout from the Asian financial crisis was expected to slow China's export growth significantly in 1998.

Although South Asia was largely unscathed by the fallout of the East Asian financial crisis, economic growth moderated in 1997 for other reasons. In Western Asia, economic growth accelerated in 1997, reflecting a market expansion in private sector investment, as well as a significant increase in Iraq's output as a result of the partial resumption of oil exports. However, disappointments in the Middle East peace process continued to hinder intraregional flows of trade and investment among Israel, Jordan and the Palestinian self-rule areas. In 1998, regional growth was expected to slow to 4 per cent owing to the sharp decline in oil prices.

In Africa, growth was expected to strengthen slightly in 1998, but remain below 4 per cent. Weather-related production decreases in northern, eastern and central Africa during 1997 could still be felt in lower agricultural output in the region in 1998, while declining oil prices and political instability hindered economic growth in many countries. Uncertainty remained regarding the effects on the African economies of the financial crisis in Asia. Although many countries in Africa appeared to have entered a period of increased growth, poverty in the region remained pervasive and unemployment high. Moreover, Africa remained highly vulnerable to exogenous shocks, such as those related to weather or international commodity prices. At the same time, there were certain manifestations of dynamism in some countries, including the rapid increase in non-traditional exports and stronger investment. Strict monetary and fiscal policies had sharply curtailed inflation in the region.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, the combination of strong economic growth—per capita output rose about 3.6 per cent—and an average inflation rate of just over 10 per cent made 1997 one of the best years of the last two decades for the region. Primarily driven by investment, the expansion was especially strong in Argentina, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Mexico and Peru, with 1997 rates of growth of GDP between 7 and 8.4 per cent. Left behind were Haiti, where GDP stagnated, and Jamaica, the only economy in the region recording a decline in output.

However, the vulnerability of the Latin American economies to the volatility of international financial and trade conditions was underscored by the indirect impact of the Asian financial crisis on their economic growth, which was expected to decelerate to 3.3 per cent in 1998. The economic slowdown threatened to reverse small reductions achieved during 1997 in unemployment and poverty rates in some countries. Moreover, the earnings gap between skilled and unskilled workers in the region remained the highest in the world and was greatest in Peru (30 per cent), Mexico (25 per cent) and Colombia (20 per cent).

According to a report on the world economic situation and prospects, prepared jointly by DESA and UNCTAD, the most dramatic change in economic circumstances in 1998 took place in the developing countries. Having grown by more than 5 per cent annually for much of the 1990s, output in the developing countries as a group expanded by only 1.6 per cent in 1998, largely owing to the Asian financial crisis. In some countries, output contracted by double-digit figures during the year, causing soaring unemployment, declining real wages and large increases in poverty. A number of countries also had to cope with natural disasters, outright conflict and political unrest in 1998, which ineluctably disrupted economic performance.

In the developed economies, consumers and producers generally benefited from the lower international prices. Governments saw little inflationary pressure and increasingly became concerned about the possibility of deflation.

However, shrinking expenditure in developing and transition economies and Japan began to be reflected in declining exports and corporate earnings.

The Trade and Development Report, 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.6] stated that international financial instability, as illustrated by the dramatic turnaround in the economic fortunes of the East Asian economies, was the single most important impediment to attaining steady and rapid growth in the world economy. The problems in Asia did not stem from resistance to a globalizing world; rather the crisis had occurred because Governments failed to manage integration into global capital markets with the same prudence and skill they had earlier shown in managing trade liberalization. International policy response had contributed to the severity of the crisis by failing to appreciate the full gravity of the situation and by placing too much faith in conventional policy prescriptions. In East Asia, the trend of decades of rising incomes had been reversed and unemployment, underemployment and poverty were reaching alarming levels. Moreover, the social harm could persist long after economic recovery was achieved. Policy should thus turn from deflation to reflation, supporting the unemployed by lowering interest rates, expanding liquidity and raising public expenditure (see also PART THREE, Chapter IV).

Human Development Report 1998

Prepared annually by UNDP since 1990, the Human Development Report 1998 presented a broad range of data to assess the state of human development—defined as a process of expanding human choices by enabling people to enjoy long, healthy and creative lives. The 1998 Report focused on patterns of consumption from a human development perspective. It marshalled a variety of arguments—environmental, developmental, technological and moral—to present a critique of consumption patterns that were inimical to human development and presented an agenda for action to create an enabling environment for sustainable consumption for human development.

The Report concluded that, despite a dramatic surge in consumption in many countries, more than a billion people worldwide lacked the opportunity to consume in ways that would allow them to meet their most basic needs. World consumption had expanded at an unprecedented pace during the twentieth century, with private and public consumption expenditures reaching $24 trillion in 1998, twice the level of 1975 and six times that of 1950. Although the benefits of consumption increases had spread worldwide, current consumption patterns and trends were undermining the environmental resource base and exacerbating inequalities. Globally, the 20 per cent of the world's people in the highest-income countries accounted for 86 per cent of total private consumption expenditures, the poorest 20 per cent a minuscule 1.3 per cent.

The Report stressed that consumption should be shared, strengthening, socially responsible and sustainable in order to shift the current consumption patterns so that they advanced rather than undermined human development. The Report presented a seven-point agenda for action: as an explicit policy objective in all countries, ensure minimum consumption requirements for all; develop and apply environmentally sustainable technologies and methods for both poor and affluent consumers; remove perverse subsidies and restructure taxes to shift incentives from consumption damaging to the environment to consumption promoting human development; strengthen public action for consumer education and environmental protection; strengthen international mechanisms to manage consumption's global impacts; build stronger alliances among movements for consumer rights, environmental protection, poverty eradication, gender equality and children's rights; and encourage people to think globally and act locally.

The Report ranked 174 countries in its human development index by combining indicators of life expectancy, educational attainment (adult literacy and combined primary, secondary and tertiary enrolment) and adjusted income.

The latest data indicated that progress in human development did not automatically follow from economic prosperity. Of the 174 countries listed, 98 ranked higher from a human development perspective than on GDP per capita, while 73 countries ranked lower, suggesting that the latter had failed to translate economic prosperity into correspondingly better lives for their people.

Development planning and public administration

Development planning

The Committee for Development Planning (CDP), at its thirty-second session (New York, 4-8 May) [E/1998/34], addressed two main substantive issues: the financial crisis in Asia and old-age security in a changing global context. In its main findings and recommendations related to policy lessons of the Asian financial crisis, CDP dealt with: opportunities and challenges of globalization; vulnerability to short-term capital movements; domestic and international policy responses to financial turmoil; the international financial system and the global economy; domestic policy and international capital flows; the need for a world financial organization; expansion and improvement of existing arrangements; automatic access to a permanent contingency fund; sharing the burden of financial disruptions; and periodic review of international financial actors.

As to old-age security, CDP's findings and recommendations covered: the need to give attention to demographic trends; the rapid ageing of the populations of most countries; rising demand for publicly supported pension systems; principles for national old-age security systems; the need to pursue portability of contribution-related pension accounts; and various aspects of pension schemes.

CDP also reviewed the criteria and methodology for identifying LDCs (see below) and discussed a number of issues related to its future work. In view of ongoing negotiations about restructuring Economic and Social Council subsidiary bodies, as well as the fact that the mandate of its current members ended on 31 December 1998, the Committee decided not to propose a work programme for future deliberations. Instead, it suggested that future sessions of the Committee or any successor body might deliberate over a wide range of economic, environmental and social problems affecting the international community in general and developing countries in particular.

Preparations for the 1998 session were carried out by four working groups that dealt with: international migration and employment (New York, 29-31 October 1997); criteria and methodology for identifying LDCs (New York, 17-19 December 1997); old-age security in a changing global context (New York, 12-14 January 1998); and systemic implications of the Asian financial crises (20-21 April 1998). Because of the urgency of considering the report of the last working group, CDP decided to defer discussion of the report on international migration and employment until a later session.

By decision 1998/291 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of CDP's report on its thirty-second session.

CDP reform

By resolution 1998/46 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council renamed the Committee for Development Planning the Committee for Development Policy. The new Committee would comprise 24 independent experts to be nominated by the Secretary-General for a term of office of three years (see PART FIVE, Chapter I).

Public administration

The Fourteenth Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance (New York, 4-8 May) [E/1998/77] explored current issues of governance, public administration and finance, and reviewed the UN work programme in the light of General Assembly resolution 50/225 on public administration and development [YUN 1996, p. 750]. The Meeting called for an effective response to the challenges facing the governance and administrative systems of all countries and their capacity to implement commitments made at major global conferences organized by the United Nations during the 1990s. Specifically, in relation to the developing countries or economies in transition, the Meeting recommended that the Programme in Public Administration and Finance focus attention on four broad areas of need: management of change; institution-building and administrative reform; human resources development; and information. The Meeting also suggested that the Economic and Social Council consider a recommendation that the Secretary-General conduct a five-year assessment of progress made in implementing Assembly resolution 50/225. By decision 1998/291 of 31 July, the Council took note of the report on the Fourteenth Meeting of Experts.

By decision 1998/219 of 23 July, the Council decided that the Fifteenth Meeting should take place during the first quarter of the year 2000.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Assembly resolution 50/225, the Secretary-General submitted a July report [A/53/173-E/1998/87] containing a synthesis and analysis of information provided by UN agencies on their activities and contributions to the implementation of that resolution. The report also contained specific recommendations regarding further work of the UN programme on public administration and development.

The Secretary-General stated that the two years since the adoption of the resolution had witnessed a growing volume of analysis, research, and experimentation on the role of the State and the public sector in the development process. New partnerships between the public sector, civil organizations and business had been forged and innovative ways of delivering public services were being explored. He called on the United Nations to facilitate discussions and analysis of those themes at the global, regional and national levels, and to provide policy advice and technical assistance in those areas to developing countries. The Secretary-General supported the recommendation of the Fourteenth Meeting of Experts that a more comprehensive and in-depth review be carried out in the year 2001 of the changes, trends and developments in the area of public administration and development, and of national and international measures taken in response to resolution 50/225. On 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report (decision 1998/291).

On 23 July, the Council decided that the Secretary-General should conduct a five-year assessment of progress made in implementing resolution 50/225 and report his findings to the Assembly through the Council in 2001 (decision 1998/220).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/605], adopted resolution 53/201 without vote [agenda item 12].

Public administration and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 50/225 of 19 April 1996 on public administration and development,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 50/225;

2. Endorses Economic and Social Council decision 1998/220 of 23 July 1998, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to conduct a five-year assessment of the progress made in the implementation of resolution 50/225, and to report his findings to the Assembly through the Council in 2001.

Developing countries

Least developed countries

The Least Developed Countries 1998 Report [Sales No. E.98.II.D.11], issued by UNCTAD, discussed how different aspects of the multilateral trading system were affecting opportunities and constraints for LDCs to enhance their participation in the world economy. It also examined the evolving interface between trade issues and the development objectives of LDCs. The report identified areas where specific concessions and provisions in multilateral agreements might be beneficial to LDCs and areas in which LDCs should develop a proactive agenda that systematically put forward their concerns and interests in the global trading system.

The Report noted that LDCs as a group averaged 4.8 per cent growth in 1997, one percentage point below the average growth recorded by the developing countries. Some 34 LDCs recorded an increase in per capita income and 25 LDCs had maintained per capita growth for three or more consecutive years, which was particularly encouraging. However, investment and savings in relation to GDP remained very low in LDCs, while foreign direct investment was also scarce and concentrated in mineral-rich countries.

Economic growth in African LDCs weakened slightly in 1997 and prospects for sustaining the recent growth momentum were considered highly uncertain, according to the Report. Asian LDCs had maintained steady economic progress with average growth of 5.4 per cent until the regional financial crisis unfolded during the second half of 1997.

Trade issues. At its sixteenth executive session (Geneva, 16 February) [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 445(EX-16))], the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board endorsed the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance, including for Human and Institutional Capacity-building, to Support LDCs in their Trade and Trade-related Activities, which had been endorsed at the WTO High-level Meeting on Integrated Initiatives for LDCs' Trade Development in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1569]. It invited the UNCTAD secretariat to carry out a number of trade-related activities within its work programme on issues of concern to LDCs and requested it to inform the Board every six months on progress in the design and implementation of such activities. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was invited to consider inter-agency arrangements to ensure coordinated implementation of the outcome of the High-level Meeting.

In agreed conclusions adopted at its forty-fifth session (12-23 October) [A/53/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 452(XLV))], the Board stressed the importance of supporting LDCs in their efforts to reverse their marginalization in world trade and to become integrated into the world economy and the international trading system. The international community should help LDCs to enhance their competitiveness through commodity diversification, improvement of their trade infrastructure and trade-supporting services, and human resource development. The Board expressed concern at the pace of implementation of the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance and emphasized the need to continue to enhance and improve coordination and coherence among the agencies involved.

In January [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/4)], the Executive Board of UNDP/UNFPA also endorsed the Integrated Framework and took note of a UNDP conference room paper on WTO initiatives for LDCs.

LDC list

The number of officially designated LDCs remained at 48 in 1998. CDP, which was responsible for adding countries to or graduating them from the list, again recommended that Vanuatu be graduated. However, the Economic and Social Council postponed consideration of Vanuatu's graduation until CDP had submitted a report on the usefulness of a vulnerability index as a criterion for designation of LDCs (see below). The 48 countries on the list were: Afghanistan, Angola, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cambodia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Tuvalu, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Yemen, Zambia. CDP established that 43 did not meet the criteria for graduation and recommended that they be retained on the list. Five countries met the criteria: Cape Verde, Maldives, Myanmar, Samoa and Vanuatu.

CDP action. CDP, at its May session [E/1998/34] (see above), considered possible improvements to the criteria and methodology for identifying those low-income countries that qualified for inclusion in the list of LDCs. CDP further examined changes to indicators of income first proposed at its 1997 session [YUN 1997, p. 836]: replacing the three-year average of GDP per capita with per capita gross national product and substituting per capita commercial energy consumption for per capita electricity consumption. It also considered changes to the indicators measuring augmented physical quality of life, the economic diversification index (EDI) and population. CDP further examined the possibility of developing a vulnerability index for small island developing States (see below).

Among its recommendations, CDP underlined the importance of preparing further sensitivity tests for the criteria by which it decided on the inclusion and graduation from the list of LDCs. A number of suggestions for improvements to current methodologies were made, including the introduction of indicators for natural vulnerability. It recommended that further work be carried out on a vulnerability index for possible use in the identification of LDCs and emphasized that structural vulnerability was already reflected to some extent in EDI. CDP reiterated its request for UNCTAD to review the benefits accruing to countries included on the list of LDCs.

As to Vanuatu, CDP noted that, even if vulnerability were to be given greater weight, that country would have been due for graduation in 1997 unless the criteria were changed. Therefore, CDP reconfirmed that Vanuatu was due for graduation.

Communication. By a 13 July letter [E/1998/89], Vanuatu transmitted to the Economic and Social Council President a letter from its Prime Minister urging deferral of CDP's review of its status as an LDC until the year 2000. As in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 837], Vanuatu expressed doubts about the quality of the statistics used in the exercise and noted that it was in the process of improving its collection of domestic statistical data.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/39 [draft: E/1998/L.39] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Status of the least developed countries

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/210 of 18 December 1997 which included, inter alia, a reference to an assessment of the usefulness of a vulnerability index for small island developing States as a criterion for the designation of least developed countries,

Noting that the requested assessment has not been completed,

Welcoming the proposals to continue the work on improvements to the criteria and methodology for the designation of least developed countries,

Taking note of the content of the letter dated 8 July 1998 from the Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Vanuatu to the President of the Economic and Social Council on the proposed graduation of Vanuatu from the list of the least developed countries, wherein reasons were advanced to support the position that the review of the status of Vanuatu should be deferred to the year 2000, and which was circulated as a document of the Council,

1. Reaffirms the need for such an assessment to be made in respect of a decision on the graduation of Vanuatu from the list of the least developed countries;

2. Notes that the Economic and Social Council will discuss the programme of work of the Committee for Development Planning during the organizational session for 1999 of the Council, and, in this regard, stresses the need for the Committee to include in its report to the Council at its substantive session of 1999 an assessment of the usefulness of a vulnerability index for small island developing States as a criterion for the designation of least developed countries and consideration of the work of all relevant international agencies on the vulnerability of small States;

3. Decides to postpone its consideration of the graduation of Vanuatu until the above-mentioned report of the Committee for Development Planning has been submitted and to take a decision accordingly.

Programme of Action for the 1990s

The eighth annual review of progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second (1990) United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries (Paris Conference) [YUN 1990, p. 369] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 45/206 [YUN 1990, p. 373], was carried out by the Trade and Development Board in October. The background document was The Least Developed Countries 1998 Report [Sales No. E.98.II.D.11] (see above). On 23 October [A/53/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 452(XLV))], the Board stated that it was encouraged by the fact that LDCs had been able to sustain their recent economic recovery in 1997. It was, however, concerned by the considerable uncertainty over the short-term prospects for LDCs; their fragile economies were particularly vulnerable to exogenous shocks such as the Asian financial crisis, declining commodity prices and natural calamities.

With regard to the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs, which the Assembly, in resolution 52/187 [YUN 1997, p. 839], decided to convene in 2001, the Board welcomed the EU's generous offer to host the Conference [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 453(XLV))]. It recommended a draft resolution on the subject to the Assembly for adoption (see text below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/608/Add.5], adopted resolution 53/182 without vote [agenda item 93 (e)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/187 of 18 December 1997, in which it decided to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries at a high level in the year 2001,

1. Welcomes and accepts the generous offer of the European Union to host the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in the first semester of the year 2001;

2. Designates the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the Secretary-General of the Conference, and requests him to make all necessary preparations for the Conference;

3. Decides to convene the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries in the first semester of the year 2001 for a duration of seven days, at a venue and time to be determined by the Secretary-General of the Conference in consultation with the European Union;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to organize the intergovernmental preparatory committee (in two parts) and the three expert-level preparatory meetings referred to in paragraph 1 (b) of resolution 52/187;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General of the Conference, in consultation with Member States and in cooperation with relevant organizations and agencies, to organize well-focused sectoral and thematic or, where appropriate, country-specific round-table meetings during the Conference to contribute to the work of the Conference;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank to link the forthcoming round-table and consultative group meetings to the preparatory process of the Conference, and to ensure that they make substantive contributions to the Conference;

7. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in his capacity as Convenor of the United Nations Development Group, to ensure the full involvement in the preparations for the Conference of United Nations resident coordinators and country teams in the least developed countries;

8. Calls upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the Conference, to convene an inter-agency meeting to ensure the full mobilization and coordination of all relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as other relevant institutions, for the purpose of preparations for and follow-up to the Conference;

9. Invites the Secretary-General of the Conference to make arrangements, on the basis of consultations with Member States, to facilitate the involvement of civil society, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the preparatory process and the Conference;

10. Decides to defray the cost of participation of two government representatives from each least developed country in the intergovernmental preparatory committee meetings and the Conference itself through the use of extrabudgetary resources and, should those resources prove to be insufficient, to consider all other options;

11. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, with the assistance of concerned organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, to take necessary measures to intensify their public information efforts and other relevant initiatives to enhance public awareness in favour of the Conference, its objectives and its significance;

12. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to submit a report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the state of preparations for the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries.

Island developing countries

Vulnerability index

In response to General Assembly resolution 50/116 [YUN 1995, p. 875], the Secretary-General submitted a February report [A/53/65-E/1998/5] to the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on progress made in the development of a vulnerability index for small island developing States (SIDS). He transmitted the report of an ad hoc expert group (New York, 17-19 December), convened by CDP, which had reviewed a number of studies addressing: alternative economic vulnerability indices; measurement of the vulnerability of small States; a composite vulnerability index; alternative ecological vulnerability indices; and the vulnerability of SIDS in the context of globalization.

The expert group concluded that as a group SIDS were more vulnerable than other groups of developing countries and that their vulnerability was structural and dependent on factors not under the control of national authorities when the shocks occurred. A large number of indicators of vulnerability could be conceived, but only those that reflected the magnitude and probability of shocks should be used; some structural handicaps could not be considered as vulnerability. Not all potentially relevant indicators could be meaningfully included in a composite vulnerability index because of constraints imposed by insufficient data, the difficulty of quantifying some indicators and the need for simplicity, the experts concluded.

At its May session [E/1998/34] (see above), CDP reviewed the results of the ad hoc expert group and agreed with its recommendations, stating that the development of a comprehensive composite index of economic vulnerability and ecological fragility was not currently feasible. CDP recommended that further work on the development of such indices be carried out by the UN Secretariat.

By decision 1998/291 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the development of a vulnerability index for SIDS.

Implementation of the Programme of Action

Commission on Sustainable Development. The Commission on Sustainable Development, at its April/May session (see above), again reviewed progress in implementing the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of SIDS, adopted in 1994 at the Global Conference on the subject [YUN 1994, p. 783] and endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/122 [ibid., p. 784]. As decided by the Commission in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 840] and endorsed by the Assembly in resolution S/19-2 [ibid., p. 792], the Commission considered reports of the Secretary-General on the outstanding chapters of the Programme of Action; they covered: climate change and sea-level rise [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.1]; management of wastes [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.2]; freshwater resources [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.3]; land resources [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.4]; biodiversity resources [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.5]; national institutions and administrative capacity [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.6]; regional institutions and technical cooperation [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.7]; science and technology [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.8]; and human resource development [E/CN.17/1998/7/Add.9]. The main report [E/CN.17/1998/7] summarized the main findings and recommendations in the addenda.

In a 1 May decision [E/1998/29 (dec. 6/4)], the Commission urged SIDS and the international community to continue preparations for the 1999 special session of the Assembly for an in-depth assessment and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action. It suggested that the 1999 review should include an assessment of changes in financial flows to SIDS, both overall and by sector, including private and public resources. The Commission encouraged SIDS to put in place national sustainable development strategies that took into account the links between economic, social and environmental indicators and policies on an ongoing basis. The donors conference on SIDS to be held in early 1999 was welcomed as a useful forum for assistance in the pursuit of sustainable development objectives of those States.

The Commission made recommendations with regard to the nine issues addressed in the Secretary-General's report and addenda and called on relevant bodies of the UN system to accord priority to quantitative and analytical work on the vulnerability of SIDS.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/202 [YUN 1997, p. 840], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/53/358] on plans and projects for the sustainable development of SIDS that had been implemented, were under implementation or were envisaged for the period 1999-2003 by bilateral donors, United Nations organizations and regional and other organizations. Information on projects arranged according to status of implementation and organized by programme area and donor category was provided in tabular form.

The Secretary-General concluded that there seemed to be an increase in projects since 1994, the year of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of SIDS. While the Programme of Action had been fairly well covered, donors and organizations had emphasized the programme areas of national institution-building and human resource development and bilateral donors had also focused on fisheries development and transport and communication. Some programme areas such as waste management, regional institutions and science and technology had been given less emphasis, although there had been some increase in projects in those areas in recent years.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/609/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/189 A without vote [agenda item 94 (c)].

Implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/183 of 16 December 1996 and 52/202 of 18 December 1997,

Reaffirming the outcome of its nineteenth special session, held from 23 to 28 June 1997, specifically the adoption of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, and the relevant resolutions and decisions of the Commission on Sustainable Development adopted at its fifth and sixth sessions, held from 7 to 25 April 1997, and on 22 December 1997 and from 20 April to 1 May 1998, respectively,

Noting the importance of the decision taken at its nineteenth special session to convene a two-day special session, in New York in September 1999, for a full and comprehensive review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States,

Reaffirming its decision to invite States members of the specialized agencies that are not members of the United Nations to participate in the special session and in the preparatory meetings therefor, in the capacity of observers,

Recognizing that small island developing States are vulnerable and face constraints in their efforts to achieve sustainable development,

Noting that implementation of the Programme of Action has been carried out primarily at the national and regional levels, and commending efforts by small island developing States in this regard,

Noting also that the considerable efforts being made at the national and regional levels need to be supplemented by effective financial support from the international community,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on plans and projects for the sustainable development of small island developing States implemented, under implementation or envisaged for the period 1999-2003 by bilateral donors, United Nations organizations and regional and non-United Nations international organizations, and welcomes the action taken by small island developing States and the international donor community in implementing plans and projects for the sustainable development of small island developing States;

2. Also takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the development of a vulnerability index for small island developing States, urges that the progress made in the development and compilation of a vulnerability index for small island developing States be continued, and encourages all the relevant organizations engaged in the process of refining the vulnerability index to work collaboratively;

3. Welcomes the action taken by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, with respect to the donors conference to be held from 24 to 26 February 1999 between representatives of small island developing States and prospective bilateral and multilateral donors, and urges the parties concerned to facilitate project preparation and development;

4. Encourages all small island developing States and prospective bilateral and multilateral donors to participate in the donors conference as a means of pursuing the development objectives of small island developing States;

5. Welcomes the actions taken by Governments, regional commissions and organizations, organizations of the United Nations system, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in support of activities relating to the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

6. Urges small island developing States to continue preparations for the seventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development and the special session of the General Assembly in September 1999 for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, and urges the international community, organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental bodies to continue to assist in this regard;

7. Calls for the participation of associate members of regional economic commissions in the special session, subject to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, and in the preparatory process thereof, in the same capacity of observer that held for their participation in the 1994 Global Conference;

8. Stresses the need for the effective participation of actors of civil society, particularly non-governmental organizations, in preparation for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements, taking into account the practice and experience gained at the Global Conference, for their substantive contributions to and active involvement in the preparatory meetings and the special session, and in that context invites the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States, to propose to Member States appropriate modalities for their effective involvement in the special session;

9. Also stresses the importance of the full and effective participation of small island developing States in the special session and in the seventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development as the preparatory body for the special session, invites Governments to make timely and voluntary contributions for that purpose to the Trust Fund for Support of the Work of the Commission on Sustainable Development, and in this context requests the Secretary-General to assist small island developing States by applying the modalities for such assistance used for their participation in the Global Conference;

10. Reiterates the urgency of international community support of adaptation efforts by small island developing States to cope with the threat of sea-level rise experienced as a consequence of climate change;

11. Welcomes the activities undertaken by the Global Environment Facility, and invites it, in accordance with the relevant decisions of its Council and the relevant provisions of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the Convention on Biological Diversity, to support further the objectives of the Programme of Action;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Sustainable Development at its seventh session, through the existing mechanism, and to the General Assembly at its special session for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States, a report on the donors conference;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States";

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on actions taken to implement the present resolution and the recommendations emanating from the special session for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States.

Landlocked developing countries

In resolution 53/171 of 15 December, the General Assembly invited donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions to continue to provide the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours with financial and technical assistance to improve the transit environment, including construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities and improved communications (see PART THREE, Chapter V).

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

In 1998, the income of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—the central United Nations funding body for technical assistance to developing countries—totalled $2,317 million, as compared with $1,973 million in 1997. Despite the increase, total voluntary contributions received in 1998 decreased to $746 million, from $761 million in 1997. UNDP expenditures on operational activities under regular resources reached $1,764 million in 1998, up from $1,529 million in 1997.

A comprehensive policy review of UN operational activities for development was concluded in 1998. In May, the Secretary-General submitted an interim report to the Economic and Social Council and a final version was completed in August for consideration by the General Assembly. The Assembly, in December, adopted a broad policy outline for future operational activities for development in the UN system.

UNDP activities in 1998 focused on five legislated priority areas: an enabling environment for sustainable human development, particularly through good governance; poverty reduction and sustainable livelihoods; environmental protection; gender equality and the advancement of women; and responding to countries with special development needs. The rapidly changing external environment in 1998, with events such as war, genocide, refugee movements, financial volatility, environmental degradation and growing social pressures stemming from increasing inequity, brought increased demand for UNDP support. In response, UNDP made proposals to narrow the focus of its interventions and guidelines to help it do so. The Administrator also reported on progress in implementing UNDP 2001—its change management process for recasting the organization's priorities and improving efficiency. In an effort to restore predictability in its income, UNDP adopted a multi-year results-based funding framework.

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) remained a fully self-financing operation, with no assessed budget funding. In 1998, it exceeded its financial targets, and total delivery rose by 16 per cent to $713 million. Projects funded from UNDP core resources decreased by 22 per cent in 1998; however, new arrangements for UNOPS activities, signed by UNDP with a range of funding sources, were valued at $250 million, up from $150 million in 1997.

The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme continued to expand in 1998, both in the number of volunteers and the types of service provided. Despite its expanded programme, overall income for UNV decreased by 18 per cent to $17.8 million.

The United Nations Capital Development Fund continued to focus its support on activities in local governance, decentralization, participation and microfinancing, with particular emphasis on local governance.

The Secretary-General, in his triennial review of UN system operational activities, examined the role of technical and economic cooperation among developing countries. The Assembly requested the system to improve the incorporation of that cooperation in its programmes and projects. On 7 October, the Assembly held a special meeting in commemoration of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries.

System-wide activities

Operational activities segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, in accordance with its decision 1998/206 of 6 February, held its 1998 substantive session (New York, 6-31 July and 5 August) [A/53/3], at which it considered the question of UN operational activities for international development cooperation (9-14, 17, 28 and 31 July). Among the documents before the Council were the May interim report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [E/1998/48 & Corr.1], and an addendum containing statistical data on operational activities for 1996 [E/1998/48/Add.1]. The interim report provided an analysis of field-level cooperation, strategic frameworks, programming and evolving dimensions of operational activities, evaluation and resources and funding. The final report was submitted to the General Assembly later in the year (see below).

Other documents considered during the operational activities segment included the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) Executive Director to the Council [E/1998/45] and the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on its first and second regular sessions of 1998 and its annual session [E/1998/36]. By decision 1998/286 of 31 July, the Council took note of those reports.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/42 [draft: E/1998/L.43] without vote [agenda item 3 (b)].

Operational activities of the United Nations for international development cooperation segment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 47/199 of 22 December 1992 and 50/120 of 20 December 1995 on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

Recalling also the role of the Council in providing co-ordination and guidance to the United Nations system to ensure that policies formulated by the General Assembly, in particular during the triennial policy review of operational activities, are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/227 of 24 May 1996,

Noting the progress made and the work that remains to be accomplished by the United Nations system in the full implementation of the provisions contained in Assembly resolution 50/120,

Recalling Council resolution 1996/42 of 26 July 1996, in which the Council urged all funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations development system to identify measurable targets to strengthen their monitoring and evaluation capabilities and to incorporate those targets into their respective management plans so as to implement Assembly resolution 50/120,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 52/203 of 18 December 1997, in particular paragraph 9 thereof, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, when presenting his comprehensive report on the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system at the fifty-third session of the Assembly, to make recommendations for the implementation of reform initiatives on operational activities, bearing in mind the views of Member States,

Strongly reaffirming the need for a substantial increase in resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries,

Stressing the need for continuous overall improvement in the effectiveness, efficiency and impact of the United Nations system in delivering its development assistance, and welcoming steps that have been taken towards that end,

Noting the urgency of a productive outcome from the current discussions on funding strategies being pursued by the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes towards reversing the declining trend in core resources,

Considering the linkage that exists between the recommendations made in the report of the Secretary-General, on advancement of women: implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development and the triennial policy review of operational activities,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, to take into account the views and comments expressed by States during the operational activities segment of the substantive session of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report, to take into account the discussions on funding strategies currently taking place in the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, when preparing recommendations for the next triennial policy review, to consider the implications of steps adopted by the United Nations system to implement reform initiatives on operational activities, as agreed in General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, taking fully into account the views expressed by States in conjunction with work that remains to be completed pursuant to Assembly resolution 50/120;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report, to provide an analysis of the state of the implementation of resolution 50/120 and related resolutions on operational activities and to make appropriate recommendations;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General, when finalizing his report, to take into account relevant aspects of agreed conclusions 1998/1 of 17 July 1998, adopted at the humanitarian affairs segment of the substantive session of the Council;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the General Assembly, taking into account the discussions in the Council on item 3 (a) of the agenda for its substantive session of 1998, entitled "Advancement of women: implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development", and the outcome thereof, to include a section on mainstreaming a gender perspective in the operational activities of the United Nations system, containing recommendations to that end;

8. Invites the Secretary-General, in accordance with the coordination, guidance and oversight roles of the Council in the implementation by the United Nations system of the triennial policy review of operational activities, to make recommendations, when finalizing his report, on the possible themes that could be discussed at the working-level meetings of the operational activities segments of the substantive sessions of 1999, 2000 and 2001 of the Council, taking into account the necessary preparatory work for the following triennial policy review;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake, as appropriate, in close consultation and collaboration with recipient Governments and donors, impact evaluations of the themes on operational activities identified by the General Assembly for discussion at future sessions of the Council;

10. Stresses the importance of the continued participation of the specialized agencies and regional commissions of the United Nations system and the ongoing collaboration with the World Bank in relevant aspects of United Nations operational activities on the basis of the national priorities of the recipient countries.

Triennial policy review

The Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 50/120 [YUN 1995, p. 883] and 52/203 [YUN 1997, p. 848], reported in August on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system [A/53/226]. The report was based on completed questionnaires received from recipient countries, major donor countries, resident coordinators and UN bodies, and on the conduct of impact evaluations, as requested by the Assembly in resolution 50/120.

The report described the impact of operational activities and specific issues, such as follow-up to global conferences and the role of the resident coordinator system, gender perspective, civil society, regional dimensions and resources and funding. It noted that the range and diversity of operational activities had increased considerably in response to the growing diversity of situations and demands facing the UN system. At the same time, mandates and tasks were being implemented in a more holistic manner as the linkages between the various dimensions of development were better understood. Traditional approaches to technical and financial assistance were being replaced by more flexible methods, linking financial assistance more directly to capacity-building. The system was paying increased attention to upstream policy and advocacy functions, replacing the project approach with the programme approach, and supporting mechanisms that facilitated and guided policy dialogue. The system was thus able to respond better to national requirements more effectively and comprehensively. The wide variation in the volume of assistance provided to countries required differing approaches and points of entry tailored to each country situation. Initiatives being taken to that end by individual organizations and agencies were accompanied by a renewed effort by the system as a whole to adapt its overall approaches to development cooperation in the new international context and to ensure that the UN reform processes under way resulted in a qualitative strengthening of the overall coherence and impact of the UN development system.

The demands placed on operational activities had also increased, including capacity-building through institutional and human resource development to enable developing countries to integrate better into the world economy; translating internationally agreed goals and objectives emerging from conferences into concrete programmes at the country level, with poverty eradication as a major underlying objective; helping to establish social safety nets for the most vulnerable groups during periods of economic adjustment; and responding to the new political, humanitarian and socio-economic needs in a growing number of countries.

However, there was an urgent need to reverse current declining and stagnant funding trends, particularly in core resources. The share of the UN system development grants in total official development assistance (ODA) dropped from 8 per cent ($4.9 billion) in 1993 to less than 7.5 per cent ($4.3 billion) in 1996. The share of UN specialized and technical agencies within total UN system grant assistance dropped from 26 per cent ($1.3 billion) in 1993 to about 19 per cent ($0.9 billion) in 1996. The total available to the UN system for operational activities for development in the past three years in nominal terms remained stagnant and had declined in real terms: $5.5 billion in 1994, $5.5 billion in 1995 and $5.4 billion in 1996. Moreover, there was a trend towards increased earmarked funding of operational activities for development. The efficiency, coherence and impact of UN system development cooperation would increase markedly with the availability of adequate levels of funding, particularly core resources, which represented the central building block for sustained development support by the system. That was confirmed by six evaluations conducted to assess the impact of operational activities.

Three of those evaluations focused on capacity-building in basic health and education, and the others on capacity-building in the transfer of technology, peace-building and the environment. They confirmed that the degree of coherence and collaboration within the UN system could be a crucial factor for positive impact, particularly where the UN system worked with the Government on common goals. Other factors affecting impact were: civil and political stability; appropriate degrees of decentralization of centralization of national capacity; technological specificity in capacity requirements; the ability of countries to deal with the effects of policy reform; national ownership; and an effective analysis of the requirements to develop operational capacity. Reasons for lack of positive impact included proliferation of effort over too many projects, pressure to undertake diverse projects recommended by individual UN bodies without sufficient managerial capacity, and failure to build sustainability into project design. The evaluations also showed that UN system activities were able to prepare conditions for larger programmes to be implemented, and that a major factor for achieving sustainable results was the availability of sufficient financial resources for the national programmes to be effective. Capacity-building required a more systematic approach within the UN system. For example, agreement on country-level targets and indicators was needed and should be linked to the country strategy note/United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) processes.

The report also examined the strategic frameworks and programming, including the country strategy note, UNDAF, the programme approach and the harmonization and simplification of programming. It stated that the UN development system was working more coherently, but further progress could be made to link its operational activities to national programmes. The Secretary-General's reforms had given a major impulse to achieving that goal through UNDAF, complementing the country strategy note. Of the 90 countries that had expressed an interest in the country strategy note, 33 had completed the process. The added value of the process could not be considered as having been clearly established in all cases, and its slow introduction and adoption by a relatively small number of countries limited its usefulness as a standard framework for programming. UNDAF, developed to ensure that the individual country programmes of UN funds and programmes were based on common objectives and harmonized time frames in order to achieve goal-oriented collaboration, programmatic coherence and mutual reinforcement, was being piloted in 18 countries, with the support of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG). Assessments of UNDAF had not been completed.

The review also confirmed the burden placed on many countries, including country offices, by the complex and diverse rules and procedures governing programming within the UN system, and the urgent need to introduce further simplification, particularly in programming.

In terms of monitoring, evaluation and accountability, while there was reporting of results as requested by Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/42 [YUN 1996, p. 761], there continued to exist methodological problems of measurement and quantification that demanded ongoing attention and work, and, at the country level, Governments had not reported evaluating UN operational activities.

As to the resident coordinator system, despite the reform measures introduced by the Secretary-General in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 844], much still remained to be done. The relationship with the host country needed further attention, including the flow of information, the existence of government focal points and the need in some countries for greater government interest and support. There was also room to increase the participation of all relevant UN system partners in the resident coordinator system at the country level, including the inclusion of agencies without field representation. Greater simplification and harmonization of procedures and more delegated authority at the country level would considerably strengthen the system.

The report also analysed capacity-building, national execution and related questions; humanitarian assistance, rehabilitation, peace-building and development, technical cooperation among developing countries; the role of agencies in the field; and cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions (see below). It contained a number of recommendations that were acted on by the General Assembly (see below).

The report's addenda examined in greater detail, taking into account the views of Governments, organizations and agencies, field coordination, strategic frameworks and programming, humanitarian assistance, post-conflict peace-building, regional dimensions of operational activities, evaluation and resources and funding [A/53/226/Add.1]; provided comprehensive statistical data on operational activities for 1996 [A/53/226/Add.2] and 1997 [A/53/226/Add.3]; and described strengthening the integration of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries in the operational activities of the UN system [A/53/226/Add.4] (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, by decision 53/447, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities. Acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/610], the Assembly, at the same meeting, adopted resolution 53/192 without vote [agenda item 95].

Triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 44/211 of 22 December 1989, 47/199 of 22 December 1992, 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 52/203 of 18 December 1997 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, taking into account the views of Member States, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1996/42 of 26 July 1996 and 1998/26 of 28 July 1998,

Reaffirming that operational activities for development within the United Nations system have an important role to play in enabling developing countries to continue to take a lead role in the management of their own development process,

Stressing that national plans and priorities constitute the only viable frame of reference for the national programming of operational activities for development within the United Nations system and that programmes should be based on such development plans and priorities and should therefore be country-driven,

Also stressing, in that context, the need to take into account the outcomes and commitments of relevant United Nations conferences, as well as the individual mandates and complementarities of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations development system, bearing in mind the need to avoid duplication,

Further stressing that the fundamental characteristics of the operational activities of the United Nations system should be, inter alia, their universal, voluntary and grant nature, their neutrality and their multilateralism, as well as their ability to respond to the development needs of developing countries in a flexible manner, and that the operational activities of the United Nations system are carried out for the benefit of recipient countries, at the request of those countries and in accordance with their own policies and priorities for development,

Noting, in this context, the activities of United Nations funds and programmes aimed at providing technical assistance to recipient countries, in response to their national economic and social needs and priorities, including poverty eradication and the promotion of all human rights, including the right to development, for achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences, and stressing the need for those activities to be undertaken at the request of interested recipient Governments strictly within the respective mandates of United Nations funds and programmes, which should receive increased contributions from donor countries,

Recognizing the urgent and specific needs of low-income countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Emphasizing that developing countries are responsible for their development processes, and in this context stressing the responsibility of the international community, in partnership, to assist developing countries in their national development efforts,

Recalling the role of the Economic and Social Council in providing coordination and guidance to the United Nations system to ensure that policies formulated by the General Assembly, particularly during the triennial policy review of operational activities, are implemented on a system-wide basis in accordance with Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and 50/227 of 24 May 1996,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

2. Reaffirms its resolutions 47/199, 50/120 and the parts relevant to operational activities for development of its resolution 52/12 B, and stresses the need to implement fully, based on lessons learned, all the elements of these resolutions in a coherent and timely manner, keeping in mind their interlinkages;

3. Emphasizes that recipient Governments have the primary responsibility for coordinating, on the basis of national strategies and priorities, all types of external assistance, including that provided by multilateral organizations, in order to integrate effectively such assistance into their development process;

4. Notes the efforts made in order to rationalize and to improve the function and impact of United Nations funds and programmes;

I

A. Reform of United Nations operational activities

5. Stresses the need for all organizations of the United Nations development system to focus their efforts at the field level on priority areas, in accordance with the priorities identified by recipient countries and the mandates, mission statements and relevant decisions of their governing bodies, in order to avoid duplication and to enhance the complementarity and impact of their work;

6. Also stresses that, in the context of the reform of the United Nations Secretariat and the restructuring and revitalization of the intergovernmental process, the mandates of the separate sectoral and specialized entities, funds, programmes and specialized agencies should be respected and enhanced, taking into account their complementarities;

B. Funding for United Nations operational activities

7. Notes with regret that, although significant progress has already been achieved on the governance and functioning of the United Nations development funds and programmes, there has not been, as part of that overall change process, any increase in core resources for operational activities for development on a predictable, continuous and assured basis;

8. Expresses serious concern at the persistent insufficiency of resources for the operational development activities of the United Nations, in particular the decline in contributions to core resources;

9. Reaffirms the need for priority allocation of scarce grant resources to programmes and projects in low-income countries, particularly the least developed countries;

10. Strongly reaffirms that the impact of the operational activities of the United Nations system must be enhanced by, inter alia, a substantial increase in their funding on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the increasing needs of developing countries, as well as through the full implementation of resolutions 47/199, 48/162, 50/120 and the parts relevant to operational activities for development of resolution 52/12 B;

11. Stresses the need for continuous overall improvement in the effectiveness, efficiency and impact of the United Nations system in delivering its development assistance, and welcomes steps that have been taken towards that end;

12. Notes with appreciation the sustained contributions of many donors and recipient countries to operational activities for development in a spirit of partnership;

13. Urges developed countries, in particular those countries whose overall performance is not commensurate with their capacity, taking into account established official development assistance targets, including targets established at the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries and their current levels of contribution, to increase substantially their official development assistance, including contributions to the operational activities of the United Nations system;

14. Stresses that other countries that are in a position to do so should strive to augment their assistance in the framework of development cooperation;

15. Notes the importance of non-core resources, including cost-sharing, trust funds and non-traditional sources of financing, as a mechanism to enhance the capacity and to supplement the means of operational activities for development;

16. Notes the discussions on funding strategies in the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes, including, inter alia, the decisions adopted recently by the Executive Board of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Population Fund as part of ongoing efforts by Member States to reverse the declining trend in core resources and to put funding for United Nations development activities on a predictable, continuous and assured basis, commensurate with the needs of the developing countries, and in this context urges the expeditious and productive outcome of these and other discussions of the executive boards, and invites the Economic and Social Council to consider, on an annual basis, the overall financial picture of the funds and programmes;

C. United Nations Development Assistance Framework

17. Emphasizes that the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, which is currently in a pilot phase, should promote a country-driven, collaborative and coherent response by the United Nations system to achieve greater impact at the country level, fully consistent with and in support of national priorities as expressed in the country strategy notes or relevant national development plans, as appropriate;

18. Stresses the importance of ensuring full government participation in the formulation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and its full ownership through the agreement of the recipient Governments concerned to the finalized Framework, bearing in mind that the responsibility for coordination of all assistance and developmental activities rests with the national Government;

19. Also stresses the need to ensure the full and active participation of the funds and programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system in the preparation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

20. Notes the importance of closer consultation, in the formulation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, among national Governments, relevant United Nations development agencies, including specialized agencies, and other relevant development partners;

21. Also notes that the country strategy note remains a voluntary initiative and that where it does not exist, other similar frameworks reflecting national priorities should be used as the basis for the preparation of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, to ensure that the Framework fully responds to national development priorities and needs;

22. Further notes the role that the United Nations Development Assistance Framework should play to facilitate, inter alia, the contribution of the United Nations to the coordinated follow-up to the major United Nations conferences at the field level and the importance of the common country assessment for the effective formulation of the Framework;

D. Resident coordinator system

23. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to make the resident coordinator system more participatory in its functioning at the field level by, inter alia, making greater use of thematic groups and adopting a more consultative approach within the United Nations system;

24. Notes the improvements in the functioning of the resident coordinator system, and encourages further progress in close consultation with national Governments;

25. Encourages further efforts, including through the United Nations Development Group, to further improve the resident coordinator system, and welcomes the efforts to continue to broaden the base of recruitment of resident coordinators, increasing the number of women resident coordinators and improving its selection criteria and procedures, including through the use of competency assessment and training and by ensuring that the resident coordinators take fully into account the mandates of all organizations of the resident coordinator system;

26. Reaffirms that resident coordinators, in full consultation with national Governments, should facilitate a coherent and coordinated United Nations follow-up to major international conferences at the field level;

27. Requests the United Nations system, including the funds and programmes, specialized agencies and the Secretariat, to provide support to the resident coordinator system;

E. United Nations Development Group

28. Urges the United Nations Development Group to work in a fully transparent and accountable manner towards a more coherent United Nations performance in the development field, while respecting the specific mandates and identity of its members;

II

A. Planning, programming and implementation

29. Stresses that the needs and priorities of recipient countries require flexibility and decentralization of operational activities to the country level, as well as the continued application of those measures, to enhance further programme responsiveness and impact;

30. Decides that, with the agreement of the host country, the United Nations development system should assist national Governments in creating an enabling environment in which the links between national Governments, the United Nations development system, civil society, national non-governmental organizations and the private sector that are involved in the development process are strengthened, with a view to seeking new and innovative solutions to development problems in accordance with national policies and priorities;

31. Calls for the further simplification, harmonization and rationalization of procedures for operational activities of the United Nations development system at the field level, where possible, and developing common databases, in consultation with national Governments;

32. Urges the funds and programmes to put in place specific measures and timetables to advance the simplification and harmonization of procedures and to report on these to their respective governing bodies;

33. Also calls for the United Nations development system to promote greater consistency in the presentation of budgets at the headquarters level and, at the field level, the sharing of administrative systems and services;

34. Emphasizes the need to implement the outcome of the major United Nations conferences through fulfilling the commitments and targets agreed upon at those conferences, and in this context stresses the importance of accelerating efforts for the coordinated follow-up to major United Nations conferences, and in this context welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1998/290 of 31 July 1998, in which the Council decided to start, on a step-by-step basis, an intergovernmental process on relevant indicators to monitor the implementation of conference outcomes at all levels, and in this context also welcomes the decision to hold an informal Council meeting on this issue in 1999;

35. Encourages greater cooperation between the World Bank, regional development banks and all funds and programmes, with a view to increased complementarity and better division of labour as well as enhanced coherence in their sectoral activities, building on the existing arrangements and fully in accordance with the priorities of the recipient Government;

36. Notes the current initiatives in pursuing common premises and the need to take fully into account cost-benefit studies as called for by relevant resolutions, and encourages further implementation of such initiatives, where appropriate, while ensuring that there will be no additional burden imposed on host countries;

B. Capacity-building

37. Reaffirms that capacity-building and its sustainability should be explicitly articulated as a goal of technical assistance provided by the operational activities of the United Nations system at the country level, with the aim of strengthening national capacities in the fields of, inter alia, policy and programme formulation, development management, planning, implementation, coordination, monitoring and review;

C. Humanitarian assistance

38. Expresses concern at the growing number of natural disasters and environmental emergencies that often strike countries that lack the resources to cope with them adequately;

39. Recognizes that the phases of relief, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development are generally not consecutive but often overlap and occur simultaneously, and notes the urgent need to develop, through a strategic framework, when appropriate, a comprehensive approach to countries in crisis, and that the development of such a comprehensive approach must involve national authorities as well as the United Nations system, donors and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and that national authorities must take a leading role in all aspects of the recovery plan, and also notes in this context the need for an early application of developmental tools in humanitarian emergencies, and takes note with appreciation of the recommendations included in the report of the Secretary-General in this regard;

40. Stresses that contributions to humanitarian assistance should not be provided at the expense of development assistance and that sufficient resources for humanitarian assistance should be made available by the international community;

D. Regional dimension

41. Stresses the growing need for incorporating the regional and subregional dimension in United Nations operational activities for development, and encourages the resident coordinators, in close consultation with Governments, to secure greater involvement of the regional commissions, taking into account their agreed mandates and work programmes, in the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, as appropriate;

E. Cross-cutting themes

1. South-South cooperation/technical and economic cooperation among developing countries

42. Requests the United Nations system to take appropriate measures to improve the effective incorporation of technical cooperation among developing countries into their programmes and projects and to intensify efforts towards mainstreaming the modality of technical cooperation among developing countries, including through support to the activities of the Special Unit for Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries, and encourages other relevant international institutions to undertake similar measures;

43. Stresses that South-South cooperation, including technical and economic cooperation among developing countries, offers viable opportunities for the development of developing countries, and in this context requests the executive boards of the funds and programmes to review, with a view to considering an increase, the allocation of resources for activities involving technical cooperation among developing countries;

44. Notes with satisfaction the broad-based support for technical cooperation among developing countries expressed by Member States at the twentieth anniversary commemoration of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries;

45. Takes note with appreciation of the recommendations on strengthening the integration of economic and technical cooperation among developing countries contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Gender

46. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations development system to take all measures to ensure gender balance when making appointments, including at the senior level and in the field, in accordance with relevant General Assembly resolutions;

47. Stresses the need for gender mainstreaming in operational activities of the United Nations system in all fields, in particular in support of poverty eradication;

3. National execution

48. Decides that the United Nations system should use, to the fullest extent possible and practicable, available national expertise and indigenous technologies in the implementation of operational activities;

49. Calls upon all funds and programmes to consider ways to increase, within existing rules and regulations, the procurement of goods and services from developing countries, both as a mechanism to promote South-South cooperation and for enhancing national execution;

50. Calls for further work on the development of common guidelines at the field level for the recruitment, training and remuneration of national project personnel, including national consultants, in the formulation and implementation of development projects and programmes supported by the United Nations development system, in order to enhance the coherence of the system;

51. Requests the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue to work on promoting, improving and expanding national execution, including through the simplification and strengthening of relevant procedures, so as to contribute to the advancement of national ownership and to enhance the absorptive capacity in developing countries, in particular in the least developed countries in Africa;

III

Monitoring and evaluation

52. Recognizes that the monitoring and evaluation process of operational activities, including joint evaluations, should be impartial and independent, under the overall leadership of the Government;

53. Takes note of the report on pilot evaluation conducted on the impact of operational activities and the need to continue these evaluations with the full and effective involvement of the recipient Government concerned in the process of such evaluation;

54. Emphasizes the importance of disseminating the experience of effective and efficient cooperation within the United Nations development system;

55. Underlines the importance of promoting, under the leadership of Governments, greater collaboration on issues relating to evaluation among recipient Governments, the United Nations development system, in particular the members of the United Nations Development Group, and relevant development partners at the country level;

56. Recognizes, in that context, the need to strengthen capacities of the recipient countries to perform both effective programme, project and financial monitoring and impact evaluations of operational activities funded by the United Nations;

57. Requests that the United Nations system strengthen its efforts, in consultation with recipient countries, to ensure that the lessons learned from both monitoring and evaluation exercises are systematically applied to programming processes at the operational level and that evaluation criteria are built into all projects and programmes at their design stage;

IV

Follow-up

58. Reaffirms that the governing bodies of the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should take appropriate action for the full implementation of the present resolution, and requests the executive heads of those funds, programmes and specialized agencies to submit a yearly progress report to their governing bodies on measures taken and envisaged for the implementation of the present resolution, as well as appropriate recommendations;

59. Invites the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes to ensure that the heads of those funds and programmes include in their annual reports to the Economic and Social Council, prepared in accordance with Council resolution 1994/33 of 28 July 1994, a thorough analysis of problems encountered and lessons learned, with emphasis on issues arising from the implementation of the Secretary-General's reform programme, the triennial policy review and the follow-up to international conferences, so as to allow the Council to fulfil its coordinating role;

60. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the funds, programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, to present a progress report to the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1999, on an appropriate management process, containing clear guidelines, targets, benchmarks and time-frames for the full implementation of the present resolution;

61. Invites the Economic and Social Council, during the operational activities segment of its substantive sessions of 1999 and 2000, to examine the operational activities of the United Nations system in order to evaluate the implementation of the present resolution with a view to ensuring its full implementation;

62. Also invites the Economic and Social Council, at its substantive session of 1999, to consider, inter alia, the issues of poverty eradication and capacity-building and, at its substantive session of 2000, to consider, inter alia, harmonization and simplification, including of programming, and resources, on the basis of progress reports by the Secretary-General, including appropriate recommendations;

63. Decides, as an integral part of the next triennial policy review of operational activities, in consultation with Member States, to conduct an evaluation of the impact of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework in the field of operational activities, and requests the Secretary-General to report, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 2001, on the results of such an evaluation, including lessons learned and recommendations made, for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, and also requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the Economic and Social Council on the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

64. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive analysis of the implementation of the present resolution in the context of the triennial policy review, and to make appropriate recommendations.

Policy coordination and programming frameworks

In his annual report [E/1998/45], the UNDP Administrator addressed several matters relating to policy coordination and programming frameworks. He reviewed issues relating to field coordination, capacity-building, harmonization of programme cycles and procedures, monitoring and evaluation activities, and the country strategy note (CSN), in the context of the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 47/199 [YUN 1992, p. 552] and 50/120 [YUN 1995, p. 883] on policies for UN operational activities for development.

Concerning field coordination, the Administrator reported that UNDAF, which accelerated the harmonization of UN system programming and responses to country needs, would provide the UN system with a framework for strategic analysis, more effective provision of development assistance consistent with national priorities and help to achieve greater impact at the country level. UNDP supported the UNDAF process at headquarters and country levels through policy discussions at the Programme Management Oversight Committee; guidance to country teams and resident coordinators; support to the preparation of provisional guidelines, including a core set of indicators; identification of organizational focal points and facilitators; and the use of human, technical and financial resources to sustain participation in the process at the country level. In addition, an especially valuable source of UNDP support was through its management of the resident coordinator system. UNDP believed that the long-term success of UNDAF would depend on the extent to which its substance was reflected in the programming processes of individual UN entities. UNDAF should also help to strengthen the dialogue with other development partners, including donors, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and international financial institutions.

The strengthening of the resident coordinator system continued to receive close attention from UNDP. It had widened the pool for the selection of resident coordinators, developed a draft set of coordinator competencies to be used for appraisal purposes, strengthened its training for coordinators and established a new programme of mentoring and support.

Capacity-building, a main element of UNDP assistance, involved strengthening the management capabilities and technical expertise of national institutions and individuals, especially through national execution. With that aim, UNDP had prepared revised procedures for national and NGO execution, standards to determine capacity for execution, a technical advisory paper for capacity development, new guidelines for the programme approach and numerous training initiatives. National execution entailed full government management and accountability through substantive and financial reporting and achievement of programme objectives.

The harmonization of programming periods was pursued through the submission of country cooperation frameworks (CCFs) and requests for extension of current country programmes. The new successor programming arrangements allowed for flexible duration of CCFs and facilitated the harmonization of programming periods. Harmonization of procedures at the operational level was also pursued, the results of which included a policy on payment to government staff and a draft format for collaborative programmes.

Monitoring and evaluation activities of UNDP included the finalization of a handbook for programme managers entitled "Results-oriented Monitoring and Evaluation" and of the Central Evaluation Database, containing information on the evaluations of over 1,500 UNDP projects. UNDP launched a new evaluation web site in October 1997, allowing individuals in UNDP country offices and at headquarters to have on-line access to evaluation reports and methodologies, among other data.

CSNs, which were the expression of a country's requirements for development cooperation, were prepared in full consultation with the Government. UNDAF complemented the CSN and provided the UN response to the needs identified by the Government. By May 1998, CSNs had been prepared in 27 countries, and drafts in 19 others. A total of 92 countries had expressed interest in the CSN. Draft revised CSN guidelines were prepared by the Department of Economic and Social Affairs under the auspices of the Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions (CCPOQ) of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC).

CCPOQ, at its twelfth session (Geneva, 2-6 March) [ACC/1998/7], approved, on behalf of ACC, a guidance note on field-level follow-up to UN global conferences for transmission by the UNDP Administrator to resident coordinators and by the executive heads of individual agencies to their field representatives. In that note, it was explained that the process of translating policy/normative dimensions of the series of global conferences that had taken place in the 1990s into operational programmes at the country level called for an ongoing process of review and adaptation based on progress achieved and lessons learned. In terms of overall guidance and monitoring, the UNDG Office would be a focal point for collecting information, through the resident coordinator system, on UN system activities in implementing conference goals at the country level and would identify and disseminate lessons learned and best practices. The regional commissions would assist in the follow-up and coordination of activities at the regional level. Periodic feedback through the national reporting systems and the resident coordinators' annual reports would assist in identifying progress and lessons learned. The UN Staff College would play a role in reinforcing best practices, sustaining advocacy, providing training on programming tools, such as the CSN and UNDAF, and strengthening inter-agency coordination.

CCPOQ, at its thirteenth session (New York, 21-25 September) [ACC/1998/15], adopted a second guidance note on the integrated follow-up by the UN system to the major UN conferences, to complement the one adopted at its twelfth session. It also recommended for adoption by ACC a job description for resident coordinator positions, and adopted, on behalf of ACC, a guidance note for the resident coordinator system on operational collaboration with civil society organizations.

CCPOQ endorsed the guidelines on national execution, the programme approach and administrative management for the resident coordinator system for inclusion in the CCPOQ Operational Activities Reference Manual.

Strengthening field representation

In March [DP/1998/17/Add.6], the Administrator submitted UNDP's comments on the 1997 Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report on strengthening field representation of the UN system and the comments of ACC thereon [YUN 1997, p. 855].

UNDP supported the recommendations on unifying representation and harmonizing geographical representation, strengthening thematic groups headed by a lead agency at the country level, and accelerating the establishment or enhancement of common premises. A recommendation for the Secretary-General to designate a single high official at the UN Secretariat to be in charge of the resident coordinator system and on other structural aspects of the Secretariat was superseded by the Secretary-General's recommendations on UN reform [ibid., p. 1389]. In response to the recommendation that coordination at the country level be more institutionalized, especially between the UN system and the multi-bi community, UNDP had taken steps to do so in its capacity-development activities for aid coordination and management.

Cooperation between the UN and Bretton Woods institutions

In June, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council a report entitled "Joint exploratory review of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions" [E/1998/61], as called for by the General Assembly in resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and the Council in resolution 1996/43 [ibid., p. 765]. The report, prepared jointly by the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions (the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank), assessed mechanisms, programmes and relationships at the field, headquarters and intergovernmental levels, with a view to identifying areas in which communication, cooperation and coordination could be improved.

The review confirmed that a multifaceted, extensive and growing partnership already existed, and it sought to build on recommendations made so far for the enhancement of that partnership. It examined the potential for improved coordination in relation to: the implementation of the results of UN conferences; the collection and dissemination of data, analyses and reports; the use of existing resources in the transition from emergency relief to rehabilitation and development; the provision of technical assistance in the field; intergovernmental and secretariat consultations; and policy dialogue.

The review stated that cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions was based on specific activities within the contexts of sustainable development, macro-economic policy dialogue, poverty eradication and environmental protection, resulting in a broad range of positive cooperation at the global and country levels, including well over 300 examples of specific instances of cooperation. A strategy for strengthening the relationship had to reflect the changing political, economic and social environment in which the two institutions worked.

Both the Bretton Woods institutions and the United Nations could gain by exchanging ideas on the linkage between human rights and development and should agree that respect for human rights was critical for economic and social development. Collaboration in the promotion of the concept of the 20/20 initiative (devoting 20 per cent of ODA and 20 per cent of national budgets to basic social programmes) should be stressed and the 20/20 compact should be part of global socio-economic monitoring. Research activities should make practical contributions to global policy formulation, specific country programmes and global knowledge networks. The United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions should increase collaboration in the establishment and operation of knowledge networks for the benefit of Governments and people, especially for those in developing countries; work with the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development in the elaboration and use of standard socio-economic indicators for monitoring progress; exchange ideas in developing partnerships with civil society, including NGOs and the private sector; and strengthen collaboration in humanitarian assistance, in reconstruction and in crisis and post-conflict recovery and development. Their respective staff should be encouraged to participate in joint training activities and staff exchanges to facilitate mutual understanding of policies, approaches and procedures.

The review suggested that, at the country level, both the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions should work with Governments, and with each other, to encourage and support country-level initiatives, and staff should be encouraged to identify opportunities for strengthening their relationships within the existing aid coordination mechanisms. Specific country-level cooperation should focus on areas where maximum returns could be expected from joint efforts. Involvement of aid agencies, regional development banks and NGOs should be pursued. Country-level cooperation in social indicators and monitoring should be emphasized. The UN resident coordinator and senior country-level staff of the Bretton Woods institutions should provide leadership for mobilizing cooperation in aid coordination meetings, including UNDP-sponsored round tables and World Bank-led consultative group meetings. Where feasible, they should coordinate documentation, support statements and follow up on activities that promoted policy dialogue at the country level, based on shared data and analyses. The experience in the two pilot countries (Mali and Viet Nam) should be reviewed so as to identify opportunities and constraints and to suggest possible modalities for country-level cooperation. Further review of the special role of the United Nations in supporting sector investment programmes should be undertaken.

The Secretary-General, in his August report on the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development (see above), examined further areas of cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions.

Financing of operational activities

Expenditures by the UN system on operational activities, excluding loans and grants through the World Bank Group, totalled $4.8 billion in 1997 [E/1999/55/Add.2], the most recent year for which complete figures were available, compared with $4.26 billion in 1996 and $4.8 billion in 1995. That amount was distributed in development grants through UNDP or UNDP-administered funds ($1.8 billion), UNFPA ($214.4 million), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) ($672.6 million), the World Food Programme (WFP) ($1.1 billion), and specialized agencies and other organizations from regular and extrabudgetary sources ($1 billion).

In addition, concessional loans of $258.9 million were disbursed by the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), and a total of $163.1 million was provided through the United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) in services engaged by Governments receiving loans and credits from international development banks or resources from bilateral donors.

By region, 36 per cent of total expenditures went to Africa, 27 per cent to Asia and the Pacific, 26 per cent to the Americas, 7 per cent to Western Asia and 4 per cent to Europe.

Contributions from Governments and other sources for operational activities, including IFAD but excluding the World Bank Group, totalled $5.54 billion in 1997, compared to $5.5 billion in 1996 and $5.6 billion in 1995.

The 1998 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (New York, 4-5 November) [A/CONF.185/3] received pledges from Governments to UN programmes and funds concerned with development. It took note of the fact that several Governments were not in a position to announce their contributions but proposed to communicate their announcement of such contributions to the Secretary-General as soon as they were in a position to do so.

The Secretary-General provided a statement of contributions, as at 30 June 1998, pledged or paid at the 1997 Pledging Conference to 23 funds and programmes [A/CONF.182/2]. The total came to almost $1.2 billion, with an estimated $623 million designated for UNDP.

Technical cooperation through UNDP

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report covering 1998 [DP/1999/15 & Add.1,2], said that the year was marked by crisis after crisis—war, genocide, refugee movements, financial volatility, environmental degradation and growing social pressures stemming from increasing inequity—increasing the demand for UNDP support at the global, regional and country levels. Despite that demand, UNDP core (non-earmarked) resources stood at just over $750 million in 1998—under two thirds of the $1.1 billion annual level agreed on in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895]. Efforts were made to reverse the downward trend and to ensure the volume and predictability of core resources. The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board addressed the issue by adopting a decision on a funding strategy (see below). However, non-core (earmarked) resources, through third-party cost-sharing, government cost-sharing and trust funds, rose from $378 million in 1992 to $1.2 billion in 1998. In the Administrator's view, the overriding challenge was to restore growth and enhance predictability to the core resource base of UNDP and to achieve annual increases until the target of $1.1 billion in core contributions was met.

UNDP's presence through its extensive country office network enabled it to respond rapidly to the specific development needs of a diverse range of programme countries worldwide. The most striking feature was the increasing demand for UNDP advice and capacity development in governance, recognized as a prerequisite for poverty eradication and sustainable human development, and for UNDP services from countries in special development situations. Responding to the increasing number of emergency situations, UNDP demonstrated that it could react flexibly and speedily, mobilizing responses from the rest of the international community. UNDP support promoted national ownership and capacity enhancement. Instruments such as national execution, the programme approach and South-South cooperation were important in that context. Inadequate core resources imposed serious limitations on the seed money available for applying the programme approach and leveraging additional resources from the rest of the international community to meet the development needs of programme countries.

continued to facilitate the exchange of best practices in good governance. At the country level, UNDP responded to the growing demand from programme countries for capacity development in governing institutions, decentralization and local governance, public-sector management and administration, and civil society organizations. UNDP also facilitated consensus on development issues between opposing sectors of society. It continued to play a catalytic role in bringing together the different partners to shape policy direction for sustainable human development and facilitated forums for high-level, broad-based policy discussions to address development challenges.

In response to the financial crisis in Asia, UNDP directed its support towards strengthening national capacity to mitigate the resultant rise in poverty through policy advice to Governments on recovery options. UNDP helped to design and monitor national response strategies and actions with a focus on empowering NGOs and community groups to cope with the human impact of the crisis. It provided $350,000 for the regional programme of special assistance to the countries in crisis. Direct assistance to people affected at the grass-roots level was provided through the community recovery programme.

Other action included the UNDP Poverty Strategy Initiative, which by the end of 1998 was supporting 100 countries and had completed a third of its projects. National human development reports continued to provide an important means for Governments to combat poverty. By the end of 1998, some 114 countries had produced such reports. UNDP published the first issue of "Overcoming Human Poverty", an annual global report on progress in implementing the commitments to poverty eradication made at the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]. Capacity development continued to be the main thrust of all UNDP support. UNDP continued to fine-tune approaches and to seek new entry points for enabling programme countries to reduce aid dependency and to own and drive their national development strategies. UNDP training modules familiarized programme country partners with the latest thinking and methodological approaches to poverty reduction, while technical and economic cooperation among developing countries facilitated increased South-South sharing of capacities through the development and dissemination of 250 best practices in a number of areas.

As to the environment, UNDP continued to explore ways to integrate an environmental perspective into its programmes at all levels, from corporate policy to field-level projects and in core and non-core funded activities. By the end of 1998, about 50 countries had Capacity 21 (a fund to assist developing countries integrate the principles of Agenda 21 of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672]) programmes and 20 others were being assisted. Through the Global Environment Facility (GEF), UNDP helped over 138 countries to prepare national strategies to meet their commitments under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [ibid., p. 681] and the Convention on Biological Diversity [ibid., p. 683]. In 1998, the UNDP-GEF portfolio reached $756 million and included 260 projects covering every region of the developing world. Under the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686], UNDP was helping 65 countries to convert their industrial and agricultural processes to eliminate the use of ozone-depleting substances and reverse damage to the ozone layer. The programme comprised 905 projects with funded budgets of $234 million. In 1998, UNDP completed 75 conversion projects in 19 countries and 50 technical cooperation and capacity-building projects. It launched its capacity-building Strategic Initiative for Ocean and Coastal Management to mark the United Nations International Year of the Ocean, and continued to help several countries to implement the Action Plan of the World Food Summit [YUN 1996, p. 1129]. Through the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought (UNSO), UNDP assisted 49 countries to prepare their national action programmes to combat desertification and drought. It also made rapid progress in implementing the UNDP Initiative for Sustainable Energy. In June, it set up a task force to provide a strategic and unified approach to follow up the Kyoto Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1997, p. 1048] and produced two key research outputs on the clean development mechanism and limiting greenhouse gases.

UNDP supported countries in developing and implementing national action plans and promoted regional and subregional initiatives in follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1169]. It continued to focus on macro-policy and empowerment, and promoted understanding of gender issues in macro-economic planning and policy-making. UNDP tested methodologies for building capacity to mainstream gender equality in development activities. It launched a monthly publication, "Gender Beat", in 1998 as an instrument of information-sharing and learning.

National development priorities continued to be the key determinants of UNDP development cooperation, which remained country-driven.

Progress was being made through the country co-operation frameworks involving a wide range of partners. UNDP continued to promote national execution, wherever possible. In 1998, national execution accounted for over 70 per cent of total expenditures, compared with 40 per cent in 1995. The revised procedures, issued in March, delineated the roles, functions and responsibilities of different partners in improving the functioning of the modality.

UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board

In 1998, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board held three regular sessions (New York, 19-26 January, 20-24 April, 14-16 and 21-22 September) and an annual session (Geneva, 8-19 June) [E/1998/36].

At the first regular session, the Board adopted four decisions, including one that gave an overview of the action at that session [dec. 98/4]. The other decisions dealt with narrowing the focus of UNDP interventions, review of policy implications of change and non-core funding, and a UNDP funding strategy (see below).

At its second regular session, the Board adopted five decisions, one of which gave an overview of action taken at the session [dec. 98/9]. The others dealt with UNDP/UNFPA reports to the Economic and Social Council (see below), approval of recruitment of country representatives (see below), and UNFPA technical support services and a resource mobilization strategy for UNFPA (see PART THREE, Chapter VIII).

At the annual session, the Board adopted eight decisions, one of which gave an overview of the Board's action at that session [dec. 98/17]. The others dealt with the United Nations Volunteers programme (UNV), assistance to Myanmar, UNDP communication and information policy, and activities of UNOPS (see below). Three others concerned UNFPA.

The Board adopted eight decisions at its third regular session, one of which gave an overview of its action at that session [dec. 98/25]. Other decisions dealt with revisions to the UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules, successor programming arrangements, budget estimates for UNOPS for the 1998-1999 biennium and the UNDP funding strategy (see below). The three other decisions dealt with UNFPA.

UNDP/UNFPA reports to Economic and Social Council

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 24 April [dec. 98/5], took note of the annual reports of the UNDP Administrator and the UNFPA Executive Director to the Economic and Social Council

[E/1998/45]. The Board called on the Administrator and Executive Director to provide in future reports: an analysis of problems encountered and lessons learned in the field; a focus on issues that would permit the Council to fulfil its coordinating role; and relevant consolidated statistical data. They were invited to consult with other members of UNDG on issues central to the improved coordination of operational activities for consideration by the Council during its 1998 substantive session. The Board invited the Council to recommend actions to increase the usefulness of those reports as inputs to the Council's deliberations by considering whether any issues in the current format were suitable for joint recommendations by the funds and programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/27 [draft: E/1998/L.19] without vote [agenda item 3 (c)].

Reporting of the United Nations funds and programmes to the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 48/162 of 20 December 1993, 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and 52/203 of 18 December 1997 and Council resolutions 1994/33 of 28 July 1994 and 1995/51 of 28 July 1995 as regards annual reporting mandates for the operational activities segment of the substantive session of the Council,

Seeking to enhance the ability of the Council to fulfil its role in providing overall coordination and guidance for operational development programmes and funds on a system-wide basis,

Acknowledging the need for enhanced interaction between the Council and the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes,

Welcoming the submission by the executive heads of the United Nations Development Programme/United Nations Population Fund to the Council, on the invitation of their Executive Board, of a consolidated list of issues central to the improved coordination of operational activities,

Welcoming also the oral reports of the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes during the operational activities segment of the substantive session of the Council on, inter alia, the resident coordinator system, the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and the United Nations Development Group,

1. Requests the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes to ensure that the heads of these funds and programmes include in their annual reports to the Economic and Social Council, prepared in accordance with Council resolution 1994/33, a thorough analysis of problems encountered and lessons learned, with emphasis on issues arising from the implementation of the reform programmes of the Secretary-General, the triennial policy review and the follow-up to conferences so as to allow the Council to fulfil its coordinating role;

2. Also requests the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes, when considering the annual reports of the executive heads of the funds and programmes to the Council, to identify specific problems, opportunities and areas in which the Council could provide cross-sectoral coordination and overall guidance on a system-wide basis and to make appropriate proposals in line with its resolution 1995/51;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, when drawing up his annual report for the operational activities segment requested in Council resolution 1994/33, to take account of the annual reports of the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes, as well as of the comments of the respective executive boards on the annual reports, and to focus the report on the themes to be agreed upon by the General Assembly in the next triennial policy review for future discussion by the Council's working-level meetings of the operational activities segment of its substantive session;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to arrange for the submission by the executive heads of the United Nations funds and programmes, in consultation with the United Nations Development Group, to the Council at its annual substantive session, of a concise consolidated list of issues that are central to the improved coordination of operational activities and on which the funds and programmes seek consideration by and guidance from the Council, in particular in regard to the triennial policy review, and to include in the list recommendations whenever possible;

5. Also invites the Secretary-General to arrange for the United Nations Development Group to explore ways and means to enhance the consultation with the specialized agencies and the Secretariat in drawing up the consolidated list, as outlined in paragraph 4 above;

6. Notes that consecutive and/or joint meetings of the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes, bearing in mind their respective mandates, could provide a useful forum for board-level discussion of the issues arising from the reporting requirements mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 4 above.

UNDP operational activities

Country programmes by region

Africa

UNDP support for Africa in 1998, provided through its Regional Bureau for Africa, focused on several priority areas [DP/1999/15]. In sustainable human development, and as part of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa (see next chapter), UNDP held the second Africa Governance Forum in Ghana in June, focusing on accountability and transparency. As a result, 11 countries prepared national capacity-building programmes in the judiciary and public administration. UNDP completed guidelines for a civil service reform package for the World Bank's Special Programme for Africa, and responded to requests from the Central African Republic, Guinea, Mali, the Niger and Togo for electoral assistance, as well as to demands for its support in constitutional reviews or reforms, and civil service reform, including decentralization and anti-corruption work. It supported Chad, Mali and Senegal in drafting legislation for decentralization and for related capacity-building. Chad also requested UNDP to assist in drawing up a human rights and governance programme.

To assist African countries in shaping policy direction for sustainable human development, UNDP organized a series of workshops for the region and prepared policy papers to promote competitiveness, leading up to the Ministerial Forum on the Competitiveness of African Economies (Dakar, Senegal, March). That process was aimed at helping countries to find strategies to negotiate and compete in the global market place. UNDP aimed to support countries in preparing competitive assessment reports on exports and in developing policies and strategies to gain access to global markets, taking stock of openness to trade, tax structures, adequate infrastructure, transparency and accountability, as well as the protection of property rights. Recommendations included actions to remove policy impediments to investment. UNDP-sponsored national long-term perspective studies (NLTPS) were instruments for enabling African Governments to define their long-term development objectives, taking into account the views of national stakeholders, the globalization of the world economy and the role of domestic and foreign private-sector investment. The NLTPS team was attempting to link long-term forecasting, medium-term strategic planning and short-term economic management.

UNDP assisted African countries in developing poverty-reduction strategies. In partnership with UNICEF, it targeted its support to the preparation of social sector expenditure reviews, 24 of which had so far been completed. A high-level workshop was held (Burkina Faso, September) to prepare the African contribution to the Global 20/20 Initiative Workshop (Hanoi, Viet Nam, October).

National human development reports continued to provide a means for Governments to foster public debate on how to combat poverty. By the end of 1998, 32 countries in the region had completed such reports. The first regional human development report for the countries of the Southern African Development Community (SADC) was launched and a report for the Sahel region was started.

Some 30 projects under the Poverty Strategy Initiative were under implementation in 1998, largely in support of the design and validation of national anti-poverty strategies and programmes. Through the UNDP-supported round-table mechanism, countries raised funding for their anti-poverty strategies. Chad mobilized $1.13 billion in support of poverty eradication, governance and demining; Gambia mobilized $103 million for public expenditure programmes with a special focus on poverty eradication; and Mali mobilized $600 million to implement its poverty programmes. Demand for UNDP support to sustainable livelihoods also rose: the Africa 2000 Network—a programme providing small grants of up to $50,000 for women in villages—promoted sustainable livelihoods and protected the environment through training and communication exchange. By the end of 1998, over 700 projects were actively benefiting the poor in Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Ghana, Lesotho, Mauritania, Rwanda, Senegal, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe. The projects focused on soil conservation, food preservation, afforestation, agroforestry and income-generating activities. Similarly, UNDP support through Enterprise Africa expanded beyond activities in Ghana and Zimbabwe to Botswana, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Namibia and South Africa, with plans to eventually reach 20 countries. Forty per cent of the beneficiaries were women. At the regional level, the programme would create cross-border links in trade and investment, as well as technology transfer. The programme aimed to reach 5,000 entrepreneurs, help to create 200,000 new jobs, provide skills training for 60,000 workers, assist companies to achieve a 50 per cent increase in profitability and help to generate $1 billion in new investments.

In the case of poverty resulting from HIV/AIDS, UNDP extended support to the Alliance of Mayors and Community Leaders for advocacy work in HIV/AIDS. UN volunteers provided support to national AIDS control programmes in Malawi and Zambia.

To facilitate networking and Internet connectivity as a means of reducing poverty in Africa, UNDP focused on strengthening connectivity between a wide range of partners—government, the private sector, NGOs and academia and civil society—building on local expertise to provide public- and private-sector training at technical and management levels. By the end of 1998, Burkina Faso, Chad, Ethiopia, the Gambia, Mauritania, Namibia, Nigeria and Swaziland had Internet agreements with UNDP.

In environmental protection, UNDP launched the Zero Emission Research and Initiatives (ZERI) project, which was aimed at transforming waste materials into raw materials for other products, in three regions: Lake Victoria (Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania), Zambezi Ecosystems (Malawi, Mozambique, Zambia, Zimbabwe) and Western Africa (Benin, Cameroon, Cote d'Ivoire, Gambia, Ghana, Senegal). Examples of ZERI products included biogas energy from organic waste from the brewing industry and high protein edible and exportable mushrooms from cereal straw, sisal wastes, cotton wastes and the water hyacinth weed. UNDP also launched a programme for sustainable management of forest resources with Cameroon, Malawi and Uganda, researching and facilitating ways to give full valuation to forest resources. UNDP continued its work through UNSO, which assisted 23 African countries to prepare national action programmes to combat desertification and drought.

UNDP continued its support to raise public awareness of women's rights and to develop training schemes and legislation to improve the status of women. In partnership with SADC, it promoted gender equality and gender mainstreaming by bringing together government and NGO representatives from the region to work together to establish national policies and instruments to measure progress in reaching the stated goals. Among the entities that UNDP supported in 1998 were Women in Law and Development in Africa (for community-level networking), the Council for the Development of Social Science Research in Africa, Femmes Africa Solidarité and the Federation of African Women in Peace, concerned with conflict resolution and peace-building in Burundi, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Rwanda. UNDP was also active in the inter-agency public awareness campaign on violence against women in Africa.

UNDP increased its support to the growing number of African countries in special development situations in post-conflict peace-building, focusing on the reintegration of refugees, internally displaced persons and ex-combatants and on support to governance. In association with the Africa Leadership Forum and the Arias Foundation for Peace and Human Progress, UNDP organized a conference (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, July) to discuss the relationship between security, demilitarization and human development in Africa. UNDP and the African Centre for Development and Strategic Studies organized a workshop on the root causes of conflict, based on national case studies of Burundi, Liberia, Mali, Mozambique, Rwanda and Sierra Leone. It supported Governments in West Africa to implement a moratorium on the import, export and production of light weapons; Mali in the destruction of some 3,000 weapons in the context of the peace process in northern Mali; efforts to reduce the circulation of small arms in the Sahel region; and the removal of mines in Angola, Chad, Mozambique and Somalia. In Lesotho, UNDP organized a workshop on the role of the security forces in a democracy and coordinated donor assistance for the May parliamentary elections. It also provided logistical support for the SADC-led peace mediation talks and, in November, conducted jointly with the World Bank an independent assessment of damage to businesses, public buildings and property and made recommendations on a reconstruction and rehabilitation programme.

During 1998, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took action with regard to a number of programmes for African countries. In January [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/4)], the Board approved the implementation strategy for the first regional co-operation framework for Africa (1997-2001) [DP/1998/6], the first country cooperation frameworks (CCFs) for Cape Verde, Ghana and Mozambique, and the second extension of the sixth country programme for Kenya. In April [dec. 98/9], it approved CCFs for Cote d'Ivoire, the Gambia, Guinea, Mali, Rwanda and Togo, and agreed on the first extension of the fifth country programme for the Niger. In September [dec. 98/25], it approved CCFs for Burundi and Equatorial Guinea.

Arab States

UNDP, through its Regional Bureau for Arab States, worked with Governments to build a framework for more participatory and decentralized decision-making and to foster national dialogue and partnerships between Governments, civil society and the private sector. UNDP supported Yemen in consolidating the process of unification, reconciling the divergent administrative traditions and streamlining the machinery of the State. The programme was expected to lead to more results-oriented decision-making in the Parliament, the cabinet and local councils. In Egypt, UNDP assisted in decentralization plans, which included the establishment of business centres in all governorates to assist investors in business start-up and promotion. In Saudi Arabia, it supported the formulation of infrastructure plans for cities and for strengthening national capacity to address long-term urban development problems. It also supported the Government's efforts in the structural transformation and diversification of the Saudi economy and in strengthening policy analysis and economic forecasting capacity to promote privatization.

To formulate poverty-reduction strategies, UNDP facilitated the production of national human development reports in all countries as key policy and operational tools. UNDP organized the first regional launching of the global Human Development Report 1998. It also supported Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Morocco in implementing the 20/20 initiative. In Lebanon, UNDP provided support to the mapping of living conditions using an "unsatisfied basic needs" approach for the first time in the region. The results would be used in the elaboration of a national programme to improve living conditions, which UNDP would help to monitor. Mapping exercises were also under way in Morocco and the Syrian Arab Republic.

In collaboration with UNSO, UNDP assisted seven countries in the Arab States region to combat desertification and drought. Other efforts to protect the environment included assistance to preserve the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden. UNDP, jointly with the World Bank, launched a $19 million initiative, to be funded primarily by GEF, to help safeguard coastal and marine habitats in the subregion through the creation of protected areas, the regulation of marine navigation, sustainable fisheries management and the introduction of coastal-zone management systems. UNDP support focused on the sustainable use of living marine resources and on enabling community groups in the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden areas to benefit from the programme. In the Sudan, area development schemes in five of the country's poorest and most environmentally fragile areas helped to establish elected village development committees to manage a range of small-scale, grass-roots interventions in agriculture, animal husbandry and handicrafts.

UNDP supported the advancement of women through culturally sensitive strategic initiatives with special focus on women in poverty, economic empowerment of women and direct support to disadvantaged women. It also supported sustainable microcredit pilots and projects in Bahrain, Morocco and Yemen. UNDP facilitated a study on increasing women's participation in public and civic life and facilitating their access to leadership and decision-making positions. An advisory panel, consisting of Arab women holding leadership positions in government, parliaments, the media and the private sector, met to define the initiative's action plan.

Countries in special development situations included Somalia, where UNDP supported activities to move the country from crisis to development, including the reintegration of displaced persons and soldiers and rural rehabilitation. As part of its rural rehabilitation programme serving about 2 million people, UNDP provided microcredit to some 1,000 women/female-headed households to start small businesses. Mine-action efforts were under way in Iran, Somalia and Yemen. Under the UNDP Programme of Assistance to the Palestinian People, projects covered the clearing of some 250 hectares of Palestinian agricultural land, the completion of the 2.5 kilometre Al-Mahed (Church of the Nativity) Street in Bethlehem, the publication of the first critical analysis of the state of poverty in the occupied Palestinian territory, and the completion of an arts and crafts village in Gaza. Another project included the construction of passenger and cargo facilities at the Erez, Rafah and Kami crossing points, and work on the new Gaza International Airport. UNV was active in social development and capacity-building in local communities.

At the regional level, UNDP concluded an agreement with the League of Arab States for a programme for capacity-building in sustainable human development.

In January [dec. 98/4], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the implementation strategy for the first regional cooperation framework for the Arab States (1997-2001) [DP/1998/7 & Corr.1] and CCFs for Algeria and the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. In April [dec. 98/9], it approved a CCF for Bahrain.

Asia and the Pacific

In Asia and the Pacific, UNDP provided support for elections in Indonesia to be held in 1999, which included strengthening the capacities of electoral management bodies, developing a voter education programme and building capacities for independent national monitoring of the election process. In Malaysia, UNDP started a senior advisory service on corporate governance to provide short-term support to national programmes in South-East Asia attempting to reform corporate accountability and transparency structures and legislative frameworks. In the Republic of Korea, UNDP organized the first national workshop on sound governance in public and corporate sectors in collaboration with the Parliamentarians Network and the Citizens for Economic Freedom. In Thailand, the UNDP Regional Programme on Governance for Asia and the Pacific co-sponsored "Integrating in Governance in Asia", a regional meeting of parliamentarians, senior government officials, civil society leaders and other policy-makers involved in promoting transparency and accountability. The meeting resulted in an approach to fighting corruption at the country level, including capacity-strengthening of parliamentarians, the media, central and local governments, watchdog agencies, ombudsmen, judiciaries and civil society organizations. In Cambodia, UNDP provided technical cooperation, procurement and logistical support for the National Elections Committee for the elections held in July. It also established an open trust fund for voter education, counter-part training and equipment purchase.

To reduce poverty and increase sustainable livelihoods, UNDP promoted the use of national human development reports. In Asia and the Pacific, 24 countries produced such reports in 1998, compared with five in 1997. In China, UNDP worked at the policy, institutional and community levels in 48 counties to lift rural households out of poverty. Activities included group-supported microcredit schemes, improved farming techniques, rainwater harvesting and capacity-building. At the regional level, UNDP established a programme for the countries bordering the Tumen River, thereby linking China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Mongolia, the Republic of Korea and the Russian Federation and enabling them to act on economic co-operation initiatives to nurture trade and investment.

UNDP environmental activities in 1998 included work with UNSO to assist two countries in Asia to prepare their national action programmes to combat desertification and drought; facilitating the involvement of 70 industrial associations in the Philippines in environmental self-regulation, industrial ecology and environmental entrepreneurship; and the launching of an initiative to promote sustainable tourism. In the Pacific islands region, UNDP led innovative sustainable environmental initiatives, including a biodiversity strategy action plan in Fiji, leading to the establishment of a village biodiversity warden system; and preparation of national biodiversity action plans in Kiribati, the Marshall Islands and Micronesia, incorporating traditional knowledge, current resource use practices, and information on indigenous flora, fauna and ecosystems. Through the UNDP Small Enterprise Development Programme, waste material from garment factories was used to make high-quality paper. The GEF-supported South Pacific Biodiversity Conservation Programme established 17 conservation areas in 15 countries through joint action among local communities, NGOs and Governments.

In gender equality, UNDP built on pilot activities to ensure that national policies took into account unpaid work and used science and technology for gender equality, political empowerment and the implementation of the recommendations of the Committee for the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (see PART THREE, Chapter X).

Special development situations in the region included China, where UNDP responded to the 1998 flood disaster along the banks of the Yangtze River. In Bangladesh, in the country's worst-ever floods, UNDP acted as a link between the donor community and the NGO community. UNDP supported Indonesia's efforts to manage extensive land and forest fires and helped to produce a plan of action for fire-disaster management. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, which had suffered three consecutive years of adverse climatic conditions and a sharp decline in agricultural and industrial production during the 1990s, UNDP assisted the Government in organizing the first donor round-table conference for agricultural recovery and environmental protection. Through the Poverty Eradication and Community Empowerment Initiative in Afghanistan, UNDP assisted in rehabilitating 25 rural and urban war-affected districts. UNDP increased its support for mine-action efforts in Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Cambodia and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. In Cambodia, it organized an international forum on de-mining and victim assistance, with support from Japan, to discuss common issues relating to de-mining operations and the rehabilitation of mine victims. UNV helped in managing the de-mining programme and in training staff.

In January [dec. 98/4], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the implementation strategy for the first regional cooperation framework for Asia and the Pacific (1997-2001) [DP/1998/8] and CCFs for the Cook Islands, the Republic of Korea and Tokelau, and decided to consider at its annual session a proposal for future UNDP assistance to Myanmar [DP/1998/11].

In June, the Board considered a further report on assistance to Myanmar [DP/1998/21]. On 19 June [dec. 98/14], it noted that continued funding of existing project activities in Myanmar was estimated at $50 million for the period mid-1999 to the end of 2001, and authorized the Administrator to approve, on a project-by-project basis, Human Development Initiative-Extension project extensions up to $36.9 million from target for resource assignment from the core (TRAC) resources for the current resource planning period, and up to $13.1 million from TRAC resources for the next resource planning period. The Board also authorized the Administrator to mobilize, in consultation with other UN bodies concerned, non-core resources for a UN system-wide programme of assistance to northern Rakhine State. It requested the Administrator to continue to report annually on the implementation of project activities of the Human Development Initiative in Myanmar.

In September [dec. 98/25], the Board approved extension of the first CCF for Bangladesh.

Europe and CIS

In Europe and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), UNDP continued ongoing sustainable human development projects in Latvia, Poland, the Republic of Moldova and Uzbekistan, supporting the establishment of independent human rights institutions, and started new projects in Romania and Ukraine. UNDP supported the establishment and start-up work of the Ombudsman Office in Romania and initial measures for the establishment of an ombudsman institution in Kazakhstan. The fourth international ombudsman workshop was organized in Warsaw, Poland, in May 1998, in cooperation with the Office of Democratic Institutions and Human Rights. UNDP promoted commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 217 A (III) [YUN 1948-49, p. 535] (see PART TWO, Chapter I). Most country offices produced national reports on the human rights situation, which were fed into the regional conference on human rights (Yalta, Ukraine, September). The conference agreed on overall objectives, to be coordinated by UNDP, including exchanges on best practices in human rights between Governments, civil society and the private sector.

In poverty and sustainable livelihoods, UNDP, in response to the financial crisis in the Russian Federation, cooperated with the Center for International Development of Harvard University, United States, and the Economic Commission for Europe in bringing together policy makers, economists and researchers from around the world in December to discuss the effects of the crises in Russia and in transition economies, and to take into account experience in Asia and Latin America in dealing with such crises. The Europe and CIS region began work on analysing the impact at the national policy level of national human development reports. In Eastern Europe and CIS, a UNDP report entitled "Poverty in Transition" documented the sharp decline in living standards and welfare in the region. In Turkey, UNDP and other UN entities committed $210 million in grants and loans to promote investment, generate employment, increase opportunities for women and improve environmental, education, health, water and sanitation services in south-east Anatolia. Armenia, Bulgaria, Estonia, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, the Republic of Moldova and Ukraine carried out various types of surveys or assessments of poverty, and Romania and Uzbekistan launched pilot projects in poor areas.

Two key areas of UNDP support for environmental protection projects were in the Aral Sea basin and the Caspian region. In the former, UNDP, jointly with the World Bank and the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), promoted the sustainable use of land and water resources for the enhancement of the economic and social development of the Central Asian republics. UNDP support focused on developing institutional capacities and human resources. In the Caspian region, UNDP, jointly with UNEP and the World Bank, five riparian countries and the European Union (EU), helped to develop a comprehensive response to severe environmental problems facing the region, based on consultations with regional and international scientific and resource management communities, as well as with the private-sector oil and gas industry.

Among its responses to countries in special development situations, UNDP, in partnership with the EU and help from UNV, supported thousands of refugees and internally displaced persons in the Travnick municipality in Bosnia and Herzegovina by reconstructing homes and social infrastructure, providing small grants for economic support, giving legal advice, training and other support through local NGOs, thus enhancing national reconciliation, and supporting the national Village Employment and Environment Programme. With $1.4 million in core resources, UNDP mobilized $27 million of non-core funds from donors. In Albania, UNDP supported a pilot "disarmament with development" project in the Gramsh district. In Kazakhstan, it assessed the situation in Semipalatinsk, where, as a result of testing nuclear and chemical weapons, 2 million people were affected by cancers and mental disabilities (see next chapter). UNDP also assisted with mine-action efforts in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The UNDP Administrator, in a March note [DP/1998/22], responded to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board's request for information on implementation of the human rights component of the first CCF for Belarus approved in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 868]. The Administrator said that Belarus was currently at a critical juncture in its transition from a centralized form of government to a decentralized, democratic society, and there was little understanding of the new role that civil society and the mass media were expected to play in that endeavour. UNDP, jointly with the Government, NGOs, other UN agencies and donors, formulated several projects to promote democracy by strengthening civil society institutions and enhancing popular participation. The human rights component of the CCF was included under the thematic area of governance. In that context, the Government requested that UNDP and the United Nations Centre for Human Rights assist in establishing a human rights institution to apply international human rights standards in the country, through Parliament, government agencies and civil society. It was hoped that by the end of the period for the first CCF (1999), the role of civil society in Belarus would be more clearly defined. In 1997, a project proposal on human rights activities in Belarus was formulated and funding sought. In addition, a project to strengthen the national information and communication infrastructure in Belarus through the Internet aimed at connecting 200 NGOs, in order to promote an open society and participatory development. Training and assistance in creating web sites were also provided through the project. In 1998, UNDP and the Government signed project documents for support to the mass media in training in the role of free media in a democratic society, and for the first fully NGO-executed project to increase the level of HIV/AIDS awareness. A centre for UN studies, devoted primarily to the promotion of human rights issues, was being established within the Belarusian State University.

Latin America and Caribbean

In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNDP's work in sustainable human development focused on strengthening the judicial system, including public security and the penitentiary sector, and improving public access to justice services, resulting in the establishment of a network of organizations and experts to monitor elements of the justice sectors in various countries. It also assisted Governments in reforming their justice systems and organized several regional conferences and training seminars. In Guatemala, UNDP strengthened the public defence service and advanced reforms under the peace accords [YUN 1996, p. 168]. In Haiti, UNDP provided technical cooperation for the institutional development of the Haitian National Police in coordination with American, Canadian and French programmes, while in Colombia it supported implementation of the peace agenda of the newly elected Government, in particular in ensuring the resettlement of internally displaced populations.

Working with the High-level Commission of Eminent Persons, UNDP helped to prepare, in consultation with the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Bank, an overview of the state of education in the region, as the UN contribution to the debate on education at the Second Summit of the Americas in April (see p. 211). The overview shaped national policy debate in several countries. UNDP supported the Círculo de Montevideo forum of key world leaders, which provided recommendations on social investment and governance and the relationship between political parties and civil society. UNDP supported fiscal reform in Brazil and Guatemala, in partnership with Governments and multilateral and bilateral donors. In Brazil, with IDB financing, UNDP worked with the National Fiscal Administration Programme to improve the management of public funds. In Guatemala, UNDP, in partnership with the World Bank and bilateral donors, was instrumental in meeting the goals set out in the peace accords, including support in establishing the new tax collection agency and in the reordering of priorities and decentralization of the Government's budget.

Among projects aimed at poverty reduction, UNDP promoted joint research by government, civil society, academia and the private sector to produce eight new national human development reports, as well as subregional reports for Central America, the Andean region and the Common Market of the Southern Cone (Mercosur). Those reports were used not only for policy-making by Governments but also for investment decisions by private companies. A comparative study of the effects of macroeconomic policy on poverty in 15 countries, sponsored by UNDP, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and IDB, was published.

Environmental concerns were addressed in a UNDP programme for sustainable management of forest resources in Costa Rica and Guyana. In cooperation with UNSO, UNDP assisted 12 countries in Latin America and the Caribbean to prepare national action programmes to combat desertification and drought.

Violence against women was a particular problem in Latin America and the Caribbean, in part owing to inadequate legislation and law enforcement. In January, UNDP and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) launched a programme covering over 20 countries to combat violence through nationwide public education campaigns using conventional media and the Internet. The campaign resulted in new legislation in Ecuador and Venezuela, and in Haiti in an invitation to the United Nations Inter-Agency Committee for Women and Development to join it in revising existing laws on women's rights. In Ecuador, the subject was introduced into the curriculum of the law faculties of several universities. UNDP country offices in Jamaica and Venezuela received awards from local governments and NGOs for their work in the programme. UNDP collaborated with UNIFEM, UNICEF and other UN partners to act as a catalyst with key partners to eliminate violence against women, resulting in the development of a protocol for cooperation between women's crisis centres and the police in the Caribbean, and the "Intra-Family Pact of Non-Violence" in Brazil.

UNDP responded to the special development needs of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua after hurricane Mitch (see next chapter). Decentralization enabled resident coordinators to channel funds rapidly for emergency response activities to support the coordinated relief efforts, including communications and logistical operations. UNDP support in the affected areas in Honduras and Nicaragua was redirected to relief and rehabilitation. Over $12 million in available resources was channelled through the UN system during the first few weeks after the disaster. UNDP also acted as the clearing house for information on the crisis for donors and the UN system. UNDP mobilized over $28 million for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction. UNV was active in all four countries.

In January [dec. 98/4], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the implementation strategy for the first regional cooperation framework for Latin America and the Caribbean (1997-1999) [DP/1998/10]. In April [dec. 98/9], the Board approved CCFs for Bolivia and the Turks and Caicos Islands, the second extension of the third country programme for Antigua and Barbuda and the second extension of the fifth country programme for Haiti. In September [dec. 98/25], it approved CCFs for Costa Rica and Paraguay, the second extension of the third country programme for the Cayman Islands and the extension of the fifth country programme for Ecuador.

Global and regional programmes

UNDP commissioned, in 1998 [DP/1999/15], a team of independent consultants to undertake an assessment of activities under the global cooperation framework, approved by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 870]. The global programme activities were covered by the global, interregional and special activities of the UNDP budget. The consultants reported that they had not had sufficient time to assess results from UNDP clients and stakeholders.

Global and regional programmes continued to facilitate the exchange of best practices. In 1998, the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, there was increased linkage between the concept of the right to development and good governance. Working with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, UNDP explored the rights-based approach at both the policy and operational levels. Results included: a global programme in support of national human rights institutions (e.g., establishing ombudsmen and human rights commissions); training on human rights, capacity development and UNDP assistance bringing together country office staff and representatives of government and civil society; stimulating dialogue on human rights policy and follow-up to UN conferences; and specific projects at the country level, ranging from support to the rule of law to political participation and to human rights education campaigns.

At the global, regional and country levels, UNDP played a catalytic role in bringing together the different partners to shape the policy direction for sustainable human development. UNDP instruments such as the human development reports—global, regional and national—were important in that regard, influencing policy decision-making and provoking public debates. UNDP also facilitated forums for high-level, broad-based policy discussions to address development challenges in the different regions of the world. For instance, in Asia and the Pacific, UNDP co-hosted the Regional Millennium Meeting with the Republic of Korea, bringing together 150 government and non-government participants from 30 countries. The Meeting resulted in increased understanding of the issues inherent in sustainable and equitable development in a globalizing world.

In regard to poverty reduction, UNDP, jointly with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, UNDG and the World Bank, formulated the first Statement of Commitment of Action to Eradicate Poverty by ACC (see previous chapter). UNDP also published the first issue of "Overcoming Human Poverty", an annual global report on the progress of programme countries and UNDP in implementing the commitments to poverty eradication made at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113].

In line with Agenda 21, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672], UNDP sought to integrate an environmental perspective into its programmes. At a meeting with donors and other partners in the United Kingdom in November, it was recommended that Capacity 21 should concentrate on: strengthening its international network of collaborating institutions and individuals; further mainstreaming its work into UNDP programmes; and completion of ongoing programmes and support to selected countries with urgent need of assistance in the development of national strategies for sustainable development.

Gender equality remained an integral part of UNDP activities. UNDP participated in the sub-working group of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC), addressing the mainstreaming of gender in the humanitarian response to emergencies, developing an IASC statement and training materials on gender and humanitarian assistance and monitoring the implementation of gender equality in the staffing of IASC member organizations.

Programme planning and management

Reform measures

In an oral report to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in June, the Administrator described developments in the ongoing reform of the UN system. He said that the UNDAF mechanism was being pilot-tested in 18 countries. He detailed a number of changes in the resident coordinator system designed to make it more responsive and to instil a sense of ownership among all the participating agencies and organizations. On the establishment of common premises for UN agencies, he had proposed to the Secretary-General 16 countries where that might be achieved. He pointed out that moves to common premises would not always result in savings.

Within the UN system, UNDP strengthened its support to the Secretary-General's reform agenda and continued to play a pro-active role as the UN operational arm in cooperating with countries through resident coordinators who represented not only UNDP but also other UN agencies not present in those countries. UNDP further strengthened the resident coordinator system, and its role as funder and manager of the system was confirmed by the General Assembly in resolution 53/192 (see above). Progress was made in forging new and strengthening existing strategic partnerships, notably within the United Nations, the World Bank and the European Commission.

In June, the Associate Administrator presented to the Board a document on the transfer of responsibility for operational activities for natural disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness from the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) to UNDP

[DP/1998/181. The Disaster Management Training Programme was transferred to UNDP effective 1 March, and the functions of the Disaster Mitigation Branch were assumed by UNDP on 1 April. The new UNDP Disaster Management Programme, to be located in Geneva, would undertake the protection of development gains by helping to build national capacity for disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness (see next chapter), while OCHA would continue to be responsible for disaster response.

In line with its reform package, UNDP 2001, the Programme focused on becoming more dynamic and results-oriented, capable of responding swiftly to a diverse range of programme country development priorities and ensuring quality service delivery. In order to define objectives and promote a culture of accountability, the Administrator signed compacts with each of his senior managers, providing a management framework for monitoring key results against objectives. In that context, UNDP strengthened its organizational capacity through human resource development and through decentralization and efficiency measures.

Gender equality remained a top priority. Between 1995 and 1998, UNDP tripled the number of female Assistant Administrators, exceeded the 20 per cent target for women at the D-2 level and increased the number of women resident representatives from 14 to 26. In 1998, 22 per cent of all resident representatives and 31 per cent of all deputy resident representatives were women. One third of senior managers at headquarters were women. The new competency assessment for selecting resident coordinators was finalized in 1998, setting in place a new methodology for recruitment for senior management posts. The first resident coordinator competency assessment programmes were conducted at the United Nations Staff College in Turin, Italy, in November 1998 for 40 participants, 23 from UNDP. The national staff career-management policy, developed and launched in 1998, was designed to enhance the professional capabilities and career horizons of national staff. In July, a new staff learning programme was approved.

The culture of participatory decision-making, in which headquarters and country offices examined issues for policy-setting and prioritization of the work, became the institutional norm. UNDP initiated a control self-assessment programme in 1998, focusing on accountability, delegation and internal controls and risk assessments. In the case of countries in special development situations, measures were put in place to ensure rapid deployment of staff in emergencies. Country-level capacity to undertake programme and management audits was increased.

Further decentralization was reviewed in the context of the UNDP 2000-2001 budget strategy. UNDP strengthened its networking system through the subregional resource facilities (SURFs) system to backstop country offices in technical areas, as well as in strategic policy, programme formulation, implementation and monitoring. To facilitate resident representatives' efforts to mobilize non-core resources, authority to sign cost-sharing agreements with Governments was given to the country offices in October. The need for headquarters approval for all trust fund disbursements was maintained. Guidelines decentralizing the authority for private sector collaboration were also formulated. The management of contracts for short-term activities was also delegated to most country offices.

The Administrator said that UNDP needed to continue to reform, playing a role in furthering the reform agenda of the United Nations and adjusting to the changing external environment, in order to strengthen its effectiveness and efficiency. Increasing demand for UNDP services in governance and in countries in special development situations would require greater flexibility. A more substantive country office network would enable UNDP to have more impact at the country level. Full accountability would be vital. In addition, UNDP had to absorb and disseminate the lessons learned from its worldwide experience.

Change management: UNDP 2001

In January, the UNDP Administrator gave an oral progress report to the Executive Board on the status of the implementation of UNDP 2001 [E/1998/36], a change management process aimed at recasting the Programme's priorities and improving efficiency [YUN 1997, p. 871]. His presentation concentrated on three areas: strengthening country offices; working on efficiency and process re-engineering; and transforming UNDP into a learning organization. He explained that the new corporate structure brought together planning and all resource management into one bureau. The authority to recruit medium- and longer-term consultants at the country level was decentralized to country offices. The Operations Support Group helped in coordinating the work of the regional bureaux and expedited work on the revision of guidelines on national execution. Also, a new simplified programming manual was due to be released shortly on CD-ROM. Arising out of a senior management retreat on the responsibilities of units for implementation and supporting country offices, compacts, with clearly defined success indicators and benchmarks to identify critical initiatives for which managers would be held responsible, would become the basis of the new UNDP corporate plan. The compacts were implemented by senior managers, according to the Administrator in his annual report for 1998 [DP/1999/15]. Management indicators were also designed to help measure country office efficiency and performance. Some 17 management reform projects were launched, 8 of which were completed. They contributed to the change process by: developing management and programme tools aimed at the delegation of greater authority to country offices; developing new strategies, methodologies, quality control and monitoring mechanisms to improve the effectiveness and impact of programmes; and building structure to improve efficiency, accountability and management.

Streamlining and simplification of procedures reduced volume, aligned financial procedures with UNDP rules and its new managerial accountability framework, translated new policies into operational procedures and ensured coherence between UNDP manuals. The programming manual and the finance manual were being finalized, and revised procedures were issued in the case of national execution. UNDP planned to undertake in 1999 a full assessment of the change process to analyse the overall outcomes of the change initiatives in relation to the goals of UNDP 2001.

In a further oral report in April, the Administrator said that the compacts formed the basis of the 1998 Strategic Plan, which established priorities and enabled monitoring of progress in achieving the UNDP mandate and the use of resources. Results of UNDP 2001 included the completion of work on country office management indicators, with a system to be operational by June. Management indicators for headquarters would be produced by September and work on selected programme performance indicators in poverty and governance was initiated. The UNDP Resource Guide on Change Management was distributed to country offices, and systems to support decentralization were refined, particularly in human and financial resources management. The Administrator said that he was accorded high priority to developing a competency-based human resource strategy, and the first comprehensive national staff management policy would be implemented in May. A roster of emergency personnel was established to respond better to the needs of programme countries in times of crisis.

UNDP, in the context of UNDP 2001, provided the Executive Board with an update on progress in establishing SURFs and other change initiatives. SURFs were discussed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) as part of the UNDP 1998-1999 biennial budget, presented to the Executive Board in 1997. For the first phase, 14 headquarters posts were identified to staff the SURFs, as part of the decision to shift a significant proportion of staff and resources from headquarters to the country offices. However, it was too early to assess the gains emanating from SURFs since the actual commencement of activities had only begun in August 1997.

Other change initiatives included measures to increase country office effectiveness, including: a comprehensive review of national staff policy; giving country offices authority for short-term recruitment and flexibility in managing financial resources; and strengthening accountability through the launching in January of the first phase of the Control Risk Self-Assessment Programme. In resource mobilization, simplified and decentralized agreements were being produced and a cost-sharing agreement drafted in consultation with donor representatives. Support for UN reform included assistance in reconstructing and strengthening the UNDG Office, collaboration in piloting UNDAF in 18 countries and establishing UN houses in selected countries and contributing to the study of common services and premises.

The Administrator concluded that since the launch of implementation of UNDP 2001, there was good reason for optimism on the expected outcome of the process. At the same time, there were internal and external difficulties, such as implementation of SURFs, streamlining programme manuals and mobilizing resources to implement the change initiatives expeditiously. Donor support to help implement UNDP 2001 would be a critical factor.

Evaluation

The Administrator, in his annual report on evaluation in UNDP for 1997 [DP/1998/19], described the activities of the Evaluation Office (formerly the Office of Evaluation and Strategic Planning). The year 1997 was one of consolidation and transition, in which the Office concentrated on developing results-based monitoring and evaluation policies, methodologies and tools to help country offices improve and document their performance, systematically learn lessons from the 1996 evaluations and assess the progress made in terms of substantive accountability. The main achievements in that area were: a joint study with the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency on performance measurement and management; and a user-friendly handbook on monitoring and evaluation for country offices. They served as building blocks in the establishment of a results-based management system in UNDP. The Office also undertook evaluations of governance issues at the regional level to compare experiences across countries and draw lessons to feed into organizational learning. According to the report, UNDP needed to demonstrate results in the key sustainable human development (SHD) areas as an organization and at the country level.

Narrowing the focus of UNDP interventions

At its January session, the Executive Board considered a report on narrowing the focus of UNDP [DP/1998/5], in which the Administrator sought the Board's guidance on an operational framework and a set of principles to guide the organization in focusing its interventions on areas where it could have optimal impact in improving the lives of the world's poorest people. The report identified corporate priorities within the broad SHD framework and defined core services where UNDP could have maximum impact in providing support to programme countries in their efforts to eradicate poverty.

UNDP was narrowing its focus so that it could help developing countries accelerate efforts to reduce poverty; mobilize financial resources to meet their poverty eradication targets; establish and maintain a clear substantive and operational identity vis-a-vis other providers of development services; ensure a clear division of labour with those partners to have a mutually reinforcing and multiplier impact; maximize its programme impact through the most appropriate methodology in synergy with country-specific approaches; and invest its resources in high-leverage, high-impact, catalytic activities.

UNDP proposed eight guiding principles to ensure predictability and help it to narrow its focus: build programme country capacity for SHD, especially poverty eradication, and ensure national ownership of development goals, strategies, policies and programmes; promote participation, dialogue and choice in decision-making; build on UNDP comparative advantages while complementing the work of other providers of development services; support aid coordination; support the mobilization of additional resources for development; use the programme approach to the maximum extent possible; build on lessons learned and on best practices; and ensure that the programme design was results-oriented and allowed for impact measurement and evaluation. The core development services, which would be reviewed periodically, were: establishment of an enabling environment for SHD; poverty eradication; employment and sustainable livelihoods; gender equality and the advancement of women; and environmental management.

On 23 January [dec. 98/1], the Executive Board reaffirmed that assistance to programme countries in their endeavour to realize SHD should remain the highest UNDP priority and be responsive and flexible. It requested UNDP to develop its expertise in providing capacity development assistance to programme countries, and underlined that a clear profile of UNDP's role at the country and global levels would facilitate resource mobilization. Recognizing UNDP's effort to identify an indicative list of core development services, the Board requested UNDP to cooperate with all actors in development cooperation, in particular the UN funds, programmes and specialized agencies, to foster synergies, avoid duplication and make optimal use of resources. It endorsed the guiding principles, which it decided should be applied to all country, regional and global cooperation frameworks, taking into account the specific conditions of programme countries, whether funded from core or non-core resources. The Board requested the Administrator to operationalize the guiding principles, including a mechanism for implementation, impact measurement and evaluation, and to incorporate them into the new UNDP programming manual; ensure that all future presentations to the Board on frameworks, beginning in 1999, as well as reviews and evaluations of those frameworks, clearly described how the principles were applied; and report in 2000 on progress in the operationalization of the guiding principles, including the mechanism for implementation, impact measurement and evaluation.

The Executive Board also considered a review of UNDP experience with the round-table mechanism, which was designed to complement reports on resources and on narrowing of the UNDP focus. The review provided a preliminary stock-taking of the application of the mechanism over the past 25 years and gave an overview of work in progress with regard to defining a corporate strategy for that operational management tool for the future. Also presented were options for programme countries to apply the mechanism to help them achieve their goals of poverty eradication and SHD.

The Board, on 19 June [dec. 98/17], took note of the report on the round-table mechanism.

Communication and information policy

The Administrator, in a March report on UNDP communication, advocacy and information policy [DP/1998/23], outlined advances made in implementing the corporate communication and advocacy strategy, endorsed by the Executive Board in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 769] and 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 874]. The report emphasized UNDP outreach targeted to constituencies, especially the media, parliamentarians and NGOs. It also noted the information role of the liaison and country offices. The main thrust of the core message to media and key development partners was that poverty eradication was achievable through the promotion of sustainable livelihoods, advancement of women, protection of the environment and support for good governance.

During the reporting period, UNDP expanded its web site through the posting of its news bulletins UNDP Flash! and El Niilo, as well as media advisories, press releases and statements by the Administrator in English, French and Spanish. The Internet had enhanced tracking of the media's use of public information products and their coverage of UNDP-sponsored events. To continue expanding UNDP visibility, regular contacts were made with permanent missions of Member States in New York, and in programme countries resident representatives were continuing to engage donors in dialogue. The Administrator and senior managers were also visiting donor and developing country capitals. More staff time in programme countries was devoted to information and advocacy work.

UNDP increased coverage of the organization's focus areas (poverty reduction, women, jobs, environment and governance) through distribution of public service announcements, the appearance of UNDP experts on radio and television shows, and the production of Azimuths, a television magazine show. A task force of the Publications Board, established to review current publications, designed a comprehensive publications policy to improve the overall quality and consistency of UNDP publications. The weekly newsletter UNDP Flash! was published in five official UN languages and distributed in hard copy, on-line and by fax. The human development magazine Choices was distributed to NGOs, academicians, the media and government officials. The Human Development Report, an important advocacy tool for the organization, appeared in 10 languages. To respond to the need for clearer and more strategic messages, UNDP introduced a new style for the illustrated annual report, focusing on key themes and specific success stories. At the country level, UNDP offices issued newsletters and brochures on their activities in individual countries to help raise UNDP's profile among donors and local constituencies. Publications were increasingly linked to fund-raising efforts.

Building constituencies through organized events, frequently in collaboration with partners, was another advocacy tool, and was aimed at NGOs, academics, trade unions, religious groups, intergovernmental organizations, civic leaders and grass-roots organizations.

Programmes increasingly incorporated advocacy and communication from the start, with a budget line assigned to information in each project. A growing number of offices were benefiting from the synergies evolving from integration of UN information centres (UNICs) and the office of the resident coordinator. UNDP also provided information on its role in development through its liaison offices in donor capitals. Those offices (in Copenhagen, Brussels, Geneva, Tokyo and Washington, D.C.) built ties with parliamentarians, government officials, development agencies, NGOs, academia and the business sector, and they worked closely with UNICs.

UNDP intended to continue joining forces with development partners to increase advocacy for anti-poverty measures. As part of the process to strengthen UNDP/donor country cooperation, it planned to systematize the development of country booklets on programme co-financing, boost co-productions of the Azimuths television magazine, increase co-sponsorship of media trips and regularize exchange of information on success stories. Negotiations with programme partners were also under way to bolster their role in advocating for development in general and UNDP in particular, especially in donor countries. UNDP would extend its work with parliamentarians and planned to build routinely into the schedules of parliamentarians visits to projects and programme sites to allow them to witness first-hand the difference that UNDP was making. Deployment of eminent public personalities to highlight the role of UNDP in the worldwide crusade against poverty would be expanded; the first Goodwill Ambassador was officially appointed in March. UNDP aimed to distribute publications in multiple languages. A campaign was under way to ensure the systematic earmarking of resources for communication and advocacy in the budgets of all programmes, projects and special funds at all levels, and in-kind information contributions were sought from donors, government counterparts, NGOs and other stakeholders.

On 19 June [dec. 98/15], the Executive Board welcomed the progress that had taken place since 1995 in creating better visibility and awareness for UNDP and the UN system among various target audiences. It encouraged the Administrator to emphasize the results in the UNDP communication policy, as well as the linkage between communication and advocacy and resource mobilization.

It supported his efforts to promote the visibility of UNDP to expand public awareness of the organization's contribution to SHD, bearing in mind that communication strategies should be tailored to fit different target audiences. The Board invited the Administrator to outline in 1999 the key areas that would respond to communication needs, bearing in mind the Board's 1997 decision on communication and comments made by delegations at the 1998 annual session. The Administrator should also present a plan of action to implement the key areas, including its budgetary implications.

Policy implications of change and non-core funding

The Administrator, in response to a 1997 Executive Board request [YUN 1997, p. 872], reviewed policy implications of change and non-core funding [DP/1998/3]. The report sought to define UNDP's role through change and examined the diversification of funding, national execution and implementation, and non-core management and costs. It represented a policy framework for activities funded by non-core resources (earmarked resources).

The Administrator pointed out that UNDP had moved beyond simply funding and coordinating technical assistance to being a full development cooperation partner. It had maintained its global network, supported effective advocacy and sponsored programmes that gave expression to its new substantive identity. Innovation and change were spearheaded by country offices developing workable approaches to resource mobilization and national execution through strong partnerships. UNDP 2001 (see above) addressed the remaining limitations or gaps in UNDP policies and procedures that inhibited effective and high-quality impact in its activities.

Concerning the diversification of funding, the Administrator noted that, while UNDP core resources declined from $1,078 million in 1992 to $848 million in 1996, non-core resources during the same period increased from $378 million to $1,295 million and were expected to reach $1,500 million for 1997. In 1996, 38 per cent of non-core resources were provided by traditional donors and 62 per cent by programme country Governments. The growth in non-core resources was demand-driven and, while every effort should be made to stabilize and reverse declining core contributions, the current trend in non-core contributions presented a new challenge, which demanded new thinking from UNDP and its partners. The thrust of UNDP 2001 was precisely to deal with the implications of that new reality. The Administrator stressed that all measures would be taken to ensure that resources programmed by UNDP, core and non-core, would be programmed within the SHD frameworks and CCFs approved by the Board. However, maintaining the multilateral character of UNDP and the integrity of the intergovernmental process was a special challenge in the light of the growth of non-core resources.

In terms of non-core management and costs, the Administrator stated that overall non-core activities were managed as an integral part of UNDP activities and the organization was currently developing new integrated financial information systems covering core and non-core resources. The management of cost-sharing activities was being fully decentralized to the country level and fell increasingly under the management of the resident representative. Trust funds were managed by the designated trust fund managers, who could be resident representatives or headquarters staff. UNDP prepared separate financial and substantive reports to co-financing partners. The Administrator was developing approaches relating to liquidity and risk management specific to non-core activities. He believed that satisfactory arrangements were in place to ensure that, at the aggregate level, UNDP was reimbursed for costs associated with providing support to non-core activities. He intended to encourage country offices to increase fees charged for those projects that required additional support.

The Executive Board, on 23 January [dec. 98/2], recalling that core resources were the bedrock of UNDP funding, expressed concern over their decline and requested that the proportions of core and non-core resources be kept under review. The Board recognized the importance of non-core resources, including cost-sharing and non-traditional sources of financing, as a mechanism to enhance and supplement UNDP's means of achieving its goals and priorities. It reaffirmed UNDP's role at the country level in providing support services for national execution and implementation of its projects, including those funded by non-core resources, and established the parameters within which that should take place.

The Board requested that when UNDP developed, implemented and managed activities funded by non-core resources, the additional costs be recovered, and requested that those activities and their support costs be identified in the cooperation frameworks. It requested the Administrator to submit in 2001 an evaluation on all aspects of activities funded by non-core resources, including government cost-sharing, and on their impact on national capacities, particularly the modalities applied by UNDP. It decided to keep the trends and impact of non-core resources under review and, to that end, requested the Administrator to provide information on their amount, origin, destination and influence on programming.

Funding strategy

In 1998, UNDP and the Executive Board worked to reverse the downward trend in contributions for UNDP core (non-earmarked) resources. The Board, on 23 January [dec. 98/3], reaffirmed that core resources ensured UNDP's universality, predictability, neutrality and multilateralism. It noted that core resources fell short of the planning figure set in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895]; core funding remained dependent on a limited number of donors; to manage the funding shortfall, the Administrator had extended the implementation phase of some country programmes; and further delays might affect programme results and the credibility of UNDP as a reliable development partner. The Board recognized that it needed to take urgent action to deal with the funding situation in the short and longer terms; that a clearer profile of UNDP's role at all levels was needed; and that it needed to set specific and realistic targets for core resources and decide on a future funding mechanism to make UNDP funding more secure and predictable. In addition, the Board recognized that results of efforts to narrow the focus of UNDP activities would play an important role in mobilizing core resources in the future. It requested the Administrator to present in April a three-year financial forecast outlining UNDP financial commitments as at 31 December 1997, and to ensure that financial implications of all future programming, administrative and policy recommendations were presented to the Board prior to their adoption.

In the short term, the Board urged member countries to contribute additional funds to UNDP core resources, and asked the Administrator to ensure that administrative costs would be maintained at levels agreed to in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 879], and that all additional contributions to core resources would be used exclusively to implement UNDP development activities.

The Board decided to convene an open-ended, ad hoc working group on the UNDP funding strategy to review funding mechanisms and other options so as to place UNDP funding on a predictable, assured and continuous basis, taking into account various budgetary processes in contributing countries, as well as the need for more equitable burden-sharing among donor countries; and to develop guidelines and criteria for setting funding targets for UNDP core resources based on: UNDP priorities set in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895];

the development needs of programme countries as identified in CCFs; projected contributions; the UNDP funding role within the larger context of international development financing; and existing long-term commitments and strategies.

The Board acknowledged the relevance of its forthcoming discussions on successor programming arrangements, including the review of the eligibility criteria for the allocation of core resources to programme countries, and the need for a clear institutional profile to increase public awareness and generate support, and to develop an effective communication and information strategy to be used in UNDP advocacy work. It requested the Administrator to ensure close coordination with similar efforts by other UN funds and programmes during the work of the working group to ensure consistency in approaches and mechanisms. The President of the Executive Board was asked to report on the progress achieved by the working group at each upcoming session with a view to adopting a decision on a sustainable funding strategy at its September session.

In response to the Board's request, UNDP submitted to the April session the three-year forecast outlining the financial commitments as at 31 December 1997 entered into by UNDP. UNDP stated that the level of core resources, originally envisaged during the three-year planning period (1997-1999) at $3.3 billion, was estimated to be $2.3 billion, or 30 per cent less halfway through the planning period. The annual level of voluntary core contributions had declined to an estimated low of about $761 million in 1997, and current projections indicated a further decline to some $740 million in 1998 and about $750 million in 1999. Consequently, from 2000, UNDP would be able to sustain annual programme expenditures of no more than $450 million. If resources were made available to fund the $318 million programme pipeline (i.e., annual contributions of about $900 million for both 1998 and 1999), then UNDP could achieve programme expenditures in excess of $700 million in each of those years, at, or near, 1992-1993 levels. However, to sustain annual programme expenditures of $700 million from 2000 onward, voluntary contributions would have to increase to a level of $1 billion per year, to compensate for the depleted balance of liquid core resources. The need for a critical mass of core programme funding in UNDP, the report said, should be considered not only in that context, but also from a perspective that looked at core and non-core resources combined. However, non-core programmes were, in principle, fully funded; hence, their financing was secured from the outset and not subject to the uncertainties that affected resource planning for the core programmes.

The Executive Board, on 24 April [dec. 98/9], took note of the report on the three-year financial forecast.

At the Board's September session, the Chairman of the open-ended, ad hoc working group on the funding strategy for UNDP reported that the group had held 13 meetings at which it addressed current and historical perspectives on UNDP funding, determination of requirements, hedging practices, criteria for setting core funding targets, the UNDP profile and burden-sharing. There was agreement that core contributions should remain voluntary, that the funding strategy needed to incorporate not only matters of predictability but also of volume, and measures proposed should not alter the fundamental nature of UNDP operations or introduce conditionality. However, matters such as burden-sharing, the relationship between programme objectives, outcomes and resource mobilization and how to attain a core resources funding target remained to be discussed.

The Board, on 23 September [dec. 98/23], stressed the need for a funding strategy, based on collective ownership, partnership and shared interests with differentiated responsibilities, to strengthen UNDP support for the development needs of programme countries, particularly least developed countries (LDCs). The Board also recognized that overdependence on a limited number of donors carried risk for the long-term financial sustainability of UNDP and urged all donors and programme countries in a position to do so to increase their contributions to core resources.

The Board adopted an annual funding target of $1.1 billion. Stressing the need to achieve annual increases in the mobilization of core resources until the target was met, the Board decided that UNDP should develop a multi-year funding framework (MYFF) that integrated programme objectives, resources, budget and outcomes, with the aim of increasing core resources, taking into account the following principles: the framework should maintain the UNDP priorities and mandate as determined by the Board and not introduce any conditionality or result in distortions of priorities or changes in the system of resource allocation; and the allocation of additional core resources that might be mobilized by MYFF should be consistent with programming guidelines determined by the Board and priority should be given to programmes. The Board designated its second regular session, starting in 1999, as the time when all member countries would: announce their voluntary core contributions to UNDP for the current year and each of the following two years, including a firm funding commitment for the current year; announce payment schedules for the current year; and review the record of actual core contributions and government contributions to local office costs payments, as well as the timing of payments made in the previous year. The Board decided to initiate a participative, transparent, open-ended consultative process between the secretariat and States members for designing an MYFF, based on the principles outlined above and on the modalities for the announcement of contributions. It requested the Administrator, on the basis of those consultations, to submit a report on MYFF at the Board's first regular session in 1999.

Successor programming arrangements

In response to the Executive Board's 1995 request [YUN 1995, p. 896], UNDP submitted a July report on the review of the successor programming arrangements [DP/1998/34], adopted by the Board in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895]. The review examined the principles for the programming cycle, mobilization of resources, programming arrangements and financial mechanisms, the financial framework and the TRAC-1 resource distribution methodology. It focused on progress achieved, problems observed, lessons learned and follow-up actions taken or planned, especially in relation to results-orientation, decentralization and simplification emphases of the change process, UNDP 2001 (see above).

A review of CCFs indicated that UNDP had achieved a narrowing of focus to the four main priority areas of poverty elimination, environmental regeneration, job creation and the advancement of women. It found a concentration of activities in the principal areas of poverty and governance, while only 3 per cent of programme outlines focused specifically on gender, although it was a secondary area of focus for most programmes. The focus on the environment was evident in all regions. Governments felt that the greater focus in UNDP programmes was a positive development. However, some expressed regret at the loss of programming flexibility and the fact that the areas of focus no longer covered support for capacity-building in technology.

The Administrator had ensured that resource allocation emphasized least developed and low-income countries. As at the end of May 1998, $1,390 million or 92 per cent of total TRAC-1 and TRAC-2 resources for the 1997-2000 period had been assigned, some 55 per cent of allocated TRAC-3 resources had gone to LDCs and some 68 per cent had gone to low-income countries. Those positive developments contributed to the anticipated leveraging of non-core resources to provide further assistance to government SHD activities already supported by UNDP core funding. Considerable progress had been made in the decentralization of authority to the country office level.

The overriding constraint was the lower-than-expected contributions to UNDP core resources of $2.35 billion for the 1997-1999 period, some 30 per cent below the target set in 1995 of $3.3 billion. Contributions for 1997 declined to $761 million and projections for 1998 indicated a further decline. At the same time, the need for UNDP services kept growing, as evidenced by the continuous growth in non-core resources, which increased by 6 per cent between 1996 and 1997 ($1,400 million and $1,482 million, respectively). Non-core income represented 61 per cent of total income in 1996 and 66 per cent in 1997. To ensure prudent resource management under the current core resource forecasts, the Administrator had to make a number of adjustments in programming levels to all programme lines on an across-the-board basis. The reduced earmarkings for 1997-2000, together with fifth-cycle carry-overs, amounted to $3,997 million, of which only $3,556 million was foreseen to be available. The $441 million or 11 per cent shortfall represented unfunded programme and programme support earmarkings for agency support costs. The unfunded portion of the already reduced earmarkings required careful resource management and was a major factor in the need to delay the approval of projects and programmes. The scope and coverage of ongoing programmes were drastically cut and some new programmes were cancelled.

Despite the shortfall in contribution levels, programme countries demonstrated the capacity to formulate high-quality programming at levels above 1997 delivery, which reached $654 million. By the end of May 1998, programme budget approvals for 1997-2000 had reached $1,932 million, or 84 per cent of planned expenditures for those years. That presented a serious challenge to UNDP activities, requiring mid-term adjustments to the financial parameters for 1997-1999.

The report provided possible resource scenarios and baseline data for decisions with regard to the financial framework and financial parameters for 2000-2002.

The report pointed out that the financial framework for the current planning period (1997-1999) covered lines relating to both programme earmarkings and the biennial support budget. To clarify that those two categories were subject to different decision-making processes and planning periods, the Administrator proposed an alternate format of setting out the relative percentage shares in the financial framework for the next period (2000-2002). The proposed framework showed the original percentage earmarkings for the current period (1997-1999), re-expressed for comparison purposes as a percentage of their respective category. It also reflected the proposed changes in certain programme earmarkings. He also proposed some additional simplifications in the support costs earmarkings for 2000-2002 and a TRAC-1 resource distribution methodology for the same period.

Concerning net contributor countries (NCCs), under the successor programming arrangements, thresholds were raised from their fifth-cycle levels to gross national product (GNP) per capita of $4,700 (for reimbursable TRAC-1) and $7,500 (for non TRAC-1). Using the new thresholds, the number of NCCs in the 1997-1999 period stood at 28 (compared to 20 using a threshold of $3,000 in the fifth programming cycle). Of those, 13 had a GNP per capita between $4,700 and $7,500, and for those NCCs fully reimbursable TRACs were calculated, using a floor of 60 per cent of their respective fifth-cycle indicative planning figure. The total reimbursable TRAC-1 for those 13 countries represented 0.34 per cent of total TRAC-1 for the period, or $2.293 million. For the remaining 15 NCCs (with a GNP per capita above $7,500), no TRACs were calculated. For the next planning period (2000-2002), the Administrator proposed to take NCCs out of the TRAC calculation model entirely, and instead manage and monitor that category as a completely separate group of programme countries. A level of funds could be agreed upon and set aside to finance reimbursable TRAC-1, which was not likely to exceed 0.4 per cent of TRAC-1 resources for the period. The Administrator was at the same time reviewing the current NCC arrangements and obligations within the wider review of the graduation principle.

The Executive Board, on 23 September [dec. 98/19], took note of the review of the successor programming arrangements, the improvements made in the programming processes and further plans, as well as the adjustments to authorized programming levels as described in the review. The Board decided to apply the financial planning parameters it had adopted in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 895] for 2000-2001, and requested the Administrator to proceed with programme planning on that basis. The Board endorsed the proposed extension of the percentage earmarkings for programme resources set out in 1995 with two modifications, and it reaffirmed the basic methodology for the distribution of resources as definied in 1995 as the basis for calculating TRAC-1 earmarkings for individual countries, as well as for overall TRAC allocations, with two modifications from 2001.

The Board reaffirmed the principles of NCC status and of graduation, and requested the Administrator to examine ways to improve the flexibility in the allocation of TRAC-2 resources and report the findings in 1999. The Administrator was also requested to provide the Board in 1999 with possible implications for programming arrangements resulting from the assessment of the pilot phase of UNDAF; to submit an analysis of the various scenarios of NCCs as contained in the review on successor programming arrangements, including the full cost implications for Governments and UNDP of maintaining offices in NCCs, and the implications for the resident coordinator system and for the additional services relating to UN system representation provided by UNDP in NCCs; and to provide an analysis of his proposal to take NCCs out of the TRAC calculation model and manage and monitor that category as a separate group of programme countries.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation for 1998 [DP/1999/32 & Add.1], the Administrator provided an overview of the financial condition of UNDP at the end of 1998, as well as comparative figures for 1997.

While UNDP continued to be successful in attracting other resources (non-core resources), it was concerned by the continued decline in voluntary contributions. Expenditures continued to exceed income, and UNDP regular resources liquidity reached a level below the recommended minimum. If income continued to decline, UNDP risked having to borrow, at least temporarily, from its operational reserve.

Compared to 1997, total income from the core activities and those of the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDC) decreased by 1.7 per cent to $785.3 million, and total expenditure went down by 11.5 per cent to $881.5 million in 1998. Overall, there was a 25.6 per cent decline in the available resource balance. Voluntary contributions to the regular resources (inclusive of SMF/LDC) fell by 2 per cent ($15 million) to $746 million in 1998. Contributions from the top 10 donor countries (Canada, Denmark, Germany, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States) were nearly stable, with $656 million donated in 1998 (84 per cent of total contributions) and $652 million in 1997 (82 per cent of total contributions).

A continued concern for the Administrator was the timing of payment of contributions, which were often remitted late in the year. The unpredictability of payment timing reduced UNDP's ability to manage foreign exchange exposure to protect the value of pledges made in currencies other than the United States dollar. About $21 million in pledges was unpaid at the end of 1998, a 25 per cent improvement over the $28 million unpaid at the end of 1997. The largest outstanding pledges at the end of the year were the United States ($7.7 million), Chile ($1.6 million), Austria ($1.5 million), Guatemala ($1.1 million), Brazil ($1 million) and the Dominican Republic ($0.6 million).

Total 1998 expenditure under regular resources declined to $881 million from $996 million in 1997, reflecting an adjustment to the lower contribution level. Programme expenditure in 1998 decreased by 10 per cent to $558 million against $654 million in 1997. Expenditure for nationally executed projects, which covered the greater portion of programme expenditure, also decreased slightly. The percentage share of programme expenditure among the regions remained relatively stable. Compared to 1997, delivery dropped in the Africa region from $278 million to $244 million, and in the Asia and the Pacific region from $201 million to $169 million. In the Arab States region, there was a slight decrease from $64 million in 1997 to $53 million in 1998. The Europe and CIS region showed a steady climb in delivery to $44 million in 1998 from $37 million in 1997. Expenditures in the Latin America and the Caribbean region also increased slightly by $4 million.

Programme support to implementing agents dropped to $38.9 million, from $53.7 million in 1997, as a consequence of the increase in national execution and in the capacity of the programme countries to implement projects/programmes.

As at 31 December 1998, the balance of unexpended resources for regular resources activities amounted to $212 million, compared to $285 million a year earlier, a decline of 26 per cent. The level of investment for regular resources decreased by $60 million, from $257 million at the end of 1997 to $197 million.

The other resources activities, which comprised mainly government cost-sharing, third-party cost-sharing, government cash counterpart contributions, trust funds, management services agreements and the Junior Professional Officer programme, represented about two thirds of all activities managed by UNDP. In 1998, there was an overall increase in other resources income, expenditure and the balance of unexpended resources, mostly attributable to government cost-sharing. Continuing an upward trend, contributions for cost-sharing activities reached $1.27 billion in 1998 from $941 million in 1997, an increase of 36 per cent. Other resources also included the reserve for field accommodation.

Review of 1997 financial situation

In September [dec. 98/25], the Executive Board took note of the report of the Administrator on the annual review of the 1997 financial situation [YUN 1997, p. 876].

Audit reports

In January, the Executive Board considered the Administrator's report [DP/1998/4] on follow-up to recommendations of the report of the Board of Auditors for the 1994-1995 biennium [YUN 1996, p. 1296], pursuant to the Executive Board's 1997 request [YUN 1997, p. 880]. The Administrator provided a tabular summary of recommendations by area of audit together with the follow-up action taken, and status of action and the target date for completion. The Administrator said that progress was achieved in many areas and that efforts were being made to address those that were still outstanding.

On 23 January [dec. 98/4], the Board took note of the Administrator's report.

In June, the Administrator submitted a report on internal audit and oversight services [DP/1998/26] provided by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review for the year ended 31 December 1997. According to the Administrator, the Office's audit and oversight activities during the year had contributed to a heightened awareness of internal control frameworks and improved practices throughout UNDP. Overall, the Office issued 141 reports during 1997. Of particular interest were three joint audits carried out with the External Board of Auditors, and a joint review of certain aspects of a country office with UNICEF internal auditors. The Office provided internal audit services to 69 of the 132 country offices and issued 48 internal audit reports containing 1,255 recommendations. Of that total, 935 (75 per cent) were accepted by auditees and had been or were being implemented. The remainder were being followed up. The Office also identified a number of issues that had organization-wide implications.

On 19 June [dec. 98/17], the Board took note of the Administrator's report.

Revision of financial regulations and rules

The Administrator, in a July report [DP/1998/32 & Corr.1], presented information on his strategy for a comprehensive revision of UNDP Financial Regulations and Rules, and interim changes to financial regulations on the biennial support budget, cost-sharing and procurement. He stated that the revision strategy comprised a sweeping restructuring of the regulations and rules to align them with the manner in which UNDP received, allocated and spent both its regular and other resources, for programme activities, for programme support, for management and administration and for support to UN operational activities. With the restructuring of UNDP under UNDP 2001, responsibility and accountability for the mobilization of resources rested primarily with the Bureau for Resources and External Affairs; for the allocation of resources, with the newly established Bureau for Planning and Resource Management; and for expenditure, with the Bureau for Financial and Administrative Services. The structure of the Financial Regulations and Rules was being aligned with that of operational and managerial accountability. The Bureau for Financial and Administrative Services was responsible for that process.

An annex to the report provided the basic structure of the proposed revision. The Administrator expected that most of the changes would result from the introduction of new definitions and from renumbering sections. The most significant effort would be at the level of financial rules, which reflected the imperatives of the Administrator, under the overall policy directions established by the Board in the financial regulations.

A second annex contained the proposed changes to the financial regulations dealing with the harmonized biennial support budget, cost-sharing contributions from non-governmental sources and procurement functions.

ACABQ, in September [DP/1998/37], requested that the presentation of revised financial regulations in 1999 make clear what was being proposed for rearrangement of presentation and what was being proposed for substantive change. The proposed changes could be grouped in two categories—the first covering changes to update the definition of categories of resources and related accounts, including those resulting from the adoption of the harmonized presentation of the biennial support budgets for UNDP and other UN funds and programmes; and the second category covering procurement as a major area of UNDP operation.

ACABQ had no objection to the first grouping. Regarding procurement procedures, ACABQ recommended that the Administrator prepare a policy paper on procurement by non-staff members, indicating the practice followed by UNDP and other UN funds and programmes.

On 22 September [dec. 98/18], the Executive Board noted the proposed revised structure for the Financial Regulations and Rules, and approved the proposed revisions to the current version. It also took note of the ACABQ report.

Procurement

In 1998, total procurement for goods and services under UNDP funding was $782 million. The share of procurement from developing countries and the economies in transition was 74 per cent. For the UN system in general, total procurement under all sources of funding during 1998 was $3 billion, and the share of procurement from developing countries and economies in transition was 42 per cent.

The volume of procurement handled by the UNDP Inter-Agency Procurement Services Office (IAPSO) had grown steadily, from $58.2 million in 1996 to $61.6 million in 1997, an increase of 5.8 per cent. Growth in the first five months of 1998 was at a rate of 6 per cent.

The Administrator, in June [DP/1998/30], reported on the activities of IAPSO, as requested by the Executive Board in 1996 [Y UN 1996, p. 786]. Information for 1998 was contained in the UNDP 1998 annual statistical report [DP/1999/34].

IAPSO supported good governance by providing procurement tools and skills development to Governments, through the UNDP country office network. It conducted seven regional procurement training programmes in 1996 and 1997 (Brazil, Egypt, Ethiopia, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Peru, Zimbabwe) for 181 participants from UNDP country offices and concerned government personnel. In 1998, courses were given in Colombia, Jordan, Nepal, Turkey and the United Republic of Tanzania. National courses were given or planned in Albania, Bolivia, China and the Sudan. IAPSO coordinated with UNICEF and UNOPS in developing other procurement training courses and organized 11 training courses from January 1997 to May 1998 for 270 participants from a number of UN organizations. The training was supplemented with the IAPSO web page to facilitate dialogue on procurement issues.

A new United Nations Common Supplier Database, a joint venture undertaken by 12 UN organizations, was launched in May to provide a single gateway to the UN system for suppliers rather than having each supplier register with over 30 organizations within the UN system.

IAPSO acted as a clearing house for notices of procurement opportunities, in printed and electronic forms. All organizations using its network were encouraged to publish procurement notices. IAPSO also provided procurement advisory services, free of charge, to UNDP country offices and programme country Governments, in the form of the development of specifications for their procurement and in the provision of benchmark pricing for items.

IAPSO was active in promoting the UNDP focus area of the environment from the procurement perspective. In addition to developing generic specifications to facilitate the procurement of environmentally friendly products, it promoted "green procurement" awareness at international conferences.

On 23 September [dec. 98/25], the Board took note of the report on IAPSO activities.

Other technical cooperation

UN activities

The UNDP Administrator submitted information on UN system technical cooperation in 1998, covering UNDP, executing and specialized agencies, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP [DP/1999/35 & Add.1]. Data for the Bretton Woods institutions were no longer considered technical cooperation expenditure but related instead to assistance preceding programmes.

Technical cooperation expenditure delivered by the UN system reached $5.24 billion in 1998 compared to $4.768 billion in the previous year, a 10 per cent increase, the highest yearly increase since 1993. UNDP remained the largest source of technical cooperation expenditure in the system, with its share standing at 40 per cent in 1998, up from 25 per cent in 1993. In 1998, UNDP disbursed a total of $2.131 billion in technical cooperation expenditure in programme countries, the highest level ever. That figure was an 18 per cent growth from the previous year, and an increase of 42.5 per cent since 1996. For the first time since 1993, expenditure by WFP recorded an increase in 1998—at $1.238 billion, 15.3 per cent more than in 1997. The largest recipients were the Sudan ($166.3 million), the Democratic People's Republic of Korea ($126.4 million) and Rwanda ($111.8 million), which together accounted for almost 30 per cent of the expenditure in 1998. Eight other countries each received over $25 million in assistance (Indonesia, Ethiopia, Bangladesh, Liberia, Kenya, Angola, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Uganda in order of assistance received).

The executing and specialized agencies expenditure on technical cooperation remained stagnant at around $1 billion. Of those agencies, the World Health Organization (WHO) contributed approximately 40 per cent of the total, followed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at 18 per cent. Four other agencies provided significant amounts: UNESCO, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements.

On 23 September [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/25)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the Administrator's report on UN system technical cooperation expenditure in 1997 [DP/1998/33 & Add.1].

DESA activities

The Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA)—responsible for UN technical cooperation activities—had more than 1,000 projects under execution during 1998 in a dozen substantive sectors, with a total project expenditure of $79.2 million. Projects financed by UNDP represented $58.4 million; those by trust funds, $18.8 million; and those by UNFPA, $2 million.

On a geographical basis, the DESA-executed programme included expenditures of $37.3 million in the Middle East, $17.6 million in Africa, $5.9 million in Asia and the Pacific, $2.7 million in Europe, $1.3 million in the Americas and $14.4 million for interregional and global programmes. Project delivery in the Middle East included expenditures of $27.6 million for the Iraq programme.

Distribution of expenditure by sector was as follows: energy, $30.8 million; economic policy, $12.8 million; the associate expert programme, $11.9 million; public administration, $6.8 million; water, $5.6 million; social policy, $3.2 million; statistics, $2.9 million; infrastructure, $2.3 million; public finance, $1.2 million; programme support, $0.9 million; and minerals, $0.8 million. Of the total delivery of $79.2 million, energy (including the Iraq programme) comprised 39 per cent, economic policy, 16 per cent, and the associate expert programme, 15 per cent.

On a component basis, DESA delivery in 1998 included $41.1 million for project personnel, $25.3 million for equipment, $8.1 million for subcontracts, $3.4 million for training and $1.3 million for miscellaneous expenses.

UN Office for Project Services

The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS), which became a separate entity within the United Nations in 1995 after having operated under UNDP direction, continued to operate in accordance with its self-financing principle, with no assessed budget funding.

1998 activities

The UNOPS Executive Director, in his annual report to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on activities during 1998 [DP/1999/22 & Add.1], said that UNOPS exceeded its 1998 financial targets.

The target for delivery was set at just over $700 million for 1998, a level never before reached by UNOPS. By the end of the year, total delivery stood at $713 million, comprising $538 million for the project portfolio and $175 million for disbursement authorizations processed for IFAD-funded projects. Those results compared with delivery targets set in the 1998 Business Plan of $550 million for the project portfolio and $158 million for the services-only portfolio, totalling $708 million. That performance translated into a delivery rate of 101 per cent. Demand for UNOPS services to nationally executed projects went from $48 million in 1997 to $120 million in 1998 (up 150 per cent).

Projects funded from UNDP core resources decreased by nearly $90 million or 22 per cent as compared to the previous year. However, newly acquired management services agreements (MSAs), under arrangements signed by UNDP with a range of funding sources, grew from $150 million in 1997 to $250 million in 1998. Projects carried out on behalf of non-traditional clients from the UN system ranked higher in the UNOPS portfolio—their value rose from $12 million in 1997 to $38 million in 1998. The portfolio acquisition with clients other than UNDP reached $67 million in 1998, up from $56 million the year before. Those figures reflected the fact that UNOPS was more successful than in previous years in diversifying its client base. It also diversified its product base further in 1998. Projects involving building, construction and engineering rose significantly.

The value of the total UNOPS portfolio grew from $3.2 billion in 1997 to $3.5 billion in 1998, an increase of 9.4 per cent, of which $763 million was from new acquisitions for the project portfolio and $284 million for the services-only portfolio, with total acquisition in 1998 crossing the $1 billion threshold for the first time.

While the target for income was set at $44.5 million, actual income for the year amounted to $49 million, distributed as follows: $44 million for the project portfolio, $4 million for services-only and $1 million of other income. The income derived from sources other than UNDP rose to over $8 million, or 16 per cent of total UNOPS income.

Administrative expenditures, projected at $45 million for 1998, stood at $41 million by the end of the year. The amount paid by UNOPS to UNDP for administrative services increased by 25 per cent to $6.3 million. The average administrative overhead rate, representing administrative costs incurred for project services rendered, remained, as in previous years, at less than 7 per cent.

The Executive Director reported that the financial performance in 1998 came close to the targets set for the year in the 1998 Business Plan. Important thresholds crossed in 1998 for the first time included the $1 billion mark for acquisition, the $700 million mark for delivery and the 100 per cent mark for the delivery target.

New service offerings included support services to the United Nations Association of the United States for its "Adopt-A-Mine-Field" activity, in which it promoted programmes funded by private donors to clear plots identified in mine-action projects. UNOPS provided information needed for project selection and implemented the demining activities. It also provided publishing and printing services for the public information programme of the Mine Action Service of the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations. It was increasingly requested to provide substantial administrative services in the area of international personnel. The services-only sector was an area with growth opportunities, as evinced by a number of UNOPS clients expressing interest in such services. UNOPS developed a new service modality, the reimbursable services agreements, under which its services were provided from its administrative budget on a reimbursable basis by the requesting Government. That innovation was intended to help UNOPS provide flexible responses to emerging development needs.

The Executive Director, while noting that implementation of the 1998 Business Plan was largely successful, said that there were areas where progress was slow or where difficulties arose. Two key areas remained as a result of the transition in 1995 from an organizational unit of UNDP to an independent entity: the finalization of the UNOPS Financial Rules and the delegation of authority in personnel matters. On both issues, UNOPS deemed it prudent to build a base of experience before defining a plan of action. Other areas of difficulty were competitive bidding, the absence of standard modalities for transferring funds from the UN Secretariat to UNOPS for the execution of activities entrusted to UNOPS, and slow progress towards transparency in the definition and costing of administrative services obtained by UNOPS from UNDP.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, on 12 June [dec. 98/16], took note of the 1997 annual report of the UNOPS Executive Director [YUN 1997, p. 883]. It requested the Management Coordination Committee (MCC) to assist and guide the Executive Director in finding appropriate responses to those areas in which UNOPS progress was slow or where unexpected difficulties were being encountered. In addition, the Board approved the establishment of the post of Chief Information Officer at the D-1 level with effect from 1 July 1998.

JIU report. The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 1998 report of JIU on the broader engagement of UNOPS with UN system organizations, taking advantage of divisions of labour and complementarities between them for the benefit of programme countries [A/53/788]. The report examined and explained the new UNOPS, its evolving mandate, structure and functions and the features that distinguished it from other UN system organizations. It looked at means of enhancing cooperation and complementarities through an examination of experiences gained in diversifying UNOPS clientele, and traced the evolving relationship between UNOPS and other UN system organizations.

JIU concluded that UNOPS had gained increasing recognition for its ability to satisfy the changing demands of its clients and to provide effectively the services needed for the projects it supported. It made notable progress in diversifying its client base and pursued decentralization, but only when there was a critical mass of projects in a certain geographic area to ensure that the office in question would be self-financing, viable and cost-effective. Problems had arisen with the advent of new decentralized offices, including meeting the skill requirements of individual jobs; ensuring appropriate interrelationships among units, especially regarding coordination and communication among geographical, thematic and type-of-service units; and maintaining the appropriate control and accountability that went with increased delegation of authority. Sources of procurement and contracting for goods and services, including services of consulting firms and consultants, were of concern to Member States. MCC had made some positive contributions but its diminishing role raised the question of whether the added layer of management was still needed. Although the Users Advisory Group (UAG) had not left much of an imprint, the basic idea behind its creation was still valid, i.e., to ensure that UNOPS was fully aware of the concerns of UN system organizations and others that utilized its services. Although there was a consensus among Member countries regarding UNOPS achievements, especially in financial terms, there was a need for more active involvement of Member States in its governance than was possible in the time allocated within the UNDP segment of Executive Board meetings. They also wanted more attention given to its role in development and capacity-building. JIU noted that the favourable reaction received by UNOPS was due largely to its record for the timely delivery of services and achieving good results to the satisfaction of clients, due to its ability to adapt its practices and procedures in a business-like manner.

JIU recommended that UNOPS give priority to partnership with the UN system organizations and actively seek and use their expertise; intensify efforts to diversify its sources of income and clients; address problems associated with decentralization; and avail itself of UNDP's field network, particularly its administrative and financial services, when cost-effective. The Executive Director should formulate a policy to achieve more equitable distribution among sources of procurement, with special attention given to sources from developing countries, economies in transition and major underutilized donor countries. The Secretary-General should consider discontinuing MCC and propose and put into effect modalities for the timely transfer of funds to UNOPS. He should also, at the General Assembly's fifty-fifth (2000) session, report on specific measures for enhancing cooperation between the UN system and UNOPS. The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board should allocate a separate segment of its sessions for UNOPS, discontinue UAG and recommend that the Secretary-General invite UNOPS to be a member of the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions. UNOPS should share its experience in adapting practices and procedures and in developing different approaches, procedures and methodologies for different circumstances with other UN organizations, especially in procurement.

1998-1999 budget estimates

The Executive Director, in June [DP/1998/35], issued revised 1998-1999 budget estimates for UNOPS, which were reviewed and approved by MCC and submitted to ACABQ.

According to the report, the estimated revised budget for 1998-1999 was $101 million, comprising $89.6 million for recurring activities and $11.4 million for extraordinary, non-recurring activities. Total income had been projected at $84.7 million [YUN 1997, p. 884]; the revised estimates showed an income of $90.8 million, which included $78.1 million from project implementation, $10.3 million as services-only income and $2.4 million of other income. The Executive Director proposed that in the 1998-1999 biennium the projected extraordinary expenditures over and above the projected income should be charged to the UNOPS operational reserve. He stated that the operational reserve, set in 1997 [ibid., p. 885] at 4 per cent of combined administrative and project budgets for the previous year, totalled $20 million as at 1 January 1998. Because of expenditures related to relocation costs, the Integrated Management Information System and year 2000 compliance projects, the reserve would be reduced to $11.2 million at the beginning of the 2000-2001 biennium. UNOPS planned on further improving performance and controlling costs to reduce the financial impact of special projects and bring the reserve quickly back to its recommended level. The Executive Director reported that staffing needs were projected to increase 41 per cent, from 281 posts in the 1996-1997 biennium to 345. He proposed establishing an office in Rome to provide initially loan-administration services to all IFAD-funded projects.

ACABQ comments. ACABQ did not agree with the UNOPS view that 1998-1999 contributions would again cover related expenditures [DP/1998/36]. It proposed that contributions and expenditures excluded from the table of projections be included in future reports. ACABQ recommended that the Board accept the increase in posts as recommended, and requested that future budget reports show more clearly how estimates for staffing resources were arrived at. ACABQ also concurred with the proposal to establish a UNOPS office in Rome, and the relocation of two posts from headquarters, and suggested that the possibility of sharing common premises and services with other agencies in the field should be explored with a view to realizing economies. ACABQ requested the Executive Director, in his next budget presentation, to include proposals and specific steps, including the time frame, for bringing the operational reserve back to its recommended level and to report on his review of the 4 per cent formula for the maintenance of the reserve.

UNDP/UNFPA Board action. On 21 September [dec. 98/20], the Executive Board approved the revised estimates in the amount of $100,955,000; the proposal that any excess of expenditure over income arising out of the extraordinary, non-recurring activities in 1998-1999 be charged against the UNOPS operational reserve; the staffing level as proposed; and the relocation of two posts from New York to the Rome office and the establishment of the post of Chief of the Abidjan office at the D-1 level. It took note of the project-specific and temporary post of a resident project manager at the L-6 level included in the staffing table.

Internal oversight

In March [DP/1998/24/Add.1], the Executive Director submitted his annual report on internal oversight of UNOPS activities. The oversight framework included an external audit by the UN Board of Auditors (see below); an internal audit by the UNDP Office of Audit and Performance Review (OAPR); and internal management oversight, which was associated with the UNOPS self-financing principle.

OAPR conducted audits and reviews of both headquarters and field activities in 1997, including audits of management and other support services provided by UNDP through UNOPS. At headquarters, a management audit of the Montreal Protocol Trust Fund-funded portfolio of UNOPS-executed projects, an audit of completion of UNOPS-executed projects, desk audits of two country projects in Latin America and the Caribbean and audits of 11 MSAs for the year 1996 were completed. Field audits covered projects in Africa, Asia and the Arab regions, as well as completion of a 1996 investigation into allegations of unauthorized expenditure in the Asia region and initiation of an investigation of allegations concerning embezzlement of funds in the Latin America and Caribbean region. UNOPS provided its response on actions taken or contemplated to implement the recommendations contained in the OAPR reports.

On 19 June [dec. 98/17], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report.

Auditors' report

In April [DP/1998/25], the UNOPS Executive Director submitted a report to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on further follow-up to recommendations by the Board of Auditors contained in the financial report and audited financial statements for UNOPS covering 1995 [YUN 1997, p. 885]. Follow-up action related to financial matters, business planning and development, appointment and management of consultancy services, and price setting and cost control. The Executive Director stated that progress had been achieved in most areas and that efforts to address outstanding issues continued.

Among actions taken, UNOPS began, in its 1996 Business Plan, to assess the potential impact of the shifting composition of its portfolio on its financial position and to set financial targets that reflected its differential income rates, with further refinements in the 1997 and 1998 Business Plans. Regarding the establishment of measures of success and benchmarks of performance, a client satisfaction survey that followed up on the 1994 baseline study was currently under way. The results were being taken into consideration in the development of the 1998 Business Plan and would provide a quantitative measure of perceived performance change in the three years since the establishment of UNOPS. As regards the repeat recruitment of individual consultants and consultancy firms, concurrent with a comprehensive review of the UNOPS information systems portfolio, the Office developed specifications that would, as the systems evolved, provide better functionality for managing recruitments and consultancy selections. It was finalizing comprehensive revised guidelines for the hiring of individual consultants, including detailed procedures for hiring and the negotiation of fees. UNOPS planned to implement monitoring mechanisms in 1998 to ensure that fees paid were in conformity with market rates. UNOPS continued to use and update its workload assessment system, improved modalities for apportioning common costs and implemented administrative cost centres. Those measures, as well as improving the reporting systems, contributed to the improvements reflected in the UNOPS financial performance. UNOPS had signed an agreement with UNDP in April 1997 providing a framework and legitimacy for compensating country offices for their costs in support of MSAs.

On 19 June [dec. 98/17], the Executive Board took note of the report.

UN Volunteers

The United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme continued to expand in both the number of volunteers in service and the range of activities performed. In 1998, there was a record number of 3,766 UNV specialists and field workers, comprising 141 nationalities and serving in 148 countries.

UNV was active in strategies to promote social justice that underpinned peace, relief and reconstruction activities, strengthening democratic institutions, supporting free and fair elections, defending human rights and alleviating poverty. It recruited 269 supervisors and observers for the preparation and monitoring of the 1998 elections in Mozambique, Cambodia (working with the EU), Bosnia and Herzegovina (in partnership with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe), the Central African Republic and Nigeria. With support from Germany and Japan, 205 UNVs from Bosnia and Herzegovina—both returning refugees and internally displaced persons—were given a new start and helped energize the country's economy by rebuilding infrastructure, organizing community groups and restarting commercial enterprises. In Rwanda, small-scale economic activities were helping people displaced by the 1994 crisis [YUN 1994, p. 281] to regain self-sufficiency. Income-producing projects benefited some 14,000 people, particularly women, orphans, disabled persons and war victims. UNV specialists and national UNVs were helping to expand the managerial capacity of the Cambodian Mine Action Centre.

In the fight against desertification, UNVs from 14 African countries were raising awareness about dryland protection throughout the region and making sure that their ideas were reflected in national desertification action plans. To break the cycle of poverty and environmental degradation, UNV initiated, with support from its Special Voluntary Fund, projects in the San Pablo Lake basin in Ecuador to reforest foothills, improve garbage collection and reduce the use of toxic chemicals, as well as in formulating plans and financing for small-scale, sustainable commercial enterprises. In Kazakhstan, UNVs were helping to put in place a regional plan that linked the restoration of the ecologically devastated area near the Caspian Sea to its economic development. Based on experience gained in the Aral Sea region, volunteers were providing technical advice on business and environmental issues. In Guatemala, 13 national UNVs continued working with the Foundation for Eco-development and Conservation and local communities in environmental education and the promotion of sustainable agroforestry practices. The also promoted ecotourism. In Guatemala City, the project succeeded in establishing the country's first "Urban National Park".

Other UNV activities included helping to restore hope in shanty towns and inner cities across the developing world, making them cleaner, safer and more attractive places to live. In four Caribbean States, UNV specialists were working to prevent drug abuse and treat addicts, and a Central American network of UNVs was working in partnership with UNICEF to prevent child labour and abuse, especially in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua.

In his report on the review of the financial situation for 1998 [DP/1999/32], the UNDP Administrator stated that overall contributions to the UNV programme remained fairly stable at $10.6 million against $11 million in 1997. UNV mobilized $3 million in voluntary contributions, compared to $3.2 million in 1997. Cost-sharing contributions amounted to $0.1 million, compared to $0.3 million in 1997, and trust fund contributions remained stable at $7.5 million as against $7.4 million in 1997. In addition, $6.3 million was received in connection with fully funded arrangements for activities carried out by UNV in accordance with specific requests from donor Governments. Programme expenditure financed by the Special Voluntary Fund and by cost-sharing increased significantly in 1998 as UNV made a conscious effort to programme resources aggressively.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board considered the report of the Administrator on UNV activities in 1996-1997 [YUN 1997, p. 886]. On 19 June [dec. 98/13], the Board noted the diversity in the range of UNV work and the volunteers' roles, the growth of the UNV programme and, in particular, the achievement of reaching the largest number of serving volunteers. It also noted the key messages of the Fourth UNV Intergovernmental Meeting, held in Bonn, Germany, in December 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 886]. It commended UNV for ensuring relevance through implementation of Strategy 2000, which was launched in 1997 [ibid.].

The Board approved the proposals to use the one-time Special Voluntary Fund surplus, totalling $1.8 million, to implement the audit's recommendations. It decided that it was appropriate to finance from the Fund strategic and cross-cutting thematic evaluations and to supplement the monitoring of UNVs and projects executed by the UNV programme. The UNV programme was requested to report later in the year on the management of the reserve for security and medical evacuation needs in the context of the annual review of the financial situation. The Board welcomed the decision to proclaim 2001 as the International Year of Volunteers [YUN 1997, p. 888].

In response to the Board's decision, the Administrator reported, in his annual review of the financial situation for 1998 [DP/1999/32], that a reserve for security and medical evacuation costs was established in 1998 with initial funding of $0.9 million, of which $0.2 million was utilized. The available balance as at 31 December 1998 was deemed adequate in view of the activities carried out during the first year of the reserve.

Economic and technical cooperation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1998 [DP/1999/15], the UNDP Administrator stated that technical and economic cooperation among developing countries (TCDC/ECDC) facilitated increased South-South sharing of capacities through the development and dissemination of 250 best practices in good governance, structural adjustment, poverty eradication, micro-financing, maternal mortality, agriculture and food security, science and technology for sustainable human development, job creation and management of the environment and the sustainable development of small island States. South-South channels of communication were also enhanced as a result of expansion and decentralization of the TCDC information referral system and the creation of the content-based national TCDC web sites in 11 programme countries. With the Group of 77, the South Centre and the Third World Network, the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC helped to deepen South-South policy dialogue and intellectual exchanges on critical issues of globalization, follow-up to the Kyoto Protocol to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change [YUN 1997, p. 1048], regional and subregional economic co-operation and preparations for the South-South Summit scheduled to take place in 2000. The Special Unit supported a high-level expert meeting (Jakarta, Indonesia, 10-11 August) to prepare for that meeting.

The Economic and Social Council, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/205 [ibid., p. 892], endorsed, by decision 1998/284 of 31 July, the revised Guidelines for the Review of Policies and Procedures concerning Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries [ibid., p. 891].

Commemorative meeting of General Assembly

The General Assembly held on 7 October 1998 a commemorative meeting of the twentieth anniversary of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Cooperation among Developing Countries [YUN 1978, p. 467].

Addressing the Assembly, the Deputy Secretary-General said that the United Nations had played an important role in promoting TCDC, providing guidance on policies and procedures and supporting institutional capacity-building, networking and information systems [A/53/PV.31]. Many of its organizations and agencies, including the regional commissions, actively promoted policies that placed emphasis on South-South cooperation. The unprecedented changes occurring in the international economic system since the 1980s—principally the globalization of markets and production structures—made such cooperation more valid and relevant than ever as an instrument for helping developing countries to participate effectively in the emerging economic order. Despite the accelerated differentiation in socio-economic performance among developing countries, however, the countries of the South still shared a number of basic development needs, including the need for external capital and development assistance, access to export markets and foreign exchange, technologies and an external economic environment that was fair, predictable and stable. Given the complex mix of opportunities and challenges presented by globalization, the UN system and the international community had to adjust to the demands of the new development context and redouble efforts in support of technical and economic cooperation. In addition, all UN organizations and agencies had to implement Economic and Social Council resolution 1992/41 on TCDC [YUN 1992, p. 573] and ensure that technical and economic cooperation was given first consideration in the design, formulation, implementation and evaluation of their operational activities. They should increase the allocation of resources for technical and economic cooperation from their regular programme budgets, find opportunities to promote joint cooperative arrangements, bring their various sectoral competencies to bear on South-South cooperation activities, and strengthen contacts with organizations in the developing world and help foster effective participation of the private sector in technical and economic cooperation activities.

Strengthening ECDC/TCDC in UN operational activities

In a September addendum [A/53/226/Add.4] to the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities of the UN system (see above), the Secretary-General reported on strengthening the integration of ECDC/TCDC in operational activities. Prepared in response to General Assembly resolution 52/205 [YUN 1997, p. 892], the report traced the evolution of ECDC and TCDC as modalities of international development cooperation and described the role of such cooperation in assisting developing countries in responding to the challenges presented by globalization and economic liberalization, which had exercised a dominant influence on the shape of the emerging global economic order.

The report assessed the contribution of UN organizations in support of such cooperation. It concluded that, despite their efforts, ECDC and TCDC, embodied in the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action, among other documents, were still not optimally integrated in UN operational activities due to a number of major constraints. The main obstacles were the persistence of attitudinal barriers against such cooperation, insufficient awareness of the potential of ECDC/TCDC for strengthening international development cooperation, a lack of a sufficiently comprehensive database on individual expert capacities, as distinct from institutional capacities, and the absence of sufficiently quantitative data that prevented the establishment of appropriate benchmarks to assess the true extent of support for ECDC/TCDC: by the UN system. The problem was compounded by the lack of a suitable methodology for reflecting ECDC and TCDC in components of programme and project budgets. The lack of an adequate level of resources to fund ECDC/TCDC was a major constraint to the application of those modalities in operational activities.

To remove the constraints blocking the full realization of the potential of ECDC and TCDC, the Secretary-General offered a number of recommendations. At the policy and programme levels, UN organizations should mainstream and institutionalize ECDC and TCDC by integrating those modalities in their organizational policy, operations manuals and directives and in their programming arrangements, thus putting in place the structure to ensure implementation, monitoring and reporting of their programmes in support of ECDC and TCDC. Regional commissions should play an active role in promoting and supporting intraregional and interregional ECDC and TCDC activities of strategic importance, and should work closely with regional and subregional groupings, networks and centres of excellence in developing countries in that endeavour. Given the difficulties experienced in reporting, UN organizations should arrive at a common understanding of ECDC and TCDC to facilitate accurate reporting and, in particular, develop a methodology for reflecting ECDC/TCDC as a separate component of programme and project budgets in order to provide a basis for compiling quantitative data on such activities. They should also promote a culture of sharing innovative approaches and best practices in respect of ECDC and TCDC, including innovative financing arrangements.

UN organizations needed to incorporate ECDC and TCDC principles in training programmes, as well as in programme and coordination frameworks, such as the country strategy note, the UN Development Assistance Framework, the UNDP country cooperation framework and other mechanisms used by UN organizations in carrying out their programmes. In addition, resident coordinators should include ECDC and TCDC in the agenda of inter-agency meetings. Strategies to follow up on results of international conferences should also include ECDC and TCDC. In view of the relevance of an adequate database on capacities in the developing world, action should be taken to expand TCDC-INRES into a multi-dimensional information system, providing data not only on institutional capacities but also on individual experts, centres of excellence and innovative cooperation arrangements that could be replicated in other developing countries. In supporting ECDC/TCDC, UN organizations needed to establish closer contact with organizations in the developing world and should seek the increased involvement of the private sector in developing countries.

Assistance should be provided to developing countries in formulating appropriate national policies for integrating ECDC/TCDC in their national planning and development process and in strengthening their institutional capacity for managing ECDC and TCDC programmes. The UNDP Special Unit for TCDC should also elaborate specific proposals for ensuring that "pivotal countries" served as catalysts for the promotion and application of ECDC and TCDC. Increased resources should be made available for South-South cooperation, through the Trust Fund for South-South Cooperation and the Perez-Guerrero Trust Fund.

In view of the need to strengthen the intergovernmental review process and ensure the continuing operational integration of ECDC and TCDC, the Secretary-General proposed that in future the High-level Committee on the Review of TCDC review progress on the operational integration between ECDC and TCDC. That would enable Member States to review progress on an important policy element of the New Directions Strategy [YUN 1995, p. 902], based on a report on the subject prepared by the Special Unit in consultation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), without prejudice to the maintenance of the separate institutional identity and responsibilities of the Special Unit within UNDP and UNCTAD. The Special Unit should also be strengthened to assist the Secretary-General and the Administrator in ensuring the promotion of TCDC on a system-wide basis. Finally, all UN organizations should apply the revised Guidelines for TCDC [YUN 1997, p. 891] prepared by the Special Unit on the basis of consultations with the various organizations and agencies. ACC should continue to monitor the application of the Guidelines to assess progress in their application on a system-wide basis.

The General Assembly, in resolution 53/192, took note of the recommendations, and requested that the UN system improve the incorporation of ECDC/TCDC in its programmes and projects.

UN Capital Development Fund

In 1998, the core contributions to the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) declined to $31 million from $33 million in 1997.

During 1997-1998, UNCDF approved projects worth a total of $106 million, including grant increases. In 1998, project expenditures increased to $44 million, or 98 per cent of its target for delivery, compared to $38.2 million, or 88 per cent in 1997.

In 1998, UNCDF continued its efforts to implement the policy and institutional changes outlined in its 1995 policy paper [YUN 1995, p. 903]. In September, the donor-led evaluation of UNCDF began to address three questions: whether the re-orientation of the Fund's activities had enhanced its distinctive identity through its ability to take risks, test new methodological approaches and pilot innovations; whether actions taken to implement the results of the capacity assessment were successful; and whether the new approaches and processes affected field operations.

During 1998, UNCDF conducted 15 evaluations in irrigation, infrastructure, agriculture and eco-development, of which 10 were final, 4 mid-term and 1 ex post. The 1998 report on programme evaluation, to be published in 1999, would focus on institutional analysis and project implementation issues. Improvement in UNCDF operations occurred in 1997 and 1998 by integrating monitoring and evaluation systems within programmes. Since September 1998, UNCDF had included logical frameworks in all new programme and project documents with clear indicators and means of verification.

UN fellowships

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in June the report of JIU on fellowships in the UN system [A/53/154], which had as its objective the identification of major management and coordination issues relating to the implementation of UN fellowship programmes and the contribution of those programmes to capacity-building. It was based on information provided by UN organizations and officials in charge of fellowship programmes.

The Inspectors found that almost every organization of the UN system had a training and fellowship programme. In 1995, the total number of fellowships awarded was close to 36,000 for an investment of more than $109 million, which could be overestimates or underestimates depending on definitions and/or accounting methods used by reporting agencies. In addition, there was no uniform format by which agencies reported on their operational activities, including data on fellowships. JIU also found that fellowship programmes in the 1990s were marked by an increased preference for short- and medium-term training, a shift in placements from developed to developing countries, the regionalization of placements, more sensitivity to a gender perspective in nominating awards, a growing impact of national execution on most programmes and the related decrease of the share of UNDP funding, and increasing concern of legislative organs for relevance, cost-effectiveness and impact.

JIU recommended a definition of fellowship as a training activity that provided a monetary grant to a qualified individual or group of individuals for meeting special learning objectives, for short or long duration, in response to nationally approved human resources policies; participants in seminars, workshops, technical meetings or conferences should generally not be classified as "fellows". Consideration should be given to establishing common standards to be used by each organization for delivering a certificate of excellence to training institutions and meritorious trainees. UN system organizations should maintain and/or update data banks of local and regional expertise, foster increased use of such expertise, make access to data banks more open and encourage service providers to avail themselves of such expertise.

The Inspectors also recommended that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the UNDP Administrator and Member States, submit an evaluation report on implementation of Assembly resolution 50/131 [YUN 1995, p. 407] on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (UNETPSA), and on the need to maintain UNETPSA as a separate programme with an expanded geographical coverage. The Secretary-General should report to the Assembly in 1999 on the possibility of UNETPSA being given a new mandate to capitalize on its experience and serve as a common-system placement and supervising mechanism in southern Africa.

He was also requested to report in 1999 on the training and fellowship programmes carried out by different units in the Secretariat and to make proposals on enhancing their implementation and promoting better coordination. The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women was urged to review its fellowship funding policies so as to be able to initiate and sustain a fellowship programme.

Concerning the management of fellowship programmes, JIU stated that implementation was often perceived as an issue of agency execution versus government execution, whereas both UN agencies and Governments were often involved. It was also recognized that evaluation remained the Achilles heel of most fellowship programmes.

JIU called for organizations to support national execution by establishing data banks of training institutions and making them accessible to national administrations. National execution should also be supported by adopting common administrative procedures relating to fees, insurance contracts and payment through the resident coordinator system. Host Governments were urged to support or continue to support their national placement and supervising agencies (NPSAs) so that they could extend free services to UN system-sponsored fellows; organizations should secure such free services whenever available, due regard being given to cost-effectiveness and quality control. Future Senior Fellowship Officers (SFO) meetings should investigate other possibilities for more cost-effective placements.

Organizations that had not done so were urged to evaluate their fellowship programmes and report to their legislative organs on ways to improve their overall impact, relevance and cost-effectiveness. Recipient countries were called on to contribute to follow-up procedures to enhance the evaluation of fellowship programmes, and, within the framework of inter-agency coordination on fellowships, evaluation issues and methodologies should be emphasized through sharing of experiences and definition of best practices.

An inter-agency coordination mechanism on fellowship matters should be maintained and hosted by one of the participating organizations to handle focal point activities. SFO meetings should continue to serve as the main framework for inter-agency coordination on system-wide issues relating to the management of fellowships. Agencies that had training activities in the same fields should designate a lead agency and harmonize their programmes for better impact.

In October [A/53/154/Add.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly his comments, as well as those of ACC, on the JIU report. In general, they found that the report contributed to the continued efforts of the system to enhance the delivery of its fellowship activities, which formed an essential part of UN system training activities and represented a crucial means for national capacity-building. The Secretary-General cautioned, however, that a number of judgements included in the report might not reflect a system-wide perspective, given the limited sample of fellowship activities covered by JIU.

The Secretary-General and ACC members generally acknowledged the need for a common definition of fellowships and endorsed the proposal for a uniform format of reporting. However, the definition should reflect the fact that sometimes non-monetary awards such as "contributions in kind" were made by Governments. It should also include recent trends in human resources development such as on-the-job training, lifelong learning, open and distance learning and formal courses. ACC members did not support the recommendation on the award of a certificate of excellence to training institutions. They endorsed the recommendation to maintain and/or update data banks of available local and regional expertise and selected training institutes.

The Secretary-General and ACC members did not believe there was justification for maintaining UNETPSA as a separate programme, as it had successfully achieved its goals, but, given the continuing need for capacity-building in the countries formerly served by the Programme, they considered that appropriate earmarkings should be considered in formulating development assistance frameworks for the countries of southern Africa. They supported the call for a report on the training and fellowship programmes. The proposal for payment of fees to host institutions and allowances to fellows through the resident coordinator system would require a more direct involvement of UN system entities in the implementation of the fellowship programme.

While generally supporting the recommendation for NPSAs to provide free services to UN fellows, the Secretary-General and ACC members pointed out that in some instances NPSAs charged handling fees for their services, and that tended to favour the increased use of direct placement. They also supported the proposal for evaluation of fellowship programmes, on the condition that due attention was paid to the cost, and concurred with the suggestion on enhanced inter-agency coordination of fellowships and attention to evaluation issues and methodologies.

The Secretary-General and ACC members agreed on the importance of maintaining an inter-agency coordination mechanism on fellowship matters, recalling that DESA and its predecessors had taken the lead role in that regard since 1974. DESA, in their view, should continue in that function until the next meeting of SFOs and host country agencies scheduled for April 1999, when coordination would be reviewed. They also agreed that the meeting of SFOs should continue to serve as the main framework for inter-agency coordination. They considered that inter-agency cooperation could be enhanced through networking arrangements, including the establishment of a web site.

The General Assembly, by decision 53/447 of 15 December, took note of the JIU report on fellowships in the UN system and the comments of the Secretary-General and ACC.

Chapter III

Humanitarian and special economic assistance

In 1998, the United Nations, through the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, continued to coordinate the collective efforts of the international community, in particular those of the UN system, to provide humanitarian and special economic assistance to States and population groups afflicted by complex emergencies and natural disasters. Consolidated inter-agency appeals were launched or ongoing in Angola, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Eritrea, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, Guinea-Bissau, Kosovo, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan and Tajikistan. An appeal for the territories of the former Yugoslavia included Albania. There was also a United Nations response to the war-displaced in Ethiopia. The amount sought for the appeals totalled $2,163 million, of which $1,301 million was received, meeting 53.9 per cent of the requirements.

The world's worst humanitarian crisis in 1998 occurred in the Sudan where a combination of a five-year drought and intensified conflict produced a major famine in the Bahr Al Ghazal region that put nearly 800,000 persons at risk of starvation. Although the situation eventually stabilized, with death rates and malnutrition declining dramatically after mid-August, Bahr Al Ghazal remained a devastated region at year-end with hundreds of thousands of people dependent upon emergency assistance.

In 1998, some 700 natural disasters claimed the lives of more than 50,000 people and caused economic losses exceeding $90 billion.

ered as part of the Council's review of its organization and methods of work.

During the segment held on 15 and 16 July (decision 1998/206), the Council addressed the theme "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian activities of the United Nations system". It had before it a June report of the Secretary-General on strengthening coordination of UN humanitarian assistance [A/53/139-E/1998/67], submitted pursuant to requests by the Assembly in resolution 52/168 [YUN 1997, p. 897] and by the Council in resolution 1995/56 [YUN 1995, p. 927].

The Secretary-General stated that in the past year respect for humanitarian principles had eroded further, in terms of denial of access to people in need and through violence against civilians and aid workers. The level of donor contributions to humanitarian assistance programmes had also declined. However, tangible results were recorded as a result of well-coordinated responses by the UN system and international and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and close collaboration with donor Governments, local authorities and civil society organizations. The challenge was to establish joint planning and coordinating mechanisms to reflect the growing links between all aspects of external support for countries afflicted by conflict.

In strengthening the coordination of humanitarian affairs, the Secretary-General reported that the Inter-Agency Standing Committee's (IASC) strategic approach ensured that humanitarian assistance contributed to UN peacemaking and peace-building activities, developed a more dynamic and prioritized approach to resource mobilization and addressed monitoring and evaluation, relief and development linkages, and staff development and security. At the field level, there were still situations where competitiveness between agencies reduced the efficiency of coordination. IASC planned to improve training of country teams and allow sufficient delegation of authority to the field to ensure greater cohesiveness and integration of initiatives. It was agreed in IASC and in the United Nations Development Group to improve the training and selection of Resident Coordinators to carry out humanitarian functions; clarify the parameters of their authority; establish a roster of candidates,

Humanitarian assistance

Coordination

Humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/205 of 6 February, decided that its humanitarian affairs segment, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], should be held for two days during its 1998 substantive session, and that practical arrangements for the segment should be consid-selection criteria and a performance review mechanism; and recommend the scope and content of their training.

IASC designated the Emergency Relief Coordinator (ERC) as the focal point for inter-agency coordination of humanitarian assistance to internally displaced persons. Consultations were being held to establish a network of focal points on internal displacement and guidelines were being developed for best practices concerning internally displaced persons. IASC agreed that the ERC should promote the establishment of a database of global information on internally displaced persons. The Committee was working to improve the quality of the consolidated appeals process and undertook to promote the appeals more aggressively. To strengthen the consolidated appeals, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) was developing a guide to assist the Humanitarian Coordinator in monitoring the provision of resources against appeals and bringing funding shortfalls to the attention of donors. OCHA continued to develop its capacity to undertake or manage lessons learned studies. A major study was completed on coordination in the Great Lakes region and its recommendations were considered at an international seminar on lessons learned in humanitarian coordination (Stockholm, Sweden, April). A study commissioned by OCHA developed a method for sanctions management. IASC set up a technical group of experts to further develop that method and to formulate objective indicators to assess and monitor the long-term effects of sanctions regimes on development. As to staff security, the Secretary-General was submitting a report to the Assembly on the security of United Nations and other humanitarian staff in the field, to which IASC had contributed (see PART FOUR, Chapter III).

New ways of delivering an international response to natural disasters were being developed, including an International Emergency Response Consultative Mechanism to promote the use and coordination of international assets. In addition, donors were encouraged to contribute to a reserve established under the United Nations Trust Fund for Disaster Relief Assistance to increase the immediate availability of funds for natural disaster response. Particular attention would be given to utilizing less costly capacities in developing countries closer to disaster locations. Developing NGO capacity in disaster-prone countries and promoting improvements in the quality of equipment manufactured in developing countries would also be prioritized. Agreements between the United Nations and individual countries on the application of simplified customs formalities for the movement of relief teams and supplies were also being negotiated.

IASC and its members identified ways to overcome the problems associated with the gap between the relief and development phases of assistance programmes. In most countries, the posts of resident coordinator and humanitarian coordinator were assumed by the same individual, thereby facilitating coordination, and recent consolidated appeals included components of short-term rehabilitation. Development agencies were aware of the need for much earlier post-conflict interventions, and international actors were aware that relief programmes had to support civil society. Initiatives were taken to ensure that improved respect for human rights was among the objectives of assistance programmes, particularly in post-conflict societies. All aid interventions needed to be planned together, and strategic frameworks developed to reflect, among other things, a common assessment of needs, and a consensus on the principles for programme implementation.

The Secretary-General proposed strengthening knowledge of the basic principles of international humanitarian law among combatants and ensuring that they were applied and that civilians were protected; bringing perpetrators of violence against civilians and aid workers to justice; strengthening the capacity of UN agencies and other humanitarian organizations to provide security for their staff; and supporting recent initiatives to halt the proliferation of small arms and landmines.

In the agreed conclusions of the humanitarian affairs segment [A/53/3 (agreed conclusions 1998/1)], the Council reiterated the need for coordinated humanitarian assistance and adequate financial resources to ensure a prompt, timely and effective response by the UN system to natural disasters and other emergencies for immediate relief and for the transition to rehabilitation, reconstruction and long-term development. It was concerned about the lack of resources to cope with the growing number of natural disasters and environmental emergencies. The Council stated that the affected State had the primary role in initiating, organizing, coordinating and implementing humanitarian assistance within its territory, but intergovernmental organizations and NGOs should continue to supplement national efforts. It stressed the need to ensure respect for and promotion of the principles and norms of international humanitarian law and the importance of engaging a much wider segment of civil society in that regard. The Council was concerned by the increasingly difficult context in which humanitarian assistance took place in some countries and reaffirmed General Assembly resolution 52/167 [YUN 1997, p. 1476] on the safety and security of humanitarian personnel.

The Council supported the leadership role of the ERC for the coordination of humanitarian assistance and prioritization of programmes within United Nations Consolidated Appeals. It noted the designation of the ERC as the focal point for inter-agency coordination of assistance to internally displaced persons and encouraged the ERC to work closely with all agencies and organizations involved, in particular with the Secretary-General's Representative on the subject. The Council shared the Secretary-General's view that the resident coordinator should assume the dual function of resident/humanitarian coordinator and that other mechanisms might be justified under appropriate circumstances. It supported efforts to clarify the parameters of authority of the resident/humanitarian coordinator functions, the establishment of selection criteria and procedures, training and performance reviews, and the maintenance of a roster of qualified candidates. The Council called on the Secretary-General to develop emergency rules and procedures to ensure a rapid response to humanitarian crises. Disaster preparedness and early warning should be further strengthened at the country and regional levels, and closer and cheaper capacities in particular developing countries should be used to enhance local disaster response capacity. The Council invited the United Nations Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño (see below) to provide its experiences on national capacity programmes for disaster management as an input to the development of the disaster reduction strategy for the twenty-first century. It noted the need to develop a strategic framework for a comprehensive approach to countries in crisis, and stressed that strengthening capacities to enable societies in post-conflict situations to manage their own affairs was critical for recovery and development. It also stressed the importance of adequate funding for humanitarian activities, in particular consolidated appeals, and that contributions to humanitarian assistance should not be at the expense of development assistance. The Council encouraged efforts to improve the format and structure of consolidated appeals to make them effective programming instruments for strategic planning. It invited the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly proposals for putting OCHA on a sound financial basis and to recommend ways to enhance the humanitarian segment to strengthen the Council's role in coordination and policy guidance of UN system humanitarian activities.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/88 [draft: A/53/L.59 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (a)].

Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 51/194 of 17 December 1996 and 52/168 of 16 December 1997 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/56 of 28 July 1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

Welcoming the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance of the United Nations,

1. Welcomes the first humanitarian affairs segment of the Economic and Social Council held during its substantive session of 1998 and agreed conclusions 1998/1 adopted at that session;

2. Calls upon relevant organizations of the United Nations system, Governments and non-governmental organizations to cooperate with the Secretary-General and the Emergency Relief Coordinator to ensure timely implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions 1998/1;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, through the 1999 substantive session of the Economic and Social Council, on the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations, including the implementation of and follow-up to agreed conclusions 1998/1;

4. Invites the Economic and Social Council to consider ways to enhance further the humanitarian segment of future sessions of the Economic and Social Council, as outlined in agreed conclusions 1998/1.

Reform measures

In his report on strengthening coordination of UN humanitarian assistance [A/53/139-E/1998/67], the Secretary-General stated that, in accordance with the measures outlined in his programme of reform [YUN 1997, p. 1390] (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), the UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs became the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), and its operational functions were transferred to the Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (see below, under "Disaster management") and the World Food Programme (WFP). The focus of OCHA was on policy development and coordination, advocacy of humanitarian issues and coordination of humanitarian emergency response. The Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, who was also the ERC, following his appointment in January, engaged IASC in collaborative efforts to deal with internally displaced persons, the development of the Consolidated Appeals process, security of humanitarian workers, field coordination mechanisms, strengthening the links between human rights and humanitarian action, introduction of a coordinated response to the humanitarian consequences of environmental and technological disasters, the use of inter-agency teams for contingency planning and to negotiate the acceptance of humanitarian principles, advocacy of humanitarian issues, and the promotion of a deeper understanding of the humanitarian impact of sanctions regimes. Efforts were also made to make OCHA more supportive of field activities. Structures and working practices of the new Office were set up, including a Complex Emergency Response and Consolidated Appeals Branch and a Disaster Relief Branch for natural disasters at Geneva and the Policy, Advocacy and Information Division and the Emergency Liaison Branch in New York, while the secretariat of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (see below, under "Disaster relief") remained in Geneva.

Resource mobilization

Central Emergency Revolving Fund

In 1998, only five advances, amounting to $6.3 million, were requested against the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, reflecting the downward trend for requests for utilization of the Fund [A/54/154-E/1999/94 & Add.1]. Factors that contributed to the decline in the use of the Fund, established in 1992 to enable operational organizations to ensure prompt response to emergencies [YUN 1992, p. 584], included an increase by individual organizations of their own internal emergency reserves and their use of the Fund only when needs exceeded their emergency funds. In addition, some agencies were reluctant to borrow from the Fund for fear of not being able to repay the balance.

As at 31 December, the Fund's balance totalled $49 million.

Consolidated Appeals

The Consolidated Appeals process coordinated and facilitated the capacity of the UN system to meet its emergency resource requirements. In 1998, inter-agency Consolidated Appeals were prepared and issued for the following countries or regions: Albania, Angola, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Great Lakes region and Central Africa, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, the Sudan and Tajikistan.

Mine clearance

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/173 [YUN 1997, p. 900], the Secretary-General submitted an October report on assistance in mine clearance [A/53/496], which provided information on the activities of UN organizations, as well as those of other international bodies and NGOs. It reviewed mine-action programmes in Afghanistan, Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cambodia, Croatia, Iraq, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Mozambique.

Annexed to the report was the main UN policy paper on mine action developed under the auspices of the Inter-Agency Coordination Group on Mine Action, as well as a table listing contributions by donor, totalling $50 million as at 13 October, to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance, established by Assembly resolution 49/125 [YUN 1994, p. 173].

OIOS trust fund audit

The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), in its fourth annual report covering activities from 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998, which was transmitted by the Secretary-General in September [A/53/428], pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], detailed the audits of two field activities of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance: the mine-action centres in Croatia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The audits identified common deficiencies in budgetary control, procurement and property control. They disclosed that the former Department of Humanitarian Affairs (DHA) (now OCHA) did not provide the mine-action centres with formal allotment documents. Due to the division of responsibility for recording expenditures and the lack of timely expenditure reports, insufficient information was available to field certifying officers to execute their functions properly. Inventories of non-expendable property were not properly established or maintained and additional expenditures were incurred as a result of delays in the preparation and submission of requisitions. OIOS recommendations emphasized the importance of official allotment advices, timely provision of expenditure performance reports and greater planning in the procurement process. DHA agreed to act on the recommendations. Subsequently, in October 1997, responsibility for the administration of the mine-action centres was transferred to DPKO. OCHA reported that it had taken measures to ensure full compliance with OIOS recommendations on procurement planning and the maintenance of inventory records. As to budgetary controls, OCHA had resolved a situation that had caused delays in providing expenditure reports to the field.

Regarding the audit of the Fund itself, a later OIOS report [A/54/393] stated that significant weaknesses in the organizational structure and operations of the DPKO Mine Action Centre limited its effectiveness as the focal point for demining activities. Consequently, the implementation of a number of demining projects was not properly monitored, thereby posing serious financial risks to funds entrusted to the Organization. In addition, trust fund accounting records were not accurately maintained and there were long outstanding accounts receivable, inter-fund indebtedness and unliquidated obligations. Management agreed with the OIOS recommendations and initiated corrective actions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 November [meeting 60], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/26 [draft: A/53/L.28 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 42].

Assistance in mine action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997 on assistance in mine clearance, all adopted without a vote,

Considering mine action to be an important component of United Nations humanitarian and development activities,

Reaffirming its deep concern at the tremendous humanitarian problem caused by the presence of mines and other unexploded devices that have serious and lasting social and economic consequences for the populations of mine-infested countries and constitute an obstacle to the return of refugees and other displaced persons, to humanitarian aid operations and to reconstruction and economic development, as well as to the restoration of normal social conditions,

Reiterating its dismay at the high number of victims of mines, especially among civilian populations, particularly children, and recalling in this context Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1995/79 of 8 March 1995, 1996/85 of 24 April 1996, 1997/78 of 18 April 1997 and 1998/76 of 22 April 1998 on the rights of the child and resolutions 1996/27 of 19 April 1996 and 1998/31 of 17 April 1998 and decision 1997/107 of 11 April 1997 on the human rights of persons with disabilities,

Deeply alarmed by the number of mines that continue to be laid each year, as well as the presence of a large number of mines and other unexploded devices as a result of armed conflicts, and thus convinced of the necessity and urgency of a significant increase in mine-clearance efforts by the international community with a view to eliminating the threat of landmines to civilians as soon as possible,

Noting the decisions taken at the Review Conference of the States Parties to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, particularly with respect to Protocol II of the Convention and the inclusion in the Amended Protocol of a number of provisions of importance for mine-clearance operations, notably the requirement of detectability, Noting the entry into force of the Amended Protocol II of the Convention on 3 December 1998,

Recalling that the States parties at the Review Conference declared their commitment to keep the provisions of Protocol II under review in order to ensure that the concerns regarding the weapons it covers are addressed, and that they would encourage efforts of the United Nations and other organizations to address all the problems of landmines,

Noting that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, adopted at the Oslo Conference on 18 September 1997 and opened for signature at Ottawa on 3 December 1997, which, among other things, recognizes that States parties in a position to do so should provide assistance for mine-clearance and related activities, for the care and rehabilitation, and social and economic reintegration, of mine victims and for mine-awareness programmes, has been signed by over one hundred and thirty States,

Noting also that the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction will enter into force on 1 March 1999,

Encouraged by the initiatives taken at conferences held at Elsinore, Denmark, Bonn, Germany, and Tokyo, notably in relation to international standards and procedures for humanitarian mine-clearance operations, as well as the development of new technology for landmine detection and removal and the rehabilitation of landmine victims, which can serve as a basis on which to advance the safety, effectiveness and professionalism of these operations throughout the world,

Taking note of the Plan of Action on Landmines adopted at the First Continental Conference of African Experts on Landmines, held at Kempton Park, South Africa, and the adoption at Harare by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity of a resolution on the report of the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity on the issue of anti-personnel mines and international efforts to reach a total ban,

Taking note also of the Agenda for Mine Action developed at the Mine Action Forum at Ottawa in December 1997, and of the outcome of the Workshop on Mine-Action Coordination held at Ottawa in March 1998,

Taking note further of the outcome of the Conference on Global Humanitarian Demining, held in Washington, D.C., in May 1998,

Noting the international conferences held recently on modern demining technology at Karlsruhe, Germany, and the Joint Research Centre, Ispra, Italy; on landmine injury and rehabilitation at Amman; on the implementation of treaty obligations in the armed forces at Vienna; and other relevant international meetings,

Noting also the International Forum on Demining and Victim Assistance, held at Phnom Penh in October 1998, which underlined the importance of ownership by mine-affected countries and their partnership with the international community in conducting mine-action activities in a suitable way towards the "zero victim goal",

Emphasizing the importance of recording the location of mines, of retaining all such records and making them available to concerned parties upon cessation of hostilities, and welcoming the strengthening of the relevant provisions in international law,

Stressing the need to convince mine-affected countries to halt new deployments of anti-personnel mines in order to ensure the effectiveness and efficiency of mine-clearance operations,

Recognizing the important role that the international community, particularly States involved in the deployment of mines, can play in assisting mine clearance in affected countries through the provision of necessary maps and information and appropriate technical and material assistance to remove or otherwise render ineffective existing minefields, mines and booby traps,

Bearing in mind the serious threat that mines and other unexploded devices pose to the safety, health and lives of personnel participating in humanitarian, peacekeeping and rehabilitation programmes and operations,

Aware that the rate of mine clearance needs to accelerate substantially if the global landmine problem is to be tackled effectively,

Concerned about the limited availability of safe and cost-effective mine-detection and mine-clearance equipment as well as the need for effective global coordination in research and development to improve the relevant technology, and conscious of the need to promote further and more rapid progress in this field and to foster international technical cooperation to this end,

Recognizing that, in addition to the primary role of States, the United Nations has an important role in the field of assistance in mine action,

Noting with satisfaction the inclusion in the mandates of several peacekeeping operations of provisions relating to mine-clearance work carried out under the direction of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat, in the context of such operations,

Commending the activities already undertaken by the United Nations system, donor and recipient Governments, the International Committee of the Red Cross and non-governmental organizations to coordinate their efforts and seek solutions to the problems related to the presence of mines and other unexploded devices, as well as their assistance to victims of mines,

Also commending the role of the Secretary-General in increasing public awareness of the problem of landmines, and in the establishment of the central landmine database and inventories of mine-awareness materials and mine-clearance techniques,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the United Nations in assistance in mine clearance;

2. Welcomes, in particular, the efforts made by the United Nations to foster the establishment of mine-clearance capacities in countries where mines constitute a serious threat to the safety, health and lives of the local population, and, emphasizing the importance of developing national mine-clearance capacities, urges all Member States and regional organizations, particularly those that have the capacity to do so, to assist mine-affected countries in the establishment and development of their national mine-clearance capacities;

3. Invites Member States to develop national programmes, in cooperation with regional organizations and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system where appropriate, to promote awareness of landmines, especially among children;

4. Expresses its appreciation to Governments and regional organizations for their financial contributions to the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance and other demining programmes, and appeals to them to continue this support through further contributions;

5. Encourages all relevant multilateral and national programmes and bodies to include, in coordination with the United Nations, activities related to mine action in their humanitarian, rehabilitation, reconstruction and development assistance activities, where appropriate, bearing in mind the need to ensure national ownership, sustainability and capacity-building;

6. Stresses the importance of international support for emergency assistance to victims of mines and the care and rehabilitation, and social and economic reintegration, of such victims;

7. Emphasizes again the important role of the United Nations in the effective coordination of mine-action activities, including those by regional organizations, and welcomes in this regard the policy on mine action and effective coordination developed by the Secretary-General in annex II to his report, which encapsulates the key principles on which United Nations mine action is based and clarifies roles and responsibilities within the United Nations system;

8. Encourages the Secretary-General to develop further a comprehensive mine-action strategy, taking into consideration the impact of the landmine problem on rehabilitation, reconstruction and development, with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of assistance in mine action by the United Nations, and emphasizes in this respect the importance of further multisectoral assessments and surveys;

9. Welcomes the creation of the United Nations Mine Action Service within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, its designation as the focal point for mine action within the United Nations system, and its ongoing collaboration with and coordination of all mine-related activities of United Nations agencies, funds and programmes;

10. Urges Member States, regional, governmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to extend full assistance and cooperation to the Secretary-General and, in particular, to provide him with information and data as well as other appropriate resources that could be useful in strengthening the coordination role of the United Nations in mine action, particularly in mine awareness, training, surveying, mine detection and clearance, scientific research on mine-detection and mine-clearance technology, and assistance to victims, including information on and distribution of medical equipment and supplies;

11. Calls upon Member States, especially those that have the capacity to do so, to provide the necessary information and technical and material assistance, as appropriate, and to locate, remove, destroy or otherwise render ineffective minefields, mines, booby traps and other devices in accordance with international law, as soon as possible;

12. Urges Member States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations that have the ability to do so to provide, as appropriate, technological assistance to mine-infested countries and to promote scientific research and development on humanitarian mine-clearance techniques and technology so that mine-clearance activities may be carried out more effectively at lower cost and through safer means and to promote international collaboration in this regard;

13. Encourages Member States and regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and foundations to continue to support ongoing activities to promote appropriate technology, as well as international operational and safety standards for humanitarian mine-clearance activities, including the early follow-up of the International Conference on Mine-Clearance Technology;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the progress achieved on all relevant issues outlined both in his previous reports to the Assembly on assistance in mine clearance and in the present resolution, and on the operation of the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance and other demining programmes;

15. Suggests in this regard that the Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Clearance be renamed Voluntary Trust Fund for Assistance in Mine Action;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session an item entitled "Assistance in mine action".

New international humanitarian order

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/74 [YUN 1996, p. 802], the Secretary-General presented an October report [A/53/486] containing the replies to his communication to Governments and NGOs requesting their views and information on the promotion of a new international humanitarian order. Since 1981, the Secretary-General had presented nine reports containing the views of 48 Governments. As at 1 October 1998, he had received replies from Bosnia and Herzegovina, Jordan, Monaco and the Netherlands and from the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/620], adopted resolution 53/124 without vote [agenda item 105].

New international humanitarian order

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/74 of 12 December 1996 and other pertinent resolutions relating to the promotion of a new international humanitarian order and of international cooperation in the humanitarian field,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and the previous reports containing the comments and views of Governments as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Keeping in mind the importance, in this context, of the role of the United Nations system, including, in particular, the newly established Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs of the Secretariat,

Noting with concern the growing number of complex emergencies and humanitarian problems,

Noting the importance of adherence to internationally accepted norms and principles and the need to promote, as required, national and international legislation to meet actual and potential humanitarian challenges,

Bearing in mind that an adequate response to emergency situations can be best ensured through local capacity-building and institution-building,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing support for the efforts to promote a new international humanitarian order;

2. Invites Governments to make available to the Secretary-General, on a voluntary basis, information and expertise on humanitarian problems of special concern to them, in order to identify opportunities for future action;

3. Calls upon Governments and other actors to ensure strict adherence to accepted humanitarian norms and principles and to promote national and international legislation that is responsive to actual and potential humanitarian problems;

4. Invites the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues to reinforce its activities as described in the report of the Secretary-General and other pertinent documents;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to remain in contact with Governments and the non-governmental organizations concerned, including the Independent Bureau for Humanitarian Issues, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Humanitarian activities

Africa

Angola

In February, OCHA launched a United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Angola, which initially sought $91.2 million for programmes for the period January to December 1998 and was later revised to $81 million.

With the resumption of low-intensity conflicts in the provinces of Angola, new groups of internally displaced persons migrated to safe havens (see PART ONE, Chapter II). By November, 330,000 new internally displaced persons had been confirmed, raising the total population of such persons to almost 1.4 million. As the situation deteriorated from mid-April 1998, funds earmarked for transition programmes were shifted towards rehabilitation and development. The Appeal received just over 68 per cent of its requirements as at 11 November. In December, OCHA launched a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal covering January to December 1999 for a total of $67 million.

Comoros

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/30 F [YUN 1996, p. 808], the Secretary-General, in a September report [A/53/330], presented the results of a United Nations mission (25 August-6 September 1997) to evaluate the emergency humanitarian and economic assistance needs of the Comoros. The mission found that, in view of the socio-economic crisis facing the country, immediate assistance was necessary in the areas of food, agriculture, livestock-raising, fisheries, health, nutrition, education, water and sanitation, and population issues. A rapid response was required to meet the needs that the vast majority of the target population could not satisfy. Estimates of those needs were annexed to the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 F [draft: A/53/L.29 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Special emergency economic assistance to the Comoros

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on emergency economic assistance to the Comoros,

Recalling its resolution 51/30 F of 13 December 1996 on special emergency economic assistance to the Comoros,

Noting the fact that the Comoros has been subjected to external events beyond its control,

Noting also the political, economic and social trauma caused by those events, which are paralysing the economic activities of the Government, including the collection of State revenues from much of the national territory, thereby depriving the State budget of the greater part of its regular budget income,

Noting further that, as a result of those events, a severe economic crisis has had serious political consequences characterized by separatist tendencies which, since March 1997, have threatened the territorial integrity and economic and social survival of the Comoros,

Recognizing that this situation has resulted in a decline in the country's gross domestic product with adverse economic consequences; the complete impoverishment of the population; the inability of the Government to ensure that the salaries of civil servants are paid regularly; the virtual paralysis owing to a lack of resources, of the reconstruction and development programmes essential to the survival of the country; and a severe recession that has led to the collapse of the energy sector and to acute electricity and fuel shortages,

Aware of the efforts made by the Government and the people of the Comoros to assist the most affected and deprived sectors of the population,

Considering in particular that, in order to respond to those urgent humanitarian needs, the Government of the Comoros, in the absence of other resources, has had to reallocate to that end, as a matter of great urgency, the major part of the budget required for the functioning of the State and the financial resources normally devoted to vital economic and social programmes,

Considering also that the unfavourable situation of the Comoros, which is among the least developed countries, is aggravated by several important factors, including the physical distance from its trading partners, the scarcity of natural resources, the diminutive size of the domestic market, the fall in prices of its export products and the poverty of its soil,

1. Notes with satisfaction the report of the Secretary-General on emergency economic assistance to the Comoros;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for having, from 25 August to 6 September 1997, expeditiously dispatched the multidisciplinary humanitarian and technical assessment mission to the Comoros, and for the mission's conclusions, which are contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

3. Urges the international community to respond generously to the needs for urgent assistance identified in annexes I and II to the report of the Secretary-General, and to grant to the Government of the Comoros all necessary assistance in order to enable it to cope with its budget deficits, including gifts in cash and in kind and debt forgiveness;

4. Expresses its gratitude to all States and to all inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, and to all the international organizations concerned, including United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, for the assistance they have provided for the relief of the Comoros, and urges them, in consultation with the Government of the Comoros, to help the country to meet its most pressing humanitarian needs and to support its efforts to effect economic recovery;

5. Stresses that the financial resources available remain nonetheless insufficient vis-à-vis the basic needs to ensure the recovery of the country;

6. Requests all Member States and donor bodies, as well as the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to grant to the Comoros all necessary financial, economic and technical assistance, in order to enable it to achieve national reconstruction and sustainable development;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the above-mentioned assistance and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Eritrea

On 6 May, a border dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia flared into a major armed clash (see PART ONE, Chapter II). In June, the armed conflict expanded, resulting in civilian casualties and displacement of populations on both sides of the border. Some 100,000 people were displaced, while another 160,000 were affected, either through disruption of their ability to farm and conduct their normal livelihood, or by having to share their resources with the displaced. In addition to coping with the displaced, as at 17 August Eritrea had received over 17,000 returnees and persons who had been obliged to leave Ethiopia. The Government and local communities provided support for the displaced and the returnees from Ethiopia, but their capacity was surpassed and the need for significant international assistance was evident.

A UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance was launched, covering the period September 1998 to February 1999 for a total of $8.9 million. Funds received totalled $385,000, covering 4.3 per cent of requirements and leaving a shortfall of $8.5 million.

Ethiopia

Following an appeal on 15 June for assistance to the people displaced by the Ethiopian-Eritrean conflict covering some 145,000 displaced persons (in the non-food sector), and a planning figure of 300,000 (in the food sector), issued by Ethiopia's Disaster Prevention and Preparedness Commission, the United Nations sent two inter-agency assessment teams to the northern region of Tigray and Afar during the period 9 to 24 June. The teams conducted an assessment of the condition and needs of the war-affected people in terms of food, health, shelter/household, access to water and sanitation.

UN interventions from existing resources, reimbursable resources and resources appealed for on 7 September, covering the period September 1998 to February 1999, totalled $4.1 million. Of the total, $2.1 million was committed from existing resources, leaving a requirement of $2 million.

Great Lakes region and Central Africa

In February, OCHA launched a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal covering 1998 for countries of the Great Lakes region and Central Africa (Burundi, Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC), Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania), totalling $550.5 million. In March, another appeal sought $23.3 million for the Republic of the Congo, bringing the total figure for the region to $573.8 million. Contributions totalled $238.4 million, covering 41.5 per cent of requirements.

During the first six months of 1998, the appeals enabled progress in the reintegration of refugee populations in their home countries and a start in the rehabilitation of most communities.

However, the resumption of hostilities in the DRC in August put a stop to the return of refugees from the United Republic of Tanzania and neighbouring countries and provoked widespread internal displacement.

In August [A/53/292], the Secretary-General described special assistance given by UN agencies and other organizations to Central African countries hosting refugees (Burundi, Congo, DRC, Rwanda, United Republic of Tanzania) in the priority areas of women, children, food assistance and the environment. It also described activities carried out in areas where large numbers of refugees had returned to their countries of origin.

The Secretary-General noted that OCHA had strengthened its field coordination units in Burundi, the DRC and Rwanda and had established a new unit in Uganda. Regarding the consolidated appeal launched in March, he stated that as at 30 May only $49.5 million had been pledged, representing 8.6 per cent of the overall requirements.

In December, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal sought $314 million for the Great Lakes region in 1999, primarily for food aid, refugees, the needs of children and food production.

Following are country profiles of the appeals. For information on the DRC, see below, under "Special economic assistance".

Burundi

The political landscape in Burundi improved considerably in 1998 (see PART ONE, Chapter II). Nevertheless, the humanitarian suffering did not diminish significantly as more than 500,000 people remained internally displaced and over 300,000 Burundians still lived in neighbouring countries as refugees. The conflict in the DRC (see PART ONE, Chapter II) precipitated the spontaneous repatriation of some 30,000 Burundi refugees from that country, while another 10,000 persons repatriated to Burundi from the United Republic of Tanzania. Country-wide social indicators revealed a deteriorating situation, accentuated in areas of conflict. The arms embargo and sanctions remained in place, donors largely limited their involvement to the financing of emergency assistance, and the Government was unable to increase the provision of basic services.

In December, OCHA launched a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Burundi, seeking $84 million for the period January to December 1999.

Congo (Republic of the)

The civilian population was beginning to recover from the effects of the 1997 civil war [YUN 1997, p. 112] when fighting intensified in December 1998. Some 10 per cent of the country's population of 2.7 million was displaced; most of them were malnourished and in poor health. Chaos reigned in the capital and in the country's interior. Large numbers of civilians were caught in the crossfire among militia men, foreign troops and Government forces. The United Nations Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator, in collaboration with OCHA, issued a plan of action for emergency humanitarian assistance over a two-month period for priority humanitarian needs such as shelter, food, health, and water and sanitation.

A UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Republic of the Congo was launched in March covering January to December 1998 for a total of $23.3 million. The Appeal was not part of the initial appeal for the Great Lakes region and Central Africa.

Uganda

In October, some 400,000 international displaced persons in Uganda were being assisted by the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies with food, medical care, water and sanitation interventions, and non-food distributions. In addition, the humanitarian community was providing internally displaced persons and conflict-affected communities with emergency health care and education interventions and with psycho-social care, as well as undertaking more rehabilitative activities aimed at reinforcing coping mechanisms and increasing food security. Some 170,000 Sudanese refugees were also living in northern Uganda where the Government of Uganda, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), WFP and NGO partners assisted them. In addition, some 10,000 refugees from the DRC and 5,000 from Rwanda were in camps in southern and western Uganda.

WFP, in cooperation with NGO partners, distributed food to 100,000 internally displaced persons in Gulu, Kitgum and Bundibugyo and responded to small-scale food emergencies such as that caused by flooding in Lake Kyoga. Projects of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) helped beneficiaries increase their food production. UNHCR and WFP, working with the national and district governments and 20 NGO partners, ensured that over 185,000 refugees were provided with adequate food, shelter, health, water and sanitation, education and community services, as well as the necessary logistical support. A cholera epidemic swept through most of the country causing 1,887 deaths out of 46,192 reported cases as at October. Due to efforts by national and district authorities in co-ordination with donors, the effects and mortality rate were limited. Flooding of Lake Kyoga displaced between 10,000 and 15,000 people and affected agriculture and fishing in lakeside communities. WFP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the Ugandan Red Cross responded with food and non-food relief. The World Health Organization (WHO) also provided technical and material assistance to 10 southwestern districts following malaria outbreaks. During the year, the UN country team worked to increase strategic humanitarian coordination to improve emergency response. OCHA also opened a small humanitarian coordination unit.

In December, OCHA issued a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Uganda, seeking $70.4 million for January to December 1999.

United Republic of Tanzania

The United Republic of Tanzania continued to host the largest refugee population in the region. Since January, UNHCR had been receiving a new influx of asylum-seekers from Rwanda. As at September, some 260,000 Burundi refugees were living in camps in the country.

UNHCR assisted over 54,000 persons to repatriate to the DRC but the operation was disrupted in August due to the eruption of civil strife. Some 40,000 refugees from the DRC remained in camps in Tanzania. UNHCR assisted Rwandan refugees in the country by aiding the Government to determine the status of asylum-seekers, advocating their protection from refoulement and settling refugees in camps pending durable solutions.

A UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal was launched in December, seeking $75.2 million for January to December 1999.

Guinea-Bissau

On 7 June, a conflict erupted in Guinea-Bissau between the Government and the self-proclaimed military junta. Fighting between them in June and October resulted in the initial displacement of 350,000 people to the countryside or neighbouring countries, followed by an additional 80,000 to 100,000 from smaller towns. Following a 26 June truce, a period of relative calm followed and some 200,000 persons returned to Bissau, but the second wave of fighting forced the same people to leave the city again. In response, OCHA issued in July a United Nations Interim Inter-Agency Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance for 1 July to 31 December 1998, seeking $28.7 million, of which $14.5 million had been received as at 9 November.

Following the signing of a peace agreement on 1 November, an estimated 75,000 people returned to Bissau. In December, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Guinea-Bissau was launched, requiring $28.6 million for January to December 1999.

Liberia

In September [A/53/377], the Secretary-General described assistance provided by the UN system for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia. He reported that following the Fourth Ministerial Meeting of the Special Conference on Liberia [YUN 1997, p. 124], at which the Government tabled its Agenda for Rebuilding Liberia, a draft planning framework for reconstruction and recovery was developed by UNDP and the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank Group and the International Monetary Fund), as well as the United States Agency for International Development and the European Union, in consultation with the Government of Liberia and its major donors. That process culminated in the Government's National Reconstruction Programme (NRP), which identified the priority areas as the consolidation of peace and democracy, resettlement, reintegration and rebuilding the physical, social and institutional infrastructure. NRP was presented to donors at a conference (Paris, 7 April), where pledges and commitments totalled $230 million for the first phase of the two-year programme. The second-phase funding requirement was $227.7 million.

Economic activity in the country was gaining momentum, owing to an improved macro-economic environment and security situation. External debt was a serious constraint for reconstruction and recovery, and was estimated to be $2.4 billion as at 31 December 1997, with the multilateral component accounting for some $1.28 billion, or 53.4 per cent. International assistance aimed to contribute to creating and strengthening a foundation for sustainable development, ensuring respect for human rights and improvements in the security situation, and at capacity-building measures to ensure accountability and transparency in the use of national resources as a necessity for financial propriety. The report also described assistance provided by the UN system, including action taken in response to the donors' conference; the resettlement of internally displaced persons and the repatriation of refugees; voluntary repatriation; reintegration; community revival and restoration; health; primary education; sustainable livelihood; food security; capacity-building; and gender-related capacity-building.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Liberia for the period January to December 1998 amounted to $70 million, later revised downward to $62 million. The Appeal brought in $30 million, or 48.3 per cent of the requirements.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 I [draft: A/53/L.36 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 45/232 of 21 December 1990, 46/147 of 17 December 1991, 47/154 of 18 December 1992, 48/197 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 E of 20 December 1994, 50/58 A of 12 December 1995, 51/30 B of 5 December 1996 and 52/169 E of 16 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Commending the Economic Community of West African States and the United Nations for their collaborative efforts with the Government of Liberia in its peace-building objectives,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all donor countries, the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, the European Union, the Bretton Woods institutions and the non-governmental organizations for their participation in the Donors' Conference convened in Paris on 7 April 1998 for the reconstruction of Liberia, and urges those that have not yet honoured their pledges and commitments to do so;

2. Also expresses its gratitude to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their assistance and support for the peace-building process in Liberia, and urges that such assistance be continued;

3. Calls upon all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide assistance to Liberia in order to facilitate the implementation of its National Reconstruction Programme submitted at the Donors' Conference;

4. Urges the Government of Liberia to provide an enabling environment for the promotion of socio-economic development and a culture of sustained peace in the country, including a commitment to uphold the rule of law, national reconciliation and human rights;

5. Commends the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts to mobilize international assistance for the development and reconstruction of Liberia, and requests him:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Liberia in its reconstruction and development, including the return and reintegration of refugees, displaced persons and demobilized soldiers;

(b) To continue his collaboration with the Government of Liberia with the objective of holding, in due course, the second round-table conference of donors to consider the funding of the second phase of the National Reconstruction Programme, depending on progress in the fields of human rights, national reconciliation and the strengthening of the rule of law;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 2000, on the implementation of the present resolution;

7. Decides to consider at its fifty-fifth session the question of international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia.

Mozambique

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/30D [YUN 1996, p.812], the Secretary-General, in June [A/53/157], described international assistance for the reconstruction and development of Mozambique. He stated that economic performance had improved dramatically since the conclusion of the peace process, which culminated in multi-party elections in 1994 [YUN 1994, p.363]. Humanitarian assistance had ended and refugee reintegration programmes concluded. Mozambique was one of the 10 poorest countries, with a gross domestic product (GDP) per capita at roughly $100, a high child mortality rate, low literacy rate and a high rate of fertility. Human resource development was low and skilled labour and entrepreneurial capacity remained weak. The establishment of microeconomic stability had improved real household income and provided the basis for sustained economic expansion and poverty-reducing growth. Although foreign investment inflows were high, the country was experiencing skills gaps and infrastructural bottlenecks that would limit growth and the potential benefit of foreign investment. It had severe limitations in public sector capacity to deliver essential services and effectively regulate areas of public responsibility. The outlook for 1998 was that Mozambique would continue the trend towards strengthening economic performance. Growth was projected at 9.5 per cent on the back of macroeconomic stability, market reform and healthy foreign direct investment. Donor confidence in the Government's economic management was high.

Mozambique was in the midst of far-reaching structural economic reforms. Privatization, liberalization and deregulation had transformed the country from a state- to a private sector-dominated economy. At the same time, public service delivery from the overstretched state sector was being mobilized to meet the needs of post-war reconstruction and rehabilitation. Progress was being made in the social sector in developing policy and establishing investment for education, health, water, youth and social welfare. The report described the most salient reform initiatives pertaining to health, education, water, youth/children, agriculture, human development and poverty alleviation, the environment, the tax system and customs reform, banking sector reform, private sector reform, transport, energy and public sector reform, decentralization and governance. It also summarized UN system initiatives in Mozambique.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 G [draft: A/53/L.30/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976,

Recalling also its relevant resolutions, in particular resolution 45/227 of 21 December 1990, 47/42 of 9 December 1992, 49/21 D of 20 December 1994 and 51/30 D of 5 December 1996, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously to the call for assistance to Mozambique,

Reaffirming the principles for humanitarian assistance contained in the annex to its resolution 46/182 of 19 December 1991,

Recalling its resolutions 48/7 of 19 October 1993, 49/215 of 23 December 1994, 50/82 of 14 December 1995, 51/149 of 13 December 1996 and 52/173 of 18 December 1997 on assistance in mine clearance, and stressing the need to foster the establishment of national mine-clearance capacity with a view to enabling the Government of Mozambique to deal more effectively with the adverse effects of those weapons within the framework of the efforts for national reconstruction,

Bearing in mind that Mozambique is recovering from a devastating war and that a proper response to address the current situation in the country requires substantial international assistance in a comprehensive and integrated manner and linking, inter alia, resettlement to reintegration programmes in order to strengthen further the process of national reconstruction and development,

Bearing in mind also the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, and the mutual commitment entered into on that occasion,

Noting the mobilization and allocation of resources by States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist national efforts,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Mozambique,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Welcomes the assistance rendered to Mozambique by various States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;
3. Welcomes the progress made in the consolidation of a lasting peace and tranquillity, the enhancement of democracy and the promotion of national reconciliation in Mozambique;

4. Recognizes the ongoing efforts undertaken by the Government and the people of Mozambique for national reconstruction and development;

5. Stresses that Mozambique has made significant progress in mitigating the consequences of a devastating war and that continued substantial coordinated international assistance is required to assist the country in addressing its development needs;

6. Stresses also the significant progress made by the Government of Mozambique in extending essential social services and in establishing an operating environment for poverty reduction and sustainable human development;

7. Welcomes the development assistance focused on rehabilitation and extension of essential social services and infrastructure, human capital investment, promotion of smallholder agriculture and establishment of an enabling environment for the expansion of private sector activity;

8. Commends all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have contributed to mine action in Mozambique, and urges those that have the capacity to do so to continue to provide the needed assistance with a view to enabling the Government of Mozambique to develop its national mine-action capacity within the framework of the ongoing mine-action programme;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the Government of Mozambique:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize international assistance for the national reconstruction and development of Mozambique;

(b) To continue to coordinate the work of the United Nations system for adequate response to the development needs of Mozambique;

(c) To prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution for consideration by the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Sierra Leone

Despite the return of the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone in March 1998, conflict continued to plague recovery efforts. Hostilities spread over a large area of northern Sierra Leone from May through mid-December (see PART ONE, Chapter II). At the same time, conflict in the east limited access to populations around Kenema, while hostilities in the northwest in late November curtailed access by road to that region, as well as to Makeni. Increased rebel activities led to an upsurge in the number of displaced and persons needing humanitarian assistance. In December, it was estimated that 308,695 persons were displaced and an estimated 508,000 more were refugees in neighbouring countries. The humanitarian response to the crisis in the north was undermined by constraints relating to security and access, and continued insecurity in most areas of origin reduced the possibility of large-scale organized voluntary repatriation. In addition, humanitarian agencies had difficulties in developing a strategic response due to a lack of reliable information about the scale of the crisis. Nonetheless, under the UNHCR-assisted repatriation programme for professionals and students, 13,000 Sierra Leoneans were repatriated to Freetown and some 210,000 and 40,000 new arrivals were assisted in Guinea and Liberia, respectively. UNHCR began a pilot project for some 10,000 people in the east to assist spontaneous returnees with life-saving and life-sustaining support. During the 1998 planting season, some 155,000 farm families benefited from seeds and tools distribution, mainly by FAO, and over 500,000 Sierra Leoneans received food aid. Among other activities, UNICEF supported the Ministry of Health to revitalize and sustain up to 120 strategic peripheral health units in five accessible districts, and coordinated cholera prevention activities.

During the year, OCHA issued three consolidated appeals. In March, the UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Sierra Leone, covering 1 March to 31 May, requested $11 million, later revised to $9.77 million. Of the total, $2.4 million was received, meeting 24.1 per cent of requirements. A Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal sought $20.2 million to meet humanitarian assistance needs between 1 March and 31 December. The Appeal received $14 million, or 64.3 per cent of the requirements. An Inter-Agency Appeal issued in December, for January to December 1999, sought $27.9 million.

Somalia

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/169 L [YUN 1997, p. 906], the Secretary-General, in September [A/53/344], described assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners for humanitarian relief and the economic and social and rehabilitation of Somalia, including bilateral assistance by individual Member States. He reported that some progress was achieved on the humanitarian front in several regions, particularly in the north of the country, where there was noticeable economic growth. Parts of southern and central Somalia continued to be more linked to complex emergencies than to recovery. Although those areas were marked by an absence of authority and by fighting and political instability, small pockets were emerging that showed signs of economic growth. UN agencies adopted an area-based approach for the implementation of rehabilitation and development activities to improve the impact and sustainability of their programmes. However, the 1997 and 1998 UN Consolidated Appeals for Somalia were underfunded, seriously hampering efforts to assist the Somali populations to recover effectively from crisis and experience economic growth. UN agencies were attempting to build bridges between humanitarian assistance and early development work. The Secretary-General called on the international community to assist those parts of the country that showed signs of stability.

In March, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal issued by OCHA sought $79 million for January to December 1998, of which $33.8 million was received, or 42.8 per cent of the requirements. In addition, the United Nations and its partners issued a Donor Alert in November for $18 million to provide emergency assistance in food, nutrition and health to over 300,000 persons in central and southern Somalia affected by crop failure. In December, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal covering the period January to December 1999 was issued for humanitarian activities amounting to $66 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 December [meeting 82], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 M [draft: A/53/L.31 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/206 of 20 December 1988, 44/178 of 19 December 1989, 45/229 of 21 December 1990, 46/176 of 19 December 1991, 47/160 of 18 December 1992, 48/201 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 L of 20 December 1994, 50/58 G of 20 December 1995, 51/30 G of 13 December 1996 and 52/169 L of 16 December 1997 and the resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council on emergency assistance to Somalia,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 733(1992) of 23 January 1992 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, in which the Council, inter alia, urged all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to facilitate the efforts of the United Nations, its specialized agencies and humanitarian organizations to provide urgent humanitarian assistance to the affected population in Somalia and reiterated the call for the full respect of the security and safety of the personnel of those organizations and guarantee of their complete freedom of movement in and around Mogadishu and other parts of Somalia,

Noting the cooperation between the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others in their efforts to resolve the humanitarian, security and political crisis in Somalia,

Noting with appreciation the continued efforts made by the Secretary-General to assist the Somali people in their efforts to promote peace, stability and national reconciliation,

Noting with concern that the absence of central authority and effective civil institutions that characterizes Somalia continues to impede sustained comprehensive development and that, while the environment has become conducive to some reconstruction and development-oriented work in certain parts of the country, the humanitarian and security situation has remained fragile in other parts,

Welcoming the joint strategy for efficient and targeted assistance and the framework for collaboration developed and adopted by the United Nations and non-governmental organizations, and reaffirming the importance it attaches to the need for effective coordination and cooperation among the United Nations agencies and their partners,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia,

Deeply appreciative of the humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation support rendered by a number of States to alleviate the hardship and suffering of the affected Somali population,

Recognizing that, while the humanitarian situation remains fragile in some parts, there is a need to continue the ongoing rehabilitation and reconstruction process alongside the national reconciliation process, without prejudice to the provision of emergency relief assistance wherever and whenever required, as security allows,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the United Nations system aimed at working directly with Somali communities, whenever possible, in the absence of a recognized national government, and welcoming the continued focus of the United Nations, in partnership with Somali elders, other local leaders and skilled local counterparts at the grass-roots level, as well as non-governmental organizations, on a programme of assistance combining humanitarian and developmental approaches, given the varying conditions in different areas,

Re-emphasizing the importance of the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 to rehabilitate basic social and economic services at local and regional levels throughout the country,

1. Expresses its gratitude to all States and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations that have responded to the appeals of the Secretary-General and others by extending assistance to Somalia;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continuing and tireless efforts to mobilize assistance to the Somali people;

3. Welcomes the ongoing efforts of the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the League of Arab States, the European Union, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the countries of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development, the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and others to resolve the situation in Somalia;

4. Also welcomes the strategy of the United Nations focusing on the implementation of community-based interventions aimed at rebuilding local infrastructures and increasing the self-reliance of the local population, and the ongoing efforts by the United Nations agencies, their Somali counterparts and their partner organizations to establish and maintain close coordination and cooperation mechanisms available for the implementation of relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes;

5. Emphasizes the principle that the Somali people, in particular at the local level, have the primary responsibility for their own development and for the sustainability of rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance programmes, and reaffirms the importance it attaches to the creation of workable arrangements for collaboration between the United Nations system and its partner organizations and their Somali counterparts for the effective execution of rehabilitation and development activities in those parts of the country where peace and security prevail;

6. Urges all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue the further implementation of its resolution 47/160 so as to assist the Somali people to embark on the rehabilitation of basic social and economic services, as well as institution-building aimed at the restoration of civil administration at the local level in all those parts of the country where peace and security prevail;

7. Appeals to all the Somali parties concerned to seek peaceful means for resolving differences and to redouble their efforts to achieve national reconciliation that allows for transition from relief to reconstruction and development;

8. Calls upon all parties, movements and factions in Somalia to respect fully the security and safety of personnel of the United Nations and its specialized agencies and of non-governmental organizations, and to guarantee their complete freedom of movement throughout the country;

9. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize international humanitarian, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia;

10. Calls upon the international community to provide continuing and increased assistance in response to the United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance for Somalia covering the period from October 1998 to December 1999;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the critical situation in Somalia, to take all necessary measures for the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

Sudan

In 1998, the Sudan faced its most serious humanitarian crisis in more than a decade when the combination of a five-year drought and intensified conflict produced a major famine in the Bahr Al Ghazal region that put nearly 800,000 persons at risk of starvation. At the peak of the crisis in July, which the United Nations declared to be the worst humanitarian disaster of the year, some of the highest malnutrition rates ever recorded were reached in Wau and Ajiep. Although the situation eventually stabilized, with death rates and malnutrition declining dramatically after mid-August, Bahr Al Ghazal remained a devastated region at year-end with hundreds of thousands of people dependent upon emergency assistance. Humanitarian conditions in other war-affected areas of the Sudan continued to deteriorate in 1998. In addition, in late August and September, the Sudan experienced the worst flooding for several decades, affecting an estimated 2 million people. In some areas, up to 70 per cent of summer crops were destroyed. During the year, Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) mounted the most complex emergency interventions in its 10-year history. While the main purpose of OLS was to provide humanitarian relief services for war-affected populations, the total needs of those populations were such that they could not be met by agencies working within OLS. Nonetheless, generous donor funding allowed OLS to increase deliveries tenfold and operate life-saving interventions, including feeding centres, vaccination campaigns and emergency health facilities. Almost the entire amount appealed for by OLS agencies was received.

In February, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal covering January to December sought $109.4 million, which was revised upward to $206 million. Some $313.8 million was pledged or contributed.

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/169 F [YUN 1997, p. 908], the Secretary-General, in a September report on emergency assistance to the Sudan [A/53/307], covering the period October 1997 to July 1998, described the situation in the Sudan, emergency operations and OLS, and action taken by Member States. He stated that efforts to coordinate the international response to the crisis included a donor consultation in March and a meeting in May of the International Advisory Committee. The Secretary-General's Special Envoy focused on reducing constraints to the operational environment. Minimum operational standards were introduced to ensure programme effectiveness and safety of humanitarian personnel in OLS areas. As a result of those efforts, the Government consistently granted permits for international staff to monitor and supervise interventions. Despite improvements, operational bottlenecks persisted. Flights into rebel-held areas were turned back on four occasions, UN agencies and NGOs continued to experience long delays in clearing goods through ports of entry and communications equipment remained in the possession of the Government in Malakal and Bor.

The Secretary-General concluded that prospects for an early end to the crisis in southern Sudan remained limited. Agencies predicted that in the short term more people would continue to cross the threshold from coping to starvation, necessitating adjustments in the number of people in need and the amount of relief required. The agencies concurred that maintaining and expanding access to populations in need would remain a top priority, and recognized that a ceasefire would allow humanitarian organizations to stabilize the situation more effectively. The United Nations would continue to insist that minimum operational standards be adhered to by the warring parties if humanitarian operations in conflict zones were to be maintained.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December [meeting 92], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 O [draft: A/53/L.72] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 43/8 of 18 October 1988, 43/52 of 6 December 1988, 44/12 of 24 October 1989, 45/226 of 21 December 1990, 46/178 of 19 December 1991, 47/162 of 18 December 1992, 48/200 of 21 December 1993, 49/21 K of 20 December 1994, 50/58 J of 22 December 1995, 51/30 I of 17 December 1996 and 52/169 F of 16 December 1997 on emergency assistance to the Sudan,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming agreed conclusions 1998/1 of the Economic and Social Council, adopted by the Council at the humanitarian segment of its substantive session of 1998, in which, among other things, the Council reaffirmed that international cooperation to address emergency situations should be provided in accordance with international law and national laws, and that the affected State has the primary role in the initiation, organization, coordination and implementation of humanitarian assistance within its territory,

Welcoming also the agreements reached by the parties to Operation Lifeline Sudan to facilitate delivery of relief assistance to affected populations, as well as the progress made by the Emergency Relief Coordinator and the Office for Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs in strengthening the coordination of the Operation,

Noting with appreciation the increased contributions to the 1998 inter-agency appeal for Operation Lifeline Sudan and the progress made in the operation following a lower level of contributions in the first quarter, and noting also that considerable relief needs still remain to be addressed, in particular in the areas of food and non-food assistance, including assistance to combat such diseases as malaria, and for logistics, emergency recovery, rehabilitation and development,

Expressing concern over the disastrous consequences of floods that have occurred in various parts of the country lately, and welcoming the appeal for assistance launched by the United Nations in that regard,

Calling for an early resolution to the conflict, and expressing concern that its continuation further increases the suffering of the civilian population and undermines the effectiveness of international, regional and national humanitarian assistance,

Reaffirming the need for all parties to continue to facilitate the work of humanitarian organizations in implementing emergency assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicines, shelter and health care, for which safe and unhindered access to the affected populations has to be respected by all parties,

Recognizing the need in emergency situations to ensure the smooth transition from relief to rehabilitation and development so as to reduce dependence on external food aid and other relief services,

1. Acknowledges with appreciation the cooperation by the Government of the Sudan with the United Nations, including the agreements and arrangements achieved to facilitate relief operations with a view to improving United Nations assistance to affected areas, and encourages the continuation of that cooperation;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the donor community, United Nations agencies and governmental and non-governmental organizations for the contributions so far made to the humanitarian needs of the Sudan, and calls upon them to continue their assistance;

3. Stresses the need for Operation Lifeline Sudan to be operated and managed with a view to ensuring its efficiency, transparency and effectiveness, with the full involvement and cooperation of the Government of the Sudan, taking cognizance of the relevant Operation Lifeline Sudan agreements reached by the parties, as well as consultations in the preparation of the consolidated annual inter-agency appeal for the Operation;

4. Recognizes the need for neutrality and impartiality of humanitarian activities, and the full cooperation of all parties, and stresses in this connection that Operation Lifeline Sudan should operate within the principle of national sovereignty and the framework of international cooperation in accordance with the relevant provisions of international law;

5. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to the emergency needs, recovery and development of the country, and urges all States, donor countries, the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide assistance to alleviate the plight of the population affected by the recent floods;

6. Urges the international community to give assistance for the rehabilitation of transportation means and infrastructure vital for the provision of relief supplies in the Sudan and their cost-effectiveness, and in this context stresses the importance of continued cooperation by all the parties involved so as to facilitate and improve the delivery of relief supplies;

7. Calls upon the donor community and the organizations of the United Nations system to provide financial, technical and medical assistance, guided by the actions called for by the General Assembly in its relevant resolutions to combat such diseases as malaria and other epidemics in the Sudan;

8. Takes note of and is encouraged by the signing of the April 1997 Peace Agreement, as well as the convening of rounds of talks between the Government and the Sudan People's Liberation Army faction under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development of the Countries of the Horn of Africa, calls for the intensification of its efforts with more frequent and regular talks to achieve a lasting peaceful solution and in this connection welcomes the announced ceasefire, and calls upon the parties to the conflict to maintain and broaden the ceasefire in order to ensure the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

9. Urges the international community to continue to support national programmes of rehabilitation, voluntary resettlement and reintegration of returnees and internally displaced persons, as well as assistance to refugees;

10. Stresses the imperative of ensuring the safety of humanitarian personnel, as well as safe and unhindered access for providing relief assistance to all affected populations, and the importance of strict observance of the principles and guidelines of Operation Lifeline Sudan, and of international humanitarian law reaffirming the necessity for humanitarian personnel to respect national laws;

11. Urges all parties involved to continue to offer all feasible assistance, including facilitating the movement of relief supplies and personnel, so as to guarantee the success of Operation Lifeline Sudan in all affected parts of the country, with special emphasis on national capacity-building in the humanitarian field for governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as on meeting emergency relief needs;

12. Welcomes the signing by the Government of the Sudan of the Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction, urges all parties to the conflict to desist from using anti-personnel mines, calls upon the international community to refrain from supplying mines to the region, and urges the international community and United Nations agencies to provide necessary assistance related to mine action in the Sudan;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize and coordinate resources and support for Operation Lifeline Sudan and to report on the emergency situation in the affected areas and the recovery, rehabilitation and development of the country to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

Asia

Afghanistan

During the year, war, poverty and natural disasters contributed to a further deterioration in the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan, illustrated by the widespread loss of human life, destruction of social and economic infrastructures, environmental degradation, food insecurity and malnutrition, high unemployment, a total lack of social services and an increase in illicit drug production. In addition, the floods and earthquakes that struck south-western and north-eastern Afghanistan in the first half of the year seriously affected people in more than 420 remote villages. In the Central Highlands, a Taliban-imposed blockade of the Ghazni-Kabul route impacted the food security of an estimated 167,000 people. In May, the Taliban opened a limited humanitarian corridor to allow WFP to transport 800 tons of food into the region on condition that 200 tons were also provided to a Taliban enclave in a conflict zone. The food shortage was further exacerbated by the failure of the Northern Alliance (later the United Front) to provide security and ensure safety of food convoys.

As at November, only $52.7 million, or 33.5 per cent of requirements, was available in response to a January Consolidated Appeal for Afghanistan of $157.3 million for the period January to December 1998. The United Nations Coordinator for Afghanistan launched an emergency appeal for $9.5 million in June for relief and emergency rehabilitation support for victims of the May earthquake.

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/211 A [YUN 1997, p. 910], the Secretary-General, in September [A/53/346], reviewed the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan and described humanitarian assistance provided by the United Nations and its partners over the past year. He reported that the operational environment in the country fluctuated unpredictably. Insecurity in northern Afghanistan did not allow the United Nations to resume activities there, while interference with programme design and implementation compelled UN agencies to suspend assistance activities in southern Afghanistan in March. A high-level UN inter-agency mission to Afghanistan concluded a 23-point memorandum of understanding in May, laying out a code of conduct for UN and local authorities, setting up a mechanism to enhance cooperation and resolution of problems and dealing in a preliminary way with the gender issues that plagued relations between the Taliban and the United Nations. That allowed UN operations to resume in southern Afghanistan on 28 May.

WFP continued to be an active partner in providing repatriation and reintegration assistance under the voluntary group repatriation programme. An estimated 28,000 internally displaced persons were assisted in five camps in Herat by WFP and other UN agencies, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and NGOs. Vulnerable groups continued to receive relief and rehabilitation assistance from the United Nations and NGOs through WFP's bread sales project, winter relief assistance and support for income-generation projects. Relief assistance was also provided to over 50,000 earthquake victims, 88,000 inhabitants in the blockaded Central Highlands region and 28,000 internally displaced persons in camps at Herat.

The Secretary-General concluded that Afghanistan had all the ingredients of a complex emergency. He called on all Afghans to lift unconditionally any blockade of humanitarian relief supplies, and on the Taliban to facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance in areas under their control, including lifting the ban on girls' education and women's employment, and to ensure the safety and security of all humanitarian personnel. He appealed to donors to increase their contributions to the 1998 Consolidated Appeal for Afghanistan, and called on the international community to support and strengthen the link between the peace process and humanitarian aid efforts through common programming.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December [meeting 93], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/203 B [draft: A/53/L.66 & Add.1] without vote [agenda items 20 (c) & 45].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/140 of 20 December 1994, 50/88 A of 19 December 1995, 51/195 A of 17 December 1996 and 52/211 A of 19 December 1997,

Expressing its grave concern about the continuation of the military confrontation in Afghanistan, threatening regional peace and security and causing massive loss of life and extensive human suffering, further destruction of property, serious damage to the economic and social infrastructure, refugee flows and other forcible displacements of large numbers of people,

Deeply disturbed by insufficient security conditions for United Nations personnel and other humanitarian personnel and by various restrictions of access imposed on them,

Deeply disturbed also by the closure of the Kabul offices of international non-governmental organizations, the expulsion of foreign workers and the arrest of local personnel, which have caused the non-governmental organizations to curtail their much-needed help to the civilian population of Kabul,

Remaining deeply concerned about the problem of millions of anti-personnel landmines and unexploded ordnance as well as the continued laying of new landmines in Afghanistan, which continue to prevent many Afghan refugees and internally displaced persons from returning to their villages and working in their fields,

Expressing its grave concern at the grave violations of human rights and violations of international humanitarian law in Afghanistan and at the inadequacy of measures taken by the warring factions to reverse the situation,

Deeply concerned by the continuing and substantiated reports of violations of human rights, in particular of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, and welcoming the decision of the United Nations to appoint gender and human rights advisers as an integral part of the office of the United Nations resident and humanitarian coordinator in Afghanistan,

Noting with deep concern the adverse effects of human rights violations on international relief and reconstruction programmes in Afghanistan as well as refugee repatriation programmes,

Expressing its grave concern for the well-being of internally displaced persons and the civilian population of Afghanistan without shelter, who face a long winter possibly deprived of basic foods, owing, inter alia, to the looting of United Nations premises and food supplies and to the denial by the warring factions of adequate conditions for the delivery of aid by humanitarian organizations,

Distressed by the loss of life caused by earthquakes and floods, and expressing its appreciation to all States, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that provided emergency relief,

Affirming the urgent need to continue, if conditions permit, international humanitarian assistance and action to assist Afghanistan in restoring basic services,

Welcoming the principle-centred approach towards humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation in Afghanistan as outlined in the Strategic Framework and in the document entitled "Next Steps for the United Nations in Afghanistan", and the common programming mechanisms introduced by the United Nations,

Expressing its gratitude to all Governments that have rendered assistance to Afghan refugees, in particular the Governments of Pakistan and of the Islamic Republic of Iran, and recognizing the need for continuing international assistance for the maintenance abroad and the voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees and internally displaced persons,

Expressing its appreciation to all States, the United Nations system, international organizations and non-governmental organizations that have responded positively and continue to respond, where conditions permit, to the humanitarian needs of Afghanistan, as well as to the Secretary-General for his efforts in mobilizing and coordinating the delivery of appropriate humanitarian assistance,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations contained therein;

2. Calls upon all relevant organizations of the United Nations to continue to coordinate closely their humanitarian assistance to Afghanistan on the basis of the Strategic Framework for Afghanistan, in particular to ensure a consistent approach on matters of principle, human rights and security, and appeals to donor countries as well as other humanitarian organizations to cooperate closely with the United Nations;

3. Calls upon the leaders of all Afghan parties to place the highest priority on national reconciliation, acknowledging the desire of the Afghan people for rehabilitation, reconstruction and economic and social development;

4. Demands that all Afghan parties respect international humanitarian law and that they, in particular the Taliban, ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of all humanitarian personnel and the protection of property of humanitarian organizations, including non-governmental organizations, and cooperate fully with the United Nations and associated bodies as well as with other humanitarian organizations and agencies in their efforts to respond to the humanitarian needs of the people of Afghanistan;

5. Condemns all blockades or other interference in the delivery of humanitarian relief supplies to the Afghan people as a violation of international humanitarian law, and notes the recent lifting of the blockade in central Afghanistan by the Taliban;

6. Urges all Afghan parties to ensure safe and unimpeded access for and facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance, in particular the supply of food, medicine, shelter and health care and to prevent the looting of United Nations premises and food supplies;

7. Takes note of the Supplementary Protocol to the Memorandum of Understanding of 13 May 1998, signed by the United Nations and the Taliban on the security of United Nations personnel in Afghanistan, and urges the Taliban to take the necessary steps for its full implementation;

8. Denounces the continuing discrimination against girls and women and religious minorities and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan, while noting with deep concern their adverse effects on international relief and reconstruction programmes in Afghanistan, and calls upon all parties within Afghanistan to respect fully the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments, inter alia, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

9. Strongly urges all of the Afghan parties to end discriminatory policies and to recognize, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of women and men, including their rights to full and equal participation in the life of the country, freedom of movement, access to education and health facilities, employment outside the home, personal security and freedom from intimidation and harassment in particular with respect to the implications of discriminatory policies for the distribution of aid;

10. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan integrates a gender perspective and that it actively attempts to promote the participation of both women and men, and that women benefit equally with men from such assistance;

11. Expresses concern over the continued laying of landmines and urges all Afghan parties to put a complete halt to the use of landmines, which continues to take a heavy toll on civilians and seriously impedes the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

12. Urgently appeals to all States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide, when conditions on the ground permit, all possible financial, technical and material assistance for the Afghan population and the voluntary, safe and secure return of refugees and internally displaced persons;

13. Calls upon the international community to respond to the inter-agency consolidated appeal for emergency humanitarian and rehabilitation assistance for Afghanistan to be launched by the Secretary-General for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1999, bearing in mind the availability also of the Afghanistan Emergency Trust Fund;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the cluster of items on coordination of humanitarian assistance, the item entitled "Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and reconstruction of war-stricken Afghanistan".

Kazakhstan

The Semipalatinsk nuclear testing range in Kazakhstan (the Polygon) operated from 1949 to 1991, when it was closed by the President of Kazakhstan. During that period, the explosion of over 500 devices profoundly damaged communities in the Semipalatinsk region. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/169 M [YUN 1997, p. 911], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/53/424] on international cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the region. The report reflected the findings of a joint mission (15-30 June) charged with, among other things, assessing the impact of the testing activities on the problems and needs of the people of the region in environment, health, economic recovery and humanitarian assistance.

To address the issues at the national level, Kazakhstan set up a Governmental Inter-Ministerial Committee. For its part, the United Nations established a UN inter-agency task force at Headquarters and a field-level task force, which initiated collaboration and coordination between agencies, assisted in identifying field experts and provided substantive inputs to the process. More than 20 international experts, in collaboration with national experts, were deployed for two weeks, beginning on 15 June, to analyse the situation and contribute to the preparation of an action plan for review by the Government. The mission's findings were tabled at a workshop (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 29-30 June), which produced a draft action plan addressing the ecological, health, economic and humanitarian problems and needs of the region. The draft was submitted for Government review at a meeting of the Inter-Ministerial Committee on 3 July.

The mission concluded that the long-term activity at the test site had had severe, long-term effects for a large group of people far beyond those directly affected by the radiation. In addition, the population was left exceptionally vulnerable to the economic, ecological and social consequences of the transition following the collapse of the former Soviet Union. Consideration should therefore be given to follow-up actions to address the urgent needs identified, while building on the results from specific donor assistance. A meeting between Member States, with the participation of UN agencies, should be considered to mobilize support for actions proposed, and the United Nations should assist the Government to establish a coordination mechanism to plan and implement future and ongoing assistance.

The mission identified priority needs in the environment and ecology, health, economic recovery and humanitarian assistance sectors. An-nexed to the report was a detailed description of projects under the priority areas, along with the corresponding cost estimates totalling $43.2 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 H [draft: A/53/L.32 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

International cooperation and coordination for the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/169 M of 16 December 1997,

Welcoming the report of the Secretary-General,

Recognizing that the Semipalatinsk nuclear testing ground, inherited by Kazakhstan and closed in 1991, has become a matter of serious concern for the people and the Government of Kazakhstan with regard to its consequences for the lives and health of the people, especially children and other vulnerable groups, as well as for the environment of the region,

Conscious that the international community should pay due attention to the issue of the human, ecological and socio-economic dimensions of the situation in the Semipalatinsk region,

Recognizing the need to coordinate national and international efforts aimed at the rehabilitation of the health of the affected population and the environment in this region,

Bearing in mind the need for know-how in minimizing and mitigating radiological, health, socio-economic, psychological and environmental problems in the Semipalatinsk region,

Recalling the Almaty Declaration of the heads of the Central Asian States of 28 February 1997, proclaiming 1998 as the Year of Environmental Protection in the region of Central Asia,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the conclusions and recommendations contained therein, which constitute a useful input in the elaboration of an overall plan of action to solve the health, ecological, economic and humanitarian problems and to meet the needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

2. Stresses the need for greater international attention and extra efforts in solving problems with regard to the Semipalatinsk region and its population;

3. Urges the international community to provide assistance in the formulation and implementation of special programmes and projects of treatment and care for the affected population in the Semipalatinsk region;

4. Invites all States, relevant multilateral financial organizations and other entities of the international community, including non-governmental organizations, to share their knowledge and experience in order to contribute to the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region;

5. Invites all Member States, in particular donor States, relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system, including the funds and programmes, to participate in the rehabilitation of the Semipalatinsk region;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to pursue a consultative process, with the participation of interested States and relevant United Nations agencies, on modalities for mobilizing the necessary support to seek appropriate solutions to the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region, including those prioritized in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to enhance world public awareness of the problems and needs of the Semipalatinsk region;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on progress made in the implementation of the present resolution under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance".

Tajikistan

The overall political and security situation in Tajikistan remained fragile (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). In many parts of the country, the rule of law had broken down, with warlords, military groups and others loosely affiliated to the United Tajik Opposition in control. International agencies were forced to pull out of the Karategin Valley following the killing of four staff members of the United Nations Observer Mission in Tajikistan in July. Violence in the relatively calm Leninabad Region in early November was testament to the precarious security environment which, coupled with the onset of winter, further impeded the delivery of humanitarian assistance.

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/169 I [YUN 1997, p. 913], the Secretary-General, in September [A/53/316], described the situation in Tajikistan and the implementation of humanitarian assistance during the period December 1997 to mid-August 1998. He stated that the humanitarian situation remained precarious, with increasing emergency needs throughout the country being only partly met through international assistance. The situation was exacerbated by the State's lack of capacity to respond to the social and welfare needs of its citizens. The current unstable environment was preventing the establishment of wide-reaching rehabilitation programmes, thus accelerating the deterioration. The emergency situation in the 1990s had evolved into a slow deterioration of vulnerable groups, including pensioners, a growing number of whom were totally dependent on international humanitarian aid. WFP estimated that 80 per cent of people lived below the poverty line, while, according to the State statistical agency, almost 50 per cent of the population were unemployed.

The UN Consolidated Appeal for Tajikistan, launched in March, requested $34.6 million for 1998, of which $10.3 million was received, accounting for 29.8 per cent of requirements. Donor response underscored the low level of interest in Tajikistan, as was the case in 1997.

Assistance provided by UN agencies included rehabilitation and reintegration support by UNHCR, other agencies and NGOs, including a shelter programme for the reconstruction of 2,000 houses for returnees. WFP and other food agencies had about 1.3 million beneficiaries requiring assistance, more than 20 per cent of the population. Food agencies were also continuing efforts in all regions to promote self-reliance and household food security through land-lease schemes, income-generating activities and food for work and training activities. Other UN agencies supported the health sector, including carrying out vaccination campaigns. UNDP and the World Bank assisted Tajikistan in preparing for the World Bank Consultative Group on Tajikistan meeting in Paris on 20 May. The United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) completed the rehabilitation of the water supply system in the southern part of the country and UNICEF provided hand pumps and sand filters to schools and other institutions, as well as hygiene education and training.

In December, OCHA launched a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for January to December 1999, which sought $24.8 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 K [draft: A/53/L.44 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency international assistance for peace, normalcy and rehabilitation in Tajikistan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/30 J of 25 April 1997 and 52/169 I of 16 December 1997,

Recalling also Security Council resolutions 1113(1997) of 12 June 1997, 1128(1997) of 12 September 1997, 1138(1997) of 14 November 1997, 1167(1998) of 14 May 1998 and 1206(1998) of 12 November 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Welcoming the progress made by the parties in the movement towards the implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan,

Commending the efforts of the United Nations, in particular those of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Tajikistan and of the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, in assisting the parties in the implementation of the General Agreement,

Noting that the economic situation in Tajikistan remains bleak, constraining the efforts of the Government of Tajikistan to support the vulnerable population, including returning refugees and displaced persons, and that the country remains in dire need of humanitarian, rehabilitation and development assistance,

Expressing its regret over the muted response to the 1998 United Nations inter-agency appeal for Tajikistan,

Recognizing the need for international support in creating conditions to shed the dependency of Tajikistan on humanitarian assistance, thus preventing Tajikistan from becoming a permanent emergency,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and achieving national reconciliation in Tajikistan and the ability of the country to meet the humanitarian needs of its people and to take effective steps towards the rapid revitalization of the economy, and reaffirming the urgent need to assist Tajikistan in its efforts to restore basic services and the infrastructure of the country,

Expressing concern that the security situation in parts of Tajikistan remains volatile,

Deeply concerned about the danger posed by land-mines in Tajikistan,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the observations and recommendations set out therein;

2. Welcomes the efforts aimed at achieving peace and national reconciliation in Tajikistan, encourages the parties to expedite the full implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, and encourages the Commission on National Reconciliation to continue its efforts, in particular those aimed at the institution of a broad dialogue among the various political forces in the country in the interests of restoration and strengthening of civil accord in Tajikistan;

3. Welcomes with appreciation the efforts undertaken by the Secretary-General in drawing the attention of the international community to the acute humanitarian problems of Tajikistan and in mobilizing assistance for the implementation of the General Agreement and the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country;

4. Welcomes the appointment by the Secretary-General of the United Nations Resident Coordinator as Deputy Special Representative of the Secretary-General in Tajikistan;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the States, organizations of the United Nations system, the World Bank, other intergovernmental organizations and all relevant humanitarian organizations, agencies and non-governmental organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, that have responded and continue to respond positively to the humanitarian needs of Tajikistan;

6. Welcomes the pledges made at the donor conference convened by the Secretary-General at Vienna on 24 and 25 November 1997 to obtain international support dedicated to the implementation of the General Agreement, in particular in the areas of political reconciliation and democratization, the demobilization and reintegration of ex-combatants and the reform of power structures, and the repatriation and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons, and invites the donor countries to continue to provide necessary assistance;

7. Notes with satisfaction the results of the meeting of the World Bank Consultative Group on Tajikistan, held in Paris on 20 May 1998;

8. Encourages Member States and others concerned to continue assistance to alleviate the urgent humanitarian needs of Tajikistan and to offer support to Tajikistan for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its economy;

9. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General to continue the United Nations humanitarian programme in Tajikistan by issuing a consolidated inter-agency appeal for humanitarian assistance to Tajikistan for 1999, and invites Member States to fund programmes included in the appeal;

10. Strongly condemns the murder of four members of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan, and urges the parties to ensure the safety, security and freedom of movement of United Nations and other international humanitarian personnel, as well as the safety and security of their premises;

11. Encourages the parties to cooperate in order to reduce the threat from the indiscriminate use of landmines to the civilian population of Tajikistan and to the provision of humanitarian assistance;

12. Recognizes that comprehensive international support remains essential for the intensification of the peace process in Tajikistan, and reminds both parties that the ability of the international community to mobilize and to continue assistance for Tajikistan is linked to the security of the personnel of the United Nations Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and of international organizations and of humanitarian workers;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to monitor the humanitarian situation in Tajikistan and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to consider at its fifty-fourth session the question of the situation of Tajikistan under the item entitled "Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance".

Europe

Albania

The refugee crisis in northern Albania began in May/June when ethnic Albanians began fleeing the fighting in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia province of Kosovo (see PART ONE, Chapter V). By October, UNHCR estimated that 23,600 refugees from Kosovo had entered the country. The security situation remained tenuous, with the Government appearing to have little control over law and order in many districts. The lack of improvement in the security situation caused most of the international aid agencies to withdraw from northern Albania. In collaboration with local authorities and national and international NGOs, UN agencies were attempting to provide effective assistance to refugees in the north.

In December, OCHA launched a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the countries of the former Yugoslavia (see below) and Albania for the period January to December 1999 totaling $359.4 million, of which $13.6 million was identified for Albania.

The former Yugoslavia

The countries of the former Yugoslavia—Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM)—continued to evolve, with different dynamics and rates of progress. In Bosnia and Herzegovina, returns, including minority returns, were taking place, with an estimated 95,000 refugees and displaced persons returning by early October, and some 30,000 minority returns. However, the momentum for returns faced obstacles because the majority of returnees were obliged to seek temporary locations since their houses continued to be occupied, which created programmatic and social strains, as well as protection concerns. UNHCR registered 8,500 Kosovo refugees in November, which placed an additional burden on reception and assistance capacities.

In Croatia, the mandate of the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) ended in January (see PART ONE, Chapter V), which saw the movement of tens of thousands of ethnic Serbs, primarily displaced persons from other parts of Croatia, but also residents of Eastern Slavonia, out of the country. In September, Government statistics indicated that 68,328 refugees and displaced persons had been registered as having returned home. There continued to be major problems in post-war reconstruction. The Government budget did not fully meet the needs, and funding from the international community was limited. Reconstruction remained focused mainly on the former UNTAES region.

In FRY, in addition to over 500,000 refugees from Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina who remained as a result of the 1992-1995 war in the former Yugoslavia, the 1998 violence in the province of Kosovo (see below) led to the displacement of over 300,000 persons. Economic conditions in FRY deteriorated further in 1998. About half of the more than 500,000 refugees faced extremely difficult circumstances and needed humanitarian assistance. In Kosovo, even prior to major violence, the economy was poorly developed. By November, a large part of the population depended on external support.

Throughout 1998, the refugee situation in FYROM remained calm, without a major refugee influx. In October, assistance programmes and protection activities were initiated for refugees from Kosovo to whom the Government had granted the status of humanitarian assisted persons, which allowed them to stay temporarily in FYROM.

The UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY and FYROM, launched in November 1997 for the period January to December 1998 and seeking $459.3 million [YUN 1997, p. 915], received $254.2 million, covering 55.3 per cent of requirements.

In December, OCHA launched a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, FRY, FYROM and Albania, for the period January to December 1999, for a total of $359.4 million.

Kosovo

In response to the escalating crisis in Kosovo (see PART ONE, Chapter V), a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Flash Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance Needs Related to the Kosovo Crisis was launched in June, covering the period 1 June to 31 August for a total of $18 million. The Appeal covered assistance for 54,000 persons in FRY, 20,000 in FYROM and planned caseloads of 50,000 in Albania, in addition to contingency planning for an increase in those numbers. As at 24 August, the overall donor response met only some 53 per cent of the total requested by providing $9.6 million.

Following the issue of the Flash Appeal, humanitarian needs increased, owing to a marked escalation of the conflict. The deteriorating security situation led to a sharp increase in the number of internally displaced persons and war-affected civilians and, to a lesser extent, of refugees. By early August, it was estimated that 50 per cent of Kosovo's population was affected by displacement. The FRY Republic of Montenegro recorded the arrival of close to 30,000 displaced persons, and over 20,000 displaced were estimated to have fled to other parts of Serbia. An estimated 14,500 refugees began arriving in Albania, following a lull in June and July, as well as in Bosnia and Herzegovina, straining that country's reception capacity. In Kosovo, normal life and trade were totally disrupted in areas affected by the conflict. Homes and fields were torched, farm animals left to roam free or killed and farm equipment destroyed. On 8 September, OCHA issued a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for Humanitarian Assistance Related to the Crisis in Kosovo for the period 1 June to 31 December, requesting $54.3 million, which was later revised to $56.5 million, to assist more than 400,000 persons affected by the conflict in FRY and for those forced to seek refuge in Albania and other neighbouring countries. Some $56.5 million was received, meeting 92.6 per cent of requirements.

Special economic assistance

African economic recovery and development

In 1998, African economic recovery and development continued to receive the attention of the international community. The Secretary-General, in April, submitted a report [A/52/871-S/1998/318] on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa (see PART ONE, Chapter II). In the section of the report on building a durable peace and promoting economic growth, the Secretary-General declared that development was central to the prospects for reducing conflict in Africa, and identified action that could contribute to sustained economic growth, including creating a positive environment for investment and economic growth, emphasizing social development, restructuring international aid, reducing debt burdens, opening international markets, supporting regional cooperation and integration and harmonizing international and bilateral initiatives.

The Second Tokyo International Conference on African Development (Tokyo, Japan, 19-21 October) [A/53/559-S/1998/1015], organized by Japan, the United Nations and the Global Coalition for Africa, considered African development towards the twenty-first century and adopted the Tokyo Agenda for Action, which was aimed at helping African States to reduce poverty through acceleration of economic growth and sustainable development and to integrate their economies into the global economy.

A preparatory meeting for the Tokyo Conference was held in Dakar, Senegal (2-3 March) [A/53/85]. The General Assembly took note of the report of that meeting by decision 53/442 of 15 December.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/298 of 5 August, decided that the theme of its 1999 coordination segment would be "Development of Africa: implementation and coordinated follow-up by the United Nations system of initiatives on African development".

New Agenda for the Development of Africa

The UN New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN 1991, p. 402], continued to be implemented by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), among other UN bodies.

UNCTAD action. The eighteenth executive session of the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) (Geneva, 10 July) [A/53/15/Rev.1, agreed conclusions 454 (XLV)] considered a May report by the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/B/EX(18)/2], which contained information on UNCTAD's contribution towards implementing the New Agenda. The report summarized UNCTAD activities regarding policy research and analysis and cross-sectoral issues, including international trade; services development; debt, debt management and financial flows; international investment; and enterprise development.

TDB, in agreed conclusions adopted at its forty-fifth session (Geneva, 12-23 October) [A/53/15/Rev.1, agreed conclusions 454 (XLV)], noted that the African economic recovery had proved to be fragile and did not generate the hoped-for increase in national savings and investment. Reforms by African countries failed to address adequately all the structural constraints, especially the underdevelopment of human resources and physical infrastructure, as well as institutional limitations. Those constraints should be taken into account in the design and implementation of structural adjustment programmes, which should be reviewed and adjusted to the requirements of individual countries; coherence in policy advice should be ensured. Debt overhang was having major adverse consequences for the fiscal health of African countries and, while the World Bank's Heavily Indebted Poor Country Initiative was designed to contribute to an enduring solution to the debt problem, greater flexibility, additional efforts and a broader basis would help put those countries back on the path to growth and development. Innovative approaches were required to deal with the accumulation of African debt, including identification by the international community of that portion of the debt assessed as unpayable for possible action by creditors. UNCTAD should continue to consider the debt situation in Africa and provide technical assistance for debt management. Donors were invited to increase the level of official development assistance (ODA) in accordance with internationally agreed targets. In agriculture, the problems of undercapitalization and low productivity needed to be addressed, including support for market-based agricultural reforms, as well as the issue of tariff peaks and escalation as regards products of special export interest to African countries. UNCTAD should continue to analyse ways in which conditions in domestic agriculture were affected by the global economic environment and develop practical and sustainable policy options, including those involving enhancement of market access. Foreign direct investment could play an important role in commodity-based industrialization, with UNCTAD cooperating with other international organizations in helping African countries identify opportunities in that area. UNCTAD should continue to explore the links between trade, international transport and African economic growth and their policy implications and, with other relevant international organizations, assist African countries to identify the trade policy options available to them and their rights and obligations under rules of the World Trade Organization (WTO), in particular the implementation of special and differential measures in favour of developing countries. Measures should be taken to facilitate accession to WTO by non-member African countries, and the problems facing supply capacities in the productive sectors should be addressed and solutions implemented. UNCTAD should continue, in cooperation with other international organizations, its technical cooperation and assistance in trade, finance and investment.

TDB welcomed the comprehensive analysis of African development in the Trade and Development Report, 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.6] and encouraged the continuation of such analysis in the context of UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s.

CPC action. On 26 June, the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC), during the first part of its thirty-eighth session (New York, 1-26 June) [A/53/16], asked the Secretary-General to update programme 6, Africa New Agenda for Development, of the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001. CPC considered the revisions and recommended their approval at the second part of the Committee's session (17-28 August).

Reports of Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in resolution 51/32 [YUN 1996, p. 832], the Secretary-General, in September [A/53/390], updated progress in implementing the New Agenda since the mid-term review in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 829]. The report summarized activities carried out by UN organizations to meet the recommendations of the mid-term review, and discussed critical issues hindering implementation of the New Agenda.

The Secretary-General observed that, although African countries had progressed economically, the debt burden had increased and the expansion of trade was hampered by small markets, the high cost of transactions and transportation, and insufficient communication links. In spite of efforts to implement trade policy reforms, Africa's share of the global market remained low, accounting for 2 per cent of world trade. Its industrial performance continued to lag behind. Since the mid-term review, improvements in health care had led to a decrease in mortality rates; national population policies were established; literacy and gender parity in access to education increased; and women played an increasingly important role in development. However, progress was slow in human development, with few direct social benefits reaching children, women and other vulnerable groups.

Critical issues hindering implementation of the New Agenda included globalization in the short term, which had led to significant marginalization of the continent. In addition, Africa faced the risks of capital flows drying up or reversing. Difficulties existed in coordination and feedback between the global political process and the operational levels in the field. The effective mobilization of financial resources continued to be a critical development issue for the region. There was a need for effective follow-up, monitoring and evaluation to maximize the outcome of the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda by the General Assembly in 2002. International multilateral and bilateral initiatives covering the range of priorities stressed in the New Agenda contributed, in varying degrees, to achieving the Agenda's objectives. However, in view of their overlapping, duplicating, independent character, they had had limited impact on African development and the New Agenda.

The report concluded that much had been done by UN organizations to advance the implementation of the New Agenda. The Secretary-General's report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa [A/52/871-S/1998/318] would bring the New Agenda to fruition if the report's recommendations on durable peace and promoting sustainable development were enacted by Member States and UN and non-UN organizations (see PART ONE, Chapter II).

In a later addendum [A/53/390/Add.1], the Secretary-General discussed how the inadequacy of financial resource flows to Africa acted as a major constraint to the implementation of the New Agenda. The report concluded that the net flow of resources to Africa was declining as donor countries had cut back on their aid budgets and were relying more on private capital flows to meet the resource requirements of developing countries. In addition, attention was diverted away from Africa in response to the spillover damage of the financial crises in South-East Asia and the Russian Federation, and even the huge increase in private capital flows to developing countries had bypassed Africa so far. The Secretary-General stated that African Governments should take measures, including trade liberalization and accelerated privatization, to provide economic security and an efficient financial system, to attract foreign private investment. The international community should support those initiatives by removing remaining obstacles to capital migration and liberalizing their markets to allow free entry for exports from Africa. The social and infrastructure sectors, for which it was difficult to attract private capital, should be developed with public funds. The international community should increase its current assistance on concessional terms, preferably as grants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/90 [draft: A/53/L.39/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 24].

Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/151 of 18 December 1991, the annex to which contains the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s,

Recalling also its resolutions 48/214 of 23 December 1993 and 49/142 of 23 December 1994 on the New Agenda, as well as its resolution 51/32 of 6 December 1996 on the mid-term review of the implementation of the New Agenda,

Mindful of the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee for Programme and Coordination at its thirty-seventh and the first part of its thirty-eighth sessions relating to its consideration of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, launched by the Secretary-General on 15 March 1996,

Recognizing that, despite some improvements in economic performance in several countries in Africa, the continent continues to face critical social and economic problems,

Noting with concern that, while challenges and opportunities are created by the process of globalization, Africa continues to be marginalized in the world economy, and is experiencing a decline in net resource flows and in its share of world trade,

Having considered the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, including measures and recommendations agreed upon at its mid-term review,

Noting with appreciation the adoption, by the Second Tokyo International Conference on African Development, held at Tokyo from 19 to 21 October 1998, of the Tokyo Agenda for Action, which, among other things, emphasizes the principles of accelerated economic growth for poverty reduction and further integration of the continent into the global economy as well as highlights the concepts of ownership and global partnership,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the progress report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, including measures and recommendations agreed upon at its mid-term review;

2. Expresses concern at the overall declining trend of resource flows to Africa, in particular in the level of official development assistance, which has been an impediment, among other things, to the timely implementation of the New Agenda;

3. Emphasizes the need to focus on priority areas identified by African countries themselves, as stipulated in the Cairo Agenda for Action and the New Agenda, and to organize close consultations at both the policy and the operational levels among the various development partners, in order to achieve the best results;

4. Reiterates the importance of effective monitoring and evaluation mechanisms and other follow-up mechanisms for the implementation of the New Agenda at the national, subregional, regional and global levels, and in this regard requests the Secretary-General to propose a set of performance indicators to measure the progress made in the implementation of the New Agenda;

5. Urges all States, international and multilateral organizations, financial institutions and development funds and programmes of the United Nations system as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to take, as a matter of urgency, concrete and effective measures in order to implement fully, in a coordinated manner, the recommendations contained in the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Mid-term Review of the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in his efforts to harmonize current international and bilateral initiatives on Africa, to ensure the effective and timely implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, and, in this context, to ensure that the United Nations and its funds and programmes are working in a coordinated manner within the framework of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General, pending the final review and appraisal of the New Agenda in the year 2002, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a progress report on the implementation of resolution 51/32.

UN System-wide Special Initiative on Africa

CPC action. On 5 June, CPC, at the first part of its thirty-eighth session (1-26 June), considered a May report of the Secretary-General updating progress on the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative for the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s [E/AC.51/1998/7], submitted in response to a 1997 request of the Committee [YUN 1997, p. 917]. The report described action taken by UN bodies and agencies and set out the link between the System-wide Special Initiative, UN development assistance frameworks and the country strategy notes. It also outlined the way forward for the Special Initiative, which reflected the recommendation of a high-level retreat (9 February), organized by the secretariat of the Special Initiative. The report noted that overall progress was made in coordination as UN agencies and others had set joint priorities in education, health, governance and informatics. Efforts were made by UN agencies to integrate the priorities of the Initiative into their activities and some African countries had fully embraced it. However, many challenges remained. The main ones, as identified by the high-level retreat, were identifying additional resources for Africa; mainstreaming within the UN system; and building sustainable partnerships for Africa utilizing the Special Initiative as a vehicle. The retreat suggested concentrating on the priority areas where results had been achieved, such as education, health, governance, gender and population; strengthening mobilization of the UN system in support of the Special Initiative; drawing up common agency guidelines regarding gender mainstreaming; developing a mechanism to promote communication for African development and to facilitate constituency-building and broaden stakeholders' involvement; and improving resource flows from bilateral and multilateral sources. The secretariat of the Special Initiative should play a more proactive role, work closely with focal points of agencies and organizations and strengthen collaboration with the Office of the Special Coordinator for Africa and the Least Developed Countries. The retreat suggested that population be a component on its own in order to promote more coordinated action in that area, and requested the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) to develop an action plan.

In June [A/53/16], CPC recommended that the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) intensify efforts to mobilize the capacity of the UN system to achieve coverage of the maximum number of countries and areas of activity, that the lead agencies develop a common strategic framework for action, and that the secretariat of the Special Initiative be strengthened. It also recommended intensifying coordination, particularly the advocacy role of the Secretary-General, the role of the Office of the Special Coordinator, and the operational role of UNDP and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA); and clarifying the link between the Special Initiative and the New Agenda. CPC proposed that a plan be established to mobilize increased resources for poverty eradication, economic development, debt reduction, partnership innovations, market access and trade opportunities, mobilization of domestic resources and allocation of additional resources. It asked that a progress report be submitted in 1999.

ACC action. At its first regular session of 1998 (Geneva, 27-28 March) [ACC/1998/4], ACC reviewed progress made on the Special Initiative and called on members to continue to direct their field representatives to support the efforts of the resident coordinator and the UN country team in implementing the Special Initiative.

At its regular second session (New York, 30-31 October) [ACC/1998/20], ACC decided that Africa-related inter-agency mechanisms, including those established in connection with the Special Initiative, would be reviewed with a view to facilitating the harmonization of Africa-related initiatives.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Ethnic and military tensions in the eastern provinces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) transformed into a rebellion in August (see PART ONE, Chapter II). Military activities were accompanied by the displacement of some 500,000 persons, the destruction of community infrastructure and serious human rights violations. The interruption of economic exchanges and isolation of strategic food-producing and mining regions, combined with hyperinflation and devaluation of the national currency and shortages of agricultural produce, weakened the coping mechanisms of the entire population.

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/169 A [YUN 1997, p. 918], the Secretary-General presented an October report on special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the DRC [A/53/538]. The report described assistance provided by ECA, FAO, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the International Labour Organization, UNDP, UNFPA, UNHCR, UNICEF, WFP and WHO. The Secretary-General stated that the triennial programme drawn up by the Government to enhance the development of the country and promote indigenous capability [YUN 1997, p. 918] enabled UN entities to begin shifting the focus of their activities from emergency to rehabilitation and development. UN entities had adapted their programmes to address the Government's priorities, and broadened the scope of their activities in the eastern part of the country where most of their interventions were concentrated. Prior to the outbreak of the current conflict in August, UN agencies accomplished major achievements in emergency management, rehabilitation, agriculture, governance, health, human rights and social affairs, including the launching by UNHCR of its Expanded Rehabilitation Programme in refugee areas in the eastern part of the country and a UNDP community-based rehabilitation programme to reinforce local capacity in crisis-affected areas. In addition, the Government undertook a major transformation of its political and economic policies. However, the conflict affected Government efforts to introduce those changes, and relations with donors and investors remained difficult as some donors were conditioning the resumption of aid on the political and human rights situation. Another major constraint was the country's heavy debt burden. The United Nations intended to provide more coordinated and coherent assistance in humanitarian and development areas, enabling a substantial enlargement of its interventions. It also planned to encourage investment by donors and private entrepreneurs.

During the year, OCHA launched an appeal for the DRC within an overall appeal for countries of the Great Lakes region and Central Africa (see above), for the period January to December 1998 totalling $53 million. However, donor response was weak.

In December, a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the period January to June 1999 was launched, seeking $26 million to assist refugees and internally displaced persons, improve the food supply and health and nutrition services, protect children and support human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 L [draft: A/53/L.63] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Special assistance for the economic recovery and reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of the Congo

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/169 A of 16 December 1997,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General, Deeply concerned about the current conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which poses a serious threat to regional peace and security,

Reaffirming the obligation to respect the territorial integrity and national sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the other States in the region and the need for all States to refrain from any interference in each other's internal affairs,

Alarmed at the plight of the civilian population throughout the country, and calling for its protection,

Urging all parties to respect and protect human rights and respect international humanitarian law, in particular, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the additional Protocols thereto of 1977,

Deeply concerned about the extensive destruction of life and property as well as the severe damage to infrastructure and the environment suffered by the Democratic Republic of the Congo,

Bearing in mind that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a least developed country with severe economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and aggravated by the ongoing conflict,

Recalling that the Democratic Republic of the Congo is a least developed country with severe economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and aggravated by the ongoing conflict,

Bearing in mind the close interrelationship between ensuring peace and security and the ability of the country to meet the humanitarian needs of its people and to take effective steps towards the rapid revitalization of the economy, and reaffirming the urgent need to assist the Democratic Republic of the Congo in the rehabilitation and reconstruction of its damaged economy and in its efforts to restore basic services and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Calls for a peaceful solution to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including an immediate ceasefire, the withdrawal of all foreign forces, the initiation of a peace process, including negotiations to end the conflict, and a political dialogue with a view to national reconciliation;

2. Supports regional diplomatic initiatives aimed at a peaceful settlement of the conflict;

3. Encourages the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to pursue sound macro-economic policies and to promote good governance and the rule of the law, and urges the Government and the people of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to exert all efforts for economic recovery and reconstruction despite the ongoing armed conflict;

4. Renews its invitation to the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to cooperate with the United Nations, its specialized agencies and other organizations in addressing the need for rehabilitation and reconstruction, stresses the need for the Government to assist and protect the civilian population, including refugees and internally displaced persons within the territory of that country, regardless of their origin, and reaffirms the need for respect for the provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular the safety of humanitarian personnel, and safe and unhindered access to all affected populations;

5. Renews its urgent appeal to the executive boards of the United Nations funds and programmes to keep under consideration the special needs of the Democratic Republic of the Congo;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue to consult urgently with regional leaders, in coordination with the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity, about ways to bring about a peaceful and durable solution to the conflict;

(b) To keep under review the economic situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo with a view to promoting participation in and support for a programme of financial and material assistance to the Democratic Republic of the Congo in order to enable it to meet its urgent need for economic recovery and reconstruction;

(c) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the actions taken pursuant to the present resolution.

Djibouti

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/169 K [YUN 1997, p. 920], the Secretary-General, in September [A/53/361], described the situation in Djibouti and progress made in providing assistance for reconstruction and development.

Since the civil strife ended, reconstruction and development in Djibouti had been slow. The social reintegration of demobilized soldiers and their employment remained priorities. Social infrastructure needed to be reconstructed so that the displaced population could be repatriated, and development activities were needed to support primary health care, primary schools and income generation. Serious environmental problems related to desertification and lack of energy were exacerbated by poverty in urban and rural areas. The Government still experienced a severe cash shortage, and budget reductions had seriously affected education, health and social development.

A dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea (see PART ONE, Chapter II) put Djibouti at risk for a further influx of refugees, negatively impacting the economy and the infrastructure, already strained due to the presence of Ethiopian and Somali refugees. In addition, there were those affected by drought. As at January, there were 1,056 Ethiopian refugees in camps in Djibouti, along with 21,000 Somali refugees.

United Nations efforts to define a common strategy on programming matters based on Djibouti's development priorities intensified. Activities concentrated on health, food security, rehabilitation and reconstruction, environmental issues and capacity-building, repatriation of refugees, governance, gender mainstreaming and the integration of NGOs and civil society in development.

The Secretary-General noted that, in addition to the economic and financial crisis, Djibouti experienced recurring emergency situations such as drought, flood and epidemics; large-scale destruction of livestock and water sources; and large movements of displaced populations. He identified areas where assistance was needed and called on the international community to provide financial support to meet urgent socio-economic programmes for reconstruction and development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 December [meeting 81], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 J [draft: A/53/L.33/Rev.2 & Rev.2/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/169 K of 16 December 1997 and its previous resolutions on economic assistance to Djibouti,

Recalling also the Paris Declaration and the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, adopted by the Second United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries on 14 September 1990, as well as the mutual commitments undertaken on that occasion and the importance attached to the follow-up to that Conference, Conscious that Djibouti is included in the list of least developed countries and that it is ranked 162nd out of the 174 countries studied in the Human Development Report 1998,

Noting that the economic and social development efforts of Djibouti are constrained by the extremes of the local climate, in particular cyclical droughts and torrential rains and floods such as those that occurred in October and November 1997, and that the implementation of reconstruction and development programmes requires the deployment of substantial resources that exceed the real capacity of the country,

Emphasizing that there is an urgent need to provide financial support in the areas of demobilization, reconstruction and rehabilitation of the regions affected by civil strife, with a view to strengthening peace and stability in the country,

Noting that the situation in Djibouti has been made worse by the deteriorating situation in the Horn of Africa, in particular in Somalia, and noting also the presence of tens of thousands of refugees and persons displaced from their countries, which has placed serious strains on the fragile economic, social and administrative infrastructure of Djibouti and caused security problems in the country, in particular in the city of Djibouti,

Noting with satisfaction that the Government of Djibouti is continuing to implement a structural adjustment programme, and convinced of the necessity to support that financial recovery programme and to take effective measures to alleviate the consequences, in particular the social consequences, of that adjustment policy, so that the country may achieve lasting economic results,

Noting with gratitude the support provided to relief and rehabilitation operations by various countries and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Djibouti;

2. Declares its solidarity with the Government and the people of Djibouti, who continue to face critical challenges owing, in particular, to the scarcity of natural resources and the continuing critical situation in the Horn of Africa;

3. Notes the implementation by the Government of Djibouti of the structural adjustment programme and, in that context, appeals to all Governments, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies of the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to respond adequately to the financial and material needs of the country;

4. Considers that the process of demobilization and the reintegration and employment of demobilized soldiers is essential not only for national rehabilitation, but also for the success of the agreements with the international financial institutions and for the consolidation of peace, and that it requires substantial resources that exceed the real capacity of the country;

5. Expresses its gratitude to the States and intergovernmental organizations that have already contributed the sums pledged at the round table on Djibouti, held at Geneva on 29 and 30 May 1997;

6. Also expresses its gratitude to the intergovernmental organizations and especially to the United Nations Development Programme, as well as the other funds and programmes of the United Nations system, for their contributions to the national rehabilitation of Djibouti, and invites them to continue their efforts;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his continued efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties faced by Djibouti;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, in close cooperation with the Government of Djibouti, his efforts to mobilize the resources necessary for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 1999, on the progress made with regard to economic assistance to Djibouti and the implementation of the present resolution.

Other economic assistance

Lebanon

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/169 D [YUN 1997, p. 924], the Secretary-General, in August, reviewed the reconstruction and development of Lebanon [A/53/213], covering the period from July 1997 to May 1998. He noted that, since the end of the emergency rehabilitation phase in 1997, Lebanon was engaged in a major reconstruction and development phase. Increased efforts were made to improve the capacity and performance of the education and health sectors; major investments were made to protect and manage the environment; efforts to address regional disparities were stepped up; and the programme to rehabilitate public administration became operational. Under the programme and activities of the Council for Development and Reconstruction, the total value of contracts awarded stood at $4,227 million (1,336 contracts) at the end of December 1997, 59.2 per cent of which went to basic infrastructure, 22.5 per cent to socio-economic sectors, 14.3 per cent to public equipment sectors and 4 per cent for productive sectors and for management and implementation. A notable shift in the recovery strategy occurred through the implementation of a new economic orientation that promoted private sector investment and eliminated obstacles to investment by Lebanese and foreigners; protected agriculture through limiting imports of competing agricultural products; selected and protected competitive industries that had an export potential; and balanced regional development. The Government also took steps to integrate the Lebanese economy into the regional and global economy.

In southern Lebanon, the unstable situation constituted a handicap for accelerated recovery and development. The effects of the decades-long instability and violence had hit the so-called security belt occupied by Israel, some 10 per cent of the territory, particularly hard. Apart from subsistence agriculture, there was scarcely any local economic activity. A number of United Nations organizations and international NGOs provided assistance for meeting immediate needs and for capacity development. Long-term stability was also sought by donor-supported initiatives of civil society regarding information, advocacy and training for human rights, as well as rights-based development.

By decision 53/415 of 16 November, the Assembly had note of the Secretary-General's report.

Nicaragua

In August [A/53/291], the Secretary-General described international assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua. He stated that advances in the consolidation of democracy were reflected in the democratic elections held in 1996 and the transfer of power between two democratically elected Governments. The signature of the property agreement and the approval of the property law in 1997 helped reduce political tensions in the country. In early 1998, national interest was focused on financial events, including the signature of the second structural adjustment programme, the presentation of national development strategies at the Consultative Group held in Geneva and the Paris Club negotiations on foreign debt. Canada, the Netherlands and Sweden, as well as the Inter-American Development Bank and UNDP, contributed to a programme to streamline procedures and facilitate the revision and solution of property claims, and to a programme of urban titling, which benefited poorer groups. UNDP also supported the Government's initiative of national dialogue, which allowed for some basic agreements between the Government and other sectors of society on peaceful ways of dealing with the country's problems. To strengthen the rule of law, UNDP supported the National Programme for the Modernization of Justice and a project to construct courthouses. Another UNDP project, financed by Spain, aimed to help modernize the criminal justice system. Technical cooperation was received from various sources for transforming the national police force into a professional force. Nicaragua also received assistance for natural disaster reduction and mitigation, decentralization and local development, and rehabilitation of basic social services, infrastructure and agricultural areas.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 D [draft: A/53/L.26/Rev.2 & Rev.2/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 45/15 of 20 November 1990 concerning the situation in Central America, and resolutions 47/169 of 22 December 1992, 48/8 of 22 October 1993, 49/16 of 17 November 1994, 50/85 of 15 December 1995 and 51/8 of 25 October 1996 concerning the item entitled "International assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Nicaragua: aftermath of the war and natural disasters", in which it requested the international community to continue to provide support to Nicaragua, taking into account the exceptional circumstances faced by that country, and requested the Secretary-General, in coordination with the Nicaraguan authorities, to provide the assistance necessary in the process of consolidation of peace,

Aware that, despite the reduction and renegotiation of the heavy burden of the foreign debt, achieved with the collaboration of the international community, Nicaragua continues to be a heavily indebted country, a fact that negatively affects its ability to ensure real sustainable growth,

Recognizing that, although progress has been made in the area of problems related to property, much still remains to be done, and that the resolution of these problems is an important factor in the consolidation of peace and democracy in Nicaragua,

Recognizing also the intensive efforts by the Government of Nicaragua to promote a sustained economic recovery and the considerable progress made in securing a broad social consensus by means of an ongoing process of national dialogue with a view to addressing national problems in a peaceful way,

Noting the importance of programmes for creating a culture of respect for human rights, laying the foundations of peace and promoting ethical values, which are being implemented in Nicaragua with the cooperation of the international community,

Taking note of the progress achieved in the prevention of natural disasters, the mitigation of their effects and assistance to victims through the municipal, regional and national system created by the Nicaraguan authorities with the assistance of the international community, which demonstrated its effectiveness in the emergency assistance provided to mitigate the serious effects of the drought caused by the El Niño phenomenon, which had a major impact on the country's agricultural production,

Taking into consideration the fact that in 1998 the demobilization of the last armed group remaining in the aftermath of the war was completed,

Considering that, despite the dedication and efforts of the Nicaraguan authorities in mine clearance, in cooperation with the Organization of American States and the Inter-American Defence Board, in many areas that were the scene of armed conflicts the problem of landmines persists, continuing to endanger the population and preventing cultivation and movement in vast areas of the country,

Expressing its appreciation for the work of the Support Group for Nicaragua, which, under the coordination of the Secretary-General, continues to play an active role in supporting that country's efforts towards economic recovery and social development,

Considering that, despite the regional fire control and prevention strategy, the El Niño phenomenon prolonged the dry season during the period 1997-1998, leading to an increase in the number of forest fires in the Central American region, Nicaragua being the country that suffered most with extensive tropical forest areas affected,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the measures adopted pursuant to resolution 51/8,

1. Commends the efforts made by the international community, including the United Nations system, to supplement the action undertaken by the Government of Nicaragua and by other parties concerned in the tasks of resolving Nicaragua's special economic problems, strengthening democracy and consolidating peace;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the Secretary-General for his report concerning the measures adopted pursuant to resolution 51/8;

3. Encourages the Government of Nicaragua to support the development of medium- and long-term national programmes and strategies, in particular those related to poverty alleviation, economic and social development and the resolution of problems related to property, with a view to the consolidation of a stable democracy;

4. Notes with satisfaction the efforts and progress made in mine clearance in Nicaragua, and calls on the States members of international organizations to continue to provide the material, technical and financial support needed by the Government of Nicaragua to complete mine-clearance activities in its national territory;

5. Stresses the need for the international community to continue its cooperation with Nicaragua in order to supplement its national efforts and provide it with the necessary financial resources consistently and under favourable conditions, with a view to the effective promotion of its economic growth and development, the conservation of its natural resources and the strengthening of its democracy;

6. Invites creditor countries and funding institutions to continue to support Nicaragua in negotiations in order to come to an effective and equitable solution to the external debt problem and to support the country so that it may join the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative as soon as possible;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session, through the Economic and Social Council at the humanitarian affairs segment of its substantive session of 2000, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster relief

In 1998, a series of natural disasters and environmental emergencies produced widespread suffering and destruction in many countries. The international community responded to emergencies such as those caused by the El Niño phenomenon; forest fires in Indonesia, Brazil and the Russian Federation; earthquakes in Afghanistan; floods in China, Bangladesh and East Africa; seismic waves in Papua New Guinea; and hurricanes Georges and Mitch in Central America. OCHA supported the launch of 28 international appeals and a joint OCHA/UNDP inter-agency transitional appeal for the countries of Central America hit by hurricane Mitch. It assisted in mobilizing $1 billion in contributions for the international community, made emergency cash grants totalling $805,000 to Governments of disaster-stricken countries to cover the most pressing needs of the affected populations, and served as a channel for more than $11.7 million in voluntary donor contributions. It mobilized and supported 17 United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC) missions to 16 countries. The OCHA Warehouse in Pisa, Italy, was to be relocated to the United Nations Logistics Base in Brindisi, Italy, and its management divested to WFP.

International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction

In 1998, activities related to the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction (IDNDR) (1990-2000) proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 44/236 [YUN 1989, p. 355], centred on implementation of the 1998-1999 action plan, presented to the Scientific and Technical Committee for IDNDR in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 926], leading up to an evaluation of the 10 years of achievement in disaster reduction in 1999 and the mapping of a comprehensive disaster reduction strategy for the twenty-first century. The Secretary-General, in his report on IDNDR [A/54/132-E/1999/80], described the plan initiated by the IDNDR secretariat. Activities were directed at advocacy, policy development and coordination of institutional capacities. The IDNDR secretariat organized the annual World Disaster Reduction Campaign, which was observed in 70 countries, under the theme "Natural disaster prevention and the media: prevention begins with information". It included the third IDNDR Internet Conference, television interviews and disaster reduction programmes aired in 72 countries, and culminated in the celebration of World Disaster Reduction Day, observed on 14 October. The secretariat also convened the UN Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño and developed the UN system strategy on El Niño. The first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño was held in Guayaquil, Ecuador (9-13 November). Another IDNDR policy focus was early warning. An international conference on early-warning systems for the reduction of natural disasters was held in Potsdam, Germany (7-11 September), sponsored by the Government of Germany. That conference concluded a four-year process of multi-disciplinary and inter-sectoral contributions coordinated by the IDNDR secretariat for improved early warning in the twenty-first century. The secretariat also developed a draft IDNDR/Economic Commission for Europe flood prevention protocol and launched the Risk Assessment Tools for Diagnosis of Urban Areas against Seismic Disasters Initiative, with the aim of developing common methodologies for seismic risk reduction in urban areas. IDNDR selected nine case study cities. Three regional advisory committees were established in May to give technical advice to the cities and to raise public awareness. The second International Conference on Earthquake Hazard and Seismic Risk Reduction/IDNDR Regional Conference for the Countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States and Central and Eastern Europe was held in Yerevan, Armenia (15-21 September).

The Tampere Convention on the Provision of Telecommunications Resources for Disaster Mitigation and Relief Operations, which was negotiated at the Intergovernmental Conference on Emergency Telecommunications (Tampere, Finland, 16-18 June), was opened for signature on 18 June. As at 31 December, 32 countries had signed the Convention.

The Scientific and Technical Committee for IDNDR, at its tenth meeting (Washington, D.C., 8-12 June), prepared an outline and plans for the final report on the Decade. It also reviewed efforts to integrate natural disaster mitigation into sustainable development and the effects of El Niño in Ecuador and other countries (see below).

ACC action. At its first regular session (Geneva, 27-28 March) [ACC/1998/4], ACC underlined the importance of follow-up to IDNDR. It said that effective measures of early warning, prevention, preparedness and mitigation were needed to reduce the vulnerability and increase the resilience of societies at risk. Disaster reduction should form an integral part of sustainable development strategies and national planning of vulnerable countries and communities. Member States were asked to bring natural disaster reduction issues to the highest level of international deliberations during the Decade's final phase, including at the Economic and Social Council's high-level segment in 1999; participate in an international forum to discuss the Decade's achievements and propose a platform for future action relating to disaster reduction; ensure the continued functional visibility and authority for disaster reduction activities within the UN system in the twenty-first century; and contribute to the review of impacts attributed to El Niño to enhance recognition and application of disaster measures.

Disaster management

In March [DP/1998/18], the UNDP Administrator informed the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board that, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], the operational and capacity-building responsibilities formerly discharged by the Disaster Mitigation Branch and the Disaster Management Training Programme were integrated within the Disaster Management Programme situated in the Emergency Response Division of the UNDP Operational Support Group. The Disaster Management Programme, based in Geneva, would address the protection of development gains and the reduction of human and economic impacts of disasters through capacitation and support of national government authorities and non-governmental institutions in disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness. Through the resident coordinator system, it would also strengthen links between national actors and the UN system and its partners in the international development community. Since disaster response remained OCHA's responsibility, it was incumbent upon the Disaster Management Programme, in fulfilling its capacity-building functions, to develop and maintain close synergies with the disaster-response community. It would also be in a position to assume any prospective successor arrangements to IDNDR (see above) at the end of the Decade.

UNDP disaster-mitigation responsibilities, as assigned by the Assembly, were expected to be financed through UN budgets and extrabudgetary contributions, additional to UNDP's core resources.

In June [E/1998/36], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board took note of the report.

Report of Secretary-General. In November [A/53/641], the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on methods of financing activities for disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness beyond the 1998-1999 biennium, stating that the UNDP Disaster Management Programme had made provision for the management and administrative structure previously funded from the UN regular budget. Resources from UNDP's regular budget for the 1998-1999 biennium pertained only to nine management and administrative posts, with no provision for funding other staff costs from the regular budget. Accordingly, UNDP would have to phase in activities in such a manner that all costs remained within the amount provided from the 1998-1999 regular budget. With regard to operational activities, UNDP would establish an open trust fund to support programmes similar to those previously funded through trust fund arrangements made within the United Nations. He recommended that the resources for managing and coordinating operational activities for natural disaster mitigation, prevention and preparedness continue to be separate and additional to the UNDP resources for development activities and that they continue to be provided by a grant from the UN regular budget for future bienniums.

UNDP activities

In 1998 [DP/1999/15], UNDP assisted the Government of China to improve its capacity to coordinate its relief effort after the flood disaster in the summer, when the central and southern parts of the country along the banks of the Yangtze River were flooded for over 60 days. It also supported a training workshop for emergency relief managers in 13 flood-prone provinces in southern China in June. In Bangladesh, in the country's worst-ever floods, UNDP acted as a vital link between the donor and the NGO communities. A joint UN flash appeal mobilized $205 million. UNDP supported Indonesia's efforts to manage extensive land and forest fires, and helped to produce a plan of action for fire-disaster management. The Resident Coordinator activated the United Nations Disaster Management Team in Indonesia and established a Disaster Response Unit in UNDP, Jakarta. In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, UNDP assisted the Government in organizing the first donor round-table conference for agricultural recovery and environmental protection and helped to strengthen the national management capacity required for handling donor-funded rehabilitation and investment projects through high-level advisory services and training. In the former Yugoslavia, UNDP support benefited thousands of refugees and internally displaced persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina by reconstructing homes and social infrastructure, providing small grants for economic support, and giving legal advice, training and other support through local NGOs to enhance national reconciliation. The UNDP-supported national Village Employment and Environment Programme helped thousands of people affected by war. It mobilized $27 million of non-core funds from donors. UNDP also supported a pilot "disarmament with development" project in Albania.

In response to hurricane Mitch, UNDP helped El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua to cope with the disaster. UNDP support in the affected areas in Honduras and Nicaragua was redirected to relief and rehabilitation. Over $12 million in available resources was channelled through the UN system during the first few weeks after the disaster. UNDP also acted as the clearing house for information on the crisis for donors and the UN system, mobilizing over $28 million for relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction.

El Niño

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/200 [YUN1997,p.927], the Secretary-General submitted an October report [A/53/487] on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon—a disruption of the ocean-atmosphere system in the tropical Pacific that had important consequences for weather and climate worldwide. He reported that the 1997-1998 El Niño event caused some countries in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, and North and South America to suffer exceptionally heavy rainfalls, storms and floods. Others experienced prolonged drought, while some suffered from both droughts and excessive rain. Damage to agriculture, forests, fisheries, industries and other economic activities, as well as human settlements, was extensive and severe. Overall global losses were estimated at approximately $14 billion worldwide. Losses were estimated at $6 billion in Asia, $4.3 billion in Central and South America and $3.5 billion in North America. In Africa, where 1.5 million people in southern Somalia and northern Kenya were affected, WFP appealed for $17 million to maintain vital relief activities. A majority of the countries affected by El Niño-induced natural disasters engaged in various forms of prevention, mitigation or preparedness activities. Those measures were being reviewed and analysed within the UN system and by other regional organizations and technical institutions. They provided a major input, through case studies, to the first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño (Guayaquil, Ecuador, 9-13 November) (see below). The specific concerns of regions and countries most affected by the El Niño phenomenon would become part of the disaster reduction strategy for the twenty-first century being developed within the IDNDR International Framework for Action. The special session on El Niño organized by the World Bank as part of the tenth meeting of the IDNDR Scientific and Technical Committee (Washington, D.C., 8-12 June) examined El Niño activities in Latin America; World Bank efforts in response to the phenomenon; health issues and El Niño; and means of improving long-term forecasting and of integrating forecasting into development strategies. The session also identified areas that needed to be addressed in national and regional approaches towards El Niño-related disaster reduction.

Regarding United Nations efforts, the Inter-Agency Steering Committee for IDNDR established the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño within the context of the Decade, which prepared a UN El Niño strategy aimed at reducing the impact of the phenomenon through prevention, mitigation and rehabilitation of damages.

Other related action included support by the second session of the Inter-Agency Committee on the Climate Agenda (IACCA) (Geneva, 16-17 April) for a proposal to prepare a retrospective of the 1997-1998 event. It recommended that the scientific and technological retrospective be combined with socio-economic analysis, and that the coordination of the scientific and technical aspects of the retrospective would remain within the World Meteorological Organization (WMO). WMO, UNESCO and its Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission supported regional and national assessments of monitoring and prediction capacities. WFP established a global task force on El Niño that supported national food security assessments, while FAO supported assessments of El Niño-induced impacts in agriculture. WHO was engaged in assessment programmes in national health sectors, and UNDP was supporting El Niño-related case study projects to integrate disaster mitigation and preparedness into development and rehabilitation programmes. The secretariat of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific collaborated on research with various institutions in the region.

The Secretary-General recommended that further system-wide action on El Niño should accord the highest priority to preventing negative impacts from future El Niño events. The work of the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño should continue and considerations on the phenomenon should be integrated into the planned review of IDNDR by the Economic and Social Council in 1999. The findings of the Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts should be presented in 1999 to the Commission on Sustainable Development and to the Council in 1999. The recommendations of the experts relating to the situations of small island developing States should be submitted to the Commission and to the General Assembly at its special session in 1999 on the five-year review of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

The first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño (Guayaquil, Ecuador, 9-13 November) [A/54/135-E/1999/88] provided an interface between the scientific and technological constituencies and their operational partners in disaster prevention, humanitarian disaster management and operational development, including support to local capacity-building. It reached consensus on the need for more complete atmospheric and oceanographic monitoring in order to improve the modelling of El Niño and the precision of forecasts. There was also agreement on the need to provide data tailored to the acute needs of the communities to be affected. The Meeting adopted the Declaration of Guayaquil, which contained recommendations for a way forward, and called on the United Nations to assess the feasibility of establishing an international centre for research of the El Niño phenomenon in Guayaquil within the context of the Inter-Agency Task Force on El Niño, and to report to the Assembly and to the Economic and Social Council in 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/609/Add.6], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/185 without vote [agenda item 94].

International cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of its resolution 52/200 of 18 December 1997 on international cooperation to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon,

Expressing its deepest concern about the widespread and devastating effects of the El Niño/Southern Oscillation on most of the regions of the world, especially during the period 1997-1998, which scientists have recognized as the period in which the El Niño/Southern Oscillation has had its strongest manifestation on record,

Noting the progress made in the understanding of the El Niño/Southern Oscillation, and noting also that a continued increase in the collection and exchange of data and information could assist in the modelling and prediction of the recurrence of this natural phenomenon,

Noting further that a phenomenon opposite to the El Niño/Southern Oscillation, known as La Nina, can, according to scientific predictions, occur in and affect several regions of the world and that international co-operation could be needed in order to reduce its impact,

Stressing that any credible strategy for the reduction of the natural disaster effects of future El Niño occurrences must be based on effective dialogue and co-operation between the scientific and technological areas of the United Nations system and its operational responsibilities in the fields of disaster management, humanitarian assistance, sustainable development, technical cooperation and capacity-building, including data-collection, monitoring and early warning systems, at all levels,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General, and endorses the recommendations and conclusions contained therein;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the cooperation provided by the United Nations system to the countries affected in their efforts to reduce the impact of the El Niño phenomenon and for the valuable cooperation given by the international community;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the outcome of the International Conference on Early Warning Systems for the Reduction of Natural Disasters convened, within the framework of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction, at Potsdam, Germany, from 7 to 11 September 1998;

4. Expresses its satisfaction at the organization of the first Intergovernmental Meeting of Experts on El Niño, held at Guayaquil, Ecuador, from 9 to 13 November 1998, in accordance with paragraph 10 of its resolution 52/200;

5. Decides that the report on the outcome of that Meeting will be considered under appropriate agenda items at the seventh session of the Commission on Sustainable Development, at the substantive session of 1999 of the Economic and Social Council and at the special session of the General Assembly for the in-depth assessment and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;

6. Also decides to consider the La Nina phenomenon in the context of the implementation of its resolution 52/200;

7. Calls for the continued and full implementation of its resolution 52/200;

8. Welcomes the convening, in 1999, of an intergovernmental meeting of experts on the El Niño phenomenon, to be held at Lima, which will have a comprehensive approach, encompassing scientific, technical, social and political issues, and a broad participation of intergovernmental experts and policy decision makers;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to submit recommendations to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session of 1999, on how the United Nations system can deal with natural disaster reduction after the conclusion of the International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction in 1999, taking into account the lessons learned and making early warning a key element for future natural disaster reduction strategies;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Disaster assistance

Bangladesh

In July, continuous heavy monsoon rain in Bangladesh and in the river catchment areas outside Bangladesh led to increased water levels in the three major river basins of the Brahmaputra, Meghna and Ganges. The rise of tide in the Bay of Bengal obstructed recession of flood water from Chandpur, Brahmanbaria and Dhaka. The flooding killed 470 people and left 21 million people homeless or marooned, with two thirds of the country submerged by floodwater. The floods caused substantial damage to crops and infrastructure.

On 26 August, the Government issued an international appeal for emergency flood relief and rehabilitation. It listed a requirement of $112.4 million for immediate relief and $460.7 million for rehabilitation, including some $250 million in additional food aid. As at 4 September, cash and in-kind contributions valued at over $64 million had been reported to OCHA by the international community.

In September, a UN Flash Appeal in Support of the Government of Bangladesh for Relief to the Victims of the Floods in Bangladesh was launched to solicit contributions amounting to $223 million for emergency relief and initial rehabilitation. Also included was the need to conduct an assessment of the longer-term rehabilitation needs, which could only be completed once the floods had receded.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 1 October [meeting 23], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 A [draft: A/53/L.1 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to Bangladesh in the wake of the devastating floods

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned about the loss of human life and the unprecedented destruction of property and infrastructure caused in recent weeks by the worst floods ever in Bangladesh,

Considering that Bangladesh is one of the least developed countries and that its situation has been worsened by the frequent recurrence of natural disasters having devastating consequences,

Recognizing that natural disasters constitute a development problem of great magnitude, the solution of which calls for substantial resources, requiring national efforts to be supplemented by international financial and technical assistance,

Recognizing also the large-scale relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the Government and the people of Bangladesh to alleviate the suffering of disaster victims and to put the country back on the road to development,

Conscious of the fact that international assistance and investment over time are required to mitigate and prevent the consequences of such disasters,

Noting the appeal made by the Secretary-General to the international community for help and assistance for the flood-affected people of Bangladesh,

Noting also the appeal to the international community made by the Prime Minister and the Government of Bangladesh to come forward with assistance in order to help the country to recover from the disastrous floods,

1. Expresses its solidarity with the Government and the people of Bangladesh, who are bravely facing the disaster;

2. Appeals to all Member States, specialized agencies and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and non-governmental organizations, to respond urgently and generously in order to assist Bangladesh in its relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts and programmes following the unprecedented calamity;

3. Expresses its gratitude to Member States, international organizations within and outside the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and individuals and groups that have so generously assisted the Government of Bangladesh in its immediate relief and rehabilitation efforts;

4. Expresses its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General for the urgent steps he has taken to mobilize humanitarian assistance and to coordinate activities of the United Nations agencies in the field for purposeful and unified assistance by the international community, and requests him to continue these efforts through effective measures;

5. Requests the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to take all necessary measures to provide support and assistance to Bangladesh in order to strengthen its capacity for disaster preparedness and prevention programmes and to implement its plans and programmes for seeking a long-term and effective solution to the problems caused by floods and other natural disasters.

The Caribbean

Hurricane Georges

From 20 to 22 September, hurricane Georges struck Antigua and Barbuda and Saint Kitts and Nevis, as well as the islands of Saba and Saint Eustatius, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and Puerto Rico. The hurricane then moved on to the south-eastern part of the United States.

Preliminary damages in the region were estimated at over $200 million for Antigua and Barbuda, over $400 million for Saint Kitts and Nevis, with the destruction of over 50 per cent of the country's agricultural sector, $1.6 billion in the Dominican Republic and $1.2 billion in Haiti. In Cuba, the majority of damage was sustained in the agricultural sector (see below). In the United States, estimates reached more than $500 million. Some 500 people lost their lives.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 5 October [meeting 28], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 B [draft: A/53/L.2/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and St. Kitts and Nevis

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987, 43/202 of 20 December 1988, 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 45/185 of 21 December 1990, 46/149 of 18 December 1991, 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 48/188 of 21 December 1993, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/21 P of 18 September 1995 and 52/169 A to M of 16 December 1997,

Deeply distressed by the loss of life, the large number of afflicted people and the destruction wrought by hurricane Georges, which from 20 to 22 September 1998 devastated Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, St. Kitts and Nevis and several other countries and Territories of the region,

Conscious of the efforts of the Governments and the peoples of Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and St. Kitts and Nevis to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of the hurricane,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Conscious of the prompt response being made by Governments, the agencies and bodies of the United Nations system, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals to provide relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the disaster and its medium- and long-term effects will require, as a complement to the efforts being made by the peoples and the Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and St. Kitts and Nevis, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral cooperation in order to face the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas and to initiate the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its support for the efforts of the Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and St. Kitts and Nevis and its solidarity with their peoples as they cope with the disaster;

2. Expresses its appreciation to all States of the international community, international agencies and non-governmental organizations that are providing emergency relief to the affected countries;

3. Urges all States of the international community, as a matter of urgency, to contribute generously to the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts in the affected countries and to provide financing for the national and regional relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts being undertaken by the affected countries using their own and pooled human resources;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the international financial institutions and bodies and agencies of the United Nations system, to assist the Governments of Antigua and Barbuda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and St. Kitts and Nevis in identifying their medium- and long-term needs and in mobilizing resources, as well as to help with the task of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected countries undertaken by their respective Governments;

5. Requests the relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to provide support and assistance in the strengthening of the disaster preparedness and prevention capacities of the countries of the region;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, under agenda item 20, through the Economic and Social Council at the next humanitarian questions segment of its substantive session, on the collaborative effort referred to in paragraphs 4 and 5 above and on the progress made with the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected countries.

Cuba

On 26 August, Cuba, through OCHA, requested international assistance following an unusually severe drought resulting from the El Niño/Southern Oscillation disturbance. From 22 to 26 September, hurricane Georges hit the country, aggravating the situation of those in need in the eastern provinces and displacing thousands more across the country. Some 40,000 homes were severely damaged and some 200,000 people had to be housed in shelters. The storm caused six fatalities. In the agricultural sector, which was affected the most by the hurricane, crops and forests sustained severe damage. Losses were estimated at $305.8 million. The natural disasters added to the country's economic difficulties. From 12 to 25 July, a United Nations Inter-Agency Mission evaluated the Government's request for food aid. In response, WFP launched an appeal for food aid, with a total WFP contribution of $20.5 million. On 18 December, the United Nations issued an Appeal for Rehabilitative Assistance for $86.8 million to help Cuba to overcome a prolonged drought and the effects of hurricane Georges.

Montserrat

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/169 J [YUN 1997, p. 930], the Secretary-General, in September, reported progress made regarding relief and rehabilitation efforts in Montserrat, following a series of eruptions of the Soufrière Hills volcano in 1997, and the support provided by the UN system [A/53/359].

The Secretary-General stated that, with a reduction in the level of volcanic activity, the uncertainties engendered by the eruptions had eased. However, the threat of further volcanic eruptions had not abated, and scientists predicted at least another two years of possible high-level activity. Nonetheless, there were signs of a small increase in population levels. The Government was refocusing its priorities from disaster relief and resettlement to disaster prevention and sustainable development. A sustainable development plan for the period 1998 to 2002 was being finalized, which emphasized the development of the north of the island as the basis for the country's economic, social and political advancement. It also focused on reform of the public sector, the enhancement of the role of the private sector in economic development, and on provisions for the welfare of the population.

Since the postponement of the adoption of Montserrat's new country cooperation framework by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 930], preliminary discussions were held with a view to finalizing the new policy that would emphasize support by UNDP, in collaboration with other UN agencies, as well as relevant partners, to implement the country's sustainable development plan. Avenues would be explored for filling any existing resource gaps to guarantee the success of the country's rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts.

In June, Montserrat's request for a review of its status as net contributor country, which had constrained UNDP efforts to allocate additional resources, was presented to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board. The Board was informed that the request would have to be taken up when the country cooperation framework for Montserrat was presented for consideration in 1999.

Central America

Hurricane Mitch swept across Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua early in the week beginning 26 October, resulting in torrential rains, flooding and landslides. The hurricane reached category V, the highest, and was one of only four hurricanes during the century to reach that level in Central America. The loss of life, devastation and ruin resulting from the effects of the hurricane was severely compounded by man-made factors. Population pressure leading to large-scale deforestation and the cultivation of marginal lands without soil conservation provoked mud slides. Flooding was aggravated by a lack of adequate watershed management. The hurricane affected most of the population of Honduras and Nicaragua, large tracts of El Salvador and Guatemala, and impacted Belize and Costa Rica to a lesser extent. Over 3 million persons were directly affected and over 500,000 lost their homes. Damage to basic infrastructure, agricultural production and industrial and commercial entities was severe.

In November [A/53/656], the Central American Presidents, supported by Mexico [A/53/648], said that the magnitude of the disaster exceeded the region's capacity to deal with the crisis, which would need large-scale multinational support beyond the emergency stage. They called for the elaboration of a Central American rehabilitation and reconstruction plan.

On 3 December, a UN Inter-Agency Transitional Appeal for Relief and Immediate Rehabilitation in Honduras, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala and Belize required $ 153 million for six months. The Appeal sought to raise support for continuing relief needs, as well as to forge links with longer-term rehabilitation while consolidating appeals already issued.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 November [meeting 50], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 C [draft: A/53/L.17 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Emergency assistance to Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 42/169 of 11 December 1987, 43/202 of 20 December 1988, 44/236 of 22 December 1989, 45/185 of 21 December 1990, 46/149 of 18 December 1991, 46/182 of 19 December 1991, 48/188 of 21 December 1993, 49/22 A of 2 December 1994, 49/21 P of 18 September 1995 and 53/1 B of 5 October 1998,

Deeply regretting the loss of human lives and the scores of victims in the wake of hurricane Mitch in Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama from 26 to 29 October 1998,

Conscious of the huge material losses sustained to crops, homes, basic infrastructure and tourist and other areas,

Acknowledging the efforts of the Governments of Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama to minimize the human losses and rapidly to assist the affected population,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to rebuild the affected areas and to alleviate the grave situation wreaked by this natural disaster,

Aware that the work of reconstruction will require broad, coordinated support, as well as solidarity, from the international community,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and the peoples of Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the international community that have so far provided support to the rescue and assistance effort for the affected population;

3. Appeals to all Member States and all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to provide speedy support to the relief, rehabilitation and assistance effort for the affected countries;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and all organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial institutions and development agencies, to assist Belize, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama in assessing their needs and to help to ensure the rehabilitation and recovery of the economy and the affected population in the short, medium and long term;

5. Requests the relevant organs and organizations of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to increase their support and assistance for strengthening the disaster-preparedness capacity of the countries concerned;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, under agenda item 20, through the Economic and Social Council at the next humanitarian questions segment of its substantive session, on the collaborative effort referred to in paragraph 4 above and on the progress made with the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts of the affected countries.

China

In the summer of 1998, China suffered the worst floods in over 44 years. The central and southern parts of the country along the banks of the Yangtze River and its tributaries were affected by heavy flooding. In July and August, extensive flooding also occurred in the north-east, along the Songhuajiang, Nenjiang and other rivers. According to government estimates, 223 million people were affected, 3,004 people died and 15 million became homeless. Crops on some 15 million farms were lost and facilities such as health centres, schools, water supply, and other infrastructure such as roads, bridges, and irrigation systems, as well as industrial facilities, were damaged. The damage was estimated at over $20 billion.

On 23 September, at the request of the Chinese authorities, a UN Inter-Agency Appeal for Emergency Relief and Initial Rehabilitation was issued by the UN Disaster Management Team in Beijing, seeking $139 million to assist 5.8 million beneficiaries. The duration of the appeal was for four months, from the end of September 1998 to the end of January 1999.

Democratic People's Republic of Korea

In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), the decline of industrial and agricultural output and successive natural disasters over the past several years had exacerbated severe food shortages and further complicated economic problems in the country.

The Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the DPRK, launched in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 929] to cover the period from April 1997 to March 1998, received contributions totalling $158 million of the total requirement of $184 million.

On 13 February, OCHA requested $415.6 million in a UN Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the DPRK for the period from 1 January to 31 December 1998. The appeal was later revised downward to $383 million. Contributions received amounted to $215.8 million, or 55.8 per cent of requirements.

In December, OCHA launched a Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal in the amount of $376.1 million for 1 January to 31 December 1999.

Niger

On 16 November [meeting 59], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/1 E [draft: A/53/L.27 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 20 (b)].

Assistance to the Niger, following the severe floods

The General Assembly,

Seriously concerned about the loss of human life and unprecedented destruction of property, dwellings and infrastructure caused in recent months by the severest floods recorded in the history of the Niger,

Recalling that the Niger is one of the least developed countries and one of the poorest according to the human development index,

Considering that the extent of the disaster and its short- and medium-term effects require, as a complement to the endeavours of the Government and the people of the Niger, a humanitarian contribution from the international community to undertake relief and rehabilitation operations,

Noting the appeal for assistance in dealing with the disastrous consequences of the floods, made by the Government of the Niger to the international community on 19 August 1998,

1. Expresses its solidarity with and support for the Government and the people of the Niger at this difficult time;

2. Calls upon all the Member States, the specialized agencies and the other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as the financial institutions and non-governmental organizations, to extend generous assistance to the Niger in support of the relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction operations and programmes it is undertaking with a view to dealing with the disastrous consequences of the floods;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Member States, international and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have so generously helped the Government of the Niger to take the first immediate relief measures;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make all the necessary arrangements for the mobilization and coordination of the humanitarian assistance of the international institutions and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system in order to support the endeavours of the Government of the Niger.

Russian Federation

In the Russian Federation, floods caused by melting snow claimed 13 lives and made 36,000 homeless in the Republic of Sakha (Yakutia). By May, some 42,612 people were evacuated, 9,171 houses had sunk, 134 bridges and 197 electric lines were destroyed, 79 dikes eroded and more than 110 kilometres of roads washed away. OCHA launched an international appeal for assistance to which the donor community committed $1.5 million in cash.

In addition, massive uncontrolled forest fires resulting from unusually dry weather affected large parts of eastern Russia, including the island of Sakhalin, destroying hundreds of homes and necessitating massive evacuations. Some 2 million hectares were burned, damaging the environment and sectors of the Russian economy. A UN Disaster Assessment and Coordination (UNDAC) team, which assessed the impact of the fires, concluded that the Russian Far East was facing a large-scale emergency of international significance. The UNDAC team met on 19 October with donors and international organizations and presented requirements for urgent international assistance totalling $2.5 million.

Chapter IV

International trade, finance and transport

In 1998, growth in the volume of world trade, which began to slow with the onset of the Asian crisis in mid-1997, decelerated. In value terms, world trade not only failed to grow; it underwent its strongest decline since 1982. Trade performance differed widely among regions, reflecting the changing pattern of demand and output growth and the impact of the decline in most commodity prices.

The Trade and Development Report, 1998—produced by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), the focal point for the integrated treatment of the inter-related issues of trade, finance, technology, investment and sustainable development—focused on international financial instability and the world economy, and African development in a comparative perspective. Having considered the report, the Trade and Development Board (TDB), UNCTAD's governing body, stated that the current financial crisis afflicting the world economy had systemic elements, and countries affected could not deal with the problem in isolation. An effective response needed to combine measures at the national and international levels.

The Economic and Social Council devoted its high-level segment in July to the theme of market access: developments since the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, implications, opportunities and challenges in the context of globalization and liberalization. It agreed that a global open market and the rejection of protectionist measures were key elements to overcome the financial crisis and promote growth and development. Having considered the Council's conclusions, the General Assembly, in December, emphasized the importance of continued trade liberalization in developed and developing countries, and of an enabling international environment to support crisis-hit countries and prevent further contagion. It requested the Secretary-General to analyse trends in financial flows and modalities to improve early warning, prevention and response capabilities for dealing with the emergence and spread of financial crises in a timely manner.

In other action on financial issues, the Assembly invited creditor countries, private banks and multilateral financial institutions to consider appropriate measures in cases with a very high level of debt overhang, and to continue their efforts to address the commercial debt problems of least developed countries. In the area of commodities, the Assembly expressed the urgent need for supportive international policies to improve the functioning of commodity markets, and urged developed countries to support the commodity diversification and liberalization efforts of developing countries.

The Assembly endorsed new administrative arrangements for the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and the World Trade Organization (WTO).

TDB conducted a special high-level mid-term review of the ninth session of UNCTAD, held in 1996, which assessed global developments since then, the expectations for the next two years and future prospects looking forward to the tenth session of the Conference in 2000.

International trade

The Trade and Development Report, 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.6] noted that in 1997 the volume of world exports rebounded to an impressive increase of 9.5 per cent after slowing down to 5 per cent the previous year; in value terms, the expansion was only one third as high. The stronger than expected volume growth of world exports in 1997 was the second highest in more than two decades and came close to the record rate of 10 per cent in 1994. With the exception of African exports and Chinese imports, there was a widespread acceleration, at varying rates, in the volume growth of individual countries' and regions' exports and imports. Latin American imports grew by over 21 per cent because of strong gross domestic product (GDP) growth, compared with 12.5 per cent for exports. Likewise, the growth rates of both export and import volume in the United States reached double digits (12 per cent). Also notable was the performance of the European Union (EU), where exports grew faster than imports, and that of transition economies, where imports grew faster than exports.

Of particular significance was the recovery of growth in export volume in Japan and other Asian countries, and more so in China, where exports rose by over 20 per cent. Japan, China and South and East Asia all had rates of growth of exports exceeding that of imports, and despite the slump in GDP growth in Japan and the countries affected by the Asian financial crisis, there was a slight increase in the rate of import growth in all developing countries of Asia, except China. For 1998, expectations were for a reduced expansion of world trade. That outcome, however, was clouded by uncertainties, especially those related to an export-led recovery in Asia.

The Asian crisis affected seriously all countries in the region, which together provided an important impetus to the expansion of global output and trade in recent years. Many Asian economies were experiencing varying degrees of contraction in domestic demand and imports. For countries with a high share of exports in the region, there were already signs of a fall-off in exports and a downward spiral in regional trade. In Japan, for the first quarter of 1998, exports fell sharply. In February alone, the decline in exports to Indonesia, Thailand, the Republic of Korea and Malaysia was 56 per cent, 41 per cent, 38 per cent and 24 per cent, respectively. Imports from Indonesia, Malaysia and Viet Nam fell by 23 per cent, 22 per cent and 30 per cent, respectively. Japanese exports fell since November 1997 and, since the beginning of 1998, imports contracted sharply each month. For the first quarter of 1998, Taiwan Province of China recorded its first quarterly trade deficit in 17 years. The Republic of Korea's exports declined in absolute terms in May 1998 for the first time since the crisis started. Although China's exports for the first five months of 1998 rose by 8.6 per cent over the corresponding period of the previous year, they fell in May alone by 1.5 per cent, for the first time in 22 months. From April to November 1997, India's rate of growth of exports to Asia was less than in the same period for 1996.

Because of the importance of the Asian economies and the relative dependence of both developing and developed countries on Asian markets, an economic slowdown in the region was likely to result in a deceleration in world import demand, with multiplier effects on the exports and incomes of countries in various regions, especially developing countries. In Latin America, while exports to Asia grew rapidly in the first nine months of 1997, there appeared to have been a sharp fall-off towards the end of the year, particularly in Chile. In Africa, the impact of the crisis could be felt particularly in Zambia, the United Republic of Tanzania and the Congo, since a quarter or more of their exports went to Asia.

The World Economic and Social Survey 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.C.1] observed that the value of world merchandise trade reached about $5.5 trillion in 1997, with developed countries accounting for 64 per cent of the total, while developing countries supplied and absorbed roughly 30 per cent of total trade. The volume of world trade grew an estimated 9 per cent, which was attributed to a surging growth of imports in all major country groups, albeit with mixed capacities and opportunities of exporters to respond. Given the high weight of the developed countries in total trade, the almost 9 per cent growth of their imports was particularly significant. In Japan, however, in contrast with what happened in the United States, Canada and Western Europe, the uncharacteristically slow growth of imports reflected the pause in its economic recovery and return to weak economic conditions. Developing countries and economies in transition also saw increases in import volumes: the largest growth was in Latin America and the Caribbean (23 per cent), followed by China (9 per cent), South and East Asia (8 per cent) and other main developing-country regions (6 per cent).

On the export side, the developed countries benefited from the increase in world trade, including Japan, whose volume of merchandise exports rose 10 per cent. Western European exports rose almost 8 per cent in volume and North American exports strengthened, especially to Latin America and the Caribbean. China's export volume grew an estimated 26 per cent, and the exports of South and East Asia grew by over 9 per cent. The volume of West Asian exports declined in the face of weakening global oil demand and strong increases in production by producers in other regions.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

During its high-level segment (6-8 July) [A/53/3], the Economic and Social Council at its substantive session, as decided in decision 1997/319 [YUN 1997, p. 939], discussed market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization. It also held a policy dialogue and discussion with the heads of UN multilateral and trade institutions on developments in the world economy and international economic cooperation.

In addition to the World Economic and Social Survey 1998 (see above), the Council had before it a note by the Secretary-General [E/1998/55] transmitting a report prepared by UNCTAD and WTO on the high-level segment theme, which discussed market access liberalization in the 1990s, post-Uruguay Round tariffs on developing country exports, sectors affected by the imposition of trade measures and market access in services. The high-level segment of the Council was summarized by its President [E/1998/92].

In the ministerial communique submitted by the President [E/1998/L.13], the Council reaffirmed and renewed its commitment to uphold and strengthen the multilateral trading system. It declared that arresting and reversing the marginalization of the least developed countries (LDCs), and promoting their integration into the world economy, constituted an ethical imperative for the international community. It pledged to work towards further enhanced market access for their exports, while supporting their own efforts at capacity-building. The Council welcomed the initiatives of WTO, in cooperation with other organizations, to implement the Plan of Action for the Least Developed Countries [YUN 1996, p. 1441] and recognized that its full implementation required further progress towards duty-free imports from LDCs. It invited WTO, UNCTAD, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the International Trade Centre, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and other relevant organizations to help strengthen the supply capacity of those countries and to take the fullest possible advantage of trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization.

However, significant non-tariff and tariff barriers and high variance, with tariff peaks and tariff escalation, still affected a notable range of products and sectors, particularly those of export interest to developing countries, including LDCs, and the degree of market access commitments in trade in services varied considerably. Future trade negotiations should take those issues into account to secure further broad-based trade liberalization for the benefit of everyone. At the same time, resort to contingency measures, such as anti-dumping duties and countervailing duties, and unilateral actions should be subject to increased multilateral surveillance so that they respected and were consistent with multilateral rules and obligations.

The Council stressed the importance of effective application by all WTO members of all provisions of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations [YUN 1994, p. 1474], taking into account the specific interests of developing countries, and reiterated the need for the effective implementation of the special provisions in the multilateral trade agreements and related ministerial decisions in their favour, in particular the least developed among them. The Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) remained a major instrument for further improving market access of developing countries; there was scope and need for its further improvement, especially for LDCs.

The Council stressed the importance of assisting developing countries and countries with economies in transition in capacity-building and development of their services infrastructure to maximize benefits from electronic commerce, and called on UNCTAD, in collaboration with other organizations, to provide analytical support and technical assistance to developing countries in that area.

The Council underlined the need to provide technical assistance to developing countries for capacity-building in trade negotiations and in taking fullest possible advantage of the WTO dispute settlement mechanism. It invited UNCTAD to continue to assist developing countries, through its policy research and analysis and technical assistance, in formulating a positive agenda for future trade negotiations.

The Council attached great importance to the diversification of African economies and increased market access for their exports. Continued efforts were needed to enhance market access for products of export interest to Africa and to support the African economies' efforts at diversification and building of supply capacity.

The Council was concerned about the financial crisis afflicting a number of countries, with its serious implications for world economic and trading prospects. There was a need for improved measures to address the negative effects of the volatility of international capital flows on the international trading system and the development prospects of developing countries. Keeping all markets open and maintaining continued growth in world trade were key elements in overcoming that crisis. In that context, the Council rejected the use of any protectionist measures. Consideration should be given to the trade financing needs of the countries affected by the crisis to enable them to import essential items. It was important that the momentum towards increased trade liberalization, particularly as regards products of interest to developing countries, be maintained and be given attention in the work leading up to WTO's third Ministerial Conference. At a broader level, there was a need for greater coherence between the development objectives agreed to by the international community and the functioning of the international trading and financial system. The Council called for close cooperation among the United Nations and multilateral trade and international financial institutions, and emphasized the importance of attainment of the universality of the multilateral trading system and the need for Governments members of WTO and relevant international organizations to assist non-members of WTO with respect to accession. WTO and UNCTAD were invited to provide technical assistance to those countries in that regard.

"Partners for Development" summit

A report of the UNCTAD Secretary-General [TD/B/EX(20)/2] reviewed the outcome of the "Partners for Development" summit, held in Lyon, France, from 9 to 12 November. The summit, providing an opportunity to develop UNCTAD's approach to working with civil society and the private sector, was structured around two main tracks: "Global Electronic Trade UN Partnerships" (GETUP), which built on existing UNCTAD programmes dealing with the modernization of trade-related administrations and transport systems and with the capacity of developing countries to participate in and benefit from global information networks; and "Profit and Development", encompassing projects which used market mechanisms to address development issues such as micro-finance, commodity risk management and structured finance, bio-trade and investment.

New questions enabled UNCTAD and its partners to jointly identify working methods to address its mandate: the question of the legitimacy and representativeness of the potential partners; the choice of potential partners, particularly in the case of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and private enterprises; the definition of "partnership" and the choice of the areas in which they would be more effective; how to mobilize the right participants in terms of thematic and geographical coverage; the challenges posed by the format of the summit's sessions; the importance of an effective communications strategy; and how to adapt UNCTAD's work methods in order to make it an effective partner for non-governmental actors.

In his conclusions, the UNCTAD Secretary-General stated that the summit was a vote of confidence by many of the world's key non-governmental development actors in UNCTAD's capacity to contribute to the solution of some of the most pressing problems of development. On the basis of the experience of the summit and of the implementation of the first partnerships, concrete proposals would be formulated, aiming at making UNCTAD a catalyst for private-public partnerships and a tool at the service of the development process.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/606/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/170 without vote [agenda item 91 (a)].

International trade and development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 50/95 and 50/98 of 20 December 1995, 51/167 of 16 December 1996 and 52/182 of 18 December 1997, as well as relevant international agreements concerning trade, economic growth, development and interrelated issues,

Welcoming the ministerial communique on the theme "Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization", adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 8 July 1998,

Reaffirming the outcome of the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Midrand, South Africa, which provides an important framework for promoting a partnership for growth and development,

Emphasizing that a favourable and conducive international economic and financial environment and a positive investment climate are necessary for the economic growth of the world economy, including the creation of employment, in particular for the growth and development of developing countries, and emphasizing also that each country is responsible for its own economic policies for sustainable development,

Taking note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on its forty-fifth session,

Noting that the second Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization was held at Geneva from 18 to 20 May 1998,

1. Recognizes the importance of the expansion of international trade as an engine of growth and development and, in this context, the need for expeditious and complete integration of developing countries and countries with economies in transition into the international trading system, in full cognizance of the opportunities and challenges of globalization and liberalization and taking into account the circumstances of individual countries, in particular the trade interests and development needs of developing countries;

2. Renews its commitment to uphold and strengthen an open, rule-based, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory, transparent and predictable multilateral trade system, which contributes to the economic and social advancement of all countries and peoples by promoting the liberalization and expansion of trade, employment and stability and by providing a framework for the conduct of international trade relations;

3. Deplores any attempt to bypass or undermine multilaterally agreed procedures on the conduct of international trade by unilateral actions inconsistent with the multilateral trade rules and regulations, including those agreed upon in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

4. Reaffirms the role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of development and related issues in the areas of trade, finance, technology, investment and sustainable development;

5. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue, on the basis of the outcome of its ninth session, to identify and analyse the implications for development of issues relevant to investment, taking into account the interests of developing countries and bearing in mind the work undertaken by other organizations;

6. Notes with appreciation the initiative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to invite the executive secretaries of the United Nations regional commissions to participate in the discussions of the Trade and Development Board, and encourages the continuation of such a practice in the future;

7. Notes the increasing importance and application of electronic commerce in international trade, and in this context welcomes the summit of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the theme "Partners for Development", held at Lyon, France, from 9 to 12 November 1998, and urges the Conference, in cooperation with other relevant bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to assist developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, and, in this regard, also notes the needs of the economies in transition;

8. Reiterates the importance of continued trade liberalization in developed and developing countries, including in sectors of export interest to developing countries, through, inter alia:

(a) Substantial reductions of tariffs, the rolling back of tariff peaks and the removal of tariff escalation;

(b) The elimination of trade-distorting policies, protectionist practices and non-tariff barriers in international trade relations;

(c) Ensuring that resort to anti-dumping duties, countervailing duties, and Phytosanitary and technical standards is subjected to effective multilateral surveillance so that such measures respect and are consistent with multilateral rules and obligations and are not used for protectionist purposes;

(d) The improvement and renewal, by preference-giving countries, of their Generalized System of Preferences schemes with the objective of integrating developing countries, especially the least developed countries, into the international trading system and of finding ways and means to ensure more effective utilization of the Generalized System of Preferences schemes, and in this context reiterates its original principles, namely, non-discrimination, universality, burden-sharing and non-reciprocity;

9. Also reiterates that it is an ethical imperative for the international community to arrest and reverse the marginalization of the least developed countries and to promote their expeditious integration into the world economy and, as declared in the ministerial communique on market access adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 8 July 1998, that all countries should work together towards further enhanced market access for exports from least developed countries within the context of supporting their own efforts at capacity-building; welcomes the initiatives taken by the World Trade Organization in cooperation with other organizations in the implementation of the Plan of Action for the Least Developed Countries adopted at its first Ministerial Conference, held at Singapore from 9 to 13 December 1996, including through effective follow-up to the High-level Meeting on Integrated Initiatives for Least Developed Countries' Trade Development, held at Geneva on 27 and 28 October 1997; recognizes that the full implementation of the Plan of Action requires further progress towards duty-free imports from the least developed countries; and invites the relevant international organizations to provide enhanced technical assistance to help strengthen the supply capacity of the least developed countries so as to help them to take the fullest possible advantage of trading opportunities arising from globalization and liberalization;

10. Stresses the urgent need to facilitate the integration of the countries of Africa into the world economy, and in this context welcomes the action-oriented agenda for the development of Africa contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, and endorses the call contained in the ministerial communique for continued efforts to enhance market access for products of export interest to African economies and support for their efforts at diversification and building of supply capacity, and in this context requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue its contribution to the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, taking into account the agreed conclusions of the Trade and Development Board at its forty-fifth session;

11. Also stresses the need to give special attention, within the context of international cooperation on trade and development issues, to the implementation of the many international development commitments geared to meeting the special development needs and problems of small island developing States and of landlocked developing States and to recognize that developing countries that provide transit services need adequate support in maintaining and improving their transit infrastructure;

12. Reiterates the importance of the effective application by all members of the World Trade Organization of all provisions of the Final Act Embodying the Results of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, taking into account the specific interests of developing countries so as to maximize economic growth and developmental benefits for all, and the need for the effective implementation of the special provisions in the multilateral trade agreements and related ministerial decisions in favour of developing countries, including special and preferential treatment, and urges Governments and concerned international organizations to apply effectively the Ministerial Decision on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-importing Developing Countries;

13. Also reiterates that it is important that the momentum towards increased trade liberalization, particularly as regards products of interest to developing countries, be maintained and given attention in the work leading up to the third Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization and that further liberalization be sufficiently broad-based to respond to the range of interests and concerns of all members, within the framework of the World Trade Organization, and in this regard invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide analytical support and technical assistance to developing countries for their effective participation in multilateral trade negotiations and in their formulation of a positive agenda for future trade negotiations;

14. Welcomes the launching of the substantive preparatory process for the tenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to be held at Bangkok in 2000, by the Trade and Development Board at its forty-fifth session, with a view to the finalization of the agenda of the Conference by the Board at its nineteenth executive session, in December 1998, and considers that the tenth session of the Conference will provide an important opportunity for the United Nations system and the international community to make a collective reflection on development;

15. Emphasizes the importance of the strengthening of, and the attainment of greater universality by, the international trading system and of accelerating the process directed towards accession to the World Trade Organization of developing countries and countries with economies in transition, and also emphasizes the necessity for Governments members of the World Trade Organization and relevant international organizations to assist non-members of the World Trade Organization so as to facilitate their efforts with respect to accession in an expeditious and transparent manner, on the basis of World Trade Organization rights and obligations, and for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the World Trade Organization to provide technical assistance, within their mandates, that will contribute to the rapid and full integration of those countries into the multilateral trading system;

16. Stresses the need for improved measures to address the effects of the financial crisis on the international trading system and the development prospects of developing countries and the countries affected by the crisis, emphasizing that keeping all markets open and maintaining continued growth in world trade are key elements in overcoming the crisis, and in this context rejects the use of any protectionist measures; at a broader level, there is a need for greater coherence between the development objectives agreed to by the international community and the functioning of the international trading and financial system, and in this context calls for close cooperation between the organizations of the United Nations system and the multilateral trade and financial institutions;

17. Recognizes the importance of open regional economic integration in the creation of new opportunities for expanding trade and investment, stresses the importance of those initiatives being in conformity with World Trade Organization rules, where applicable, and, bearing in mind the primacy of the multilateral trading system, affirms that regional trade agreements should be outward-oriented and supportive of the multilateral trading system;

18. Reiterates that, in line with Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Governments should have as their objective to ensure that trade and environmental policies are mutually supportive so as to achieve sustainable development and that, in so doing, their environmental policies and measures with a potential trade impact are not used for protectionist purposes, and encourages the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue its work on trade, environment and development;

19. Strongly underlines the need for technical assistance to enable developing countries to take the fullest possible advantage of the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization, based on multilaterally agreed rules and regulations, and in this context emphasizes the importance of enabling the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide technical assistance to developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and small island developing States, in this area, and welcomes its collaboration with the relevant organizations of the United Nations system, the Bretton Woods institutions, the World Trade Organization, the Bank for International Settlements and other relevant organizations in the course of its work;

20. Emphasizes that the dispute settlement mechanism of the World Trade Organization is a key element with regard to the integrity and credibility of the multilateral trading system and the full realization of the benefits anticipated from the conclusion of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations;

21. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in collaboration with the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution, developments in the multilateral trading system and the implementation of the ministerial communique on market access adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 8 July 1998.

Trade policy

Trade in goods and services, and commodities

The Commission on Trade in Goods and Services, and Commodities held its third session in Geneva from 28 September to 2 October [TD/B/45/10]. The Commission had before it a report [TD/B/COM.1/20 & Add.1] by the UNCTAD secretariat on ways to enhance the utilization of trade preferences by developing countries, in particular LDCs, as well as on further ways to expand preferences. The report analysed GSP and other non-reciprocal trade preferences in the post-Uruguay Round trading environment, and the recent trends in trade under them. It also suggested how to improve the utilization of trade preferences and further expand them, in particular in favour of LDCs, and how to build consensus on new policy initiatives.

In agreed conclusions, the Commission stressed that the effects of recent financial and economic turmoil and its adverse consequences called for further strengthening of international cooperation. The improvements and extensions of GSP schemes and other unilateral trade preferences, in particular those in favour of LDCs, were a sign of their continuing relevance and importance. Concrete action should be taken so that a greater number of beneficiaries could utilize GSP advantages to rectify imbalances in the distribution of its benefits.

In recommendations addressed to preference-giving countries, the Commission stated that there was scope for expanding and improving GSP benefits by increasing product coverage to better match the comparative advantage of beneficiary countries; harmonizing and simplifying GSP rules of origin to enhance their transparency, facilitate their application and improve GSP effectiveness; and addressing the deficiencies of a number of schemes, such as the lack of stability, predictability and simplicity. In addition, preference-giving countries should disseminate to their importers information on products covered, rates and other conditions applied under the various schemes they maintained, give prompt notification of changes in GSP schemes and provide related trade data to the UNCTAD secretariat for its technical cooperation activities. Efforts should be made also to eliminate the inherent weakness of the supply capabilities in LDCs, and all preference-giving countries should consider offering duty-free market access for all LDC products on an autonomous basis. Further relaxation of administrative procedures in favour of LDCs would help enhance their utilization of GSP benefits, and ways should be devised for improving contacts between preference-giving countries and LDC beneficiaries to help understand better their problems and find appropriate solutions.

In the context of South-South cooperation, more developing countries that were capable of doing so were encouraged to accord preferential market access unilaterally and without conditions to LDCs.

Addressing preference-receiving countries, the Commission recommended that, to help beneficiary countries overcome some of the important obstacles, such as unfamiliarity with the various schemes and their complex procedures and weak export capacities, and make greater use of GSP benefits, Governments in preference-receiving countries should assist in informing and training the private sector in GSP and other trade laws, and other developing countries should also provide technical cooperation to LDCs in the context of South-South cooperation. More LDCs should join the Global System of Trade Preferences among Developing Countries (GSTP) to provide a major boost to South-South trade.

Addressing UNCTAD, the Commission recommended that UNCTAD continue to analyse the importance of GSP schemes and other trade preferences, and identify their real benefits; and provide technical cooperation to preference-receiving countries, especially LDCs and developing countries with structurally weak and vulnerable economies, to increase their utilization of trade preferences, and enhance their human resource capacities by fortifying existing GSP focal points or assisting in their establishment. UNCTAD should also explore the use of new information technologies to render technical cooperation in GSP and other trade preferences more effective.

For its consideration of the scope for expanding exports of developing countries in specific services sectors through all General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) modes of supply, taking into account their interrelationship, the role of information technology and of new business practices, the Commission had before it a report by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/COM.1/21 & Add.1], which analysed the expansion of trade in specific sectors and the role of modes of supply and the role of information technology and new business techniques in expanding service exports of developing countries, and suggested strategies to expand services exports.

In its agreed conclusions, the Commission requested Governments to take the following policy initiatives at the national level: identify barriers to service exports and facilitate the liberalization of market access through measures to strengthen producer services; apply policies to encourage enterprises to take advantage of market access opportunities for the movement of persons, in ways to reduce brain drain and facilitate the acquisition of skills; identify areas of comparative advantage in labour-intensive services; and accelerate the inclusion of services and their liberalization in the context of subregional arrangements and strengthen cooperative efforts through such arrangements for the next round of GATS negotiations.

The Commission invited the international community to examine the effective implementation of articles IV and XIX of GATS in the development of the guidelines for GATS negotiations; to foster conditions conducive to the transfer of technology to firms in developing countries and to its diffusion in the public domain; and to assist the UNCTAD and WTO secretariats in improving services statistics to meet the needs of policy makers and trade negotiators for the next round of GATS negotiations.

The Commission agreed that UNCTAD should prepare, jointly with WTO, an assessment of the impact on developing countries of liberalization under GATs; identify opportunities for expanding trade and analyse developments in trade and competition issues in service sectors; continue to work on the Measures Affecting Service Trade database, evaluating its functioning with a focus on the utilization of developments in information technology; assist developing countries, especially LDCs, in improving their supply capacity in trade in services, and continue work on the Co-ordinated African Programme of Assistance in Services and extend it to other interested countries; consider ways of improving the relationship between developing countries' tourism service suppliers and travel agents from consumer countries to achieve a sustainable tourist industry; and prepare, in cooperation with WTO, a list of economic needs tests under GATS and propose ways to introduce a greater degree of transparency and predictability in the application of such tests.

The Commission took note of the following reports of expert meetings: on examining the effectiveness and usefulness for commodity-dependent countries of new tools in commodity markets: risk management and collateralized finance [TD/B/COM.1/16]; on strengthening the capacity for expanding the tourism sector in developing countries, with particular focus on tour operators, travel agencies and other suppliers [TD/B/COM.1/17]; on strengthening capacities in developing countries to develop their environmental services sector [TD/B/COM.1/18]; and of an informal report by the UNCTAD secretariat on the ad hoc meeting of the Secretary-General of UNCTAD on GSP, GSTP and new initiatives for LDCs [UNCTAD/SG/AC.1/1]. It also recommended that UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board (TDB) convene expert meetings to consider the impact of changing supply-and-demand market structures on commodity prices and exports of major interest to developing countries; to examine trade in the agricultural sector, with a view to expanding the exports of developing countries and assisting them to better understand the issues at stake in future agricultural negotiations; and to clarify air transport services issues to define elements of the agenda of developing countries as regards both GATS and specific sector negotiations of interest to them.

At its nineteenth executive session in December [TD/B/EX(19)/3], TDB endorsed the Commission's agreed conclusions.

Interdependence and global economic issues

TDB, in October, considered interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective, and adopted agreed conclusions on the causes, management and prevention of financial crisis [A/53/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 451(XLV))] (see below, under "Financial policy").

Trade promotion and facilitation

In 1998, United Nations bodies continued to assist developing countries to promote their exports and to facilitate the movement of their goods in international commerce. The International Trade Centre was the main originator of technical cooperation projects in that area.

The TDB Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development held one session during the year.

International Trade Centre

During 1998, the International Trade Centre (ITC), under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and WTO, progressed from building up organizational strengths to transferring them to its operational programmes, shifting its focus from administrative reform and basic retooling to the effective delivery of its field programmes, based on assessed needs and tailor-made national programmes. The process of reforming the organization, which started in 1996, was completed in 1998, and several initiatives of previous years started to materialize [ITC/AG(XXXII)/172].

Major substantive accomplishments in 1998 included the application of the "product-network" approach to national capacity-building and private-sector development, validated in the field and endorsed by external evaluation, which made it possible for ITC significantly to increase the outreach of its services to its clientele. Demand from client countries for the ITC range of "products" continued to rise, and partner agencies in a number of countries worked closely with ITC in testing, validating and refining flexible learning systems for export and import management. ITC also turned its attention to bringing the benefits of information technology within the grasp of small businesses, through initiatives to promote increased usage of the Internet as a means of enhancing business performance and to strengthen ITC's own capability for delivering services over the Internet. Support was also intensified to the business community in attaining a clearer understanding of the implications of the evolving multilateral trading system and in optimizing ITC's performance. In collaboration with WTO, the Centre designed a comprehensive programme (World Trade Net) to reinforce national capabilities for addressing WTO issues through an interactive national and international network.

ITC's product and market development (PMD) programme, charted by the new PMD strategy, gathered momentum. ITC took major steps to respond better to the changing needs of partner countries in a wide range of export products and services, and to develop new approaches to increase the effectiveness and broaden the impact of its PMD activities. It expanded services close to, and directly supportive of, business transactions, and to making more intensive use of the Internet. To improve PMD delivery and in response to buoyant demand for ITC's strategic market research, a Market Analysis Section was created within the Division of Product and Market Development.

The evaluation of the trade information management subprogramme, initiated during the year, emphasized the importance of trade information to success in the context of globalization and the role of ITC in assisting its partner countries in developing effective information services and networks. ITC refined its approaches to information management and communication and developed new methods and tools. It extended assistance to new partner organizations, in particular those participating in the Global Trade Point Network.

In trade support services, ITC continued to maintain professional expertise and assist partner countries in developing their trade support services to the business community. It concentrated on revitalizing its institutional advisory capacity; improving small and medium-sized enterprise (SME) competitiveness in world markets; providing support on trade finance to SMEs; enhancing export quality; meeting new market requirements in export packaging; and providing legal services.

In the human resource development programme, ITC implemented its medium-term strategy, acting as a technical support centre to organizations in partner countries involved in international business management training and counselling. The geographic focus was sub-Saharan Africa.

With regard to international purchasing and supply management (IPSM), key actions were undertaken in the area of public sector procurement and to support the institutional development of national purchasing associations. The IPSM programme continued to focus on developing generic technical products and building up national training, consultancy and information support capacities.

ITC strengthened its capacity to deliver programmes in the field, particularly in support of the new programme initiatives for LDCs and Africa. Programme development work for LDCs intensified, increasingly in coordination with other agencies. ITC, with UNCTAD and WTO, initiated a multi-country programme to integrate African countries into the multilateral trading system under special donor-support arrangements, and the Joint ITC/UNCTAD/WTO Integrated Technical Assistance Programme in Selected Least Developed and Other African Countries became operational. Activities in economies in transition expanded, and the design of new South-South trade activities was initiated in parallel with a thematic evaluation of ITC's own experience in that area.

JAG action. The ITC Joint Advisory Group (JAG) held its thirty-first session in Geneva from 27 April to 1 May [ITC/AG(XXXI)/171]. JAG had before it reports on: ITC activities in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 940]; the evaluation of the ITC subprogramme on product and market research, development and promotion [ITC/AG(XXXI)/165]; the ITC strategy for product and market development [ITC/AG(XXXI)/168]; the report of the ITC Technical Meeting 1998 [ITC/AG(XXXI)/166]; and the report of the ITC Global Trust Fund's Consultative Committee [ITC/AG(XXXI)/169].

The Group stressed its appreciation for ITC's progress in defining and implementing a new strategic orientation, in pursuing its management reform, in intensifying cooperation with other organizations and in reporting comprehensively on its activities. It approved the steps taken to devote more attention to LDCs, and affirmed the relevance of ITC's mandate to its partner countries against the backdrop of the current economic environment and its effort to integrate them into the multilateral trading system. Concern was expressed over the decline of resources for technical cooperation, even though a slight increase was noted in the previous year; that negative trend, however, did not reflect the level of donor interest in ITC's work. The Group was supportive of the "product-network approach", providing a cost-effective response to needs on the one hand and to limited ITC resources on the other, and stressed the need to continue to spread the benefits of the tools and to intensify the capacity-building effort. It expressed appreciation for the contribution that the Global Trust Fund and its Consultative Committee had made to ITC's work programme.

Pledges of trust fund contributions to ITC were announced by Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

ITC administrative arrangements

In a March note [A/C.5/52/45] on the administrative arrangements for ITC, the Secretariat reported that, in the context of the 1995 agreement between the Secretary-General and the WTO Director-General [YUN1995, p. 959] with regard to the status of ITC as a joint body, the Secretary-General had submitted to the General Assembly revised administrative arrangements for ITC [YUN 1997, p. 941], in particular proposals regarding the preparation, review and approval of its budget, and, based on those proposals, the ITC 1998-1999 proposed programme budget. However, WTO was of the view that those proposals did not fully address its concerns. In the circumstances, the Bureau of the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee agreed that the matter should be brought to its attention at the resumed fifty-second session in 1998.

In September [A/53/7/Add.3], the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) noted that the current ITC budgetary process and the Secretary-General's proposals did not fully address the need for simplified arrangements, including those called for by the WTO General Council. It proposed, starting with the programme budget for the 2000-2001 biennium, new administrative arrangements, under which, in May of the year preceding the UN financial period, ITC would submit to the Assembly its budget outline for the first year of activities of the biennium with a projection of requirements for the second year. The Assembly, in the spring of that year, would approve in Swiss francs the level of the ITC outline for the biennial period concerned. The UN proposed programme budget, based on that outline, would be presented to the Assembly in United States dollars as part of the overall proposed programme budget, using the same rate of exchange as in the proposed programme budget as a whole. ITC would submit its outline in Swiss francs to the WTO Committee on Budget, Finance and Administration for approval, and its proposed programme budget to the Assembly and to the WTO General Council in the autumn of the year preceding the UN financial period. The proposed ITC programme of work would be reviewed by the intergovernmental bodies concerned. ITC accounts would continue to be administered by the United Nations, and its financial statements certified and reported to the Assembly and the WTO General Council. The activities of the Centre would continue to be subject to UN internal audit and oversight.

In decision 53/411 A of 26 October, the Assembly requested TDB and JAG to consider the ACABQ proposals on new administrative arrangements and to submit their comments as a matter of priority.

In a November note [A/C.5/53/38], the Secretary-General reported that both TDB and JAG had endorsed the proposals of ACABQ and that the Fifth Committee had been advised accordingly.

In decision 53/411 B of 18 December, the Assembly took note of that information and endorsed the administrative arrangements.

In resolution 53/215 A of 18 December, the Assembly, in its revised appropriations for the 1998-1999 biennium, approved $19.8 million for ITC.

Enterprise, business facilitation and development

The TDB Commission on Enterprise, Business Facilitation and Development held its third session in Geneva from 23 to 27 November and on 14 December [TD/B/45/15]. It had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on policy issues relevant to inter-firm cooperation, clustering and networking [TD/B/COM.3/19]. The report stated that globalization and the post-Uruguay Round brought with them a new competitive environment and hence new requirements for sustained competitiveness on the part of firms. International partnering, networking and clustering within localities were some of the best ways to build and sustain the kind of competitiveness that SMEs needed to survive and grow in a globalizing economy. The report also explored the main findings of two expert meetings held during the year: on the impact of government policy and government/private action in stimulating inter-firm partnerships regarding technology, production and marketing, with particular emphasis on North-South and South-South linkages in promoting technology transfers (know-how, management expertise) and trade for SME development (Geneva, 20-22 April) [TD/B/COM.3/12]; and on clustering and networking for SME development (Geneva, 2-4 September) [TD/B/COM.3/14]. Experts reviewed the role of public policies promoting inter-firm cooperation, regional clusters, export processing zones and business incubators, as well as support measures and programmes. Both meetings underlined the primary role of Governments in providing an enabling macroeconomic environment, legal and regulatory frameworks and basic infrastructure for cooperation among firms via partnerships, clustering and networking. Governments could also encourage and empower meso-level institutions such as business associations, academic institutions, business service centres and NGOs to play an active role in promoting those activities. UNCTAD was requested, inter alia, to undertake studies to develop criteria and checklists of conditions, capacities and attitudes making companies "partnership-ready"; and on innovative, non-fiscal incentives useful for promoting clustering and networking.

In agreed conclusions, the Commission invited Governments, particularly in developing countries and economies in transition, to continue to create an enabling macroeconomic environment and provide basic infrastructure and services to promote private sector and SME development. For that purpose, Governments should promote basic conditions, such as a legal framework and a sound competition climate, and develop local capital markets and mobilize domestic savings to facilitate the access of SMEs to finance. They were also invited to establish means empowering meso-level institutions to support enterprise development, including inter-firm cooperation.

Recommendations addressed to the international community stressed the importance of its policies and support measures in helping developing countries promote their enterprise sector, such as targeted technical assistance, access to information networks, and strengthening support for research and development systems through linkages with enterprises, universities and research institutions. The international community should facilitate inter-firm cooperation, particularly in LDCs; build awareness of the existence of internationally recognized standards, and provide information on meeting those standards and related assistance; and support and promote research on the feasibility of enhancing and creating special financial mechanisms to meet SMEs' needs, since a major challenge facing them was access to finance.

The Commission recommended that UNCTAD, in cooperation and coordination with other international organizations, help developing countries integrate into networks of research institutions on networking, partnering and clustering issues; examine the feasibility of increasing the access of SMEs to finance, and undertake case studies to identify best practices in promoting inter-firm cooperation with a view to developing criteria and checklists of conditions, capacities and attitudes which made companies "partnership-ready"; advise Governments on policy options within specific sectors and on creating an appropriate policy environment for inter-firm cooperation; compile information on establishing an electronic network of North-South and South-South partnering programmes, and prepare a study on innovative, non-fiscal incentives; and expand its existing technical assistance programmes for developing countries.

For its consideration of the impact and relevance of electronic commerce on trade growth and development, the Commission had before it the report of an expert meeting on capacity-building in the area of electronic commerce: human resource development (Geneva, 29 June-1 July), which identified areas in which UNCTAD should pursue technical cooperation activities in human resource development for electronic commerce [TD/B/COM.3/13]; an UNCTAD secretariat note updating the trade efficiency assessment methodology [TD/B/COM.3/15]; and an UNCTAD secretariat report on policy issues relating to access to participation in electronic commerce [TD/B/COM.3/16], assessing the state of connectivity/accessibility of various countries and regions to Internet-based electronic commerce, and identifying main areas in which policy issues needed to be addressed to enhance access to participation in electronic commerce; and an UNCTAD secretariat report on the implications for trade and development of recent proposals to set up a global framework for electronic commerce [TD/B/COM.3/17], including those by the EU, Japan, the United States and the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

In agreed conclusions addressed to Governments, the Commission invited them to provide the proper legal and regulatory environment for the rapid development of electronic commerce and its dissemination among enterprises, especially SMEs, with a view towards facilitating interoperability; pay attention to the experience and expertise of their own enterprises in electronic commerce; and consider the development impact of the possible rules and regulations they could adopt nationally, regionally and internationally. Addressing the international community, the Commission invited it to strengthen assistance to developing countries in: raising the awareness of government officials, trade practitioners and entrepreneurs about the legal, technical and economic dimensions of electronic commerce and their potential impact on the ability of those countries to participate in international trade; offering practical learning and information tools to enhance their ability to use the techniques of electronic commerce effectively; strengthening developing countries' ability to enhance trade efficiency through electronic means; providing assistance in capacity-building and in setting up the legal and regulatory framework to benefit from electronic commerce; and facilitating broader participation of developing those countries in work towards an international framework for electronic commerce.

The Commission stressed the importance of enhancing cooperation in electronic commerce between UNCTAD and other international and regional organizations. It recommended that UNCTAD organize regional electronic commerce workshops on stimulating exchanges of experience in electronic commerce; gather and post on its web site information relevant to development-related dimensions of electronic commerce; and pursue its analytical and research work on the links between electronic commerce and development, with special focus on measures and policies to enhance developing countries' participation in global electronic commerce and the link between such commerce and trade facilitation.

TDB, at its nineteenth executive session [TD/B/EX(19)/3], endorsed the Commission's agreed conclusions.

Export promotion

The Seoul Framework for Cooperation [A/53/796], adopted at the Forum on Asia-Africa Cooperation in Export Promotion (Seoul, Republic of Korea, 14-16 December), reviewed the Asian experience and the challenges facing Africa in export promotion and diversification, identified areas for Asia-Africa cooperation for export promotion in Africa and devised a framework for cooperation and equal partnership.

The Forum noted that international trade increasingly had become the main engine of economic growth and, while East and South-East Asia achieved high rates of economic growth, Africa's share in world trade declined as a result of over-dependence on a limited range of commodities coupled with policies unfavourable to external trade expansion. However, export promotion and diversification were among the major goals of Africa's growth-oriented strategy, and the Asian experience was of particular relevance in that regard. The Forum examined practical aspects in trade and export promotion and explored ways and means to strengthen Asia-Africa cooperation promoting trade and joint ventures among them, including capacity-building and institutional mechanisms. A major requirement for cooperation in general, and for capacity-building in particular, should be based on the commitment by the African countries to create an enabling environment for foreign investment; on the other hand, Asian countries should look at Africa as an opportunity for investment and mutual benefit. Furthermore, Asia-Africa cooperation in capacity-building should be guided by globalization and trade liberalization.

The Forum suggested that Asia and Africa should devise a joint strategy to expand their markets both in the two regions and in third parties, through measures such as industrial relocation and investment to diversify production structures. In addition, to expand exports, African countries should build their institutional capacity in export promotion. The Forum recommended that a steering committee be set up to ensure follow-up to the Forum.

Commodities

The World Economic and Social Survey 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.C.1] stated that dollar prices of non-oil commodities exported by developing countries were on average the same in 1997 as in 1996, although there was considerable variability in prices of individual commodities and commodity groups. There was also a pattern in a number of commodities of strong growth in demand, and prices at the beginning of the year, followed by declines in the second half, related in large measure, but not exclusively, to the Asian currency and economic crisis. Although supply and demand responses to the crisis differed in each country, the downturn in economic activity in East Asia contributed to lower demand for commodity imports, global excess supplies and lower prices. Import demand for industrial raw materials and other commodities slowed considerably in many Asian countries. However, industrial growth and strong demand in Europe, Latin America and the United States averted steeper declines in prices of some commodities in the minerals, ores and metals group.

The Trade and Development Report, 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.6] stated that prices in 1997 for non-oil primary commodities remained at the same level as in the previous year, while those for oil and manufactured products fell by some 6 per cent. Underlying the apparent stable prices for non-oil commodities was a sharp increase in the prices of tropical beverages, in contrast to falling prices for agricultural raw materials. Prices of commodities that had suffered significant damage from unfavourable climatic conditions caused by El Niño also increased, despite the general declining trend.

Oil prices in 1997 started their decline later than most other primary commodities, influenced by, among other factors, a slowing demand growth in a number of countries affected by the Asian crisis, an unseasonably warm winter in the northern hemisphere which reduced demand for heating oil, and a marked expansion in supplies and a considerable build-up of inventories from the previous year at all stages of the marketing chain. The prices of agricultural commodities appeared to have stabilized, albeit at lower levels than those prevailing in mid-1997, but those for most metals and petroleum continued to decline until April 1998. From June 1997 to April 1998, non-oil commodity prices declined on average by 10.6 per cent, with larger falls in agricultural raw materials (12 per cent) and metals (17.3 per cent) than in food and beverages (10.1 per cent). The decline in the price of oil was 24.6 per cent. To a large extent, those price falls were associated with the Asian crisis, notably in the case of copper, nickel and natural rubber. Also, while some commodities were in ample supply, the low rate of inflation in developed market economies was a disincentive to speculative buying of commodities, as was the sharp appreciation of the dollar in 1996 and 1997. While the decline in commodity prices in general helped to keep inflation down in developed countries, it adversely affected a large number of developing countries dependent on commodity export earnings.

UNCTAD report. In response to General Assembly resolution 51/169 [YUN 1996, p. 860], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/53/319], prepared by UNCTAD, on world commodity trends and prospects. The report stated that during 1985-1997 primary commodity prices experienced one of the least favourable trends in recent decades and that, with the onset of the Asian crisis in mid-1997, the prospects of many commodity markets had become even more uncertain. However, commodity exports continued to constitute a major source of foreign exchange earnings for a large number of developing countries, and their sustained development was dependent on the realization of the potential of that sector. Therefore, their efforts to improve their commodity production and to identify and exploit emerging opportunities, particularly in non-traditional areas, were a prerequisite for many of them to escape further marginalization. Action by commodity-dependent countries should aim at obtaining improvements in the multilateral trading system conducive to commodity-based development; creating an enabling domestic environment for commodity-based development; and assisting the enterprise sector in commodity-based businesses domestically, regionally and globally. The international community should provide a favourable international environment and supply the requisite assistance for the success of actions by the Governments of commodity-dependent countries. It could also support developing countries' measures regarding trade finance by providing financial support and expertise, as well as extra security at agreed warehouses, enhancing possibilities for rediscounting developing country banks and creating new sovereign risk insurance facilities. Efforts should be made to promote enhanced complementarities among developing countries for taking advantage of the emerging and diversified trade opportunities. South-South cooperation could also help harmonize policies and rationalize supplies. Commodity-dependent countries needed to formulate a proactive agenda for forthcoming multilateral trade negotiations, reflecting their requirements for commodity-based development.

Individual commodities

Cocoa. In March, according to the World Economic and Social Survey 1998, member countries of the International Cocoa Organization reached agreement on a "Cocoa Production Management" plan, under article 29 of the 1993 International Cocoa Agreement [YUN 1993, p. 760]. The plan set specific targets for cocoa production, consumption and stock levels that would reduce excess supplies and maintain stable supply and demand balances worldwide.

As at 31 December 1998, 30 States and the EU had become parties to the Agreement. In 1998, Benin, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the EU became parties.

Common Fund for Commodities

The 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities [YUN 1980, p. 621], a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities, as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing, entered into force in 1989 and the Fund became operational later that year.

In 1998, Trinidad and Tobago, the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa and the Organization of African Unity (OAU) became parties to the Agreement. As at 31 December 1998, the number of parties stood at 106 States, the EC, the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa and OAU.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/606/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/174 without vote [agenda item 91 (c)].

Commodities

The General Assembly,
Recalling its resolutions 45/200 of 21 December 1990, 47/185 of 22 December 1992, 48/214 of 23 Deember 1993 and 51/169 of 16 December 1996, and stressing the urgent need to ensure their full implementation,

Recognizing that in many developing countries, in particular African countries and least developed countries, the commodity sector remains the principal source of export revenues and of the creation of employment, income and savings, as well as a driving force of investment and a contributor to growth and development,

Expressing deep concern about the negative effects of recent unfavourable weather conditions on the supply side of commodity-dependent countries and the effects of the financial crisis on the demand for commodities, as well as the continuing decline of commodity prices, which adversely affect the economic growth of commodity-dependent countries, especially in Africa,

Concerned about the difficulties experienced by the developing countries in financing and implementing viable diversification programmes and in attaining access to markets for their commodities,

Emphasizing the necessity for the developing countries, in particular African countries and least developed countries, for a domestic industrial transformation of their commodity production with a view to enhancing productivity and stabilizing and increasing their export earnings, thus promoting the sustainable economic growth of developing countries in their integration into the global economy,

Taking note of the report of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on world commodity trends and prospects,

1. Notes the need of the developing countries, in particular the commodity-dependent developing countries, for stable and more predictable commodity prices in the face of instability and decline in real terms of the prices of many commodities;

2. Emphasizes the need for developing countries that are heavily dependent on primary commodities to continue to promote a domestic policy and an institutional environment that encourage diversification and liberalization of the trade and export sectors and enhance competitiveness;

3. Expresses the urgent need for supportive international policies to improve the functioning of commodity markets through efficient and transparent price formation mechanisms, including commodity exchanges, and through the use of commodity price risk management instruments;

4. Urges developed countries to continue to support the commodity diversification and liberalization efforts of developing countries, especially African countries, in a spirit of common purpose and efficiency, inter alia, by providing technical and financial assistance for the preparatory phase of their commodity diversification programmes;

5. Urges producers and consumers of individual commodities to intensify their efforts to reinforce mutual cooperation and assistance;

6. Reiterates the importance of maximizing the contribution of the commodity sector to economic growth and sustainable development, while continuing with diversification efforts, in developing countries, especially in commodity-dependent countries, and, in this respect, stresses that:

- (a) International support for the efforts of developing countries towards the industrial transformation of their commodities is required to increase their export revenues and to improve their competitiveness with a view to facilitating their integration into the global economy;

- (b) In the context of the process of trade liberalization, the use of trade-distorting policies and practices, including tariff peaks, tariff escalations and non-tariff barriers, should be minimized as they have negative effects on the ability of developing countries to diversify their exports and to undertake the required restructuring of their commodity sector and as they could also adversely impact liberalization measures undertaken by commodity-dependent developing countries;

- (c) In the light of the process of multilateral trade liberalization, which has led to the diminution of differentials accorded by preferred trade regimes, there is a need to take measures, as appropriate and consistent with international obligations, to address that diminution, in particular by strengthening technical assistance to and by addressing supply-side constraints faced by commodity-dependent developing countries, in order to improve the competitiveness of their commodity sector and to overcome difficulties encountered in their diversification programmes;

- (d) In line with Agenda 21 and the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, Governments should have as their objective to ensure that trade and environmental policies are mutually supportive so as to achieve sustainable development; in so doing, their environmental policies and measures with a potential trade impact should not be used for protectionist purposes;

- (e) Effective financial cooperation to facilitate the management by commodity-dependent countries of excessive fluctuations in commodity export earnings should be maintained and further pursued;

- (f) Technical cooperation in the areas of transfer of new technologies in production processes and training for technical, managerial and commercial staff of developing countries is of paramount importance for quality improvements in the commodity sector;

- (g) Expansion of South-South trade and investment in commodities enhances complementarities and offers opportunities for intersectoral linkages within and among exporting countries;

- (h) There is a need to promote research and development, to provide infrastructure and support services and to encourage investment, including joint ventures in developing countries engaged in the commodity and commodity-processing sectors;

7. Encourages the Common Fund for Commodities, in cooperation with the International Trade Centre, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other relevant bodies, to direct its commodity development programmes more towards commodity sector diversification projects, as well as to promote commodity market development in developing countries, with particular focus on the needs of least developed countries, and to explore effective ways and means of using the resources of the First Account of the Common Fund;

- S. Invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within its mandate, to provide assistance to developing countries in the financing of commodity diversification and to include issues related to commodities in the provision of analytical support and technical assistance to developing countries in their preparation for effective participation in multilateral trade negotiations and in formulating a positive agenda for future trade negotiations;

9. Also invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to consider issues related to commodities in the preparation for its tenth session, to be held in Thailand in the year 2000;

10. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on world commodity trends and prospects;

11. Decides to include the question of commodities in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session.

Consumer protection

In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/53 [YUN 1997, p. 944], the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Sustainable Development a February report [E/CN.17/1998/5] on consumer protection: guidelines for sustainable development, to which was annexed the report of the Co-Chairmen of the Interregional Export Group Meeting on Consumer Protection and Sustainable Consumption (Sao Paulo, Brazil, 28-30 January). The meeting proposed new elements on sustainable consumption for addition to the guidelines for consumer protection adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 39/248 [YUN 1985, p. 571]. The Secretary-General said that those guidelines had assisted Governments in the identification of priorities and had responded to the growing international interest in consumer protection and contributed to that growth. More than 40 African countries were host to more than 80 consumer organizations, and consumer rights were legally recognized in 13 Latin American and Caribbean nations, and were also included in the Constitution in 7 of those countries. In Central America, four countries had created or strengthened legal norms in recent years. The guidelines were also used in developed countries for review and assessment of consumer protection policy. With increased recognition of the link between consumption patterns and environmental sustainability, a number of Governments and many consumer organizations focused on extending consumer protection policies and programmes to cover environmental protection and other sustainable consumption issues.

The Interregional Expert Group Meeting stated that a review and revision mechanism for the guidelines should be established under the aegis of the United Nations so as to assess progress in their implementation and revise them as necessary. The Secretary-General should report regularly on the status of their implementation, and technical assistance should be made available to countries that might encounter difficulties in collecting and processing the required data.

The Commission on Sustainable Development, on 1 May [E/1998/29], adopted a draft decision on consumer protection guidelines for sustainable consumption for action by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

The Secretary-General, in June [E/1998/63], transmitted to the Council his February report.

By decision 1998/215 of 23 July, the Council noted the Secretary-General's report and invited Governments to undertake national consultations, with appropriate stakeholder groups, including consumer organizations and representatives of business, trade unions and NGOs, on guidelines for sustainable consumption, and to submit their views on the proposed new guidelines to the Secretariat so that they could be made available to all Governments; the Bureau of the Commission on Sustainable Development was invited to organize open-ended consultations among States and to report thereon to the Inter-Sessional Ad Hoc Working Group. It requested the Commission to report to the Council at its 1999 substantive session.

By decision 1998/291 of 31 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's June note.

Finance

Financial policy

In less than a year from mid-1997, the Asian economies that were once held up as examples of prudent and sustainable economic policies were transformed into structurally unstable systems, incapable of formulating their own economic policies, and were assigned to the tutelage of IMF, stated the Trade and Development Report, 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.6].

The root causes of the financial difficulties in the region were the close relationship between government and business and market distortions that insulated business from competitive forces and market discipline. It was yet another episode in a series of crises that had been occurring with increasing frequency since the breakdown of the Bretton Woods arrangements, and with the introduction of floating exchange rates and the unleashing of financial capital. As in earlier episodes of financial crisis and currency turmoil in developing countries, the crisis in East Asia was preceded by financial liberalization and deregulation.

lation, which in some cases constituted a major break with past practices. In that sense the fundamental problem was not too much government intervention and control, but too little. The break with past practices was particularly notable in the Republic of Korea, which together with Japan and Taiwan Province of China was the most successful model of modern industrialization. It centred around two crucial areas: control over external borrowing and state guidance of private investment. Dismantling checks and balances in those areas proved to be extremely destabilizing and disruptive for the traditional institutional arrangements regarding corporate investment and finance. High corporate leverage proved fatal when corporations were allowed to raise money abroad without the traditional supervision and control, treating external and domestic debt as perfect substitutes, even though there was no international counterpart to the domestic lender of last resort. Thus, the problem was not so much with leverage as with liberalization. Coming on top of structural difficulties, financial liberalization increased dependence of the second-tier newly industrializing economies on foreign resources and hence their vulnerability to the whims of international finance. That was most evident in Thailand, where the establishment of an international banking facility, the liberalization of the banking sector and the decontrol of property investment were crucial in the crisis.

Just as in 1982 when the crisis in Latin America was initially regarded as a short-term liquidity problem, the Asian problem was initially perceived to be about the exchange rate and payments adjustment. Consequently, the crisis was dealt with as a traditional payments crisis, aggravated by structural weakness in the banking system. The standard instruments of monetary and fiscal tightening and high interest rates were brought in as a remedy even though the payments imbalances were neither caused by budget deficits nor due to a loss of competitiveness because of domestic inflation. The rationale for applying traditional policies in response to the crisis arose from the expectation that they would help restore market confidence, halt the decline of exchange rates and reverse capital outflows, as well as correct the underlying fundamentals, mainly to reduce payments imbalances. The fiscal restriction was also justified as necessary for funding government expenditure on recapitalization of the banking system without jeopardizing the fiscal surplus. The policies were, however, unsuccessful and, given the financial vulnerability of indebted firms, they simply intensified the debt deflation, pushing the economies deeper into recession. High interest rates were largely unsuccessful in stopping the downward spiral in exchange rates and had little impact on the decision of firms and banks to reduce their exchange rate exposure, while making the substitution of domestic for foreign sources of funding more onerous. As a result, in the aftermath of the crisis, low interest rates and fiscal expansion were part of a successful adjustment policy in the countries most affected.

While the traditional policies were applied in response to the crisis, the objective of IMF lending departed from the traditional adjustment programmes, where such lending was usually designed to support the new exchange rate reached after adjustment. In East Asia, exchange rates were left to float. Thus, rather than guaranteeing new exchange rates, the Fund's lending was aimed at ensuring the maintenance of the domestic currency's convertibility and free capital flows, and guaranteeing repayment to foreign lenders.

The World Economic and Social Survey 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.C.1] stated that since 1991, international borrowing arrangements had grown almost 18 per cent a year. However, while total flows continued to increase, fewer countries were able to tap them, or did so on tougher terms, largely as a consequence of the Asian financial crisis. Over 80 per cent of the medium- and long-term credit arrangements were for borrowers from developed economies and most for the private sector, but arrangements for public and private borrowers in developing countries rose over 25 per cent in 1997 and arrangements for transition economies, albeit of a much smaller magnitude, grew 160 per cent. In short, there was no shortage of financial resources in international capital markets, which were able to intermediate the very large flows with ease. At the same time, however, 1997 saw the greatest number of and value of bond defaults globally since the 1930s, two thirds of which occurred in the second half of the year, reflecting the currency crisis in East Asia and the continuing financial difficulties of Japan. That began to be reflected in sharply reduced international lending to developing countries in the closing months of 1997 and early 1998. Consequently, countries were being thrown back onto reliance on official financing.

TDB, at its forty-fifth session (Geneva, 12-23 October), in its consideration of interdependence and global economic issues from a trade and development perspective, adopted agreed conclusions on the causes, management and prevention of financial crisis [A/53/15/Rev.1 (agreed conclusions 451(XLV))].

TDB stated that the financial crisis afflicting the world economy had systemic elements and, although in some countries domestic factors played a major role, the countries affected could not deal with the problem in isolation. An effective response had to combine measures at the national and international levels. Moreover, a single recipe for responding to the crisis was neither feasible nor desirable. Domestic policies needed to be tailored to the specific circumstances of each country and designed to revive growth, restore confidence and ensure an orderly return to financial stability. Growth-oriented policies held the key to averting the risk of global recession and pressures for protectionism, with an enabling external environment to support domestic measures which would require, inter alia, adequate and transparent supervision of volatile, short-term capital flows. The international financial architecture needed to be reformed, with full participation of developing countries, including effective multilateral and domestic surveillance and greater coherence in international policy-making in trade, money and finance. Reform efforts should also address weaknesses and gaps in the regulatory framework for cross-border lending and financial flows.

TDB stated that financial stability required greater transparency of the operations of private financial institutions, Governments and multilateral financial institutions for effective surveillance of policies and supervision of markets and for timely action; strengthened regulation and supervision of the financial system in a well-sequenced process of liberalization; as well as domestic reforms, including increased transparency and disclosure, strengthening of domestic regulatory standards, and more effective burden-sharing arrangements, such as improved insolvency and debtor-creditor regimes. While prevention of financial crises was the ultimate aim of reform efforts, measures also had to be put in place for better management when they arose, such as the establishment of a genuine international lender of last resort with adequate resources to provide the liquidity needed to support countries facing external financial difficulties; alternative means to safeguard against speculative attacks and disruption of markets, prevent moral hazard and secure more equitable burden-sharing between debtors and creditors; and the establishment of orderly debt work-out principles. Developed countries should also consider actions to facilitate access to liquidity of developing countries. The Board urged the secretariat to continue to study international trade and monetary and financial issues, and invited UNCTAD to contribute to the debate on the strengthening and reforming of the international financial architecture by continuing to provide relevant analysis from a development perspective.

Financial flows

The World Economic and Social Survey 1998 stated that the two most striking developments in the international flow of financial resources in 1997 were that the net transfer to the United States rose to $ 131 billion, the highest level in a decade, and that the developing countries as a group saw an extraordinary swing from a small net transfer to them from other countries in 1996 to a net transfer from them to other countries (denoted as a negative net transfer) in 1997. In the case of the United States, one aspect of the very large net transfer was an extraordinary $309 billion inflow of portfolio investment. On the other hand, net foreign portfolio purchases by United States residents dropped by almost $30 billion in 1997. The slowdown in United States portfolio outflow, like the increase in inflows, was related to the relative performance and expectations of national financial markets and exchange rates and to the uncertainties created by the Asian currency crisis. That was especially visible in the fourth quarter of 1997 when United States residents sold shares in every major foreign market except Canada, and non-residents of the United States moved their deposits from non-United States banking institutions to banks in the United States and outflows of currency from the United States jumped from $17 billion in 1996 to $25 billion in 1997.

Regarding the developing countries, the aggregate net transfer of financial resources was significantly negative in 1997 for the first year since 1990. The net transfer to the LDCs was not much changed, nor was that to Africa. If the net transfers to those countries did not suffer a deterioration, neither did they see any significant improvement. Rather, the main development was the sharp increase in the net outward transfer from certain Asian economies, which was only partly offset by the substantial increase in the net transfer to Latin America and the Caribbean. In some cases, such as that of China and some of the small Asian "tigers", the outward transfer was a sign of economic strength, while in others it was the beginning of a difficult adjustment process. The change in financial flows to a sample of 22 countries from South and East Asia in 1997 showed the crisis in action, with a net outflow of $92 billion. To a small degree, that was compensated by inflows of medium- and short-term private credits, but the main counterweight was a large shift in official lending. Those countries received $ 18 billion from official creditors in 1997, but that did not fully offset the larger outflows.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, for the year as a whole, the net transfer on foreign credit was $11 billion, almost half of the amount recorded in 1996. In contrast to the situation in East and South Asia, however, short-term borrowing and other unidentified flows continued to come into the region on a net basis and foreign direct investment inflows swelled.

Africa seemed to have been the only region largely to escape the financial consequences of the Asian crisis. Excluding reserve accumulation, the net transfer to 50 African countries increased by $6 billion in 1997, as some countries in North Africa received a substantial amount of portfolio investment and other forms of long-term capital. However, the net transfer on foreign investment remained weak and the net transfer back to foreign official creditors was barely offset by the shrinking level of official grants.

With respect to the transition economies, there seemed to have been a positive net transfer overall, concentrated in the Central and Eastern European countries and in the Baltic States.

Net transfer of resources

In response to General Assembly resolution 51/165 [YUN 1996, p. 863], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/228] on financing of development, including net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries, which reviewed the most recent data of the net flows and transfer of financial resources, and elaborated on the monitoring contained in the World Economic and Social Survey 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 946]. The Secretary-General noted that in 1997, after years of substantial net transfers of resources to developing countries, capital flows to several countries suddenly changed direction and, although long-term private financing, particularly foreign direct investment (FDI), largely maintained its pace and direction, short-term financial flows exhibited violent moves.

The sudden reversal of net transfers in 1997 to countries affected by the Asian currency crisis significantly reduced their spending capacity, forcing them to take sharp adjustment measures. The important point was not that the net transfer became negative per se, but that in several countries there was a large and sudden shift of external flows from a net inward to a net outward transfer, resulting in substantial currency devaluations and a sudden contraction of trade deficits.

As of mid-1998, moreover, volatility of international financial flows had not subsided for more than short periods. Several Asian currencies, then the Russian rouble, the South African rand and even the Chilean peso were hit by the exit of short-term funds, and there was uncertainty about how international flows would develop in the rest of 1998 and over ensuing years.

From July 1997, when the Asian currency crisis erupted in Thailand, through December 1997, when it struck the Republic of Korea, the swing in Asian international flows dominated the changes in the net transfer of financial resources of developing countries. As a result, the net transfer on an "expenditure basis", which had been positive since 1991, became negative during the year. While the net transfer to all developing countries shifted from an $8 billion inflow in 1996 to an outflow of $27 billion in 1997, the net transfer to East and South Asia dropped by about $53 billion.

Regarding the financial composition of net transfers themselves, as well as the overall levels, data for 105 net-debtor developing countries showed that the negative transfer for that group reflected reserve accumulation decisions by Governments, which withdrew over $53 billion on a net basis from net financial inflows and added them to official reserves. Excluding those reserves, the net transfer from abroad, amounting to $46 billion, was positive. The change in net transfers in 1997 mainly took the form of an unprecedented swing of short-term borrowing and net domestic outflows in Asia, moving from an inflow of $10 billion in 1996 to an estimated outflow of $92 billion in 1997. In contrast, flows of FDI in developing countries increased, reaching a record $22 billion to Latin America and the Caribbean.

In discussing official financial cooperation, the report noted that flows of official development assistance (ODA) from member countries of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of OECD fell 14 per cent in dollar terms in 1997, mainly because of the fall in the exchange rates of various donor-country currencies against the United States dollar. Total DAC aid fell to 0.22 per cent of the combined gross national product (GNP) of the donor countries in 1997, the lowest level since the United Nations adopted its ODA target of 0.7 per cent.

Since cuts in the aid budgets of some of the countries in the Group of Seven major industrialized countries (G-7) accounted for almost all of the recent decline in ODA, long-standing international cooperation commitments were re-examined. The shrinking flows of ODA were reflected in the concessional flows from multilateral institutions to developing countries. In particular, the resource commitments of the operational agencies of the UN system, which were on a grant basis, dropped from their high of $3.9 billion in 1995 to $3.5 billion in 1997.

Concessional lending commitments by most regional development banks also fell in 1997, a notable exception being a strong increase from the African Development Fund.

IMF, as the international community's chief emergency funding institution, approved in July 1997 its first loan ($1.1 billion) to the Philippines under its Emergency Financing Mechanism. In December of that year, the Fund took the additional step to provide emergency resources beyond its standard loans when it established the Supplemental Reserve Facility to quickly disburse large amounts of financial assistance to countries in serious financial crisis. The Republic of Korea was the first beneficiary. The Fund also agreed to establish a New Arrangement to Borrow, under which it could borrow funds to forestall or cope with financial crises.

By decision 53/439 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report. By decision 53/437 of the same date, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on macroeconomic policy questions [A/53/606].

Global financial integration

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/180 [YUN 1997, p. 948], the Secretary-General in September addressed the matter of volatility in global financial flows and their impact on developing countries [A/53/398]. The report focused on suggested policy measures for national Governments and for strengthened international co-operation in the context of increasingly volatile international financial flows. The Secretary-General stated that as a result of the severity and duration of the Asian currency crisis of 1997-1998, policy advice that was guided by the Washington consensus (policies advocated by IMF, the World Bank and various donor countries) was unable to stem the economic decline in East Asia or protect distant countries from contagion. Crisis management by national officials and the Bretton Woods institutions was thus challenged, causing internationally advocated policies to change slowly, including the easing of fiscal and monetary policy conditions in the more recent IMF adjustment agreements, and the lengthening of the time-frame for reaching complete capital account liberalization to upward of 50 years, at least for some countries. Moreover, in April 1998, the Institute of International Finance, which reflected the views of the major international commercial banks, sent a letter to the Interim Committee of IMF, inter alia, expressing reservations about amending IMF's Articles of Agreement to make capital account liberalization a main goal of the Fund.

The Secretary-General said that it was timely to see if a new consensus was emerging on policy for macroeconomic management and growth and for effective integration into the global financial system. The emerging view seemed to suggest less a break with the Washington consensus than a pragmatic modification of some aspects of it. He contended that the first element of the new consensus entailed awareness that policy-making was carried out in a political context and that policy prescriptions were politically viable. Policy formulas developed for one set of national institutions did not automatically work well in others and institutions developed for one period could become inappropriate in later ones. The art of policy-making consisted in recognizing when change was necessary in policies and/or institutions, when it was possible and how it could be brought about effectively. In addition, macroeconomic policy-making was complex when capital markets were open and financial flows volatile; therefore, macro-policy should aim to attain medium-term goals and incorporate automatic stabilizers to help absorb short-term fluctuations.

Relaxation of policy limitations on a domestic financial sector should not be carried to the point of complete laissez-faire. That financial institutions were inherently prone to excess and vulnerable to crisis warranted appropriate supervision and prudent regulation. It was essential for authorities to monitor the financial state of the domestic economy to identify and address unsustainable situations as they arose, and for that there might be need for new types of information. In developed economies, as well as in emerging-market economies, regulatory systems and early-warning mechanisms needed to be strengthened, beginning at the level of the financial firm.

In the area of international reform, Finance Ministers of G-7 saw an urgent need for a system of multilateral surveillance of national financial, supervisory and regulatory systems. The Ministers asked relevant institutions to develop proposals on ways in which greater cooperation could be achieved, including options for institutional reform. There were also proposals to supplement the overall surveillance role of IMF in macroeconomic and financial policy with surveillance at the regional level. Such an arrangement was established in the Association of South-East Asian Nations. Moreover, as the only institution with the mandate to deal with international financial crises, if the international community wished IMF to carry out that role, the agreement to increase its resources should be implemented without delay. There was also a sentiment that conditions should be established under which debtor countries in balance-of-payments crisis would not be penalized for undertaking a "debt standstill", a moratorium on debt servicing having at least implicit approval of creditors. A complementary proposal would further encourage creditor cooperation in restructuring the debt due in such circumstances. Called the "IMF lending into arrears", it would entail an IMF policy decision to permit agreement to a Fund-supported economic adjustment programme.

The Secretary-General concluded that the outline of the consensus on national and international policies for macroeconomic and financial management was an interim exercise. If widespread recession was avoided, it might be sufficient to reduce the risk of a similar episode in the future. However, if the storm worsened, the changes suggested might not be sufficient and the policy paradigm for development in a globalized market economy might need to be revised.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249], the Economic and Social Council, on 18 April, held a special high-level meeting with the Bretton Woods institutions (the World Bank and IMF).

The Council had before it a note by the Secretary-General on global financial integration and development and recent issues [E/1998/9]. The Secretary-General stated that the process of global financial integration was fuelled primarily by the liberalization of markets and technological progress. The experience of East Asia over the past decade demonstrated the positive contribution that international financial flows could make to development, while the region's more recent experience revealed the challenges they could pose. He suggested that the discussions might focus on the lessons learned, in particular the respective roles of national Governments, financial markets and international organizations in addressing global financial integration and its effects. Some of the issues that might be addressed were: the challenges of global financial integration, including the national economic and financial environment, monitoring and oversight, and contingency arrangements; and responding to financial crises, including the sharing of risks and responsibilities, protecting vulnerable groups and safeguarding long-term development.

In his summary conclusions [E/1998/91] of the meeting, the Vice-President of the Council stated that there was universal recognition that global financial integration was a historical shift, offering great opportunities, challenges, benefits and risks. The Asian crisis had resulted in great attention being given to the sharing of risks and benefits in times of financial turmoil and over the long term, in particular the risk of marginalization and that some countries or individuals might be left behind. Global financial integration should be to the benefit of all countries and peoples, and there was a growing consensus on the means to maximize such benefits so as to reduce potential risks. While there continued to be different points of view about the reasons for and how to respond to the recent crisis, there was also recognition that the initial crisis had developed wide-ranging economic and social dimensions and special efforts were needed to protect the poor and other vulnerable groups in times of crisis. International institutions and national Governments still had much to learn about responding to the forces of global integration. The meeting agreed that there was a need to strengthen the global architecture, that prevention was better than cure, and that actions were required at the international and national levels. The wide-ranging nature of the fallout from the crisis called for a collective response involving all institutions. To reduce the possibility of financial crises, the meeting demonstrated the need to develop the flows of information and transparency between institutions, and for policy coherence and partnership at all levels. There was also a consensus on the need for greater efforts to integrate the financial, economic, social and political policies and strategies.

Follow-up to agreed conclusions 1997/1

As requested by General Assembly resolution 52/182 [YUN 1997, p. 935], the Secretary-General, in October, reported on action taken by the United Nations [A/53/510] in follow-up to agreed conclusions 1997/1 of the Economic and Social Council [YUN 1997, p. 947] on fostering an enabling environment for development: financial flows, including capital flows, investment and trade.

On 15 December, the Assembly, by decision 53/438, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/606/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/172 without vote [agenda item 91 (b)].

The financial crisis and its impact on growth and development, especially in the developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 52/180 of 18 December 1997 on global financial flows and their impact on the developing countries, as well as the ministerial commu-

niqué on market access, adopted by the Economic and Social Council on 8 July 1998,

Also reaffirming that global financial flows, in the context of financial globalization, have presented Governments, the multilateral financial institutions and the international community at large with new challenges and opportunities, and that they should constitute a very important element of the dialogue between the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions,

Mindful of the vital role of financing for fostering the economic development of the developing countries, and emphasizing the importance of adequate financial resources for development,

Recognizing the benefits of the increasing integration of global markets and the important role of capital flows for promoting economic development and social welfare,

Deeply concerned at the overall declining trend in official development assistance, which is a significant external resource for financing development and an important source of support to the efforts of developing countries, in particular least developed countries, to create an enabling environment for eradicating poverty and tackling basic social needs, especially where private capital flows may either be inadequate or unavailable,

Regretting that the current crisis in financial markets, characterized, inter alia, by massive and sudden outflows of capital from the affected countries and the sharp decline in private capital flows to developing countries and some economies in transition, has resulted in higher interest rate spreads, leading to a significant slowdown in economic activity,

Welcoming the continued efforts of the countries affected by the crisis to restore financial and economic stability, ease the social impact of the crisis and put their economies on the path to recovery, and in this context also welcoming the continued support of the international community, including the multilateral financial institutions, to the affected countries,

Deeply concerned that the international financial crisis has acquired extremely worrying dimensions, posing a threat to world economic development, and that if it were allowed to continue financial turmoil could result in major setbacks to the global economy, in particular to the progress that most developing countries have achieved in the 1990s,

Expressing concern at the negative effects of the financial crisis on international trade, in particular the sharp reduction in commodity prices and its negative effects on the development prospects for developing countries and some economies in transition, and emphasizing that keeping all markets open, in accordance with multilateral trade rules, and maintaining continued growth in world trade, are key elements in overcoming the crisis, and in this context rejecting the use of any protectionist measures,

Expressing concern that the financial crisis has also seriously affected the growth and development prospects of least developed countries,

Recognizing that the current crisis has exposed weaknesses in the international financial system and the urgent need to work on a wide range of reforms to create a strengthened international financial system with a view to enabling it to deal more effectively and in a timely manner with the new challenges of global financial integration,

Welcoming the convening of the special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions held in New York on 18 April 1998 and the convening of the meeting of the World Bank's "Exchange Programme" with a delegation of Ambassadors to the United Nations, led by the President of the Economic and Social Council, held at Washington, D.C., on 27 and 28 May 1998,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Global financial flows and their impact on developing countries: addressing the matter of volatility", the World Economic and Social Survey 1998 and the Trade and Development Report, 1998;

2. Stresses the importance of having an enabling international environment and a strong cooperative effort by all countries and institutions to support crisis-hit countries and to prevent further contagion, and calls on all countries, particularly major industrialized countries, which have significant weight in influencing world economic growth, to adopt and pursue policies conducive to economic growth and to promote a favourable external economic environment for the recovery of the affected countries and countries in a critical economic situation;

3. Also stresses the importance at the national level of sound macroeconomic policies and policies aimed at strengthening institutional capacities and regulatory frameworks, especially the regulatory and supervisory systems of the domestic financial and banking sectors;

4. Emphasizes that the international financial institutions, in providing policy advice and prescriptions in the context of adjustment and financial crisis programmes, should ensure that they are sensitive to the specific circumstances of the concerned countries and to the special needs of developing countries and work towards the best possible outcome for the economies concerned;

5. Recognizes the importance of accelerating the growth and development prospects of least developed countries, which remain the poorest and most vulnerable segment of the international community, and calls upon development partners to carry on their efforts to increase official development assistance and their efforts aimed at strengthened debt relief, improved market access and enhanced balance-of-payments support;

6. Stresses the need for continued and constructive dialogue in the appropriate forums among developed and developing countries on issues related to strengthening and reforming the international financial architecture;

7. Also stresses the need for the international community to continue to work together in formulating a global approach towards financial crisis, and in this regard welcomes the efforts undertaken to strengthen further the cooperation and collaboration among the United Nations system, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, the regional development banks, the World Trade Organization and other relevant international economic institutions in the areas of common and complementary objectives;

8. Further stresses the importance of the open high-level dialogue between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, and invites the Secretary-General to support further the Economic and Social Council in the organization of the high-level dialogue in 1999, in accordance with Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996;

9. Recognizes the need to improve the capacities and modalities of the international financial institutions with regard to the prevention, management and resolution in a timely and effective manner of international financial crises;

10. Stresses the importance of strengthened collaboration between the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund in specific areas where collaboration is needed, such as the financial sector, while recognizing the specific mandates of the two institutions, and also stresses the need for the institutions dealing with financial crises to keep in mind the overall objective of facilitating long-term development;

11. Stresses the need to endow the International Monetary Fund with adequate resources to provide emergency financing to countries affected by financial crises as a result, among others, of the high volatility of international capital flows, and in this context also stresses the importance of sound macroeconomic policies and policies aimed at strengthening the institutional capacities and regulatory frameworks;

12. Also stresses the need to strengthen international and national financial systems through a more effective national, regional and international surveillance of both the public and private sectors, based upon the improvement of the availability and transparency of information, as well as the strengthening of the role of the International Monetary Fund in this regard, and the collaboration of the World Bank with technical assistance and capacity-building in this matter;

13. Invites the International Monetary Fund and relevant international regulatory bodies to consider as quickly as possible additional regulatory and disclosure measures to ensure greater transparency of financial market participants, including international institutional investors, particularly of highly leveraged operations;

14. Encourages the Interim Committee of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund and other relevant forums to expedite the work relative to the greater involvement of the private sector in preventing and resolving financial crises;

15. Emphasizes that the opening of the capital account must be carried out in an orderly, gradual and well-sequenced manner, keeping its pace in line with the strengthening of the ability of countries to sustain its consequences, underscores the crucial importance in this regard of solid domestic financial systems and of an effective prudential framework, and invites the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and relevant international regulatory bodies to contribute to this process;

16. Calls upon the international community to pursue national and international efforts, at the intergovernmental and inter-agency levels, to contribute to minimizing the excessive volatility of global financial flows and to distribute in a more equitable manner the costs of systemic adjustments between the public and private sectors;

17. Invites the International Monetary Fund to facilitate the dialogue among relevant actors to consider the possibility of establishing regulatory frameworks for short-term capital flows and trade in currencies;

18. Recognizes that a most important question that needs to be addressed by the international community in the process of globalization is the need to mobilize resources for such goals as poverty eradication, human resources development, and health and education;

19. Welcomes the efforts of the World Bank to help Governments to address the social consequences of crises, including the strengthening of social safety nets for the most vulnerable;

20. Requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with all relevant entities of the United Nations, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, within their respective existing mandates and in consultation with the Bretton Woods institutions, to analyse the current trend in global financial flows and modalities to improve early warning, prevention and response capabilities for dealing with the emergence and spread of financial crises in a timely manner, taking a comprehensive and long-term perspective, while remaining responsive to the challenges of development and the protection of the most vulnerable countries and social groups;

21. Also requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with the Bretton Woods institutions and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Debt problems of developing countries

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/185 [YUN1997, p. 951], the Secretary-General submitted a September report [A/53/373] on the debt situation of the developing countries as at mid-1998. The report focused on two particular groups of countries: the heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC) and the middle-income countries in Latin America and Asia affected by the financial crises. It drew some international policy conclusions with a view to making constructive proposals for improvement in the debt workout strategies.

Discussing recent trends in external debt, the Secretary-General stated that the total external debt of all developing countries and countries in transition as at the end of 1997 was estimated at $2.2 trillion, an increase of 4 per cent over 1996, 80 per cent of which was long-term debt and 18 per cent short-term debt. Credits from IMF made up the difference. Public and publicly guaranteed debt continued to account for the major share of long-term debt, at 83 per cent of the total, while the share of volume of private non-guaranteed debt rose to 17 per cent. The volume of bonds outstanding declined by 13 per cent and its share in total external debt fell to 14 per cent. Debt indicators improved for developing countries, with marginal declines in the ratios of debt service to exports and debt stock to GNP, and a larger fall in the ratio of the stock of debt outstanding to total exports, largely reflecting the rapid growth of developing country exports, which rose by 6 per cent during the year. Short-term debt as a percentage of foreign exchange reserves fell moderately. Those overall trends, while indicating an improved debt position of developing and transition countries, masked a continued overhang of debt in many African countries and did not reveal the liquidity problems that led to the East Asian crisis.

There was no change in the geographical distribution of debt among the various developing and transition country regions: Asia and Latin America both accounted for 31 per cent of the total, as compared with 16 per cent for Africa and 18 per cent for Europe and Central Asia. Total Asian external debt rose by 6 per cent to an estimated $666 billion at the end of 1997; Latin America witnessed a moderate increase of 3 per cent, bringing the total to $678 billion; and Africa continued to experience a high debt burden despite a fall in total external debt of 2 per cent to $324 billion in 1996 and an improvement in its debt indicators. For many countries in Africa, the large share of multilateral debt continued to represent an obstacle to improving their debt profile. The core of the problem was the unsustainable debt positions of the group of 41 HIPC; their total external debt amounted to $245 billion at the end of 1996. The IMF/World Bank HIPC Initiative [YUN1997, p.950] represented a critical effort in addressing that issue.

Updating the international debt strategy, the Secretary-General stated that, in 1998, attention was given by the donor community to renewed efforts to provide debt relief to the poorest countries. At the Birmingham summit of the eight major industrialized countries, including the Russian Federation (G-8), held in May, recommendation was made to forgive all ODA debt or take action in favour of LDCs which made progress in implementing economic reforms; the G-8 countries also noted the need for debt relief, including on arrears to international financial institutions, for poor countries in a post-conflict situation. In 1997, activity within the Paris Club moderated, with the conclusion of fewer debt restructuring agreements as compared with earlier years: seven countries in 1997 against 15 in 1996. The slowing of activity reflected the fact that many countries had graduated from the rescheduling process or received a multi-year rescheduling agreement. As at July 1998, six other countries renegotiated their debt. Senegal received an exit stock treatment, with 67 per cent reduction, while Nicaragua and Rwanda both received a 67 per cent reduction of the flow of debt service. The Paris Club applied for the first time the Lyon terms, allowing a reduction of 80 per cent of the flows of debt service in the cases of Cote d'Ivoire and Mozambique. Uganda, which had received a stock treatment in 1995, received a further reduction to reach the equivalent of 80 per cent. Under the HIPC Initiative, by mid-1998, 10 HIPCs saw their cases reviewed. Between 1989 and 1997, officially supported programmes and associated market swap operations reduced developing countries' debt to commercial banks by $53.2 billion. Eighteen low-income countries extinguished $12.6 billion of the $18.2 billion of eligible principal and interest arrears due to commercial banks under the International Development Associations's Debt-reduction Facility, and more recently under the Brady Plan.

The Secretary-General noted that it was a matter of concern that the implementation process of the HIPC Initiative was very slow: after two years only one country (Uganda) had benefited from the full-fledged relief, and the calendar of implementation indicated that at most three countries would be considered each year. The slowness of the process was due to the lack of adequate funding for an expeditious resolution of all eligible cases and the complexity of the process itself. It was suggested that, to accelerate implementation and embark all eligible poor countries on the process by the year 2000, the debt sustainability analysis should be simplified and fully involve debtors in determining criteria; the implementation period should be shortened; the World Bank and IMF should mobilize adequate financing, including the sale of part of IMF gold holdings; increased contributions should be made by bilateral donors to the HIPC Trust Fund; and, for the poorest HIPCs, consideration should be given to bolder actions, including conversion into grants of all remaining official bilateral debt and clearing of the entire stock of debt if warranted.

The report concluded that debt was making a comeback as a burning problem on the international agenda. The slow process of implementation of the HIPC Initiative and the frequency of financial crises affecting middle-income countries following their rapid integration into the global financial markets were sources of concern for the international community. An important factor behind the apparent failure to deal with the debt problems was the insufficient level of financing of debt relief or debt rescue packages. IMF remained the linchpin of international debt work-out approaches, and the international creditor community attached importance to that role, which was to prevent moral hazard behaviour of debtor countries, by imposing and monitoring adjustment programmes on those countries, and to mobilize necessary finance. However, such an approach might tilt too much towards controlling debtor countries and not giving them a voice in determining their own debt objective. Furthermore, too much burden was put on the official sector in providing bail-out finance for private creditors without sufficiently involving the latter in an equitable burden-sharing arrangement.

With specific regard to the external debt of African countries, the Trade and Development Report, 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.6] emphasized a rapid removal of the debt overhang as the most important step for the reassessment of international and domestic policy approaches essential for African economic development. The Report stated that a comprehensive assessment of the sustainability of African debt was needed; it should be carried out by an independent body appointed by mutual agreement between creditors and debtors, and not influenced by the interest of creditors. The HIPC Initiative needed a significant revision to help establish the conditions for rapid and sustained growth. The basic issues related to eligibility and the adequacy of the debt reduction to be granted as well as the speed with which countries would benefit. Increasing net resource transfers through debt relief would not succeed unless accompanied by appropriate domestic policies designed to break out of low productivity and dependence on a small number of primary commodities in the majority of African economies. Such a structural change called for a higher rate of investment in both primary and secondary industries and by the private and the public sectors. A new policy orientation was needed that focused on capital accumulation and on building the institutions required for an efficient market economy, including a dynamic indigenous entrepreneurial class. In order to achieve the required structural change, accumulation should be linked to trade: in that respect, increasing productivity and output in the primary sector, essential for generating investable resources, would provide the focus for initial policy efforts in many countries. Since all the debt had to be paid in foreign currency, export earnings would be an important determinant of debt-servicing capacity; however, as a large proportion of debt was owed by the public sector, the debt burden relative to government revenues would be equally relevant in determining debt-servicing capacity. Greater attention should be paid to the fiscal burden of debt in assessing debt sustainability, independently of the degree of export orientation of the economy and the extent to which debt servicing cut into export earnings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/606/Add.4], adopted resolution 53/175 without vote [agenda item 91 (d)].

Enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problem of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/165 of 21 December 1993 and 50/92 of 20 December 1995, the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole of the General Assembly for the Mid-Term Review of the Implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s and the Agenda for Development, as well as the results, as agreed, of all major United Nations conferences and summit meetings held since the beginning of the 1990s,

Recalling also its resolutions 51/164 of 16 December 1996 and 52/185 of 18 December 1997 on enhancing international cooperation towards a durable solution to the external debt problem of developing countries,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further implementation in an effective, equitable and development-oriented way of existing mechanisms for the treatment of the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries in order to help them to exit from the rescheduling process and unsustainable debt burdens, and, in this context, stressing the need to agree upon equitable burden-sharing among the international public creditor community,

Welcoming and emphasizing the importance of the efforts of debtor countries, despite the great social cost often involved, in pursuing economic reform, stabilization and structural adjustment programmes aimed at achieving stability, raising domestic savings and investments, attaining competitiveness to take advantage of market access opportunities where available, reducing inflation, improving economic efficiency and addressing the social aspects of development, including the eradication of poverty as well as the development of social safety nets for the vulnerable and poorer strata of their populations, and encouraging them to continue in these efforts,

Noting that the ongoing international financial crisis is adding further burdens to the external debt problems of many developing countries and that a number of developing countries have continued to meet their international debt and debt-service obligations in a timely fashion, despite serious external and domestic financial constraints,

Noting also, in this context, the increasing significance of official development assistance as an external resource for many developing countries, particularly African countries and the least developed countries, in the light of reduced private flows, and further that the overall declining trend in official development assistance is a cause for concern,

Stressing the need for a full, swift implementation of those initiatives, which will further assist developing countries, in particular the poorest and heavily indebted countries, especially in Africa, in their efforts to improve their debt situation, in view of their continued very high level of total debt stock and servicing burdens,

Noting the improvement in the debt situation of a number of countries and the contribution that the evolving debt strategy has made to this improvement, noting with appreciation the debt-relief measures taken by creditor countries both within the framework of the Paris Club and through the cancellation and equivalent relief of bilateral official debt, and welcoming the even more favourable debt-relief measures taken by the Paris Club on the basis of the Naples terms of December 1994 and, for the first time, on the basis of the Lyon terms,

Noting with concern the continuing debt and debt-servicing problems of indebted developing countries as constituting an element adversely affecting their development efforts and economic growth, and stressing the importance of alleviating the onerous debt and debt-service burdens connected with the various types of debt of many developing countries on the basis of an effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable approach and, where appropriate, addressing the full stock of debt of the poorest and most indebted developing countries as a matter of priority,

Encouraging multilateral creditors to consider appropriate measures in the case of developing countries with exceptionally high levels of debt overhang,

Welcoming the decision of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to undertake a comprehensive review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative as early as 1999,

Stressing the need for continuing global economic growth and the necessity for a continuing supportive international economic environment with regard to, inter alia, terms of trade, commodity prices, improved market access, trade practices, access to technology, exchange rates and international interest rates, and noting the continued need for resources for the sustained economic growth and sustainable development of the developing countries, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the debt situation of the developing countries as of mid-1998;

2. Recognizes that effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries can contribute substantially to the strengthening of the global economy and to the efforts of developing countries to achieve sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences;

3. Notes that further progress, including swift implementation of innovative approaches and concrete measures, is essential for contributing to effective, equitable, development-oriented and durable solutions to the external debt and debt-servicing problems of developing countries, particularly the poorest and heavily indebted countries;

4. Also notes, while recognizing the benefits of liberalization of international capital flows, the adverse impact of the volatility of short-term capital flows on exchange rates, interest rates and the debt situation of developing countries, and stresses the need for coherence in implementing policies as well as capital accounts liberalization in an orderly, gradual and well-sequenced manner to keep pace with the strengthening of the ability of countries to sustain its consequences, in order to mitigate the adverse impact of such volatility;

5. Urges the international community to consider voluntary measures and mechanisms, involving private creditors and taking into account existing frameworks, that would allow debtor countries breathing space through, inter alia, mutually agreed temporary suspension of payments while maintaining their access to interim financing, and, in this regard, welcomes the willingness of the International Monetary Fund to consider providing financing to members in arrears on their debt payments to some private creditors;

6. Stresses the urgent need to endow the International Monetary Fund with adequate resources to provide emergency financing to countries affected by financial crises as a result, inter alia, of the high volatilities of international capital flows and that continue to pursue a programme of economic stabilization and reform;

7. Also stresses the need for the Bretton Woods institutions to consider fully, when providing emergency financing, the special economic situations of indebted developing countries affected by natural disasters;

8. Welcomes the decisions announced by various creditor countries to cancel, partially or totally, the official bilateral debt of the countries of Central America that were most adversely hit by hurricane Mitch, as well as the decisions by donor countries to help reduce debt owed to multilateral institutions, while recognizing the need to ensure that adequate resources are still directed towards relief and rehabilitation efforts, also welcomes the proposals to discuss at the Paris Club meeting, to be held on 7 December 1998, further debt relief for the concerned countries, and calls upon the international financial institutions to help those countries in their reconstruction efforts, inter alia, by lessening the debt-service burden and considering appropriate additional measures and undertaking the early consideration of Honduras and Nicaragua for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative;

9. Stresses the importance for developing countries of continuing their efforts to promote a favourable environment for attracting foreign investment, thereby promoting economic growth and sustainable development, so as to favour their exit from debt and debt-servicing problems, and also stresses the need for the international community to promote a conducive external environment through, inter alia, improved market access, stabilization of exchange rates, effective stewardship of international interest rates, increased resource flows, access to international financial markets, flow of financial resources and improved access to technology for the developing countries;

10. Also stresses that the evolving debt strategy must be accompanied by a favourable and supportive international economic environment, including the full implementation of the results of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, and the Marrakesh ministerial decisions in favour of the least developed countries and the net food-importing developing countries;

11. Further stresses the need for existing facilities to provide debt-relief measures through various debt conversion programmes, where possible, such as debt-equity swaps, debt-for-nature swaps, debt-for-child development swaps and other debt-for-development swaps, to be widely implemented so that the countries concerned may be assisted in their development efforts, as well as to support measures in favour of the most vulnerable segments of the societies of those countries and to develop techniques of debt conversion applied to social development programmes and projects, in conformity with the priorities of the World Summit for Social Development, held at Copenhagen in March 1995;

12. Recognizes the need for attaching higher priority to social aspects in the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative;

13. Welcomes the progress made in the implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative and the extension by the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund of the original two-year period for countries to begin qualifying for assistance until the end of the year 2000, and stresses that the Initiative offers an important opportunity for the heavily indebted poor countries to reach a sustainable external debt position;

14. Calls for the speedy and determined extension of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative to more countries, and encourages all eligible countries to take policy measures needed to embark on the process as soon as possible so that all can be in process by the year 2000;

15. Stresses the need for the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to address expeditiously the special needs of poor post-conflict countries in close cooperation with all relevant parts of the United Nations system, and, in this context, welcomes the decision of the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund to add a degree of flexibility in its evaluation of track records of policy performance for countries receiving post-conflict assistance;

16. Also stresses the urgent need for effective mobilization of additional financial resources for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative from both bilateral and multilateral creditors without affecting the support required for other development activities of developing countries, and, in this regard, expresses its appreciation for contributions made by some bilateral donors to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund of the World Bank and the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility/Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund of the International Monetary Fund, urges other bilateral donors and invites other international financial institutions that have not yet finalized mechanisms for participation in the Initiative to do so as soon as possible, and calls upon bilateral and multilateral donors to contribute to the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund to help the African Development Bank meet its share of Initiative costs;

17. Calls upon the industrialized countries that have not yet contributed to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility/Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Trust Fund to come forward immediately with their contributions;

18. Stresses the importance of implementing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative flexibly, including shortening the interval between the decision and completion points, taking due account of the policy performance of the countries concerned, in a transparent manner and with the full involvement of the debtor countries;

19. Also stresses the importance of increased flexibility with regard to Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative eligibility criteria, including continuously evaluating and actively monitoring the implications of the existing terms of the eligibility criteria so as to ensure sufficient coverage of heavily indebted poor countries, increased flexibility being, in this context, particularly important for known borderline cases and countries in post-conflict situations, in respect of, inter alia, avoiding delays in the establishment of a track record of economic performance caused by temporary setbacks due to external shocks, in order to help them to exit from the rescheduling process and from unsustainable debt burdens;

20. Underlines the importance of the transparency and involvement of debtor countries in any review and analysis that is conducted during the adjustment period;

21. Welcomes the implementation since 1994 by the Paris Club of the Naples terms, as well as the decision to go beyond the Naples terms to provide debt reduction for eligible countries, in particular the poorest and most heavily indebted countries, and invites all other bilateral, multilateral and commercial creditors to make an appropriate and consistent contribution to the common objective of debt sustainability;

22. Encourages the international creditor community to consider appropriate measures in cases with a very high level of debt overhang, including, where appropriate, debt conversion measures for the low-income countries in Africa, in particular the poorest among them, in order to make an appropriate and consistent contribution to the common objective of debt sustainability;

23. Welcomes the decision of the Boards of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank that the comprehensive review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative should be undertaken as early as 1999, encourages the review's inclusion of the consideration of debt sustainability criteria, as well as a comprehensive study of the impact of traditional debt-relief efforts and its examination of the relationship between debt relief and poverty reduction within the recipient country, and recognizes that the comprehensive review should consider the inputs of other relevant international organizations;

24. Invites creditor countries, private banks and multilateral financial institutions, within their prerogatives, to continue the initiatives and efforts to address both the commercial debt problems of the least developed countries and the requests for continued mobilization of resources, including through the Debt-reduction Facility of the International Development Association, in order to help least developed countries reduce their commercial debt;

25. Recognizes the efforts of indebted developing countries in regard to fulfilling their commitments on debt servicing despite the high social cost incurred, and, in this regard, encourages private creditors and, in particular, commercial banks to continue their initiatives and efforts to address the commercial debt problems of middle-income developing countries, in particular those affected by the financial crisis;

26. Stresses the urgent need to continue to provide social safety nets to vulnerable groups most adversely affected by the implementation of economic reform programmes in debtor countries, in particular low-income groups;

27. Encourages debtors and creditors to consider ways to ensure that future loans are used in such a way that they avoid having a negative impact on debt sustainability;

28. Notes with concern the continuing burden of debt and debt-service obligations of middle-income developing countries, including in particular those in Africa, and encourages creditors, including multilateral financial institutions, commercial banks and bilateral creditors, to continue to support those countries in addressing these obligations effectively;

29. Expresses strong support for the continuation of Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility operations, and, in this regard, emphasizes the urgency of securing the Facility's funding and sustenance;

30. Stresses the need to finalize negotiations as soon as possible for an adequate twelfth replenishment of the International Development Association to a level commensurate with the needs of concessional funding by the poorest developing countries;

31. Reaffirms the Mid-term Global Review of Progress towards the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, in particular the appropriate actions in favour of those countries concerning their official bilateral, commercial and multilateral debt;

32. Stresses the need for new financial flows to debtor developing countries from all sources, in addition to debt-relief measures that include debt and debt-service reduction, and urges creditor countries and multilateral financial institutions to continue to extend concessional financial assistance, particularly to the least developed countries, in order to support the implementation of economic reforms and stabilization and structural adjustment programmes by the developing countries that will enable them to extricate themselves from the debt overhang and attract new investment and to assist them in achieving sustained economic growth and sustainable development, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions and recent United Nations conferences, and the eradication of poverty;

33. Also stresses the importance of providing adequate resources for debt relief in the light of the adverse effects of the current international financial crisis on the mobilization of both domestic and external resources for the development of the least developed countries and Africa, and welcomes unilateral debt-relief measures from creditor countries on top of the multilaterally agreed debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, bearing in mind that such unilateral actions strengthen the impact of the Initiative as a credible exit solution;

34. Further stresses the need to strengthen the institutional capacity of developing countries in debt management, and calls upon the international community to support their efforts towards that end;

35. Calls upon the international community, including the United Nations system, and invites the Bretton Woods institutions, as well as the private sector, to take appropriate measures and actions for the implementation of the commitments, agreements and decisions of the major United Nations conferences and summits organized since the beginning of the 1990s on development related to the question of the external debt problem of developing countries;

36. Notes the various proposals contained in the Trade and Development Report, 1998, concerning the issue of the external debt of African countries, and requests the Secretary-General to report pertinent developments relating thereto to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

37. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Financing for development

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/179 [YUN 1997, p. 954], the Assembly's Second Committee held a substantive debate on 19 March, at the resumed fifty-second session, on the agenda item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions: financing of development, including net transfer of resources between developing and developed countries".

In a March note [A/52/840], the Secretary-General said that the summary records of those meetings contained numerous proposals by Member States on key elements of financing for development, as well as identification of potential sources. Annexed to the note were papers submitted by Indonesia (on behalf of the Group of 77 and China), Japan, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, the United States and the World Bank outlining their views and suggestions.

By decision 52/478 of 2 June, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee [A/52/626/Add.5/Rev.1].

In October, the Secretary-General submitted a note on recurring themes and key elements of high-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development [A/53/470]. He reported that the Secretariat had developed an open-ended questionnaire on the subject, which it sent to a broad range of stakeholders from all regions and to various international organizations. As at 15 September, over 180 replies had been received, reflecting a number of recurring themes and key elements in the areas of mobilizing domestic resources and international private financial flows for development, international financial cooperation for development, external debt, financing for development and trade, innovative sources of financing, governance of the international monetary, financial and trade systems, and the interrelationship between major elements and other special topics. In another October note [A/53/479], the Secretary-General reported on the current work of the UN system that addressed financing for development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/606/Add.2], adopted resolution 53/173 without vote [agenda item 91 (b)].

High-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 52/179 of 18 December 1997,

Taking note of the views expressed by Governments, including those reflected in the notes by the Secretary-General of 24 March 1998 and 8 October 1998, on the key elements that might be included in consideration of financing for development,

1. Recalls its decision in resolution 52/179 to establish an ad hoc open-ended working group of the General Assembly to undertake an in-depth examination of all inputs requested in the resolution, with a view to formulating a report containing recommendations on the form, scope and agenda of, inter alia, a summit, international conference, special session of the General Assembly or other appropriate high-level international intergovernmental forum on financing for development to further the global partnership for development, to be convened not later than the year 2001;

2. Requests the ad hoc working group to consider appropriate modalities that will ensure the completion of its work and the submission of specific recommendations to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

3. Requests the President of the General Assembly at its fifty-third session to serve as ex officio chairman of the ad hoc working group and to convene an organizational meeting of the ad hoc working group not later than January 1999 to decide on the modalities referred to in paragraph 2 of the present resolution and to develop arrangements for the effective direction and functioning of the ad hoc working group;

4. Also requests the President of the General Assembly at its fifty-third session, in close consultation with Member States, to designate two vice-chairpersons for the ad hoc working group, preferably before the convening of its organizational meeting in January 1999, bearing in mind appropriate representation;

5. Requests the Bureau of the Second Committee at the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, with the assistance of the Secretariat, to organize briefings or panel discussions on important topics or significant trends and events that may enrich the deliberations of the ad hoc working group;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Macroeconomic policy questions", a sub-item entitled

"High-level international intergovernmental consideration of financing for development".

On the same date, the Assembly, by decision 53/439, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the work of the UN system on financing for development.

Investment, technology and related financial issues

The UNCTAD Commission on Investment, Technology and Related Financial Issues held its third session in Geneva from 14 to 18 September [TD/B/45/9]. For its consideration of recent developments in foreign direct investment (FDI) trends and policies, the Commission had before it, among other documents, a background note on the subject and the report of an expert meeting on the growth of domestic capital markets, particularly in developing countries, and its relationship with foreign portfolio investment (Geneva, 27-29 May) [TD/B/COM.2/12].

In agreed conclusions, the Commission recognized that investment policy was a fundamental element of national development strategies and stressed the role played by FDI in integrating countries into the world economy. It stressed the importance of technical assistance in national capacity-building for the design and implementation of such policies and the exchange of experiences and policy reviews. Efforts should be made to help build capacities and create mechanisms in developing countries, and especially LDCs, so that they could realize their investment potentials, including through negotiating and promotion techniques. The Commission underlined that there was potential in Africa to attract additional FDI and that consistent policies and a change in the negative image of the continent would help; it called on the international community to assist African countries in creating a sound investment environment. It requested UNCTAD to continue to pay regard to the impact of financial instability on FDI flows, including factors affecting those flows, and to prepare and disseminate fact sheets on FDI in Asian developing countries and in Latin America and the Caribbean. Recognizing the complex interrelationship between various types of capital flows, especially between foreign portfolio flows and FDI flows, the Commission requested that further study be made of their characteristics, similarities, complementarities and differences, as well as of the development impact and policy implications arising therefrom, and that UNCTAD cooperate with international banking and financial institutions and other organizations so as to benefit from greater synergy effects. It also invited UNCTAD to continue technical assistance activities geared towards capacity-building in developing countries in policies related to private capital flows.

For its examination and review of existing agreements on investment to identify their implications for development, the Commission had before it, among other documents, the report of an expert meeting (Geneva, 1-3 April) [TD/B/COM.2/11], which focused on the objectives of regional and multilateral instruments and the question of definition of investment in existing investment agreements, paying particular attention to their development dimension.

In agreed conclusions, the Commission recognized the importance of the issues related to FDI and development, in particular those related to international investment agreements, and the need to pay attention to how those agreements could increase FDI flows and further the objective of development. The complexity of the issues involved in international investment agreements was stressed, in particular as they related to promotion of investment, economic growth and the development dimension. The Commission recognized that UNCTAD could contribute to a better understanding of the development implications of international investment agreements and that the task required further analytical and capacity-building work.

The Commission took note of the reports of its subsidiary bodies: the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy, the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (see below), and the 1997 Expert Meeting on Competition Law and Policy [YUN 1997, p. 956].

TDB, at its nineteenth executive session (Geneva, 15 December) [TD/B/EX(19)/3], took note of the Commission's report and endorsed its agreed conclusions.

Competition law and policy

The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy held its first session in Geneva from 29 to 31 July [TD/B/COM.2/13] (formerly the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices). The Group had before it three documents prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat: a preliminary report of a study on experiences gained with international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/3], a revised report on the empirical evidence of the benefits from applying competition law and policy principles to economic development in order to attain greater efficiency in international trade and development [TD/B/COM.2/EM/10/Rev.1], and a review of technical assistance and advisory and training programmes on competition law and policy [TD/B/COM.2/CLP/2].

In agreed conclusions, the Group, reaffirming the fundamental role of competition law and policy for sound economic development, recommended the continuation of the important work programme carried out within the UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery. It invited the Secretary-General of UNCTAD to continue cooperation with WTO and other organizations working in the area of competition law and policy, and to prepare a preliminary assessment of the operation of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices [YUN 1980, p. 626] since the Third Review Conference [YUN 1995, p. 961]. It requested all member States to assist UNCTAD on a voluntary basis in technical cooperation activities by providing experts, training facilities or financial resources.

The Group recommended that the consultations at its next meeting focus on the relationship between the competition authority and relevant regulatory agencies, especially in respect of the privatization and demonopolization processes; on international merger controls, in particular where they had effects in developing countries; and on the creation of a culture of competition. The UNCTAD secretariat was asked to prepare a preliminary report on how competition policy addressed the exercise of intellectual property rights and, taking into account the information to be received from member States and international organizations by 31 January 1999, an updated review of technical assistance, as well as a report on the experiences gained with international cooperation on competition policy issues and the mechanisms used. It was also requested to continue to publish on a regular basis, and to make available on the Internet, further issues of the Handbook on Competition Legislation, a revised version of the Commentary to the Model Law, an updated version of the Directory of Competition Authorities and an information note on recent important competition cases.

International standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (ISAR) held its fifteenth session in Geneva from 11 to 13 February [TD/B/COM.2/10].

In its recommendations, ISAR requested Governments and international and regional organizations to assist UNCTAD in the dissemination of ISAR's position paper, including cooperating in the organization of regional workshops, and called upon them to work with UNCTAD to create an enabling environment for the development of the profession in developing countries and economies in transition, specifically by closing the education gap between the developed and developing countries, through the development of a global curriculum, identification and elaboration of requirements to develop fully qualified accountants and support for UNCTAD's programme for long-distance training in LDCs. It also called on Governments to cooperate with UNCTAD in the identification of the accounting needs of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in their countries and to provide information on any accounting rules in force for SMEs.

UNCTAD was requested to undertake, together with the Asian countries in the Group, a research project on the Asian financial crisis from the perspective of accounting and auditing, identifying room for improvement in the accounting and auditing systems and drawing lessons for the prevention of future crises; it was asked to report back to ISAR as soon as possible. UNCTAD should publish and disseminate ISAR's position paper on accounting and financial reporting for environmental costs and liabilities, continue its research on the development of environmental performance indicators which could be linked to financial performance indicators, and develop a global curriculum in cooperation with relevant bodies, as well as other requirements for producing fully qualified accountants. Its results should be reported back to ISAR at its sixteenth (2000) session. The Group also recommended that UNCTAD continue its efforts to strengthen long distance-learning programmes in francophone Africa in cooperation with other organizations specialized in distance-learning and seek funding for that programme. It should begin work on accounting for SMEs and report back to the seventeenth (2002) session of ISAR. UNCTAD should also commission studies of the current practices in government accounting for future consideration by the Group.

TDB, at its nineteenth executive session (Geneva, 15 December) [TD/B/EX(19)/3], reviewed the functioning of the Working Group through informal consultations conducted by its Vice-President. It extended the mandate of the Vice-President to allow consultations to resume in March 1999 and requested the Working Group to conduct a brief review of the Group's functioning with a view to providing the consultations with substantive inputs or expert views.

Taxation

The eighth meeting of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Cooperation in Tax Matters was held in Geneva from 15 to 19 December 1997 [E/1998/57]. The Group's Steering Committee met in Geneva on 11 and 12 December.

The meeting focused on tax havens, with special reference to exchanges of information; new financial instruments; transfer pricing; update of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries and the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties between Developed and Developing Countries; and technical training.

The Group of Experts recommended that the United Nations and other organizations should enhance world awareness on the continuance of the tax havens phenomenon; developed, developing and transitional economy countries, through bilateral tax treaty negotiations, should exert pressure on tax havens to exchange information so as to reduce their efficacy and the reason for their existence. The United Nations and other organizations should adopt a consensual approach and provide strategies for dealing with the distortions of market mechanisms resulting from the artificial basis for determining taxable profits, created by some multinational enterprises through transfer pricing mechanisms. Serious efforts should be made by the United Nations and relevant organizations to lay down simplified guidelines of the taxation systems of both developed and developing countries, and suggest necessary changes in fiscal legislation to avoid loss of revenue. The Secretary-General should ensure that the proper guidelines and provisions in the United Nations Model Convention and the Manual for the Negotiation of Bilateral Tax Treaties were consistent with the interests of developed, developing and transitional economy countries and improve internal income allocation. He should also ensure that the proposed guidelines in the revised publications were simplified to meet the needs of tax administrators and reflect conditions in the evolving international taxation environment.

By decision 1998/291 of 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report on the eighth meeting of the Group.

By decision 1998/218 of 23 July, the Council decided that the ninth meeting of the Group would take place in the first half of 1999, as envisaged in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1998-1999, so that the report of the meeting might be submitted to the Council at its substantive session of 1999.

Transport

Maritime transport

The Review of Maritime Transport 1998 [Sales No. E.98.II.D.12] stated that world seaborne trade recorded its twelfth consecutive annual increase in 1997, reaching a record high of 4.95 billion tons. Annual growth also soared to a rate of 4.1 per cent, the highest in the 1990s. However, the growth of world seaborne trade in 1998 was estimated to have slowed down considerably to 2.2 per cent, though trade exceeded 5 billion tons for the first time. Total maritime activities measured in ton-miles in global trade increased by 3.6 per cent in 1997 to 21,413 billion ton-miles, compared to 20,678 billion ton-miles in the previous year.

The world merchant fleet expanded to 775.9 million deadweight tons (dwt) at the end of 1997, representing a 2.3 per cent increase over 1996. The relatively slow rate of expansion reflected the balance between new-building deliveries (36.8 million dwt) and tonnage broken up and lost (19.1 million dwt), leaving a net gain of 17.7 million dwt. The developing countries' share of tonnage registered in major open-registry countries increased slowly, reaching about 25 per cent in 1997. On the other hand, the developed market-economy countries' share was on a downward trend, representing two thirds of the total tonnage registered in the major open-registry countries.

Arrest of ships

At its sixteenth executive session (Geneva, 16 February) [A/53/15/Rev.1], the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board endorsed the arrangements for the United Nations/International Maritime Organization Diplomatic Conference on Arrest of Ships, proposed by the UNCTAD secretariat [TD/B/EX(16)/4]. The Conference was to be held in Geneva from 1 to 12 March 1999.

Transport of dangerous goods

The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods held its twentieth session in Geneva from 7 to 16 December [ST/SG/AC.10/25 & Add.1-3 & Add.3/Corr.1, Add.4 & Add.4/Corr.1]. It had before it the reports of its Subcommittee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods on its thirteenth and fourteenth sessions, held in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 957], and on its fifteenth session (Geneva, 29 June-9 July 1998) [ST/SG/AC.10/C.3/30 & Add.1-3].

The Committee adopted a number of amendments to the Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods (Model Regulations and Manual of Tests and Criteria), as proposed by its Subcommittee. It discussed activities related to the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672], particularly on global harmonization of systems of classification and labelling of chemicals (including health hazards and hazards to the environment; physical hazards; labelling and hazard communication systems) and on hazardous wastes. The Committee also considered implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/3 on the Committee's work [YUN 1997, p. 957]. It prepared two draft resolutions for consideration by the Council in 1999.

UNCTAD institutional and organizational questions

UNCTAD programme

In 1998, the Trade and Development Board (TDB)—the executive body of UNCTAD—held five sessions, all in Geneva: the sixteenth (16 February), seventeenth (8 May) and eighteenth (10 July) executive sessions and the forty-fifth regular session (12-23 October) [A/53/15/Rev.1], as well as the nineteenth executive session (15 December) [A/54/15 (Part I)]. In February, the Board discussed follow-up to the WTO high-level meeting on integrated initiatives for LDCs' trade development; organization of the mid-term review of UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery; UNCTAD's publications policy; and its technical cooperation plan for 1998-2000. In May, it addressed the publications policy and the trust fund to enhance participation of developing countries' experts in UNCTAD meetings. In July, TDB discussed UNCTAD's contribution to the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s (see PART THREE, Chapter III) and the report of its President on guidelines and modalities for funds from savings resulting from improved overall cost-effectiveness for financing of experts and on operational modalities of the trust fund.

In October, the Board engaged in a high-level discussion on the regional perspectives of the impact of financial crisis on trade, investment and development. The high-level segment comprised two panel discussions, one on "The Asian epicentre" and the other on "The ripple effect and lessons to be learnt from the crisis". It also conducted a special high-level mid-term review of UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 844]. TDB adopted agreed conclusions on: the causes, management and prevention of financial crisis [agreed conclusions 451(XLV)] (see above, under "Financial policy"); trade and investment in LDCs: opportunities and constraints in the multilateral trading system [452(XLV)] (see PART THREE, Chapter I); and UNCTAD's contribution to the implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s: prospects for agriculture, trade and industrialization [454(XLV)]. It adopted three decisions: on the contribution of the Board for consideration by the General Assembly, at its fifty-third session, of the date, duration and venue of the Third United Nations Conference on LDCs and its preparatory process [dec. 453(XLV)] (see PART THREE, Chapter I); on the review of technical cooperation activities of UNCTAD [455(XLV)] (see below); and on financing the participation of developing country experts in UNCTAD expert meetings [456(XLV)] (see below).

In December, it considered the draft provisional agenda for UNCTAD X and reviewed the functioning of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting and the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Competition Law and Policy, and reports of the subsidiary bodies of the Board.

By decision 53/438 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of TDB's report on its sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth executive sessions.

Technical cooperation activities

In a July report [TD/B/45/6 & Corr.1 & Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1], the UNCTAD Secretary-General gave an overview of technical cooperation activities in 1997, when UNCTAD's expenditures amounted to $23.3 million, an increase of around 4 per cent over the previous year. Of that amount, $6.8 million was financed by UNDP, $16.1 million was from trust fund contributions and $0.4 million was from the regular programme of technical cooperation. Trust fund contributions continued to increase slightly in 1997, and the decline in the share of expenditures originated from UNDP was reversed.

By region, approximately $7.8 million went to Africa, $3.9 million to Asia and the Pacific, $2.5 million to Europe and $1.4 million to Latin America and the Caribbean. Some $7.6 million went to the interregional programme. The LDCs' share of technical cooperation expenditures in 1997 amounted to 40.4 per cent, up from the 1996 figure of 31.1 per cent.

By programme, the Division on Services Infrastructure for Development and Trade Efficiency accounted for 56 per cent of total expenditures; the three other Divisions, on International Trade in Goods and Services and Commodities, on Globalization and Development Strategies and on Investment, Technology and Enterprise Development, represented respectively 13, 15 and 12 per cent of total expenditures. The balance (4 per cent) was represented by the Office of the Special Coordinator for Least Developed, Landlocked and Island Developing Countries and by activities reported for the secretariat as a whole.

In February, TDB took note of UNCTAD's technical cooperation plan for 1998-2000 [TD/B/EX(16)/2].

In October TDB adopted a decision [(A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 455(XLV))), as recommended by the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see below), on the review of UNCTAD's technical cooperation activities. It requested the secretariat, in consultation with member States, to intensify efforts to ensure a better relative balance in the share of technical cooperation activities of the various regions. TDB encouraged the secretariat to deepen cooperation with WTO and ITC to better coordinate technical cooperation, and urged it to make maximum use of capacities from developing countries, including local and regional expertise. The secretariat would finalize the handbook on UNCTAD's technical cooperation and make it available to member States on the Internet and in all UN official languages, and prepare the rolling three-year technical cooperation plan in a simplified format for 1999-2001 for consideration by the Working Party and TDB. The Board decided that an in-depth evaluation of the competition law and policy programme would be considered at the 1999 session of the Working Party dealing with technical cooperation, and noted that the Working Party had agreed that further consultations were needed on the modalities of partial cost recovery for selected programmes.

Pursuant to TDB's October decision, the UNCTAD secretariat submitted in December [TD/B/WP/112] UNCTAD's technical cooperation plan for 1999-2001.

Participation of developing country experts in UNCTAD meetings

At TDB's May session, the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in a progress report on the trust fund to enhance participation of developing countries' experts in UNCTAD meetings, said that the fund, set up in 1997, aimed to seek contributions to an amount of $680,000. To date, $3,000 had been contributed and, since no decision had been made to disburse the funds, that amount was considered an unencumbered balance.

TDB, in its decision on the trust fund [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 450(EX-17))], decided to hold informal consultations, under the authority of its President, on the operational modalities of the fund, in accordance with the final document of UNCTAD IX entitled "A Partnership for Growth and Development" [YUN 1996, p. 845], and to enable the UNCTAD Secretary-General to modify those modalities to include two windows, one for earmarked and one for non-earmarked contributions. The TDB President was requested to complete those consultations by 3 July so that the modalities could be endorsed by the Board at its July session.

In addition, the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (thirty-first session, Geneva, 4-8 May) [TD/B/45/5], in its consideration of the item on savings resulting from the improved cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to UNCTAD IX, adopted a conclusion on the proposals by the UNCTAD Secretary-General for allocation of $5.5 million from the unspent balance remaining from the 1996-1997 biennium, pursuant to General Assembly decision 52/462 (see below). The Working Party recommended that those funds be used for the financing of experts on the understanding that it would involve only one-time expenditure within the framework of the 1998-1999 biennium and would not set a precedent regarding the financing from UNCTAD's regular budget of expenses of experts attending expert meetings. Special consideration would be given to the needs of developing countries, in particular LDCs. The President of TDB was requested to undertake informal consultations with the UNCTAD Secretary-General on the establishment of guidelines and modalities for the distribution of the relevant funds.

In resolution 53/3 (see below), the General Assembly invited TDB to take a final decision at its October session on the question of the selection, nomination and appointment of experts to participate in UNCTAD expert meetings.

In October [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 456(XLV))], TDB agreed that experts benefiting from the financing would be nominated by their Governments according to the procedure set out in the decision and serve in their personal capacity. All travel arrangements would be made in accordance with UN financial rules and regulations. The financing would facilitate the participation of the appropriate number of experts for each expert meeting, and the UNCTAD Secretary-General would report to the TDB regular session on the achievement of the objectives of the financing.

Savings resulting from improved cost-effectiveness

In February [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 448(EX-16))], TDB adopted a decision on savings resulting from improved overall cost-effectiveness, requesting the UNCTAD Secretary-General to present to the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (see below) a detailed report on the savings achieved pursuant to decisions taken at UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 845] and General Assembly resolution 52/220 [YUN 1997, p. 1421]. It requested the Working Party to meet urgently to review the savings achieved, to analyse proposals on their use, and to propose recommendations on how to allocate in the 1998-1999 budget cycle a part of the savings already achieved, with a view to strengthening UNCTAD capabilities.

By decision 52/462 of 31 March, the Assembly decided to retain a balance ($5,526,600) of the unspent balance of funds remaining at the end of the 1996-1997 biennium ($9,326,600) with a view to financing UNCTAD activities, taking into account the recommendations of the Secretary-General.

The Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, in May [TD/B/45/5], regretted that it was not in a position to determine the exact amount of savings achieved due to a lack of information. Nevertheless, it affirmed that a portion of the reduced level of expenditure ($7.7 million) in UNCTAD's 1996-1997 budget was directly attributable to improved cost-effectiveness and recommended allocating a percentage of the total savings to the financing of UNCTAD activities within the current (1998-1999) biennium. The Working Party also made recommendations concerning the Secretary-General's proposals for the allocation of the $5.5 million pursuant to decision 52/462.

In a May report [A/52/898 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General reviewed the resource situation, including savings in the 1996-1997 biennium, and made proposals for allocating the $5.5 million. The proposals reflected the recommendations of the Working Party.

ACABQ, in a September report [A/53/7/Add.2], cautioned that the Assembly decision to fund activities after the biennium to which the funds related had ended created a precedent and should be avoided. It pointed out that the $5.5 million in savings was not directly related to decisions taken at UNCTAD IX and the reform of the UNCTAD secretariat. However, it had no objection to the Secretary-General's proposal for using those funds and recommended that the amount to be utilized did not exceed $5,526,600.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 October [meeting 36], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee [A/53/485], adopted resolution 53/3 without vote [agenda item 113].

Analysis of savings resulting from the improved overall cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery and the reform of the secretariat, as requested by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/220 of 22 December 1997, and proposals pursuant to Assembly decision 52/462 of 31 March 1998

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 41/213 of 19 December 1986 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations and subsequent relevant resolutions,

Recalling its resolutions 51/167 of 16 December 1996 and 52/220 of 22 December 1997 and its decision 52/462 of 31 March 1998,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the analysis of savings resulting from the improved overall cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery and the reform of the secretariat,

Having considered also the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Emphasizing the need to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in particular, in priority areas,

1. Endorses the proposals of the Secretary-General, contained in his report, on the understanding that the amount to be utilized by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should not exceed 5,526,600 United States dollars;

2. Agrees to the use of the amount of 1,088,000 dollars for the expenses of experts attending, in their personal capacity, expert meetings convened by the commissions of the Trade and Development Board in accordance with paragraph 114 of the document entitled "A Partnership for Growth and Development", on the understanding that:

(a) It would only involve a one-time expenditure within the framework of the biennium 1998-1999, made possible because of extra resources that have been allocated as a result of underspending;

(b) The financing of the expenses of the experts should not set a precedent regarding the financing from the regular budget of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development of expenses of experts attending, in their personal capacity, expert meetings convened by the commissions of the Board, in accordance with paragraph 114 of the document entitled "A Partnership for Growth and Development";

(c) Special consideration would be given to the needs of developing countries, in particular, the least developed countries;

3. Invites the Trade and Development Board to take a final decision, at its forty-fifth session from 12 to 23

October 1998, on the question of the selection, nomination and appointment of experts to participate in the expert meetings of its commissions, so as to enable the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to carry out the activities foreseen without further delay;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development of the activities financed from the unspent balance referred to in paragraph 1 above, and on how the accomplishments had contributed to strengthening the capacity of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in particular, in priority areas;

5. Considers that significant savings have been achieved by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as a direct result of decisions of the ninth session of the Conference, including the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery and the reform of the secretariat;

6. Regrets the lack of clear information concerning the savings achieved pursuant to the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery and the reform of the secretariat, and takes note, in this context, of the indication in paragraph 8 of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that an amount of 2 million dollars, which is part of the above-mentioned savings, could be traceable to the reduction in the conference-servicing requirements of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development undertaken as a result of the ninth session, and agrees with the Advisory Committee that this information should have been reflected in the report of the Secretary-General;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session comprehensive information on the savings, including the amount of 2 million dollars referred to in paragraph 6 above, resulting from the improved overall cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to the ninth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including the restructuring of the intergovernmental machinery and the reform of the secretariat, as requested in its resolutions 51/167 and 52/220;

8. Decides to continue consideration of this question during the main part of its fifty-fourth session.

Publications policy

As decided in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 960], TDB, in February, examined the progress report on UNC-TAD's publications policy [TD/B/EX(16)/3 & Add.1] and a 1997 report on documentation and publications [TD/B/EX(15)/5]. On 16 February [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 447(EX-16))], TDB decided that the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget should meet as soon as possible to review both reports so that member States could ascertain the extent to which the policy was in line with their objectives for an overall publications policy, taking into account the discussion in the General Assembly on the UN publications policy, and to enable member States to monitor whether UNCTAD publications were in line with the policy. The Working Party was to recommend any changes to achieve such objectives and ensure the role of member States in that process.

As recommended by the Working Party in May (see below), TDB, also in May [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 449(EX-17))], encouraged member States to take an active part in a transparent review of UNCTAD's publications policy through consultations with the secretariat, so as to ensure that publications met their needs and fulfilled UNCTAD priorities. It invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to hold meetings with member States on the publications policy at an appropriate stage of the planning and review process.

Medium-term plan and programme budget

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in 1998, both in Geneva.

At its thirty-first session (4-8 May) [TD/B/45/5], the Working Party considered the savings resulting from the improved overall cost-effectiveness achieved pursuant to UNCTAD IX (see above). It recommended that consideration be given to allocating a percentage of the total savings to the financing of UNCTAD activities within the current biennium and made recommendations on the financing of experts from developing countries to attend UNCTAD expert meetings. It also considered UNCTAD's publications policy and recommended a draft decision on the subject to TDB. TDB adopted that decision in May (see above).

At the first part of its thirty-second session (21-23 September) [TD/B/45/11], the Working Party reviewed UNCTAD's 1997 technical cooperation activities and their financing, on the basis of an UNCTAD report [TD/B/45/6 & Corr.1 & Add.1,2 & Add.2/Corr.1] (see above). In its agreed conclusions, the Working Party welcomed the increased technical cooperation expenditures towards Africa and LDCs, and hoped that that trend would continue. It noted with concern that the relative share and absolute level of technical cooperation in Latin America and the Caribbean had diminished significantly and that that trend was likely to continue in 1998; that technical cooperation expenditures in Europe had fallen by 30 per cent in 1997; and, though the share of the Asian region had increased in 1997, it remained at a relatively low level. There was general agreement that it was vital to ensure the financial self-sustainability of UNCTAD programmes, in particular that adequate resources should be available to ensure continuous software enhancement and systems maintenance. The Working Party recommended to TDB a draft decision on technical cooperation activities. TDB adopted that decision in October (see above).

The Working Party held its resumed thirty-second session on 10-11 November, but was not able to complete its work.

TDB, at its nineteenth executive session (Geneva, 15 December) [TD/B/EX(19)/3], took note of the oral report of the Chairman of the Working Party and agreed to his recommendation to convene consultations to address issues relating to partial cost recovery for selected UNCTAD technical cooperation programmes; the rolling three-year technical cooperation plan for 1999-2001; and the in-depth evaluation of the Trade Point programme. The consultations would be convened in 1999.

UNCTAD intergovernmental machinery

TDB, in February [A/53/15/Rev.1 (dec. 446(EX-16))], adopted guidelines on the efficiency and functioning of UNCTAD's intergovernmental machinery [TD/B/EX(16)/L.2] presented by the Vice-President of the Board, and agreed that they should be applied immediately. The guidelines were intended to improve the working methods and enhance the functioning of the intergovernmental machinery.

UNCTAD IX follow-up

High-level mid-term review

At its February session, TDB, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/182 [YUN 1997, p. 935], launched the mid-term review process of UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 844]. The purpose of the review was to determine to what extent its mandate in terms of work programmes and institutional reforms had been implemented; to identify what remained to be completed before UNCTAD X; and to make recommendations on the work programme and agendas for the Board, the Commissions and expert meetings in the period leading to UNCTAD X.

In July, the Board approved and adopted the outcome of the mid-term review. In its general recommendations, TDB stated that the partnerships for development envisaged by the UNCTAD IX Midrand Declaration should be the hallmark of UNCTAD and would require further changes in the way business was conducted. UNCTAD should strengthen its links with civil society, in particular the private sector, and international organizations. Constructive ideas should be developed on how to improve the dissemination of policy advice, including through electronic means, to make sure it reached end-users in a user-friendly form. The scope and content of the secretariat's work programme should be commensurate with approved mandates, taking resource constraints into account. Work on cross-sectoral issues had to be better integrated into the work of the intergovernmental machinery, and the Board should ensure that the cross-sectoral issues referred to in the final document of UNCTAD IX, "A Partnership for Growth and Development" [YUN 1996, p. 845], were integrated into the work of the Commissions. UNCTAD's analytical and technical cooperation activities should be better coordinated and the secretariat should put mechanisms in place for that purpose. The strategy for the coherence of regular budget and extrabudgetary programmes to strengthen those linkages should be further pursued and linked to the outcomes of expert meetings, the Commissions, the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget and TDB. UNCTAD's management should deploy every effort to reduce the current excessive vacancy rate and reduce costs within the framework of system-wide efforts to improve efficiency, and step up staff training. The secretariat should integrate further in its work the use of performance indicators, which should be relevant, simple and measurable, and propose to TDB ideas for feedback mechanisms to measure the impact of UNCTAD activities. Cost recovery should be examined for certain technical cooperation programmes.

In its specific recommendations, TDB stated that, as the focal point within the UN system for assistance to least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, the Office of the Special Coordinator should be strengthened. Issues concerning LDCs should be fully integrated into the work of the intergovernmental machinery at all levels and TDB should address the lack of effective participation of LDCs in UNCTAD meetings. Those countries should be assisted in preparations for, and follow-up to, country-specific round tables. Greater emphasis should be placed on cooperation with other agencies in implementation of the Programme of Action of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783] and work relating to development problems specific to landlocked and transit countries should be strengthened and proceed in consultation with all parties concerned.

Work on globalization and development strategies should have broader regional coverage, dissemination should be improved and more should be done on the pace and sequencing of domestic liberalization policies. In debt management, more work should be done on the training of national staff and on domestic debt management, and work on debt problems of indebted countries should be pursued within UNCTAD's mandate. UNCTAD should analyse the impact of European economic and monetary union and the euro on developing countries. Work on portfolio investment should be carried out under the programme of investment and advantage taken of work being done by regional development banks and UN regional institutions. UNCTAD should continue work to identify and analyse the implications for development of issues relevant to a possible multilateral framework for investment and to assist developing countries to strengthen their capacity to promote trade and development through foreign investment. Further research should be undertaken into factors affecting the choice of investment location by private-sector firms, analysis continued on the development of transnational corporations (TNCs), and help provided to developing countries to improve their understanding of issues related to TNCs and their contribution to development and on policies to help developing countries benefit from the operations of TNCs. More attention should be paid to promoting investment among developing countries, and the integrated approach to investment and technology should be further pursued.

Further emphasis should be placed on capacity-building in trade, and secretariat efforts should continue in assisting developing countries and economies in transition to participate effectively in international trade negotiations and in acceding to WTO. Analytical work on the impact of trade preferences on the trade and development of developing countries should be strengthened. Implementation of the special and differential provisions in favour of developing countries provided by the Uruguay Round agreements [YUN 1994, p. 1474] should be analysed, bearing in mind the work being done by WTO in that area. Training in commercial diplomacy should ensure that UNCTAD's role was directed towards strengthening the analytical capacity of developing countries in international negotiations. Work on diversification and risk management in the area of commodities should be strengthened. The sustainability of the Trade Point programme and trade points should be enhanced, the concept of support services for the Automated System for Customs Data (ASYCUDA) should be developed and measures to ensure its sustainability and that of other trade facilitation programmes explored. The future activities of the Training Development in the field of Foreign Trade (TRAINFORTRADE) programmes should be spelt out more clearly. Assistance should also be provided to developing countries to prepare for possible multilateral discussions on electronic commerce.

The secretariat should produce an annual report on UNCTAD activities to achieve greater transparency, provide member States with a comprehensive overview and permit a better assessment of its work and achievements.

TDB requested member States, the UNCTAD secretariat and relevant organizations to implement the recommendations, and the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide regular progress reports at monthly consultations and to transmit the outcome to the high-level mid-term review.

In response to the request contained in the Midrand Declaration adopted at UNCTAD IX [YUN 1996, p. 845], a high-level mid-term review meeting of UNCTAD IX was held during TDB's forty-fifth session. The meeting focused on the follow-up to the mid-term review exercise launched in February, with a view to assessing global developments since UNCTAD IX, expectations over the next two years and future prospects looking forward to UNCTAD X and beyond. The meeting had before it a document [TD/B/45/8] containing the outcome and support documents of the mid-term review and an issues paper by the UNCTAD Secretary-General.

TDB requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare a draft provisional agenda for UNCTAD X for approval at its nineteenth executive session. The Board was also informed that UNCTAD X was scheduled to be held in Thailand from 12 to 20 February 2000.

TDB, at its nineteenth executive session (15 December), decided that, since further time was needed to reach agreement in the ongoing consultations, the draft provisional agenda for UNCTAD X would be taken up by the Board at its next executive session or in monthly consultations of its President.

Chapter V

Regional economic and social activities

In 1998, the five United Nations regional commissions continued their efforts to promote economic and social development throughout their areas. Three met for regular sessions during the year at their headquarters: the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) (Bangkok, Thailand); the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) (Geneva); and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) (Santiago, Chile), which marked its fiftieth anniversary. Neither the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) nor the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) held regular sessions in 1998. Both were scheduled to meet next in May 1999. In celebration of its fortieth anniversary in April/May, ECA convened the International Conference on African Women and Economic Development: Investing in our Future.

During the year, in the context of the overall UN reform process, all five commissions continued to implement reform measures aimed at rationalizing their work, allowing them to be more responsive to global challenges, taking into account the specific interests and needs of each region. ESCAP adopted a resolution on follow-up to the restructuring of its programme and organization; it also adopted the Manila Declaration on Accelerated Implementation of the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region, containing a set of recommendations for national action on planning and target-setting, mobilizing enablers, capacity-building through human resources development, resource mobilization and monitoring evaluation. Also in the context of UN reform, ECE adopted a resolution on the review of the UN regional commissions by the Economic and Social Council, which reaffirmed the need to strengthen cooperation between ECE and other bodies on issues of common concern. Those measures were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council, which also adopted a resolution on strengthening the relationship between ECA and UN agencies and regional and subregional organizations in Africa and on ECA's revised medium-term plan for 1998-2001. The Council also provided overall guidance for improving the contributions and relevance of the regional commissions to the UN reform process.

Regional cooperation

Efforts continued in 1998 to strengthen the role of the regional commissions in the context of the restructuring of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields and as part of the programme of reform of the United Nations. On 3 February, the Economic and Social Council decided (decision 1998/201) to consider at its substantive session, under the item entitled "Regional cooperation", the review and reform of the regional commissions, on the understanding that the topic would also be considered in conjunction with the item on implementation of General Assembly resolutions 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392].

Meeting of executive secretaries. The executive secretaries of the regional commissions met in New York from 10 to 12 March to review developments taking place at the regional and global levels. They agreed that there were more possibilities than in the past for effective interregional cooperation in view of the emerging interests of their respective membership in learning from experiences in other regions on economic and social issues, and in utilizing the regional commissions for that purpose. They identified some of the issues on which there seemed to be growing interest for interregional cooperation, such as the implications of the current Asian financial crisis; the aftermath of the Mexican financial crisis of 1994; management of financial flows; the relative experience of integration groupings in promoting intraregional trade and investment; electronic commerce and trade facilitation in a globalizing world economy; privatization of public utilities; reform of the pension system; and intraregional and international migration flows.

On 17 July, the Economic and Social Council, during its consideration of the item on regional cooperation (see below), held a panel discussion with the executive secretaries of the regional commissions.

Review and reform of the regional commissions

Reports of Secretary-General. In a June report [E/1998/65], the Secretary-General examined the role of the regional commissions in the context of a programme for reform of the United Nations. The report analysed the dual role of the commissions both as contributors to the Organization's global work programme and as occupiers of a niche in the institutional landscape of their respective geographical areas, and the interface between those two roles.

The Secretary-General proposed four broad avenues for optimizing the regional commissions' potential contribution to the central role of the United Nations in promoting development and international cooperation. The first, in the context of the internal reform efforts of each commission, would entail further measures to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the secretariats by building on the reviews already undertaken to strengthen their internal functioning and effectiveness, clarify their role and functions and define their relationships and promote cooperation with UN and non-UN entities. Horizontal cooperation between the commissions should be encouraged, so that the best practices in any commission could be adopted by the others.

Secondly, there was a need to determine a rational distribution of the Secretariat's responsibilities based on, among other criteria, geographical considerations: which entities should undertake which activities at the global, regional, and national levels. The Secretary-General committed himself to assuring active participation of the regional commissions in the Executive Committee for Economic and Social Affairs; carrying out joint exercises between each commission and the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA), as well as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD); developing criteria for measuring comparative advantages within the Secretariat through a joint effort of DESA, UNCTAD and the five regional commissions; and optimizing the convening power of the regional commissions as an important mechanism for articulating regional perspectives on global issues. He suggested that the Economic and Social Council might wish to clarify the manner in which it should interact with the intergovernmental machinery of the regional commissions, so that its overall guidance and coordination were fully taken into account. The ongoing exercises on priority-setting in some of the regional commissions should become a key ingredient in involving Governments in defining the distribution of responsibilities of the UN overall work programme at the global, regional and national levels.

The third avenue sought to improve coordination of the activities of the regional commissions with other regional activities within the UN system. The Secretary-General proposed to organize, in each geographical area, yearly meetings between the regional commissions and all UN funds and programmes, agencies and departments engaged in regional and intercountry activities to reinforce synergies and avoid overlapping of regional activities; assure active participation of the regional commissions in the United Nations Development Group; reactivate the activities of the Task Force created in June 1994 by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the regional commissions [YUN 1994, p. 798]; assure close consultations between UNDP and the regional commissions during the programming stages of the former's regional activities, and encourage partnerships between them in undertaking such activities; and enhance an approach to programming based on thematic, multisectoral and cross-cutting activities, which should facilitate interaction between the regional commissions and UNDP. The Secretary-General would examine further the role of the regional commissions in respect of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and the UNDP country strategy note and how it could be enhanced.

The fourth avenue pertained to the need to reinforce synergies and lessen duplication of efforts regarding the work programmes of the regional commissions and non-UN regional or subregional bodies. The Secretary-General had instructed the executive secretaries of the regional commissions to seek closer interaction with such bodies; undertake joint endeavours with other regional entities, especially where specific mandates existed from both UN and non-UN intergovernmental bodies; and organize yearly meetings with non-UN regional and subregional bodies.

In an addendum to his report [E/1998/65/Add.1], the Secretary-General reviewed implementation of reforms within each commission and described selected activities implemented during 1997 and 1998, including follow-up to recent world conferences. Another addendum contained resolutions adopted at recent sessions of the regional commissions calling for action by the Economic and Social Council [E/1998/65/Add.2]. Also before the Council was a letter from the Chairman of ESCAP's fifty-fourth session (Bangkok, 16-22 April) to the President of the Council, transmitting portions of the ESCAP report entitled "The role of ESCAP in the promotion of economic and social development in Asia and the Pacific: draft ESCAP position paper for review by the Economic and Social Council" [E/1998/65/Add.3].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July, by decision 1998/214, the Council took note of the reports of the Secretary-General on regional cooperation (see above) and of summaries of the survey of the economic and social situation in Africa, 1997 [E/1998/12]; the economic survey of Europe, 1997 [E/1998/11]; the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1997 [E/1998/14]; the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific, 1998 [E/1998/13]; and the survey of economic and social developments in the ESCWA region, 1997-1998 [E/1998/15].

The Council also adopted resolutions on its review of the regional commissions (1998/3); strengthening regional support for persons with disabilities into the twenty-first century (1998/4); relationships between ECA, UN agencies and regional and subregional organizations in Africa (1998/5); and revision of the medium-term plan, 1998-2001, of ECA (1998/6). It also adopted one decision on the venue of the twenty-eighth session of ECLAC (1998/213). (Those resolutions and that decision are to be found in the relevant sections of this chapter.)

The Council, in annex III of resolution 1998/46 of 31 July on further measures for the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields (see PART FIVE, Chapter I), provided guidance for improving the commissions' contributions to and relevance in the UN reform process.

Audit of regional commissions

The Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS), pursuant to General Assembly resolution 48/218 B [YUN 1994, p. 1362], conducted audits of ECA, ESCAP, ECLAC and ESCWA during the period from September 1996 to April 1997. In a January 1998 note [A/52/776], the Secretary-General transmitted the OIOS report to the Assembly.

Concerning ECA, OIOS stated that major improvements were needed to strengthen internal controls and to monitor compliance with financial regulations and rules. The accounting system was outdated and did not meet the Commission's needs. Bank reconciliations were not done on a timely basis and contained reconciling items that had not been properly investigated. Collection action for accounts receivable was weak. The costs of running the newly completed United Nations Conference Centre were not segregated from the operating costs of other ECA facilities. Separate account codes should be established and common costs prorated to reflect the actual costs of operating and maintaining the Centre.

The audits of ECLAC and its subregional office in Mexico disclosed generally satisfactory management of programmes. However, the monitoring of extrabudgetary projects was inadequate and the quality of programme outputs was not being properly assessed. ECLAC Mexico, while using substantial regular budget resources to produce outputs that were not covered by the approved programme of work, was nevertheless able to achieve a subprogramme implementation rate of 90 per cent. There was no indication of overbudgeting.

Changes in the ESCAP secretariat that were necessary to support the thematically oriented programme of work of the Commission had not been effected. There was also little congruence between the programme and organizational structures, and no correlation between the programme budget and the financial statements. An audit of technology management disclosed that security, disaster planning and disaster recovery needed to be strengthened.

At ESCWA, internal controls were generally adequate, but procedures needed strengthening, in particular in procurement and financial management. Disaster planning and prevention needed improvement.

The Secretary-General indicated his concurrence with the findings and recommendations contained in the OIOS report.

Africa

The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) did not hold a regular session in 1998. The thirty-third session/twenty-fourth meeting of the Conference of Ministers/Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Finance was scheduled to be held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 6 to 8 May 1999. ECA celebrated its fortieth anniversary in 1998. On that occasion, it convened the International Conference on African Women and Economic Development: Investing in our Future (Addis Ababa, 28 April-1 May) (see below, under "Integration of women in development").

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social situation in Africa, 1998 [E/1999/16], for the fourth consecutive year gross domestic product (GDP) in Africa grew faster than population, contrasting markedly with a decade and a half of declining per capita income. The 3.3 per cent growth in GDP in the region, compared with the 2.9 per cent growth in 1997, was the highest in the world. However, even that level of growth was below what was needed to have a significant impact on poverty. If Africa was to reduce poverty by half over the next 15 years, it would need to attain and sustain an average growth rate of 7 per cent per annum. In addition, the positive aggregate economic performance was not shared evenly across the continent. While the North and Central African subregions grew in 1998, there were declines in the eastern, western and southern subregional rates of growth. The oil-exporting countries maintained their growth momentum as a group (3.7 per cent in 1998 against 3.6 per cent the previous year), but growth in Gabon and Angola declined by half, while it increased in the Congo and Algeria. Largely because of the recovery in agriculture and the decline in oil prices, the non-oil-exporting countries grew by 2.9 per cent, up from 2.3 per cent in 1997. The 33 least developed countries (LDCs) increased their GDP growth rate from 2.4 per cent in 1997 to 4.1 per cent. Growth in the five largest economies (Algeria, Egypt, Morocco, Nigeria and South Africa) increased from 2.2 per cent to 3.1 per cent. Only the Comoros and the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) had negative GDP growth in 1998, and only Botswana, the Congo and Equatorial Guinea grew by 7 per cent or more.

Agriculture remained the dominant sector in Africa and its recovery in 1998 fueled GDP growth. Good weather and reforms, which improved the availability and distribution of modern inputs, including credit, contributed to the better performance. However, the removal of subsidies and the reduction of public extension services resulting from the reforms negatively affected small producers. Constraints in the sector were aggravated by the decline in donor support for rural development projects and the reduction of investment in rural social services. Those developments had a negative impact on the drive by African countries to attain food self-sufficiency.

The industrial sector grew by 3.2 per cent in 1998, down from 3.8 per cent in 1997. The fall in investment, together with weak competitiveness due largely to relatively low productivity, were responsible for the drop in growth of the manufacturing subsector, from 2.5 per cent in 1997 to 2 per cent in 1998.

The recession in emerging markets was transmitted to Africa mainly through depressed commodity prices. All of Africa's exportable products were affected, with oil experiencing the largest fall. However, the decline in oil prices did benefit the oil-importing African countries.

There was serious pressure on the balance of payments in 1998. Export revenue declined by 17 per cent and, for the first time in the 1990s, the trade balance turned negative, boosting the current account deficit to a high of $16 billion. The perennial imbalance in the services sector, driven by external debt payments and the cost of transport and financial services, continued to put pressure on the current account balance and to claim an inordinate share of foreign revenue from merchandise exports.

Resource flows into Africa declined to $3 billion from $4.5 billion in 1997 as a result of reduced private flows and bilateral credit. For sub-Saharan countries, net transfers declined by nearly 40 per cent. The ratio of debt stock to GDP increased moderately and the ratio to exports grew steeply because of the latter's decline. Debt service increased to $35 billion, or 31 per cent of goods and services exports. Ongoing debt reduction initiatives did not significantly affect the debt burden. Only one country (Uganda) of the 41 potentially eligible benefited from the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF), and only four (Burkina Faso, Cote d'Ivoire, Mali and Mozambique) were scheduled to receive actual debt reduction in the next three years.

Investment as a percentage of GDP increased from 21 per cent in 1997 to 23 per cent, mainly because of a 1 per cent increase in domestic savings. Higher incomes and lower consumption, especially in the public sector, were the major contributory factors in the change in domestic savings.

Inflation declined from 15 per cent in 1997 to 12 per cent. Increased agricultural production and the fall in the price of imports helped to contain consumer prices. The decline in external trade resulted in an increase in government deficits due to reduced revenues from international trade taxes.

Policy developments

In 1998, Africa enjoyed its fourth consecutive year of positive GDP growth despite global financial and currency turmoil. However, that favourable outcome did not mean that the aggregate African economy had crossed the critical threshold to a self-sustainable poverty-reducing growth path. For that to happen, the global environment and exogenous shocks would have to change permanently in Africa's favour. Official development assistance (ODA) was stagnant or declining, little progress was made in reducing the debt burden, protectionist tendencies continued in Africa's major markets and erratic weather conditions persisted.

Current growth theory posited a specific group of variables and factors to constitute eco-conomic growth fundamentals. Macroeconomic stability and other steps were needed to reduce transaction costs, raise returns on investment, reduce risks to investors, improve human capital, improve international competitiveness and address the problems of poverty and inequality. Testing whether Africa had built a critical mass of momentum towards sustained poverty-reducing growth required the use of multiple evaluation criteria. Unfortunately, comprehensive Africa-specific composite indices needed for that purpose were not available.

African countries needed to plan for and mitigate the crippling effects of negative natural and environmental phenomena through better scientific and policy understanding and proactive programmes to apply science and technology in solving environmental and natural resource-based constraints. Africa had also to come to grips with natural and man-made human catastrophes, particularly the scourge of civil wars and conflict and the HIV/AIDS pandemic, which had undermined the sustainability of development.

For most of the African countries on the verge of recovery, the capacity to sustain growth and development over time was very low. The key mistake of the preceding two decades was the focus on macroeconomic stabilization, while capacity, structural and institutional elements were neglected. Achieving stabilization entailed sacrificing expenditures needed to build the requisite institutions and infrastructure and invest in human capital development and retention. Policies with the twin goals of macroeconomic stability and sustainability either were not drawn up and adopted or were not being implemented. Those were the urgent tasks at hand.

The analysis and process of constructing the indicators of performance, sustainability and policy stance underscored the many challenges facing decision makers in moving forward with the Africa development agenda—implementing and sustaining macroeconomic reforms; human capital development; diversification of the economy; institutional development; competitiveness; and the capacity of the economy to generate resources internally. Those challenges called for appropriate policy responses, by Africa's decision makers.

Social trends

According to the summary of the economic and social situation in Africa, 1998, the analysis of income distribution in Africa showed a fairly high degree of inequality. Compared with other regions of the world, Africa had the second most unequal income distribution next to Latin America. The highest values for inequality were for Kenya, South Africa and Zimbabwe, the lowest for Algeria, Egypt and Ghana. Although 44 per cent of Africa's population lived below the region-wide poverty line of $39 per capita per month, the depth and incidence of poverty varied between and within subregions. In the North Africa subregion, only 22 per cent were under the poverty line of $54 per capita per month, while sub-Saharan Africa had 51 per cent below the poverty line of $34 per capita per month. Significantly more poor people lived in the rural areas. The average income of the rural poor was only $14 per person per month, compared with an average of $27 per month for the urban poor.

To reduce poverty by half in Africa by the year 2015 would require a 4 per cent reduction in the ratio of people living in poverty each year. For Africa as a whole, GDP growth of about 7 per cent per annum would be required to achieve that annual reduction. Increases of 5 to 6 per cent were needed for North Africa and southern Africa, 6 to 7 per cent for Central Africa, and 7 to 8 per cent for the West and East African subregions. Investment of 33 per cent of GDP would be needed to reach 7 per cent per annum growth, to be financed partly by domestic savings and the rest by foreign inflows. Africa-wide averages hid large variations among the subregions. North Africa needed only about 5 per cent of GDP in external resources to complete the financing needed to generate a GDP growth rate high enough to halve the poverty level in the subregion by the year 2015. ODA to the subregion was averaging about 3 per cent of GDP, leaving a financing gap of about 2 per cent of GDP. Financing investment for needed GDP growth was most difficult in Central Africa, where the residual financing gap was about 27 per cent. Recent foreign resource flows to Africa were far short of the volume needed to meet the poverty reduction objective. Africa had to address the key issue of raising domestic savings rates, but in the short run any expectation of significant change was unrealistic in view of the existing low levels of income. Given those rather stark realities, the key policy issues for the development of Africa that could be addressed directly by African policy makers related to domestic savings and external resource inflows other than conventional ODA, such as foreign direct investment, and the causes of capital flight. Stabilization of the macroeconomy would stimulate savings by creating an economic environment where private agents could plan their future with a large measure of confidence. Moreover, prudent government behaviour and fiscal discipline would be expected to contribute to increased savings.

Activities in 1998

In 1998, the work of ECA was carried out under the new structure of five subprogrammes: facilitating economic and social analysis; ensuring food security and sustainable development; strengthening development management; harnessing information for development; and promoting regional cooperation for development. The cross-cutting themes of promoting the advancement of women and capacity-building underpinned those subprogrammes [E/ECA/CM.24/4].

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

African recovery and development

ECA continued to monitor implementation of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 46/151 [YUN 1991, p. 397], and the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, launched in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 832] (see PART THREE, Chapter III). Since the 1996 mid-term review of the New Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 829], ECA had made significant contributions to Africa's economic recovery by promoting economic cooperation and integration, as well as strengthening Africa's position in the global economy. ECA organized conferences and meetings of African Ministers responsible for finance, economic development and planning; undertook analytical studies in the context of technical and advisory services to member States; and collaborated with other UN and non-UN agencies.

In support of the implementation of the Special Initiative, ECA held an informal consultation with the World Bank and UNDP (New York, October) to explore resource mobilization strategies. As part of the Special Initiative secretariat's communication and outreach strategy, activities included publication of the second issue of the Special Initiative's newsletter in November and development of a database on African development issues on the Internet. Related activities included capacity-building training on the Internet and Web publishing techniques for ECA's Subregional Development Centre in Lusaka, Zambia, in September. ECA and UNDP held the second annual African Governance Forum (Accra, Ghana, 25-26 June), which focused on the themes of transparency and accountability.

The first Meeting of the Ministerial Follow-up Committee of the Conference of Ministers responsible for economic and social development and planning was held in Addis Ababa on 27 April [E/ECA/MFC.1/5].

Trade promotion and development finance

In March, ECA organized the Ad Hoc Experts Group Meeting on Appropriate Follow-up Mechanisms to the First World Trade Organization (WTO) Ministerial Conference [YUN 1996, p. 1441] and modalities to facilitate Africa's effective participation in the second WTO Ministerial Conference (Geneva, May) (see PART SIX, Chapter XVII). The Meeting was part of the process of assisting African countries to adjust to the post-Uruguay Round economic and trading environment, and to enhance their capacities for taking advantage of the opportunities emerging from the new world economic order. Held under the theme "Enhancing Africa's participation within the framework of the multilateral trade negotiations", the Meeting discussed the challenges facing Africa in adapting to the realities of globalization and liberalization and in enhancing the role of trade as an engine of growth. It also discussed the agenda for the second WTO Ministerial Conference with a view to providing pointers on key issues to be discussed that were of importance to African countries.

The Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Liberalization of Trade and Factor Mobility within Africa and the Promotion of Emergence of Complementarities as a Basis for the Expansion of Intra-African Trade (Addis Ababa, 25-27 November) [ECA/RCID/67/98] considered a case study on the subject for the East and southern African subregions. It also discussed the country experiences of Kenya, Malawi, Uganda and Zambia in the context of the case study.

ECA continued preparations for the 1999 Conference of African Ministers of Finance and the Conference of Ministers of Economic Development and Planning, for which the theme "The challenge of financing development in Africa" was chosen.

Under the regular programme of technical cooperation, the Commission responded to requests for advisory services to strengthen the capabilities of member States and their inter-governmental organizations in such areas as financial and monetary integration; international trade and financial negotiations; formulation and programming of projects in trade, tourism and economic cooperation and integration; and issues related to the Uruguay Round agreements and follow-up to the first WTO Ministerial Conference, including providing assistance in trade negotiations. It also organized training workshops and seminars aimed at building capacity at the country level and at ECA.

Information technology

Implementation of the African Information Society Initiative (AISI), adopted by ECA in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 880], took place at national, subregional and regional levels, with emphasis on information society awareness; policy; infrastructure and connectivity; sector applications, covering distance education, electronic commerce, health, statistics and agriculture; content development, particularly web-site development; national information and communication infrastructure policies, plans and strategies; democratizing access to the information society; and expansion of African content.

AISI was implemented through partnerships with multilateral and bilateral organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the private sector through the Partnership for Information and Communication Technologies in Africa (PICTA). ECA was working with UNCTAD and PICTA partners to build electronic commerce sites in selected African countries through local chambers of commerce and investment promotion centres. Joint projects included policy and awareness workshops, telecentre projects and organization of major conferences such as the Global Connectivity for Africa (Addis Ababa, 2-4 June). ECA's AISI implementation modalities included information dissemination, advisory services, workshops, seminars and conferences. Advisory services were provided to countries in statistical organization and management and improvement of basic economic statistics to promote capacity-building. The ECA library was embarking on a project to automate and improve its library and information services to serve as a hub in an African network of research libraries and institutions. To that end, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and UNDP offices in Addis Ababa had transferred their library collections to the ECA library. Work continued on the ECA multisectoral regional database, which comprised a wide range of economic and social indicators. Three technical publications were issued on: best practices in the formulation of statistical development plans; possible alternative approaches to population censuses in Africa; and population and housing censuses in Africa: lessons from the last four rounds. Recognizing the need to promote geographic information, ECA, in November, organized an ad hoc expert group meeting to discuss a working document on integrated geographic information systems with special attention to cadastre and land information systems for African decision makers. The meeting made recommendations for improving existing systems in African countries and developing new ones.

Transport and communications

ECA provided technical advisory services to several member States on policy reforms in transport and communications. The Comoros, Ethiopia and Sierra Leone received assistance in developing national transport data banks and policy reforms in the transport and communications sector within the context of the Second United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, 1991-2000 (UNTACDA II), adopted by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1991/83 [YUN 1991, p. 301]. At the request of the Djibouti-Ethiopia Railways Corporation, the ECA secretariat, together with the European Union (EU), fielded a mission in December to Djibouti to assist in restructuring and modernizing the jointly owned railways corporation. As to railway development in Africa, ECA undertook a joint mission with the Union of African Railways to Egypt, the Sudan and Tunisia to provide those countries with information on the implementation of the master plan for interconnection of railways in Africa, with special emphasis on the North African subregion. To minimize duplication across sectors and subregions, ECA undertook joint activities with various key actors in transport and communications.

To improve regional transport linkages and traffic facilitation, ECA's major activity concerned coordination of the implementation of the Yamoussoukro Declaration on a New African Air Transport Policy [YUN 1988, p. 273], aimed at creating an enabling environment for cooperation and coordination among African air transport operators and for the gradual liberalization of traffic rights within Africa. As lead agency, ECA set up a working group of experts preparatory to the special meeting of African Ministers responsible for civil aviation, scheduled to take place in 1999.

The first Meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee for the Creation of a Pan-African Association for Port Cooperation (Addis Ababa, 14 July) [ECA/RCID/32/98] approved a draft constitution for the Association. ECA also organized two workshops on port commercialization issues in Maputo, Mozambique, and Mombasa, Kenya, in April. In addition, the Comoros and Mali received assistance on policy reforms in transport and communications, particularly in formulating national policies covering air, road and maritime transport as well as telecommunications and postal services.

Harmonization of achievements of phase 1 of the UNTACDA II regional transport database project with other regional and subregional activities continued. ECA consulted with the Southern Africa Transport and Communications Commission (SATCC) on the harmonization of the subregional database to be established by SATCC for the 12 member States of the Southern African Development Community (SADC). In a similar effort, ECA assisted the Port Management Association for Eastern and Southern Africa in formulating the terms of reference of a database for its member ports.

Science and technology

The first Advisory Board Meeting on Science and Technology for Africa's Development (Addis Ababa, 18-19 May) [ECA/FSSDD/S&T/ABM/98/13] discussed a framework for ECA's future intervention and issues relating to the Compendia of Best Practices and the ECA Science and Technology Network; other science and technology issues, including the role and potential of indigenous technology for the promotion of sustainable development for food security and science and technology profiles of countries; prioritization of the science and technology needs of member States; funding of ECA's science and technology activities; and preparation of the work programme for the Executive Dialogue to be held in June (see below).

Among suggestions made for raising extra-budgetary resources for funding ECA science and technology activities were: preparing project proposals in collaboration with member States and jointly seeking bilateral donors for regional projects; choosing different donors for different projects, for which interest could be determined from the annual pledging conferences; seeking funding from the Global Environment Facility for biodiversity (see PART THREE, Chapter VII), biotechnology and patents; and incorporating science and technology activities into more popular programmes.

The first Executive Dialogue of Ministers and Leaders in the Private Sector on Science and Technology for Africa's Development (Addis Ababa, 18-19 June) [ECA/FSSDD/S&T/ED/98/7] considered papers on relations between research institutions and industry within the national system of innovation; African technological development in the context of globalization; and information and communication technology in support of food security and sustainable development. The following issues were identified for ECA consideration: promotion of "real services" to small and medium-sized enterprises for their technological development; increased funding of science and technology activities at the country level, with ECA spearheading activities to expand the funding base; promoting the networking of science and technology institutions, the compilation and dissemination of databases on research and development activities and the identification and encouragement of centres of excellence as a means of promoting subregional cooperation; identifying the science and technology priorities of member States and assisting them to develop core competencies in areas of comparative advantage; screening available free patents relevant to specific needs and compiling and disseminating a database of such patents; and encouraging those member States without science and technology policies to develop them and integrate them into national development policies and programmes. ECA should also spearhead regional research on technology policies with cross-country implications in the context of globalization and promote linkages between research and development institutions and industry with special reference to small and medium-sized enterprises.

Energy and natural resources

During the year, the ECA secretariat prepared four studies on promoting and enhancing policies and financing mechanisms for mining and energy projects: best practices in policy, legal and regulatory frameworks for sustained development of mineral resources; alternative approaches to financing energy and power development; the contribution of transnational corporations in the mining and energy sectors in four African countries; and modalities for accessing new sources of capital for development of Africa's mineral resources. The studies underscored the need to intensify efforts to attract higher levels of private investment in those sectors. Two expert meetings were organized in December to review and improve the content of those publications, as well as to formulate guidelines for implementation of their recommendations.

Advisory services provided by ECA included assistance to the Economic Community of West African States in formulating an action plan for the interconnection of energy grids in the subregion; assistance to the West African Economic and Monetary Union (UEMOA) in formulating a common subregional programme for the development of energy and mineral resources; support for the Southern and Eastern Mineral Centre in defining its work programme and backstopping its activities; and assistance to Benin, Burkina Faso and the United Republic of Tanzania in utilizing solar energy, promoting investment in the mining sector and improving conditions for small-scale mining. To strengthen subregional and regional cooperation in mineral resources development and utilization, the secretariat collaborated with African intergovernmental organizations, regional organizations and other UN agencies. Together with the World Bank's Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency, it organized a conference on investment in the African mining sector (Marrakech, Morocco, November).

A seminar on environmental and natural resource accounting (Addis Ababa, 26-28 October) [ECA/FSSDD/ENV/ENRA/98/2], which had the objective of supporting the efforts of African Governments to identify, capture and use effectively resource rent for economic development, introduced the system of integrated environmental and economic accounting and its potential policy uses. It also disseminated the experience of several African countries that had experimented with natural resource accounting and called for support from African Governments and the international community for its application.

Food security and sustainable development

ECA activities in support of ensuring food security and sustainable development continued to focus on raising African policy makers' awareness of the interrelationship between food, population and environmental concerns in development planning; improving water resources management; strengthening cooperation among agencies concerned with sustainable development; and the application of science and technology to agriculture and sustainable development concerns. Building the capacity of member States to ensure food security and sustainable development constituted an important component of the secretariat's activities. Workshops organized by the Secretariat included those on: integrating wetlands and water resources management (Dakar, Senegal, November); environmental and natural resources accounting (Addis Ababa, October); and environmental impact assessment for sub-Saharan Africa (Nairobi, Kenya, July).

The secretariat collaborated with other UN agencies and organizations, as well as with regional and subregional intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, through the exchange of data and information, and attending conferences, meetings and workshops.

The High-level Expert Group Meeting on Agriculture and Environment (Addis Ababa, 30 November-2 December) [ECA/FSSDD/AGR.ENV/EG/98/2] discussed the critical links between population, agriculture and the environment: presentation of the population, environment, development and agriculture model.

Development management

ECA activities in support of strengthening development management emphasized fostering public-private sector partnership in support of development; promoting public sector reforms for enhanced effectiveness and efficiency; promoting public sector policies and practices in fostering an enabling environment for private sector development; and enhancing the role of civil society organizations in development and governance. It prepared technical publications on civil service reform policies: strategies and effectiveness in other countries and lessons for Africa; and on effective systems of ethics and accountability in African public services.

The secretariat also carried out a study on improving access to loans by operators of small-scale enterprises through effective use of formal and informal microfinancing systems. The study reviewed microfinancing practices and programmes in selected African, Asian and Latin American countries, assessed policies and strategies, as well as implementation constraints, and made a number of recommendations. A publication on the review of experiences in privatization proposed measures to promote privatization in strategic sectors of African economies, such as telecommunications, transport and tourism. The secretariat also issued the Development Management Newsletter, a recurrent publication covering public sector management issues, private sector development and civil society participation in development and governance.

Other activities included an advisory mission to Swaziland in November to redefine the strategic objectives of the civil service reform programme; a mission to Lesotho to review the institutional support requirements of the Faculty of Health Sciences at the University of Lesotho; collaborating in organizing and servicing the second Pan African Conference of Ministers of Civil Service (Rabat, Morocco, November); and preparation of a report on the policies, incentives and support mechanisms for small-scale enterprises in Zambia.

The ECA Development Management Division organized a national workshop (Addis Ababa, 12-13 February) on the promotion of the informal sector for development in Africa [ECA/DMD/PSD/RPT/98/2]. The Conference on Governance in Africa: Consolidating the Institutional Foundations (Addis Ababa, 2-6 March) [ECA/DMD/PSM/RT/98/7] considered governance and institutional development, the public service and development and the role of civil society in governance. In recognition of the increasing role of African civil society organizations (CSOs), including NGOs, in African development, the Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Capacities, Activities and Services Required to Enhance the Effectiveness of African CSOs (Addis Ababa, 12-13 October) [ECA/DMD/CSPG/RP/98/3] reviewed the activities of CSOs/NGOs, assessed their capacity-building needs and recommended modalities to enable them to acquire new capacities and potential partnerships.

Integration of women in development

ECA activities for promoting the advancement of women were aimed at mainstreaming gender issues into policies and programmes of member States; economic and social empowerment of women; and information dissemination on progress made in implementing globally and regionally agreed plans of action.

In preparation for the sixth African Regional Conference on Women to be held in 1999, the ECA secretariat organized in 1998 subregional follow-up meetings on the preparation and implementation of national platforms for action in Central Africa (June) and North Africa (October). The meetings stressed the importance of monitoring the process and developing guidelines for monitoring implementation of the platforms for action.

As to fostering the economic empowerment of women, the second African Women Entrepreneurs Global Trade Fair and Investment Forum, organized in collaboration with ECA's African Centre for Women (Addis Ababa, 15-23 October), demonstrated the significant contributions of women in the economic development process of their countries, particularly in the business sector, and exposed women entrepreneurs to the requirements of international markets. The second component of the event—the Investment Forum (20-23 October)—had the overall theme of "Credit and private direct investment for the enhancement of women entrepreneurs' participation in the global economy" [ECA/ACW/SGWE/TFIF.REP/98].

A three-week study tour of India and Sri Lanka for women entrepreneurs on food processing technologies was organized in June for 28 participants from 17 countries. A leadership skills training workshop for women entrepreneurs and women managers (Entebbe, Uganda, 4-11 December) had women participants from nine East, West and southern African countries. Within the context of promoting the economic empowerment of women, studies were carried out in 1998 on access and control over land and agriculture technologies in Burkina Faso, Guinea, Kenya, Senegal and Uganda. An expert group meeting organized in November to discuss the studies proposed measures to address the legal, economic and cultural aspects of the issues of land and technologies.

Technical support took the form of advisory missions to member countries with the aim of defining a legal framework for the advancement of women and monitoring progress in adopting the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. Missions were undertaken to Guinea, Mauritius and the Niger in May, September and January, respectively. A publication on formal education as an entry point for incorporating women's rights issues into school curricula was produced to raise awareness among policy makers on the role of schools in promoting those rights and in shaping future policy on the subject.

International Conference on African Women and Economic Development

ECA celebrated its fortieth anniversary in May with the holding of an international conference on the general theme "African women and economic development: investing in our future" (Addis Ababa, 28 April-1 May). The Conference, which brought together representatives from African Governments, civil society, NGOs and private-sector and international organizations, as well as some African heads of State, discussed the following issues: developing African economies: the role of women; achieving good governance: the essential participation of women; African women and the information age: a new window of opportunity; and creating opportunities for Africa's new generation. The Conference proposed actions and strategies under each of those issues, singling out areas where Governments needed to accelerate action to honour their commitments, either by releasing the necessary resources, collaborating with different actors to meet specific objectives, or adopting policies to facilitate implementation of the national platforms for action. Representatives of organizations present at the Conference, including the World Bank, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the Canadian International Development Agency, outlined ways in which they could be partners in implementing some of the actions agreed at the Conference, including the expansion of gender-sensitive reviews to include public expenditure; introducing national accounting systems that counted women's work; including a gender perspective in information and communication technologies and supporting the establishment of telecentres for rural women; and supporting women's peace initiatives.

During the Conference, the Secretary-General of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) announced the setting up of the African Women Committee on Peace and Development, endorsed by the ECA Council of Ministers in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 972], and a contribution of $100,000 by the OAU Peace Fund towards the Committee's activities, which was matched by Canada. The Committee would provide advisory services to OAU and ECA on issues of gender, security, good governance, peace and development in Africa.

Follow-up action

The Follow-up Meeting to the Fortieth Anniversary Conference (Addis Ababa, 1-3 December) [ECA/ACW/AWED.FM/98] decided to review, classify and merge the strategic actions proposed by the Conference and set up monitoring and evaluation mechanisms. It also agreed to establish a Gender Advisory Group to provide, among other things, expertise on gender issues, technical support, information and liaison services and specific advice on key issues or events involving African women.

The 16-member African Women Committee on Peace and Development, at its inaugural session (Addis Ababa, 10-11 November) [OAU/ECA/AF/WM/PD/8(1)], decided that capacity-building in negotiation and advocacy techniques in conflict prevention, management and resolution should be a high-priority area. The Committee should also work to ensure that women's rights were protected, particularly in war and conflict, and to influence the policies of OAU and ECA.

Social development

The first Meeting of the Working Group of the Follow-up Committee on the Implementation of the Dakar/Ngor Declaration on Population, Family and Sustainable Development (DND) [YUN 1992, p. 476] and the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 956] was held in Dakar, Senegal, from 6 to 7 May [FSSDD/APC.3/WG.1/98/5]. The Group considered the process and modalities for the mid-term review and appraisal of the ICPD Programme of Action and adopted the draft agenda for the third Meeting of the Follow-up Committee and new orientations for the Committee's programme of work.

The third Meeting of the Follow-up Committee on the Implementation of DND and the ICPD Programme of Action (Addis Ababa, 23-25 September) [FSSDD/ICPD/FC.3/98/4] made recommendations on population questions in African development in the twenty-first century and on health and reproduction rights; family, youth and adolescents; equality of the sexes, promotion of women and the participation of men; the role of NGOs and the private sector in implementing the Programme of Action; population policies and subregional development strategies/mechanisms.

Programme, administrative and organizational questions

Revision of medium-term plan

In 1998, ECA revised the medium-term plan, 1998-2001, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1996/4 [YUN 1996, p. 888]. Two additional subprogrammes were created—one on the advancement of women and the other on supporting subregional activities for development. The new subprogrammes would take effect in the 2000-2001 biennium.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council considered an ECA note [E/ECA/MFC.1/2] entitled "Reform of the regional commissions: relationships between ECA, United Nations agencies, regional and subregional organizations in Africa".

On 20 July [meeting 35], the Council, on the recommendation of ECA [E/1998/65/Add.2], adopted resolution 1998/6 [agenda item 10].

Revision of the medium-term plan, 1998-2001, of the Economic Commission for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the note by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa on the first revision to the medium-term plan, 1998-2001,

Recalling Commission resolution 809(XXXI) of 8 May 1996, in which the Commission endorsed the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001, in the context of the new directions for the Commission,

Recalling also Commission resolutions 810(XXXI) of 8 May 1996 and 828(XXXII) of 8 May 1997, in which the Commission called, respectively, for the strengthening of the multinational programming and operational centres and for their transformation into subregional development centres with an extended programme and policy orientation, as well as resolution 824(XXXI) of 8 May 1996 entitled "Follow-up to the Dakar and Beijing conferences: implementation of the global and regional platforms for action for the advancement of women", Endorses the revision to the medium-term plan, 1998-2001, involving the establishment of two new subprogrammes: "Promoting the advancement of women" and "Supporting subregional activities for development".

Reform

The ECA secretariat, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], prepared, in the context of the reform of the regional commissions, a note [E/ECA/MFC.1/2] on relationships between ECA, UN agencies and regional and subregional organizations in Africa. The report, prepared for the consideration of the first Meeting of the Ministerial Follow-up Committee of the Conference of Ministers responsible for economic and social development and planning (Addis Ababa, 27 April) [E/ECA/MFC.1/5], examined ECA's role in African development and its relationships with other agencies of the UN system in Africa and with other regional and subregional organizations. The report noted the dual position of ECA as a UN organ and as part of the architecture of regional institutions and the relations it had built up with those organizations. It examined the patterns of and potential for collaboration between ECA and the various organizations and presented recommendations for strengthening those ties.

Based on the secretariat report, the Ministerial Follow-up Committee made recommendations with regard to reaffirming and supporting existing coordination mechanisms at the regional level; adoption of principles for regional cooperation; strengthening coordination at the subregional level; the role of ECA in normative and operational functions; and on enhanced cooperation among African organizations.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 35], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECA [E/1998/65/Add.2], adopted resolution 1998/5 without vote [agenda item 10].

Relationships between the Economic Commission for Africa, United Nations agencies and regional and subregional organizations in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Africa, as adopted by the Council in resolution 671 A (XXV) of 29 April 1958 and amended by its resolutions 974 D I (XXXVI) of 5 July 1963, 1343 (XLV) of 18 July 1968 and 1978/68 of 4 August 1978,

Recalling also the various resolutions that have implications for the mandate and operations of the Commission, including, in particular, General Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, 33/202 of 29 January 1979, 44/211 of 22 December 1989 and 50/120 of 20 December 1995,

Recalling further Commission resolutions 718 (XXVI) of 12 May 1991 on the revitalization of the mandate and operational framework of the regional commission for Africa, 726 (XXVII) of 22 April 1992 on strengthening the Commission to face Africa's development challenges in the 1990s, 779 (XXIX) of 4 May 1994 on strengthening the operational capacity of the Commission and 809 (XXXI) of 8 May 1996 on new directions for the Commission, on the restructuring and revitalization of the United Nations in the economic, social and related fields, as well as Assembly resolution 46/235 of 13 April 1992, in the annex to which the Assembly stated that the regional commissions should be enabled fully to play their role under the authority of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and that those located in developing countries should be strengthened in the context of the overall objectives of the restructuring and the revitalization process,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolutions 45/177 of 19 December 1990 and 45/264 of 13 May 1991

Taking into account General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997 entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform", in which the Assembly invited the Economic and Social Council, in consultation with Member States and appropriate intergovernmental regional bodies, to conduct a general review of the regional commissions at its substantive session of 1998, bearing in mind the relevant provisions of Assembly resolution 50/227 of 24 May 1996 and the individual reviews each commission had already carried out, in order to consider the competencies of the regional commissions, taking into account the competencies of global bodies and other regional and subregional intergovernmental bodies,

Having examined the note by the secretariat of the Commission entitled "Reform of the regional commissions: relationships between the Economic Commission for Africa, United Nations agencies, regional and subregional organizations in Africa",

1. Welcomes the note by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Africa entitled "Reform of the regional commissions: relationships between the Economic Commission for Africa, United Nations agencies, regional and subregional organizations in Africa";

2. Expresses its appreciation for the observations and analyses contained in the note;

3. Decides to adopt the following recommendations:

Recommendation 1. Reaffirm and support existing coordination mechanisms at the regional level

An important first step in enhancing collaboration between the Economic Commission for Africa and the United Nations agencies is to reaffirm and support the team leadership role assigned to the regional commissions by the General Assembly in resolution 32/197. The agencies should use the mechanism of a regional administrative committee on coordination, first suggested in 1994 by the Secretary-General. The Economic and Social Council should consider providing a legislative directive to this effect. The regional administrative committee on coordination would be a useful mechanism for addressing a number of regional issues, including follow-up to the global conferences and programmes on post-conflict reconstruction developments in Africa. In this regard, the forthcoming meeting of the Conference of Ministers, to be held in 1999, should consider in-depth coordination and collaboration among United Nations agencies operating at the subregional and regional levels in Africa;

Recommendation 2. Adopt some principles for regional coordination

The United Nations agencies in Africa should adopt some principles for regional coordination. The agencies should endeavour to foster regional coordination on the basis of promoting greater exchange of information on planned and ongoing work, improve complementarities among programmes, draw on each other's competencies and bring the pool of resources—financial and human—at their disposal to bear on policy issues of common interest;

Recommendation 3. Strengthen coordination at the subregional level

Coordination or collaboration among United Nations agencies in Africa should also be enhanced at the subregional level. This should take the form of the development of joint ventures to support the specific activities of countries in a subregional framework. In this way, the complementarities and harmony sought at the regional level will be given greater impact and impetus. The subregional development centres of the Economic Commission for Africa should be an important vehicle for coordination at the subregional level;

Recommendation 4. The role of the Economic Commission for Africa in normative and operational functions

The Economic Commission for Africa, as a United Nations regional commission and as one of the regional institutions in the service of the development of Africa, has carried out valuable normative (analysis, advocacy, norm-setting) and operational activities that have been mutually complementary and supportive to the member States of the region. The Commission should continue to undertake both categories of activities, since it has been recognized that its technical assistance plays a catalytic role in translating its normative work into concrete support for the development efforts of member States;

Recommendation 5. Enhanced cooperation among African organizations

At the regional level, there is already implicit specialization and division of labour among the three major intergovernmental organizations in Africa, namely the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank. There remains, however, a need to promote a more clear-cut division of responsibilities and to rationalize and strengthen complementarities among the three organizations more strictly, according to their mandates and competencies, as a means of increasing their combined effectiveness, impact and efficiency in their collective mandate, which is to oversee the overall development of Africa at the regional level. This calls for these African organizations to strengthen their joint secretariat by implementing among themselves similar strategies to those outlined above for the United Nations system. In particular, they should:

(a) Strengthen coordination, including collaboration in programme development, planning of activities, monitoring and evaluation, with a view to building upon and exploiting complementarities;

(b) Improve networking and communication at all staff levels, not only at the level of chief executive;

(c) Work to establish a common ethos among their staff, based on a common perspective of Africa's political, social and economic development challenges and opportunities and a common zeal to move Africa forward;

(d) Streamline and coordinate their intergovernmental machineries: the governing bodies of all African organizations could be required to summarize, in a joint report, their main decisions for submission to the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity, which is the supreme organ of the African Economic Community.

Subregional Development Centres

In response to a 1997 ECA Conference of Ministers decision [YUN 1997, p. 979] to rationalize and strengthen ECA's Subregional Development Centres (SRDCs) (formerly the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MUL-POCs)), steps were taken to enhance the capacities of the Centres for programme delivery, including acceleration of decentralization of secretariat staff and activities to SRDCs. Based in Central, East, North and southern Africa, the Centres played a pivotal role in providing services more effectively to regional economic communities, thus improving ECA's capacity to support regional cooperation and integration efforts at the subregional level.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), at its fifty-fourth session (Bangkok, Thailand, 16-22 April) [E/1998/40], had as its theme "Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century: prospects for social development". The Commission reviewed the implications of recent economic and social developments; follow-up on restructuring the Commission's conference structure; and the role of ESCAP in the promotion of economic and social development in Asia and the Pacific. Other issues considered were: regional economic cooperation; environment and natural resources development; socio-economic measures to alleviate poverty in rural and urban areas; transport, communications and infrastructure development; tourism; statistics; least developed, landlocked and island developing countries; technical cooperation; and programme and organizational questions.

The Commission decided to hold its fifty-fifth session in Bangkok from 22 to 28 April 1999. The theme for that session would be "Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century: information technology, globalization, economic security and development".

In a message to the 1998 session, the Secretary-General noted that the session was taking place at an important juncture in the region's history because the region's most dynamic economies had been afflicted by a sudden and unforeseen financial crisis that affected not only the region but also the world. The turmoil was a sobering reminder of the challenges posed by globalization and ever-increasing interdependence. ESCAP, he stated, along with regional and subregional organizations, had an important role to play and he was committed to ensuring that the United Nations system remained a close partner of the countries of Asia and the Pacific in their work for stability and development. While it was an especially difficult time for the region, there were grounds for optimism: sound fundamental, abundant natural resources and a well-educated labour force.

In a policy statement, the ESCAP Executive Secretary identified some of the causes of the crisis and suggested that the establishment of an appropriate exchange rate regime and the need to overcome weaknesses in the domestic financial sector were two critical areas in which action was needed. Governments in the region should establish proper regulatory and supervisory frameworks where accounting and disclosure requirements should be clearly specified. Rules should be strengthened, strictly enforced and equipped with adequate authority and competent human resources. The Executive Secretary drew attention to proposals for setting up an Asian Fund; the use of regional currencies for intraregional trade; the establishment of an insurance scheme dealing with cross-border financial claims; and the adoption of common standards for overseeing financial sector institutions and sharing information relating to their operation. At the international level, a debt strategy including rollovers, rescheduling and external liquidity support for the revival of export growth required serious attention to deal with the immediate crisis. However, social safety nets should be in place to cushion the impact in the areas of poverty, employment, health care and education. There was a need for policies that would promote good governance and wide awareness of the key social issues. In addition, the Executive Secretary drew attention to the need for greater regional cooperation in industrial and technological development regarding the utilization of industrial complementarities, investment-related technology transfer, human resource development and the speedy integration of the least developed countries (LDCs). He also expressed the desire to make ESCAP a more effective and responsive vehicle for the promotion of regional cooperation in the new millennium.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic and social survey of Asia and the Pacific [E/1999/17], the economic crisis that began in Asia in 1997 turned out to be deeper and more long-lasting than had been foreseen and its impact was widespread, affecting countries within the region and beyond. The depth of the crisis was reflected by the fact that ESCAP developing economies as a group recorded a growth rate of close to zero per cent in 1998 as against 7 per cent in 1996 and almost 6 per cent in 1997. The dismal performance cut across practically all the subregions, with South Asia being the only bright exception. However, there were some positive developments within the region since the onset of the crisis. Those included a downward trend in interest rates; recovery and stabilization in exchange rates and stock markets; and an increase in foreign exchange reserves. Nevertheless, concerns regarding the sustainability of those improvements were raised in the light of only limited progress in financial sector restructuring, the continued credit crunch, the still growing burden of non-performing loans and no major recovery of exports. The summary identified a number of policy actions at the national, regional and international levels to overcome the problems created by the crisis. The prevailing credit crunch had to be overcome, the financial sector strengthened and the corporate sector restructured. Consideration should be given to reforming the international financial architecture, intensifying regional cooperation and the establishment of an Asian Fund. Governments had to play a critical role in ensuring social protection by preserving and augmenting budgetary allocations for the social sector. Among other measures suggested were: the establishment of a social fund; proper targeting of publicly provided goods and services; strengthening of institutional capacity and the information base; involvement of stakeholders in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of programmes; unemployment insurance schemes; and strengthening of the rural and urban informal sectors.

Subregional economic performance

For South-East Asia, 1998 was one of the worst years on record with large contractions in the gross domestic product (GDP) in Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand, while GDP growth remained virtually flat in the Philippines and Singapore. Viet Nam, though decelerating, was the only bright spot of economic expansion in the region. Except for Indonesia, inflation rates remained within single digits and domestic interest rates began to ease significantly. However, the current account of all countries registered major improvements, largely due to weak domestic demand rather than export expansion.

In East and North-East Asia, China, Hong Kong and the Republic of Korea experienced large contractions in output. China's growth rate reduced slightly. Exports remained weak, imports fell sharply and the inflationary pressure on those economies receded. An extreme case was China, where a massive build-up of inventories generated deflationary pressure, and in 1998 prices fell slightly.

The relative insulation of the financial markets in the economies of South and South-West Asia moderated the contagion effect of the regional economic crisis on domestic economies. In Iran, GDP growth rates contracted owing to the slump in oil prices, while in other countries of the region they remained moderately high. Inflation rates were either lower or increased very slightly in 1998, compared with 1997.

Among LDCs, growth was much less robust in South-East Asia than in South Asia, in part because foreign direct investment to those countries slowed as investors from Malaysia, Singapore and Thailand either delayed or cancelled proposed projects. Inflationary pressure increased owing to depreciation of their currencies.

Except for Papua New Guinea and Solomon Islands, which had substantial trading links with developing Asian countries, and, to a lesser extent, Fiji, the crisis did not have a direct impact on the Pacific island economies. However, many of them were affected indirectly because of the impact of the crisis on Japan and New Zealand, which together absorbed a sizeable portion of Pacific island country exports.

Central Asian countries recorded positive growth for the first time in 1998. Only the Russian Federation's economy experienced a serious economic downturn in 1998, due to a combination of falling output, sharply lower export earnings and government revenues, accelerating inflation and the debt freeze.

Overall growth performance in the developed countries in the region was mixed. Of the three developed countries—Australia, Japan and New Zealand—Australia remained largely unaffected by the adverse impact of the Asian crisis. Japan's recessionary impulses, which predated the crisis, were reinforced and New Zealand experienced a substantial deceleration. Inflation remained low in all three countries, between 0.3 and 1.5 per cent, despite the downward pressure on exchange rates during 1998. Exports of all three countries received a significant negative shock from the sharp drop in demand from Asian economies in crisis.

Activities in 1998

ESCAP activities in 1998 were carried out under thematic sub-programmes approved by the Commission in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 720]: regional economic cooperation; environment and sustainable development; poverty alleviation through economic and social development; transport and communications; statistics; and least developed, landlocked and island developing countries.

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

ESCAP considered a secretariat note that reviewed the economic and social developments in the region [E/ESCAP/1081]; another on the financial crisis in the region and its policy implications [E/ESCAP/1085]; and a third on trade and investment [E/ESCAP/1086].

The Commission emphasized the need for policy options at the national, regional and international levels, not only to mitigate the effects of the current crisis but also to prevent its future recurrence. The establishment, at the national level, of an appropriate exchange rate regime and overcoming the weakness of the domestic financial sector to reduce volatility of large movements of short-term capital were of paramount importance. At the regional level, transmission of accurate, transparent and timely information for financial markets, cooperative financing arrangements to supplement International Monetary Fund (IMF) resources, surveillance mechanisms, development of an early warning system, clearing mechanisms, use of regional currencies for trade transactions and regional bond markets were recommended. At the international level, a framework of surveillance and supervision was needed.

The Commission suggested that the secretariat, in cooperation with other international agencies, should form a multidisciplinary team to study the origin and effects of the crisis and recommend ways for economies to avail themselves of international capital flows while minimizing the risks. In that context, the secretariat organized a high-level seminar on managing capital flows (Bangkok, 15-16 June), in cooperation with IMF, the World Bank Group and the Asian Development Bank.

In terms of regional cooperation, the Commission said that the secretariat should harness its multidisciplinary expertise and, in collaboration with international financial institutions, recommend ways for member countries to continue to avail themselves of international capital flows while minimizing financial and exchange risks.

With regard to trade promotion, the Commission stressed the development of the region's capacity to adopt electronic commerce to improve competitiveness. It asked the secretariat to provide technical assistance for building awareness of and education on the different facets of electronic commerce, and endorsed the holding of a high-level meeting of trade promotion experts on a regional approach to a trade promotion policy.

In terms of trade and investment, the Commission noted that focusing on trade and investment information networks should decrease the impediments to the desired levels of trade investment and promotion. It suggested that the Regional Trade Information Network and the Investment Network Services of Asia and the Pacific should focus their services on the special needs of ESCAP members, especially LDCs, with regard to technical assistance.

The Commission urged the secretariat to continue providing technical assistance to developing countries to support their trade liberalization efforts, and to enhance their understanding of the implications of new trade issues, as well as their capacity for effective participation in the World Trade Organization (WTO) and for adequately preparing for further negotiations. It emphasized the importance of developing a positive trade agenda and recognized the need to assist developing countries in identifying sectors of current and potential common interest to them. The Commission endorsed the proposal to convene a meeting of senior officials at the regional level, which would also address the special needs of LDCs. It urged the secretariat to continue identifying areas of collaboration for technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) activities, especially those of a tripartite nature.

The Commission expressed concern over the adverse implications of the financial crisis in social development, especially the rise in unemployment and inflation. It stated that it was essential to consider how to improve national development strategies, to achieve not only long-term sustainable growth of the economy but also continued social development, alleviation of poverty, and enhancement of the welfare society through health, education and social security measures.

The Commission highlighted the need for environmental conservation, the prevention of natural resources degradation, the promotion of strategies for water resources management and action to deal with natural disasters such as floods, cyclones, drought, earthquakes, forest fires and the effects of El Niño. The secretariat should complement the work of the Commission on Sustainable Development and give particular attention to the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly's nineteenth special session [YUN 1997 p. 790].

Economic and social development should be spread equitably throughout the ESCAP region.

The Pacific island, least developed and land-locked countries required greater international cooperation and assistance to make their economies more efficient and competitive. It was also necessary to arrest the decline in official development assistance (ODA), the principal form of external capital inflow for those countries.

The Commission also considered a secretariat note on current policy issues on rural poverty alleviation [E/ESCAP/1095], which reported that, despite continuing efforts at poverty alleviation and sustainable development, the majority of the world's poor were still found in the Asia and Pacific region, concentrated mostly in South Asia. Two policy needs were emerging: increased global commitment and partnership at the international level and good governance at the national level. Countries needed, therefore, to pursue high-quality economic growth, which was broad-based, labour-intensive and sustainable, while at the international level developing countries should be supported in evolving such a growth process.

The Commission recommended that direct programmes and policies targeted at the rural poor should be continued and strengthened. The secretariat should continue to act as a prime mover in regional cooperation and as a source of assistance and guidance in rural poverty alleviation, particularly in the development of multidisciplinary strategies for national and regional action programmes; undertake studies on the impact of the recent financial crisis on absolute poverty and social development; review regularly national experience in rural poverty alleviation and facilitate exchange of experience among ESCAP member countries; and expand practical policy guidelines for sustainable economic growth, human resources development, public participation, institutional reform and regional and international cooperation. It also recommended that technical cooperation among the countries of the region should be expanded and urged that more resources be made available to the secretariat to carry out important activities in rural poverty alleviation in the developing countries of the region.

The Committee on Socio-economic Measures to Alleviate Poverty in Rural and Urban Areas held its first session in Bangkok from 15 to 17 September [E/ESCAP/1129]. It reviewed various aspects of the poverty situation in the region and some critical issues, including the economic, social and demographic impacts of economic liberalization on rural poverty. The Committee adopted recommendations on the impact of macroeconomic policies, agricultural and rural development policies and social policies on poverty alleviation.

It also adopted recommendations regarding integrated approaches to poverty alleviation.

Least developed, landlocked and island developing countries

Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries

The Commission considered the report of the Special Body on Pacific Island Developing Countries on its fifth session (Bangkok, 14-15 April) [E/ESCAP/1104], and heard an oral report on secretariat activities relevant to least developed and landlocked developing countries.

The Commission endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Body, specifically those on youth employment and the possibilities for and constraints on financial sector liberalization. It noted that youth were an important human resource, and investment in developing their skills for small business and self-employment should be encouraged. With regard to financial sector liberalization, the Commission noted that careful deregulation and reform were required and recommended that non-bank and informal financial institutions be developed as feasible mechanisms for domestic resource mobilization. The Commission urged the secretariat to continue to strengthen the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre by providing it with regular budget resources, and called for the continuation of the sessions of the Special Body to encourage the participation of Pacific island countries in ESCAP work. The Commission recognized the role that economic cooperation among developing countries (ECDC) and TCDC played in the development efforts of least developed, landlocked and Pacific island countries and urged the continuation of activities under that programme. In that regard, it noted the offers of technical assistance of Indonesia, Japan and Thailand.

The Commission noted the limited impact of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s, endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 45/206 [YUN 1990, p. 373], and urged the international community to implement the measures called for in the Programme, especially those on aid volume and modalities and on commercial policies. It asked the secretariat to ensure that its programmes responded to the needs of the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries and to implement more activities at the country level to make a visible impact on their economic situation. The secretariat should continue monitoring implementation of the Programme of Action in Asia and the Pacific, increase its allocation of budgetary and staff resources to activities for the benefit of those countries, and implement programmes in economic policy framework, external trade and investment, external finance and management of external debt to assist LDCs to overcome supply-side constraints. The Commission decided that the Special Body on Least Developed and Landlocked Developing Countries, during its fourth session in 1999, should consider the utilization of development assistance in LDCs and multi-agency integrated initiatives led by WTO for the development of exports from those countries, in preparation for its review of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries in the 1990s at its fifth session in 2001, prior to the global conference on LDCs in that year.

Landlocked States in Central Asia

In a September note [A/53/331], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on the transit environment in the landlocked States of Central Asia and their transit neighbours, in response to Assembly resolution 51/168 [YUN 1996, p. 894]. The report discussed the economic recovery and the emerging trade and transit patterns in Central Asia, including alternative transit transport routes and pipelines. New pipeline project proposals and rail and road inland water transport through the Caspian Sea, China, Iran, the Persian Gulf, the Russian Federation and Turkey were presented. To improve the efficiency of transport operations, it examined measures designed to overcome physical infrastructure bottlenecks and non-physical barriers; legal and administrative measures; and institutional support arrangements and human resource development.

On 9 April [A/53/96], Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration on the further intensification of regional integration and the Tashkent Declaration of 26 March on the United Nations special programme for the economies of Central Asia.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/606/Add.1], adopted resolution 53/171 without vote [agenda item 91 (a)].

Transit environment in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 48/169 and 48/170 of 21 December 1993, 49/102 of 19 December 1994 and 51/168 of 16 December 1996,

Recalling also the Global Framework for Transit Transport Cooperation between Landlocked and Transit Developing Countries and the Donor Community and other relevant international legal instruments,

Recognizing that the overall socio-economic development efforts of the landlocked States in Central Asia, seeking to enter world markets through the establishment of a multicountry transit system, are impeded by a lack of territorial access to the sea as well as by remoteness and isolation from world markets and lack of adequate infrastructure in the transport sector in their transit developing neighbours due to their economic problems,

Reaffirming that transit countries, in the exercise of their full sovereignty over their territory, have the right to take all measures necessary to ensure that the rights and facilities provided for landlocked countries in no way infringe upon their legitimate interests,

Supporting the current efforts being undertaken by the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, through relevant multilateral, bilateral and regional arrangements, to address issues regarding the development of a viable transit infrastructure in the region,

Taking note of the report prepared by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the transit environment in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit neighbours, and considering that the problems of transit transport facing the Central Asian region need to be seen against the backdrop of economic changes and accompanying challenges, including especially the impact of those changes on the international and intraregional trade of the countries concerned,

Recognizing that, to be effective, a transit transport strategy for the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours should incorporate actions that address both the problems inherent in the use of existing transit routes and those associated with the early development and smooth functioning of new alternative routes, and welcoming, in this context, further cooperation of landlocked States with all interested countries,

Noting that there have been a number of important developments at the subregional and regional levels, including the signing of a transit transport framework agreement among States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization at Almaty, Kazakhstan, on 9 May 1998, the signing on 26 March 1998 by the heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific of the Tashkent Declaration on the United Nations special programme for the economies of Central Asia, the implementation of the expanded Transport Corridor-Europe-Caucasus-Asia programme and the signing of the Baku Declaration on 8 September 1998,

Emphasizing once again the importance of strengthening international support measures to address further the problems of the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours,

1. Notes with appreciation the contribution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to improving the efficiency of the transit transport system in the landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours;

2. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Governments concerned, in cooperation with the United Nations Development Programme, the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the Economic Commission for Europe and relevant regional and international organizations and in accordance with approved programme priorities and within existing financial resources, to continue elaborating a programme for improving the efficiency of the current transit environment in the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours;

3. Also invites the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close cooperation with the regional economic commissions, within their respective mandates and current resources, as well as with other relevant international organizations, to provide technical assistance and advisory services to the newly independent landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, taking into account the relevant transit transport agreements;

4. Invites donor countries and multilateral financial and development institutions, within their mandates, to continue to provide the newly independent and developing landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours with appropriate financial and technical assistance for the improvement of the transit environment, including construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport, storage and other transit-related facilities and improved communications;

5. Calls upon the United Nations system to continue studying, within the scope of the implementation of the present resolution, possible ways of promoting more cooperative arrangements between landlocked States in Central Asia and their transit developing neighbours, and to encourage a more active supportive role on the part of the donor community;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in close cooperation with the regional commissions, to prepare a report on the implementation of the present resolution, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Economic and technical cooperation

In 1998, ESCAP received $16.4 million in contributions for technical cooperation activities—$5.7 million from within the UN system, $10.3 million from bilateral donors and developing and associate members, and $0.4 million from other organizations. The total was a decrease of some $5.8 million from the previous year. Japan remained the largest bilateral donor, followed by the Netherlands. Other contributors from developed nations included Australia, Finland, France, Germany, New Zealand and Sweden. Twenty-two developing members and associate members contributed to ESCAP's technical cooperation programme, the largest being the Republic of Korea, followed by China. In addition to cash contributions, donors and developing member countries provided 317 work-months of services by experts. During the year, 86 technical assistance projects were initiated, with a value of $6.7 million.

Technical cooperation among developing countries

The Commission considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1110 & Corr.1] on ESCAP's technical cooperation activities, including TCDC and ECDC, and the constraints to those activities.

The secretariat noted that inadequate commitment arising from the lack of a TCDC policy framework at the national level, resulting in inadequate resource allocation, and weak TCDC national focal points were the major constraints impeding fuller implementation of operational TCDC activities by least developed, landlocked and island developing countries and the disadvantaged economies in transition. The secretariat had done its best to mobilize resources to strengthen TCDC national focal points. It urged beneficiary countries to keep it informed of their needs to facilitate the matching of needs with capacities available from other developing countries.

In 1998, the secretariat implemented some 100 promotional TCDC/ECDC-related activities within the framework of its revised subprogrammes (see below, under "Programme and organizational questions"). In addition, the secretariat promoted and facilitated the participation of approximately 65 officials in 23 operational TCDC activities, which included training, seminars, study visits and workshops. Participation in those activities contributed to the enhancement of the technical capabilities of officials, particularly from the least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, as well as the economies in transition. The ECDC/TCDC activities continued to concentrate on a broad spectrum of areas, including biogas technology, solar energy application, the biotech industry, environmental protection and technology, renewable energy, customer computer applications, transport environment, urban management, desert control science and technology, sustainable development, food processing, women's entrepreneurship development, population information technology, statistics, water resources management, trade promotion and foreign investment.

During the year, the secretariat continued with the sensitization of the TCDC focal points of selected least developed, landlocked and island developing countries, as well as economies in transition. It conducted a workshop on TCDC national focal points for selected LDCs and disadvantaged economies in transition (Beijing, China, 20-23 July), in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation of China and with financing by Japan.

The Commission stated that countries should be assisted in building up the capacities and capabilities of TCDC national focal points. It urged further efforts to augment the support of the UNDP Special Unit on TCDC to strengthen ESCAP's role in promoting TCDC. To promote economic growth, transfer of technology and accelerated development, viable TCDC projects should be identified to mobilize donor support. To use the scarce resources available for TCDC activities efficiently, joint efforts among ESCAP members and associate members should be promoted. ESCAP efforts to promote TCDC should be further strengthened with increased extrabudgetary resources from donors.

Transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development

The Commission had before it the Executive Secretary's report on progress in the implementation of resolutions and major decisions of the Commission in transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development [E/ESCAP/1101], and the report of the third session of the Committee on Transport and Communications (Bangkok, 1-4 December 1997) [E/ESCAP/1100]. The Committee welcomed its new terms of reference and its change of name to Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development, as decided by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1997/4 [YUN 1997, p. 993], and agreed that it would discuss in even years, beginning in 1998, water transport and tourism and in odd years, commencing in 1999, land transport and other infrastructure.

The Commission endorsed the Committee's report and requested the secretariat to resume its preparations of the review of developments in transport, communications and tourism.

The first session of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development was held from 18 to 20 November 1998 in Bangkok [E/ESCAP/1135]. The Committee focused on major issues in water transport and tourism. It also reviewed progress in the implementation of the regional action programme for phase I (1997-2001) of the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1995, p. 1012], and the impact of the Asian economic crisis on the region's maritime transport sector.

Transport, communications and infrastructure

In the area of transport, the Commission supported a secretariat initiative to develop harmonized formats for the presentation of maritime data on the Internet. It requested the secretariat to intensify its activities in the inland water transport sector and to focus on the full integration of inland water transport within the overall transport system, and to facilitate its use for the carriage of international traffic on the major river systems of the region.

The Commission urged the secretariat to continue undertaking work in respect of the transport of dangerous goods, including the publication of guidelines to assist member countries in upgrading and harmonizing relevant legislation and regulations; to continue supporting the Association of South-East Asian Nations in formulating a framework agreement on multimodal transport; and to share experience in that ground-breaking work with other subregional groupings. In urban transport, the Commission endorsed ESCAP activities to address the needs of transport-disadvantaged people, especially those with disabilities, and urged the secretariat to focus especially on that area. The Commission expressed support for the conceptual basis of the Asia Infrastructure Development Alliance (AIDA), a tripartite alliance between governments, the private sector and multilateral and intergovernmental agencies, and requested the secretariat to continue to investigate ways of providing the required services with the support of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) Build-Operate-Transfer (BOT) Expert Group. It welcomed the establishment of the Maritime Information Network (MARINET) and urged the secretariat to promote the use of the standard web-site software developed for ports and shipping companies.

The first meeting of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development [E/ESCAP/1135] requested the secretariat to estimate the medium- and long-term requirements for container shipping and port development; establish a consultative mechanism to bring shipowners, ports and shippers together to promote mutual understanding; undertake a study and establish a regional forum to better align projected employment demands for seafarers and training capacity; strengthen the secretariat's activities in freight forwarding and multimodal transport; and undertake a comparative analysis of port charges and key indicators of performance. The Committee also endorsed the establishment of MARINET, and adopted a draft resolution on sustainable development of inland water transport in Asia and the Pacific, for endorsement by the Commission at its fifty-fifth (1999) session.

Concerning infrastructure development, the Commission reiterated the significance of implementing the New Delhi Action Plan on Infrastructure Development in Asia and the Pacific and, in view of the financial crisis, it requested that priority be given to activities that could play a significant role in economic recovery. It underscored the importance of implementing activities under the programme in countries with complementary national activities, and urged countries to nominate national focal points and to indicate priority projects from within the regional action programme of the Plan. It urged the secretariat to set in place a mechanism for monitoring the progress of the Plan's implementation.

The Commission recognized the important role the private sector could play in infrastructure development and reiterated its support for AIDA. It requested the secretariat to study the implications of the Asian financial crisis for private sector investment in infrastructure and to suggest measures to encourage renewed investment.

The Commission reiterated its support for the Asian land transport infrastructure development (ALTID) project as a priority within phase I (1997-2001) of the New Delhi Action Plan and endorsed the refined strategy and revised subregional groupings for the implementation of the project. It also endorsed the plan of action for phase III (1998-1999) of the ALTID project, and decided that an impact assessment of the project should be undertaken at the end of phase I of the New Delhi Action Plan. The Commission requested the secretariat to also study the possibility of reviewing the practice of intergovernmental railway group meetings and introducing cooperative arrangements among railway centres in ESCAP member countries. Noting the progress in implementation of its resolution 48/11 [YUN 1992, p. 485] on road and rail transport modes in relation to facilitation measures in the landlocked countries, the Commission recommended that the secretariat give priority to organizing national workshops, advisory missions and training.

The first meeting of the Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development [E/ESCAP/1135] endorsed the convening of a ministerial conference on infrastructure in 2001, in lieu of the fourth session of the Committee, to review the New Delhi Action Plan.

The Committee expressed support for the conceptual basis of AIDA. Recognizing the difficulty in obtaining private sector funding for putting the Alliance into operation, the Committee asked the secretariat to investigate ways of providing services with the support of the ECE BOT Expert Group.

The Committee, in view of the need to address the critical social issues of AIDS in relation to transport and tourism, urged the secretariat to collaborate with the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS in formulating and implementing responsive programmes to the HIV/AIDS situation in the region. In response, the secretariat formulated a project proposal on HIV/AIDS: trucking and the transport industry, for implementation in 1999.

Tourism

The Commission reiterated that tourism should be given high priority in the ESCAP programme and recommended that regular Professional staff resources for tourism activities should be expanded. It endorsed the decisions and recommendations of the Meeting for the Establishment of a Network for Tourism Training Institutes and Organizations in the Asian and Pacific Region (Tehran, Iran, 22-25 September 1997). It supported the establishment of the Network of Asia-Pacific Education and Training Institutes in Tourism (APETIT), and urged donor countries, agencies and the private sector to provide financial support to its activities. The Commission requested the secretariat to pay particular attention to the specific needs of countries in early stages of tourism development, to place special emphasis on the facilitation of travel and the promotion of ecotourism, and to strengthen activities to promote tourism in the Greater Mekong subregion, particularly through improved air transport.

The ESCAP/World Tourism Organization Seminar on Facilitation of Travel in the Asian Region was held in Phuket, Thailand, in July, and the ESCAP Seminar on Developing Ecotourism in the Asian Region was held in Bangkok in November.

The Committee on Transport, Communications, Tourism and Infrastructure Development [E/ESCAP/1135] endorsed a plan of action (1999-2005) for sustainable tourism development in the Asia and Pacific region, and asked the secretariat to coordinate with related organizations to implement the plan fully. The Committee urged donor countries and agencies to support the plan's implementation financially. The secretariat should also support APETIT and strengthen activities to promote tourism in the Greater Mekong subregion, as well as in the Bangladesh-India-Myanmar-Sri Lanka-Thailand Economic Cooperation member countries.

Industrial and technological development

The Meeting of Ministers of Industry and Technology (Bangkok, 19-24 February) [E/ESCAP/1088] adopted the Bangkok Declaration on Strengthening Regional Cooperation for Industrial and Technological Development in the Asian and Pacific Region and the Regional Action Plan for Industrial and Technological Development, which identified priority areas for regional cooperation and national-level action, including industrial and technological restructuring and development to promote complementarities and achieve international competitiveness; promotion of investment-related technology transfer; privatization and private sector development; skills development; and integration of LDCs, Pacific island countries and economies in transition in a globalized world economy.

On 22 April, the Commission adopted a resolution [E/1998/40 (res. 54/3)] endorsing the Bangkok Declaration and the Regional Action Plan. It urged UN bodies and agencies, multilateral financial institutions, donor countries and agencies to contribute technical and financial resources to help implement the recommendations of the Meeting, including the Declaration and the Regional Action Plan. The Commission called upon the Subcommittee on Industry and Technology of the Regional Inter-agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific to play an effective role in implementing the Action Plan as coordinators of those areas within their competence.

The Commission asked the Executive Secretary to mobilize human, financial and technical resources for implementing the Declaration and the Regional Action Plan, and to undertake a comprehensive study of the implications of the Asian crisis on the industrial and technological development of the region and organize a meeting to examine those findings. The Executive Secretary should facilitate and monitor the implementation of the Declaration and the Action Plan and include a mid-term review and assessment of progress in that regard in the agenda of the 2000 session of the Committee on Regional Economic Cooperation. A report should be presented to the Commission at its fifty-seventh (2001) session.

The Commission urged the secretariat to involve the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology in the implementation of the Regional Action Plan and to seek from members and associate members specific projects for implementation.

The Commission endorsed the findings and policy recommendations contained in a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1087] on financing of industrial development. It recommended implementation of policies to maintain macroeconomic stability and ensure a stable and efficient financial system for the efficient mobilization and allocation of financial resources.

Science and technology

The Governing Board of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology (APCTT) held its thirteenth session in Manila, Philippines, from 26 to 27 November [E/ESCAP/1124].

In 1998, APCTT focused its activities on the transfer and dissemination of environmentally sound technologies to small and medium-sized enterprises and on strengthening the technical, financial, legal and commercial expertise needed for effective technology management and innovation. Thirty-eight technology transfer-related events were organized in 14 countries in cooperation with 54 partner institutions. APCTT, in its drive towards women's empowerment, continued to promote the entrepreneurial efforts of women's groups at the grass-roots level and individual entrepreneurs at the micro, small and medium scale of production. Efforts were made to strengthen the Centre's institutional framework, financial base and personnel infrastructure.

The Commission urged the Centre to strengthen small and medium-sized enterprises further in the utilization of environmentally sound technologies and environment management systems, and to enhance its activities for promoting technology management, with special emphasis on strategic and associated issues. It stressed that participating countries should consider seconding Professional staff to the Centre. It supported the establishment of an endowment fund and urged the working group set up to examine the issue to produce viable recommendations to make the fund a reality.

Environment and sustainable development

The Commission endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the fourth session of the Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development (Bangkok, 8-10 October 1997) [E/ESCAP/1092], which reviewed the refinement and promotion of methodologies for the integration of environment and development; environmental aspects of coal-based energy and its more efficient use; and environmental management of mineral resources development in the Asia and Pacific region. The Committee expressed concern about the high costs of clean coal technologies and suggested establishing pilot projects where experiences could be shared. It requested the secretariat to facilitate the flow of funds, technical assistance and exchange of information from developed to developing countries; assist members in formulating effective environmental management policies in mineral resources development, including environmental impact assessment; and act as an information centre for mineral resources assessment and development.

The Commission recommended that efforts and studies should be undertaken to strengthen regional cooperation in the promotion of the use of economic instruments to encourage the private sector to adopt and develop environmentally sound technology. It held the view that wide adoption of clean technology and free flow of related information should be encouraged through regional cooperation and that a consultative mechanism be set up for coordinating the work of regional and international bodies. The Commission suggested that private and public partnerships for investment in cleaner technology should be enhanced and the private sector encouraged to develop niches in environmental technologies and products to meet market demand.

The Commission encouraged the continued use of environmental impact assessment for enhanced management of the environment, and recommended that the capacity of countries in the region be further strengthened to prepare, review and approve those assessments. The Commission emphasized the need to strengthen its assistance in alleviating environmental degradation related to mining activities and requested the secretariat to continue technical assistance in formulating environmental management policies, legislation and regulatory mechanisms to strengthen institutional capability and coordinating mechanisms at the national level, and to focus on the use of economic instruments and environment impact assessment methodologies to further strengthen environmental management practices related to mining and mineral resource development. The secretariat should act as a major repository and information centre for mineral resource assessment and development in the region. The Commission noted the secretariat's activities in developing the framework for the review of policy and mineral resource potential in the offshore, coastal and inland areas in North-East Asia and expressed interest in the follow-up project on geographic information systems application in mineral resource assessment in the subregion.

The Commission also considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1093], which described progress in the implementation of its resolution 52/8 [YUN 1996, p.907] on the third Ministerial Conference on Environment and Development in Asia and the Pacific, and reviewed the outcome of the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly [YUN 1997, p. 790] in relation to the regional implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 672].

The Commission identified the financing and transfer of technologies as a major issue in the implementation of Agenda 21 and the Regional Action Programme for Environmentally Sound and Sustainable Development, 1996-2000 [YUN 1996, p. 908]. Concerning implementation of the Regional Action Programme, it recommended further intensification of inter-agency and inter-ministerial cooperation at the national level for the mobilization of resources to address sustainable development goals. The Commission also recommended the development of data banks on new projects and greater inter-agency cooperation to avoid duplication. The Commission reviewed the projects proposed for the implementation of the Regional Action Programme, assigning high priority to those dealing with clean technology, capacity-building, monitoring and assessment of the environment and the use of economic instruments. It directed the secretariat to continue taking the lead role in assisting members and associate members in implementing Agenda 21.

Natural resources development

Energy and mineral resources

The Commission considered a secretariat note on energy and fresh water [E/ESCAP/1094]. The document examined sustainable energy systems and efficient energy use, including the fundamental objectives of achieving a sustainable energy future for all; trends and issues in the development of energy use in Asia; the potential for enhancing sustainable energy systems; options for the promotion of sustainable energy; and the scope for regional cooperation.

The Commission noted recent achievements and trends in energy sector development and emphasized that access to adequate, secure and affordable energy remained a prerequisite for sustainable development. It called on the secretariat, in collaboration with the Asian Development Bank and other financial institutions, to undertake feasibility studies of possible hydropower project sites in interested countries of the region. The Commission endorsed the objective of achieving a sustainable energy future for all, as set out in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, outlined by the General Assembly in resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792]. It recommended that Governments should establish, review periodically and develop national action plans for sustainable energy development and management; and members and associate members should continue to share information and experience in promoting energy development and use. It noted the secretariat proposal for a regional forum at the expert level for the preparation of inputs to the global consultation process on sustainable energy development, leading to the ninth session of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I).

The secretariat organized the Regional Workshop on Energy and Environmental Planning and the Impact of the Financial Crisis on the Energy Sector (Bangkok, December).

Also before the Commission was the report of the Coordinating Committee for Coastal and Offshore Geoscience Programmes in East and South-East Asia [E/ESCAP/1112].

Water resources

The Commission considered strategic approaches to the sustainable use of freshwater resources contained in the secretariat note on energy and fresh water [E/ESCAP/1094].

Those approaches related to issues in freshwater resources management; policy integration; and management issues. The document also gave an overview of experience in a strategic approach to water resources development and management.

The Commission emphasized the importance of developing a strategic approach to freshwater management, in view of the high rates of population increase and economic growth in the past decades and the complexity of economic liberalization in the ESCAP region. It noted with concern the increasing severity of issues faced by the countries in freshwater resource management, particularly water supply and sanitation, water pollution control, flood control and management, the lack of financial resources and limitations in technical capacity in integrated water resources development and management. It said that significant effort would be required for developing countries to achieve Agenda 21 goals, which would depend on commitment, availability of resources and international assistance.

The first session of the Committee on Environment and Natural Resources Development (Bangkok, 21-23 October) [E/ESCAP/1126] reviewed the integrated development and management of water resources and economical use of water. The Committee recognized that water availability could become a major limiting factor in the region's socio-economic development. It identified water conservation management options, the creation of an organizational framework for improving water efficiency, public information and education, and international cooperation as the main policy issues for improving the economical use of water. It emphasized the need to adopt an integrated and holistic approach to the formulation and implementation of national water management policies, and recommended that policy options should be applied in a consistent manner, institutional and legal frameworks should be streamlined and appropriate mechanisms established.

The Committee urged increased levels of international cooperation, in technical support and fund allocation, towards meeting the requirements for providing safe drinking water and ensuring water security; assisting in water conservation and pollution control; and tackling water-related natural disasters, including flooding, waterlogging and drought.

Mekong River basin development

In 1998, important progress was made in the implementation of the 1995 Mekong Agreement, establishing the Mekong River Commission (MRC) [YUN 1995, p. 1017], particularly the development of the Strategic Plan elaborating its vision, mission statements and goals. Major developments included the implementation of the MRC Water Utilization Programme; preparation for the Basin Development Plan; formulation of environmental policy and environmental impact assessment methodology; preparation of the Agriculture and Irrigation Programme; and formulation of the Gender Strategy and the Hydro-power Development Strategy. There were 37 ongoing projects, including 12 partially funded or operational, and 900 officials from the riparian countries participated in training and capacity-building activities under those projects. MRC and other major river basin organizations continued cooperation in 1998, including the Murray-Darling Basin Commission and related agencies working in the Niger and the Nile River basins. In August, MRC headquarters relocated to Phnom Penh, Cambodia, from Bangkok.

The Commission had before it a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1113] transmitting the MRC report. The Commission noted with concern the decreasing trend in assistance from donors and urged UNDP and other international agencies and donor countries to provide increasing support to MRC.

Agriculture and development

The Commission considered the report on the Regional Coordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific [E/ESCAP/1098]. Major developments in 1997 were summarized, as well as issues requiring action by the Commission. Implementation of programmes in 1997 and planned activities for 1998 were discussed, as well as the financial status of the Centre.

The Commission recommended that the Centre continue strengthening collaborative research and development projects on the sustainable development of upland agriculture and the effect of trade liberalization on agriculture and poverty alleviation, and undertake activities in human resources development and information services. It urged the Centre to focus further on the enhancement of regional agriculture and rural communities in the light of the current economic situation and climatic conditions triggered by El Niño. The Commission called for further strengthening of programme resources and their timely allocation, and the provision of the services of experts. It noted the Centre's action to revise its strategic plan and to implement an impact evaluation.

The Commission considered the report on the Regional Network for Agricultural Machinery (RNAM) for the period from April 1997 to April 1998 [E/ESCAP/1090]. The Commission noted RNAM activities in human resource development, enhancement of employment opportunities for rural women, promotion and development of agro-related metalworking industries in LDCs and the exchange of useful agro-machines and technology among them. It noted with concern the financial difficulties of the Network and recommended that the ESCAP secretariat consult with UNDP, UNIDO and bilateral donors for financial support. It urged countries to make their contributions regularly and on time and requested those in a position to do so to provide experts on a non-reimbursable loan basis.

The Governing Body of RNAM held its eighteenth session from 3 to 4 December in Los Banos, Philippines. It recommended activities for the years 1999-2000, and requested the Commission to pronounce on the issues of hosting the RNAM secretariat in the Philippines and the continuation of the Regional Office within ESCAP until more permanent arrangements were made.

Social development

At its 1998 session, ESCAP considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1082] entitled: "Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century: prospects for social development", which presented an overview of the prospects for social development into the twenty-first century and the issues facing the region, including poverty alleviation, social protection, education and health for all, and people's participation. It examined issues and prospects for specific population groups, and discussed policies to enhance social development prospects in the region and ESCAP's supporting role in that regard.

The report concluded that social development in the region had been extremely uneven, despite the commitment of Governments to the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region (regional Social Development Agenda) and the considerable level of resources. The situation could be explained in part by: the failure to engage in a multidimensional and integrated approach to social development; the lack of capability, in some countries, in one or more of the political, economic, environmental, technological, cultural or social dimensions of development; and national commitment to goals and targets established in the regional social development agendas. The pursuit of growth-oriented strategies took precedence over such goals as poverty alleviation. The review revealed the need for increasing the centrality and levels of social concern and awareness, participation and equality through the mobilization of human and financial resources, expertise and partnerships of all sectors of society and with the engagement of all development actors.

The Commission, in considering the region's prospects for social development into the twenty-first century, stated that the unevenness in social progress underscored the need for the region to continue to promote the well-being of all its people and to prioritize assistance to the least developed countries and regions, as well as to the poor and other disadvantaged and vulnerable groups.

The Commission identified policies in several areas of concern that could enhance social development prospects in the region: promoting an enabling environment, including promoting participation and equity, social concern and security, and good governance; accelerating poverty alleviation, employment generation and social integration; building capacities; strengthening families and communities; promoting partnerships; and providing regional support. The Commission underlined the importance of regional support measures for forging "a caring society for all", which addressed issues relating to specific population groups. The Commission stressed that resources allocated for poverty alleviation programmes should not be diminished in the face of the economic downturn. It asked ESCAP to support national capacity-building efforts, particularly in social policy analysis and the development of comprehensive multisectoral strategies for poverty alleviation integrated within national development plans, and the wider dissemination of regional experience. The secretariat should also conduct a survey to monitor the impact of macroeconomic policies and programmes on the poor, taking into account the factors that influenced the participation of the poor in the development process.

It underlined the importance of promoting partnerships among the various actors and institutions concerned with social development and requested the secretariat, in cooperation with UN bodies and specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, to undertake analyses, identify resource requirements, disseminate information on social indicators, policies and programmes, and provide advisory services and technical assistance.

The Commission adopted a resolution [E/1998/40 des. 54/2)], in which it endorsed the findings and conclusions contained in the report of the Fifth Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Development and the Manila Declaration on Accelerated Implementation of the Agenda for Action on Social Development in the ESCAP Region adopted at that meeting [YUN 1997, p. 989]. It urged members and associate members to accelerate implementation of the regional Social Development Agenda in accordance with the recommendations contained in the Manila Declaration, and urged donors and multilateral financial institutions, in their loans, funding and general development assistance, to support it more explicitly, as well as other UN programmes of action and agendas related to social development concerns.

The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to harness the multidisciplinary potential of the secretariat to ensure full support for the effective implementation of the Manila Declaration; establish a Regional Inter-Agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific subcommittee on the regional Social Development Agenda in order to strengthen coordination among UN and other development actors; consider, with UNDP, mechanisms to facilitate coordination of assistance for social development, including convening multi-donor consultations on support to the region in the implementation of the regional Social Development Agenda; provide technical assistance to strengthen national capacities for multisectoral and integrated social development planning and programming; and to convene a regional meeting in 1999 to review the implementation of the regional Social Development Agenda in preparation for the global review of the follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development.

opment [YUN 1995, p. 1115] by the General Assembly at its special session in 2000.

The Commission also considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1097] on progress in the implementation of resolutions and decisions relating to socio-economic measures to alleviate poverty in rural and urban areas.

In response to Commission resolution 54/2, the eighth session of the Regional Inter-Agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific, on 20 August, established the Subcommittee on the Regional Social Development Agenda. The first meeting of the Subcommittee was convened on 10 December.

Disabled persons

In the secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1082] on prospects for social development in Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century, it was stated that the region still had a long way to go to ensure that persons with disabilities could live full and active lives, and the goals of creating housing and living environments where they could function effectively, a work place free of discrimination against them, and a society that accepted them were also still far from attainment across the region. To enhance their well-being, the disability situation had to first be known and understood, including the collection of accurate data; attitudes had to change so that those persons could be viewed in terms of their potential; a commitment was needed to undertake those changes in society; and preventive aspects of addressing disabilities should be emphasized, such as the removal of landmines and reducing the high level of road accidents.

On 22 April, the Commission adopted a resolution [E/1998/40(res. 54/1)] on strengthening regional support for persons with disabilities into the twenty-first century.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 35], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ESCAP [E/1998/40], adopted resolution 1998/4 without vote [agenda item 10].

Strengthening regional support for persons with disabilities into the twenty-first century

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its decision 1992/289 of 31 July 1992 on the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002,

Noting the implementation efforts made during the first half of the Decade by many countries and areas in the Asia and Pacific region, including progress in the adoption of equalization legislation, as well as the intercountry meetings hosted by the Governments of India, Japan, Malaysia and the Philippines on critical issues in the implementation of the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled

Persons, 1993-2002 related to assistive devices, non-handicapping environments, multisectoral collaboration and national coordination,

Welcoming the Seoul Proposals for the second half of the Decade, adopted by the Meeting of Senior Officials to Mark the Mid-point of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, hosted by the Government of the Republic of Korea in September 1997,

Expressing its appreciation to the Subcommittee on Disability-related Concerns of the Regional Inter-Agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific for pioneering collaborative inter-organizational action for the Decade,

Noting the need for a stronger regional impetus to support national and local endeavours in the second half of the Decade,

1. Requests the General Assembly to endorse the present resolution and to encourage intergovernmental organizations to support its implementation in order to assist in addressing equalization issues faced by the majority of the world's disabled persons, including disabled women and disabled children, who live in the Asia and Pacific region;

2. Urges all members and associate members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific:

(a) To intensify multisectoral collaborative action towards the fulfilment of the targets for the implementation of the Agenda for Action for the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002, adopted by the Commission at its forty-ninth session, in April 1993;

(b) To contribute to the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific technical cooperation trust fund for the Decade to meet capacity-building needs for information and technical assistance in multisectoral collaboration among diverse sectors, in support of the fulfilment of the targets for the Decade;

3. Urges all Governments that have not yet signed the Proclamation on the Full Participation and Equality of People with Disabilities in the Asian and Pacific Region to do so before the next regional meeting to review the progress of the Decade, to be held in 1999;

4. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific to strengthen secretariat assistance to members and associate members by taking the following action:

(a) Harnessing the multidisciplinary potential of the secretariat of the Commission to enhance sensitivity to disabilities—that is, by the inclusion of persons with disabilities and/or the consideration of the impact thereof on disability-related concerns—as a performance criterion of the secretariat's overall technical assistance, on a par with other criteria, such as gender sensitivity and relevance to development needs in the countries and areas of the region;

(b) Examining resource allocations within the secretariat with a view to undertaking the adjustments required to enhance secretariat support for disability-related action;

(c) Mobilizing resources to replenish continually the technical cooperation trust fund for the purposes of documentation, exchanges and field visits and to disseminate good practices in the implementation of the Agenda for Action, giving special attention to the enhancement of knowledge and skills among persons with disabilities and the equal participation of disabled women and girls;

(d) Generating practical guidelines for advancing equal access by disabled persons to mainstream development opportunities, by organizing and following up on two regional meetings in 1999, in close collaboration with other members of the Subcommittee on Disability-related Concerns of the Regional Inter-Agency Committee for Asia and the Pacific, on the following topics:

- (i) Education and technology for the specific needs of disabled children and youth;
- (ii) Implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities and fulfilment of the targets for the Decade;

(e) Exploring the means of organizing, by the end of 2002, a high-level regional meeting to consider the lessons learned from national and area efforts towards the fulfilment of the targets for the Decade, so as to lay a solid foundation for the inclusion of persons with disabilities in mainstream society into the twenty-first century;

5. Also requests the Executive Secretary to report to the Commission biennially on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution, with emphasis on follow-up action to reinforce the impact of the above-mentioned regional meetings, and to submit recommendations to the Commission, as required, concerning continuous secretariat action to improve the opportunities for persons with disabilities to participate in the development process, until 2003, when the overall endeavours of the Decade will be reviewed as a separate agenda item at the fifty-ninth session of the Commission, to provide a basis for further action in the new millennium.

International Year of Older Persons

In the secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1082] on prospects for social development in Asia and the Pacific into the twenty-first century, it was stated that many countries in the region were experiencing rapid population ageing, while other changes in society were impacting on the living situation and well-being of older persons, so that many countries had growing populations of older persons whose general condition was more precarious than in the past. The issue was a comparatively recent concern of social development in the region, but one that would be of increasing priority in the twenty-first century.

The Commission adopted a resolution [E/1998/40 (res. 54/5)] on the International Year of Older Persons: towards a society for all ages.

Members and associate members were urged to implement General Assembly resolutions concerning older persons and make preparations for the International Year of Older Persons in 1999, as decided by the General Assembly in resolution 47/5 [YUN 1992, p. 889]. UN bodies and specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and other members of civil society were called upon to generate greater awareness of the issues relating to ageing and older persons. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to continue assisting members and associate members in their preparations for the Year; convene a regional meeting to formulate a plan of action on ageing for Asia and the Pacific; facilitate the exchange of national experiences and information concerning older persons; and to report to the Commission in 2000 on the observance of the Year and on progress in the implementation of the plan of action on ageing for the region.

In response to the Commission's request, the secretariat convened the Regional Meeting on a Plan of Action on Ageing for Asia and the Pacific (Macau, 28 September-1 October), which adopted the Macau Declaration and Plan of Action on Ageing for Asia and the Pacific. The secretariat also convened the Regional Workshop on Preparations for the International Year of Older Persons (Beijing, China, 26-29 May) and the Regional Seminar on a Society for All Ages (Bangkok, 1-4 December).

Family

The Commission adopted a resolution [E/1998/40 (res. 54/6)] on strengthening the role of the family in social development, in which it invited members and associate members to continue their activities to build family-friendly societies and urged them to view individuals and their needs in the context of the family in order to plan for programmes and projects in a holistic manner, as well as strengthen multi-generational relationships. It asked the Executive Secretary, in collaboration with concerned UN bodies, donor Governments and funding agencies, to continue to play an active role in facilitating regional cooperation within the framework of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family, celebrated in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 1144].

The Executive Secretary was also asked to convene a regional workshop on strengthening the role of the family in providing social protection, to prepare and disseminate a publication on that topic, and to report to the Commission in 2000 on regional cooperation strategies to achieve a more focused and coordinated approach to the family.

Human resource development

The Commission stressed the critical importance of human resource development as the basis for long-term and sustainable development in the ESCAP region, and the need to promote investment in the region's human resources, particularly the vulnerable social groups. It expressed the hope that the current economic crisis would not result in a reduction of programmes to develop the region's human resources, and urged the secretariat to support national efforts to promote the human resources development of vulnerable groups, particularly in countries severely affected by the economic crisis. The focus of the secretariat's human resources development programme should be on promoting education and training for productive employment for youth, since that group was the most negatively affected by the current labour situation resulting from the economic crisis in the region.

Pursuant to ESCAP resolution 52/4 [YUN 1996, p. 906] on promoting human resources development among youth in Asia and the Pacific, the ESCAP secretariat convened the Asia-Pacific Meeting of Youth Organizations (Bangkok, 27-29 May), in preparation for the third session of the World Youth Forum, and the Second Asia-Pacific Intergovernmental Meeting on Human Resources Development for Youth (Bangkok, 1-5 June) [E/ESCAP/1134]. The latter Meeting was a regional preparatory activity for the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth (Lisbon, Portugal, 8-12 August) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). The specific objectives of the Meeting were to: assess the regional youth situation, focusing on the human resources development areas of education, employment and health; formulate an Asia-Pacific input for the draft Lisbon Declaration on Youth Policies and Programmes for the World Conference; and address the special theme of "elimination of sexual abuse and exploitation of children and youth", as called for in Commission resolution 53/4 [YUN 1997, p. 990]. The Meeting adopted the Asia-Pacific position for the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth, which was incorporated into the Lisbon Declaration on Youth Policies and Programmes, adopted by the World Conference.

Also in pursuance of resolution 53/4, ESCAP implemented a regional programme on the elimination of sexual abuse and sexual exploitation in the Greater Mekong subregion: Cambodia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Myanmar, Thailand, Viet Nam and Yunnan Province of China.

ESCAP, together with Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation, the Bogor Agricultural University and the Ministry of Food and Horticulture of Indonesia and the Government of Japan, organized the Regional Workshop on Human Resource Development for the Food Industries in Asia and the Pacific (Jakarta, Indonesia, 20-22 July).

Women in development

As follow-up to Commission resolution 51/7 [YUN 1995, p. 1022] on the implementation of the Jakarta Declaration and Plan of Action for the Advancement of Women in Asia and the Pacific [YUN 1994, p. 716] and resolution 53/2 [YUN 1997, p. 990] on the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action for the advancement of women [YUN 1995, p. 1170], ESCAP activities in 1998 focused on women and poverty, violence against women, women in the economy, the human rights of women and women in the media. ESCAP, in collaboration with the International Labour Organization (ILO), the International Organization for Migration, the National Commission on Women's Affairs of Thailand and the Asian Women's Fund, organized the Regional Conference on Trafficking in Women (Bangkok, 3-4 November), at which the Bangkok Accord and Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Women were adopted. The Plan of Action for Promoting Women in Small Businesses in Indo-China was adopted at a subregional seminar on the subject (Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam, 28-30 October). In addition, a regional meeting on the impact of globalization on women was convened (Bangkok, 22-24 June) to discuss migration of women, women and technological change and women and economic liberalization. A subregional project on the promotion of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], through NGO networks in the Pacific was initiated. That effort was facilitated by a consultative meeting held jointly with UNDP and the Pacific community on the implementation and promotion of women's rights through the Convention (Nadi, Fiji, July).

Population

ESCAP adopted a resolution [E/1998/40 des. 54/4] on the mobilization of human and financial resources for further implementation of actions to achieve the population and development goals of the region. It endorsed the report and key actions of the 1994 High-level Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development (Cairo, Egypt) and the 1993 Bali Declaration on Population and Sustainable Development and to Make Recommendations for Further Action (Bangkok, March 1998). The Commission urged Asian and Pacific countries to continue to mobilize adequate domestic resources for comprehensive health care, reproductive health, including family planning services, and other social development programmes that were facing financial constraints. Through South-South cooperation, they should ensure optimum use of the human and financial resources available in the region. It called upon the international community to increase support substantially to meet the pressing needs of the region and provide additional resources, as a temporary measure, to the social sector, especially in those countries facing a major economic crisis.

The Commission asked the Executive Secretary, in cooperation with UNFPA and other relevant UN organizations, to ensure the availability of resources to achieve the goals of the Bali Declaration and the Cairo Programme of Action; to take the steps recommended by the High-level Meeting to reorient the Asian and Pacific regional programme on population and sustainable development, paying special attention to LDCs; and to report on the implementation of the resolution at the Fifth Asian and Pacific Population Conference scheduled for 2002.

Natural disasters

Having reviewed the annual report of the Typhoon Committee [E/ESCAP/1114], the Commission noted its progress in the areas of meteorology and hydrology, disaster prevention and preparedness, training and research. The Commission noted that the Committee would be assigning Asian names to tropical cyclones to attract more public attention. It urged UNDP and other donors to support the Committee's work and directed the ESCAP secretariat to provide substantive support to the Committee within its own programme of work.

The Commission noted the first report of the Panel on Tropical Cyclones [E/ESCAP/1115].

Statistics

The Commission considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1102] on emerging issues and developments in statistics, which examined the year 2000 problem in computer systems, developments in data dissemination standards, and issues relating to the population and housing census, gender statistics, national accounts and price statistics.

The Commission, as recommended by the tenth session of the Working Group of Statistical Experts [YUN 1997, p. 992], endorsed the actions proposed by the Working Group relating to the year 2000 problem in computers, and the views of the Working Group on inter-agency coordination in providing technical assistance on the General Data Dissemination System (GDD) and in the adoption of the Special Data Dissemination Standard (SDDS). It impressed on policy makers the need for additional resources for national statistics agencies to respond to SDDS/GDD requirements. The Commission reiterated the importance of population and housing censuses and gender statistics, and urged Governments to provide additional resources for new statistical collections needed for the compilation of the 1993 System of National Accounts. The Commission supported efforts to improve the measurement of inflation, endorsed the priority activities of the statistics subprogramme in 1998-1999, and confirmed that the priorities identified for 2000-2001 should form the basis of the draft work programme for that biennium.

The Commission also considered a report [E/ESCAP/1103] on the Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific (SIAP), which covered activities and issues of concern, as well as its financial status, and contained a summary of the third session of the Governing Board (Tokyo, Japan, 15-17 October 1997).

The Commission welcomed the inclusion of new topics, such as statistics on disability, gender issues, poverty and income distribution, the environment and the informal sector. It urged SIAP to expand its training programmes in sampling, data processing and analysis and interpretation of statistics, as well as to offer new topics, such as modelling and forecasting. Expressing appreciation for the initiatives taken to chart the new direction of SIAP, the Commission urged ESCAP members and associate members and international organizations to collaborate with the Institute. It commended the Institute on its efforts to relocate courses to lower-cost venues to achieve cost-effectiveness. The Commission noted the recommendations of the SIAP Governing Board and welcomed its proposal to mobilize funding from non-traditional sources and through other funding arrangements. Noting the significant support of the Government of Japan, the Commission urged that the financial viability of the Institute be secured and requested ESCAP members not contributing to the Institute to do so, and those countries not meeting the minimum in the Commission's guidelines to increase their contributions.

The Committee on Statistics held its eleventh session in Bangkok from 24 to 26 November [E/ESCAP/1138]. It asked the secretariat to strengthen its role as a conduit between the regional statistical community and the UN Statistical Commission, and that ESCAP strengthen further its cooperation with subregional organizations for the promotion of statistical development in the region. The Committee commended SIAP for its new direction, as approved by the Governing Board, and welcomed increased collaboration, initiated by SIAP, with national statistical offices and relevant international organizations and agencies in the implementation of its training activities. The Committee reaffirmed the importance of the fundamental principles of official statistics and expressed interest in improving data on poverty measurement. It considered it important to strengthen cooperation among national statistical offices of countries in financial crisis through staff exchange programmes and networking. It concurred with the priorities for the programme of work for 2000-2001. It decided to evaluate its experience with the biennial three-day session within the new conference structure adopted by the Commission in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 993] at the conclusion of its twelfth session in 2000 and to report to the Commission if it felt that the format was unworkable. The Committee decided that a session of the Working Group of Statistical Experts should be organized in 1999.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission endorsed the proposed revision of the medium-term plan [E/ESCAP/1105 & Corr.1] for the period 1998-2001, to conform to the Commission's revised conference structure, as set out in Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/4 [YUN 1997, p. 993]. As a result, ESCAP's 10 subprogrammes were streamlined to 7. Under the revised structure, two subprogrammes: regional economic cooperation: trade and investment; and regional economic cooperation: industry and technology, would be merged into one. Three subprogrammes relating to poverty alleviation would be restructured into two subprogrammes—one to deal with social development issues and concerns, human resource development, and women in development, with specific reference to the alleviation of poverty, and the other to address social and economic issues in the areas of population and rural and urban development that were directly related to the alleviation of poverty. Changes to reflect a more focused approach were introduced in the subprogrammes on the environment and sustainable development and on transport and communications. The revised subprogrammes would, therefore, comprise regional economic cooperation; development research and policy analysis; social development; population and rural and urban development; environment and natural resources development; transport, communications, tourism and infrastructure development; and statistics. The Commission requested that the 15 sectoral subprogramme account codes of ESCAP should be revised in line with the revised programme structure for the programme budget for the biennium 2000-2001 to establish clear linkages between financial statements and programme performance.

The Commission endorsed the conclusions contained in the report on the implementation of the programme of work for 1996-1997 [E/ESCAP/1106 & Corr.1]. The Commission welcomed the secretariat's efforts to change its emphasis from the production of publications to the provision of group training. It endorsed also the proposed changes to the 1998-1999 programme of work [E/ESCAP/1107 & Corr.1]. It expressed concern that the reduced regular budget allocations would affect the programme's implementation. It noted a 25 per cent decline in programmed training activities compared to the previous biennium.

ESCAP reform

The Commission considered a secretariat note [E/ESCAP/1083] on follow-up to its resolution 53/1 [YUN 1997, p. 993] on restructuring the conference structure of the Commission, and another [E/ESCAP/1084] containing a draft ESCAP position paper for review by the Economic and Social Council on the role of ESCAP in the promotion of economic and social development in Asia and the Pacific.

The Commission stated that ESCAP reform efforts needed to be pursued in the broader context of economic and social developments in the region and the Commission's ability to respond in an adequate and timely manner to problems. It should continue adjusting itself to changing conditions in order to remain relevant and responsive to the needs of the membership. ESCAP's activities should have clearer objectives and time frames, and its monitoring and impact assessment capabilities should be strengthened. The results of the questionnaire on priorities and resource allocation should be reflected in the programme planning and budgeting process. The secretariat would be restructured to correspond to the revised medium-term plan (see above). The Commission requested the secretariat to report on its efforts to reduce programme costs.

The Commission found that the draft position paper [E/ESCAP/1084] correctly highlighted the comparative advantage of ESCAP, particularly with respect to interdisciplinary orientation, and suggested that ESCAP should lead, or at least mirror, the reform taking place in the UN system. It emphasized that resources should be directed more to operational activities than to meetings and publications. It expressed the view that members and associate members should coordinate and exchange information between their representatives and UN Headquarters to increase understanding of ESCAP's role and the nature of its reform process. Improved coordination could assist in identifying more precisely the requirements of the Commission with respect to regular budget allocation and ensure that decisions made in New York were relevant to the real needs at the regional level. It should also take into account the reforms being conducted by other regional commissions.

The Commission agreed that its Chairman should transmit to the Secretary-General and the President of the Economic and Social Council a letter detailing the views and concerns of the Commission. That letter was transmitted on 18 May [E/1998/65/Add.3].

Subregional activities

The Commission supported the secretariat's efforts to promote cooperation between subregional organizations and urged the continuation and strengthening of such activities. It noted the launching of the United Nations special programme for the economies of Central Asia (SPECA) and their special needs at the meeting of the heads of State of Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan (Tashkent, Uzbekistan, 26 March), which also adopted the Tashkent Declaration spelling out the objectives and priorities of SPECA. The Commission also noted the establishment of the Bangladesh-India-Myanmar-Sri Lanka-Thailand Economic Cooperation (BIMST-EC). The Commission invited interested donors to contribute to the activities of SPECA and BIMST-EC.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/19 [YUN 1997, p. 1001], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/53/435] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO). The report reviewed cooperation between UNDP, ESCAP, UNCTAD, UNFPA, the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and UNIDO. UNDP agreed to fund a joint project to support ECO countries in trade efficiency and economic cooperation. UNCTAD, the executing agency for the project, undertook a follow-up joint ECO/UNCTAD mission to Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan from 4 to 14 March to explore opportunities for cooperation. A second mission to Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan was undertaken in May. ESCAP, under the terms of the 1993 memorandum of understanding [YUN 1993, p. 613] between the Commission and ECO, agreed to foster cooperation in several areas and facilitate cooperation between other relevant bodies established by both organizations. The areas of cooperation between the two organizations were: land transport services; transport development; multimodal transport; international land transport; a legal and regulatory system for efficient transport; trade and investment among the south-western States; and physical and "soft" infrastructure for trade and investment, including border and non-border measures. Technical cooperation between ECO and ESCAP was being explored. ESCAP was also seeking cooperation with ECO in the implementation of a project on investment promotion for the mining industry in the ECO countries. Issues such as economic assessment of mineral potential, identification of prominent targets for development and trade, and review of mineral development policies would be discussed at an international round-table conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 October [meeting 48], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/15 [draft: A/53/L.14 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 34].

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 48/2 of 13 October 1993, by which it granted observer status to the Economic Cooperation Organization,

Recalling also that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to promote international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character,

Recalling further its resolutions 50/1 of 12 October 1995, 51/21 of 27 November 1996 and 52/19 of 21 November 1997, in which it urged the specialized agencies and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and invited the relevant international financial institutions to initiate, maintain and increase consultations and programmes and extend their assistance to the Economic Cooperation Organization and its associated institutions in the attainment of their objectives,

Recalling its resolution 52/169 M of 16 December 1997 on the human and ecological rehabilitation and economic development of the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan,

Bearing in mind the progress achieved in the restructuring process of the Economic Cooperation Organization and considering that that organization should strive to play a more effective role, aimed at the all-round socio-economic development of its member States, which is consistent with the aims and objectives of the United Nations in promoting higher standards of living and conditions of economic and social progress and development,

Welcoming the recent developments concerning drug control activities in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization, including the growing cooperation between that organization and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Economic Cooperation Organization at its eighth meeting to strengthen the monitoring of the international trade in precursors used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Noting that the existing relationship between the Economic Cooperation Organization and various organizations of the United Nations system has contributed towards identifying and assisting regional programmes in advancing the socio-economic infrastructure of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and encouraging further coordinated utilization of available resources in promoting common objectives of the two organizations,

1. Takes note of the Almaty Declaration issued at the fifth meeting of the Heads of State and Government of the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held at Almaty on 10 and 11 May 1998, which re-emphasizes the importance of and the resolve of the States members of that organization to promote socio-economic development, enhanced trade and an integrated transport and communications network in their territories;

2. Takes note also of the Programme of Action of the Economic Cooperation Organization Decade of Transport and Communications (1998-2007), adopted at the Second Ministerial Meeting on Transport and Communications of the Economic Cooperation Organization, held at Ashgabat in March 1998, and invites the specialized agencies and international financial institutions to give due consideration to the projects envisaged in the Programme of Action for assistance;

3. Notes with satisfaction the signing, at Almaty in May 1998, by the States members of the Economic Cooperation Organization, of the main text of the Transit Transport Framework Agreement, aimed at facilitating the transit of goods and passengers, both within the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization and in neighbouring countries, and invites the relevant United Nations entities to extend all possible assistance in promoting the objectives of the Framework Agreement both within and outside the region;

4. Appreciates the entry into force of the agreements on transit trade and visa simplification procedures for businessmen in the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization, which, in conjunction with the ongoing technical assistance of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concerning trade efficiency and trade and transport facilitation, may contribute to enhancing intraregional and interregional trade;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 52/19, expresses satisfaction at the enhanced pace of mutually beneficial interaction between the two organizations through cooperative arrangements entered into by the Economic Cooperation Organization with various organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, and requests those organizations to maintain the existing momentum of contacts and cooperation;

6. Welcomes the recommendations of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific at its fifty-fourth session, held in April 1998 to promote cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Organization in the identified areas of mutual concern, and invites the Commission to enhance the mutual collaboration with that organization, focusing on implementable projects in the priority areas of the Economic Cooperation Organization, namely, transport and communications, trade, investment, energy, environment, industry and agriculture, for the overall benefit of the entire region;

1. Also welcomes the signing by the Economic Cooperation Organization and the United Nations Development Programme of the project document on capacity-building of the secretariat of the Economic Cooperation Organization, and encourages the Programme to continue to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of the regional cooperation arrangements and create an enabling environment for sustainable development in the area;

8. Further welcomes the signing in December 1997 by the Economic Cooperation Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of a memorandum of understanding, and accordingly invites the Food and Agriculture Organization, within its current mandate and resources, to consult and cooperate with the Economic Cooperation Organization in order to attain the objectives of the latter in this field;

9. Welcomes the holding, at Baku in September 1998, of a joint Economic Cooperation Organization and United Nations Population Fund conference on the role of men in reproductive health and family planning, and calls upon the Fund and other relevant United Nations organizations, in cooperation with the Economic Cooperation Organization, to continue activities in the field of public health and social development in the future;

10. Calls upon the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the relevant United Nations organizations, in pursuit of the outcome of the twentieth special session of the General Assembly, to render all possible assistance to the Economic Cooperation Organization in the implementation of its programmes and projects pertaining to the world drug problem;

11. Invites the relevant international financial institutions to extend their assistance, both technical and financial, as appropriate, to the regional development plans of the Economic Cooperation Organization in the priority areas;

12. Welcomes the decision of the Heads of Central Asian States on the creation of an international fund on saving the Aral Sea, and invites the relevant international organizations to extend financial and technical assistance towards rehabilitation programmes and projects, both ongoing and future, in certain parts of the region of the Economic Cooperation Organization that are suffering from ecological catastrophic influences, including the Aral Sea, the Caspian Sea, the Semipalatinsk nuclear testing site and the Sarez Lake basin;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization".

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), at its fifty-third session (Geneva, 21-23 April 1998) [E/1998/38], focused on the strengthening of economic cooperation in Europe, implementation of ECE reform and preparations for the review of the regional commissions by the Economic and Social Council.

As called for by the Plan of Action on strengthening economic cooperation in Europe, endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1997/224 [YUN 1997, p. 1002], the ECE secretariat organized a debate on a major economic theme, which concentrated on factors that might increase divergences in economic development among the countries in the region, including the fragility of the banking system in the transition economies and their vulnerability to external shocks; economic risks and benefits of increased globalization; and the economic opportunities and challenges brought about by the introduction of the euro to non-European Union (EU) countries and the implications for their monetary and trade policies.

Concerning operational activities, the Commission requested the Executive Secretary to continue to respond to requests for technical assistance, paying attention to the needs of individual countries; the selection of projects should be based on their value added and merit. The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to focus on the specific needs of the Mediterranean countries, and explore ways to increase extra-budgetary funding for its operational activities in those countries. It established an open-ended ad hoc working group to develop ethical guidelines governing relationships between ECE and the business community.

The Commission held an exchange of views with the Chairmen of the principal subsidiary bodies (PSBs) on the implementation of ECE reform, including intersectoral issues and cross-sectoral concerns. It confirmed decisions of: the Inland Transport Committee to maintain the standing character of the meetings of experts under the Working Party on the Construction of Vehicles and to rename them "working parties"; and the Committee on Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development to maintain the standing character of the meetings of experts under the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development and to rename them "specialized sections" of the Working Party corresponding to the names of the former meetings of experts. It agreed that the current membership of the Bureau of the Committee on Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development should continue until its annual session in 1999, at which time the composition of the Bureau should be brought in line with the bureaux of other PSBs. The Commission requested that each PSB review its recurrent publications, decide whether their continued publication was merited and report its findings to the United Nations Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ). The Commission endorsed the Common Guidelines for Prioritization of the Work of PSBs.

It endorsed the follow-up mechanism, approved by the Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005], that ECE should undertake monitoring of the implementation of the Conference's Programme of Joint Action through joint meetings of the bureaux of the Inland Transport Committee and the Committee on Environmental Policy.

The Commission reviewed relations between ECE and other regional, subregional and global organizations and institutions carrying out activities of the same nature and in the same areas, and agreed to proposals submitted to it in that regard.

It agreed that the Group of Experts on the Programme of Work should continue to examine the relevant legal and other aspects of the biennialization of the annual sessions of the Commission, taking into account the views expressed by the Chairman during his consultations on the subject, and report its findings to the Commission. In that context, it agreed to review the rules on the convening of ad hoc meetings to make them more flexible. The Commission also agreed that the role of its Bureau and the usefulness of having more frequent informal contacts among delegations and the secretariat should be examined.

The Commission adopted a decision [E/1998/38 (dec. A(53))] on the review of the UN regional commissions by the Economic and Social Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 20 July [meeting 35], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of ECE [E/1998/65/Add.2], adopted resolution 1998/3 without vote [agenda item 10].

Review of the regional commissions by the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, in which the Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to conduct a review of the regional commissions,

Noting that the Economic Commission for Europe, at its fifty-third session, considered a note by the Executive Secretary on relations with other regional, subregional and global organizations and institutions and a report on operational activities and cooperation with subregional groupings, interests and initiatives,

Recalling the principles governing the relationship of the Commission with other bodies as set forth in chapter IV of its Plan of Action,

1. Reaffirms the need to strengthen cooperation between the Economic Commission for Europe and other bodies according to complementarity in terms of mandates, membership and approaches to issues of common concern;

2. Stresses that, in order to ensure synergies and coherence as well as to avoid duplication and inconsistencies, these relationships should be based on regular exchange of information in common areas of work and on mutual recognition and use of the expertise and experience available in each organization and should lead to joint activities, as appropriate;

3. Emphasizes the importance of dialogue among the secretariats of institutions and of consistent messages by Governments in different forums in order to maximize cooperation among institutions;

4. Recognizes that the Commission has acquired over the years considerable knowledge of countries with economies in transition and has developed long-standing working relationships with those countries in the areas of its expertise;

5. Stresses that, in responding to the specific needs of the region, the Commission has two core functions: the development and harmonization of legal instruments, norms and standards in its areas of expertise and the production of statistics and analyses in those areas;

6. Welcomes the involvement of interested non-member States in the development and adoption of norms established by the Commission as well as the interest of other regions in using these norms and in adapting them to their concerns and needs;

7. Emphasizes that the technical assistance activities of the Commission are limited in scale and are undertaken in support of the functions mentioned in paragraph 5 above, and are directed in particular towards countries with economies in transition;

8. Stresses that the Commission also has the role of bringing the contribution of the region to the global level and facilitating the implementation of international commitments in the region with respect to its areas of work;

9. Takes note of the information on the relationships that the Commission has built up with other organizations in its areas of cooperation.

Economic trends

According to the summary of the economic survey of Europe, 1998 [E/1999/15], the economies of the ECE region suffered from the continuing effects of the 1997 Asian financial crisis, from the results of the Russian devaluation and debt moratorium in August 1998, and from the effects of the Brazilian crisis in the second half of the year. Western economies recorded a gross domestic product (GDP) growth of 3.3 per cent, while the transition economies of Eastern Europe, the Baltic States and the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) registered a negative GDP growth of 0.5 per cent. The slowdown in economic growth occurred in virtually all the Eastern European and Baltic economies, which failed to improve on their relatively weak performance of 1997, and deteriorated sharply in the CIS countries.

Eastern Europe, Baltic States and CIS

In 1998, the global economic crisis and the associated financial instability had a severe impact on the transition economies of Eastern Europe, the Baltic States and CIS countries. The slowdown in economic growth in the economies of virtually all the Eastern European and Baltic countries was more severe than expected, with the exception of Hungary, which grew by 5 per cent. GDP in Eastern Europe rose on average by just 2 per cent. However, the Baltic economies did relatively better for the year as a whole, with a GDP growth rate of just over 4 per cent, but the deceleration from the 1997 rate of 7.6 per cent was considerable. The CIS economies as a whole registered a negative GDP growth of just under 3 per cent. For the leading reform economies and the Baltic States, the break in mid-1998 of the relatively strong growth of the last few years was due not only to the deterioration in external conditions but also to weak domestic factors, especially in south-east Europe. The growth rates of industrial production also fell considerably in most of the faster-reforming and faster-growing economies of Central Europe and the Baltic States, while in south-east Europe the recession in industry worsened in the second half of the year. Also contributing to the economic slowdown was the sharp increase in interest rates in most countries of the region. In CIS, hard hit by the Asian and Russian crises, output fell and the slender gains of 1997 were more than offset. Unemployment rates rose sharply from mid-year, averaging 12.6 per cent in December for Eastern Europe, up from 11.6 per cent in June. In the Baltic States, at the end of the year, the rate was 7.3 per cent, a full percentage point higher than the previous year.

One of the crucial elements in the situation facing the transition economies was the deterioration in their current accounts, all of which were in deficit, averaging about 4.5 per cent of GDP in Eastern Europe. For individual countries in Eastern Europe, the deficits ranged from 1.5 per cent in the Czech Republic to some 7 per cent in Croatia and Romania, and about 11 per cent in Slovakia; in the Baltic States, the proportions ranged from nearly 10 to 13 per cent. Towards the end of 1998, those deficits were larger than even the most pessimistic forecasts. For most of the Eastern European and Baltic economies, imports were still rising faster than exports in 1998, raising the question as to how long the current deficits could be sustained. The more rapidly growing economies of the last few years—Croatia, Hungary, Poland and Slovakia—had large increases in their current account deficits, underlining the dependence of the transformation process on imports and foreign borrowing, and the slowdown in Western European growth.

In most of the transition economies, inflation rates had fallen below 20 per cent, with many in single digits. The persistence of moderate rates of inflation in much of Central Europe reflected a continuing adjustment of relative prices as administrative controls were gradually lifted. In contrast, the excessive emphasis on rapid price stabilization in the Russian Federation, involving tight monetary policy, had a negative effect on the real economy, leading to, among other things, the growth in payment arrears.

Western Europe and North America

Throughout 1998, the adjustment of Western market economies to the world economic crisis continued to be supported by strong growth in the United States, where GDP rose by just under 4 per cent for the second year running. That was underpinned by strong domestic demand and the buoyancy of business investment, especially in information technology. Total domestic demand in the United States rose by more than 5 per cent, but was significantly offset by adverse changes in real net exports, which rose only 1.5 per cent for the year, restrained by the strong dollar and weakening demand in foreign markets. Personal consumption expenditure rose at its strongest rate since 1985, and continued to be supported by the combined effect of continuing employment growth, increases in average nominal earnings and falling inflation. Economic growth also strengthened in Canada in the final quarter of 1998, supported by the stronger demand for goods from the United States. For the year as a whole, GDP grew by 3 per cent, down from 3.8 per cent in 1997, due to weaker growth in domestic demand.

Western Europe, like the United States, benefited initially from the effects of the economic crisis through the large fall in prices of commodities and the substantial improvement in their terms of trade, and the "flight to quality" in the financial markets made it easier to reduce interest rates in a number of countries. However, unlike the United States, GDP growth in Western Europe was just 2.7 per cent.

Manufacturing production in the United States was relatively sluggish as a result of the Asian crisis and competitive pressures from the strong dollar. The continuing economic expansion in the United States supported further large gains in employment and a fall in the unemployment rate to 4.3 per cent at the end of 1998. However, given the differential strength of domestic and foreign demand, there was a large increase in the foreign trade deficit to $169.1 billion, which was amplified by the weakening of net investment income from abroad and a further rise in United States net foreign indebtedness.

In Western Europe, manufacturing production turned increasingly sluggish in the course of 1998, a marked contrast to its buoyancy in 1997. Output was estimated to have fallen between the third and fourth quarters of 1998. Private consumption held up relatively well, with aggregate households' disposable incomes underpinned by continued growth in average earnings and by stronger gains in employment than in 1997. Real disposable incomes were boosted by falling inflation and a sharp fall in oil prices. Growth in real exports of goods and services slowed down significantly in 1998 from the very high rates of 1997, due to the fall in demand from Asia, Russia, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) countries and Central and Eastern Europe. There was an increase in total employment in Western Europe of over 1 per cent, which was the largest annual increase since 1990, but the weakening of cyclical growth forces in 1998 increasingly weakened the demand for labour. The unemployment rate in the euro area averaged 10.9 per cent and was starting to rise again towards the end of year. The situation was especially worrying in Germany, where economic growth slowed sharply in the second half of 1998. Europe's consumer price inflation continued its declining trend, reaching its lowest level in almost 40 years.

Trade, industry and enterprise development

The Committee for Trade, Industry and Enterprise Development, at its second session (Geneva, 16-18 June) [ECE/TRADE/222], agreed on the priorities of its work, giving high priority to: trade facilitation, including UN/Electronic Data Interchange for Administration, Commerce and Trade (EDIFACT); agricultural quality standards; and the preparation of guides for trade and investment promotion. It strongly supported the work on commercial quality standards for perishable produce conducted by the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development, and endorsed its efforts to harmonize the work of various national and international bodies. It welcomed the fact that the Centre for the Facilitation of Procedures and Practices for Administration, Commerce and Transport (CEFACT) had completed its organizational phase; substantive work on trade facilitation would be effected by several informal groups, including those on international trade procedures, business process analysis, electronic commerce, and technique and methodologies. The Committee expressed support for the activities of the Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry, particularly the work of its Build-Operate-Transfer (BOT) Group in preparing relevant guidelines. It also welcomed the Forum on Enforcing Intellectual Property Rights (Geneva, 26 October), with the participation of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), EU and WTO and the launch of the Terre Initiative in July to promote the work of the Real Estate Advisory Group in transition economies. The Committee decided to retain responsibility for the further elaboration and implementation of the new Enterprise Development Programme, and to invite its Bureau to discuss comments by countries on the draft programme. It supported the initiatives of the Working Party on Technical Harmonization and Standardization Policies aimed at wider implementation and use of international standards, and enhancing cooperation on technical harmonization issues in the ECE region. It also adopted its own programme of work for 1998-2000.

The Working Party on International Contract Practices in Industry, at its forty-seventh session (Geneva, 26-28 October) [TRADE/WP.5/1998/11], held a forum on the protection and enforcement of intellectual property rights in the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and CIS. The Forum recommended the establishment of an expert group under the joint auspices of UN/ECE and WIPO, with public and private sector representatives to implement the recommendations of the Forum. The Working Party adopted the Forum's recommendations and agreed to establish a group on the enforcement of intellectual property rights. It also discussed the guide on financing private enterprise and trade. The Working Party reviewed and approved the final version of its revised mandate (annex II) [TRADE/NONE/1998/6], and the proposal made by the Seminar on Revising the European Convention on International Commercial Arbitration (Prague, Czech Republic, 28-29 September) [TRADE/WP.5/1998/10] to establish an expert group to review the Convention thoroughly and to consider new arbitration issues that might be incorporated in a new instrument.

Transport

The Inland Transport Committee, at its sixtieth session (Geneva, 12-16 January) [ECE/TRANS/125], discussed, among other things, the transport situation in ECE member countries, assistance to countries in transition, transport agreements and conventions, transport trends and policy and transport economics, road transport, regulations for the construction of vehicles, rail transport and inland water transport, combined transport, customs questions, transport of dangerous and perishable goods and transport statistics.

The Committee took note of the results of the transport programme review undertaken by ECE, as reflected in its Plan of Action, and the implications of the reform process for the Inland Transport Committee. In accordance with the Plan of Action, all PSBs were invited to review the status of their related bodies and limit them to two categories: standing working parties and ad hoc expert groups. The Committee decided to retain eight working parties and delete three ad hoc expert groups convened under its auspices. The Committee also discussed the length of the meetings of PSBs and the reform of its Bureau.

The Committee noted the results of and follow-up to the Regional Conference on Transport and the Environment [YUN 1997, p. 1005], including the Vienna Declaration and the Programme of Joint Action. It mandated the Working Party on Combined Transport to ensure the further development and implementation of the Protocol to the 1991 European Agreement on Important International Combined Transport Lines and Related Installations (AGTC Agreement), and the Working Party on the Construction of Vehicles to further develop the Agreement concerning the Adoption of Uniform Conditions for Periodical Technical Inspections of Wheeled Vehicles and the Reciprocal Recognition of Such Inspections. The Committee urged all ECE member countries and international organizations to designate by March focal points and other volunteer leaders to implement the Programme of Joint Action. It charged the coordination, follow-up, implementation and monitoring of the Programme of Action to its Bureau and decided to review the progress on follow-up to the Conference at its next session.

The Committee was informed about the results of the Third Pan-European Transport Conference (Helsinki, Finland, 23-25 June 1997), where reference was made to the Declaration "Towards a European-Wide Transport Policy".

The Committee invited its subsidiary bodies to explore the possibility of undertaking the monitoring of ECE legal instruments and to prepare an inventory of the main problems encountered.

The Committee adopted a resolution designating 1-7 May 2000 as the third Road Safety Week in the UN/ECE region, and requested the Working Party on Road Traffic Safety to prepare a programme of activities to be undertaken at the national, regional and international levels. It also requested ECE and its secretariat to provide support and publicity.

Energy

The Committee on Sustainable Energy (formerly the Committee on Energy), at its eighth session (Geneva, 6-8 November) [ECE/ENERGY/38], endorsed the decisions of the Task Force on the UN International Framework Classification for Reserves/Resources [ENERGY/1998/24] and recommended that the Framework Classification be extended to gas and oil reserves/resources.

The Committee noted the information provided by the secretariat on the restructuring of the energy sector, development of competitive European energy markets and the implications of liberalization on energy security in ECE countries, and suggested that it be updated periodically. It asked the secretariat to publish documents on restructuring of coal and thermal power in Eastern and Western Europe. The Committee approved the preparation of the strategy for a new project, Energy Efficiency 21, to assist ECE member States to implement greenhouse gas emission mitigation strategies and develop related investment projects at the conclusion of the third phase of the Energy Efficiency 2000 Project (EE 2000). It also agreed that EE 2000 could serve as a useful instrument in the implementation of the Energy Conservation Initiative, and invited interested Governments to provide support for follow-up.

The Committee adopted its programme of work, including that of its subsidiary bodies, and agreed to give high priority to work on sustainable energy policies, energy efficiency and natural gas. It endorsed the decision of the twenty-eighth sessions of the Meetings of Experts on the Use and Distribution of Gas and on the Transport and Storage of Gas that the two bodies be merged into an ad hoc group of experts on the supply and use of gas.

Agriculture

The Meeting of Experts on Standardization of Dry and Dried Produce (Fruit), at its forty-fourth session (Istanbul, Turkey, 2-6 June 1997) [AGRI/WP.1/GE.2/59], discussed a revision of standards for unshelled hazelnuts, unshelled walnuts, walnut kernels and dried apples, as well as a proposal to change the colour chart of walnut kernels. At its forty-fifth session (Grenoble, France, 15-19 June 1998) [TRADE/WP.7/GE.2/1998/14], it took note of the decisions taken by the Working Party on Standardization of Perishable Produce and Quality Development at its fifty-third session [TRADE/WP.7/GE.2/1998/2] as related to its work.

The Timber Committee, at its fifty-sixth session (Geneva, 28 September-1 October) [ECE/TIM/91], examined the implementation of the ECE Plan of Action and the four ECE cross-sectoral issues and agreed to strengthen its cooperation with other ECE PSBs. It reviewed its activities in support of sustainable forest management, to which it had attached the highest priority. Welcoming the ECE/FAO contribution to the third Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe (Lisbon, Portugal, 2-4 June), the Committee agreed to participate actively in drawing up a pan-European programme of action on forests, as agreed in the Lisbon General Declaration adopted at that Conference (see below). In the light of the discussion on the session's special topic "Recycling, energy and market interactions", the Committee agreed to address the consequences of energy and environment policies for the forest sector and reviewed the markets for forest products. Finally, it approved its programme of work for 1999-2003.

The Lisbon General Declaration, adopted at the third Ministerial Conference on the Protection of Forests in Europe, emphasized the importance of strengthening an effective partnership between the forest sector and society, and two resolutions: one on the socio-economic aspects of sustainable forest management, and the other on pan-European criteria and indicators and operational-level guidelines for sustainable forest management.

Environment

In 1998, the Committee on Environmental Policy held a special session (Geneva, 16-18 March) [ECE/CEP/38] to finalize its input for the fourth Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe" (Århus, Denmark, 23-25 June). It endorsed a draft convention on access to information, public participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters, which was opened for signature in Århus. It also welcomed the progress on substantive preparations for energy conservation and the phase-out of leaded petrol in Europe, as well as progress in other parts of the implementation of the Environmental Programme for Europe, which was adopted at the previous Ministerial Conference in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1036]. The Committee also reviewed the environmental performance of the Republic of Moldova and adopted recommendations for strengthening Moldova's environment policy and management.

The fourth Ministerial Conference adopted a Ministerial Declaration [ECE/CEP/56] reaffirming the strong commitment of the Ministers to cooperate on the environmental protection in the ECE region developed at the three previous conferences and recognizing the political importance of the "Environment for Europe" process as the major long-term pan-European political framework for the promotion of environmentally sound and sustainable development. The Conference recognized the importance of regional, subregional and bilateral environmental cooperation in the UN/ECE region and welcomed the Joint Statement of the Ministers of Environment of the Central Asia Region (Almaty, Kazakhstan, 22 April) to support and implement the Regional Environmental Action Plan within the "Environment for Europe" process, as well as the adoption of the Baltic Agenda 21 (Nyborg, Denmark, 3 June), which would play a major role in the Baltic Sea region. The Conference welcomed the publication Europe's Environment: The Second Assessment, requested at the meeting in 1995, which identified further action that was required in transport, agriculture, energy, chemicals, surface, subterranean, coastal and marine waters, soil degradation and biodiversity, as well as the report "Central Asia: environment assessment", which was prepared by countries in that region. The Conference also set out action for the implementation of the environmental programme for Europe in air pollution prevention, the phase out of leaded petrol, energy efficiency, pan-European biological and landscape diversity; and public participation and the role of NGOs, as well as action within the environmental action programme for Central and Eastern Europe, refocusing on the newly independent States, environmental financing and economic instruments, national environmental programmes, project preparation committee, business and environment, and regional environmental centres. The Conference agreed to reduce the frequency of ministerial conferences to an interval of four years, with the next conference scheduled to take place in 2002 on the tenth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [YUN 1992, p. 670]. The Conference also adopted two declarations: one on the phase-out of added lead in petrol, and the other on long-range transboundary air pollution, in which it underlined that the 1998 Protocols on Heavy Metals and Persistent Organic Pollutants constituted a significant step in reducing emissions of substances that might cause adverse effects on the health of humans or the environment (see PART THREE, Chapter VII).

Human settlements

The Committee on Human Settlements, at its fifty-ninth session (Geneva, 14-16 September) [ECE/HBP/110], considered the implications of the ECE Plan of Action [YUN 1997, p. 1002] and recommendations related to PSBs adopted at the Commission's fifty-third session (see above). It adopted its 1998-1999 programme of work, set priorities and decided to consider its medium-term work programme for 1999-2002 at its sixtieth (1999) session. Regarding the Housing and Urban Management Advisory Network, the Committee deemed its first-year activities to be fully satisfactory, and recommended that the Meeting of Officials on Land Administration should be granted standing character. It agreed that urban governance should be an umbrella topic for all programme activities in view of its role in strengthening local governance and democratization, and in facilitating the involvement of the private sector and the general public in decision-making. The Committee adopted a statement on social and economic benefits of good land administration, and agreed to promote activities on sustainable consumption patterns, to evaluate the practice of urban renewal, and to look into ways to develop sustainable housing and land-use planning indicators. The Committee supported the continuation of the ECE Urban and Regional Research Conferences.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians, at its forty-sixth session (Paris, 18-20 May) [ECE/CES/54], considered the implications of the February meeting of the UN Statistical Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination and the 1998 ECE session. It agreed with the conclusions of the Working Group on prospects for the 2000 round of censuses in countries in greatest need. It reviewed: the integrated presentation and coordination of international statistical work in the region, including financial statistics and indicators in the light of the Asian economic crisis and the importance of statistical information to the financial stability of countries; countries in transition in the ECE region; preparations for the 2000 round of population and housing censuses; and education and training statistics. It also considered joint data collection by ECE, Eurostat, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development and other international organizations, and relations between statistical offices and Governments.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) held its twenty-seventh session in Oranjestad, Aruba, from 11 to 16 May 1998 [E/1998/41], during which it also held a ceremony to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary. Speakers focused on the relevance, continuity and importance of ECLAC in the economic affairs of the region and highlighted its pioneering work in linking economic thought with social concerns.

The Commission's deliberations centred on recent trends in public finance and public sector management in Latin America and the Caribbean. The Commission considered a main document entitled "The fiscal covenant: strengths, weaknesses, challenges", which outlined the five main elements of a new fiscal covenant: consolidating the adjustment; improving the productivity of public expenditure; enhancing the transparency in public spending; promoting social equity; and strengthening the institutional framework of democracy. It also considered a companion document entitled "Impact of the Asian crisis on Latin America" [LC/G.2026], which analysed the effects of the Asian crisis on Latin American economies and pointed out the main lessons to be drawn in terms of macroeconomic management, competitiveness and modernization of the production structure, the avoidance of financial risks and the reinforcement of the international financial system.

Addressing the session, the ECLAC Executive Secretary noted that the document on the fiscal covenant offered a complete, well-balanced picture of the role of public finances in regional development, and characterized it as an effort to provide a comprehensive analysis of the fiscal adjustment processes in the region over the last two decades. He said the Commission was proud to be celebrating its fiftieth anniversary and its major contributions to regional development as it responded to the changes that occurred in Latin America and the external environment over the years. In the midst of a transition from economies predominantly controlled by the State to market economies, ECLAC formulated a new message centred around the concept of changing production patterns with social equity. That concept was based on the importance of having a sound macroeconomy and an efficient State; the existence of development objectives; the absence of a straightforward connection between growth and social equity; the need to combine a healthy macroeconomy with strong meso- and micro-economies to achieve a dynamic form of productive development; the importance of social capital for economic growth; and the myriad ways of using the complementarities between the State and the market. ECLAC's history was a contribution to the debates on topics such as distribution of the fruits of development, sustainable development, inflation, the debt crisis and the various modalities of macroeconomic adjustment. It was also a history of a methodology of work combining the quest for an integrated vision of development, a dialectic of thought and action and a search for a regional identity.

In the Aruba resolution on the fiscal covenant: strengths, weaknesses, challenges [E/1998/41 (res. 564(XVII))], the Commission noted that the reorientation of regional development had led to a significant change in the role assigned to the State and institutional mechanisms and that, for economic reforms to be successful, the public sector must be efficient, competent, complement the private sector and have its finances in order. The Commission welcomed the document entitled "The fiscal covenant: strengths, weaknesses, challenges", concurring with the secretariat's position of the unifying concept of the "fiscal covenant" in increasing the productivity of public management, enhancing the transparency of fiscal actions, promoting the goal of equity in public revenue and expenditure, and encouraging the development of democratic institutions.

The Commission asked the secretariat to distribute and promote the document to as wide an audience as possible throughout the region in economic, academic, political, business and social spheres as well as international organizations dealing with economic development, particularly the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, and the Asian countries to stimulate further comparative analysis. The Executive Secretary should organize, before the Commission's next session, an international seminar of high-level experts and policy makers to consider issues analysed in the report and exchange relevant experiences. ECLAC urged the secretariat to develop the following topics in greater depth: the evolution of fiscal adjustment processes and their contribution to growth, stability, equity and competitiveness; comparative analysis and diffusion of experiences and best practices in public social expenditure, social security, decentralization, infrastructure, privatization, regulation, management of quasi-fiscal practices and improvement of public management; review of the consistency among fiscal, monetary and exchange-rate policies, and between those policies and regulation and supervision of the financial system under different macroeconomic regimes; consolidation of fiscal adjustment; access to stable levels of public revenues to meet the most pressing needs of the population, particularly in education, health, public safety and infrastructure; fiscal mechanisms that fostered greater equity in revenue collection and allocation and management of expenditure; best practices and policies for utilizing market and private management advantages in the delivery of social services; and use of direct and indirect taxation to improve distribution. It also urged the secretariat to continue its analysis of the economic, social and environmental aspects of development, and its study of the modernization of the public sector and the role of the State in the process of changing production patterns with social equity.

The Commission also adopted resolutions on: the reform of the United Nations and its impact on ECLAC; the programme of work of ECLAC for the biennium 2000-2001; the calendar of conferences for 1998-2000; follow-up to the Regional Programme of Action for the Women of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001 [YUN 1994, p. 739]; the Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre as the Population Division of ECLAC; support for the work of the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES); poverty, population and fiscal expenditure; preparations for the regional appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development [ibid., p. 956]; technical cooperation among developing countries and regions; participation of ECLAC associate member countries in the follow-up to the UN world conferences and in the work of the Economic and Social Council; and the place and date of the next session.

Economic trends

According to the 1998 summary of the economic survey of Latin America and the Caribbean [E/1999/18], 1998 was one of the most problematic years of recent times due to the international financial crisis that broke out in Asia in mid-1997, adverse weather conditions such as El Niño that affected the entire region, and a series of hurricanes that ravaged a number of Central American and Caribbean countries. Despite those upheavals, the economies of the region did fairly well, and the average growth rate of 2.2 per cent, down sharply from the 5.5 per cent of 1997, was higher than the average 1.7 per cent for the world economy as a whole.

The slowdown in the overall level of activity was due to results recorded in 13 countries (notably Argentina, Brazil, Guyana, Peru and Venezuela), where growth was between 3.5 and 7 points lower than the previous year, although Paraguay and Venezuela in Latin America and Guyana and Jamaica in the Caribbean were the only countries to record an actual contraction. Costa Rica registered a 6 per cent growth rate that was second only to the 7 per cent growth rate posted by the Dominican Republic for the third year in a row. Eight countries (Argentina, Bolivia, Grenada, Guatemala, Mexico, Nicaragua, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay) reported growth rates of between 4 and 6 per cent and another seven (Barbados, Dominica, Chile, El Salvador, Haiti, Honduras, Panama) had rates of between 2 and 4 per cent. The downswing in the region's economies was more serious than those figures suggested. In early 1998, their economies continued to exhibit the strong dynamism of 1997, but as the impact of the international financial crisis began to make its effects felt, through a steep drop in capital inflows and a severe deterioration in the terms of trade, the expansion in output began to flag, coming to a virtual standstill in the final months of the year. The unfavourable conditions were reflected more clearly in the region's industrial activity, which dropped by 3 per cent in Brazil compared to a 4 per cent rise in 1997. Results were also poor in Argentina, Chile, Colombia and Venezuela. Mexico's industrial growth rate also slumped towards the end of the year.

Economic activity in a number of countries was adversely affected in 1998 by the El Niño phenomenon, which caused serious droughts and flooding that had a severe impact on agriculture and destroyed housing, social infrastructure and production facilities in some South American countries. Hurricanes in Central America and the Caribbean caused direct and indirect losses estimated at over $7 billion.

The regional inflation rate, which had registered a steep reduction between 1990 and 1997, fell marginally to 10.2 per cent, which was the lowest in nearly 50 years. Thirteen of the 22 countries considered had single-digit inflation rates. In the majority of countries, the rate fell or remained low; only Ecuador, Nicaragua and Paraguay had significant increases. Argentina maintained its record as best performer with near zero inflation, while Brazil's inflation rate was only 2.5 per cent. The Dominican Republic, Haiti and Uruguay registered the biggest advances.

The slower rate of economic growth translated into higher unemployment, which rose from 7.3 per cent on average for the region in 1997 to 7.9 per cent in 1998, due primarily to the worsening situation in Brazil and Colombia. In most countries, the annual average rate was stationary or even fell, particularly in Argentina, Barbados, the Dominican Republic, Mexico, Nicaragua, Trinidad and Tobago and Uruguay.

The regional current account deficit widened from $64 billion, or 3 per cent of gross domestic product (GDP) in 1997, to $83 billion, or 4 per cent in 1998, due to the deterioration in the trade balance as a result of a weakening trend in the value of exports. In the three largest economies (Argentina, Brazil, Mexico), the deficit was close to the regional average but reached levels around or above 7 per cent of GDP in Chile and the Andean countries other than Venezuela.

The region's merchandise exports declined for the first time in 12 years due to a sharp drop in prices. Also, the unit value of exports declined on average by more than 8 per cent, reflecting a sharp drop in commodity prices in world markets, particularly those of raw materials from mining and agriculture. Venezuela experienced the greatest decline (25 per cent), while Ecuador, Chile and Peru suffered declines of between 13 and 14 per cent, followed by Colombia and Paraguay, which registered losses of about 10 per cent. In the Central American countries, export unit values declined or held stable, and the Caribbean countries were variously affected, with Trinidad and Tobago suffering losses in exports that amounted to the equivalent of 2 per cent of GDP.

Growth in import volume for the region as a whole was 11 per cent, considerably less than half the figure for the previous year. In value terms, the reduction was even greater, as prices of imported products fell significantly throughout the region. The slackening pace of imports was due in part to greater difficulty in financing them. The decline in the region's terms of trade, however, was limited to 4 per cent. While roughly half of the countries suffered a deterioration in their terms of trade, the other half found that lower prices for their exports were more than offset by lower prices for their imports. The improvement in the terms of trade was equivalent to about 1 per cent of GDP or more in the Central American countries, Uruguay and the Dominican Republic, 3 per cent in the case of Honduras and 4 per cent for Nicaragua. However, exporters of petroleum and metals were the chief losers, with losses exceeding 5 per cent of GDP in Venezuela and 2 per cent in Chile and Ecuador. In Brazil, the two effects offset one another. The net aggregate effect of the variation in the terms of trade for the region was negative and amounted to over $10 billion, equal to nearly half of the international reserves lost by the region in 1998 and 0.5 per cent of the region's GDP for the year.

External debt

In 1998, the region's total external debt expanded to $700 billion, an increase of 7 per cent in nominal terms, a pace faster than the previous year's and similar to the growth rate in 1995. The expansion was attributable largely to the increased external debt of a few countries, chiefly Argentina, Brazil and Chile. In Chile, the increase was due to private-sector borrowing, while in Argentina the cause was the expansion of the public sector's external debt. Other countries did not significantly increase their external debt, and some might have actually reduced it in nominal terms. Indicators of the region's external debt reflected a change for the worse for the first time in the 1990s, chiefly because of the stagnation in exports of goods and services. The ratio of accrued interest to exports of goods and services rose from 14.3 to 15.2 per cent, and the ratio of the external debt to exports of goods and services rose from 194 to 209 per cent. In 1998, under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative, a debt relief programme went into effect in Bolivia, and the International Monetary Fund, the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) and the World Bank were considering programmes for Honduras and Nicaragua.

Activities in 1998

Development policy and regional economic cooperation

According to the report on Commission activities in 1998 [LC/G.2073(SES.28/5)], the Economic Development Division in 1998 continued to provide a timely and analytical view of the state of the regional economy and analysis of the impacts of the international crisis on the economies of the region through its annual publications—Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean and Preliminary Overview of the Economy of Latin America and the Caribbean—as well as electronically via the Internet. The Division continued to monitor and analyse the region's national macroeconomic policies and to assess the effects of the structural changes and institutional reforms implemented over the last 15 years on patterns of economic growth and social equity. In addition, it focused on the determining factors of development in the analysis of linkages between the results in growth and equity, on the one hand, and macroeconomic policies and structural and institutional reforms, on the other; study of macroeconomic and fiscal policies for restoring or consolidating macroeconomic stability, strengthening domestic capacity to generate financial resources for investment and facilitating the appropriate working of institutions and instruments to channel those resources towards capital accumulation; productivity and job creation; and the role of social spending in increasing equity in Latin American societies in a sustainable manner. Operational activities were carried out through projects on growth, employment and equity in Latin America and the Caribbean in the 1990s and on experiences and policy lessons from decentralization and promotion of economic development. In addition, phase II of the project on institutional requirements for market-led structures in Latin America and the Caribbean began with financial support from Germany. During the year, the Division participated in numerous seminars and training courses, and provided technical assistance to several countries in the region on fiscal policy and decentralization. It also participated in activities supporting negotiations for the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) as well as strengthening cooperative links with bilateral and multilateral organizations within the region and elsewhere.

The Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation, which focused on the management of information and information technologies for economic and social development, directed its efforts during the year at enhancing knowledge, reflection and dissemination of the new information management and information technology paradigms which conditioned the performance and functioning of Latin American and Caribbean societies. Training seminars were held on total quality in local government management (Santiago, Chile, July) and on information search and retrieval strategies on the Internet (Mendoza, Argentina, July).

During 1998, ILPES worked to satisfy the concerns and priorities expressed by member Governments on the central issue of strategic management and State reform. The Commission, in its resolution [E/1998/41 (res. 570(XXVII))] on support for ILPES work, noted the resolutions emanating from the nineteenth meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Council for Planning [YUN 1997, p. 1009]. It endorsed the proposal that the tenth Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean and the eleventh meeting of the Regional Council for Planning be held in Chile towards the end of 1998, and requested the Executive Secretary to submit to the Commission's twenty-eighth (2000) session a report on the institutional, functional and financial implications for ILPES of the management reform process being carried forward by ECLAC.

The tenth Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean and the eleventh meeting of the Regional Council for Planning were held on 26 and 27 November, both in Santiago. The meetings focused on the functioning of the market economy and its prospects in each of the countries of the region. During 1998, ILPES conducted international, subregional and national training courses for participants from different countries of the region. It also organized the first international distance education course through the Internet on local management of solid household waste and environmental impact. Conferences were held in Argentina on knowledge, globalization and territory, and a cooperative agreement with Chile under the programme for making institutional improvements in the national investment system included courses on project preparation and appraisal. ILPES also provided support for other teaching activities in various academic centres and technical support to several countries of the region.

The International Trade Unit, the main body in ECLAC responsible for integration, open regionalism and regional cooperation, concentrated on analysing the evolution of the main Latin American and Caribbean integration schemes and their prospects. It focused on the tendency for trade policy instruments and productive restructuring of those schemes to converge towards a common denominator. Studies were made of the economic aspects of convergence between the various bilateral and multilateral agreements. Technical and logistical assistance was provided to the working group on services trade and, with IDB, to improve the information base on measures affecting hemispheric trade in services and statistical data on such trade. The Unit contributed to the annual publication Latin America and the Caribbean in the World Economy, on the evolution of regional integration in the trade, political, institutional and foreign relations domains. In conjunction with the Latin American Integration Association and the Latin American Economic System, a meeting of the Integration and Cooperation Secretariats of Latin America and the Caribbean was held (Santiago, 19 August), as was a seminar on the convergence of hemispheric integration processes (Santiago, November).

Productive, technological and entrepreneurial development

The Division of Production, Productivity and Management, which was responsible for productive, technological and entrepreneurial development, concentrated on working with countries to analyse and implement policies and actions aimed at: enhancing the technological dimension of productive activities; increasing competitiveness; overcoming bottlenecks in the markets for key factors of production; stimulating entrepreneurial development; identifying policies for strengthening and developing a better understanding of natural resource-based productive systems; and analysing the behaviour of different types of enterprises ranging from small and medium-sized firms to large transnational corporations and the latter's potential contribution to the region's economic development.

Under the ECLAC/United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) regional project to improve the quality, efficiency and relevance of technical and professional training, technical assistance was provided to Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela in connection with policies for export development, human resource development and technological innovation and diffusion. The project also supported governmental organizations in industrial policy design and helped promote the modernization of business associations. Progress was made in executing the second phase of the ECLAC/International Development Research Centre project on industrial restructuring, innovation and international competitiveness in Latin America and the Caribbean. Research activities on forestry clusters in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia and Mexico, as well as studies on the new contractual linkages between the auto parts and automotive industries and on the leather and footwear industries, were in their final stage. National studies on the growth, distributive and environmental implications of a natural resource-cluster development strategy were carried out, and a comparative study was started with dairy industry clusters in the Netherlands. Other studies with funding from several countries were initiated on energy and the dairy industry in Colombia and the dairy industry in Argentina, forestry in Brazil and Argentina and tourism in Chile.

In coordination with the Economic Development Division, the Division participated in a project financed by the Netherlands on growth, employment and equity in Latin America and the Caribbean in the 1990s. It collaborated in studies on economic liberalization in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico and Peru to evaluate the differences in labour productivity between those countries and the manufacturing industry in the United States. Studies also began on the telecommunications sector in those countries and the mining industry in Chile. Other projects included: studies on the labour and capital markets and on the market for technical knowledge in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico and Peru; development and upgrading of a series of analytical computer software programs for evaluating export competitiveness in the major markets for Latin American and Caribbean international trade; studies on small and medium-sized industrial enterprises in Latin America and the Caribbean and international competitiveness; studies on policies to improve the quality, efficiency and relevance of technical and professional training; and a comparative study of forestry incentives in eight countries of the region.

In agricultural development, attention focused on the analysis and formulation of policies towards investment, technological innovation and productive and service linkages in agriculture and agribusiness and in streamlining the land market and strengthening the registry of title deeds, promotion of the forestry and agriculture sector and rural development. ECLAC organized a meeting of officials from several international organizations involved with agricultural development to reflect on the development of Latin American agriculture since the 1980s, with special emphasis on the repercussions of adjustment, liberalization and free-market policies (Washington, D.C., 26-27 May), and an expert meeting to examine the impact of structural reforms and macroeconomic policies on agriculture in the region (Santiago, 26-27 November). Two national seminars were held in Bolivia and Peru on policy options to promote the development of agricultural land markets with a view to facilitating land transfers to small farmers. Technical assistance was provided to Chile on the development of poor rural areas.

In the field of entrepreneurial investments and strategies, a foreign direct investment information centre was set up to gather and process statistical and legal information generated by international agencies, national bodies and secondary sources and data arising from research undertaken. The centre supported research activity and provided for a broad diffusion of information on the subject.

Two publications, Foreign Investment in Latin America and the Caribbean and Directory on Foreign Investment and Transnational Corporations in Latin America and the Caribbean, were published in the context of research carried out during the year.

Investigations were made on issues related to globalization, international competitiveness, transnationalization and foreign investment negotiations. The Division served as a focal point in the ECLAC/Organization of American States (OAS)/IDB Tripartite Committee in support of the Negotiating Group on Competition Policy of FTAA.

International trade and development finance

The International Trade Unit, which was responsible for linkages with the world economy, competitiveness and productive specialization of the region, concentrated on changes in the international economy and their effect on the demand for Latin American and Caribbean export products, on the international organization of production, and on the capacity of the region to adapt. Special emphasis was placed on identifying opportunities for the region's economies in a context of greater transparency and clear rules, along with problems caused for developing countries by constant supervision of the tools used to alter their export profile. Under a project on the comparative study of development strategies of selected East Asian and Latin American countries with special reference to trade and industrial policies under the new international trading system, a seminar was held in Santiago on 11 and 12 August, which resulted in a book entitled Nuevas políticas comerciales en América Latina y Asia: algunos casos nacionales.

The fourth meeting of Trade Policy Officials of Latin America and the Caribbean was held in Santiago on 20 and 21 August to foster interchange of opinions and develop approaches for negotiations among regional countries with respect to FTAA and World Trade Organization (WTO) negotiations.

A joint ECLAC/United Nations Conference on Trade and Development project was carried out involving individual country case studies of private-sector interests in international and regional negotiations and mechanisms for diffusing information from the public to the private sector and for making up the negotiating agenda. Studies were carried out covering Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay in preparation for multilateral and hemispheric trade negotiations, as well as a conceptual and methodological study.

A workshop, organized jointly with the Latin American Faculty of Social Sciences, was held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in June on issues to be included in a positive trade negotiations agenda.

Environmental and land resource sustainability

In 1998, the ECLAC programme of work in environmental and land resource sustainability focused on activities related to public policy and institutional issues relating to the performance and environmental sustainability of countries; trade liberalization; human settlements; multilateral agreements relating to the environment and Agenda 21 [YUN 1992, p. 672]; natural disasters; natural resources; energy-related activities; and technical cooperation. Those activities included an ECLAC/UNDP project that examined the challenges and proposals for implementing economic instruments in environmental management; a project analysing the enhancement of citizens' awareness in formulating pollution control policies in Mexico City, Sao Paulo (Brazil) and Santiago; and analysis of trade liberalization and integration of the economies of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Mexico and Peru, and their impact on the environment and sustainable development. Follow-up activities to the decisions of the chapter of Agenda 21 dealing with sustainable development and international trade and environmental impact assessments were carried out to determine the effects of integration, especially in the context of the Southern Cone Common Market (MERCOSUR), FTAA and WTO. As part of the follow-up to multilateral agreements relating to the environment and Agenda 21, efforts were focused on an analysis, from a regional perspective, of some of the legal, institutional and economic issues identified in the Convention on Biological Diversity [YUN 1992, p. 683].

In response to natural disaster emergencies in the region, ECLAC teams collaborated in the assessment of damage caused by hurricane Mitch in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, hurricane Georges in the Dominican Republic and the earthquake that hit Colombia. A project to improve damage assessment methodology to promote natural disaster mitigation and risk reduction awareness and preparedness was initiated. Technical assistance, training and support were provided to Governments and international organizations to manage natural resources and formulate policies for increasing energy efficiency, improving water legislation and management of multiple uses of water and river basins, promoting the development of mining, management of coastal margins and issues related to oceans and fisheries. Various studies were also prepared on water legislation and water-related policies. Energy-related activities centred on efficient energy use and support for the Latin American Energy Organization in the implementation of a project on energy and sustainable development in Latin America and the Caribbean. ECLAC continued to provide technical assistance and advice to various countries on mining legislation and efficient use of energy and water.

Social development and equity

ECLAC's work under the subprogramme on social development and equity was carried out in a development phase characterized by improvements in the productivity and competitiveness of the region's economies, the inclusion of social dimensions in economic development and innovations in policy-making and the role of the State. However, despite progress made in reducing poverty levels, there was a deterioration in the distributional situation and a higher incidence of unemployment. Those conditions were aggravated by the Asian crisis, which led to slower economic growth in several Latin American countries.

In that context, the Social Development Division supported countries in designing and implementing social policies, programmes and projects, and in intensifying and keeping up to date the social diagnosis of the countries in the region; examined the effects of socio-economic development policies on welfare and social equity; and developed cooperative links with other international bodies.

A number of seminars and meetings were organized to analyse the current situation of social sector reform, the labour market and human resource management in health care, the reform of the State and public administration. A joint ECLAC/German Agency for Technical Cooperation research project on reforms to social policies management in Latin America and the Caribbean was carried out, as were training activities under the ECLAC/OAS programme on social policies in the region. Several publications were issued dealing with equity trends in education and employment, youth and rural development, comparative experiences in health care, the management of social policies and programmes and citizen safety. The 1998 edition of Social Panorama of Latin America was also published.

Special help was provided to Honduras under a project to support the development of guidelines for eradicating poverty, and technical assistance was provided to the Dominican Republic in producing a national human development report, in conjunction with UNDP. Simultaneous analysis of poverty alleviation and income distribution improvement objectives was carried out with support from the Netherlands.

With respect to activities related to welfare and social equity, contributions were made to the document on an overall assessment of the results of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] to be presented at the second follow-up meeting of the Summit and to a special session of the General Assembly in the year 2000.

On the topic of youth, inter-institutional collaboration was strengthened around preparations and follow-up to the 1998 World Youth Forum (see PART THREE, Chapter XI), and a meeting was held to analyse best practices in projects self-managed by young people. The Regional Youth Meeting of Latin America and the Caribbean prior to the third session of the World Youth Forum was held from 1 to 3 June in Santiago.

The Commission [E/1998/41 (res. 571(XXVII))] considered that the promotion of social and gender equity was a priority objective of the region to ensure full enjoyment of human rights, strengthen sustainable development and consolidate democracy; that population programmes helped to foster social equity; and that problems in reproductive health and gender equity severely affected those living in poverty, especially women, youth and children. It supported the efforts of Governments and civil society organizations, in particular women's and youth organizations, to meet the specific needs and requirements of women, youth and children. The Commission requested Governments to consider population and development programmes, especially those focusing on the promotion of reproductive health and gender equity, as a central component of their social development strategies and plans for eradicating poverty; promote political consensus-building to strengthen the redistributive capacity of fiscal expenditure and promote allocation to programmes with the greatest impact on the poorest sectors, particularly in primary health care and pre-school and basic education; and give priority to mobilizing financial resources, both internal and external, to achieve the countries' objectives in population and development.

Integration of women in development

During 1998, ECLAC activities for the integration of women in development centred on follow-up to the Regional Programme of Action for the Women of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1995-2001 [YUN 1994, p. 739], the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women [YUN 1995, p. 1170] and the Santiago Consensus, adopted at the seventh session of the Regional Conference on the Integration of Women into the Economic and Social Development of Latin America and the Caribbean [YUN 1997, p. 1012], and preparations for the eighth session to be held in Peru in 2000. Two meetings of the Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference were held (Santiago, 13-14 July; San Salvador, El Salvador, 2-4 December). A process was promoted to institutionalize the gender perspective in ECLAC's substantive work, and progress was made in developing a system of gender indicators emphasizing the strategic areas of the Regional Programme of Action and the Platform for Action to help Governments formulate public policies from a gender perspective and evaluate commitments and agreements.

Indicators were established for assessing the current situation of women in socio-political participation and leadership, and related data were collected in all countries of the region. The Presiding Officers of the Regional Conference at their July meeting asked the ECLAC secretariat to draw up a proposal for gender indicators that would be useful as data on the situation of women in comparison to men.

A meeting of specialized agencies and other organizations of the UN system on the advancement of women in Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 15 July) discussed the possibilities for exchange and coordination in follow-up to the Platform for Action and the Regional Programme of Action, as well as their support to the preparation and dissemination of indicators to assess compliance with those agreements.

The Commission [E/1998/41 (res. 568(XXVII))] adopted the Santiago Consensus of the seventh session of the Regional Conference. It welcomed the request of the Conference that it be renamed the Regional Conference on Women in Latin America and the Caribbean and endorsed the resolutions adopted on national institutions for women and on activities in follow-up to the Regional Programme of Action.

The Commission also took note of the secretariat's proposal to create a subprogramme for promoting the tasks related to mainstreaming the gender perspective into the main spheres of the regional development process [res. 566(XXVII)].

Population and development

In 1998, the Latin America and Caribbean Demographic Centre (CELADE) became the Population Division of ECLAC. Its activities centred on monitoring demographic trends, particularly those relating to fertility, mortality and international migration in the countries of the region. Cooperating actively with national statistical offices and related institutions, the Division produced new estimates and projections at the national level that were published in the Demographic Bulletin. It updated and improved the database on spatial distribution of the population and urbanization and the data bank of the project on investigation of international migration in Latin America.

The Division supported the ECLAC sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development in assessing the progress achieved by countries and the obstacles they faced in meeting the commitments assumed at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955].

With financial support from the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), the Division organized two meetings of governmental experts (Santiago, 13-16 October; and Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago, November) to exchange views and share experiences on new methodological tools and techniques in preparation for the 2000 census round. The first meeting focused on the Latin American countries while the second, organized jointly with the Caribbean Community (CARICOM), focused on the Caribbean countries.

Work continued on updating the REDATAM-Plus software (retrieval of data for small areas by microcomputer). New versions were developed for Windows to facilitate the management of large amounts of data from different sources in combination with geographical data systems and other related tools.

Research activities addressed issues relating to trends in ageing, the relationship between reproductive health and poverty, international migration and linkages between population and youth. A report on the relationship between reproductive health and poverty, submitted to the ECLAC sessional Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development at its second meeting in May, concluded that reproductive health should be included in any strategy for improving living conditions, upgrading human resources and reducing economic and social inequalities.

Technical cooperation activities were carried out in Bolivia, Nicaragua, Peru and Suriname in health, poverty and information systems. The twenty-first intensive regional course on demographic analysis for development was conducted at ECLAC headquarters between August and December with 18 participants, training workshops were conducted on the use of REDATAM-Plus software and related tools, and assistance was provided to several training institutions in population and development.

The Commission [E/1998/41 (res. 569(XXVII))] endorsed the Executive Secretary's decision to incorporate CELADE fully into the ECLAC secretariat as the Latin American and Caribbean Demographic Centre-Population Division, and expressed its desire to see it continue its traditional activities as efficiently as before, particularly its technical assistance, applied research and training of human resources in population. It requested that resources be allocated from the regular budget to CELADE, as the Population Division, and requested international agencies and States members of ECLAC to reinforce their support for its activities.

The Commission [res. 572(XXVII)] concurred as to the importance of identifying and promoting a national mechanism in each country for follow-up to the 1994 Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, and of identifying or maintaining a liaison agency to coordinate related activities. It decided that the next meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee should examine population, youth and development and that the ECLAC secretariat should prepare substantive documentation on the subject. The Presiding Officers of the Ad Hoc Committee were requested to maintain permanent contact with the secretariat in order to follow up the Latin American and Caribbean Regional Plan of Action on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 740] between ECLAC sessions and to cooperate in obtaining funds for its implementation. CELADE and ECLAC's subregional headquarters for the Caribbean, in cooperation with UNFPA and other relevant national and regional organizations, should promote activities in countries that placed priority on human resources training, the year 2000 census round, international migration, population information and education directed towards vulnerable groups, ageing and the elderly, the family, social inequalities and vulnerable groups, including indigenous populations.

The Commission asked relevant bodies to train human resources and implement programmes in population and development, equity and gender; the sexual and reproductive health of adolescents; education for family life; prevention of maternal mortality, including complications of abortions; prevention of sexually transmitted diseases, such as HIV/AIDS; health-care management; access to quality services in reproductive health; sexuality, reproductive health and gender; prevention of sexual violence; and the status of children, adolescents and young people.

The Commission entrusted CELADE, in coordination with the Caribbean subregional headquarters and in consultation with UNFPA, with drafting a report on the situation and action taken in Latin America and the Caribbean with respect to implementation of the recommendations of the 1994 Programme of Action, to be submitted by 15 November for consideration by the Presiding Officers of the Ad Hoc Committee, and which should be submitted as the region's report to the Hague Forum in February 1999 and to the Commission on Population and Development, in its capacity as preparatory body for the special (2000) session of the General Assembly.

The Commission reiterated its agreement to involve civil society organizations at the national, regional and international levels and urged the countries of the region, even in periods of financial restriction, to allocate sufficient resources to implement population and development programmes that included the reduction of poverty among their objectives and to advocate the inclusion of population and reproductive health issues in reforms implemented in the education and health sectors. It also urged the international community to increase technical and financial assistance for that purpose.

The report on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the 1994 Programme of Action was presented to the meeting of the Presiding Officers of the Ad Hoc Committee (Santiago, 14-15 December).

Economic statistics and projections

The Economic Statistics and Projections Division carried out activities to expand the regional framework of statistical information, develop and disseminate statistical information, promote regional cooperation on statistical matters and produce forward-looking studies on development in the region and the region's participation in the world arena. Those activities included: consolidation, amplification and operation of the Regional Short-term Indicators Database and setting up a short-term financial database and another containing quarterly GDP figures; the definitive incorporation of the latest international statistical classifications based on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System for international trade data; the creation of an External Debt Database for countries in the region; the incorporation of new surveys in the Household Survey Data Bank and the systemization and documentation of its contents and definition of expeditious user access mechanisms; implementation of the gradual migration to an Excel 95/97 computer platform for the databases of the tables contained in the Statistical Yearbook of Latin America and the Caribbean; and the adaptation of the balance-of-payments data bank to the new concepts and methods for compiling the regional national accounts series, in relation to the new base year, 1995.

Support continued for the regional implementation of a new revision of the System of National Accounts (SNA 1993), including its translation into Spanish and publication by the United Nations and the creation of a glossary of national accounts terminology widely used in the region. Action was initiated to standardize the calculation of consumer price indices in the countries of the region and progress was made in disseminating information via electronic media. The Division participated extensively in the MECOVI programme to improve surveys on living conditions in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Several projects continued in the formation of statistical databases, household surveys, improvements to national accounts, production of basic statistics and social programmes and policies. Progress was made specifically in the adaptation, enhancement and production of basic statistics, environmental and poverty statistics and indicators and services statistics. A regional seminar on national accounts to prepare accounts for institutional sectors was held in Rio de Janeiro between 23 and 27 November in conjunction with the UN Statistics Division and the Brazilian Geographical Statistical Institute.

Two regional workshops in the framework of the MECOVI programme were held: one on planning and undertaking household surveys to measure living conditions (Aguascalientes, Mexico, 1-3 April) and the other on the measurement of income in household surveys (Buenos Aires, 10-13 November). In addition, an international workshop on poverty was held (Aguascalientes, 24 August-4 September).

With respect to forward-looking studies, the focus was on external elements that influenced economic trends and medium-term prospects of the region and on analysing their linkages with the world economy. National macroeconomic projections were updated and the regional economy was monitored in the framework of Project Link, which coordinated world projections under the leadership of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs.

Technical cooperation and assistance

During the year, ECLAC's Programme Planning and Operations Division completed 34 regional, subregional and national projects, financed from extrabudgetary funds. It launched 42 new projects, 10 of which were completed in 1998.

ECLAC continued to support and promote technical cooperation among developing countries (TCDC) in the region. The Committee on Cooperation among Developing Countries and Regions, which met in May during the twenty-seventh session of ECLAC, analysed the operational aspects of the new TCDC guidelines for the 1997-1999 triennium [YUN 1997, p. 891] (see PART THREE, Chapter II). ECLAC continued to build TCDC elements into the execution of projects financed with extrabudgetary resources to include the promotion and exchange of TCDC experiences and results. It also continued to support the meetings of Directors of International Cooperation of Latin America and the Caribbean, focusing particularly on activities for modernizing national TCDC focal points on information technology matters. ECLAC organized several subregional training workshops on information technology issues, especially through its Internet web site.

The Commission [E/1998/41 (res. 573(XXVII))] took note of the report [LC/G.2000(SES.27/14)] entitled "Activities of the ECLAC system to promote and support technical cooperation among developing countries and regions during the biennium 1996-1997". It stressed the need for fuller technical cooperation among developing countries and regions in implementing and consolidating the strategy for changing production patterns with social equity in the region, and emphasized the importance of closely linking TCDC with economic cooperation. The Commission emphasized the importance of ECLAC's support for regional Governments to increase the use of TCDC mechanisms and modalities at the subregional, regional and interregional levels in public economic and social development policy.

The Commission requested the Executive Secretary to intensify the incorporation of TCDC modalities into the secretariat's programme of work, especially in technical cooperation project formulation and execution, and to broaden the dissemination of information on such projects and activities to national technical cooperation focal points; strengthen links between the ECLAC system and national TCDC focal points to improve and expand the utilization of information on successes in TCDC projects executed by ECLAC, and support such focal points in taking advantage of the opportunities offered by connection to global information networks; continue to support TCDC cooperation networks and systems at the regional and subregional levels, especially through the reinforcement of networks or systems for data collection and analysis in economic and social sectors of priority importance to Governments; collaborate with UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC in strengthening TCDC and provide technical support for its activities in areas addressed by UNDP to promote TCDC during 1997-1999, especially with regard to experience gained in programmes for eliminating poverty, achievements in urban management, identification of strategies for promoting small and medium-sized enterprise and policies concerning trade, investment and macroeconomic management; continue to support coordinating mechanisms with a view to inter-agency coordination in the execution of TCDC projects; collaborate with the Permanent Secretariat of the Latin American Economic System in organizing joint activities to support national TCDC focal points; promote joint activities with the secretariats of the other regional commissions in support of TCDC in developing regions, in coordination with UN organizations; and continue to incorporate the gender perspective in TCDC activities.

Caribbean

The ECLAC subregional headquarters for the Caribbean—the secretariat of the Caribbean Development and Cooperation Committee (CDCC), located in Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago—focused on the analysis of issues relevant to the economic and social development of the subregion. The highlight of the year was the ministerial meeting of the seventeenth session of CDCC on 15 May in Oranjestad, which was preceded by the technical phase of the session held at its headquarters on 23 and 24 March. CDCC reviewed the activities of the ECLAC secretariat during 1996-1997 and approved the proposed work programme for 2000-2001.

CDCC, in its capacity as provisional joint secretariat, continued its activities relating to implementation of the Programme of Action of the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States [YUN 1994, p. 783], in cooperation with CARICOM and with the support of an inter-institutional group, which provided an innovative mechanism for promoting collaboration between regional agencies and institutions. It assisted member States in preparations for the special (2000) session of the General Assembly for the review and appraisal of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development [ibid., p. 956], including preparation of a progress report on follow-up activities in the Caribbean, which was approved at a subregional preparatory meeting (Port of Spain, 17-18 November).

Activities were also undertaken for implementation of the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1115] and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1170].

CDCC continued to support the work of the Consultative Group on Smaller Economies in the context of the establishment of the Free Trade Area of the Americas, the secretariat of CARICOM, the Association of Caribbean States on issues pertaining to the trade agreements of the countries of the subregion, the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, other regional and subregional institutions and international organizations and agencies. It also implemented a project funded by the Netherlands to support associate member countries of ECLAC and non-independent Caribbean countries in developing institutional linkages and accessing benefits from the UN system and other intergovernmental organizations.

The promotion of the intensive use of new information technologies was another field in which the subregional headquarters assisted member States. In collaboration with CARICOM and with UNFPA funding, it organized a seminar (Trinidad and Tobago, 2-4 December) to prepare the Caribbean countries for the year 2000 population and housing censuses. CDCC continued to collect and coordinate information on the economic and social development of the region, and conducted studies on global and hemisphere-wide development, with particular reference to the economies of CDCC member States, as well as to trade, investment and the environment. Newsletters provided updated information on trade, finance and development strategies and other issues of interest to the sub-region.

Two projects were carried out through the Caribbean Council for Science and Technology (CCST), with funding from OAS, on facilitating the transfer and development of technologies for industrial food processing and preservation and on the improvement of teaching of science and mathematics at the primary level. CCST held its sixteenth plenary session in Barbados on 10 and 11 December. Other activities in science and technology were carried out on renewable energy and the establishment of the Symbiosis network.

Mexico and Central America

ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico expanded its studies on priority issues, including regional and hemisphere-wide integration; macro-economic policies and growth; sustainable technological development in agricultural production; industrial competitiveness; new modalities of participation on the international market; policies on social development and equity; and integration in the field of energy.

Technical cooperation activities were carried out in collaboration with governmental and regional agencies. Studies were conducted on developments in the drinking water sector in the subregion, and a proposal was drawn up for institutional re-engineering of the Regional Coordination Committee of Drinking Water and Sanitation Institutions of Central America, Panama and the Dominican Republic. The subregional headquarters also collaborated with the Mission for the Verification of Human Rights and of Compliance with the Commitments of the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala (see PART ONE, Chapter III) by offering support to Guatemala on the analysis of economic and financial issues and with the registry of urban and rural properties.

The subregional headquarters played a special role in the coordination of ECLAC activities in response to the emergency situations caused by natural disasters. Studies were carried out to assess the damage caused by hurricanes Mitch and Georges and identify rehabilitation and reconstruction measures. Studies were also made of the impact of the El Niño phenomenon on the Central American and Andean economies, in connection with which technical cooperation was provided to Costa Rica and Ecuador, and on the socio-economic impact of the earthquake that hit the coffee-growing regions of Colombia.

The economic development section prepared a study and organized a meeting of experts (Mexico City, 12-13 November) on the impact of tax incentives on savings and investment in Central America. Other activities included the annual study of economic trends in the 10 countries of the subregion, the publication of a report on Mexico's economic situation, and studies on structural reform and the performance of the Cuban economy in the 1990s, and on social, policy, the macroeconomy and the productive base in Honduras.

With regard to industrial competitiveness and agricultural modernization, a number of studies and expert meetings were carried out on the institutional change and organizational development of small rural production units in Central America; promotion and modernization of the agroexport sector in the Central American isthmus; and analysis of land markets in El Salvador and Guatemala. Studies were also made of the maquila industry and trends in the industrial sector in Central America. Technical cooperation and training activities were undertaken in connection with the application of the Module for the Analysis of Growth of International Commerce.

Activities with regard to labour markets, gender and equity focused on remittances and family economy in El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua and on the social impact of globalization on the peasant economy. An expert meeting was held on globalization in the peasant economies of Central America: social implications and technology (Mexico City, 8 April).

Work in the areas of international trade and regional economic integration and cooperation concentrated on the analysis of trade policies, trends in integration, trade liberalization, environmental prospects, and institutional and commercial aspects of FTAA. Several studies and expert meetings were organized on those subjects.

In the energy sector, studies were made on the feasibility of a gas pipeline for Mexico and the Central American isthmus, and reform processes in the electricity industry and its short- and medium-term prospects. Statistical yearbooks were published on hydrocarbons and electricity, and technical cooperation was provided to the secretariat of the Central American Committee for Cooperation on Hydrocarbons and to the Central American Electrification Council.

Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/3 [YUN 1997, p. 1016], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/53/420] on cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American Economic System (SELA), which had intensified and become more diversified. Such cooperation included participation of ECLAC and SELA representatives in meetings of the two institutions and preparation by ECLAC of specialized documentation in support of SELA activities. The Latin American Centre for Economic and Social Documentation cooperated with SELA in 1998 in the framework of ECLAC's assistance in reconstituting the SELA Permanent Secretariat's information systems following a fire in February. A technical assistance mission in April, financed by UNDP, issued a report on reconstruction of the data bank and information management systems of the Permanent Secretariat. The ECLAC subregional headquarters in Mexico cooperated closely with SELA in conducting, in various Central American countries, the annual course on Central American integration. ECLAC contributed, as joint publisher, to the production of several SELA publications, particularly on social policy, economic integration and the environment.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations maintained close cooperation with SELA, inter alia, through reciprocal attendance at meetings, exchange of information, experience, documents and publications, and implementation of joint activities. The International Monetary Fund's Legal Department provided technical assistance for the third high-level meeting of the reform of financial systems in Latin America and the Caribbean (Madrid, Spain, 28-29 May). The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization cooperated with SELA in programmes relating to integrated economic and social policies, growth and employment, globalization and cultural undertakings, intellectual property, crafts development and communication for integration. Both organizations continued to execute a regional project on communication for integration in Latin America and the Caribbean, which was to be completed during the year. Cooperation activities also continued with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Bank, the World Intellectual Property Organization and UNDP.

The Secretary-General concluded that cooperation between SELA and the programmes, organizations and agencies of the United Nations was growing, and inter-agency cooperation had been established in many areas in which optimal use was being made of existing resources for the benefit of countries in the region.

By decision 53/408 of 22 October, the General Assembly deferred consideration of the item on cooperation between the United Nations and SELA until its fifty-fourth (1999) session and included it in the provisional agenda of that session.

Programme and organizational questions

The Commission [E/1998/41 (res. 566(XXVII))] approved the draft programme of work of the ECLAC system [LC/G.2006(SES.27/10)], including ILPES, for the 2000-2001 biennium. Activities were proposed under 12 subprogrammes. It decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group, established pursuant to resolution 553(XXVI) [YUN 1996, p. 930] on UN reform and its impact on ECLAC, should set the priorities for the programme of work for 2000-2001 and update the current work programme. The Commission also approved the ECLAC calendar of conferences [LC/G.1992(SES.27/11)] for 1998-2000 [res. 567(XXVII)].

The Commission [res. 574(XXVII)] requested ECLAC member countries to devise mechanisms to permit associate members to participate in the special sessions of the General Assembly to review and appraise implementation of the programmes of action of recent UN conferences and in their preparatory processes, and to participate in the work of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies.

Venue of the twenty-eighth session of ECLAC

On 20 July, the Economic and Social Council, acting on ECLAC's recommendation [res. 575 (XXVII)], decided that the Commission's twenty-eight session would be held in Mexico in 2000 (decision 1998/213).

Impact of UN reform

Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/54 [YUN 1997, p. 1017], the Commission considered the report of the Chairman on the work of the Ad Hoc Working Group established pursuant to resolution 553(XXVI) [LC/G.2008 (SES.27/4)], which described the results of the meetings of the group, including its third meeting (New York, 12 November 1997), at which progress in the implementation of the pilot management scheme was considered. At the meeting, doubts and objections were raised with regard to the sequencing of the scheme's implementation, its legality and its possible postponement until decisions were taken in relevant forums. The Executive Secretary informed the meeting that the scheme might be put into practice gradually and progressively, while awaiting the Commission's decision at its twenty-seventh session concerning those areas of concern.

The Commission also considered a note by the secretariat on the case of ECLAC in the context of the general review of the regional commissions by the Economic and Social Council [LC/G.2009 (SES.27/5)], and another secretariat note [LC/G.2011 (SES.27/7)], which examined the new ECLAC management scheme, ECLAC's policy framework, performance management, authority and responsibility, and accountability. In the conclusions and recommendations, it was stated that the new management pilot scheme represented a major change in doing things at ECLAC and would initiate a process of cultural change. Its successful implementation and transfer of lessons learned to other areas of the UN Secretariat depended on support for further institutional development, including competence-building, training and capacity-building. (See PART FIVE, Chapter I, for details of the pilot management scheme.)

The Commission recommended that ECLAC continue to apply the reform measures along the lines indicated in the document on the new management scheme, bearing in mind the decisions of the relevant legislative organs [E/1998/41 (res. 565(XXVII))]. It renewed the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group established pursuant to resolution 553(XXVI), and reiterated the instructions given to the Executive Secretary in that resolution [YUN 1996, p. 930]. The Commission requested the Ad Hoc Group to consider, in consultation with the Executive Secretary, progress achieved in the implementation of current UN reform proposals, including the pilot management scheme, to report to the Economic and Social Council at its resumed substantive session, for subsequent consideration by the General Assembly, and to transmit its proposals regarding the priorities and updating of the programme of work for 2000-2001 to the Assembly. The Ad Hoc Group was also to report to the Commission at its twenty-eighth (2000) session.

Western Asia

The Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA) did not meet in 1998, nor did its Technical Committee. The Commission's twentieth session was to be held in Beirut, Lebanon, on 27 and 28 May 1999.

Economic and social trends

Economic trends

Overall economic performance in the ESCWA region was dismal in 1998, according to the summary of the survey of economic and social developments in the region [E/1999/19]. Preliminary estimates indicated that the combined real GDP, excluding Iraq, increased only by 1 per cent on average, a significant decline from the annual growth rates of 3.7 per cent in 1996 and 3.4 per cent in 1997. With the region's high population growth rate of 2.5 per cent, real GDP per capita in the region registered a negative 1.5 per cent growth. The 1998 combined real GDP of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) countries (Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates) as a group contracted by 0.02 per cent compared to its 1997 level, while that of the more diversified economies (Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen, West Bank and Gaza Strip) registered a positive 3.6 per cent annual growth.

Among GCC countries, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates registered estimated negative real GDP growth rates of 0.6 per cent and 1 per cent, respectively. The low growth rates in the GCC countries were attributable to a sharp decline in oil prices and government revenues, unlike the more diversified economies, which were not adversely affected by the decline in oil prices since late 1997. Kuwait's economic growth, which registered a positive 1 per cent, was also adversely affected because of large reductions in planned government expenditures and structural economic imbalances. The economies of Bahrain and Oman were estimated to have grown positively by 2.2 per cent and 2.5 per cent, respectively. Qatar registered the highest real GDP, with a growth rate of 4.4 per cent, but considerably lower than the 15.5 per cent achieved in 1997, due mainly to the 10.5 per cent increase in oil production and the rapidly rising return from investment in its liquefied natural gas project.

In contrast, among the countries with more diversified economies, Egypt's growth rate was estimated at 4.7 per cent, which was slightly lower than in 1997, but nonetheless the largest in the entire ESCWA region as a result of the implementation of economic reform since 1991. Lebanon's estimated annual rate of 3.8 per cent was the second highest due to the expansion in its construction sector and rising profits in its banking sector. Yemen's real GDP per capita contracted by 1.7 per cent due to the sharp fall in oil prices and export revenues, curtailment of government expenditure, poor performance of its industrial sector and the rise in interest rates on the Yemeni rial. Jordan's real GDP was estimated at an annual growth rate of 1.7 per cent compared to 2.2 per cent in 1997. The deterioration in the economic performance in the GCC countries and the financial crisis in Asia negatively affected Jordan. The Syrian Arab Republic experienced the smallest economic growth in 1998, at 1.5 per cent real GDP, due to sharp declines in oil prices and revenues, falling prices of cotton exports and cutbacks in aid from GCC countries, resulting in a decrease in public investment projects. Despite the oil-for-food deal agreed to by the Security Council (see PART ONE, Chapter IV), Iraq's poor economic conditions remained unchanged in 1998 because of the decline in its oil production capability. The West Bank and Gaza Strip registered a positive 2.1 per cent real GDP growth in 1998, compared to 1 per cent in 1997, due to the reduction in the number of days in which the borders were closed by Israeli authorities.

Inflation rates in the ESCWA region fell further in most countries in 1998. The highest inflation rate in GCC countries was an estimated 3.5 per cent in Qatar. Preliminary estimates indicated that four GCC countries—Bahrain (0.5 per cent), Kuwait (negative 1.3 per cent), Oman (0.5 per cent) and Saudi Arabia (negative 0.8 per cent)—experienced deflation in 1998 due to the appreciation of their currencies along with the United States dollar and prudent monetary policies and considerable reductions in government spending. Among the more diversified economies, Yemen witnessed the highest inflation rate—12.2 per cent; the Syrian Arab Republic reduced its inflation rate to 4.9 per cent; the West Bank and Gaza Strip also came down to 4.1 per cent; and Lebanon declined to 3.8 per cent. Inflation rates in Egypt came down to 3.6 per cent while Jordan's declined to 2.5 per cent. The currencies of all the GCC countries, with the exception of the Kuwaiti dinar, were pegged to the United States dollar, with which they appreciated against the Japanese yen and most other Asian and Western European currencies. Currencies of the more diversified economies, excluding Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic, also remained stable against the dollar. Therefore, the prices of imported goods to ESCWA member countries declined significantly, pushing down inflation rates.

Unemployment, a chronic problem facing the region's more diversified economies, worsened in 1998 as the region's economic performance failed to generate adequate employment opportunities to absorb the rapidly increasing labour supply. In addition, the economic slowdowns in the traditionally labour-receiving GCC countries resulted in shrinking demand for expatriate workers, which further exacerbated the problem. Yemen and Jordan had the highest unemployment rates in 1998 in the region, with estimates of 27 per cent and 21 per cent, respectively. Egypt estimated its unemployment rate at slightly below 10 per cent, while other sources, including the International Labour Organization, estimated it at 17 per cent. Lebanon placed its unemployment rate at about 10 per cent and the Syrian Arab Republic officially registered it at 5 per cent. In the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, the unemployment rate was estimated to have declined from 20.9 per cent in 1997 to 15.6 per cent in 1998. The GCC countries' unemployment problem was different from the more diversified economies. They had been the labour-receiving countries, but because of the increasing indigenous labour force, those countries were forced to create employment opportunities for their own nationals by implementing measures such as training opportunities for their nationals; making the private sector more attractive; giving incentives to private companies for employing nationals; and levying penalties on those companies that did not meet the recommended quota of employed nationals. Bahrain and Oman were the more successful in that endeavour among the GCC countries.

ESCWA member countries' fiscal position deteriorated in general in 1998, and their budget deficits as percentages of GDP increased considerably compared to the preceding two years, due to the steep decline in oil prices, especially in the GCC countries. Qatar's deficit was estimated at 9.5 per cent of GDP, the highest ratio among GCC countries, and the United Arab Emirates at 7.5 per cent. All other GCC countries curtailed government expenditures as oil prices fell, so their budget deficits remained relatively small. Oman registered the lowest budget-to-GDP ratio among GCC countries at 2.8 per cent. Only Lebanon managed to decrease its budget deficit from 23.5 per cent in 1997 to 15 per cent in 1998, while Egypt maintained its budget deficit of 1 per cent—the lowest among ESCWA countries. In other diversified economies, Jordan's deficit as a percentage of GDP was 9.3 per cent, the Syrian Arab Republic, 3.6 per cent, and Yemen, 4 per cent. The countries with more diversified economies pursued tight fiscal policies in 1998 due to declines in foreign aid and spillovers from GCC countries.

Oil

The region's oil production increased by 1 million barrels per day to 18.3 million barrels per day, an 8 per cent increase over the 1997 figure of 17.35 barrels per day. However, that did not sufficiently counterbalance the 34 per cent decline in prices and hence revenues, which declined by 28.6 per cent to $67.7 billion, compared to the 1997 level of $94.8 billion. The average Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) crude-oil basket price in 1998, which was estimated at $12.3 per barrel, declined even further, reaching a monthly average of $9.69 per barrel in December.

Trade

Due to the steep decline in oil prices and export revenues, the total value of ESCWA's exports in 1998, excluding the West Bank and Gaza Strip, was estimated at $97.1 billion, a drop of 21.7 per cent from the 1997 level.

Export revenues of GCC countries, estimated at $79.4 billion in 1998, declined 26.4 per cent from 1997 revenues. The largest percentage declines in export revenues were registered for Kuwait and Saudi Arabia at 31 per cent and 28.5 per cent, respectively, while the smallest was registered for Bahrain at 19.8 per cent. In contrast, the countries with more diversified economies increased their combined total export revenues by 10 per cent in 1998 from the 1997 level. The main contributing factor was an increase in Iraqi exports under the oil-for-food programme authorized by the Security Council in February (see PART ONE, Chapter IV). However, total exports of Yemen (30.5 per cent), the Syrian Arab Republic (20.4 per cent) and Egypt (11.7 per cent) were estimated to have dropped significantly. Jordan and Lebanon, non-oil exporters, increased their exports by an estimated 5.1 per cent and 15.3 per cent, respectively.

Total values of imports were also estimated to have declined, by 2.6 per cent from their 1997 level, as a result of the fall in oil revenue, a significant decline in world commodity prices and the decline of the value of imports from several East Asian countries owing to the depreciation of their respective currencies. Import values of GCC countries were estimated to have decreased by 4.8 per cent from their 1997 values, varying within the group between 3 per cent in Oman and 6.5 per cent in the United Arab Emirates. For the more diversified economies as a group, preliminary estimates for 1998 indicated a growth rate of 2.1 per cent in total imports, owing primarily to the increase in Iraq's imports. Imports of the other countries of the group declined by between 8.6 per cent in Jordan and 3.5 per cent in Egypt.

The export/import ratio of the ESCWA region deteriorated in 1998 to reach only 0.91, with that of the GCC countries decreasing from 1.42 in 1997 to 1.1 in 1998, while the ratio for the more diversified economies was estimated to have increased from 0.48 in 1997 to 0.51 in 1998.

Social trends

The population of ESCWA member countries grew from 87.8 million to 157.6 million between 1978 and 1998, an average annual increase of 2.9 per cent, and was projected to reach 210 million by 2010. The region's population was relatively young, with about 41 per cent below 15 years of age in 1998, while only 4 per cent were older than 65. Despite the decline in the total fertility rate from 6.8 in 1978 to 4.4 in 1998, growth momentum would increase the region's population due to the high percentage of young people of child-bearing age and the improvement in average life expectancy. With new entrants to the labour force, there was a need to upgrade the quality of education and expand vocational training programmes.

Urban population growth was faster than total and rural population growth in the ESCWA member countries as a whole, and urbanization progressed faster than in other developing countries. Most member countries made considerable progress in extending infrastructure facilities to dwelling units in the urban areas. Some 75 to 90 per cent of households in GCC countries had direct access to water and sewage networks and over 95 per cent of dwellings were connected to kitchen and bathroom facilities. However, lower income countries achieved more modest progress. In Egypt, only 42 per cent of households were directly connected to water and sewage networks, and squatter settlements in Sana'a and Hodiedah, the West Bank and Gaza, Beirut, Baghdad, Amman and Aqaba lacked any access to adequate housing, sanitation and refuse collection, resulting in serious environmental problems. In contrast, the urban-rural gap in extending electricity supply in most countries of the region was minimal.

The gender gap in socio-economic status persisted in most of the countries in the region, despite considerable progress made in the status of Arab women. Continued inadequate participation in education for girls and adult women had serious negative implications for their skills development, employment opportunities and access to income and revenue. Although political participation by Arab women improved, with an increase in the number of ESCWA countries granting women the right to vote and a rise in the number of women parliamentarians, their appointments to high-ranking government posts or executive levels continued to be limited. The highest percentage of economically active women in the region was recorded in Lebanon and Egypt, while the lowest rates were in the GCC countries.

Activities in 1998

During 1998, ESCWA activities under the 1998-1999 work programme [E/ESCWA/C.1/20/4 (Part 1)] focused on the management of natural resources and the environment; improvement of the quality of life; economic development and global changes; coordination of policies and harmonization of norms and regulations for sectoral development; and development, coordination and harmonization of statistics and information.

Economic development and cooperation

In 1998, the Survey of Economic and Social Developments, 1997-1998 was published. The Survey focused on overall economic conditions during the period, including economic reform and structural adjustment programmes, inflation and GDP growth expectations. It also reviewed social development issues such as human settlement conditions and the social integration of disadvantaged groups. The Preliminary Overview of Economic Developments in the ESCWA Region in 1998, an annual publication, was published. It provided the business community and policy makers with an early assessment of the region's economic performance and highlighted the direction of economic changes. The Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region 1997-1998: Summary was also completed.

The Economic Development Issues and Policies Division, in cooperation with the Sectoral Issues and Policies Division, prepared a comprehensive study on trade efficiency in the region and held a seminar on the subject (Beirut, 30 November-2 December). The study and the seminar explored the relationship between trade and trade practices, business information, transport, banking and insurance, customs and telecommunications in selected member countries. The roles of Government, the private sector and non-governmental organizations were also examined. A regional plan of action for consideration by member States was formulated at the seminar. Follow-up on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the 1990s began [YUN 1990, p. 369].

ESCWA signed a memorandum of understanding with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on 9 April to create opportunities for achieving common goals in economic and social development, and agricultural development in particular, in the countries of the Near East.

Transportation

An expert group meeting on economic reform coordination of transport policies, including merchant fleets in the ESCWA region within the emerging globalization trends was held in Beirut from 17 to 19 November. The group proposed the establishment of a regional land, maritime, air and multimodal transport network and a draft declaration on the adoption of an integrated transport system in the Arab Mashreq, which was approved by the ESCWA Committee on Transport for submission to the Commission in 1999.

Statistics

The Statistics Division assisted member countries in the adoption and implementation of international classifications and methods by holding two expert group meetings: on evaluation of the initial stages of the implementation of the 1993 System of National Accounts in the ESCWA member States (Beirut, 18-22 May); and on the implications of the UN global conferences on social statistics (Beirut, 1-3 December). The latter meeting marked the beginning of regional efforts to redress the imbalance resulting from placing too much importance on economic statistics and not enough on social statistics.

As part of the secretariat's efforts to disseminate information on statistical issues and contribute to the development of national statistical systems, four publications were issued during the year: Statistical Abstract of the ESCWA Region, External Trade Bulletin of the ESCWA Region, National Accounts Studies of the ESCWA Region and Bulletin on Vital Statistics in the ESCWA Region. The Division was also preparing a home page on statistics for the ESCWA web site to facilitate and increase the dissemination of statistical information. The development and maintenance of databases on price, energy, labour force, social and industrial statistics continued. Other activities included the establishment of a database on gender statistics and indicators and the holding of a workshop on environmental statistics, indicators and accounting (Cairo, 1-5 November).

ESCWA reached agreement with UNDP, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Development Research Centre in Canada for activities related to the project on national gender statistics in the Arab countries, and conducted national workshops for producers and users of gender statistics in the Syrian Arab Republic (Damascus, April), Jordan (Amman, May), Lebanon (Beirut, July), Tunisia (Tunis, July), Oman (Muscat, September) and Egypt (Cairo, November). A inter-agency programme was launched in July, in collaboration with UNDP, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and UNICEF to create a gender-sensitive database for Lebanon.

Natural resources and environment

The Committee on Water Resources held its second session on 14 and 15 December. The Committee's deliberations and recommendations were expected to promote the adoption of policies and measures for regional cooperation in the area of water resources.

Activities in renewable energy promotion included village electrification in Yemen; gasification of agricultural waste for energy production in Egypt; survey of available energy-relevant environmental standards in Egypt, Oman, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Yemen; and study of environmental standards in the electric power, oil and gas, transport and industry subsectors.

Quality of life

The Social Development Issues and Policies Division continued to promote regional cooperation in harmonizing social policies and setting standards and regulations for improving the quality of life. Work focused on the development of guidelines for applying the concept of sustainable human development, including: poverty alleviation; implementation of local development projects; and establishment of national human development networks. Local community development projects exploring the empowerment of local societies, community participation, the distribution of income, and the participation of women and youth had been initiated in Egypt and the Syrian Arab Republic and efforts were under way to replicate them in Lebanon. Several studies in Arabic had been generated by those projects and a manual on community development services was also issued.

In support of member States' efforts to adopt an integrated approach to following up the recommendations of UN global conferences, four regional meetings were held in Beirut during the year: the Arab conferences on the implementation of the action programmes of the International Conference on Population and Development [YUN 1994, p. 955] (22-25 September); the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements [YUN 1996, p. 992] (24-27 November); the World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113] (8-11 December); and the Fourth World Conference on Women [ibid., p. 1169] (12-15 December). ESCWA and UNDP initiated a flagship project, a mechanism for integrated regional follow-up by the Arab States to UN global conferences, which dealt with cross-cutting issues and provided a policy framework that reflected the priorities common to the four conferences.

The Division also covered activities for the disabled and the people of the occupied territories and the Syrian Golan. The Arabic/English Braille computer manual was published and a report submitted to the Economic and Social Council on economic and social repercussions of the Israeli occupation on the living conditions of the Palestinian people.

Issue No. 9 of the News Bulletin on Human Settlements in the Arab World was published in cooperation with the League of Arab States and the UN Centre for Human Settlements. The database on demographic estimates and projections continued to be updated and the integrated information system for population policies in ESCWA member countries was expanded to include policies on human development, women and development and human settlements, which could be used to follow up on global conferences.

Programme and organizational questions

Permanent headquarters

The move of ESCWA headquarters from Amman to Beirut proceeded smoothly and was completed by the end of December 1997. The offices at United Nations House in Beirut were inaugurated by the Secretary-General on 20 March 1998. ESCWA also signed a Memorandum of Understanding concerning Occupancy and Use of Common Premises by the United Nations Agencies, Programmes, Funds and Offices on 24 November. The loss of most of the local staff in Amman and the lengthy recruitment process to fill General Service posts resulted in delayed outputs in 1998. The vacancy rate in the Professional category in the substantive divisions remained high.

Chapter VI

Natural resources, energy and cartography

The development and conservation of natural resources and the efficient use of renewable sources of energy were considered by several UN bodies during 1998. Particular attention was paid to freshwater resources development, use, management and protection by the Commission on Sustainable Development. In October, the General Assembly endorsed the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, aimed at improving the quality of life in both industrialized and developing countries through the wider use of renewable energies, notably in the rural areas of developing countries.

The Economic and Social Council, in July, merged the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development into a single body, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development. That body was to meet in 1999.

The report of the International Atomic Energy Agency was presented to the General Assembly in November by its Director General; the Assembly took note of it and affirmed its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes.

The Seventh United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names was held in New York in January.

Institutional reform

In accordance with General Assembly resolutions 50/227 [YUN 1996, p. 1249] and 52/12 B [YUN 1997, p. 1392], which dealt with United Nations reform, and in line with Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/310 [ibid., p. 1408], the Council, in informal consultations in 1997 and 1998, reviewed the mandates, composition and working methods of its subsidiary bodies.

By resolution 1998/46 of 31 July, the Council terminated the mandates of the Committee on Natural Resources and the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, merging them into a single expert body—the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for Development. The new Committee, which would meet biennially, would comprise two sub-groups of 12 experts, one dealing with energy and the other with water resources (see also PART FIVE, Chapter I).

The first session of the new Committee was scheduled for April 1999.

Natural resources

The fourth session of the Committee on Natural Resources, scheduled for March 1998, did not take place due to the projected termination of its mandate. However, the Secretary-General had already prepared reports on the following subjects: technical cooperation activities of the UN system in mineral resources [E/C.7/1998/2]; state-of-the-art environmental technologies for the utilization and reprocessing of mineral industry wastes [E/C.7/1998/3]; the basic problem of improving the capacity of developing countries and economies in transition to capture the maximum economic and social benefits of their potential for mineral production [E/C.7/1998/4]; and issues related to the spatial planning of land (including minerals) and water resources [E/C.7/1998/5].

Freshwater resources

As requested in the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly by resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792], the Commission on Sustainable Development, at its sixth session (New York, 22 December 1997, 20 April-1 May 1998) (see PART THREE, Chapter I), considered the sectoral theme of strategic approaches to freshwater management. Governments had called for a dialogue, under the Commission's aegis, aimed at building a consensus regarding a strategic approach for the implementation of all aspects of the sustainable use of fresh water.

Among documents before the Commission was a January report of the Secretary-General on strategic approaches to freshwater management [E/CN.17/1998/2], which highlighted issues requiring urgent attention and identified starting points for strategic action for sustainable development in the context of the recommendations contained in chapter 18 of Agenda 21, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672], and emanating from other international water conferences. The report gave an overview of the comprehensive assessment of the freshwater resources of the world, submitted to the Commission and the Assembly in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1029].

Problem areas for action identified in the report were: access to urban and rural water supply and sanitation services; water for sustainable food production and rural development; growth in the demand for and impact of industrial use; degraded environments; undervalued water resources; and weak institutional and regulatory frameworks.

It was noted that water quality was somewhat more amenable to policy choice since raw water and waste water could be treated. In the face of a widening gap between demand and supply in terms of both quality and quantity, what was determined by policy was the approach to water resources management and the subsequent planning of investment in water infrastructure. Most approaches at the national level had been supply-led and authority over the allocation of the freshwater resources had been held ultimately by the State. That style of intervention was proving unsustainable, particularly in developing countries with a rapidly growing population and limited financial resources.

The report observed that competition for fresh water between economic sectors was increasing in many countries, especially between those sectors seeking large volumes of low-quality water (irrigated agriculture) and those seeking small volumes of high-quality water. Disputes over limited resources had occurred and would continue to develop between agricultural, industrial and urban users unless water management measures to prioritize household water supply were taken.

The need for integration and orderly management of sectoral issues thus remained essential. The report identified three sectoral uses of particular importance: drinking water supply and sanitation, water for agricultural production, and the utilization of clean and efficient technologies for the use of water in industrial production. Each of those uses generated demand for a different type of water: irrigated agriculture would generally use untreated water, industry might demand bulk supplies to be treated to varying standards, and water-supply business required acceptable bulk supplies that it could treat to po-table retail standards. In addition, three principal non-sectoral issues stood out: progressively degraded hydro-environments, chronically undervalued water resource assets and serious institutional weaknesses.

The report identified gaps in freshwater management, such as overall lack of awareness of the scope and function of freshwater management; absence of explicit linkages with socio-economic development; declining capacity to assess the availability and variability of water resources; and a lag in the mobilization of financial resources. It also set out guiding principles and strategic themes needed for the attainment of equity and sustainability, and called for a number of strategic actions to be taken so that informed policy choices and management options could be adopted at the local, national and regional levels. Included among such actions were: promotion of ownership and participation of key users and interest groups; promotion of productivity gains and sustainability through enhanced regulation and the use of economic instruments; promotion of sectoral policies and the improvement of sectoral coordination; management of water resources at the lowest appropriate levels and increased accountability to the public; strengthening information management and promoting the flow of key data; management of hydro-meteorological uncertainty; mainstreaming environmental concerns; financing water supply and sanitation to meet basic human needs and waste water treatment; starting a process of nationally owned diagnosis and obtaining consensus and commitment; and building a balanced and sustainable capacity in water management.

In February [E/CN.17/1998/2/Add.1], the Secretary-General presented the report of the Expert Group Meeting on Strategic Approaches to Freshwater Management (Harare, Zimbabwe, 27-30 January). The Expert Group presented policy options for freshwater management for the Commission's consideration and a number of key recommendations covering capacity-building, information management, environment and development, economics and finance, participation and institutions and international cooperation. The Expert Group recommended that the Commission invite countries to submit, by the year 2002, information on their national water policies and related plans, and on progress in their implementation.

Also before the Commission was the Secretary-General's report on the activities of the organizations of the UN system in the field of freshwater resources [E/CN.17/1998/3]. The report summarized the involvement of and cooperative arrangements among the organizations of the system, focusing on strategic responses by the system to challenges faced by Governments and the international community in striving towards the sustainable development and utilization of water resources. The three main types of activity were: data gathering/analysis and preparation of studies and reports; organization and servicing of meetings and workshops; and technical cooperation, including advisory services and field projects.

The Commission also reviewed the report of the Inter-Sessional Ad Hoc Working Group on Strategic Approaches to Freshwater Management (New York, 23-27 February) [E/CN.17/1998/13], which, in preparation for the Commission's sixth session, discussed the recommendations and proposals contained in the Secretary-General's report and in the report of the Expert Group (see above). The Working Group called on Governments and organizations to organize meetings and activities to exchange experiences and best practices on specific issues proposed by Governments. It stated that the Commission should assess progress achieved at all levels in freshwater management and give further guidance to various activities leading to a more comprehensive review in 2002. Organizations of the UN system were invited to develop a consolidated guidebook on integrated water resources management, to replace existing sectoral guidelines, and to submit the guidelines to the Commission in 2002.

Also before the Commission was the Final Declaration and the Programme for Priority Actions adopted by the International Conference on Water and Sustainable Development (Paris, 19-21 March) [E/CN.17/1998/16]; the Petersberg Declaration, issued by the International Dialogue Forum on Global Water Politics, Cooperation for Transboundary Water Management (Petersberg, Germany, 3-5 March) [E/CN.17/1998/17]; and the Declaration of Thessaloniki, adopted by the International Conference on Environment and Society: Education and Public Awareness for Sustainability, organized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Government of Greece (Thessaloniki, Greece, 20 April-1 May) [E/CN.17/1998/19].

In a 1 May decision [E/1998/29 (dec. 6/1)], the Commission on Sustainable Development reaffirmed that water resources were essential for satisfying basic human needs, health and food production, energy, and the restoration and maintenance of ecosystems, and for social and economic development in general. It noted that, since 1992, marked improvements in water quality had occurred in a number of river basins and groundwater aquifers in areas where pressure for action had been strong. However, overall progress had not been sufficient to reduce general trends of increasing water shortages, deteriorating water quality and growing stress on freshwater ecosystems and on the natural hydrological cycle. The Commission made a series of recommendations for action by Governments and the international community in the areas of information and data for decision-making; institutions, capacity-building and participation; technology transfer and research cooperation; financial resources and mechanisms; and follow-up and assessment. The Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) was invited to compile and publish periodic assessments of the success of strategic approaches to the sustainable development, management, protection and use of freshwater resources in achieving the goals of chapter 18 of Agenda 21 and for a global picture of the state of freshwater resources and potential problems.

Economic and Social Council consideration.

In a 26 May report [E/1998/56] to the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General described action taken by the UN system to implement the Council's agreed conclusions 1997/3 [YUN 1997, p. 1032] on freshwater, including clean and safe water supply and sanitation. He summarized action taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development (see above) and detailed the steps taken within the UN system to streamline programmes and activities.

By decision 1998/288 of 31 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ACC consideration. The nineteenth session of the ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources (Beirut, Lebanon, 29 September-1 October) [ACC/1998/18], which was preceded by the eighth meeting of the Inter-Agency Steering Committee for Water Supply and Sanitation (28 September), discussed follow-up to the 1998 session of the Commission on Sustainable Development; matters arising from the twelfth session of the Inter-Agency Committee on Sustainable Development (Geneva, 28-29 September) (see PART THREE, Chapter I); integrated land and water management; water quality and freshwater issues related to the implementation of the 1995 Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities [YUN 1995, p. 1081]; matters arising from other inter-governmental bodies; and water supply and sanitation.

The Subcommittee also discussed coordination of activities at the country level; the establishment of a web page on water-related information within the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs home page; public information, with particular reference to the World Day for Water (22 March), which in 1998 was organized under the rubric "Groundwater, the invisible resource"; and joint initiatives with the Global Water Partnership and the World Water Council.

Exploration

The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in a report on special funds and programmes [DP/1999/4], discussed recent programme developments and programme resources of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE). The Fund, established in 1973 [YUN 1973, p. 399] to assist States to explore natural resources under national jurisdiction, had begun to redirect its activities to focus on addressing environmental issues relating to the mining sector. The Fund's new direction reflected the challenges of linking food security (small-scale mining of rock phosphates to improve soil fertility), water management (mercury abatement) and sustainable livelihoods (artisanal and/or small-scale mining and community issues).

UNRFNRE project expenditures in 1997 amounted to $611,000. Voluntary contributions for 1997 totalled $133,000, representing a sharp decrease from $1,339,000 in 1996, owing to the receipt of a major donor's contribution only in 1998. The Fund's resource balance as at 31 December 1998 was estimated at $3,080,000.

During 1998, UNRFNRE began a multidisciplinary technical cooperation pilot project in Mozambique aimed at recovering a valuable mineral (tantalite) from old mining dumps. It also assisted Suriname in evaluating an environmental impact assessment submitted by a private company for developing a gold mine. In 1997, a project in Sri Lanka identified 400 cubic metres of heavy mineral sands. The Fund continued to provide countries where discoveries had been made with legal advice and help in preparing international bidding documents aimed at stimulating the interest of private companies.

During 1998, the Fund published four guidebooks for environmentally sound mining activities in close collaboration with external organizations.

Energy

New and renewable sources of energy

The third session of the Committee on New and Renewable Sources of Energy and on Energy for Development, scheduled to meet in March 1998, did not take place due to the projected termination of its mandate (see above). However, the Secretary-General prepared the following reports: follow-up to the previous sessions of the Committee [E/C.13/1998/2]; environmentally sound and efficient fossil energy technologies [E/C.13/1998/3]; renewable sources of energy, with special emphasis on wind energy [E/C.13/1998/4]; development and implementation of rural energy policies [E/C.13/1998/5]; energy and transportation [E/C.13/1998/6]; and coordination of activities of the organizations of the UN system in the field of energy [E/C.13/1998/7].

World Solar Programme (1996-2005)

By a 5 June letter [A/53/142], China, Georgia, India, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Malaysia, the Niger, Pakistan, Senegal, South Africa, Tunisia and Zimbabwe requested the Secretary-General to include an item entitled "World Solar Programme 1996-2005" in the agenda of the fifty-third session of the General Assembly.

The letter stated that Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672], had, among other things, focused international attention on the unsustainable pattern of energy production and consumption and on the need for increased reliance on environmentally sound energy systems, particularly new and renewable sources of energy. As a follow-up to UNCED, UNESCO, together with several partners within and outside the UN system, initiated a process for the promotion, development and dissemination of the Solar Programme covering the decade 1996-2005. That Programme was approved in June 1997 by the World Solar Commission, a body of 18 heads of State and Government, chaired by President Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe.

Recalling that the 1997 UNESCO General Conference had called on all UNESCO member States to contribute to the success of the Programme, the letter's signatories believed that the time had come for the Assembly to take similar action in support of the Programme.

On 14 September [A/53/395], Zimbabwe transmitted a document entitled "World Solar Programme 1996-2005" to the Secretary-General, requesting that it be circulated as an Assembly document. The purpose of the Programme was to sensitize Governments, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations, financial institutions, academia and private institutions to the need to support the development and utilization of renewable energy for sustainable development. The document contained global, regional and national projects to be implemented under the auspices of the Programme and suggested action to ensure its effective implementation and funding.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 October [meeting 39], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/7 [draft: A/53/L.8 & Add.1] without vote [agenda item 158].

World Solar Programme 1996-2005

The General Assembly,

Aware that one of the priority tasks of the United Nations for the benefit of present and future generations is the elimination of poverty and the improvement of the quality of life of the millions living in misery,

Recalling, in the context of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, that sustainable development is one of the main goals of the United Nations system and that one of the key elements for attaining it is the application of sustainable energy systems, which includes the wider use of environmentally friendly, renewable energies,

Recalling also that the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session, recognized the need to promote efforts in research on and development and use of renewable energies at the international and national levels,

Recalling further that energy will be one of the main topics of the ninth session of the Commission on Sustainable Development in 2001,

Recalling that the World Solar Summit, held at Harare on 16 and 17 September 1996, adopted the Harare Declaration on Solar Energy and Sustainable Development and approved the preparation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 aimed at improving the quality of life in both industrialized and developing countries through the wider use of renewable energies, notably in the rural areas of developing countries, and that the Programme was approved by the World Solar Commission in June 1997,

Recalling also resolution 29 C/14 concerning the World Solar Programme 1996-2005, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in November 1997,

Considering the need to make all necessary efforts to achieve the goals set out in the Harare Declaration,

Noting with appreciation the support shown and commitments made so far by a number of donor Member States,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the heads of State and Government who have agreed to serve on the World Solar Commission, and especially to the Chairman of the Commission;
2. Endorses the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 as a contribution to the overall sustainable development agenda;
3. Invites all States Members of the United Nations to contribute to the successful implementation of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005;
4. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in consultation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and in close cooperation with the United Nations Environment Programme and other relevant organizations:

(a) To undertake concrete action in order to ensure that the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 is fully integrated into and brought into the mainstream of the efforts of the United Nations system to attain the objective of sustainable development;

(b) To bring the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 to the attention of relevant funding and technical assistance sources and to encourage them to consider contributing to its effective implementation;

(c) To continue to sensitize and generate a greater degree of awareness in all Member States and international, regional and national institutions, both public and private, to the strategic importance of the World Solar Programme 1996-2005 for ensuring sustainable development;

(d) To submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, under the item entitled "Environment and sustainable development", a report entitled "World Solar Programme 1996-2005" concerning measures taken by the different entities of the United Nations system in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution.

Nuclear energy

By a 26 August note [A/53/286], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the 1997 report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Presenting and updating the report in the Assembly on 2 November [A/53/PV.50], the IAEA Director General focused on the priority work of the Agency, which included issues such as nuclear disarmament; energy for sustainable development; nuclear safety, including radioactive waste and management of spent fuel; and preserving the environment (see also PART ONE, Chapter VII, and PART SIX, Chapter I). In addition, he described the process of review and reform initiated to ensure that the Agency was responding efficiently and effectively to the needs and priorities of its member States.

The Director General also discussed the difficulties with regard to IAEA's nuclear inspection activities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and in Iraq (see PART ONE, Chapter IV).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 2 November [meeting 51], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/21 [draft: A/53/L.18 & Add.1, as orally revised] by recorded vote (113-1-8) [agenda item 14].

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency

The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1997,

Noting the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, in which he provided additional information on the main developments in the activities of the Agency during 1998,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency in promoting the further application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes as envisaged in the statute of the Agency and in accordance with the inalienable right of States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other relevant internationally legally binding agreements that have concluded relevant safeguards agreements with the Agency to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II and other relevant articles of the Treaty, and with the objectives and purposes thereof,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as in ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purpose, as stated in article II of its statute,

Reaffirming that the Agency is the competent authority responsible for verifying and assuring, in accordance with the statute and the safeguards system of the Agency, compliance with its safeguards agreements with States parties undertaken in fulfilment of their obligations under article III, paragraph 1, of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, with a view to preventing diversion of nuclear energy from peaceful uses to nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, and also reaffirming that nothing should be done to undermine the authority of the Agency in this regard and that States parties that have concerns regarding non-compliance with the safeguards agreement of the Treaty by the States parties should direct such concerns, along with supporting evidence and information, to the Agency to consider, investigate, draw conclusions and decide on necessary actions in accordance with its mandate,

Stressing the need for the highest standards of safety in the design and operation of nuclear installations and in peaceful nuclear activities so as to minimize risks to life, health and the environment,

Considering that an expansion of technical cooperation activities relating to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy will contribute to the well-being of the peoples of the world, recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance from the Agency and the importance of funding in order to benefit effectively from the transfer and application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes as well as from the contribution of nuclear energy to their economic development, and desiring that the resources of the Agency for technical cooperation activities be assured, predictable and sufficient to meet the objectives mandated in article II of its statute,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear energy, applications of nuclear methods and techniques, nuclear safety, radiological protection and radioactive waste management, including its work directed towards assisting developing countries in all these fields,

Taking note of the report of the Director General to the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency on the implementation of Security Council resolutions relating to Iraq, of his reports to the Security Council of 15 January, 9 April, 27 July and 7 October 1998 and of resolution GC(42)/RES/3 of 25 September 1998 of the General Conference,

Taking note also of resolutions GOV/2711 of 21 March 1994 and GOV/2742 of 10 June 1994 of the Board of Governors and GC(42)/RES/2 of 25 September 1998 of the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency in connection with the implementation of the Agreement between the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the International Atomic Energy Agency for the application of safeguards in connection with the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, the statements by the President of the Security Council of 31 March, 30 May and 4 November 1994 and the authorization of the Board of Governors, on 11 November 1994, to the Director General, to carry out all the tasks requested of the Agency in the statement by the President of the Security Council of 4 November 1994,

Taking note of resolutions GC(42)/RES/4 on criteria or guidelines for consideration of requests for the restoration of voting rights, GC(42)/RES/10 on the Convention on Nuclear Safety, GC(42)/RES/11 on measures to address the year 2000 issue, GC(42)/RES/12 on the safety of radiation sources and the security of radioactive materials, GC(42)/RES/13 on the safety of transport of radioactive materials, GC(42)/RES/14 on the study of the radiological situation at the atolls of Mururoa and Fangataufa, GC(42)/RES/15 on the strengthening of the technical cooperation activities of the Agency, GC(42)/RES/16 on the plan for producing potable water economically, GC(42)/RES/17 on strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system and application of the Model Protocol, GC(42)/RES/18 on measures against illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive sources, GC(42)/RES/20 on the participation of Palestine in the work of the Agency and GC(42)/RES/21 on the application of Agency safeguards in the Middle East, adopted on 25 September 1998 by the General Conference of the Agency at its forty-second regular session,

Taking note of resolution GC(42)/RES/19 on nuclear testing, adopted on 25 September 1998 by the General Conference of the Agency at its forty-second regular session,

Noting the statement by the President of the forty-second regular session of the General Conference of the Agency, which was endorsed by the General Conference during the tenth plenary meeting and issued under the item concerning Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat, that:

"The General Conference recalls the statement by the President of the thirty-sixth session of the General Conference in 1992 concerning the item entitled 'Israeli nuclear capabilities and threat'. That statement considered it desirable not to consider that item at the thirty-seventh session. At the forty-second session, the item was, at the request of certain member States, reinscribed on the agenda. The item was discussed. The President notes that certain member States intend to include this item in the provisional agenda of the forty-third regular session of the General Conference",

Noting also the statement by the President of the forty-second regular session of the General Conference of the Agency, issued under item 17 concerning article VI of the statute of the Agency, in which the Board of Governors was urged to redouble its efforts to achieve a solution to that long-standing issue, pursuant to the mandate conferred on it by the Conference in resolution GC(41)/RES/20 of 3 October 1997 and decision GC(41)/DEC/10, and to report to the Conference at its forty-third regular session on a finalized formula, taking into account the progress achieved so far,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the Agency in the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Welcomes the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to maintain and strengthen the effectiveness and cost-efficiency of the safeguards system in conformity with the statute of the Agency, in particular, stressing the importance of the Model Additional Protocol approved on 15 May 1997, affirms that strengthening the effectiveness and improving the efficiency of the safeguards system with a view to detecting undeclared nuclear activities must be implemented rapidly and universally by all concerned States and other parties in compliance with their respective international commitments, and requests all concerned States and other parties to safeguards agreements to conclude additional protocols without delay;

4. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international cooperation in carrying out the work of the Agency, pursuant to its statute, in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of the necessary measures to strengthen further the safety of nuclear installations and to minimize risks to life, health and the environment, in strengthening technical assistance and cooperation for developing countries and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the safeguards systems of the Agency;

5. Welcomes the measures and decisions taken by the Agency to strengthen and fund its technical cooperation activities, which should contribute to achieving sustainable development in developing countries, and calls upon States to cooperate in implementing the measures and decisions pursuant thereto;

6. Commends the Director General and the secretariat of the Agency for their continuing, impartial efforts to implement the safeguards agreement still in force between the Agency and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, recognizes the important role of the Agency in monitoring the freeze of nuclear facilities in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea as requested by the Security Council, expresses deep concern about the continuing non-compliance of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea with the safeguards agreement, calls upon the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to comply fully with that safeguards agreement and, to this end, urges it to cooperate fully with the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards agreement and to take all steps the Agency may deem necessary to preserve all information relevant to verifying the accuracy and completeness of the initial report of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on the inventory of nuclear material subject to safeguards;

7. Also commends the Director General of the Agency and his staff for their strenuous efforts to implement Security Council resolutions 687(1991) of 3 April 1991, 707(1991) of 15 August 1991, 715(1991) of 11 October 1991, 1051(1996) of 27 March 1996, 1060(1996) of 12 June 1996, 1115(1997) of 21 June 1997, 1154(1998) of 2 March 1998 and 1194(1998) of 9 September 1998, welcomes the report of the Director General of the Agency of 7 October 1998, calls upon Iraq to cooperate fully with the Agency in accordance with its obligation under the relevant Security Council resolutions and the Memorandum of Understanding signed by the Deputy Prime Minister of Iraq and the Secretary-General on 23 February 1998, as well as to resume a dialogue with the Agency immediately, and stresses that greater transparency by Iraq would contribute greatly to the resolution of the few remaining questions and concerns;

8. Welcomes the entry into force on 24 October 1996 of the Convention on Nuclear Safety, appeals to all States to become parties to it so that it obtains the widest possible adherence, and expresses its satisfaction that an organizational meeting of the contracting parties was held from 29 September to 2 October 1998 and that a first review meeting will begin on 12 April 1999;

9. Also welcomes the measures taken by the Agency in support of efforts to prevent illicit trafficking in nuclear materials and other radioactive sources and, in this context, decides to bear in mind, while elaborating an international convention on the suppression of acts of nuclear terrorism, the activities of the Agency in the prevention and combating of illicit trafficking in nuclear material and other radioactive sources;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the Agency the records of the fifty-third session of the General Assembly relating to the activities of the Agency.

RECORDED VOTE ON RESOLUTION 53/21:

Cartography

The Seventh United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names (New York, 13-22 January) [E/CONF.91/3] considered reports by linguistic/geographical divisions and Governments on the situation in their regions and countries and on the progress made in the standardization of geographical names since the Sixth Conference [YUN 1992, p. 662]. It also reviewed the reports of the three committees established in 1992 on national, technical and international programmes, which dealt with, among other things, national standardization, toponymic guidelines and terminology.

The Conference adopted 15 resolutions. It recommended the creation of a French-speaking division within the United Nations Group of Experts on Geographical Names (UNGEGN), that the Eighth Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names be convened in the second half of 2002, and that the twentieth session of UNGEGN be convened during the fourth quarter of 1999. It called for the establishment of country toponymic web sites for the standardization of geographical names and requested the Secretary-General to ensure the continued availability of officials with the necessary expertise in cartography to provide support to UNGEGN and to the Conference. It also urged UNGEGN to update on a regular basis its list of country names, which was to be regarded as a reference for all cartographic applications. Other recommendations focused on toponymic data exchange formats and standards; cooperation and agreements with consumer enterprises; national standardization based on local usage; review of the amended Beirut system of 1972 for the romanization of Arabic script; standardization of geographical names and UN regional cartographic conferences; teaching materials for training courses in toponymy; training courses in toponymy in conjunction with sessions of UNGEGN; liaison with the International Organization for Standardization; and access to and archiving of technical papers.

On 31 March, the General Assembly decided that Conference documents that were issued by the Secretariat should be translated into the six United Nations official languages (decision 52/470).

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary General, on 18 May [E/1998/47], reported to the Economic and Social Council on the Seventh United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names, noting that the Council had been called on to endorse the Conference's recommendations on the dates of the Eighth Conference and of the twentieth session of UNGEGN, and the measures to be taken by him to implement the Conference's recommendations, especially with regard to the work of UNGEGN.

By decision 1998/291 of 31 July, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

By decision 1998/221 of 23 July, the Council endorsed the following recommendations of the Seventh Conference that: the Eighth Conference should be held in the second half of 2002; the twentieth session of UNGEGN should be convened during the fourth quarter of 1999; and that the Secretary-General should take measures to implement the recommendations of the Seventh Conference, especially with regard to the work of UNGEGN.

Group of Experts. At its nineteenth session (New York, 12 and 23 January) [GEGN/19], UNGEGN discussed organizational matters concerning the Seventh Conference and reviewed its own statute. It discussed the implementation of the Conference's recommendations, the status of its various working groups and the provisional agenda of its twentieth (1999) session.

Chapter VII

Environment

In 1998, the United Nations and the international community continued efforts to protect Earth's environment by adopting or refining several legally binding instruments. Mainly through the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), advice and assistance were provided to Member States on environmental protection issues.

In September, a Conference of Plenipotentiaries adopted the Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, which covered a list of five industrial chemicals and 22 pesticides. Chemicals and pesticides that were banned or severely restricted by two or more parties from different regions would be included in the list, as would certain severely hazardous pesticide formulations that posed problems under conditions of use in developing countries. Parties would be required to provide export notifications to countries regarding chemicals that had been banned or severely restricted in their territory.

The fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the 1992 United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change took place in November when it adopted the Buenos Aires Plan of Action to reduce the risk of global climate change and accelerate work on the Convention. It made refinements to the clean development mechanism, which would give industrialized countries credits for financing emissions-avoiding projects in developing countries. The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, created to assess scientific information on human-induced climate change, decided in October to establish a Task Force on National Greenhouse Gas Inventories.

In observance of the 1998 International Year of the Ocean, proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1994, conferences, workshops and training cruises were arranged and major publications were dedicated to the Year.

A regional ministerial conference on the theme "Environment for Europe" (Aarhus, Denmark, June) adopted the Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters, which opened for signature on 25 June.

The first session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) took place in Montreal in June/July. The meeting gave the UNEP secretariat a mandate to prepare a new draft outlining the substantive articles that could be contained in the future convention. The meeting also established an expert group to develop science-based criteria and a procedure to identify additional POPs as candidates for future action.

On 10 November, the Assembly proclaimed the year 2002 as the International Year of Mountains. On 15 December, it proclaimed the year 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism.

UNEP Governing Council

The Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) held its fifth special session (Nairobi, Kenya, 20-22 May) [A/53/25] to evaluate UNEP's management and administration and to review the results of the 1997 special session of the General Assembly [YUN 1997, p. 790], which reviewed and appraised the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by the 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) [YUN 1992, p. 672]. The Council also considered the conclusions of its subsidiary organ, the High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials, at its second (1998) meeting; that body was established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1040]. The Council adopted decisions on those and other matters.

Review of General Assembly special session

The UNEP Governing Council reviewed the results and decisions of the nineteenth (1997) special session of the General Assembly [ibid., p. 790], which carried out a review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21, adopted by UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 672].

By resolution 53/188 of 15 December, the General Assembly underscored the importance of the active involvement of all relevant UN bodies in implementing Agenda 21 and the Programme of Action for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, adopted at the Assembly's nineteenth special session in resolution S/19-2 [YUN 1997, p. 792].

High-level Committee

The 36-member High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials, established as a subsidiary organ of UNEP's Governing Council in 1997 [ibid., p. 1040], held its second and third meetings in 1998. At its second meeting (Nairobi, 2-4 March) [UNEP/HLC/2/6], the Committee considered the status of the trust funds in support of its work, UNEP funding needs for the 1998-1999 biennium [UNEP/HLC/2/3/Add.1], a progress report on the Mercure telecommunication system [UNEP/HLC/2/INF/1 & Corr.1 & Add.1], UNEP reform and revitalization, fresh water and its own rules of procedure.

Welcoming the Executive Director's report on the critical funding situation of UNEP [UNEP/HLC/2/3 & Corr.1] and noting that financial contributions to the Environment Fund had declined by one third since 1992, the Committee concluded that adequate and predictable funding was essential if UNEP was to fulfil its role. The Executive Director was asked to propose measures to ensure that trust funds, earmarked contributions and counterpart funds could lead to increasing UNEP financial resources without undermining the integrity and coherence of its global programme.

Having considered the Executive Director's report on UNEP reform and revitalization in the context of the United Nations reform [UNEP/HLC/2/2 & Corr.1], the Committee endorsed the 1997 Nairobi Declaration [YUN 1997, p. 1040] as the basis for the reform process. Written proposals for restructuring and reform submitted by the Bureau of the Committee, the European Union (EU), the Group of 77 and China, Mexico and the United States were appended to the Committee's report. The Committee welcomed the Secretary-General's decision to establish a task force under the Executive Director to prepare proposals on reforming and strengthening UN activities related to environment and human settlements.

The Committee considered a report of the Executive Director on UNEP's freshwater strategy [UNEP/HLC/2/4 & Corr.1 & Add.1] and acknowledged the wide-ranging focus of international organizations and the extensive consideration given to freshwater activities at international meetings. It agreed that UNEP should provide substantive environmental input in freshwater issues, including those being developed by the Commission on Sustainable Development. The Committee asked the Executive Director to develop proposals on an enhanced future UNEP work programme on freshwater management.

The High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials, at its third meeting (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 10 November) [UNEP/HLC/3/5], considered the implementation of the conclusions of its second meeting; UNEP reform; financing sustainable development; the role of UNEP in the financial mechanism; and the contribution of UNEP to the seventh (1998/99) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development on oceans, small island developing States, tourism and consumption and production patterns.

Regarding the implementation of the Committee's March conclusions [UNEP/HLC/3/2], the Executive Director made a statement outlining progress made by UNEP. He stressed that support to Africa was a priority and referred to the UNEP-sponsored high-level ministerial consultation held within the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (19-23 October), UNEP's support and coordination in convening the Pan-African Conference on Sustainable Integrated Coastal Management (Maputo, Mozambique, July) and the joint activities of UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) (Habitat) in developing a project on managing water for African cities. With regard to environmental crises, he advocated the development of an emergency response capacity and strengthening of UNEP's early warning and assessment functions.

The Executive Director stated that the General Assembly would discuss the report of the Task Force on Environment and Human Settlements [UNEP/HLC/3/INF/1 & INF/2, A/53/463], which was an attempt to address the commonly held conviction that the institutional fragmentation and lack of policy coherence over the last 20 years had resulted in a loss of effectiveness in the work of the United Nations in the area of the environment and human settlements. The Task Force recommendations concerned improving inter-agency coordination, including the establishment of an inter-agency environment management group; possible clustering of the secretariats of the various environmental conventions and protocols; integrating the administrative work of UNEP, UNCHS and the United Nations Office at Nairobi (UNON), with one person responsible for the three entities; the intergovernmental framework; information, monitoring and assessment; the participation of civil society; and a more open and forward-looking process to address future issues. The Executive Director presented the new organizational structure for the UNEP secretariat and the 2000-2001 programme budget. The restructuring followed the guidance of the Secretary-General's 1997 report on reform [YUN 1997, p. 1390] (see also PART FIVE, Chapter I), the report of the Task Force (see below), the Nairobi Declaration and the policy guidance of the Governing Council. The Executive Director stressed the need to enhance regional cooperation and delivery by UNEP, and the importance of promoting cooperation between the environmental conventions. He outlined the functions of the new administrative divisions covering the following areas: environmental assessment and early warning; environmental policy development; environmental policy implementation; technology, industry and economics; coordination of the conventions; regional cooperation and representation; and communications and public information. The Committee endorsed the progress made by UNEP as described by the Executive Director.

As to financing sustainable development, the Committee considered the Executive Director's overview of the financial mechanisms for international environmental conventions and agreements [UNEP/HLC/3/3]. Introducing the item, the Executive Director focused on the Global Environment Facility (GEF) and UNEP's role as an implementing agency. In that regard, the Committee considered reports of the Executive Director on the complementarity of the core activities of UNEP and its GEF interventions [UNEP/HLC/3/INF/3]; on measures initiated by UNEP to mainstream GEF operations into its regular activities [UNEP/HLC/3/INF/4]; and on the outcome of the twelfth meeting of the GEF Council [UNEP/HLC/3/INF/5]. In response to a GEF Council request at its eleventh meeting (New Delhi, India, 30-31 March), UNEP submitted two reports to the Council's twelfth meeting (Washington, D.C., 14-16 October) on the issue of complementarity and mainstreaming. The Council had requested UNEP to prepare for its thirteenth (1999) meeting an action plan on the issue of complementarity and additionality; the draft action plan would be submitted to the Governing Council in 1999 for review and decision. The Committee asked the Executive Director, in consultation with its Bureau, to prepare a draft action plan on the complementarity and additionality of UNEP's core activities with its GEF interventions, taking into account the proposed UNEP 2000-2001 work programme; the draft was to be circulated to Governments two weeks prior to the Council's 1999 session.

Following consideration of the Executive Director's report on UNEP's contribution to the seventh (1998/99) session of the Commission on Sustainable Development on oceans, small island developing States, tourism and consumption and production patterns [UNEP/HLC/3/4], the Committee endorsed the UNEP contribution. On 22 May [A/53/25 (dec. SS.V/3)], the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to consult with Member States on UNEP's contribution to the Commission and to prepare reports for consideration by the High-level Committee and the Council in 1999, with a view to submitting them to the Commission that same year.

UNEP reform

The Governing Council considered proposals to strengthen and restructure UNEP in the context of the wider UN reform process (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). In a policy statement [UNEP/GCSS.V/2], the Executive Director proposed topics relating to UNEP's revitalization for the Council's consideration.

On 22 May [A/53/25 (dec. SS.V/2)], the Council welcomed the Executive Director's proposals regarding environmental information, assessment and research, including environmental emergency response capacity and strengthening the early warning and assessment functions of UNEP; enhanced coordination of environmental conventions and development of environmental policy instruments; fresh water; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa, as well as the other UNEP priority areas. It asked him to re-examine the 1998-1999 work programme [YUN 1997, p. 1045] in the light of the 1997 Nairobi Declaration [ibid., p. 1040], with due regard to the needs of environmental education, within the existing programme of work; and to develop new proposals in the context of the 2000-2001 work programme, and make recommendations thereon in 1999. The Council decided to review in 1999 the status of the ongoing UNEP reform, and to provide to the General Assembly in 2000 its policy conclusions on institutional arrangements within the UN system for dealing with the environmental challenges of the next century and the role of UNEP.

UNEP evaluation

In response to a 1997 Governing Council request [ibid., p. 1045], the Executive Director presented, in April [UNEP/GCSS.V/4], an evaluation of the management and administrative support of UNEP and of the role, functions and management of the six UNEP regional offices covering Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America, North America and West Asia. He reviewed management and support costs and stated that he intended to use any savings from measures aimed at streamlining those costs to strengthen the UNEP regional presence. Regarding the Secretary-General's decision to entrust the executive direction of the three parts of the UN Secretariat in Nairobi—UNEP, UNCHS and UNON—to the same official, the Executive Director outlined steps to make the best use of UNON as the instrument to strengthen the UN presence in Nairobi and to realize its full potential in achieving synergies in the programme support mechanisms of UNEP and UNCHS. The Executive Director reviewed the status of UNEP trust funds, of which there were 70 (27 general trust funds, 25 technical cooperation trust funds of a programmatic nature, 17 technical cooperation trust funds for personnel and the Multilateral Fund, a special trust fund). Of the total financial resources of $382.5 million available to the funds as at 31 March, $32.7 million was to support UNEP programmes, $30 million belonged to the trust funds of conventions, protocols and regional seas programmes and $319.8 million to the Multilateral Fund. During the 1996-1997 biennium, UNEP received $16.5 million as counterpart contributions in support of UNEP activities. UNEP, as an implementing agency in GEF, would deliver a work programme for fiscal 1999-2000 amounting to $74 million. The Executive Director was committed to implementing recommendations of the UN Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) [YUN 1997, p. 1044]. He made a series of recommendations for the Council, which were adopted (see below). Annexed to the report were the findings and recommendations of the Task Force of the Committee of Permanent Representatives to UNEP regarding the budget, UNON, the regional offices, and trust funds and counterpart contributions.

On 22 May [A/53/25 (dec. SS.V/1)], the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to implement the 1997 OIOS recommendations. Confirming the 1998-1999 management and administrative support costs (MASC) budget appropriation of $27.5 million, subject to the continued feasibility of the approved 1998-1999 programme of $75 million, the Council asked the Executive Director to reduce the MASC cost expenditures should contributions to the Environment Fund fall short of the level required to implement the 1998-1999 programme. The Council approved the cancellation of the extraordinary additional 1998-1999 MASC appropriation of $1 million and the Executive Director's proposal to direct the resources into Fund programme activities. The Executive Director was asked to re-examine the 1998-1999 programme, approved by the Council in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1045], in the light of the core elements of the mandate of the Nairobi Declaration [ibid., p. 1040], and to report thereon in 1999, and to increase government involvement in programme and budget formulation and priority-setting between sessions of the Council, using its subsidiary bodies. The Executive Director was authorized to prepare a 2000-2001 programme of work and to define a core programme for the 2000-2001 biennium, making use of the priorities of the Nairobi Declaration, for submission in 1999.

The Council urged the Executive Director to work with Governments to establish a common core mandate and set regional responsibilities and propose allocations, and to present to the Council in 1999 a report on the functioning of the regional offices. The Executive Director was asked to propose in 1999 measures to strengthen regionalization and decentralization through the involvement of regional ministerial and other forums.

The Council urged the Executive Director to work with Governments to reconfirm or adjust, if necessary, the mandates of the two specialized offices (the Industry and Environment Programme Activity Centre (Paris) and the International Environmental Technology Centre (Osaka and Shiga, Japan)) and to present a report in 1999 on the functioning of the offices.

Noting the substantial growth of trust funds and counterpart contributions and the relative decline in the resources available to the Environment Fund, the Council expressed concern that the administrative and management costs of trust funds and counterpart contributions might not be borne in full by the sources of funding and that part of the costs were charged to the Fund. The Executive Director was asked to report thereon, as mandated by the Council in 1997 [ibid., p. 1046], and to enhance trust fund and counterpart contribution monitoring and reporting.

OIOS review

On 6 April [E/AC.51/1998/5 & Corr.1], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) an OIOS report on the triennial review of the implementation of CPC's 1995 recommendations on the evaluation of the programme on environment [YUN 1995, p. 1065]. The report noted that UNEP had implemented or had made significant progress towards implementing recommendations relating to the promotion of credible scientific assessments; the discontinuation of superseded UNEP assessment services; assistance to countries in developing and adopting a common set of indicators for sustainable development for use in policy-making and environmental management; the development of a comprehensive database on national and international environmental law; resources for environmental law and institutions; needs assessment for capacity-building; and a strategy for environment information. UNEP had not given adequate attention to the recommendations relating to utilizing existing expertise within the UN system, providing support to the implementation of environmental conventions and improving access to information for the non-scientific community, including decision makers and the media.

OIOS recommended that UNEP should implement CPC's 1995 recommendations and that its report, together with the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee thereon, should be submitted to the UNEP High-level Committee of Ministers and Officials for review and action. A report on the implementation of the CPC recommendations should be submitted to the UNEP Governing Council in 1999. The Secretary-General concurred with the OIOS recommendations.

In June [A/53/16], CPC expressed confidence that the Executive Director's reform proposals, presented to the Governing Council in May (see above), would contribute to the revitalization and strengthening of UNEP. UNEP was strongly encouraged to work in collaboration with other organizations to gather environmental information. The role of Earthwatch should not be enhanced but should function in collaboration with UNEP's own network and Environment and Natural Resources Information Networks. Work on indicators should take into account the views of the developing countries, and UNEP should develop its own indicators to be examined by the UNEP Governing Council and then submitted to the General Assembly. It was important that UNEP pay adequate attention to the needs of decision makers. Management costs of UNEP should be reduced in favour of programme funding.

CPC was of the view that UNEP should fully implement the OIOS recommendations and recommended to the Assembly that the review be forwarded to the UNEP Governing Council for its consideration.

Fresh water

On 22 May [dec. SS.V/4], the Governing Council decided to enhance UNEP's role in the environmental aspects of sustainable development and management of fresh water by providing environmental, technical and scientific advice, facilitating the transfer of technology to developing countries and assisting countries in that regard, developing and strengthening their ability to manage their water resources, strengthening their institutional capacities and developing tools for monitoring and analysing water quality and quantity, and means of enhancing public awareness of important environmental aspects of water-related issues. It asked the Executive Director to facilitate the provision of advice and assistance to States on strengthening integrated river basin management. He was also asked, in consultation with Governments and other UN entities, to assist countries, particularly developing countries, to establish methods of identifying environmental problems of fresh water and the capacity to collect, interpret and disseminate information relating to environmental aspects of water-management decisions; to facilitate the surveying, development and dissemination of technologies and methodologies for the environmentally sound management of fresh water; to promote the best use of water technology centres in developing countries for South-South cooperation; to examine how corporate voluntary agreements and initiatives could enhance industry's role in fresh water; and to create mechanisms for assisting countries, particularly developing countries, in identifying effective practices in public participation in addressing environmental aspects of fresh water. He was also asked to cooperate with other UN entities and other international bodies through the Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) in promoting arrangements for cooperation on the environmental aspects of fresh water. The Council called on the Executive Director to present proposals and to report in 1999 on progress made in implementing its decision and on the environmental issues arising from it.

(For action taken by the Commission on Sustainable Development and the ACC Subcommittee on Water Resources on the question of fresh water, see preceding chapter.)

Convention on prior informed consent procedure

The Governing Council, on 22 May [dec. SS.V/5], authorized the participation of the UNEP secretariat in an interim secretariat and in a secretariat to the Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade (see below, under "Environmental activities"), if so decided by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Convention, provided that the arrangements were satisfactory to the Executive Director and that additional costs could be met through extrabudgetary resources. Similarly, the Council agreed to accept changes in the voluntary prior informed consent procedure, if so decided by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries, provided that additional costs could be met through extrabudgetary resources.

Global Environment Facility

By a 28 April note [UNEP/GCSS.V/INF/2], the Executive Director circulated to the Governing Council the Joint Summary of the Chairs of the GEF Council meeting (New Delhi, 30-31 March) and the policy recommendations for the second GEF replenishment period (1998-2002). A background paper of the same date on UNEP's participation in GEF [UNEP/GCSS.V/6] outlined possible action by the Council.

On 22 May [dec. SS.V/6], the Governing Council welcomed: progress made by the Executive Director in strengthening UNEP's role in GEF; the results of the first meeting of the GEF Assembly (New Delhi, 1-3 April); the successful conclusion of the negotiations on the GEF second replenishment; and the revitalized profile of UNEP as an implementing agency of GEF. It asked the Executive Director to strengthen further the revitalized role of UNEP in GEF, taking into account the decisions of the GEF Council and the statement of the first meeting of the GEF Assembly, and to report on those actions in 1999. GEF was asked to support the Executive Director's efforts to strengthen the role of UNEP in the Facility.

(See also PART THREE, Chapter II.)

Land degradation

On 22 May [dec. SS.V/7], the Governing Council asked the Executive Director to continue to promote action to assist, in collaboration with other UN bodies, parties to the 1994 United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa [YUN 1994, p. 944] to implement the Convention. The Executive Director was called on to assist countries, particularly those in Africa, with the implementation of regional plans of action to combat land degradation. He was asked, in consultation with the GEF Chief Executive Officer and Chairman, to further strengthen UNEP's role in GEF in activities aimed at combating land degradation and to report in 1999 on the implementation of the Council's decision.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/609/Add.6], adopted resolution 53/187 without vote [agenda item 94].

Report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2997 (XXVII) of 15 December 1972, by which it decided to establish the Governing

Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Also recalling the results and decisions of the nineteenth special session of the General Assembly, convened for the purpose of an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of Agenda 21, and, in particular, paragraphs 119 and 122 to 124 of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21,

Further recalling the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme at its nineteenth session,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its fifth special session,

1. Welcomes the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on its fifth special session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Recognizes, in particular, the Governing Council decision on the revitalization, reform and strengthening of the United Nations Environment Programme, including the areas of concentration of the activities of the Programme as proposed by the Executive Director in keeping with the spirit of the Nairobi Declaration on the Role and Mandate of the United Nations Environment Programme, as well as other priority areas of the Programme, as established by the Governing Council at its nineteenth session;

3. Welcomes the adoption by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries, at Rotterdam, Netherlands, on 11 September 1998, of the Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, and takes note of the fact that the functions of the secretariat of the Convention are jointly performed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the United Nations Environment Programme as an interim arrangement pending the final decision to be taken by the parties to the Convention on the location of the secretariat;

4. Also welcomes the holding of the first session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants, which took place at Montreal, Canada, from 29 June to 3 July 1998, and further welcomes the positive role played by the United Nations Environment Programme in the field of environmental management of chemicals and especially the efforts undertaken by the Programme, as the secretariat of the convention, for the negotiations on a convention on persistent organic pollutants;

5. Emphasizes that the United Nations Environment Programme has been and must continue to be the principal United Nations body in the field of environment and that its role is to be the leading global environmental authority that sets the global environmental agenda, that promotes the coherent implementation of the environmental dimension of sustainable development within the United Nations system and that serves as an authoritative advocate for the global environment;

6. Welcomes the Governing Council decision, as well as the decisions taken by the Assembly of the Global Environment Facility at its meeting held at New Delhi from 1 to 3 April 1998 and by the Global Environment Facility Council at its meeting held in Washington, D.C., from 14 to 16 October 1998, regarding the role of the United Nations Environment Programme in the Facility, and also welcomes the collaboration with the Facility on freshwater resources, as in the global international water assessment, and on activities aimed at combating land degradation as they relate to the focal areas of the Facility;

7. Encourages the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to continue with the ongoing reform of the Programme, and recognizes, as stated in the Nairobi Declaration, that, in order to operationalize its mandate, a revitalized Programme needs adequate, stable and predictable financial resources, and in this regard also recognizes the inter-relationship between excellence, relevance and cost-effectiveness in programme delivery, confidence in the organization and a consequent increase in the ability of the Programme to attract funding;

8. Also encourages the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to intensify his efforts to mobilize additional financial resources from other donor sources, as appropriate, in order to support the implementation of the priority areas of the Programme in line with the Nairobi Declaration and subject to the agreement of the Governing Council.

Regional offices

In May [UNEP/GCSS.V/INF/6], the Executive Director outlined the future role of the UNEP regional offices. He noted that the core functions of the six regional offices were information and analysis; fund-raising and liaison with regional partners; support to regional consultations, negotiations and decision-making in environmental policy matters; and communication of regional priorities to UNEP as the environmental authority of the United Nations. They acted as a clearinghouse, channelling regional priorities to headquarters for the Executive Director's action.

The Regional Office for Europe (ROE) required a UNEP liaison presence in Brussels to maintain daily links with the European Commission and the EU Council. ROE in Geneva provided logistical support for outposted UNEP programme activities for trade and economics and chemicals. In addition, it provided liaison functions with other UN agencies and other intergovernmental and non-governmental bodies. ROE also provided for coordination with the newly independent States. The task of the Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific was to ensure that UNEP was integrated into the regional priorities, which included reinforcing policy, institutional and legal measures for promoting the integration of environment and development; pollution control and management; development and implementation of global and regional environmental accords; natural resources conservation and sustainable use; response to environmental emergencies; information dissemination; and human resource development. The priorities of the Regional Office for West Asia focused on water resources; desertification; biodiversity; industrial pollution and waste management; energy; and climate change. The Executive Director proposed that the Office should revive existing memoranda of understanding with major inter-governmental bodies concerned with the environment. There should be increased public awareness on environmental issues through communications with the media. The Regional Office for North America served as a liaison with various governmental, intergovernmental, non-governmental and private-sector agencies. There was an urgent need for representation in Washington, D.C. The Regional Office for Latin America and the Caribbean should focus on institutional framework policies and instruments for environmental management. Other priorities in which UNEP should be involved included integrated watershed management; biodiversity and protected areas; and climate change. The Regional Office for Africa should strengthen its role in the policy-making processes in the region through its coordination of the African Ministerial Conference on the Environment. The priorities identified by the Conference included management of water and forest resources; management of municipal and toxic wastes; trade and economics; and drought and desertification.

International conventions and mechanisms

Implementation of conventions related to sustainable development

In accordance with General Assembly decision 52/445 [YUN 1997, p. 1047], the Secretary-General, in October [A/53/477], proposed ways and means for the Assembly to review progress made in implementing the conventions signed at UNCED in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681], reestablished as a result of the Conference, as well as other conventions related to sustainable development.

The Task Force on Environment and Human Settlements [A/53/463], established in response to decision 52/445, made recommendations regarding a future review, including that UNEP: base its support to global and regional conventions on its capacities for information, monitoring and global assessment; build its capacity and networks to ensure the scientific underpinnings of conventions, and facilitate their implementation; and continue to support joint meetings of heads of convention secretariats. It also recommended that the President of the UNEP Governing Council be invited to consult with the presidents of the conferences of the parties to selected conventions on arrangements for periodic joint meetings of representatives from those conventions in order to address cross-cutting issues arising from their work programmes and policy approaches.

The Secretary-General stated it was clear that the Assembly should begin to play an important role in the development of international environmental law related to sustainable development from a more cross-sectoral and integrated perspective. In line with the Task Force recommendations, a review by the Assembly should be policy-oriented and constitute the culmination of an intergovernmental process that would allow the Assembly to: conduct periodic integrated assessments of progress in conventions that could be carried out on a thematic or issue basis; identify and make policy recommendations on inter-linkages among various conventions; promote policy coherence among the provisions of various legal instruments and activities undertaken to implement them; identify overlap or inconsistencies among the various instruments; identify and promote areas of activity that had multiple benefits; and provide consolidated policy advice rather than separate sectoral resolutions. The Secretary-General outlined ways to organize the review.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/609/Add.6], adopted resolution 53/186 without vote [agenda item 94].

International institutional arrangements related to environment and development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 adopted at its nineteenth special session, in particular part IV thereof, entitled "International institutional arrangements",

Recalling also its decision 52/445 of 18 December 1997 on progress in the implementation of conventions relating to sustainable development,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on ways and means of undertaking the review of progress made in implementing conventions related to sustainable development,

Emphasizing that policy decisions under the conventions are taken by their respective Conferences of the Parties, which are autonomous governing bodies,

Noting that various conventions related to environment and sustainable development are at different stages of implementation, and recognizing the role of the General Assembly in fostering progress in the implementation of those conventions and of the commitments contained therein,

Reaffirming the need, as stipulated in part IV of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, for greater coherence in various intergovernmental organizations and processes through better policy coordination at the intergovernmental level, as well as for continued and more concerted efforts to enhance collaboration among the secretariats of relevant decision-making bodies,

1. Encourages the Conferences of the Parties to, and the permanent secretariats of, the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa to examine appropriate opportunities and measures to strengthen their complementarities and improve scientific assessments of ecological linkages between the three conventions;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report, for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, identifying actions undertaken to implement part IV.A, in particular paragraph 119, of the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21, as well as the areas requiring further consideration and work, taking into account the roles of relevant organizations and institutions of the United Nations system, as stated in part IV of the Programme.

On the same date, the Assembly took note of the report of the Second Committee on environment and sustainable development [A/53/609] (decision 53/444).

Climate change convention

As at 31 December, 177 States had become parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which was opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 681] and entered into force in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 938]. During 1998, the Dominican Republic, Gabon and Rwanda ratified the Convention and Tajikistan, Togo and Trinidad and Tobago acceded to it.

Conference of Parties

The fourth session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Buenos Aires, 2-14 November) adopted the Buenos Aires Plan of Action to reduce the risk of global climate change [FCCC/CP/1998/16 & Add.1]. The Plan would accelerate work on the Convention and prepare the way for industrialized countries to take action under the 1997 Kyoto Protocol [YUN 1997, p. 1048] on greenhouse gas emissions. It made refinements to the clean development mechanism, which would give industrialized countries credits for financing emissions-avoiding projects in developing countries. In addition to the Protocol's mechanisms, the Plan of Action addressed work on compliance issues and on policies and measures. The Plan would enhance work on transferring climate-friendly technologies to developing countries, and address the special needs of countries affected by global warming and the economic implications of response measures.

In a decision on the relationship between efforts to protect the stratospheric ozone layer and efforts to safeguard the global climate system—issues related to hydrofluorocarbons (HFCs) and perfluorocarbons (PFCs)—the Conference invited parties, the relevant bodies of the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 6861, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) (see p. 993) and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to provide information to the secretariat, by 15 July 1999, on ways to limit HFC and PFC emissions, including their use as replacements for ozone-depleting substances. It encouraged the convening of a workshop in 1999 by IPCC and the Technology and Economic Assessment Panel of the Montreal Protocol.

The Conference also adopted decisions on its financial mechanism; the development and transfer of technologies; the Kyoto Protocol; land use, land-use change and forestry; the impact of single projects on emissions; preparations for its first session serving as the meeting of the parties to the Kyoto Protocol; and a number of administrative and financial questions. It approved the text of the multilateral consultative process for the resolution of questions regarding implementation (article 13), prepared by the Ad Hoc Group on Article 13 at its sixth session (Bonn, Germany, 5-11 June) [FCCC/AG13/1998/2].

The fifth session of the Conference of the Parties would take place from 25 October to 5 November 1999 in Bonn.

Subsidiary bodies. The Subsidiary Body for Scientific and Technological Advice held its eighth (Bonn, 2-12 June) [FCCC/SBSTA/1998/6] and ninth (Buenos Aires, 3-10 November) [FCCC/SBSTA/1998/9] sessions. It considered article 6 of the Convention (education, training and public awareness), emissions inventories, land-use change and forestry, scientific and methodological aspects of a proposal by Brazil on recent scientific activities, articles 6, 12 and 17 of the Kyoto Protocol, the development and transfer of technologies and the clean development mechanism and emissions trading.

The eighth (Bonn, 2-12 June) [FCCC/SBI/1998/6 & Corr.1] and ninth (Buenos Aires, 3-10 November) [FCCC/SBI/1998/7] sessions of the Subsidiary Body for Implementation considered progress made in reviewing national communications from parties to the Convention on their greenhouse gas inventories and also discussed the financial mechanism; the clean development mechanism; emissions trading; and administrative and financial matters.

Note by Secretary-General. On 1 October [A/53/449], the Secretary-General transmitted a report by the Executive Secretary of the Convention on the outcome of the third (1997) session of the Conference of the Parties [YUN 1997, p. 1048], submitted in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/199 [ibid., p. 1049]. The report discussed preparations for, and potential outcomes of, the fourth session of the Conference and an ongoing review of administrative support services.

By decision 53/446 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Executive Secretary.

Other action. In his annual report covering 1998 [DP/1999/15], the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) stated that UNDP had set up a task force on climate change to provide a strategic and unified approach to the Kyoto Protocol follow-up and had produced two key research outputs on the clean development mechanism and limiting greenhouse gas emissions. To seize opportunities from increased international focus on the Convention, it launched a pilot project to support capacity-building for clean development mechanism activities with the support of Norway. The first pilot countries were Bulgaria, Peru, the Philippines and South Africa.

Conventions related to ozone layer

Montreal protocol

As at 31 December, 167 States and the European Community (EC) were parties to the 1987 Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer [YUN 1987, p. 686], 127 States and EC were parties to the 1990 Amendment to the Protocol [YUN 1990, p. 522], and 87 States and EC were parties to the 1992 Amendment [YUN 1992, p. 684].

The Tenth Meeting of the Parties to the Montreal Protocol (Cairo, Egypt, 23-24 November) [UNEP/OzL.Pro.10/9] asked the parties to develop and submit a strategy for managing halons, including emissions reduction and the elimination of their use, and to discourage the production and marketing of bromochloromethane. They were also asked to ensure the control and phase-out of new substances that threatened the ozone layer and to report on any new ozone-depleting substances (ODS) being produced or sold in their territories. The Technology and Economic Assessment Panel and the Science Assessment Panel were asked to determine whether substances such as n-propyl bromide posed a threat to the ozone layer and to identify the sources and availability of halon-1202. The former Panel was also asked to assess the volumes and uses of methyl bromide under the quarantine and pre-shipment exemption and to report on: the availability of alternative substances and technologies; emissions of carbon tetrachloride from its use as feedstock; emissions of other ODS arising from the use of controlled substances as feedstock; the impact of chlorofluorocarbon production phase-out on the future use of carbon tetrachloride as feedstock and emissions from such use; and progress made in reducing emissions of controlled substances from process-agent uses. Other decisions dealt with amending the non-compliance procedure of the Montreal Protocol, the implementation of that Protocol in the light of the Kyoto Protocol, customs codes, the extension of the global laboratory and analytical-use exemption until 31 December 2005, countries' compliance with the Montreal Protocol, and a number of administrative matters, including the 2000-2002 replenishment of the Multilateral Fund. The Meeting decided to hold the Eleventh Meeting of the Parties in November 1999 in China.

The UNDP Administrator reported that, as at December, UNDP had assisted 65 countries to convert their industrial and agricultural processes to eliminate the use of ODS and reverse damage to the ozone layer [DP/1999/15]. The programme comprised 905 projects with budgets of $234 million. In 1998, UNDP completed 75 conversion projects in 19 countries, eliminating 3,927 tonnes of ODS. Some 50 technical cooperation and capacity-building projects were also completed. Innovative projects were implemented in eight countries to help small and medium-sized enterprises to convert their processes using locally produced equipment.

Vienna convention

In 1998, Kazakhstan, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Tonga acceded to the 1985 Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer [YUN 1985, p. 804], which entered into force in 1988 [YUN 1988, p. 810], bringing the total number of States parties to 169.

The fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention was scheduled to take place in Beijing in November/December 1999.

Convention on air pollution

As at 31 December, 43 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution [YUN 1979, p. 710], which entered into force in 1983 [YUN 1983, p. 645]. Two protocols additional to the Convention, one dealing with heavy metals and the other with persistent organic pollutants, were opened for signature in Aarhus, Denmark, from 24 to 25 June, then at UN Headquarters until 21 December 1998. At year's end, the protocols had 36 signatories and both had been ratified by Canada.

Convention on Biological Diversity

In 1998, Angola and Tonga became parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, which opened for signature in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 683] and entered into force in 1993 [YUN 1993, p. 810], bringing the total number of parties to 174.

The Conference of the Parties, at its fourth meeting (Bratislava, Slovakia, 4-16 May) [UNEP/CBD/COP/4/27], adopted programmes of work for marine and coastal biodiversity, forest biodiversity, the diversity of inland and water ecosystems and agricultural biodiversity. In addition, the Conference considered issues related to biosafety, in particular the negotiations for a protocol to the Convention to address the transboundary movements of organisms modified by biotechnology. It decided that the final meeting of the Open-ended Ad Hoc Working Group on Biosafety and an extraordinary meeting of the Conference of the Parties would be held in 1999 regarding the adoption of the Protocol on Biosafety and preparations for the first Meeting of the Parties to the Protocol. In a decision on the relationship of the Convention with the Commission on Sustainable Development (see PART THREE, Chapter I) and biodiversity-related conventions, other international agreements, institutions and processes of relevance, the Conference stressed the need to ensure consistency in implementing the Convention and the World Trade Organization agreements. Other decisions dealt with the ecosystem approach, indicators, monitoring and assessment, alien species that threatened ecosystems, habitats of species and launching the Global Taxonomy Initiative; the clearing-house mechanism; access to genetic resources and sharing the benefits from their use; further implementation of the Convention's provisions regarding indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles; measures to implement the Convention; and administrative and budgetary matters.

Reports of UNEP Executive Director. The Governing Council considered a May note of the Executive Director describing action taken by UNEP to support the implementation of the Convention's provisions [UNEP/GCSS.V/INF/4].

The Executive Director, also in May, circulated to the Council documents relating to the proposed 1999-2000 budget for the Convention [UNEP/GCSS.V/INF/5 & Rev.1].

Note of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/201 [YUN 1997, p. 1050], the Secretary-General transmitted, in October, a report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention summarizing the decisions of the Conference of the Parties [A/53/451].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/609/Add.4], adopted resolution 53/190 without vote [agenda item 94 (d)].

Convention on Biological Diversity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/201 of 18 December 1997 on the Convention on Biological Diversity and other relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the provisions of the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Recalling further Agenda 21, particularly its chapter 15 on the conservation of biological diversity and related chapters,

Having considered the report of the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity,

Deeply concerned about the continued loss of the world's biological diversity, and, on the basis of the provisions of the Convention, reaffirming the commitment to the conservation of biological diversity, the sustainable use of its components and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of the utilization of genetic resources, including by appropriate access to genetic resources and appropriate transfer of relevant technologies, taking into account all rights over those resources and to technologies, and by appropriate funding,

Recognizing the contribution of indigenous and local communities to the conservation and sustainable use of biological resources,

Emphasizing that the Convention is an important instrument for achieving sustainable development, taking into account its three objectives, and for promoting the ecosystem approach embodied in the Convention and the decisions of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

Recalling the decisions adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting, relating to intellectual property rights and the relationship of the Convention with other international agreements,

Noting the dialogue taking place in the Committee on Trade and Environment of the World Trade Organization on the provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, Encouraged by the work carried out to date under the Convention, and satisfied that most States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified the Convention,

Taking note with appreciation of the generous offer of the Government of Colombia to host the sixth meeting of the Open-ended Ad hoc Working Group on Biosafety and the extraordinary meeting of the Conference of the Parties, which will take place at Cartagena de Indias from 15 to 19 February and on 22 and 23 February 1999, respectively,

Recalling its invitation to the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to report to the General Assembly on the result of future meetings of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

Noting the importance of decision IV/6, in particular paragraph 11 thereof, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting,

1. Welcomes the results of the fourth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity, held at Bratislava from 4 to 15 May 1998;

2. Also welcomes decision IV/16, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting, on the adoption of the programmes of work and the thematic approach adopted to guide its work in the development of the Convention for the foreseeable future, including its in-depth consideration of ecosystems;

3. Calls upon Governments, in cooperation with the Conference of the Parties, to use science-based analysis to study and monitor closely the evolution of new technologies to prevent possible adverse effects on the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity, which might have an impact on farmers and local communities;

4. Recognizes the importance of the adoption of a protocol on biosafety at the extraordinary meeting of the Conference of the Parties in 1999, or as soon as possible thereafter;

5. Welcomes decision IV/15, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting, in which it stressed the need to ensure consistency in implementing the Convention and World Trade Organization agreements, including the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights, with a view to promoting increased mutual supportiveness and integration of biological diversity concerns and the protection of intellectual property rights;

6. Reaffirms paragraph 10 of decision IV/15, in which the Conference of the Parties emphasized that further work is required to help develop a common appreciation of the relationship between intellectual property rights and the relevant provisions of the Agreement on Trade-related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights and the Convention on Biological Diversity, in particular on issues relating to technology transfer and conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity and the fair and equitable sharing of benefits arising out of the use of genetic resources, including the protection of knowledge, innovations and practices of indigenous and local communities embodying traditional lifestyles relevant for the conservation and sustainable use of biological diversity;

7. Recognizes the importance of the implementation of the Convention at all levels, including through the preparation and implementation of national strategies, plans and programmes, taking into account the need for financial resources to support the implementation activities, in particular those of developing countries, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and decisions of the Conference of the Parties;

8. Encourages those States that have not yet ratified the Convention to do so as soon as possible;

9. Welcomes decision IV/8, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting, in which it decided to establish a panel of experts to implement the terms outlined in the decision;

10. Recognizes the importance of national action to conserve biological diversity in many habitats, including forests, wetlands and coastal areas, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Convention, in particular article 8, and the need to mobilize national and international support for such national actions;

11. Welcomes decision IV/16, adopted by the Conference of the Parties at its fourth meeting, in which it decided to include an item entitled "Alien species that threaten ecosystems, habitat or species" in the agenda of its sixth meeting;

12. Recognizes the utility of information exchange, and encourages the development of biodiversity information networks at the national, regional and international levels;

13. Invites all funding institutions and bilateral and multilateral donors, as well as regional funding institutions and non-governmental organizations, to cooperate with the secretariat of the Convention in the implementation of the programme of work;

14. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to settle urgently any arrears and to pay their contributions in full and in a timely manner so as to ensure continuity in the cash flows required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies and the Convention secretariat;

15. Invites the Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity to report to the General Assembly on the ongoing work regarding the Convention;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the sub-item entitled "Convention on Biological Diversity".

Convention to combat desertification

In 1998, 28 countries and EC ratified, accepted or acceded to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, which was adopted in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 944] and entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 958], bringing the number of parties to 145.

The Conference of the Parties, at its second session (Dakar, Senegal, 30 November-11 December) [ICCD/COP(2)/14 & Add.1], held a special segment on ways to promote the implementation of the Convention. A declaration adopted by a round table of parliamentarians from 21 countries outlined measures that their parliaments would take to implement the Convention. The Conference established a 10-member ad hoc panel to compile and synthesize the most important and widely applied traditional knowledge in dry land ecosystems. The Conference approved the headquarters agreement of the Convention secretariat in Bonn, signed on 18 August, subject to its ratification by Germany. Other decisions dealt with the Global Mechanism, regional cooperation between countries of Eastern and Central Europe, review of the implementation of the Convention, collaboration with other conventions and administrative and budgetary matters.

The third session of the Conference was scheduled to take place in November 1999 in Recife, Brazil.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/198 [YUN 1997, p. 1053], the Secretary-General reported, in October, on the headquarters agreement, the Global Mechanism, an additional regional implementation annex to the Convention for the countries of the Eastern and Central European region, the status of the Convention and arrangements for the second session of the Conference [A/53/516].

Committee on Science and Technology

The Committee on Science and Technology, a subsidiary body of the Conference, at its second session (Dakar, 1-3 December), considered a report on the work of the ad hoc panel on benchmarks and indicators [ICCD/COP(2)/CST/3/Add.1] and of other bodies performing work similar to that envisaged for the Committee [ICCD/COP(2)/CST/4]. It also had before it a synopsis of reports on traditional knowledge, as well as a supplementary report on the subject [ICCD/COP(2)/CST/5 & Add.1], and a report on a survey and evaluation of existing networks, institutions, agencies and bodies [ICCD/COP(2)/CST/2 & Add.1].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/609/Add.5], adopted resolution 53/191 without vote [agenda item 94 (e)].

Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/198 of 18 December 1997 and other resolutions relating to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa,

Reiterating its decision, in conformity with paragraph 17 of its resolution 52/198, to include in the calendar of conferences and meetings for the biennium 1998-1999 the sessions of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention and its subsidiary bodies envisaged for that biennium, taking into account the request of the Conference of the Parties at its first session, held at Rome from 29 September to 10 October 1997,

Noting with satisfaction that a large number of States and one regional economic integration organization have ratified or acceded to the Convention, and confirming its globality and the worldwide support it enjoys,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Government of Senegal for the generous offer to host the second session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention,

Expressing its deep appreciation to the Secretary-General and to all bilateral and multilateral contributors, including intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations, for the contribution and the support they provided to the interim secretariat of the Convention,

Noting with appreciation the work undertaken by the interim secretariat in contributing to the ratification and implementation of the Convention at the national, subregional and regional levels, including in promoting public awareness,

Looking forward to the continued efforts of the Conference of the Parties and its subsidiary bodies in addressing desertification and drought issues in the light of the provisions of the Convention, as well as of the decisions taken by the Conference of the Parties at its first session,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of resolution 52/198, submitted in accordance with paragraph 21 thereof, and noting in this context the statement made on 22 October 1998 to the Second Committee of the General Assembly by the Executive Secretary of the Convention on the progress made by all actors in implementing the provisions of the Convention,

1. Welcomes the convening of the second session of the Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa, at Dakar, from 30 November to 11 December 1998, in accordance with paragraph 19 of its resolution 52/198;

2. Calls upon all States and other actors to contribute to the successful outcome of the second session of the Conference of the Parties;

3. Also calls upon all countries that are not yet parties to the Convention to ratify or accede to the Convention as soon as possible;

4. Notes that the United Nations, the Convention secretariat and the Government of Germany signed a headquarters agreement on 18 August 1998, which will be before the Conference of the Parties at its second session for adoption, subject to ratification by the German Parliament;

5. Invites the host Government and the Convention secretariat to contribute fully to the relocation of the secretariat and its effective functioning at Bonn, and also invites the secretariat to continue its efforts with a view to finalizing the relocation as soon as possible;

6. Notes with concern that the Global Mechanism did not begin operating on 1 January 1998;

7. Notes with appreciation the efforts made by the International Fund for Agricultural Development to establish the framework for the separate identity of the Global Mechanism within the Fund, and looks forward to a prompt start to its activities, in conformity with the provisions of the Convention and relevant decisions taken by the Conference of the Parties at its first session;

8. Urges all States parties to the Convention to pay promptly and in full on or before 1 January of each year, starting in 1999, the contributions required for the core budget of the Convention envisaged in the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties, so as to ensure continuity in the cash flow required to finance the ongoing work of the Conference of the Parties, the subsidiary bodies, the permanent secretariat and the Global Mechanism;

9. Notes with appreciation the financial support already provided on a voluntary basis by some States parties, and reiterates its appeal to Governments, all interested organizations and the private sector to make promptly further voluntary contributions in support of the activities and functioning of the Global Mechanism;

10. Calls upon Governments, regional economic integration organizations and other interested organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and the private sector, to contribute generously to the General Fund, the Supplementary Fund and the Special Fund, to be established by 1 January 1999 in accordance with the relevant paragraphs of the financial rules of the Conference of the Parties;

11. Also calls upon developing countries that are parties to the Convention to accelerate the process of elaboration and adoption of national action programmes, and calls for the implementation of those adopted through, inter alia, the conclusion of partnership agreements, including consideration of the contributions of non-governmental organizations;

12. Further calls upon the international community, in particular the developed countries and the United Nations system, and invites the multilateral financial institutions and all other interested actors, to support the efforts of affected developing countries in the process of elaborating and implementing action programmes to combat desertification, including, as appropriate, interregional programmes and platforms of cooperation, by providing them with financial resources and other forms of assistance;

13. Invites the Conference of the Parties at its second session to facilitate and launch the process of elaborating and negotiating an additional regional implementation annex to the Convention for the countries of the Eastern and Central European region, with a view to finalizing it as soon as possible;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the outcome of the second session of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention, as well as on measures taken for the implementation of decisions adopted by the Conference at that session;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, particularly in Africa".

Environmental activities

The atmosphere

Stratospheric ozone protection

A scientific assessment of ozone depletion during 1998, released by the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), confirmed that in the past 10 years the world's consumption of ozone-depleting substances (ODS) fell by 80 per cent. Industrialized countries had nearly phased out the production and use of chlorofluorocarbons and had contributed $760 million to the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer (see above, under "International conventions and mechanisms") for ozone-related projects in some 100 countries.

One of UNEP's tasks as an implementing agency under the Multilateral Fund was to provide a clearing-house function to assist developing countries with their phase-out of ODS. UNEP's OzoneAction Programme fulfilled that mandate by providing industry, government and other stakeholders in developing countries with information exchange services, training and networking of ODS officers. In addition, the Programme provided assistance through country programmes and institutional strengthening projects. The Programme convened meetings of the ODS Officers Network and conducted training on recovery and recycling of refrigerants in Namibia and on refrigeration management plans and good practices in refrigeration in Guatemala, Guyana and Peru. Regional training on monitoring and control of ODS consumption was held in Saint Lucia for the Caribbean and in Panama for Latin America and the Caribbean. A survey on methyl bromide was carried out for French-speaking countries in Africa, and the results were presented to a regional workshop in the Niger. The Programme disseminated a publication, How the Hotel and Tourism Industry Can Protect the Ozone Layer, to national ozone units and hotel associations.

The UNEP Methyl Bromide Technical Options Committee held three working meetings to complete the 1998 assessment on methyl bromide, which would provide an overview of technical issues related to the methyl bromide phase-out and the latest information on chemical and non-chemical alternatives for the current uses of the substance. On 8 September, the Programme began developing a policy plan for the control of use and production of methyl bromide in China. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) started work to identify progress and constraints for the replacement of methyl bromide in developing countries.

Climate protection

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), established by UNEP and WMO to assess scientific information about human-induced climate change for international and national policy formulation, held its fourteenth session (Vienna, 1-3 October). It established a Task Force on National Greenhouse Gas Inventories and adopted the terms of reference and membership of the Bureau of the Task Force to cover the period until its sixteenth (2000) session. IPCC approved the topics to be addressed in its special report on land use, land-use change and forestry, and presented an outline of the report.

Terrestrial ecosystems

Land degradation

A memorandum of understanding on the issue of land degradation, supported by the Global Environment Facility, was signed in November by UNEP and UNDP.

UNDP continued its work through the Office to Combat Desertification and Drought, which had assisted 49 countries to prepare their national action programmes to combat desertification and drought (see PART THREE, Chapter II).

Deforestation and forest degradation

Intergovernmental Forum on Forests

The Intergovernmental Forum on Forests (IFF), established in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1058] under the aegis of the Commission on Sustainable Development to work towards a legally binding instrument on the management, conservation and sustainable development of all types of forests, held its second session (Geneva, 24 August-4 September) [E/CN.17/IFF/1998/9]. With regard to implementation of the proposals for action of the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests (IPF) [YUN 1997, p. 1057], IFF recognized that implementation by developing countries with low forest cover merited special attention and called on UNEP to expedite the development of a definition of low forest cover as contained in the proposals for action. It agreed on several important elements for the implementation of the IPF proposals for action. The Forum drafted preliminary conclusions and proposals on matters left pending on trade and environment and on the transfer of environmentally sound technologies to support sustainable forest management. Other issues arising from the programme elements of the IPF process needing further clarification were discussed, including underlying causes of deforestation, traditional forest-related knowledge, forest conservation and protected areas, and research priorities; and valuation of forest goods and services, economic instruments, tax policies and land tenure, future supply of and demand for wood products and non-wood forest products, and rehabilitation of forest cover. In its discussion of forest-related work of international and regional organizations and under existing instruments, IFF called on interested parties to identify means to mobilize their diverse strengths and capabilities to support country-level efforts in implementing the proposals for action; foster synergies among them, and encourage them to contribute to international forest policy dialogue; and clarify their roles regarding UNCED's forest-related programmes of action [YUN 1992, p. 670].

By decision 1998/216 of 23 July, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission on Sustainable Development's request [E/1998/29] to hold IFF's third session in Geneva from 3 to 14 May 1999.

UNDP action. The UNDP Administrator reported that UNDP had launched a programme for sustainable management of forest resources with Cameroon, Costa Rica, Guyana, Malawi, Uganda and Viet Nam [DP/1999/15]. New partnerships, through country-led initiatives, were formed to support sustainable forest management and related livelihoods.

Sustainable mountain development

Report of Secretary-General. In response to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/45 [YUN 1997, p. 1059], the Secretary-General reported in June on the desirability of proclaiming an international year of mountains and on other ways to ensure the sustainable development of mountain countries, following consultations with Governments and international, regional and non-governmental organizations [E/1998/68]. The report concluded that the responses received suggested that the proclamation of an international year of mountains at an appropriate time could contribute to efforts to protect, conserve and sustainably manage mountain resources.

Communication. Within the context of the preparations for the proclamation of an international year of mountains, Kyrgyzstan, together with the International Centre for Integrated Mountain Development and the Asia Pacific Mountain Network, hosted the International Seminar on the Mountains of Central Asia (Bishkek, 25-28 May) [E/1998/80]. The participants adopted a declaration in which, among other things, they pledged to participate in the activities of the proposed international year of mountains.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 July [meeting 45], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/30 [draft: E/1998/L.21] without vote [agenda item 7 (e)].

Proclamation of an international year of mountains

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1997/45 of 22 July 1997 on the proclamation of an international year of mountains,

Recalling also its resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries, in which it recognized the contribution that the celebration of international years could make to the furtherance of international cooperation and understanding,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the proclamation of an international year of mountains, in which it was recognized that the proclamation of an international year of mountains would provide an impetus for achieving sustainable mountain development, Recommends that the General Assembly at its fifty-third session proclaim the year 2002 as the International Year of Mountains.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 10 November [meeting 54], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/24 [draft: A/53/L.24] without vote [agenda item 12].

International Year of Mountains, 2002

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/30 of 29 July 1998,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of Agenda 21 on sustainable mountain development,

Noting the work already undertaken to achieve sustainable mountain development by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and particularly its role as task manager for chapter 13 of Agenda 21,

1. Proclaims the year 2002 as the International Year of Mountains;

2. Invites the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to serve as the lead agency for the International Year of Mountains, in collaboration with Governments, the United Nations Environment Programme, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations;

3. Calls upon Governments, national and international organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to make voluntary contributions in accordance with the guidelines of the Economic and Social Council for international years and anniversaries and to lend other forms of support to the International Year of Mountains;

4. Encourages all Governments, the United Nations system and all other actors to take advantage of the International Year of Mountains in order to increase awareness of the importance of sustainable mountain development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the state of the preparations for the International Year of Mountains.

Marine ecosystems

Protection of the marine and coastal environment

The Pan-African Conference on Sustainable Integrated Coastal Management (Maputo, Mozambique, 18-25 July), jointly supported by UNEP, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and Finland, launched a series of pan-African and partnership conferences, all aimed at moving the protection, management and development of Africa's marine and coastal environment to the centre stage of policy and decision-making in the region. In December, building on the achievements of the Conference, African Ministers adopted the Cape Town Declaration on an African Process for the Development and Protection of the Coastal and Marine Environment. The document reflected the fact that the coastal and marine environment was an essential resource for long-term sustainable development in Africa and that African countries should work together to tackle regional issues like marine pollution.

In 1998, UNEP launched the first coastal resources atlas in Eastern Africa, from Somalia to the United Republic of Tanzania, comprising five sets of coastal resource maps and an illustrated textbook on the coastal environment in Kenya.

ACC Subcommittee. The ACC Subcommittee on Oceans and Coastal Areas (sixth session, Lisbon, Portugal, 20-23 January) considered a status report on the United Nations ocean atlas, the evolving programme of the 1998 International Year of the Ocean (see below) and the inter-agency review of implementation planning for the 1995 Global Programme of Action for the Protection of the Marine Environment from Land-based Activities [YUN 1995, p. 1081].

International Year of the Ocean

In observance of the 1998 International Year of the Ocean, proclaimed by the General Assembly in resolution 49/131 [YUN 1994, p. 951], more than 200 conferences, workshops and training cruises were arranged. Seventeen major publications were announced as dedicated to the Year. In addition, an International Year of the Ocean web site was created to disseminate scientific, cultural and educational information related to the Year.

To mark the Year, UNDP launched its capacity-building Strategic Initiative for Ocean and Coastal Management.

Living marine resources

Drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing and fisheries by-catch and discards

In October [A/53/473], the Secretary-General presented information received from States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and regional and subregional fisheries organizations on efforts to implement General Assembly resolution 52/29 [YUN 1997, p. 1062]; that resolution addressed the impact on the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas of large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing and unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and the impact on the sustainable use of the world's living marine resources of fisheries by-catch and discards. He also reported on efforts by FAO concerning the preparation of plans of action to reduce the incidental catch of seabirds, the conservation and management of shark populations, and guidelines for the control and management of fishing capacity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 24 November [meeting 69], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/33 [draft: A/53/L.45 & Add.I] without vote [agenda item 38 (b)].

Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolutions 46/215 of 20 December 1991, 49/116 and 49/118 of 19 December 1994, 51/36 of 9 December 1996 and 52/29 of 26 November 1997, as well as other resolutions on large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General,

Emphasizing the useful role that report plays in bringing together information relating to the sustainable development of the world's marine living resources, provided by States, relevant intergovernmental organizations, regional and subregional fisheries organizations, and non-governmental organizations,

Noting with satisfaction that, while significant work remains, interested parties have made real progress towards sustainable fisheries management,

Welcoming the progress in organizing new regional organizations and arrangements in several heretofore unmanaged fisheries,

Noting that the secretariat of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations stated that 60 to 70 per cent of world fisheries are either fully exploited or overfished, and encouraging, in this regard, the current intergovernmental negotiating process at that organization to address the issue of fishing overcapacity,

Noting with concern the reports of continued loss of sea birds, particularly albatross, as a result of incidental mortality from long-line fishing operations, and the loss of other marine species, including sharks and fin-fish species, as a result of incidental mortality,

Conscious of the need to promote and facilitate international cooperation, especially at the regional and subregional levels, in order to ensure the sustainable development and use of the living marine resources of the world's oceans and seas, consistent with the present resolution and with the duties of States to cooperate in the conservation and management of marine living resources, in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,

Once again expressing concern at the impact of large-scale drift-net fishing on the marine living resources of the oceans and seas, and noting that there are continuing reports of activities inconsistent with the terms of resolution 46/215,

Concerned also to ensure that the implementation of resolution 46/215 in some parts of the world does not result in the transfer to other parts of the world of drift-nets that contravene the resolution,

Expressing concern at the detrimental impact of unauthorized fishing in areas under national jurisdiction on the sustainable development of the world's fishery resources and on the food security and economies of many States, particularly developing States, and the continuing reports of unauthorized fishing activities, inconsistent with the terms of resolution 49/116, in zones of national jurisdiction,

Recalling that, pursuant to a proposal made at the twenty-second session of the Committee on Fisheries of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations in March 1997, that organization agreed to organize an expert consultation to develop and propose guidelines leading to a plan of action aiming at a reduction in the incidental catch of sea birds, to organize an expert consultation to develop and propose guidelines leading to a plan of action for the conservation and effective management of shark populations, and to hold a technical consultation on the management of fishing capacity to draft guidelines for the control and management of fishing capacities,

Noting with satisfaction that the Consultation on Management of Fishing Capacity, Shark Fisheries and the Incidental Catch of Sea Birds, held from 26 to 30 October 1998, and its preparatory meeting, held in July 1998, produced draft plans of action or elements thereof for approval at the February 1999 meeting of the Committee on Fisheries,

Recognizing the importance of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks and the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas, and noting that neither of these agreements has yet entered into force,

Noting that the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries sets out principles and global standards of behaviour for responsible practices to conserve, manage and develop fisheries, including guidelines for fishing on the high seas and in areas under the national jurisdiction of other States, and on fishing gear selectivity and practices, with the aim of reducing by-catch and discards,

Recalling that Agenda 21, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, calls upon States to take effective action, consistent with international law, to deter reflagging of vessels by their nationals as a means of avoiding compliance with applicable conservation and management rules for fishing vessels on the high seas,

Noting with satisfaction that "Oceans and seas" will be the sectoral theme discussed by the Commission on Sustainable Development at its seventh session in 1999,

1. Reaffirms the importance it attaches to sustainable management and conservation of the marine living resources of the world's oceans and seas, and the obligations of States to cooperate to this end, in accordance with international law, as reflected in the relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, in particular, the provisions on cooperation set out in part V and part VII, section 2, of the Convention regarding straddling stocks, highly migratory species, marine mammals, anadromous stocks and marine living resources of the high seas;

2. Also reaffirms the importance it attaches to compliance with its resolutions 46/215, 49/116, 49/118 and 52/29, and urges States and other entities to enforce fully such measures;

3. Requests all participants to work for the adoption of the outcomes of the technical consultation of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, held in Rome from 26 to 30 October 1998, and encourages all States to act responsibly, as appropriate, at national, regional and global levels to implement the action plans or the guidelines, in particular those for the management of fishing capacity, once adopted by the Committee on Fisheries;

4. Calls upon States and other entities referred to in article 1, paragraph 2 (b), of the Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Agreement to consider doing so at the earliest possible time, and to consider applying it provisionally;

5. Also calls upon States and other entities referred to in article 10, paragraph 1, of the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas that have not submitted instruments of acceptance of the Agreement to consider doing so at the earliest possible time;

6. Urges all authorities of members of the international community that have not done so to take greater enforcement responsibility to ensure full implementation of the global moratorium on all large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing on the high seas, including enclosed seas and semi-enclosed seas, and to impose appropriate sanctions, consistent with their obligations under international law, against acts contrary to the terms of resolution 46/215;

7. Calls upon States that have not done so to take measures, including measures to deter reflagging to avoid compliance with applicable obligations, to ensure that fishing vessels entitled to fly their flags do not fish in areas under the national jurisdiction of other States unless duly authorized by the authorities of the State concerned and in accordance with the conditions set out in the authorization, and do not fish on the high seas in contravention of the applicable conservation and management rules;

8. Urges States, relevant international organizations and regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and arrangements to take action, including through assistance to developing countries, to reduce by-catches, fish discards and post-harvest losses consistent with international law and relevant international instruments, including the Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries;

9. Reiterates its call on organizations with development assistance programmes to make it a high priority to support, including through financial and/or technical assistance, the efforts of developing coastal States, in particular the least developed countries and the small island developing States, to improve the monitoring and control of fishing activities and the enforcement of fishing regulations, including through financial and technical support for regional and subregional meetings for this purpose;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to bring the present resolution to the attention of all members of the international community, relevant intergovernmental organizations, the organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional fisheries management organizations and relevant non-governmental organizations, and to invite them to provide the Secretary-General with information relevant to the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to ensure that reporting on all major fisheries-related activities and instruments is effectively coordinated, that any duplication of activities and reporting is minimized, and that relevant scientific and technical studies are disseminated to the international community, and invites the relevant specialized agencies, including the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, as well as regional and subregional fisheries organizations and arrangements, to cooperate with the Secretary-General to that end;

12. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on further developments relating to the implementation of resolution 52/29, the status and implementation of the Agreement to Promote Compliance with International Conservation and Management Measures by Fishing Vessels on the High Seas and efforts undertaken in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, referred to in paragraph 8 of resolution 52/29, taking into account the information provided by States, relevant specialized agencies, in particular the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and other appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and subregional organizations and arrangements and other relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

13. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fifth session, under the item entitled "Oceans and law of the sea", the sub-item entitled "Large-scale pelagic drift-net fishing, unauthorized fishing in zones of national jurisdiction and on the high seas, fisheries by-catch and discards, and other developments".

Conservation of wildlife

As at 31 December, the 1994 Lusaka Agreement on Cooperative Enforcement Operations Directed at Illegal Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora [YUN 1994, p. 951], which entered into force in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 970], had been ratified or acceded to by six States (Congo, Kenya, Lesotho, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia). The Agreement aimed to reduce, and ultimately eliminate, illegal trafficking in African wildlife.

Protection against harmful products and wastes

Chemical safety

Prior informed consent procedure

Intergovernmental Committee. The Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for the Application of the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, at its fifth session (Brussels, Belgium, 9-14 March) [UNEP/FAO/PIC/INC.5/3], reached agreement on a draft Convention on the topic. The Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, which was adopted at the Conference of Plenipotentiaries in Rotterdam, Netherlands, on 11 September and named the Rotterdam Convention, was signed on that day by 57 countries and EC, and was to be open for signature until 10 September 1999. The Convention created the Chemical Review Committee to evaluate the scientific basis for including candidate chemicals in the prior informed consent (PIC) procedure and make recommendations to a Conference of the Parties. It covered five industrial chemicals and 22 pesticides. Chemicals eligible to become candidates for the procedure included chemicals and pesticides that were banned or severely restricted by two or more parties from different regions, as well as certain severely hazardous pesticide formulations that posed problems under conditions of use in developing countries. Parties would be required to provide export notifications to countries regarding chemicals that had been banned or severely restricted in their territory. The Convention would enter into force after it had been ratified by at least 50 countries. To ensure that work under the Convention started immediately, an interim procedure on its voluntary implementation was in place until it became legally binding.

Report of UNEP Executive Director. In an April report [UNEP/GCSS.v/5], the UNEP Executive Director proposed that the Governing Council authorize the participation of the UNEP secretariat in an interim secretariat and in a secretariat to the Convention, and agree to accept changes in the voluntary PIC procedure provided that costs additional to the implementation of the current voluntary procedure were met through extra-budgetary resources.

Harmful products

In June [A/53/156-E/1998/78], the Secretary-General submitted a report for the fifth triennial review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments. The most recent previous review was held in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1084].

The Secretary-General noted that considerable progress had been achieved in developing the Consolidated List and a recent decision to focus exclusively on pharmaceuticals and chemicals in alternate issues, along with computerized maintenance and production, should make the List more user-friendly. However, problems relating to issuing the List in alternating sets of languages needed to be addressed.

By decision 53/445 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/41 [draft: E/1998/L.34] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Protection against products harmful to health and the environment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/137 of 17 December 1982, 38/149 of 19 December 1983, 39/229 of 18 December 1984 and 44/226 of 22 December 1989, as well as Assembly decisions 47/439 of 22 December 1992 and 50/431 of 20 December 1995,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on products harmful to health and the environment, which contains a review of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments,

Noting with satisfaction the continued close collaboration between the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization and the United Nations Environment Programme in the preparation of the Consolidated List, Noting the successful conclusion of the negotiations to develop a legally binding instrument for the application of the prior informed consent procedure for certain hazardous chemicals and pesticides in international trade (Rotterdam Convention),

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on products harmful to health and the environment, and notes the progress being achieved in increasing the number of countries that participate in the preparation of the Consolidated List of Products Whose Consumption and/or Sale Have Been Banned, Withdrawn, Severely Restricted or Not Approved by Governments;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the cooperation extended by Governments in the preparation of the Consolidated List, and urges all Governments, in particular those that have not yet done so, to provide the necessary information to relevant organizations for inclusion in future issues of the Consolidated List;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to prepare the Consolidated List, focusing on chemicals and pharmaceutical products in alternate years, with the same frequency for each official language in publishing the Consolidated List as was envisioned in General Assembly resolutions 39/229 and 44/226;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary technical assistance to developing countries, at their request, for the establishment and/or strengthening of national capacity for managing hazardous chemicals and pharmaceutical products;

5. Urges the adoption of the agreed text of the Rotterdam Convention at the diplomatic conference to be held at Rotterdam, the Netherlands, on 10 and 11 September 1998, and calls for a speedy ratification by the signatories of the Convention, aimed at its early entry into force;

6. Emphasizes the need to continue to utilize the work being undertaken by relevant organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental organizations in this area, as well as that being carried out under international agreements and conventions in related areas in updating the Consolidated List;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to report every three years, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/229, on the implementation of the present resolution and of previous Assembly resolutions on the same subject.

Persistent organic pollutants

The first session of the Intergovernmental Negotiating Committee for an International Legally Binding Instrument for Implementing International Action on Certain Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) (Montreal, Canada, 29 June-3 July) focused on a list of 12 POPs: aldrin, chlordane, DDT, dieldrin, dioxins, endrin, furans, heptachlor, hexachlorobenzene, mirex, PCBs and toxaphene. The meeting gave the UNEP secretariat a mandate to prepare a new draft outlining the substantive articles for possible inclusion in a future convention. Once accepted, the outline would be used for drafting the text of the agreement. The meeting also established an expert group to develop science-based criteria and a procedure to identify additional POPs as candidates for future action. It also focused on the need for technical cooperation and financial assistance so that developing countries could participate in replacing POPs with alternative chemicals and solutions. The second round of talks was scheduled for 1999.

The Criteria Expert Group held its first session (Bangkok, Thailand, 26-30 October) to start identifying the scientific criteria to be used to add chemicals to the list of POPs. In addition to toxicity, the Group considered factors such as volatility, persistence, long-range transport and bioaccumulation. It also discussed the procedural aspects of adding chemicals to a future legally binding instrument.

Hazardous wastes

Transboundary movement

The fourth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the 1989 Basel Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal [YUN 1989, p. 420] (Kuching, Malaysia, 23-27 February) [UNEP/CHW.4/35] approved two lists: one of wastes containing substances that would be banned, including arsenic, lead, mercury, asbestos and other chemicals; and a second describing non-hazardous materials that could be safely and profitably recycled. The mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts to Consider and Develop a Draft Protocol on Liability and Compensation for Damage Resulting from Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes and their Disposal was extended and the Group was asked to finalize the draft text for consideration and adoption in 1999. The Conference decided to hold its fifth meeting in 1999 in Basel, Switzerland.

(See also PART TWO, Chapter II.)

Environmental emergencies

The third meeting of the Advisory Group on Environmental Emergencies (Geneva, 30 November) [EU/AG/18] was convened jointly by the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) and UNEP, in accordance with the Group's recommendations at its second meeting [YUN 1996, p. 973]. The Group exchanged views and experiences on international assistance for environmental emergencies and reviewed the work of the Joint UNEP/OCHA

Environment Unit. It called for closer attention to environmental impacts of natural disasters, and asked the Joint Unit to address environmental impacts of natural disasters on a systematic basis, to develop further its activities in accordance with the established practice and mechanisms of OCHA's Disaster Response Branch and to report on the added value the Unit brought to the Branch. The meeting discussed a proposal for a publication to address topics and issues associated with establishing an emergency response mechanism that focused on environmental emergencies, and a related publication, Guidelines for the Development of a National Environmental Contingency Plan. It also discussed updating the directory of emergency response centres that was in draft form. Regarding the programme of work of the Joint Unit, the meeting proposed establishing a small core group that would meet between the regular sessions of the Advisory Group, if necessary. The Group scheduled its next meeting for 2000.

Other matters

International Year of Ecotourism (2000)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 July [meeting 46], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/40 [draft: E/1998/L.28, orally revised] without vote [agenda item 13 (a)].

Declaring the year 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1980/67 of 25 July 1980 on international years and anniversaries, in which the Council recognized the contribution of international years to the furtherance of international cooperation and understanding,

Recalling also Agenda 21, which was adopted by one hundred and eighty-two Governments at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (Earth Summit), on 14 June 1992, and the conclusions of the General Assembly at its nineteenth special session relative to sustainable tourism,

Stressing that the implementation of Agenda 21 requires the full integration of sustainable development into the tourism industry in order to ensure, inter alia, that travel and tourism provide a source of income for many people, that travel and tourism contribute to the conservation, protection and restoration of the Earth's ecosystem, that international trade in travel and tourism services takes place on a sustainable basis and that environmental protection is an integral part of tourism development,

Stressing also the need to promote the implementation of international conventions on environment and development, including those on biodiversity and climate change,

Bearing in mind the need for international cooperation in promoting tourism within the framework of sustainable development so as to meet the needs of present tourists and host countries and regions while protecting and enhancing opportunities for the future, managing resources to fulfil economic, social and aesthetic needs and maintaining cultural integrity, essential ecological processes, biological diversity and life-support systems,

Recognizing the support of the World Tourism Organization for the importance of ecotourism and, in particular, of the designation of the year 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism in fostering better understanding among peoples everywhere, in leading to greater awareness of the rich heritage of various civilizations and in bringing about a better appreciation of the inherent values of different cultures, thereby contributing to the strengthening of world peace,

Considering that the designation of the year 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism will encourage the intensification of cooperative efforts by Governments and international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations, to achieve the aims of Agenda 21 in promoting development and the protection of the environment,

1. Recommends to the General Assembly that it declare the year 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism;

2. Invites States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies and pertinent intergovernmental and governmental organizations to exert all possible efforts on behalf of the success of the Year, in particular regarding ecotourism in developing countries;

3. Requests the Commission on Sustainable Development, within the framework of its discussion of tourism during its seventh session, to recommend to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, supportive measures and activities which will contribute to a successful Year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide, in accordance with the guidelines for future international years as contained in the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/67, necessary support to ensure the success of the Year, including widespread dissemination of pertinent information;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with all relevant entities of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Environment Programme as well as the World Tourism Organization, and the World Travel and Tourism Council, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session a report containing:

- (a) Information on programmes and activities undertaken by Governments and interested organizations during the Year;

- (b) An assessment of the results achieved in realizing the aims and objectives of the Year, in particular in terms of encouraging ecotourism in developing countries;

- (c) Recommendations to advance further the promotion of ecotourism within the framework of sustainable development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/605], adopted resolution 53/200 without vote [agenda item 12].

Proclamation of 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/40 of 30 July 1998, Proclaims 2002 as the International Year of Ecotourism.

Access to information

A regional ministerial conference on the theme "Environment for Europe" (Aarhus, Denmark, June) [E/1999/I4/Add.2] adopted the Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters. The Convention opened for signature on 25 June and thereafter at Headquarters until 21 December. At year's end, there were 40 signatories to the Convention (see also PART THREE, Chapter V).

Declaration on cleaner production

Participants attending the Fifth International High-level Seminar on Cleaner Production (Phoenix Park, Republic of Korea, 29 September-1 October) signed the International Declaration on Cleaner Production. The Declaration, which was prepared by UNEP after extensive consultation with diverse interest groups, focused on leadership; awareness, education and training; research and development integration; communication; and implementation. UNEP was to coordinate and monitor the Declaration's implementation.

Chapter VIII

Population and human settlements

At mid-1998, the estimated world population stood at 5.9 billion, having grown at a rate of 1.3 per cent over the preceding year. Over 80 per cent of the population resided in the less developed regions. According to United Nations projections, the world population would be in the range of 7.3 billion to 10.7 billion by the mid-twenty-first century depending on the assumed future fertility trends.

In 1998, UN population activities focused on a global review of the Programme of Action adopted at the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), in preparation for the 1999 special session of the General Assembly on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action. During the year, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) carried out activities in some 155 countries and organized a number of round tables and technical symposia on major themes connected with the Programme of Action's implementation. The three core UNFPA programme areas were reproductive health, population and development strategies, and advocacy. In 1998, provisional UNFPA project expenditures totalled $216.6 million.

The Commission on Population and Development, which served as the preparatory body for the Assembly's 1999 special session, considered follow-up actions to the ICPD recommendations and devoted its thirty-first session to the issue of health and mortality, paying special attention to gender issues and development. On the Commission's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on census activities and on the review and appraisal of the ICPD Programme of Action. The Assembly also adopted a resolution on implementation of the Programme of Action.

UN activities in the area of human settlements were guided by follow-up to the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II). The Assembly decided that the special session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of Habitat II would be held in 2001. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, in an effort to build global awareness of the deterioration of the housing conditions of the poor, was in the process of establishing a campaign on secure tenure.

Population

Follow-up to the 1994 Conference on Population and Development

Implementation of the Programme of Action

The United Nations continued to implement the Programme of Action adopted by the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) in 1994 [YUN 1994, p. 956] and endorsed that year by the General Assembly in resolution 49/128 [ibid., p. 963].

Report of Secretary-General. The Secretary-General, in response to General Assembly resolution 52/188 [YUN 1997, p. 1075], presented a September report [A/53/407] on the preparations for the special session of the Assembly, to be held from 30 June to 2 July 1999, for the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action.

The Secretary-General said that the review and appraisal was well under way, focusing on policy changes and operational experiences at the country level. The review sought to draw out lessons learned, to identify obstacles encountered and to propose key future action needed to achieve ICPD goals and objectives. Inquiries had been sent to Member States to learn more of what had been done or was taking place at the country level with regard to policies and programmes.

The five-year review was a broad-based process which had benefited from cooperation between the Population Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA) of the UN Secretariat and the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). The two bodies met periodically to discuss documentation, notably: the report being prepared by UNFPA for the international forum on the implementation of the Programme of Action to be held at The Hague, Netherlands, in February 1999; the quinquennial review and appraisal being coordinated by the Population Division, with one chapter being written by UNFPA; and the Secretary-General's report, being coordinated by UNFPA in consultation with the Population Division, to be submitted to the special session. The regional commissions were scheduled to hold regional consultations on the five-year review, and the agencies, funds and programmes of the UN system were also participating in the preparations. In addition, there had been formal briefings for various groups from civil society.

The Secretary-General described the role and activities of intergovernmental bodies, the UN system and organizations in civil society. He reported on two regional preparatory meetings for the five-year review: the Asia-Pacific Regional High-level Meeting (Bangkok, Thailand, 24-27 March) and the Ad Hoc Committee on Population and Development of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (Aruba, 13-14 May). Other regional consultations were held by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (Beirut, Lebanon, 22-25 September), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 23-25 September) and the Economic Commission for Europe (Budapest, Hungary, 7-9 December).

The Secretary-General also reported on the outcomes of three round tables and a technical symposium organized by UNFPA—the Round Table on Adolescent Reproductive Health and Rights (New York, 14-17 April); the Round Table on Ensuring Reproductive Rights and Implementing Sexual and Reproductive Health Programmes, including Women's Empowerment, Male Involvement and Human Rights (Kampala, Uganda, 22-25 June); the Round Table on Partnership with Civil Society (Dhaka, Bangladesh, 27-30 July); and the Technical Symposium on International Migration and Development (The Hague, 29 June-3 July). Other technical meetings on ageing, reproductive health services in emergency situations, and population change and economic development took place in the latter half of the year (see below, under "UN Population Fund").

Preparations were under way for the international forum on the implementation of the Programme of Action, organized by UNFPA in cooperation with the Netherlands, to be held in February 1999. In addition, the thirty-second session of the Commission on Population and Development was scheduled to take place from 22 to 30 March 1999. In resolution 52/188 [YUN 1997, p. 1075], the Assembly had decided that the Commission would serve as the preparatory body for the final preparations for the Assembly's 1999 special session. The findings and conclusions of the round tables and technical meetings and of the regional consultations would be incorporated into the documentation for the international forum and the Commission and into the Secretary-General's report to be submitted to the special session.

Commission preparations for special session.

The Commission, at its thirty-first session [E/1998/25], considered and approved the outline for the quinquennial review and appraisal, as prepared by the UN Population Division.

The Commission had approved in 1995 a work programme for 1996-1999, with a view to monitoring progress in the major thematic areas covered by the Programme of Action. Included in the Commission's terms of reference, as endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1995/55 [YUN 1995, p. 1093], was the undertaking of a quinquennial review and appraisal of the progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action and in implementing its recommendations. The Commission therefore had called on the Secretary-General to report in 1999 on that review and appraisal.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Population and Development [E/1998/25], adopted resolution 1998/8 without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/188 of 18 December 1997 on population and development,

Noting the work being done by the relevant United Nations bodies and the proposed outline of the Secretariat for the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the quinquennial review and appraisal of progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, while bearing in mind the views expressed by Member States at the thirty-first session of the Commission on Population and Development,

Stressing the need to ensure that the review of the outcome of the Conference will be a coordinated process which reinvigorates and strengthens efforts at the local, national and international levels to implement fully the Programme of Action,

1. Requests the Secretariat to prepare, as soon as possible and no later than the end of June 1998, and to make available to States a comprehensive plan, including a timetable, for the preparatory process of inter-agency consultations, technical meetings and round-table meetings, including those at the regional level, setting out the purpose, working methods and key anticipated outcomes of each and how they will contribute to the review and appraisal report. In preparing this plan, the Population Division of the Secretariat and the United Nations Population Fund should work closely together, as they did in the preparations for the International Conference on Population and Development, and in consultation, as appropriate, with other relevant bodies and should hold regular briefings for States;

2. Requests that the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General on the quinquennial review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, to be coordinated by the Population Division, the report of the international forum on the operational review of the Programme of Action, to be coordinated by the United Nations Population Fund, and the draft report of the Secretary-General for the special session of the General Assembly on the further implementation of the Programme of Action, also to be coordinated by the United Nations Population Fund, all of which are to be prepared for the Commission on Population and Development at its thirty-second session, should focus on, inter alia:

(a) Analysis of key successes and constraints as well as lessons learned in developing effective strategies and actions in the implementation of the Programme of Action and changes in policy, programmes and resource allocations at the national and international levels towards a more comprehensive achievement of the goals of the Conference;

(b) Strengthening of coordination throughout the United Nations system and between the United Nations system, Governments and other actors, such as the multilateral development banks and civil society;

(c) Domestic, bilateral and multilateral resources made available as of 31 December 1998, estimates of resources expected to be made available as of 31 December 1999, examples of effective and efficient use made of available resources and circumstances for improving the environment, with a view to increased financial support from the international community for population and development activities;

(d) Methodology and mechanisms for monitoring progress in the implementation of the Programme of Action;

3. Decides that the length of the thirty-second session of the Commission on Population and Development, in March 1999, shall be extended to seven working days.

The Council, by decision 1998/295 of 31 July, decided that the thirty-second session of the Commission would meet in New York from 22 to 30 March 1999.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/608/Add.6], adopted resolution 53/183 without vote [agenda item 93 (f)].

Implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/128 of 19 December 1994, 50/124 of 20 December 1995, 51/176 of 16 December 1996 and 52/188 of 18 December 1997 on the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development,

Noting that, in paragraph 2 of its resolution 52/188, the General Assembly decided to convene a special session for a duration of three days, from 30 June to 2 July 1999, at the highest possible level of participation, to review and appraise the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/8 of 23 July 1998 on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the preparations for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the preparations for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development;

2. Reaffirms that the special session will be undertaken on the basis of and with full respect for the Programme of Action and that there will be no renegotiation of the existing agreements contained therein;

3. Stresses the need for the effective participation of actors of civil society, particularly non-governmental organizations, in the preparations for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements, taking into account the practice and experience gained at the Conference, for their substantive contributions to and active involvement in the preparatory meetings and the special session, and invites the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States, to propose to Member States appropriate modalities for their effective involvement in the special session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to seek extra-budgetary resources to assist developing countries, particularly the least developed countries, in sending representatives to the thirty-second session of the Commission on Population and Development, which is to serve as the preparatory meeting for the special session of the General Assembly, and to the special session of the Assembly from 30 June to 2 July 1999 on the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action;

5. Decides that the thirty-second session of the Commission on Population and Development, meeting as the preparatory committee for the special session, shall be open-ended to allow the full participation of all States;

6. Invites all other relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to contribute, as appropriate, to the special session as well as to its preparation;

7. Decides to invite States members of the specialized agencies that are not members of the United Nations to participate in the work of the special session in the capacity of observers;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the special session;

9. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development".

Health and mortality

The Commission on Population and Development, the principal body responsible for reviewing the follow-up to and implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, considered, as the central theme of its thirty-first session (New York, 23-27 February) [E/1998/25], health and mortality, with special emphasis on the linkages between health and development, and on gender issues and the family.

Under the item on follow-up to ICPD, the Commission considered five reports and adopted one resolution.

In a report on world population monitoring, 1998: health and mortality [E/CN.9/1998/2], the Secretary-General discussed the relationship between child survival and health and examined levels and trends of mortality, primary health care and the health-care sector, women's health and safe motherhood, HIV/AIDS and the epidemiological transition. He also discussed activities of intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) with respect to health and mortality, as well as the relationship between health and development.

A report on monitoring of population programmes [E/CN.9/1998/3] provided an overview of activities in the areas of health and mortality, with a focus on the linkages between health and development, and on gender and age, which had been implemented in UNFPA programme countries since ICPD in 1994. More specifically, it assessed policies and programmes that countries had implemented in order to improve health and reduce mortality, with special emphasis on strengthening primary health care and the health-care sector; promoting child survival and development and women's health and safe motherhood; and slowing the spread of HIV/AIDS infection.

A report of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) Task Force on Basic Social Services for All [E/CN.9/1998/4], prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolutions 1995/55 [YUN 1995, p. 1093] and 1996/2 [YUN 1996, p. 977], summarized replies from 17 of its member organizations to a request for information on activities related to health and mortality. The report presented an overview of the Task Force's activities; discussed Task Force member organizations' work in the areas of primary health care, child survival and health, women's health and safe motherhood, and HIV/AIDS; took note of the technology, research and development work undertaken by Task Force member organizations; and concluded by highlighting key lessons learned through the experience of the Task Force.

The Commission considered a report of the Secretary-General on activities conducted by intergovernmental organizations and NGOs in sexual and reproductive health and rights in the three years following ICPD [E/CN.9/1998/5]. The report, which reflected responses received from 482 international, regional, national and grassroots NGOs in 103 countries and four intergovernmental organizations, assessed the strategies and approaches adopted by NGOs to implement the recommendations of the Programme of Action. In addition, it analysed the difficulties and constraints encountered by NGOs in implementing sexual and reproductive health and rights programmes and services, in monitoring the implementation of the ICPD recommendations and in working in partnership with Governments.

The Commission also examined a report of the Secretary-General describing flows of financial resources in international assistance for population activities for 1995 and provisionally for 1996 and 1997, and domestic flows for 1996 [E/CN.9/1998/6]. Preliminary estimates for resource flows in 1996 indicated that more than $1.8 billion of international assistance was expended on population activities for the implementation of the Programme of Action, a slight decrease compared to 1995. Domestic resource flows in 1996 were estimated at $8 billion (by Governments, NGOs and private sources), giving a preliminary global total for population-related expenditures and allocations in 1996 of almost $10 billion. Donor support in 1996 for ICPD implementation presented a mixed picture: several donor countries had shown increased commitment, while assistance from others either stagnated or declined. Nevertheless, many donor countries had given increased priority to the ICPD goals in terms of the share of total official development assistance devoted to population. Early indications for 1997 seemed to suggest that unfavourable exchange rate movements would further depress international assistance measured in dollar terms. The preliminary estimate of $8 billion raised domestically for population included the sizeable allocations of a few large developing countries that gave high priority to population programmes. In contrast, most countries in sub-Saharan Africa, as well as some developing countries in other regions, had been able to mobilize only a small part of the financial resources required for them to reach ICPD goals.

The Commission adopted a resolution on health and mortality [E/1998/25 des. 1998/1], by which it called on UN bodies, international organizations and NGOs to coordinate with each other and with Governments in strengthening national capacities to collect, analyse and utilize health and mortality data in ICPD priority areas, including infant, child, adolescent and maternal health and mortality; sexual and reproductive health; and violence against women and children; and in the areas of infectious disease, substance abuse and measurement of adult mortality and morbidity. The UN Population Division and UNFPA were requested to explore ways, such as an electronic database, to facilitate information exchange. The Commission called for assistance to developing countries to strengthen their national health services and for Governments to support efforts to determine the causes of the stagnation or increase of mortality among adults in countries with economies in transition, as well as in some developing countries, and to combat such trends. Governments were urged to undertake information campaigns on health risks, particularly in relation to HIV infection, maternal and infant mortality, and the detrimental effects of smoking, and to promote healthy diet, accident reduction and reproductive health. The Commission called on Governments to reduce disparities in health and mortality, particularly when related to socio-economic differentials. Governments were also urged to work towards the health and mortality goals set by the Programme of Action, in cooperation with NGOs, the private sector and local communities.

International migration

The Working Group on International Migration of the ACC Task Force on Basic Social Services for All, pursuant to a 1997 Commission resolution [YUN 1997, p. 1071], organized the Technical Symposium on International Migration and Development (The Hague, 29 June-3 July 1998) [E/CN.9/1999/3]. The Symposium examined policy issues on international migration and development, considered ways of improving knowledge on the causes of migration, and assessed the effectiveness of migration policies and related measures at the country level. With respect to migration for employment, the Symposium discussed the problems arising from the irregular employment of international migrants and provided insights about the effectiveness of measures taken by countries of origin to protect their migrant workers abroad. The social and cultural situation of long-term migrants in a variety of contexts was analysed and measures to prevent their marginalization were assessed. Recognizing the importance of return migration, the Symposium examined its implications for the development of countries of origin and the problems posed by large and unexpected return flows. Lastly, the Symposium devoted particular attention to forced migration and the changing responses to it in the various world regions. The Symposium underscored the fact that international migration posed major challenges to the international community, which were made all the more daunting by the pervasiveness of negative public perceptions about international migration and the generally limited recognition of the significant contributions made by migrants to host societies.

Population census activities

The Statistical Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination, at its nineteenth session (New York, 10-12 February 1998) [E/CN.3/1999/20], considered, among other things, the importance of undertaking the 2000 round of population and housing censuses (see PART THREE, Chapter XV), and recognized the resource constraints that many countries were facing in that regard. The Group concluded that the censuses were being accorded insufficient priority at that crucial stage of their preparation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 23 July [meeting 40], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Population and Development [E/1998/25], adopted resolution 1998/7 without vote [agenda item 13 (g)].

Importance of population census activities for evaluation of progress in implementing the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development

The Economic and Social Council, Recalling its resolution 1995/7 of 19 July 1995 in which it urged Member States to carry out population and housing censuses during the period 1995-2004,

Taking into account the report of the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Coordination on its nineteenth session, held in New York from 10 to 12 February 1998, which, inter alia, addressed the prospects for the 2000 round of population and housing censuses,

Emphasizing the importance of up-to-date population and housing census information for implementation of the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development at the country level and for decision-making by Governments on a wide range of policy issues,

Mindful of the technical limitations of sample surveys as vehicles for the collection of data on adult mortality, and recognizing that methods exist for the collection of data on deaths in households in the course of a population census,

1. Invites Governments to give priority to the planning and undertaking of the next population and housing census;

2. Recommends that countries lacking adequate vital-statistics systems give due consideration to the collection and analysis of data in the 2000 round of population censuses for the estimation of levels of mortality;

3. Calls upon relevant organizations of the United Nations system, donor Governments, through multilateral and bilateral mechanisms, and non-governmental organizations to provide the necessary support to those countries in need in respect of undertaking such censuses, including the building of national capacity in this field.

UN Population Fund

1998 activities

In her report for 1998 [DP/FPA/1999/7 (Pan I)] to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)/UNFPA Executive Board, the UNFPA Executive Director described the Fund's activities in programme priority areas and noted that the Fund had achieved the highest implementation rate in its history, having carried out activities in some 155 countries. The year had also been one of review and assessment for the Fund. The five-year review of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, informally known as the "ICPD+5" process, provided UNFPA with an opportunity to assess what had been learned in implementing the Programme of Action and to consider how those lessons could be applied to its programmes in the future.

As part of the ICPD+5 process, the Fund organized three round tables during 1998 (see above) and technical meetings and symposia on ageing (Brussels, Belgium, 6-9 October), population change and economic development (Bellagio, Italy, 2-6 November), reproductive health in emergency situations (Rennes, France, 3-5 November) and use of new information technologies (Ankara, Turkey, 1-4 December). Also as part of the ICPD+5 process, UNFPA conducted a global field inquiry that was sent to 139 developing countries and countries with economies in transition, of which 114 responded, to collect information in four areas: policies and programmes in population and development; gender equality, equity and empowerment of women; reproductive rights and reproductive health; and government partnerships and collaboration with civil society. A smaller and different inquiry was conducted among developed countries. The responses from the inquiries were coded and entered into a database for analysis, which allowed for a comparison of changes in policies and programmes since 1994 and could be used, in general terms, as a barometer to measure progress made in implementing the Programme of Action.

During the year, the Fund published technical reports and programme advisory notes dealing with a variety of issues concerning UNFPA programmes. Particularly relevant to the assessment of the implementation of the Programme of Action were a technical and policy paper on issues in measuring and monitoring maternal mortality; technical reports on the sexual and reproductive health of adolescents and on operationalizing advocacy in support of population and development programmes at the country level; programme advisory notes on reducing maternal mortality and morbidity and on reproductive health effects of gender-based violence; and a publication on Indicators for Population and Reproductive Health Programmes. All of those review, evaluation and technical activities were designed to provide input to strengthen UNFPA's work in its core programme areas—reproductive health, including family planning and sexual health; population and development strategies; and advocacy.

With regard to reproductive health, more than half of the countries responding to the field inquiry reported having taken significant measures to improve the quality of reproductive health services since 1994. More service providers were being trained, health infrastructure and facilities were being improved, monitoring and evaluation were being strengthened and referral to reproductive health services was being enhanced. There had also been greater recognition of reproductive rights, with several countries having formulated policies and laws against female genital mutilation (FGM) and sexual and gender violence. Nevertheless, more progress had to be made in adding new components to existing reproductive health programmes and in integrating reproductive health services into primary health-care systems. Greater efforts were also needed to promote the decentralization of health-care systems. Major challenges included improving financial resources, strengthening human resources and addressing sociocultural issues. UNFPA was addressing those challenges in its country programmes.

Empowering women and eliminating violence against them were essential to effective reproductive health programmes, as called for in the Programme of Action, because both had a direct effect on women's ability to exercise autonomy in the use of reproductive health services. A majority of countries responding to the field inquiry had taken at least some measures since ICPD to protect the rights of women and promote women's empowerment. The greatest changes had been in policy: protecting women's employment and inheritance rights; prohibiting harmful traditional practices; protecting women from acts of violence; and establishing women's affairs offices. Over half of the respondents cited social and cultural attitudes as the major constraint in achieving gender equality, while a quarter cited lack of financial resources as the major obstacle. All UNFPA-assisted programmes supported actions to encourage gender equality and equity and the empowerment of women. The Fund issued a programme advisory note during the year on the reproductive health effects of gender-based violence, as well as the specific effects it had on reproductive health. As part of its advocacy series of booklets, UNFPA produced and distributed a publication entitled Violence against Girls and Women: A Public Health Priority, which was based on the programme advisory note. An example of a country-level initiative in this area was Uganda's Reproductive, Education and Community Health (REACH) programme, which had reduced the rate of FGM in the eastern part of the country. Other initiatives were taken in Burkina Faso, Nepal, Panama and the Philippines. Numerous activities focused on male involvement and male responsibility. For example, the first conference in francophone African countries on the subject of male participation (Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, 20 March-3 April) focused on identifying barriers to the participation of men in reproductive health and on developing strategies to overcome those barriers. Other conferences, studies and workshops on male involvement were held in Chile, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Zambia.

Reducing maternal mortality continued to be an important aspect of UNFPA-supported reproductive health policies. That was particularly true in 1998—which had been proclaimed the "Year of Safe Motherhood" by the Safe Motherhood Inter-Agency Group, composed of the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNFPA, the World Bank, the International Planned Parenthood Federation, Family Care International and the Population Council. The proclamation attempted to bring to the world's attention the fact that more than 600,000 died each year from childbirth-related illnesses and injuries, most of them in developing countries.

The year 1998 also marked the completion of the first decade of the global Safe Motherhood Initiative, which was launched in 1987 to improve maternal health and which aimed at cutting the number of maternal deaths in half by 2000. Though the Initiative did not achieve the progress that had been hoped for, a number of lessons were learned, including that the single most effective way to reduce maternal deaths was to ensure that a health professional with the skills to conduct a safe, normal delivery and to manage any complications was present during childbirth. There was, however, a chronic shortage of such professionals in developing countries. UNFPA issued a programme advisory note on reducing maternal mortality and morbidity for use in its country programmes. Based on the premise that pregnancy and childbirth were among the leading causes of death among women of reproductive age and that making motherhood safer was essential for women's health, the note identified specific actions that were required within families, communities and society at large, at the legal policy level and in health systems. A pilot programme in Uganda, supported by UNFPA, encompassed many of the elements that the Initiative had demonstrated to be essential in ensuring maternal survival, such as establishing a communications link between traditional birth attendants (TBAs) and health units and between the health units and hospitals. As a result, the number of babies delivered in hospitals and health units had increased, while the number delivered by TBAs had decreased. Other initiatives included studies of maternal mortality in Turkey and Zambia, and a regional programme in Latin America and the Caribbean to prevent maternal mortality.

In order to address the reproductive health needs of adolescents, UNFPA, among other things, supported the attendance of several delegations at the World Youth Forum (Braga, Portugal, August) and assisted in drafting the Braga Youth Plan of Action, which formed a major part of the Lisbon Declaration, adopted at the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth (Lisbon, Portugal, August) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). In addition, UNFPA worked to foster regional cooperation in adolescent reproductive health by sponsoring the Caribbean Youth Summit and organizing, in cooperation with UNICEF and ECA, a discussion on the theme "Africa's New Generation".

All of the 1998 initiatives underlined a few key lessons in implementing adolescent reproductive health programmes, such as the need to involve young people in the design and implementation of programmes and the advantage of mobilizing them in advocating appropriate information and services; the importance of involving parents and the community; and the effectiveness of utilizing media forms that youth themselves used and understood. Adolescent reproductive health concerns were addressed in practically all UNFPA country programmes in 1998. In Iran, UNFPA assisted the Ministry of Education in printing a booklet on adolescent reproductive issues designed to involve parents in helping their children to understand population issues as well as their health. The Programme for Enhancing Adolescent Reproductive Life (PEARL) in Uganda was another example of UNFPA-Government collaboration aimed at creating awareness and providing reproductive health counselling and services, primarily to youth aged from 10 to 24.

Since ICPD, UNFPA had responded to a number of emergency situations, helping refugees and displaced people in 33 countries and spending a total of $6.4 million on 52 projects executed by 24 partner agencies. Notable among UNFPA efforts during the year was the provision of emergency reproductive health kits to the victims of hurricane Mitch in Central America. In the United Republic of Tanzania, UNFPA supported a project for refugees and impacted communities in the western parts of the country that had been affected by the war in the neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo. Emergency assistance in the form of medical supplies and clean delivery kits was provided to Papua New Guinea in response to the tidal wave disaster on the north coast; to Indonesia to fill the gaps in meeting reproductive health needs that resulted from the economic crisis; and to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to meet the urgent needs of flood-stricken areas.

In collaboration with the Joint and Co-sponsored United Nations Programme on Human Immunodeficiency Virus/Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (UNAIDS), UNFPA helped to develop specific HIV/AIDS prevention goals, which called for, among other things, assured access to HIV/AIDS information, education and services for at least 90 per cent of males and females aged 15 to 24 in 2005 and at least 95 per cent in 2010. At the global level, UNFPA joined the UNICEF/WHO/UNAIDS initiative on prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV/AIDS and participated in preparations to operationalize the programme on a pilot basis in seven countries (Cambodia, Cote d'Ivoire, Rwanda, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe). In March, the Fund participated in the UNAIDS Co-sponsors Retreat in Venice, Italy. Along with WHO and UNAIDS, UNFPA was requested to take a leadership role in the follow-up regarding the establishment of a consensus-building mechanism for policy and technical guidance, which had since been completed. UNFPA provided support for research on condom use and on the effects of hormonal contraceptives on the progression of HIV infection. It also supported a number of projects designed to promote AIDS awareness and prevention in various in-school and out-of-school education activities.

At the regional level, UNFPA provided assistance, among other things, to conferences that sought to raise awareness and build political support for different aspects of reproductive health, including HIV/AIDS prevention, women and HIV/AIDS, and men's participation in reproductive health. Support was also provided for meetings that targeted special groups, such as women parliamentarians.

In order to assess the specific impact of UNFPA-supported HIV/AIDS-related interventions, a thematic evaluation was carried out in seven countries in 1997 and 1998. The evaluation highlighted the comparative advantage of the Fund's reproductive health approach to HIV/AIDS prevention and stressed the need to strengthen the technical capacity of field offices to promote a focused, appropriate and efficient response to the epidemic utilizing UNFPA resources for the greatest possible impact. In 1998, UNFPA supported HIV/AIDS-prevention activities in more than 130 countries. All were developed in cooperation with national Governments and coordinated through the theme group mechanism of UNAIDS. Those activities had an integrated reproductive health approach, adding HIV/AIDS-prevention services to existing family planning and maternal health services.

Population and development strategies accounted for approximately 24 per cent of the Fund's expenditures in 1998. The State of World Population 1998 focused on some of the problems faced throughout the world in dealing with unprecedented numbers of young people and the elderly, the direct result of past fertility increases and declining mortality rates. In addition, since ICPD, increasing emphasis had been placed on the use of indicators for measuring progress in the implementation of population and reproductive health programmes. To that end, in October, UNFPA issued Indicators for Population and Reproductive Health Programmes, the result of a process that had begun in early 1996.

The aim of UNFPA's work at the country level was to increase knowledge of present and future population challenges; to strengthen national capacity to produce and analyse data; to provide information for policy formulation, programme development and monitoring and evaluation; and to develop and carry out programmes relevant to a country's own population situation. A large number of UNFPA-supported activities were carried out in those areas in 1998, such as providing technical assistance to Panama and Zambia in preparation for the 2000 census, and supporting a project in Ecuador to examine the linkages between population and sustainable development at the community level.

UNFPA's advocacy efforts at the international level were aimed at raising awareness of reproductive health and population issues in developed and developing countries in order to mobilize support and resources for the implementation of ICPD. The Fund's "Face to Face" campaign, which used celebrity Goodwill Ambassadors as spokespersons on a variety of issues, was expanded in 1998. Publications issued by UNFPA for international audiences included The State of World Population 1998: The New Generations, the Annual Report, a revision of the Population Issues Briefing Kit, 10 issues of the news bulletin Dispatches, four issues of the UNFPA magazine Populi, and a new booklet in UNFPA's advocacy series, UNFPA at Work: Five Country Profiles, which described the Fund's country-level operations in Burkina Faso, Eritrea, India, Nicaragua and the Syrian Arab Republic. An electronic version of The State of World Population 1998 was the most-visited document on the Fund's web site (www.unfpa.org). The Fund, in cooperation with Turkey, organized an international seminar to discuss the role that new communication technologies might have in promoting the goals of the ICPD Programme of Action (Ankara, 1-4 December). The recommendations that emerged from the discussions stressed that information and communication technologies applications needed to be gender-responsive and located in institutions to which women already had access; community-owned and -operated; decentralized to local community organizations; and supported by the private sector, among other things.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 53/443 of 15 December, the General Assembly decided to allocate a plenary meeting at its fifty-fourth (1999) session to the commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the operation of UNFPA.

Review of operational activities

The UNFPA Executive Director submitted a February report [E/1998/45] to the Economic and Social Council, in response to Council resolution 1997/59 [YUN 1997, p. 846], on measures taken to implement the provisions of the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system (see PART THREE, Chapter II) and their relationship to measures called for by the Secretary-General in his 1997 programme of reform [YUN 1997, p. 1390]. The report was prepared in the format jointly agreed by UNDP, UNICEF, UNFPA and the World Food Programme. It covered a wide range of issues, including funding arrangements for operational activities, work with UNAIDS and integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major UN conferences and summits.

Introducing the report to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, the Executive Director underscored the Fund's strong commitment to the implementation of various General Assembly and Council resolutions and Executive Board decisions on operational activities, as well as the Fund's active participation in and commitment to the Secretary-General's programme of reform. The United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) and the resident coordinator system were expected to strengthen further, and give greater coherence to, country-level coordination among the partners of the United Nations Development Group (UNDG), as well as among the entities of the UN development system as a whole. The Executive Director stated that it was already clear that the UNDAF process facilitated a coordinated approach regarding data systems, situational analyses, monitoring and follow-up reporting to conferences. Overall, that would lead to a more solid basis for formulating programmes of assistance to a given country. She also observed that common attention was being directed to issues relating to national execution and the shared goal of strengthening national capacity. UNFPA had brought to the attention of other UNDG members lessons learned from its experience in that area.

The Executive Board, in April [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/5)], called on the UNFPA Executive Director to provide in future reports a thorough analysis of problems encountered and lessons learned in the field, a focus on issues that would permit the Council to fulfil its coordinating role and, in that context, to present relevant statistical data in a consolidated manner. It also invited the Executive Director to consult with other UNDG members on a consolidated list of issues central to the improved coordination of operational activities for consideration by the Council in 1998. The Executive Board invited the Council to recommend actions intended to increase the usefulness of those reports as inputs to the Council's deliberations.

In January [E/1998/36], the Executive Board reviewed several other reports on UNFPA activities, including one on the follow-up to the report of the Board of Auditors for 1994-1995: status of implementation of recommendations [DP/FPA/1998/1], which highlighted progress made in areas of concern to UNFPA management, including national execution, technical support services arrangements and the management of consultancies. Reports were also submitted on assistance to Algeria [DP/FPA/CP/199], China [DP/FPA/CP/196], Egypt [DP/FPA/CP/198], Nicaragua [DP/FPA/CP/197], Paraguay [DP/FPA/CP/195] and the Pacific subregion [DP/FPA/CP/200].

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/286 of 31 July, took note of the report of the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board on its first regular session of 1998, decisions adopted at that session and at its second regular and annual sessions [E/1998/36], and the annual report of the UNFPA Executive Director to the Council (see above).

Country and intercountry programmes

UNFPA's provisional project expenditures for country and intercountry (regional and interregional) programmes in 1998 totalled $216.6 million, compared to $214.4 million in 1997, according to the Executive Director's statistical overview report covering 1998 [DP/FPA/1999/7 (Part I/Add.1)]. The 1998 figure included $174.7 million for country programmes and $41.9 million for intercountry programmes. In accordance with criteria defined by the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 989], total allocations in 1998 to those countries most in need amounted to $109.3 million (62.5 percent), compared to $106 million in expenditures in 1997. Country population assessments were completed in Benin, Burundi, Iran and Madagascar.

Africa. Expenditures for UNFPA programmes in sub-Saharan Africa totalled $70.8 million in 1998, compared to $74.6 million in 1997. Most of the resources (41.7 per cent) were spent for reproductive health and family planning, followed by population and development strategies (17.3 per cent) and advocacy (11.8 per cent).

As part of the assessment of the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action, in 1998 UNFPA collaborated with ECA to review achievements and constraints encountered in the Africa region since 1994 [DP/FPA/1999/7 (Part III)]. The review showed progress in most countries in reproductive health, adolescent reproductive health, women's empowerment and partnerships with civil society, and also found that many African countries had adopted or revised their population policies in the light of ICPD. However, African countries still faced many constraints related to the lack of financial resources, economic difficulties, lack of involvement of the private sector, lack of trained personnel, ineffective advocacy strategies, difficulties in changing gender attitudes and behaviour, and unequal educational opportunities for men and women. Often, reproductive health services were compartmentalized and male involvement was minimal. UNFPA prepared an issues paper that identified priority population issues of concern to most African countries in which collective collaboration and coordination within the UN system and with other partners could have a positive impact and would add value to the efforts of individual agencies. UNFPA strengthened its collaboration with the World Bank, agreeing on priority areas and countries for closer collaboration.

The seriousness of the HIV/AIDS epidemic and the reproductive health needs of youth and adolescents continued to be key priority issues in sub-Saharan Africa. The Fund offered information services and training programmes on HIV/AIDS prevention in Cote d'Ivoire, Ghana, Kenya and Rwanda. Reproductive health information and services, including for HIV/AIDS prevention, were offered in Eritrea, Namibia, Senegal and Uganda, among others. UNFPA participated in and supported a Pan-African Conference on Women and HIV/AIDS (Dakar, Senegal, December), as well as an international conference on HIV/AIDS in African prisons (Dakar, February).

The Fund continued to stress national capacity-building through a number of activities designed to provide national counterparts with the technical and managerial skills required to develop, implement and monitor population programmes. The Fund collaborated with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to sponsor research in a number of countries on sociocultural factors affecting demographic behaviour and their implications for the formulation and execution of population programmes. During the year, UNFPA increased its support to populations in emergency situations and organized a consultative meeting on its assistance in emergency situations in Africa. It also participated in joint assessments of the needs of refugees and displaced persons in a number of African countries, and assistance for emergency reproductive health services was provided in Angola, the Comoros, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau and Lesotho. Despite the conflict situation that prevailed in the Congo, UNFPA collaborated with the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies to meet the reproductive health needs of Congolese women.

In April [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/9)], the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved UNFPA assistance to Botswana, Cameroon, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, the Niger, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, South Africa and Swaziland.

Arab States and Europe. In the Arab States region, 1998 was dominated by the review of the actions taken by Governments towards implementing the ICPD Programme of Action. The review found that, despite the commitment of most Arab countries to population goals, only 11 out of the 21 had specific population policies. In the promotion of gender equality, the number of women in higher administrative and political positions remained limited, and only 11 States had ratified the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by General Assembly resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895], albeit sometimes with reservations. The review indicated that only three States had introduced the concept of gender in their population policies; UNFPA was collaborating with other UN agencies to assist Governments in mainstreaming gender. Most UNFPA-supported country programmes in the region provided significant inputs to upgrade physical facilities, improve the skills of health-care providers, integrate basic counselling services, increase the availability of a wider mix of contraceptives, and institutionalize quality assurance systems to monitor and upgrade reproductive health services. Access to those services was increased through the construction of new primary health-care facilities and the provision of a comprehensive package of reproductive health services that included components on safe motherhood and family planning, prevention and management of sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), and FGM.

Many European countries with economies in transition were experiencing unprecedented demographic change and were in the midst of a health and mortality crisis. Issues such as low fertility and population ageing were perceived as having a profound impact on the economy. Another major problem was the prevalence of STDs and high rates of HIV infection. The reported number of syphilis cases had increased 30 to 40 times over the past few years, while a cumulative rise of new HIV cases had occurred in many parts of the region, particularly in Belarus, the Russian Federation and Ukraine. Teenage fertility rates in the region were roughly three times as high as the average in Western Europe, and the rate of teenage abortion had increased in the past few years. To address those trends, UNFPA initiated numerous activities throughout the region—for example, a country programme for Albania focused entirely on reproductive health, and a project supported the development of comprehensive reproductive health information and services in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In Armenia and Romania, UNFPA provided funds for surveys to understand adolescent behaviour better. In the Russian Federation, support was provided to the Russian Family Planning Association for the development of an appropriate peer-education programme for teenagers. UNFPA continued to provide assistance for the evaluation and strengthening of national population and reproductive health programmes in Turkey. In December, it fielded a needs assessment mission to the Kosovo province of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to assess emergency reproductive health care for internally displaced persons.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, in April [dec. 98/9], approved assistance to Jordan and Yemen.

Asia and the Pacific. In 1998, political commitment to ICPD goals was maintained in the Asian and Pacific countries, and progress towards gaining the support of NGOs and civil society, especially in the area of reproductive health, was strengthened. As in the past, the major focus of UNFPA assistance in the region was on the operationalization of reproductive health services, including adolescent reproductive health, with a focus on national capacity-building. UNFPA supported efforts by most countries to revise or develop population and reproductive health policies, operational guidelines, and reproductive health clinic and protocol standards. Expansion of reproductive health services to remote areas with limited access to health services was a key feature of programmes in Bangladesh, Cambodia, Iran, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Papua New Guinea, Viet Nam and the South Pacific subregion. The Fund also trained health professionals in a number of countries, such as Mongolia, where, following a training programme and upgrading of health centres, services were provided to over 5,000 clients during a six-month period. UNFPA and the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) jointly organized a conference on advocating and promoting the role of men in population and reproductive health programmes. The conference was hosted in Baku by Azerbaijan and concluded a series of four regional conferences organized since 1995 as follow-up to implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action in the 10 ECO member countries.

To create wider awareness among policy makers and to overcome misconceptions about adolescent reproductive health, advocacy efforts were intensified in 1998 through a series of high-level international conferences organized with UNFPA assistance. At the regional level, technical workshops and conferences (Bangkok, Thailand, and New Delhi, India) assisted in the formulation of specific policy and programme strategies for adolescent reproductive health. At the country level, several innovative approaches attempted to reach adolescents, such as working with religious groups and parents in Papua New Guinea and Sri Lanka, and sexuality education in Bhutan, India and Indonesia. UNFPA, in collaboration with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, Japan and Sweden, formulated a pilot project in 1998 for six countries of the Mekong Delta region. A training package for social service and health personnel was being developed that would serve as a model for application in other subregions of Asia and the Pacific. In January, the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board approved the Fund's fourth programme of assistance (1997-2000) for China. The $20 million programme consisted of four components: reproductive health; women's empowerment; advocacy; and South-South collaboration. The Pacific island countries undertook a thorough review of their experiences in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action through a regional meeting in Fiji and, with the assistance of UNFPA, identified major issues and challenges facing each country and the Pacific subregion as a whole.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, in April [dec. 98/9], approved UNFPA assistance to Bangladesh, Bhutan, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Iran, Maldives, Papua New Guinea and Thailand.

Latin America and the Caribbean. During 1998, UNFPA expanded and strengthened partnerships with other UN agencies and organizations and with NGOs and other groups in civil society in Latin America and the Caribbean; addressed emerging issues such as gender equity and male responsibility in reproductive health; and supported innovative and replicable initiatives. Nearly all UNFPA-supported country programmes contained advocacy, information, education and communication techniques, and service components to promote adolescent health and rights. All programmes focused on building national capacities to improve quality of care and to ensure that both services and service providers were gender- and age-responsive and respectful of clients from all social and cultural backgrounds. UNFPA placed increasing emphasis on working directly with municipalities to expand access of services to poor and hard-to-reach rural communities. Close collaboration with the ministries of health and education, women's health groups, universities and other institutions all working in partnership at the local level had proved to be complex and often difficult to pursue, but the longer-term prospects for sustainability of activities were promising.

The Fund supported the formation of national networks and strategies to involve men in reproductive health and in the gender equity agenda. In Bolivia, Ecuador, Nicaragua and Paraguay, UNFPA supported an innovative approach in collaboration with the armed forces to develop awareness-raising activities focusing on gender sensitivity, human rights and reproductive health for those primarily male audiences. Assistance was also provided to a multi-country initiative developed by the Latin America and Caribbean Women's Health Network, which focused on monitoring the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. The United Nations Inter-Agency Campaign against Violence against Women, in which UNFPA played a leadership role, contributed to a series of important results. For example, the Brazilian Government announced additional funds for safe houses; in Peru, a national multi-agency task force was established; and in Venezuela, the bill against domestic violence was approved after two years of inaction. In Nicaragua, following the devastation caused by hurricane Mitch, the UNFPA country office accorded top priority to rehabilitation efforts, and work plans were revised to focus on the most vulnerable groups and to establish alliances with community representatives close to the affected population. In Paraguay, UNFPA established specialized clinics that provided integrated reproductive health services to adolescents and undertook education initiatives on sexual and reproductive health.

The UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board, in April [dec. 98/9], approved UNFPA assistance to Bolivia, Brazil and Colombia.

Interregional programmes. In 1998, UNFPA continued to strengthen the development and assessment of contraceptive methods, contraceptive surveillance and social science research in reproductive health. It focused on developing and conducting research on female-controlled methods and new methods for males. As part of efforts to operationalize health programmes, UNFPA funded the development of technical guidelines on key reproductive health issues, the development of tools for training NGO professionals in advocacy, gender issues, reproductive health, youth and institution-building, and the enhancement of reproductive health components in emergency situations. In the context of reproductive health, the Fund focused on the reduction of maternal morbidity and mortality and promoted policy to ensure that women had ready access to well-equipped and adequately staffed maternal health-care services, including emergency obstetric services. Regarding STD prevention and diagnosis, UNFPA provided funding to UNAIDS to develop and test strategies for the integration of STD and HIV/AIDS prevention activities into reproductive health programmes.

As for population and development strategies, UNFPA funded the development of sustainable national integrated information systems and the promotion of timely and cost-effective data collection efforts and analyses. In the area of population and the environment, the Fund worked with other UN agencies and organizations, NGOs and universities to produce practical manuals to enable countries to formulate population and environment policies and interventions. Information dissemination projects funded under the interregional population and development strategies programme included the Population Information Network, the Annual Review of Population and Law and the Fund's Inventory of Population Projects in Developing Countries around the World. The Fund's interregional advocacy efforts were carried out mainly through the production, distribution and dissemination of publications, computer software and audio-visual materials.

Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements

During 1998, the Fund's Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs, a project begun in 1992 [YUN 1992, p. 697], continued to focus on national capacity-building in the areas of logistics management, distribution of contraceptive and reproductive health commodities, and donor coordination and advocacy. The Initiative provided technical support for studies on contraceptive requirements and logistics needs, for training in logistics management and for workshops in strategy development. In-depth studies on contraceptive requirements and logistics management needs were conducted in Turkey, Viet Nam and Zimbabwe, while logistics management training and strategy development workshops were held in Santiago, Chile, and Kampala, Uganda [DP/FPA/1999/7 (Part II)]. An annual report, Donor Support for Contraceptive Commodities, detailed the quantities, types and costs of contraceptives provided to developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

To help make programmes sustainable, the UNFPA private-sector initiative developed model approaches to involve the private sector and NGOs in making reasonably priced commercial products and services more accessible to users in developing countries. A meeting of representatives of the interested parties was held in Bellagio, Italy, in November to review progress on the initiative. The participants recommended, among other things, that UNFPA should continue to support further exploration of the initiative in selected countries. Six missions were fielded in 1998 to Egypt, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Thailand and Zimbabwe.

The Global Initiative prepared revised guidelines for logistics managers with checklists for the procurement and resupply of contraceptives, and provided technical support for countries that experienced depletion of stocks due to logistics problems. Programme countries continued to use the Fund's Global Contraceptive Commodity Programme, which supplied condoms, oral contraceptives and intrauterine devices.

South-South cooperation

In July [DP/FPA/1998/13], the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP/UNFPA Executive Board a progress report on UNFPA support to Partners in Population and Development, a South-South initiative launched by 10 developing countries (Bangladesh, Colombia, Egypt, Indonesia, Kenya, Mexico, Morocco, Thailand, Tunisia, Zimbabwe) at ICPD in 1994, and later joined by China and Pakistan, with India expected to join. The report was requested in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 987]. UNFPA support involved the management of the Partners' trust funds and other administrative assistance for human resource management, as well as funding for the Partners' secretariat in Dhaka, Bangladesh. The linkage with UNFPA had enabled the Partners to better coordinate their activities with UNFPA field offices and UNFPA country support teams. UNFPA, together with a number of Governments, national and international NGOs and development agencies, participated in the Partners' activities, which provided opportunities for addressing reproductive health issues through sharing of experiences, skills and technologies.

Financial and administrative questions

UNFPA's income from regular resources in 1998 was $280.6 million, a decrease of 4.4 per cent from the 1997 level of $293.4 million [DP/FPA/1999/13]. Expenditures totalled $304.1 million, resulting in an excess of expenditure over income of $23.5 million. However, surplus general resources brought forward from 1997 amounted to $11.5 million. Thus, after adjusting for excess expenditure in 1998 and the reduction in the level of the operational reserve of $7 million, UNFPA was required to draw down from the operational reserve to finance a regular resource deficit of $6.5 million. That deficit, along with a $1.6 million balance of unexpended cost-sharing resources, comprised the negative $4.9 million in unspent regular resources at the end of 1998. Contributions pledged by 89 Governments in 1998 totalled $269.2 million, a decrease of $17.9 million from the previous year. The cumulative outstanding balance of unpaid pledges for 1998 and prior years was $1.6 million.

1998-1999 budget

In July, the UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the Executive Board a progress report on implementation of the 1998-1999 biennial support budget [DP/FPA/1998/12], approved by the Board in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1083]. The estimated income for 1998-1999 amounted to $642 million from regular resources and $692 million from all sources, including regular, multi-bilateral, private foundations and others. Programme expenditures for 1998 were estimated at $252 million.

The Executive Director said that in the recent past UNFPA had had to face the dual pressures of limited resources and growing demands by programme countries to achieve ICPD goals. Prudent financial management of those limited resources had allowed the Fund to continue to fulfil its role as the lead agency for operationalizing population and reproductive health activities, while keeping expenditure under reasonable limits. Without eroding its limited staff resources, UNFPA had imposed on itself the objective of maintaining, in 1998, net expenditures at the same level as in 1997 (in real terms), which would imply a 1998 net expenditure of around $60.5 million.

The Executive Board, in April [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/8)], authorized the Executive Director to begin recruitment of seven country representatives, as proposed in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1083] and in line with the availability of resources.

The Executive Director submitted a July report to the Executive Board describing revisions to the existing UNFPA Financial Regulations [DP/FPA/1998/10]. The revisions concerned the biennial support budget and were made necessary as a result of the harmonization of budgets by UNDP, UNFPA and UNICEF, in order to reflect the updating of the terminology and structural modifications agreed to by the three organizations in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 880]. The report also included revisions to the regulations concerning procurement.

The Executive Director also submitted to the Executive Board a review of multi-bilateral trust-fund arrangements [DP/FPA/1998/11], as requested in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1084]. Multi-bilateral contributions were received from donor and programme recipient countries, financial institutions, NGOs and foundations and were used for specific population activities that could not be accommodated from UNFPA's general resources. The report covered the main elements and a historical review of UNFPA multi-bilateral funding and cost-recovery mechanisms and concluded with recommendations for undertaking full cost recovery for the managerial and support services (MSS), and for the administrative and operational support (AOS) for UNFPA execution of multi-bilateral projects. UNFPA provided a full range of MSS to develop, oversee and monitor projects financed from multi-bilateral resources. Those services were provided to all multi-bilateral funded projects, regardless of whether UNFPA acted as the executing agency for the projects or other agencies were selected to execute them. The MSS costs were incurred by UNFPA, thus the performance of those services represented a subsidy from regular resources (biennial support budget) to activities funded from multi-bilateral resources. For 1998, multi-bilateral income was projected at $25 million, or 8 per cent of total resources.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), in September [DP/1998/37], commented on the revision of the Financial Regulations of UNFPA and on the review of UNFPA's multi-bilateral trust-fund arrangements. ACABQ agreed with the Executive Director's proposal to establish a recovery rate of 5 per cent for MSS costs to be levied on all multi-bilateral trust-fund projects. That income would be credited to the biennial support budget. In addition, ACABQ had no objection to the proposed increase in the rate of reimbursement for AOS costs from 5 per cent to 7.5 per cent for such projects.

In September [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/21)], the Executive Board approved revisions to the UNFPA Financial Regulations with two amendments. The first allowed for amounts otherwise designated to be credited to the biennial support budget, including, among other things, income derived from UNFPA support costs and net income relating to procurement services provided to third parties. The second stated that funds received by UNFPA for procurement of supplies, equipment and services on behalf of and at the request of Governments, specialized agencies or other organizations should be treated as trust funds, in addition to which the income relating to procurement services provided to third parties should be used to meet the direct cost of those services.

The Executive Board, also in September [dec. 98/22], reaffirmed the principle of additionality and complementarity of multi-bilateral funding on the understanding that it would not impinge on UNFPA general resources. It accepted, as an interim measure, the proposed increase in AOS costs to the proposed rate of 7.5 per cent. The Board requested the Executive Director to develop a methodology for full cost identification and recovery and to quantify the level of charges for AOS. It decided that the new cost-recovery arrangements would be effective from 1 January 1999.

Audit reports

A November report [DP/FPA/1999/2] described action taken in response to the recommendations contained in the report of the United Nations Board of Auditors for the 1996-1997 biennium [A/53/5/Add.7]. Steps to be taken by UNFPA included: updating the Policies and Procedures Manual; channelling procurement requests through the Fund's Procurement Unit; showing the value of contributions-in-kind in a note to the financial statements; establishing procedures for accurately recording non-expendable project equipment held by Governments and NGOs; amending the financial regulations to require exchange losses, other than those arising from voluntary contributions, to be charged as expenditure; taking action to recover overdue travel advances; expediting the receipt of outstanding disbursement reports in respect of Government- and NGO-executed projects; reviewing inactive projects and closing them if appropriate; and undertaking a field capacity study to assess whether country offices were appropriately staffed.

The Executive Board considered a March report [DP/FPA/1998/7] by the Executive Director describing UNFPA internal audit and oversight activities in 1997. The principal activities consisted of management audits in three field offices; compliance audits in 32 country offices in the Africa region, undertaken by a public accounting firm; a review of one branch at UNFPA headquarters; a review of project closing procedures; and a review of the delegation of authority to the Executive Director on personnel issues. In general, the country offices in the Africa and Asia and Pacific regions were rated as satisfactory based on the audits. Of 43 reports issued in 1997 (covering both 1996 audits for which reports were issued during 1997 and early 1997 audits), the level of internal controls and the compliance with financial and administrative requirements were found to be satisfactory in most offices, with three offices receiving a good rating. However, eight offices were rated marginally deficient in at least one area of their operations.

Policy application reviews were conducted in six countries in 1997—three in Asia and the Pacific and one each in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Arab States and Europe. They examined the process of programme development and implementation in order to ascertain that appropriate mechanisms to ensure accountability were in place and were being utilized. The reviews provided inputs to the preparation of the comprehensive policies and procedures manual, particularly the programme manual. The programmes generally adhered to the approved programme framework, although there had been a tendency for many projects to be carried over from one programme cycle to another.

1999-2002 work plan

In an April report [DP/FPA/1998/5], the Executive Director outlined the 1999-2002 UNFPA work plan and put forward a request for programme expenditure authority. The report examined UNFPA 1997 programme development by programme area and included information on projected resources and proposed utilization of programmable resources among country and intercountry activities, as well as among geographical regions for 1999-2002. It presented the Executive Director's proposed programme expenditure authority for 1999 from regular resources, the estimates of new programmable resources for 2000-2002 and the estimates of new programmable resources from multi-bilateral funding.

The regular income for 1997 amounted to $290.1 million, a decrease of $18.7 million or 6 per cent compared to 1996. The current income assumption for 1998 was $320 million from regular resources, of which $20 million would be from private foundations. That assumption, together with carry-forwards from previous years, would allow UNFPA to conduct programme activities at a higher level than in 1997.

The UNFPA work plan, which was a rolling four-year plan, was a projected programme of assistance based on income projections, prior commitments and foreseeable needs. The 1998 estimated income was used as the base and for the following four years a constant annual rate of increase of 7 per cent was projected; thus income projection from regular resources totalled $1,519 million for 1999-2002, with $1,214 million available as new programmable resources, compared to $1,544 million for 1998-2001, with $1,235 million for new programmable resources. The income assumption from multi-bilateral resources was $25 million per year. Income assumption from regular and multi-bilateral resources combined was $1,619 million. The amount of resources required for the administrative and programme support services was assumed to be 17.5 per cent of the combined resources each year, or $285 million for the four years.

The proportion of total programmable resources intended for country activities for 1999-2002 increased by one percentage point to 72 per cent from the work plan for 1998-2001. In absolute terms, the $874 million intended for country activities was basically the same amount previously foreseen for 1998-2001. In addition, $116 million was projected for technical support services for country programmes. AGS costs from regular resources for 1999-2002 were estimated at $42 million.

The new work plan reflected the 1996 Board decision to use a new system of allocation of UNFPA resources [YUN 1996, p. 989] by categorizing developing countries in three groups. The share for Group A countries (those with a low level of development and the farthest from achieving ICPD goals) was expected to be 67 per cent, on average, for the 1999-2002 work plan; for Group B (those that had made considerable progress in achieving ICPD goals), it was expected to be 24 per cent; and for Group C (those that had met the thresholds of the seven ICPD goals), it was expected to be 5 per cent. By region, the average for 1999-2002 would be: sub-Saharan Africa, 39 per cent; Asia and the Pacific, 38 per cent; Arab States and Europe, 12 per cent; and Latin America and the Caribbean, 11 per cent.

The proposed programme expenditure authority for 1999 amounted to $271 million, and the new programmable resources for 2000, 2001 and 2002 were estimated at $293 million, $314 million and $336 million, respectively.

In April, the Executive Director submitted a report [DP/FPA/1998/8] on the status of financial implementation of country programmes and projects approved by the former Governing Council and the Executive Board. Of the 148 programmes approved for 1989-1997, 59 programmes were completed before 1997, 31 programmes were completed in 1997 and 58 programmes were ongoing. The report presented financial data showing the degree of timeliness of implementation. It revealed that UNFPA was on target with delivering the amount from regular resources in its country programmes, although it needed additional resources in order to deliver the total amount combining regular and other resources.

The Executive Board, in June [E/1998/36 (dec. 98/11)], took note of the Executive Director's resource planning proposals as revised by the Deputy Executive Director, and approved the request for 1999 programme expenditure authority at a level equal to expected new programmable resources for 1999, estimated at $263 million. The Board took note of the estimates for new programmable resources from regular resources for programme planning for 2000-2002. It requested the Executive Director to take steps to evolve the work plan into a more analytical and outcome-oriented document and invited her to increase the proportion of programmable resources for the 2000-2003 work plan. She was also asked to report on any significant increases or shortfalls in estimated income for 1999.

Technical support services system

The Executive Board, in April [dec. 98/6], authorized the continued funding of the technical support services (TSS) specialist posts until 31 December 1999, as proposed by the UNFPA Executive Director in July 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1085]. It invited the Executive Director to develop future options for providing specialist support and advice to country support teams and country programmes through arrangements that utilized the best expertise in the UN system, and for enhancing the contribution of relevant UN specialized agencies in promoting the ICPD agenda. The Executive Director was requested to seek solutions to concerns raised in an independent evaluation report, in particular on coordination, accountability, communication within the system and the advocacy function of TSS specialists. She was also asked to submit a progress report on improvements in the TSS system since 1997.

Funding strategy

The Executive Director updated the Executive Board on progress made in informal inter-sessional meetings to discuss a sustainable funding strategy that would place UNFPA's funding on a predictable, assured and continuous basis. The informal Board meetings had emphasized several important aspects of the UNFPA funding situation, including: the clear and focused UNFPA mandate and programme priorities; the Fund's resource allocation system, which was based on a country's level of achievement of ICPD goals and gave special attention to less developed countries, low-income countries and Africa; the increased attention of the international community on the challenges and goals of the ICPD Programme of Action; and the perception of both donors and programme countries that UNFPA was an effective organization.

The Executive Board, in September [dec. 98/24], emphasized the need for predictable, timely payments and increased funding to enhance UNFPA's capacity to contribute to the implementation of the ICPD Programme of Action. It stressed the need for a funding strategy, based on a concept of collective ownership, partnership and shared interests with differentiated responsibilities, that was programme-driven and encouraged a collective partnership with programme and donor countries, lending institutions, the private sector and foundations. The Board urged the Fund to continue to expand its advocacy and institutional profile at the national and international levels in order to illustrate better the importance of its work and the impact of its programmes. It adopted for UNFPA a programme-driven total resource goal of $400 million for 1999 and requested the Executive Director to make every effort to reach that goal. The Board recognized that overdependence on a limited number of donors carried risks for the long-term financial sustainability of UNFPA and urged donors and programme countries to increase their contributions to core resources. In that context, the Board decided that UNFPA would develop a multi-year funding framework that integrated programme objectives, resources, budget and outcomes, with the objective of increasing core resources, taking into account the following principles: the framework would maintain the order of priorities and the UNFPA mandate; it would not introduce any conditionality or result in distortions in priorities or changes in the system of resource allocation; and the allocation of additional core resources that might be mobilized by the multi-year funding framework would be consistent with the Board's programming guidelines, with priority given to programmes. The Executive Board also designated its second regular session, starting tentatively in 1999, as the time when all member countries would announce their voluntary core contributions to UNFPA through a firm funding commitment for the current year, as well as for the following two years, for those in a position to do so. Member States were expected to announce payment schedules for the current year and review the record of actual core contributions. The Board decided to initiate a fully participative, transparent, open-ended consultative process between the UNFPA secretariat and the States members of the Fund for designing a multi-year funding framework. The Executive Director was requested to submit in 1999 a report on that effort.

Resource mobilization

As a follow-up to UNFPA's annual donor consultation on resource mobilization (New York, 20 February), the Executive Director submitted a paper entitled "Mobilizing resources now and for the future: UNFPA's strategy". The paper reiterated resource targets established at ICPD, linked those targets to the Fund's resource goals and showed the benefits that would be realized if the targets were met. The Executive Director added that the paper, among other things, reviewed the Fund's resource mobilization strategy and its global communication strategy, both of which were aimed at mobilizing population resources from programme and donor countries, as well as from private sources.

The Executive Board, in April [dec. 98/7], invited the Executive Director to update her paper and requested her to organize informal inter-sessional meetings of the Board with a view to reviewing various funding mechanisms for UNFPA and to report on the progress made.

Programme absorptive capacity and financial resources utilization

In April [DP/FPA/1998/4], the Executive Director presented a study on ways to increase the absorptive capacity and financial resource utilization in UNFPA programme countries, as requested by the Executive Board in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 988]. Using recommendations made by an outside consulting firm, the study set forth a number of concrete operational proposals. They called for UNFPA to continue to develop human resources by supporting training programmes; to increase training for nationals in programme management; to intensify advocacy efforts in order to get countries to recognize their population and reproductive health challenges and to carry out effective programmes to address them; to support efforts for countries to build up information systems; to work to simplify, as much as possible, financial and other reporting requirements; to provide support at decentralized levels of government; to increase collaboration among international development partners; and to use the Fund's new mechanisms for assessing the capacity of potential executing agencies.

The Executive Board, in June [dec. 98/10], endorsed the action already taken to increase the absorptive capacity and resource utilization in programme countries, including training and the issuance of the UNFPA Policies and Procedures Manual. It also endorsed the recommendations contained in the Executive Director's study and urged her to implement the recommendations and to report in 2000 on follow-up to them.

Programme effectiveness

The Executive Director submitted to the Executive Board a report [DP/FPA/1999/7 (Part II)] on programme effectiveness in 1998, focusing on four major activities: the Global Initiative on Contraceptive Requirements and Logistics Management Needs (see above); the UNFPA staff training programme; coordination and collaboration; and monitoring and evaluation. The year was one of transition from a system of project-focused reviews to one that emphasized subprogramme- and programme-level reviews. It also saw an increase in allocations for external evaluations of UNFPA-supported projects.

Evaluation activities

In March [DP/FPA/1998/6], the Executive Director submitted to the Executive Board a biennial report on evaluation activities, as requested in 1990 [YUN 1990, p. 5441]. She said that all UNFPA-supported projects had a built-in evaluation requirement and that an increasing number of projects had provided for an external evaluation, usually an end-of-project evaluation, in their work plans. The level of resources devoted to external evaluations rose from just over $3 million in 1994-1995 to over $5 million 1996-1997. That was due to a large increase in expenditures for evaluating projects in the Africa region and for evaluating interregional projects in 1997. The high level of evaluation activities coincided with the preparation of 32 new country programmes in 1997, of which 15 were in Africa. An inquiry among UNFPA country offices provided some insights into the extent to which completed projects were evaluated externally in the 1996-1997 biennium. In Africa, about 36 percent of completed country-level projects were evaluated; in Asia and the Pacific, about 43 per cent; in Latin America and the Caribbean, about 35 per cent; and in the Arab States and Europe, about 43 per cent. Taking into account that such external project evaluations were not mandatory, the level of activity was indicative of the Fund's strong commitment to evaluation as an important programming and management tool.

The report reviewed evaluations of modalities used in executing projects, safe motherhood programmes, and integration of HIV/AIDS and reproductive health activities. It described how evaluation results were used to improve the focus of and strategies for projects and programmes. In addition, the report discussed the monitoring and evaluation guidelines and how they were applied, as well as future evaluation plans.

The Executive Board, in June [dec. 98/12], encouraged UNFPA to enhance the analytical content of the periodic report on evaluation activities. It requested the Executive Director to undertake joint evaluations, where appropriate, with partner organizations and Governments and to include in the periodic report, starting in 2000, an annex providing a record and analysis of evaluation compliance for all country programmes completed in the previous biennium in line with UNFPA's evaluation work plan. The Board also requested that efforts be made to increase the percentage of external evaluations and to continue to report on progress made towards that objective.

UN Population Award

The 1998 United Nations Population Award was presented to Professor Hugh H. Wynter in the individual category and the Sabiny Elders Association of Uganda in the institutional one. Professor Wynter, Chairman of the National Family Planning Board of Jamaica, was chosen for his work in promoting safe and effective family planning, both in the private sector and in government policy. The Sabiny Elders Association was chosen for its efforts to curtail the practice of FGM among the Sabiny community in eastern Uganda. The award was established by the General Assembly in resolution 36/201 [YUN 1981, p. 792], to be presented annually to individuals or institutions for outstanding contributions to increased awareness of population problems and to their solutions.

In September, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the report of the UNFPA Executive Director on the Population Award [A/53/406].

Other population activities

Commission on Population and Development

The Commission on Population and Development, at its thirty-first session (New York, 23-27 February) [E/1998/25], considered as its central theme health and mortality (see above), with special emphasis on the linkages between health and development, and on gender issues and the family. It recommended to the Economic and Social Council two draft resolutions, on population census activities for evaluation of progress in implementing the ICPD Programme of Action and on the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Programme of Action (see above).

The Commission adopted a resolution on health and mortality [res. 1998/1] (see above). The Commission decided [dec. 1998/1] that "Gender, population and development" would be the special theme for its thirty-third session in the year 2000.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/222 of 23 July, took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-first session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-second (1999) session.

1998 UN activities

In a report [E/CN.9/1999/6] on the programme implementation and progress of work of the UN Population Division in 1998, the Secretary-General described activities dealing with the analysis of demographic variables at the world level; world population projections; population policy and socio-economic development; monitoring, review and appraisal, coordination and dissemination of population information; and technical cooperation in population.

During the year, work was completed on a wall-chart dealing with world contraceptive use, which showed data on levels of contraceptive use among married couples. The chart presented data separately for all countries and by regions, more and less developed areas and for the world as a whole. The chart highlighted results from the report entitled "Levels and trends of contraceptive use as assessed in 1998", which showed that the level of use of contraception in countries of the developed regions was 70 per cent of married women compared with 55 per cent in the less developed regions. Among the less developed regions, the average level of use of contraception was 60 per cent in Asia, 66 per cent in Latin America and the Caribbean and about 20 per cent in Africa. Eastern Asia had the highest regional level of contraceptive use in the world—83 per cent; that level was strongly influenced by its prevalence in China, estimated at 83.4 per cent in 1992. In the more developed regions, use of contraception varied within a narrow range, from 69 to 78 per cent.

Among countries in less developed regions, contraceptive prevalence ranged from 1-2 per cent to over 80 per cent of married couples. Contraceptive prevalence had increased substantially over the previous 10 to 15 years—by at least 10 to 20 percentage points in many developing countries. Sterilization, especially female sterilization, was the most prevalent method of family planning in the world. With 19 per cent of married women and 4 per cent of married men sterilized, that method accounted for two fifths of world contraceptive use. The next most prevalent method was the intrauterine device, which was used by 13 per cent of married women, followed by the pill (8 per cent). In a majority of countries, the rise in overall contraceptive prevalence had been mainly due to an increase in modern methods.

The Population Division collaborated with the UN Statistics Division of DESA and the Statistical Office of the European Communities in preparing and publishing the Recommendations on Statistics of International Migration: Revision 1 [Sales No. E.98.XVII.14]. A database on South-to-North migration was updated to cover the period 1965-1995, and a database on East-to-West migration was in preparation.

The completion of the 1998 revision of world population estimates and projections was announced in October 1998. There was one series of demographic estimates for the period 1950-1995, and four projection variants for 1995-2050. The results of the 1998 revision were to be published during 1999 as a three-volume set entitled World Population Prospects: The 1998 Revision. The 1998 revision showed a devastating toll from AIDS with respect to mortality and population loss. In the 29 African countries in which the impact of AIDS was studied, life expectancy at birth was projected to decrease to 47 years in 1995-2000, whereas it would have been expected to reach 54 years in the absence of the AIDS epidemic. Fertility was significantly below the level necessary for the replacement of generations in countries of the more developed regions (total fertility rate of approximately 2.1). In the 1980s and 1990s, fertility had decreased to levels below replacement in several countries from the less developed regions, including all countries in the populous region of Eastern Asia, except Mongolia.

As a result of the decrease in fertility and increase in life expectancy, the world population was becoming older, with a diminishing proportion of children (those under age 15) and an increase in older persons (those aged 60 or older). Overall, however, there were three times as many children as older persons.

The Division, in cooperation with UNAIDS, convened a Technical Meeting on the Demographic Impact of HIV/AIDS (New York, 10 November), which examined the results, methodology, data and assumptions concerning the levels and trends of HIV infections and their demographic impact. It also reviewed existing knowledge on factors related to the epidemiology and demography of HIV/AIDS and made recommendations on methodological issues, approaches to sharing information and future research needs in order to improve future estimates and projections.

In the area of population policies, a major activity in 1998 was data processing and analysis of the United Nations Eighth Population Inquiry among Governments on Population and Development, which contained a number of questions to assess the extent to which the ICPD Programme of Action had been translated into population policies. While a preliminary report had been completed, additional questionnaires from countries were being sought. As far as abortion policies were concerned, a wallchart entitled World Abortion Policies, 1999 and the corresponding publication entitled Abortion Policies: An International Overview had been prepared. The report found that nearly all countries (97 per cent) had policies that permitted legal abortions to save the woman's life. The proportion of countries that permitted legal abortions for other reasons varied: 63 per cent permitted legal abortion to preserve the woman's physical health; 51 per cent to preserve the woman's mental health; 43 per cent for rape or incest; 42 per cent when there was a possibility of foetal impairment; 31 per cent for economic or social reasons; and 25 per cent upon request. Also during 1998, a volume entitled National Population Policies was revised and completed. The volume presented an overview of trends in population policies for 190 countries. It showed that in the past two decades the number of countries that considered their rate of population growth and their fertility rates to be too high had increased significantly. Most of those countries had established policies aimed at lowering their fertility rates. A particular concern had been expressed by Governments regarding the level of fertility among adolescents and many had adopted policies to address that issue.

With respect to population and development, a wallchart on world population ageing had been prepared for release in 1999, to coincide with the International Year of Older Persons. Based on estimated mortality rates for the period 1995-2000, those who survived to age 60 could expect to live 18 more years—20 years for women and 17 years for men. People in the more developed world could expect to live three years longer than those in less developed countries. A report entitled Charting the Progress of Populations, which had been prepared for publication, grew out of the participation of the Population Division in activities aimed at ensuring a coordinated and system-wide implementation of the goals and commitments adopted by various global conferences, including ICPD. Work was ongoing on the scheduled revision of the data bank on population, resources, environment and development.

During 1998, the Population Division completed the fourth annual edition of the World Population Monitoring Report, which focused on population growth, structure and distribution, and covered such issues as changing population age structures, population distribution; urbanization and internal migration; and the interrelationship of population growth, economic growth, poverty, food provision and the environment. As a result of those interrelationships, population policies were viewed as an important element of the policy-making components needed to advance social and economic development and to eliminate poverty.

The Division prepared an updated catalogue of its publications, covering the period 1996-1998. In addition, its Population Information Network (POPIN) project, funded by UNFPA, continued to promote use of the Internet and the CD-ROM to increase the worldwide availability and accessibility of substantive population information. POPIN focused in particular on information capacity-building and the creation of developing country institution web sites for the dissemination of local population information.

The Division also provided technical assistance services during 1998 in the areas of population and development training; analysis and research on socio-economic and demographic data obtained from population censuses, surveys and vital registration systems; population policy; and population and development. The Interregional Adviser in Population and the two TSS specialists carried out various country assistance missions during the year.

Demographics

The twentieth session of the ACC Subcommittee on Demographic Estimates and Projections (New York, 23-25 June) [ACC/1998/161] discussed the continuing collaboration in demographic and sectoral estimates and projections in the UN system, including the coordination of the 1998 and 2000 rounds. The Subcommittee also discussed the activities of the Population Division, the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and other UN bodies.

The Subcommittee agreed that it was essential to continue inter-agency coordination in the field of demographic and sectoral estimates and projections in order to strengthen the UN system database, maintain consistency of coverage and timing, and ensure homogeneity in the presentation of results.

Human settlements

Follow-up to the 1996 UN Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)

In an August report [A/53/267], the Secretary-General submitted proposals on the scope and organizational aspects of the special session of the General Assembly on the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the 1996 United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) [YUN1996,p.992], to be held in 2001 in accordance with Assembly resolution 52/190 [YUN 1997, p. 1092].

The report contained, among other things, proposals on the scope and substantive aspects of the special session; its organizational aspects, including the preparatory activities; the roles of the Commission on Human Settlements, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in that process; and the involvement of partners and relevant UN organizations and agencies in the review and appraisal process. An indicative timetable for the preparatory process was annexed to the report.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Assembly an October report on environment and human settlements (see preceding chapter).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/608/Add.3], adopted resolution 53/180 without vote [agenda item 93 (c)].

Special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 51/177 of 16 December 1996 on the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) and 52/192 of 18 December 1997 on the follow-up to the Conference and the future role of the Commission on Human Settlements,

Also recalling that, in paragraph 13 of its resolution 51/177, the General Assembly reaffirmed that the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, together with the Commission on Human Settlements, should constitute a three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism to oversee the coordination of activities for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

Further recalling paragraph 218 of the Habitat Agenda, adopted by the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), in which the Conference recommended that the General Assembly consider holding a special session in the year 2001 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Conference,

Recalling its resolution 52/190 of 18 December 1997, in which it, inter alia, decided to hold a special session of the General Assembly in the year 2001 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II), the modalities of which were to be decided on at its fifty-third session,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing proposals on the scope and organizational aspects of the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General concerning the modalities for the special session of the General Assembly for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

2. Decides that the special session for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) will be held in June 2001 for a period of three working days;

3. Reaffirms that the special session will be undertaken on the basis of and with full respect for the Istanbul Declaration on Human Settlements and the Habitat Agenda and that there will be no renegotiation of the existing agreements contained therein;

4. Decides to invite States members of the specialized agencies that are not members of the United Nations to participate in the work of the special session in the capacity of observers;

5. Also decides that the Commission on Human Settlements, which is currently scheduled at its seventeenth and eighteenth sessions to focus on monitoring the implementation of the Habitat Agenda and assessing its impact, should serve as the preparatory committee for the special session;

6. Further decides that the Commission, meeting as the preparatory committee for the special session, shall be open-ended to allow full participation of all States;

7. Stresses the need for the effective participation of local authorities, other Habitat Agenda partners and relevant actors of civil society, in particular the private sector and non-governmental organizations, in the preparations for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements, taking into account the practice and experience gained at the Habitat II Conference, for their substantive contributions to and active involvement in the preparatory meetings and the special session, and invites the President of the General Assembly, in consultation with Member States, to propose to Member States appropriate modalities for their effective involvement in the special session;

8. Invites Governments to play an active role in the preparatory process, inter alia, through an intensified exchange of experiences, and welcomes the proposals received so far from Singapore to hold an international conference on model cities, from 19 to 21 April 1999, and from Germany to hold an international conference, entitled "Urban 21", in 2000;

9. Invites the Commission on Human Settlements, serving as the preparatory committee, to meet for two working days back-to-back with its forthcoming seventeenth session in order, inter alia, to elect its officers, adopt appropriate rules of procedure and consider the organization of work for its first substantive session, to be held at Nairobi for five working days in May 2000, and invites the preparatory committee, at its first substantive session, to consider the modalities, duration, date and agenda for the second substantive session, to be held in 2001;

10. Invites the Economic and Social Council to devote its coordination segment in 2000 to human settlements issues and the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

11. Also invites the Economic and Social Council actively to promote and coordinate the role of the regional commissions in the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda at the regional and subregional levels;

12. Invites the regional commissions, within their mandates and in cooperation with regional intergovernmental organizations and banks, to consider convening high-level meetings to review the progress made in implementing the outcome of the Conference and to report the results of their review to the Economic and Social Council;

13. Requests other relevant organizations and agencies of the United Nations system and the funds and programmes, consistent with their respective mandates, to contribute, as appropriate, to the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda at the national, regional and global levels;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to seek extra-budgetary resources to assist developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, to send representatives to the sessions of the preparatory committee and the special session of the General Assembly in June 2001 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the Habitat Agenda;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the sub-item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II)".

OIOS review of Habitat II

In March [A/52/821], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report of the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) on the audit of Habitat II, which was conducted from September 1996 to March 1997. The objectives of the audit were to assess the adequacy of the financial controls over the Conference and the effectiveness of the Habitat II secretariat in preparing for the Conference.

OIOS expressed concern about the breakdown of internal controls over financial management and financial reporting; in particular, it noted extensive hiring of consultants and high consultancy fees without competitive bidding and frequently with little value received in return. According to OIOS, the expenditures of Habitat II, estimated at $8.5 million, and the financial deficit of $0.3 million reported for the period ended 31 December 1996, were significantly understated, and the financial statements for the period ended on that date were unreliable. The United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS) estimated that the Conference's financial deficit was in the range of $2 million. OIOS recommended, among other things, that UNCHS recalculate the total expenditures and deficit as at 31 December 1996, and that it make additional efforts to realize outstanding pledges and, if possible, to raise additional contributions from donors. UNCHS was urged to improve internal controls and financial management.

UN Centre for Human Settlements

In 1998, many UNCHS activities focused on follow-up to Habitat II. As part of efforts to build greater global awareness of the deterioration of housing conditions of the poor, UNCHS was establishing a campaign on secure tenure and was engaging in the "Cities Initiative". While the Centre's activities in the area of urban poverty were at an initial stage focusing on research, networking, strategy formulation and awareness-building, it was expected that poverty reduction in urban areas would become a central goal and focus. Following the second Global Forum of the Global Parliamentarians on Habitat (Cancún, Mexico, January), the Centre began to collaborate with the participants on human settlements legislation, for further promotion of the Habitat

Agenda. In the area of disaster mitigation, the Centre collaborated with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) in a Task Force on Flood Management. Through its Women and Habitat Programme, UNCHS gave advisory services and capacity-building assistance to governments, local and national, on gender-aware implementation of the Habitat Agenda. The Centre disseminated the second global report on human settlements and began work on the third report, scheduled to be released in 2001. UNCHS worked closely with UNICEF on the issue of the rights of the child, particularly with respect to shelter and related services, and participated in its initiative on child-friendly cities. UNCHS and UNICEF jointly organized a workshop on that issue at the first World Congress on Health and Urban Environment (Madrid, Spain, July).

On 1 December [HS/C/17/6], the Executive Director of UNCHS submitted a report on "International cooperation for the implementation of the Habitat Agenda" to the Commission on Human Settlements, as the Commission had requested in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1093]. The theme was to be included in the agenda of the Commission's seventeenth (1999) session. The report focused on: international cooperation to implement the Habitat Agenda [YUN 1996, p. 994] at the national and local levels through the strengthening or development of plans of action; international cooperation in monitoring the implementation of the Agenda; international cooperation for strengthening participation by partner groups in the implementation of the Agenda, including local authorities, parliamentarians, non-governmental and community-based organizations and the private sector; and the activities of the UN system and other development agencies, which supported implementation of the Agenda. The report also elaborated a set of issues for discussion and consideration by the Commission.

The Executive Director noted that since Habitat II in 1996, very limited resources had been mobilized to promote the human settlements issue and to stimulate and monitor international cooperation initiatives for the implementation of the Agenda. As a result, the share of human settlements-related programmes and projects had not progressed and rarely exceeded 5 per cent of official development assistance to developing countries and countries in transition, despite the major influence of urban areas on national development and the rapid growth of urban poverty. UNCHS suggested that the Commission might wish to revive the Centre's monitoring mandate in order to follow up on the evolution of international assistance to the human settlements sector. It suggested that the Commission reaffirm its role in implementing operational activities and recommend the development of systematic approaches for operational activities of international agencies at the national and local levels, aimed at developing integrated approaches to implement urban poverty reduction strategies at the national and local levels. UNCHS also suggested that the Commission define an agenda for a comprehensive discussion on the need for increased international assistance for urban development at the special session of the General Assembly in 2001 on an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of Habitat II.

The United Nations Task Force on Environment and Human Settlements, established by the Secretary-General to develop new measures for strengthening and restructuring UNEP and UNCHS, proposed that the two organizations should derive greater benefit from their common location in terms of administrative efficiency and programmatic synergy (see preceding chapter). The Task Force recommended that the United Nations Office at Nairobi be utilized to unify their administrative services; that common support services for information, press and library facilities be established; that the planning and implementation of the two programmes be more tightly linked; and that the possibility of co-locating regional offices be assessed.

Report of Secretary-General. In an October report [A/53/512], the Secretary-General presented an assessment of UNCHS. Among the shortcomings identified by the Secretary-General was the lack of internal coherence in the subprogrammes as depicted in the work programme. Policy guidelines were not based on lessons learned and were not necessarily used in carrying out operational activities. Furthermore, most of the normative activities were mandate-driven and few attempts were made to prioritize activities into a Centre-wide policy. The work programme process lacked staff participation and was based on a top-down approach. The Centre, in most cases, failed to transform its operational activities into policy statements or normative positions.

The problems of dispersed and insufficiently focused activities were addressed in various proposals by the Centre for restructuring the organization; consequently, it was agreed that the Centre should be reorganized along programmatic lines. Progress was made in introducing mechanisms for self-evaluation at the subprogramme level, as well as in the overall work of the Centre. In addition, a Programme Review Committee had been established.

The report also analysed the current work programme of the Centre, as well as its financial situation, strengths and weaknesses, general management, financial management, programme and project management, and revitalization work. According to the report, the UNCHS financial situation was precarious because of a variety of external factors, notably a sizeable decline in core programme resources and a corresponding increase in earmarked contributions, and also because of the lack of timely management response. The financial problems stemmed largely from the Centre's inability to utilize resources efficiently and with transparency. Recommendations were made regarding the general management and the financial management of the Centre, as well as the programme and project management. The Centre had established an expert team for revitalization which began work in September.

By decision 53/441 of 15 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report.

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

Biennial financial audit

In July tA/53/5/Add.8], the UN Board of Auditors transmitted to the General Assembly the financial report and audited financial statements of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation for the biennium 1996-1997. The Foundation's total expenditure during the biennium amounted to $24,251,255, an increase over the expenditure of $23,709,501 in 1994-1995. The Board of Auditors reported, among other things, that the financial statements of the Foundation and Habitat II for the 1996-1997 biennium were generally consistent with the provisions of the United Nations System Accounting Standards, except for contributions in kind and accounting for contributions. Among the Board's recommendations were that the administration should prepare the financial statement in conformity with UN standards, review the basis of its fund-raising strategy with the aim of increasing contributions, analyse the reasons for projects' time overruns and take corrective action, and set a time frame for closing projects financially soon after their operational closure.

Chapter IX

Social policy, crime prevention and human resource development

United Nations efforts to advance social, cultural and human resource development continued throughout 1998, as did the implementation of the Organization's crime prevention and criminal justice programme.

At its February session, the Commission for Social Development, in the context of the follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development, considered as its priority theme "Promoting social integration and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons". It also carried out a review of UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups. In preparation for the special session of the General Assembly to be held in the year 2000 to review and appraise the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit, the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session held an organizational meeting in May. In November, the Assembly welcomed Switzerland's offer to convene the special session in Geneva in June 2000. Throughout the year, the UN Secretariat continued to monitor the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, which was adopted by the Assembly in 1982.

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in April, discussed preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 2000. In December, the Assembly decided that the theme of the Tenth Congress should be "Crime and justice: meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century". On the Commission's recommendation, the Assembly, also in December, adopted complementary provisions for the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters. As follow-up to the 1994 Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, the Assembly established an intergovernmental committee to begin drafting an international convention against transnational organized crime.

During the year, the Assembly declared 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations and addressed issues related to cultural and human resource development. On 2 February, the Assembly President made a solemn appeal in conjunction with the observance of the Olympic Truce.

Social policy and cultural issues

Social aspects of development

Commission for Social Development

At its thirty-sixth session (New York, 10-20 February) [E/1998/26], the Commission for Social Development considered two topics in the context of the follow-up to the 1995 World Summit for Social Development [YUN 1995, p. 1113]: its priority theme "Promoting social integration and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons"; and a review of UN plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups (see below). It adopted a resolution on the priority theme and decisions on options for the future review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Ageing (see PART THREE, Chapter XI) and on documents considered in connection with the World Summit follow-up. The Commission recommended two draft decisions to the Economic and Social Council for adoption, one on activities of the Consultative Group for the International Year of Older Persons (1999) (see PART THREE, Chapter XI) and the other on its 1998 report and 1999 agenda.

By decision 1998/226 of 28 July, the Council took note of the Commission's report on its thirty-sixth session and endorsed its decisions. It also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the Commission's thirty-seventh (1999) session.

Follow-up to 1995 World Summit for Social Development

In 1998, the UN system continued to carry out activities at the national and international levels to implement the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Ac-don [ibid., p. 1114], adopted at the 1995 World Summit for Social Development.

The Commission for Social Development considered follow-up to the Summit in February and the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives (2000) held an organizational session in May.

Commission action. At its February session [E/1998/26], the Commission for Social Development, which had responsibility for Summit follow-up and implementation of the Copenhagen Declaration and Programme of Action, focused on the priority theme: "Promoting social integration and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons". The Commission heard special presentations by national representatives on follow-up to the Summit and held two panel meetings with invited experts and two dialogues with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) on the priority theme. There was also an exchange of views with the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the United Nations Secretariat.

In considering the priority theme, the Commission had before it a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.5/1998/2] that addressed the issues of participation and social justice and enhancing social protection and reducing vulnerability. He defined vulnerability as being a state of high exposure to risks, combined with a reduced ability to defend oneself against those risks and to cope with ensuing negative consequences. The Secretary-General recommended reducing vulnerability through enhanced employment opportunities for groups and persons with specific needs; creation of an enabling environment; increasing empathy; facilitating partnerships; conducting social impact assessments; promoting peace; and reconsidering resource issues.

The Commission adopted a resolution [E/1998/26 des. 36/1] containing a set of agreed conclusions on promoting social integration and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons. They included recommendations for action at local, national, regional and international levels related to three major issues: promoting social integration through responsive government, full participation in society, non-discrimination, tolerance, equality and social justice; enhancing social protection, reducing vulnerability and enhancing employment opportunities for groups with specific needs; and violence, crime and the problem of illicit drugs and substance abuse as factors of social disintegration.

The Commission transmitted the agreed conclusions to the Economic and Social Council for consideration and appropriate follow-up action, as well as to the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly in 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit and to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, acting as preparatory body for the June 1998 special session of the Assembly devoted to the fight against the illicit sale, production, demand, traffic and distribution of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (see PART THREE, Chapter XIV).

The Commission also considered two notes of the Secretary-General transmitting the reports of expert workshops held in 1997 on issues related to the priority theme. The Expert Workshop on Participation and Social Justice (London, 29 September-3 October) [E/CN.5/1998/4] brought together experts from all world regions and observers from the United Kingdom and the UN system to review the experience in different areas to determine how participation might be encouraged so that social integration could be promoted. The Expert Workshop on Ways and Means to Enhance Social Protection and Reduce Vulnerability (New York, 10-14 November) [E/CN.5/1998/5] sought to clarify key concepts such as vulnerability and review its causes and consequences, as well as policies, programmes, tools and priorities for reducing vulnerability and enhancing protection. The Commission took note of the reports of the two workshops [E/1998/26 (dec. 36/102)].

Special session of General Assembly (2000)

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/25 [YUN 1997, p. 1109], the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives held an organizational session in New York from 19 to 22 May [A/53/45]. It discussed preparations for the special session, participation of NGOs, arrangements for future sessions of the Preparatory Committee and other organizational matters. It also held panel discussions on UN system-wide follow-up to the Summit and on the implementation of the Summit's outcome.

The Committee had before it a Secretariat note containing proposals on the participation of NGOs at the special session and in the preparatory process [A/AC.253/2], a report of the Secretary-General containing proposals on the preparatory process [A/AC.253/3] and a letter from Switzerland to the Secretary-General proposing that the special session be held in Geneva [A/AC.253/4].

The Committee adopted eight decisions dealing with the objectives of the special session; issues to be addressed; coordination with the Commission for Social Development; the role of the UN system; mobilization of voluntary resources to support the participation of the least developed countries in the work of the Committee and the special session; arrangements for future sessions; participation of NGOs; and other organizational matters. By the decision on arrangements for future sessions, the Committee noted with appreciation Switzerland's offer to convene the special session in Geneva and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the practical implications of the offer for the General Assembly's fifty-third (1998) session (see below).

Report and note of Secretary-General. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/25 [YUN 1997, p. 1109], the Secretary-General, in August [A/53/211], provided updated information on the implementation of the outcome of the Summit by intergovernmental bodies, including the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session, the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council. He also described other follow-up activities, including national reporting and activities undertaken by the UN Secretariat and system and by civil society. The report included a timetable for the intergovernmental process towards the year 2000 when the special session was to take place. The Secretary-General indicated that, while there were positive developments and activities taking place related to implementing the Summit goals, much more remained to be done at all levels to tackle the serious problems of poverty, unemployment and social disintegration faced by most countries.

In an August note [A/53/210], the Secretary-General reported on the practical implications of Switzerland's offer to convene the special session in Geneva.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 7 October, the General Assembly, by decision 53/405, approved the provisional agenda for the first (1999) session of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session. In annotations to the decision, the Assembly stated that the principal subject for discussion at the first session would be the identification of the specific issues and initiatives that Governments wished to have placed on the special session's agenda. The 10 commitments agreed upon at the Summit, as elaborated in the Programme of Action, would provide the framework for discussion.

On 19 November [meeting 62], the Assembly adopted resolution 53/28 [draft: A/53/L.34 & Add.I] without vote [agenda item 37].

Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 46/139 of 17 December 1991, 47/92 of 16 December 1992, 48/100 of 20 December 1993, 50/161 of 22 December 1995, 50/227 of 24 May 1996, 51/202 of 17 December 1996 and 52/25 of 26 November 1997,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1991/230 of 30 May 1991, resolutions 1992/27 of 30 July 1992, 1995/60 of 28 July 1995, 1996/7 of 22 July 1996, 1996/36 of 26 July 1996, 1997/56 of 23 July 1997 and 1998/44 and 1998/46 of 31 July 1998 and agreed conclusions 1995/1 of 28 July 1995, 1996/1 of 26 July 1996 and 1997/1 of 25 July 1997,

1. Reaffirms the commitments adopted by heads of State and Government at the World Summit for Social Development, contained in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action, and their pledge to give the highest priority to national, regional and international policies and actions for the promotion of social progress, social justice, the betterment of the human condition and social integration, based on full participation by all;

2. Expresses its profound concern at the seriousness of the current economic crisis in many regions of the world and of its negative social and economic consequences, demonstrating the necessity to implement fully the commitments made at the Summit, and reaffirms the need to continue to evaluate the impact of structural adjustment programmes by, inter alia, integrating the social dimensions involved;

3. Emphasizes the urgency of placing the goals of social development as contained in the Copenhagen Declaration and the Programme of Action at the centre of economic policy-making, including policies influencing domestic and global market forces and the global economy;

4. Also emphasizes the need for revitalized economic and social development everywhere within a framework that places people at the centre of development and aims to meet human needs rapidly and more effectively by, inter alia, enhancing positive interaction between economic and social policies, and stresses the need for strong, sustained political will at the national, regional and international levels to invest in people and their well-being in order to achieve the objectives of social development;

5. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development, the implementation of the first United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (1997-2006) and the role of microcredit in the eradication of poverty;

Critical importance of national action and international cooperation for social development

6. Stresses that social development and the implementation of the Programme of Action of the Summit are primarily the responsibility of Governments and that strengthened and coordinated international cooperation and assistance are essential for their full implementation;

7. Reiterates that international cooperation based on a spirit of partnership and solidarity among all countries contributes to create an enabling environment so as to achieve the goals of social development;

8. Calls upon all Governments and the United Nations system to promote an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective and to use gender analysis as a tool for the integration of a gender dimension into the planning and implementation of policies, strategies and programmes on social development;

9. Reiterates the call of the Summit for Governments to assess on a regular basis national progress towards implementing the outcome of the Summit, and encourages Governments to provide information using the Secretary-General's guidelines for national reporting on the progress made and obstacles encountered, in the implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action;

10. Considers as a positive step towards greater cooperation and strengthened partnership among members of the international community the convening of its high-level meeting on renewal of the dialogue on strengthening international economic cooperation for development through partnership, held on 17 and 18 September 1998, on the overall theme of "the social and economic impact of globalization and interdependence and their policy implications";

Mobilization of financial resources

11. Reaffirms that the mobilization of domestic and international resources for development from all sources is an essential component for the comprehensive and effective implementation of the outcome of the Summit;

12. Calls upon all countries to develop economic policies that promote and mobilize domestic savings and attract external resources for productive investment and to seek innovative sources of funding, both public and private, for social programmes, while ensuring their effective utilization, and in the budgetary process, to ensure transparency and accountability in the use of public resources and to give priority to providing and improving basic social services;

13. Expresses concern that the volatility of short-term capital flows can have negative consequences for social development, undermining the goals of the Summit and setting back progress in its implementation, in particular in developing countries, and underlines the need to study the ways and means to address the problem;

14. Reaffirms that a strong political commitment by the international community is needed to implement strengthened international cooperation for development, including social development, that the mobilization of domestic and international resources for development from all sources is an essential component for the comprehensive and effective implementation of development, that enhanced efforts should be made for the mobilization and provision of new and additional financial resources for the development of developing countries and that, despite an increase in private capital flows, official development assistance remains an essential source of external funding, and notes that developed countries reaffirm the commitments undertaken to fulfil as soon as possible the agreed United Nations targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product for overall official development assistance and 0.15 per cent of their gross national product for official development assistance for the least developed countries, that donor countries that have met the 0.15 per cent target will seek to undertake to reach 0.20 per cent, and that further efforts are also needed to improve the effectiveness of official development assistance and to focus such aid on the poorest countries;

15. Also reaffirms the importance of agreeing on a mutual commitment between interested developed and developing country partners to allocate, on average, 20 per cent of official development assistance and 20 per cent of the national budget, respectively, to basic social programmes;

16. Calls upon the international community, including international financial institutions, to implement fully and effectively all initiatives that will contribute to a durable solution to the debt problems of developing countries, in particular African countries and the least developed countries, and thus to support their efforts to achieve social development and, in this context, reaffirms the need to make further progress towards the implementation of the recommendations of the Summit by the Bretton Woods institutions, including the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Debt Initiative;

17. Recognizes the necessity of providing appropriate technical cooperation and other forms of assistance to the countries with economies in transition, as set out in the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action;

Involvement of civil society and other actors

18. Reaffirms the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments and the relevant actors of civil society, the social partners, the major groups as defined in Agenda 21, including non-governmental organizations and the private sector, in the implementation of and follow-up to the Declaration and the Programme of Action, and for ensuring their involvement in the planning, elaboration, implementation and evaluation of social policies at the national level;

19. Encourages non-governmental organizations to continue to participate in the work of the Commission for Social Development, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996 and decisions 1996/315 of 14 November 1996 and 1997/298 of 23 July 1997, and in the implementation process related to the Summit to the maximum extent possible;

Role of the United Nations system

20. Welcomes resolution 36/1 adopted by the Commission for Social Development on the priority theme "Promoting social integration and participation of all people, including disadvantaged and vulnerable groups and persons" and the agreed conclusions contained therein;

21. Also welcomes the ministerial communique adopted by the Economic and Social Council at the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1998 on "Market access: developments since the Uruguay Round, implications, opportunities and challenges, in particular for the developing countries and the least developed among them, in the context of globalization and liberalization" and Council decision 1998/298 of 5 August 1998, in which it decided to dedicate the high-level segment of its substantive session of 1999 to "The role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women";

22. Recalls the session of the Economic and Social Council on integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of major United Nations international conferences and summits, held from 13 to 15 May 1998 and, in this regard, takes note of Council resolution 1998/44, as well as decision 1998/290 of 31 July 1998, entitled "Basic indicators for the integrated and coordinated implementation and follow-up of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields";

23. Welcomes the efforts of funds and programmes in assisting countries in implementing all Summit commitments at the national, regional and international levels;

24. Also welcomes the efforts of the United Nations Development Programme in the implementation of Summit commitments aimed at the eradication of poverty, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries;

25. Further welcomes the contribution of the International Labour Organization on the implementation of the Summit commitments, particularly relating to its activities in promoting expansion of productive employment and reduction of unemployment as part of promoting social development;

26. Takes into account that the Commission for Social Development will examine at its thirty-seventh session, in 1999, the theme "Social services for all", and emphasizes the importance of the continued involvement and support by funds and programmes as well as specialized agencies, notably the World Health Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in the promotion and attainment of the Summit commitment of promoting universal and equitable access to quality education, the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, and the access of all to primary health care;

27. Urges the continued involvement and support by the regional commissions in the promotion of the implementation of the objectives of the Summit at the regional and subregional levels, and reiterates its invitation to the commissions, in accordance with their mandates and in cooperation with the regional inter-governmental organizations and banks, to continue to convene on a biennial basis meetings at a high political level to review the progress made towards implementing the outcome of the Summit, to exchange views, to identify and share best practices and lessons learned and to identify additional initiatives to strengthen implementation;

28. Welcomes in this context the convening of sub-regional meetings by the Economic Commission for Africa in December 1998 and in 1999, and a regional meeting by the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia in December 1998 to evaluate the follow-up of the Summit in their regions;

Special session of the General Assembly and its preparatory process

29. Recalls its resolution 50/161, in which it decided to hold a special session in 2000 for an overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit and to consider further actions and initiatives;

30. Also recalls its resolution 52/25, in which it decided to establish a Preparatory Committee open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies, with the participation of observers in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly;

31. Takes note of the report and decisions of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives;

32. Reiterates that the objectives of the special session will be to reaffirm the Declaration and the Programme of Action agreed at the Summit and not to renegotiate them, to identify progress made and constraints therein, as well as lessons learned, in the implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action at the national, regional and international levels and to recommend concrete actions and initiatives to further efforts towards full and effective implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action;

33. Recalls the provisional agenda for the first substantive session of the Preparatory Committee for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Implementation of the Outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and Further Initiatives as adopted in decision 53/405 of 7 October 1998;

34. Reaffirms the need to integrate a gender perspective in all aspects of the preparatory work as well as in the special session;

35. Takes note of the recommendation of the Preparatory Committee that the Commission for Social Development, which has primary responsibility for the follow-up and review of the implementation of the Declaration and the Programme of Action, be entrusted with the responsibility of acting as the forum for national reporting, benefiting from the sharing of experiences gained and thus in 1999 and 2000 identifying areas where further initiatives are needed, for consideration by the Preparatory Committee;

36. Reaffirms the decision of the Preparatory Committee that its substantive activities should take into account the results of other major United Nations conferences and contributions by other relevant organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system in time for the respective substantive sessions of the Committee;

37. Invites all relevant organs, funds and programmes, as well as the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization, to contribute to and be actively involved in the preparatory process and the special session by submitting contributions for the overall assessment of the implementation of the Copenhagen commitments as well as by, inter alia, submitting proposals for further actions and initiatives;

38. Invites the International Labour Organization, which because of its mandate, tripartite structure and expertise has a special role to play in the field of employment and social development, to be actively involved in the preparatory process and the special session, to contribute to the overall review and appraisal of the implementation of the outcome of the Summit and to consider further action and initiatives therein;

39. Invites Governments to contribute to the Trust Fund for the Follow-up to the World Summit for Social Development in order to support the participation of the least developed countries in the work of the Preparatory Committee and the special session, and the work undertaken by the Secretariat in the preparations for the special session;

Arrangements for future sessions of the Preparatory Committee and the special session

40. Takes note of the decision of the Preparatory Committee to hold its first substantive session in New York from 17 to 28 May 1999 and its second session, also in New York, from 3 to 14 April 2000;

41. Decides that the Preparatory Committee should establish an in-session open-ended working group during the second week of its first substantive session to facilitate consultations on organizational matters related to the special session;

42. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on the preparations for the special session;

43. Welcomes the offer of the Government of Switzerland to convene the special session at the United Nations Office at Geneva;

44. Decides that the special session will be held at Geneva from 26 to 30 June 2000;

45. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the outcome of the Summit;

46. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its fifty-fourth session the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development".

UN Research Institute for Social Development

During 1998, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued to conduct research into the social dimensions of development problems. While its main objectives continued to be the promotion of cross-country comparative research on critical problems and issues of social development, UNRISD had diversified its role in response to the changing demands of the 1990s, becoming more involved in applied research that responded directly to the concerns of policy makers and the international development community. Through workshops, seminars and conferences, the Institute promoted dialogue among policy makers, donors, scholars, NGOs and grass-roots activists.

The period 1997-1998 was one of transition for the Institute, according to the report of the Board of UNRISD on the activities of the Institute during that period [E/CN.5/1999/9]. A new Director, Thandika Mkandawire, took up his post on 1 May 1998 and the Institute had developed a major new research programme on globalization and citizenship as part of its general effort to strengthen a rights-based perspective on development. UNRISD also launched new research programmes on information technologies and social development; gender, poverty and well-being; business responsibility for sustainable development; public-sector reform and crisis-ridden States; and emerging national and regional mass tourism in developing countries. It had also set up new programmes at the request of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD) (grass-roots initiatives and knowledge networks for land reform in developing countries) and the International Labour Organization (ILO) (applied research on the ILO gender focal point system).

At the same time, UNRISD continued to support the follow-up activities to the World Summit for Social Development, sponsoring seven international meetings over the period 1997-1998, as well as a dozen smaller workshops and seminars. Other continuing programmes of research included the war-torn societies project and vulnerability and coping strategies in Cambodia. In addition, UNRISD staff members were increasingly called on to act in a range of advisory roles for UN agencies, multilateral and bilateral organizations, Governments, NGOs, research institutes and universities.

In the information dissemination area, the most significant development was the redesign and improvement of the UNRISD web site, which contained 73 publications in their entirety, as well as summary information on all research programmes, conference highlights and newsletters. During 1997-1998, 14 books were co-published with academic or commercial presses and three monographs were printed by UNRISD. In addition, the Institute published 17 discussion papers and eight occasional papers.

Financial situation

Although part of the United Nations system, all UNRISD activities were financed by voluntary contributions from Governments, international development agencies and foundations. In 1997-1998, the core funding of UNRISD was provided by Denmark, Finland, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. The research programme was supported by 26 bilateral and multilateral agencies and foundations. UNRISD expenditures were expected to reach $5.36 million in 1998, an increase of 12.4 per cent over two years.

Persons with disabilities

During 1998, the UN Secretariat continued to monitor the implementation by Governments, NGOs and other members of the UN system of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 37/52 [YUN 1982, p. 981]. The Special Rapporteur to monitor the implementation of the 1993 Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 48/96 [YUN 1993, p. 977], whose mandate was renewed by the Economic and Social Council by resolution 1997/19 [YUN 1997, p. 1114], continued his work, paying special attention to the situation of children with disabilities.

In resolution 1998/4 of 20 July, the Council called for strengthening of regional support for persons with disabilities in the context of the mid-point of the Asian and Pacific Decade of Disabled Persons, 1993-2002 (see PART THREE, Chapter V).

Assembly resolution 53/128 of 9 December on the rights of the child contained a section on children with disabilities (see PART THREE, Chapter XI).

Cultural development

Intergovernmental conference

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/197 [ibid., p. 1118], the Secretary-General, by a 3 September note [A/53/321], transmitted the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on cultural development. Also in response to that resolution, the report described the outcome of the Intergovernmental Conference on Cultural Policies for Development, held in Stockholm, Sweden, from 30 March to 2 April. The Conference adopted the Action Plan on Cultural Policies for Development, which set forth principles, policy objectives and recommendations based on the challenges of cultural development outlined in Our Creative Diversity, a report of the World Commission on Culture and Development, which was submitted to the Assembly in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1018].

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/608/Add.7], adopted resolution 53/184 without vote [agenda item 93 (g)].

Cultural development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 41/187 of 8 December 1986, 46/158 of 19 December 1991, 51/179 of 16 December 1996 and 52/197 of 18 December 1997 on cultural development,

Noting the fact that public opinion throughout the world as well as Governments and non-governmental organizations have become much more sensitive to the need for better integration of the cultural dimension into the entire development process, as a result of the World Decade for Cultural Development and the work of the World Commission on Culture and Development,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the active participation of Member States, United Nations bodies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals in the implementation of projects of national, regional and interregional scope aiming at the promotion of the objectives of the Decade and its follow-up, and in the work of the World Commission,

Taking note of the convening of the Intergovernmental Conference on Cultural Policies for Development, held at Stockholm from 30 March to 2 April 1998,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General;

2. Invites all States, intergovernmental bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations:

(a) To implement the recommendations of the Action Plan on Cultural Policies for Development adopted by the Intergovernmental Conference on Cultural Policies for Development;

(b) To cooperate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the purpose of ensuring effective follow-up to the Action Plan;

(c) To intensify their efforts to integrate cultural factors into their development programmes and projects so as to ensure sustainable development that fully respects cultural diversity, taking into account their cultural values and identity;

3. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to pursue its ongoing task of promoting throughout the United Nations system a greater awareness of the crucial relationship between culture and development, taking into account the diversity of cultures and the need to apply the recommendations of the Stockholm Conference;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

Olympic Truce

On 2 February, the President of the General Assembly made a solemn appeal [A/52/782] in connection with the observance of the Olympic Truce. By resolution 52/21 [YUN 1997, p. 1120], the Assembly had urged Member States to observe the Olympic Truce during the XVIII Winter Games (Nagano, Japan, 7-22 February 1998).

In his appeal, the Assembly President stated that, starting with the 1998 Winter Games, the International Olympic Committee had decided to fly the United Nations flag at all competition sites as a way of illustrating the connection in goals and aspirations between the Olympic movement and the United Nations. The Assembly President appealed to all States to demonstrate their commitment to the spirit of fraternity and understanding among peoples by observing the Olympic Truce and urged all those who were engaged in armed struggle to suspend hostilities in keeping with the observance.

On 4 February, by decision 52/460, the Assembly took note of the Assembly President's solemn appeal.

International Year of Dialogue among Civilizations

On 4 November [meeting 53], the General Assembly adopted resolution 53/22 [draft: A/53/L.23/Rev.1 & Rev.1/Add.1] without vote [agenda item 168].

United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, which, inter alia, call for collective effort to strengthen friendly relations among nations, remove threats to peace and foster international cooperation in resolving international issues of an economic, social, cultural and humanitarian character and in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Recognizing the diverse civilizational achievements of mankind, crystallizing cultural pluralism and creative human diversity,

Aware that positive and mutually beneficial interaction among civilizations has continued throughout human history despite impediments arising from intolerance, disputes and wars,

Emphasizing the importance of tolerance in international relations and the significant role of dialogue as a means to reach understanding, remove threats to peace and strengthen interaction and exchange among civilizations,

Noting the designation of 1995 as the United Nations Year for Tolerance, and recognizing that tolerance and respect for diversity facilitate universal promotion and protection of human rights and constitute sound foundations for civil society, social harmony and peace,

Reaffirming that civilizational achievements constitute the collective heritage of mankind, providing a source of inspiration and progress for humanity at large,

Welcoming the collective endeavour of the international community to enhance understanding through constructive dialogue among civilizations on the threshold of the third millennium,

1. Expresses its firm determination to facilitate and promote dialogue among civilizations;

2. Decides to proclaim the year 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilizations;

3. Invites Governments, the United Nations system, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and other relevant international and non-governmental organizations, to plan and implement appropriate cultural, educational and social programmes to promote the concept of dialogue among civilizations, including through organizing conferences and seminars and disseminating information and scholarly material on the subject, and to inform the Secretary-General of their activities;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to present a provisional report on activities in this regard to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, and a final report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session.

Crime prevention and criminal justice

Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice held its seventh session from 21 to 30 April in Vienna [E/1998/30 & Corr.1]. The Commission recommended three draft resolutions for adoption by the General Assembly and nine draft resolutions and two draft decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council (see below).

It also adopted a resolution on strategic management of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, which it brought to the attention of the Council.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/227, took note of the Commission's report on its seventh session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the eighth (1999) session. The Council, by decision 1998/228 of the same date, endorsed the Commission's appointment of members of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute.

Preparations for UN Crime Congress (2000)

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice had before it a March report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.15/1998/2] on progress made in preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held in 2000, as decided by the General Assembly in resolution 52/91 [YUN 1997, p. 1176]. UN crime congresses had been held every five years since 1955. The Secretary-General described substantive and organizational preparations for and planning aspects of the Congress and annexed to his report a draft programme of work for the Congress's plenary and committee meetings. He also summarized responses received from five Governments to his note verbale requesting their views on topics to be discussed at the Congress. The Secretary-General also submitted a draft discussion guide for the regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth Congress [E/CN.15/1998/2/Add.1/Rev.1], which was intended to stimulate debate on matters of major concern to the international community, with a view to identifying the main policy options for consideration by the Congress. The guide covered such issues as: promoting the rule of law and strengthening the criminal justice system; new challenges facing international cooperation in combating transnational crime; keeping pace with new developments related to effective crime prevention; and accountability and fairness in the justice process regarding offenders and victims.

The Secretary-General submitted a draft discussion guide on the workshops, ancillary meetings, symposia and exhibits to be held during the Congress [E/CN.15/1998/2/Add.2], which aimed to facilitate substantive discussions on combating corruption; crimes related to the computer network; community involvement in crime prevention; and women in the criminal justice system.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/13 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The Economic and Social Council,

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 53/110 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/615], adopted resolution 53/110 without vote [agenda item 101].

Preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/91 of 12 December 1997 on preparations for the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Considering that, pursuant to its resolutions 415(V) of 1 December 1950 and 46/152 of 18 December 1991, the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders is to be convened in the year 2000,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1993/32 of 27 July 1993 and the draft rules of procedure for United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders annexed to that resolution,

Emphasizing the role of the Tenth Congress as a consultative body of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in accordance with paragraph 29 of the statement of principles and programme of action of the Programme annexed to resolution 46/152,

Aware of the important work to be accomplished by the regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth Congress,

Stressing the importance of undertaking all the preparatory activities for the Tenth Congress in a timely and concerted manner,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the preparations for the Tenth Congress,

1. Accepts with gratitude the invitation of the Government of Austria to host the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders at Vienna;

2. Decides to hold the Tenth Congress from 10 to 17 April 2000, with pre-Congress consultations to be held on 9 April 2000;

3. Approves the following provisional agenda for the Tenth Congress, finalized by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its seventh session:

1. Opening of the Congress.
2. Organizational matters.
3. Promoting the rule of law and strengthening the criminal justice system.
4. International cooperation in combating transnational crime: new challenges in the twenty-first century.
5. Effective crime prevention: keeping pace with new developments.
6. Offenders and victims: accountability and fairness in the justice process.
7. Adoption of the report of the Congress;

4. Notes that the Commission, at its seventh session, reviewed a draft discussion guide for the regional preparatory meetings for the Tenth Congress;

5. Endorses the programme of work for the Tenth Congress, including the holding of four practical-oriented technical workshops on the following subjects:

- (a) Combating corruption;
- (b) Crimes related to the computer network;
- (c) Community involvement in crime prevention;
- (d) Women in the criminal justice system;

6. Decides that the theme of the Tenth Congress should be "Crime and justice: meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century";

7. Emphasizes the importance of the workshops, and invites Member States, non-governmental organizations and other relevant entities to support financially, organizationally and technically the preparations for the workshops, including the preparation and circulation of relevant background material;

8. Welcomes the offer of the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network to assist in the preparations for the workshops;

9. Invites donor countries to cooperate with developing countries to ensure their full participation in the workshops;

10. Encourages Governments to undertake preparations for the Tenth Congress at an early stage by all appropriate means, including, where appropriate, the establishment of national preparatory committees, with a view to contributing to a focused and productive discussion on the topics and to participating actively in the organization and follow-up of the workshops;

11. Decides, without prejudice to the current preparatory arrangements for the Tenth Congress, to streamline and minimize the costs of the preparation and servicing of the regional preparatory meetings by shortening their duration and limiting their documentation, by holding them in conjunction with other regional meetings or, if they are not absolutely necessary, by not convening them at all;

12. Also decides that the savings achieved should be used in servicing meetings and in supporting the priority programme activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat;

13. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To take the necessary logistic steps, in collaboration with Member States and the institutes constituting the Programme network, to mobilize the participation of interested partners in the preparations for the four workshops;

(b) To ensure, in collaboration with Member States, a wide and effective programme of public information related to the preparations for the Tenth Congress, to the Congress itself and to the implementation of its conclusions;

14. Requests the Commission, as the preparatory body for the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, to accord high priority at its eighth session to the finalization in good time of all the necessary organizational and substantive arrangements;

15. Also requests the Commission, at its eighth session, to prepare a draft declaration for submission to the Tenth Congress, taking into account the results of the regional preparatory meetings;

16. Urges the regional preparatory meetings to examine the substantive items of the agenda and workshop topics of the Tenth Congress and to make action-oriented recommendations to serve as a basis for the draft declaration to be considered by the Commission at its eighth session;

17. Requests the Tenth Congress to elaborate a single declaration containing its recommendations on the various substantive items of its agenda with a view to submitting that declaration to the Commission for consideration at its ninth session;

18. Decides that the Commission, at its tenth session, should undertake a review of the role, function, periodicity and duration of the United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, including the issue of regional preparatory meetings;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure proper follow-up of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session.

Regional meetings

Three regional meetings were held in preparation for the Tenth Crime Congress: the Asian and Pacific Regional Preparatory Meeting (Bangkok, Thailand, 2-4 November) [A/CONF.187/RPM.1/1 & Corr.1]; the Western Asian Regional Preparatory Meeting (Beirut, Lebanon, 11-13 November) [A/CONF.187/RPM.2/1]; and the African Regional Preparatory Meeting (Kampala, Uganda, 7-9 December) [A/CONF.187/RPM.3/1].

Each Meeting adopted action-oriented recommendations that reflected its regional perspective for consideration by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in preparing the draft declaration to be submitted to the Tenth Congress.

UN Programme on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/90 [YUN 1997, p. 1122], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/380] on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, particularly its technical cooperation capacity.

The report noted that the Centre for International Crime Prevention had begun to concentrate its technical cooperation activities in national and regional programmes to combat organized crime, corruption and bribery. The Centre was also formulating and implementing projects to improve prison conditions, develop national juvenile justice systems, counter domestic violence and strengthen the capacity of institutions of criminal justice generally. The year 1998 saw an intensification of cooperation with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, particularly with regard to projects in Africa, Central Asia, the Balkans and the Caribbean region. The Centre also organized training programmes, including those for civilian police in UN peacekeeping operations.

The report described progress in preparing for the Tenth Crime Congress (see above); international cooperation in combating organized transnational crime; measures to regulate firearms; the development, analysis and policy use of crime and criminal justice information and the computerization of criminal justice operations; and the use and application of UN standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice. It also discussed implementation of the recommendations of the Office of Internal Oversight

Services and strategic management and resource mobilization (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/616], adopted resolution 53/114 without vote [agenda item 101].

Strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, in particular its technical cooperation capacity

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991 on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme, in which it approved the statement of principles and programme of action annexed to that resolution,

Bearing in mind the goals of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, specifically the reduction of criminality, more efficient and effective law enforcement and administration of justice, respect for human rights and promotion of the highest standards of fairness, humanity and professional conduct,

Convinced of the desirability of closer coordination and cooperation among States in combating crime, including drug-related crimes such as money-laundering, illicit arms trade and terrorist crimes, bearing in mind the role that could be played by both the United Nations and regional organizations in this respect,

Recognizing the urgent need to increase technical cooperation activities in order to assist countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition, with their efforts in translating United Nations policy guidelines into practice,

Recalling its relevant resolutions in which it requested the Secretary-General, as a matter of urgency, to provide the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme with sufficient resources for the full implementation of its mandate, in conformity with the high priority attached to the Programme,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the progress made in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 52/90 of 12 December 1997;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and the crucial role it has to play in promoting effective action to strengthen international cooperation in crime prevention and criminal justice, in responding to the needs of the international community in the face of both national and transnational criminality and in assisting Member States in achieving the goals of preventing crime within and among States and improving the response to crime;

3. Also reaffirms the priority of the Programme, in accordance with the relevant resolutions, and requests the Secretary-General further to strengthen the Programme by providing it with the resources necessary for the full implementation of its mandate, including follow-up action to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994, and to the

Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995;

4. Further reaffirms the high priority attached to technical cooperation and advisory services in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, and stresses the need to continue to improve the operational activities of the Programme, in particular in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, in order to meet the needs of Member States, at their request, for support in crime prevention and criminal justice;

5. Encourages the ongoing efforts of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to obtain executing agency status with the United Nations Development Programme;

6. Calls upon States and United Nations funding agencies to make significant financial contributions for the operational activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, and encourages all States to make voluntary contributions for that purpose to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund, taking into account the activities required for the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime;

7. Expresses its appreciation to non-governmental organizations and other relevant sectors of civil society for their support to the Programme, and encourages them to increase such support;

8. Calls upon States to review funding policies for development assistance so as to include crime prevention and criminal justice in such assistance;

9. Calls upon all relevant programmes, funds and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies, to support technical operational activities in this field;

10. Takes note with appreciation of the contributions of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme to United Nations peacekeeping and special missions, as well as its contributions to the follow-up to those missions, inter alia, through advisory services, and encourages the Secretary-General, as a way of strengthening the rule of law, to recommend the inclusion of the re-establishment and reform of judicial and criminal justice systems in peacekeeping operations;

11. Requests the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to continue to strengthen cooperation between the United Nations International Drug Control Programme and the Centre for International Crime Prevention, in particular in the areas of transnational organized crime and money-laundering;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures to assist the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as the principal policy-making body in this field, in performing its activities, including cooperation and coordination with other relevant bodies, such as the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women;

13. Calls upon the open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee, established on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime to devote attention to the drafting of the main text of the convention, as well as, as appropriate, of international instruments addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea;

14. Welcomes the efforts undertaken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to improve the strategic management of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and to exercise more vigorously its mandated function of resource mobilization, and calls upon the Commission to strengthen further its activities in this direction;

15. Also welcomes the decision of the Commission to mainstream a gender perspective into all its activities and its request to the Secretariat that a gender perspective be integrated into all activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session.

OIOS reports

In 1998, the United Nations Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) prepared two reports concerning the work of the United Nations in crime prevention and criminal justice. In January, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly an OIOS report on the review of programme management in the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division (which subsequently became the Centre for International Crime Prevention) [A/52/777]. The report noted little evidence of guidance and oversight of the Division by top management of the United Nations Office at Vienna, suggesting that the Division had been conducting its work in a quasi-independent manner. That lack of guidance was manifest in the absence of clear strategic direction, including resource mobilization, and in the manner in which resources were being managed and priorities addressed. While acknowledging that the Division was carrying out a considerable amount of work on a broad range of issues, OIOS stated that there were indications that the programme was becoming less focused and that priorities were not being given sufficient attention. The secretariat needed to identify areas that lent themselves to streamlining; a first step would be to effect a clearer balance between its roles as a servicing body and as a technical assistance provider. The secretariat also needed to address the question of the relatively large volume of documentation prepared for the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice. In addition, much remained to be done to reorient the programme from standard-setting to a greater emphasis on assistance to Member States in implementing standards and in researching issues relating to transnational and organized crimes.

By a March note to the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) [E/AC.51/1998/3], the Secretary-General transmitted the OIOS in-depth evaluation of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, which reviewed the Programme's achievements and problems in servicing intergovernmental meetings; the development of standards and norms; information and clearing-house functions; assistance to Governments; and cooperative arrangements with other organizations of the UN system and the institutes, national focal points and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations of its network. Recommendations were made on strategic management, monitoring of standards and norms, registration of web site users, training in the use of the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network and related tools, traditional publications, a public information strategy, executing agency status, fund-raising for operational activities, the contribution of the regional commissions and work with partners in the Network.

CPC, at its thirty-eighth session (New York, 1-26 June) [A/53/16], stated that the Programme should give adequate attention to all mandated activities and recommended that the crucial role and mandate of the Department of Public Information should be borne in mind. It endorsed the report's recommendations.

Plan for strategic management

In a March report [E/CN.15/1998/10], the Secretary-General provided an overview of the inter-sessional activities undertaken by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to strengthen its strategic management of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme. It also described the activities of the UN Secretariat in that regard and made recommendations for action by the Commission.

In an April resolution on strategic management of the Programme [E/1998/30 (res. 7/1)], the Commission welcomed the reorganization of the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division as the Centre for International Crime Prevention, as well as the establishment of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention as the focal point for integrated UN efforts in drug control, crime prevention and combating international terrorism. The Commission expressed its appreciation for the Secretariat's efforts to implement the Secretary-General's reform measures, taking into account the Commission's previous recommendations on streamlining its agenda and reporting requirements, among other things. The Commission reaffirmed the need to maintain a balance between the priority issue of combating transnational organized crime and other priority issues. It requested the Centre to strengthen its oversight function with regard to the institutes of the Programme network. The Commission decided to mainstream a gender perspective into all its activities and requested the Secretary-General to integrate a gender perspective into all Centre activities. It called on the Secretary-General to strengthen further the Centre's resources, in line with the priorities of the United Nations as set out in the medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001.

Technical cooperation and coordination

The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice had before it the Secretary-General's review [E/AC.15/1998/9] of the technical cooperation and advisory services provided in 1997 by the Centre for International Crime Prevention (formerly the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division). The report highlighted the coordination of activities with other UN entities and described the contributions of Member States in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, providing suggestions on how the technical cooperation programme might be enhanced.

With its increase in stature from a division to a centre in 1997, the Centre's capacity to engage in technical cooperation was enhanced. The number of requests for the Centre's services increased during the year, resulting in a sizeable increase in its workload. While the Centre's only major technical cooperation field projects in 1996 were in Bosnia and Herzegovina, in 1997 it also had projects in Albania, Kyrgyzstan, Mongolia, South Africa and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). Technical cooperation activities focused on those programme areas specifically related to the Commission's most recent mandates, including the fight against organized crime, corruption and bribery; crime statistics and criminal justice management; juvenile justice; victims of crime and abuse of power; and improvement of prison conditions. The Centre also received requests for general policy advice on crime prevention.

Training activities undertaken by the Centre were directed at the end-users, for example, police officials, prosecutors, judges or prison officers, or were designed to have a multiplier effect by being directed at trainers, such as teachers at police colleges or in training facilities for prison staff. In 1997, the Centre undertook training activities in correctional services, community policing, organized crime, extradition and mutual assistance, drug trafficking, juvenile justice, crime prevention and policing in peacekeeping operations. The report suggested measures to enhance the Centre's ability to meet the demands of Member States in the area of technical cooperation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/24 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Technical cooperation and advisory services in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/90 of 12 December 1997, on strengthening the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, particularly its technical cooperation capacity,

Stressing the direct relevance of crime prevention and criminal justice to sustained development, stability, improved quality of life, democracy and human rights, which is increasingly being recognized by United Nations entities, specialized agencies and other international organizations,

Aware of the continued increase in requests for technical assistance forwarded to the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat by least developed countries, developing countries, countries with economies in transition and countries emerging from conflict,

Recalling the memorandum of understanding concluded in August 1997 between the Centre and the United Nations Office for Project Services to cooperate closely in the execution and implementation of technical assistance projects in crime prevention and criminal justice,

Appreciating the funding provided by certain Member States in 1997 that has permitted the Centre to enhance its capacity to execute an increased number of projects,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 52/12 A of 12 November 1997 and 52/12 B of 19 December 1997, entitled "Renewing the United Nations: a programme for reform",

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the technical cooperation activities of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat, in particular its success in focusing its technical cooperation activities in those subject areas specifically mandated by the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Centre for assisting Member States in achieving positive results in the improvement of their criminal justice systems by responding to the increasing requests for technical assistance, by implementing a number of important projects and by formulating new projects that urgently require new funding;

3. Welcomes the work done by the informal consultative group on resource mobilization in accordance with resolutions 5/3 of 31 May 1996 and 6/1 of 9 May 1997 of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

4. Commends the increased cooperation between the Centre, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Office for Project Services, and calls upon those entities, together with the World Bank and other international, regional and national funding agencies, to support technical cooperation activities complementary to existing bilateral programmes devoted to crime prevention and criminal justice as a means of guaranteeing effective and sustainable development, utilizing the expertise of the Centre;

5. Welcomes the close cooperation between the Centre and the United Nations International Drug Control Programme, in particular in the areas of action against money-laundering and of drugs and prisons, and calls upon the two entities to continue undertaking joint activities, in particular the elaboration and execution of technical cooperation projects;

6. Expresses its concern at the fact that the lack of adequate resources may impede progress in the further operationalization of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme and hamper the implementation of those projects that have so far been elaborated in response to urgent requests from countries in need;

7. Expresses its appreciation to those Member States that contribute to the activities of the Programme by providing funding and the services of associate experts, consultants and experts for training purposes, advisory missions and the implementation of technical assistance projects, by developing training manuals and other material, by offering fellowship opportunities and by hosting action-oriented workshops and expert group meetings;

8. Calls upon potential donors and relevant funding agencies to make significant and regular financial and/or other contributions for the formulation, coordination and implementation of technical assistance projects elaborated within the framework of the Programme and to strengthen the role of the Programme as facilitator of bilateral assistance in that area;

9. Invites developing countries and countries with economies in transition to include in their requests for assistance from the United Nations Development Programme, in particular as part of its country programme framework, projects and/or elements on crime prevention and criminal justice, with a view to strengthening national institutional capacity, professional expertise and continuing education in that field;

10. Requests the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the plan for strategic management of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, in accordance with Commission resolutions 1/1 of 29 April 1992 and 4/3 of 9 June 1995, to enhance further the resources available within the existing overall budgetary framework of the United Nations for the activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, including travel funds for the mobilization of resources and special efforts for fund-raising;

11. Requests the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to enter into discussions with the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme with a view to having the Centre for International Crime Prevention recognized as an executing agency;

12. Calls upon the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention to consider enhancing the operational activities of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme by establishing a presence at the country or subregional level, jointly with the United Nations International Drug Control Programme where appropriate.

UN African crime prevention institute

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/89 [YUN 1997, p. 1125], the Secretary-General submitted an August report [A/53/381] on the situation of the African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (UNAFRI), including its status, operations, staffing, programme of activities and funding, as well as proposals on how to strengthen its programmes and activities. The programme consisted mainly of activities related to UNAFRI's general direction and management; training and human resource development; comparative research and policy development; information and documentation services; advisory services to Governments and technical cooperation; international cooperation and joint activities; and conferences and seminars. It noted that implementation of the activities specified in the Institute's programme of work for 1998-1999 depended on the availability of funds.

UNAFRI's resources for 1998 totalled $410,414, which came from assessed contributions from member States, a grant from the United Nations, grants in relation to specific projects, and income generated by the rental of the Institute's premises. Since 1996, the payment of assessed contributions had decreased considerably, from $63,024 in 1996 to $20,935 in 1997, to $8,300 by 31 July 1998, when only two of UNAFRI's 28 member States had made payments for the year.

The Secretary-General concluded that, despite the need and political support for UNAFRI services, its financial situation had worsened to the extent that its limited activities had hardly had any impact on crime prevention strategies and criminal justice systems. Its viability basically depended on a UN grant and extrabudgetary contributions from the United States.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/616], adopted resolution 53/113 without vote [agenda item 10].

United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/89 of 12 December 1997 and all other relevant resolutions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and further acknowledging the assistance rendered to the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Bearing in mind the urgent need to establish effective crime prevention strategies for Africa, as well as the importance of law enforcement agencies and the judiciary at the regional and subregional levels,

1. Commends the United Nations African Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for its efforts to promote and coordinate regional technical cooperation activities related to crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

2. Reiterates the need to strengthen further the capacity of the Institute to support national mechanisms for crime prevention and criminal justice in African countries;

3. Urges the States members of the Institute to make every possible effort to meet their obligations to the Institute;

4. Appeals to all Member States and non-governmental organizations to adopt concrete practical measures to support the Institute in the development of the requisite capacity and implement its programmes and activities aimed at strengthening crime prevention and criminal justice systems in Africa;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify efforts to mobilize all relevant entities of the United Nations system to provide the necessary financial and technical support to the Institute to enable it to fulfil its mandate;

6. Calls upon the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme to work closely with the Institute;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to enhance regional cooperation, coordination and collaboration in the fight against crime, especially in its transnational dimension, which could not be adequately dealt with by national action alone;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to make concrete proposals to strengthen the programmes and activities of the Institute and to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Transnational crime

In 1998, United Nations efforts to combat organized transnational crime continued to focus on implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted in 1994 by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Crime [YUN 1994, p. 1160]. The question of elaborating an international convention against organized transnational crime continued to be discussed.

In a March report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/CN.15/1998/6], the Secretary-General reviewed implementation of the Naples Declaration and Action Plan. The report described the continuing work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention in that area and included information received from 17 States and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Developments on specific issues, such as extradition and mutual assistance in criminal matters, were also covered as they directly related to both the implementation of the Naples Declaration and Action Plan and the strengthening of international cooperation against organized transnational crime. The report also set out future action to be taken by the Centre in response to the needs and requests of Member States to strengthen their efforts to prevent and control organized transnational crime and raised issues for the Commission's consideration with regard to determining further work on the subject.

International convention

The inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts on the elaboration of a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime, established by General Assembly resolution 52/85 [YUN 1997, p. 1143], met in Warsaw, Poland, from 2 to 6 February 1998 [E/CN.15/1998/5]. During a general discussion that sought to identify and consolidate areas of consensus regarding an effective UN instrument to address organized transnational crime, it emerged that, although the contours of organized crime were generally understood, there continued to be divergences of a legal nature that made it difficult to reach a comprehensive definition of organized transnational crime. It was agreed that a convention should include practical measures of international cooperation and appropriate safeguards for the protection of human rights.

The group of experts addressed the following specific elements of the convention: scope of application; domestic obligations, including criminalization and money-laundering; jurisdictional matters; judicial cooperation, including extradition, mutual assistance and international confiscation; protection of victims and witnesses; law enforcement cooperation and exchange of information; training and technical assistance; prevention; the role of the United Nations and other relevant organizations; and safeguards. Included in the group's report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice was an outline of options for contents of the convention.

The Commission also had before it the reports of regional ministerial workshops on organized transnational crime held in Africa (Dakar, Senegal, 21-23 July 1997) [E/CN.15/1998/67Add.1] and Asia (Manila, Philippines, 23-25 March 1998) [E/CN.15/1998/67 Add.2].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/14 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Transnational organized crime

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 53/111 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/616], adopted resolution 53/111 without vote [agenda item 101].

Transnational organized crime

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 49/159 of 23 December 1994 and 52/85 of 12 December 1997,

Taking note of the Buenos Aires Declaration on Prevention and Control of Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the Regional Ministerial Workshop on Follow-up to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, held at Buenos Aires from 27 to 30 November 1995, the Dakar Declaration on the Prevention and Control of Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, adopted by the African Regional Ministerial Workshop on Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, held at Dakar from 21 to 23 July 1997, and the Manila Declaration on the Prevention and Control of Transnational Crime, adopted by the Asian Regional Ministerial Workshop on Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, held at Manila from 23 to 25 March 1998, Convinced of the importance of continuous action by Member States aimed at the full implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994,

Convinced also of the need to proceed expeditiously with the elaboration of a convention against transnational organized crime,

Mindful of the fact that, pursuant to Economic and Social Council decision 1997/232 of 21 July 1997, the theme for the seventh session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice was "Organized transnational crime",

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime: question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, and other possible international instruments;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Government of Poland for acting as host to the meeting of the inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts, established pursuant to resolution 52/85, on the elaboration of a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime, held at Warsaw from 2 to 6 February 1998;

3. Welcomes with appreciation the report of the meeting of the intergovernmental group of experts;

4. Urges Member States to continue to make every possible effort to implement fully the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan by taking the most appropriate legislative, regulatory and administrative measures, including those aimed at prevention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his work on the development and maintenance of the central repository established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/27 of 24 July 1996;

6. Urges Member States to respond promptly to the requests of the Secretary-General for data, and other information and material, including legislation and pertinent regulatory texts, by submitting such information and material in accordance with the methodological points and categorization of data set forth in annex II to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/22 of 21 July 1997, in order to facilitate the work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his work on the elaboration of training manuals for law enforcement and judicial personnel on action against transnational organized crime;

8. Also requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to identify and allocate, within the overall budget of the United Nations, adequate resources for strengthening the capacity of the Centre for International Crime Prevention in order to assist Member States in the full implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide Member States with technical cooperation, advisory services and other forms of assistance upon request in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including in the area of prevention and control of transnational organized crime;

10. Decides to establish an open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee for the purpose of elaborating a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime and of discussing the elaboration, as appropriate, of international instruments addressing trafficking in women and children, combating the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, and illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea;

11. Welcomes with appreciation the offer of the Government of Argentina to host an informal preparatory meeting of the intergovernmental ad hoc committee at

Buenos Aires from 31 August to 4 September 1998, so as to ensure the continuation without interruption of work on the elaboration of the convention;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of the intergovernmental ad hoc committee at Vienna from 18 to 29 January 1999 and to consider the possibility of convening a second meeting before the eighth session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, if this proves necessary to advance the process;

13. Decides to accept the recommendation of the Commission to elect Luigi Lauriola (Italy) as the Chairman of the intergovernmental ad hoc committee;

14. Requests the intergovernmental ad hoc committee, in carrying out its work pursuant to paragraph 10 above, to take into account the report of the intergovernmental group of experts, the report of the working group on the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, including its appendices, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1998/18, 1998/19 and 1998/20 of 28 July 1998;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary resources to convene, support and follow up the work of the intergovernmental ad hoc committee;

16. Invites donor countries to cooperate with developing countries to ensure their full participation in the work of the intergovernmental ad hoc committee;

17. Requests the intergovernmental ad hoc committee to submit a progress report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session and to hold a meeting during that session for at least three working days.

The informal preparatory meeting of the open-ended intergovernmental ad hoc committee on the elaboration of a comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime (Buenos Aires, 31 August-4 September) [A/AC.254/3] completed the first reading of the outline of options for contents of the convention by reviewing articles 14 to 30. During the reading, the following were discussed: mutual legal assistance; investigation of offences; transfer of proceedings; recognition of foreign judgements; protection of victims and witnesses; law enforcement cooperation; collection and sharing of information on organized crime; training and technical assistance; prevention; the role of the United Nations and other relevant organizations; relations with other conventions; dispute settlement; and the standard final clauses of the convention.

Mutual assistance

In March [E/CN.15/1998/7], the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters (Arlington, Virginia, United States, 23-26 February), convened in response to General Assembly resolution 52/88 [YUN 1997, p. 1145]. The Meeting complemented the 1996 Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition [ibid.]. The Expert Group suggested to the Commission a draft resolution, which the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption by the General Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/15 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Mutual assistance and international cooperation in criminal matters

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 53/112 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/616], adopted resolution 53/112 without vote [agenda item 101].

Mutual assistance and international cooperation in criminal matters

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind that the United Nations model treaties on international cooperation in criminal matters provide important tools for the development of international cooperation,

Convinced that existing arrangements governing international cooperation in criminal justice must be regularly reviewed and revised to ensure that the specific contemporary problems of fighting crime are effectively addressed,

Bearing in mind that developing countries and countries with economies in transition may lack the resources for developing and implementing treaties on mutual assistance in criminal matters,

Convinced that complementing and supplementing the United Nations model treaties will contribute to increased efficiency in combating criminality,

Recalling its resolution 45/117 of 14 December 1990, by which it adopted the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, annexed to that resolution,

Recalling also its resolution 52/88 of 12 December 1997,

Commending the work of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, held at Arlington, Virginia, United States of America, from 23 to 26 February 1998, to implement in part resolution 52/88 by proposing complementary provisions for the Model Treaty, elements for inclusion in model legislation on mutual assistance in criminal matters, and training and technical assistance for national officials engaged in that field,

Commending also the Government of the United States of America for hosting the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting, for its substantial contribution to the organization of the Meeting and for the support given by the National Institute of Justice of the United States Department of Justice through the programme of the United Nations On-line Crime and Justice Clearing House,

1. Welcomes the report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, held at Arlington, Virginia, United States of America, from 23 to 26 February 1998;

2. Decides that the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters should be complemented by the provisions set forth in annex I to the present resolution;

3. Encourages Member States, within the framework of national legal systems, to enact effective legislation on mutual assistance, and calls upon the international community to give all possible assistance in order to contribute to the achievement of that goal;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to elaborate, in consultation with Member States, for submission to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, model legislation on mutual assistance in criminal matters, in order to enhance effective cooperation between States, taking into account the elements recommended by the Intergovernmental Expert Group for inclusion in such model legislation, which are set forth in annex II to the present resolution;

5. Invites Member States to take into account the Model Treaty in negotiating treaties at the bilateral, regional or multilateral level, as appropriate;

6. Also invites Member States to consider, where applicable and within the framework of national legal systems, the following measures in the context of the application of treaties on mutual assistance in criminal matters or other arrangements for such mutual assistance:

(a) Establishing or designating a national central authority or authorities to process requests for assistance;

(b) Undertaking regular reviews of their treaties on mutual assistance in criminal matters or other arrangements and implementing legislation, as well as taking other necessary measures for the purpose of rendering such arrangements and legislation more efficient and effective in combating established and emerging forms of crime;

(c) Concluding asset-sharing arrangements as a means of enabling forfeited proceeds of crime to be used to strengthen the capacity of national criminal justice systems and contributing a part of such proceeds to programmes such as those aimed at enhancing national capacities for fighting crime in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition, paying due consideration to the rights of bona fide third parties;

(d) Making use of videoconferencing and other modern means of communication for, inter alia, the transmission of requests, consultation between central authorities, the taking of testimony and statements, and training;

7. Encourages Member States to promote, on a bilateral, regional or worldwide basis, measures to improve the skills of officials in order to strengthen mutual assistance mechanisms, such as specialized training and, whenever possible, secondment and exchanges of relevant personnel, and to consider the use of videoconferencing and other modern means of communication for training purposes;

8. Reiterates its invitation to Member States to provide to the Secretary-General copies of relevant laws and information on practices related to international cooperation in criminal matters and, in particular, to mutual assistance in criminal matters, as well as updated information on central authorities designated to deal with requests;

9. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To update and disseminate regularly the information mentioned in paragraph 8 above and, in particular, to prepare, for use by Member States, a directory of central authorities responsible for mutual legal assistance, drawing on the information already collected during the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting;

(b) To continue to provide advisory and technical cooperation services to Member States requesting assistance in drafting and implementing appropriate national legislation and in developing and implementing bilateral, subregional, regional or international treaties on mutual assistance in criminal matters, drawing on the expertise of Member States as appropriate;

(c) To provide, in cooperation with interested Member States and relevant intergovernmental organizations, training in mutual assistance law and practice for personnel in appropriate governmental agencies and for central authorities of requesting Member States in an effort to develop the necessary skills and to improve communication and cooperation aimed at enhancing the effectiveness of mutual assistance mechanisms;

10. Also requests the Secretary-General, in cooperation with interested Member States, relevant intergovernmental organizations and the institutes constituting the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to develop appropriate training materials for use in providing to requesting Member States the technical assistance referred to above;

11. Commends the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences of Siracusa, Italy, for its offer to organize and host up to two training seminars for mutual assistance officials, and invites interested Member States to provide voluntary contributions to offset the travel costs of officials from developing countries and from countries with economies in transition and to make substantive contributions to the seminars;

12. Urges Member States and funding agencies to assist the Secretary-General in implementing the present resolution through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Fund;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure the full implementation of the provisions of the present resolution.

ANNEX I

Complementary provisions for the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters

Article 1

1. In paragraph 3 (b), replace the words "Optional Protocol to" with the words "article 18 of".

Article 3

2. In the title, replace the word "competent" with the word "central".
3. Insert the word "central" before the word "authority".
4. Add the following footnote to the end of the article:
"Countries may wish to consider providing for direct communications between central authorities and for the central authorities to play an active role in ensuring the speedy execution of requests, controlling quality and setting priorities. Countries may also wish to agree that the central authorities are not the exclusive channel for assistance between the Parties and that the direct exchange of information should be encouraged to the extent permitted by domestic law or arrangements."

Article 4

5. In the footnote to paragraph 1, replace the last sentence with the following:
"Countries may wish, where feasible, to render assistance, even if the act on which the request is based is not an offence in the requested State (absence of dual criminality). Countries may also consider restricting the requirement of dual criminality to certain types of assistance, such as search and seizure."
6. In paragraph 1 (d) delete the words "that is subject to investigation or prosecution in the requested State or".
7. Add the following footnote to the end of paragraph 4:
"States should consult, in accordance with article 20, before assistance is refused or postponed."

Article 5

8. Add the following footnote to the end of paragraph 2:
"Countries may wish to provide that the request may be made by modern means of communication, including, in particularly urgent cases, verbal requests that are confirmed in writing forthwith."

Article 6

9. Add the following footnote to the end of the article:
"The requested State should secure such orders, including judicial orders, as may be necessary for the execution of the request. Countries may also wish to agree, in accordance with national legislation, to represent or act on behalf or for the benefit of the requesting State in legal proceedings necessary to secure such orders."

Article 8

10. Add the following words to the end of the footnote to the article:
", or restrict use of evidence only where the requested State makes an express request to that effect."
11. Add the following words to the beginning of the article:
"Unless otherwise agreed,".

Article H

12. Add the following footnote to the end of paragraph 2:
"Wherever possible and consistent with the fundamental principles of domestic law, the Parties should permit testimony, statements or other forms of assistance to be given via video link or other modern means of communication and should ensure that perjury committed under such circumstances is a criminal offence."

Article 12

13. In the English version of paragraph 1, replace the word "required" with the words "called upon".
14. Add the following footnote to the end of the article:

"Some countries may wish to provide that a witness who is testifying in the requesting State may not refuse to testify on the basis of a privilege applicable in the requested State."

New article 18

15. Insert as new article 18, entitled "Proceeds of crime", paragraphs 1 to 6 of the Optional Protocol to the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters concerning the proceeds of crime and delete the remaining text of the Protocol, including the footnotes.

16. Replace the word "Protocol" with the word "article" throughout the new article.

17. Add the following footnote to the end of the title of the new article:

"Assistance in forfeiting the proceeds of crime has emerged as an important instrument in international cooperation. Provisions similar to those outlined in the present article appear in many bilateral assistance treaties. Further details can be provided in bilateral arrangements. One matter that could be considered is the need for other provisions dealing with issues related to bank secrecy. Provision could be made for the equitable sharing of the proceeds of crime between the Contracting States or for consideration of the disposal of the proceeds on a case-by-case basis."

18. Add the following footnote to the end of paragraph 5:
"The Parties might consider widening the scope of the present article by the inclusion of references to victims' restitution and the recovery of fines imposed as a sentence in a criminal prosecution."

Articles 18-21

19. Renumber former article 18 as article 19 and renumber all subsequent articles accordingly.

ANNEX II

Elements recommended for inclusion in model legislation on mutual assistance in criminal matters

A. General recommendation

1. Model legislation on mutual assistance in criminal matters should reflect in statutory terms the general provisions of the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, together with the recommendations contained in annex I above. To the extent possible, it should provide different options for States with different legal systems. Where relevant, it should take into account provisions of the model bill on mutual assistance in criminal matters developed in 1998 by the United Nations International Drug Control Programme.

B. Scope

2. The model legislation should provide a full range of flexible options for assuming mutual assistance obligations. When there is a treaty on mutual assistance in criminal matters, the terms of that treaty should govern the relationship. The legislation should also permit mutual assistance to be provided without a treaty, with or without reciprocity.

C. Jurisdiction

3. The model legislation could provide for jurisdiction, inter alia:

(a) To issue judicial orders necessary for executing mutual assistance requests;

(b) To authorize the requested State to act on behalf or for the benefit of, or to represent the interests of, the requesting State in legal proceedings necessary for executing mutual assistance requests;

(c) To punish perjury committed during mutual assistance, in particular perjury committed during videoconferencing.

D. Procedure

4. The model legislation should include options for procedures dealing with both incoming and outgoing requests for assistance in criminal matters. Such procedures should be in conformity, wherever applicable, with international and regional human rights instruments. Where no treaty provision is applicable, the legislation could also contain provisions on specific forms of mutual assistance, including testimony and other forms of cooperation carried out via video link, cooperation in asset seizure and forfeiture and the temporary transfer of witnesses in custody.

5. The model legislation could provide for the establishment of a central authority or authorities for the receipt and transmission of requests and the provision of advice and assistance to relevant authorities. The legislation could also specify the extent of the central authority's powers.

E. Communications

6. Where no treaty provision is applicable, the legislation should set forth the means of communicating between the requesting State and the requested State, allowing for the use of the most modern forms of communication.

Trafficking in human beings

During discussions on the report of the meeting of the inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental working group of experts on the elaboration of a possible convention against organized crime [E/CN.15/1998/5] (see above) at the April meeting of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the question of including specific offences in additional protocols was discussed. The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption draft resolutions on action to combat illegal trafficking in migrants and international trafficking in women and children.

Trafficking in migrants

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/19 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action against illegal trafficking in migrants, including by sea

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants are normally carried out by organizations as part of their transnational criminal operations and ordinarily take place under inhuman conditions which result in a great number of accidents and casualties,

Stressing the need to combat all criminal practices connected with illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, having due regard to universally recognized human rights,

Stressing also that it is important that the States concerned establish bilateral, regional and multilateral coordinating mechanisms to fight activities related to illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/62 of 12 December 1996, in which the Assembly, inter alia, requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider giving attention to the question of the smuggling of aliens,

Recalling also its resolutions 1994/14 of 25 July 1994 and 1995/10 of 24 July 1995,

Taking note of the report of the meeting of the inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts on the elaboration of a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, held at Warsaw from 2 to 6 February 1998, and recalling the text of the draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime, submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session by the Government of Poland,

Taking note also of the existing proposals for a convention and a protocol on the subject of illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea, submitted to it by the Governments of Austria and Italy,

Taking note further of the proposal considered by the group of experts that the draft of an international convention against organized transnational crime could consist of a main convention and additional protocols covering specific offences,

Stressing the importance for any legal instruments against illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea, of being consistent legally and substantively with the draft of an international convention against transnational organized crime,

Emphasizing that women and children are particularly vulnerable to becoming victims of the crime of illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants,

1. Recognizes the importance of elaborating an efficient legal instrument combating all aspects of transnational organized crime, for example, illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea, having due regard to universally recognized human rights;

2. Decides that the ad hoc committee on the elaboration of a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime, to be established by the General Assembly, should hold discussions on the elaboration of an international instrument against illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by sea, taking into account the existing proposals for legal instruments against illegal trafficking in and transporting of migrants, including by

Trafficking in women and children

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/20 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action to combat international trafficking in women and children

The Economic and Social Council,

Gravely concerned by the significant and continuing increase in the activities of transnational criminal organizations and others that profit from international trafficking in women and children,

Declaring that the attention and resources of law enforcement authorities, in particular in the countries of destination for the women and children being trafficked, must be directed towards preventing and punishing the activities of all those involved in organizing and facilitating such international trafficking, including criminal groups, individual traffickers, employers and consumers, who often force women and children into forms of debt bondage, servitude or sexual exploitation, involving criminal activities, in order to pay for their passage,

Recognizing that organized international criminal groups are becoming increasingly dangerous and active in international trafficking in women and children, without regard to dangerous and inhumane conditions and in flagrant violation of domestic laws and international standards,

Taking note of the report of the meeting of the inter-sessional open-ended intergovernmental group of experts on the elaboration of a preliminary draft of a possible comprehensive international convention against organized transnational crime, held at Warsaw from 2 to 6 February 1998, and recalling the text of the draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime, submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-first session by the Government of Poland,

Recalling its resolution 1996/26 of 24 July 1996, on measures to prevent illicit international trafficking in children and to establish penalties appropriate to such offences,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 52/86 of 12 December 1997, on crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women,

Convinced of the need for all States to protect fully the universally recognized human rights of women and children, regardless of their legal status, and to provide humane treatment, in particular with regard to assistance, and protection,

Recognizing that international trafficking in women and children has high social and economic costs, often contributing to official corruption and burdening law enforcement agencies in all States where women and children subjected to such trafficking depart, transit or are found,

Reaffirming respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States, including their right to control immigration flows,

Concerned that trafficking in women and children undermines public confidence in laws, policies and procedures relating to immigration and to ensuring the protection of genuine refugees,

Commending those States that have enacted effective domestic legislation permitting seizure and forfeiture of property, both real and personal, that is knowingly used in organized criminal activities that involve trafficking in women and children, as well as all property used in or derived from such trafficking,

Encouraging Member States that have not yet done so to enact domestic criminal legislation to combat international trafficking in women and children,

Concerned that, in the absence of a universal instrument on these matters, women and children will not be sufficiently protected against this type of crime, which is increasingly transcending national borders,

Declaring that effective action to combat international trafficking in women and children requires a comprehensive approach in the countries of origin, transit and destination that includes preventive measures to educate potential victims and their families as well as to frustrate traffickers, enforcement measures against traffickers and all those who assist them and protective measures to aid victims of trafficking, including protection for those victims who would assist in the prosecution of the traffickers,

1. Decides that the ad hoc committee on the elaboration of a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime, to be established by the General Assembly, should hold discussions on the elaboration, as appropriate, of an international instrument addressing trafficking in women and children;

2. Stresses the relevance of the following issues in connection with trafficking in women and children:

(a) The need for States to take effective and expeditious measures, in particular the enactment or amendment, if necessary, of domestic legislation, to provide for appropriate penalties, such as substantial imprisonment, fines and forfeiture, in order to combat all aspects of organized criminal activities related to trafficking at the international level in women and children;

(b) The importance for States of sharing information, coordinating law enforcement activities and otherwise cooperating, if their laws permit, in order to locate and arrest those who organize trafficking in women and children, as well as those who exploit those trafficked;

(c) The need for States to provide specialized training for law enforcement, immigration and other officers concerned, as well as to initiate public information campaigns to make both potential victims and the general public aware of the terrible exploitation and possible loss of life inherent in trafficking in women and children;

(d) The need for countries of origin, transit and destination to observe fully international obligations and national laws, including those concerning the humane treatment and strict observance of all human rights of women and children, regardless of whether they were trafficked voluntarily or involuntarily;

(e) The goal of ensuring that international efforts to prevent international trafficking in women and children do not inhibit immigration or freedom of travel consistent with laws or undercut the protection provided to refugees by international law;

(f) The need for strengthened international co-operation and technical assistance for the benefit of developing countries.

Corruption and bribery

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/87 [YUN 1997, p. 1153], the Secretary-General submitted a March report [E/CN.15/1998/3] to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, which contained an analysis of information provided by Member States and presented an overview of activities against corruption and bribery undertaken by the Centre for International Crime Prevention and by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations.

The Secretary-General concluded that corruption was a complex phenomenon that required an integrated approach composed of different elements, such as promotion of good governance and democracy, economic reform, awakening of civil society, and strengthened and coordinated international cooperation. He noted that action taken within the United Nations and other international bodies had prompted legislative action by several countries and the issue of corruption and bribery was increasingly considered a top priority by Member States. New initiatives suggested for the Centre for International Crime Prevention included: collection and analysis of national anti-corruption strategies in order to elaborate compilations of best practices for use in developing training materials; elaboration of comparative studies to assist with the formulation and implementation of joint strategies to prevent and control corruption; development of model courses for universities and business schools; organization of public awareness campaigns; and assistance in the elaboration of codes of conduct for private enterprises. The report also contained specific recommendations for consideration by the Commission regarding further work in the area of action against corruption.

In September [A/53/384], the Secretary-General made that report and previous reports on action against corruption and bribery available to the General Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/16 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Action against corruption

The Economic and Social Council,

Concerned about the seriousness of problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Convinced that existing arrangements for combating corruption at the national and international levels must be periodically reviewed and modernized to ensure that the specific contemporary problems of fighting all forms of corruption are being effectively addressed at all times,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/59 of 12 December 1996,

Recalling also its resolution 1995/14 of 24 July 1995,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 52/87 of 12 December 1997, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to invite each Member State to provide a report on steps taken to implement the provisions of the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on action against corruption and bribery,

Recalling the manual prepared by the Secretariat on practical measures against corruption,

Aware of recent multilateral initiatives to combat corruption, including the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials, the Inter-American Convention against Corruption, adopted by the Organization of American States on 29 March 1996, the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions, adopted by the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development on 21 November 1997, the Convention on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests of 26 July 1995 and the Protocols of 27 September 1996 and 19 June 1997 to that Convention, drawn up by the Council of the European Union on the basis of article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, the Convention on the fight against corruption involving officials of the European Communities or officials of member States of the European Union, drawn up by the Council of the European Union on 26 May 1997, the ongoing work of the Council of Europe to elaborate a criminal law convention against corruption, the programmes of the Council of Europe targeting that form of criminality and recommendation 32 of the recommendations elaborated and endorsed by the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight, which met at Lyon, France, from 27 to 29 June 1996, which are contained in annex I to Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/22 of 21 July 1997,

Convinced that updating the manual on practical measures against corruption by incorporating into the manual a section describing recent developments will contribute to increased efficiency in combating that form of criminality,

Determined to ensure that United Nations materials to assist States in their efforts to combat corruption remain as useful and as up to date as possible,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in his efforts to update the manual prepared by the Secretariat on practical measures against corruption, to include in the text a section describing recent developments in combating corruption, in particular the practical impact of recent multilateral initiatives in this area, such as the above-described activities of the United Nations, the Organization of American States, the Organisation for Eco-conomic Cooperation and Development, the European Union, the Council of Europe and the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime of the Political Group of Eight;

2. Decides to convene an open-ended meeting of governmental experts, using extrabudgetary resources offered by the Government of France for that purpose, to explore means of ensuring that the initiatives described in paragraph 1 above are effective and that an appropriate international strategy against corruption, including the proceeds thereof, is formulated in consultation with other intergovernmental organizations active in this area;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including on the work of the governmental experts, to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/607], adopted resolution 53/176 without vote [agenda item 92 (a)].

Action against corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3514(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which it, inter alia, condemned all corrupt practices, including bribery, in international commercial transactions, reaffirmed the right of any State to adopt legislation and to investigate and take appropriate legal action, in accordance with its national laws and regulations, against such corrupt practices, and called upon all Governments to cooperate to prevent corrupt practices, including bribery,

Concerned about the seriousness of problems posed by corruption, which may endanger the stability and security of societies, undermine the values of democracy and morality and jeopardize social, economic and political development,

Disturbed by the bribery of public officials by individuals and enterprises of other States in relation to international commercial transactions,

Recalling the further work carried out by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on elaborating the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials and a code of conduct on transnational corporations, consideration of which helped call attention to and raise international awareness of the adverse consequences of corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions,

Taking note of the Rules of Conduct to Combat Extortion and Bribery in International Business Transactions of the International Chamber of Commerce, Recalling its resolution 51/191 of 16 December 1996, by which it adopted the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, and its resolution 52/87 of 12 December 1997, by which it called for further measures to implement the Declaration,

1. Welcomes recent multilateral initiatives to combat corruption including, inter alia, the Inter-American Convention against Corruption, adopted by the Organization of American States, the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions, adopted by the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development, the Dakar Declaration on the Prevention and Control of Organized Transnational Crime and Corruption, the Manila Declaration on the Prevention and Control of Transnational Crime, and the Convention on the fight against corruption involving officials of the European Communities or officials of member States of the European Union;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Promotion and maintenance of the rule of law: action against corruption and bribery";

3. Commends the work of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Secretariat in combating corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions, including the convening of an open-ended meeting of governmental experts;

4. Calls upon Member States to take all possible measures to further the implementation of the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions and relevant international declarations and to ratify, where appropriate, existing instruments against corruption;

5. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other competent bodies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates and agreed work programmes, to assist Member States, at their request, in implementing national programmes to strengthen accountability and transparency and in implementing relevant conventions, declarations and instruments to combat corruption and bribery in international commercial transactions, and, in that context, welcomes the valuable work done by the United Nations Development Programme in the field of governance;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in close consultation with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on measures taken by Member States and competent international and regional organizations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector to implement the present resolution.

UN standards and norms

In a February report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice [E/CN.15/1998/8], the Secretary-General highlighted recent developments in the promotion of their use and application, focusing on ways to improve current procedures, particularly the information-gathering process. In accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/30 [YUN 1997, p. 1158], the report also provided information on the strengthening of system-wide coordination in the field of juvenile justice and, in accordance with Council resolution 1997/31 [ibid., p. 1164], gave an overview of recent initiatives to further the use and application of the 1985 Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 40/34 [YUN 1985, p. 742].

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Commission a report on the use and application of UN standards and norms in juvenile justice [E/CN.15/1998/8/Add.1], containing information from 51 Governments on the use and application of the 1985 United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 40/33 [YUN 1985, p. 746], the 1990 United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines), adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/112 [YUN 1990, p. 738] and the 1990 United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty, adopted by the Assembly in resolution 45/113 [ibid., p. 743], based on a questionnaire on the subject. The summary and analysis of the results would assist countries in assessing the progress made in the use and application of such instruments and direct the Commission in its task of reviewing their implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/21 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Reaffirming the importance of United Nations standards, norms and guidelines in crime prevention and criminal justice and the need to maintain a balance between the current main priority issue of combating transnational organized crime and the other priority issues of the Programme,

I

Use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice

Recalling its resolution 1993/34 of 27 July 1993, in section III of which it requested the Secretary-General to commence without delay a process of information-gathering to be undertaken by means of surveys,

Recalling also its resolution 1996/16 of 23 July 1996, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue to promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice,

1. Recommends that the relevant national authorities promote the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the information-gathering and to submit to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth session a report on the use and application of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules), the Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors and the Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, and to prepare updated reports where at least thirty additional States have replied in respect of a standard or norm on which a report has already been submitted;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to prepare survey instruments on the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security and the International Code of Conduct for Public Officials;

4. Invites States to provide resources to the Secretariat with a view to making the information provided on the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice accessible through the United Nations Crime and Justice Information Network via the World Wide Web;

5. Invites States and research institutes to make use of the information gathered regarding the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his budget proposals on the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme the resources appropriate for the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat, in order to enable the Centre to fulfil its mandates;

II

Administration of juvenile justice

Recalling its resolution 1997/30 of 21 July 1997, on the administration of juvenile justice, and the Guidelines for Action on Children in the Criminal Justice System, annexed to that resolution,

Welcoming the fact that the Committee on the Rights of the Child places considerable emphasis on juvenile justice during the review of State party reports, and noting that its concluding observations often include recommendations to seek technical assistance in juvenile justice from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat and the United Nations Children's Fund, in accordance with article 45 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Emphasizing the important preventive character of the effective use and application of existing United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice,

Concerned about the situation of children in conflict with the law and their treatment by the criminal justice system in a number of States,

Concerned also about the fact that, in the view of the Committee on the Rights of the Child, juvenile justice reform is needed in almost all States whose country reports have been considered,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, in which the Secretary-General highlighted difficulties and deficiencies in the use and application of United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice by Member States;

2. Welcomes the fact that the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat has enhanced its cooperation with other United Nations entities and with other partners involved in assisting Member States in setting up separate juvenile justice systems or in improving existing juvenile justice systems by adapting them to the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice;

3. Also welcomes the increased number of technical assistance projects in the field of juvenile justice, which reflects an increased awareness on the part of Member States of the importance of juvenile justice reform in establishing and maintaining stable societies and the rule of law;

4. Further welcomes the establishment of a coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice to coordinate activities in the field of juvenile justice, subject to the conditions set out in Economic and Social Council resolution 1997/30, and calls on the partners involved to increase their cooperation, share information and pool their capacities and interests in order to increase the effectiveness of programme implementation;

5. Urges States to include, where necessary, provisions for juvenile justice in their national development plans, calls upon States to include the administration of juvenile justice in their funding policies for development cooperation, and invites them to respond favourably to requests from other States that are seeking assistance from the Centre for International Crime Prevention, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights or the United Nations Children's Fund in developing and improving juvenile justice systems;

6. Urges States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child to intensify their efforts to ensure full implementation of their obligations under the Convention and to pursue the goals set forth in the Convention with regard to the treatment of children in the administration of juvenile justice, and urges States to use and apply the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice and related instruments;

7. Reaffirms that juvenile justice remains a high priority in the work of the Centre for International Crime Prevention, in particular as juveniles, both those in conflict with the law and those in difficult circumstances who may be potential future criminals, are easy prey for criminal organizations closely linked with activities of transnational organized crime;

8. Requests the Centre to continue providing technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice, and calls on Member States to provide the necessary resources;

9. Underlines the need for mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes relating to children in the criminal justice system;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the administration of juvenile justice, as well as on the activities of the coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice, to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session;

Victims of crime and abuse of power

Recognizing the importance of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, which was adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/34 of 29 November 1985 and annexed thereto, and is considered a landmark in the treatment of victims,

Deeply concerned about the continuing victimization by crime, especially organized crime, violence, terrorism and abuses of power, of vulnerable groups and individuals in particular, which exacts a vast human cost and impairs the quality of life in many parts of the world,

Recalling the recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power in the International Setting, held at Vienna from 18 to 22 December 1995, as well as the expert group meetings on the same subject held at Tulsa, United States of America, from 10 to 12 August 1996, at The Hague, Netherlands, on 6 and 7 March 1997 and in Washington, D.C., on 26 and 27 February 1998, which highlighted the needs of victims of crime and abuse of power and the necessity of concerted action to protect and assist such victims,

Underlining the fact that the subject of victims of crime and abuse of power will be one of the four main topics of the Tenth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, to be held at Vienna in April 2000,

1. Welcomes the Guide for Policy Makers on the Implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the Handbook on Justice for Victims on the use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;

2. Notes the consideration that the Preparatory Committee on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court has given to provisions related to victims, in particular with regard to the proposed creation of a victims and witnesses unit;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to translate the Guide and the Handbook into all other official languages of the United Nations and to disseminate them widely, using also electronic means of dissemination;

4. Recommends the continued development of a database on practical national experiences, on relevant case law and legislation and on the use and application of the Declaration, taking into account different systems and traditions, including indigenous and customary justice practices, and welcomes the initiative of the Government of the Netherlands to establish such a database and to maintain it for an initial duration of three years;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To seek the views of Member States regarding the desirability and feasibility of establishing an international fund for victims of crime and abuse of power in order to support, inter alia, the following:

- (i) Technical assistance to develop and/or strengthen victim support services and organizations;
- (ii) Specific projects and activities;

- (iii) Awareness campaigns on victim rights and crime prevention;
- (iv) Eligible victim claims resulting from international and transnational crime, where national avenues of recourse and/or redress are unavailable or insufficient;

(b) To convene a working group on this matter, consisting of Member States that express an interest in such a fund, and welcomes the offer of the Government of the Netherlands to host the working group;

6. Invites the Secretary-General, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in victim assistance and redress, using a multi-partner approach where appropriate, to incorporate victim assistance modules in technical cooperation projects and to assist Member States, on request, in applying the Guide and the Handbook, through training courses, seminars, study tours, fellowships and advisory services, in order to help resolve problems in the implementation of the Declaration, and welcomes the initiative of the Government of the United States of America to establish a training programme to that end;

7. Invites the Secretary-General, with the assistance of interested States and relevant organizations, to make use of the database referred to in paragraph 4 above in order to provide guidelines for drafting appropriate laws on victims and, at the request of Member States, to assist in the elaboration of new legislation;

8. Invites the Secretary-General, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations:

(a) To promote, where necessary, demonstration or pilot projects for the establishment and the further development of victim services, and other operational activities;

(b) To develop measures, where necessary, for special victim groups, such as victims of terrorism, victims and witnesses of organized crime, victims of hate or bias crimes, female and child victims of violence and sexual abuse and disabled victims;

9. Invites the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the establishment of a coordination panel or other mechanism to ensure concerted action, with an appropriate division of responsibilities, among United Nations entities and other entities concerned in order to promote the implementation of the Declaration;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the plan of action for the implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, annexed to the present resolution, with a view to reporting on it to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its eighth session;

11. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission at its eighth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Plan of action for the implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power

I

Capacity-building

1. The Secretary-General, Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations active in victim assistance and redress are requested further to incorporate victim assistance modules in technical cooperation projects and to assist interested Member States in applying the Guide for Policy Makers on the Implementation of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power and the Handbook on Justice for Victims on the use and application of the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, through training courses, seminars, study tours, fellowships and advisory services, in order to help to resolve problems in the implementation of the Declaration.

2. The Secretary-General is requested to develop, in collaboration with relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, criteria for the selection of technical cooperation projects for the establishment or the further development of victim services.

3. Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network are invited to assist the Secretary-General in updating, with an appropriate interval, the Guide and the Handbook, giving special attention to practical national experiences, legislative information and case law concerning special victim groups, such as victims and witnesses of organized crime, terrorism, economic and environmental crime or bias or hate crimes and victims of violence against women and children.

4. The Secretary-General, together with intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, is requested to assist interested Member States in the development of reparative and restorative policies for victims of violations of human rights and humanitarian law, as part of national reconstruction and reconciliation, and in the promotion of justice and the rule of law.

II

Information-gathering, information exchange and research

5. The Secretary-General, in cooperation with interested Member States and non-governmental organizations, is requested to support the international database on practical national and regional experiences in providing technical assistance in this field and on bibliographic and legislative information, including case law relevant to this field.

6. Member States and non-governmental organizations are invited to provide information for the database on projects, new programmes, case law and legislation and other relevant guidelines that have been found to be effective and that could serve as models for such developments elsewhere and to help in identifying experts who could assist Member States, upon request, in implementing such projects, programmes and legislation.

7. Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are invited to give consideration to the further development and use of methods of gathering data on victimization, such as standardized victimization surveys, including their extension to cover groups of victims such as victims and witnesses of organized crime, terrorism, economic and environmental crime or bias or hate crimes and victims of violence against women, children and migrants.

8. Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations are invited to promote the evaluation of the efficacy of different forms of providing assistance to victims, the evaluation of the extent to which the criminal justice process takes into consideration the legitimate needs and concerns of victims and the evaluation of different forms of ensuring compensation and restitution to victims.

III

Prevention of victimization

9. The Secretary-General, together with cooperating institutes and organizations, is invited to study ways in which to provide technical assistance to Member States, upon request, in responding to cases of large-scale victimization, terrorism and man-made catastrophes that are the result of criminal negligence, ensuring that the necessary emergency assistance is provided, using, where necessary, interdisciplinary and international crisis response teams to help in dealing with the situation and in responding to the needs and rights of the victims.

10. Member States are encouraged to consider the introduction, where necessary, and the strengthening of the work of ombudsmen and civilian review bodies or other complaint mechanisms and means of preventing and investigating possible abuse of power.

11. Member States and non-governmental organizations are encouraged to conduct public information and education campaigns designed to prevent and curtail victimization and re-victimization. Such campaigns should include both general campaigns directed at broad sectors of the population and special campaigns targeting selected groups known to be at high risk of such victimization and re-victimization.

12. Member States, in close cooperation with representatives of the mass media, are encouraged to elaborate and implement effectively guidelines for the media aimed at protecting victims and curtailing re-victimization.

IV

Action at the regional and international levels

13. The Secretary-General, in cooperation with Member States and the regional commissions, is requested to explore the possibility of developing regional mechanisms for monitoring victimization and providing recourse and/or redress for victims.

14. The Secretary-General, in cooperation with the international professional and academic community, is requested to help Member States in identifying lacunae in international criminal law and humanitarian and human rights law concerning the protection and rights of victims and witnesses, with a view to addressing those lacunae.

V

Coordination of relevant initiatives

15. The Secretary-General is requested to assist Member States in strengthening coordination arrangements and procedures to foster joint planning and implementation of victim-related activities.

16. The Secretary-General is requested to ensure concerted action, with an appropriate division of responsibilities, among United Nations entities and other entities concerned with promoting the implementation of the Declaration.

17. The Secretary-General is requested to assist Member States, upon request, in the elaboration of joint strategies and the mobilization of support for providing assistance to victims, including wider citizen participation and the promotion of the principles of restorative justice.

Other crime prevention and criminal justice issues

Measures to regulate firearms

In a report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/CN.15/1998/4], the Secretary-General addressed measures taken to regulate firearms, including publication of a UN international study on firearm regulation and the results of four regional workshops on the issue, which were convened between September 1997 and January 1998 in Africa, the Americas, Asia and Europe. The main issues discussed at the workshops included: the purposes of owning firearms; conditions for ownership or possession of firearms; procedures for issuing firearm licences; the procedure for introducing firearm regulations; conditions for firearm use; handling, storage and carrying of firearms; missing, illegal or stolen firearms; categories of firearm violations; recovering and removing firearms; firearm safety; and definition of firearms. The report also reviewed international cooperation in combating illicit trafficking in firearms, which was considered a major problem requiring immediate action in all four regions in which the workshops were held. The report concluded that the United Nations International Study on Firearm Regulation [Sales No. E.98.IV.2] made possible the successful compilation and dissemination of extensive information on the subject. Using the draft of the study as a basis for considering measures to regulate firearms, the regional workshops developed a common understanding of the national legislative issues and transnational aspects of illicit trafficking in firearms. Since ammunition was a part of explosives, some participants in the workshops suggested that the study should also cover the question of criminal use and trafficking of explosives and their components and parts in the context of organized transnational crime.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/18 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Measures to regulate firearms for the purpose of combating illicit trafficking in firearms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 9 of 7 May 1995, on firearms regulation for purposes of crime prevention and public safety, adopted by the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995,

Recalling also section IV.A of its resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995 and its resolutions 1996/28 of 24 July 1996 and 1997/28 of 21 July 1997,

Bearing in mind that freedom from the fear of crime is fundamental to international cooperation and to the sustainable development of States and that international illicit trafficking in and criminal misuse of firearms have a harmful effect on the security of each State and endanger the well-being of peoples and their social and economic development,

Aware of the need for improved cooperation and exchange of data and other information for law enforcement purposes as well as for cooperative action to combat illicit trafficking in firearms,

Mindful that the suppression and prevention of international illicit trafficking in firearms can best be accomplished by the adoption of effective methods of identifying and tracing firearms and by the establishment of an import and export and in-transit licensing or similar authorization regime for the international transfer of firearms,

Aware of the importance of bilateral and multilateral instruments and arrangements in the furtherance of international cooperation, including guidelines and model regulations,

Taking note with appreciation of the work of regional organizations such as the Organization of American States, which adopted the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials at its twenty-fourth special session, held in Washington, D.C., on 13 and 14 November 1997, the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission of the Organization of American States, which adopted the Model Regulations for the Control of the International Movement of Firearms, Their Parts and Components, and Ammunition at its twenty-second regular session, held at Lima from 4 to 6 November 1997, and the Council of the European Communities, which adopted the directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons on 18 June 1991,

Taking note of the relevant recommendations contained in the report of the Panel of Governmental Experts on Small Arms, in particular those related to achieving effective control of firearms in the peace-building process in order to prevent their entry into the illicit market,

Taking note also of the results of the United Nations International Study on Firearm Regulation,

Recognizing that States will benefit from sharing technical expertise and training that will enhance the capability of law enforcement and criminal justice officials to develop crime prevention policies and solutions to prevent and combat illicit trafficking in and criminal misuse of firearms,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/85 of 12 December 1997,

1. Welcomes the results of the United Nations International Study on Firearm Regulation, and expresses its appreciation to the Member States that participated in that initiative;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Australia, Canada and Japan, to intergovernmental organizations and to institutes of the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network for contributing financially or in kind to the development and implementation of the Study;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Government of Slovenia for acting as host to the regional workshop on firearm regulation in Europe, held at Ljubljana from 22 to 26 September 1997, to the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania for acting as host to the regional workshop on firearm regulation in Africa, held at Arusha from 3 to 7 November 1997, to the Government of Brazil for acting as host to the regional workshop on firearm regulation in the Americas, held at Sao Paulo from 8 to 12 December 1997, and to the Government of India for acting as host to the regional workshop on firearm regulation in Asia, held at New Delhi from 27 to 31 January 1998;

4. Recommends that States, in the light of the above-mentioned considerations, work towards the elaboration of an international instrument to combat the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition within the context of a United Nations convention against transnational organized crime;

5. Invites States, when discussing the elaboration of the international instrument referred to in paragraph 4 above, to take into account, as appropriate, the views of interested non-governmental organizations and other interested parties;

6. Recommends that States, in discussing the elaboration of the international instrument, take into account, where relevant and appropriate, the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials, as well as other existing international instruments and ongoing initiatives;

7. Decides that the ad hoc committee on the elaboration of a comprehensive international convention against transnational organized crime, to be established by the General Assembly, should hold discussions on the elaboration of an international instrument to combat the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in firearms, their parts and components and ammunition, including, inter alia, effective methods of identifying and tracing firearms, as well as on the establishment or maintenance of an import and export and in-transit licensing or similar authorization regime for the international commercial transfer of firearms, their parts and components and ammunition to prevent their diversion for criminal misuse;

8. Invites the International Criminal Police Organization and other intergovernmental organizations to provide the Secretary-General with views and proposals regarding their possible contributions towards the development and implementation of technical cooperation to strengthen the ability of law enforcement officials to combat illicit trafficking in and criminal misuse of firearms, and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its ninth session.

Explosives

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/17 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Regulation of explosives for the purpose of crime prevention and public health and safety

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 9 of 7 May 1995 adopted by the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Cairo from 29 April to 8 May 1995,

Recalling also section IV.A of its resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995 and its resolutions 1996/28 of 24 July 1996 and 1997/28 of 21 July 1997,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 52/38 J of 9 December 1997, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to initiate a study on the problems of ammunition and explosives in all their aspects, in cooperation with appropriate international and regional organizations where necessary,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 51/60 of 12 December 1996 and the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security annexed to that resolution,

Bearing in mind also Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 9(XXXVI) of 7 April 1993, on the relationship between the illicit traffic in arms and explosives and illicit drug trafficking, in which the Commission recommended that States should consider establishing or improving appropriate controls on transfers of explosives, munitions and armaments,

Taking note with appreciation of the Inter-American Convention against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials, adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States at its twenty-fourth special session, held in Washington, D.C., on 13 and 14 November 1997,

Deeply concerned that effective action against manifestations of transnational organized crime is hampered by the easy access of criminals and organized criminal groups to firearms, munitions, explosives and their components and parts,

Concerned that the rapid globalization of crime will have a negative effect on the continued capacity of Governments to assess and to counteract effectively threats to public security and will weaken international efforts aimed at enhancing cooperation among police, intelligence, customs and border-control agencies,

Noting the interest shown by Member States in receiving United Nations technical assistance in the area of prevention and control of illicit trafficking in and use of firearms, explosives and their components and parts,

Recognizing that, with the increasing dimensions and scale of international transport and the growing sophistication of transnational illicit trafficking in explosives, States that have not already done so may consider reviewing their legislation and administrative regulations concerning explosives and their components and parts to make those instruments more effective in combating that crime,

Determined, therefore, to initiate measures to promote international cooperation for the prevention of the criminal misuse of and illicit trafficking in explosives and their components and parts,

1. Decides, for purposes of crime prevention and public safety, that a study should be initiated on the illicit manufacturing of and trafficking in explosives by criminals and on the abuse and misuse of explosives for criminal purposes;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, as early as possible, in cooperation with relevant international and regional organizations where necessary, an action plan for collecting, reviewing and exchanging statistics, other information and policy proposals that may deal with, inter alia, the following issues:

(a) Criminal incidents in which explosive substances were involved, including the number of such incidents, the number of victims involved, the nature and extent of harm caused, the extent of damage to property and the type of explosives used;

(b) Diversion of explosives for criminal use;

(c) Status of national legislation and regulations on explosives in individual countries;

(d) Relevant initiatives for the regulation of explosives at the international and regional levels;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of convening a meeting of a group of experts to consider the question of the preparation of the action plan;

4. Invites the International Criminal Police Organization to provide the Secretary-General with its views, suggestions and expertise regarding the development and implementation of the action plan with a view to making it an effective instrument for combating the criminal misuse of and illicit trafficking in explosives.

Status of foreign citizens in criminal proceedings

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/22 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

Status of foreign citizens in criminal proceedings

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted and proclaimed by the General Assembly by its resolution 217 A (III) of 10 December 1948,

Bearing in mind the relevant international legal instruments in the field of human rights,

Bearing in mind also the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the First United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Geneva from 22 August to 3 September 1955, and approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 663 C (XXIV) of 31 July 1957, and the procedures for the effective implementation of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, approved by the Council in its resolution 1984/47 of 25 May 1984 and set out in the annex thereto,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 49/159 of 23 December 1994, in which the Assembly approved the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime adopted by the World Ministerial Conference on Organized Transnational Crime, held at Naples, Italy, from 21 to 23 November 1994, Conscious of the need to respect human dignity and the recognized rights of persons undergoing criminal proceedings as set forth in the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Urges Member States that have not yet done so to consider adopting the following measures:

(a) Carefully examine whether foreign citizens under criminal prosecution are guaranteed universally recognized rights with regard to criminal prosecution at all stages of proceedings;

(b) Ensure that individuals are not subjected to more severe custodial penalties or inferior prison conditions in a State solely because they are not nationals of that State;

(c) Undertake the necessary arrangements to ensure that any foreign citizen subject to criminal proceedings whose native language is not that of the State conducting the proceedings against him or her and who, for that reason, is unable to understand the nature of such proceedings has access throughout his or her trial to the services of a suitable interpreter in his or her native language, to the extent possible;

(d) Whenever permitted by its internal law or practice, make available to foreign citizens as well as to nationals, provided that they fulfil the relevant legal requirements, alternative penal sentences or administrative penalties provided for under the legislation of the State conducting proceedings;

(e) Intensify efforts to implement applicable international instruments, such as the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, concerning, inter alia, notification to consular authorities of the detention of their citizens.

Prison conditions

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice [E/1998/30 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/23 without vote [agenda item 14 (c)].

International cooperation aimed at the reduction of prison overcrowding and the promotion of alternative sentencing

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned by the serious problem confronting many Member States as a result of prison overcrowding,

Convinced that conditions in overcrowded prisons may affect the human rights of prisoners,

Mindful of the fact that the physical and social conditions associated with prison overcrowding may result in outbreaks of violence in prisons, a development that could pose a grave threat to law and order,

Recalling the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules), and convinced of the necessity of their further implementation,

Recalling also the resolutions on the conditions of prisoners adopted by United Nations congresses on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, in particular resolution 16 on reduction of the prison population, alternatives to imprisonment and social integration of offenders and resolution 17 on the human rights of prisoners, both adopted on 6 September 1985 by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Noting that the International Conference on Community Service Orders in Africa, held at Kadoma, Zimbabwe, from 24 to 28 November 1997, adopted the Kadoma Declaration on Community Service, contained in annex I to the present resolution,

Taking note of the recommendations of the seminar entitled "Criminal justice: the challenge of prison overcrowding", held jointly by the Latin American Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the European Commission at San Jose, Costa Rica, from 3 to 7 February 1997, contained in annex II to the present resolution,

Mindful that many Member States lack the necessary resources to resolve the problem of prison overcrowding, and conscious that the inadequate facilities and cell accommodations in prisons are a product of the difficult socio-economic conditions prevailing in developing countries and in countries with economies in transition,

Noting that, in an attempt to reduce prison overcrowding, some Member States have been trying to find a solution by granting amnesties or pardons or by building new prisons,

Recognizing the need for Member States to establish economic and technical cooperation for the purpose of improving prison conditions and allocating resources to that end,

Considering that prison overcrowding causes a variety of problems, including difficulties for overworked staff,

Taking into account the limited effectiveness of imprisonment, especially for prisoners serving short sentences, and the cost of imprisonment to society as a whole,

Considering the growing interest in many Member States in measures to replace custodial sentences, especially taking into account the principles of human rights,

Considering also that community service and other non-custodial measures are innovative alternatives to imprisonment and that there have been promising developments in this area,

Considering further that compensation for damage done is an important element of non-custodial sentences,

Considering that legislation can be introduced to ensure that community service and other non-custodial measures will be imposed as alternatives to imprisonment,

1. Urges Member States, if they have not yet done so, to consider introducing appropriate alternatives to imprisonment in their criminal justice systems;

2. Recommends to Member States that have not yet done so to consider adopting effective measures to reduce pre-trial detention;

3. Recommends to Member States, subject to national law, to consider the following:

(a) Dealing with petty offences according to customary practice, where such practice exists, provided that doing so meets human rights requirements and that those involved so agree;

(b) If possible, using amicable means of settlement to deal with petty offences and resolving those offences among the parties, for example, by using mediation, acceptance of civil reparation or agreement to compensation through part of the income of the offender or through the work done by the offender to recompense the victim;

(c) If possible, preferring community service and other non-custodial measures to imprisonment;

(d) Conducting a study on the feasibility of adapting successful models of non-custodial measures and applying them in States where they are not yet being applied;

(e) Educating the public about the objectives of the above-mentioned alternatives to imprisonment and about how those alternatives work;

4. Invites international and regional financial institutions such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to incorporate in their technical assistance programmes measures to reduce prison overcrowding, including the establishment of adequate infrastructure and the development of alternatives to imprisonment in criminal justice systems;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice no later than at its tenth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX I

Kadoma Declaration on Community Service

Recalling the Kampala Declaration on Prison Conditions in Africa, adopted at the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held at Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, which takes into account the limited effectiveness of imprisonment, especially for those serving short sentences, and the cost of imprisonment to the whole of society,

Noting the growing interest in many countries in measures that replace custodial sentences and the promising developments across the world in this regard,

Noting with appreciation that the importance of the Kampala Declaration was recognized by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1997/36 of 21 July 1997 on international cooperation for the improvement of prison conditions, to which the Declaration was annexed,

Bearing in mind the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules) and the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules),

Considering that, in many countries in Africa, the level of overcrowding is inhuman, Recalling that the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights reaffirms the dignity inherent in a human being and the prohibition of degrading punishment and treatment,

Welcoming the success of the Zimbabwe community service scheme and its adoption by the Government of Zimbabwe following a three-year trial period,

Noting with appreciation that other African countries, including French-speaking and Portuguese-speaking countries, are interested in introducing community service as a penal sanction in their criminal justice systems,

The participants at the International Conference on Community Service Orders in Africa, held at Kadoma, Zimbabwe, from 24 to 28 November 1997, make the following Declaration:

1. The use of prison should be strictly limited to being a measure of last resort. Prisons represent a waste of scarce resources and human potential. The majority of prisoners who occupy them pose no actual threat to society.

2. The overcrowding in our prisons requires positive action through, inter alia, the introduction of community service.

3. Community service is in conformity with African traditions of dealing with offenders and with healing the damage caused by crime within the community. Furthermore, it is a positive and cost-effective measure to be preferred, whenever possible, to a sentence of imprisonment.

4. Community service should be effectively implemented and supervised and involve a programme of work in which the offender is required to carry out a number of hours of voluntary work for the benefit of the community in his or her own time.

5. Governments, donors and civil society organizations are invited to support research, pilot schemes and other initiatives in this important area.

6. Countries that already have community service should take into account lessons learned from elsewhere and review their own schemes accordingly.

7. There should be promotion of community support through sensitization campaigns targeting public opinion and the development of statistical databases to measure the effectiveness of community service.

8. We encourage those countries that have not yet done so to develop non-custodial sentencing alternatives and to this end we commit ourselves to cooperating with and coordinating our action through other national committees on community service and/or interested groups, in order better to promote the scheme.

9. We adopt the Plan of Action attached hereto.

APPENDIX

Plan of action for the Kadoma Declaration on Community Service

Further to the Kadoma Declaration on Community Service, adopted by the participants at the International Conference on Community Service Orders in Africa, held at Kadoma, Zimbabwe, from 24 to 28 November 1997, the participants adopt the following Plan of Action:

1. Network

Establish a network of national committees on community service and other interested groups to provide mutual support and encouragement through:

—The provision of resource persons to assist at seminars in the subregion or elsewhere;

—The sharing of documentation (legislation, guidelines, administrative forms) and ideas;

—Coordination and support of new projects;

—Cooperation and assistance in administering the scheme;

—Assistance in staff training;

—Exchange visits.

2. Community service directory

Compile a community service directory. To this end, a home page will be established on the Internet informing interested persons of developments in this area and a book will be produced that includes:

- The contact points and addresses of all national committees on community service and those contacts engaged in community service schemes;
- A list of experts and resource persons;
- Contacts in interested countries;
- Interested groups and organizations around the world;
- Donor contacts and government contacts.

The book will be distributed in different languages, including in French and English.

3. Newsletter

Issue a newsletter:

- To be produced by each national committee on community service at regular intervals and circulated to the network;
- To include initiatives undertaken, problems encountered, solutions found, reports on workshops, a calendar of events, requests for support (for example, resource persons), statistics and other information;
- To be disseminated through the Internet or the mail, or both.

4. Research and data-gathering

Set up mechanisms for research and data-gathering whereby:

- Research findings and data gathered will be shared through the newsletter or via the Internet;
- Research projects will be identified (for example, on cost-benefit analyses) and funding application supported by the network;
- Joint research projects on the benefits, problems and effectiveness of community service where the scheme is applied will be undertaken regionally and internationally.

ANNEX II

Recommendations of the seminar entitled "Criminal justice: the challenge of prison overcrowding", held at San Jose, Costa Rica, from 3 to 7 February 1997

1. The Secretary-General should take measures to ensure that assistance is offered to States requesting it, either by drawing on existing resources or by creating a special budget heading, with a view to improving the physical conditions of prisons.

2. The Secretary-General should take measures to ensure that the relevant entities are furnished with the necessary resources to provide training for the administrative and operational personnel of the prisons of Member States requesting such training, with priority being accorded to the most overcrowded prisons.

3. Measures should be taken to ensure that international and regional financial institutions, such as the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, adopt initiatives aimed at reducing prison overcrowding, including the provision of assistance for programmes of prison construction and the renovation of infrastructure.

4. The World Health Organization and regional bodies should be requested to incorporate, in their programmes of assistance, initiatives aimed at improving prison hospital facilities and the medical and hospital services offered to prisoners in States requesting such assistance.

5. Member States should urge the Secretary-General to promote and adopt, jointly with requesting Member States, measures to privatize individual prisons in such a way that they provide for security, the well-being and social reintegration of prisoners, profitable industrial use of prison labour and employment opportunities for prisoners after their release.

6. Member States should seek to establish in prisons human rights committees and work panels as alternative conflict-resolution mechanisms.

7. Member States should explore the possibility of adopting strategies to involve private enterprise in prison social rehabilitation programmes by creating enterprises and micro-enterprises to encourage investment in the vocational training of prisoners, employment creation within prisons and the reintegration of former prisoners into the labour force, thereby ensuring full application of the principles of social reintegration and rehabilitation of former prisoners within the productive mainstream of countries.

8. Member States should take measures to ensure the marketing of prison production through promotional and marketing programmes and to set up progressively workshops in prisons.

Human resources

UN research and training institutes

JIU report. By a March note [A/52/559/Add.I], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly the comments and recommendations of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC) on the 1997 Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) report [YUN 1997, p. 1178] on the programmes and activities of the training institutions in the UN system.

ACC noted that there was fundamental confusion throughout the JIU report between the activities of the UN system's independent training institutions and the training activities of the organizations of the system, which were part of their human resources functions. It commented on JIU's specific recommendations regarding the UN Staff College Project, staff training and development, evaluation of the use and impact of the training institutions under the jurisdiction of member organizations and coordination among training institutions.

UN Institute for Training and Research

In 1998, the training and capacity-building programmes of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) conducted on average 10 different training programmes per month in developing countries, at UN Headquarters and at the UN Offices at Geneva and Vienna. Between 1 July 1996 and 30 June 1998, the Institute organized 243 different programmes benefiting some 7,800 participants, according to the biennial report of the Executive Director of UNITAR [A/53/14]. The main aim of the Institute's training and capacity-building activities was to facilitate the understanding of developing countries and countries in transition in the main international issues, such as negotiation, the peaceful resolution of conflict, monitoring modern information and communications technologies, environmental management and good financial governance. The training programme in multilateral diplomacy and international affairs management included diplomacy training and fellowships; peacemaking and preventive diplomacy; training for the application of environmental law; correspondence instruction in peace-keeping operations; and international migration policy and law courses. Training and capacity-building programmes in the field of economic and social development addressed chemicals and waste management; climate change; information and communication systems; information and development; the legal aspects of debt, economic and financial management and public administration; and disaster reduction. Activities at UNITAR's New York Office focused mainly on training programmes for permanent missions of States Members to the United Nations in New York, as well as joint initiatives with academic institutions.

Report of Secretary-General. In response to General Assembly resolution 52/206 [YUN 1997, p. 1178], the Secretary-General, 'in October [A/53/354], reported on issues related to the development of UNITAR programmes in cooperation with other institutions within and outside the United Nations. The Secretary-General stated that he had followed closely the completion of UNITAR's restructuring process and noted that UNITAR's achievements during that process had been positive and encouraging. The Institute was cooperating with several national, regional and international institutes for the design and conduct of its projects and was building partnerships with the agencies and bodies of the UN system with respect to their training and capacity-building programmes. UNDP had designated UNITAR as the executing agency for an important Global Environment Fund programme and UNITAR was co-sponsoring a training programme with the United Nations Population Fund on the law and diplomacy of international migration.

Financial reports

The report of the United Nations Board of Auditors for the year ending 31 December 1997 [A/53/5/Add.4] indicated that $356,759 was contributed by Governments and various donors to the General Fund for 1997 and payment of outstanding pledges. In addition, $6,716 was received under interorganization arrangements, $541,805 as programme support income and $94,512 as interest and other income, bringing the total income to $999,792 compared with $723,354 in 1996. Expenditures for the year amounted to $787,960, resulting in an excess of income over expenditures of $211,832.

A total of $3,822,154 was received as grants. Total income in the Special Purpose Grants Fund was $4,050,205 and total expenditure was $4,465,128, resulting in a shortfall of $414,923 for the year. At the end of the year, the fund balance amounted to $2,567,783. The amount allocated by UNDP was $1,051,449 and expenditures totalled the same amount, including programme support costs of $116,018.

UNITAR was funded through voluntary contributions and received no subsidies from the UN regular budget.

The Board of Auditors made several recommendations related to UNITAR's reconciliation of records in Geneva, promotions and performance assessment procedures and procurement operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/611], adopted resolution 53/195 without vote [agenda item 96 (b)].

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 47/227 of 8 April 1993, 48/207 of 21 December 1993, 49/125 of 19 December 1994, 50/121 of 20 December 1995, 51/188 of 16 December 1996 and 52/206 of 18 December 1997,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on the activities of the Institute,

Welcoming the successful restructuring of the Institute and the recent progress made by the Institute in its various programmes and activities, including the improved cooperation that has been established with other organizations of the United Nations system and with regional and national institutions,

Noting the relevant recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit in its report entitled "Training institutions in the United Nations system: programmes and activities",

Expressing its appreciation to the Governments and private institutions that have made or pledged financial and other contributions to the Institute,

Noting that contributions to the General Fund of the Institute have not increased along with the increased participation of the developed countries in the training programmes, and underlining the need to address urgently this discrepancy,

Reiterating that the funding of training programmes offered at the specific request of States or departments and units of the Organization and other organs of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies should be arranged by the requesting parties,

Recognizing that training activities should be accorded a more visible and larger role in support of the management of international affairs and in the execution of the economic and social development programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the importance of a coordinated United Nations system-wide approach to research and training and underlines the need for United Nations training and research institutions to avoid duplication in their work;

2. Reaffirms also the relevance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, in view of the growing importance of training within the United Nations and the training requirements of States, and the pertinence of research activities related to training undertaken by the Institute within its mandate;

3. Stresses the need for the Institute to strengthen further its cooperation with other United Nations institutes and relevant national, regional and international institutes;

4. Also stresses the need for continuity in the management of the Institute in order to ensure efficient and effective completion of the process of restructuring and revitalization;

5. Renews its appeal to all Governments and to private institutions that have not yet contributed financially or otherwise to the Institute to give it their generous financial and other support, and urges the States that interrupted their voluntary contributions to consider resuming them in view of the successful restructuring and revitalization of the Institute;

6. Encourages the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to continue its efforts to address the discrepancy between the contributions to the General Fund of the Institute and participation in its programmes;

7. Stresses the need for enhanced coordination between the main training and research institutions of the United Nations system, based on an effective division of labour among these institutions;

8. Notes the survey prepared by the Institute of training institutes and training programmes within the United Nations, and requests the Secretary-General, in close cooperation with the Institute, to prepare, from within existing financial resources, an assessment of the survey with a view to highlighting the lessons learned from the responses already received, providing a qualitative assessment of pedagogical methods followed by these institutions in the provision of their training services and highlighting the complementarities and synergies that were apparent in the survey;

9. Welcomes the progress made in building partnerships between the Institute and other agencies and bodies of the United Nations system with respect to their training programmes, especially for developing countries and countries with economies in transition, consistent with the division of labour;

10. Underlines the need to develop further and expand the scope of these partnerships, particularly at the country level;

11. Requests the Board of Trustees to attract, to the extent possible, experts from developing countries and countries with economies in transition for the preparation of the relevant training materials for the programmes and activities of the Institute;

12. Calls upon the Secretary-General to continue to explore all possible ways and means to provide additional facilities to the Institute for maintaining its offices and for conducting programmes and training courses that are provided at no cost to States and to their representatives accredited to United Nations offices in New York, Nairobi, Geneva and Vienna;

13. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Institute, as well as with the United Nations funds and programmes, to continue to explore ways and modalities to utilize systematically the Institute in the execution of training and capacity-building programmes;

14. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session on the implementation of the present resolution.

United Nations University

During 1998, the United Nations University (UNU) began to focus its work within two thematic areas—environment and sustainable development, and peace and governance—in which it undertook research and training on a broad range of issues: from managing international financial flows to the challenges of urbanization; and from the legitimacy of international organizations to the causes of complex humanitarian emergencies.

Policy makers and researchers made great efforts in 1998 to understand the causes and try to remedy the impacts of the financial crisis in East Asia. UNU research on short-term capital movements and balance-of-payments crises provided suggestions for managing capital flows and for reshaping the international financial architecture. UNU also continued to focus on the particular development challenges of Africa and of economies in transition. Implementation commenced for the new four-year phase of the project on people, land management and environmental change with $6 million in funding from the Global Environment Facility.

With regard to peace and governance, UNU analysed the economic and political roots of vulnerability to humanitarian disasters and the economic implications of the prevention of humanitarian emergencies, and also undertook work linked to the process of UN reform.

In the area of capacity-building, UNU provided 233 fellowships to young scientists, of whom 184 were from developing countries, thus helping to strengthen institutional capacity. It also carried out 44 short training courses, of which 33 were in developing countries, on issues ranging from software technology to water management to sustainable use of natural resources. Implementation began on a large multi-year programme to develop a national capacity-building framework for the Mexican water sector through a partnership between the UNU International Network on Water, Environment and Health and the Mexican Water Commission.

Based on UNU work, 34 new books were printed in 1998. The UNU home page continued to be expanded and updated.

UNU Council

The UNU Council, at its forty-fifth session (Tokyo, Japan, 7-11 December), focused on four main topics: reviewing the year's activities; discussing the key recommendations from recent evaluations of UNU; assessing and improving UNU's administrative and financial management system; and discussing a draft strategic plan for the University for 1999-2002.

Report of Secretary-General. In a September report to the General Assembly [A/53/408], the Secretary-General outlined developments in the previous two years regarding the expansion of substantive interactions between UNU and the UN system. The report addressed relevant aspects of the reform and revitalization of the United Nations, follow-up to UN conferences, UNU research programmes and other areas in which there were developments related to the interface between the University and the United Nations.

The Secretary-General stated that the new Rector of the University, appointed in 1997, had initiated an intensive round of consultations with UN senior officials on possible areas of cooperation. UNU was also in the process of reviewing its programmes so that it might be in a better position to act as a bridge between the United Nations and the international academic community and to perform think-tank functions for the Organization. Concurrently, a strategic plan for 1999-2002 was being developed within UNU, which stressed that the University should be guided by principles relevant to its work both as an academic institution and as part of the UN system.

The Secretary-General concluded that the innovative measures introduced to enhance UNU interaction with the United Nations had been of great mutual benefit. A special effort was being made by the University to raise the profile and awareness of UNU in the host country and in New York. At UN Headquarters, more than 2,000 participants had taken part in public forums organized since February 1995 to disseminate among practitioners and scholars the results of UNU research.

JIU report. The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in September the report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on enhancing the relevance and effectiveness of UNU [A/53/392]. The Inspectors found that, since its establishment in 1973, UNU had performed its basic mandates reasonably well, but not without constraints and challenges. It had undertaken numerous research projects on a wide range of topics, provided various forms of training courses to thousands of individuals from all regions of the world, and produced a long list of publications for the benefit of the world academic community and organizations of the UN system. However, UNU had not yet succeeded fully in asserting its distinctive academic image and visibility within the UN system and broader world of scholarship. It had been constrained by a number of factors, including financing, from achieving its potential as a UN think-tank and from becoming an intellectual bridge between the multilateral system of cooperation and the world academic community. The Inspectors concluded that UNU was in need of a strengthened mandate and operations, which could be provided by ongoing UN reforms. The report concluded with 10 specific recommendations related to the University's governance; institutional development; programme planning and implementation; and financing and management.

In an addendum [A/53/392/Add.I] to the JIU report, the Secretary-General commented on the Inspectors' conclusions and recommendations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee [A/53/611], adopted resolution 53/194 without vote [agenda item 96 (a)].

United Nations University

The General Assembly,
Reaffirming its previous resolutions on the United Nations University,

Welcoming the appointment of Hans van Ginkel as the fourth Rector of the United Nations University, by the Secretary-General in September 1997,

Having considered the report of the Council of the United Nations University, the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations University, the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the United Nations University as transmitted by the Secretary-General and the comments of the Secretary-General on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on the United Nations University,

Bearing in mind the need to ensure a coordinated system-wide approach to training and training-related research issues as well as to establish a coherent strategy for building on common fields of interest and complementarities between the various training and research institutions within the United Nations system,

Expressing its deep appreciation for the voluntary contributions made to date by Governments and other public and private entities in support of the University,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by the Rector of the United Nations University in intensifying his interaction with United Nations Headquarters in the context of the development and implementation of a University-wide strategic plan which would help the University to determine an overall strategic direction for the future, and, in this context, encouraging him further to enhance interdisciplinary research, as recommended in the comments of the Secretary-General on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit,

Noting also with appreciation the efforts made by the Rector in initiating a self-assessment of the University,

1. Welcomes the completion of the review of the United Nations University carried out by the Joint Inspection Unit and the internal assessment conducted by an ad hoc committee of the Council of the University and the comments of the Secretary-General on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the steps taken by the Council and the Rector of the United Nations University to promote the work and the visibility of the University, particularly among Member States, the United Nations and its agencies, through such measures as organizing a series of public forums for the purpose of disseminating the results of its research, and requests them to intensify such efforts further;

3. Welcomes the progress made by the University in contributing to the work of the United Nations, and requests the Council and the Rector to continue intensifying their efforts to improve the University's interaction and communication with other relevant bodies of the United Nations system and to continue their efforts to avoid unnecessary duplication of work within the system;

4. Requests the Council and the Rector to enhance further coordination and complementarity between the University's research and training centres and its programmes, keeping in mind the relevant recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit in its report entitled "Training institutions in the United Nations system: programmes and activities";

5. Recognizes the importance of creating linkages, collaboration and cooperation with other research institutions and universities in developing countries to facilitate the exchange of experience and best practices

so as to mainstream the perspective of developing countries in the activities of the University;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in this connection, to continue his consideration of innovative measures to improve interaction and communication between the University and other relevant bodies of the United Nations system and to ensure that the work of the University is taken into account in all relevant activities of the system, taking into account General Assembly resolution 51/187 of 16 December 1996, so that the United Nations system may draw more extensively upon the work of the University, and to submit a report thereon to the Assembly at its fifty-fifth session;

7. Welcomes the intention of the University to strengthen its policy-analysis and capacity-building activities in conjunction with the continuation of fundamental research and reflection in the strategic plan now being developed by the University for 1999-2002;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to encourage the further participation of the University in the work of the United Nations, and also requests him, taking into account resolution 51/187, to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-fifth session on such further participation of the University in the activities of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and its subsidiary machinery, as well as through other existing structures and modalities for communication, interaction and synergy;

9. Urges the University, in its allocation of fellowships, to increase the number of researchers from developing countries, thereby enabling them to benefit from the knowledge, expertise and skills of the University and enhance capacity-building efforts in developing countries, particularly in educational and research institutions;

10. Requests the Council and the Rector, taking into account resolution 51/187, to continue to make further efforts to ensure the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the activities of the University, as well as its financial transparency and accountability, to intensify efforts to augment its Endowment Fund and to find innovative ways to mobilize operating contributions and other programme and project support;

11. Invites the international community to make voluntary contributions to the University, including its research and training centres and programmes, and in particular to its Endowment Fund.

Chapter X

Women

In 1998, the United Nations continued efforts to advance the status of women and ensure their rights, particularly through implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, a comprehensive plan for women's empowerment adopted in 1995 at the Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing). The Conference outcomes set the agenda for women's empowerment into the twenty-first century and embodied the commitment of the international community to advance the goals of equality, development and peace for all women.

During the year, the General Assembly reaffirmed its commitment to achieving full implementation of the Declaration and Platform for Action. It decided that a special session in June 2000 to assess the progress achieved in implementing the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Platform for Action, and to consider further action and initiatives, would be entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century". The Assembly also took action to protect women and ensure their rights in a variety of situations through resolutions addressing the girl child, traditional practices affecting the health of women and girls, the status of women in the UN Secretariat (see also PART FIVE, Chapter III) and the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

The Economic and Social Council also continued to focus on follow-up to the Fourth World Conference, particularly efforts to mainstream a gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the UN system and to implement strategic objectives related to 12 critical areas of concern contained in the Platform for Action. It decided that the theme of the high-level segment of its 1999 substantive session would be the role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women.

In 1998, the Commission on the Status of Women monitored implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, particularly at the national level and within the UN system. In addition, it adopted resolutions aimed at protecting women in particular situations, including older women, migrants and women in armed conflict. It also addressed the human rights of women related to land tenure, as well as poverty and economic development.

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its eighteenth and nineteenth sessions, reviewed the reports of 16 States parties to the 1979 Convention.

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-second session (New York, 2-13 March) [E/1998/27 & Corr.1], considered follow-up to the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women, particularly the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action [YUN 1995, p. 1170]. Commission action mainly reflected strategic objectives set forth in the Platform for Action related to 12 critical areas of concern: women and poverty; education and training of women; women and health; violence against women; women and armed conflict; women and the economy; women in power and decision-making; institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women; human rights of women; women and the media; women and the environment; and the girl child.

In other follow-up action, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 52/100 [YUN 1997, p. 1188], the Commission met as the Preparatory Committee for the Assembly's high-level plenary review in 2000 to appraise and assess progress achieved in the implementation of the 1985 Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women [YUN 1985, p. 937] and the Beijing Platform for Action. The Committee considered a February report of the Secretary-General containing options for convening the review [A/52/789].

Implementation of Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action

Reports of Secretary-General. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/6 [YUN 1996, p. 1060], the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a report of the Secretary-General on national plans and strategies to implement the Platform [E/CN.6/1998/6]. The report examined whether national action plans submitted to the Secretariat by 85 Member States and one observer followed the recommendations of the Platform concerning preparation, content, action defined and resources allocated. The 86 national action plans reflected the critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action as follows: women and poverty (56), education and training (77), women and health (70), violence against women (61), women and armed conflict (28), women and the economy (71), women in power and decision-making (75), institutional mechanisms for the advancement of women (77), human rights of women (70), women and the media (46), women and the environment (42) and the girl child (27). In some cases, the national action plans complemented sectoral plans in development, education or health, and therefore did not include the details of action proposed in those plans. The analysis indicated that the momentum created by the 1995 Conference had been sustained at the national level in many countries. The majority of plans contained both general policy recommendations and concrete action proposals. Only a few established comprehensive time-bound targets and benchmarks or indicators for monitoring.

The Commission also considered the first of three annual reports of the Secretary-General on follow-up to the Fourth World Conference and implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action within the UN system and by the international community [E/CN.6/1998/2]. The reports were submitted on a rolling basis during the year to the three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism for Conference follow-up composed of the Commission, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. Each report included information on progress made since the previous year that was most pertinent to the respective intergovernmental body, in order to facilitate its decision-making, and a section on means of implementation, including human and financial resource requirements.

The first report, submitted in January, emphasized efforts by the Secretariat to support mainstreaming a gender perspective within the UN system and other follow-up activities relevant to the work of the Commission. The report also covered the situation of Palestinian women and the release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflict and imprisoned (see below). An addendum to the report [E/CN.6/1998/2/Add.1] contained a joint work plan for the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UN Division for the Advancement of Women (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

A May report of the Secretary-General [E/1998/53] focused on developments related to implementation in intergovernmental forums reporting to the Economic and Social Council, by the regional commissions and in the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality. By decision 1998/294 of 31 July, the Council took note of the report.

The third report [A/53/308], submitted to the General Assembly in August, contained information on follow-up to the 1995 Conference by intergovernmental bodies, the UN system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

Inter-Agency Committee on Women. The Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC), at its first regular session of 1998 (Geneva, 27-28 March) [ACC/1998/4], adopted a statement on gender equality and mainstreaming in the work of the UN system. The statement had been prepared by the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality at its third session (New York, 25-27 February). The Committee, established in 1996 [YUN 1996, p. 1060], addressed, system-wide, all aspects of implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action, as well as gender-related recommendations emanating from other international conferences.

The statement constituted a commitment for action, by which ACC declared itself accountable for ensuring that the UN system's institutional culture was both gender-sensitive and gender-responsive, and that staff policies, programme budgets and resource allocations reflected the commitment to gender equality goals. The statement also expressed a commitment to supporting implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action, as well as the specific recommendations on gender mainstreaming contained in agreed conclusions 1997/2 of the Economic and Social Council [YUN 1997, p. 1186].

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 7 May [meeting 5], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1998/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/2 without vote [agenda item 81].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action

The Economic and Social Council

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 52/231 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 4 June [meeting 87], the General Assembly adopted resolution 52/231 without vote [agenda item 106].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions, in particular resolution 52/100 of 12 December 1997, on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action, as well as agreed conclusions and relevant resolutions of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Economic and Social Council on the follow-up to the Conference,

Reaffirming the commitments made in the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

1. Decides that the high-level plenary review to appraise and assess the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and the Platform for Action five years after its adoption, and to consider further actions and initiatives shall be held as a special session of the General Assembly for five days, from 5 to 9 June 2000;

2. Also decides that the special session should reaffirm the commitment to the Platform for Action and further focus, inter alia, on obstacles encountered in implementation as well as on strategies to overcome those obstacles, with a view to implementing fully the Platform for Action as well as taking further action and initiatives;

3. Recalls that, in keeping with General Assembly resolution 52/100, the Commission on the Status of Women will serve as the preparatory committee for the review and will be open-ended for the purposes of the preparations;

4. Decides that the preparatory work, which should be supported by inter-sessional consultations convened by the open-ended Bureau of the Commission on the Status of Women as needed, will be carried out by the Commission at its forty-third and forty-fourth sessions in the years 1999 and 2000, respectively, and that the forty-third and forty-fourth sessions will be extended by five days each to complete the preparations;

5. Calls upon the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the regional commissions, to develop a standardized questionnaire, with a focused set of indicators, on all critical areas of concern as a framework to assist national Governments in their assessment of and reporting on the implementation of the Platform for Action;

6. Encourages those Governments that have not yet done so to submit their national plans of action to the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat by September 1998 as an input to the start of the review during the forty-third session of the Commission, and encourages Governments to submit in 1999 information on their implementation of the Platform for Action, focusing particularly on positive actions, lessons learned, obstacles, key challenges remaining and a vision for gender equality in the next millennium;

7. Invites Governments to prepare their national evaluations on the implementation of the Platform for Action with the involvement of civil society;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite all entities of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, funds and programmes, to be involved actively in preparatory activities and to participate at the highest level in the special session, including through presentations on best practices, obstacles encountered and a vision for the future to accelerate implementation of the Platform for Action and address new and emerging trends;

9. Encourages appropriate regional preparatory activities for the special session, inter alia, by Governments in cooperation with the regional commissions, and recommends submission of the results as an input to the Commission at its forty-fourth session, in the year 2000;

10. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission at its forty-third session, in addition to the documentation already foreseen in the long-term work programme of the Commission for the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Platform for Action, suggestions on further initiatives and actions that might be considered during the review, with attention to mainstreaming gender equality and to common trends and themes across the twelve critical areas of concern;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to provide in the report on emerging issues, to be submitted to the Commission at its forty-fourth session, additional material on further actions and initiatives for the preparation of the outlook beyond the year 2000;

12. Invites the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to provide information in 1999 on the implementation of the Platform for Action, based on its review of reports of States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

13. Invites the Secretary-General to integrate in his reports information from relevant treaty-monitoring bodies on their efforts, within their mandates, to mainstream a gender perspective;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its special session a comparative report on how different categories of projects and programmes of United Nations organizations are including women's interests and gender mainstreaming issues and on resources allocated in this regard;

15. Recommends that the United Nations Development Programme and the World Bank focus on gender issues in the Human Development Report and the World Development Report for the year 2000;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to provide by the end of 1999 a compilation of updated statistics and indicators on the situation of women and girls in countries around the world by issuing, for example, a volume of The World's Women;

17. Calls upon States, the United Nations and non-governmental organizations to undertake necessary measures with a view to providing appropriate information to the public on the implementation of the Platform for Action and the process of preparations for the special session of the General Assembly;

18. Emphasizes the important role of non-governmental organizations in implementing the Platform for Action and the need for their active involvement in preparations for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements for their contributions to the special session;

19. Requests the Secretary-General to make available the necessary resources for the participation of the least developed countries at the special session in accordance with past practice.

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee [A/53/619], adopted resolution 53/120 without vote [agenda item 104].

Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women and full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 50/42 of 8 December 1995, 50/203 of 22 December 1995 and 51/69 of 12 December 1996,

Recalling also its resolutions 52/100 of 12 December 1997 and 52/231 of 4 June 1998, in which it decided to convene a high-level plenary review as a special session of the General Assembly to appraise and assess the progress achieved in the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, and the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, five years after their adoption, and to consider further actions and initiatives,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/6 of 22 July 1996 on the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, Council agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 and resolutions 1998/43 of 31 July 1998 on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system and 1998/26 of 28 July 1998 on the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development,

Reaffirming that the full implementation of the Platform for Action requires immediate and concerted action by all to create a peaceful, just and humane world based on all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the principle of equality for all people of all ages and from all walks of life, and, to that end, recognizing that broad-based and sustained economic growth in the context of sustainable development is necessary to sustain social development and social justice,

Deeply convinced that the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women are important contributions to the advancement of women worldwide in order to achieve gender equality and must be translated into effective action by all States, the United Nations system and other organizations concerned, as well as by non-governmental organizations,

Recognizing that the implementation of the Platform for Action rests primarily at the national level, that Governments, non-governmental organizations and public and private institutions should be involved in the implementation process and that national mechanisms also have an essential role in this regard, and bearing in mind that enhanced national efforts and international cooperation are essential for the effective implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action,

Reaffirming its decision that the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on the Status of Women, in accordance with their respective mandates and with Assembly resolution 48/162 of 20 December 1993 and other relevant resolutions, constitute a three-tiered intergovernmental mechanism that plays the primary role in the overall policy-making and follow-up and in coordinating the implementation and monitoring of the Platform for Action, and reaffirming also the need for a coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the results of major international conferences in the economic, social and related fields,

Reaffirming that the Commission on the Status of Women has a central role as a functional commission assisting the Economic and Social Council in the monitoring, within the United Nations system, of the implementation of the Platform for Action and in advising the Council thereon, and serves as the preparatory body for the special session of the General Assembly, open to the participation of all States Members of the United Nations, members of the specialized agencies and observers, in accordance with the established practice of the General Assembly,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

2. Welcomes the initiatives and actions taken by Governments, the United Nations system and other international organizations, including their secretariats, as well as by non-governmental organizations and other actors of civil society, towards the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted by the Conference, and calls upon them to implement effectively all the critical areas of concern of the Platform for Action;

3. Calls once again upon States, the United Nations system and all other actors to implement the Platform for Action, in particular by promoting an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective at all levels, including in the design, monitoring and evaluation of all policies and programmes to ensure effective implementation of all critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action;

4. Stresses that Governments have the primary responsibility for implementing the Platform for Action, and reaffirms that Governments should continue to commit themselves at the highest political level to its implementation and should take a leading role in coordinating, monitoring and assessing progress in the advancement of women;

5. Welcomes the progress achieved, calls for further intensified efforts at the international level to integrate the equal status and all human rights of women into the mainstream of United Nations system-wide activity and to address those issues regularly and systematically throughout relevant United Nations bodies and mechanisms, and welcomes, in this context, Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1998/2 of 28 July 1998 on the coordinated follow-up to and implementation of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993;

6. Also welcomes the steps already taken by the Secretary-General to draw the attention of all senior managers in the United Nations system to Economic and Social Council agreed conclusions 1997/2 and resolution 1998/43 on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, and urges the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts to ensure that managers are held accountable for gender mainstreaming in their areas of responsibility and that gender mainstreaming is systematically integrated into the reform process of the United Nations, including the work of the executive committees;

7. Directs all its committees and bodies, and draws the attention of other bodies of the United Nations system to the need to mainstream a gender perspective systematically into all areas of their work, in particular in such areas as macroeconomic questions, operational activities for development, poverty eradication, human rights, humanitarian assistance, budgeting, disarmament, peace and security and legal and political matters;

8. Requests all bodies that deal with programme and budgetary matters, including the Committee for Programme and Coordination and the governing bodies of the United Nations funds and programmes, to ensure that all programmes, medium-term plans and, in particular, programme budgets visibly mainstream a gender perspective;

9. Reiterates the request of the Economic and Social Council to the Secretariat to present issues and approaches in a gender-sensitive manner when preparing reports, so as to provide the intergovernmental machinery with an analytical basis for gender-responsive policy formulation;

10. Requests the Economic and Social Council to ensure that gender mainstreaming is an integral part of all its activities concerning integrated follow-up to recent United Nations conferences, building upon its agreed conclusions 1997/2 and its resolution 1998/43;

11. Re-emphasizes the need for the United Nations system to strengthen the role of gender units and gender focal points;

12. Urges Governments that have not yet done so to establish or strengthen appropriate national machineries for the advancement of women at the highest political level, including by making appropriate budgetary allocations to ensure their effective operation, appropriate intra- and inter-ministerial procedures and staffing and other institutions with the mandate and capacity to promote women's participation and integrate gender analysis into policies and programmes;

13. Notes with appreciation that many Governments have developed national strategies and action plans, some of them in consultation with non-governmental organizations, and urges all Governments that have not yet done so to complete their national action plans as soon as possible, but no later than June 1999, and to submit these plans to the Secretariat;

14. Encourages Governments to submit responses to the questionnaire prepared by the Secretariat in consultation with the regional commissions, which, together with the national action plans, are an essential contribution to the special session of the General Assembly;

15. Reiterates its invitation to Governments to prepare national evaluations of the implementation of the Platform for Action with the involvement of civil society;

16. Recognizes the importance attached to the regional and subregional monitoring of the global and regional platforms for action by regional commissions and other subregional or regional structures, within their mandates, in consultation with Governments, and calls for the promotion of cooperation in that respect among Governments and, where appropriate, national machineries of the same region;

17. Calls upon States to take action to fulfil the commitments for the advancement of women and for the strengthening of international cooperation made at the Fourth World Conference on Women, and reaffirms that adequate financial resources should be committed at the international level for the implementation of the Platform for Action in developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries;

18. Invites the Secretary-General, in the implementation of the United Nations System-wide Special Initiative on Africa, to pay special attention to the needs and role of women as actors and beneficiaries in the development process;

19. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, adequate mobilization of resources at the national and international levels, as well as new and additional resources for the developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries, from all available funding mechanisms, including multilateral, bilateral and private sources for the advancement of women, will also be required;

20. Recognizes that implementation of the Platform for Action in the countries with economies in transition requires continued national efforts and international cooperation and assistance, as indicated in the Platform for Action;

21. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, a reformulation of policies and reallocation of resources may be needed, but that some policy changes may not necessarily have financial implications;

22. Calls upon Member States to allocate sufficient resources for the provision of data disaggregated by sex and age for undertaking gender impact analyses in order to develop successful national implementation strategies for the Platform for Action;

23. Stresses that full and effective implementation of the Platform for Action will require a political commitment to making available human and financial resources for the empowerment of women, the integration of a gender perspective in budgetary decisions on policies and programmes and adequate financing of specific programmes for securing equality between women and men;

24. Invites Member States to encourage non-governmental organizations, the private sector and other institutions to mobilize additional resources to facilitate the full implementation of the Platform for Action in order to achieve gender equality;

25. Recognizes that the creation of an enabling environment at the national and international levels is necessary to ensure the full participation of women in economic activities, and calls upon States to remove obstacles to the full implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;

26. Again calls upon Member States to commit themselves to achieving gender balance by, inter alia, aiming at gender balance in the composition of delegations to the United Nations and other international forums, and by presenting, promoting and appointing women candidates in all government-appointed committees, boards and other relevant official bodies, as well as in all international bodies, institutions and organizations;

27. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat can carry out effectively all the tasks foreseen for it in the Platform for Action, play a catalytic role in support of gender mainstreaming, including through policy advisory services at the request of Governments, in cooperation with other bodies of the United Nations system, and serve as the secretariat for the special session of the General Assembly by, inter alia, providing sufficient human and financial resources within the regular budget of the United Nations;

28. Notes with appreciation the work done by the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women, inter alia, in her role as the Chairperson of the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality, towards the system-wide implementation of the Platform for Action and gender mainstreaming and towards the achievement of gender balance in the Secretariat and system-wide, and, in that regard, stresses the importance of increasing human and financial resources from all available funding sources;

29. Takes note of the statement of the Administrative Committee on Coordination on gender equality and mainstreaming in the work of the United Nations system: a commitment for action, adopted by the Committee in March 1998, in which gender equality was established as a strategic objective of the international community and of the organizations of the United Nations system;

30. Encourages the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality to continue its cooperation with the subsidiary bodies of the Administrative Committee on Coordination to develop strategies, tools and methodologies, such as gender-sensitive budgeting, to enhance the implementation and monitoring of the Platform for Action and gender mainstreaming in the United Nations system;

31. Requests the Secretary-General, in keeping with Economic and Social Council resolution 1998/26, to ensure that a gender perspective is integral to all operational activities, is fully integrated into the triennial comprehensive policy review of those activities and that resident coordinators, in the execution of their mandates, fully incorporate a gender perspective, in particular into the coordinated follow-up to recent global United Nations conferences, utilizing fully all the expertise available in the United Nations system;

32. Invites States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to include information in their reports on measures taken to implement the Platform for Action;

33. Notes the importance of the activities undertaken by the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women in the implementation of the Platform for Action, and encourages the strengthening of their cooperation and coordination within their respective mandates;

34. Encourages international financial institutions to continue to review and revise policies, procedures and staffing to ensure that investments and programmes benefit women, and invites the Secretary-General to include information on any such steps in his annual report on follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session;

35. Invites the World Trade Organization to contribute to the implementation of the Platform for Action, including through activities in cooperation with the United Nations system;

36. Reiterates that the special session, which will take place from 5 to 9 June 2000, should review and appraise progress in implementation, focusing on examples of good practices, positive actions, lessons learned, obstacles and key challenges remaining, and identify further actions and initiatives for achieving gender equality in the next millennium;

37. Decides that the special session shall be entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century";

38. Encourages appropriate regional preparatory activities for the special session, inter alia, by Governments in cooperation with the regional commissions, and recommends the submission of the results as an input to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-fourth session, in 2000;

39. Invites the Commission acting as the preparatory committee for the special session to propose the agenda (structure and themes) and documentation for the special session, taking into account resolution 52/231, and, at its forty-third session, to focus in particular on the report requested on suggestions for further actions and initiatives that might be considered during the review in order to achieve gender equality, with attention to mainstreaming a gender perspective and to common trends and themes across the twelve critical areas of concern;

40. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission at its forty-third session a report on suggestions for further actions and initiatives;

41. Requests the Secretary-General to provide by the end of 1999 a compilation of updated statistics and indicators on the situation of women and girls, including older women and those with special needs, in countries around the world, including by issuing a new volume of The World's Women;

42. Reiterates that participation in the special session should be at a high political level;

43. Emphasizes the important role of non-governmental organizations in implementing the Platform for Action and the need for their active involvement in the preparations for the special session, as well as the need to ensure appropriate arrangements for their contributions to the special session;

44. Recalls the interim measures put forward by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1997/298 of 23 July 1997 for the participation of non-governmental organizations in the work of the Commission on the Status of Women with a view to their application for the forty-third session, and recommends that the Council extend their application to the forty-third session of the Commission;

45. Invites the Commission, meeting as the preparatory committee for the special session, in March 1999, to recommend to the General Assembly appropriate arrangements for the involvement and participation of non-governmental organizations in the special session;

46. Recommends to the Economic and Social Council to decide that, in the absence of a recommendation from the Commission at its first meeting as the preparatory committee for the special session, in 1998, the non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Council, as well as the non-governmental organizations that participated in the Fourth World Conference on Women whose applications for consultative status with the Council are still under consideration, may participate in the sessions of the Commission meeting as the preparatory committee, in 1999 and 2000;

47. Requests the Secretary-General to report annually to the General Assembly, the Commission on the Status of Women and the Economic and Social Council on follow-up to and progress in the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;

48. Decides to appraise the progress on this question on an annual basis and to retain on the agenda of its forthcoming sessions the item entitled "Implementation of the outcome of the Fourth World Conference on Women".

Critical areas of concern

In 1998, the Commission considered 4 of the 12 critical areas of concern identified in the Beijing Platform for Action: the human rights of women; violence against women; the girl child; and women and armed conflict. It had before it a January report of the Secretary-General on thematic issues to be discussed by it in 1998 [E/CN.6/1998/5]. The report presented strategies for accelerating implementation of the Platform for Action in the four critical areas of concern, drawing on recommendations from expert group meetings organized by the UN Division for the Advancement of Women, as a basis for agreed conclusions.

Following thematic panel discussions on the four areas, the Commission agreed to a set of conclusions, which it recommended to the Economic and Social Council for endorsement.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1998/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/12 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on critical areas of concern identified in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women

The Economic and Social Council

Endorses the following conclusions adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women with respect to the four critical areas of concern addressed by the Commission at its forty-second session:

I. Violence against women

The Commission on the Status of Women

Reaffirms the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, notably chapter IV.D on violence against women, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women;

Requests States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to take into account in their initial and periodic reports to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women general recommendation 19 on violence against women, adopted by the Committee at its eleventh session, and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women;

Requests States parties to international human rights treaties to compile information and report on the extent and the manifestations of violence against women, including domestic violence and harmful traditional practices, and the measures taken to eliminate such violence, for inclusion in reports to the Committee, and to include such information in reports to other treaty bodies;

Proposes, in order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of chapter IV.D of the Platform for Action:

A. An integrated, holistic approach

Actions to be taken by Governments and the international community

- Formulate comprehensive, multidisciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, which will be widely disseminated and will provide for targets, timetables for implementation and effective domestic enforcement procedures through the establishment of monitoring mechanisms involving all parties concerned, including consultations with women's organizations;

- Call upon the international community to condemn and act against all forms and manifestations of terrorism, in particular those that affect women and children;

- Develop strong and effective national, regional and international cooperation to prevent and eliminate trafficking in women and girls, especially for purposes of economic and sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of the prostitution of women and girls;

- Encourage the media to take measures against the projection of images of violence against women and children;

- Strengthen effective partnerships with non-governmental organizations and all relevant agencies to promote an integrated and holistic approach to the elimination of violence against women and girls;

- Integrate effective actions to end violence against women into all areas of public and private life, as a means of working to overcome the violence and discrimination that women face because of such factors as race, language, ethnicity, poverty, culture, religion, age, disability and socio-economic class or because they are indigenous people, migrants, including women migrant workers, displaced women or refugees;

- Ensure that comprehensive programmes for the rehabilitation of victims of rape are integrated into global programmes;

B. Provision of resources to combat violence against all women

Actions to be taken by Governments, non-governmental organizations and the public and private sectors, as appropriate

- Support the work of non-governmental organizations in their activities to prevent, combat and eliminate violence against women;

- Provide adequate resources for women's groups, helplines, crisis centres and other support services, including credit, medical, psychological and other counselling services, as well as focus on vocational skill training for women victims of violence that enables them to find a means of subsistence;

- Provide resources for the strengthening of legal mechanisms for prosecuting those who commit acts of violence against women and girls, and for the rehabilitation of victims;

- Support and encourage partnerships for the establishment of national networks and provide resources for shelters and relief support for women and girls, so as to offer a safe, sensitive and integrated response to women victims of violence, including the provision of programmes designed to heal victims of trafficking and rehabilitate them into society;

- Consider increasing contributions for national, regional and international action to combat violence against women, including for the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences and the Trust Fund in Support of Action to Eliminate Violence against Women of the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

- Develop special programmes that would assist women and girls with disabilities in recognizing and reporting acts of violence, including the provision of accessible support services for their protection and safety;

- Encourage and fund the training of personnel in the administration of justice, law enforcement agencies, security, social and health-care services, schools and migration authorities in matters related to gender-based violence, and its prevention, and the protection of women from violence;

- Include in national budgets adequate resources related to the elimination of violence against women and girls;

C. Creation of linkages and cooperation with regard to particular forms of violence against women

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Consider, where appropriate, formulating bilateral, subregional and regional agreements to promote and protect the rights of migrant workers, especially women and girls;

- Develop bilateral, subregional, regional and international agreements and protocols to combat all forms of trafficking in women and girls, and assist victims of violence resulting from prostitution and trafficking;

- Improve the international exchange of information on trafficking in women and girls by recommending the setting up of a data-collection centre within the International Criminal Police Organization, regional law enforcement agencies and national police forces, as appropriate;

- Strengthen the implementation of all relevant human rights instruments in order to eliminate organized and other forms of trafficking in women and girls, including trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation and of pornography;

- Strengthen gender focal points of the regional commissions and further enhance their contributions to gender-balanced development policies, as they have already made significant contributions by helping Member States to build capacities and as regards gender mainstreaming for alleviating gender-based violence against women and have contributed actively to promoting the human rights of women;

D. Legal measures

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Ensure the gender-sensitive development of an integrated framework that includes criminal, civil, evidentiary and procedural provisions and that addresses sufficiently the multiple forms of violence against women;

- Take all appropriate measures to develop an integrated and comprehensive legislative framework that addresses sufficiently the multiple forms of violence against women;

- Promote, where necessary, the harmonization of local legislation that penalizes acts of violence against women;

- Provide, in order to respond to the needs of the survivors of violence against women and girls and to assist them towards full recovery and reintegration into society, adequate infrastructure and support services, such as witness protection programmes, restraining order against perpetrators, crisis centres, telephone hotlines, shelters, provisions for economic support and livelihood assistance;

- Develop guidelines to ensure appropriate police and prosecutorial responses in cases of violence against women;

- Establish and support programmes that provide legal aid and assistance for women and girls bringing complaints relating to gender-based violence through various applicable ways and means, such as support by non-governmental organizations for women with claims relating to violence against women;

- Ensure the accountability of relevant law enforcement agencies for the implementation of policies to protect women from gender-based violence;

- Investigate and, in accordance with national legislation, punish all acts of violence against women and girls, including those perpetrated by public officials;

- Implement strategies and practical measures, taking account of the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 52/86 of 12 December 1997 and contained in the annex thereto;

- Review national legislation in order to effect complete legal prohibition of rape and all forms of violence against women and girls, such as domestic violence, including rape, and to ensure that legislation that protects women and girls from violence is effectively implemented;

- Criminalize all forms of trafficking in women and girls for the purposes of sexual exploitation and penalize all traffickers;

- Take steps to enable women who are victims of trafficking to make complaints to the police and to be available when required by the criminal justice system and ensure that during this time women have access to social, medical, financial and legal assistance, and protection, as appropriate;

- Develop and implement national legislation and policies prohibiting harmful customary or traditional practices that are violations of the human rights of women and girls and obstacles to the full enjoyment by women and girls of their human rights and fundamental freedoms;

- Ensure that women are safe at work by supporting measures that promote the creation of a workplace environment free from sexual harassment or other violence and encourage all employers to put in place policies designed to eliminate and deal effectively with harassment of women whenever it occurs in the workplace;

- Encourage the participation of women in law enforcement agencies so as to achieve gender balance;

E. Research and gender-disaggregated data collection

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Promote coordinated research on violence against women to ensure that it is multidisciplinary and addresses the root factors, including external factors, that encourage trafficking in women and girls for prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation;

- Encourage research aimed at exploring the nature, extent and causes of violence and collect data and statistics on its economic and social costs, and its consequences, and conduct research on the impact of all laws relevant to combating all forms of violence against women;

- Develop common definitions and guidelines and train relevant actors for the collection of data and statistics on violence against women and ensure that all cases of violence against women are recorded systematically and appropriately, whether they are first reported to the police or to health and social services;

- Sponsor community-based research and national surveys, including the collection of disaggregated data, on violence against women, with regard to particular groups of women, such as women with disabilities, women migrant workers and trafficked women;

- Support evaluations of the impact of measures and policies, in particular with regard to legislative, evidentiary and procedural law reform, to address violence against women with a view to identifying and exchanging good practices and lessons learned, and initiate intervention and prevention programmes;

- Promote the sharing of research results, including information on best practices at the national, regional and international levels;

- Explore the possibility of establishing mechanisms such as national rapporteurs, who report to Governments on the scale, prevention and combating of violence against women, in particular trafficking in women and girls;

Actions to be taken by the United Nations

- Consider ways to share good practices and lessons learned, including establishing a readily accessible database of good practices and lessons learned with regard to all forms of violence against women;

F. Change in attitudes

Actions to be taken by Governments and civil society, including non-governmental organizations

- Work to create violence-free societies by implementing participatory educational programmes on human rights, conflict resolution and gender equality, for women and men of all ages, beginning with girls and boys;

- Support programmes of peer mediation and conflict resolution for schoolchildren and special training for teachers to equip them to encourage cooperation and respect for diversity and gender;

- Encourage innovative education and training in schools to enhance awareness of gender-based violence by promoting non-violent conflict resolution, and short-, mid- and long-term strategic educational goals for achieving gender equality;

- Introduce and invest in comprehensive public awareness campaigns, such as "zero tolerance", that portray violence against women as unacceptable;

- Encourage the promotion in media portrayals of positive images of women and of men, presenting them as cooperative and full partners in the upbringing of their children, and discourage the media from presenting negative images of women and girls;

- Encourage the media to create positive images of women and men as cooperative and crucial actors in preventing violence against women through the development of voluntary international media codes of conduct, on positive images, portrayals and representations of women and on the reporting of violence against women;

- Raise awareness and mobilize public opinion to eliminate female genital mutilation and other harmful traditional, cultural or customary practices that violate the human rights of women and girls and negatively affect their health;

- Promote the responsible use of new information technologies, in particular the Internet, including the encouraging of steps to prevent the use of these technologies for discrimination and violence against women and for trafficking in women for the purposes of sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of the prostitution of women and girls;

- Create policies and programmes to encourage behavioural change in perpetrators of violence against women, including rape, and monitor and assess the impact and effect of such policies and programmes;

- Establish legal literacy programmes to make women aware of their rights and the methods of seeking protection under the law;

- Recognize that women and girls with disabilities, women migrants and refugee women and girls could be particularly affected by violence and encourage the development of programmes for their support;

- Encourage campaigns aimed at clarifying opportunities, limitations and rights in the event of migration so as to enable women to make informed decisions and to prevent them from becoming victims of trafficking;

- Encourage and support men's initiatives to complement efforts of women's organizations to prevent and eliminate violence against women and girls;

- Conduct research on, and create policies and programmes to change, the attitudes and behaviour of perpetrators of violence against women within family and society;

- Actively encourage, support and implement measures aimed at increasing the knowledge and understanding of violence against women, through gender analysis capacity-building and gender-sensitive training for law enforcement officers, police personnel, the judiciary, medical and social workers and teachers;

II. Women and armed conflict

The Commission on the Status of Women

Reaffirms the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, notably chapter IV.E on women and armed conflict;

Proposes the following, taking into account the conclusions of the Commission on the human rights of women, violence against women and the girl child, in order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of chapter IV.E of the Platform for Action:

A. Ensuring gender-sensitive justice

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Ensure that national legal systems provide accessible and gender-sensitive avenues of redress for victims of armed conflict;

- Ensure that a gender-sensitive perspective is integrated into the drafting and interpretation of international law and domestic legislation, including for the protection of women and girls in armed conflict;

- Support efforts to create an international criminal court that integrates a gender perspective into its statute and functioning, enabling a gender-sensitive interpretation and application of the statute;

- Provide and disseminate to the public in local languages, including to women's groups and non-governmental organizations, information on the jurisdiction of and procedures for accessing the ad hoc war crimes tribunals, the human rights treaty bodies and all other relevant mechanisms; this information should be widely and actively disseminated in cooperation with the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations;

- Protect children in situations of armed conflict, especially the girl child, against participation, recruitment, rape and sexual exploitation through adherence to the applicable principles of international human rights law, international humanitarian law and national legislation;

- Promote a gender balance and gender expertise in all relevant international bodies, at all times, including the International Law Commission, the ad hoc war crimes tribunals and the human rights treaty bodies, having due regard for the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

- Examine and consider modifying existing legal definitions and standards to ensure that they encompass concerns of all women and girls affected by armed conflict and, in particular, reaffirm that rape, systematic rape and sexual slavery in armed conflict constitute war crimes;

- Ensure that, where crimes of sexual violence are committed in situations of conflict, all perpetrators, including those among United Nations and international peacekeeping and humanitarian personnel, are prosecuted;

B. Specific needs of women affected by armed conflict

Actions to be taken by Governments and international organizations

- Collect and provide information on violations of the human rights of women living under foreign occupation and take steps to ensure the full enjoyment of the human rights of these women;

- Take account of the impact of armed conflict on the health of all women and introduce measures to address the full range of the health needs of women, including those of women with disabilities, and the psychological needs arising from trauma stemming from sexual abuse and the effects of violations of their rights;

- Address the specific needs and concerns of refugee and displaced women and ensure appropriate training for relevant bodies to address the specific needs and concerns of women refugees, who should receive special protection, including the proper design and location of camps and their adequate staffing;

- Recognize the importance of fully involving women in designing rehabilitation policies in post-conflict situations and take steps to assist household economies, including the social and economic conditions of women-headed households and widows;

- Ensure the physical safety and security of all refugee women and girls and those internally displaced by, inter alia, adequately providing for and increasing their access to the right of return to their country or place of origin, and the participation of women in the committees responsible for the management of camps, ensure that the camps are designed in accordance with the Guidelines on the Protection of Refugee Women of 1991 of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and arrange for gender-sensitive legal, social and medical services in camps and for the talents and capabilities of refugee and displaced women and girls to be integrated fully into the development and implementation of these programmes while they are in such camps;

- Provide refugee victims of sexual violence and their families with adequate medical and psychosocial care, including culturally sensitive counselling, and ensure confidentiality;

- Take measures in accordance with international law with a view to alleviating any negative impact of economic sanctions on women and children;

- Mainstream a gender perspective, as appropriate, into national immigration and asylum policies, regulations and practices, in order to extend protection to those women whose claim for protection is based on gender-related persecution;

- Provide and strengthen assistance to all women and girls in conflict and post-conflict situations, including through non-governmental organizations, as appropriate. Refugee women and men must have equal rights in the administration and distribution of goods and services in the camps;

- Condemn and bring to an immediate end massive violations of human rights, especially in the form of genocide, and ethnic cleansing as a strategy of war, and its consequences, such as rape, including the systematic rape of women in war situations;

- Encourage rehabilitation centres to ensure that the knowledge and professions of displaced persons and refugees are utilized;

- Mainstream a gender perspective into humanitarian responses to crises and armed conflicts and into post-conflict reconstruction activities;

C. Increasing the participation of women in peace-keeping, peace-building, pre- and post-conflict decision-making, conflict prevention, post-conflict resolution and reconstruction

Actions to be taken by Governments and international and regional intergovernmental institutions

- Increase, including through measures of affirmative action, participation and leadership by women in decision-making and in preventing conflict;

- Mainstream a gender perspective into peace-promoting activities at all levels as well as humanitarian and peace-building policies, including through gender analysis and the encouragement of the participation of more female personnel at all levels, in particular at senior or high levels in field missions, and monitor and review such policies, as appropriate, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution where applicable;

- Recognize and support women's non-governmental organizations, in particular at the grass-roots level, in respect of their preventing conflict, including early warning and peace-building;

- Take note of the Kampala Action Plan on Women and Peace, adopted by the Regional Conference on Women, Peace and Development, held at Kampala from 22 to 25 November 1993, as well as the Kigali Declaration on Peace, Gender and Development and the Plan of Action for Conflict-affected Areas, both adopted by the Pan-African Conference on Peace, Gender and Development, held at Kigali from 1 to 3 March 1997, as part of the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women, and, if appropriate, convene conferences to assess progress and promote implementation;

- Regional research and training institutes should carry out research on the role of women in conflict resolution and identify and analyse policies and action programmes;

- Create mechanisms to encourage more women candidates with the appropriate qualifications to apply for judicial, prosecutorial and other positions in all relevant international bodies, in order to achieve gender balance on the basis of equitable geographical distribution;

- Nominate and appoint more women as special representatives in conflict resolution, giving due consideration to the principle of equitable geographical distribution;

- Enhance the role of women in bilateral preventive diplomacy efforts as well as those undertaken by the United Nations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

- Ensure that the participants in humanitarian missions and in peacekeeping operations, both military and civilian, are given specific gender-sensitive training;

- Develop and implement innovative strategies to increase the participation of women in peacekeeping operations and invite the Secretary-General to analyse their effectiveness in his reports on peacekeeping operations, if appropriate, based on the work of an expert group meeting;

- Mainstream a gender perspective into bilateral and multilateral peace-building discussions and the promotion of social development;

D. Preventing conflict and promoting a culture of peace

Actions to be taken by Governments, the international community and civil society, as appropriate

- Integrate a gender perspective into foreign policies and adjust policies accordingly;

- Support the establishment of women-for-peace networks;

- Discourage the adoption of and refrain from any unilateral measure that is not in accordance with international law and the Charter of the United Nations and that impedes the full achievement of economic and social development by the population of the affected countries, in particular women and children, that hinders their well-being and that creates obstacles to the full enjoyment of their human rights;

- Ensure that education, including teacher training, promotes peace, respect for human rights, gender sensitivity, tolerance for diversity, including cultural and religious diversity, and pluralism;

- Encourage the incorporation of relevant international humanitarian law principles and their interpretation from a gender perspective into national legal systems;

- Encourage and support the participation of young people in programmes, seminars and workshops on conflict resolution and human rights, negotiations for the peaceful settlement of disputes and the importance of a gender perspective in the promotion of a culture of peace, development and human rights of women;

- Strengthen ongoing efforts to train international peacekeeping forces in human rights and gender sensitivity, provide training regarding codes of conduct and the prevention of violence against women, ensuring that trainers include civilians, women and experts in gender issues, and monitor the impact of this training;

- Enhance the culture of peace and the peaceful settlement of armed conflicts, including through the mass media, audio and video as appropriate;

- Draw upon and utilize the expertise of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and the United Nations Children's Fund for the preparation of materials for the training of United Nations peacekeepers;

- Continue to make resources available nationally and internationally for the prevention of conflict and ensure participation by women in the elaboration and implementation of strategies for preventing conflict;

- Recognize and support the work done by national machineries for the advancement of women and by non-governmental organizations and work towards mobilizing the action necessary to encourage the achievement by women of a critical mass at the national cabinet level in key ministries and departments and in international organizations that make or influence policy with regard to matters related to collective peace and security;

Actions to be taken by the United Nations

- Acknowledge and support the vital work of non-governmental organizations in the field of peace in efforts towards preventing conflict and for peace-building;

- Organize programmes and seminars to sensitize community leaders and women on the important role that women should play in developing a culture of peace in society;

E. Disarmament measures, illicit arms trafficking, landmines and small arms

Actions to be taken by Governments

- In order to alleviate the suffering of women and children caused by landmines, work towards the objective of eliminating anti-personnel landmines and, in this regard, take due note of the conclusion at Oslo on 18 September 1997 of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction and its implementation by those States that become parties to it;

- Join international efforts to elaborate international policies to prohibit illicit traffic and trade in and transfer of small arms, and to control their excessive production, with a view to alleviating the suffering of women and children in situations of armed conflict;

- Provide landmine-awareness campaigns or classes in close cooperation with communities and community leaders formally and informally, making them accessible to women in afflicted areas, and provide resources and assistance for landmine clearance and share technology and information so that local populations can engage effectively in the safe clearance of landmines;

- Support programmes for the rehabilitation and social integration of women victims of anti-personnel landmines, and demining and mine-awareness activities;

- Encourage, as appropriate, the role of women in the peace movement, working towards general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control, including disarmament of all types of weapons of mass destruction;

- Work to prevent and put an end to aggression and all forms of armed conflict, thereby promoting a culture of peace;

III. Human rights of women

The Commission on the Status of Women

Reaffirms the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, in particular chapter IV.I on the human rights of women, and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993;

Recommends that the Commission on Human Rights give particular attention to the economic and social rights of women in any discussions it may have at its fifty-fourth session on the question of the appointment and mandate of a special rapporteur on economic, social and cultural rights, or a specific aspect thereof, invites the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women in 1999 on decisions taken by the Commission on Human Rights on this issue, and recommends that the special rapporteur, if appointed, make his or her reports available to the Commission on the Status of Women;

Proposes, in order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of chapter IV.I of the Platform for Action:

A. Creation and development of an environment conducive to the enjoyment by women of their human rights and awareness-raising

Actions to be taken by Governments, non-governmental organizations, employers, trade unions, the private sector and other actors in civil society, as appropriate

- Ensure universal awareness by all persons, women and men, girls and boys, of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of women and children, including the girl child, through comprehensive human rights education in accordance with the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, 1995-2004, and create and promote a culture of human rights, development and peace;

- Encourage and support broad-based national and community-based dialogues that include women and men, and girls and boys, from diverse backgrounds, on the meaning of human rights, on the obligations thereby created and on gender-specific discrimination and violations;

- Ensure that work, including, inter alia, work by treaty bodies within their mandates to develop an understanding of the gender dimensions of human rights, is compiled and widely disseminated and that this gender-sensitive interpretation of human rights is fully integrated into all policies and programmes of international and regional organizations;

- Make reports of United Nations mechanisms that deal with the human rights of women, such as those on discrimination and violence against women, widely available to the public, including the judiciary, parliamentarians and non-governmental organizations;

- Support, encourage and disseminate research and collect gender- and age-disaggregated statistics on factors and multiple barriers that affect the full enjoyment by women of their economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, including their right to development, and on violations that are particular to women, and disseminate the findings and utilize the collected data in assessing the implementation of the human rights of women;

- Develop and implement national legislation and policies prohibiting customary and traditional practices that are harmful to women and that are violations of the human rights of women;

- Eradicate customary or traditional practices, in particular female genital mutilation, that are harmful to or discriminatory against women and that are violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of women, through the design and implementation of awareness-raising programmes, education and training;

- Ensure that their personnel periodically receive gender training and are educated and made aware of all human rights of women, men and children;

- Mobilize the resources necessary and create the conditions for the full exercise of the economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights of women;

- Establish and strengthen partnerships and cooperation with each other and with the United Nations system and regional organizations in order to promote more actively the full enjoyment by women of their human rights;

- Ensure that the special conditions of indigenous and other marginalized women are taken fully into consideration within the framework of the human rights of women;

- Mainstream a gender perspective, as appropriate, into national immigration and asylum policies, regulations and practices in order to extend protection to those women whose claim for protection is based on gender-related persecution;

B. Legal and regulatory framework

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Guarantee the existence of a national legal and regulatory framework, including independent national institutions or other appropriate mechanisms, that ensure the full realization of all human rights of women and girls on the basis of equality and non-discrimination, including their right to be free from violence, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, other instruments related to human rights and international law;

- Take steps, including a gender-sensitive review of national legislation, to revoke any laws or legal procedures and eradicate practices—national or customary—that promote discrimination on the basis of sex;

- Ensure that women and children have full and equal access to effective legal remedies for violations, including domestic mechanisms, which are monitored and revised to ensure that they function without discrimination, and international mechanisms that address human rights as provided for, inter alia, under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

- Promote changes that ensure that women enjoy equal opportunities in law and in practice to claim their rights through national legal systems, including by educating them on these rights as well as ensuring availability of measures such as free or affordable legal aid, legal representation and court appeals procedures, and support existing programmes of non-governmental organizations and other agencies;

C. Policies, mechanisms and machineries

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Ratify and accede to and ensure implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women so that universal ratification of the Convention can be achieved by the year 2000;

- Limit the extent of any reservations to the Convention, formulate any such reservations as precisely and as narrowly as possible, ensure that no reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise incompatible with international treaty law and regularly review those reservations with a view to withdrawing them, and withdraw reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or that are otherwise incompatible with international treaty law;

- Create channels of communication to promote information exchange between national institutions that address the human rights of women and non-governmental organizations and relevant policy-making bodies of Government;

- Create gender-mainstreaming mechanisms within all policy-making bodies so that women's ability to enjoy their rights is strengthened by all policies and programmes, including through gender-sensitive budgeting;

- Support efforts to create an international criminal court that integrates a gender perspective into its statute and functioning, enabling a gender-sensitive interpretation and application of the statute;

- Mainstream a gender perspective into all economic and social policies in order to promote the human rights of women and girls, including their right to development;

- Adopt measures to ensure by appropriate means that women enjoy equal opportunities to participate in decision-making processes, including parliamentary and other elected assemblies;

Actions to be taken by States parties to human rights instruments

- Promote gender balance in the nomination and election to treaty bodies of independent experts having expertise and sensitivity in regard to gender issues in the field of human rights, giving due consideration to equitable geographical distribution and different legal systems;

- Take note of the report of the Secretariat to the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on reservations to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and encourage similar studies by other treaty bodies, as well as by the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, especially with respect to their effect on the enjoyment by women and girls of their human rights;

- Ensure that their periodic reports to treaty monitoring bodies mainstream a gender perspective;

Actions to be taken within the United Nations system

- Urge the Commission on Human Rights to ensure that all human rights mechanisms and procedures fully incorporate a gender perspective in their work, within their respective mandates;

- The Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality of the Administrative Committee on Coordination should, as planned, conduct a workshop to clarify the understanding of a rights-based approach to the empowerment and advancement of women and to gender equality, drawing on the work already being done in this regard by the United Nations Development Fund for Women and others;

- The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat should strengthen and improve coordination in general human rights activities within their respective mandates and continue to prepare the joint annual work plan;

- The Office of the High Commissioner and the Division should continue to prepare the joint annual work plan and strengthen cooperation and coordination in human rights activities, in particular:

(a) By collaborating in the writing of reports for the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights, the first initiative of this type being welcomed;

(b) By sharing information systematically on the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, its sessions and documentation, in order to ensure that its work will be better integrated into the work of the other treaty bodies and United Nations human rights activities;

(c) Through capacity-building to implement agreed conclusions 1997/2, adopted on 18 July 1997 by the Economic and Social Council, on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, in particular training and gender sensitization, especially of human rights monitors;

- Take further steps to increase cooperation and promote integration of objectives and goals among the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, as well as the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations funds and programmes;

- Cooperation, communication and exchange of expertise should be enhanced between the Commission on the Status of Women and other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, including the Commission on Human Rights, in order to promote more effectively the human rights of women;

- The treaty bodies, within their mandates, should continue to promote a better understanding of the rights contained in international human rights instruments and their particular significance to women;

- Given the importance of general comments in clarifying the provisions of human rights treaties, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women is invited to draw up joint general comments with other treaty bodies, within their respective mandates, on the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of human rights and should discuss these and other collaborative activities at the annual meetings of persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies;

- The treaty bodies should continue to develop working methods that facilitate communications between non-governmental organizations, treaty bodies and the States parties;

- The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights is commended for establishing the Gender and Human Rights of Women Team for studying, within the mandate of the Office, the human rights of women; the team should be given the necessary support by the most senior levels of management and decision-making to carry out its work effectively;

- Specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international financial and national trade organizations, should develop innovative ways of integrating the promotion of the enjoyment by women of their human rights into all their policies and programmes;

IV. The girl child

The Commission on the Status of Women

Reaffirms the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, notably chapter IV.L on the girl child, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted on 25 June 1993 by the World Conference on Human Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Proposes, in order to accelerate the implementation of the strategic objectives of chapter IV.L of the Platform for Action:

A. Promotion and protection of the human rights of the girl child

Actions to be taken by Governments, local authorities, non-governmental organizations and civil society and the United Nations system, as appropriate

- Promote further the enjoyment by children, in particular the girl child, of their human rights by the elaboration of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on measures for the prevention and eradication of the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography;

- Organize community-based actions, including the setting up of local committees to create awareness of and monitor conformity with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, with a special focus on the situation of adolescent girls and young mothers;

- Conduct awareness-raising campaigns designed to mobilize communities, including community leaders, religious organizations, parents and other family members, especially male family members, with regard to the rights of the child, giving special emphasis to the girl child, and monitor changes in attitudes;

- Conduct awareness-raising campaigns and gender training targeted at law enforcement and justice system officials with regard to the rights of the child, giving special attention to the girl child;

- Eliminate traditional and customary practices that constitute son preference through awareness-raising campaigns and gender training;

- Recognize and promote the contribution of girls and boys to development;

- Promote non-discriminatory treatment of girls and boys in the family and, in this regard, adopt measures to ensure equal access by girls and boys to food, education and health;

Actions to be taken by States parties to the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

- Include comprehensive information and sex- and age-disaggregated data on children in their reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and invite the treaty monitoring bodies to pay special attention to the rights of the girl child while assessing those reports;

- Ensure that any reservations to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child are formulated as precisely and as narrowly as possible and that they are not incompatible with the object and purpose of those conventions and review the reservations to those conventions with a view to withdrawing them;

B. Education and empowerment of the girl child

Actions to be taken by Governments, educational institutions and the United Nations system, as appropriate

- Consider drawing upon the findings and recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Adolescent Girls and Their Rights, held at Addis Ababa from 13 to 17 October 1997;

- Consider making primary education compulsory;
- Ensure universal enrolment and retention of girls in school and the continued education of pregnant adolescents and young mothers in order to guarantee basic education to the girl child;

- Encourage all levels of society, including parents, Governments and non-governmental organizations, to support the implementation of educational policies to enhance gender awareness in the community;

- Provide gender-sensitive training for school administrators, parents and all members of the school community, such as local administrators, staff, teachers, school boards and students;

- Review teaching materials, including textbooks, to promote the self-esteem of women and girls through positive self-images and revise these materials, highlighting the effective role of women in society, including in decision-making, development, culture, history, sports and other social, political and economic endeavours;

- Develop programmes of sensitization on the gender perspective for staff of government offices working on educational issues concerning indigenous and rural girls and develop educational materials adapted to their situation;

- Identify the special needs of girls in difficult circumstances, including girls from migrant families, refugee and displaced girls, girls from ethnic minorities, indigenous girls, orphaned girls, girls with disabilities and other girls with special needs, and provide the resources necessary to address their needs;

- Involve girls, including girls with special needs, and their representative organizations in the decision-making process and include them as full and active partners in identifying their own needs and in designing, planning, implementing and assessing policies and programmes to meet those needs;

- Provide training opportunities for girls to develop their skills in leadership, advocacy and conflict resolution;

- Make visible girls' and boys' unpaid work in the household by conducting research and documenting gender differences, in particular in rural communities, note the implications of household work for equal access by girls to basic and further education and career development and take measures to redress imbalances and eliminate discrimination;

C. Health needs of girls

Actions to be taken by Governments, civil society and the United Nations system, as appropriate

- Protect the girl child from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse by taking appropriate measures, including, for example, designing and implementing legislation;

- Encourage parents, coalitions of concerned organizations and individuals, especially political leaders, popular and community figures and the media, to advocate for children's health, including adolescent girls' reproductive and sexual health;

- Eradicate all customary or traditional practices, in particular female genital mutilation, that are harmful to or discriminate against women and girls and that are violations of the human rights of women and obstacles to the full enjoyment by women of their human rights and fundamental freedoms, through the design and implementation of awareness-raising programmes, education and training, as well as programmes to help the victims of such practices to overcome their trauma;

- Develop and implement national legislation and policies prohibiting customary or traditional practices that are violations of the human rights of women and obstacles to the full enjoyment by women of their human rights and fundamental freedoms and prosecute the perpetrators of practices that are harmful to the health of women and girls;

- Make widely available to adolescent girls and boys information and counselling, especially on human relationships, reproductive and sexual health, sexually transmitted diseases and adolescent pregnancy, that are confidential and easily accessible and emphasize the equal responsibility of girls and boys;

- Improve health care for adolescent girls by health personnel and provide the latter with appropriate training and encourage health-care personnel to work with girls to understand their special needs;

- Recognize and protect from discrimination pregnant adolescents and young mothers and support their continued access to information, health care, nutrition, education and training;

- Support the activities of non-governmental organizations in the area of reproductive health and health orientation centres for girls;

- Enact laws concerning the minimum age for marriage and raise the minimum age for marriage when necessary in order to ensure respect for the rights of the child, as stipulated in the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

D. Girls in armed conflict

Actions to be taken by the United Nations and Governments

- Incorporate information on the rights of the child in the mandates and operational guidelines of peace-keeping forces, the military and humanitarian workers and provide them with gender-sensitive training;

- Encourage girls and other individuals and communities to play a key role in reporting violations of the rights of girls in armed conflict to the appropriate authorities and ensure adequate, accessible and gender-sensitive support services and counselling;

- Protect the girl child in situations of armed conflict against participation in armed conflicts, recruitment, rape and sexual exploitation, in particular through the adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as recommended by the General Assembly;

- Take measures to address the special needs of girls for protection and for gender-appropriate support and counselling centres in refugee camps, and in resettlement and reintegration efforts;

- Create and respect zones of peace for children in armed conflict;

E. Trafficking, including for purposes of prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation

Actions to be taken by Governments, international organizations and civil society

- Collect information and raise public awareness on the issue of trafficking, physical and psychological abuse and sexual exploitation of girls in order better to design and improve preventive programmes;

- Consider implementing the recommendations of the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996;

- Establish recovery programmes for children who have been abused or sexually exploited, with specially trained personnel to provide a safe and supportive environment;

Actions to be taken by Governments

- Enact and enforce laws that prohibit sexual exploitation, including prostitution, incest, abuse and trafficking of children, paying special attention to girls;

- Prosecute and punish persons and organizations engaged in and/or promoting the sex industry, sexual exploitation, acts of paedophilia, trafficking in organs, child pornography and sex tourism involving minors and condemn and penalize all those offenders involved, whether local or foreign, while ensuring that children who are victims of those practices are not penalized;

- Design mechanisms and strengthen international cooperation in order better to protect girls and bring to justice the perpetrators of such crimes;

- Adopt measures that ensure that judicial and legal processes are sensitive to the specific needs of abused girls to prevent further traumatization or victimization;

F. Labour and the girl child

Actions to be taken by Governments, international organizations and the private sector

- Consider ratifying and implementing international agreements that are designed to protect children, including conventions of the International Labour Organization, and bring national legislation into conformity with those agreements in order to protect the girl child;

- Ensure that girls who work have access to education and vocational training, health care, food, shelter and recreation on equal and favourable conditions and are protected from economic exploitation, sexual harassment and abuse in the workplace;

- Pay special attention to girls in the informal sector, such as domestic workers, and develop measures to protect their human rights and fundamental freedoms and prevent their economic exploitation, ill-treatment and sexual abuse;

- Raise government and public awareness as to the nature and scope of the special needs of girls employed as domestic workers and of those performing excessive domestic chores in their own households and develop measures to prevent their economic exploitation and sexual abuse;

- Contribute actively to efforts at the 1998 session of the International Labour Conference to draw up a new international convention to eliminate the most abhorrent forms of child labour;

- Consider the implementation of the actions identified in the Agenda for Action of the Oslo Conference on Child Labour, held from 27 to 30 October 1997;

G. General recommendations

Actions to be taken by Governments and the United Nations system

- Prepare programmes for the girl child as part of national action plans in order to implement fully the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women;

- The organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, as the agency mandated to deal with the rights and concerns of children, should give greater attention to the girl child through Fund country programmes, using its goodwill ambassadors for raising awareness on the situation of the girl child at the national, regional and international levels;

- The Secretary-General should submit a report on the girl child to the Commission on the Status of Women prior to the five-year review of the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

- Base programmes and policies for the girl child on the rights of the child, the responsibilities, rights and duties of parents and the evolving capacity of the girl child, in accordance with the Platform for Action and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Violence against women

In February, the Secretary-General transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women a report of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) on action it had taken to eliminate violence against women and girls [E/CN.6/1998/9]. UNIFEM had worked to implement activities towards the elimination of violence against women through gender training for legal administration, governmental and non-governmental personnel; assistance to women's organizations to analyse and change legislation; production and dissemination of information on violence against women directed at change of social and policy attitudes towards the problem; and other innovative strategies piloted by NGOs and Governments. Activities of the Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women, established in 1995 under the provisions of General Assembly resolution 50/166 [YUN 1995, p. 1188], had gained momentum. According to the report, the Programme Approval Committee allocated all funds contributed to the Trust Fund in 1997 (a total of $1.2 million) to 36 projects. Another 19 projects, also approved for funding, were awaiting additional contributions to the Trust Fund.

The Commission on Human Rights at its fifty-fourth session considered a follow-up report of the Special Rapporteur on violence against women [E/CNA/1998/54] (see p. 698). The report analysed various forms of violence against women in the family and the community as perpetrated and/or condoned by the State. It addressed violence against women in armed conflict, custodial violence against women and violence against refugee and internally displaced women.

Women migrant workers

The Commission on the Status of Women, in a March resolution [E/1998/27 (res. 42/3)], encouraged the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to consider developing a general recommendation on the situation of women migrant workers. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNIFEM and relevant organizations of the UN system were asked to support national measures designed to strengthen preventive action. The Commission called on Governments to institute penal and criminal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers and to provide victims with immediate assistance.

(See also p. 701.)

Women and children in armed conflict

In March [res. 42/2], the Commission on the Status of Women condemned violent acts in contravention of international humanitarian law against civilian women and children in areas of armed conflict, including those subsequently imprisoned. It asked the Secretary-General and relevant international organizations to facilitate the release of the women and children. All parties to armed conflicts were urged to respect international humanitarian law and to provide unimpeded access to specialized humanitarian assistance for such women and children. The Secretary-General was asked to report in 1999.

The girl child

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/621], adopted resolution 53/127 without vote [agenda item 106].

The girl child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 52/106 of 12 December 1997 and all previous relevant resolutions,

Recalling also the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development, the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development, the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference on Human Rights, held at Vienna from 14 to 25 June 1993, the Plan of Action for Implementing the World Declaration on the Survival, Protection and Development of Children in the 1990s of the World Summit for Children, held in New York on 29 and 30 September 1990, the World Declaration on Education for All and the Framework for Action to Meet Basic Learning Needs adopted at the World Conference on Education for All, the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, held at Stockholm from 27 to 31 August 1996, and the conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women on critical areas of concern identified in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, adopted by the Commission at its forty-second session, in particular those relating to the girl child,

Deeply concerned about discrimination against the girl child and the violation of the rights of the girl child, which often result in less access for girls to education, nutrition, physical and mental health care and in girls enjoying fewer of the rights, opportunities and benefits of childhood and adolescence than boys and often being subjected to various forms of cultural, social, sexual and economic exploitation and to violence and harmful practices such as incest, early marriage, female infanticide, prenatal sex selection and female genital mutilation,

Deeply concerned also that girls, in particular adolescent girls, continue to be silent and invisible victims of violence, abuse and exploitation and that some legal systems do not address adequately the vulnerability of girls in the administration of justice, including the need for better protection of child victims and witnesses,

Stressing that discrimination and neglect of the girl child can initiate a lifelong downward spiral of deprivation and exclusion from the social mainstream,

Deeply concerned that, in situations of poverty, war and armed conflict, girl children are among the victims most affected and that thus their potential for full development is limited,

Concerned that the girl child has furthermore become a victim of sexually transmitted diseases and the human immunodeficiency virus, which affects the quality of her life and leaves her open to further discrimination,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men as enshrined, inter alia, in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

1. Stresses the need for full and urgent implementation of the rights of the girl child as guaranteed to her under all human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, as well as the need for universal ratification of those instruments;

2. Urges all States to take all necessary measures and to institute legal reforms to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by the girl child of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, to take effective action against violations of those rights and freedoms and to base programmes and policies for the girl child on the rights of the child;

3. Urges States to base programmes and policies for the girl child on the rights of the child, the responsibilities, rights and duties of the parents and the evolving capacity of the girl child, in accordance with the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child;

4. Also urges States to prepare programmes for the girl child as part of their national action plans in order to implement fully the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

5. Urges all States to enact and enforce legislation protecting girls from all forms of violence, including female infanticide and prenatal sex selection, female genital mutilation, rape, domestic violence, incest, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, child prostitution and child pornography, and to develop age-appropriate safe and confidential programmes and medical, social and psychological support services to assist girls who are subjected to violence;

6. Calls upon all States and international and non-governmental organizations, individually and collectively:

(a) To set goals and to develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies to address the rights and needs of children, in accordance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, to take into account the rights and particular needs of the girl child, especially in education, health and nutrition, and to eliminate negative cultural attitudes and practices against the girl child;

(b) To take measures to ensure the non-discrimination and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms of the girl child with disabilities;

(c) To generate social support for the enforcement of laws on the minimum legal age for marriage, in particular by providing educational opportunities for girls;

(d) To give attention to the rights and needs of adolescent girls, which call for special action for their protection from sexual and economic exploitation and abuse, harmful traditional and cultural practices, teenage pregnancy and vulnerability to sexually transmitted diseases and human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome and for the development of life skills and self-esteem, reaffirming that the advancement and empowerment of women throughout the life cycle must begin with the girl child at all ages;

(e) To review teaching materials, including textbooks, to promote the self-esteem of women and girls through positive self-images and to revise these materials, highlighting the effective role of women in society, including in decision-making, development, culture, history, sports and other social, political and economic endeavours;

(f) To take measures to increase awareness of the potential of the girl child and to promote gender-sensitive socialization of boys and girls from early childhood, with the aim of achieving gender equality, development and peace within the family and the community;

(g) To ensure the equal participation of girls and young women on the basis of non-discrimination and as partners with boys and young men in social, economic and political life and in the development of strategies and the implementation of action aimed at achieving gender equality, development and peace;

(h) To strengthen and reorient health education and health services, in particular primary health-care programmes, including in sexual and reproductive health, and to design quality health programmes that meet the physical and mental needs of girls and attend to the needs of young expectant and nursing mothers;

(i) To make information and counselling widely available to adolescent girls and boys, especially on human relationships, reproductive and sexual health, sexually transmitted diseases and adolescent pregnancy, in a manner that is confidential and easily accessible, and to emphasize the equal responsibility of girls and boys;

(j) To provide adequate infrastructure and support services to respond to the needs of the survivors of violence against women and girls and to assist them towards full recovery and reintegration into society;

(k) To provide gender-sensitive training for personnel in the administration of justice, law enforcement agencies, security, social and health-care services, schools and migration authorities and to develop guidelines to ensure appropriate police and prosecutorial responses in cases of violence against women and girls;

7. Urges States to enact and enforce strictly laws to ensure that marriage is entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses, to enact and enforce strictly laws concerning the minimum legal age of consent and the minimum age for marriage and to raise the minimum age for marriage where necessary;

8. Also urges States to eliminate all barriers so as to enable girls, without exception, to develop their full potential and skills through equal access to education and training;

9. Urges States, educational institutions and the United Nations system to provide gender-sensitive training for school administrators, parents and all members of the school community;

10. Encourages States to consider ways and means to ensure the continuing education and training of married women, pregnant women and young mothers and to protect them from discrimination;

11. Urges States to take special measures for the protection of children, in particular to protect girls from rape and other forms of sexual abuse and gender-based violence in situations of armed conflict, paying special attention to refugee and displaced girls and taking into account the special needs of the girl child in the delivery of humanitarian assistance;

12. Urges States parties to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to protect women and girls from all forms of violence, including domestic violence, sexual exploitation and trafficking and child prostitution;

13. Urges States to formulate comprehensive, multi-disciplinary and coordinated national plans, programmes or strategies to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, which should be widely disseminated and should provide targets and timetables for implementation, as well as effective domestic enforcement procedures through the establishment of monitoring mechanisms involving all parties concerned, including consultations with women's organizations;

14. Also urges States to implement measures to protect women and girls from all forms of violence, in line with the recommendations of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences;

15. Requests all States to implement, on an urgent basis, measures to protect children from all forms of sexual exploitation, including measures in line with those outlined in the Declaration and Agenda for Action of the World Congress against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children;

16. Calls upon Governments, civil society, including the media, and non-governmental organizations to promote human rights education and the full respect for and enjoyment of the human rights of the girl child, inter alia, through the translation, production and dissemination of age-appropriate information materials on these rights to all sectors of society, in particular to children;

17. Calls upon Governments to encourage efforts by civil society and non-governmental organizations, including women's organizations, to establish community-based groups or local committees that could assist with the safety and welfare of children;

18. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to ensure that all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system individually and collectively, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the World Health Organization and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, take into account the rights and the particular needs of the girl child, especially in education, health and nutrition, and eliminate negative cultural attitudes and practices against the girl child in the implementation of the outcomes of all recent global conferences, in particular the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, and of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 1996-2001;

19. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to pay particular attention to the human rights of the girl child;

20. Requests all human rights treaty bodies, special procedures and other human rights mechanisms of the Commission on Human Rights and the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to adopt regularly and systematically a gender perspective in the implementation of their mandates and to include in their reports information on the qualitative analysis of violations of human rights of women and girls, and encourages the strengthening of cooperation and coordination in that regard;

21. Calls upon States and international and non-governmental organizations to mobilize all necessary resources, support and efforts to realize the goals, strategic objectives and actions set out in the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women;

22. Also calls upon States and international and non-governmental organizations to implement fully, as appropriate, the conclusions on the girl child adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-second session.

Women's human rights

The Commission on the Status of Women considered a February report of the Secretary-General on women's enjoyment of their human rights, particularly those relating to the elimination of poverty, economic development and economic resources [E/CN.4/1998/22-E/CN.6/1998/11]. The report, which was also submitted to the Commission on Human Rights (see PART TWO, Chapter II), aimed to facilitate the interaction of the two bodies on the issue.

The report examined the impact of women's unequal enjoyment of rights on their socio-economic status. It considered gender factors that perpetuated women's unequal access and treatment with regard to economic and social rights and opportunities. Progress made in inter-governmental and expert bodies in addressing women's enjoyment of their human rights was assessed.

Women's full enjoyment of their human rights, including those relating to economic development and resources, was essential to any strategy aimed at poverty eradication and sustainable development, the report concluded. The Platform for Action recognized the impact of gender on the enjoyment of human rights, including access to rights, opportunities and resources, and with regard to treatment in many areas. Together with international human rights instruments, the Platform for Action emphasized that such gender-based inequalities and disadvantages needed to be addressed explicitly in all actions of Governments and of other actors entrusted with their implementation.

By decision 1998/298 of 5 August, the Economic and Social Council decided to consider as a theme for its 1999 substantive session "The role of employment and work in poverty eradication: the empowerment and advancement of women".

Land rights

In March 1998 [res. 42/1], the Commission on the Status of Women, recognizing that land was a valuable resource and that secure land rights were key rights for women's economic empowerment, urged States to give attention to women in their development programmes and specifically to address the feminization of poverty and its root causes, including secure land tenure. States were also urged to design and revise laws to ensure that women were accorded rights to own land and other property and to institute administrative reforms and other measures to give women the same rights as men to credit, capital, technologies, access to markets and information. The Commission called on the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to increase awareness that land rights discrimination was a violation of human rights and that, in addressing the right to development, secure land tenure for women should be taken into account. It asked the Secretary-General, as ACC Chairman, to ensure that all UN organizations and bodies, in particular UNDP, took into account land rights discrimination and its negative impact on women in all poverty eradication programmes and policies. States and relevant UN organizations and bodies were called on to report in 1999 on initiatives related to the Commission's resolution.

Women's health

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/99 [YUN 1997, p. 1197], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/53/354] on steps taken by the UN system, Member States and non-governmental and community organizations to help eliminate traditional or customary practices that were harmful to women and girls and to raise awareness of the issue.

The report concluded that fundamental changes in societal attitudes were required to eliminate the practices. Recommendations included establishing or strengthening government mechanisms to implement national policies; ratification and implementation of relevant international and regional human rights treaties; education and public awareness-raising campaigns; strengthening collaboration and coordination among human rights organizations and women's groups; and support to NGOs in addressing the issue. (See also p. 701.)

Traffic in women and girls

In 1998, trafficking in women and girls was addressed by the General Assembly in resolution 53/116 and by the Commission on Human Rights (see p. 703). The Commission on the Status of Women also addressed the issue in the context of its agreed conclusions on critical areas of concern identified in the Beijing Platform for Action, which were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1998/12 (see above).

Report of Secretary-General. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/98 [YUN 1997, p. 1195], the Secretary-General reported in September [A/53/409] on steps taken within UN forums, as well as regionally and nationally, to address trafficking in women and girls. Also reviewed were national and regional measures taken to address the issue. The report concluded that, while the actual incidence of trafficking was unknown due to its clandestine and criminal nature, it was perceived to be a growing problem since its root causes—poverty, scarce resources, lack of opportunities for and low status of women, and the growth of networks of trans-border organized crime—continued to be global factors. The United Nations and Member States should facilitate strategies to address root factors, as well as to strengthen measures to discourage traffickers; protect those vulnerable to trafficking; and offer legal, physical and psychological protection and empowerment to victims.

Situation of older women

Report of Secretary-General. The Commission on the Status of Women considered a January report of the Secretary-General on the support systems of older persons [E/CN.6/1998/4]. The report was based on the findings of a 1997 expert group meeting (Malta, 30 November–2 December) on the gender dimensions of caregiving and older persons. The report presented an overview of the challenges the support systems faced and changing caregiving patterns. It highlighted the situation of older women and suggested gender-sensitive policies and programmes to address the situation.

Regarding the situation of older women, the report noted that women lived longer than men and were more likely to live alone in old age. Older women were more likely than men to be poor and faced a higher risk of chronic illness and disability. In addition, older women's contributions to the well-being of their families, communities and the economy were widely overlooked.

The report made a series of recommendations regarding research on support systems for older persons from a gender perspective; the economic security of women; girls' and women's educational training; and support to caregivers.

Commission action. In March [res. 42/4], the Commission, taking note of the recommendations in the Secretary-General's report, asked him to take them into account in preparing his report in 1999 on key global issues regarding the differential impact of population ageing on men and women. The recommendations were annexed to the Commission's resolution. The Commission's discussions on the issue were intended to contribute to ongoing preparations for the International Year of Older Persons, to be held in 1999 (see PART THREE, Chapter XI). The Commission called on Member States to consider implementing the recommendations.

Palestinian women

In January [E/CN.6/1998/2/Add.2], the Secretary-General stated that, as in the past, Palestinian women were experiencing the gender-specific impact of security-related measures imposed by the Israeli authorities, which was reinforced by existing inequalities in society between women and men. The report described UN assistance to Palestinian women.

On the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/10, by which it asked the Commission to continue to monitor and take action on the matter of Palestinian women and children (see p. 444).

Women in Afghanistan

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1998/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/9 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Situation of women and girls in Afghanistan

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action adopted at the Fourth World Conference on Women and other instruments of human rights and international humanitarian law,

Deeply concerned by the continuing and substantiated reports of violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, in particular in areas under the control of the Taliban, resulting, inter alia, in restrictions on movement, denial of equal access of women to health care, prohibition of most forms of female employment, restrictions on education for women and girls, the closing of girls' schools and severe limitations on the enrolment of females in institutions of higher education and on their access to humanitarian assistance,

Welcoming the ongoing work of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, in particular his special focus on violations of the human rights of women and girls, especially in territories under the control of the Taliban faction,

Welcoming also the decision of the Secretary-General to send a gender mission to Afghanistan, hoping that it will serve as a model for future efforts to address the gender dimension of crisis or conflict situations, and encouraging the Secretary-General to continue to send such high-level missions, when appropriate,

Taking into account the report of the United Nations Inter-Agency Gender Mission to Afghanistan, led by the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, which took place from 12 to 24 November 1997,

Expressing its appreciation for the international community's support of and solidarity with the women and girls of Afghanistan, being supportive of the women of Afghanistan who protest against violations of their human rights, and encouraging women and men worldwide to continue efforts to draw attention to their situation and to promote the immediate restoration of their ability to enjoy their human rights,

1. Condemns the continuing violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, in all areas of Afghanistan;

2. Calls upon all parties within Afghanistan to recognize, protect, promote and act in accordance with all human rights and fundamental freedoms, regardless of gender, ethnicity or religion, in accordance with international human rights instruments, and to respect international humanitarian law;

3. Strongly urges all of the Afghan factions to end discriminatory policies and to recognize, protect and promote the equal rights and dignity of women and men, including their rights to full and equal participation in the life of the country, freedom of movement, access to education and health facilities, employment outside the home, personal security and freedom from intimidation and harassment, with special respect to the implications of discriminatory policies for the distribution of aid;

4. Appeals to all States and to the international community to ensure that all humanitarian assistance to the people of Afghanistan integrates gender concerns and actively attempts to promote the participation of both women and men and to promote peace and human rights;

5. Encourages the continuing efforts of the United Nations, international and non-governmental organizations and donors to ensure that all United Nations-assisted programmes in Afghanistan are formulated and coordinated in such a way as to promote and ensure the participation of women in those programmes and that women benefit equally with men from such programmes;

6. Welcomes the establishment of the ad hoc Inter-Agency Task Force on Gender in Afghanistan under the leadership of the Special Adviser to the Secretary-General on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women, and encourages States to make particular efforts to promote the human rights of women in Afghanistan;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that reports of future gender missions are made available to the Commission on the Status of Women.

(For action by the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, see p. 707.)

System-wide plan

The Commission on the Status of Women had before it a January report of the Secretary-General summarizing progress made by the UN system in 1996 and 1997 to implement the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001 [E/CN.6/1998/3], endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1996/34 [YUN 1996, p. 1057].

Despite considerable progress in implementing the wide array of activities envisaged under the plan, obstacles encountered included lack of data and of methodologies and indicators to monitor progress; lack of tools for tracking expenditures for cross-sectoral activities, at both the headquarters and field levels; inadequate human and financial resources; low levels of commitment, both politically in some countries and at the managerial level in some UN agencies; cultural and other constraints; and delays in delivery of technical assistance.

Among recommendations for action by the UN system that would further a cohesive approach to implementing the second half of the plan's term, the report suggested: support for the coordinated collection, packaging and dissemination of economic and social data disaggregated by sex; the development of action plans or strategies for gender mainstreaming; identification of the competencies required for gender mainstreaming and strategies for closing gaps through investment in training to enable staff to work with gender analysis tools; strengthened cooperation and exchange of experience on gender issues at the regional level; assistance to countries in building gender competencies cross-sectorally; and development of principles and guidelines to strengthen cooperation with NGOs concerned with gender issues.

Annexed to the report was information on implementation of the 12 critical areas of concern of the Beijing Platform for Action by responding UN entities.

CPC action. In June [A/53/16], the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) considered the Secretary-General's progress report. It endorsed the recommendations contained therein and recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve them. CPC recommended that measures be taken to overcome the obstacles to implementing the Platform for Action and the system-wide medium-term plan. Noting the absence of some key UN entities from the progress assessment, it recommended that all entities cooperate with the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women and the UN Division for the Advancement of Women in monitoring the implementation of the plan. It also recommended that the UN entities place more emphasis on coordination and collaboration, provide or increase gender analysis training and designate focal points to facilitate and monitor the implementation of the plan and mainstreaming of a gender perspective in their work. CPC recommended that the UN system intensify efforts to mainstream a gender perspective and further recommended the development of performance indicators to measure progress made in implementing the system-wide plan. It called on UN senior managers to give high priority to gender mainstreaming. It agreed to consider the new draft system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women for the period 2002- 2005.

Women in the Secretariat

In response to General Assembly resolution 52/96 [YUN 1997, p. 1471], the Secretary-General, in February [E/CN.6/1998/8], updated information on the status of women in the Secretariat. He stated that some gains had been made even though the United Nations was undergoing significant restructuring and downsizing (see PART FIVE, Chapter I). The percentage of women in higher-level positions had increased from 18.5 per cent in December 1996 to 22.6 per cent as at 1 January 1998. The Secretary-General updated measures taken to achieve gender equality in the Secretariat. (See also PART FIVE, Chapter III.)

On 9 December, the General Assembly, in resolution 53/119, called on the Secretary-General to implement and monitor the strategic plan of action for the improvement of the status of women in the Secretariat (1995-2000) [YUN 1994, p. 1383], in order to achieve the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women [E/1998/27 & Corr.1], adopted resolution 1998/11 without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

Mid-term review of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, including the status of women in the Secretariat

The Economic and Social Council,

Reaffirming the revised system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, and the comments of the Commission on the Status of Women contained in Commission resolution 40/10 of 22 March 1996 and the annex thereto,

Noting with concern that a number of obstacles have been encountered in the implementation of the plan,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the mid-term review of the implementation of the system-wide medium-term plan for the advancement of women, 1996-2001, and endorses the recommendations contained therein;

2. Urges the Secretary-General to ensure that the obstacles encountered in the implementation of the plan are dealt with effectively, in particular through heightened accountability at all levels, especially that of senior manager, and by including the necessary training, where appropriate;

3. Emphasizes the need for continued efforts by all entities of the United Nations system to implement the plan fully;

4. Stresses in particular the importance of mainstreaming a gender perspective into the formulation and implementation of operational activities for development of the United Nations system and into the United Nations Development Assistance Framework, notably at the country level;

5. Welcomes the work of the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, in particular its coordination and catalytic role in the area of gender mainstreaming, policy analysis and operational activities in the programmes of work of the bodies of the United Nations system, and its work in compiling good practices, guidelines and indicators in the area of gender mainstreaming;

6. Urges Member States, when considering the triennial policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system, during the fifty-third session of the General Assembly, to integrate fully a gender perspective into those activities;

7. Requests the United Nations Development Group to institute guidelines and procedures for the implementation of relevant aspects of the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women into the planning and preparation of the operational activities for development of United Nations funds and programmes;

8. Recommends that gender equality and women's empowerment goals be integrated into the continuing United Nations reform process, including in the work of the executive committees, and, in that regard, reaffirms the goal of 50/50 gender distribution by the year 2000 in all categories of posts within the United Nations system, especially at the D-1 level and above, with full respect for the principle of equitable geographical distribution, in conformity with Article 101 of the Charter of the United Nations, and also taking into account the lack of representation or underrepresentation of women from certain countries, in particular developing countries and countries with economies in transition.

Mainstreaming gender concerns

In a June report [E/1998/64], the Secretary-General reviewed the status of follow-up activities requested by the Economic and Social Council in its agreed conclusions 1997/2 on mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the UN system [YUN 1997, p. 1186]. The report stated that the implementation of the provisions was still at its initial stage.

Recommendations for action by the Council included: encouraging the UN system to take further measures to implement gender mainstreaming as a matter of urgency and at the latest by the time of the five-year review of the Platform of Action in 2000; urging that a gender perspective be mainstreamed in all UN institutions, policies and programmes by implementing the agreed conclusions; requesting the Secretary-General to assess progress made in gender mainstreaming in the light of the agreed conclusions; and deciding that its contribution to the review of the World Summit for Social Development (see preceding chapter) would reflect a gender perspective.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/43 [draft: E/1998/L.32] without vote [agenda item 6].

Mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997, on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system,

Affirming that gender mainstreaming constitutes a critical strategy in the implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and for achieving the overall goal of gender equality,

Recognizing the importance of integrating a gender perspective into development as well as into all other policy areas and of addressing the disparity of opportunities between women and men at all stages of their lives if gender equality is to be achieved,

Welcoming the steps already taken by various entities of the United Nations system, including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and its functional and regional commissions and other subsidiary bodies, the Secretariat, the Administrative Committee on Coordination, the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality and other subsidiary machinery of the Administrative Committee on Coordination and the executive committees, as well as specialized agencies, funds and programmes, to implement agreed conclusions 1997/2,

1. Invites the United Nations system, in implementing the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, to take into account the different obstacles to the development and empowerment of women in all regions and their roles as actors in and beneficiaries of development;

2. Reaffirms that the recommendations contained in its agreed conclusions 1997/2 should be implemented as a matter of urgency and at the latest by the time of the five-year review of the Platform for Action in 2000, and calls on all parts of the United Nations system to take immediate action in this regard;

3. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Implementation of the agreed conclusions of the 1997 coordination segment of the Economic and Social Council on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes of the United Nations system";

4. Requests all entities of the United Nations system, in particular the funds and programmes in their operational activities, to adopt a comprehensive, integrated and multisectoral approach to implementing the Platform for Action;

5. Welcomes the efforts of the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat to contribute to the inclusion of a gender perspective in the reports of the Secretariat, and reiterates that all reports from entities of the Secretariat should reflect a gender perspective;

6. Urges the Commission on the Status of Women to continue to provide suggestions to the Council and its subsidiary bodies, in particular to other functional commissions, on further measures to implement the strategy of gender mainstreaming;

7. Decides to pay particular attention to the feminization of poverty, its causes and remedies when reviewing the theme of poverty eradication in 1999 and to ensure a gender perspective when reviewing the implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits, and requests that any documentation to be prepared for this purpose provide an adequate basis towards this end;

8. Also decides to continue to monitor annually the way in which its functional commissions and subsidiary bodies implement the Platform for Action, inter alia, by mainstreaming the gender perspective, under the agenda items "Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits" and "Advancement of women".

Gender in development

In 1998, the high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council, during the operational activities segment of the Council's substantive session, discussed the theme "Advancement of women: implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development". At the meeting, the Council considered a May report of the Secretary-General on the theme [E/1998/54 & Corr.1]. The report took into account decisions of legislative bodies and consultations undertaken with the ACC Consultative Committee on Programme and Operational Questions and UN system focal points on gender. Information was also reviewed from resident coordinators/representatives and Governments in response to a questionnaire sent to them in connection with the triennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the UN system (see p. 800).

During the past two decades, the UN system had built the foundation both for undertaking women-specific activities and for mainstreaming gender into agency missions, sectors and, to a lesser extent, policy dialogue. The Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995 represented a watershed in the effort to secure the full participation of women on the basis of equality in all spheres of society. Since the Conference and the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, there had been increasing momentum directed towards the development of policy instruments, procedures and training to mainstream gender. Mandates for mainstreaming gender had been designed and endorsed by various intergovernmental bodies, such as the Commission on Population and Development, the Commission for Social Development and the governing bodies of several UN specialized agencies, funds and programmes.

The report recommended action by the Council in the area of capacity-building for mainstreaming, particularly concerning institutional structure; guidelines and checklists; focal points; strategic frameworks and programming; accountability and evaluation; and staff training and development of training materials. Recommendations were also made regarding mobilizing resources for gender mainstreaming.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1998/203 of 6 February, the Economic and Social Council decided to include in the provisional agenda of its resumed organizational session the item "Social and human rights questions: advancement of women".

On 28 July [meeting 44], the Council adopted resolution 1998/26 [draft: E/1998/L.20] without vote [agenda item 3 (a)].

Advancement of women: implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997, on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, and General Assembly resolutions 50/120 of 20 December 1995, 52/100 of 12 December 1997 and 52/195 and 52/203 of 18 December 1997,

Recalling also that Governments have the primary responsibility for implementing the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women,

Reaffirming the importance of operational activities for development in assisting the developing countries in implementing the commitments of the Platform for Action,

Reaffirming also that operational activities for development within the United Nations system have a critical and unique role to play in enabling developing countries to take the lead in the management of their own development process and that the funds and programmes constitute important vehicles for advancing international development cooperation,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on advancement of women: implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development,

Noting that coordinated and integrated follow-up to United Nations conferences has become a priority of the United Nations system and that all activities related to global conference follow-up should fully integrate a gender perspective,

Emphasizing the importance of data disaggregated on the basis of sex and age for the evaluation of gender mainstreaming,

Expressing serious concern at the persistent insufficiency of resources for operational activities for development of the United Nations system, in particular the decline in contributions to core resources,

Stressing that national plans and priorities constitute the only viable frame of reference for national programming of operational activities for development within the United Nations system and that programmes should be based on such development plans and priorities and thus should be country-driven,

Stressing also in that context the need to take into account the outcomes and commitments of relevant United Nations conferences, as well as the individual mandates and complementarities of the organizations and bodies of the United Nations development system, bearing in mind the need to avoid duplication,

1. Welcomes the activities within the United Nations system that are aimed at implementing the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, in particular for mainstreaming gender issues, and recognizes the need to integrate further a gender perspective, in particular into operational activities for development;

2. Also welcomes the opportunities that are presented by the reform process in the United Nations better to coordinate and mainstream gender issues as part of a strategic framework, and reaffirms that an active and visible policy of gender mainstreaming should be integrated into the ongoing pilot phase and review of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework;

3. Calls upon the United Nations system to incorporate fully a gender perspective into the coordinated and integrated implementation of and follow-up to major United Nations conferences and summits and to continue to strengthen its capacity to support and implement world conference commitments, in particular the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;

4. Calls upon the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, within their poverty eradication activities, to target women and girls living in poverty and to ensure the availability of funding sources for such activities;

5. Calls upon Governments to implement specific programmes for the eradication of poverty and illiteracy, ensuring women's equal rights and access to basic social services, such as education and health, as well as productive resources, training, employment, credit, microfinance and the promotion of entrepreneurial activities in order to promote the advancement and empowerment of women in all countries, invites the international community to support national efforts in developing countries in this regard, and invites non-governmental organizations, in this regard, to integrate a gender perspective into their programmes;

6. Recognizes the need for the United Nations system to adopt a coordinated and coherent policy for gender mainstreaming, including the establishment and strengthening of the role of gender units and focal points, including guidelines and directives for mainstreaming a gender perspective in policies and programmes for achieving gender equality;

7. Reiterates that location, seniority level, resources and participation of gender units, gender advisers and focal points in all policy-making and programming processes are crucial for translating the gender mainstreaming mandate into practical reality;

8. Reaffirms that responsibility for translating gender mainstreaming into practice rests at the highest levels;

9. Urges all funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to increase their efforts to incorporate fully a gender analysis and perspective into their operational activities, with a view to achieving time-bound measurable goals, and emphasizes that this process should be guided by the need for the United Nations system to extend assistance to developing countries in meeting their commitments under the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action;

10. Requests the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system to assist Governments in integrating data disaggregated by sex and age into their country programmes;

11. Emphasizes the role of the resident coordinators, within their mandate, to incorporate fully a gender perspective in the implementation of operational activities for development, in consultation with the host Government, and the need to provide regular gender training for resident coordinators and their staff;

12. Recognizes the need for accountability in the operational activities of the United Nations system in the implementation of gender mainstreaming activities, including in the report on the triennial policy review and through the preparation of comprehensive reports on the use of resources allocated for gender mainstreaming, in accordance with the relevant decisions of the respective governing bodies;

13. Requests the governing bodies of the United Nations funds and programmes to monitor the implementation of gender mainstreaming in their programmes of work, including in the budgeting of their respective organizations;

14. Also requests the respective governing bodies to ensure the development of integrated monitoring and evaluation of gender mainstreaming activities to facilitate an early identification of problems and to develop effective responses thereto, and requests the United Nations funds and programmes to evaluate the impact of their gender mainstreaming activities, in cooperation with the national Governments concerned, and to report thereon;

15. Requests the funds, programmes and agencies of the United Nations system, within their mandates and the priorities set by their respective governing bodies, to establish internal funding targets for gender mainstreaming wherever they do not exist, and requests that, where they do exist, more determined efforts be made to reach their own targets and to report regularly to their respective governing bodies thereon;

16. Encourages the United Nations development funds and programmes, in mobilizing resources from all available sources, to provide for particular attention to allocating resources to gender mainstreaming activities and capacity-building;

17. Welcomes the work that the United Nations Development Fund for Women has undertaken to support inter-agency cooperation in gender mainstreaming, as well as its efforts to assist the advancement and empowerment of women at the country level, inter alia, by placing gender advisers and gender specialists, and recommends that States and agencies of the United Nations system consider increasing their contribution to and support for the work of the Fund;

18. Reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, a reformulation of policies and reallocation of resources may be needed, but that some policy changes may not necessarily have financial implications;

19. Also reaffirms that, in order to implement the Platform for Action, adequate mobilization of resources at the national and international levels, as well as new and additional resources to the developing countries, in particular those in Africa and the least developed countries, from all available funding mechanisms, including multilateral, bilateral and private sources for the advancement of women, will also be required;

20. Welcomes the work undertaken by the Inter-Agency Committee on Women and Gender Equality of the Administrative Committee on Coordination in implementing General Assembly resolution 52/100, and, in this regard, requests the funds and programmes to submit proposals for the implementation of paragraphs 12 and 40 of resolution 52/100 to their respective governing bodies;

21. Requests all funds, programmes and relevant agencies of the United Nations system to assist Governments, upon their request, in their national efforts to implement the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, including the reporting system;

22. Requests the Secretary-General, in reporting to the preparatory committee for the high-level review in the year 2000 of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Platform for Action, to be held as a special session of the General Assembly, to include information on the progress in gender mainstreaming in operational activities and on the implementation of the present resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, the General Assembly, by decision 53/435, took note of relevant chapters of the report of the Economic and Social Council [A/53/3 & Corr.1].

UN machinery

Convention on elimination of discrimination against women

As at 31 December 1998, 163 States were parties to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 34/180 [YUN 1979, p. 895]. During the year, Djibouti and Kazakhstan acceded to the Convention. Also at year's end, 21 States parties had accepted the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention in respect of the meeting time of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), which had been adopted by the States parties in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1178]. The amendment would enter into force when accepted by a two-thirds majority of States parties.

The Secretary-General submitted his annual report to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention as at 1 August [A/53/318].

Meeting of States parties. The tenth meeting of States parties to the Convention (New York, 17 February) [CEDAW/C/SP/1998/4] reviewed reservations of States parties to the Convention and notifications of withdrawals, as well as objections to States parties' reservations. At the meeting, 12 members of CEDAW were elected to replace those whose terms were due to expire at the end of the year.

Optional protocol

In March, the Commission on the Status of Women considered a report of the Secretary-General [E/CN.6/1998/7], which provided an annotated comparison of the draft optional protocol to the Convention and the amendments proposed thereto, with the provisions of international human rights instruments whose procedures were similar to those envisaged in the draft.

The Commission's Open-ended Working Group to elaborate the draft optional protocol met from 2 to 13 March. Negotiations were based on the results of a first reading of the draft, which had been completed in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1203]. The Group's revised draft was appended to the report of the Commission on its forty-second session [E/1998/27 & Corr.1].

CEDAW

In 1998, the 23-member Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, established in 1982 to monitor compliance with the 1979 Convention [YUN 1982, p. 1149], held two sessions in New York [A/53/38/Rev.I].

At its eighteenth session (19 January-6 February), the Committee considered under article 18 of the Convention the initial or periodic reports of Azerbaijan, Bulgaria, Croatia, the Czech Republic, the Dominican Republic, Indonesia, Mexico and Zimbabwe on measures they had taken to implement the Convention. The Committee adopted three decisions and a suggestion relating to procedural matters.

At its nineteenth session (22 June-10 July), CEDAW reviewed the initial or periodic reports of New Zealand, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, the Republic of Korea, Slovakia, South Africa and the United Republic of Tanzania. The Committee adopted a statement on the adverse impact of reservations to the Convention as its contribution to the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (see p. 615). It also adopted three decisions related to procedural matters.

On 31 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the CEDAW report (decision 1998/294).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December [meeting 85], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee [A/53/618], adopted resolution 53/118 without vote [agenda item 103].

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/68 of 12 December 1996,

Bearing in mind that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Articles 1 and 55 of the Charter, is to promote universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind, including distinction as to sex,

Affirming that women and men should participate equally in social, economic and political development, should contribute equally to such development and should share equally in improved conditions of life,

Recalling the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993, in which the Conference reaffirmed that the human rights of women and the girl child were an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights,

Welcoming the agreed conclusions of the Commission on the Status of Women at its fortieth, forty-first and forty-second sessions regarding the implementation of the strategic objectives of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women, agreed conclusions 1997/2 of the Economic and Social Council on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system and Council resolution 1998/26 of 28 July 1998, entitled "Advancement of women: implementation of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the role of operational activities in promoting, in particular, capacity-building and resource mobilization for enhancing the participation of women in development",

Welcoming also the growing number of States parties to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which now stands at one hundred and sixty-two,

Taking note of the elaboration and adoption by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, at its sixteenth session, of general recommendation 23 on women in public life,

Having considered the report of the Committee on its eighteenth and nineteenth sessions,

Expressing concern at the great number of reports overdue and that continue to be overdue, in particular initial reports, which constitutes an obstacle to the full implementation of the Convention,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Urges all States that have not yet ratified or acceded to the Convention to do so as soon as possible, so that universal ratification of the Convention can be achieved by the year 2000;

3. Emphasizes the importance of full compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention;

4. Urges States to limit the extent of any reservations they lodge to the Convention, to formulate any such reservations as precisely and as narrowly as possible, to ensure that no reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention or otherwise incompatible with international treaty law, to review their reservations regularly with a view to withdrawing them and to withdraw reservations that are contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention or that are otherwise incompatible with international treaty law;

5. Invites States parties to the Convention to give due consideration to the statement regarding reservations to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women adopted by the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights;

6. Takes note of the report of the Secretariat on reservations to the Convention;

7. Urges States parties to the Convention to make all possible efforts to submit their reports on the implementation of the Convention in accordance with article 18 thereof and with the guidelines provided by the Committee and to cooperate fully with the Committee in the presentation of their reports;

8. Encourages the Secretariat to extend technical assistance to States parties, upon their request, in the preparation of reports, in particular initial reports, and invites Governments to contribute to those efforts;

9. Commends the Committee on its efforts to contribute to the effective implementation of the Convention;

10. Also commends the Committee for reducing the backlog of reports, inter alia, through improved internal methods of work, and notes the efforts of the Committee to continue to improve its internal methods of work;

11. Urges States parties to the Convention to take appropriate measures so that acceptance of the amendment to article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention by a two-thirds majority of States parties can be reached as soon as possible so that the amendment may enter into force;

12. Expresses its appreciation for the additional meeting time allowing the Committee to hold two sessions annually, each of three weeks' duration, preceded by a pre-session working group of the Committee;

13. Emphasizes the need to ensure adequate financing and staff support for the effective functioning of the Committee, including for the dissemination of information;

14. Welcomes the progress made by the Open-ended Working Group on the Elaboration of a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women of the Commission on the Status of Women and encourages the Working Group to continue its work with a view to completing it at the forty-third session of the Commission;

15. Encourages the strengthening of coordination between the Committee and the other human rights treaty bodies, and encourages the human rights treaty bodies to coordinate their activities in monitoring the implementation of human rights instruments for the full enjoyment by women of their human rights;

16. Invites the Committee to draw up joint general comments with other treaty bodies, within their respective mandates, on the universality, indivisibility, interdependence and interrelatedness of human rights, and invites the persons chairing the human rights treaty bodies, at their annual meetings, to explore ways and means to facilitate those activities;

17. Stresses that a comprehensive and integrated approach to the promotion and protection of the human rights of women, including the integration of the human rights of women into the mainstream of United Nations system-wide activities, requires systematic, increased and sustained attention to and implementation of the general recommendations of the Committee, at the request of the General Assembly, throughout the United Nations system;

18. Welcomes the submission of reports by specialized agencies, at the invitation of the Committee, on the implementation of the Convention in areas falling within the scope of their activities and the contribution of non-governmental organizations to the work of the Committee;

19. Commends the United Nations Development Fund for Women, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Population Fund, the United Nations Children's Fund and others for building women's capacity to understand and use human rights instruments, particularly the Convention;

20. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session a report on the status of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the implementation of the present resolution.

Commission on the Status of Women

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its forty-second session (New York, 2-13 March), adopted five resolutions and one decision related to improving the status of women and ensuring their rights [E/1998/27 & Corr.1]. Assessing and ensuring implementation of the Beijing Declaration and the Platform for Action continued to be a primary focus of the Commission's work. Panel discussions were held during the session on 4 of the 12 critical areas of concern outlined in the Platform: violence against women, women in armed conflict, the girl child and the human rights of women. The Commission recommended four draft resolutions and a draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

In parallel with the session, the Commission served as the preparatory committee for the General Assembly's high-level review in the year 2000 of the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and the Beijing Platform for Action. It also continued work on a draft optional protocol to the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 July, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1998/224, took note of the report of the Commission on its forty-second session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-third (1999) session.

By decision 1998/295 of 31 July, the Council approved the dates and venue of the Commission's 1999 session as 1 to 19 March in New York.

On 16 December [meeting 50], the Council adopted decision 1998/301 [draft: E/1998/L.52] without vote [agenda item 1].

Participation of non-governmental organizations in the work of the Commission on the Status of Women

At its 50th plenary meeting, on 16 December 1998, the Economic and Social Council, having considered General Assembly resolution 53/120 of 9 December 1998, decided:

(a) As an interim measure, and in conformity with the provisions of paragraph 53 of its resolution 1996/31 of 25 July 1996, to invite those non-governmental organizations that were accredited to the Fourth World Conference on Women to attend the forty-third and forty-fourth sessions of the Commission on the Status of Women, including those parts of the sessions in which the Commission would act as the preparatory committee for the special session of the General Assembly, to be entitled "Women 2000: gender equality, development and peace for the twenty-first century" and to be held in June 2000, provided that they had started the process of applying for consultative status in accordance with Council decisions

1996/315 of 14 November 1996 and 1997/298 of 23 July 1997;

(b) To request the Secretary-General to draw the attention of the non-governmental organizations accredited to the Fourth World Conference on Women to the provisions of the present decision and to the process established under Council resolution 1996/31.

Communications on the status of women

At a closed meeting on 11 March, the Commission took note of the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women [E/1998/27 & Corr.1], established in 1993 to consider ways of making the communications procedure more transparent and efficient [YUN 1993, p. 1050]. The Working Group considered nine confidential communications received directly by the UN Division for the Advancement of Women and 27 communications that formed the confidential list received by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights. Regarding those confidential communications, the Working Group expressed deep concern regarding the systematic and grave violation of women's human rights, including arbitrary arrest and detention; abusive treatment by security forces; widespread repression in conflict situations; harmful traditional practices, such as female genital mutilation; and harassment of human rights defenders. Concern was also expressed about discrimination against indigenous families; de facto discriminatory treatment; and alleged specific cases of discrimination and harassment, including physical and sexual assault, verbal and non-verbal abuse, unprovoked and obscene comments, psychological abuse, intimidation and threats of bodily harm, shunning and exclusion from employee gatherings. In reviewing three non-confidential communications, the Working Group took note of the continued absence of women in decision-making processes, particularly in the context of conflict prevention and resolution.

UN Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)

In 1998, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM) continued to focus on strengthening women's economic capacity; engendering governance and leadership; and promoting women's human rights and the elimination of all forms of violence against women. The three thematic programme areas were addressed in relation to regional realities in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Caribbean, Eastern Europe and the countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States, and placed within the larger global context. UNIFEM was committed to intensifying support for programmes that linked micro- and macro-level practical and policy actions in its three thematic areas to meet emerging needs and priorities for gender mainstreaming and for building the capacity of women's organizations as economic and political actors.

In addition, UNIFEM continued to play a catalytic role to promote gender mainstreaming within the UN system of operational activities and contributed actively to the implementation of the Secretary-General's reform proposals, especially at the field level. In all its activities UNIFEM relied on five core strategies for promoting its empowerment approach: building the capacity and leadership of women's organizations and networks; leveraging political and financial support for women from a range of stakeholders in the development process; forging new synergies and effective partnerships among women's organizations, Governments, the UN system and the private sector; undertaking pilot and demonstration projects to test innovative approaches to women's empowerment; and building an operational knowledge base to influence gender mainstreaming.

The Trust Fund in Support of Actions to Eliminate Violence against Women approved 29 projects in 1998, of which 15 targeted problems rooted in specific forms of violence against women. The annual income for the Fund doubled in size over that of 1997, to some $ 1.8 million.

UNIFEM, as the co-chair with UNDP of the Microcredit Summit of United Nations Agencies, played a lead role within the Microcredit Summit Meeting of Councils, held in New York from 25 to 27 June 1998.

UNIFEM and the International Women's Rights Action Watch Asia/Pacific co-sponsored the second annual workshop on the implementation and monitoring of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. It supported a training workshop of trainers in Barbados, the first step towards implementing a series of workshops on the Convention for the media, judges and NGOs in the region.

In September [A/53/363], the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a report on UNIFEM's activities during 1997.

International Research and Training Institute (INSTRAW)

The Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) held its eighteenth session at the Institute's headquarters in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, from 27 April to 1 May 1998 [E/1998/46]. INSTRAW was an autonomous institution undertaking research and training programmes for the advancement and mobilization of women in development.

The Board expressed deep concern over the decreasing financial base of the Institute and, while expressing confidence in the management's new vision for the future, concluded that INSTRAW's overall level of output during the year had not met its expectations. The Board endorsed the report of the Strategic Planning Committee, whose main focus was the financial crisis affecting the Institute. It approved the research and training programmes, the proposed programme budget for 1998-1999, and the organization of a brainstorming workshop to review and further develop the Institute's new conceptual framework for the advancement of women and gender equality.

In 1998, INSTRAW embarked on a revitalization and reform effort that coincided with the first year of its biennial work programme. The effort involved vigorous administrative and substantive activities, which were undertaken in spite of a difficult financial situation ongoing for the past several years. Within that context, emphasis was placed on: a dynamic research and training programme; extrabudgetary project proposals and activities; increased dialogue for confidence-building; reinstatement of the internship programme; cost-effectiveness and work efficiency; enhancing the capacity of the liaison office; structural and substantive evaluation of the Institute; and preparation of a strategic work plan for INSTRAW.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 31 July [meeting 47], the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1998/48 [draft: E/1998/L.36] without vote [agenda item 14 (a)].

International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 52/95 of 12 December 1997 on the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Reiterating the importance of the autonomous status of the Institute, as set out in article I of its statute,

Welcoming the recent appointment of the Director of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Bearing in mind that the entire operation of the Institute depends solely on voluntary contributions,

Expressing deep concern over the serious financial situation of the Institute, and noting the efforts undertaken to date by the Director to assuage that concern,

Welcoming the growing number of developing countries that contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women,

Reiterating the content of paragraph 334 of the Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women and the relevant provisions contained in agreed conclusions 1997/2 of 18 July 1997 of the Economic and Social Council, on mainstreaming the gender perspective into all policies and programmes in the United Nations system, which emphasized the need for research and related training activities and the role of the Institute within the United Nations system,

1. Takes note of the report of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women on its eighteenth session and the decisions contained therein;

2. Also takes note of the programme budget of the Institute for the biennium 1998-1999, approved by the Board of Trustees at its eighteenth session;

3. Commends the Institute for its efforts to coordinate its activities with the Division for the Advancement of Women of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and other entities of the United Nations and through relevant inter-agency and Administrative Committee on Coordination subcommittees and its efforts to develop joint activities and fund-raising with the specialized and related agencies of the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, so as to promote programmes that contribute to the advancement of women;

4. Stresses the importance of strengthening independent research, training and the compilation of related databases, which are crucial elements for mainstreaming a gender perspective into policy, planning and implementation;

5. Requests the Director of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, in cooperation with the Board of Trustees and all interested partners, taking into account the outcome of the planned Inter-Agency Brainstorming Workshop and the planned International Dialogue on Research Priorities, to draw up a strategic and comprehensive work plan, without delay, setting out a vision for the future, taking into account the comparative advantages of the mandate of the Institute within the United Nations system;

6. Requests the Joint Inspection Unit, in accordance with its proposed work plan, to carry out an evaluation of the Institute which should include a detailed analysis of the reasons for the financial and staffing situation of the Institute, and the implications thereof for the Institute at all levels, and the results of the activities mentioned in paragraph 5 above;

7. Requests the Director, in cooperation with the Board of Trustees, to present a report to the Economic and Social Council at its next substantive session, containing the following:

(a) A detailed analysis of the reasons for the financial and staffing situation of the Institute and the implications thereof for the Institute, at all levels, including an up-to-date balance sheet of its finances and reserves and of all the steps taken to strengthen its financial and staffing situation, in accordance with the relevant articles of the statute of the Institute, including financial administration as contained in the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations, as well as the system support;

(b) Information on the progress of the preparation of a strategic and comprehensive work plan and on steps taken for its implementation;

(c) Information on the outcome of the planned Inter-Agency Brainstorming Workshop and the planned International Dialogue on Research Priorities;

8. Calls upon the regional commissions, the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies in the United Nations system, within their respective mandates, to coordinate fully with the Institute and to give support to it, in particular in the programming and implementation of joint activities;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide support to the Institute, in particular in fund-raising activities, by encouraging voluntary contributions to the Institute;

10. Invites Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women or to increase their contributions, taking into consideration the importance of those contributions in enabling the Institute to continue to respond effectively to its mandates.

Chapter XI

Children, youth and ageing persons

In 1998, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued its efforts to improve the situation of children worldwide, particularly those living in poverty. UNICEF global advocacy and alliance-building efforts focused on promoting children's rights, while its programmes continued to highlight development goals established at the 1990 World Summit for Children. Programme priorities for 1998 emphasized reducing childhood death, illness and disability; reducing maternal mortality and morbidity; improving children's access to and quality of education; and protecting them from exploitation and abuse.

UNICEF joined other UN bodies in continuing to promote adherence to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (see PART TWO, Chapter I). The General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights took action during 1998 to protect the rights of children in a variety of circumstances, including meeting the needs of the girl child (see PART THREE, Chapter X) and protecting children in situations of armed conflict (see PART TWO, Chapter II). The protection of children from the impact of armed conflict was also addressed in June by the Security Council (see PART TWO, Chapter II). In November, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council, proclaimed the period 2001-2010 as the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

United Nations activities concerning young people remained focused on implementation of the 1995 World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which called on Governments to adopt national youth policies and a cross-sectoral approach to addressing youth's concerns. In 1998, the first World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth (Lisbon, Portugal, 8-12 August) adopted the Lisbon Declaration on Youth Policies and Programmes, which built on the 1995 Programme of Action by outlining further policy commitments for Governments. Prior to the Conference, the third session of the World Youth Forum of the United Nations System (Braga, Portugal, 2-7 August) adopted the Braga Youth Action Plan, which called for the empowerment of young people to enable their participation in human development.

As part of ongoing efforts to support ageing persons, the United Nations proceeded with preparations for the International Year of Older Persons (1999). The Assembly, in December, noted the launching on 1 October 1998 of the International Year, with the theme "A society for all ages", and encouraged States, UN organizations and other actors to take advantage of the Year to increase awareness of the challenge of the demographic ageing of societies. The Commission for Social Development reviewed implementation of the 1982 International Plan of Action on Ageing, which dealt with areas of concern to older persons, such as health, housing, income security and social welfare.

Children

United Nations Children's Fund

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), bolstered by nearly universal acceptance of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by General Assembly resolution 44/25 [YUN 1989, p.560], made human rights the guiding force of its country programmes. Of primary importance to the rights-based programming approach was increasing access to education, health services, immunization, safe water and sanitation, as well as overcoming some of the fundamental obstacles to development, such as weak community participation, wide income gaps and inequity in access to basic social services.

Priority was given to early childhood care, adolescent health and development, and the collection of data on children and women. UNICEF programmes also aimed to address the causes of poverty, break the persistent patterns underlying inequality, violence and wasted human potential, and support children and women in critical periods of their life cycle—early childhood, the primary school years, adolescence and the reproductive years.

Among its 1998 activities, UNICEF assisted in health campaigns to eradicate polio and control malaria; helped restore schooling and other social services in 55 countries in crisis; and advised countries on how to incorporate rights into laws and policies. UNICEF also focused on protecting children in crisis, including situations of armed conflict, abuse and exploitation. Promoting global advocacy for children's rights was furthered through UNICEF's major annual publications, including The State of the World's Children 1998, which addressed the devastating impact of malnutrition, and The Progress of Nations, which provided comparative data on progress made by countries in achieving goals set at the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797] and in implementing the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (see PART TWO, Chapter I). The General Assembly, in resolution 53/128, called for action on the rights of the child, including implementation of the Convention. In addition, the Assembly addressed the needs of the girl child in resolution 53/127.

UNICEF cooperated with 161 countries, areas and territories in 1998: 46 in sub-Saharan Africa; 35 in Latin America and the Caribbean; 33 in Asia; 20 in the Middle East and North Africa; and 27 in Central and Eastern Europe, the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) and the Baltic States.

Programme expenditures totalled $785 million in 1998, of which 32 per cent was spent on child health; 24 per cent on planning, advocacy and cross-sectoral support; 14 per cent on education and early childhood development; 13 per cent on community development, women's programmes, and measures for children and women in need of special protection; 11 per cent on water and environmental sanitation; and 6 per cent on child nutrition. In addition, $97 million, or 11 per cent of total expenditure, was spent on management, administration, write-offs and other charges. UNICEF operations in 1998 were described in the 1999 UNICEF Annual Report and the report of the Executive Director [E/ICEF/1999/4 (Pans I & II)].

The UNICEF Executive Board held its first regular session of 1998 from 26 to 28 and on 30 January, the annual session from 1 to 5 June, and the second regular session from 8 to 11 September, all in New York [E/1998/35/Rev.1]. During those sessions, the Board adopted 22 decisions.

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1998/286 of 31 July, took note of the Board's report on its first regular session of 1998 and the decisions adopted by the Board at its annual session.

By decision 52/502 of 8 September, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Committee on Conferences, authorized the Board to meet in New York during the main part of the Assembly's fifty-third (1998) session.

In September [dec. 1998/19], the Board adopted the dates and programme of work for its 1999 sessions. The first regular session would be held from 19 to 22 January, the annual session from 7 to 11 June, and the second regular session from 7 to 10 September.

Programme policies

In decisions related to UNICEF's programme policies, the Executive Board approved the priorities for action set forth in the medium-term plan for 1998-2001, which emphasized a rights-based programming approach [dec. 1998/22], and adopted a programme of work for 1999 [dec. 1998/19]. It also endorsed the Fund's polio eradication efforts [dec. 1998/12], as well as measures that would accelerate progress towards achieving by the year 2000 goals established by the World Summit for Children [dec. 1998/13].

Follow-up to 1990 World Summit for Children

In March, UNICEF submitted to the Executive Board its annual progress report [E/ICEF/1998/8] on follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797], covering 1997. The report provided a global overview of progress towards the major Summit goals and identified priority actions to accelerate progress towards the goals during the period 1998-2000. In addition, it contained information on actions taken to respond to the needs of children requiring special protection measures, such as those affected by child labour, sexual exploitation and disabilities. It also included an annex on steps taken to implement the strategy for improved nutrition of children and women in developing countries.

General progress had been made towards the Summit goals and the significant progress at mid-decade had been sustained in the majority of countries. However, it appeared that achieving year 2000 targets set for major Summit goals would be difficult at the global and many regional levels. Only East Asia and the Pacific, Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States, and the industrialized countries appeared to be on track to achieve the basic education target, the industrialized countries alone for the under-five mortality target, and no region for the malnutrition, safe water and sanitation or adult literacy targets. Issues requiring urgent consideration included the continuing rise in poverty, sharp declines in official development assistance and the allocation of resources to basic social services, the spread of the HIV/AIDS pandemic, and the increasing number of humanitarian emergencies affecting children.

Several short-term priorities for UNICEF emerged from an internal review of progress towards the end-decade Summit goals: strengthening the capacities of families and communities to act as the first line of protection for children; supporting better collection, monitoring and utilization of data at national and regional levels; focusing on direct assistance to countries with the highest under-five mortality rates; devising an integrated approach to early childhood care and development that addressed the physical, emotional and intellectual development of children; giving greater emphasis to reducing maternal mortality; renewing efforts to sustain the drive for universal child immunization and improving the situation related to several other diseases and health-care issues; expanding and improving the quality of basic education, ensuring equal opportunities for disadvantaged girls and children; and advocating the rights of children in need of special protection to ensure that they received priority attention from national authorities and other relevant partners.

Although the Summit Declaration and Plan of Action had been endorsed by 181 countries, it was necessary to enhance national and international efforts if the Summit goals were to be achieved, the report stated.

On 5 June [dec. 1998/13], the Executive Board, noting overall progress made in implementing the Declaration and its contribution to the realization of children's rights, recognized that efficient measures needed to be taken to reach the Summit goals for 2000. The Board asked the Executive Director to support the Secretary-General in preparing his report to the fifty-third (1998) session of the General Assembly on the preparation of the Assembly's special session in 2001 to review achievement of the Summit goals. It also recommended that the Economic and Social Council take appropriate actions to highlight the need to achieve those goals.

Report of Secretary-General. In July, the Secretary-General, in response to Assembly resolution 51/186 [YUN 1996, p. 1083], submitted a report on preparations for the special session of the General Assembly in 2001 to review the achievement of the goals and targets agreed upon at the World Summit for Children for the year 2000 [A/53/186]. The report included an update on progress towards the end-decade goals and highlighted the major challenges that remained in order to keep the Summit's promises for children.

The report concluded that, while there had been important progress since mid-decade in meeting many of the targets agreed upon in 1990, much remained to be done if all the goals for children were to be accomplished at the global level by 2000. Governments were called on to renew Summit commitments, which, according to the report, could be met with strong political commitment, widespread participation of stakeholders and the provision of adequate resources and international support. The report also related Summit follow-up to the coordinated follow-up by the UN system to the major summits and conferences of the 1990s.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 15 December [meeting 91], the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee [A/53/610], adopted resolution 53/193 without vote [agenda item 95].

Preparations for the special session of the General Assembly in the year 2001 to review the achievement of the goals of the World Summit for Children

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 51/186 of 16 December 1996,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General on progress on the implementation of the World Declaration and the Plan of Action of the World Summit for Children;

2. Decides to postpone to its fifty-fourth session consideration of the arrangements for the special session of the General Assembly in 2001 to review the achievement of the goals of the Summit.

Medium-term plan

In July, UNICEF issued its medium-term plan for the period 1998-2001 [E/ICEF/1998/13 & Corr.1]. During formulation of the plan, UNICEF took into consideration the lessons learned in the process of implementing the Plan of Action of the 1990 World Summit for Children [YUN 1990, p. 797] and through the near universal ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child (see PART TWO, Chapter I). More so than in the past, the medium-term plan for 1998-2001 was the result of a planning process that involved all parts of UNICEF. It included a brief analysis of the global context for children, as well as the opportunities, threats and issues that influenced their lives. It also outlined a vision for children into the twenty-first century and assessed UNICEF's strengths and weaknesses and the criteria used to select its organizational priorities. For the first time, a funding target was estimated for the plan period (see below, under "UNICEF finances").

Organizational priorities outlined in the plan indicated that UNICEF would focus on reducing young child mortality and morbidity; improving early childhood care for child growth and development; preventing childhood disabilities; improving adolescent health and development; providing protection from exploitation, violence and abuse; preventing gender discrimination and promoting gender equality; and reducing maternal mortality and morbidity. Implementation of those priorities was to be guided by the principles of a child-focused (rather than sector-focused), decentralized and participatory approach; promoting equity and non-discrimination of women and girls, as well as reducing social and geographic disparities within countries; emphasis on process as well as results, thereby strengthening local capacities; learning from experience; and collaboration with UN partners. During the plan period, UNICEF would continue to deploy its three principal strategies of service delivery, capacity-building and advocacy/social mobilization.

The Board, on 11 September [dec. 1998/22], approved the medium-term plan as a framework for UNICEF action for the period 1998-2001, and noted the inclusion of funding targets (see below) and its emphasis on strengthening performance management. It also approved the priorities for UNICEF actions set forth in the plan, with special emphasis on the achievement of the World Summit goals and implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and asked the Executive Director to assess progress towards those priorities in her annual report. The Board expressed support for the rights-based approach reflected in the plan and welcomed the Executive Director's intention to elaborate on it further. It also approved a financial medium-term plan for 1998-2001 (see below, under "Budget appropriations").

Child protection policy review

In response to a 1997 Executive Board request [YUN 1997, p. 1211], UNICEF submitted a March 1998 report [E/ICEF/1998/CRP.II] on progress made in implementing the UNICEF policy on children in need of special protection measures, which was adopted in 1997 [YUN 1997, p. 1211]. The report focused on the integration of protection issues within UNICEF country programmes. It highlighted prevention and target responses, capacity-building, relevant partnerships and information gathering. Based on reports from 75 countries surveyed, the report stated that more than three quarters (58) were addressing child protection issues; of those, two thirds (38) had mainstreamed protection concerns within other areas, such as education, social mobilization, health, early childhood care and development, and community-based integrated development.

Based on knowledge and organizational capacity, it had become clear that, in implementing the new policy, UNICEF global action should focus mainly on the following areas: the elimination of child labour; the protection of children affected by armed conflict; prevention and protection to address childhood disability; and efforts to end the sexual abuse and exploitation of children (see also PART TWO, Chapter II). Other important issues were juvenile justice, child-headed households and children orphaned by AIDS.

The report concluded that progress in implementing the new policy had left UNICEF in a better position to contribute to achieving the goals of the World Summit. Through capacity-building and other efforts, the Fund was also organizationally well placed to make a significant difference in the areas of child labour, commercial sexual exploitation of children, childhood disability, the impact of armed conflict, the AIDS pandemic and juvenile justice.

The Security Council, at a 29 June meeting, issued a statement [S/PRST/1998/18] expressing its concern at the harmful impact of armed conflict on children (see PART TWO, Chapter II).

In related action, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1998/31), proclaimed 2001-2010 as the International Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for the Children of the World (resolution 53/25) (see PART TWO, Chapter I).

Health strategy

Noting a 1997 report on UNICEF health strategy [YUN 1997, p. 1211], the Executive Board, on 5 June [dec. 1998/12], endorsed the Fund's polio eradication efforts in cooperation with the World Health Organization (WHO), Governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and civil society. The Board reaffirmed its goal of polio eradication by the year 2000, but expressed concern at gaps in funding and programming, which created barriers to achieving the eradication target. It also called for polio eradication to be accomplished in such a way as to build capacity in developing health systems.

Follow-up to ICPD

In response to a 1995 Executive Board request [YUN 1995, p. 1194], UNICEF issued a March report [E/ICEF/1998/9] on its activities in response to the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) [YUN 1994, p. 955]. UNICEF follow-up to ICPD included programmes for girls' education; women's empowerment; primary health care and child survival; reproductive health, with a focus on maternal mortality reduction; and measuring progress in child and maternal mortality.

The report concluded that substantial progress had been made in implementing many of the central tenets of the ICPD Programme of Action. While much remained to be done, particularly to reduce maternal and under-five mortality and to eliminate discrimination against women, the essential strategies had become clear and there were several examples of best practices to provide UNICEF with information for its continuing action. UNICEF's comparative strength in ICPD follow-up included its country programme approach, its ability to work effectively with a variety of partners, and a multisectoral approach to ICPD goals. In June [dec. 1998/10], the Executive Board took note of the report.

Maurice Pate Award

The Executive Director recommended that the Maurice Pate Award for 1998 be presented to the Pacific Regional Human Rights Education Resource Team and that the Executive Board approve an allocation of $25,000 from general resources for that purpose [E/ICEF/1998/5]. Established in 1966 [YUN 1966, p. 385], the Award was presented to the Team in recognition of its significant contribution to human rights education, including child rights, through a pioneering role in developing an awareness and knowledge of human rights in the Pacific region. The Team was dedicated to improving the capacity of government and civil society organizations, with a focus on the legal and human rights of women and children. On 30 January [dec. 1998/7], the Board agreed with the recommendation and approved the allocation.

UNICEF programme expenditure

During 1998, regional UNICEF expenditures in support of cooperation programmes totalled $784 million, $291 million of which was spent for 46 programmes in Africa; $228 million for 33 programmes in Asia; $91 million for 37 programmes in the Americas and the Caribbean; $83 million for 18 programmes in the Middle East and North Africa; and $42 million for 27 programmes in Central and Eastern Europe, CIS and the Baltic States. Another $49 million was spent for interregional programmes. Overall, the total programme expenditure represented a decline of 9 per cent compared to 1997, which was attributable to a range of country-specific situations, the majority of which were beyond UNICEF control. In some cases, implementation of planned activities was hampered by the effects of the financial crisis on the capacity of government counterparts, especially in Asia and parts of the Americas; in other instances, by the temporary diversion of efforts from regular programme activities to urgent responses to natural disasters and conflict, particularly in Central America and parts of Africa. Actions had been initiated to assess specific reasons for underexpenditure in each region in order to identify corrective measures.

The major portion of UNICEF resources continued to be made available to and spent in the 63 low-income countries with a per capita income of $785 or less. Those countries, which had a child population of 1.3 billion or 69 per cent of all children worldwide, received two thirds of UNICEF programme expenditure, 1 per cent more than in 1997.

Approval process for country programme recommendations

In response to a 1995 Executive Board request [YUN 1995, p. 1206], UNICEF submitted a June report, which reviewed procedures for the approval process of country programme recommendations [E/ICEF/1998/P/L.22]. The report described experiences with implementing the procedures adopted in 1995 [YUN 1995, p. 1206], including summaries of the themes and issues relative to country notes, mid-term reviews of country programmes and major programme evaluations on which the Executive Board had commented during the past three years.

UNICEF concluded that the assessment of the pilot experiences of 18 countries with respect to the recent establishment of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) (see PART THREE, Chapter II), to be completed at the country level by December 1998, would have significant implications for its ongoing collaboration with other funds and programmes and for further economizing and streamlining its own programme procedures. In September [dec. 1998/16], the Executive Board asked to be informed, no later than the second regular session in 1999, if any changes to the approval process were required as a result of the findings of the assessment of the UNDAF pilot phase.

Field visits

In February, UNICEF Executive Board members visited Bangladesh, Guinea and Mali. The delegation observed a variety of UNICEF-supported projects and met with UNICEF country office staff, government officials, NGOs and representatives of other UN agencies, as well as the beneficiaries of UNICEF programmes in those countries.

The team found that projects in Bangladesh were focused and being carried out by highly motivated UNICEF staff and government counterparts. The recipients of and participants in those services felt that their lives and the lives of their families and communities had been improved as a result of the interventions. The shift by UNICEF to a child-rights-based approach resulted in a greater challenge for implementation at the field level, as Bangladesh now participated in a wider range of activities in various sectors, all inter-related. The delegation found that the chief advantages of UNICEF's operations in Bangladesh were its large field presence; expertise in such areas as supply and procurement and communication strategies; name recognition and image; flexibility of structure; and its brokering role between the Government, local NGOs, private sector entities and other external partners. The team had concerns regarding capacity-building, empowerment and sustainability, as well as the country office's style of operation, particularly in the context of UN reform.

In Guinea, the team examined UNICEF projects in relation to health and nutrition; basic education; water and sanitation; communication and advocacy; and support for human development. It observed a spirit of partnership between the UNICEF office and Guinea government officials, which enabled, among other things, the development of creative solutions to address elements of traditional practices that negatively affected the welfare of women and children. The delegation expressed concern that, although collaboration existed between UNICEF and other UN partners in the planning stages of programme development, there was difficulty in the collaborative execution of the programmes.

In Mali, one of the poorest countries, the delegation found the various field projects—which emphasized protection, survival, development and social sector planning and advocacy—to be focused, with clear objectives. The Government, with UNICEF assistance, was shifting to a rights-based approach to basic services. Cooperation between government officials and UNICEF staff was excellent and both parties were knowledgeable about the aims of projects being implemented.

UNICEF programmes by sector

As in previous years, the major share of UNICEF programme expenditure continued to be in the area of health ($207 million or 26 per cent), followed by child-focused advocacy, planning, capacity-building and other cross-sectoral programmes, including social mobilization and statistics ($155 million or 20 per cent). Significant shares of expenditure were also directed to basic education ($93 million or 12 per cent), water and environmental sanitation ($67 million or 9 per cent), nutrition ($37 million or 5 per cent) and other key developmental activities ($85 million or 11 per cent).

Child and adolescent health

As a main health-related programme priority, in 1998, UNICEF aimed to reduce young child mortality and morbidity, improve early childhood care for child growth and development, prevent childhood disability, improve access to and quality of basic education, improve adolescent health and development and reduce maternal mortality and morbidity.

To accelerate progress towards meeting the World Summit for Children goals of improving child survival and health by the year 2000, UNICEF emphasized breastfeeding and other key elements of children's well-being, such as basic health care, education and access to safe water and sanitation. By the end of 1998, breastfeeding protection, promotion and support had been adopted by nearly 15,000 hospitals that met the global criteria of the Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative, spearheaded by UNICEF and WHO. The two organizations cooperated on the Integrated Management of Childhood Illness (IMCI) programme that combined strategies for control and treatment of five major killers of young children—respiratory tract infections, diarrhoeal dehydration, measles, malaria and malnutrition—through strengthening health services, upgrading skills of health workers and improving the care provided by families and communities. During 1998, 20 countries introduced the IMCI programme, bringing to 58 the number of countries that had adopted it. Other UNICEF-assisted programmes for young children combined interventions for children's health and nutrition, early education, environment and overall psychological and social well-being. The UNICEF Early Childhood Care for Survival, Growth and Development initiative was developed to improve a child's chances of reaching the first year of school healthy, resilient, well-nourished and ready to learn. UNICEF continued cooperation with various partners in campaigns to reach World Summit goals related to immunization targets for the year 2000, including the eradication of polio, reduction of measles deaths by 95 per cent from pre-immunization levels, elimination of neonatal tetanus, and reaching 90 per cent of children with vaccines for measles, polio, tuberculosis and diphtheria/pertussis/tetanus. It also supported efforts to combat vitamin A and iodine deficiency—a leading cause of visual disability, mental retardation and stunting. UNICEF supported malarial control programmes in more than 30 countries. In 1998, UNICEF joined with WHO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank to launch the Roll Back Malaria initiative, which aimed to strengthen health services and make available effective and affordable antimalarial drugs to communities in need.
